imposer un blocus n'oblige pas le Maroc à faire de même. Mais accuser pour cette raison le Maroc de suivre une politique procoloniale constitue une affirmation totalement inadmissible et dénuée de fondement. En outre, la délégation marocaine se demande si ce problème colonial préoccupe vraiment le Gouvernement espagnol autant que la persistance des autres problèmes coloniaux auxquels il doit faire face en qualité de Puissance administrante.

85. La délégation marocaine a toujours soutenu que Gibraltar devrait être restitué à l'Espagne et, l'année précédente, fidèle au principe de la décolonisation, elle s'est trouvée au nombre des auteurs d'un projet de résolution sur la question que l'Assemblée générale a adopté en tant que résolution 2070 (XX). En outre, la décolonisation de Gibraltar est favorable au Maroc, car le cas du Rocher est identique à celui de deux villes situées en territoire marocain, et la restitution de Gibraltar permettrait au Maroc d'utiliser les arguments irréfutables qu'invoque le Gouvernement espagnol dans l'affaire de Gibraltar.

86. M. Sidi Baba précise que la délégation espagnole, au cours de la présente session, a pris plusieurs fois la liberté de faire allusion à la délégation marocaine en des termes qu'il considère comme contraires à l'esprit de bonne volonté et de bon voisinage qu'ont toujours prônés les dirigeants responsables des deux pays. Par exemple, lorsque le représentant du Maroc, parlant à la Quatrième Commission d'un problème colonial, a fait allusion, entre autres formes de colonialisme en Afrique, au colonialisme espagnol, le représentant de l'Espagne a taxé le représentant du Maroc d'irresponsabilité. La délégation marocaine, au contraire, considère ce représentant comme parfaitement responsable.

87. On a accusé récemment le Maroc d'être de connivence avec le colonialisme britannique, tout cela parce que le Maroc est un pays qui se consacre à la décolonisation. Il convient de faire observer que, dans ce domaine, le Maroc n'a à recevoir de leçons de personne. Son peuple s'est soulevé contre les forces combinées d'occupation étrangère, sans armes, sans ressources, sans industries et a forgé sa propre gloire. Il n'a pas reçu son indépendance, mais il l'a gagnée par sa ténacité et il ne doit rien à personne pour son émancipation. Il a toujours lutté contre le colonialisme, l'expansionnisme et l'exploitation, et, si c'est ce que l'Espagne lui reproche, M. Sidi Baba répète que son pays continuera à s'opposer au colonialisme avec toute l'énergie nécessaire.

88. De plus, le Maroc et l'Espagne sont en relations et ont divers intérêts communs, et l'ambassadeur d'Espagne au Maroc, qui assiste aux débats de la Quatrième Commission, aurait pu faire en sorte que la délégation espagnole s'abstienne de traiter la délégation marocaine de la manière dont elle l'a fait systématiquement pendant toute la session.

89. Le Maroc poursuivra sa lutte contre le colonialisme dans le cadre de la politique des Nations Unies, en collaboration avec les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie et avec tous les pays épris de paix et de liberté. Face aux graves accusations portées par la délégation espagnole, le représentant du Maroc a maîtrisé son émotion par respect à l'égard du peuple espagnol et de tous les pays qui sont unis par des liens d'amitié ou d'affection à ce peuple, mais il tient à réfuter catégoriquement toutes ces accusations sans fondement.

90. M. FORTIN PINEL (Honduras) s'associe aux déclarations faites par le représentant de l'Uruguay au sujet de la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas) et de Gibraltar. Il demande au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni d'adopter, conjointement avec les Gouvernements espagnol et argentin, des mesures en vue de résoudre le problème de Gibraltar et des îles Falkland (Malvinas). D'autre part, le représentant du Honduras prend note avec satisfaction de la bonne foi dont l'Espagne a fait preuve en respectant les résolutions des Nations Unies.

M. Kanakarathne (Ceylan), vice-président, reprend la présidence.

91. M. DE PINIES (Espagne), exerçant son droit de réponse, rappelle qu'il a recommandé lui-même à la Quatrième Commission d'examiner le texte du Livre blanc du Royaume-Uni. Il rappelle également qu'à la demande des délégations bulgare et cambodgienne la question de Gibraltar a été inscrite, en 1963, à l'ordre du jour du Comité spécial, en tant que question relative à un territoire non autonome. On a exposé alors les origines du problème, ainsi que les manœuvres ultérieures tendant à remplacer la population originaire du territoire par des immigrants.

92. Lorsque le Royaume-Uni affirme ses droits sur le Rocher, il oublie que les arguments mêmes sur lesquels il fonde ses droits peuvent être invoqués pour couper les communications terrestres. Dans le cas présent, il n'y a lieu de parler que de la suppression des moyens que l'Espagne fournissait jusqu'à présent, dans le plein exercice de sa souveraineté.

93. Répondant au représentant du Maroc, M. de Piniés affirme qu'il est déplacé de parler de blocus pour les raisons qu'il vient d'exposer. En outre, les communications maritimes demeurent libres. En ce qui concerne la présence des Marocains à Gibraltar, le représentant de l'Espagne voulait uniquement signaler qu'avant que son pays ne commence à supprimer les moyens qu'il fournissait, il n'y avait pas d'ouvriers marocains à Gibraltar et qu'à l'heure actuelle l'on en compte plus de 2 800, dont certains jouissent de privilèges dont sont privés les ouvriers espagnols. Quant aux communications aériennes et maritimes entre Tanger et Gibraltar, M. de Piniés évoque l'inauguration d'une ligne aérienne entre Gibraltar, Tanger et Casablanca, et, tout en précisant qu'il n'a aucune critique à formuler sur le fait qu'un pays entretienne des relations avec un autre pays, il observe que l'on ne saurait priver la délégation espagnole du droit de signaler tous ces faits à l'attention de la Commission.

94. M. SIDI BABA (Maroc), exerçant son droit de réponse, précise qu'il existe depuis longtemps des lignes aériennes et maritimes qui unissent Gibraltar à Tanger et que l'inauguration d'une nouvelle ligne ne constitue pas une action dirigée contre les objectifs de l'Espagne à Gibraltar. Il tient à préciser également que souvent les travailleurs marocains quittent le pays sans que les autorités puissent exercer le moindre contrôle sur les villes qu'utilisent ces ouvriers comme point de départ pour se rendre dans un pays quelconque, y compris Gibraltar. Il formule également des réserves sur le nombre de travailleurs marocains qui, selon les déclarations qui ont été faites, se trouvent à Gibraltar.

95. M. HOPE (Royaume-Uni), exerçant son droit de réponse, veut simplement poser deux questions: en premier lieu, s'il y a deux parties à un litige et si l'une d'entre elles est disposée à soumettre l'affaire à un tribunal impartial et que l'autre refuse, quelle est celle dont la cause est la meilleure? En second lieu, si l'objectif de la décolonisation est la liberté, les 25 000 habitants de Gibraltar seraient-ils plus libres une fois qu'ils seraient transférés à l'Espagne?

96. M. MALECELA (République-Unie de Tanzanie) réserve le droit de sa délégation de revenir à la question de Gibraltar et, en particulier, à la suggestion du Royaume-Uni tendant à soumettre l'affaire à la Cour internationale de Justice.

97. Le Royaume-Uni doit tenir compte du fait que, lorsque, pour la première fois, la question de Gibraltar a été comprise dans le problème de la décolonisation, elle l'a été sous réserve que les deux parties entameraient des négociations. La Quatrième Commission, qui a le droit de s'informer de la marche de ces négociations, espérait que l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni lui communiqueraient des renseignements à ce sujet. Il est nécessaire d'être au courant des faits pour savoir si l'on peut prolonger la durée des négociations ou examiner à nouveau la question au sein de la Quatrième Commission.

98. Il en va de même pour les îles Falkland (Malvinas), car il a été adopté une résolution dans laquelle les parties intéressées étaient priées d'entamer des négociations, mais la Quatrième Commission n'est pas encore informée des résultats de ces négociations qui n'ont été entamées qu'en septembre 1966, bien que la résolution en question ait été adoptée à la vingtième session.

99. Le représentant de la Tanzanie répète que, lorsque l'Assemblée générale adopte une résolution dans laquelle elle demande que diverses parties intéressées entament des négociations, elle a le droit d'être informée de la marche de ces négociations. Il réserve également le droit de sa délégation de traiter à nouveau de la question.

100. M. DE PINIES (Espagne), exerçant son droit de réponse, déclare qu'il aurait été préférable que le Royaume-Uni ait attendu de prendre connaissance du texte de sa déclaration, parce que la garantie d'un statut spécial qu'offre l'Espagne aux habitants de Gibraltar, qui serait soumis au Secrétaire général pour approbation et déposé à l'ONU, ne permet pas de mettre en doute les perspectives qui s'ouvrent aux habitants de Gibraltar. Au sujet des observations formulées par le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie, le représentant de l'Espagne note que, si celui-ci étudie le texte de son intervention, il pourra se rendre compte des difficultés et des obstacles auxquels on s'est heurté au cours des négociations.

101. M. CAHEN (Belgique) note que le représentant de l'Union soviétique a fait mention de la participation de la Belgique à l'expédition au Congo organisée de l'île d'Ascension. Comme l'a déjà expliqué M. Spaak, alors ministre des affaires étrangères de Belgique, il ne s'agissait pas d'une expédition coloniale, parce que cette expédition avait obtenu l'accord du Gouvernement congolais et du général Mobutu.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément (suite) [A/6242, A/6261 et Add.1, A/6262 et Add.1, A/6277, A/6278, A/6300/Rev.1, chap. XI et XIV à XXII; A/6568, A/C.4/680]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

65. M. STEFL (Tchécoslovaquie) rappelle tout d'abord les difficultés que présente la solution des problèmes posés par le cas des petits territoires coloniaux. Cependant, bien que ces territoires se trouvent dans une situation particulière en raison de leur faible superficie et de leur population peu nombreuse, il n'en est pas moins vrai qu'il s'agit de territoires coloniaux et que par conséquent la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux leur est également applicable. C'est cette conclusion qui figure expressément dans le rapport du Comité spécial qui est consacré à ces territoires (A/6300/Rev.1, chap. XI et XIV à XXII).

66. Il ressort également de ce rapport que les puissances coloniales n'ont pas encore pris de mesures efficaces pour que la décolonisation s'accomplisse dans les petits territoires aussi rapidement que possible et conformément aux principes de la Déclaration. Les institutions politiques qui ont été mises en place notamment aux îles Gilbert et Ellice, aux îles Salomon et aux Samoa américaines n'ont pas un caractère représentatif, et les puissances administrantes détiennent encore des pouvoirs considérables dans les domaines exécutif et législatif. On ne peut nier que certaines réformes constitutionnelles aient été accomplies dans ces territoires, mais l'on peut souvent se demander si elles vont assez loin et si elles sont conformes aux dispositions de la Déclaration. Trop souvent, les puissances coloniales utilisent les petits territoires coloniaux dans leur propre intérêt, lequel ne coïncide guère avec les intérêts des populations locales. On sait que bon nombre de petits territoires ont une grande importance militaire et stratégique et que la présence de bases militaires dans ces territoires est un grave obstacle au développement de ces pays. Il faut donc demander aux puissances coloniales de supprimer toutes les bases militaires qu'elles possèdent dans les petits territoires et de s'abstenir d'en construire de nouvelles.

67. Les missions de visite des Nations Unies sont particulièrement utiles dans le cas des petits ter-ritoires. Nul n'ignore en effet que les renseignements qui sont communiqués par les puissances coloniales en vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte sont incomplets et ne permettent pas de s'assurer des volontés de tous les secteurs des populations intéressées. Souvent, les puissances coloniales refusent d'accepter les missions de visite en alléguant que la situation dans les territoires où ces missions doivent être envoyées est des plus satisfaisantes. Il y a dans cette attitude une contradiction flagrante, car si tel est le cas, elles ne peuvent avoir qu'intérêt à faire constater la réalité de leurs affirmations par des représentants des Nations Unies. La délégation tchécoslovaque estime que les missions doivent être envoyées dans les territoires coloniaux sans que les puissances coloniales aient à imposer la moindre condition préalable.

68. M. CAMPORA (Argentine) déclare que sa délégation aurait voulu formuler certaines observations en réponse à celles qui ont été faites par diverses délégations au sujet des îles Malvinas. Comme certaines délégations auxquelles il voulait s'adresser ont dû s'absenter, il se réserve la possibilité de prendre la parole à ce sujet lors d'une séance ultérieure.

69. M. GHAREKAN (Inde) déclare qu'en étudiant en dernier les petits territoires non autonomes, la Commission ne leur fait pas pleinement justice. Il exprime l'espoir qu'à la session suivante la Commission mettra au point une formule qui lui permette d'examiner le cas de ces territoires suffisamment tôt pour que cet examen soit véritablement fructueux. Sur la soixantaine de territoires qui demeurent inscrits sur la liste du Comité spécial, quatre seulement, à savoir le Lesotho, le Botswana, la Guyane et la Barbade, sont devenus indépendants depuis l'année précédente. Il y a donc là une situation qui laisse beaucoup à désirer et qui résulte essentiellement du fait que les puissances administrantes ne tiennent guère compte des appels répétés qui leur sont adressés par les Nations Unies.

70. Le Royaume-Uni, par exemple, détient encore un grand nombre de territoires de par le monde. La délégation indienne a eu l'occasion de faire de nombreuses observations au sujet des petits territoires au cours des travaux du Comité spécial dont elle fait partie. Elle s'attachera donc seulement au cas de certains d'entre eux, notamment l'île Maurice et les îles Falkland (Malvinas).

71. En ce qui concerne l'île Maurice, la délégation indienne continue de penser que le Royaume-Uni a mis au point un système électoral par trop complexe. Elle exprime néanmoins l'espoir que le Royaume-Uni ne retardera pas l'accession au stade final de l'indépendance. L'Inde était un des auteurs, à la vingtième session, de la résolution 2066 (XX), dans laquelle l'Assemblée générale a fait observer que toute mesure prise par la Puissance administrante pour détacher certaines îles du territoire de l'île Maurice afin d'y établir une base militaire constituerait une violation de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et en particulier du paragraphe 6 de cette Déclaration. Dans la même résolution, le Royaume-Uni a été invité à ne prendre aucune mesure qui démembrerait le territoire de l'île Maurice et pourrait violer son intégrité territoriale. Cependant, malgré cette résolution, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a procédé à l'établissement du territoire britannique de l'océan Indien. La délégation indienne a déjà défini sa position sur ce point à la Quatrième Commission (1566ème séance), à la session précédente de l'Assemblée générale. Elle ajoutera seulement que le Gouvernement indien est hostile à l'établissement de bases militaires étrangères où que ce soit.

72. En ce qui concerne les îles Falkland (Malvinas), qui ont fait l'objet de la résolution 2065 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale, on constate que les deux parties intéressées ont procédé aux négociations qui étaient préconisées dans ladite résolution. Cependant, il ne suffit pas que les deux parties poursuivent à loisir leurs conversations, et il y aurait lieu de leur demander instamment d'accorder à la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas) toute l'attention qu'elle mérite.

73. La délégation indienne voudrait présenter certaines observations au sujet des missions de visite des Nations Unies. Cette délégation a toujours jugé essentiel l'envoi de missions dans tous les territoires, quels qu'ils soient. On constate à cet égard une évolution très encourageante chez les puissances administrantes. C'est ainsi que la Nouvelle-Zélande a pris récemment l'initiative d'inviter les Nations Unies à envoyer une mission aux îles Cook. Dans le cas d'un autre territoire, cette même puissance administrante a fait une invitation analogue, mais en l'assortissant de certaines réserves. Selon la délégation indienne, celles-ci ne sont pas justifiées, et il faut espérer que la Nouvelle-Zélande n'insistera pas pour qu'il en soit tenu compte. L'Inde se réjouit également que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, de son côté, ait accepté l'envoi d'une mission dans le territoire d'Aden. Il faut espérer qu'il y a là le signe d'une heureuse évolution de la part de ce gouvernement.

La séance est levée à 23 h 50.

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément (suite) [A/6242, A/6261 et Add.1, A/6262 et Add.1, A/6277, A/6278, A/6300/Rev.1, chap. DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (fin)

1. M. CAMPORA (Argentine) appelle l'attention de la Commission sur une lettre, en date du 15 décembre 1966, adressée au Secrétaire général par le représentant permanent adjoint de l'Argentine (A/C.4/682), transmettant le texte d'un communiqué commun ayant trait aux négociations qui se déroulent entre l'Argentine et le Royaume-Uni sur la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas). La délégation argentine est également d'avis que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit être tenue au courant de l'évolution des négociations et reconnaît qu'il est légitime pour l'Organisation de s'intéresser à toutes les questions coloniales. L'Argentine s'efforcera de fournir un rapport circonstancié au Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, ainsi qu'à l'Assemblée générale à sa vingt-deuxième session. La délégation argentine est désireuse de voir les négociations aboutir à bref délai à la solution du problème, conformément à la résolution 2065 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale. Toutefois, le problème est complexe et l'Argentine éprouve des difficultés à faire accepter une formule qui ferait valoir ses droits, comme l'exige la stricte application de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale à la question des îles Malvinas.

2. M. CARRASQUERO (Venezuela) dit que l'attitude de la délégation vénézuélienne à l'égard des divers territoires à l'examen figure dans les chapitres pertinents du rapport du Comité spécial (A/6300/Rev.1). Toutefois, M. Carrasquero relève d'une façon générale que, dans quelques territoires, certains progrès dans le domaine politique ont été réalisés, ou sont sur le point de l'être, mais que ces progrès sont loin de satisfaire les aspirations des populations ou les vœux exprimés par l'Assemblée générale. La délégation vénézuélienne s'inquiète de la lenteur des progrès de ces territoires en matière d'autodétermination et continue d'insister pour que les puissances administrantes appliquent sans délai les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV). Aucune raison d'ordre politique, économique ou stratégique ne peut être invoquée pour retarder l'application de cette résolution. Cependant, il est vrai que la viabilité politique est fonction de la viabilité économique, et certains petits territoires qui ne disposent que de maigres ressources risquent lors de leur accession à l'indépendance de dépendre d'une autre puissance, de sorte que leur autodétermination serait fictive. La délégation vénézuélienne a souvent insisté sur la nécessité pour les petits territoires situés dans une zone géographique donnée d'envisager la possibilité d'une forme d'autodétermination qui leur assure le plus haut degré d'indépendance réelle. Ils pourraient s'inspirer des tendances intégrationnistes qui existent dans le monde. Il est regrettable que l'idée d'une fédération de certains des territoires intéressés ait soulevé des difficultés; il faut espérer que ces difficultés seront aplanies.

3. Le représentant du Venezuela désire faire quelques observations sur deux territoires au sujet desquels des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale ont engagé les parties intéressées à entamer des négociations directes, à savoir les îles Falkland (Malvinas) et Gibraltar. En ce qui concerne les îles Falkland (Malvinas), les parties intéressées sont l'Argentine et le Royaume-Uni. Il est logique de supposer que, lorsque l'Assemblée générale, dans sa résolution 2065 (XX), a engagé les deux parties à entreprendre des négociations, il était entendu qu'elles devaient rechercher la formule convenant le mieux pour l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) et que toute solution envisagée devait être compatible avec le paragraphe 6 de cette résolution. Il est regrettable qu'au bout d'un an les parties intéressées aient été dans l'impossibilité de signaler un progrès quelconque dans les négociations. Il ressort de la déclaration du représentant de l'Argentine que les propositions présentées par le Royaume-Uni au cours de ces négociations ne satisferaient même pas partiellement les justes revendications de l'Argentine. Il faut insister auprès de l'Argentine et du Royaume-Uni pour qu'ils s'efforcent de résoudre le problème sans délai. Le Royaume-Uni devrait se rendre compte que tout vestige de colonialisme sur le continent américain ne saurait être toléré plus longtemps. On ne peut pas arrêter la marche de l'histoire.

4. En ce qui concerne Gibraltar, l'Assemblée générale, par sa résolution 2070 (XX), a invité l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni à entamer des négociations. Les déclarations des représentants de l'Espagne et du Royaume-Uni montrent que certains actes de la Puissance administrante ont fait obstacle à ces négociations. Des incidents tels que la violation de l'espace aérien espagnol ne contribuent pas à hâter la solution du problème. Il est tout aussi difficile d'accepter l'affirmation selon laquelle l'Espagne a l'obligation d'octroyer des droits de passage à la colonie. Le Venezuela s'inquiète tout particulièrement du fait que Gibraltar a servi de lieu de rencontre lors des récentes conversations entre Ian Smith et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Cela met en évidence le rôle stratégique de Gibraltar dans la politique coloniale du Royaume-Uni en Afrique, ce qui explique la volonté du Royaume-Uni de garder le territoire en sa possession malgré les revendications légitimes de l'Espagne.

5. La délégation vénézuélienne est convaincue que la résolution 1514 (XV) est applicable à Gibraltar et que le paragraphe 6 de cette résolution intéresse ce territoire au même titre que le principe du respect de l'intégrité territoriale des Etats Membres énoncé dans la Charte.

6. La délégation vénézuélienne a toujours défendu le principe du règlement pacifique des différends et considère que les négociations sont la procédure la plus appropriée à cet effet. Toutefois, elle estime que l'Assemblée générale a le devoir de se tenir au courant du progrès de ces négociations dans le contexte du processus de décolonisation. L'Assemblée générale devrait être prête, le cas échéant, à prendre des mesures pour assurer l'application rapide de la résolution 1514 (XV).

7. M. Carrasquero espère que l'Assemblée générale continuera d'étudier les questions de Gibraltar et des îles Falkland (Malvinas) jusqu'à ce que les négociations y ayant trait aient eu des résultats satisfaisants et qu'elle exprimera son désir de voir appliquer les résolutions 2065 (XX) et 2070 (XX).

8. M. JANEVSKI (Yougoslavie) dit que la pratique habituelle de la Quatrième Commission consistant à examiner la situation des petits territoires à la fin de la session ne doit pas laisser croire que leurs problèmes sont moins importants ou qu'en ce qui les concerne l'autodétermination et l'indépendance sont moins urgents que pour les autres territoires. La délégation yougoslave estime que les Nations Unies ont une obligation particulière à l'égard de ces territoires, étant donné qu'il n'est pas facile pour une population peu nombreuse de faire valoir ses droits sans aide.

9. Dans certains des petits territoires, il y a des bases et des installations militaires, dont certaines sont utilisées pour lancer des attaques contre l'Etat indépendant du Viet-Nam du Nord. On projette en outre de construire de nouvelles bases dans certains d'entre eux. Les petits territoires risquent de créer des problèmes majeurs pour l'ensemble du monde puisque le maintien des bases est lié à la continuation du système et des privilèges coloniaux dans diverses parties du monde. Dans ces conditions et compte tenu du fait que des bases militaires ont été installées dans des territoires non autonomes sans le consentement des populations, la délégation yougoslave tient à souligner que l'existence de ces bases est contraire aux intérêts des populations des territoires en question et à ceux de la paix. Il importe de démanteler ces bases et de ne pas en construire de nouvelles. Récemment, l'Assemblée générale a une fois de plus exprimé son opinion [résolution 2189 (XXI)] sur la question des bases situées dans des territoires non autonomes.

10. Dans sa résolution 2069 (XX), l'Assemblée générale a décidé que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devra prêter toute l'aide nécessaire aux peuples de ces territoires dans les efforts qu'ils déploient pour décider librement de leur statut futur. L'Organisation des Nations Unies ne pourra pas accomplir cette tâche sans la collaboration des puissances administrantes, notamment si elles ne lui permettent pas d'envoyer des missions de visite dans les territoires. Les rapports de ces missions permettraient à l'Organisation de se faire une idée précise de la situation dans les territoires et de connaître les vœux de la population. Si les puissances administrantes ont véritablement l'intention d'accorder le droit à l'autodétermination aux peuples des territoires en question, il n'y a pas de raison pour qu'elles fassent obstacle à l'envoi de ces missions de visite.

11. M. ALJUBOURI (Irak) dit qu'en examinant la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas), la Commission doit avant tout avoir présent à l'esprit le fait qu'il s'agit d'un problème intéressant deux pays qui ont eu pendant longtemps des rapports amicaux. Un dialogue s'est engagé entre ces deux pays. Les gouvernements de l'Argentine et du Royaume-Uni ont fourni des renseignements à ce sujet dans des lettres en date du 15 décembre 1966 (A/C.4/682 et A/C.4/683). L'élément le plus important de ces lettres est la déclaration selon laquelle les deux gouvernements poursuivront les négociations afin d'essayer de résoudre le problème et présenteront en temps voulu un rapport plus détaillé au Comité spécial et à l'Assemblée générale.

12. Il est vrai que peu de progrès ont été réalisés jusqu'ici dans ces négociations. Mais l'Organisation des Nations Unies est en droit de demander à être renseignée sur la marche des négociations. La délégation irakienne engage les deux gouvernements à continuer de rechercher un règlement à l'amiable de cette question et espère que les pourparlers aboutiront dans un proche avenir à des résultats positifs.

13. M. SICLAIT (Haïti) déclare que son pays appuie sans réserve la lutte de libération des habitants des petits territoires et espère que la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale sera mise en œuvre rapidement. M. Siclait voudrait parler en particulier de la situation de deux territoires: les îles Falkland (Malvinas) et Gibraltar. Les négociations engagées à leur sujet conformément aux résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale se poursuivent dans un climat de compréhension mutuelle. En ce qui concerne les îles Falkland (Malvinas), M. Siclait a noté l'engagement pris par le représentant de l'Argentine de mettre, en temps voulu, l'Organisation des Nations Unies au courant des progrès réalisés dans les négociations. Pour ce qui est des pourparlers au sujet de Gibraltar, il ressort de la déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Espagne (1671ème séance) que ces pourparlers se heurteraient à certains obstacles. La délégation haïtienne pense, comme la délégation espagnole, qu'un recours à la Cour internationale de Justice ne serait pas indiqué dans le cas de Gibraltar, car cela équivaldrait à renvoyer sine die toute solution du problème. D'autre part, on ne saurait considérer que le Royaume-Uni a acquis, du fait de sa longue occupation, des droits sur une partie du territoire espagnol. Le Gouvernement espagnol a fait preuve de bonne volonté en acceptant d'examiner les dispositions à prendre afin de protéger les intérêts britanniques dans le territoire. Quoi qu'il en soit, la situation coloniale existant à Gibraltar ne saurait se prolonger indéfiniment.

14. Mme ANDERSON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) tient à donner un aperçu de l'évolution de la situation dans les Samoa américaines, à Guam et dans les îles Vierges; cet aperçu sera bref, puisque les Etats-Unis ont déjà fourni des renseignements détaillés au cours de l'examen de la situation dans ces territoires par les Sous-Comités II et III du Comité spécial (voir A/6300/Rev.1, chap. XVIII, annexe, et chap. XXII, annexe). Mme Anderson voudrait tout d'abord dire que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis demeure convaincu que dans les résolutions et les rapports relatifs à des territoires aussi exigus, il faudrait se référer non seulement à la résolution 1514 (XV), mais aussi à la résolution 1541 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. La délégation des Etats-Unis regrette que le Comité spécial ait supprimé, dans le rapport des sous-comités, toute mention de cette dernière résolution; en effet, pour présenter d'une manière réaliste les diverses possibilités entre lesquelles ces territoires auront à choisir, il est indispensable de citer les dispositions de la résolution 1541 (XV). Au cours des débats à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ces possibilités ont été généralement reconnues, comme, par exemple, dans le cas des formules fédératives proposées dans la région des Antilles.

15. Un certain nombre de faits politiques importants se sont produits récemment dans les Samoa américaines. On se souviendra que la Constitution de 1960 des Samoa américaines contenait des dispositions relatives à sa révision automatique au bout de cinq ans. Un comité chargé de réviser la Constitution samoane vient d'achever ses travaux. Beaucoup de ses propositions visent à accorder des pouvoirs plus étendus à la législature samoane — et Mme Anderson tient à souligner tout particulièrement ce fait étant donné qu'il a été affirmé au cours du débat que les pouvoirs de la législature samoane étaient nettement limités. Le Comité a notamment proposé d'accorder à la législature un droit de regard sur la partie du projet de budget devant être financée par Washington avant que les recommandations ne soient soumises au gouvernement fédéral. Il a également proposé que le Gouverneur présente la partie de budget pour laquelle les Etats-Unis ne versent pas de subvention spéciale — abstraction faite des fonds normalement accordés à tous les Etats et territoires au titre de la législation générale des Etats-Unis — à la législature, qui serait habilitée à ouvrir les crédits nécessaires. Le Comité a également formulé des propositions tendant à modifier les conditions requises pour pouvoir être élu à l'Assemblée législative, de manière à rendre celle-ci plus représentative et à prolonger la durée maximum de ses sessions. D'autres recommandations ont trait à de nouvelles restrictions aux prérogatives du Gouverneur concernant les propositions de loi. Ces recommandations et d'autres encore ont été examinées à une conférence constitutionnelle qui s'est réunie aux îles Samoa en octobre 1966. Les électeurs samoans viennent d'approuver les recommandations du Comité chargé de réviser la Constitution. Le texte de la nouvelle constitution sera soumis à Washington dans un proche avenir.

16. Dans le domaine économique, on s'est efforcé surtout de diversifier l'économie du territoire et de la rendre plus viable. Dans le cadre de ces efforts, on a cherché non seulement à développer le secteur touristique, mais aussi à accroître les investissements industriels, notamment par l'implantation de conserveries de poisson et d'installations pour la transformation des noix de coco.

17. Dans le domaine de l'enseignement, l'événement le plus récent qui mérite d'être mentionné est l'introduction d'émissions de télévision éducatives sur une large échelle afin de permettre aux enfants des régions les plus éloignées de recevoir le meilleur enseignement possible.

18. En ce qui concerne Guam, le territoire jouit déjà d'une assez grande autonomie; en effet, sa législature monocamérale, pleinement représentative, jouit de pouvoirs étendus, notamment en ce qui concerne les impôts et l'ouverture des crédits nécessaires à l'administration locale. A la dernière session du Congrès des Etats-Unis, le gouvernement fédéral a présenté un projet de loi tendant à donner à Guam un chef élu de l'exécutif. Le Gouverneur actuel de Guam est né dans le territoire et y a vécu toute sa vie, mais cela n'a pas été jugé suffisant; d'autre part, l'adoption du système d'un chef élu de l'exécutif mettrait fin au droit de veto du gouvernement fédéral. Les deux Chambres du Congrès ont déjà approuvé la législation nécessaire à cet effet, mais celle-ci n'a pas encore été officiellement promulguée faute de temps pour régler certains détails de procédure. Le gouvernement ne manquera pas de soumettre à nouveau ces propositions au Congrès à ses prochaines sessions.

19. A Guam également, la politique économique a été axée sur la diversification. Une commission commune fédérale et territoriale vient de formuler certaines recommandations tendant à promouvoir le développement économique, et notamment à construire des usines de fabrication et d'assemblage de produits soumis à des droits de douane élevés, tels que les montres, à diversifier la production agricole et à donner de l'extension au tourisme. Une agence de développement économique dotée de larges pouvoirs a été instituée de manière à attirer les capitaux extérieurs et à favoriser ainsi le commerce, l'agriculture et l'industrie du territoire. On espère que ces efforts, ainsi que la construction projetée d'un nouveau port de commerce, permettront à l'île de jouer un rôle important comme centre d'entreposage, d'entretien et de transformation.

20. Parlant de Guam, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a souligné l'existence d'une base militaire bien qu'il n'ait pas parlé des progrès accomplis dans le sens de l'autonomie et de la libre détermination. Les habitants de Guam ne considèrent pas la base comme un obstacle au progrès politique. La représentante des Etats-Unis elle-même s'est rendue dans l'île en 1965 et a eu des entretiens avec de nombreux membres du corps législatif de Guam qui lui ont assuré que celui-ci — élu suivant le principe "à chacun une voix" — a donné son appui total au maintien de la base. Cette dernière existe depuis des années, et, pourtant, le progrès vers l'autodétermination a été continu. D'ailleurs, la Charte des Nations Unies ne restreint nullement le droit des différents pays de posséder des installations de défense contre l'agression, et tel est l'objectif de la base en question.

21. Au sujet des îles Vierges américaines, la représentante des Etats-Unis dit qu'une évolution constitutionnelle intéressante y a eu lieu dernièrement. Récemment, ce territoire a fait l'objet d'un examen constitutionnel complet. Une convention constitutionnelle a fait un rapport en 1965 et a proposé d'amender l'Organic Act actuel, de façon à donner au peuple des îles un rôle accru dans les affaires politiques et financières locales. Il existe déjà aux îles Vierges un corps législatif élu au suffrage universel et disposant de larges pouvoirs. Les îles peuvent compter presque complètement sur des ressources financières d'origine locale, et le corps législatif a une autonomie complète en ce qui concerne la perception et la gestion de ces ressources. La Convention constitutionnelle a également recommandé de donner aux îles le droit d'élire leur propre gouverneur et leur lieutenant-gouverneur, ainsi que de supprimer le droit de veto du gouvernement fédéral. Cette proposition a été pleinement approuvée par le Gouverneur actuel, qui a demandé que le Congrès des Etats-Unis donne toute son attention aux recommandations de la Convention constitutionnelle. Celles-ci ont reçu l'appui total du gouvernement fédéral et l'approbation générale des deux Chambres du Congrès, mais, malheureusement, le Congrès n'a pas pris de mesure à ce sujet avant la fin de sa récente session. Le gouvernement fédéral compte demander l'adoption des recommandations en question à la prochaine session du Congrès. Certaines autres recommandations de la Convention constitutionnelle des îles Vierges, y compris une modification de la répartition des sièges du corps législatif, ont déjà été adoptées et ont force de loi.

22. La plupart des membres de la Commission connaissent la prospérité économique du territoire, due dans une large mesure à l'expansion du tourisme. En 1965, plus d'un demi-million de personnes ont visité les îles Vierges et y ont dépensé 54 millions de dollars. A la suite de cette expansion et de l'augmentation d'autres recettes, le revenu par habitant du territoire, dont la population est d'environ 50 000 habitants, a dépassé 2 000 dollars. Les dépenses d'enseignement, de logement, de santé et de travaux publics par habitant sont élevées. C'est ainsi que 5 millions de dollars ont été affectés à l'amélioration de l'enseignement; d'autre part, 5 000 logements pour personnes à faibles revenus sont en construction et 1 000 nouveaux logements doivent être construits chaque année.

23. Deux autres faits nouveaux reflètent quelques-unes des orientations fondamentales de la politique économique actuelle. Une grande usine d'aluminium, qui formera un ensemble avec une raffinerie de pétrole, est en cours d'achèvement. Cette entreprise symbolise la tendance à la diversification de l'économie de l'île, l'objectif étant d'éviter une dépendance excessive à l'égard du tourisme et de rompre avec l'ancienne organisation économique fondée sur la culture de la canne et la production de sucre. De plus, le Gouvernement des îles Vierges a acheté la presque totalité des installations de la Virgin Islands Corporation, institution du Gouvernement fédéral créée en 1930 pour favoriser la stabilisation de l'économie de l'île. Cette mesure reflète l'idée que, dans la mesure du possible, les services publics doivent être financés par les ressources de l'île elle-même plutôt que de l'extérieur.

24. La délégation des Etats-Unis note avec satisfaction que des négociations sont en cours entre les gouvernements argentin et britannique en vue de régler le conflit qui les oppose depuis longtemps au sujet des îles Falkland (Malvinas), et elle leur souhaite tout le succès possible dans cette entreprise méritoire.

25. M. NUTI (Italie) dit que le fait que, six ans après l'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, de nombreux petits territoires sont encore sous administration coloniale ou sous tutelle, a été présenté comme le résultat d'une conspiration internationale visant à priver une large fraction de la population coloniale de son droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Ayant siégé pendant cinq ans au Comité spécial, la délégation italienne sait que cette façon de présenter les choses n'est pas entièrement exacte et que, nonobstant les vœux des puissances administrantes, la décolonisation a été ralentie par des circonstances telles que la dimension limitée des territoires, leur faible population, les mauvaises conditions économiques, les prétentions rivales à la souveraineté, les difficultés intérieures, les problèmes posés par la diversité des origines ethniques de la population, etc. De l'avis de la délégation italienne, l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait guider ces territoires vers la libre détermination en tenant compte des meilleurs moyens de parvenir à la véritable liberté et à la viabilité économique, et s'abstenir d'accusations stériles. Il serait injuste de ne pas reconnaître que chaque année l'Organisation des Nations Unies peut noter avec satisfaction l'accession à l'indépendance de plusieurs anciens territoires coloniaux, y compris de petits territoires tels que la Barbade.

26. La délégation italienne se félicite de constater que l'avenir d'autres petits territoires fait l'objet de négociations continues et amicales entre les gouvernements particulièrement intéressés. Elle relève que les négociations qui ont lieu entre la République argentine et le Royaume-Uni au sujet des îles Falkland (Malvinas) seront prochainement reprises, et elle espère que ces deux pays, avec lesquels l'Italie entretient des relations amicales, trouveront en temps voulu une solution raisonnable au problème, conformément aux dispositions et aux objectifs de la Charte.

27. M. KARASIMEONOV (Bulgarie) dit que le rapport du Comité spécial montre que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux est pleinement applicable aux territoires dont il est question et que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait donc les aider à recouvrer leur droit inaliénable à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Bien que ces territoires se trouvent situés dans diverses parties du monde, les problèmes et les difficultés qui se posent à eux sont très semblables. Beaucoup d'entre eux ont une population peu nombreuse et sont de dimensions réduites et, du fait qu'ils ont toujours servi les intérêts des colonisateurs, il leur est difficile d'organiser une structure économique saine. Comme l'a fait observer le pétitionnaire des Bermudes à la 1672ème séance, leur économie est tout entière entre les mains des anciens colonisateurs et des anciens propriétaires d'esclaves. Cette oligarchie a des liens étroits avec la métropole, sert les intérêts des puissances coloniales et cherche à maintenir des systèmes politiques et constitutionnels qui privent la population de ses droits démocratiques les plus élémentaires. Le système actuellement en vigueur aux Bermudes date de 1821. Aucune personne de moins de 30 ans révolus n'a le droit de vote, et les propriétaires fonciers ont une voix supplémentaire.

28. Une autre caractéristique de ces territoires est qu'ils servent les plans militaires et stratégiques des pays métropolitains. Les puissances coloniales y établissent des bases militaires ou permettent à d'autres puissances de le faire, sans consulter la population; ainsi, elles engagent les pays qui sont sous leur administration dans des entreprises politiques et militaires qui sont contraires aux intérêts de leurs habitants et à ceux des nations voisines. Un des exemples qui illustrent le mieux l'utilisation de ces bases par les puissances impérialistes à des fins stratégiques est celui de la base américaine de Guam, d'où décollent jour après jour les appareils américains qui vont bombarder sauvagement la population de la République démocratique du Viet-Nam.

29. Dans la zone des Caraïbes également, les Etats-Unis ont établi dans des territoires coloniaux sous administration britannique des bases militaires, telles que celle des Bahamas, connue sous le nom de Atlantic Underwater Test and Evaluation Centre (AUTC). D'après le rapport du Comité spécial, lorsque cette base sera en pleine activité, elle se composera de trois zones: une zone d'essais d'armes, une zone d'essais acoustiques et une zone d'essais sonores. Elle servira de terrain final d'essais pour tous les nouveaux systèmes de détection (voir A/6300/Rev.1, chap. XXII, par. 259). Cela montre que les bases militaires des puissances coloniales établies dans de petits territoires coloniaux ne sont pas moins préjudiciables à l'indépendance et à la sécurité des peuples que les bases établies dans de vastes territoires, et l'ONU devrait exercer la plus grande vigilance à cet égard. Il devient sans doute de plus en plus difficile pour les puissances coloniales et impérialistes d'installer des bases militaires dans des Etats souverains. Etant donné que les peuples sont hostiles à leurs visées agressives, ces puissances se voient de plus en plus contraintes à chercher de nouveaux sites pour leurs installations militaires; dès lors, les petits territoires et les îles isolées jouent un rôle important dans leurs plans impérialistes. Le débat sur Gibraltar est un excellent exemple; il montre que l'existence de bases militaires, outre qu'elle est préjudiciable aux intérêts des peuples se trouvant sous la domination coloniale, complique la recherche d'une solution équitable aux problèmes coloniaux. Il n'y a aucun doute que l'évacuation par le Royaume-Uni de sa base militaire de Gibraltar faciliterait considérablement la solution du problème de ce territoire colonial.

30. Le Comité spécial a à maintes reprises demandé aux puissances coloniales de se conformer à la décision de l'Assemblée générale et d'accepter de recevoir des missions de visite dans les petits territoires. En refusant d'accéder à cette demande, le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis et d'autres puissances coloniales ont montré qu'elles n'avaient aucun désir de coopérer avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour favoriser les progrès de ces territoires vers l'indépendance.

31. En sa qualité de membre du Comité spécial et du Sous-Comité III, qui s'occupe des territoires situés dans l'Atlantique et dans la région des Caraïbes, la délégation bulgare tient à exprimer son inquiétude devant le fait que ces organismes n'ont pas été en mesure d'examiner en détail la situation d'un certain nombre de territoires situés dans cette région; la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas) n'a pas été étudiée d'une manière approfondie depuis 1964. Il est vrai que des négociations à ce sujet sont en cours entre l'Argentine et le Royaume-Uni, mais M. Karasimeonov estime que le moment est venu de communiquer à l'Organisation des Nations Unies et au Comité spécial des informations détaillées sur ces pourparlers.

32. La délégation bulgare estime que la Commission devrait recommander à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter une résolution dans laquelle seraient exposés les problèmes spéciaux auxquels doivent faire face les petits territoires. L'Assemblée devrait une fois encore adresser un appel urgent aux puissances coloniales afin qu'elles acceptent que des missions de visite se rendent dans les territoires qui se trouvent sous leur administration. Ce serait là la meilleure preuve que ces puissances sont prêtes à coopérer avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour donner suite à la résolution 1514 (XV).

33. M. ESFANDIARY (Iran) voudrait parler de la question des petits territoires et des territoires à propos desquels se pose un problème de souveraineté. Il convient de noter que, dans le cas des territoires qui ont été séparés de la métropole, l'Assemblée générale a toujours recommandé que des négociations aient lieu entre la puissance administrante et la métropole intéressée. Pour ce qui est des îles Falkland (Malvinas) et de Gibraltar, l'Assemblée générale a invité le Royaume-Uni à ouvrir des négociations avec les pays dont les droits souverains se trouvent en jeu, à savoir l'Argentine et l'Espagne. Ce faisant, elle a correctement interprété et appliqué sa résolution 1514 (XV). A ceux qui prétendent que les vœux des peuples en cause devraient jouer un rôle décisif dans le processus de décolonisation, M. Esfandiary fait observer que la négociation est encore le meilleur moyen de protéger les intérêts de ces peuples. Lorsque ces territoires ont été séparés de leurs métropoles par suite du colonialisme, leurs habitants n'ont pas été consultés. Maintenant que la situation se trouve renversée et que la décolonisation est en cours, la justice exige qu'on tienne compte des vœux du pays qui a subi une amputation. C'est pourquoi, dans le cas de Gibraltar et des îles Falkland (Malvinas), il est essentiel de prendre en considération non seulement les vœux du peuple des territoires, mais aussi celles du peuple des pays métropolitains, c'est-à-dire l'Espagne et l'Argentine. On ne peut tenir compte des vœux de la population des Etats indépendants que lors de négociations avec les représentants officiels de ces pays. M. Esfandiary rend hommage au Royaume-Uni pour la bonne volonté dont il a témoigné en ouvrant des négociations tant avec l'Espagne qu'avec l'Argentine, et il exprime l'espoir que des progrès importants seront réalisés pendant l'année à venir, de manière que la décolonisation puisse être menée à bonne fin dans les meilleurs délais.

34. En règle générale, l'indépendance est le seul objectif de la décolonisation, mais étant donné les circonstances particulières dans lesquelles se trouvent les petits territoires (leur situation économique, leur faible population et leurs dimensions réduites), l'indépendance peut ne pas être la solution indiquée, et il est essentiel que la population de ces territoires puisse exprimer librement ses vœux en ce qui concerne son statut futur, en toute connaissance des solutions qui s'offrent à elle, telles que l'intégration, la libre association et la fédération. En pareil cas, la surveillance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies est essentielle, étant donné que ces territoires sont vulnérables aux pressions extérieures. En qualité de membre du Sous-Comité III, la délégation iranienne a toujours estimé que des missions de visite devraient se rendre dans les territoires afin de sonder l'opinion de la population et que la présence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait être assurée au moment où s'exerce le droit d'autodétermination.

35. M. ARAVENA (Chili) dit qu'à sa session précédente l'Assemblée générale, par sa résolution 2105 (XX), a prié le Comité spécial de porter une attention particulière aux petits territoires et de recommander à l'Assemblée générale les moyens les plus appropriés pour permettre aux populations de ces territoires d'exercer pleinement leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Si l'on peut constater certains progrès dans nombre de ces territoires, il en est d'autres où il n'y a eu que peu ou pas de changement. Dans l'île Maurice, aux Seychelles et à Sainte-Hélène les progrès sont lents. De plus, la création du territoire britannique de l'océan Indien est contraire à l'esprit de la résolution 2066 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale. La délégation chilienne ne peut que déplorer cette création, comme le fait qu'au milieu du XXème siècle la population des Seychelles se voit toujours refuser le droit au suffrage universel.

36. La délégation chilienne note les grands progrès réalisés dans les territoires du Pacifique administrés par le Royaume-Uni. Les changements constitutionnels ont été nombreux et profiteront sans aucun doute à la population autochtone; en revanche, le progrès économique est resté lent.

37. Nioué et les îles Tokélaou, sous administration néo-zélandaise, sont de petits territoires isolés aux ressources naturelles limitées. On ne peut nier que la Puissance administrante ait grandement contribué au progrès de ces îles et le représentant du Chili note que, d'après la déclaration du représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande, le gouvernement de ce pays est prêt à accepter qu'une mission se rende dans le territoire, pour autant que la visite soit étendue à d'autres parties de la région. La délégation chilienne espère qu'une mission des Nations Unies sera bientôt envoyée dans cette partie du monde pour examiner la situation des autochtones.

38. Si le progrès économique des territoires administrés par les Etats-Unis a été remarquable, leur évolution politique reste lente. Il faut accélérer le développement politique de ces territoires de sorte que les populations des Samoa américaines, de Guam et du Territoire sous tutelle des îles du Pacifique puissent jouir de leurs droits inaliénables.

39. Il y a encore un grand nombre de colonies sur le continent américain, et les peuples d'Amérique latine et des Antilles n'auront de cesse que ces territoires ne soient libérés de la domination étrangère. Le représentant du Chili réaffirme l'opinion de sa délégation, à savoir que les îles Falkland (Malvinas) doivent être décolonisées. Il a plaisir à constater que l'Argentine et le Royaume-Uni ont engagé des négociations, à la suite de l'invitation contenue dans la résolution 2065 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale, en vue de trouver une solution pacifique à ce problème. Une fois de plus, le Chili exprime sa solidarité avec la population argentine dans son juste combat pour recouvrer ses droits légitimes sur les îles Falkland (Malvinas).

40. Les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale n'ont pas été appliquées dans certaines îles des Antilles qui sont encore sous domination étrangère et dont la population doit être autorisée à exercer son droit à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance. L'ONU est à même de prendre des mesures propres à assurer que l'on donnera à ces populations l'occasion de décider librement de leur statut futur.

41. Dans certains territoires, tels que les îles Vierges britanniques, on constate un progrès constitutionnel remarquable. On ne dispose pas de renseignements suffisants en ce qui concerne d'autres îles comme les Bermudes, les Bahamas, Antigua, la Dominique et la Grenade; c'est une des raisons pour lesquelles la délégation chilienne pense qu'il serait utile d'envoyer une mission dans les Antilles.

42. La délégation chilienne est heureuse d'enregistrer un certain progrès constitutionnel dans les îles Vierges américaines; la Puissance administrante n'a toutefois pas encore appliqué la résolution 1514 (XV). M. Aravena pense qu'il faudrait qu'une mission se trouve dans le territoire au moment où la population exercera son droit à la libre détermination.

43. Enfin, la délégation chilienne tient à parler du problème de Gibraltar, territoire espagnol qui doit faire retour à ses propriétaires légitimes. Malheureusement, ce n'est pas à la Quatrième Commission d'examiner la situation de fait qui règne dans le territoire, ni de discuter des incidents de frontière qui s'y sont produits. L'ONU doit prier instamment les parties intéressées de faire tous leurs efforts pour parvenir à un accord permettant à la Puissance administrante d'accélérer le processus de décolonisation et de transférer les pouvoirs au Gouvernement espagnol, conformément à la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale et aux intérêts de la population du territoire. Bien que les entretiens entre l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni aient jusqu'à ce jour été ardues, la délégation chilienne espère qu'avec de la bonne volonté des deux côtés on pourra éviter un conflit et décoloniser le territoire. La délégation chilienne invite les deux parties à résoudre ce problème aussi rapidement que possible. En particulier, elle demande à la Puissance administrante de procéder au transfert des pouvoirs en tenant compte de l'intérêt de la population du territoire et conformément aux résolutions des Nations Unies, puis de faire rapport au Comité spécial dès que possible, mais au plus tard à la vingt-deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale.

44. M. EL MASRY (République arabe unie) dit que, comme tout autre peuple, celui des petits territoires a le droit à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance. Ni la Charte des Nations Unies ni la résolution 1514 (XV) ne font de distinction entre les peuples des petits territoires et ceux des grands territoires; en fait, l'ONU a une responsabilité toute spéciale à l'égard des premiers et doit faire tout ce qui est possible pour les aider à obtenir la liberté et l'indépendance. La délégation de la République arabe unie conteste que certains territoires ne puissent parvenir à l'indépendance à cause de leur situation économique ou de leur isolement géographique; ces problèmes ne doivent pas servir de prétexte pour retarder leur indépendance. L'ONU et les institutions spécialisées ont un rôle important à jouer dans l'évolution économique de ces territoires.

45. Il est fort regrettable que certaines puissances administrantes maintiennent ou installent de nouvelles bases militaires, principalement à des fins d'agression. Ces bases devraient être démantelées immédiatement.

46. La délégation de la République arabe unie a également le regret de noter qu'il y a parmi les puissances administrantes une tendance à annexer de petits territoires au moyen d'élections qui n'en ont que le nom. L'ONU doit prendre toutes les mesures possibles pour assurer que les populations de ces territoires puissent s'exprimer librement et en pleine connaissance de leurs droits sur le statut futur qu'elles souhaitent avoir. L'ONU doit être présente dans les territoires pendant l'exercice du droit de libre détermination et doit pouvoir y envoyer des missions.

47. On ne constate pas de progrès importants dans l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Dans le cas de Gibraltar, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni bloque les négociations avec l'Espagne afin de retarder la décolonisation et de maintenir sa base militaire, qu'il a souvent utilisée pour des agressions contre des Etats souverains. Il faut prier le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de démanteler sa base militaire, conformément au paragraphe 12 du dispositif de la résolution 2105 (XX) et à la résolution 2189 (XXI), et de ne pas faire obstacle aux négociations. Il s'agit d'un problème colonial, non juridique; les intéressés sont les autochtones, non pas les fonctionnaires et employés britanniques.

48. La question des îles Falkland (Malvinas) est également une question coloniale et c'est comme telle que l'ONU doit continuer à s'en occuper. Le représentant de la République arabe unie espère que les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Argentine vont poursuivre les négociations et faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale.

49. En ce qui concerne l'île Maurice, les Seychelles et Sainte-Hélène, la Commission doit recommander à l'Assemblée générale une résolution s'inspirant de la résolution 1514 (XV) pour dire que les populations de ces territoires ont un droit inaliénable à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance, qu'il faut prendre des mesures immédiates pour transférer sans condition tous les pouvoirs à la population, conformément à leur vœu librement exprimé, et que les bases militaires étrangères doivent être démantelées. M. El Masry déplore que la Puissance administrante cherche à violer l'intégrité territoriale de l'île Maurice et des Seychelles en créant le territoire britannique de l'océan Indien, qu'elle a l'intention d'utiliser à ses fins militaires propres et à celles des Etats-Unis. Selon le rapport du Comité spécial (voir A/6300/Rev.1, chap. XIV, par. 46 et 47), trois ministres ont démissionné du Gouvernement de l'île Maurice pour protester contre le plan du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et le mécontentement grandit parmi les habitants. La Puissance administrante doit être avertie qu'il lui faut abandonner ses desseins militaires et se conformer à la Charte et aux résolutions des Nations Unies.

50. M. LAALA (Algérie) dit qu'à la session précédente (1556ème séance), sa délégation s'était félicitée de constater que les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Argentine étaient disposés à entreprendre des négociations sur la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas) afin de trouver, en conformité avec la résolution 1514 (XV), une solution juste et définitive. Toutefois, les espoirs de sa délégation ont été déçus. Malgré l'appel adressé par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 2065 (XX), la situation demeure inchangée. Un dialogue s'est bien établi entre les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Argentine sans toutefois aboutir à un règlement définitif. M. Laala espère que les deux gouvernements poursuivront leurs négociations et en feront connaître les résultats. Le représentant de l'Argentine a promis de le faire et il espère que le représentant du Royaume-Uni en fera autant. Quant à la question de Gibraltar, la délégation algérienne est à la fois surprise et déçue par la lenteur des négociations, qui n'ont jusqu'ici abouti à aucun résultat concret, et par les atermoiements répétés du Royaume-Uni pour maintenir Gibraltar sous sa domination. Le retour du territoire à la mère patrie, en l'occurrence l'Espagne, est la seule solution. La Puissance administrante essaie de défendre ce qu'elle appelle ses droits sur Gibraltar, tout en agrandissant sa base militaire et en renforçant son emprise sur le territoire. Elle s'est servie de Gibraltar pour organiser une rencontre entre le Premier Ministre du Royaume-Uni et Ian Smith. La délégation algérienne ne saurait accepter la nouvelle thèse du Royaume-Uni tendant à soumettre la question de Gibraltar à la Cour internationale de Justice. Il s'agit d'un problème colonial qui doit être réglé par l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). A cet égard Gibraltar constitue un cas particulier en ce sens que la question posée est celle de son retour à la mère patrie afin de rétablir son intégrité territoriale; la situation est comparable à celle d'Ifni, dont la population autochtone doit voir ses vœux exaucés.

51. M. MENDELEVITCH (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques), répondant à la représentante des Etats-Unis, qui avait exprimé son désaccord sur certains points de la déclaration qu'il avait faite au sujet de Guam à la 1671ème séance de la Commission, fait remarquer qu'elle n'a pas apporté la preuve que le peuple de Guam ne s'oppose pas à l'existence d'une base militaire américaine sur son territoire ni à son utilisation contre le peuple du Viet-Nam. La déclaration qu'elle a faite à ce sujet est basée sur sa visite à Guam l'année précédente mais en tant que représentant de la Puissance administrante elle n'aurait pu être aussi objective qu'un représentant de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Les puissances coloniales qui ont intérêt à conserver leurs colonies ne voient naturellement pas les choses sous le même jour que les autres Etats. En outre, la représentante des Etats-Unis a visité Guam à une époque où les bombardiers B-52 qui s'y trouvaient n'avaient pas encore été utilisés contre le Viet-Nam, comme c'est le cas maintenant, et elle ne peut avoir aucune idée de l'attitude du peuple de Guam à l'égard des opérations militaires dans lesquelles il a été entraîné.

52. La représentante des Etats-Unis l'a également pris à partie pour avoir suggéré que la base de Guam constituait l'aspect le plus important de la question. M. Mendelevitch pense qu'il était inutile qu'elle fasse état de sa déclaration à ce propos, étant donné que non seulement l'Union soviétique mais la grande majorité des Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont exigé, par la résolution 2105 (XX) et par la résolution 2189 (XXI), que les bases militaires existant dans les territoires coloniaux soient démantelées. C'est l'ONU qui estime que la suppression des bases militaires est l'un des éléments les plus importants de la décolonisation.

53. La représentante des Etats-Unis a parlé de l'intérêt que son pays porte au peuple de Guam, mais s'il désirait réellement en faire la preuve, il devrait démanteler la base militaire qui constitue une menace directe contre la sécurité du peuple de Guam.

54. M. Mendelevitch attire alors l'attention sur le paragraphe 14 de l'Organic Act de 1960 qui stipule que chaque membre de la législature de Guam et tous les membres du Gouvernement de Guam doivent s'engager à respecter la Constitution des Etats-Unis, les lois de ce pays applicables à Guam et les lois de Guam. Il est révélateur que les lois de Guam soient mentionnées en dernier lieu. Quand la représentante des Etats-Unis parle de l'intérêt que la Puissance coloniale porte au peuple de Guam, on en est amené à se rappeler la récente manœuvre d'une autre puissance coloniale, l'Espagne, dont le représentant avait assuré la Commission que son pays préparait la décolonisation de ses colonies et était prêt à coopérer avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ce qui ne l'a pas empêché ensuite de voter contre la résolution touchant Ifni et le Sahara espagnol, que la Commission a adoptée à la séance précédente. Cela donne une idée de l'intérêt que les puissances coloniales portent à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. La délégation soviétique partage les vues exprimées par le représentant du Chili. La résolution 1514 (XV) doit être pleinement appliquée dans toutes les colonies. Il est urgent qu'une mission de visite se rende à Guam pour faire le point de la situation dans ce territoire, surtout après la déclaration qui vient d'être faite par la représentante des Etats-Unis.

55. Mme ANDERSON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique), exerçant son droit de réponse, signale que ce n'est qu'incidemment qu'elle a mentionné dans sa déclaration la visite qu'elle avait faite à Guam l'année précédente. Elle a voulu signaler que depuis que la base existe, des membres régulièrement élus de la législature se sont exprimés en sa faveur car elle constitue à leur avis un élément important de la défense de leur pays contre l'agression. La presse locale, qui est entièrement libre, a également donné son appui à ces bases. Les Etats-Unis continueront à remplir leurs obligations pour la défense de la liberté du peuple de Guam et de la région du Pacifique.

56. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a également fait état du serment prêté par les fonctionnaires de Guam. Mme Anderson signale que les fonctionnaires de Guam sont des citoyens américains, fait dont ils sont fiers, et qu'il est donc parfaitement normal et naturel qu'ils s'engagent à respecter la Constitution et les lois des Etats-Unis. Les fonctionnaires sont élus suivant le principe "un homme, une voix" et la liberté politique absolue règne dans ce territoire.

57. M. DE PINIES (Espagne), répondant à la remarque du représentant de l'Union soviétique concernant le vote négatif de la délégation espagnole sur la résolution touchant Ifni et le Sahara espagnol, adoptée à la séance précédente, rappelle qu'il y a un certain nombre d'années, on avait discuté la question de savoir si l'Espagne fournirait ou non des renseignements sur les territoires administrés par elle, en tant que première étape vers la décolonisation. On discute à l'heure actuelle de la manière dont la décolonisation devrait s'effectuer mais, l'Espagne étant en désaccord avec la méthode suggérée, c'est pour cette raison, et pour cette raison uniquement, que la délégation espagnole a voté contre la résolution en question. L'Espagne a très certainement l'intention de décoloniser les territoires sous son administration.

58. M. MENDELEVITCH (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) dit que la dernière déclaration de la représentante des Etats-Unis n'a fait que confirmer l'opinion de la délégation soviétique. Les membres de la législature de Guam s'engagent à respecter les lois des Etats-Unis; comme l'installation de la base de Guam a pour fondement les lois des Etats-Unis, ils sont obligés de parler en sa faveur. Pour que ce cercle vicieux soit rompu, il faut qu'une mission des Nations Unies se rende à Guam et prenne connaissance de la situation véritable.

La séance est levée à 13 h 15.

EXAMEN DE PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (suite)
[A/C.4/L.863 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.866]

5. M. GHAREKHAN (Inde) présente, au nom de ses auteurs, le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.866, qui concerne tous les territoires n'ayant pas fait l'objet d'une résolution distincte. La délégation de l'Inde et la majorité des auteurs du projet de résolution déplorent que ces territoires ne soient étudiés qu'au moment où la Commission est sur le point d'achever ses travaux. Les auteurs estiment donc qu'à la session suivante il faudra assigner à l'étude de ces territoires un rang assez élevé dans l'ordre de priorité.

6. Le projet de résolution se passe de commentaires étant donné que ses dispositions apparaissent déjà dans d'autres résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale sur la même question. D'autre part, il est équilibré et rédigé en termes modérés. Les trois premiers alinéas du préambule ne concernent pas le fond de la question. Le quatrième alinéa a pour but de mettre l'accent sur les informations aussi inquiétantes que précieuses qui figurent dans le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6300/Rev.1), selon lequel des tentatives sont faites actuellement pour porter atteinte à l'intégrité territoriale de certains des territoires considérés et pour y établir des bases militaires. Au cinquième alinéa, les auteurs déplorent l'attitude négative de certaines puissances administrantes en ce qui concerne l'envoi de missions de visite des Nations Unies. La même formule est répétée dans les projets de résolution chaque année et elle le sera tant que les puissances administrantes ne changeront pas d'attitude. On constate déjà un changement, qui est dû sans aucun doute aux efforts de la Commission, et on sait en particulier que l'envoi d'une mission à Aden, de même qu'à Ifni et au Sahara espagnol, a déjà été décidé avec la coopération des puissances administrantes intéressées. Enfin, aux sixième et septième alinéas du préambule, les auteurs insistent sur le fait qu'ils n'ignorent pas la situation particulière des territoires considérés, qui ont une faible superficie et dont l'économie n'est pas viable.

7. Au dispositif, c'est le paragraphe 2 qui revêt la plus grande importance, car on y réaffirme le droit des peuples à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance. Au paragraphe 3, il est de nouveau demandé aux puissances administrantes d'appliquer les résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale, demande qui a déjà été adressée à ces puissances lors de la session antérieure mais qui n'a pas été suivie des effets voulus. Des auteurs estiment que ce paragraphe ne contient rien qui puisse empêcher quiconque, y compris les puissances administrantes, d'en appuyer les termes, et ils espèrent que la situation se sera améliorée l'année suivante. Au paragraphe 4, les auteurs rappellent la déclaration de l'Assemblée selon laquelle toute atteinte à l'intégrité territoriale des territoires coloniaux, ainsi que l'établissement de bases militaires dans ces territoires, sont incompatibles avec la Charte des Nations Unies. Cette déclaration est importante si l'on tient compte de ce que dit à cet égard le Comité spécial dans son rapport. La question de l'île Maurice est un cas d'espèce: au mépris des décisions de l'Assemblée générale, on a créé, avec certaines îles de ce groupe, un autre territoire sur lequel on installera une base militaire. Le paragraphe 5 concerne les missions de visite, question dont le représentant de l'Inde a déjà parlé, tandis que les termes du paragraphe 6 se fondent sur la conviction que depuis la création des Nations Unies la reconnaissance du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes s'affirme chaque jour davantage. Enfin, les paragraphes 7 et 8 concernent uniquement la procédure.

8. Le représentant de l'Inde recommande avec la plus grande insistance à la Commission le projet de résolution qu'il a présenté.

9. M. CALINGASAN (Philippines), qui voudrait fournir une explication de vote avant que le vote de la Commission n'ait lieu, déclare que sa délégation fait sien l'intention principale de ce projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.866), qui est d'obtenir la libre détermination et l'indépendance pour les 25 territoires intéressés, mais qu'elle fait des réserves au sujet de la question des bases militaires. La position des Philippines sur cette question, position qui a été exposée en détail à la 1492ème séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale, est que l'existence des bases militaires dans un territoire non autonome ne doit être condamnée que lorsqu'il existe des preuves irréfutables de l'utilisation de ces bases pour étouffer les volontés légitimes des habitants du territoire intéressé, mais que lorsqu'il n'existe aucune preuve de ce genre, il n'y a pas lieu d'évoquer cette question. C'est dans la logique de cette position que la délégation des Philippines a voté au cours de la même session pour la suppression de la base établie en Oman, de même qu'elle avait voté précédemment pour la suppression des bases situées à Aden, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal. En revanche, le projet de résolution qui va être mis aux voix concerne 25 territoires bien définis pour lesquels rien ne prouve que les bases pouvant s'y trouver soient utilisées contre les populations intéressées. Le représentant des Philippines demande donc que le quatrième alinéa du préambule et le quatrième paragraphe du dispositif du projet de résolution soient mis aux voix séparément.

10. M. Calingasan fait également des réserves sur les paragraphes 1 et 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.866 en déclarant qu'il en approuve les termes dans la mesure où ils ne concernent pas la question des bases militaires. Quoi qu'il en soit, la délégation des Philippines votera pour le projet de résolution dans son ensemble, car elle est un ferme partisan du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et de l'indépendance.

11. M. McCARTHY (Australie) déclare que, n'ayant pas reçu d'instructions de son gouvernement au sujet du projet de résolution, il s'abstiendra sur ce texte.

12. Le PRESIDENT invite la Commission à se prononcer sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.866, concernant les territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément.

13. M. CALINGASAN (Philippines) précise que ses réserves portent sur les mots "et à l'établissement, par les puissances administrantes, de bases et d'installations militaires en violation des résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale", qui figurent au quatrième alinéa du préambule, et il demande qu'un vote distinct ait lieu sur cette partie du texte.

14. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le membre de phrase du quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.866, cité par le représentant des Philippines.

Sur la demande du représentant des Philippines, il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

Le vote commence par le Cambodge, dont le nom a été tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Cameroun, Ceylan, Chili, République démocratique du Congo, Cuba, Chypre, Tchécoslovaquie, Ethiopie, Ghana, Guinée, Hongrie, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Jamaïque, Jordanie, Koweït, Libéria, Libye, Mali, Mauritanie, Mongolie, Maroc, Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Pologne, Roumanie, Arabie Saoudite, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Espagne, Soudan, Syrie, Togo, Trinité et Tobago, Tunisie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, République-Unie de Tanzanie, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Zambie, Algérie, Bulgarie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie.

Votent contre: Canada, France, Grèce, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Philippines, Portugal, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique.

S'abstiennent: Chine, Colombie, Danemark, Finlande, Guatemala, Iran, Irlande, Israël, Italie, Japon, Madagascar, Malaisie, Iles Maldives, Mexique, Norvège, Suède, Thaïlande, Turquie, Uruguay, Venezuela, Argentine, Autriche, Brésil.

Par 48 voix contre 11, avec 23 abstentions, le membre de phrase est adopté.

15. Le PRESIDENT demande au représentant des Philippines si, vu les résultats du vote qui vient d'avoir lieu, il souhaite encore un vote distinct sur le paragraphe 4 du dispositif, où figure un membre de phrase similaire à celui qu'il a cité précédemment.

16. M. CALINGASAN (Philippines) déclare qu'il ne demande pas un vote distinct sur ce paragraphe, mais qu'il désire que la nette opposition de sa délégation à l'égard de cette partie du texte soit consignée dans le compte rendu de la séance.

17. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.866 dans son ensemble.

Sur la demande du représentant des Philippines, il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

Le vote commence par Singapour, dont le nom a été tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Espagne, Soudan, Syrie, Togo, Trinité et Tobago, Tunisie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, République-Unie de Tanzanie, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Zambie, Algérie, Argentine, Brésil, Bulgarie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Cameroun, Ceylan, Chili, Chine, Colombie, République démocratique du Congo, Cuba, Chypre, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Ethiopie, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinée, Hongrie, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Irlande, Israël, Jamaïque, Jordanie, Koweït, Libéria, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritanie, Mexique, Mongolie, Maroc, Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Arabie Saoudite, Sénégal, Sierra Leone.

S'abstiennent: Suède, Thaïlande, Turquie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Canada, Danemark, Finlande, France, Grèce, Italie, Japon, Malaisie, Iles Maldives, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Portugal.

Par 62 voix contre zéro, avec 21 abstentions, le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.866 dans son ensemble est adopté.

18. M. BARDER (Royaume-Uni) dit que certains passages de la résolution sont inacceptables mais qu'il s'est abstenu en raison du manque de temps pour étudier le projet et de l'absence d'instructions à son sujet.

19. M. SOYLEMEZ (Turquie) explique que ses réserves concernant le dispositif l'ont poussé à s'abstenir.

20. M. ESFANDIARY (Iran) déclare qu'il appuie la résolution dans son ensemble, y compris le paragraphe 4 du dispositif au sujet duquel il s'est abstenu. Ce paragraphe contient une mention de bases militaires étrangères conforme à la politique et à la pratique du Gouvernement iranien, qui a interdit très clairement et catégoriquement l'installation de toute base militaire étrangère sur son territoire. L'unique réserve qu'il a formulée au sujet de la mention de bases militaires dans la résolution est due à ce qu'il s'agit là d'une question de sécurité qui ne relève pas de la compétence de la Quatrième Commission.

21. M. CAMPORA (Argentine) s'associe aux préoccupations qu'ont exprimées d'autres délégations au sujet du fait que la question des territoires, n'ayant pas été examinée séparément, ait été réservée pour la dernière partie des travaux de la Commission parce que l'on a manqué de temps pour en discuter comme il se doit. Il estime qu'il conviendra d'accorder à la question un rang de priorité plus élevé lorsqu'on la réexaminera.

2288 (XXII). Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique

L'Assemblée générale,

Ayant examiné le point de l'ordre du jour intitulé "Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique",

*Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatif aux activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale*⁴,

Ayant entendu la déclaration du pétitionnaire ⁵,

Rappelant sa résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960, et en particulier le huitième considérant de ladite résolution,

Rappelant également ses résolutions 2105 (XX) du 20 décembre 1965 et 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966, ainsi que toutes autres résolutions pertinentes,

Considérant que les puissances coloniales se sont engagées à assurer le progrès politique, économique, social et culturel des habitants des territoires qu'elles administrent et à protéger les populations et les ressources naturelles de ces territoires contre les abus, conformément aux Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte des Nations Unies,

Convaincue que toutes activités économiques ou autres qui font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) sont incompatibles avec les buts et principes de la Charte,

1. Approuve en général le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatif aux activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale;

2. Réaffirme le droit inaliénable des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et à la possession des ressources naturelles de leurs territoires, ainsi que leur droit à disposer de ces ressources au mieux de leurs intérêts;

3. Déclare que les puissances coloniales qui privent les peuples coloniaux de l'exercice et de la pleine jouissance de ces droits ou font passer les intérêts économiques ou financiers de leurs ressortissants ou des ressortissants d'autres pays avant ceux des autochtones violent les obligations qui leur incombent en vertu des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte des Nations Unies et font obstacle à l'application intégrale et rapide de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale;

4. Condamne énergiquement l'exploitation des pays et des peuples coloniaux ainsi que les méthodes pratiquées dans les territoires sous domination coloniale par les intérêts étrangers, financiers, économiques et autres, qui visent à perpétuer les régimes coloniaux contrairement aux principes énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV);

5. Déplore la politique des puissances coloniales qui permet l'exploitation des ressources naturelles des territoires sous leur administration au détriment des intérêts de la population autochtone et qui encourage ou tolère les régimes de travail et autres pratiques injustes et discriminatoires;

6. Prie tous les Etats intéressés de s'acquitter de l'obligation fondamentale qu'ils ont de veiller à ce que les concessions qui sont octroyées à leurs nationaux ainsi que les exploitations qui leur sont consenties et les investissements qu'ils sont autorisés à faire dans les territoires sous domination coloniale n'aillent pas à l'encontre des intérêts présents ou futurs des habitants autochtones desdits territoires;

7. Prie en outre les puissances coloniales d'interdire les pratiques ci-après qui vont à l'encontre des principes de la Charte et, en violant les droits économiques et sociaux des peuples des territoires sous domination coloniale, font obstacle à la mise en œuvre rapide de la résolution 1514 (XV), pratiques consistant à:

a) Exploiter la main-d'œuvre et les ressources naturelles au détriment des intérêts des habitants autochtones;

b) Entraver l'accès des habitants autochtones à ces ressources;

c) Tolérer et encourager l'injustice et la discrimination dans la rémunération de la main-d'œuvre et dans l'établissement des conditions de travail;

8. Exhorte les puissances coloniales à reconsidérer, en tenant compte des dispositions de la présente résolution, tous les privilèges et toutes les concessions qui sont contraires aux intérêts des habitants autochtones;

9. Prie le Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain de prendre d'urgence les mesures propres à mettre fin, dans le Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain, aux lois et aux pratiques établies par le Gouvernement sud-africain qui sont contraires aux buts et principes de la Charte;

10. Invite les puissances coloniales à cesser immédiatement de déposséder la population autochtone de ses terres et à prendre des mesures immédiates pour lui restituer toutes les terres dont elle a été expropriée;

11. Engage tous les Etats intéressés à coopérer pleinement avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies en vue de l'application rapide et effective de la résolution 1514 (XV), afin de garantir aux peuples l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, ainsi que la jouissance des ressources naturelles de leurs propres territoires;

12. Prie le Comité spécial de poursuivre l'étude du problème et de faire rapport à ce sujet à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa vingt-troisième session;

13. Décide de maintenir cette question à son ordre du jour.

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission 1

Président: M. Corneliu MANESCU (Roumanie).

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique:

RAPPORT DE LA QUATRIÈME COMMISSION (A/6939)

M. Dashtseren (Mongolie), rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission, présente le rapport de cette commission et déclare ce qui suit.

1. M. DASHTSEREN (Mongolie) [Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission] (traduit de l'anglais): La Commission s'est saisie de la question pour la première fois en tant que problème particulier au titre du point 24 de l'ordre du jour. La plupart des délégations qui ont participé aux discussions ont réaffirmé le droit inaliénable des peuples des territoires coloniaux à l'autodétermination, à l'indépendance et aux ressources naturelles de leur territoire, ainsi que leur droit de disposer de ces ressources au mieux de leurs intérêts.

2. De nombreux membres ont condamné l'exploitation des territoires et des peuples coloniaux par des monopoles étrangers, notamment en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, parce que cette exploitation épuise les ressources humaines et naturelles de ces territoires et fait obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. A ce sujet, ils ont adressé un appel aux

Etats dont les ressortissants ou les entreprises ont des intérêts économiques, financiers ou autres dans les territoires coloniaux pour qu'ils prennent des mesures en vue de mettre fin aux activités de ces intérêts.

3. Un grand nombre de délégations ont condamné également la politique des puissances coloniales, qui crée des conditions favorables à l'exploitation des ressources naturelles des territoires sous leur domination au détriment des intérêts des populations autochtones, qui dépossède de leurs terres les habitants autochtones et qui encourage un régime de travail discriminatoire. Elles ont invité ces Etats à mettre fin à ces pratiques injustes, qui vont à l'encontre des principes de la Charte des Nations Unies. Elles ont fait remarquer que les puissances coloniales, en agissant ainsi, violaient les obligations qui leur incombent au titre des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte. En raison de ces considérations, tous les Etats intéressés, en particulier les puissances coloniales, ont été exhortés à reconsidérer tous les privilèges et toutes les concessions accordées pour l'exploitation des territoires sous domination coloniale.

4. En outre, le Comité des vingt-quatre puissances a été prié de poursuivre son étude du problème et de faire rapport à ce sujet à l'Assemblée générale à sa vingt-troisième session.

5. Ces considérations figurent dans le projet de résolution qui fait l'objet du paragraphe 11 du rapport [A/6939] que la Commission recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter. Ce projet de résolution, présenté par 60 puissances, a été adopté par la Quatrième Commission, à l'issue d'un vote par appel nominal, par 86 voix contre 2, avec 17 abstentions. J'espère que le projet de résolution que nous vous présentons recevra un large appui de l'Assemblée générale.

Conformément à l'article 68 du règlement intérieur, il est décidé de ne pas discuter le rapport de la Quatrième Commission.

6. Le PRÉSIDENT: En vertu de la décision que l'Assemblée vient de prendre, les interventions seront limitées à des explications de vote.

7. M. MBEKEANI (Malawi) [traduit de l'anglais]: Pour expliquer son vote sur le projet de résolution qui figure dans le rapport de la Quatrième Commission [A/6939, par. 11] sur les activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires se trouvant sous domination portugaise, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique, ma délégation tient à souligner qu'elle est fermement opposée au colonialisme et qu'elle désapprouve la politique d'apartheid et de discrimination raciale sous quelque forme qu'elle se manifeste. Mon gouvernement et ma délégation ont déclaré en termes non équivoques, à maintes reprises, que mon pays ne tolère pas et ne tolérera jamais cette politique. Nous déplorons profondément qu'elle continue à être pratiquée, où que ce soit. Nous avons déjà affirmé cette position dans le passé et nous la maintenons.

8. Pourtant, ma délégation ne croit pas que le problème de l'apartheid puisse être résolu par des insultes ou par le vote, par l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de résolutions rédigées en termes énergiques; il ne peut pas l'être non plus par l'emploi de la force armée contre ceux qui pratiquent cette politique. On nous a dit ici à maintes reprises que les temps étaient révolus où on pouvait résoudre les problèmes coloniaux par l'envoi de canonnières. Ma délégation est convaincue que, si nous voulons commencer — au moins commencer — à chercher à résoudre ce problème, il faut penser sérieusement à entamer un dialogue avec ces gens-là. Discutons. Ma délégation croit que si on pouvait commencer, on pourrait arriver à un résultat.

9. Ma délégation s'intéresse vivement à la question dont nous sommes saisis et elle a examiné avec attention le rapport du Comité des vingt-quatre puissances [A/6868] et le rapport du Sous-Comité I [A/6868/Add.1]. Tout en rendant hommage au Sous-Comité I pour l'abondance des renseignements et des faits contenus dans son rapport, elle peut difficilement admettre ou approuver certaines des conclusions et des recommandations que ce sous-comité tire de la masse des faits. Aussi bien dans les rapports que dans la discussion générale, on a remplacé des études véritables par des généralisations et cela n'a pas contribué à faire avancer la question aussi rapidement qu'il convenait.

10. Ce n'est un secret pour personne que la plupart des pays en voie de développement d'Asie et d'Afrique qui ont accédé à l'indépendance au cours des 20 dernières années comptent, pour la plus grande partie de leur économie nationale, sur les anciennes activités économiques coloniales. Dans la plupart des cas également, ces mêmes activités ont été maintenues après l'indépendance, volontairement, bien entendu, par les gouvernements nationaux intéressés. Même maintenant — ce n'est pas non plus un secret — nous voyons de nombreux ministres des affaires étrangères et chefs d'Etat courir les capitales des pays développés à la recherche d'aide étrangère, offrant même pour cette aide et pour des investissements étrangers des conditions plus favorables que celles qu'offraient les gouvernements coloniaux à l'époque où ces intérêts étrangers exerçaient une activité dans les colonies.

11. De l'avis de ma délégation, il n'a pas été répondu à la question importante de savoir dans quelle mesure — si même c'est le cas — les intérêts économiques étrangers, en tant que distincts des intérêts d'un gouvernement colonial, font vraiment obstacle à la réalisation de l'autodétermination et de l'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux; on n'a pas non plus essayé d'examiner ce que serait réellement la situation économique et politique des territoires coloniaux si on supprimait dans ces territoires toute activité des intérêts économiques étrangers, comme le rapport le recommande.

12. Ma délégation se souvient de certaines déclarations qui ont été faites au cours des débats sur cette question à la Quatrième Commission par des représentants qui semblaient vivement désireux de démasquer complètement les ennemis de l'indépendance africaine, ceux qui s'opposent aux combattants de la liberté et même les délégations qui trouvent facile et commode de s'empresse d'affirmer devant l'Organisation que leur pays ou leur gouvernement est partisan de la décolonisation et de nier toute coopération de leur part avec les régimes minoritaires d'Afrique australe. Ce sont des assertions de ce genre, venant de pays ou de délégations que nous savons incapables de rompre avec les pays mêmes qu'ils prétendent boycotter, qui rendent dérisoires nos importantes délibérations.

13. Ce n'est pas, pour un pays indépendant, coopérer avec un gouvernement colonial que de négocier avec celui-ci au sujet d'installations ferroviaires spéciales ou d'avoir des représentants de ses travailleurs dans un pays qui pratique la discrimination, ou même de bénéficier dans ses mines de main-d'œuvre et de capitaux provenant du pays condamné. Les représentants ici présents qui connaissent d'autres pays d'Afrique producteurs de diamants ou d'or savent fort bien que ces pays ne pourraient pas vendre leurs diamants et leur or s'ils ne coopéraient pas avec ces régimes. Je ne désigne aucune délégation en particulier. Je dis simplement: "A bon entendeur, salut!". Un pays ne va-t-il pas à l'encontre de la résolution du Conseil de sécurité sur la Rhodésie [232 (1966)] en autorisant un de ses ressortissants à ouvrir à Salisbury, bien qu'en secret, un bureau pour l'achat de tabac rhodésien? Encore une fois, à bon entendeur, salut!

14. Est-il honnête pour un représentant de se laisser aller à prononcer dans cette salle une condamnation facile et générale, alors que cette condamnation restera sans effet dans son propre pays? On ne peut pas s'empêcher de se demander si un tel comportement ne contribue pas à nous empêcher d'avancer vers nos objectifs et ne compromet pas les résultats que nous nous efforçons sérieusement d'obtenir par nos délibérations. Ma délégation n'est pas étonnée — et l'Organisation ne doit pas l'être non plus — que, faute de propositions constructives et de prises de position honnêtes, ces questions traînent indéfiniment, malgré nos efforts répétés. Nous devrions, au point où nous en sommes, commencer à nous demander quels sont les véritables ennemis de l'indépendance africaine.

15. En raison de ce que je viens de dire, ma délégation tient à réserver sa position en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution qui figure dans le rapport de la Quatrième Commission.

16. M. SZYMANOWSKI (Pologne) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au cours du débat à la Quatrième Commission sur la question dont nous sommes saisis, la délégation de la Pologne, comme beaucoup d'autres, a exprimé sa satisfaction de ce que ce problème fasse l'objet pour la première fois d'un point particulier de l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale. Nous considérons cette décision comme très importante pour l'accomplissement de la tâche difficile et lourde qui incombe à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, à savoir d'identifier, de démasquer et de supprimer un très gros obstacle qui barre aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux la route de l'indépendance.

17. Les faits relatifs aux activités des intérêts étrangers qui sont énumérés dans les documents et rapports pertinents, ainsi que ceux qui ont été cités au cours du débat, constituent un acte d'accusation très grave contre les monopoles étrangers, les régimes coloniaux responsables de l'administration des divers territoires et les puissances qui favorisent et encouragent ces activités. A ce sujet, je tiens à appeler l'attention de l'Assemblée sur un document important qui, malheureusement, ne nous est parvenu qu'après la fin du débat à la Quatrième Commission. Il s'agit du document A/6941 qui contient un exposé d'ensemble fait par le Gouvernement de la République démocratique allemande. Dans cet exposé sont relatés des faits très pertinents qui concernent le rôle joué par des intérêts de l'Allemagne occidentale en Afrique australe et qui étayaient solidement les arguments que nous avons présentés à la Quatrième Commission.

18. Cette conjuration infâme des intérêts des monopoles et des puissances coloniales désireuses de maintenir le régime colonial afin que les pratiques d'exploitation, d'oppression et de discrimination puissent persister constitue aujourd'hui l'essence même du problème colonial. Nous croyons donc que l'Assemblée générale devrait adopter une résolution particulièrement claire, formulée en termes énergiques, et ne laissant subsister aucune excuse ni aucune échappatoire aux forces qui constituent le principal obstacle à la décolonisation.

19. Dans l'ensemble, le projet de résolution qui nous est présenté [A/6939, par. 11] répond à ces conditions. Le fait qu'il est présenté par un très grand nombre de pays est par lui-même encourageant et significatif. Nous le saluons comme une première étape importante, mais, en même temps, nous tenons à déclarer, pour qu'il en soit fait mention au procès-verbal, que nous ne sommes pas entièrement satisfaits de la rédaction de certains de ses paragraphes. C'est la raison principale pour laquelle nous prenons la parole maintenant.

20. Nous sommes d'autant plus désireux de faire connaître nos observations qu'un certain nombre de délégations des différentes parties du monde en ont présenté d'analogues à la Quatrième Commission. Je me limiterai à deux points seulement.

21. Le premier est que ma délégation n'approuve pas le libellé du premier paragraphe du dispositif, où on a ajouté l'expression "en général" pour limiter la portée de l'approbation que l'Assemblée donne au rapport du Comité des vingt-quatre puissances. La Pologne est membre de ce comité. Nous estimons qu'il a contribué pour une large part à cerner le problème et à l'approfondir. Nous approuvons entièrement le rapport et ses conclusions et nous aurions préféré que l'Assemblée fît de même. C'est plus qu'une question de mots. Le fait que l'Assemblée générale fasse manifestement des réserves sur certains passages du rapport ne peut qu'apporter un réconfort et un encouragement aux forces que nous cherchons à démasquer et à condamner.

22. Le deuxième point est que d'autres paragraphes du dispositif, notamment les paragraphes 6 et 8, devraient à notre avis être plus clairs et sans équivoque. Nos débats ont fait apparaître très nettement que la plupart des concessions, des privilèges, des contrats, etc., accordés à des ressortissants ou à des entreprises de pays étrangers ou conclus avec eux sont, en fait, préjudiciables aux intérêts des habitants autochtones des territoires coloniaux et que ces actes de caractère juridique constituent réellement un instrument essentiel de l'exploitation coloniale.

23. Nous croyons donc que notre projet de résolution devrait les dénoncer très clairement et, dans certains cas, les déclarer nuls et non avenue. C'est particulièrement le cas des actes promulgués ou signés par le régime illégal de la Rhodésie et par l'administration sud-africaine en ce qui concerne le Sud-Ouest africain.

24. L'invitation contenue dans le paragraphe 6 est bien plus une recommandation anodine qu'une estimation réelle de la situation, et celle qui fait l'objet du paragraphe 8 ne nous paraît pas assez pressante. Ce que nous attendons des puissances coloniales, ce n'est pas qu'elles reconsidèrent les privilèges et les concessions qui existent, c'est qu'elles renoncent aux pratiques actuelles en la matière.

25. En résumé, nous croyons que le projet de résolution aurait pu et aurait dû être plus précis et plus ferme sur certains points, car il traite d'une question de la plus haute importance. Cependant, tel qu'il est, il constitue un document très précieux et il marque une étape prometteuse dans la voie de la décolonisation. La délégation polonaise l'appuie très sincèrement et elle est prête à voter pour lui.

26. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée est appelée à se prononcer sur le projet de résolution dont la Quatrième Commission recommande l'adoption et qui figure dans son rapport [A/6939, par. 11]. Un vote séparé et par appel nominal a été demandé pour le paragraphe 1. Je mets ce paragraphe aux voix.

Par 91 voix contre 2, avec 17 abstentions, le projet de résolution est adopté [résolution 2288 (XXII)].

28. Le PRESIDENT: Je vais maintenant donner la parole aux représentants qui ont demandé à expliquer leur vote.

29. Lord CARADON (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je me suis abstenu lors du vote qui vient d'avoir lieu et je voudrais en expliquer les raisons.

30. Aucun gouvernement n'a davantage que le mien le droit de condamner l'exploitation des peuples coloniaux. Aucun n'a davantage que lui le droit de condamner tout retard apporté à leur accession à l'indépendance. Aucun n'a davantage que lui le droit de condamner la discrimination. En moins d'un quart de siècle, un quart de la population du monde, qui était sous administration britannique, a accédé à l'indépendance. Dans presque toutes les nations nouvelles ainsi créées, l'indépendance a été réalisée sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes, de l'autonomie du pouvoir judiciaire et d'institutions pleinement démocratiques. Dans aucun de ces pays, il n'a été permis aux intérêts économiques ou autres de contrarier la politique délibérée et heureuse d'évolution vers l'indépendance politique et économique. Telle a toujours été la politique de mon gouvernement. Nous pouvons appuyer ce que dit à ce sujet la résolution.

31. Cependant, celle-ci, dans le paragraphe 1 de son dispositif, approuve un rapport [A/6868 et Add.1] qu'il nous est impossible d'accepter. Nous avons voté contre ce paragraphe en Quatrième Commission et nous avons fait de même aujourd'hui. C'est surtout parce que nous ne pouvons en aucune façon accepter ce qui est dit dans ce rapport, base de la résolution, que nous nous sommes abstenus lors du vote sur l'ensemble de celle-ci.

32. Le rapport en question part d'une conception fausse. Il repose sur une erreur et même, pis que cela, sur une théorie néfaste qui, si elle était admise, pourrait faire le plus grand mal aux nations en voie de développement. Quelle est-elle? C'est celle — que vient de rejeter le représentant de la Pologne — qui affirme que les investissements privés constituent une menace, qu'il faut les décourager, que dans les territoires coloniaux ils conduisent obligatoirement à l'exploitation et qu'ils empêchent l'évolution vers l'indépendance. C'est cette erreur qui déforme le rapport.

33. De nombreux pays en voie de développement n'ont que peu ou point de capitaux qui leur soient propres. Ils aspirent ardemment au développement. Mais sans capitaux, il ne peut y avoir de développement. D'où doivent venir les capitaux? Certains peuvent avoir pour origine la Banque mondiale ou des banques régionales ou, en ce qui concerne le capital humain, sous forme de préinvestissements et d'assistance technique, le Programme des Nations Unies pour le développement. D'autres peuvent avoir comme source une aide bilatérale accordée par un gouvernement à un autre, encore qu'il soit bon de dire en passant que par comparaison le bloc oriental ne donne qu'une aide bien faible aux pays en voie de développement. Mais tous ceux qui, comme je l'ai fait moi-même pendant la plus grande partie de ma vie, ont travaillé dans des territoires dépendants en voie de développement, qui sont maintenant tous indépendants, savent fort bien que l'aide multilatérale ou bilatérale ne suffit pas. Les investissements privés sont d'une importance vitale. Les pays qui attirent ces investissements progressent, alors que ceux qui ne le font pas stagnent dans la pauvreté.

34. Je ne parle pas aujourd'hui des pays de l'Afrique australe. Là, le problème est racial bien plus que colonial et nous avons nettement affirmé en de nombreuses occasions que nous n'admettions pas la politique suivie dans cette région. Mais décourager, condamner et refuser les investissements privés dans les pays en voie de développement, c'est commettre un crime contre les peuples de ces pays — des peuples qui ont besoin de sortir de leur état actuel de dégradation économique.

*Le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie a ultérieurement informé le Secrétariat que s'il avait été présent il aurait voté en faveur du paragraphe 1.

35. Bien entendu, il est nécessaire de contrôler les activités des investissements privés. Bien entendu, il est nécessaire d'imposer leurs bénéfices. Bien entendu, il est nécessaire de garantir, par une législation sociale raisonnable, que ces investissements servent l'intérêt public. C'est exactement ce que les Parlements élus longtemps avant l'indépendance au suffrage universel des adultes dans les territoires coloniaux britanniques font depuis bien des années. Ils n'ont pas manqué à leur devoir envers les peuples qui les ont élus. Mais décrier les investissements privés et nier leur contribution au développement, comme le fait le rapport aveugle et partial dont nous sommes saisis, c'est rendre un très mauvais service aux peuples des nations en voie de développement.

36. Loin d'attaquer les investissements privés, notre devoir est de les encourager et de les faciliter. Tous les pays en voie de développement peuvent tirer profit d'investissements privés sagement contrôlés. Aucun ne peut prospérer sans eux. En fait, je le répète, tous les ministres des pays en voie de développement savent qu'il en est ainsi.

37. C'est surtout parce que le rapport auquel se réfère cette résolution déforme et conteste cette vérité économique évidente et essentielle que je me suis abstenu lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet.

38. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation a voté contre le projet de résolution contenu dans le rapport de la Quatrième Commission. Elle a expliqué très clairement en temps opportun à cette commission les raisons de son vote. Elle demande que les déclarations qu'elle a faites à cette occasion soient considérées comme renouvelées pour le procès-verbal de la séance plénière.

La séance est levée à 16 h 10.

Vingt-deuxième session
Point 24 de l'ordre du jour

ACTIVITES DES INTERETS ETRANGERS, ECONOMIQUES ET AUTRES, QUI FONT OBSTACLE A L'APPLICATION DE LA DECLARATION SUR L'OCTROI DE L'INDEPENDANCE AUX PAYS ET AUX PEUPLES COLONIAUX EN RHODESIE DU SUD, AU SUD-OUEST AFRICAIN ET DANS LES TERRITOIRES SOUS DOMINATION PORTUGAISE, AINSI QUE DANS TOUS LES AUTRES TERRITOIRES SE TROUVANT SOUS DOMINATION COLONIALE, ET AUX EFFORTS TENDANT A ELIMINER LE COLONIALISME, L'APARTHEID ET LA DISCRIMINATION RACIALE DANS LE SUD DE L'AFRIQUE

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission

Rapporteur : M. Buyantyn DASHTSEREN (Mongolie)

1. Conformément à la décision prise par l'Assemblée générale au paragraphe 20 de la résolution 2189 (XXI), du 13 décembre 1966, le Secrétaire général a inscrit à l'ordre du jour provisoire de la vingt-deuxième session (A/6680/Rev.1) une question intitulée "Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale".
2. A sa 166ème séance, le 21 septembre 1967, le Bureau de l'Assemblée a décidé de recommander l'inscription de cette question à l'ordre du jour sous un nouveau libellé, à savoir : "Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique".

A sa 167ème séance, le 22 septembre, le Bureau a décidé également de recommander à l'Assemblée générale de renvoyer l'examen de ce point à la Quatrième Commission.

3. A sa 1564ème séance plénière, le 23 septembre, l'Assemblée générale, en adoptant les recommandations du Bureau (A/6840), a inscrit la question à son ordre du jour et l'a renvoyée à la Quatrième Commission pour examen et rapport (A/6851/Rev.1).

4. La Quatrième Commission a examiné cette question de sa 1718ème à sa 1725ème séance et à ses 1730ème, 1732ème, 1735ème et 1736ème séances, tenues entre le 14 novembre et le 4 décembre.

5. A la 1718ème séance, le 14 novembre, le Rapporteur du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux a présenté le rapport de ce Comité concernant les activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale (A/6868 et Add.1).

6. A la 1719ème séance, le 15 novembre, le Président a informé la Quatrième Commission qu'il avait reçu une lettre datée du 13 novembre 1967 qui lui avait été adressée par le Président de la Commission politique spéciale et dans laquelle celui-ci lui transmettait une lettre datée du 2 novembre 1967 émanant de M. James Forman, représentant du Student Non violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), qui contenait une demande d'audition concernant le point 24 de l'ordre du jour (A/C.4/699). A sa 1720ème séance, le 16 novembre, la Commission a décidé de faire droit à cette demande.

7. A la 1721ème séance, le 17 novembre, M. James Forman a fait une déclaration et a répondu aux questions qui lui ont été posées par un membre de la Commission. Au cours de la même séance, il a été décidé de faire distribuer la déclaration faite par le pétitionnaire comme document de la Commission (A/C.4/700).

8. La discussion générale consacrée à la question s'est déroulée de la 1718ème à la 1725ème séance, du 14 au 21 novembre.

RECOMMANDATION DE LA QUATRIEME COMMISSION

11. En conséquence, la Quatrième Commission recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter le projet de résolution ci-après :

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique

L'Assemblée générale,

Ayant examiné le point de l'ordre du jour intitulé "Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique",

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatif aux activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les autres territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale

Ayant entendu la déclaration du pétitionnaire^{2/},

Rappelant sa résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960, et en particulier le huitième alinéa du préambule de ladite résolution,

Rappelant également ses résolutions 2105 (XX) du 20 décembre 1965 et 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966, ainsi que toutes autres résolutions pertinentes,

^{1/} A/6868 et Add.1.

^{2/} A/C.4/700.

Considérant que les puissances coloniales se sont engagées à assurer le progrès politique, économique, social et culturel des habitants des territoires qu'elles administrent et à protéger les populations et les ressources naturelles de ces territoires contre les abus, conformément aux Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte des Nations Unies,

Convaincue que toutes activités économiques ou autres qui font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) sont incompatibles avec les buts et principes de la Charte des Nations Unies,

1. Approuve en général le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatif aux activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale;

2. Réaffirme le droit inaliénable des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et à la possession des ressources naturelles de leurs territoires ainsi que de leur droit à disposer de ces ressources au mieux de leurs intérêts;

3. Déclare que les puissances coloniales qui privent les peuples coloniaux de l'exercice et de la pleine jouissance de ces droits ou font passer les intérêts économiques ou financiers de leurs ressortissants ou des ressortissants d'autres pays avant ceux des autochtones violent les obligations qui leur incombent en vertu des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte des Nations Unies et font obstacle à l'application intégrale et rapide de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale;

4. Condamne énergiquement l'exploitation des pays et des peuples coloniaux ainsi que les méthodes pratiquées dans les territoires sous domination coloniale par les intérêts étrangers, financiers, économiques et autres, qui visent à perpétuer les régimes coloniaux contrairement aux principes énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV);

5. Déplore la politique des puissances coloniales qui permet l'exploitation des ressources naturelles des territoires sous leur administration au détriment des intérêts de la population autochtone et qui encourage ou tolère des régimes de travail et autres pratiques injustes et discriminatoires;

6. Prie tous les Etats intéressés de s'acquitter de l'obligation fondamentale qu'ils ont de veiller à ce que les concessions qui sont octroyées à leurs nationaux ainsi que les exploitations qui leur sont consenties et les investissements qu'ils sont autorisés à faire dans les territoires sous domination coloniale n'aillent pas à l'encontre des intérêts présents ou futurs des habitants autochtones desdits territoires;

7. Prie en outre les puissances coloniales d'interdire les pratiques ci-après qui vont à l'encontre des principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et en violant les droits économiques et sociaux des peuples des territoires soumis à la domination coloniale, font obstacle à la mise en oeuvre de la résolution 1514 (XV), pratiques conçues pour :

- a) Exploiter la main-d'oeuvre et les ressources naturelles au détriment des intérêts des habitants autochtones;
- b) Entraver l'accès des habitants autochtones à ces ressources;
- c) Tolérer et encourager l'injustice et la discrimination dans la rémunération de la main-d'oeuvre et dans l'établissement des conditions de travail;

8. Exhorte les puissances coloniales à reconsidérer, en tenant compte des dispositions de la présente résolution, tous les privilèges et concessions qui sont contraires aux intérêts des habitants autochtones;

9. Prie le Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain de prendre d'urgence les mesures propres à mettre fin, dans le territoire, aux lois et aux pratiques établies par le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud et qui sont contraires aux buts et principes de la Charte des Nations Unies;

10. Invite les puissances coloniales à cesser immédiatement de déposséder la population autochtone de ses terres et à prendre des mesures immédiates pour lui restituer toutes les terres dont elle a été expropriée;

11. Engage tous les Etats intéressés à coopérer pleinement avec l'Organisation en vue de l'application rapide et effective de la résolution 1514 (XV), afin de garantir aux peuples l'exercice de leur droit à l'auto-détermination et à l'indépendance, ainsi que la jouissance des ressources naturelles de leurs propres territoires;

12. Prie le Comité spécial de poursuivre l'étude du problème et de faire rapport à ce sujet à l'Assemblée générale à sa vingt-troisième session;

13. Décide de maintenir cette question à son ordre du jour.

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le Sud de l'Afrique (A/6868 et Add.1)

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE

1. M. ESFANDIARY (Iran) [Rapporteur du Comité spécial] présente à la Quatrième Commission le rapport du Comité spécial concernant les activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique (A/6868 et Add.1).

2. En adoptant les recommandations du Comité spécial, l'Assemblée générale a décidé, au paragraphe 20 du dispositif de la résolution 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966, d'inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour provisoire de la vingt-deuxième session. Au début de sa session de 1967, en vue d'aider l'Assemblée générale à examiner la question, le Comité spécial en a confié l'étude au Sous-Comité I. Le Comité spécial a adopté le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1), et approuvé ses conclusions et recommandations qui figurent dans les paragraphes 81 à 133 de ce document.

3. Le Rapporteur indique également qu'au cours de l'année le Comité spécial a accordé une attention particulière à cette question lorsqu'il a procédé à l'examen du cas des territoires de l'Afrique australe lors des réunions tenues hors du Siège. Une résolution a été adoptée le 20 juin 1967 au sujet de ces territoires; le texte de cette résolution figure au paragraphe 744 du rapport du Comité spécial (A/6700, Rev.1, chap. II).

4. M. MALECELA (République-Unie de Tanzanie) note que le rôle des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, dans les territoires sous domination coloniale a déjà été étudié par le Comité spécial et son sous-comité I. Le fait que la Quatrième Commission soit appelée à poursuivre l'examen de la question montre combien elle est importante et directement liée à la lutte menée pour obtenir l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

5. A la suite des études faites au sujet du territoire du Sud-Ouest africain, des territoires administrés par le Portugal et de la Rhodésie du Sud, le Sous-Comité I, puis le Comité spécial et l'Assemblée générale ont conclu que les activités des intérêts étrangers font effectivement obstacle à la libération et à l'indépendance des populations intéressées. Il est, certes, légitime de faire ressortir le bon côté des investissements économiques, mais, en considérant la situation de l'Afrique australe, on s'aperçoit que, si certaines puissances occidentales n'y possédaient pas d'importants intérêts, il serait plus facile pour ces territoires d'accéder à l'indépendance. Il est indéniable également que c'est l'exploitation qui a abouti au colonialisme, dont le but initial était d'assurer des marchés aux puissances métropolitaines.

6. En ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Sud, M. Malecela a déjà eu l'occasion de souligner que, sans l'assistance financière des monopoles capitalistes, le régime de Smith n'aurait pu survivre aussi longtemps. C'est pourquoi l'échec des sanctions économiques était prévisible du fait des activités dans ce territoire de certaines puissances occidentales qui sont Membres de l'Organisation.

7. Les renseignements fournis par le Secrétariat au Sous-Comité I ont mis en évidence le rôle négatif des monopoles étrangers en Rhodésie du Sud. Le document établi par le Secrétariat (A/6868/Add.1, appendice I) indique qu'une société américaine la Continental Ore Corporation, qui achète de la fonte brute à la Rhodésie du Sud, a importé en 1966 une plus grande quantité de produits qu'en 1965. D'après ce même document, le régime raciste minoritaire comptait augmenter de 5,5 millions de dollars chaque année ses ressources en devises étrangères en exploitant les dépôts de nickel. Il est, d'ailleurs, intéressant de noter que 85 p. 100 des intérêts de la Trojan Mine, qui extrait ce nickel, ont été achetés par l'Anglo-American Corporation.

8. La société britannique Turner and Newall, Ltd., qui représente 63 p. 100 de la production totale d'amiante, a fait savoir en septembre 1966 que ses ventes d'amiante avaient augmenté et s'élevaient à quelque 94,8 millions de livres. Le pétrole, si important en l'occurrence, continue de parvenir en quantités suffisantes à la Rhodésie du Sud en dépit des prétendues sanctions. Nul n'ignore en fait que les principaux fournisseurs de ce produit sont des sociétés britanniques et américaines comme la British Petroleum, Mobil, Caltex, etc. Une étude plus complète des activités des monopoles étrangers en Rhodésie du Sud ayant déjà été faite, M. Malecela ne veut pas prolonger son exposé et se bornera à formuler sa conclusion qui est que les activités de ces sociétés qui sont originaires d'Etats membres du Conseil de sécurité, sont principalement responsables de l'échec des sanctions modérées imposées par le Conseil. Les monopoles en question contribuent et participent directement à l'exploitation des ressources naturelles et des ressources en main-d'œuvre de la Rhodésie du Sud. Dans son écrasante majorité, la population de la Rhodésie du Sud, s'exprimant par l'intermédiaire du mouvement de libération nationale, s'est élevée contre les activités des monopoles étrangers et contre leur association avec les forces du colonialisme. La Commission ne peut que condamner l'attitude négative des divers éléments qui s'opposent à la libération du peuple africain du Zimbabwe.

9. Il n'est guère besoin de rappeler que les salaires payés par les monopoles aux travailleurs africains dans les territoires colonisés correspondent à un dixième environ de ceux que perçoivent les travailleurs européens. Cela explique en partie les énormes bénéfices de ces sociétés et le fait que les Africains ne progressent pas dans la même mesure que les Européens. Etant donné que, dans beaucoup de territoires colonisés d'Afrique, il faut pour pouvoir voter justifier d'un certain revenu, si cette inégalité de salaire persiste, les Africains seront pendant longtemps encore privés du droit de vote à cause de ces monopoles. On voit donc concrètement comment les sociétés étrangères empêchent les populations africaines d'accéder à la liberté et à l'indépendance.

10. Quant aux territoires sous domination portugaise, M. Malecela rappelle qu'il a déjà donné de nombreuses précisions sur les activités de certaines sociétés exerçant leurs activités dans ces territoires. La Gulf Oil Corporation, qui a dépensé l'année précédente 22 millions de dollars pour l'exploitation du pétrole en Angola, y consacrera 28 millions de dollars en 1967 et 76 millions en 1968. Ces investissements rendent le Portugal intransigeant et l'amènent évidemment à intensifier la lutte armée contre les mouvements de libération. Les exemples de l'exploitation à laquelle est soumis l'Angola abondent dans le document de travail du Secrétariat (A/6868/Add.1, appendice III). On y constate que l'Angola Diamond Company, à laquelle a été accordée une concession portant sur 1 025 700 km², a contribué pour 195 millions d'escudos au budget du Portugal pour ce territoire. D'après un article de la South African Financial Gazette de Johannesburg du 18 mars 1966, la production du pétrole en Angola devra atteindre 2 millions de tonnes par an au cours des deux prochaines années pour répondre aux besoins croissants de l'Afrique du Sud, de la Rhodésie du Sud, de l'Angola et du Mozambique. D'énormes investissements vont être faits en vertu d'un accord conclu entre la Petrangol et le Gouvernement portugais; cet accord permet à la Petrangol de procéder à l'extraction du pétrole avec huit autres compagnies, deux étant sud-africaines et les autres françaises, italiennes et portugaises. Lorsque la production de pétrole de l'Angola atteindra 2 millions de tonnes par an, elle pourra satisfaire un quart environ des besoins de l'Afrique australe.

11. La même situation existe au Sud-Ouest africain et, selon l'ouvrage de Ruth First intitulé South West Africa, la Consolidated Diamond Mines de l'énorme empire de la compagnie De Beers-Anglo-American réalise des bénéfices annuels au Sud-Ouest africain qui correspondent à près du double du budget de ce territoire. La Tsumeb Corporation, compagnie américaine qui exploite la mine de plomb la plus importante du continent africain, ne cache pas son attachement au Gouvernement sud-africain.

12. Tous ces renseignements révèlent que les intérêts et les droits des populations africaines sont bafoués dans tous les territoires. On a dit en certaines occasions qu'il fallait donner aux colonialistes le temps de s'adapter à une situation nouvelle; or ils ne sauraient profiter de ce répit que pour investir davantage et maintenir ainsi leur emprise.

13. La délégation tanzanienne espère que l'examen de la question à l'ordre du jour permettra de faire la lumière sur tout ce qui fait obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Il est, d'ores et déjà, évident que l'oppression coloniale se perpétue dans les territoires coloniaux en raison des énormes intérêts économiques en jeu. La délégation tanzanienne est prête à collaborer à l'élaboration d'un projet de résolution reflétant les vues de la Commission sur cette question.

14. Mlle IMRU (Ethiopie) déclare que la question à l'examen est très importante, car elle permet de comprendre une des causes principales du maintien du régime colonial dans certains territoires, et de trouver des solutions à cet état de choses.

15. Les immenses richesses de la Rhodésie, des territoires administrés par le Portugal et du Sud-Ouest africain ne sont pas exploitées dans l'intérêt des autochtones; elles sont au contraire la cause de l'oppression qu'ils endurent. Les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies condamnent cette oppression, mais ils sont incapables d'y mettre fin, et le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud les défient impunément. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I du Comité spécial (A/6868/Add.1) montre quelles sont les raisons profondes de cette impuissance. Au paragraphe 108, il est dit qu'un groupe d'intérêts sud-africains, britanniques et américains étroitement liés les uns aux autres joue un rôle prépondérant dans l'économie de toute l'Afrique australe; le noyau de ce groupe est formé par quatre grandes sociétés qui possèdent ensemble un capital d'environ 450 millions de livres sterling. On note également dans le rapport que le volume des investissements privés des Etats-Unis en Afrique du Sud est passé de 286 millions de dollars en 1960 à 528 millions de dollars en 1965, tandis que les investissements directs du Royaume-Uni dans ce même pays atteignent actuellement 900 millions de dollars.

16. Le rapport révèle aussi l'influence politique considérable que les monopoles internationaux ont sur les gouvernements de certaines puissances occidentales; leurs pressions amènent ces puissances, et notamment les Etats-Unis d'Amérique et le Royaume-Uni, à favoriser directement le maintien du statut colonial des territoires d'Afrique australe. Quels espoirs les peuples peuvent-ils placer dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies si deux membres permanents du Conseil de sécurité agissent ainsi, tandis que d'autres membres de l'Organisation, à des degrés divers, entretiennent eux aussi d'étroites relations commerciales avec les puissances coloniales?

17. Le paragraphe 116 du rapport fait apparaître les inégalités de la répartition des terres entre les minorités blanches et les populations autochtones en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain, en Angola, au Mozambique et dans d'autres territoires. Les meilleures terres vont aux étrangers, et une vaste majorité d'agriculteurs autochtones sont contraints de travailler sur les propriétés des Européens dans des conditions qui évoquent le servage. Les colons blancs et les intérêts étrangers ont la haute main sur la production marchande destinée à l'exportation, alors que les autochtones sont réduits à une agriculture de subsistance. La séparation maintenue entre ces deux secteurs constitue un sérieux obstacle au développement économique.

18. Les sociétés étrangères poursuivent des buts matériels étroits et n'ont aucun souci du progrès humain. Les travailleurs autochtones qu'elles emploient sont réduits au rôle d'une main-d'œuvre à bon marché, et aucune possibilité d'émancipation économique et sociale ne leur est offerte. Ils sont payés 5 à 15 fois moins que les blancs; la législation en vigueur leur interdit de former des syndicats ou de faire grève, et il n'existe aucun système de sécurité sociale pour les travailleurs âgés ou handicapés.

19. Dans les territoires portugais, il a été décrété que le sous-sol est la propriété de l'Etat, et des concessions minières sont accordées sans que les autochtones qui possèdent le sol soient consultés. Aux paragraphes 101 et 102 du rapport, il est dit que "de vastes territoires sont attribués" à des sociétés qui "disposent de leurs propres forces de police ou de sécurité et même de leur armée". Ces sociétés "aux termes des accords qu'elles ont conclus avec le Gouvernement portugais, sont tenues d'aider ce dernier à maintenir la paix et l'ordre".

20. Une situation comparable existe dans les territoires du Pacifique et des Antilles. Au paragraphe 97 du rapport, il est noté qu'en Nouvelle-Guinée et au Papua les intérêts étrangers contrôlent les secteurs principaux de l'économie (cultures marchandes et ressources minérales). Aux îles Fidji les plantations de sucre et les mines d'or, principales entreprises du territoire, sont également contrôlées par des étrangers. Aux Bahamas, le tourisme, qui est la seule industrie, est entièrement contrôlé par des capitaux américains et européens.

21. De manière générale, on constate que, dans les territoires coloniaux, les moyens de production (terres, mines, usines, transports) sont aux mains de monopoles étrangers qui font d'immenses bénéfices, tandis que les populations autochtones, loin de participer réellement à la vie économique, sont constamment humiliées par des lois discriminatoires. Les gouvernements des pays coloniaux tolèrent et encouragent ces pratiques, en raison des profits qu'ils en tirent eux-mêmes. La délégation éthiopienne espère que les pays coloniaux et ceux qui encouragent le colonialisme feront enfin un examen de conscience, afin de ne pas faire leur philosophie de la suprématie raciale qu'ils ont combattue au cours de la deuxième guerre mondiale, et d'être réellement à la hauteur de leurs responsabilités.

22. M. BURTICA (Roumanie) déclare que les peuples ne peuvent constituer des nations libres et indépendantes si leur progrès économique et social n'est pas assuré; sans cela ils sont incapables de se libérer réellement du joug colonial.

23. Or, les rapports du Comité spécial montrent que ces dernières années les capitaux étrangers ont joué un rôle toujours croissant dans les territoires soumis à la domination coloniale. C'est là une situation très inquiétante, car, bien qu'on cherche à faire croire que les activités des intérêts étrangers favorisent l'émancipation économique et sociale des colonies, les faits montrent bien quelle est la nature de la mission "civilisatrice" des monopoles internationaux et des "bienfaits" que des intérêts étrangers apportent aux populations autochtones.

24. Des études effectuées par l'ONU et par les institutions spécialisées, il ressort que la population des territoires coloniaux est en grande majorité analphabète et que le nombre des cadres qui ont reçu une formation universitaire est insignifiant. Les autochtones sont délibérément maintenus dans un état retardataire, pour être plus facilement exploités. Ce n'est pas le manque de ressources matérielles et humaines qui est la cause de ce retard, mais bien le régime colonial et l'exploitation du capital étranger.

25. Les monopoles étrangers ne sont animés que par la recherche du profit. Ce qui les intéresse dans les territoires coloniaux, ce sont les bénéfices possibles, bénéfices nettement supérieurs à ceux qu'ils pourraient réaliser dans leurs propres pays, étant donné les bas salaires versés aux travailleurs autochtones. De plus, ils créent une économie déformée, orientée artificiellement vers la production de matières premières agricoles et industrielles destinées à l'exportation, et non vers la satisfaction des besoins des populations. C'est là une politique qui, à long terme, compromet gravement le développement et l'indépendance économique des territoires coloniaux.

26. Cette politique de pillage des richesses naturelles, poursuivie des décennies et des siècles durant par les puissances coloniales, a empêché les peuples de vastes régions du globe de développer leurs forces de production, leur industrie, leur agriculture, leurs connaissances scientifiques, en un mot d'accéder à un niveau de vie matériel et spirituel plus élevé. Elle est à l'origine de la grave inégalité économique et sociale qui va s'accroissant dans le monde et qui crée un des problèmes les plus brûlants de la vie internationale actuelle.

27. Il faut ajouter que les monopoles aident directement les puissances coloniales à maintenir un système d'oppression nécessaire à l'exercice de leurs activités. Ils ont permis à l'Afrique du Sud, au Portugal et à la Rhodésie du Sud d'accroître sensiblement leurs budgets militaires en dépit des sanctions économiques imposées par la communauté internationale. Ils ont été jusqu'à créer des alliances économiques qui constituent en fait, en Afrique australe, la base d'alliances politico-militaires. En Rhodésie du Sud, par exemple, où 65 p. 100 des investissements proviennent de l'étranger, ce sont eux qui contrôlent l'économie, plus que les colons.

28. Le colonialisme, depuis son commencement, il y a plusieurs siècles, a toujours été animé par certains intérêts économiques des métropoles. Ces intérêts ont, au cours de l'histoire récente, freiné le processus de décolonisation et contraint les peuples coloniaux à prendre les armes pour se libérer. La décolonisation a beaucoup progressé, mais les colonialistes veulent encore sauver ce qu'il leur reste de privilèges, et même reconquérir les positions perdues. Il n'est donc pas surprenant que les peuples coloniaux se heurtent à une résistance accrue des monopoles étrangers. Dans leur lutte, les peuples coloniaux peuvent compter sur l'appui du peuple roumain, et M. Burtica souhaite que l'ONU, pour sa part, agisse de manière plus énergique pour mettre fin à la situation intolérable qui existe en Afrique australe et en d'autres lieux du monde.

29. M. JOUEJATI (Syrie) déclare que la résistance acharnée que les dernières puissances coloniales opposent à l'évolution irréversible des peuples colonisés vers l'indépendance était, encore récemment, difficile à expliquer. Pourquoi tant d'argent dépensé pour les armements, tant de sacrifices, tant de haines créées? En un mot, on voyait mal si, véritablement, "le jeu en valait la chandelle". Ce n'est que peu à peu que la logique profonde de cet état de choses est apparue. Aujourd'hui, grâce aux efforts du Comité spécial et à ceux du Secrétariat de l'ONU, on se rend mieux compte de toute l'ampleur du rôle joué dans les territoires coloniaux par de puissants intérêts qui se cachent derrière la façade de sociétés privées apparemment innocentes.

30. La révélation essentielle à laquelle les études effectuées ont permis d'aboutir est que ces intérêts ont des caractéristiques et des buts communs; ils sont interdépendants et s'associent pour se donner une influence et des moyens de pression considérables. Dans certains cas, cette coordination est facile, certaines intérêts n'étant que les ramifications d'une société qui a son siège dans une capitale du monde capitaliste. Dans d'autres cas, ils se sont consolidés en s'associant aux colons étrangers. Mais, le plus souvent, on est en présence d'une forme de coopération encore plus solide: une coopération directe avec les puissances coloniales, si étroite que les objectifs des sociétés privées et ceux des gouvernements de ces pays finissent par se confondre.

31. Cette coordination une fois assurée, les activités des intérêts étrangers dans les pays coloniaux se développent selon un processus facile à comprendre, et particulièrement évident dans les territoires africains. En premier lieu, la puissance coloniale met en vigueur une législation qui permet aux intérêts étrangers d'acquérir des terres dans des conditions avantageuses. Il ne s'agit pas de terres abandonnées ou stériles, mais bien de terres d'une fertilité exceptionnelle, ou riches en ressources minérales. Les autochtones, propriétaires légitimes, sont dépossédés sans scrupules. Dans certains cas les concessions accordées aux sociétés étrangères atteignent des proportions gigantesques: par exemple, l'Angola Diamond Company a à elle seule, en Angola, une concession exclusive pour la prospection et l'exploitation qui couvre une superficie de 1 025 700 km carrés.

32. En deuxième lieu, les intérêts étrangers exploitent les ressources auxquelles ils ont ainsi accès de la manière la plus intensive, dans les conditions les moins onéreuses, afin de réaliser les bénéfices les plus élevés possibles. On peut arguer que ce sont là les conditions normales de l'exploitation capitaliste, et le représentant d'un pays de l'Ouest a fait observer au Comité spécial que toutes les entreprises capitalistes agissent ainsi; cependant, dans les territoires coloniaux, une situation particulière existe. La main-d'œuvre autochtone n'est pas traitée de la même manière qu'une autre main-d'œuvre, les sociétés en usent comme il leur plaît, et aucune protection ne lui est assurée. Certains défenseurs de ce système d'exploitation ont cherché à le justifier en faisant appel à des notions démodées telles que celles du marché libre et de la loi de l'offre et de la demande; mais on sait que, dans les pays capitalistes eux-mêmes, les conséquences du système capitaliste sont limitées par des mesures de protection sociale telles que le salaire minimum garanti, la sécurité sociale, l'assurance médicale, etc. Les défenseurs de la libre entreprise devraient se demander s'il est admissible qu'une société minière verse à un travailleur africain un salaire journalier de 8 escudos, soit environ 20 cents des Etats-Unis, étant entendu qu'avec ce salaire il doit nourrir sa famille, qui vit souvent à plus de 500 miles de son lieu de travail et payer l'équivalent d'au moins 8 cents d'impôts et de taxes diverses. La société qui traite ainsi ce travailleur africain s'est excusée auprès de ses actionnaires de ce que la production nette ait atteint seulement 928 millions d'escudos en 1965 — soit 24 millions de dollars environ. Le sort pénible des travailleurs africains aurait peut-être un sens s'ils pouvaient compter sur un avenir meilleur, mais on sait malheureusement qu'ils sont délibérément maintenus dans une position subalterne qui ne leur laisse aucun espoir.

33. Les défenseurs de la libre entreprise savent combien cette situation est tragiquement vraie, mais ils prétendent que les investissements étrangers permettent d'accroître le revenu national des territoires. Or, quelle signification peut-on attribuer à cette notion de revenu national, ou de revenu par tête d'habitant, lorsqu'on sait que le revenu des Européens est 10 ou 12 fois supérieur à celui des Africains? De plus, l'accroissement du revenu profite essentiellement à la métropole, tandis que les peuples colonisés n'en tirent que des bienfaits imaginaires. L'objectif premier des colonialistes est en fait d'accroître le bien-être de la métropole, en lui assurant des importations à bon marché, un approvisionnement en matières premières régulier et peu coûteux, des devises fortes et un marché colonial pour son industrie.

34. Après avoir recueilli des renseignements sur les activités des intérêts étrangers pendant deux ans, le Sous-Comité I, chargé de l'étude de cette question, a abouti à la conclusion que ces intérêts ne font que contribuer au renforcement du régime colonial. Les recommandations du Sous-Comité (A/6868/Add.1, par. 133), que le Comité spécial a adoptées, lui ont été dictées par les faits. Il faut absolument qu'elles soient adoptées par la Commission si l'on veut que la communauté des nations ne reste pas passive alors que l'on cherche à perpétuer le régime colonial pour maintenir les privilèges des minorités aux dépens des majorités autochtones.

35. Maintenant que l'ONU a compris la situation réelle qui existe dans les territoires coloniaux, il faut qu'elle agisse rapidement.

36. M. MOROZOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques/) note que les représentants de l'Ethiopie, de la Roumanie, de la Syrie et de la République-Unie de Tanzanie ont à juste titre accordé une importance considérable à la question examinée et il exprime l'espoir qu'eux et d'autres représentants qui interviendront dans les débats en feront de même par la suite. L'activité des monopoles impérialistes étrangers dans les pays coloniaux a en vérité un caractère particulièrement sinistre. L'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, l'appropriation du produit du travail de la majorité écrasante de la population par une petite poignée de capitalistes qui se sont assurés la mainmise sur les moyens de production, ce principe clef du capitalisme et de l'impérialisme prend des proportions et revêt des formes monstrueuses à l'égard des pays et des peuples coloniaux.

37. Si l'on replace la question à l'étude dans un contexte plus large, il apparaît que le point de l'ordre du jour que la Commission vient d'aborder n'est qu'un élément du problème général de la lutte entre le travail et le capital, un élément de la lutte pour l'élimination de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, un élément du problème lié au combat contre le pillage des travailleurs par une poignée de monopoles dont l'activité se manifeste non seulement dans les pays coloniaux, mais aussi dans les pays dont l'économie est fondée sur les principes du capitalisme et de l'impérialisme.

38. M. Morozov ne s'étendra pas sur ce sujet à ce stade, encore qu'il soit sans doute parfaitement opportun de développer l'idée qu'il vient d'exprimer, et qu'il doive revenir par la suite sur les liens communs et les causes communes qui incitent les monopoles étrangers à opérer dans les pays coloniaux pour en piller les richesses naturelles et exploiter dans des proportions monstrueuses la population laborieuse; ces monopoles agissent ainsi non seulement à l'égard des pays coloniaux, mais aussi de nombreux autres pays qui, après la seconde guerre mondiale, ont jeté bas les chaînes de l'esclavage colonialiste. Toutefois, la question dont la Commission s'occupe est inscrite à l'ordre du jour en des termes bien précis; c'est pourquoi, dans le cadre de cette question et sans perdre de vue les liens déjà mentionnés, la délégation soviétique voudrait souligner que toute l'histoire de l'édification du système colonial n'est qu'une suite ininterrompue de crimes sanglants perpétrés contre les populations autochtones. Comme l'a noté le fondateur de l'Etat soviétique V. I. Lénine, la domination des puissances européennes "sur des centaines de millions d'habitants des colonies n'a pu être réalisée qu'à la suite de guerres permanentes, ininterrompues et toujours renouvelées". La domination des colonialistes a été consolidée par le massacre et l'extermination impitoyables de peuples sans défense.

39. Les guerres coloniales, la traite des esclaves, l'extermination systématique de populations pacifiques par les colonialistes, la famine et les maladies ont fait périr des millions d'habitants autochtones d'Asie, d'Afrique, d'Amérique du Nord et du Sud, d'Australie et d'autres régions du monde.

40. Près de 30 millions d'Indiens ont été exterminés au cours de la prétendue mise en valeur du continent américain par les colonialistes européens. En s'emparant du continent africain, les colonialistes britanniques, espagnols, portugais, belges, allemands et autres ont fait périr plus de 60 millions d'êtres humains. Des tribus et des peuples entiers ont été anéantis. Des dizaines de millions d'esclaves ont été exportés en Amérique seule. De 1884 à 1960, la population de l'ancien Congo belge a diminué, passant de 30 à 14 millions. Les colonialistes allemands ont exterminé des centaines de milliers d'êtres humains dans leurs colonies africaines. A l'époque de la répression du mouvement populaire aux Philippines, à la fin du XIXème siècle, les Etats-Unis ont exterminé plus de 600 000 autochtones.

41. Des dizaines de millions d'habitants de l'Inde, de l'Indochine, de l'Indonésie et d'autres anciennes colonies d'Asie ont péri, fauchés par les guerres incessantes, la famine et la maladie.

42. La nature criminelle du capitalisme et de l'impérialisme montre qu'il a enfanté demeure inchangée. Contraint de manœuvrer sous la pression irrésistible du mouvement de libération nationale, l'impérialisme tente de dissimuler sa nature d'exploiteur, bat parfois en retraite et change de forme et de méthodes pour maintenir sa domination. Mais il n'en demeure pas moins que l'impérialisme recourt comme par le passé aux mêmes méthodes cruelles et brutales de répression et de pillage, à la guerre et à l'agression, pour maintenir sa domination et perpétuer l'exploitation colonialiste des peuples. Cela se manifeste avec une violence particulière dans les territoires coloniaux.

43. Dans ces territoires, le mouvement de libération nationale se heurte aujourd'hui à une résistance toujours plus opiniâtre des monopoles impérialistes. Ils ne reculent devant aucun moyen, même les plus cruels, pour maintenir les régimes coloniaux et racistes. S'ils agissent ainsi, c'est parce que ces régimes leur permettent de poursuivre l'exploitation éhontée des ressources naturelles et humaines des colonies et d'en tirer des profits excessivement élevés.

44. Comme on l'a déjà fait observer à la Commission, c'est sur l'alliance des autorités colonialistes et des monopoles étrangers que reposent aujourd'hui les régimes colonialistes qui subsistent encore, c'est dans cette alliance qu'ils trouvent leur appui principal. Comme il a déjà été démontré au cours de l'examen des questions de la Rhodésie du Sud, des colonies portugaises, du Sud-Ouest africain et d'autres territoires coloniaux, c'est précisément cette alliance qui fait obstacle à l'élimination totale du capitalisme, à l'application de la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

45. Voilà pourquoi la délégation soviétique, de même que des délégations d'autres pays, estime que la question du caractère criminel des activités des monopoles impérialistes étrangers dans les colonies est un des éléments les plus importants du problème général de l'élimination définitive du colonialisme et de ses conséquences funestes — la discrimination raciale et l'apartheid.

46. La délégation soviétique a déjà fait remarquer que les activités des monopoles impérialistes dans les colonies ne constituent qu'un aspect de la lutte que ces monopoles mènent sur les nombreux continents en soutenant les régimes antipopulaires pourris du Viet-Nam du Sud, de la Corée du Sud et de nombreuses autres régions du monde par l'intermédiaire des milieux dirigeants dociles de nombreux pays impérialistes.

47. Lors de l'examen de la question à l'étude, on ne doit pas oublier que les monopoles des Etats-Unis d'Amérique opérant dans les territoires coloniaux sont en même temps les inspirateurs et les organisateurs de la guerre d'agression infâme menée au Viet-Nam. C'est avec la participation et l'appui direct des monopoles impérialistes que l'on déclenche à notre époque des guerres dites locales et que l'on organise des expéditions punitives contre les forces des mouvements de libération nationale dans de nombreux pays, notamment au Proche-Orient, comme l'ont montré les événements des jours derniers. Là aussi, le mobile principal est la volonté de renforcer à tout prix l'influence de l'impérialisme, de s'opposer au mouvement irrésistible des peuples contre l'esclavage capitaliste, au mouvement irrésistible des peuples pour la paix, la liberté, l'indépendance nationale et le socialisme.

48. Pour souligner l'ampleur qu'a pris le processus de concentration des moyens de production et des capitaux, il est bon de rappeler que, d'après les chiffres de l'année 1964, le monde capitaliste comptait 76 entreprises industrielles dont chacune réalisait un bénéfice annuel supérieur à un milliard de dollars. D'après des données dignes de foi fournies par les experts, le chiffre des ventes pour 1963 de la seule General Motors était égal au budget de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et dépassait de 10 p. 100 le revenu national des Pays-Bas.

50. La chasse aux surprofits, qui est devenue la loi fondamentale du développement et de l'activité des monopoles impérialistes, entrave, en dernière analyse, l'élimination du colonialisme et la libération nationale des peuples et enfin menace la paix et la sécurité dans le monde entier. Ces agissements vont directement à l'encontre des dispositions et des buts de la Charte des Nations Unies et de plusieurs décisions importantes déjà adoptées par l'Organisation, en particulier des dispositions et des principes fondamentaux proclamés par l'ONU dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

51. Si l'on observe attentivement les activités des monopoles dans les territoires coloniaux, on voit clairement que le capital monopoliste représente la réaction sous tous ses aspects. Le joug des monopoles est particulièrement pesant pour les peuples coloniaux. Dans le domaine économique, il se manifeste par le pillage des ressources nationales du pays, qui ralentit de plusieurs dizaines d'années le développement de l'économie des territoires coloniaux. C'est là un retard économique considérable, un développement unilatéral de la structure économique et un état de dépendance économique par rapport aux pays impérialistes.

52. Sur le plan politique et social, on trouve l'arbitraire absolu qui se caractérise par le système honteux de discrimination raciale et d'apartheid, l'abaissement des habitants autochtones des territoires coloniaux au niveau d'esclaves, à qui tout droit est refusé de lutter pour améliorer leur vie, par la famine, la misère, les maladies, la mort lente, et par le retard dans les domaines de l'enseignement et de la culture.

53. La délégation soviétique fait entièrement sienne la conclusion légitime du Sous-Comité I du Comité spécial, à savoir que les monopoles étrangers dans les pays coloniaux ont joué et continuent d'avoir "des effets réactionnaires sur le développement économique, politique et social" (A/6868/Add.1, par. 90).

Le rôle funeste des monopoles impérialistes se manifeste également dans les activités qu'ils mènent dans le sud du continent africain, où subsiste à l'heure actuelle le bastion le plus puissant des régimes coloniaux et racistes. Ce bastion ne pourrait se maintenir tant soit peu longtemps sans l'appui du capital monopoliste international. C'est la raison pour laquelle le Comité spécial s'inquiète profondément et à bon droit de la pénétration continue du capital étranger et du renforcement de ses positions en Rhodésie du Sud, en Angola, au Mozambique, dans le Sud-Ouest africain et dans la République sud-africaine.

54. Il est opportun de rappeler que, selon les données dont on dispose, le volume total des investissements étrangers dans les pays de l'Afrique australe est supérieur à l'heure actuelle à 10 milliards de dollars. Il s'agit là d'une somme considérable si l'on songe qu'elle dépasse le budget national de nombreux pays indépendants en voie de développement. La majeure partie de cette somme revient au capital monopoliste du Royaume-Uni et des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, ainsi que d'un certain nombre d'autres pays membres de l'OTAN, notamment de la République fédérale d'Allemagne.

55. Les monopoles étrangers possèdent plus des deux tiers de tous les investissements effectués en Angola et au Mozambique et plus de 80 p. 100 des investissements en Rhodésie du Sud. En ce qui concerne la République sud-africaine, qui est l'entité économique la plus puissante de la région, les seuls investissements effectués par les Etats-Unis et le Royaume-Uni représentent environ 5 milliards de dollars.

56. La délégation soviétique estime que l'opinion publique mondiale doit savoir quels sont les monopoles qui constituent dans les colonies les ennemis les plus dangereux de l'indépendance des peuples africains. Il ne suffit pas de mentionner, comme l'ont déjà fait à juste titre un certain nombre de représentants, un certain capital étranger anonyme qui cause un tort incalculable aux peuples des territoires coloniaux; il faut s'efforcer de suivre la voie qu'ont montrée dans leurs interventions un certain nombre de représentants, en d'autres termes, il faut connaître et désigner par leur nom ces monopoles.

57. La délégation soviétique tient à signaler en premier lieu l'Anglo American Corporation of South Africa et la Charter Consolidated, qui possèdent avec leurs filiales des investissements dépassant 1 milliard de dollars E.U. et qui contrôlent les secteurs clefs de l'économie de l'ensemble de la région en question.

58. En ce qui concerne l'Angola, il faut mentionner avant tout l'Angola Diamond Company, spécialisée dans l'extraction de diamants, ainsi que les sociétés minières Lobito et Lombige, les compagnies pétrolières Petrofina et Cabinda Gulf Oil Company. Les monopoles des Etats-Unis, de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et de la Belgique jouent un rôle important dans ces sociétés.

59. En ce qui concerne le Mozambique, on doit citer au premier chef la Mozambique Gulf Oil Company, la Mozambique Pan-American Oil Company et la Companhia Carbonifera do Moçambique. Là encore, le capital des monopoles américains et belges prédomine dans ces sociétés.

60. En Rhodésie du Sud, il convient de mentionner surtout la Lonrho Ltd., la Selection Trust, Ltd., les trois filiales de la société américaine Union Carbide Company, la Rhodesia Vanadium Corporation et certaines autres sociétés. De nouveau, comme cela a déjà été reconnu lors de l'examen de la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, ce sont les monopoles anglais et américains qui jouent un rôle fondamental.

61. Au Sud-Ouest africain, il y a lieu de signaler principalement la Tsumeb Corporation, la Consolidated Diamond Mines of South-West Africa, Ltd. et la Marine Diamond Corporation, Ltd., où l'influence prédominante est celle des monopoles sud-africains, anglais et américains.

62. La délégation soviétique n'énumère pas ces sociétés et ces monopoles étrangers pour le plaisir de faire une analyse économique en tant que telle, encore que ce genre d'analyse soit toujours utile si l'on veut montrer et définir les ressorts et les raisons véritables de telle ou telle politique, qui s'oppose aux principes et aux intérêts des peuples progressistes. Comme elle l'a déjà souligné, la délégation soviétique est convaincue que la responsabilité des crimes commis contre l'humanité et contre la liberté et l'indépendance des peuples doit revenir à des monopoles étrangers bien réels, qui se livrent directement à leurs agissements de barbares, de pillards et de bandits sur les territoires coloniaux; cette responsabilité revient bien entendu aussi aux milieux dirigeants des puissances coloniales et impérialistes, bien réels eux aussi, qui leur obéissent.

63. Il se pose ici une question légitime, qui a déjà été soulevée à la présente Commission au début même de la discussion. Pourquoi ces représentants ainsi que d'autres représentants de l'impérialisme soutiennent-ils activement les régimes coloniaux et racistes? La réponse à cette question a déjà été donnée et la délégation soviétique tient à s'associer à la conclusion déjà formulée au début du présent débat. La réponse est que les régimes coloniaux et racistes présentent précisément des avantages et offrent aux monopoles impérialistes la garantie de percevoir des bénéfices fabuleux grâce à l'exploitation éhontée des grandes richesses naturelles des pays d'Afrique australe et d'une main-d'œuvre à bon marché. Nul n'ignore par ailleurs que le coût peu élevé de cette main-d'œuvre ne résulte pas de facteurs économiques particuliers à telle ou telle région où est pratiquée cette exploitation monstrueuse. Le coût peu élevé de la main-d'œuvre s'explique par une contrainte qui ne relève pas du domaine économique et qui trouve son expression dans les régimes racistes et la discrimination raciale, dans l'exploitation effrénée et l'oppression directe de la population autochtone. Par suite de l'emploi d'une main-d'œuvre peu coûteuse, les monopoles impérialistes réalisent des surprofits qui constituent le double ou même le triple des bénéfices correspondants dans les pays capitalistes développés, où, dans des conditions normales, les bénéfices ne dépassent pas le chiffre annuel de 7 à 8 p. 100. M. Morozov ne parle pas ici des surprofits que réalisent les monopoles impérialistes partisans de la course aux armements et du renforcement de la tension internationale, surprofits qui aboutissent à ce que ces monopoles impérialistes reçoivent également dans les pays capitalistes développés des bénéfices fabuleux dont ne peut et n'a pu rêver aucun apologiste du système économique capitaliste. De l'aveu même de ceux qui ont fourni ces renseignements, c'est-à-dire les monopoles étrangers eux-mêmes, ces derniers recouvrent le capital qu'ils ont investi dans les territoires coloniaux sous forme de bénéfices en 4 ou 5 ans au maximum.

64. Ce phénomène explique notamment l'augmentation récente et particulièrement rapide des investissements effectués par les Etats-Unis et la République fédérale d'Allemagne. C'est ainsi qu'au cours des dix dernières années (de 1956 à 1966) les investissements de la République fédérale d'Allemagne ont décuplé.

65. L'or, les diamants, le pétrole, le coton et d'autres richesses appartenant aux peuples africains, ainsi que la vie même des Africains, servent à enrichir les monopoles étrangers, comme ils servent aussi partiellement à corrompre les dirigeants de la classe ouvrière dans les pays impérialistes. En ce qui concerne les Africains, ces crimes ont conduit à une existence végétative d'esclaves, à la faim, à la maladie, à la mort prématurée, à l'analphabétisme et au retard dans le domaine culturel.

66. Aucun chiffre statistique ne peut, naturellement, refléter toute l'horreur de la tragédie que vivent les peuples africains en Afrique australe. Et pourtant ces chiffres sont déjà éloquentes. L'Anglo Diamond Company, déjà mentionnée ici, a réalisé de 1961 à 1965 quelque 70 millions de dollars de bénéfices grâce à l'exportation de diamants. Il est intéressant de voir comment ces bénéfices se sont répartis: 27 millions sont allés à différents détenteurs d'actions dans la métropole et à peu près autant au Gouvernement portugais. En outre, pendant cette même période, le Gouvernement portugais a reçu environ 3 millions de dollars de cette société à titre de contribution à la "défense de la patrie". On comprend aisément que cette "défense de la patrie" signifie en réalité l'appui donné aux forces armées du régime colonial; quant aux autorités coloniales locales, elles ont reçu de cette société, aux mêmes fins, c'est-à-dire l'appui au régime colonial, des prêts de 8 millions de dollars.

67. Il convient de noter en outre que l'Anglo American Corporation of South Africa réalise des bénéfices atteignant les mêmes proportions, non pas en l'espace de cinq ans, mais en une seule année.

68. Dans le Sud-Ouest africain, les principaux monopoles impérialistes sont la Tsumeb Corporation, la Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd., et la Marine Diamond Corporation, Ltd., que M. Morozov a déjà citées. Le capital américain et anglais y joue un rôle déterminant. Ils font partie du complot international des monopoles impérialistes qui entendent renforcer le régime colonial, organiser la résistance aux mouvements de libération nationale dans ces territoires, créer une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales, à la sécurité non seulement des peuples d'Afrique, mais des autres régions du monde.

69. On sait, par ailleurs, que ce complot a consisté notamment à amener l'administration coloniale, qui agit au nom mais aussi au détriment des intérêts des populations autochtones, à consentir aux monopoles étrangers des privilèges qui seraient absolument inimaginables dans des pays indépendants. Ces privilèges contribuent à grossir encore plus les surprofits et en facilitent la formation. Il convient également de rappeler que, dans les colonies portugaises, les monopoles étrangers sont exonérés de l'impôt et des droits de douane, qu'ils se voient attribuer d'immenses étendues de terres, qu'ils ont la possibilité de constituer leurs propres forces de police, voire leurs propres unités militaires qu'ils utilisent pour défendre le régime colonial et écraser la lutte populaire. Dans le Sud-Ouest africain, près de la moitié du territoire a été cédée sous forme de concessions aux monopoles étrangers.

70. Un représentant de la Newmont Mining Corporation qui opère dans la République sud-africaine et dans le Sud-Ouest africain a indiqué que les bénéfices de sa compagnie, et de nombreuses autres, atteignent en moyenne 27 p. 100 du capital investi. Comme l'a déclaré le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie dans l'intervention qu'il a faite à la présente séance, le revenu annuel de la Consolidated Diamond Mines représente presque le double du budget du territoire du Sud-Ouest africain. Dans les colonies portugaises, les bénéfices sont en moyenne de 18 à 20 p. 100 au minimum et ils atteignent fréquemment, dans le cas de certaines compagnies importantes, jusqu'à 45 p. 100.

71. Voici pourquoi, même si l'on envisage la situation en se plaçant du point de vue des partisans du maintien du système capitaliste de production et d'économie, de ceux qui font l'apologie du système capitaliste, les données qui sont ou qui ont été fournies à la Quatrième Commission et que renferme notamment le rapport du Comité spécial constituent un verdict de culpabilité prononcé contre le complot international des monopoles impérialistes dont les activités sont dirigées contre les peuples des territoires coloniaux, contre la cause de la libération nationale et contre l'accession à l'indépendance de ces pays.

72. Ainsi, le capital monopolistique pénètre toujours plus profondément en Afrique, dans les territoires coloniaux qui subsistent sur ce continent et ce — comme on l'a relevé ici à juste titre — non à des fins humanitaires, non pour développer l'économie de ces territoires, mais pour les piller.

73. Pour compléter les faits qu'il a déjà cités, M. Morozov rappelle que la Charter Consolidated dont il a déjà fait état perçoit dans le sud de l'Afrique près de 40 p. 100 de l'ensemble de ses bénéfices, contre 12 p. 100 seulement dans les pays indépendants d'Afrique et moins de 20 p. 100 au Royaume-Uni. On comprend donc les raisons pour lesquelles ce monopole et ses pareils luttent énergiquement pour perpétuer le colonialisme.

74. Comme l'a noté le Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1, par. 85), dans les territoires coloniaux de l'Afrique australe, les principaux moyens de production, à savoir la terre, les mines, les usines et les fabriques ainsi que les moyens de transport, sont tous aux mains des capitalistes étrangers et des colons locaux cependant que la population autochtone est privée de toute possibilité de participer à la vie économique du pays.

75. Cette situation n'est pas uniquement caractéristique des territoires du sud de l'Afrique; elle est typique de toutes les possessions coloniales des pays impérialistes. M. Morozov attire l'attention sur la situation en Afrique parce que la discussion porte sur ce bastion du colonialisme que, de toute évidence, les colonialistes n'ont aucune intention d'abandonner sans lutte. Il souligne tout spécialement ces faits parce que ce bastion constitue une menace permanente pour les Etats indépendants d'Afrique.

76. L'activité des monopoles étrangers a produit des effets, sur le plan économique et social, qui sont vraiment catastrophiques.

77. Ainsi qu'il est indiqué dans les documents du Sous-Comité I, les étrangers se sont emparés des meilleures terres, d'où il s'ensuit que l'écrasante majorité des agriculteurs est obligée de louer des terres à des sociétés étrangères ou à des propriétaires locaux à des conditions défavorables. En fait, cette situation ne diffère guère du servage, de l'esclavage. Les paysans ne peuvent s'adonner qu'aux cultures dont ont besoin les compagnies concessionnaires étrangères. Ils vendent leur production à ces mêmes compagnies étrangères à des prix fixés arbitrairement par celles-ci, c'est-à-dire à des prix qui assurent aux monopoles des bénéfices élevés sur l'exportation de cultures hautement rentables.

78. A côté de la production agricole marchande hautement développée organisée sur les terres des sociétés étrangères et des colons locaux, gros propriétaires fonciers, on trouve une économie de subsistance, retardataire et primitive, sur les terres pauvres, de superficie réduite, qui sont encore aux mains de la population autochtone. Le développement économique général des territoires s'en trouve freiné; quant aux paysans, c'est-à-dire la population autochtone, ils vivent dans de telles conditions qu'ils sont privés des moyens d'existence de première nécessité.

79. On sait, par exemple, qu'en République sud-africaine la population autochtone, qui représente bien plus des deux tiers de la population totale, n'a le droit — et M. Morozov est tenté de mettre le mot "droit" entre guillemets parce qu'il ne s'agit là que d'un droit théorique — qu'à 13 p. 100 des terres. Il en va de même d'une manière générale en Rhodésie du Sud.

80. N'est-il pas significatif que, comme vient de le rappeler le représentant de la Syrie, l'Angola Diamond Company possède des droits exclusifs sur une superficie de plus d'un million de kilomètres carrés, alors que sur le reste du territoire chaque cultivateur africain dispose en moyenne de cinquante fois moins de terres que l'exploitant agricole portugais. Est-il besoin de citer des données plus éloquantes?

81. Le revenu des cultivateurs africains en Angola, par exemple, comme le signale le Comité spécial dans son rapport, ne représente au mieux que 2 p. 100 seulement du revenu des exploitants agricoles blancs. D'après le même rapport, en Rhodésie du Sud, le revenu annuel moyen du cultivateur africain ne s'élevait en 1965 qu'à 10 livres sterling par habitant.

82. La délégation soviétique estime justifiées les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial qui a insisté sur le caractère inadmissible et criminel des expropriations massives de terres dont a été victime la population africaine autochtone; comme le Comité, elle demande qu'il soit mis fin à cette situation.

83. Il ne faut pas oublier non plus que la population autochtone des territoires coloniaux se voit refuser le droit d'association et, par conséquent, ne peut s'organiser pour défendre ses intérêts.

84. Comme l'a noté le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie, le monopole dont jouissent les sociétés étrangères, en ce qui concerne la vente des produits agricoles destinés à l'exportation et la fixation des prix de ces produits, repose en fait sur une discrimination raciale sans limites à l'égard des travailleurs africains de l'industrie, du point de vue des conditions de travail notamment. Le revenu annuel moyen d'un habitant européen de la République sud-africaine est plus élevé que le revenu annuel moyen d'un habitant du Royaume-Uni. Cependant, le revenu de la population africaine de l'Afrique du Sud est considérablement inférieur au revenu de la population des pays africains indépendants. En République sud-africaine, cette effarante disparité entre le revenu moyen de la population européenne et de la population autochtone ne cesse de s'aggraver. En Rhodésie du Sud, en 1965, le salaire annuel moyen d'un ouvrier africain représentait le dixième du salaire annuel moyen d'un ouvrier blanc (128 livres sterling pour un Africain et 1 284 livres sterling par an pour un ouvrier blanc). Dans le Sud-Ouest africain, cet écart est encore plus considérable: dans l'industrie minière, le salaire d'un ouvrier africain ne représente que le douzième ou le treizième du salaire d'un ouvrier blanc. Voilà pourquoi l'activité des monopoles étrangers se traduit dans ces régions par des bénéfices fabuleux et par un pillage d'une ampleur monstrueuse.

85. Cette activité criminelle des monopoles en Afrique australe est également une menace pour la sécurité des pays indépendants d'Afrique. Mais il ne faut pas oublier non plus que les petits territoires coloniaux sont eux aussi durement exploités par les monopoles des pays occidentaux.

86. Les peuples du Proche-Orient, d'Asie, d'Océanie et d'autres régions du monde, qui subissent la domination coloniale, pâtissent également de l'activité des monopoles étrangers, de la même façon que les peuples de l'Afrique australe.

87. Il faut rappeler à cet égard un fait, d'ailleurs bien connu, qui explique la ténacité avec laquelle les colonialistes s'accrochent à leurs possessions du Proche-Orient. Nul n'ignore les bénéfices fantastiques que les monopoles pétroliers retirent de l'extraction du pétrole de cette région. Or, l'existence de régimes coloniaux n'est pas sans rapport avec ces bénéfices puisque, dans les principautés arabes divisées et opprimées par les colonialistes, les monopoles étrangers, comme on le sait, paient des impôts bien infé-rieurs à ceux qu'ils doivent verser aux Etats arabes indépendants.

88. Les possessions australiennes d'Océanie offrent un tableau analogue. Dans le Territoire du Papua et de la Nouvelle-Guinée, les investissements s'accroissent au rythme de 5 à 6 millions de livres sterling par an, et les bénéfices exportés (compte non tenu des réinvestissements et d'autres dépenses effectuées sur place) représentent de 3 à 5 millions de livres sterling par an. Ce faisant, la Puissance administrante participe directement, aux côtés des sociétés privées, à l'exploitation ou plus exactement au pillage du Territoire, puisqu'elle détient une part importante des actions de certaines entreprises, dépassant parfois 50 p. 100.

89. La situation est identique dans les possessions américaines des océans Atlantique et Pacifique. A Porto Rico, les monopoles américains, qui ont la haute main sur 80 p. 100 de l'industrie, réalisent des bénéfices annuels qui représentent de 28 à 30 p. 100 de leurs investissements. Il en va de même dans l'île de Guam, où sévit en fait un seul monopole, la compagnie Jones and Guerrero, et où les investissements sont purement et simplement exempts de tout impôt pendant les dix premières années. Il serait facile d'allonger la liste de ces exemples.

90. Parce qu'ils sont les véritables maîtres des pays capitalistes et qu'ils déterminent l'activité des milieux dirigeants de ces pays, les monopoles peuvent mobiliser tout l'appareil d'Etat pour défendre leurs intérêts dans les colonies, subordonner à leurs intérêts et à leurs buts égoïstes la politique étrangère et la puissance militaire de ces pays. C'est ainsi que s'explique la politique suivie par plusieurs grandes puissances occidentales en matière de décolonisation, politique dont ces puissances ont donné plusieurs exemples lors de la présente session et des précédentes sessions de l'Assemblée générale, au cours des débats sur la situation dans différents territoires coloniaux: tout en admettant en paroles le droit des peuples à l'autodétermination, les représentants des grandes puissances coloniales font en réalité tout ce qu'ils peuvent pour conserver au colonialisme des points d'appui en Afrique australe et dans les petits territoires coloniaux. Cette politique est directement et très intimement liée à la politique suivie par les pays coloniaux — notamment les Etats-Unis d'Amérique —, qui s'accrochent de toutes leurs forces à un réseau de bases militaires réparties dans le monde entier comme autant de bastions destinés à l'agression et à la lutte contre le mouvement de libération nationale.

91. Ces divers aspects du problème, rappelle M. Morozov, sont étroitement liés. A cet égard, l'action des monopoles des pays impérialistes se fait sentir dans tous les domaines: exploitation économique des territoires coloniaux, soutien politique fourni à des régimes colonialistes gangrenés, répression militaire de l'héroïque combat des peuples pour leur indépendance nationale. Aux yeux d'un observateur attentif et impartial, un fait apparaît de manière absolument claire: la base américaine de Guam, qui est utilisée contre le peuple vietnamien épris de liberté, les bases britanniques de la péninsule Arabique, qui servent à réprimer la lutte des peuples d'Arabie du Sud, la base dont l'Allemagne de l'Ouest dispose au Portugal, qui permet aux colonialistes portugais d'envoyer des renforts en Angola, la base américaine de Guantanamo, qui menace l'indépendance de Cuba — toutes ces bases et bien d'autres encore ne servent qu'un seul et même but: renforcer les positions de l'impérialisme et de ses monopoles, écraser le mouvement de libération nationale.

92. Dans ce complot, les petits territoires coloniaux occupent une place particulière et des plus importantes. Non seulement les monopoles impérialistes et leurs gouvernements exploitent directement leurs ressources naturelles et humaines, mais ils les utilisent comme points d'appui aux fins d'agression et de lutte contre le mouvement de libération nationale.

93. Il suffit d'avoir présente à l'esprit la carte du globe pour comprendre l'importance de cette chaîne de bases qui s'étend des îles Marshall et des îles Mariannes à la mer des Antilles en passant par les îles de l'océan Indien, l'Arabie et l'Afrique australe. Ces bases, comme maintes délégations l'ont plus d'une fois noté, sont un grave danger pour la sécurité des peuples.

94. Une telle situation ne saurait être tolérée plus longtemps. La délégation soviétique estime que l'Assemblée générale doit exiger avec force que les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, le Royaume-Uni et les autres puissances coloniales appliquent les résolutions de l'ONU touchant l'élimination des bases étrangères situées en territoires coloniaux. L'application de ces décisions serait un pas important dans la lutte contre les crimes commis par les monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux; elle contribuerait grandement à la victoire du mouvement de libération nationale et rapprocherait le jour de l'élimination définitive du colonialisme.

95. De l'avis de la délégation soviétique, le rapport du Comité spécial et les autres renseignements dont on dispose montrent que les monopoles étrangers poursuivent dans les territoires coloniaux une politique contraire aux intérêts fondamentaux des pays indépendants aussi bien que des peuples qui luttent pour leur libération nationale. Elle estime par conséquent que l'Assemblée générale doit condamner cette activité des monopoles comme dangereuse pour la paix du monde et comme étant l'un des principaux obstacles à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

96. La délégation soviétique appuie sans réserve les conclusions et recommandations présentées à l'Assemblée générale par le Comité spécial. Elle estime que ces conclusions et recommandations peuvent offrir une base utile et appropriée à la résolution que l'Assemblée générale devra adopter à la présente session. De l'avis de la délégation soviétique, la portée de cette résolution ne devra pas se limiter à la situation en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les colonies portugaises et autres; elle devra s'appliquer également à la République sud-africaine et à d'autres territoires coloniaux.

97. Bien entendu, la délégation soviétique est prête à examiner toute proposition constructive visant à compléter les recommandations du Comité spécial ou les conclusions et propositions qu'elle vient elle-même de présenter.

98. La délégation soviétique pense également que l'Assemblée générale doit condamner résolument l'activité criminelle des monopoles étrangers et le soutien qu'ils apportent aux régimes coloniaux, ainsi que l'exploitation et le pillage des richesses naturelles et des peuples des pays coloniaux. L'Assemblée générale doit exiger qu'il soit mis fin à cette activité criminelle qui entrave sérieusement l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux ainsi que l'élimination définitive du colonialisme et de ses séquelles.

99. Il importe également que l'Assemblée générale condamne le soutien que les puissances coloniales — au premier chef le Portugal et la République sud-africaine et ensuite les Etats-Unis d'Amérique et le Royaume-Uni — apportent aux monopoles internationaux au détriment de la population autochtone des pays coloniaux.

100. L'Assemblée générale doit inviter les gouvernements de tous les Etats dont les monopoles participent au pillage des peuples coloniaux, notamment ceux des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, du Royaume-Uni et de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, à prendre des mesures législatives et autres pour mettre fin à l'activité criminelle de leurs monopoles dans les colonies. Il faudra également stipuler, dans la résolution, que les Etats intéressés doivent enfin intervenir de façon efficace pour limiter fortement l'exportation par les monopoles étrangers de bénéfices provenant des territoires coloniaux et qu'ils doivent prendre des mesures législatives pour qu'une plus large fraction de ces bénéfices soit affectée au développement économique et social des colonies, à l'élévation du niveau de vie de la population autochtone et à l'amélioration de la santé publique et de l'enseignement.

102. M. NKAMA (Zambie) estime que la question qu'étudie en ce moment la Commission est au cœur même du problème de l'accession à l'indépendance des populations autochtones d'Afrique australe. Il est par conséquent essentiel que les véritables ennemis de l'indépendance africaine soient connus et leurs activités analysées. Déjà il apparaît qu'un grand nombre de pays qui, à maintes occasions, se sont déclarés solidaires des mouvements de libération sont en fait opposés à la réalisation des objectifs qu'espèrent atteindre les combattants de la liberté.

103. Il est commode pour un représentant de venir devant la Commission nier que son pays coopère avec les régimes minoritaires et affirmer qu'il appuie les principes de la décolonisation et du gouvernement par la majorité. La vérité doit être dite, et c'est ce qu'a fait le représentant de l'Union soviétique, qui, dans son intervention, a traité des problèmes complexes auxquels se heurtent les populations autochtones d'Afrique australe dans la lutte qu'elles mènent pour se libérer du joug colonial.

104. M. Nkama demande donc que la déclaration du représentant de l'Union soviétique soit reproduite intégralement dans le compte rendu des débats de la Commission.

105. Le PRESIDENT déclare qu'en l'absence d'objections il considérera que la Commission accepte la proposition faite par le représentant de la Zambie.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le Sud de l'Afrique (suite) [A/6868 et Add.1]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. PAKHARENKO (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) estime que l'examen du point 24 de l'ordre du jour traduit la nécessité de déterminer les principaux obstacles à l'indépendance politique et économique des pays et des peuples coloniaux. A cet égard, les activités du capital monopolistique international revêtent une importance de premier plan. En effet, toute l'histoire du capitalisme est liée au pillage des colonies, et l'exportation de capitaux est le fondement de la domination impérialiste et de l'oppression des territoires coloniaux. Le capital monopolistique ne recule devant aucun moyen pour réaliser son objectif principal: le profit maximum. Il a partagé en sphères d'influence les pays et territoires du tiers monde et domine désormais dans le monde capitaliste tous les secteurs de la production et tous les aspects de la vie sociale. Les monopoles impérialistes, qui ont provoqué deux guerres mondiales, sont à l'heure actuelle à l'origine de la tension internationale et de la course aux armements. Ils sont responsables de l'aventure criminelle des Etats-Unis au Viet-Nam et de la nouvelle agression contre les Etats arabes.

2. Après avoir freiné pendant des décennies, voire des siècles, le développement des territoires coloniaux, les monopoles continuent d'exploiter impitoyablement les populations autochtones. Les revenus d'investissement des seuls monopoles des Etats-Unis en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique latine se sont élevés à 10 milliards de dollars pendant la période 1960-1964. Les monopoles impérialistes règnent sans partage en Afrique et contrôlent presque entièrement l'économie des colonies portugaises, de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain. Leurs investissements dans ces territoires s'élèvent à plus de cinq milliards de dollars. Leurs activités sont à l'origine du développement unilatéral de l'économie des colonies et de l'asservissement aux marchés internationaux. Les sociétés américaines, britanniques, allemandes, belges et portugaises contrôlent toutes les ressources minérales de l'Angola. Le taux de rendement des investissements dans ce territoire est de 40 p. 100 dans l'industrie et de 60 à 75 p. 100 dans l'agriculture. Les bénéfices annuels du plus puissant des monopoles étrangers en Afrique dite portugaise, la Diamang, dépassent à l'heure actuelle le montant de son capital social, qui s'élève à 294,1 millions d'escudos. Ses actionnaires touchent des dividendes de l'ordre de 40 à 50 p. 100. En 1966, la Diamang a rapporté au trésor du Portugal 2 366 millions d'escudos. Les bénéfices d'une autre société, la Petrangol, sont passés de 56 millions d'escudos en 1963 à 172,7 millions d'escudos en 1965. Ce monopole se propose de verser au Gouvernement portugais une "prime" de 30 millions d'escudos et doit lui prêter 290 millions d'escudos. Ces exemples montrent que le capital monopolistique est l'appui principal du colonialisme portugais et qu'il est un des grands obstacles à l'indépendance authentique des peuples d'Angola, du Mozambique et d'autres territoires sous domination portugaise. Les monopoles des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et d'autres pays capitalistes jouent un rôle tout aussi criminel en Rhodésie du Sud. Leur domination a permis de renforcer le régime illégal de Smith et de tourner la décision du Conseil de sécurité sur les sanctions contre la Rhodésie du Sud. Les monopoles de l'Allemagne de l'Ouest ont intensifié leurs activités en Rhodésie du Sud depuis l'adoption de la décision sur les sanctions et les défenseurs du régime raciste de Smith ont déclenché une campagne très active aux Etats-Unis. Les capitaux américains, britanniques et sud-africains contrôlent toute l'industrie extractive du Sud-Ouest africain. La Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd. a réalisé en vingt ans des bénéfices nets de l'ordre de 369 millions de rands. Les bénéfices d'une autre société américaine, la Tsumeb Corporation, se sont élevés de 1948 à 1961 à plus de 140 millions de rands, soit 70 fois son capital social. Ces bénéfices fabuleux sont soit expatriés, soit accaparés par la minorité blanche.

4. S'appuyant sur les régimes coloniaux, les monopoles étrangers ont privé la population de ces territoires de son droit inaliénable d'exploiter en toute propriété ses ressources naturelles. La législation discriminatoire en vigueur en Angola, au Mozambique, en Rhodésie du Sud et dans le Sud-Ouest africain empêche la population autochtone de participer à la vie politique et économique et la condamne à la misère, à la faim et à des souffrances sans précédent.

5. La discrimination raciale en matière de salaires fait qu'un travailleur autochtone gagne 10 à 15 fois moins qu'un colon blanc. Cette politique, accompagnée d'échanges forcés de main-d'œuvre entre les territoires coloniaux, échanges destinés à maintenir un faible taux de rémunération, est à l'origine des profits fabuleux des monopoles. La majorité de la population autochtone est illettrée et à peu près privée de soins médicaux.

6. L'exploitation, voire le pillage des peuples par les impérialistes sont indissolublement liés aux activités militaires des puissances coloniales dirigées contre les mouvements de libération nationale. L'utilisation à ces fins des bases militaires situées à Guam, dans l'Ile de l'Ascension, à Aden, etc., en apporte la preuve, et la liquidation de ces bases est une des principales conditions de l'élimination du joug colonial.

7. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit condamner l'activité des monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux. Les travaux du Comité spécial constituent une contribution non négligeable à cet objectif. Le peuple ukrainien, qui a subi avant la révolution d'Octobre la double exploitation des capitalistes autochtones et étrangers, est sensible aux souffrances actuelles des peuples coloniaux. L'Ukraine était, elle aussi, considérée à l'époque par les capitalistes étrangers comme une source de matières premières et de main-d'œuvre à bon marché. Ayant brisé pour toujours, en 1917, les chaînes de l'esclavage, le peuple ukrainien a transformé son pays en une grande puissance industrielle et agricole où fleurissent les sciences et les arts.

8. La délégation ukrainienne fait siennes les conclusions du Comité spécial touchant le rôle réactionnaire des intérêts économiques et financiers étrangers dans les colonies. Elle estime que l'Assemblée générale doit condamner l'activité des monopoles étrangers dans les colonies, car cette activité est le principal obstacle à l'application de sa résolution 1514 (XV). Il importe de condamner de la manière la plus énergique les Gouvernements sud-africain et portugais ainsi que le régime raciste de la Rhodésie du Sud pour l'appui actif qu'ils apportent aux monopoles impérialistes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit exiger des puissances administrantes qu'elles restituent sans tarder à la population autochtone les terres dont elle a été privée. M. Pakhareenko appuie la proposition de la délégation soviétique (1718ème séance) tendant à prendre des mesures de nature à mettre fin à l'action criminelle des monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux. Il estime aussi qu'il serait souhaitable de prier le Secrétaire général d'assurer une plus large diffusion des renseignements relatifs à cette action. En terminant, M. Pakhareenko se prononce pour le maintien du point 24 à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale et appuie la suggestion tendant à confier au Comité spécial le soin d'élaborer de nouvelles recommandations concrètes concernant cette question.

9. M. FALL (Sénégal) tient à préciser l'optique dans laquelle sa délégation envisage de prendre part à la discussion du point à l'étude. La délégation sénégalaise estime que les pratiques issues d'accords multilatéraux ou bilatéraux entre pays indépendants ne sauraient être invoquées dans le débat actuel pour justifier telle ou telle position au sujet des territoires coloniaux. Par ailleurs, l'étude des activités des intérêts étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux ne doit pas être, à son avis, l'occasion de jugements de valeur sur les systèmes politiques et sociaux en vigueur dans le monde.

10. La délégation sénégalaise ne croit pas que la coopération économique, si elle est bien aménagée, puisse faire obstacle au développement rationnel des pays. Elle ne pense pas non plus que les intérêts étrangers, par leurs activités, puissent à eux seuls remettre en question la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux; à son sens, ces intérêts, aussi puissants qu'ils soient, sont des auxiliaires, mais des auxiliaires privilégiés du colonialisme. Il faut donc éviter les deux positions extrêmes qui consisteraient à les considérer soit comme seuls responsables, soit comme de simples accessoires, alors qu'ils partagent avec les puissances administrantes une même responsabilité.

11. Il est évident qu'une fois que ces intérêts auront été mis hors d'état de nuire, il restera aux colonisés à faire preuve d'une volonté politique d'indépendance, et pour cela il faudra, comme on l'a dit, une cristallisation des consciences dans le sens de la libération; de la part des colonisateurs, il restera à espérer une option claire. Enfin, le débat sur le point à l'étude ne devrait pas être simplement un inventaire des activités qui font obstacle à l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux; il doit faire intervenir d'autres facteurs, d'ordre politique, culturel et racial notamment, qui sont inséparables du processus de décolonisation.

12. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1), qui a été adopté par le Comité spécial, a suscité plusieurs critiques. A ceux qui se plaignent de l'insuffisance de renseignements obtenus directement, il faut répondre en soulignant le manque d'empressement manifesté par ceux-là mêmes qui étaient censés fournir ces renseignements; on ne peut par ailleurs que déplorer d'entendre critiquer le langage passionné du rapport du Sous-Comité I, dont les membres auraient, selon certains, fait preuve de parti-pris. S'il est une question qui n'exclut pas la passion, c'est bien celle qui touche la décolonisation, l'indépendance et la liberté des peuples. La délégation sénégalaise, pour sa part, estime que le rapport du Sous-Comité I représente une somme d'excellent travail et que la Commission se trouve, grâce à lui, en possession des éléments dont elle a besoin pour étudier la question qui l'occupe et décider en connaissance de cause. Toute réserve qui pourrait être formulée ne serait qu'une dérobade, un refus de s'exprimer sur un problème fondamental.

13. Le point qu'examine la Commission porte sur une question dont l'étude ne pourra que l'amener une fois de plus à condamner le colonialisme, et la Commission sera d'autant plus fondée à le faire que l'Afrique du Sud, le Portugal et la Rhodésie du Sud, soutenus par les monopoles internationaux, se font les avocats de la situation tragique qui règne en Afrique australe. Il est notoire que le but de la colonisation est l'exploitation des richesses des territoires assujettis. Il est non moins établi que l'unique but des sociétés étrangères est, en participant à cette exploitation, d'en tirer le maximum de profits, si bien que les Etats colonisateurs et les monopoles internationaux se trouvent faire partie de la même équipe dans cette course au trésor. L'identité des intérêts déterminant l'identité des actes, les puissances administrantes et leurs alliés font ensemble obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

14. Personne ne va jusqu'à nier complètement l'influence néfaste des monopoles sur le mouvement d'émancipation des peuples encore asservis; mais les derniers apologistes de la colonisation invitent encore à une plus grande circonspection, parlant de nuances, de bienfaits, d'absence de preuves établissant que la présence des intérêts étrangers fait obstacle à la marche des peuples coloniaux vers l'indépendance. Or, il est de notoriété publique que partout où les monopoles se sont installés l'iniquité a atteint la démesure. Les terres sont aliénées aux dépens des autochtones, des "réserves" sont créées pour y parquer les indigènes, solution radicale pour mener à bien l'entreprise de démoralisation et de démobilitation de la population, les droits politiques les plus élémentaires ainsi que les droits syndicaux ne sont pas reconnus aux autochtones, tout cela dans un climat où la discrimination raciale est érigée en système et où tout est fait pour saboter la lutte de libération. D'un autre côté, et pour les mêmes mobiles, on cherche à assurer le développement de l'économie marchande tandis qu'on laisse dépérir l'économie de subsistance. Enfin, on régionalise les investissements selon une méthode qui s'inscrit dans la stratégie globale élaborée pour soustraire l'Afrique australe au courant de décolonisation.

15. Il va de soi que de toutes ces mesures il résulte des bénéfices exceptionnellement élevés pour une minorité d'exploiteurs, au détriment d'un sous-prolétariat qui croupit dans un paupérisme inadmissible. Ce sont ces bénéfices fabuleux qui expliquent que les monopoles internationaux soient de connivence avec des Etats comme le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud ou avec le régime rebelle de Salisbury. A moins d'y être contraintes, les sociétés étrangères ne se résoudront pas à renoncer à des affaires qui leur rapportent de 20 à 27 p. 100 d'intérêt, alors que, dans le meilleur des cas, les investissements qu'elles feraient dans les pays d'origine ne leur permettent pas de réaliser plus de 5 à 9 p. 100 d'intérêt. Les territoires sont saccagés sous les yeux des puissances administrantes et avec leur plein consentement. En d'autres termes, les puissances administrantes n'ont aucun souci du bien-être des populations colonisées car elles sont trop attentives à celui de leurs propres ressortissants et de leurs alliés.

16. Si un pays comme le Portugal, par exemple, au lieu de protéger les intérêts des populations, laisse faire les monopoles internationaux, c'est parce que, n'ayant pas les moyens financiers nécessaires pour mener à bien sa politique, il est obligé, pour se maintenir en Afrique, de se plier aux volontés des sociétés étrangères qui l'aident dans son entreprise. D'où l'on peut déduire qu'en mettant fin aux activités des intérêts étrangers on mettrait fin du même coup à la colonisation portugaise; on a donc là une raison de plus de condamner énergiquement les monopoles internationaux qui exploitent les territoires encore dépendants.

17. L'expansion des intérêts étrangers est significative en ce sens qu'elle atteste une recrudescence des forces de régression, une volonté plus marquée d'implantation et de mainmise sur les richesses convoitées, état de choses qui est du reste facilité par une législation exceptionnellement accommodante. Cette exploitation forcée suppose en outre la mise en place d'un système de protection contre la révolte prévisible. Quand on voit quel est l'enjeu, on comprend pourquoi les monopoles participent à la répression aux côtés des forces des puissances administrantes. Ces monopoles, qui, on le sait, sont exonérés d'impôts et de droits d'importation ou d'exportation, bénéficient d'un autre privilège, celui de disposer de forces armées particulières.

18. En Rhodésie du Sud, au lendemain de la déclaration unilatérale d'indépendance, ce sont les sociétés étrangères qui ont compromis l'efficacité des sanctions décidées par les Nations Unies en portant secours aux producteurs européens de tabac et de sucre, en recourant à des produits de remplacement des importations déficitaires, en réinvestissant leurs bénéfices dont le rapatriement était aléatoire et en organisant l'approvisionnement en pétrole et produits pétroliers à partir de l'Afrique du Sud et du Mozambique. Ce sont là, à n'en pas douter, des activités absolument contraires aux intérêts des populations autochtones et contraires aux desseins de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

19. Quel que soit le territoire considéré, on parviendrait aux mêmes conclusions. Partout, en territoire colonial, les intérêts étrangers se comportent en maîtres incontestés, partout ils sont liés aux groupes financiers internationaux et aux gouvernements coloniaux par un système de profits communs, partout ils agissent sans tenir compte du développement harmonieux des territoires ou des aspirations légitimes des populations, infléchissant la politique des puissances administrantes dans le sens d'un durcissement des méthodes de domination et, éventuellement, de la répression violente, et partout ils freinent l'essor des peuples qui veulent se libérer.

20. La délégation sénégalaise est heureuse que le Sous-Comité I ait adopté son rapport à la quasi-unanimité, comme elle se réjouit du vote émis par le Comité spécial. Elle prend acte du fait que, sur le fond du problème, les divergences enregistrées ont été minimales et qu'aucune voix ne s'est élevée pour prendre avec conviction et succès la défense des sociétés étrangères, que la Quatrième Commission a le devoir de condamner avec la même sévérité que celle dont elle fait preuve lorsqu'elle juge les puissances coloniales.

21. La délégation sénégalaise est prête à contribuer à l'élaboration d'un projet de résolution qui réaffirmerait sans équivoque le droit inaliénable des habitants des territoires coloniaux à disposer de leurs ressources naturelles et à les exploiter à leur profit, en attendant que soit confirmé et acquis leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance.

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. SABEV (Bulgarie) déclare que les activités des intérêts étrangers dans les pays coloniaux sont à la racine même du colonialisme et du racisme, et sont tout à fait en accord avec la philosophie et leur raison d'être de ces idéologies: tirer d'immenses profits des ressources naturelles et humaines de ces pays, au prix de la sueur et du sang des peuples colonisés.

2. Le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (A/6868 et Add.1) montre bien que le colonialisme et le racisme ne sont pas des phénomènes abstraits et inexplicables: ils sont le produit d'une société orientée vers la satisfaction des intérêts égoïstes d'une minorité. Les conclusions et les recommandations formulées dans ce rapport, que la délégation bulgare approuve sans réserve, seront très utiles à la Commission dans l'élaboration de mesures destinées à mettre fin aux graves conséquences du jeu des monopoles.

3. Les monopoles agissent en collaboration étroite avec les puissances coloniales pour piller les ressources naturelles des territoires qu'elles administrent, exploiter leur main-d'œuvre et réprimer les mouvements de libération nationale — les nombreuses études effectuées par le Comité spécial et d'autres organes de l'ONU l'ont amplement prouvé. L'Assemblée générale a déjà condamné l'expropriation des autochtones et l'emprise économique étrangère dans les territoires coloniaux dans plusieurs résolutions adoptées à ses vingtième et vingt et unième sessions. Elle a, en particulier, au paragraphe 12 du dispositif de sa résolution 2189 (XXI), condamné les activités des intérêts étrangers au Sud-Ouest africain, en Rhodésie du Sud et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, et demandé aux gouvernements intéressés de prendre les mesures nécessaires pour mettre fin à ces activités.

4. En dépit des appels de l'ONU, les monopoles ne font qu'élargir leur champ d'action. Cette situation compromet gravement le développement harmonieux et l'indépendance économique future des pays qui vivent actuellement sous le joug colonial, et les pays qui se sont libérés au prix de longues luttes sont eux-mêmes menacés. M. Sabev rappelle que les orateurs qui l'ont précédé ont souligné que les intérêts étrangers dépendent d'un groupe de monopoles qui ont leurs sièges dans les capitales occidentales. Il existe aujourd'hui une conjuration internationale de forces impérialistes et colonialistes dont les activités des monopoles étrangers — notamment des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni et de la République fédérale d'Allemagne — sont la manifestation. Au Portugal et dans les colonies portugaises, ces monopoles contrôlent deux tiers des investissements. Ce qui les attire dans la partie méridionale de l'Afrique, ce sont les conditions favorables offertes par les gouvernements coloniaux, qui leur permettent de faire des bénéfices deux ou trois fois supérieurs à ceux qu'ils feraient dans leurs pays d'origine. L'Afrique australe n'est d'ailleurs pas la seule région du monde où leur présence se fait sentir. Au Moyen-Orient, et notamment en Arabie du Sud, les monopoles impérialistes, notamment ceux des Etats-Unis et du Royaume-Uni, pratiquent une exploitation à outrance. Le rapport du Comité spécial montre que dans les territoires coloniaux du Pacifique et de l'océan Indien l'économie, essentiellement agricole, est aux mains d'exploiteurs étrangers, tandis que la population autochtone est contrainte à travailler sur les plantations pour des salaires dérisoires. Aux Antilles, et notamment aux Bahamas, le tourisme, qui est pratiquement la seule industrie, est entièrement contrôlé par des capitaux des Etats-Unis et d'Europe.

5. Le rôle des monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux a, à de nombreuses reprises, été dénoncé par les représentants des mouvements nationaux de libération. Le Comité spécial a appris qu'en Angola, par exemple, certaines sociétés disposent d'armées privées qui aident les colonialistes portugais à massacrer les patriotes africains. De plus, les monopoles apportent un soutien financier à la répression; on peut citer le cas de l'Angola Diamond Company, société qui, ainsi que certains orateurs l'ont déjà signalé, a une concession de plus d'un million de kilomètres carrés, et a versé environ 125 millions d'escudos, soit 4 millions de dollars, à cette fin.

6. Le rapport du Comité spécial montre toute l'ampleur des conséquences politiques, économiques et sociales néfastes des activités des monopoles. Pour être plus aisément exploités les autochtones sont privés de leurs droits et victimes de mesures discriminatoires; aucune activité syndicale ne leur est permise; l'analphabétisme est quasi universel et les soins médicaux pratiquement inexistantes.

7. Devant cette situation, l'ONU doit réaffirmer les droits de tous les peuples sur leurs ressources naturelles, condamner les activités des monopoles étrangers qui pillent ces ressources, ainsi que les gouvernements des pays coloniaux, et notamment ceux de l'Afrique du Sud et du Portugal, qui encouragent ces pratiques aux dépens des peuples colonisés. M. Sabeu pense que l'on pourrait également demander au Secrétaire général de faire en sorte que les renseignements concernant les activités des intérêts étrangers soient plus largement diffusés.

8. M. Sabeu exprime enfin l'espoir que la discussion en cours permettra d'adopter des mesures constructives capables de mettre fin à l'oppression et à l'exploitation des peuples dans le monde entier.

9. M. KAEMBA (Zambie) déclare qu'aux yeux de sa délégation ce sont les activités des intérêts étrangers dans les pays coloniaux qui sont l'obstacle majeur à la décolonisation et la raison profonde de l'impuissance de l'ONU dans ce domaine.

10. La raison d'être du colonialisme est d'enrichir les colonisateurs et de maintenir les colonisés dans un état de dépendance économique. Même dans les pays aujourd'hui libérés, les colonialistes cherchent encore à s'assurer le contrôle des matières premières que ces pays possèdent par des actes d'agression flagrante, ainsi qu'ils le montrent les événements récemment survenus en République démocratique du Congo, où les monopoles n'ont pas hésité à employer des mercenaires pour faire échouer la marche vers le progrès d'un Etat africain indépendant. En Afrique, le but des colonialistes a été, et est encore, l'exploitation des vastes richesses minérales du continent, au prix de la déshumanisation des Africains. Ils intensifient cette déshumanisation en Afrique du Sud, en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain, au Mozambique, en Angola et en Guinée (Bissau), en prétextant, pour comble de paradoxe, que les populations autochtones ne sont pas encore mûres pour la liberté.

11. Les porte-parole des exploités étrangers ont fait de pieuses déclarations à la Quatrième Commission, dénonçant verbalement l'apartheid et toutes les formes d'injustice raciale et économique, mais ils ont révélé leurs intentions profondes en votant contre les deux résolutions que la Commission a adoptées à cette session (A/C.4/L.870/Rev.2 et A/C.4/L.872/Rev.1) pour mettre fin, précisément, à ces maux. En fait, les pays qu'ils représentent sont les architectes les plus subtils et les plus dangereux de l'injustice. Ils admettent qu'ils fournissent des armes au Portugal et à l'Afrique du Sud, mais prétendent avoir reçu l'assurance que ces armes ne seraient pas utilisées contre des Africains: c'est là une excuse absurde que la délégation zambienne rejette, et dont les photographies exposées à la Commission montrent bien le peu de valeur. La Zambie a d'ailleurs été elle-même attaquée, au début de l'année, par des Portugais qui ont détruit des villages avec du matériel fabriqué dans les pays occidentaux.

12. Le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6868 et Add.1) révèle toute l'ampleur du contrôle que les intérêts du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis et de l'Afrique du Sud exercent sur l'économie de toute l'Afrique australe. En Rhodésie, où 80 p. 100 des investissements effectués dans l'industrie proviennent de l'étranger, l'industrie minière, qui est le secteur le plus important, est contrôlée par des sociétés telles que l'Anglo-American Corporation, la British South Africa Company, Turner and Newall Ltd. (Royaume-Uni) et Union Carbide (Etats-Unis) [par. 93 et 94 du document A/6868/Add.1]. Une situation comparable existe au Sud-Ouest africain (ibid., par. 96). Dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal où les monopoles occidentaux jouent aussi un rôle capital, on apprend (ibid., par. 102) qu'ils participent directement à la répression.

13. Pour la Zambie, le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud ne sont que les instruments de ces monopoles. Le rapport présenté à la Quatrième Commission en donne la preuve, et l'attitude des pays occidentaux ne fait que confirmer cette conclusion. Les pays occidentaux sont directement responsables de la politique intolérable de discrimination raciale qui fait qu'en Angola et au Mozambique le salaire mensuel initial d'un Africain est en moyenne de 150 escudos, soit 5 dollars des Etats-Unis, alors que celui d'un Blanc est de 4 000 escudos, soit 133,33 dollars. En Rhodésie, c'est grâce aux monopoles que les rebelles racistes se sont maintenus au pouvoir.

14. Les Africains, maintenant qu'ils connaissent le rôle joué par les intérêts étrangers, doivent mieux distinguer leurs amis de leurs ennemis. Les monopoles considèrent l'indépendance des pays africains comme une menace pour leurs investissements, et ils auront recours à tous les moyens, y compris l'intervention de mercenaires, pour s'assurer des profits plus considérables. Le continent africain tout entier est aujourd'hui menacé, et la délégation zambienne lance un appel aux monopoles occidentaux pour qu'ils cessent leur oppression et leur exploitation avant que la patience des Africains ne soit à bout.

15. M. LUARD (Royaume-Uni) dit que le problème fondamental à l'examen revêt une grande importance pour la Commission, s'agissant d'un problème qui n'a peut-être pas été suffisamment examiné dans le passé, à savoir les difficultés économiques et financières des territoires dépendants. Du fait que la plupart des territoires qui n'ont pas encore été décolonisés sont très petits et très pauvres en ressources, la question de leur développement économique et de l'assistance économique dont ils ont besoin doit être étudiée de toute urgence. A notre époque, où il ne reste plus qu'un si petit nombre de territoires dépendants, dont presque tous sont d'ailleurs en voie d'être décolonisés, il faut incontestablement accorder une attention croissante à leurs problèmes économiques. Les questions à examiner à cet égard sont les suivantes: quel est le montant total des investissements dans chaque territoire, quelle part des capitaux investis l'ont été par le gouvernement local, le gouvernement métropolitain ou des intérêts privés, dans quelle mesure le total des investissements correspond-il aux besoins du territoire et, le cas échéant, quel revenu chaque catégorie d'investisseurs en retire-t-elle? Le cas échéant, quelles conséquences l'investissement de capitaux privés entraîne-t-il sur les plans social et politique? Dans quelle mesure les investissements en question sont-ils répartis d'une manière satisfaisante, et le gouvernement exerce-t-il sur eux un contrôle suffisamment strict pour s'assurer qu'ils servent les intérêts du territoire dans son ensemble? Mais surtout, et c'est là sans aucun doute la question capitale qui se pose à propos du point de l'ordre du jour en discussion, les territoires en question se trouveraient-ils, sans investissements privés étrangers, dans une situation meilleure ou pire et mieux ou moins bien préparés pour accéder à l'indépendance: en d'autres termes, les investissements étrangers font-ils "obstacle" à la décolonisation, comme le donne à penser le titre de ce point de l'ordre du jour, ou bien au contraire, en favorisant la mise en valeur des ressources et la croissance économique, encouragent-ils l'indépendance et permettent-ils, le moment venu, de lui donner davantage de réalité et de sens?

16. Il s'agit là de problèmes très concrets, dont il est légitime, aux yeux de la délégation britannique, que la Quatrième Commission se préoccupe. Toutefois, si l'on veut que cette question fasse l'objet d'un débat utile, il importe que l'on s'efforce de démêler les divers éléments qui la composent. A l'origine, le rapport dont la Commission est saisie visait à examiner l'influence des sociétés étrangères en Afrique australe; il reflète donc l'inquiétude profonde et parfaitement justifiable qu'éprouvent les membres de la Commission devant l'évolution de la situation dans cette région. Cependant, ce document étend bon nombre de ses conclusions, ou plutôt des hypothèses qu'il contient sur cette question, aux sociétés privées installées dans les territoires dépendants en général, et la plupart des conclusions auxquelles il arrive n'ont, en ce qui concerne les sociétés, que fort peu de pertinence ou sont même dénuées de toute substance. Enfin, le rapport va encore plus loin, puisqu'il cherche à englober dans ses conclusions les investissements privés dans tous les pays en voie de développement; or, sur ce point, les affirmations auxquelles il aboutit sont encore plus générales et plus radicales et peuvent difficilement être acceptées par la plupart des membres de la Commission qui ont encouragé ce type d'investissements. A mesure que s'étend le champ de son sujet, le rapport non seulement multiplie les assertions gravement erronées, mais reflète de plus en plus clairement les préjugés des tenants d'une conception idéologique particulière. Cette orientation n'est probablement pas étrangère au fait que le rapport a été établi par un sous-comité dont, quoique l'on en puisse dire par ailleurs, la composition politique ne saurait guère être qualifiée d'équilibrée.

17. M. Luard aborde pour commencer la question générale des investissements privés dans les pays en voie de développement. A son avis, l'une des raisons pour lesquelles ce problème revêt une telle ampleur, qui ne fait d'ailleurs que s'accroître, réside dans cette constatation que les économistes ont faite depuis un certain temps, à savoir que les investisseurs privés s'intéressent de moins en moins, depuis quelques années, aux régions insuffisamment développées. Avant la première guerre mondiale, une part considérable de l'ensemble des capitaux était investie à l'étranger et une très grande partie l'était dans les territoires qui étaient alors les moins développés: il s'agissait de capitaux investis dans l'extraction des matières premières, les mines, les chemins de fer et certains secteurs de production agricole. A cette époque, la Grande-Bretagne investissait environ la moitié de tous ses capitaux à l'étranger, principalement dans les pays en voie de développement. Entre les deux guerres, la part relative de ce type d'investissement a diminué, et cette tendance s'est encore accentuée depuis la fin de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Le rapport publié en 1961 par l'ONU sous le titre Le courant international des capitaux à long terme et les donations publiques, 1951-1959^{1/}, étude importante sur les investissements internationaux, contient notamment les conclusions suivantes:

"Le volume des diverses catégories de capitaux étrangers entrant dans le circuit international a accusé une augmentation considérable, mais la répartition des capitaux en question est loin d'avoir été uniforme entre les diverses régions géographiques et entre les groupes de pays classés selon leur stade de développement économique. En particulier, les capitaux privés ont manifesté une tendance marquée à se concentrer dans les pays fortement exportateurs ou ayant déjà atteint un niveau élevé de développement." (Par. 52.)

Dans un rapport analogue de l'ONU, consacré à la même question^{2/} et publié deux ans plus tard, on peut lire que:

"... les pays développés eux-mêmes absorbaient une proportion croissante des capitaux privés à long terme engagés dans des transactions internationales. La part disponible pour le financement du développement du reste du monde en a été trouvée réduite." (Par. 98.)

Enfin, dans un rapport encore plus récent sur cette question^{3/}, publié en 1966, il est écrit que:

"... les entrées de capitaux privés à long terme varient considérablement d'une année à l'autre dans la plupart des pays en voie de développement. Au cours des quatre années 1961-1964, on ne note un accroissement net plus ou moins régulier des investissements de capitaux privés étrangers que dans une minorité des pays en voie de développement ...

"Malgré ce caractère variable, les mouvements enregistrés font apparaître une concentration marquée: au cours de chacune des années considérées, la plus grande partie des montants nets reçus est allée à un groupe restreint de pays (de 3 à 5 généralement)." [Par. 71 et 72.]

18. Ainsi, non seulement la plupart des capitaux ont été investis dans les pays développés plutôt que dans les pays en voie de développement, mais encore, parmi les pays en voie de développement eux-mêmes, ce sont surtout les plus avancés et les plus riches en ressources qui ont enregistré des entrées de capitaux.

19. Il apparaît donc qu'une part très élevée des capitaux privés est aujourd'hui investie dans les pays d'origine plutôt qu'à l'étranger; de plus, dans la mesure où des capitaux sont effectivement investis à l'étranger (et souvent le gouvernement du pays d'origine impose délibérément des restrictions sur ces investissements), c'est, comme pour le commerce extérieur, dans une très forte proportion entre les pays développés eux-mêmes que ces transactions ont lieu, plutôt que de pays développés à pays en voie de développement. L'extraction des matières premières occupe proportionnellement une place moins importante que la mise en valeur de nouvelles matières premières; l'agriculture est encouragée d'une manière plus active et souvent subventionnée dans les pays développés eux-mêmes; enfin et surtout, les éléments qui attirent et font fructifier les capitaux — les équipes de recherche, la main-d'œuvre qualifiée, les marchés de grande consommation et une large gamme de services perfectionnés — n'existent que dans les pays les plus développés. C'est pourquoi les capitaux des Etats-Unis investis à l'étranger le sont aujourd'hui dans une proportion écrasante en Europe, au Canada et dans les autres régions développées, tandis que les capitaux britanniques sont placés dans les pays du Marché commun et dans l'ancien Commonwealth, etc.

20. C'est ainsi que les pays en voie de développement, dont naturellement les territoires dépendants, se trouvent négligés, tout comme les régions insuffisamment développées de tous les pays, et incapables d'attirer les capitaux dont ils ont un besoin si urgent.

21. L'un des problèmes auxquels les membres de la Commission — et d'ailleurs tous ceux que préoccupe la prospérité future de ces territoires, seraient peut-être bien avisés d'attacher maintenant plus d'attention — consiste à déterminer comment les petits territoires dépendants, dépourvus de ressources et éloignés, peuvent s'y prendre pour attirer un volume plus grand de capitaux, tant publics que privés.

22. C'est là un fait qui est même admis par la plupart des pays en voie de développement. Loin de se montrer méfiants à l'égard des investissements étrangers, ou de s'y opposer, ainsi que le rapport dont la Commission est saisie semble le suggérer, les populations et les gouvernements de ces territoires ont fait l'impossible pour les attirer comme d'ailleurs les pays en voie de développement en général. L'importance de l'investissement privé pour les pays en voie de développement a, dans l'ensemble, été reconnue au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Dans sa résolution 2087 (XX) sur le "Financement du développement économique", l'Assemblée générale a invité les gouvernements à "accorder l'attention voulue aux mesures et à l'action propres à favoriser les investissements privés étrangers dans les pays en voie de développement recommandées par la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et le développement ...". Un rapport sur les moyens d'encourager le courant des capitaux privés, intitulé "Développement des investissements privés étrangers dans les pays en voie de développement (Résumé et conclusions)"^{4/}, a été rédigé en mars 1967 à l'intention du Conseil économique et social. On peut y lire ce qui suit: "On trouve peu de pays en voie de développement qui ne soient disposés à accepter sous une forme ou une autre des investissements privés étrangers." On y souligne l'importance que revêtent ces investissements du fait qu'ils permettent l'"introduction, par l'intermédiaire d'entreprises étrangères, de procédés techniques modernes" (par. 103). On y note en outre l'avantage qu'ils présentent en rendant possible l'"intensification de l'emploi de la main-d'œuvre locale et l'augmentation de sa productivité" (par. 55) et le transfert des "connaissances techniques et administratives nécessaires à l'exploitation d'industries dépassant le stade rudimentaire" (par. 146). A l'alinéa b du paragraphe 2 du dispositif d'un projet de résolution récent^{5/}, le Conseil économique et social prie le Secrétaire général de "prêter son assistance, en coopération avec les organisations internationales intéressées et avec le concours des commissions économiques régionales, aux gouvernements et aux organismes du système des Nations Unies qui pourraient demander son assistance pour l'application des mesures destinées à accroître le courant des investissements étrangers productifs dans des conditions qui soient acceptables pour toutes les parties intéressées". Naturellement, tout le monde sait cela. Les gouvernements des pays en voie de développement qui ont accédé à l'indépendance sont, pratiquement sans exception, pleinement conscients de la nécessité d'attirer davantage de capitaux étrangers, et non pas moins. Lorsque l'un de ces gouvernements critique la politique économique de l'ancienne puissance coloniale, c'est pour n'avoir pas attiré suffisamment d'investissements étrangers quand le pays n'était pas encore indépendant, et non pas pour avoir ouvert la porte à trop d'investissements.

23. Pour juger de l'utilité des investissements privés étrangers, le meilleur critère est sans doute leurs effets sur les pays en voie de développement qui en ont absorbé le plus. Il est frappant de constater que bon nombre des pays en voie de développement qui, au cours des dernières années, ont enregistré le taux de croissance économique le plus spectaculaire sont précisément ceux qui, tant avant que depuis l'accession à l'indépendance, ont su attirer le courant le plus puissant de capitaux étrangers. Ces pays sont, en Asie: le Japon, autrefois, puis la Malaisie, le Pakistan et Hong-kong; en Afrique: la Zambie, le Kenya et la Côte d'Ivoire; en Amérique latine: le Mexique et le Chili. Koweït, qui accuse, sauf erreur, le revenu par habitant le plus élevé du monde, n'aurait guère eu de chance d'arriver à ce résultat s'il n'avait été disposé à accueillir des capitaux privés en grandes quantités. Il est vrai que, dans certains de ces pays, le niveau de vie élevé est dû, en partie, à l'existence de matières premières qui ont attiré les capitaux. Le fait est, toutefois, que ces pays ont su mesurer l'importance du rôle que peuvent jouer les capitaux, les talents et les techniques de commercialisation étrangers lorsqu'il s'agit de tirer de la mise en valeur de ces matières premières les revenus les plus élevés. C'est pourquoi la très grande majorité de ces pays accueillent favorablement et recherchent même activement les capitaux étrangers nécessaires à leur développement.

24. A ce propos, il est intéressant d'examiner l'attitude adoptée à l'égard de l'investissement privé par la Russie et la Yougoslavie (dont les représentants ont contribué à la rédaction du rapport à l'examen) au cours de leur propre période de développement. Tout le monde ne se rend peut-être pas compte que Lénine lui-même estimait que les pays en train d'édifier un régime socialiste devaient offrir des concessions aux capitaux étrangers. Les avis de Lénine à ce sujet peuvent être trouvés dans le tome 31 de ses Oeuvres^{6/}, dont il convient de citer les extraits suivants: "Il (le plan d'électrification) a été élaboré par les meilleurs agronomes et les meilleurs ingénieurs. Sans le concours de capitaux et de moyens de production provenant de l'étranger, nous ne sommes pas en mesure d'en accélérer la réalisation. Mais il faut payer pour recevoir de l'aide." (P. 471 à 472.) "Où prendre les moyens de production qui nous sont nécessaires? Il faut payer les Américains si nous voulons leur concours: ce sont des businessmen." (P. 472.) "Aussi résolvons-nous le problème au moyen des concessions." (P. 472.) "... nous apprendrons d'eux à organiser des entreprises modèles en montant les nôtres à côté des leurs. Si nous ne savons pas le faire, alors ce n'est pas la peine de parler de quoi que ce soit. Nous équiper selon le dernier mot de la technique est aujourd'hui une tâche qui n'est pas facile; il faut apprendre pour cela, apprendre par la pratique, car les écoles, les universités et les cours ne suffisent pas; et c'est pourquoi nous accordons les concessions disposées en échiquier: venez et apprenez ici même." (P. 474.) Naturellement, si Lénine était pleinement conscient de l'importance des investissements étrangers, c'était parce que l'histoire de son propre pays le lui avait enseigné. A l'époque de la révolution, la Russie impériale était déjà la cinquième puissance industrielle du monde grâce, pour une bonne part, aux capitaux étrangers qu'elle avait reçus tout au long des 50 années précédentes. Quant au Gouvernement yougoslave, il semble conscient des avantages de l'investissement privé puisqu'il a cherché récemment à attirer des capitaux privés des pays occidentaux. Alors, on se demande pourquoi l'Union soviétique, qui a profité elle-même des investissements étrangers, cherche maintenant à empêcher les pays en voie de développement de béné-ficier des mêmes avantages? En vérité, on ne peut que se demander quels peuvent bien être les motifs de ceux qui critiquent si amèrement les investissements étrangers. Si on empêche les intérêts économiques étrangers d'investir des capitaux dans les pays en voie de développement, où ceux-ci trouveront-ils donc les fonds dont ils ont besoin pour leur développement? Il est d'autant plus étonnant que ces critiques viennent de gouvernements qui sont loin d'être particulièrement généreux eux-mêmes en matière d'aide officielle. Il convient ici de rappeler l'échec du Fonds pour le développement économique du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland — pays qui sont situés dans la région qui, aujourd'hui, nous intéresse au premier chef. Ce fonds avait été créé en vertu des dispositions de la résolution 2063 (XX) qui avait été si chaleureusement appuyée, il y a près de deux ans, par un grand nombre de membres de la Quatrième Commission. Or, le mois dernier, le Secrétaire général a annoncé que ce fonds ne pouvait pas fonctionner, les contributions annoncées n'atteignant pas au total 6 000 livres sterling.

25. M. Luard rappelle à la Quatrième Commission que son débat de ce jour porte de façon précise sur les investissements privés dans les territoires dépendants, bien qu'il soit intéressant de noter que bon nombre des généralisations par trop absolues du rapport dont elle est saisie portent sans la moindre discrimination sur les investissements privés étrangers en général. Naturellement, la plupart des considérations générales relatives aux investissements privés dans les régions en voie de développement sont valables tant pour les territoires dépendants que pour les autres pays en voie de développement, car il s'agit là de considérations qui se rapportent à l'utilité des investissements privés pour l'économie, en général. Elles sont valables pour les territoires dépendants comme pour les pays en voie de développement. Il n'y a pas de baguette magique qui transforme, lors de l'accession à l'indépendance, un investissement jusque-là néfaste en investissement subitement salutaire.

26. Certains prétendent parfois que le cas est différent lorsqu'il s'agit d'investissements privés dans un pays indépendant, car ils sont alors surveillés par le nouveau gouvernement indépendant qui peut veiller à ce qu'ils soient utilisés au profit de la collectivité. Or les investissements privés sont tout aussi rigoureusement surveillés dans les territoires dépendants. Dans tous les territoires britanniques certainement, les investissements privés sont strictement contrôlés, tant par le gouvernement local que par le gouvernement de la métropole. Dans la plupart des territoires encore britanniques, des questions comme l'investissement et la politique de développement sont du ressort des ministres et des membres des organes législatifs élus par la population locale. Ce contrôle prend un certain nombre de formes. En premier lieu, les investissements sont soumis à l'impôt, des redevances sont payées, et les recettes sont utilisées à l'intérieur du territoire à des fins qui profitent à l'ensemble de la population. En deuxième lieu, dans les territoires où il reste quelque élément de contrôle britannique, tout investissement d'un montant supérieur à 50 000 livres sterling est soumis à l'approbation du Trésor britannique et une des conditions explicitement requises est que l'investissement doit être "considéré comme avantageux pour l'économie et le développement du territoire". En troisièmeliieu, le gouvernement de chaque territoire contrôle les investissements étrangers au moyen de ses propres dispositions législatives et de ses plans de développement. Les instruments envoyées aux gouvernements des territoires coloniaux après la mise en vigueur du Colonial Development and Welfare Act de 1945 stipulent ce qui suit:

"Un équilibre judicieux entre les différents secteurs de développement et de protection sociale est indispensable à l'élaboration d'une saine politique de développement ... L'attention la plus grande doit, partout, être donnée à l'amélioration de la productivité des ressources du territoire, qu'il s'agisse des ressources humaines ou matérielles."

Telle est toujours notre politique. Les plans de développement sont élaborés par les gouvernements des colonies, la plupart de celles-ci étant maintenant gouvernées par une majorité élue. Ces plans, qui portent en général sur une période de 3 à 5 ans, comprennent des projets de développement économique et social dans des domaines considérés comme prioritaires, compte tenu des ressources financières escomptées pour la période considérée.

27. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni qui, bien entendu, assure la plus grande partie du financement de ces plans (et pratiquement la totalité dans les petits territoires) n'épargne aucun effort pour s'assurer que le choix des priorités est approprié, compte tenu des besoins économiques et sociaux du territoire intéressé. Bien souvent, il s'acquitte de cette tâche en envoyant des missions d'experts dans le territoire afin d'aider les autorités locales dans leurs travaux de planification ou d'entreprendre des enquêtes économiques afin de fournir aux autorités une base pour l'établissement des plans. Récemment, de telles missions ont été envoyées au Souaziland et à l'île Maurice, une enquête économique tripartite à laquelle participait le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a eu lieu au Honduras britannique, la mission Selwyn-Hollands s'est rendue en Arabie du Sud, et une enquête socio-économique a été effectuée aux îles Gilbert-et-Ellice. Le Ministère du développement d'outre-mer et l'Office du Commonwealth examinent ces plans en détail comme ceux de pays indépendants, avec l'aide de conseillers spécialisés en matière de développement économique, d'agriculture, d'irrigation, de sylviculture, de coopératives, d'enseignement et de santé publique.

28. On attache actuellement une attention toute particulière aux moyens propres à diversifier les économies coloniales et à accélérer le processus d'expansion équilibrée, par exemple en développant la production d'aliments destinés à la consommation locale et en encourageant le développement des industries travaillant pour l'exportation et la fabrication de produits de remplacement des importations. Toutes ces mesures permettent d'assurer le contrôle des investissements et du développement général, principalement par l'intermédiaire de représentants élus de la population, afin de servir au mieux les intérêts de l'ensemble du territoire.

29. En second lieu, on avance parfois l'opinion que dans les territoires dépendants certaines entreprises privées peuvent s'assurer une position plus dominante et plus influente dans l'ensemble de la société, et en particulier utiliser cette influence pour faire "obstacle" au processus de décolonisation. Quelle preuve y a-t-il que les investissements privés étrangers font réellement "obstacle" au processus de décolonisation? La première réponse qui vient à l'esprit est que, si tel est le but des intérêts en question, leurs efforts sont apparemment d'une inefficacité singulière. Depuis 1945, c'est-à-dire longtemps avant que le terme de décolonisation ait été employé pour la première fois à l'ONU, la décolonisation a été la doctrine officielle des gouvernements qui se sont succédé à Londres. Cette politique a été poursuivie avec constance depuis cette date et son aboutissement est maintenant tout proche. Jusqu'ici, le Royaume-Uni a décolonisé 35 territoires comptant au total une population de 740 millions d'habitants. Trois autres territoires, l'Arabie du Sud, l'île Maurice et le Souaziland, sont actuellement sur le point d'accéder à l'indépendance. Il ne restera plus ensuite, les deux cas particuliers que représentent la Rhodésie et Hong-kong mis à part, que quelques petits territoires, dont la population ne dépasse en aucun cas le demi-million, et dans la plupart des cas se situe même au-dessous de 100 000 habitants, le total dépassant à peine le chiffre d'un million d'habitants. Au surplus, et c'est peut-être là l'aspect le plus important de la question, ce sont presque sans exception les territoires les plus développés sur le plan économique, et ceux où les investissements étrangers étaient les plus considérables, qui ont accédé les premiers à l'indépendance; les territoires non encore décolonisés, les îles des Antilles et du Pacifique, sont ceux où le volume des investissements étrangers est le plus faible, et non le plus considérable. Si les intérêts privés étrangers constituaient réellement un facteur qui fasse obstacle d'une manière ou d'une autre à la décolonisation, c'est l'inverse qui aurait dû se produire. Les sociétés étrangères se montraient extrêmement actives dans la plupart des territoires qui ont accédé à l'indépendance, et particulièrement actives dans la plupart des pays qui y ont accédé les premiers, tels que l'Inde, la Birmanie, la Malaisie, Singapour, le Ghana et le Nigéria. Il est vrai que la Rhodésie constitue une exception à cette règle. La seule raison du retard apporté à l'octroi de l'indépendance à ce territoire est le souci du Gouvernement britannique de faire en sorte que cette émancipation ne s'effectue que dans des conditions permettant de parvenir à bref délai à la mise en place d'un gouvernement désigné par la majorité, et, étant donné les difficultés résultant de l'attitude des gouvernements qui se sont succédé en Rhodésie. Ce retard n'est en aucune façon lié à l'attitude des sociétés ou des intérêts commerciaux. La responsabilité de la politique en matière de décolonisation incombe, comme il se doit, au Gouvernement britannique à Londres et aucun effort ou activité de la part d'entreprises ou d'intérêts quelconques opérant dans les territoires ne peut être considéré comme capable de l'influencer d'une façon quelconque. Il est à peine besoin de dire que cette remarque est particulièrement valable lorsqu'il s'agit d'un gouvernement travailliste tel que le gouvernement actuel. Le rapport prétend que les investissements privés font obstacle à la décolonisation, mais l'histoire montre que c'est le contraire qui s'est passé et que les territoires qui ont été les premiers à accéder à l'indépendance sont ceux où les investissements privés étaient les plus importants.

30. Troisièmement, on prétend quelquefois que les entreprises privées qui investissent dans les pays dépendants font passer leurs propres intérêts avant ceux de la population locale. Bien entendu, les investisseurs privés se soucient toujours dans une certaine mesure de leurs propres intérêts, tant dans les pays dépendants que dans les pays indépendants. Cependant, puisque la plupart des pays les accueillent volontiers, c'est qu'ils reconnaissent que, quels que soient leurs mobiles, leurs investissements servent les intérêts des habitants. Les investissements fournissent des emplois à la population, permettent de mettre méthodiquement en valeur les ressources du pays et suscitent la création d'une main-d'œuvre nationale spécialisée. A l'heure actuelle, nombre d'entreprises privées organisent des programmes de formation et de protection sociale qui procurent des avantages considérables aux pays où elles opèrent. Enfin et surtout, la présence de ces entreprises assure d'importantes recettes aux territoires. Il est de fait que, dans bien des cas, une proportion importante des recettes des territoires dépendants provient des activités des sociétés étrangères. Pour ne citer qu'un seul exemple, auquel s'intéresse particulièrement le rapport, celui de l'Afrique australe, 70 p. 100 des impôts sur le revenu perçus au Souaziland sont versés par des sociétés qui, presque toutes, sont des sociétés privées étrangères. En d'autres termes, abstraction faite des subventions accordées par le Royaume-Uni, qui représentent à peu près la moitié des recettes du territoire, et du produit des droits de douane, la plus grande partie des recettes perçues localement sont dues à la présence de ces sociétés étrangères, qui, d'autre part, jouent un rôle positif en stimulant le développement des territoires. Peut-on légitimement prétendre que la situation de ces territoires n'en serait que meilleure si ces sociétés ne s'y étaient pas installées? A Hong-kong, autre territoire dépendant, qui, sans doute, ne constitue pas un exemple typique, les impôts versés par les sociétés étrangères représentent plus de 20 p. 100 des recettes de la colonie, laquelle dispose de ce fait de sommes considérables qu'elle consacre au financement des services sociaux et à d'autres projets de développement.

31. Une autre des idées énoncées dans le rapport est que l'afflux de capital privé dans les territoires dépendants risque de donner lieu à une forme de développement mal équilibré. En ce qui concerne les territoires britanniques, M. Luard peut affirmer catégoriquement que le Gouvernement britannique a toujours eu le plus grand soin, lorsqu'il examinait les propositions relatives aux plans de développement et aux investissements, de faire en sorte que les activités proposées aboutissent à un développement bien équilibré et intégré. Comme il l'a déjà signalé, ces plans sont examinés de la façon la plus attentive afin de réaliser un équilibre adéquat entre les dépenses d'ordre social et d'ordre économique et d'assurer une répartition aussi harmonieuse que possible des dépenses entre les différents secteurs de l'économie. Il est même possible d'affirmer que, dans certains cas, les administrations coloniales peuvent exercer un contrôle plus effectif sur les plans de développement des territoires dépendants que les gouvernements indépendants sur leurs propres plans. A ce stade du développement, la structure de l'économie est habituellement moins complexe et le territoire a souvent une plus grande certitude de recevoir une assistance régulière et prévisible de la métropole dans les années à venir. Dans de nombreux territoires britanniques on a constitué des sociétés de développement, non seulement afin d'encourager les investissements privés, mais également afin de les intégrer au programme général de développement du pays. Souvent, des clauses de sauvegarde sont incluses dans les règlements afin de protéger les intérêts du territoire, par exemple afin d'assurer le recrutement, dans des conditions adéquates, du personnel local. Dans certains cas, les règlements disposent que des programmes de formation devront être organisés à l'intention du personnel local de ces entreprises. La meilleure preuve que les intérêts des territoires ont été préservés d'une façon adéquate à cet égard par les gouvernements coloniaux réside dans le fait que, la plupart du temps, après l'indépendance, aucune modification sensible n'a été portée aux conditions de fonctionnement des entreprises étrangères. A part quelques exceptions, les mêmes entreprises privées sont autorisées à fonctionner de la même façon et dans les mêmes conditions qu'auparavant.

32. Ces considérations conduisent M. Luard à un autre problème sur lequel porte le rapport, à savoir celui qui a trait aux activités des intérêts économiques étrangers dans les territoires d'Afrique australe. Il est clair que, dans l'ensemble, les considérations relatives aux avantages ou autres conséquences des investissements de fonds étrangers sont aussi valables pour cette région que pour les autres parties du monde. En Afrique australe, comme ailleurs, d'un point de vue strictement économique, les investissements étrangers servent les intérêts des territoires et de ceux qui travaillent et y vivent. En Afrique australe, comme ailleurs, ces investissements aboutissent non seulement au développement de l'industrie, mais à la formation de travailleurs spécialisés et à l'élévation du niveau de vie de la main-d'œuvre employée dans les entreprises intéressées. Cependant, on suggère parfois que, du point de vue politique, l'action de ces investissements s'exerce d'une façon différente dans cette région où les entreprises étrangères peuvent favoriser et renforcer le système actuel de gouvernement par la minorité. Dans quelle mesure cette affirmation est-elle vraie? Est-il exact que les entreprises privées aient aidé ou encouragé l'apartheid en Afrique du Sud ou la résistance à l'indépendance et à l'établissement d'un régime majoritaire en Rhodésie? Les seuls éléments dont on dispose à ce sujet, semble-t-il, tendent à prouver le contraire. C'est un fait bien connu qu'en Rhodésie ce sont principalement les milieux d'affaires qui se préoccupent le plus gravement de l'état actuel de l'économie et qui poussent le plus activement M. Smith à rechercher un accord. On sait également qu'en Afrique du Sud ce sont les grandes entreprises, dans leur propre intérêt, qui ont cherché à obtenir à faire disparaître le système des emplois réservés, en vertu duquel les Blancs peuvent seuls accéder à certains emplois, et qui sont intervenus activement auprès du gouvernement pour qu'il assouplisse encore ce système. Dans bien des cas, ces entreprises font œuvre de pionniers en formant des Africains à de nouvelles spécialités et en leur permettant d'accéder à des postes de responsabilité. Une ou deux des plus grandes entreprises ont travaillé d'une façon particulièrement active à susciter des mesures de libéralisation de ce genre: par exemple, un industriel bien connu, M. Oppenheimer, ne se fait pas faute de manifester ouvertement son opposition à l'apartheid. En conséquence, les allégations selon lesquelles ces entreprises travaillent dans les coulisses à renforcer l'apartheid et s'opposent à toute réforme paraissent être démenties par les faits. A la vérité, les hommes d'affaires appellent de tous leurs vœux l'avènement d'une situation favorable à une activité économique prospère et stable, et beaucoup sont conscients des avantages qu'ils tireraient d'une amélioration du sort des travailleurs et des consommateurs africains.

33. Ainsi, on peut montrer que beaucoup des évaluations générales que contient le rapport au sujet du rôle des investissements privés étrangers dans les territoires dépendants sont fausses; elles sont manifestement le reflet des points de vue idéologiques ou politiques propres à ses auteurs. Il est à craindre que cette remarque ne s'applique encore davantage à nombre des déclarations spécifiques que le rapport contient sur certains sujets particuliers. Par exemple, en ce qui concerne les syndicats, le rapport (A/6868/Add.1) contient au paragraphe 89 le passage suivant: "Il n'existe aucune loi relative à la protection du travailleur." Au paragraphe 132, qui récapitule les conclusions générales auxquelles est arrivé le Sous-Comité I, il est fait mention à l'alinéa c de "l'interdiction faite aux autochtones d'avoir des activités syndicales légales" dans les territoires coloniaux. C'est là une des généralisations typiques dont le rapport fourmille et qui ne sont pas seulement excessives, mais fausses. Pour ce qui est des territoires britanniques, comme nombre de représentants d'anciens territoires britanniques aujourd'hui indépendants peuvent le confirmer à la Commission, le Royaume-Uni a toujours eu pour politique essentielle dans ses territoires dépendants d'encourager et de soutenir le développement de syndicats ouvriers dans les colonies. Cette politique, inaugurée en 1930 par le Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies, a été maintenue jusqu'à ce jour. Elle a eu pour principe fondamental qu'un mouvement syndical viable et responsable est indispensable au progrès économique et politique de ces territoires. On a jugé essentiel de faire en sorte que tous les territoires soient dotés d'une législation ouvrière adéquate et, cela étant, l'aide qui a été accordée à des territoires aux termes du Colonial Development and Welfare Acts a été subordonnée à l'existence d'une législation de cette nature dans le territoire intéressé. Le Colonial Development and Welfare Act de 1940 stipulait que le Secrétaire d'Etat devait s'assurer que la législation de la colonie permette de créer des syndicats ouvriers et d'exercer des activités syndicales, et que des conditions équitables de travail soient observées dans l'exécution des travaux. De plus, on a appliqué, pour encourager le développement d'un mouvement syndical prospère, divers programmes de formation à l'intention des dirigeants syndicaux, et ce aussi bien au Royaume-Uni que dans les territoires intéressés. En dehors des bourses individuelles ou de détachements, cette formation peut aussi être acquise par les cours que donne le Ministère du travail du Royaume-Uni et qui sont spécialement conçus pour répondre aux besoins des syndicalistes des pays en voie de développement. Ces cours ont une durée approximative de 3 mois et sont organisés deux ou trois fois par an, ou plus fréquemment en cas de besoin, avec le concours du Ministère du développement des territoires d'outre-mer.

34. On peut mesurer les résultats obtenus par la politique gouvernementale britannique d'encouragement effectif au syndicalisme en déterminant jusqu'à quel point les conventions de l'Organisation internationale du Travail relatives à la liberté d'association et aux négociations collectives sont appliquées dans les territoires non métropolitains. La Convention No 84 (Convention de 1947 concernant le droit d'association et le règlement des conflits du travail dans les territoires non métropolitains) a été ratifiée par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté en mars 1950 et a été appliquée à tous les territoires coloniaux. Peut-être les faits suivants constituent-ils la meilleure réfutation du rapport. En 1932, on ne comptait que trois syndicats légalement constitués dans les territoires coloniaux; en 1942, il y en avait 228, comptant environ 83 000 adhérents. En 1950, le nombre de syndicats était de 1 037 et ils groupaient au total environ 616 000 membres. Par conséquent, on peut dire en fait que le droit de s'affilier à un syndicat existe et est librement exercé dans chaque territoire du Royaume-Uni. Il serait peut-être intéressant de comparer cette situation aux possibilités d'activités syndicales effectives qui existent en Union soviétique, par exemple, et dans certains des autres pays dont les représentants ont contribué à établir le rapport.

35. Par ailleurs, on trouve dans le paragraphe 132, qu'il a déjà cité, et tout au long du rapport l'expression "main-d'œuvre à bon marché". Encore une fois, quels sont les faits? Les faits sont qu'en partie grâce à l'activité des syndicats libres dont il a été fait mention, le niveau des salaires dans les territoires britanniques dépendants se compare très favorablement presque dans chaque cas avec celui de tous les territoires voisins dans la même région. Tel est le cas en Afrique australe; quels que soient les autres désavantages dont la main-d'œuvre africaine doit à coup sûr pâtir, on ne saurait y inclure de bas salaires industriels. En outre, les sociétés étrangères auxquelles le rapport s'intéresse paient généralement des salaires plus élevés, et non moindres, que ceux qui sont en vigueur dans des entreprises du même ordre qui existent dans ces territoires. Il est du reste extraordinaire que ce rapport et les longs appendices dont il s'accompagne, si riches en documentation pour tant de domaines, soient si peu loquaces sur ce point essentiel: la relation entre les salaires versés par les intérêts économiques étrangers dont ils discutent et ceux qui sont payés ailleurs. La notion d'"exploitation" est un thème dominant de ce texte, encore qu'on ne s'efforce nulle part de la définir; mais il faut présumer que le niveau des salaires doit en l'occurrence représenter un facteur important de cette "exploitation". Or, en fait, dans la mesure où l'on dispose de renseignements, le niveau des salaires versés par ces firmes étrangères en Afrique, au Moyen-Orient, en Asie et ailleurs est en général supérieur, et non inférieur, à celui des salaires payés par d'autres entreprises analogues dans les pays en question. Dans bien des cas, on accorde aussi des avantages marginaux sous la forme de logement, de services médicaux et d'autres prestations. Si c'est là de l'"exploitation", comment définir la politique que pratiquent les autres entreprises de ces régions?

36. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I formule aussi un certain nombre d'accusations entièrement dépourvues de fondement au sujet de restrictions sur la propriété des terres. Il est question au paragraphe 86 de "l'aliénation des terres aux dépens des populations autochtones. Les étrangers se sont emparés des meilleures terres. Il s'ensuit que l'écrasante majorité des agriculteurs est obligée de louer des terres à des conditions défavorables à des propriétaires européens et à des sociétés étrangères". Pour ce qui est des territoires britanniques, ces déclarations sont absolument fausses. Dans nombre de territoires britanniques, les transactions foncières avec des non-autochtones, y compris les Anglais, font l'objet d'une réglementation très minutieuse, qu'il s'agisse de terres publiques ou privées. Ces transactions doivent être approuvées par le gouvernement. Ce contrôle est exercé pour veiller à ce que la terre profite au territoire et ne serve pas à de pures fins de spéculation. Il est bon de noter à ce propos que, dans la plupart des cas, la législation adoptée à ce sujet par le Gouvernement britannique pendant la période coloniale forme encore la base des pratiques appliquées dans ces mêmes pays depuis qu'ils ont accédé à l'indépendance. On ne saurait donc en conclure que la législation coloniale ait été soit discriminatoire, soit néfaste au développement.

37. M. Luard revient sur un terme aux résonances passionnelles, et en l'occurrence incorrect, qui revient sans cesse dans le rapport à savoir celui de "monopoles internationaux". M. Luard peut donner l'assurance catégorique que dans les territoires que le Royaume-Uni administre encore, la Rhodésie exceptée, aucune très grande société internationale ne joue un rôle dominant dans la vie économique. A l'exception peut-être des îles Falkland, du projet de Freeport aux Bahamas et de l'industrie sucrière aux îles Fidji, il n'y a pas de territoire colonial britannique où un large secteur de l'économie soit dominé par deux grandes sociétés et encore moins par une seule ni où de telles sociétés soient en mesure d'exercer une influence politique importante sur le plan local. De plus, dans beaucoup de ces territoires, et Hong-kong et l'île Maurice en sont des exemples frappants, la plus grande part du secteur privé de l'économie n'est en aucun cas entre les mains de sociétés étrangères mais entre celles d'entreprises locales. Ce terme maintes fois répété, malgré ses résonances passionnelles, n'a donc aucun rapport avec les conditions dans ces territoires.

38. M. Luard n'a traité que des inexactitudes les plus criantes et le plus souvent répétées que contient le rapport. Il y a de nombreuses autres expressions et allégations qui relèvent si évidemment de la propa-gande politique qu'elles ne méritent pas qu'on s'y arrête longuement. On citera, par exemple, le paragraphe 89 où il est dit que "les populations autochtones des territoires sont privées de leurs droits et libertés politiques, ou ne peuvent les exercer". La Commission sait fort bien que la politique du Royaume-Uni dans ses territoires coloniaux a été d'encourager leurs populations à exercer leurs droits politiques en y développant des organes politiques autonomes, prélude à l'indépendance. Quiconque a examiné la situation dans ces territoires sait que les activités politiques y sont plus librement exercées que dans certains des pays dont les représentants ont aidé à préparer le rapport. Dans ces territoires, bien avant l'indépendance, on avait organisé des élections libres avec la participation de divers partis et d'une presse libre, liberté politique à laquelle l'Union soviétique, même après la célébration de son cinquantième anniversaire, ni certains des autres pays dont les représentants ont signé le rapport peuvent à peine prétendre avoir accédé. Si le représentant de l'Union soviétique désire le contester, il voudra peut-être, dans l'exercice de son droit de réponse, indiquer à la Commission à quelle date de telles élections ont eu lieu pour la dernière fois dans son pays.

39. Au paragraphe 132 du rapport, qui résume les conclusions générales, on fait allusion à "des concessions et des privilèges qui [leur] sont accordés par des gouvernements coloniaux". En fait, sauf dans le cas de quelques mines où la nécessité d'accorder les droits à une entreprise unique est évidente, l'activité économique dans les colonies britanniques est entièrement libre et ouverte à la concurrence tant locale qu'étrangère. Il y a d'innombrables mentions de l'"exploitation", bien que le sens de ce terme n'ait jamais été défini et qu'il ne soit fait aucune comparaison concrète avec les conditions de travail ailleurs. Ce que M. Luard a déjà dit des salaires, des conditions de vie et de la liberté politique et syndicale dans les colonies britanniques suffit sans doute à montrer que ces phrases creuses sont dépourvues de sens. D'autres allégations, comme celle qui figure à l'alinéa d du paragraphe 132, que les intérêts économiques étrangers "ont contribué... à l'appauvrissement de la grande majorité de la population autochtone" et qu'ils "partagent donc avec les puissances coloniales la responsabilité des souffrances des peuples coloniaux" se discréditent elles-mêmes par leur absurdité. Elles ne se justifient guère de la part de représentants de pays développés siégeant à la Commission qui ont eux-mêmes fait si peu pour apporter une aide économique ou des investissements aux pays en voie de développement. Enfin, comment comprendre l'allégation figurant à l'alinéa f du paragraphe 132 selon laquelle "il est évident que du fait de leurs activités économiques dans les territoires coloniaux, les intérêts étrangers contribuent à mettre en danger la paix et la sécurité internationales dans la mesure où ils font obstacle à l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux"? Comment les intérêts étrangers contribuent-ils à menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales? Comment font-ils obstacle à l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux? Pourquoi feraient-ils l'un ou l'autre? M. Luard croit en avoir déjà assez dit pour montrer que les faits indiquent que c'est exactement le contraire qui se passe et que les territoires où les intérêts étrangers ont été les plus actifs ont été les premiers à accéder à l'indépendance. C'est une chose que de démontrer que les sociétés étrangères ont joué un grand rôle dans certains pays, qui peut être considéré comme bon ou mauvais selon le point de vue auquel on se place. C'en est une tout autre, qu'aucun fait ne justifie, de prétendre qu'elles "font obstacle à la décolonisation" ou qu'elles "menacent la paix".

40. Un des aspects les plus extraordinaires du rapport est la surprenante divergence qui existe entre les données de fait communiquées par le Secrétariat, qui sont souvent très intéressantes, et les conclusions qui en ont été tirées, qui, en vérité, n'ont absolument aucun rapport avec les faits. En suivant leurs objectifs idéologiques, certaines délégations n'ont pas hésité à exploiter, à des fins de guerre froide, le sincère intérêt que le Comité spécial et la Quatrième Commission portent à la cause de la décolonisation. Elles n'ont pas hésité à exploiter les ressources et les énergies du Secrétariat, qui a produit une très appréciable quantité de renseignements concrets qui figurent dans les appendices du rapport, données concrètes qui non seulement ne justifient en rien les conclusions arbitraires que le rapport prétend en tirer, mais dans bien des cas les démentent. La délégation britannique estime qu'il est inadmissible que les ressources de l'Organisation, c'est-à-dire les crédits inscrits au budget ordinaire et les longues heures de travail consacrées par le Secrétariat aux recherches demandées, soient ainsi utilisées abusivement et que l'attention soit détournée des vrais problèmes.

41. Un orateur précédent a lancé un éloquent appel pour que la question ne soit pas considérée comme une question idéologique. Mais il n'y a pas eu d'alternative possible. Le fait est que le rapport dont la Commission est saisie est de la pure idéologie, du commencement à la fin. Il n'est pas étonnant que le représentant de l'Union soviétique, au début de son intervention le 14 novembre 1967 (1718^{ème} séance), ait saisi l'occasion que lui offrait cette question pour aborder "un élément du problème général de la lutte entre le travail et le capital, ... de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme" et de la lutte mondiale contre le capitalisme et l'impérialisme. C'était sans doute une occasion sans pareille, pour le représentant de l'Union soviétique et ceux qui pensent comme lui, de poursuivre leur stérile bataille idéologique contre les régimes économiques et politiques adoptés non seulement par l'Ouest mais dans un grand nombre d'autres parties du monde. Il ne faut pas se le dissimuler, ce rapport, ou plutôt ses conclusions et recommandations, sont de la propagande politique destinée à discréditer les investissements privés étrangers non seulement en Afrique mais partout ailleurs. Certains peuvent assurément s'opposer sincèrement à de tels investissements. Tout pays membre de la Commission peut annoncer à tout moment qu'il n'acceptera plus les investissements privés étrangers. Mais M. Luard estime que l'ONU n'est pas le lieu où prendre parti sur des problèmes idéologiques. Et quiconque a lu le rapport objectivement ne peut absolument pas douter qu'il prend parti et qu'en l'adoptant ainsi que les recommandations qu'il contient la Commission prendrait également parti. M. Luard espère sincèrement que les membres de la Commission démontreront leur objectivité en refusant de s'engager dans cette lutte politique et idéologique et d'approuver ce rapport partial.

M. Braithwaite (Guyane), vice-président, prend la présidence.

42. M. McDOWELLE (Nouvelle-Zélande) propose que la déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni soit reproduite intégralement dans le compte rendu des débats de la séance.

43. Sans prendre parti pour ou contre cette déclaration quant au fond, le représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande pense que les observations détaillées et concrètes qu'elle contient, du fait même qu'elles sont formulées par le représentant d'un pays qui est l'une des sources de capitaux auxquelles les reproches sont adressés au premier chef, peuvent être d'une grande utilité pour la Commission, qui pourra les étudier à loisir.

44. M. KANNANGARA (Ceylan) appuie la proposition du représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande. Il pense que le point de vue exposé par le représentant du Royaume-Uni mérite de figurer dans la documentation de la Commission.

45. M. JOUEJATI (Syrie) estime également que la déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni, bien que ne traitant pas la question à l'étude mais celle de savoir si les investissements étrangers sont souhaitables ou non, devrait figurer intégralement dans le compte rendu des débats de la séance.

46. Le PRÉSIDENT déclare qu'en l'absence d'objection il considérera que la Commission décide de faire figurer intégralement dans le compte rendu la déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

47. M. TIKHONOV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) déclare que le Comité spécial a accompli un travail utile en étudiant les activités des intérêts économiques notamment en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise.

48. Il ressort clairement du rapport du Comité spécial que les activités des monopoles étrangers sont extrêmement nuisibles aux territoires coloniaux et qu'elles sont la principale cause du maintien de l'oppression coloniale. Le Comité spécial a en effet souligné que les investissements de capitaux étrangers sont à l'origine de nombreuses mesures qui sont défavorables aux populations autochtones et qui visent à renforcer l'emprise des colonisateurs.

49. Le Président de l'Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa a déclaré en 1963 que la devise de cette société était de réaliser le plus de bénéfices possible pour ses actionnaires; c'est bien là l'objectif de tous les monopoles. Les pays colonisés de l'Afrique australe sont riches en produits divers, minéraux notamment, qui sont exploités par la minorité blanche. De plus, les colons se sont emparés des terres fertiles et celles qui ont été laissées à la population lui permettent tout juste de subsister.

50. Trois grandes sociétés, l'Anglo-American Corporation, la Charte Consolidated et la Selection Trust, dont les capitaux proviennent notamment des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la République fédérale d'Allemagne et de la Belgique, amassent en Afrique australe des bénéfices fabuleux: en 1966, ceux de l'Anglo-American Corporation ont été de 15,4 millions de livres sterling et ceux de la Charter Consolidated de 8,6 millions de livres sterling. L'exploitation des ressources de leur pays n'apporte que misère aux populations autochtones. C'est ainsi qu'un accord conclu entre le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud contraint des milliers de travailleurs du Mozambique à aller gagner une maigre existence dans des usines d'Afrique du Sud. La loi ne protège guère les travailleurs, lesquels ne peuvent pas constituer de syndicats, et l'aide médicale qui leur est fournie est minime. D'autre part, l'Angola compte plus de 95 p. 100 d'analphabètes et le Mozambique à peu près le même pourcentage. En Rhodésie du Sud, les sommes allouées annuellement pour l'éducation des enfants noirs sont 15 fois inférieures à celles qui sont allouées pour les enfants blancs. En République sud-africaine, l'espérance de vie est en moyenne de 45 ans pour les Noirs et de 70 ans pour les Blancs.

51. En Afrique australe, les régimes racistes créent des conditions favorables aux activités néfastes des sociétés. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'est bien gardé de l'admettre. Des lois discriminatoires, telles que le Land Apportionment Act, sont appliquées par la terreur, c'est-à-dire grâce à l'appui de la police et de l'armée, pour défendre les droits des colonialistes. Les sociétés reconnaissantes appuient financièrement le colonialisme. Le rapport pour 1966-1967 du Groupe Oppenheimer fait état du versement de 20 millions de livres sterling à l'Afrique du Sud.

52. Il est particulièrement intéressant de noter combien les monopoles ont des liens étroits avec les gouvernements. Selon un membre du Parlement britannique, quarante et un membres conservateurs de ce Parlement, ainsi que des ministres, occupent des fonctions dans les conseils d'administration de diverses sociétés de Rhodésie ou d'ailleurs. Selon l'aveu même d'un grand magnat de la finance internationale, les pays où il est possible de faire des investissements sûrs ne sont plus si nombreux et l'Afrique du Sud est certainement le plus sûr de tous. Les puissances occidentales savent fort bien en utiliser les possibilités au maximum. En 1964, M. Harry Oppenheimer a fait l'éloge en 1964 du régime de Smith et en avril 1967, il a déclaré que les sanctions économiques adoptées contre la Rhodésie du Sud ne serviraient pas les intérêts britanniques. Les événements qui se sont déroulés ultérieurement ont prouvé que le Royaume-Uni avait tenu compte des avis de M. Oppenheimer. Le Gouvernement britannique a envoyé des émissaires à M. Smith et a tout fait pour s'entendre secrètement avec le régime rebelle.

53. M. Tikhonov constate qu'il n'est tenu aucun compte des décisions de l'ONU et que les intérêts égoïstes des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni et d'autres puissances occidentales font obstacle à la décolonisation complète de l'Afrique; l'emprise des sociétés étrangères ne fait que se resserrer. Des pays comme la République fédérale d'Allemagne y investissent de plus en plus. Le rapport de M. Oppenheimer sur les activités des sociétés de son groupe pour 1965 indique qu'un consortium des principales banques de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, dont la Deutsche Bank, a consenti un prêt de 100 millions de marks à une société qui exerce ses activités en Afrique du Sud. De même, pour financer les activités de l'Anglo-American Corporation en 1966, un prêt de 20 millions de dollars a été consenti par des banques d'Europe occidentale, dont la Deutsche Bank. L'Afrique australe est considérée par certaines puissances comme une tête de pont permettant de lutter contre les pays indépendants d'Afrique. Bien entendu, l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique Nord aide les racistes et les pays qui en sont membres bafouent les décisions de l'ONU concernant l'apartheid et les lois discriminatoires et violent les résolutions pour lesquelles ils ont voté.

54. Dans d'autres régions du monde, le rôle des monopoles est tout aussi affligeant. Au Moyen-Orient, la principale richesse, le pétrole, est évidemment exploitée par des monopoles. Les bénéfices de sociétés pétrolières comme la Shell Royal Dutch sont extrêmement élevés par rapport aux investissements. La population autochtone profite si peu de cette richesse qu'un cheikh déposé par les Britanniques en 1966 a déclaré au Caire devant le Comité spécial que le pétrole est en définitive une malédiction pour la population. En Oman, il n'existe que deux écoles primaires et pas d'écoles secondaires et les Britanniques ne se sont guère occupés des besoins essentiels de la population.

55. Selon M. Tikhonov, le même schéma se retrouve dans tous les territoires coloniaux sans exception; que ce soit dans l'océan Pacifique, l'océan Indien ou la mer des Antilles, partout les monopoles étrangers dominant, contrôlent les secteurs essentiels, renforcent leur position par des lois discriminatoires. L'investissement des capitaux rappelle le maximum de bénéfices et la moindre part n'est jamais utilisée pour assurer les progrès économiques et culturels des autochtones.

56. Devant cette situation, l'Assemblée générale doit d'abord souligner que les pratiques des monopoles privent les populations autochtones de leurs droits inaliénables. Elle doit condamner sévèrement les activités de ces monopoles et demander la restitution des bénéfices réalisés grâce au pillage des richesses naturelles des territoires coloniaux. L'Assemblée générale doit déclarer que leurs activités sont contraires aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et elle doit inviter les Etats-Unis, le Royaume-Uni, la République fédérale d'Allemagne et d'autres puissances occidentales à faire pression sur leurs citoyens ayant des intérêts économiques dans tous ces territoires pour qu'ils cessent les activités qui portent préjudice aux populations intéressées. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit mobiliser l'opinion mondiale et faire prendre des mesures efficaces pour éliminer tous les obstacles qui s'opposent encore à l'élimination du colonialisme.

57. La République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie appuie les conclusions des documents A/6868 et Add.1, bien qu'elle ne les juge pas suffisamment énergiques.

Elle appuie également les propositions faites par la délégation de l'URSS.

58. M. BOZOVIC (Yougoslavie), qui prend la parole dans l'exercice du droit de réponse, déclare que l'intervention du représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui contenait des généralisations tout à fait fausses, ne traitait pas dans l'ensemble de la question inscrite à l'ordre du jour. Le rapport du Comité spécial y est analysé avec une partialité qui est assez révélatrice de l'attitude du Gouvernement britannique à l'égard des questions coloniales.

59. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a essayé de convaincre la Commission que les activités des intérêts étrangers dans les territoires dépendants sont rigoureusement contrôlées par les puissances administrantes. Il est, cependant, aisé de prouver que c'est loin d'être le cas et qu'en dépit de ce contrôle, en Rhodésie du Sud, par exemple, la minorité blanche possède 49 p. 100 des terres arables, tandis qu'en Afrique du Sud, elle possède 89 p. 100 des terres de cette catégorie.

60. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni voudrait persuader la Commission que les racistes de Rhodésie du Sud, d'Afrique du Sud et des territoires administrés par le Portugal défendent réellement les intérêts des populations autochtones lorsqu'ils traitent avec les monopoles opérant dans ces territoires. Si tel est le cas, cela signifie donc qu'ils ont jugé que l'apartheid est un système si profitable pour eux-mêmes qu'il mérite d'être défendu.

61. Lorsque le représentant du Royaume-Uni dit que son pays a décolonisé de nombreux territoires, il oublie de préciser que le Royaume-Uni s'est souvent trouvé contraint de le faire et qu'il s'est montré fermement opposé à la décolonisation chaque fois que la population blanche était tant soit peu importante dans un territoire. Il suffit de se rappeler l'exemple du Kenya et de la Rhodésie du Sud.

62. Enfin l'étude qu'a faite le représentant du Royaume-Uni aurait dû comparer les incidences des activités des monopoles étrangers, d'une part, dans les territoires dépendants et, d'autre part, dans les territoires où il n'y a pas de colons.

63. M. TEVOEDJRE (Dahomey), prenant la parole dans l'exercice du droit de réponse, précise, à l'intention du représentant du Royaume-Uni, que sa délégation, dans une déclaration antérieure, s'est bornée à dire qu'il était nécessaire que des capitaux étrangers soient investis dans les pays en voie de développement.

64. La délégation dahoméenne estime que l'intervention du Royaume-Uni n'est qu'un exercice futile de diversion, sans rapport avec le sujet à l'étude. Cette intervention, dans laquelle le représentant du Royaume-Uni justifie les régimes de l'Afrique du Sud et de la Rhodésie du Sud, prouve une fois de plus que le Royaume-Uni est l'ingénieur de ce que l'écrivain Jean Ziegler a appelé "La contre-révolution en Afrique"; la délégation dahoméenne l'a démontré lorsqu'à propos de la Rhodésie du Sud elle a évoqué la situation qui règne en Afrique australe.

65. On comprend du reste que le Royaume-Uni s'emploie à cette tâche; il essaie de se relever de la faiblesse dans laquelle l'a laissé la perte de ses intérêts traditionnels, auxquels il a dû renoncer à la suite de la décolonisation qu'il a été forcé de faire dans certains pays.

66. M. CHAKHOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques), prenant la parole dans l'exercice du droit de réponse, s'élève contre l'apologie de l'impérialisme et de l'exploitation capitaliste que vient de faire le représentant du Royaume-Uni. La déclaration que la Commission vient d'entendre est une digression qui a pour seul but de justifier la politique de protection des monopoles pratiquée par la métropole ainsi que le rôle criminel des puissances impérialistes et des monopoles étrangers qui tentent de s'opposer à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

67. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'est longuement appesanti sur le rôle des investissements étrangers dans les pays en voie de développement. M. Chakhov se réserve le droit de reprendre la parole pour citer des faits et des exemples montrant que les activités des intérêts étrangers ont pour effet de faire obstacle à l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux. A ce stade, il tient simplement à dire que sa délégation regrette que le représentant du Royaume-Uni ait cru devoir citer des paroles de Lénine à l'appui de sa thèse en faveur des investissements. Lénine a certes parlé en faveur de l'octroi de concessions, mais il va de soi qu'il ne concevait la chose que dans des conditions telles que le peuple soviétique n'eût pas à en souffrir; il est évident que ces conditions, les monopoles étrangers les ont jugées inacceptables, eux qui voulaient soumettre le peuple soviétique au système impérialiste. Winston Churchill lui-même ne parlait-il pas de la nécessité d'étouffer au berceau le régime et l'Etat soviétique? L'Union soviétique, toutefois, a su avoir raison des exploiters.

68. Pour ce qui est de l'allusion faite par le représentant du Royaume-Uni à l'existence d'un parti unique en Union soviétique, M. Chakhov tient à faire observer que ce parti unique, le parti communiste, a toujours, quant à lui, soutenu le principe de la souveraineté et de l'égalité des peuples, défendu le droit des peuples à l'indépendance et soutenu la lutte anticoloniale. Le Royaume-Uni, avec ses deux partis, reste attaché à des idées et des pratiques dépassées, et se fait le défenseur des monopoles.

69. En revanche, il est une question que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a passée sous silence, c'est celle des pouvoirs laissés aux autorités législatives des territoires; il lui serait sans doute difficile de nommer un seul territoire où les soi-disant organes législatifs aient pouvoir de décision et où le Gouverneur n'ait pas, de son côté, le pouvoir de refuser son assentiment à une mesure législative décidée par lesdits organes législatifs.

70. En ce qui concerne le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6868 et Add.1), auquel le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a pas ménagé ses critiques et dont les recommandations ne sont pas jugées par lui dignes d'être prises au sérieux, M. Chakhov tient à signaler que les conclusions et recommandations qui figurent dans ce document ne sont pas celles de la Yougoslavie ou de l'Union soviétique mais celles des 19 délégations qui ont voté en leur faveur. Ce n'est pas la première fois que l'on essaie de discréditer de la sorte le Comité spécial et c'est dans cet esprit que la délégation britannique a refusé de participer aux réunions de ce comité en Afrique; elle voulait sans doute éviter d'entendre les arguments et les faits que n'allaient pas manquer de fournir les représentants des peuples africains, et la condamnation explicite des monopoles que prononceraient les représentants de toutes les tendances des mouvements de libération.

71. Avant de conclure, M. Chakhov tient à déclarer qu'à son avis c'est à chaque pays qu'il appartient de décider s'il faut favoriser ou non les investissements. La délégation soviétique est contre les activités des monopoles étrangers dans les colonies parce que les peuples de ces colonies n'ont pas été consultés à ce sujet et qu'ils sont privés du droit de faire savoir s'ils souhaitent ou non que l'on investisse des capitaux chez eux. Tel est le problème essentiel et tel est le problème que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a évité de traiter dans l'intervention qu'il a faite pour détourner l'attention de la Commission de la question à l'étude.

72. M. Chakhov se réserve le droit de reprendre la parole sur le même sujet en temps opportun.

73. M. KAEMBA (Zambie), prenant la parole dans l'exercice du droit de réponse, s'insurge contre les mots "propagande politique" que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a employés au sujet du rapport du Comité spécial; il fait observer que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a recours à la tactique bien connue qui consiste à éluder le problème essentiel pour se réfugier dans des généralisations.

74. Le Royaume-Uni sait parfaitement bien que, si les monopoles étrangers n'exerçaient pas leurs activités dans les territoires d'Afrique australe, le Portugal serait incapable de poursuivre sa politique, l'apartheid n'aurait aucune chance de survivre ni le régime de Rhodésie du Sud de se maintenir.

75. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni sait que son pays n'a pas décolonisé la Zambie et qu'il a été obligé de mettre fin à sa domination sur ce pays. Le Royaume-Uni se vante d'avoir accordé l'indépendance à 740 millions d'habitants; il faut faire observer que c'est sans plaisir qu'il a dû s'y résigner et que, s'il n'avait tenu qu'à lui, la situation serait demeurée inchangée.

76. Non seulement le représentant du Royaume-Uni cherche à justifier son pays mais encore il défend la funeste politique du Sud et refuse de reconnaître que les monopoles ont conclu avec les puissances administrantes un pacte pour la défense du "bien national".

77. Quant à la situation qui règne dans les territoires, le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a pas cherché à l'aborder; s'il l'avait fait, il aurait pu dire à la Commission par exemple qu'en Zambie, avant l'indépendance, il existait dans la fonction publique deux barèmes de traitements, l'un applicable aux ressortissants du Royaume-Uni et l'autre applicable aux Africains, alors même qu'ils étaient titulaires de diplôme universitaires délivrés par des universités de Grande-Bretagne ou d'ailleurs. Il semble inconcevable que quiconque défende une politique pouvant donner lieu à un tel état de choses. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni aurait pu dire également que le territoire zambien était morcelé, une zone étant réservée aux Africains et le reste, les meilleures terres, appartenant à la Couronne. Ce sont des pratiques de ce genre que décrit le rapport.

78. La Zambie appuie sans réserve le rapport du Comité spécial et recommande vivement à la Commission de l'adopter. Elle espère que les Nations Unies n'auront plus à entendre l'apologie des régimes racistes qui sévissent en Afrique du Sud et dans les colonies portugaises.

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

31. M. SZYMANOWSKI (Pologne) dit que, au cours des nombreux débats consacrés à la question, certaines délégations ont laissé entendre à maintes reprises que tout le problème était imaginaire, reposait sur des suppositions qui étaient le fruit de théories abstraites et que son examen était imposé à l'Organisation des Nations Unies à des fins de propagande. Le Royaume-Uni a repris ces arguments à la séance précédente. En réalité, le problème s'est imposé à l'attention de l'Organisation des Nations Unies parce que, chaque fois qu'un organe des Nations Unies a examiné de près la situation de n'importe quel territoire colonial, ce problème était toujours au premier plan. Il se pose avec le plus d'acuité dans les régions expressément mentionnées dans le libellé de ce point de l'ordre du jour. C'est dans la région de l'Afrique située au sud du Zambèze, où l'on trouve certaines des zones les plus riches en ressources naturelles, que le système de l'apartheid, qui n'est en fait qu'une nouvelle forme d'esclavage, a été imposé; c'est dans cette région que l'exploitation de la population autochtone est la plus impitoyable. Les régimes racistes réactionnaires y prospèrent parce qu'ils reçoivent un appui considérable des monopoles qui exploitent la population, et les monopoles réalisent à leur tour des bénéfices fabuleux grâce à la protection totale dont ils jouissent de la part des régimes au pouvoir.

32. L'Afrique australe offre peut-être l'image la plus affligeante de la conspiration coloniale à l'œuvre, mais les pratiques des monopoles sont pour ainsi dire identiques dans tous les territoires coloniaux. Il ne faut pas oublier que le commerce a toujours été le principal mobile des conquêtes coloniales dont le but était d'accroître au maximum les richesses des pays métropolitains en s'emparant de ressources naturelles et en exploitant une main-d'œuvre à bon marché.

^{2/} Le texte intégral de la déclaration faite par le représentant du Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee a été distribué sous la cote A/C.4/700.

33. Bien que la question des activités des intérêts étrangers ait d'abord été étudiée dans le contexte de territoires particuliers, on s'est rapidement rendu compte qu'il fallait l'examiner dans son ensemble. L'effort fait par l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour mettre en lumière le rôle des intérêts des monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux doit être considéré comme une initiative de la plus haute importance. Ce n'est, toutefois, qu'une première étape puisqu'il faut d'abord diagnostiquer le mal avant de lui porter remède. L'Assemblée générale a déjà condamné, dans bon nombre de ses résolutions, les intérêts économiques étrangers parce qu'ils font obstacle à la décolonisation et la question a fait l'objet de nombreux commentaires et études. Le représentant de la Pologne se bornera donc à essayer de faire ressortir certains des éléments clefs du mécanisme de l'exploitation et de montrer non seulement leurs conséquences immédiates, mais aussi leurs conséquences plus lointaines. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit élaborer des mesures propres à contrecarrer l'action des intérêts étrangers dans le processus de décolonisation et à empêcher que les pays coloniaux continuent à être exploités après leur accession à l'indépendance.

34. Compréhant que les jours du colonialisme sont comptés et que des bénéfices aussi énormes ne pourront plus être réalisés après l'accession à l'indépendance de tel ou tel territoire, les monopoles accélèrent leur exploitation pendant qu'il en est encore temps et intensifient leurs efforts pour préserver les conditions existantes jusqu'à ce que les principales ressources soient épuisées. Sur le plan local, les monopoles étrangers appuient les régimes coloniaux non seulement par les impôts qu'ils versent mais aussi grâce à des prêts et des donations. Ils offrent souvent une assistance directe pour réprimer les troubles et les mouvements de libération par l'intermédiaire de leurs forces de police, de leurs gardes et de leurs réseaux d'espionnage privés. Il est également évident que les intérêts étrangers exercent une influence directe sur l'administration des territoires. Sur le plan international, ils aident les régimes coloniaux au moyen de puissants lobbies et de campagnes de propagande, avec l'appui des gouvernements de leurs pays qui s'efforcent depuis longtemps de faire échec à l'opinion publique qui insiste pour que des mesures efficaces soient prises contre le colonialisme.

35. Le représentant de la Pologne voudrait appeler tout spécialement l'attention sur certains aspects des activités des monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux qui nuisent directement à la cause de l'indépendance. Tel est le cas pour la discrimination en matière d'emploi, de salaires et de niveaux de vie. Par suite de ces pratiques, non seulement l'écrasante majorité de la population autochtone se maintient à peine au niveau de la subsistance, mais sa situation ne cesse de s'aggraver et ses espoirs d'une vie meilleure diminuent eux aussi. On empêche la population autochtone de se livrer à toute activité économique susceptible de la conduire à des progrès économiques; c'est ainsi que l'on supprime les entreprises coopératives dans les territoires coloniaux.

36. L'aliénation des terres constitue également un obstacle majeur à la décolonisation. Des mesures doivent être prises pour y mettre un terme et pour veiller à ce que les terres soient restituées aux populations des territoires en cause.

37. Les bénéfices énormes que rapportent les capitaux investis dans les territoires coloniaux ne sont pas utilisés au profit de la population, mais la part réinvestie dans les territoires est extrêmement faible. Comme l'a signalé l'économiste américain Leo Model dans le numéro de juillet 1967 de la publication Foreign Affairs, les dividendes rapatriés au titre des investissements directs des Etats-Unis se sont élevés à 4 milliards de dollars en 1966, sans compter 1 milliard de dollars versés par des succursales ou des filiales de sociétés américaines sous forme de redevances et de patentes, et le montant des nouveaux investissements était beaucoup moins important que celui des dividendes rapatriés. Selon le même article, au Canada, en Australie, en Nouvelle-Zélande et en Afrique du Sud, les revenus provenant des investissements directs, y compris les droits et redevances, représentent un montant à peu près équivalant à celui des nouveaux fonds investis directement, tandis que dans le reste du monde, et en particulier dans les pays moins développés, les revenus provenant des investissements directs, notamment dans l'industrie pétrolière et minière, sont bien supérieurs au montant des nouveaux investissements. Les recettes des sociétés américaines opérant en Asie et en Afrique se sont chiffrées à 1 373 millions en 1966 alors que le montant des nouveaux investissements n'a pas dépassé 289 millions de dollars. La Commission devrait, dans la résolution qu'elle adoptera, condamner de telles pratiques et prévoir des mesures visant à empêcher la fuite continue des capitaux.

38. Tout ceci se fait en vertu d'actes juridiques et de contrats légaux au sujet desquels la population du territoire intéressé n'a pas voix au chapitre et qui vont directement à l'encontre de ses intérêts. La validité de ces actes juridiques s'étend souvent sur de longues périodes, parfois de 50 à 100 ans, et peut ainsi aller au-delà de l'accession du territoire à l'indépendance. Un grand nombre de ces actes sont entièrement illicites, comme ceux qui émanent du régime illégal de Rhodésie du Sud et ceux de la République sud-africaine qui ont trait au Sud-Ouest africain. Certains gouvernements, qui ont voté pour les résolutions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies déclarant ces régimes illégaux, considèrent néanmoins que ces actes sont valides. Il faut indiquer expressément que tous les actes juridiques de ce type octroyant des privilèges et des concessions aux monopoles étrangers ne sauraient être considérés comme légaux et valides après l'accession à l'indépendance; ils ne sauraient manifestement être consi-dérés comme valides s'ils émanent de régimes illégaux.

39. Le dispositif d'exploitation va bien au-delà de l'instauration de pratiques telles que la disparité des salaires et des prix ou la discrimination dans les termes de l'échange. La plupart des grands monopoles opèrent dans plus d'un territoire et sont étroitement interdépendants. Les territoires coloniaux sont ainsi soumis à une exploitation concertée d'associations puissantes de capitaux. Les grands monopoles interviennent non seulement dans la production, mais aussi dans les transports, les assurances et à la fourniture d'équipement industriel ou de biens de consommation pour leurs employés, et leurs bénéfices réels sont par conséquent infiniment supérieurs à ceux qui apparaissent dans les états budgétaires.

40. Tout le problème vient du fait que la situation échappe totalement au contrôle des peuples des territoires coloniaux. Tandis que les Nations Unies adoptent des résolutions qui affirment le droit de tous les peuples à la souveraineté sur leurs ressources naturelles, une conspiration puissante s'emploie à préserver une situation qui constitue une violation directe de ces résolutions. Lorsque l'heure de l'indépendance sonnera, la plupart des territoires coloniaux trouveront leurs ressources naturelles, notamment les gisements minéraux, dévastées, sinon épuisées, du fait d'une exploitation inconsidérée. Leur économie, pour la plupart d'entre eux, reposera sur la monoculture, ce qui les rendra économiquement dépendants, et ils manqueront de personnel qualifié, que ce soit pour la production ou pour assurer la gestion de l'économie. Dans les territoires où il existe à l'heure actuelle des bases militaires et où celles-ci sont le pivot de l'économie, les effets de cette situation se feront sentir encore longtemps et seront difficiles à éliminer. Dans tous les territoires coloniaux, les biens économiques les plus importants sont entre les mains des colons blancs. Comme le signale la brochure No 176^{3/} de la Headline Series (publication de la Foreign Policy Association), au sujet du Sud-Ouest africain, aucune mesure n'a été prise pour assurer la représentation de non-Blancs dans les organismes chargés d'élaborer la politique, les non-Blancs n'ont pas accès aux emplois spécialisés ni à la formation qui leur permettrait d'occuper de tels emplois, ce qui fait qu'ils en sont au niveau de la subsistance, et il y a des écarts énormes entre les dépenses de caractère social qui sont consacrées aux Blancs et celles qui sont consacrées aux non-Blancs, en particulier dans le domaine de l'enseignement.

41. Les arguments qui ont été invoqués au cours du débat, notamment par le représentant du Royaume-Uni à la séance précédente, et selon lesquels les activités des intérêts des monopoles étrangers contribuent au développement des territoires coloniaux, sont des arguments dépassés et peu convaincants. L'activité économique qui a pour objet la réalisation de profits maximums dans certains domaines limités et non le développement du pays dans son ensemble n'est pas une activité profitable, pas plus que ne l'est le travail forcé tel qu'il est pratiqué dans le monde contemporain. Peut-être est-il vrai que les intérêts économiques étrangers ont introduit dans certains des territoires coloniaux des techniques modernes, mais la question est de savoir comment ces techniques sont utilisées. Dans les territoires coloniaux, la technique sert à accroître l'efficacité de l'exploitation et non à développer l'économie nationale. Dans bien des cas, on a négligé d'appliquer à d'autres domaines la technique utilisée dans tel ou tel domaine particulier, ce qui fait que l'on trouve côte à côte les techniques les plus modernes et les techniques les plus arriérées.

42. La délégation polonaise, qui est membre du Comité spécial, souscrit entièrement aux conclusions de cet organe et rejette les critiques sans fondement dont ce rapport a fait l'objet. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a pu citer aucune donnée de fait convaincante pour réfuter ces conclusions et s'est contenté de ressortir les mêmes vieux clichés anti-communistes. C'est avoir recours à des méthodes périmées que de mettre l'étiquette de propagande marxiste sur des faits dont on ne veut pas tenir compte, comme par exemple l'aliénation des terres et l'exploitation de la main-d'œuvre.

43. La question à l'étude est extrêmement pressante et la délégation polonaise s'associe à l'appel lancé par le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie à la 1718^{ème} séance. C'est tous les jours que des millions d'êtres humains souffrent de maux toujours plus grands que leur infligent les exploités étrangers et qui les marqueront pour longtemps. On doit prendre rapidement les mesures qui s'imposent pour éliminer ce redoutable obstacle à l'accession à l'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux.

44. M. ISSAKA (Togo) rappelle à la Commission que le régime de Smith vient de célébrer le deuxième anniversaire de la déclaration unilatérale d'indépendance et que M. George Thompson, secrétaire d'Etat du Royaume-Uni aux affaires du Commonwealth, s'est rendu récemment en Rhodésie du Sud. C'est là un fait qu'il faudrait faire connaître largement.

45. La délégation togolaise estime que les questions de la Rhodésie du Sud et des territoires administrés par le Portugal ne peuvent être séparées du point actuellement à l'étude qui a trait à l'exploitation de l'Afrique australe par la ploutocratie internationale. Il conviendrait d'étudier d'abord les activités des intérêts étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux pour ensuite appliquer les conclusions de cette étude aux cas de la Rhodésie du Sud et des colonies portugaises par exemple. Le représentant du Portugal lui-même a été explicite à ce sujet dans la déclaration qu'il a faite à la 1704^{ème} séance de la Commission lorsqu'il a dit que toute tentative d'incriminer le Portugal doit être considérée comme une manœuvre visant à faire oublier quels sont les véritables responsables du problème rhodésien et lorsqu'il a indiqué qu'une grande partie du commerce extérieur de la Rhodésie passe par le Mozambique en vertu d'accords conclus à l'origine avec l'Autorité administrante — le Royaume-Uni — et qu'il n'a pas été adopté de nouvelles dispositions durant les deux dernières années. Le Royaume-Uni n'a pas entrepris de négociations avec le Portugal en vue de modifier ces accords parce que Salazar, Ian Smith et Vorster ne sont pas les véritables responsables de la situation et qu'ils ne sont que des mercenaires payés par le capital international pour asservir les peuples et réaliser le maximum de profits. Le Portugal lui-même n'a pas le choix; pays pauvre, il ne fait qu'exécuter le travail pour d'autres. M. Issaka comprend la situation du Portugal et plaint ce pays mais il le juge impardonnable de s'être fait l'outil servile de la répression des peuples africains avec lesquels il a tout intérêt à avoir des relations amicales.

46. Le rapport extrêmement intéressant présenté par le Sous-Comité I du Comité spécial indique les deux moyens qu'utilise le capital international pour exploiter les peuples coloniaux et qui sont: l'exploitation systématique des ressources naturelles et celle impitoyable de la main-d'œuvre à bon marché grâce auxquels les investissements dans les territoires coloniaux sont si rentables. Les bénéfices ou bien sont exportés ou bien demeurent entre les mains de la minorité blanche; ils ne sont utilisés ni pour développer l'économie des territoires ni pour améliorer le niveau économique et social des habitants autochtones. Même dans l'agriculture, les paysans autochtones sont exploités. Ils ne peuvent vendre leurs récoltes qu'aux agents des sociétés étrangères, et à des prix bien inférieurs aux prix moyens pratiqués sur le marché international. Ce que le rapport ne mentionne pas c'est que les balances destinées au pesage des produits agricoles sont truquées, si bien que le paysan ne peut pas savoir quel est le poids exact de sa marchandise.

47. Le rapport du Sous-Comité indique les différents intérêts qui exploitent les peuples coloniaux. Ces intérêts sont, dans une très grande majorité, anglo-saxons, même dans les colonies portugaises. Ainsi, au Mozambique, la société à capitaux essentiellement britanniques Sena Sugar Estates, Ltd., assure à elle seule les deux tiers de la production sucrière totale du territoire.

48. En ce qui concerne la question agraire, le rapport indique clairement que les terres les plus riches ont été prises aux autochtones pour être données aux colons blancs tandis que les autochtones eux-mêmes sont obligés soit de travailler dans les fermes ou dans les usines qui sont entre des mains étrangères, soit de vivre misérablement du revenu de leur travail sur les terres pauvres qui leur sont laissées. On a fait venir de plus en plus de colons blancs dans le Sud-Ouest africain, pendant que 54 p. 100 de la population vit dans quatre réserves.

49. Dans ses recommandations, le Sous-Comité préconise des mesures propres à affranchir les peuples encore sous domination étrangère; la délégation togolaise appuie toutes ces recommandations et demande à la Commission de les faire siennes. M. Issaka est prêt à appuyer toute résolution qui reprendrait l'essentiel de ces recommandations.

50. Après avoir lu le rapport, on comprend facilement pourquoi et par qui des armes ont été fournies pour asservir les peuples coloniaux. L'"alliance impie" ne comprend pas seulement Salazar, Ian Smith et Vorster; elle englobe tous les pays dont les monopoles entravent l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale aux territoires encore sous domination étrangère. Les capitaux étrangers ne sont pas investis dans les colonies portugaises pour assurer le développement de ces colonies, comme le prétend le représentant du Portugal, mais en vue des bénéfices que peuvent en tirer les investisseurs du fait que les conditions dans les territoires sont favorables aux investissements. Les intérêts étrangers sont beaucoup plus disposés à investir en Angola et au Mozambique que dans les Etats indépendants d'Afrique car dans les territoires les bénéfices qu'ils réalisent représentent plus que leur part équitable, et cela bien que bon nombre de pays sous développés aient pris des mesures pour protéger les capitaux étrangers. L'expérience des dernières années a montré que le système d'exploitation coloniale est précaire et qu'il est contraire à l'intérêt à long terme des monopoles internationaux eux-mêmes. Il faut que ceux-ci revisent leur conception de l'exploitation des ressources mondiales s'ils veulent survivre. Il faut par conséquent que les investisseurs pensent aux intérêts des autres en même temps qu'aux leurs; il faut qu'ils pensent aux peuples de l'Afrique australe qui meurent pendant qu'eux réalisent d'énormes bénéfices. Ce faisant, ils assureront leur propre survie et, en plus de recevoir leur juste part de profits, ils auront conscience de contribuer à l'amélioration de la condition humaine.

4. M. JOUEJATI (Syrie), prenant la parole dans l'exercice du droit de réponse, rappelle qu'il a déjà fait observer que la Quatrième Commission ne traite pas de questions économiques, mais de décolonisation, et qu'elle doit mettre en lumière tous les obstacles qui empêchent encore la libération des territoires dépendants.

5. Le Sous-Comité I du Comité spécial a utilisé de nombreuses sources d'information, des données statistiques fournies par les puissances administrantes elles-mêmes, des informations émanant de certaines sociétés étrangères et les nombreux témoignages des pétitionnaires, qui ont en outre été longuement interrogés par les membres du Sous-Comité ou du Comité spécial; ces renseignements ont été complétés par une série de documents établis par le Secrétariat au cours des trois dernières années.

6. Cette longue étude a permis d'aboutir à un certain nombre de constatations concernant notamment les salaires de misère versés par les sociétés étrangères aux travailleurs autochtones, auxquels sont refusées toutes possibilités de promotion ou de spécialisation. Les concessions accordées aux sociétés étrangères ne comportent en général aucune disposition prévoyant qu'une part des bénéfices doit être consacrée au bien-être de la population autochtone et à la création d'écoles ou d'instituts permettant de préparer les cadres nécessaires au territoire lorsqu'il accédera à l'indépendance. En conséquence, les bénéfices sont anormalement élevés, la main-d'œuvre africaine ne recevant pas la part qui devrait lui revenir. D'après les chiffres des budgets de certaines sociétés comme la Sena Sugar Estates, Ltd., les dividendes versés sont supérieurs au montant total des salaires de la main-d'œuvre africaine.

7. Or ces sociétés ne peuvent agir de la sorte qu'avec l'aide de la Puissance administrante, qui leur permet de ne pas se conformer aux règlements internationaux en vigueur, et c'est pourquoi, en retour, les sociétés versent des subsides aux puissances coloniales, qui peuvent ainsi raffermir leur emprise.

8. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a guère contribué à l'examen de la question puisqu'il s'est borné à traiter de façon générale de ce que l'on peut appeler la théorie des investissements étrangers. Il a déclaré que, dans certaines colonies britanniques, il existe des syndicats, que les gouvernements locaux ont leur mot à dire en ce qui concerne les investissements étrangers, qu'une partie des bénéfices réalisés par les sociétés est consacrée à la construction de logements et d'écoles et que les autochtones ne sont pas privés de leurs droits politiques. Or la structure administrative des territoires britanniques est telle que toutes les décisions sont subordonnées au bon vouloir du gouverneur, qui dispose non seulement du droit de veto dans les conseils législatifs, mais qui peut même faire adopter des dispositions contraires aux décisions prises et, s'il le veut, faire promulguer ces dispositions sous forme de lois. Le Royaume-Uni répondra que, si les pouvoirs du Gouverneur sont si étendus, c'est parce que les territoires en question n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Il est certain, cependant, que, lorsque les syndicats, dont le rôle politique est si limité, protestent contre certaines mesures illégales, une répression s'ensuit immédiatement. De même, de nombreux appels qui ont été lancés aux autorités britanniques pour obtenir une diversification de la production dans certains territoires, comme aux îles Fidji ou à l'île Maurice, et de nombreuses résolutions de l'ONU adoptées à cet effet n'ont pas été prises en considération.

9. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré que les salaires payés par certaines grandes sociétés étrangères sont plus élevés que ceux que versent les petites entreprises. Toutefois, c'est la proportion de la rémunération du travail par rapport aux bénéfices réalisés qui doit être prise en considération. L'injustice fondamentale réside dans le fait qu'une proportion écrasante des bénéfices va aux actionnaires étrangers et à la Puissance administrante.

10. M. Jouéjati note avec intérêt que le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) et la déclaration du Royaume-Uni (1720ème séance) concordent sur un point au moins, à savoir que la main-d'œuvre africaine souffre de certaines conditions désavantageuses. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui s'est inquiété des dépenses qu'entraînait pour le Secrétariat la préparation des documents, a évoqué en une seule phrase et presque en passant le préjudice causé aux travailleurs africains.

11. D'autre part, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a contesté que la politique des compagnies étrangères puisse constituer une menace pour la paix internationale. Son pays ne sait-il pas, par expérience, que les peuples africains, comme tous les autres peuples du reste, sont résolus à lutter pour la reconnaissance de leurs droits? Les risques de conflit ne sont pas négligeables vu la tension actuelle des relations internationales.

12. M. Jouéjati déplore que, dans ses déclarations, la délégation britannique ait souvent parlé des membres du Sous-Comité de façon telle qu'elle revenait à s'ingérer dans les affaires intérieures des Etats qu'ils représentent. Il déplore également les critiques désobligeantes dont le rapport a fait l'objet de la part de certains pays occidentaux. C'est oublier la tâche profondément humaine dont est chargé le Comité spécial que de faire au sujet du rapport du Sous-Comité I des observations aussi déplacées.

13. En ce qui concerne enfin les efforts du Royaume-Uni dans le domaine de l'éducation, M. Jouéjati rappelle que M. Ali Bayoomi, ministre du prétendu Gouvernement fédéral de l'Arabie du Sud, a déclaré devant la Commission en 1966 (1626ème séance), au sujet des envois de personnel à l'étranger pour se perfectionner que ces personnes restaient deux ou trois mois à Londres et revenaient sans avoir acquis de qualifications spéciales. Le représentant du Sierra Leone a également déclaré au Comité spécial que la Puissance administrante avait délibérément maintenu dans son pays, avant l'indépendance, un niveau d'enseignement très bas. Les diplômés d'universités ne pouvaient pas même trouver d'emplois dans le secteur public ou privé.

14. La délégation britannique a estimé que le rapport du Comité spécial ne contenait que des généralités. C'est là un jugement qui semble s'appliquer au contraire à la récente déclaration de son représentant.

15. M. HULINSKY (Tchécoslovaquie) déclare que les nombreuses résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale témoignent de l'intérêt accru qu'elle porte aux activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Parmi ces documents figurent notamment la résolution 2074 (XX) relative au Sud-Ouest africain, la résolution 2107 (XX) relative aux territoires administrés par le Portugal et la résolution 2189 (XXI) relative à l'application de la Déclaration. De son côté, le Comité spécial a réuni une documentation portant sur les activités des monopoles étrangers au Sud-Ouest africain, en Rhodésie du Sud et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise. Les données qu'il a recueillies depuis plusieurs années et les conclusions auxquelles il a abouti dans son dernier rapport (A/6868 et Add.1) témoignent de l'importance qu'il convient d'accorder à ces problèmes. Les efforts du Comité spécial ont contribué à établir le fait que les monopoles occidentaux ne tiennent pas compte des dispositions de la Déclaration et aggravent la situation des peuples colonisés en Afrique australe. Les travaux du Comité spécial permettent de tirer un certain nombre de conclusions quant à l'influence des monopoles étrangers sur l'économie de l'Afrique australe.

16. En Rhodésie du Sud, les intérêts économiques étrangers contrôlent environ 80 p. 100 de l'ensemble du capital. Le rôle décisif dans ce domaine appartient à des sociétés enregistrées en République sud-africaine, au Royaume-Uni et aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique, notamment l'Anglo American Corporation et la British South Africa Company, qui ont fusionné en 1965 avec la Charter Consolidated. Les investissements de capitaux privés britanniques en Rhodésie du Sud se sont élevés en 1966 à 200 millions de livres sterling, ceux de la République sud-africaine à 75 millions de livres et ceux des Etats-Unis à 56 millions de livres.

17. En ce qui concerne les territoires coloniaux portugais, les rapports du Comité spécial montrent que l'économie de l'Angola et du Mozambique est essentiellement aux mains de sociétés du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis et de la République fédérale d'Allemagne. C'est ainsi que l'Angola Diamond Company possède les droits exclusifs de la prospection et de l'extraction des diamants sur ce territoire. Les droits exclusifs de l'extraction du pétrole en Angola appartiennent à la société belge Petrofina et à la société américaine Gulf Oil Company. Les sociétés Lobito et Lombige contrôlent quant à elles l'extraction du minerai de fer sur le territoire.

18. En ce qui concerne le Sud-Ouest africain, il faut rappeler que pratiquement toute l'exploitation des richesses minérales est contrôlée par les monopoles étrangers, en particulier par la Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd., et la Tsumeb Corporation, cette dernière appartenant aux sociétés américaines American Metal Climax et Newmont Mining Corporation.

19. En analysant la situation des monopoles étrangers en Afrique australe, on ne saurait passer sous silence le rôle important que joue la République sud-africaine. Comme l'indique le document A/AC.115/

L.56/Rev.3⁴, les investissements étrangers en République sud-africaine atteignaient globalement à la fin de l'année 1965 le montant de 4 802 millions de dollars. Sur cette somme, la part du capital britannique revient à environ 60 p. 100, celle du capital américain à 12 p. 100 et le reste à d'autres pays occidentaux. Il existe en fait un réseau complexe d'intérêts contrôlés par des sociétés telles que l'Anglo American Corporation of South Africa, la Charter Consolidated, la Selection Trust et la Lonrho Ltd.

20. L'analyse effectuée par le Comité spécial montre que l'influence des monopoles étrangers s'exerce dans plusieurs domaines d'activité essentiels; sur le plan économique, les monopoles renforcent l'influence de l'impérialisme; dans le domaine politique, les monopoles interviennent dans le développement des territoires et appuient les autorités coloniales qui luttent contre les mouvements de libération nationale. Les monopoles étrangers apportent à l'heure actuelle un appui considérable aux régimes colonialistes et racistes. Cet appui se manifeste sous forme d'une participation aux bénéfices et aux dividendes, ainsi que de versements effectués au titre de la défense. C'est ainsi que les monopoles étrangers, en Angola, versent aux autorités portugaises un "impôt sur la défense" qui sert à prendre des mesures de répression contre les patriotes angolais. Le pétitionnaire qui représentait le Mouvement populaire de libération de l'Angola (MPLA) à la session que le Comité spécial a tenue en Afrique a également indiqué le numéro du décret relatif à la perception de cet impôt; il s'agit du décret No 46112, qui est sans aucun doute un excellent exemple de la façon dont on utilise l'un des moyens d'exercer un contrôle sur les monopoles étrangers, dont le représentant du Royaume-Uni a parlé au Comité, "à des fins qui profitent à l'ensemble de la population", pour reprendre les paroles mêmes de ce représentant.

21. L'une des principales raisons pour lesquelles la Quatrième Commission examine le problème des activités des intérêts étrangers est le fait bien établi que les monopoles étrangers utilisent les conditions favorables régnant dans les colonies afin de percevoir des bénéfices qui sont de deux à trois fois plus élevés que dans les autres régions du monde. Tout développement de l'économie des territoires dépendants, qu'il s'agisse des plantations, de l'agriculture, des mines, de l'infrastructure ou même des industries de transformation, est subordonnée à ces intérêts et n'est que la conséquence secondaire, et non pas l'objectif principal de l'expansion des monopoles économiques contrôlés par le capital étranger. Les activités économiques des monopoles dans les territoires dépendants permettent le développement de quelques branches seulement de la production. De ce fait, l'économie de ces territoires s'est développée sans tenir compte des réalités et de façon anarchique, et les territoires ne sont plus que des fournisseurs de matières premières de leur métropole. Les autochtones se voient refuser le droit de déterminer si peu que ce soit l'orientation à donner à l'expansion économique de leur pays.

⁴ Les investissements étrangers en République sud-africaine (publication des Nations Unies, numéro de vente: 67.II.K.10).

22. Il faut remarquer à cet égard que, dans sa déclaration (1720ème séance), le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a pas établi de distinction entre la situation régnant dans les colonies et la situation des pays en voie de développement. L'exploitation des ressources naturelles et de la main-d'œuvre à bon marché permet aux monopoles étrangers de percevoir des bénéfices considérables, dont la majeure partie est utilisée en dehors des territoires coloniaux. Les monopoles étrangers qui possèdent les moyens de production essentiels des territoires coloniaux profitent également de la discrimination dont est victime la population autochtone dans les domaines social et politique. Le revenu considérable des investissements étrangers est dû pour une large part à la discrimination qui est pratiquée à l'encontre de la main-d'œuvre locale et que facilite l'existence, dans les territoires dépendants, de régimes racistes et coloniaux. Le salaire annuel moyen des 629 000 Africains employés dans l'économie de la Rhodésie du Sud était en 1965 de 128 livres, alors que le salaire moyen de la main-d'œuvre européenne était de 1 284 livres. En 1962, déjà, les salaires annuels moyens de ces deux catégories de main-d'œuvre dans les industries minières du Sud-Ouest africain s'élevaient respectivement à 202,9 rands et 2 542 rands. Le fait que les monopoles persévèrent dans ces pratiques fait obstacle à l'élimination de la discrimination qui est pratiquée à l'encontre des Africains dans le domaine social.

23. La question dont est actuellement saisie la Quatrième Commission doit être également examinée du point de vue des mesures concrètes prises dans le cadre du programme de l'ONU sur la décolonisation. C'est ainsi que le Comité spécial a réuni des renseignements prouvant que les monopoles étrangers contribuent à faire obstacle à l'application de ces mesures, et en particulier des sanctions économiques. Un certain nombre de sociétés britanniques et américaines ont continué de distribuer le pétrole et les produits pétroliers importés du Mozambique et de la République sud-africaine. En outre, n'est-ce pas là un exemple concret des efforts que déploient les monopoles pour faire échec aux mesures de décolonisation? Pourtant, si l'on en croit certaines déclarations faites à la séance précédente, aucun effort en ce sens n'aurait été tenté. Les conclusions du Comité spécial montrent bien l'influence des bénéfices réalisés dans ces territoires sur l'attitude des puissances occidentales à l'égard des questions coloniales et des régimes racistes.

24. Les travaux méritoires du Comité spécial ont souligné indiscutablement que, si l'on veut réaliser de nouveaux progrès dans la décolonisation, il faut d'abord mettre fin aux activités des monopoles étrangers qui soutiennent les régimes coloniaux et racistes et qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. La délégation tchécoslovaque fait entièrement siennes les recommandations du Comité spécial figurant au paragraphe 95 du document A/6868. Il importe que la question continue d'être examinée par l'Assemblée générale afin d'établir une liste de mesures concrètes visant à empêcher les monopoles étrangers de violer les dispositions de la Déclaration.

25. M. LADGHAM (Tunisie) déclare que le colonialisme, sur la définition duquel l'opinion est unanime, est encore vivace dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, en Rhodésie du Sud et au Sud-Ouest africain, grâce aux apports financiers étrangers.

26. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I met en lumière la solidarité qui lie les intérêts étrangers à ceux des puissances coloniales. Celles-ci, qui cependant ont souscrit aux obligations de la Charte des Nations Unies, en particulier à celles qui sont stipulées à l'Article 73 en ce qui concerne le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires, font de l'abus de leur pouvoir un système de gouvernement.

27. Ainsi en Angola, le Gouvernement portugais, faisant fi des droits de la population, a promulgué une loi aux termes de laquelle tous les gisements miniers sont déclarés propriété de l'Etat portugais, qui tire de ces gisements la majeure partie de ses ressources en devises. Des concessions couvrant d'immenses superficies ont été accordées à des sociétés étrangères. Au Mozambique également, les ressources du sous-sol sont exploitées en grande partie par des sociétés étrangères qui versent des sommes importantes pour les dépenses militaires portugaises et entretiennent même des forces de police privées. Une de ces sociétés a versé 72 millions d'escudos au titre de sa participation à la "défense du patrimoine national".

28. L'exploitation forcée des ressources minières, ainsi que la colonisation des terres par les colons européens, ont réduit la population autochtone au chômage et à la misère. Ainsi contraints, de nombreux chômeurs vont travailler en Afrique du Sud.

29. La même situation se reproduit en Rhodésie du Sud, où les intérêts étrangers contrôlent les principaux secteurs de l'économie (mines, banques, finances) et représentent plus de 80 p. 100 de l'ensemble des capitaux investis sur le territoire. Dans l'industrie minière uniquement, ils représentent 73 p. 100 du total des capitaux investis.

30. Au Sud-Ouest africain, deux grandes sociétés étrangères règnent en grande partie sur le secteur minier, dont la valeur représente près de la moitié du produit intérieur brut.

31. La politique des salaires appliquée dans ces deux derniers pays est scandaleuse. En effet, en Rhodésie du Sud, le salaire annuel moyen d'un ouvrier africain est douze fois inférieur à celui d'un Européen. Dans les zones rurales, le revenu annuel moyen par habitant est évalué à 10 livres. Au Sud-Ouest africain, où règne l'apartheid, l'écart est encore plus grand et, en 1962, le salaire annuel moyen versé par les sociétés minières aux ouvriers blancs était de 2 542 rands, tandis que celui qui était versé aux ouvriers autochtones ne dépassait pas 202,9 rands.

32. Dans de telles conditions, il est bien évident que la législation fiscale et le statut colonial appliqué à la main-d'œuvre ont facilité le drainage d'investissements étrangers si importants. Les bénéfices des sociétés étrangères sont de l'ordre de 20 à 25 p. 100.

33. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I a bien mis en relief le rôle que jouent les intérêts étrangers dans cette lamentable situation. La Quatrième Commission doit condamner avec sévérité les puissances coloniales et l'appui qu'elles reçoivent des intérêts étrangers grâce auquel se poursuit une sordide exploitation.

34. Il est tragique, au moment où le monde est en pleine mutation et où les pays en voie de développement déploient des efforts gigantesques pour faire bénéficier leur peuple du progrès, de constater que des intérêts égoïstes cherchent à maintenir le colonialisme. Les relations entre nations étant maintenant fondées sur la coopération, l'équité et la justice, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit dénoncer avec force l'exploitation dégradante à laquelle certains territoires restent encore soumis. Seule une véritable décolonisation permettra d'élever le niveau de vie des peuples dépendants et de préserver la paix dans le sud de l'Afrique.

35. M. GATUGUTA (Kenya) déplore que la décolonisation, dont le processus s'était accéléré à la fin des années 1950 et au début des années 1960, soit aujourd'hui au point mort, en raison de la résistance obstinée d'un dernier groupe de colonialistes prêts à recourir à tous les moyens pour maintenir en place un système fondé sur l'inégalité raciale et l'exploitation économique. Et on constate qu'aujourd'hui comme hier ce sont les intérêts économiques étrangers qui sont le meilleur soutien du régime colonial; peut-être même ce phénomène est-il plus évident qu'il ne l'a jamais été.

36. Les puissances coloniales ont toujours considéré leurs colonies comme une source de matières premières et de main-d'œuvre à bon marché. Pour exploiter intensivement ces ressources, les gouvernements coloniaux actuels cherchent à attirer les investissements en créant des conditions spéciales qui assurent des bénéfices substantiels aux investisseurs; ils promulguent des lois interdisant toute activité syndicale, allant même parfois jusqu'à instituer un système de travail forcé; les Africains sont dépossédés des terres qui leur appartenaient traditionnellement afin que de vastes concessions puissent être attribuées aux monopoles étrangers; sur les terres fertiles, les colons blancs venus d'Europe prennent la place des agriculteurs autochtones. Du fait de cette politique, on constate, par exemple, qu'au Sud-Ouest africain les Africains, qui constituent 90 p. 100 de la population, ne possèdent qu'un quart des terres et que près de la moitié du territoire a été attribuée en concession à des monopoles étrangers. En Rhodésie du Sud, les Européens, qui représentent 5 p. 100 de la population, possèdent 45 p. 100 des terres arables, et détiennent 93,5 p. 100 de la production agricole commercialisable; là aussi, de vastes concessions sont accordées aux monopoles.

37. La collaboration entre puissances coloniales et monopoles permet à ces derniers de faire en Afrique australe des bénéfices de l'ordre de 22 à 30 p. 100 du capital investi. Pendant ce temps, qu'apporte ce système à la population africaine? Les Africains sont utilisés comme un réservoir de main-d'œuvre à bon marché, et n'ont pas accès à la formation qui leur permettrait de progresser et de prendre en main leur avenir; leurs droits les plus élémentaires sont violés et le rapport du Comité spécial contient de nombreux exemples d'injustices qui leur sont infligées.

38. Face à cette situation, certaines grandes puissances restent passives, et leurs représentants n'ont apporté aucune contribution constructive aux travaux de la Quatrième Commission; elles ont voté contre des projets de résolutions destinés à faire pression sur les pays coloniaux — notamment le Portugal — ou elles se sont abstenues. Par ailleurs, ces grandes puissances lancent de pieux appels, mais cela ne peut suffire à libérer les peuples opprimés, et il faut que l'ONU demande à ceux de ses Etats Membres qui ont des intérêts économiques dans les pays coloniaux de prendre des mesures plus concrètes. La délégation du Kenya appuiera tout projet de résolution présenté à cette fin qui serait conforme aux recommandations du Comité spécial.

39. M. Gatuguta, se référant en particulier à la déclaration faite par le représentant du Royaume-Uni à la 1720ème séance, juge erronée l'affirmation selon laquelle les investissements étrangers sont à l'origine des progrès accomplis dans les pays coloniaux avant et après l'indépendance, au Kenya en particulier — pays que M. Luard a cité comme exemple. Les pays nouvellement indépendants savent bien qu'on n'a rien fait pour les doter d'une industrie de transformation avant l'indépendance, qu'ils ont dû faire cet effort eux-mêmes par la suite; ils n'ont hérité du colonialisme que des systèmes d'éducation defectueux, des réseaux routiers insuffisants, des installations sanitaires inadéquates. Les puissances coloniales se sont contentées d'exploiter les matières premières, et, si elles ont fait un effort pour améliorer les conditions de vie, c'est au profit des colons blancs, qui occupaient les postes élevés et recevaient de hauts salaires. Les Africains étaient laissés dans un état d'impuissance économique; ils étaient mal payés et ne pouvaient pas obtenir de prêts pour créer leurs propres entreprises. Les travailleurs africains avaient parfois des droits syndicaux, mais on ne leur permettait jamais de faire grève. Si aujourd'hui les investissements étrangers contribuent au progrès des pays autrefois colonisés, c'est dans la mesure où ils sont contrôlés par les gouvernements, qui veillent à ce que les bénéfices ne soient pas drainés vers l'étranger, et à ce que leurs ressortissants occupent des postes importants et aient des salaires décents.

40. Par ailleurs, M. Gatuguta tient à rejeter une fois de plus l'assertion habituelle selon laquelle le Royaume-Uni a accompli une œuvre de décolonisation immense. Si le Royaume-Uni a quitté ses colonies, c'est le plus souvent parce qu'il y a été contraint par les peuples qu'il dominait; cela est particulièrement vrai dans le cas du Kenya.

41. M. BOYE (Chili) déclare que son pays, pour sa part, a toujours été favorable à l'entrée d'investissements étrangers sur son territoire, mais à condition que ces investissements soient soumis à sa législation nationale, se conjuguent avec les plans et programmes gouvernementaux et contribuent au développement économique et social du Chili.

42. Dans les territoires non autonomes, s'opposer à toutes les formes d'investissements étrangers serait faire preuve d'un dogmatisme absurde, mais il faut dénoncer les intérêts étrangers qui ont pour objectif de retarder l'accession de ces territoires à l'indépendance. Le droit inaliénable des peuples qui y vivent sur leurs ressources naturelles doit être réaffirmé et, pour le garantir, l'ONU doit s'efforcer de créer des conditions favorables à leur accession à l'indépendance. Cela est indispensable si l'on veut qu'ils bénéficient de conditions de travail et de rétribution dépourvues de toute discrimination, et qu'ils jouissent non seulement des avantages sociaux, mais aussi du droit à l'éducation et de celui de participer à l'organisation de la société.

43. La Commission, pour la première fois, aborde le problème des activités des intérêts étrangers d'une manière globale et systématique; elle devrait en profiter pour parvenir à un consensus aussi large que possible sur les principes fondamentaux qui doivent inspirer sa solution. Un premier pas consisterait à poser des bases solides à partir desquelles on pourrait se prononcer sur des situations concrètes, et donner ainsi à l'ONU la possibilité d'agir efficacement et en profondeur.

44. M. LORINC (Hongrie), se référant à la déclaration faite par le représentant du Royaume-Uni à la 1720^{ème} séance, déclaration dans laquelle ce représentant s'est fait le défenseur des monopoles qui aident à maintenir en place les régimes coloniaux de M. Vorster et de M. Smith, tient tout d'abord à rappeler quelques traits historiques du colonialisme. Les historiens savent que le colonialisme moderne est un produit de l'avènement de la société capitaliste et que la colonisation a le plus souvent détruit les structures sociales des peuples colonisés. Ce que l'on sait peut-être moins, c'est que la colonisation n'a fait que creuser un fossé entre le niveau de vie des colonisateurs et des colonisés, et contribué ainsi à susciter la division actuelle du monde entre pays riches et pauvres. Pour ce qui est des monopoles, M. Lörinc ajoute qu'ils ne sont pas le produit de l'imagination de propagandistes communistes, mais une réalité bien vivante de notre époque et que, de plus, ils n'existent que dans un type bien particulier de sociétés.

45. M. Lörinc rappelle que ce sont les puissances coloniales qui ont fait pression sur l'ONU pour qu'une distinction soit établie entre colonies et territoires sous tutelle — on sait que les territoires sous tutelle sont essentiellement les colonies arrachées au Japon, à l'Italie et à l'Allemagne après la seconde guerre mondiale. L'ONU a adopté la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale pour tenir compte des changements historiques survenus depuis cette époque. Lorsque le Comité spécial s'est efforcé d'identifier les forces qui retardent l'application de cette déclaration, il a dû aller de plus en plus profond dans l'étude de la question pour obtenir des faits et des données dont la Commission est aujourd'hui en possession et qui font apparaître clairement la situation. On prend nettement conscience de l'existence d'un réseau d'intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres collaborant avec les gouvernements coloniaux, qui ont eux-mêmes formé ce que l'on a appelé une "alliance impie", pour empêcher les peuples des derniers territoires coloniaux d'accéder à l'indépendance.

46. Aujourd'hui, une minorité — une minorité très puissante — voudrait que l'ONU accepte qu'une partie de l'humanité soit écartée du domaine d'application des principes énoncés dans les chartes, résolutions, déclarations, conventions et traités élaborés par les Nations Unies, que le principe de la souveraineté nationale ne s'applique pas à certaines parties du globe, et que la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme ne soit pas universelle. Cette minorité a des valeurs morales et politiques fondamentalement différentes de celles de la majorité; ce qui l'anime, avant tout, c'est la recherche du profit.

47. En fonction de cet objectif, les activités des monopoles dans les pays coloniaux s'ordonnent selon des schémas très clairs. En premier lieu, la recherche du profit tend à placer l'ensemble de l'économie des pays coloniaux sous le contrôle des monopoles. On en a la preuve lorsqu'on constate que les intérêts économiques étrangers contrôlent aujourd'hui les principaux secteurs de l'économie de la Rhodésie du Sud et entrent pour plus de 80 p. 100 dans le montant global des capitaux investis dans le territoire, et qu'au Sud-Ouest africain les mines, qui fournissent près de la moitié du produit national brut, sont presque entièrement aux mains de deux grandes sociétés étrangères contrôlées par des intérêts du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis et de l'Afrique du Sud. En Nouvelle-Guinée et au Papua, les cultures marchandes et l'exploitation des ressources minérales, qui constituent les secteurs principaux de l'économie, sont dominées par des intérêts étrangers, et, selon un rapport de la BIRD, "la Steamship Trading Company, Ltd., l'une des plus importantes parmi les sociétés qui sont implantées dans le Territoire et dans d'autres zones du Pacifique, a réalisé en 1964 un bénéfice net global ... qui représente, en moyenne, un taux de rémunération de 24,4 p. 100 du capital versé" (A/6868/Add.1, par. 104); en d'autres termes, le capital investi a été entièrement amorti en quatre ans. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) fait apparaître qu'en Afrique australe les activités des intérêts étrangers sont caractérisées par des "ententes groupant des capitaux sud-africains, anglais et américains" (ibid., par. 105).

48. En deuxième lieu, les monopoles aliènent les terres de la population autochtone. En Rhodésie du Sud, 38 p. 100 des terres — la partie la plus fertile — appartiennent aux colons blancs, qui représentent 5 p. 100 de la population. Dans le Territoire sous tutelle des Iles du Pacifique, si l'on en croit le rapport publié en 1966 par les Etats-Unis, la population a été dépossédée de 58 p. 100 des terres.

49. En troisième lieu, les monopoles foulent aux pieds tous les droits de la population autochtone. Le paragraphe 89 du rapport met l'accent sur la discrimination raciale pratiquée dans les salaires, les travailleurs autochtones étant payés 5 à 15 fois moins que les étrangers. Il n'existe pas de lois sociales, de sécurité sociale, de caisses de retraite ou de pensions. Une majorité écrasante de la population autochtone est illettrée, et les soins médicaux sont pratiquement inexistantes.

50. En quatrième lieu, les monopoles maintiennent la population autochtone dans le servage, la pauvreté, l'ignorance et l'impuissance pour préserver leurs privilèges. Les puissances impérialistes ont investi 5 milliards de dollars en Afrique australe, mais les Africains vivent toujours dans la misère. En Rhodésie du Sud, les Blancs ont un revenu annuel moyen de 1 284 livres sterling, mais ce chiffre tombe à 128 livres pour les travailleurs indigènes, et le revenu individuel moyen des Africains vivant dans les zones rurales n'a pas dépassé 10 livres en 1965.

51. En cinquième lieu, les monopoles collaborent étroitement avec les puissances coloniales, au point d'aller jusqu'à créer des armées privées pour aider ces derniers dans leur répression (ibid., par. 112).

52. En sixième lieu, l'objectif commun des monopoles est de faire en sorte que les territoires coloniaux restent dépendants. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I conclut à cet égard que les activités des intérêts étrangers ont abouti à la destruction de la structure sociale des communautés autochtones, "compromettant de ce fait le déroulement du processus par lequel la population pouvait s'édifier en nation" (ibid., par. 130).

53. En septième lieu, ces mêmes monopoles influent sur la politique étrangère des gouvernements de leurs propres pays. L'affirmation d'un ancien président de la société américaine General Motors, Charles Erwin Wilson: "ce qui est bon pour la General Motors est bon pour les Etats-Unis", est symbolique de cet état de choses.

54. En outre, on constate que les pays dont les monopoles font l'objet des discussions de la Commission sont des alliés militaires des Etats-Unis dans le cadre de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord (Royaume-Uni, Belgique, etc.), d'autres accords militaires (Australie) ou de traités bilatéraux (Japon). A cet égard, il faut rappeler que, dans sa résolution 2232 (XXI), l'Assemblée générale a déclaré que la création de bases militaires dans les pays coloniaux est incompatible avec les principes de la Charte et de la résolution 1514 (XV), mais que ces pays n'en continuent pas moins à utiliser des bases de ce genre; on peut donner pour exemples Guam, dont les Etats-Unis se servent dans leur guerre d'agression contre le Viet-Nam, ou l'île de l'Ascension, à partir de laquelle une agression a été perpétrée contre le Congo en 1964. Aujourd'hui, de manière générale, on a fait de l'ensemble de l'Afrique australe un tremplin pour les opérations militaires dirigées contre des Etats africains indépendants, ainsi que le montrent les récentes incursions de mercenaires au Congo, qui viennent de faire l'objet d'un débat au Conseil de sécurité, et l'intervention de troupes sud-africaines en Rhodésie du Sud contre le peuple du Zimbabwe.

55. Certains prétendent que la condamnation des monopoles dont M. Lörinc vient de définir le rôle est une manœuvre idéologique qui se situe dans le cadre du conflit Est-Ouest. Mais on sait bien que les pays socialistes n'ont pas de monopoles qui exploitent les territoires coloniaux. S'il y a controverse, c'est entre la majorité écrasante des Etats Membres de l'ONU qui demande que soit reconnu le droit à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté nationale des peuples coloniaux et la minorité qui, sous le couvert de grands discours, cherche à maintenir une situation honteuse pour défendre ses privilèges — en d'autres termes, comme cela s'est produit si fréquemment dans l'histoire de l'humanité, entre les forces de progrès et les forces rétrogrades.

La séance est levée à 18 h 5.

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le Sud de l'Afrique (suite) [A/6868 et Add.1]

DECLARATION DU REPRESENTANT DE CUBA

1. M. RODRIGUEZ ASTIAZARAIN (Cuba) dit que, dans le communiqué de presse publié par le Service de l'information sur la 1721^{ème} séance de la Commission (communiqué de presse GA/T/1688), on n'indique pas que la délégation cubaine a appuyé la proposition de la délégation guinéenne tendant à faire distribuer le texte de la déclaration de M. James Forman. On y réserve en revanche une large place aux observations du représentant des Etats-Unis bien qu'elles soient sans rapport, quant au fond, avec les questions soulevées par M. Forman. Le représentant de Cuba souhaite que les protestations qu'il formule à cet égard soient consignées dans le compte rendu.

2. Le PRÉSIDENT dit que le Secrétariat enquêtera sur cette question.

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

3. M. MIRDHA (Inde) dit que l'examen du point à l'étude a montré combien il était utile d'examiner le problème dans son ensemble dans tous les territoires coloniaux étant donné qu'une telle étude montre pourquoi les puissances coloniales sont résolues à conserver la mainmise sur leurs territoires aussi longtemps que possible. Il s'agit là d'un problème complexe nécessitant des recherches approfondies et une analyse détaillée, mais le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (A/6868 et Add.1) offre une base adéquate à un examen circonstancié de la question.

4. Le principal mobile des entreprises industrielles et commerciales, qu'elles opèrent dans un pays indépendant ou à l'étranger, est de réaliser des bénéfices. Dans le cas d'une entreprise industrielle ou commerciale opérant dans un pays ou un territoire étranger, l'attrait du profit doit être suffisamment fort pour amener des capitaux étrangers à s'y investir. Une distinction doit être établie toutefois entre des intérêts étrangers opérant dans des Etats indépendants et ceux qui opèrent dans des territoires coloniaux. Dans le premier cas, les gouvernements en cause sont à même de protéger les intérêts de leur population et d'assurer que les investissements étrangers contribuent à la prospérité de l'économie nationale, mais dans le deuxième cas la situation est entièrement différente. Les intérêts des puissances coloniales et des monopoles étrangers sont presque toujours en conflit avec ceux des peuples coloniaux. Tout avantage que la population autochtone peut retirer des activités des intérêts financiers étrangers est purement fortuit. La construction de routes et de chemins de fer, d'écoles et d'hôpitaux et la mise en place de services de transmissions ont pour but de faciliter les activités économiques des puissances coloniales et des sociétés étrangères.

5. La domination économique des monopoles étrangers qui s'exerce en collaboration avec la puissance coloniale est une constante que l'on retrouve dans tous les territoires coloniaux du monde. En Rhodésie du Sud, les intérêts financiers étrangers, qui représentent plus de 80 p. 100 de tous les capitaux investis dans le territoire, dominent les secteurs clefs de l'économie, tels que les industries extractives, les banques et les industries manufacturières. Dans le Sud-Ouest africain, les industries extractives sont essentiellement entre les mains de compagnies étrangères, et en Angola le seul producteur de diamants est une entreprise étrangère. Dans l'agriculture, les cultures marchandes comme les cultures destinées à l'exportation sont pratiquées par les compagnies étrangères et par les colons alors que les autochtones employés comme salariés gagnent péniblement de quoi subsister.

6. Les monopoles étrangers aident souvent directement la puissance coloniale à réprimer les mouvements nationaux de libération: c'est là un fait à l'appui duquel le rapport du Comité spécial cite des preuves abondantes. La collaboration entre la puissance coloniale et les monopoles étrangers est particulièrement apparente dans les colonies africaines administrées par le Portugal. Les compagnies étrangères sont exonérées de la plupart des impôts et des droits d'importation ou d'exportation et l'on empêche les Africains de leur faire concurrence dans n'importe quelle branche de la production. Les Africains sont obligés de ne pratiquer que les cultures dans lesquelles les compagnies concessionnaires se spécialisent et de vendre leurs produits à ces compagnies à des prix fixés par ces dernières. En échange de ces concessions, les compagnies étrangères fournissent à la puissance coloniale une aide financière et même militaire. Les compagnies étrangères ont leurs propres forces de police et leurs propres forces armées et se sont engagées par contrat à appuyer le Gouvernement portugais en vue du "maintien de la paix et de l'ordre public", en d'autres termes à réprimer la lutte légitime du peuple pour la liberté et l'indépendance.

7. Les représentants des puissances administrantes soutiennent parfois que, dans les territoires où il existe des gouvernements élus, ceux-ci déterminent librement la nature des investissements étrangers et les conditions dans lesquelles ils s'effectuent. Aucun gouvernement d'un pays qui n'est pas entièrement indépendant ne peut être considéré comme étant vraiment libre de fixer sa politique, du fait que les puissances coloniales exercent des pressions subtiles sur des gouvernements de ce genre. Ce n'est qu'après son accession à l'indépendance complète et souveraine qu'un pays peut arrêter lui-même la politique qui, à son avis, est la mieux à même de favoriser son développement économique: c'est un fait bien connu de l'Inde.

8. La délégation indienne rejette ce que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a laissé entendre dans la déclaration qu'il a faite à la 1720^{ème} séance, à savoir que si l'Inde a obtenu l'indépendance c'est en premier lieu en raison des activités des compagnies étrangères dans ce pays. L'Inde a en réalité conquis son indépendance par ses propres efforts et par les sacrifices qu'elle a consentis, et ce en dépit des activités d'intérêts financiers étrangers.

9. Les puissantes compagnies financières et industrielles qui opèrent dans les territoires coloniaux ont souvent tout autant d'influence dans leurs propres pays et elles exercent une pression considérable sur leurs gouvernements pour les amener à adopter une politique plus favorable aux puissances coloniales dans les colonies desquelles elles ont placé des capitaux. Il est regrettable que bon nombre de gouvernements aient cédé devant de telles pressions. Ces compagnies consacrent des ressources immenses à des activités de propagande en faveur des puissances coloniales, en déformant la réalité afin de faire passer ces puissances pour les sauveurs de la civilisation occidentale.

10. La délégation indienne partage entièrement les vues du Comité spécial qui estime que les milieux économiques étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux opèrent principalement pour servir leurs propres intérêts étroits en collaboration avec la puissance coloniale en cause et entravent ainsi le progrès des peuples coloniaux vers la liberté et l'indépendance.

11. M. BENSID (Algérie) fait observer que la manière dont les intérêts étrangers économiques, ou autres, font obstacle à la décolonisation varie selon la nature du processus colonial. Certains territoires sont soumis à un colonialisme de type classique, où la colonie relève de l'autorité de la métropole même, alors qu'ailleurs, comme en Rhodésie du Sud, en Afrique du Sud et, à plus longue échéance, dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, on s'est trouvé en présence d'une colonisation de peuplement.

12. Dans le cas d'une colonisation du type classique, les capitaux étrangers ont été investis afin d'exploiter les richesses naturelles des territoires coloniaux pour le compte de la métropole au moyen d'une production intensive et rapidement rentable. Cette politique a amené la ruine des producteurs autochtones. Chaque colonie se voyait obligée de produire des matières premières qui étaient exportées dans la métropole; de cette manière, la colonie devenait économiquement dépendante de la métropole puisque les prix des matières premières étaient fixés en Europe et que la colonie était obligée d'importer de la métropole les denrées alimentaires indispensables à la subsistance. En vertu de cette politique, aucune infrastructure économique ou sociale n'a été mise en place dans les territoires coloniaux, étant donné que tout le développement était conditionné par les besoins particuliers des intérêts économiques étrangers. Par suite du manque d'éducation scolaire ou d'autres types de formation, les populations des territoires coloniaux sont considérées comme incapables d'assumer la responsabilité de leurs propres affaires et sont donc soumises à une domination à la fois politique et économique de la métropole.

13. Il est arrivé cependant que malgré les conditions défavorables ainsi délibérément créées par les puissances coloniales, certains territoires coloniaux se sont vu octroyer l'indépendance, mais seulement après que la puissance coloniale eut créé les bases nécessaires à l'implantation du néo-colonialisme et de l'impérialisme, de sorte qu'elle pouvait continuer à retirer tous les avantages de l'exploitation coloniale sans supporter plus longtemps la responsabilité de l'ancienne colonie. Si le jeune Etat indépendant cherchait à desserrer l'emprise des milieux économiques étrangers, il découvrirait que rien n'avait changé; dans certains cas même la souveraineté ou l'intégrité territoriale du nouvel Etat étaient remises en cause s'il prenait son indépendance par trop au sérieux. C'est là un aspect important du problème parce que des événements récents dirigés par des milieux financiers internationaux ont secoué la stabilité de jeunes Etats et menacent encore leur existence.

14. Il importe que l'Organisation des Nations Unies continue de jouer le rôle principal dans la disparition du colonialisme ou, tout au moins, dans l'évolution de la décolonisation. L'un des concepts moteurs à la base de l'action des Nations Unies est le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, droit qui conditionne la jouissance de tous les autres droits de l'homme. Ce principe, de même que le principe de la souveraineté des peuples sur leurs richesses naturelles, doit continuer à guider l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans son action décolonisatrice. L'application de ces principes dans les derniers flots de colonisation, quel que soit le type de colonisation dont ils relèvent, aurait permis de désamorcer la violence à laquelle on a abouti, en maints endroits, du fait du maintien de situations qui tendent à retarder le processus de libération des peuples coloniaux.

15. Dans le cas des colonies de peuplement, des minorités européennes, étrangères à la culture et à la civilisation des peuples qu'elles maintiennent sous leur joug, ont créé des entités territoriales factices et se sont emparées de tous les pouvoirs de décision de ces pays au détriment des intérêts légitimes des populations autochtones. En Afrique du Sud par exemple, ce n'est que lorsque la minorité européenne a consenti à perpétuer, pour le compte d'intérêts étrangers, l'exploitation des ressources du territoire que le pays a été déclaré indépendant, au profit exclusif de la minorité européenne. Les intérêts étrangers et les intérêts des colons blancs sont étroitement liés en Afrique du Sud. En janvier 1963, M. Charles Engelhard, président de l'American South African Investment Company, a dit que les conditions sont idéales pour les investisseurs d'outre-mer. La confiance des investisseurs étrangers avait apparemment été ébranlée à la suite des événements de Sharpeville et de Windhoek et de l'admission à l'ONU de nouveaux Etats africains indépendants, et le capital américain est nécessaire au maintien de la stabilité financière de l'Afrique du Sud. M. Engelhard a reconnu que la politique d'apartheid était le principal garant des intérêts américains et autres en Afrique du Sud et que toute mise en cause de cette politique avait entraîné des conséquences fâcheuses pour le développement des monopoles. Le capital étranger est le principal soutien de l'apartheid en Rhodésie du Sud, dans les colonies portugaises, dans le Sud-Ouest africain ainsi qu'en Afrique du Sud. En 1964, au Sud-Ouest africain, la valeur des exportations des minéraux a atteint le chiffre record de 93 millions de rands, dont 60 millions représentent la vente des diamants et 32 millions les minéraux de base produits par la Tsumeb Corporation. En 1957, l'Anglo American Corporation of South Africa a produit 25 p. 100 de l'or de l'Afrique du Sud, 24 p. 100 de son uranium, 43 p. 100 de son charbon, 41 p. 100 du total des diamants produits dans le monde et 51 p. 100 du cuivre de la Zambie; cette société a également des intérêts en Rhodésie du Sud, dans l'Anglo American Corporation (Rhodésie). En 1964, le montant total des investissements étrangers en Afrique du Sud s'élevait à 4 354 millions de dollars, dont le Royaume-Uni détenait 60 p. 100 et les Etats-Unis 11 p. 100.

16. Dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, la plupart des cultures d'exportation sont dominées par des capitaux européens. Si le colonialisme dans ces territoires est encore un colonialisme de type classique, la politique de peuplement poursuivie par Lisbonne donne lieu de craindre que la situation n'évolue dans le même sens qu'en Afrique du Sud ou en Rhodésie du Sud. Les intérêts étrangers ne man-queront certainement pas de soutenir une telle politique car l'existence d'une minorité européenne reste la garantie de la pérennité de l'exploitation coloniale.

17. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a le devoir de mesurer l'étendue des conséquences néfastes résultant des activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres dans les territoires coloniaux. Ces conséquences comprennent la perpétuation de la dépendance politique, le sous-développement économique et social, l'orientation déséquilibrée de l'économie et la dépendance totale à l'égard des milieux financiers étrangers. Ces activités favorisent également l'implantation du néo-colonialisme et de l'impérialisme après l'accession de ces territoires à l'indépendance. Cette situation ne prévaut que parce que généralement la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, et en particulier le paragraphe 2 du dispositif, ne sont pas appliqués intégralement et avec toute l'honnêteté désirable. Le Gouvernement algérien condamne catégoriquement les activités des intérêts étrangers qui contribuent à la perpétuation du colonialisme et de l'apartheid et limitent le développement économique et social des territoires coloniaux. Il fait appel aux Etats intéressés pour qu'ils prennent les mesures nécessaires en vue d'arrêter ce flux de capitaux vers les territoires coloniaux dont l'objectif est une exploitation égoïste.

18. A la conférence qui s'est tenue récemment à Alger^{1/}, les Etats d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine ont stigmatisé les conséquences lointaines de ces activités pour l'avenir des jeunes Etats. L'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait dénoncer les agissements des milieux financiers internationaux et des puissances qui favorisent leur persistance dans les territoires coloniaux.

19. M. ASIROGLU (Turquie) dit que la question considérée est d'une importance particulière car elle intéresse de près la mise en application du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Bien que le droit à l'autodétermination soit considéré comme un droit politique, le processus de décolonisation comporte également des facteurs économiques, sociaux et culturels. Les puissances qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer les territoires non autonomes sont tenues en vertu de la Charte des Nations Unies d'assurer le progrès politique, économique et social des populations placées sous leur administration et de favoriser le développement de leur instruction. L'interdépendance des facteurs politiques, économiques, sociaux et culturels est également démontrée dans le Pacte international relatif aux droits économiques, sociaux et culturels et dans le Pacte international relatif aux droits civils et politiques. Le premier reconnaît le droit de tous les peuples de disposer d'eux-mêmes et de disposer librement de leurs richesses et de leurs ressources naturelles; il reconnaît également le droit qu'a toute personne de jouir de conditions de travail justes et favorables et de bénéficier d'un salaire équitable et d'une rémunération égale pour un travail de valeur égale, sans distinction aucune.

^{1/} Réunion ministérielle du groupe des soixante-dix-sept pays en voie de développement.

20. La délégation turque appuie dans ses grandes lignes le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6868) et celui du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) sur les activités des intérêts étrangers économiques et autres dans les territoires coloniaux, bien qu'elle ait certaines réserves à formuler en ce qui concerne les recommandations. Elle fait sienne la recommandation tendant à ce que l'Assemblée générale inscrive à nouveau ce point à l'ordre du jour de sa vingt-troisième session, pour pouvoir l'étudier plus à fond. De l'avis de la délégation turque, des experts compétents devraient être mis à la disposition du Sous-Comité I pour l'assister dans l'accomplissement de sa tâche difficile et il serait utile que le Sous-Comité coopère étroitement avec les institutions spécialisées, telles que la Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement, le Fonds monétaire international et le Bureau international du Travail.

21. Il importe de distinguer entre les concessions qui sont favorables au développement des populations autochtones et celles qui vont à l'encontre de leurs intérêts. La délégation turque condamne l'exploitation inhumaine des peuples coloniaux par les monopoles étrangers et par les intérêts qui coopèrent avec les puissances administrantes mais, d'un autre côté, elle estime que les investissements étrangers peuvent aussi servir l'intérêt mutuel des autochtones et des investisseurs étrangers et qu'il serait donc erroné de condamner catégoriquement tous les investissements étrangers en se fondant sur des considérations dépourvues de réalisme et d'objectivité.

22. Le Comité spécial suggère que l'Assemblée générale adresse un appel à toutes les institutions spécialisées des Nations Unies pour qu'elles n'accordent à l'Afrique du Sud, au Portugal et à la Rhodésie du Sud aucune assistance financière, économique ou technique tant qu'ils n'auront pas renoncé à leur politique d'apartheid, de colonialisme et de discrimination raciale. Les raisons militent contre une telle assistance sont si connues qu'il serait superflu d'insister. Néanmoins, la délégation turque pense que ce serait aller à l'encontre des intérêts de la population autochtone de l'Afrique australe que de condamner tous les genres et toutes les formes d'assistance. Le programme d'assistance technique vise à améliorer le niveau économique et social des pays sous-développés; par exemple, en 1966, c'est pour aider la population rurale que l'Organisation mondiale de la santé a exécuté des programmes d'éradication du paludisme au Mozambique et dans les fles du Cap-Vert. Comme le Comité spécial ne souhaite certainement pas entraver le progrès des peuples autochtones en Afrique australe, il serait opportun de modifier le texte en question afin d'éviter toute interprétation erronée.

M. Dashtseren (Mongolie), rapporteur, prend la présidence.

23. Selon M. ABDEL-WAHAB (République arabe unie), l'histoire du colonialisme au cours des deux derniers siècles a clairement montré que l'exploitation économique est son objectif principal. Une fois que les puissances coloniales ont subjugué entièrement les territoires dont elles exploitent les ressources naturelles, elles ont cherché à protéger leurs intérêts en répartissant entre elles des zones d'influence et en créant des compagnies mixtes à la seule fin d'exploiter les territoires dépendants et de s'assurer des débouchés pour leurs produits. Cette situation persiste et les gouvernements se laissent encore guider par des considérations économiques et commerciales dans leur politique internationale.

24. Le rapport du Comité spécial est une source abondante de renseignements utiles sur les activités des intérêts étrangers économiques et autres dans tous les territoires coloniaux. Il n'est pas surprenant que le Royaume-Uni et les Etats-Unis aient rejeté les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial. Les délégations de ces deux pays ont essayé d'introduire dans le débat des questions sans rapport avec le point à l'étude afin de détourner l'attention de la Commission ou de semer la division parmi ses membres. Par exemple, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a estimé que le rapport reflète des préjugés propres à un certain point de vue idéologique. Mais le Comité connaît bien ces tactiques, qui n'ont aucune chance de réussite.

25. Les résolutions 2158 (XXI) et 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale soulignent qu'il importe d'accroître le rôle des pays en voie de développement dans l'administration des entreprises étrangères et de favoriser le développement politique, économique, social et culturel des peuples dépendants. Le rapport du Comité spécial fait ressortir la nécessité d'éliminer la domination économique étrangère dans les territoires coloniaux. Les compagnies et les monopoles étrangers, poussés par le désir de réaliser des bénéfices aussi élevés que possible, secondent activement les régimes coloniaux en vue de sauvegarder leurs propres intérêts. Des lois discriminatoires exonèrent le capital étranger d'impôts et de droits de douane et les investisseurs étrangers peuvent puiser dans le réservoir d'une main-d'œuvre bon marché. L'exportation de travailleurs est également à leur avantage.

26. Les investisseurs étrangers fournissent aux régimes coloniaux, notamment en Afrique australe, une assistance tant directe qu'indirecte. C'est ainsi que les prêts que le Portugal reçoit d'eux renforcent son économie et lui permettent de produire du matériel de guerre dont il se sert pour perpétuer sa tyrannie. D'autre part, les sociétés étrangères possèdent leurs propres forces de police et de sécurité, qui aident les autorités portugaises à réprimer les mouvements de libération. Les intérêts économiques étrangers aident le régime sud-rhodésien à se soustraire aux sanctions imposées par le Conseil de sécurité et, ce faisant, déjouent les efforts déployés par l'ONU pour renverser ce régime. En fait, plus de 80 p. 100 des investissements en Rhodésie du Sud appartiennent à des intérêts étrangers. Il ressort du paragraphe 114 du rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) que les industries minières et manufacturières contribuent activement à renforcer l'économie sud-rhodésienne. D'autre part, ces intérêts économiques étrangers sont étroitement liés à ceux opérant en Afrique du Sud, en Angola et au Mozambique; les Gouvernements portugais et sud-africain refusent d'appliquer des sanctions contre la Rhodésie du Sud.

27. Certains des monopoles étrangers accélèrent leur exploitation des ressources naturelles des territoires coloniaux, ce qui nuit à l'avenir des populations autochtones, en raison notamment du fait que les bénéfices sont transférés à l'étranger. En outre, la grande majorité des travailleurs autochtones ne sont employés qu'en tant que travailleurs non qualifiés et n'ont pas la possibilité de recevoir une formation et d'améliorer leur condition. M. Humphrey, vice-président des Etats-Unis, a dit que la paix peut être menacée aussi bien par les privations sociales et économiques que par les forces militaires. On peut se demander si les Etats-Unis et le Royaume-Uni gardent cette idée présente à l'esprit dans la poursuite de leur politique colonialiste.

28. Il y a deux types de puissances administrantes. Certaines exploitent directement les ressources naturelles de leurs colonies au moyen de leurs propres capitaux ou de ceux de leurs ressortissants. D'autres accordent toutes les facilités et tous les privilèges illicites possibles à des capitalistes étrangers et, en échange, reçoivent de ces derniers une partie de leurs bénéfices élevés ainsi qu'une assistance militaire et politique. De tels privilèges et facilités sont ordinairement contraires aux règles établies du droit international.

29. Le rapport traite également du rôle des Etats aux ressortissants desquels appartiennent les monopoles étrangers. C'est un fait patent que les monopoles internationaux opérant dans les territoires coloniaux exercent une considérable influence sur la politique de leurs gouvernements. Les intérêts égoïstes de certaines puissances les amènent à adopter une politique d'obstruction au mépris total des responsabilités morales et juridiques qui leur incombent au titre de la Charte. Une telle attitude fait obstacle aux efforts de l'ONU et entrave le processus de décolonisation.

30. Il est ironique que la richesse et les bénéfices que les puissances coloniales amassent dans leurs territoires servent à détruire les populations de ces territoires et à consolider des pouvoirs illégitimes comme en Rhodésie du Sud; ils sont même utilisés contre des Etats indépendants. Bon nombre des pays représentés à la Commission ont subi le joug colonial des décennies durant; ils savent comment le rôle joué par les monopoles étrangers à travers l'histoire a entravé le processus de décolonisation et que les investissements étrangers, si on en fait un emploi abusif, peuvent être plus nuisibles qu'utiles.

31. Selon M. MARTINEZ (Argentine), nul ne peut nier que les mobiles économiques aient joué un rôle décisif dans le processus de colonisation; en fait, beaucoup de colonies ont été, à l'origine, des comptoirs commerciaux appartenant à des compagnies privées. Les intérêts économiques des anciennes puissances coloniales interviennent même dans les affaires des Etats qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance, comme la République démocratique du Congo. La décision de l'Assemblée générale tendant à examiner, en tant que point distinct de son ordre du jour, les rapports qui existent entre les intérêts économiques et la persistance de situations coloniales est donc particulièrement importante. L'Assemblée a mentionné cette question lors de sessions antérieures dans des résolutions se rapportant à des territoires particuliers, mais il importe que ce problème soit examiné dans son ensemble.

32. La délégation argentine estime que le rapport présenté sur cette question par le Comité spécial et son annexe, le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868 et Add.1) offrent un excellent point de départ pour l'examen de cette question. Bien que le Secrétaire général ait fourni au Comité spécial des documents de base fort utiles, il faudra disposer de renseignements plus complets pour pouvoir étudier à fond la question. Par exemple, les renseignements relatifs à la Rhodésie du Sud contenus dans l'appendice I du document A/6868/Add.1 indiquent les effets des sanctions économiques mais ne mettent pas suffisamment en lumière la situation des populations autochtones ou les conséquences négatives que ces sanctions peuvent avoir pour elles. Cependant, le document sur le Sud-Ouest africain reproduit dans l'appendice II fournit des données révélatrices; par exemple, les chiffres concernant les catégories de bétail dont l'élevage est le plus avantageux cités dans le tableau que l'on trouve au paragraphe 17 donnent une idée précise de la répartition des sources de richesses entre les différents groupes raciaux. En ce qui concerne plus particulièrement l'appendice III, consacré aux territoires administrés par le Portugal, M. Martinez tient à déclarer que sa délégation se rend compte que l'industrie minière nécessite des capitaux considérables qui peuvent provenir de sources différentes. L'essentiel est qu'une part des bénéfices des activités économiques aille aux populations autochtones, sous forme de salaires ou d'investissements du produit des impôts et des redevances dans des projets d'intérêt général. Si la puissance administrante décide d'utiliser ces recettes pour financer une guerre coloniale, cela ne signifie pas que les investissements privés sont mauvais en tant que tels et l'on ne peut tenir les sociétés qui versent des impôts pour responsables de l'utilisation qui est faite des sommes perçues.

33. Au stade actuel du processus de décolonisation politique, et dans le processus parallèle que l'on pourrait qualifier de "décolonisation économique", il convient d'arrêter certains principes généraux. On devrait adopter une résolution définissant ces principes qui complèteraient, sur le plan économique, les principes politiques énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. De l'avis de la délégation argentine, on peut résumer les obligations de la communauté internationale envers les peuples placés sous la domination coloniale en indiquant qu'elle doit garantir aux populations autochtones la conservation des richesses naturelles qui leur appartiennent, leur faciliter l'accès à ces richesses et les mettre en mesure de les exploiter dans les conditions les plus modernes, leur garantir l'accès à l'enseignement à tous les niveaux, leur permettre d'avoir leur part des bénéfices tirés de l'exploitation des ressources naturelles et leur garantir des conditions de travail et des salaires équitables. L'application de ces principes doit préparer le terrain à l'indépendance et créer les conditions indispensables à l'établissement d'une économie nationale saine. Ces principes sont les corollaires logiques des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte et de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée.

34. Les travaux futurs des Nations Unies sur la question actuellement à l'étude devraient conduire à l'élaboration d'une étude détaillée où l'on définirait, d'une part, les rapports réels qui existent entre les pratiques des puissances coloniales et celles des intérêts privés, et où l'on examinerait, d'autre part, la façon dont la résolution 1514 (XV) est appliquée. Ce document ne pourrait pas donner lieu à des critiques alléguant la partialité ou des généralisations trop poussées et il aurait le mérite de s'appuyer sur des principes définis dans la Charte tout en établissant un code de conduite à l'usage des Etats et de l'Organisation. Il serait ainsi possible de s'assurer l'appui de tous les Etats qui ont l'œuvre de décolonisation à cœur.

35. M. RODRIGUEZ ASTIAZARAIN (Cuba) dit que, pour les peuples coloniaux, les monopoles et les intérêts étrangers sont synonymes de faim, de maladie, d'analphabétisme, d'exploitation, de racisme et d'oppression. L'histoire des intérêts étrangers se confond avec celle du colonialisme, du néo-colonialisme et des guerres d'agression; c'est l'histoire de l'impérialisme et de son principal champion, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

36. La principale raison d'être des colonies est l'exploitation de leurs richesses, et la politique des puissances impérialistes est guidée par les bénéfices que leurs entreprises retirent des territoires coloniaux. On en trouve la preuve au paragraphe 13 du rapport du Comité spécial (A/6868) reproduisant les observations du représentant des Etats-Unis qui a qualifié le rapport du Sous-Comité I de tendancieux et de doctrinaire, a accusé le Sous-Comité de généraliser à l'excès et a déclaré que les conclusions et les recommandations du Sous-Comité s'appuyaient sur des idées préconçues et non fondées. La délégation cubaine n'est pas surprise que la délégation des Etats-Unis trouve à redire à ce rapport, mais les critiques de cette délégation constituent le plus grand hommage que l'on puisse rendre aux travaux du Sous-Comité.

37. Il y a aux Etats-Unis des gens qui ne partagent pas les vues du gouvernement de leur pays, comme en témoignent les déclarations faites devant la Commission à sa 1721ème séance par le représentant du Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee qui a dit que son organisation condamnait les activités des monopoles en Afrique, en Amérique latine et en Asie et travaillerait inlassablement pour aider les populations de l'Afrique australe.

38. D'un bout à l'autre du document A/6868/Add.1, on voit réapparaître constamment certains noms bien connus. Ce sont les noms des sociétés étrangères qui pillent les richesses des populations africaines et qui ont toutes leur siège dans des pays capitalistes d'Europe ou aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Même les sociétés d'Afrique du Sud ou de Rhodésie du Sud dont il est fait mention sont des filiales de monopoles des Etats-Unis. Dans certaines de ces sociétés, par exemple l'Anglo American Corporation of South Africa, on trouve représentés les intérêts de plusieurs pays. On peut lire au paragraphe 50 de l'appendice I du document A/6868/Add.1 que parmi les sociétés d'exploitation minière en Rhodésie du Sud figurent notamment la société Turner and Newall, Ltd., qui produit 63 p. 100 de l'amiante extrait dans le pays, et les sociétés Rhodesia Chrome Mines, Ltd.,

African Chrome Mines, Ltd. et Union Carbide Rhomet of Que Que qui toutes trois appartiennent à la Union Carbide Company des Etats-Unis. Au paragraphe 57, on signale que les exportations à destination des Etats-Unis de minerai et de concentrés de chrome pour la période de janvier à octobre 1965 ont représenté 3,2 millions de dollars. Dans l'appendice II, consacré au Sud-Ouest africain, on indique (par. 41) que la production des diamants au Sud-Ouest africain est un quasi-monopole de la Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd., filiale d'une filiale de l'Anglo American Corporation of South Africa. Dans le domaine des métaux de base, on trouve la Tsumeb Corporation dont les principaux actionnaires sont deux grandes sociétés minières des Etats-Unis.

39. Les pétitionnaires ont également fourni des renseignements sur les investissements des Etats-Unis en Afrique du Sud. D'après un pétitionnaire qui s'est présenté devant le Comité spécial à sa 526ème séance, ces investissements à la fin de 1962 s'élevaient au total à 182 millions de dollars dans les industries extractives, 113 millions de dollars dans les industries manufacturières, 50 millions de dollars dans les assurances et la finance, 78 millions de dollars dans le commerce et 335 millions de dollars dans les services publics (A/AC.109/SR.526). La délégation des Etats-Unis a déclaré à la même séance que les investissements et le commerce privés américains n'étaient pas dirigés par le gouvernement et qu'il ne fallait pas interpréter les opérations des sociétés américaines comme reflétant la politique du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis (A/AC.109/SR.526). Mais le fait est que les milieux d'affaires privés ont la mainmise sur le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, comme le prouve toute sa politique. Chaque fois qu'un peuple tente de redevenir maître de ses ressources qui ont pendant longtemps été exploitées par des intérêts américains, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis a recours à tous les moyens, y compris à l'intervention armée, pour défendre ces intérêts comme en témoigne l'agression commise contre le Guatemala en 1964. Même s'il y a un léger risque que leurs intérêts économiques et politiques soient touchés, les Etats-Unis interviennent militairement ainsi qu'ils l'ont fait dans la République Dominicaine en 1965. Le représentant de Cuba juge inutile de rappeler à la Commission les agressions commises contre son propre pays. Les sanctions économiques décrétées contre la République populaire démocratique de Corée et la République populaire de Chine, et l'agression dont est victime la République démocratique du Vietnam illustrent les méthodes qu'emploient les impérialistes pour protéger leurs intérêts. Nul ne se laissera abuser par les déclarations selon lesquelles les activités des sociétés privées ne représentent pas la politique du gouvernement.

40. Les bases militaires que les Etats-Unis maintiennent dans le monde entier sont également destinées avant tout à protéger les intérêts des monopoles américains. Mais la politique des impérialistes se heurte à la lutte que mènent les peuples du monde entier pour reprendre le contrôle de leurs richesses naturelles, et l'appui moral et matériel apporté aux combattants de la liberté accélérera la fin du règne des monopoles et de l'impérialisme yankee.

41. Sur la base des renseignements contenus dans le rapport, la délégation cubaine tient à dire qu'elle appuie les recommandations du Comité spécial; elle insiste notamment pour que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis soit condamné pour sa responsabilité indéniable dans le soutien apporté aux monopoles américains en vue de la réalisation de leurs objectifs.

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique (A/6868 et Add.1)

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. ALWAN (Irak) tient à féliciter le Secrétariat pour les documents de travail qu'il a établis; ces documents faciliteront considérablement les travaux du Sous-Comité I. M. Alwan aurait néanmoins aimé trouver dans le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6868 et Add.1) certaines données sur la situation économique des territoires coloniaux de la péninsule arabique et de la zone environnante. La décolonisation a beaucoup progressé depuis la fin de la deuxième guerre mondiale, surtout grâce à l'héroïsme et à la volonté de lutte des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique, parmi lesquels il y a lieu de citer notamment le peuple algérien. Cette lutte s'est heurtée à des obstacles quasi-insurmontables, comme par exemple l'attitude négative du Portugal et l'intransigeance de l'Afrique du Sud. De plus, l'avènement de régimes minoritaires racistes en Rhodésie du Sud et en Palestine porte atteinte aux intérêts de la population autochtone et favorise le maintien des avantages stratégiques et économiques que possèdent les puissances coloniales. La délégation irakienne attribue la plus grande importance à la question des monopoles étrangers, qu'elle considère comme des ennemis du progrès social et économique des territoires considérés. Les monopoles obtiennent d'énormes bénéfices grâce à une série de facteurs qui règnent uniquement dans les territoires non autonomes, à savoir l'exploitation insatiable des ressources naturelles et humaines, la législation discriminatoire, délibérément conçue pour favoriser les intérêts des monopoles, et la domination qu'exerce l'étranger sur tous les aspects de la vie économique des colonies.

2. M. Alwan ne partage pas le jugement porté sur le rapport par le représentant du Royaume-Uni, et en particulier il nie que ce rapport reflète les préjugés propres à telle ou telle idéologie. De plus, la délégation du Royaume-Uni n'a pas coopéré dans toute la mesure possible aux travaux du Comité spécial, s'abstenant par exemple de participer aux réunions tenues en dehors du Siège, et ses critiques sont injustes. La délégation irakienne fait siennes les conclusions et recommandations du rapport et remercie les membres du Sous-Comité I du précieux travail qu'ils ont accompli.

3. M. TSERENCHOODOL (Mongolie) partage l'opinion exprimée au cours du débat sur les territoires administrés par le Portugal, à savoir que les activités des intérêts et des monopoles étrangers font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Ces intérêts et ces monopoles appuient en Rhodésie du Sud le régime de Smith malgré les sanctions décidées par les Nations Unies, tandis que dans les territoires coloniaux portugais ils contribuent au soutien du régime de Salazar. Les énormes bénéfices qu'ils retirent de l'exploitation des richesses de ces territoires leur permettent de soutenir économiquement et militairement les régimes racistes, qui leur accordent les conditions les plus favorables pour leurs entreprises. Par exemple, les investissements effectués dans les colonies rapportent plus de 20 p. 100 par an, c'est-à-dire beaucoup plus qu'il n'est possible d'obtenir dans les pays indépendants. Ces profits sont réalisés grâce à la misère des populations autochtones, victimes de la plus abjecte discrimination. On sait que les travailleurs autochtones perçoivent à peine 10 p. 100 du salaire des travailleurs blancs et qu'ils n'ont pas le droit de s'organiser en syndicats pour défendre leurs intérêts. Dans les territoires, tous les moyens de production et la majeure partie des terres sont aux mains des Blancs; au Sud-Ouest africain, par exemple, où les Africains constituent 90 p. 100 de la population, les Européens possèdent 50 p. 100 des terres. Les monopoles étrangers s'immiscent dans les affaires intérieures des territoires, versent un impôt spécial pour soutenir les forces armées des régimes racistes et constituent un réseau international qui, sans aucun doute, exerce une influence réactionnaire sur l'ensemble du processus de décolonisation, notamment en Afrique australe. Pour défendre les intérêts des monopoles, les puissances capitalistes interviennent ouvertement contre les pays indépendants d'Afrique et d'Asie, où leurs entreprises criminelles ont pour but d'étouffer les mouvements de libération nationale. Les bases militaires établies dans les territoires coloniaux jouent un rôle important dans cette répression systématique; c'est pourquoi il est si important que ces bases soient éliminées.

5. M. NAVA CARRILLO (Venezuela) rappelle que sa déclaration, en sa qualité de membre du Comité spécial, manifeste que la structure colonialiste du capital et des intérêts étrangers freine souvent l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Elle estime cependant que certaines idées du rapport du Comité spécial sont présentées de telle manière qu'elles pourraient se prêter à une interprétation erronée. Par exemple, les avantages du régime de la propriété publique de certaines ressources minérales ne sont plus à démontrer; ce qui est véritablement condamnable, c'est que les autorités permettent que ces ressources soient exploitées de façon incompatible avec les intérêts de la collectivité qui en est le légitime propriétaire. Pour que la collectivité puisse défendre ses droits, il faut avant tout qu'elle soit libre de les exercer. Dans la mesure où les intérêts étrangers font obstacle à l'exercice de ces droits et empêchent la collectivité d'accéder librement à ses ressources naturelles, il se crée une situation d'oppression politique et économique; tel est le cas pour les populations autochtones de l'Afrique australe.

6. Il ressort clairement du rapport que les puissances administrantes font passer au second plan l'obligation que leur impose la Charte d'assurer le progrès économique et social des peuples coloniaux. Certes, on ne peut s'attendre à ce que les capitaux soient investis à des fins philanthropiques, mais les autorités administrantes sont tenues de réglementer les investissements de telle manière que ceux-ci ne profitent pas seulement à ceux qui les effectuent, mais également aux territoires qui les accueillent. C'est cela que le Secrétaire général a voulu dire lorsque, cherchant à définir le rôle des entreprises et des investissements étrangers dans son rapport sur le Développement des investissements privés étrangers dans les pays en voie de développement: "résumé et conclusions"¹, il a parlé de "bases de conciliation". Un régime qui permet l'utilisation de la population et des richesses d'un territoire sans la contrepartie nécessaire, qui favorise et maintient l'existence de barèmes de salaires distincts de ceux qui sont appliqués aux travailleurs blancs, et qui aliène les ressources d'un territoire sans l'assentiment de la population, ce régime porte atteinte aux droits de cette population et consacre une situation inique.

7. A une époque où l'espoir se concrétise autour de la diversification de l'économie, il est triste de constater que les gouvernements coloniaux et les monopoles étrangers font délibérément obstacle au développement équilibré des territoires soumis à leur contrôle. Il a fallu de nombreuses années de discussion aux Nations Unies pour faire admettre finalement la thèse du développement harmonieux des différents pays et pour que l'appui des pays développés aux pays en voie de développement se manifeste par des actes concrets. Il est donc inadmissible que dans certains territoires coloniaux on favorise la prédominance d'une activité économique unique et que l'on vise à perpétuer une telle situation et à subordonner les intérêts des populations autochtones à ceux des intérêts étrangers ou des minorités. Ce qui est dit dans le rapport au sujet de l'agriculture de subsistance et de l'agriculture orientée vers l'exportation fait bien ressortir les méthodes appliquées par les grands consortiums étrangers pour exercer leur domination et faire obstacle à l'indépendance des territoires considérés.

8. M. Nava Carrillo déclare que la communauté internationale doit prendre des mesures pour vaincre le déséquilibre du développement économique et social des territoires coloniaux. Il ne suffit pas de demander aux organismes internationaux de refuser leur assistance aux puissances administrantes; il faut également apporter une aide positive aux territoires sous domination coloniale.

9. Le déséquilibre favorisé par la prédominance accordée à une activité économique unique est un fait que l'on peut constater également dans les territoires coloniaux de l'Amérique latine. Par exemple, aux îles Bahamas, dont l'économie est principalement tributaire du tourisme, les recettes de cette industrie, qui s'élevaient en 1960 à 28 400 000 dollars, ont atteint en 1965 48 500 000 dollars, tandis qu'au cours de la même période les dépenses effectuées aux Etats-Unis par le territoire sont passées de 40 700 000 dollars à 95 300 000 dollars. Les industries liées au tourisme représentent 80 p. 100 du produit national brut, tandis que la part des secteurs de base, qui en 1967 était de 13 p. 100, se trouve ramenée actuellement à 8 p. 100. On a là une preuve de la manière dont on néglige le secteur intérieur de l'économie des territoires coloniaux, ce qui compromet d'une manière générale les progrès de la collectivité. C'est pourquoi la délégation vénézuélienne souligne qu'au moment de l'indépendance, laquelle doit intervenir au plus tôt, le gouvernement, en tant que représentant de la collectivité, doit disposer non seulement du pouvoir politique, mais aussi de la puissance économique, car s'il n'en est pas ainsi, l'état de subordination à l'égard des intérêts étrangers se perpétuera. L'aide extérieure ne doit pas impliquer une atteinte à la souveraineté, et c'est pourquoi l'assistance multilatérale est la plus avantageuse, bien qu'elle doive dans certains cas se combiner avec l'aide bilatérale.

10. Lorsqu'on examine les activités qui font l'objet du rapport, il convient de signaler la situation des "petits territoires" dont la situation actuelle et future doit être un motif de préoccupation.

11. M. Nava Carrillo souligne que l'essentiel est d'accélérer la décolonisation, non de vouloir faire du système colonial quelque chose de moins critiquable et de plus supportable. Il fait sienne, en conclusion, l'objection fondamentale à tout régime colonial ayant pour objectif, notamment, de faciliter des accommodements qui tendent à sacrifier les aspirations de la communauté sur laquelle ce régime exerce sa domination.

12. M. MWEMPU-SAMPU (République démocratique du Congo) se déclare convaincu que le comportement des monopoles étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux représente une influence négative et destructrice qui s'oppose aux efforts déployés par l'Organisation pour hâter la décolonisation de ces territoires. Il n'est pas question en l'occurrence d'une querelle idéologique portant sur les méthodes de développement économique; il s'agit tout simplement de démontrer objectivement que les monopoles étrangers contribuent à l'action répressive des puissances administrantes en leur apportant leur assistance financière, économique et militaire. Par conséquent, les tentatives faites pour orienter le débat vers un examen des questions qui concernent la coopération entre pays développés et pays en voie de développement n'est pas autre chose qu'une manœuvre pour détourner l'attention de la Commission.

13. Il est évident que l'Organisation ne peut se substituer aux peuples qui se trouvent encore sous la domination coloniale pour choisir le système qui convient le mieux au développement économique de chaque territoire. C'est à ces peuples qu'il reviendra de prendre une décision à cet égard, une fois qu'ils auront réussi à s'organiser, à s'administrer et se gouverner eux-mêmes. Malheureusement, les monopoles économiques étrangers, soutenus par les puissances administrantes, se refusent à reconnaître les droits légitimes des peuples et s'obstinent à perpétuer leur domination en opposant des obstacles à la libération des territoires coloniaux.

14. Par sa résolution historique 1514 (XV), l'Assemblée générale a reconnu le droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance des peuples des territoires coloniaux. Cependant, les efforts poursuivis par l'Organisation pour atteindre cet objectif de liberté et de dignité humaine se brisent continuellement contre l'attitude négative des puissances administrantes et de certains Membres de l'Organisation à l'égard des recommandations des Nations Unies. Cette attitude négative se trouve renforcée par le rôle néfaste que jouent dans les territoires coloniaux les monopoles étrangers, qui usurpent le droit des populations autochtones à l'utilisation des ressources naturelles de leur pays et exploitent ces ressources à leur profit.

15. Les monopoles étrangers opèrent sur trois fronts pour faire obstacle au processus de décolonisation. En premier lieu, ils font des territoires coloniaux une source de matières premières destinées aux marchés mondiaux, en même temps qu'ils y ménagent des débouchés sûrs pour leurs produits manufacturés. Ils se bornent à développer l'industrie minière, l'extraction pétrolière et les secteurs agricoles qui produisent pour l'exportation, et ils en retirent d'énormes bénéfices; et, si parfois ils construisent aussi des routes, des réseaux ferroviaires et des aéroports, ils ne le font que pour faciliter l'exportation et l'importation de marchandises entre les territoires coloniaux et les marchés mondiaux et métropolitains. En deuxième lieu, en vue de sauvegarder leurs intérêts dans les territoires coloniaux, les milieux financiers internationaux accordent des facilités et des prêts aux puissances administrantes, les aidant ainsi à renforcer leur politique d'oppression et de répression des mouvements de libération nationale. Enfin, les puissances administrantes, en témoignage de reconnaissance, offrent aux monopoles les conditions les plus favorables pour leurs investissements dans les territoires en les autorisant à transférer leurs fonds et en leur accordant des exonérations douanières et fiscales. Il se crée ainsi entre les puissances administrantes et les monopoles étrangers une interdépendance, une communauté d'intérêts et une coopération égoïste qui perpétuent l'asservissement des peuples coloniaux en bafouant leur droit à la libre détermination.

17. L'immigration massive d'étrangers constitue un autre élément néfaste au développement des territoires coloniaux. S'appuyant sur une législation discriminatoire, les colons blancs s'emparent des meilleurs terres en expulsant les populations autochtones. Dépouillés de leurs terres, les paysans autochtones se voient contraints de se consacrer à une agriculture de subsistance dans des régions arides ou de chercher du travail dans les domaines des colons blancs ou dans les centres industriels. De cette manière, les entreprises agricoles et industrielles des monopoles étrangers se constituent une réserve importante de main-d'œuvre à bon marché. Les salaires que l'on paie aux autochtones sont bien inférieurs à ceux des étrangers et ne leur permettent pas de vivre décemment. De même, les entreprises minières et agricoles étrangères négligent la formation technique des travailleurs autochtones pour éviter d'avoir à verser des salaires plus élevés. Alors que les entreprises agricoles étrangères utilisent les méthodes les plus modernes pour augmenter leur productivité, les paysans autochtones n'ont guère accès ni à la technique ni aux capitaux et on leur refuse ainsi toute possibilité d'entrer en concurrence avec lesdites entreprises sur les marchés.

18. Cette situation est contraire aux dispositions de l'Article 73 de la Charte, qui proclame la primauté des intérêts économiques et sociaux des habitants des territoires non autonomes. M. Mwempu-Sampu est fermement convaincu que, malgré toutes les justifications et tous les arguments avancés par les monopoles étrangers et les puissances administrantes, les intérêts économiques et sociaux des autochtones ne peuvent être mieux défendus que par les habitants de ces territoires, et qu'en aucun cas on ne peut s'attendre à ce que des éléments étrangers se chargent de les défendre puisque leur principal objectif est d'obtenir pour eux-mêmes et pour leurs métropoles les bénéfices les plus élevés.

19. Enfin, pour renforcer leur position dans les territoires coloniaux et faire obstacle au processus de décolonisation, les monopoles étrangers cherchent des défenseurs parmi les membres de la communauté internationale. Ces défenseurs, au nombre desquels on compte certains des Etats Membres de l'Organisation et des institutions spécialisées, se chargent de mettre en échec tous les efforts que déploie la communauté internationale en faveur du droit des peuples à l'autodétermination, à la dignité et à la liberté. La délégation de la République démocratique du Congo est persuadée que, sous l'égide des puissances administrantes et avec l'appui tacite ou explicite de certains Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les monopoles étrangers croient pouvoir perpétuer leur domination économique sur les territoires coloniaux au détriment des véritables intérêts des populations autochtones. C'est pourquoi, M. Mwempu-Sampu s'associe aux délégations qui ont énergiquement dénoncé les activités et les méthodes des monopoles étrangers, dont le seul but est d'accumuler d'énormes bénéfices et d'exploiter une main-d'œuvre à bon marché sans se préoccuper du développement harmonieux des territoires intéressés ou des aspirations des habitants à l'autodétermination.

20. Les activités des intérêts économiques étrangers ont des caractéristiques communes dans tous les territoires de l'Afrique australe qui se trouvent sous la domination étrangère, ainsi que dans les autres territoires coloniaux. Afin de mettre en évidence la complicité des monopoles étrangers dans les manœuvres qui visent à contrecarrer le processus de décolonisation, M. Mwempu-Sampu cite le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud, où les intérêts étrangers ont collaboré avec le régime de Smith pour que les sanctions des Nations Unies restent sans effet, le cas du Sud-Ouest africain, où l'industrie minière et l'agriculture orientée vers l'exportation sont entièrement aux mains des étrangers, celui du Mozambique, où les colons blancs ont remplacé les Africains dans la culture du cachou, du riz et du coton et dont le réseau de transports a été utilisé pour aider le régime de Smith à résister aux décisions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et le cas de l'Angola, où les grandes compagnies minières réservent dans leurs budgets des crédits pour le gouvernement colonial, la défense et le maintien de la sécurité et de l'ordre. Dans la République démocratique du Congo, l'Union-Minière du Haut-Katanga, qui a déjà essayé de séparer le Katanga du reste du pays, a maintenant conçu un plan pour saboter l'économie congolaise, soulever l'armée et renverser le gouvernement. A cette fin, cette société a organisé des incursions de mercenaires à partir de l'Angola. Cela montre bien que les monopoles étrangers ne reculent devant rien pour sauvegarder leurs intérêts.

21. Le tableau alarmant que présentent les activités des intérêts économiques étrangers qui, en Afrique australe, s'exercent au détriment des populations coloniales, se retrouve dans les îles Fidji, à l'île Maurice, au Papua, en Nouvelle-Guinée et aux Bahamas. L'analyse de la situation économique dans ces territoires ne laisse aucun doute quant au fait que les monopoles étrangers ne font qu'exploiter les territoires coloniaux, s'opposant ainsi à la réalisation des objectifs fondamentaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et que leur action va à l'encontre des obligations que l'Article 73 de la Charte impose aux puissances administrantes.

22. La délégation de la République démocratique du Congo appuiera toute mesure positive permettant de rétablir le droit des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination, à l'indépendance et à l'utilisation de leurs ressources naturelles.

23. M. YADAVA (Népal) souligne les difficultés qu'il y a à réunir toutes les données nécessaires à l'examen de la question, en raison de l'attitude réticente des intérêts économiques et de gouvernements comme ceux de l'Afrique du Sud et du Portugal, qui refusent de donner des renseignements. En effet, les données dont on dispose ne sont pas complètes, qu'il s'agisse des cas où les capitaux étrangers ont joué un rôle positif dans le développement économique, ou de ceux où leur rôle a été absolument négatif. Il est cependant improbable que les conclusions et recommandations du rapport eussent été différentes si l'on avait disposé de renseignements plus nombreux.

24. Les capitaux étrangers, tant publics que privés, ont joué jusqu'ici un rôle variable. Dans les pays indépendants, les gouvernements et les sociétés ont déterminé d'un commun accord les caractéristiques et la portée des rapports entre intérêts économiques nationaux et intérêts étrangers. Au Népal, par exemple, on a adopté une politique qui permet aux capitaux étrangers de jouer un rôle positif dans le développement économique. Mais il n'en a pas toujours été ainsi dans les territoires coloniaux, où le rôle des intérêts économiques étrangers a pu varier selon les cas.

25. Le débat actuel a pour objet de déterminer dans quelle mesure les intérêts économiques étrangers ont fait obstacle à l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux. A cet égard, il a été établi de manière indiscutable que des sociétés comme l'Angola Diamond Company, où interviennent d'importants intérêts sud-africains et belges, ont pratiqué une politique de discrimination et d'exploitation et exercé une influence négative sur le progrès de l'Angola vers l'indépendance. Dans la majeure partie des territoires, les intérêts étrangers n'ont apporté aucun avantage économique, social ou culturel à la population autochtone, et ils ont fait obstacle à son accession rapide à l'indépendance.

26. A mesure que le mouvement de décolonisation a pris de l'ampleur, les intérêts économiques se sont unis pour constituer un front puissant d'opposition à l'indépendance. Il est particulièrement inquiétant de constater que certains intérêts économiques de pays tels que le Royaume-Uni et la France, qui ont contribué d'une manière positive à la décolonisation, ou les Etats-Unis, qui en général se sont opposés au colonialisme, ont participé à cette exploitation économique, dont l'effet inévitable sera de retarder l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux.

27. En conséquence, la délégation népalaise réaffirme la nécessité de l'octroi rapide de l'indépendance aux territoires coloniaux et condamne le rôle négatif joué par les intérêts économiques étrangers en ce qui concerne la réalisation de cet objectif. Elle estime cependant que, lorsque des territoires coloniaux se voient refuser le droit à l'indépendance, c'est principalement par la faute de la Puissance administrante. Aussi M. Yadava pense-t-il qu'il faudrait remanier la résolution recommandée par le Sous-Comité I afin de souligner la nécessité de l'accession rapide à l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux et de mettre en relief la responsabilité politique et morale de la puissance coloniale à cet égard.

28. M. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR (Sierra Leone), qui a écouté attentivement les orateurs qui ont traité de la question à l'étude, se déclare gravement préoccupé par les digressions qui ont parfois été faites au sujet de conflits idéologiques qui ne sont pas du ressort de la Commission.

29. Il ne fait pas de doute que la question se prête à la discussion, mais peut-être serait-il bon, au stade actuel, de placer le débat dans sa véritable perspective. L'intérêt que la Commission porte aux peuples coloniaux devrait être suffisamment fort pour écarter toute tentation de digression. C'est pourquoi M. Coleridge-Taylor espère qu'au moment où le débat en cours s'achèvera la Commission aura une vision claire de la question examinée et de la nature véritable du problème dont elle s'occupe. De l'avis de la délégation du Sierra Leone, il s'agit de savoir dans quelle mesure les activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres dans les territoires coloniaux font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV).

30. Dans la mesure où de tels obstacles existent, les puissances administrantes auront trahi la mission sacrée qui leur est confiée à l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, où il est dit:

"Les Membres des Nations Unies qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes reconnaissent le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires. Ils acceptent comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser dans toute la mesure du possible leur prospérité, dans le cadre du système de paix et de sécurité internationales établi par la présente Charte..."

On trouve ensuite dans ce même article une énumération claire et sans ambiguïté des moyens concrets par lesquels doivent être servis les intérêts des habitants des territoires considérés. Pour ce qui est de la question sur laquelle porte le débat actuel, il convient de signaler en particulier l'alinéa a en vertu duquel les puissances administrantes prennent l'engagement "d'assurer, en respectant la culture des populations en question, leur progrès politique, économique et social, ainsi que le développement de leur instruction, de les traiter avec équité et de les protéger contre les abus".

31. Pour déterminer de manière objective dans quelle mesure cette mission n'a pas été remplie, la Commission peut se reporter au rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1). Les nombreuses données contenues dans ce rapport volumineux dénotent le travail minutieux qu'il a exigé et elles rendent très précieux ce rapport, pour lequel il y a lieu de remercier le Secrétariat. Cependant, M. Coleridge-Taylor estime, comme il l'a déjà indiqué, qu'il faut écarter tout danger de malentendu sur le contenu et l'objet de ce rapport; cela sera possible si l'on écarte certaines idées erronées qui se sont fait jour au cours du débat.

32. En premier lieu, on a laissé entendre que le rapport s'en prend aux investissements étrangers dans les territoires dépendants. On a aussi interprété ce rapport comme une critique dirigée contre les investissements capitalistes dans les pays en voie de développement. On l'a enfin présenté comme un travail de propagande politique.

33. En ce qui concerne ce dernier point, M. Coleridge-Taylor déclare que, s'il est une partie du rapport qui peut être interprétée comme de la propagande politique, sa délégation ne l'a évidemment pas remarqué, car elle s'intéresse avant tout à la question coloniale fondamentale, et, à son avis, insister sur l'intention de propagande qui serait celle du rapport en perdant de vue la question fondamentale, c'est bien mal servir la cause de la décolonisation. Pour ce qui est de la deuxième allégation, elle est déplacée, puisque la Commission s'occupe des territoires dépendants, et non des territoires indépendants, et de plus elle est fautive. Ainsi, la délégation du Sierra Leone l'a déclaré au Comité spécial, le gouvernement qu'elle représente non seulement accueille volontiers les investissements étrangers mais il les accueille quelle qu'en soit la source. En fait, il s'emploie à les attirer, et on peut en dire autant de beaucoup de gouvernements représentés à la Commission. De toute manière, cette considération est à côté du sujet.

34. En ce qui concerne la première allégation, qui constitue peut-être la critique la plus grave adressée au rapport, à savoir qu'il s'en prend aux investissements étrangers dans les territoires non autonomes, elle est à la fois fautive et dénuée de fondement. Les investissements étrangers dans les territoires dépendants sont une nécessité universellement reconnue. Dans la plupart des cas, les habitants eux-mêmes ne disposant pas des capitaux nécessaires pour exploiter et mettre en valeur les ressources nationales, le recours aux investissements étrangers s'impose. A cet égard, il faut préciser que le terme "étranger" signifie "non autochtone", et vise également les colons.

35. Se référant concrètement au rapport, M. Coleridge-Taylor déclare que la partie centrale de ce document est l'alinéa c du paragraphe 132, où il est dit:

"Les intérêts étrangers et les gouvernements coloniaux sont liés par un système de profits communs: profitant des concessions et des privilèges qui leur sont accordés par les gouvernements coloniaux, ainsi que l'existence d'une main-d'œuvre à bon marché rendue possible grâce aux lois et pratiques discriminatoires et à l'interdiction faite aux autochtones d'avoir des activités syndicales légales, les intérêts étrangers exploitent les ressources naturelles et humaines des territoires dans le seul but d'accumuler des bénéfices auxquels participent les gouvernements coloniaux qui s'en servent pour renforcer leur domination coloniale et bâillonner les populations."

36. Il ressort clairement de ce passage que ce qui est visé n'est pas la notion même d'investissements étrangers dans les territoires indépendants mais la manière dont on a recours à ces investissements; c'est cet aspect de la question ainsi que les méthodes employées par les groupes financiers qui constituent une atteinte à l'Article 73 de la Charte et qui font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Pour l'instant, la seule tentative sérieuse pour réfuter le rapport a été la déclaration faite par le représentant du Royaume-Uni le 16 novembre (1720ème séance). Cependant, ce représentant serait le premier à reconnaître que quelles que soient les conséquences de sa déclaration en tant que dissertation idéologique, celle-ci n'a pas affecté le moins du monde la véracité des données ni la validité des conclusions du rapport. Par exemple, il est dit notamment au paragraphe 93:

"En Rhodésie du Sud, où les intérêts économiques étrangers ont joué un rôle sans précédent dans la mise en place d'un gouvernement représentatif de la minorité raciste, des colons étrangers exercent le pouvoir aux dépens de la population autochtone, et, de concert avec des intérêts économiques étrangers et autres, ont entrepris pour leur profit mutuel une exploitation systématique et impitoyable de la terre et des populations autochtones. Il en est résulté une interpénétration et une interdépendance étroites des intérêts des sociétés étrangères exerçant leurs activités dans le territoire et de ceux des colons européens."

37. Ces affirmations sont irréfutables, de même que la suivante, qui constitue le paragraphe 98:

"Au cours des quelques dernières années, dans presque tous les territoires étudiés par le Sous-Comité, et plus particulièrement en Afrique australe, les sociétés étrangères se sont enrichies, les bénéfices et les dividendes distribués à l'extérieur des territoires ont augmenté, mais le niveau de vie de la grande majorité des habitants n'en a pas bénéficié."

A-t-il dit quelque chose qui démente cela? N'est-il pas exact qu'en 1965 le salaire moyen des Africains en Rhodésie du Sud représentait le dixième de celui des Européens? N'est-il pas vrai qu'au Sud-Ouest africain la proportion est analogue? A propos du Sud-Ouest africain, on peut également citer le paragraphe 53 de l'appendice II, où l'on lit: "En 1966, un seul Africain dans le Territoire exploitait à son compte une mine de soude, dans le Kaokoveld". Dans le même contexte, on lit au paragraphe 56: "Si les autochtones résidant dans les quartiers indigènes peuvent être desservis par des entreprises blanches de la zone urbaine blanche, le gouvernement n'autorise pas la création d'entreprises blanches dans les quartiers autochtones." Ces exemples sont la preuve de la discrimination qui limite le développement économique des populations autochtones dans les territoires dépendants, limitant du même coup leur évolution politique.

38. Se référant à l'appendice III, qui concerne les territoires administrés par le Portugal, M. Coleridge-Taylor cite le paragraphe 18, où il est dit notamment que: "de nombreux Européens, aussi bien en Angola qu'au Mozambique, exploitent des terres ou en occupent de nouvelles sans titre légal, alors que les Africains attendent encore que leur droit de propriété soit officiellement reconnu". N'est-on pas fondé à conclure que les autorités coloniales privent la population autochtone de ses terres?

39. La triste vérité est que, lorsque les autorités des puissances administrantes passent des accords avec des entreprises privées pour l'exploitation des ressources agricoles et minérales de leurs territoires coloniaux, la dernière des considérations dont elles tiennent compte est le bien-être des habitants. Naturellement, ces entreprises ont l'obsession du profit et la réalisation de cet objectif égoïste suppose que certaines conditions sont remplies: main-d'œuvre à bon marché, terres disponibles, calme politique. La main-d'œuvre à bon marché est obtenue par l'adoption d'un système inique qui crée des différences entre les salaires des colons et ceux des autochtones, lesquels constituent en général la majorité de la population et la réserve de main-d'œuvre à bon marché. Pour être sûr de faire accepter ces bas salaires, on refuse aux autochtones d'autres possibilités de travail soit à la faveur d'une législation appropriée, soit, plus communément, grâce à des méthodes d'embauche qui constituent une discrimination flagrante. Pour pouvoir accorder les terres nécessaires aux sociétés, on adopte en général les lois qui privent les autochtones d'une grande partie de leur territoire. Invariablement, on exproprie les zones les plus fertiles afin d'ôter tout encouragement à ceux qui voudraient échapper au système de la main-d'œuvre à bon marché et retourner à la terre. Ainsi, soumis à une oppression économique d'une aussi grande ampleur, pourvus uniquement des connaissances nécessaires pour leur travail, privés de la possibilité de s'organiser ou réduits à une situation de subordination telle que toute velléité d'affirmer une volonté indépendante est mal vue, les autochtones finissent pas accepter passivement leur condition, ce qui permet d'obtenir le calme politique recherché. M. Coleridge-Taylor affirme qu'en laissant régner une telle situation les puissances administrantes trahissent la mission qui leur est confiée en vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte et notamment de l'alinéa a de cet article.

40. Au sujet des territoires devenus indépendants depuis peu, M. Coleridge-Taylor déclare que souvent, étant donné le caractère des accords conclus entre les puissances administrantes et les entreprises étrangères, la durée excessive des contrats de location des terres, les concessions fort généreuses faites auxdites entreprises, ces territoires se heurtent à de grandes difficultés après l'indépendance. Le nouveau pays indépendant doit s'attaquer au problème que pose la nécessité de réorganiser son économie pour que celle-ci profite à la population; il est alors gêné par une situation qu'il a héritée du passé et qui est accentuée par le fait qu'avant l'indépendance les sociétés ont exporté la plus grande partie de leurs bénéfices au lieu de les investir dans le territoire pour qu'ils servent au développement.

41. La délégation du Sierra Leone déclare qu'en considération de ce qui précède la Commission doit condamner les activités des intérêts économiques et autres dans les territoires non autonomes, ainsi que les puissances administrantes qui les encouragent et les favorisent. Il faut en même temps lancer un appel à toutes les puissances coloniales pour qu'elles mettent fin aux pratiques et aux injustices décrites dans le rapport, où qu'elles existent, afin que la décolonisation universelle soit couronnée de succès. Ce n'est qu'ainsi que la résolution 1514 (XV) pourra devenir superflue, ce qui est très certainement l'objectif de toutes les délégations.

42. M. MALECELA (République-Unie de Tanzanie) déclare que l'intervention du représentant du Sierra Leone est une réponse sincère à une autre déclaration formulée à la Commission la semaine précédente; étant donné l'intérêt que présente cette intervention, il demande qu'elle soit reproduite intégralement dans le compte rendu de la séance.

43. Le PRESIDENT déclare que, s'il n'y a pas d'objection, il en conclura que la Commission adopte la proposition du représentant de la Tanzanie.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

44. M. BISWAS (Pakistan), rappelant que la question à l'étude figure pour la première fois à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale, déclare que cette question revêt néanmoins une très grande importance, car l'examen des activités des intérêts économiques et autres dans les territoires coloniaux a révélé les causes véritables qui font que, presque sept ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration historique qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée, de nombreux territoires se trouvent encore soumis à la domination coloniale.

45. Les intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres continuent à jouer un rôle important dans l'économie des territoires coloniaux; les entreprises étrangères qui exercent leurs activités dans ces territoires s'interpénètrent et cherchent à empêcher que les populations autochtones participent à la vie économique et profitent des ressources de leur pays. Ces intérêts étrangers sont associés aux gouvernements coloniaux par le profit mutuel; les gouvernements octroient des concessions et des privilèges et offrent une main-d'œuvre à bon marché qui permet aux intérêts en question de réaliser des bénéfices énormes, en échange de quoi ils reçoivent une partie de ces bénéfices, qu'ils utilisent pour renforcer leur domination et les mesures de répression prises à l'encontre des populations.

46. La délégation pakistanaise est convaincue que les entreprises étrangères font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) en Afrique australe et dans d'autres territoires. Malgré des preuves écrasantes et contre l'opinion de la majorité des délégations qui prennent part aux débats, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a, dans son intervention, affirmé que les entreprises étrangères n'empêchent pas l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, mais au contraire contribuent à la mettre en œuvre en aidant au développement des pays intéressés. Pour renforcer son affirmation, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a évoqué le rôle joué par les investissements étrangers dans la croissance économique des pays en voie de développement. La délégation pakistanaise ne saurait souscrire à cette comparaison, qu'elle ne juge ni réaliste ni logique. La situation des pays indépendants, développés ou non, est totalement différente de celle des pays soumis à la domination coloniale; dans les premiers, les entreprises étrangères sont obligées d'exercer leurs activités conformément à l'intérêt national, alors qu'en Afrique australe, par exemple, elles agissent sans la moindre considération pour les intérêts des populations autochtones et avec l'unique but d'obtenir le plus de profit possible en exploitant impitoyablement les ressources humaines et matérielles.

47. Le Gouvernement du Pakistan est convaincu que, tant que dureront les activités de ces intérêts économiques étrangers, les peuples des territoires soumis à la domination coloniale se heurteront à toutes sortes d'obstacles dans l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Il appuiera donc toute mesure visant à éliminer ces obstacles et à assurer l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV).

48. M. WARSAMA (Somalie) fait observer que les Nations Unies n'ont commencé à s'occuper que récemment des activités des intérêts économiques étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux et que, par conséquent, elles n'ont pas eu le temps d'étudier la question de façon approfondie. Le Sous-Comité I du Comité spécial a examiné les activités des intérêts économiques dans un nombre limité de territoires coloniaux mais non celles des autres intérêts, d'ordre politique, stratégique et militaire, qui font tout autant obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée; aussi faudrait-il que les études qui seront entreprises à l'avenir embrassent ces catégories d'intérêts et qu'elles portent sur tous les territoires coloniaux.

49. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) contient toutefois suffisamment de données pour qu'il soit possible de se faire une idée des effets négatifs et même nuisibles des activités de ces intérêts économiques étrangers dans les territoires coloniaux. Le colonialisme est inséparable des monopoles étrangers; il est bien connu que les territoires ont été exploités et, dans bien des cas, administrés par les sociétés étrangères au nom des gouvernements européens avant que ceux-ci assument eux-mêmes, directement, la responsabilité de leur administration. Tous les grands monopoles ont acquis des terres qui leur ont été cédées dans le cadre du pernicieux système des "concessions" en vertu duquel les meilleures terres sont données aux colons blancs et aux monopoles étrangers. Au XIX^{ème} siècle, les sociétés étrangères n'étaient pas aussi bien organisées qu'à présent et leur activité avait pour seul but l'accumulation de richesses; la notion d'exploitation a changé depuis et on constate, à lire le rapport du Sous-Comité I, que tous les monopoles étrangers, notamment ceux qui ont des activités en Afrique australe, appartiennent à une même catégorie de personnes, que lie une idéologie politique commune qui se teinte de racisme. Ainsi a été favorisée l'application d'une politique concertée et systématique de mainmise sur les ressources économiques et humaines des territoires. Parmi les plus influentes des grandes sociétés, on peut citer l'Anglo American Corporation, l'Union Carbide Company, la Lonrho Ltd., la Selection Trust, Ltd., et la Gulf Oil Company. L'Anglo American Corporation, par exemple, règne, directement ou indirectement, sur la quasi-totalité de l'industrie minière de Rhodésie du Sud, laquelle absorbe 75 p. 100 des investissements consacrés à l'ensemble des industries. Ce monopole, qui contrôle l'industrie minière, détient des participations dans l'agriculture, dans l'industrie manufacturière, dans les banques et dans la finance. Par ailleurs, il contrôle les mines du Sud-Ouest africain dont les revenus constituent 50 p. 100 du produit intérieur brut du territoire. Par l'intermédiaire de ses filiales — Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd., Consolidated Mines of South Africa, De Beers Consolidated Mines, Marine Diamond Corporation et autres —, il exploite et contrôle les mines de diamants, qui sont la ressource la plus importante du territoire. Cette même société possède de vastes intérêts en Angola, au Mozambique et dans d'autres territoires coloniaux de la région, comme le montrent clairement les chiffres cités dans le rapport. De nombreux autres monopoles exploitent d'énormes territoires dans lesquels ils disposent parfois de forces de police, de services de sécurité, voire d'une armée privée. Ces sociétés, outre qu'elles exploitent les ressources de la région, aident par tous les moyens dont elles disposent les gouvernements coloniaux à opprimer et à asservir la population autochtone, en particulier dans les territoires sous domination portugaise.

50. Les chiffres que l'on trouve dans le rapport prouvent que les monopoles, grâce à un plan délibéré et systématique, sont en train d'essayer d'accroître leurs bénéfices dans un minimum de temps. C'est ainsi par exemple qu'en 1962 la Consolidated Diamond Mines of South West Africa, Ltd., qui exploite des mines dans le Sud-Ouest africain, a investi 10 400 000 rands, qui ont rapporté 120 millions de rands aux actionnaires et 200 millions de rands pour les caisses de la société. On estime que dans le cas des mines de fer de Cassinga, par exemple, les gisements seront épuisés en moins de 25 ans; les monopoles étrangers disposent des fonds et de la technique moderne nécessaires pour épuiser dans un minimum de temps toutes les ressources des territoires coloniaux dans lesquels ils sont installés.

51. M. Warsama veut espérer que les représentants des Etats Membres, en particulier ceux qui investissent des capitaux ou qui possèdent des intérêts dans les territoires coloniaux, feront prendre conscience à leurs ressortissants des conditions inhumaines dans lesquelles sont réalisés les bénéfices qu'ils tirent de leurs investissements. Il prie instamment ces représentants de faire le nécessaire pour amener leurs ressortissants à s'abstenir de toute action qui pourrait entraver l'accession des peuples coloniaux à l'indépendance. Avant de conclure, M. Warsama tient à exprimer la profonde inquiétude que lui inspire la situation qui règne dans les territoires coloniaux du fait de l'exploitation impitoyable et inhumaine dont ils sont victimes. Il appuie les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial et déclare que la Somalie est prête à coopérer avec toutes les délégations et tous les groupes en vue de l'adoption de mesures propres à assurer la décolonisation rapide des territoires coloniaux.

52. M. BOZOVIC (Yougoslavie) dit que l'intérêt particulier porté par l'Assemblée générale aux activités des intérêts économiques et autres dans les colonies découle de la responsabilité qui incombe à l'Organisation de contribuer à réaliser des conditions qui permettraient aux peuples encore sous domination coloniale d'exercer leur droit à la libre détermination. L'entrée et les activités des capitaux étrangers dans les pays indépendants sont régies par les lois de ces pays ainsi que par des accords entre les pays bénéficiaires et les investisseurs étrangers. Mais, dans les colonies, c'est l'administration coloniale qui détermine, en dernier ressort, les conditions d'entrée de ces capitaux et conclut les accords nécessaires, agissant comme si elle était la seule autorité habilitée à décider, dans la plupart des cas sans consulter les habitants du pays, ce qui peut favoriser le développement du territoire et de sa population dans des circonstances données.

53. M. Bozović fait observer qu'il est effectivement très difficile, les dernières colonies étant à des degrés divers de développement, de formuler des conclusions générales sur les activités des intérêts économiques étrangers. Ces activités sont étroitement liées aux tentatives faites par les puissances coloniales pour se maintenir dans ces territoires le plus longtemps possible, pour des raisons d'ordre économique et stratégique.

54. En ce qui concerne les investissements étrangers, M. Bozović dit qu'il s'agit de savoir non pas si ces territoires ont besoin d'investissements d'origine nationale ou étrangère, mais dans quelles conditions les intérêts économiques étrangers opèrent, et s'ils contribuent ou au contraire font obstacle à l'évolution des dernières colonies vers l'indépendance. En Rhodésie du Sud par exemple, les colons blancs, qui représentent 5 p. 100 de la population, ont absorbé 49,9 p. 100 du revenu national en 1964 et les Africains 32,8 p. 100 seulement, le reste allant aux entreprises étrangères. Une seule de ces entreprises a eu un niveau à peu près égal à la moitié de celui de toute la population africaine.

Il s'agit de savoir non pas si la population africaine vivrait dans de meilleures conditions s'il n'y avait pas d'investissements privés, mais quelle part du revenu national lui reviendrait si ces sociétés, en Afrique du Sud par exemple, exerçaient leurs activités que la plupart des pays indépendants ont pu obtenir dans leurs négociations avec elles, c'est-à-dire en tenant compte des intérêts de la plus grande partie de la population.

55. Par conséquent on doit se demander si les sociétés étrangères qui réalisent des gains élevés et opèrent dans des conditions favorables seraient disposées à accepter un changement de l'état de choses actuel.

56. Compte tenu de cette situation, l'ONU devrait s'efforcer d'obtenir une amélioration des conditions dans lesquelles les intérêts étrangers exercent leurs activités dans les colonies en général et dans le

Sud de l'Afrique en particulier, et de faire aligner ces conditions sur la pratique actuellement suivie dans les pays où la population bénéficie du droit de prendre elle-même des décisions.

57. Malgré certaines lacunes, le rapport du Comité spécial fournit suffisamment de données de base pour qu'il soit possible d'étudier ce problème plus avant. Il convient d'examiner tout particulièrement la situation des territoires de l'Afrique australe dont la population connaît des problèmes particuliers et doit lutter non seulement contre la domination des colons blancs, mais également contre des facteurs économiques et politiques puissants sans l'aide desquels la minorité blanche n'aurait d'autre possibilité de sauvegarder l'avenir qu'en s'efforçant d'établir des rapports d'égalité, de compréhension mutuelle et de coopération avec la majorité africaine.

La séance est levée à 17 h 45.

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique (suite) [A/6868 et Add.1]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (fin)

1. M. ALLIMADI (Ouganda) constate que malgré les principes énoncés dans la Charte des Nations Unies, la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et malgré les nombreuses résolutions qui ont été adoptées au sujet de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain le mal que les Nations Unies cherchent à combattre en Afrique australe, loin de disparaître, paraît s'étendre. L'absurde politique du Gouvernement portugais qui prétend que les Africains des territoires qui se trouvent sous sa domination sont des citoyens portugais et le maintien au pouvoir du régime illégal de Ian Smith sont deux exemples parmi d'autres de l'impuissance des Nations Unies à régler les problèmes de la décolonisation.

2. L'ONU a voulu faire de l'opinion internationale une arme pour l'élimination du mal qu'elle combat. On a cru que l'opinion mondiale, s'exprimant par les résolutions des Nations Unies, serait entendue par l'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal. Or, ces deux pays sont résolus à ne jamais céder à l'opinion mondiale, comme le montrent on ne peut plus clairement les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux sur la Rhodésie du Sud (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. III), le Sud-Ouest africain (ibid., chap. IV) et les territoires administrés par le Portugal (ibid., chap. V) et le récent rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la politique d'apartheid du Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine^{1/}. Il est temps que l'ONU mette au point une nouvelle stratégie pour briser la résistance du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud et faire triompher les principes inscrits dans la Charte.

3. Le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) montre l'ampleur des intérêts économiques que possèdent le Royaume-Uni, les États-Unis et quelques pays d'Europe occidentale dans les industries de Rhodésie du Sud, d'Afrique du Sud et des territoires portugais. Selon un groupement privé que préoccupe le sort des peuples d'Afrique australe, plus de 250 sociétés américaines ont des activités dans la seule Afrique du Sud. Il est absolument indispensable que les gouvernements dont les ressortissants exercent une grande influence économique et financière dans les territoires coloniaux tentent de convaincre ces sociétés de servir la cause de l'autodétermination, de l'égalité entre les hommes et de la justice.

4. La délégation ougandaise dénonce la tentative délibérée du représentant du Royaume-Uni visant à détourner l'attention de la Commission de la question à l'étude. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a voulu comparer les investissements étrangers en Afrique du Sud, en Rhodésie du Sud et dans d'autres pays coloniaux à des investissements étrangers dans des pays indépendants en voie de développement. Pareille tactique est déplorable à un moment où l'ONU demande un effort concerté et un réexamen des méthodes utilisées pour libérer les peuples des territoires dépendants des chaînes du colonialisme et de l'apartheid. L'Ouganda pour sa part a indiqué clairement que la nécessité d'attirer des capitaux étrangers ne lui fera jamais approuver les activités des investisseurs qui compromettent l'effort de décolonisation.

5. M. TEVOEDJRE (Dahomey) déclare que sa délégation a été indignée de voir le représentant du Royaume-Uni tenter d'induire la Commission en erreur en affirmant que les investissements économiques étrangers en Afrique australe sont toujours profitables aux populations autochtones. C'est un fait que le Royaume-Uni porte la plus grande part de responsabilité dans la situation déplorable qui règne en Afrique australe.

6. La découverte récente, signalée dans le New York Times du 20 septembre 1967, d'un important gisement de pétrole brut d'excellente qualité au large de la côte de l'enclave portugaise de Cabinda est une illustration de la manière dont les puissances occidentales exploitent économiquement les territoires coloniaux. Ce gisement occupe une position stratégique pour l'approvisionnement de l'Europe occidentale puisqu'il échappe aux différends entre les pays arabes et Israël et que le pétrole peut être transporté en Europe par une route beaucoup plus courte que celle qui contourne l'Afrique du Sud. On pense que ce gisement produira 150 000 barils de pétrole par jour, soit deux fois plus que n'en consomme le Portugal actuellement; ce pays n'aura donc plus à être tributaire des sources du Moyen-Orient. En outre, les autorités portugaises ont promis d'assurer la protection militaire des zones où des mesures spéciales de sécurité pourraient être nécessaires pour répondre à d'éventuelles attaques des combattants de la liberté angolais.

7. La délégation dahoméenne appuiera toute résolution qui condamnerait les activités des intérêts économiques étrangers en Afrique australe et dont le but serait de rendre aux populations autochtones la jouissance de leurs ressources naturelles.

8. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal), exerçant son droit de réponse, déclare que sa délégation exprime au sujet de la question à l'examen les mêmes réserves que celles qu'elle a exprimées au sujet du point 66 (1708ème séance). Elle tient à protester contre le libellé du point en discussion, qu'elle juge inapproprié en ce qui concerne les territoires portugais.

9. Le débat actuel semble avoir pour objet l'ouverture d'un nouveau front dans le conflit idéologique habituel qui, du domaine politique, gagne le domaine économique. Comme dans tous les conflits, la prudence s'impose, de crainte qu'un faux pas au départ dégénère en faute grave, et le problème doit être examiné sans passion et avec réalisme.

10. Tel que le point de l'ordre du jour est libellé, il y a, au départ de la discussion, un parti pris contre les investissements non locaux effectués dans les territoires dits non autonomes. Il importe de voir ce parti pris et de le corriger.

11. Il n'est pas douteux que tout doit être fait pour promouvoir le développement économique des territoires dits non autonomes, qu'il ne peut y avoir de développement économique sans investissement et que l'encouragement aux investissements de toutes sources satisfaisantes est une attitude libérale, tant sur le plan politique que sur le plan économique. La délégation portugaise soutient que pour promouvoir le développement économique d'un territoire, qu'il soit autonome ou non, le meilleur moyen qu'on ait encore trouvé consiste à encourager les investissements de toutes origines qui ne sont pas incompatibles avec les intérêts de ces territoires et de leurs peuples. Des abus sont toujours possibles, bien entendu, et il faut les combattre, mais cela n'enlève rien au fait que les investissements sont nécessaires. Lorsqu'il n'est pas possible de trouver des capitaux sur place, la seule solution est d'en rechercher à l'extérieur. Il faut par conséquent veiller à ce que la politique d'investissements soit subordonnée aux intérêts du développement économique des territoires et à ce que ces investissements ne deviennent pas un moyen pouvant être utilisé pour exercer une influence politique. Cela vaut pour tous les investissements étrangers, et non pas seulement pour ceux qui sont faits dans les territoires dits non autonomes.

12. Malheureusement, la plupart des représentants qui ont participé à la discussion sont partis du point de vue que les investissements étrangers sont indésirables. Le débat a ainsi pris un tour artificiel, sans rapport avec la réalité. La délégation portugaise serait portée à croire que, si l'on a tant insisté sur le danger des abus auxquels peuvent donner lieu les investissements étrangers, ce n'est pas sans arrière-pensées, et non pas parce qu'il y a une part de vérité dans les accusations qui ont été lancées.

13. Certains investisseurs ont apparemment l'impression qu'il ne leur est pas permis d'investir dans les territoires dits non autonomes. Peut-être faut-il en chercher la raison dans le fait qu'en général ils cherchent à investir leur idéologie en même temps que leurs capitaux. Il n'y a rien de surprenant dès lors à ce qu'on préfère des investissements qui ont un caractère neutre, politiquement et idéologiquement, et dont le seul objet est de concourir au développement économique des territoires. Il n'est que légitime que les investisseurs tirent des bénéfices raisonnables de leurs investissements, mais il faut reconnaître que la richesse qu'ils contribuent à produire enrichit le patrimoine des territoires et de leur population.

14. Comme la délégation portugaise l'a fait observer à la 1716ème séance, les investissements du Portugal métropolitain dans ses provinces d'outre-mer ne peuvent pas être considérés comme des investissements étrangers, puisqu'il s'agit de la même entité souveraine. Le Portugal fait bon accueil aux investissements étrangers dans ses provinces d'outre-mer, car il se soucie de promouvoir l'expansion économique de ces provinces; or, on sait qu'une bonne politique d'investissements est le moyen universellement admis d'accélérer le développement économique. La politique et la législation portugaises en matière d'investissements sont les mêmes pour la métropole et pour les provinces d'outre-mer; il n'est accordé aux étrangers aucun droit ni privilège qui ne soit reconnu aux ressortissants portugais, c'est-à-dire tous ceux qui sont nés dans des territoires portugais et à leurs descendants qui ont conservé leur nationalité, quelle que soit leur race ou leur couleur. Il est donc faux de dire que les étrangers qui investissent des capitaux dans les territoires portugais peuvent le faire au détriment de la population locale.

15. On a déclaré, dans une accusation de portée générale, que les investissements étrangers dans les territoires portugais sont exonérés d'impôts. Il y a lieu de faire observer que les investissements ayant essentiellement pour but de développer l'économie locale, tous les pays accordent normalement certaines facilités aux nouvelles entreprises, au début et pour de brèves périodes. On voit mal comment les deux accusations contradictoires qui ont été formulées, à savoir que les investisseurs étrangers ne versent presque rien au Gouvernement portugais et que les investisseurs étrangers aident le Gouvernement portugais à mener ses prétendues guerres en Afrique, pourraient être vraies l'une et l'autre.

16. M. de Miranda a déjà réfuté dans la déclaration qu'il a faite à la 1716ème séance les allégations qui ont été formulées au sujet de la politique portugaise en matière de main-d'œuvre. Ces allégations, en particulier celles qui ont trait à l'émigration de la main-d'œuvre, ont été démenties également par la mission d'enquête de l'Organisation internationale du Travail. M. de Miranda souligne que l'émigration de la main-d'œuvre est entièrement volontaire; elle constitue un phénomène qui n'est pas propre aux provinces portugaises et qu'on retrouve aussi bien dans d'autres pays d'Afrique de la région, et la protection sociale des travailleurs qui partent est garantie par des accords bilatéraux qui sont strictement observés. Le rapport de l'OIT^{2/} réfute également les allégations contenues dans le rapport du Sous-Comité I qui ont été reprises par plusieurs représentants au sujet de la situation intérieure de la main-d'œuvre dans les provinces portugaises. Il n'y a aucune discrimination entre un ressortissant portugais et un autre, nulle part sur le territoire portugais. M. de Miranda rejette également les allégations qui ont été formulées au sujet du régime foncier; les droits de la population locale à cet égard sont garantis comme il convient par des lois qui sont strictement appliquées.

17. La délégation portugaise rejette le rapport du Sous-Comité I (A/6868/Add.1) et toutes les allégations qui se fondent sur lui. Le rapport ne fait qu'accumuler des allégations de manière à arriver à une conclusion toute faite sans tenir le moindre compte des réalités politiques, économiques et sociales de la vie portugaise.

18. M. ISSAKA (Togo), qui prend la parole en vertu du droit de réponse, déclare que la complicité entre les représentants du Portugal d'une part et du Royaume-Uni d'autre part est évidente; tous les deux ont parlé de questions qui ne sont pas à l'ordre du jour. Les investissements étrangers en Angola, au Mozambique et en Guinée dite portugaise ne sont pas destinés à favoriser le développement économique des territoires pour le bien de la population. Il est clair que le Portugal n'accordera pas l'indépendance à ces territoires et ne permettra pas à leurs populations de prendre elles-mêmes les décisions touchant les investissements, car le Portugal ne retirerait alors plus aucun profit des territoires.

19. M. GATUGUTA (Kenya), répondant à l'affirmation du représentant du Portugal selon laquelle les investissements étrangers dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal sont conformes aux intérêts de tous les habitants, demande combien de médecins, d'ingénieurs et d'avocats africains a donné une population d'environ 13 millions en 400 ans de domination portugaise. De l'impossibilité de citer un chiffre satisfaisant, il faut conclure que le Portugal n'a fait qu'exploiter les populations africaines. M. Gatuguta demande également combien, parmi les firmes industrielles et commerciales installées dans les territoires, sont aux mains des Africains, combien d'Africains y occupent des postes de cadres supérieurs et où vont les bénéfices de ces entreprises. Le représentant du Portugal a dit qu'il n'y avait pas de discrimination entre ressortissants portugais; pourtant la politique d'assimilation établit une discrimination à l'encontre de l'immense majorité des habitants de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée dite portugaise qui n'ont pas atteint le niveau fixé par le Portugal pour les assimilados. Les investissements économiques étrangers ne sont souhaitables que dans les pays où la population exerce sur eux son contrôle. Dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal, les investissements étrangers ne profitent qu'à une petite clique d'opresseurs, comme le montre le rapport du Comité spécial.

20. M. Gatuguta rejette catégoriquement les allégations du représentant du Portugal et ses efforts pour convaincre la Commission que les intérêts économiques étrangers profitent à la population africaine.

21. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal), répondant au représentant du Kenya, déclare que les investissements étrangers sont effectivement conformes aux intérêts des populations des provinces portugaises. Le Portugal se préoccupe avant tout d'assurer le bien-être et le progrès de toutes les populations, sans discrimination fondée sur la race ou la couleur. M. de Miranda ne peut fournir de statistiques sur le nombre d'Africains qui sont médecins, ingénieurs ou avocats dans les provinces car il n'existe aucune statistique fondée sur la race ou la couleur; ce genre de statistique ne servirait qu'à favoriser le racisme. Pourtant, M. de Miranda peut assurer au représentant du Kenya que les provinces africaines fournissent depuis longtemps des membres de toutes les professions libérales. Il y a plus d'un siècle, le Portugal a ouvert une école de médecine à Luanda, mais il a dû la fermer faute d'étudiants. Depuis des siècles, des étudiants de toutes les provinces d'outre-mer font des études dans les universités de la métropole et il y a maintenant des universités au Mozambique et en Angola.

22. Quant aux assimilados, bien des représentants semblent en avoir une idée fausse. A l'heure actuelle, toutes les personnes nées en territoire portugais sont citoyens portugais et jouissent du même statut. Le système de l'assimilation a été introduit pendant une courte période à titre d'expérience pour essayer de favoriser le progrès social parmi les populations locales des provinces d'outre-mer. Selon ce système, ceux qui veulent conserver le mode de vie tribal et vivre selon leurs propres lois peuvent le faire, alors que d'autres, qui remplissent certaines conditions, peuvent opter pour la citoyenneté et se soumettre au droit civil du pays. Il n'entre aucune discrimination dans ce système et personne n'est exclu de la citoyenneté. Nombreux sont ceux qui auraient pu obtenir la citoyenneté pleine et entière dans le cadre de ce système, mais qui ont préféré ne pas le faire car, en optant pour le régime tribal, ils pouvaient bénéficier de certains privilèges et de certaines mesures de protection.

23. M. de Miranda s'inscrit en faux contre l'opinion selon laquelle les investissements étrangers ne devraient être possibles que dans les pays indépendants. Il faut favoriser le développement économique dans les territoires que la Commission considère comme non autonomes. Le Portugal estime qu'il est de son devoir de favoriser le développement économique de ses provinces par tous les moyens disponibles; c'est pourquoi il encourage les investissements d'où qu'ils viennent, pourvu qu'ils ne soient assortis d'aucune condition et qu'ils soient de nature à faciliter le développement économique des provinces et, par conséquent, de la population.

24. M. ALWAN (Irak) rejette la notion d'assimilation. Ce n'est pas un bien grand honneur pour un Africain d'être étiqueté Portugais.

25. M. Alwan déplore l'attitude négative du représentant du Portugal, qui rejette dans sa totalité le rapport du Sous-Comité I. Cette attitude n'est ni juste ni rationnelle et elle est inacceptable pour la majorité des délégations.

26. M. ISSAKA (Togo) déclare qu'à son avis, pour un territoire dépendant, le sous-développement est préférable au développement lorsque celui-ci vise à procurer des bénéfices à autrui. Les ressources naturelles des territoires administrés par le Portugal ne devraient pas être mises en valeur tant que les territoires n'ont pas obtenu l'autonomie.

27. En ce qui concerne l'école de médecine de Luanda, dont a parlé le représentant du Portugal, M. Issaka fait observer qu'il faut créer des écoles primaires avant de fonder des universités; il est évident que dans le cas contraire celles-ci n'auront pas d'étudiants.

28. M. TEVOEDJRE (Dahomey) déclare que le fait de ne pas avoir de statistiques prouve que le Portugal est un pays intellectuellement sous-développé. Il demande au représentant du Portugal de citer une seule réalisation de son gouvernement dans l'enclave qu'il a occupée pendant des siècles et jusqu'à ces dernières années en territoire dahoméen.

29. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal) fait observer au représentant du Dahomey qu'il a dit que le Portugal n'avait pas de statistiques fondées sur la race ou la couleur, et non qu'il n'avait pas de statistiques du tout. La question que vient de poser le représentant du Dahomey à propos de l'enclave de Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Ouidah est sans portée; le représentant du Dahomey ne peut en effet ignorer que cette enclave n'était qu'un fort avec quelques centaines de mètres carrés de terrain et aucun habitant sauf le personnel du fort.

La séance est levée à 12 h 25.

POINT 24 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le Sud de l'Afrique (suite*) [A/6868 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.875]

EXAMEN DU PROJET DE RESOLUTION A/C.4/L.875

10. M. FALL (Sénégal), avant de présenter le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875, signale que le nom de l'Indonésie a été omis dans la liste des auteurs et annonce que les délégations de l'Algérie et de la Somalie ont exprimé le vœu de figurer parmi les auteurs du texte.

11. M. Fall fait observer que le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875 trouve naturellement sa place dans la série des résolutions de la Quatrième Commission qui ont été approuvées par l'Assemblée générale. Comme ces autres résolutions, en effet, il traduit une volonté affirmée d'apporter une contribution positive à la lutte qui est menée à l'heure actuelle pour mettre fin à l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme. Si on le considère dans cette perspective, on ne peut manquer de convenir que ce texte est bien le minimum que l'on puisse faire à l'issue d'une discussion comme celle qui a été consacrée à la question considérée.

12. M. Fall tient à faire observer que, malgré le fait que le rapport du Comité spécial sur la question (A/6868 et Add.1) ait été accueilli favorablement par la majorité des membres, les auteurs du projet de résolution ont évité, par esprit de compromis, de reprendre les termes mêmes employés au cours des débats par les représentants. Le préambule rappelle la contribution signalée du pétitionnaire entendu sur le point à l'étude ainsi que les résolutions pertinentes qui ont été votées et il évoque l'engagement implicite pris par les puissances administrantes elles-mêmes de poursuivre une politique de progrès et de justice dans les territoires occupés. On est en effet forcé de constater que ces puissances ont failli à leur engagement car, soit de propos délibéré soit sous la pression de groupes financiers internationaux, elles ont permis que se développent des activités économiques qui, manifestement, font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. C'est cette situation que le projet de résolution veut condamner, et c'est elle qu'il entend faire cesser en préconisant certaines mesures.

13. Après avoir pris note du rapport du Comité spécial, les auteurs réaffirment, au paragraphe 2 du dispositif, le droit inaliénable des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, mais surtout, en affirmant que les peuples des territoires ne jouiront d'une souveraineté réelle que le jour où ils disposeront totalement de leurs ressources, ils mettent l'accent, et en cela réside l'originalité du texte, sur l'indépendance économique. En faisant passer les intérêts économiques ou financiers de leurs ressortissants ou des ressortissants d'autres pays avant ceux des autochtones, les puissances coloniales violent les obligations qui leur incombent en vertu des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte et font obstacle à l'application intégrale et rapide de la résolution 1514 (XV); c'est ce que met en lumière le paragraphe 3. Le paragraphe 4 condamne les intérêts étrangers qui, avec la protection ou la collaboration de quelques puissances, contribuent, par l'exploitation à laquelle ils se livrent dans les pays coloniaux, à perpétuer la domination coloniale. Le paragraphe 5 déplore la politique des puissances coloniales qui favorise l'exploitation et tolère et encourage l'injustice et les pratiques discriminatoires.

14. Au paragraphe 6, les Etats intéressés sont invités à s'acquitter de l'obligation fondamentale de préserver les intérêts des autochtones en luttant contre tous les abus qu'ils constatent, tant dans l'octroi des concessions que dans les autorisations d'investir ou dans la mise en valeur des terres ou exploitations concédées. Le paragraphe 7 est un appel adressé aux puissances coloniales pour leur demander d'interdire toute pratique pouvant donner lieu à des injustices. Dans le même ordre d'idées, les auteurs, au paragraphe 8, exhortent les puissances coloniales à réexaminer tous les privilèges et concessions accordés aux intérêts étrangers, au mépris flagrant des propriétaires authentiques des ressources confisquées. C'est là une mesure qui ne devrait susciter aucune réserve.

15. Le paragraphe 9 est consacré au Sud-Ouest africain et le paragraphe 10, outre qu'il dénonce un vol, la dépossession des populations autochtones, exige que soient restituées à celles-ci toutes les terres dont elles ont été expropriées. Le paragraphe 11 engage tous les Etats intéressés à coopérer pleinement avec l'ONU pour garantir aux peuples colonisés l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance ainsi que la totale jouissance de leurs ressources naturelles.

16. Les paragraphes 12 et 13 traduisent le désir des auteurs de voir poursuivre l'étude du problème afin que soit menée à bonne fin la mission de la Quatrième Commission.

17. M. Fall signale que, dans les textes du projet de résolution autres que le français, on a omis la mention du Chapitre XII de la Charte, au paragraphe 3 du dispositif. Au paragraphe 5 du dispositif du texte français, il faudrait supprimer le mot "placés", à la deuxième ligne.

18. M. Fall pense que le ton volontairement modéré du texte, sa sobriété et son réalisme même sont des éléments qui militent en sa faveur et qui permettent d'espérer que la Commission lui donnera son appui à une large majorité.

19. M. MARTINEZ (Argentine) tient à son tour à présenter le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875 au nom de son pays comme au nom de la Barbade, du Chili, de la Colombie, de l'Equateur, du Guatemala, de la Jamaïque, du Mexique, de Trinité-et-Tobago et du Venezuela. Il est heureux de noter que, pour la première fois, le groupe afro-asiatique et le groupe latino-américain ont pu mettre en commun leurs efforts pour élaborer un texte qui servira de point de départ à l'action en faveur du processus de décolonisation économique. C'est là un événement dont tous les Etats Membres, et non pas seulement les pays d'Amérique latine, doivent se réjouir. La délégation argentine est particulièrement heureuse que les négociations auxquelles a donné lieu la mise au point de ce texte se soient déroulées dans un esprit de compréhension et de solidarité.

20. Le projet de résolution veut avant tout exposer de façon explicite certains des principes énoncés aux Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte et dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale; c'est ce que fait le préambule.

21. Les paragraphes 2, 3, 4 et 5 du dispositif définissent l'attitude de la communauté internationale à l'égard des Etats ou groupes d'intérêts qui prétendent ignorer le caractère inexorable d'un processus que tous les Membres des Nations Unies se sont engagés à favoriser. Ils définissent également les limites dans lesquelles les groupes d'intérêts peuvent investir des capitaux dans les territoires coloniaux; ces investissements doivent contribuer au développement des territoires en vue de la création d'économies nationales fortes.

22. Les paragraphes 6 et 7 du dispositif soulignent les aspects humanitaires dont doit tenir compte toute exploitation économique, en particulier dans les territoires coloniaux. A cet égard, doit être condamnée toute pratique discriminatoire et toute pratique tendant à déposséder les peuples de leurs richesses. Quant à l'étude que devait faire le Comité spécial, aux termes du paragraphe 12 du dispositif, elle devrait se fonder sur une analyse des pratiques qui ont cours dans les territoires coloniaux en matière d'exploitation des ressources naturelles et de rémunération de la main-d'œuvre autochtone. Cette étude devrait également porter sur les pratiques des groupes d'intérêts qui mettent à profit la situation coloniale au détriment des populations autochtones et, enfin, déterminer, à partir de données objectives, s'il y a un rapport entre ces phénomènes et ceux qui font obstacle au processus de décolonisation. Une étude qui serait effectuée sur de telles bases serait inattaquable et personne ne pourrait l'accuser d'être inspirée par des préjugés idéologiques. Il ne fait pas de doute que l'Organisation possède les capacités techniques et l'expérience nécessaire pour s'acquitter de ce travail comme il convient.

23. Il est certain que, si les auteurs, malgré leur grand nombre, sont arrivés à se mettre d'accord sur le texte qu'ils présentent à la Commission, c'est parce qu'ils étaient tous convaincus de la nécessité d'exposer clairement les principes fondamentaux sur lesquels doit se fonder l'action des puissances administrantes et des intérêts économiques, laquelle doit avoir pour objet de créer les conditions économiques qui feront que l'indépendance pourra être viable. Ils ont jugé nécessaire de dire clairement aux puissances administrantes que les principes de la décolonisation proclamés dans la résolution 1514 (XV) doivent être placés au-dessus des intérêts économiques et que ceux-ci doivent être subordonnés aux principes de l'indépendance et de l'intégrité territoriale des pays. M. Martinez fait observer que, soucieux avant tout d'exprimer clairement les objectifs fondamentaux qu'ils voulaient donner à leur action, les auteurs ont oublié de recommander au Secrétariat d'assurer la plus grande publicité possible au projet de résolution; mais cette omission sera sans importance si le Comité spécial effectue de la façon dont l'a suggéré M. Martinez l'étude du problème, car alors cette étude ferait tellement autorité qu'elle deviendrait un ouvrage de référence international indispensable.

24. M. RODRIGUEZ ASTIAZARAIN (Cuba), soulevant une question d'ordre, tient à faire observer que la délégation cubaine n'a à aucun moment été consultée lors de l'élaboration du projet de résolution dont est saisie la Commission (A/C.4/L.875); Cuba se trouve donc être victime de discrimination de la part du groupe latino-américain.

25. La délégation cubaine se réserve le droit de prendre la parole ultérieurement pour exposer son point de vue.

26. Le PRESIDENT espère que la Commission pourra, à une séance prochaine, se prononcer sur le projet de résolution qui vient de lui être présenté.

EXAMEN DU PROJET DE RESOLUTION

A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1 (suite)

53. Le PRESIDENT appelle l'attention de la Commission sur le projet de résolution révisé qui figure dans le document A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1.

54. M. MALECELA (République-Unie de Tanzanie) précise que la version révisée du projet de résolution, qui comprend une liste des auteurs plus importante, ne comporte que de très légères modifications apportées par les auteurs au texte initial. Aussi le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie souhaiterait-il que la Commission considère qu'elle a été saisie dès le début du projet de résolution sous sa forme révisée (A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1).

55. M. BERRO (Uruguay) déclare que son pays voudrait figurer parmi les auteurs du projet de résolution révisé, qui confirme les dispositions de la résolution 2189 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale.

56. Précisant la position de son pays au sujet de la question à l'étude, M. Berro tient à redire que l'Uruguay condamne les intérêts économiques étrangers qui font obstacle au processus normal de décolonisation mais qu'il entend se garder de toute généralisation qui pourrait donner lieu à des interprétations erronées du sens et de la portée des rapports et résolutions existant en la matière.

57. Selon M. Berro, s'il convient de condamner sans réserve les activités étrangères qui tendent à perpétuer le colonialisme, de même qu'il faut condamner tout facteur politique, racial ou autre qui fait obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV), il faut en revanche accueillir avec faveur toute activité financière — et notamment les investissements de capitaux — destinée à améliorer les conditions économiques et sociales existantes, qu'il s'agisse de territoires coloniaux ou d'Etats indépendants, et cela en vertu même des principes dont s'inspire l'action des Nations Unies en vue d'accélérer le progrès des pays peu développés ou en voie de développement.

*Reprise des débats de la 1730ème séance.

Ces principes, qui sont ceux de la coopération économique internationale, l'ONU essaie d'en accélérer la mise au point et l'adoption comme le montrent les résolutions 1942 (XVIII), 1995 (XIX) et 2085 (XX), qui traitent des mesures à adopter pour parvenir à un accord total sur les principes qui doivent régir les relations commerciales internationales et les politiques commerciales propres à assurer le développement.

58. Il faut à tout prix éviter d'assimiler les intérêts économiques étrangers qui retardent l'indépendance des peuples avec les investissements de capitaux internationaux qui sont nécessaires, dans le cadre de la coopération économique internationale, pour as-surer le développement économique des Etats, comme celui des territoires coloniaux, et le bien-être des populations. La volonté de lutter contre les activités illicites des intérêts étrangers qui freinent le processus de la décolonisation ne doit pas faire oublier le caractère légitime et salubre des investissements en général.

59. Le PRESIDENT annonce que les représentants du Maroc, du Nicaragua et de la République Dominicaine, de même que le représentant de l'Uruguay, souhaitent que le nom de leur pays soit ajouté à la liste des auteurs du projet de résolution révisé (A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1/Add.1).

La séance est levée à 13 h 5.

EXAMEN DU PROJET DE RESOLUTION A/C.4/L.875/REV.1 ET REV.1/ADD.1 ET 2 (fin)

1. M. DE LA ROSA (Philippines) dit que, depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, en décembre 1960, et même depuis l'adoption de la Charte, les Nations Unies ont consacré une grande partie de leurs efforts à aider les peuples colonisés à exercer leur droit à l'autodétermination et à accéder à l'indépendance. Bien que cette entreprise ait été couronnée d'un certain succès, des millions de personnes et de nombreux territoires sont toujours sous la domination coloniale.

2. Dans son œuvre de décolonisation, l'ONU a constamment veillé à mettre en œuvre tous les moyens possibles prévus dans la Charte pour accélérer l'évolution. L'inscription à l'ordre du jour de la question actuellement à l'examen et son étude sont un progrès important dans cette direction. Comme les intérêts économiques ont été l'une des raisons principales qui ont conduit à la création de colonies, il convient de procéder à un examen approfondi de leurs activités dans les territoires dépendants en vue de déterminer si ces intérêts empêchent l'accession desdits territoires à l'indépendance.

3. La délégation philippine juge entièrement opportun le projet de résolution à l'étude. Ce texte est assez modéré dans la forme et indique la voie que les puissances administrantes et les intérêts économiques intéressés doivent suivre pour accélérer et non entraver l'exercice de la libre détermination et l'accession à l'indépendance. M. De La Rosa approuve les objectifs du projet de résolution et les appuie entièrement. Mais il précise qu'en disant cela il ne met aucune-ment en parallèle la situation en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal, d'une part, et la situation générale dans les autres territoires coloniaux, d'autre part. En Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal, la politique des autorités de fait est délibérément et ouvertement dirigée contre l'exercice par les populations intéressées du droit de libre détermination et leur accession à l'indépendance; la délégation philippine approuve entièrement les conclusions et recommandations du Sous-Comité I (voir A/6868/Add.1, par. 81 à 133) concernant ces territoires. Dans les autres territoires coloniaux, la situation est différente en ce qui concerne la politique des puissances administrantes. Cela ne signifie pas, toutefois, que les intérêts économiques opérant dans ces territoires ne font rien, sciemment ou non, qui les empêche d'accéder à l'indépendance. La délégation philippine insiste donc auprès des puissances administrantes et des intérêts économiques opérant dans ces territoires pour qu'elles s'inspirent des dispositions du projet de résolution dont la Commission est saisie.

4. M. ROGERS (Australie) dit que, lorsque le rapport du Sous-Comité I a été présenté au Comité spécial, la délégation australienne a critiqué la manière dont il avait été établi et dont il exposait la situation dans les territoires sous administration australienne. Ce rapport ne constitue pas une étude des problèmes que pose le développement économique dans les territoires dépendants ni du rôle que les investisseurs étrangers jouent à cet égard, il n'est qu'un répertoire détaillé des sociétés qui, dit-on, exerceraient des activités contraires aux intérêts des habitants autochtones des territoires. Les auteurs du rapport prétendent également qu'il y a un lien étroit entre les intérêts économiques étrangers et les puissances qui administrent les divers territoires. Le Sous-Comité n'a pas tiré tout le profit possible de l'expérience et de la documentation du Secrétariat et n'a pas consacré assez de temps à l'étude approfondie de cette question complexe.

5. Une des critiques que la délégation australienne a faites au Comité spécial est que le rapport tient peu compte du fait que les conditions économiques sont différentes dans chaque territoire — répartition des ressources naturelles, structure de l'économie, investissements de la Puissance administrante et des intérêts privés étrangers. Le problème du développement économique des territoires dépendants est un problème difficile. Tous les territoires coloniaux ont besoin des capitaux et des techniques sans lesquels il ne peut y avoir de progrès économique. De l'avis de la délégation australienne, il est regrettable que le Sous-Comité I n'ait pas consacré une plus grande attention aux problèmes économiques fondamentaux. C'est seulement après avoir examiné de près la situation des territoires dépendants qu'on peut déterminer si les activités économiques qui y ont lieu sont préjudiciables aux intérêts de leurs habitants autochtones.

6. La délégation australienne estime qu'on aurait dû tenter d'indiquer les critères permettant de juger de la valeur des investissements économiques étrangers. Il est de fait que les sources nécessaires de capitaux n'existent pas dans la plupart des pays coloniaux et que ces capitaux doivent venir de l'extérieur. Les organisations internationales et la Puissance administrante intéressée ne peuvent fournir que des fonds limités. Or, la demande de capitaux dans le monde est forte et bien des territoires dépendants n'offrent pas de perspectives intéressantes aux investisseurs privés. Les auteurs du rapport ne font aucun effort pour établir une distinction entre les investissements étrangers qui servent les intérêts des habitants autochtones et ceux qui leur sont plus nettement préjudiciables. M. Rogers reconnaît que la tâche n'est peut-être pas facile, mais il n'en reste pas moins que l'on n'a pas essayé de l'aborder.

7. L'Australie a notamment pour objectif, dans les territoires qu'elle administre, de promouvoir le développement économique de manière à conduire les habitants au stade de la libre détermination. Or, le rapport reste muet sur les efforts qu'elle déploie pour améliorer la situation des peuples de ces territoires ou sur les investissements que le Gouvernement australien fait dans les territoires dans l'intérêt des autochtones. Il ne signale pas non plus l'importante subvention que l'Australie accordera aux territoires pendant l'année en cours.

8. La délégation australienne apprécie les efforts accomplis par les auteurs du projet de résolution pour améliorer certaines des conclusions et recommandations figurant dans le rapport. Mais elle n'est pas en mesure d'approuver le paragraphe 1 du dispositif car, à son avis, le rapport du Comité spécial dresse un tableau inexact et tendancieux de la situation dans les territoires dépendants. La délégation australienne considère aussi que les autres paragraphes du projet de résolution sont rédigés d'une manière ambiguë. Certains, tel le paragraphe 3, ne peuvent pas et ne doivent pas être interprétés comme visant les territoires administrés par l'Australie. Il eût été préférable de les libeller en termes moins généraux.

9. Le projet de résolution se fondant en grande partie sur le rapport du Comité spécial, qu'elle n'accepte pas, la délégation australienne s'abstiendra lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution. M. Rogers demande un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 1 du dispositif.

10. M. GARCIA (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) dit que la délégation des Etats-Unis a déjà exprimé au Comité spécial sa consternation devant le caractère tendancieux, doctrinaire et polémique du rapport que la Commission est invitée à approuver aux termes du paragraphe 1 du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Add.1 et 2. Dans les conclusions de ce rapport, fondées sur une documentation fragmentaire et une discussion brève et partielle, on affirme audacieusement que l'activité économique étrangère est partout un obstacle à la libre détermination ou porte atteinte aux intérêts des populations autochtones. Les Etats-Unis ne peuvent pas appuyer une résolution qui entérine un rapport où les faits sont aussi peu respectés et qui n'est qu'un assaut de propagande mal déguisé. M. Garcia note en passant que les vues exprimées à ce sujet pas plusieurs représentants à la Commission diffèrent quelque peu des déclarations que les représentants de ces mêmes pays font à l'occasion de discussions plus sérieuses et moins doctrinaires sur le rôle des investissements étrangers dans le développement économique.

11. La délégation des Etats-Unis formule de grandes réserves en ce qui concerne les passages du projet de résolution qui demandent aux Etats Membres d'assumer et d'exercer des obligations qui, en vertu des dispositions de la Charte, sont celles des puissances administrantes intéressées. D'autres passages du projet de résolution, notamment les paragraphes 4, 9, 10, 11 et 12 du dispositif, sont rédigés dans des termes trop imprécis et généraux.

12. La délégation des Etats-Unis ne se propose pas de défendre ou de louer les activités des intérêts économiques étrangers partout et toujours. Ces activités, tant dans les territoires non autonomes que dans les Etats indépendants, se passent généralement de commentaires. La délégation des Etats-Unis reconnaît qu'elles sont parfois déplorables, en partie à cause de la politique de certains pays, et ne servent les intérêts à long terme ni de la Puissance administrante, ni des habitants des territoires, ni même des sociétés qui s'y livrent. On aurait pu améliorer cette situation, qui est le but recherché, en examinant en connaissance de cause, d'une manière approfondie et constructive, et en présentant sans équivoque toutes les données pertinentes. Or, dans le rapport que la Commission est invitée à approuver, cela n'a pas été fait. C'est pourquoi la délégation des Etats-Unis s'abstiendra lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution et votera contre le paragraphe 1 du dispositif.

13. M. DIARRA (Guinée) se félicite de ce que pour la première fois un point spécifique sur les intérêts économiques étrangers a fait l'objet d'une étude détaillée par un organe des Nations Unies. Le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6868 et Add.1) a permis aux membres de mieux cerner les réalités et de situer les responsabilités de ceux qui, directement ou indirectement, font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, dans les territoires sous domination portugaise et dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous la domination coloniale.

14. Le rapport du Comité spécial met les membres en mesure de disséquer les structures des capitaux étrangers qui constituent un élément de consolidation du pouvoir politique, militaire et économique des racistes d'Afrique du Sud, des rebelles de la Rhodésie du Sud et des colonialistes du Portugal. Un simple coup d'œil jeté sur les statistiques contenues dans le rapport montre que ce sont les mêmes firmes et les mêmes groupes financiers que l'on retrouve en Angola, au Mozambique, en Rhodésie du Sud, dans le Sud-Ouest africain et en Afrique du Sud. La solidarité existant entre les milieux financiers et les puissances colonialistes ne résulte pas uniquement du désir de réaliser un profit maximum mais aussi des mêmes sentiments racistes qui les animent. C'est là l'explication de l'afflux toujours croissant des capitaux en direction de ces territoires, en dépit du climat d'insécurité que le colonialisme lui-même crée pour les capitaux en raison de la lutte que les populations autochtones des territoires occupés mènent pour la reconquête de leur indépendance et de leur dignité. Il est vrai que les monopoles étrangers, aveuglés par les super profits qu'ils amassent, sont incapables de mettre au point une politique saine à longue échéance et ne sont soucieux que de leurs intérêts immédiats. Il ressort du rapport du Comité spécial que 80 p. 100 de l'économie des territoires dépendants sont accaparés par les monopoles étrangers qui réalisent un bénéfice de près de 5 milliards de dollars par an, ce qui leur permet d'amortir leurs investissements sur une période de moins de dix ans, tout en assurant en retour aux racistes d'Afrique du Sud, de la Rhodésie du Sud et aux colons portugais des bénéfices énormes en devises étrangères grâce auxquels ils peuvent importer de l'Occident du matériel de guerre destiné exclusivement à massacrer les populations autochtones afin d'assurer la pérennité de leur domination.

15. La communauté internationale a, d'une manière non équivoque, condamné la politique colonialiste des dirigeants de Pretoria, de Salisbury et de Lisbonne, et elle doit aussi condamner les pays qui favorisent et encouragent les investissements de capitaux dans les territoires coloniaux. Malgré leurs déclarations grandiloquentes en faveur de la libération et de l'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux, ces pays se comportent en fait en alliés des colonialistes et des racistes. Ces pays avancent l'argument selon lequel ils n'exercent aucune influence sur le secteur privé qui est libre de s'investir où bon lui semble et qui par ailleurs est protégé par des dispositions législatives nationales. Cet argument, de toute évidence, ne résiste pas à l'analyse, car on sait que les mêmes gouvernements ont été amenés à imposer des blocus économiques dans certaines zones en interdisant formellement aux capitaux privés de s'orienter vers ces zones sous peine de sanctions sévères. Donc, si ces pays agissent autrement dans les territoires coloniaux, c'est bien parce que leurs intérêts se fusionnent avec ceux des Blancs d'Afrique australe et qu'ils s'efforcent par tous les moyens de conserver ces territoires comme une chasse gardée de l'Occident impérialiste.

16. Les racistes d'Afrique du Sud et de Rhodésie du Sud ainsi que les colonialistes portugais doivent comprendre qu'ils ne peuvent continuer à exploiter indéfiniment ces territoires. Il est temps que leurs partenaires commerciaux comprennent eux aussi qu'ils ne peuvent tromper indéfiniment l'opinion publique internationale en se présentant comme des anticolonialistes tout en soutenant ceux-là même dont la seule présence en Afrique australe constitue une insulte à la dignité des Africains. Ces pays peuvent encore modifier leur politique si tant est qu'ils sont animés de saines intentions vis-à-vis des peuples africains. L'Afrique indépendante, avec son potentiel économique gigantesque, offre aux monopoles étrangers toutes les possibilités de réorienter leurs capitaux. La délégation guinéenne, consciente de l'importance du problème, a également la conviction que sa solution amènera la fin du colonialisme en Afrique.

17. La délégation guinéenne s'est portée coauteur du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.875 et Rev.1) afin d'apporter une fois de plus sa contribution à l'entreprise commune de décolonisation assumée par l'Organisation.

18. M. LUARD (Royaume-Uni) répondra à certains des commentaires auxquels a donné lieu la déclaration qu'il a faite sur la question au cours de la discussion générale (1720ème séance). M. Luard conteste tout d'abord l'assertion selon laquelle son intervention a été consacrée uniquement à la question générale des investissements, sans qu'il ait fait de distinction entre les territoires dépendants et les pays indépendants. Bien que M. Luard ait formulé quelques observations sur les avantages économiques que peuvent présenter les investissements privés indépendamment du statut des territoires en cause, les principales considérations qu'il a émises avaient trait expressément aux territoires dépendants.

19. Le premier point souligné par M. Luard est que, tout au moins dans les territoires relevant du Royaume-Uni, les investissements sont soigneusement contrôlés, afin de garantir qu'ils soient équilibrés et servent les intérêts du territoire dans son ensemble, à la fois par des représentants élus du territoire même et par le Gouvernement britannique à Londres. En deuxième lieu, M. Luard a voulu montrer que rien ne prouve que dans les territoires coloniaux en général les investissements privés fassent obstacle à la décolonisation; il ne songe pas à l'Afrique australe et ne défend pas l'influence éventuelle, bien qu'assez restreinte, que peuvent avoir les intérêts économiques dans cette région. En fait, il a cité des données montrant que la décolonisation s'était faite d'abord dans les territoires où les sommes investies étaient les plus fortes. En troisième lieu, M. Luard a fait valoir que le niveau de vie de la population est généralement le plus élevé dans les territoires dépendants où les investissements privés sont les plus importants. Qui plus est, les salaires versés par les entreprises privées tendent à être supérieurs aux salaires perçus habituellement dans les territoires. La délégation britannique estime que ces points devraient être analysés dans les rapports ultérieurs que le Comité spécial pourrait effectuer sur l'utilité des investissements privés dans les territoires dépendants ou sur d'autres aspects de la question.

20. La délégation britannique persiste à croire que le rapport du Comité spécial est un document extrêmement partial et tendancieux. Dans ces conditions, il est absolument impossible pour le Gouvernement britannique d'appuyer ou de faire sienne toute résolution qui accepte le rapport ou en prend acte avec satisfaction. Toutefois, la délégation britannique est heureuse de noter que, dans le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Add.1 et 2), l'Assemblée générale se contente d'appuyer le rapport "en général". Cette formule atténuée traduit manifestement les doutes qu'éprouvent même les nombreux auteurs du projet de résolution. Toutefois, malgré cette forme d'approbation atténuée, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni est opposé à ce paragraphe, car il ne peut approuver, même en général, un rapport aussi partial et aussi inexact.

21. La délégation britannique se félicite des modifications apportées au projet de résolution par rapport aux recommandations qui figurent dans le rapport du Comité spécial. Dans le texte actuel du projet de résolution, on a cherché à éviter de généraliser par trop en mentionnant "tous les territoires coloniaux". Toutefois, certains paragraphes sont quelque peu ambigus, notamment les paragraphes 3, 4 et 5 du dispositif. La délégation britannique en a étudié le texte et est parvenue à la conclusion que, puisqu'on a omis le mot "toutes" et que l'on n'a pas placé de virgule après les mots "les puissances coloniales" dans les paragraphes 3 et 5, ces paragraphes doivent être interprétés comme s'appliquant uniquement aux territoires où les pratiques dont il est fait état existent. A cette condition et à cette condition seulement, la délégation britannique s'abstiendra lors du vote sur les paragraphes 3, 4 et 5.

22. Etant donné les réserves qu'il a formulées au sujet du paragraphe 1 du dispositif, le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'abstiendra lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution. Il croit comprendre que la résolution vise essentiellement à appeler l'attention sur certaines pratiques et certaines formes de discrimination que l'on trouve incontestablement dans certaines régions de l'Afrique australe et que la délégation britannique déplore elle aussi. Il ne peut toutefois accepter toutes les critiques générales auxquelles ont donné lieu les effets des investissements privés étrangers dans les territoires dépendants lorsque ces investissements ont lieu dans les conditions appropriées, et il ne peut pas non plus accepter l'assertion selon laquelle dans les territoires du Royaume-Uni les mesures voulues ne sont pas prises pour garantir que le bien-être des habitants dans leur ensemble soit protégé là où les investissements s'effectuent.

23. Si le Comité spécial est prié de poursuivre son étude de la question, la délégation britannique espère que ses travaux futurs seront marqués par une objectivité plus grande que celle dont le Comité a fait preuve jusqu'ici.

24. M. COLLAS (Grèce), expliquant le vote qu'émettra la délégation hellénique sur le projet de résolution, dit que la question examinée est l'un des aspects les plus importants du problème de la décolonisation. Tout obstacle aux progrès et à l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux et à la pleine application du principe de l'autodétermination présente un caractère grave et il est juste que l'on s'efforce d'analyser l'interaction des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, dans la mise en œuvre de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. Bien que la délégation grecque ne souscrive pas à tout ce qui a été dit au cours des débats, elle considère qu'un grand nombre de considérations émises sont constructives et utiles et que le rapport du Comité spécial en la matière comprend certains éléments dignes d'attention.

25. La délégation hellénique considère que le projet de résolution vise essentiellement à assurer l'application intégrale de la résolution 1514 (XV) et du principe de l'autodétermination. Etant donné qu'elle souscrit à cet objectif, la délégation hellénique votera en faveur du projet de résolution dans son ensemble. Elle a toutefois des réserves à formuler au sujet de certaines généralisations que l'on trouve dans le projet de résolution et estime que le libellé de certains passages n'est pas entièrement satisfaisant. Il semble que l'on n'ait pas encore atteint un stade où l'on puisse procéder à une analyse précise du problème, qui serve les intérêts réels de la décolonisation. M. Collas espère que ce but sera atteint dans un proche avenir, mais, pour les raisons qu'il a mentionnées, il devra s'abstenir sur certains paragraphes du dispositif, notamment les paragraphes 1, 3 à 6, 8 et 10, s'ils sont mis aux voix séparément. Les réserves de la délégation hellénique ne mettent nullement en cause les intérêts légitimes des populations autochtones des pays coloniaux, elle découlent uniquement de sa conviction que les paragraphes en question sont trop vagues, ont une portée trop générale et laissent sans solution un certain nombre de problèmes, notamment des problèmes d'ordre pratique.

26. M. MYFTIU (Albanie) dit que la survivance du régime colonial dans le monde s'explique par la rapacité avec laquelle les monopoles impérialistes exploitent les populations et les richesses des pays étrangers. Ce genre d'exploitation est l'unique objectif du colonialisme, et, pour mener à bien ces pillages, les monopoles internationaux recourent à des méthodes barbares, notamment à l'extermination des populations autochtones. C'est ainsi que, par le passé, des dizaines de millions d'Indiens ont été exterminés aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Avec les Etats-Unis en tête, les puissances impérialistes appliquent actuellement la même politique en Afrique du Sud, en Rhodésie du Sud, dans les colonies portugaises et dans d'autres territoires.

27. La sphère d'activités des monopoles impérialistes s'est réduite grâce à la lutte victorieuse menée par de nombreuses nations pour recouvrer l'indépendance, et les puissances coloniales et impérialistes, tout en s'efforçant de maintenir leur domination coloniale sous ses formes classiques, recourent également à des méthodes néo-colonialistes. La violence, divers subterfuges, la pénétration économique et la prétendue coopération économique, les crédits esclavagistes et les groupes du Peace Corps sont utilisés à cette fin.

28. L'impérialisme des Etats-Unis poursuit, avec une férocité jamais égalée, sa politique de néo-colonialisme et d'asservissement économique. Il procure une assistance politique, économique et militaire aux puissances coloniales et aux cliques racistes de Rhodésie du Sud, d'Afrique du Sud et des colonies portugaises, parce que ces puissances sont les instruments dociles des monopoles impérialistes. Il suffit de rappeler, à titre d'exemple, les bénéfices énormes que réalisent l'Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa et l'Angola Diamond Company, ainsi que le fait que le salaire d'un travailleur africain est de 15 fois inférieur à celui d'un travailleur blanc. La population autochtone en est réduite à une économie de subsistance et sa condition est celle d'esclaves.

29. La délégation albanaise condamne énergiquement les arguments contre-révolutionnaires des révisionnistes modernes qui, pour de sinistres raisons, refusent de reconnaître que les monopoles ont partie liée avec les gouvernements impérialistes et colonialistes. Le fait que ces gouvernements ne sont que les représentants des monopoles est bien illustré par les menées agressives de l'impérialisme des Etats-Unis dans le monde entier.

30. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Add.1 et 2, la délégation albanaise formule des réserves à l'égard des paragraphes 5, 6, 7 et 8 du dispositif. Le projet de résolution souffre de certaines lacunes qui touchent le droit imprescriptible des peuples se trouvant sous domination coloniale à disposer librement de leurs ressources naturelles. La délégation albanaise ne se fait aucune illusion quant aux mobiles des puissances impérialistes et c'est pourquoi elle regrette que certaines expressions aient été utilisées dans le projet de résolution. Ce texte devrait condamner énergiquement le pillage auquel les impérialistes et leurs monopoles se livrent dans les pays coloniaux.

31. Les peuples coloniaux savent que les impérialistes ne renonceront jamais volontairement à leur domination et à leur exploitation et ils savent également qu'une lutte résolue contre les impérialistes est la seule voie sûre pour conquérir la liberté et devenir les vrais maîtres de leur patrie. Le Gouvernement albanais soutient fermement la lutte des peuples contre l'impérialisme des Etats-Unis et condamne les activités des monopoles impérialistes. La délégation albanaise ne pourra donc pas appuyer le projet de résolution et ne participera pas au vote.

32. M. JOHANSON (Norvège) dit que sa délégation se préoccupe, elle aussi, de voir les objectifs de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée atteints aussitôt que possible et n'ignore pas qu'il faut pour cela consacrer l'attention voulue à la situation économique des territoires coloniaux. Aux termes de la Charte, le bien-être des habitants des territoires non autonomes doit être assuré. La délégation norvégienne sait parfaitement qu'il existe encore dans certains territoires coloniaux des conditions économiques qui nécessiteraient l'attention des organes des Nations Unies.

33. La délégation norvégienne comprend le souci des auteurs du projet de résolution et partage l'intérêt qu'ils portent à la situation économique des habitants des territoires non autonomes. Toutefois, elle estime que les travaux de la Commission auraient été étayés par des bases plus solides si le Comité spécial s'était assuré le concours d'économistes. Par ailleurs, le rapport du Comité spécial ne justifie pas, à son avis, que l'on cherche à mettre sur le même plan les conditions qui existent dans les différents territoires coloniaux qui varient énormément selon la superficie, la population, le stade de développement, les ressources et la situation géographique. Le Comité spécial n'a pas non plus suffisamment tenu compte des différences existant entre la politique de telle ou telle puissance administrante. C'est pourquoi il est difficile à la délégation norvégienne de s'associer, ne serait-ce que d'une manière générale, à une approbation du rapport du Comité sur le point à l'étude.

34. Les généralisations que l'on trouve dans le rapport du Comité spécial apparaissent dans une certaine mesure dans le projet de résolution. De l'avis de la Norvège, il faut aborder avec prudence et discernement les problèmes complexes qui sont en cause. Tout en approuvant certains points du projet de résolution, notamment ce qui concerne une juste rémunération et le droit de la population autochtone à recevoir une part équitable des profits résultant du développement, la délégation norvégienne s'inquiète de la portée et du caractère général de certaines dispositions du projet de résolution. Il faut veiller à ce que toute résolution de l'ONU n'ait pas pour effet de priver les territoires coloniaux d'avantages matériels possibles, même sous la forme d'investissements privés effectués par des intérêts économiques étrangers. La Norvège ne pourra donc pas voter pour le projet de résolution.

35. La délégation norvégienne se félicite des efforts déployés pour rendre le texte acceptable à la quasi-totalité des membres de la Commission, mais elle regrette que les résultats obtenus ne lui permettent pas d'appuyer le projet de résolution.

36. M. CHAKHOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) dit que le projet de résolution représente la somme du travail important accompli depuis 1964 par le Comité spécial et l'Assemblée générale elle-même dans l'étude des activités nuisibles des monopoles internationaux dans les territoires coloniaux. Les dispositions du projet de résolution reflètent bien les conséquences funestes de l'action des monopoles impérialistes dans les territoires coloniaux, condamnent les activités criminelles de ces monopoles qui font obstacle à l'accession à l'indépendance des peuples dépendants et suggèrent diverses mesures visant à protéger les intérêts des populations autochtones. Toutefois, la délégation soviétique considère que le projet de résolution comporte des lacunes. Tout d'abord, le paragraphe 1 du dispositif indique que l'Assemblée générale approuve en général le rapport du Comité spécial; ce libellé laisse subsister un doute touchant les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial, bien que bon nombre des délégations ayant participé aux débats aient appuyé le rapport sans réserve. Certains représentants, comme ceux du Royaume-Uni et de l'Australie, ont essayé de discréditer le rapport, mais ils n'ont pas fourni de preuves convaincantes pour appuyer leur position ou réfuter des observations contenues dans le rapport.

37. Certaines autres dispositions du projet de résolution ne sont pas claires. Par exemple, le libellé du paragraphe 5 du dispositif est manifestement insuffisant. L'Assemblée se contente de "déplorer" la politique des puissances coloniales qui permet l'exploitation des ressources naturelles des territoires placés sous leur administration, alors que ce texte devrait "condamner énergiquement" la politique et les pratiques tant des monopoles que des gouvernements d'un certain nombre de pays, notamment des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni et de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, qui fournissent toute l'aide possible aux monopoles pour leur permettre d'exploiter sans merci les peuples coloniaux. Une telle condamnation serait tout à fait justifiée puisqu'il a été démontré de manière irréfutable, à la fois dans le rapport du Comité spécial et lors des débats consacrés à ce point de l'ordre du jour, que ce sont les gouvernements des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de l'Australie, du Portugal, de la République sud-africaine et d'un certain nombre d'autres pays occidentaux qui soutiennent directement les activités des monopoles. En outre, les gouvernements des pays dont les ressortissants et les compagnies participent à l'administration et à la gestion des entreprises opérant dans les territoires coloniaux devraient être invités à prendre des mesures en vue de supprimer les droits et privilèges spéciaux accordés à ces particuliers et à ces entreprises. Ils devraient tout d'abord adopter des mesures législatives, administratives et autres afin de réduire considérablement le montant des bénéfices que les monopoles peuvent exporter des territoires coloniaux et assurer qu'une part importante de ces bénéfices soit réservée obligatoirement au développement économique et social de ces territoires. L'absence d'une disposition préconisant de telles mesures affaiblit manifestement le projet de résolution.

38. Le paragraphe 6 du dispositif est insuffisant lui aussi. Etant donné les conditions qui existent dans les territoires coloniaux où les populations autochtones sont privées de leur droit souverain de disposer de leurs ressources naturelles, l'aliénation des terres pratiquée pour octroyer des concessions aux compagnies étrangères ne saurait être considérée comme légale. Il devrait en être fait expressément mention dans le projet de résolution.

39. Toutefois, la délégation soviétique appuiera le projet de résolution puisqu'il contient un certain nombre de dispositions positives visant à empêcher les monopoles impérialistes de poursuivre leurs activités nuisibles dans les territoires coloniaux et condamnant ces activités.

40. M. RODRIGUEZ ASTIAZARAIN (Cuba) dit qu'au cours de la discussion générale (1723ème séance) sa délégation s'est jointe à la majorité des orateurs pour condamner les activités des intérêts étrangers dans les territoires sous domination coloniale et a appuyé le rapport et les recommandations du Comité spécial. La délégation cubaine a également estimé que l'on devait condamner le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis pour la part indéniable de responsabilité qu'il assume en tant qu'instrument des monopoles américains. Elle a en effet la conviction que les intérêts étrangers, économiques, politiques et militaires, sont la raison d'être du colonialisme.

L'exploitation de richesses appartenant de plein droit aux peuples des territoires coloniaux doit faire l'objet d'une condamnation expresse, quels que soient les intérêts étrangers en cause.

41. Cuba aurait souhaité que le projet de résolution se fonde sur les recommandations du Comité spécial, conformément à la pratique suivie précédemment par la Commission. Le projet de résolution qui a été présenté est loin d'être satisfaisant et les paragraphes 4, 5, 6, 7 et 8 du dispositif, qui établissent des distinctions, empêchent Cuba d'appuyer ce projet. M. Rodríguez Astiazarain rappelle que Cuba a traditionnellement soutenu les résolutions présentées par les pays africains et asiatiques relatives aux questions coloniales et n'a jamais, en tant que pays latino-américain, émis de suggestions visant à en affaiblir le texte.

42. Pour les raisons qu'elle vient d'exposer, la délégation cubaine préfère s'abstenir lors du vote.

43. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal) déclare que, si le projet de résolution se bornait à énoncer des principes généraux rationnels tendant à guider les activités des intérêts étrangers et reconnaissait que le progrès économique des territoires sous-développés, quel que soit leur statut, nécessite une politique rationnelle d'investissements, l'appréciation de cette politique devant être laissée à la seule discrétion du gouvernement en cause, la délégation portugaise pourrait voter pour ce texte. La délégation portugaise est opposée à l'exploitation coloniale au même titre que toute autre délégation. Elle estime que les peuples placés sous un régime colonial devraient être dotés de droits politiques, économiques et sociaux, mais que des décisions de cet ordre sont du ressort exclusif des puissances administrantes intéressées.

44. La délégation portugaise trouve à redire au projet de résolution pour diverses raisons, mais principalement par suite de la mention qui y est faite de "territoires sous domination portugaise". Elle rejette la thèse selon laquelle l'un quelconque des territoires administrés par le Portugal relève des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée ou de toute autre résolution. Elle rejette également toutes les accusations d'exploitation coloniale lancées contre le Portugal. Conformément à la position qu'elle a toujours suivie, la délégation portugaise votera contre le projet de résolution. Si la résolution est adoptée, la délégation portugaise souhaite que les réserves qu'elle a formulées expressément soient consignées dans le compte rendu.

45. Le PRESIDENT dit qu'un vote séparé a été demandé sur le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Add.1 et 2. En l'absence d'objection, il va être procédé au vote sur le paragraphe 1 du dispositif.

Par 86 voix contre 2, avec 17 abstentions, le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.875/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Add.1 et 2 est adopté dans son ensemble.

46. M. SZYMANOWSKI (Pologne) dit que sa délégation a voté pour le projet de résolution dont l'adoption est un bon départ dans la tâche importante qui consiste à dénoncer et à supprimer un obstacle sérieux à l'application intégrale de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée. Les faits cités dans le rapport du Comité spécial et au cours des débats mettent en lumière l'existence d'une conspiration sinistre fomentée par les intérêts étrangers, les régimes coloniaux et les pays qui favorisent les activités des intérêts étrangers. La résolution de l'Assemblée générale concernant cette question doit être claire et ferme et ne laisser aucune échappatoire à ces forces qui entravent la décolonisation. Dans l'ensemble, le projet de résolution qui vient d'être adopté remplit ces conditions, mais la délégation polonaise n'est pas entièrement satisfaite de son libellé.

47. Tout d'abord, la délégation polonaise n'approuve pas le texte du paragraphe 1 du dispositif dans lequel le rapport du Comité spécial est approuvé "engénéral". La Pologne est membre du Comité spécial dont elle a fait siens sans réserve le rapport et les conclusions. Elle craint que les forces que l'on condamne dans cette résolution ne se sentent rassurées du fait que l'Assemblée générale fait preuve d'une certaine réserve dans son approbation du rapport. Deuxièmement, les paragraphes 6 et 8 du dispositif auraient pu être rédigés de façon plus claire. Il est évident que la plupart des concessions et des privilèges octroyés aux nationaux étrangers sont en fait contraires aux intérêts des habitants autochtones des territoires coloniaux et que ces concessions sont l'un des principaux instruments de l'exploitation coloniale. La délégation polonaise a donc estimé que la résolution devait dénoncer tous ces accords et dans certains cas les déclarer nuls et non avenue, notamment lorsqu'il s'agit des régimes illégaux comme ceux de la Rhodésie du Sud ou de l'administration sud-africaine dans le Sud-Ouest africain. L'appel contenu dans le paragraphe 6 semble être une recommandation édulcorée plutôt qu'une évaluation réaliste de la situation. En ce qui concerne le paragraphe 8, ce qui est nécessaire ce n'est pas de reconsidérer les privilèges existants, mais de mettre fin aux pratiques dont il est question.

48. Néanmoins, étant donné que cette résolution est un texte extrêmement important et constitue un progrès encourageant, la délégation polonaise l'accueille avec satisfaction.

49. M. POWER (Irlande) déclare que sa délégation a voté pour le projet de résolution, qui, à son avis, énonce un certain nombre de principes qui favorisent dans l'ensemble le progrès économique, social et politique des peuples des territoires coloniaux. La délégation irlandaise a trouvé dans cette résolution un sens de la mesure qui fait quelque peu défaut dans le rapport du Comité spécial, c'est la raison pour laquelle elle n'a pu appuyer le paragraphe 1 du dispositif de la résolution. De même, elle ne peut souscrire au paragraphe 9 du dispositif car elle n'a pas été à même d'appuyer la création du Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain, qu'elle ne considérerait pas comme une mesure pratique de nature à conduire aux objectifs recherchés. Enfin, la délégation irlandaise n'interprète nullement la résolution comme constituant une attaque contre les investissements étrangers en tant que tels dans les territoires coloniaux. Ces investissements sont généralement indispensables au développement des territoires intéressés, et plus un territoire est avancé du point de vue économique, meilleures sont ses chances de conserver son indépendance lorsque son peuple aura conquis sa liberté.

50. M. BOZA (Pérou) dit que sa délégation a voté pour le projet de résolution dont elle approuve les principes et les objectifs. Mais la délégation péruvienne tient à ce qu'il soit consigné dans le compte rendu qu'elle considère que certaines des expressions employées dans la résolution sont inopportunes.

51. M. PRETORIUS (Afrique du Sud) dit que sa délégation a voté contre le projet de résolution qui lui semble, ainsi que le rapport du Comité spécial sur cette question, être inspiré par des motifs politiques et contenir des accusations non fondées contre certains Etats. En ce qui concerne la mention qui y est faite du Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain, l'Afrique du Sud considère que la résolution portant création de ce conseil est illégale.

52. M. ISSAKA (Togo), exerçant son droit de réponse, est heureux de noter que le Portugal est opposé à l'exploitation coloniale et espère que ce pays cessera par conséquent d'exploiter l'Angola, le Mozambique et la Guinée (Bissau).

53. M. Issaka fait observer que le représentant du Royaume-Uni essaie toujours de parler à la fin du débat et ne laisse pas le temps de lui répondre comme il convient. Se référant au premier argument avancé par le représentant du Royaume-Uni, à savoir que les investissements privés dans les territoires placés sous l'administration du Royaume-Uni sont contrôlés à la fois par des représentants élus du territoire même et par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, M. Issaka estime que les premiers ne sont pas les vrais porte-parole de la population et se conforment toujours aux vœux de la puissance coloniale de sorte que c'est cette dernière seule qui contrôle effectivement les investissements privés, et elle n'agira jamais à l'encontre de ses propres intérêts dans un pays où des capitaux britanniques sont investis. Les gouvernements locaux ne sont que des marionnettes au service des capitaux étrangers. Quant à l'argument selon lequel les investissements accélèrent le processus de décolonisation plutôt qu'ils ne le freinent, il devrait être possible, s'il en était vraiment ainsi, de décoloniser l'Afrique du Sud. Pour ce qui est du troisième argument du représentant du Royaume-Uni, à savoir que là où les investissements privés sont le plus considérables les salaires sont plus élevés, M. Issaka souligne que le montant des salaires ne constitue pas à lui seul un indice de développement économique. Il faut tenir compte du niveau de vie dans son ensemble. Les salaires des travailleurs autochtones dans les territoires coloniaux sont jusqu'à quinze fois inférieurs à ceux des étrangers qui les exploitent, alors qu'ils pourraient être vingt fois plus élevés qu'ils ne le sont à l'heure actuelle si les ressources des territoires étaient exploitées au seul profit de ces territoires.

54. M. LUARD (Royaume-Uni) invite le représentant du Togo à se rendre dans n'importe lequel des territoires administrés par le Royaume-Uni et à se renseigner sur le système électoral qui y est en vigueur. M. Luard assure le représentant du Togo que le système électoral est juste et démocratique et peut soutenir favorablement la comparaison avec celui de nombreux pays représentés à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Les gouvernements élus de ces territoires adoptent souvent des positions différentes de celles du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et déterminent effectivement les conditions dans lesquelles s'effectuent les investissements. En outre, le Gouvernement britannique contrôle les investissements dans tous les territoires qu'il administre. Ces investissements doivent tous être approuvés par le Ministère des finances qui veille à ce qu'ils soient conformes aux intérêts du territoire en cause.

55. Quoi que l'on puisse penser de la situation en Afrique du Sud, elle ne prouve pas que les investissements étrangers entravent la décolonisation. L'Afrique du Sud est indépendante même si la situation qui y règne peut être comparée à une situation coloniale. Pour ce qui est de la question du paiement de salaires plus élevés dans les territoires où il y a des investissements étrangers, M. Luard dit que, si le rapport du Comité spécial laisse entendre que le fait qu'il y ait dans les territoires coloniaux des investissements privés conduit nécessairement à l'exploitation, il pense, quant à lui, que ces investissements entraînent un accroissement des revenus et une amélioration du niveau de vie général de la population de ces territoires. Il est fort possible que certains aspects des activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, soient critiquables, mais dans le rapport du Comité spécial on n'a absolument pas cherché à analyser les faits de façon détaillée. Il faudrait comparer le revenu de ceux qui travaillent pour des sociétés étrangères et de ceux qui vivent dans les territoires où ces sociétés opèrent aux revenus de ceux qui ne travaillent pas pour des sociétés étrangères ou qui vivent dans des territoires où ces sociétés n'opèrent pas.

56. M. ISSAKA (Togo) fait observer à l'intention du représentant du Royaume-Uni que le Togo a été le premier pays où la France a autorisé que les Nations Unies supervisent des élections. Le Royaume-Uni devrait suivre l'exemple de la France en Rhodésie du Sud et ailleurs. M. Issaka estime que l'Afrique du Sud n'est pas un pays indépendant et qu'elle ne pourra pas l'être tant que les véritables habitants n'auront pas le droit à une autodétermination effective.

57. M. CHAKHOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques), répondant à l'argument du représentant du Royaume-Uni selon lequel les investissements effectués dans les territoires coloniaux administrés par ce pays sont contrôlés par le Gouvernement britannique et par le gouvernement local, dit que les recherches qu'il a lui-même effectuées sur cette question ont révélé l'existence d'un système complexe d'alliance entre les monopoles et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Les vues exprimées par la Fédération of British Industries, qui, depuis 1965, fait partie d'un organisme encore plus puissant, la Confederation of British Industry, sont portées à l'attention du Gouvernement britannique pour faire pression sur la politique de ce dernier, par écrit ou au moyen de visites que les représentants officiels de la Federation rendent aux ministères appropriés. La Federation a accès à tous les ministères et entretient des contacts avec les fonctionnaires à tous les échelons. Selon le numéro de l'Observer du 25 février 1962, la Federation a, dans les différents départements ministériels, ses propres représentants chargés de fournir des conseils sur l'élaboration de la politique. Des indications sur ce point sont données à la page 272 de l'ouvrage intitulé Business Enterprise, de Edwards et Townsend, publié en 1958. Le gouvernement demande l'avis de la Federation sur les questions qui l'intéressent; le Directeur général de la Federation lui-même a dit que presque chaque jour un des départements ministériels le consulte. La politique du gouvernement et celle des entreprises industrielles et commerciales sont étroitement liées. Le Directeur de la National Association of British Industry affirme que son association est consultée sur toutes les questions législatives touchant l'industrie manufacturière et qu'elle se trouve à même de veiller à ce que tout soit fait selon ses vœux. Des renseignements concernant la National Association of British Industry figurent aux pages 273 et 274 de Business Enterprise. Il est donc évident que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne contrôle pas les activités des monopoles britanniques; les monopoles agissent comme bon leur semble et le gouvernement est un instrument entre leurs mains.

58. Selon M. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR (Sierra Leone), il est inexact que, dans les territoires dépendants, il y ait deux autorités distinctes: le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et le gouvernement élu du territoire. Les décisions de la Puissance administrante ont plus de poids et c'est elle qui encourt le blâme pour les iniquités commises par les entreprises étrangères et pour les accords conclus avec ces dernières. Les postes les plus importants du gouvernement élu d'un territoire, comme ceux des services financiers, sont souvent occupés par des représentants de la Puissance administrante jusqu'à la veille de l'indépendance. M. Coleridge-Taylor ne voit donc pas comment le représentant du Royaume-Uni peut soutenir que cet argument est fondé. La délégation britannique a affirmé que rien ne prouve que les investissements privés fassent obstacle à l'indépendance, mais il a eu la prudence de passer sous silence certaines régions coloniales, et M. Coleridge-Taylor est sûr qu'une étude minutieuse de ces régions corroborerait la conclusion que l'investissement privé est bien en fait un obstacle à l'indépendance. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a critiqué le rapport du Comité spécial et a voté contre le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution qui approuvait le rapport en général; cependant il n'a fourni aucune donnée statistique et n'a mentionné aucun territoire particulier à l'appui de son assertion suivant laquelle l'indépendance est accélérée par l'investissement de capitaux étrangers.

59. M. Coleridge-Taylor était sur le point de féliciter le Portugal sur son changement d'attitude, mais le vote a montré que le Portugal donne au mot "colonial" une interprétation différente de la sienne; il ne peut donc qu'exprimer son regret devant cet état de choses.

60. A propos de l'observation du représentant de l'Afrique du Sud, qui estime que la résolution 2145 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale est illégale, M. Coleridge-Taylor tient à rappeler à son intention combien de délégations ont voté en faveur de cette résolution. Il n'est guère probable qu'une minorité se réduisant à une seule délégation puisse avoir raison.

61. M. BECK (Hongrie), appuyé par M. JOUEJATI (Syrie), propose de lever la séance.

62. M. McDOWELL (Nouvelle-Zélande) pense que, pour assurer la liberté des débats et permettre l'organisation rationnelle des travaux de la Commission, il faudrait donner la parole à toutes les délégations qui souhaitent faire une intervention, étant entendu que la discussion serait close à la présente séance.

63. Le PRESIDENT tient à faire une déclaration sur l'organisation des travaux de la Commission et il souhaiterait la faire même si la proposition de la Hongrie est adoptée.

Par 24 voix contre 8, avec 19 abstentions, la Commission décide de lever la séance, étant entendu que le Président fera une déclaration sur les travaux de la Commission.

Organisation des travaux de la Commission (A/C.4/698)

64. Le PRESIDENT suggère que l'examen du rapport du Conseil de tutelle, le point suivant de l'ordre du jour de la Commission, publié sous la cote A/C.4/698, soit retardé jusqu'au 6 décembre 1967; le Président a été informé en effet qu'une délégation du Territoire sous tutelle de Nauru — qui doit accéder à l'indépendance le 31 janvier 1968 — doit arriver sous peu à New York. Le Président propose donc que la Commission aborde l'examen de la question des îles Fidji le 4 décembre 1967, en plus de l'examen des points restants de son ordre du jour.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

La séance est levée à 18 h 10.

2326 (XXII). Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux figurant dans sa résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960,

Rappelant ses résolutions 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, 1810 (XVII) du 17 décembre 1962, 1956 (XVIII) du 11 décembre 1963, 1970 (XVIII) du 16 décembre 1963, 2105 (XX) du 20 décembre 1965 et 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966,

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatifs aux travaux qu'il a consacrés en 1967 à cette question¹¹ et ayant adopté des résolutions au sujet de différents territoires examinés par le Comité,

Ayant examiné également le rapport pertinent du

¹¹ Ibid., additif au point 23 de l'ordre du jour (A/6700/Rev.1), chap. I à XXIV.

Comité spécial¹² et la résolution 2288 (XXII) de l'Assemblée générale, en date du 7 décembre 1967, sur la question intitulée "Activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, ainsi que dans tous les autres territoires se trouvant sous domination coloniale, et aux efforts tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale dans le sud de l'Afrique",

Tenant compte du rapport du Cycle d'études international sur l'apartheid, la discrimination raciale et le colonialisme dans le sud de l'Afrique, qui s'est tenu à Kitwe (Zambie), du 25 juillet au 4 août 1967¹³,

Notant avec une grave inquiétude que sept ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration de nombreux territoires sont encore sous domination coloniale,

Déplorant l'attitude négative de certaines puissances coloniales qui refusent de reconnaître aux peuples coloniaux le droit à l'autodétermination, à la liberté et à l'indépendance, et en particulier l'intransigeance du Gouvernement portugais, qui, au mépris des résolutions pertinentes de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, persiste à perpétuer sa domination étrangère oppressive, et du Gouvernement sud-africain, qui nie ouvertement la validité des résolutions 2145 (XXI) et 2248 (S-V) de l'Assemblée générale, en date des 27 octobre 1966 et 19 mai 1967,

Préoccupée par la politique suivie par les puissances coloniales qui favorisent l'afflux systématique d'immigrants étrangers et déplacent, déportent ou transfèrent les habitants autochtones en violation des droits économiques et politiques ainsi que des droits de l'homme fondamentaux de ces habitants,

Considérant que la persistance du colonialisme et de ses manifestations, y compris le racisme et l'apartheid, et les efforts déployés par certaines puissances coloniales pour éliminer les mouvements de libération nationale par des activités répressives et par l'emploi de la force armée contre les peuples coloniaux sont incompatibles avec la Charte des Nations Unies, la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux,

Déplorant l'attitude de certains États qui, au mépris des résolutions pertinentes du Conseil de sécurité, de l'Assemblée générale et du Comité spécial, persistent à coopérer avec les Gouvernements portugais et sud-africain et avec le régime minoritaire raciste illégal de Rhodésie du Sud, qui continuent à opprimer les peuples africains,

Convaincue que tout nouveau retard dans l'application rapide et effective de la Déclaration constitue une source de différends et de conflits internationaux qui entravent sérieusement la coopération internationale et compromettent la paix et la sécurité mondiales,

Rappelant sa résolution 13 (I) du 13 février 1946 concernant l'action de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le domaine de l'information et les dispositions pertinentes de ses résolutions 2105 (XX) du 20 décembre 1965, 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966, 2262 (XXII) du 3 novembre 1967, 2270 (XXII) du 17 novembre 1967 et 2288 (XXII) du 7 décembre 1967 soulignant la nécessité d'une diffusion générale et suivie d'informations sur les travaux des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation, la situation dans les territoires coloniaux et la lutte constante menée par les peuples coloniaux pour leur libération, Réaffirmant sa conviction que la célébration en 1968 de l'Année internationale des droits de l'homme, notamment la réunion de la Conférence internationale des droits de l'homme, contribuera grandement à favoriser le respect universel et effectif des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous, sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion,

1. Réaffirme ses résolutions 1514 (XV), 1654 (XVI), 1810 (XVII), 1956 (XVIII), 1970 (XVIII), 2105 (XX) et 2189 (XXI);

2. Prend note avec satisfaction du travail accompli par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et le félicite des efforts qu'il déploie pour assurer l'application intégrale et effective de la Déclaration;

3. Approuve le rapport du Comité spécial sur ses travaux de 1967 et prie instamment les puissances administrantes de donner suite aux recommandations qui y figurent et de prendre toutes les autres mesures nécessaires en vue d'appliquer la Déclaration et les résolutions pertinentes de l'Organisation des Nations Unies;

4. Approuve le programme de travail envisagé par le Comité spécial pour 1968, y compris l'envoi de missions de visite, l'étude des activités militaires et des dispositions de caractère militaire prises par les puissances coloniales dans les territoires sous leur administration et qui pourraient entraver l'application de la Déclaration, ainsi que l'examen de la liste des territoires auxquels la Déclaration s'applique;

5. Déclare à nouveau que la persistance du régime colonial met en danger la paix et la sécurité internationales et que la pratique de l'apartheid et de toute forme de discrimination raciale constitue un crime contre l'humanité;

6. Réaffirme qu'elle reconnaît la légitimité de la lutte que les peuples coloniaux mènent pour l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, note avec satisfaction les progrès accomplis dans les territoires coloniaux par les mouvements de libération nationale tant par la lutte qu'ils mènent que par la mise en œuvre de programmes de relèvement, et prie instamment tous les Etats de leur apporter une aide morale et matérielle;

7. Remercie le Haut Commissaire des Nations Unies pour les réfugiés, les institutions spécialisées intéressées et les autres organisations internationales de secours de l'aide qu'ils ont prêtée jusqu'ici, et les prie d'accroître leur assistance économique, sociale et humanitaire aux réfugiés des territoires sous domination coloniale;

8. Prie tous les Etats, agissant soit directement soit par l'intermédiaire des institutions internationales dont ils sont membres, y compris les institutions spécialisées, de s'abstenir de fournir une assistance quelconque aux Gouvernements portugais et sud-africain et au régime minoritaire raciste illégal de la Rhodésie du Sud tant que ces gouvernements et ce régime n'auront pas renoncé à leur politique de domination coloniale et de discrimination raciale;

9. Appelle l'attention de tous les Etats sur les graves conséquences résultant de la formation en Afrique

australe d'une entente entre les Gouvernements sud-africain et portugais et le régime minoritaire raciste illégal de la Rhodésie du Sud, dont les activités sont contraires aux intérêts de la paix et de la sécurité internationales, et demande à tous les Etats, en particulier aux principaux partenaires commerciaux de l'entente, de refuser tout appui ou toute assistance aux membres de l'entente;

10. Prie les puissances coloniales de démanteler leurs bases et installations militaires dans les territoires coloniaux, ainsi que de s'abstenir d'en établir de nouvelles et d'utiliser celles qui existent encore pour entraver la libération des peuples des territoires coloniaux dans l'exercice de leurs droits légitimes à la liberté et à l'indépendance;

11. Condamne une fois de plus la politique suivie par certaines puissances administrantes dans les territoires se trouvant sous leur domination, qui consiste à imposer des régimes non représentatifs et des constitutions, à renforcer la position d'intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, à abuser l'opinion publique mondiale et à encourager l'afflux systématique d'immigrants étrangers tout en déplaçant, déportant et transférant les autochtones vers d'autres régions, et demande à ces puissances de renoncer à de telles manœuvres;

12. Prie le Comité spécial de poursuivre sa tâche et de continuer à rechercher des moyens appropriés en vue d'assurer l'application immédiate et intégrale de la Déclaration dans tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance;

13. Prie le Comité spécial de formuler des suggestions concrètes en vue d'aider le Conseil de sécurité à étudier les mesures qu'il convient de prendre, conformément à la Charte des Nations Unies, à l'égard des faits nouveaux survenant dans les territoires coloniaux qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales, et recommande au Conseil de prendre ces suggestions pleinement en considération;

14. Invite le Comité spécial, chaque fois qu'il le jugera bon et opportun, à recommander une date limite pour l'accession à l'indépendance de chaque territoire considéré, conformément au désir de la population et aux dispositions de la Déclaration;

15. Prie le Comité spécial, dans l'accomplissement de ses tâches, de tenir compte des activités spéciales envisagées à l'occasion de l'Année internationale des droits de l'homme et, en particulier, de participer, comme il le jugera approprié, à la Conférence internationale des droits de l'homme qui doit se tenir à Téhéran en avril 1968;

16. Prie le Comité spécial d'examiner l'observation, par les Etats Membres, de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et des autres résolutions pertinentes relatives à la question de la décolonisation, en particulier celles qui concernent les territoires sous domination portugaise, la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain, et de rendre compte à ce sujet à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa vingt-troisième session;

17. Invite le Comité spécial à accorder une attention particulière aux petits territoires et à recommander à l'Assemblée générale les méthodes les plus appropriées à appliquer ainsi que les mesures à prendre pour permettre aux populations de ces territoires d'exercer pleinement leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance;

18. Demande instamment aux puissances administrantes de coopérer avec le Comité spécial en permettant à des missions de visite d'avoir accès aux territoires coloniaux conformément aux décisions prises antérieurement par l'Assemblée générale et par le Comité spécial;

19. Prie le Comité spécial d'examiner et de soumettre à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa vingt-troisième session, des recommandations concernant l'organisation, au début de 1969, d'une conférence spéciale de représentants des peuples coloniaux qui serait chargée notamment d'examiner les moyens les plus efficaces par lesquels la communauté internationale peut intensifier son assistance à ces peuples dans les efforts qu'ils déploient pour parvenir à l'autodétermination, à la liberté et à l'indépendance;

20. Prie le Secrétaire général de prendre des mesures concrètes en usant de tous les moyens dont il dispose, notamment les publications, la radio et la télévision, pour donner effet aux dispositions des résolutions 2105 (XX), 2189 (XXI), 2262 (XXII), 2270 (XXII) et 2288 (XXII) de l'Assemblée générale concernant la diffusion générale et suivie d'informations sur les travaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation, la situation dans les territoires coloniaux et la lutte constante menée par les peuples coloniaux pour leur libération;

21. Prie les puissances administrantes de coopérer avec le Secrétaire général en vue de faire largement connaître les travaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans l'application de la Déclaration;

22. Prie le Secrétaire général de fournir tous les fonds et les moyens nécessaires à l'application de la présente résolution.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

45. M. CERNIK (Tchécoslovaquie) [traduit de l'anglais]: La question qui nous est soumise se rattache directement au processus historique de désintégration du système colonial, qui caractérise notre époque. Depuis plusieurs dizaines d'années, ce processus a conduit un nombre croissant de peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine à gagner la liberté et l'indépendance. Les Nations Unies ont eu le mérite de se ranger aussi du côté des mouvements de libération nationale.

46. C'est l'adoption de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux qui a marqué le point tournant de l'engagement des Nations Unies dans la lutte pour l'élimination du colonialisme. La Déclaration a non seulement confirmé le droit des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, mais abjuré toutes les formes d'hégémonie et d'exploitation étrangères. Elle a formulé l'exigence de la libération immédiate et inconditionnelle de tous les territoires et de tous les peuples coloniaux. Dans les diverses résolutions adoptées ces dernières années, les Nations Unies ont reconnu le caractère légitime de la lutte des peuples coloniaux et affirmé que ces nations, pour la mener, sont en droit d'obtenir une assistance morale, politique et matérielle.

47. Les peuples ont mis fin au système colonial dans plusieurs territoires qui se trouvaient avant dans une situation de dépendance. Ceux qui se sont engagés sur la voie nouvelle du développement indépendant ont réussi, avec l'aide des forces progressistes du monde, à renforcer leur liberté et leur indépendance.

48. Il y a quelques jours, le combat de la libération nationale du peuple d'Aden et de l'Arabie du Sud lui ont donné la victoire, après les nombreuses épreuves que lui ont infligées les colonisateurs britanniques. Un nouvel Etat indépendant, que nous venons d'accueillir aujourd'hui même comme Membre de notre organisation, s'est édifié sur les ruines de l'un des derniers bastions du colonialisme au Moyen-Orient.

D'ici à quelques semaines également, le territoire sous Tutelle du Nauru deviendra indépendant. Du fond de nos cœurs, nous souhaitons aux peuples de ces deux pays de vivre prospère et de se développer au cours des années à venir, afin qu'ils puissent jouir des fruits de leur victoire dans la paix et la liberté, sans ingérence de la part de leurs anciens maîtres.

49. D'autre part, il suffit de jeter un coup d'œil sur la carte pour se rendre compte que le juste combat mené par les peuples n'a pas encore permis d'atteindre les objectifs fixés. Plus de 50 millions de personnes vivent encore sous un régime de colonialisme et de racisme. Les événements récents montrent qu'actuellement la lutte des nations assujetties se poursuit dans des conditions particulièrement difficiles et se heurte à la résistance sauvage de tous les régimes coloniaux et racistes, ainsi que de leurs alliés. Les positions principales des colonisateurs et des racistes se trouvent maintenant concentrées dans le sud de l'Afrique, où les forces de la réaction internationale sont en train d'édifier un bastion de résistance contre l'indépendance et la liberté de l'ensemble du continent africain.

50. La politique raciste d'apartheid que mène le Gouvernement de la République d'Afrique du Sud et l'annexion graduelle du Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain par les racistes d'Afrique du Sud, la ligne de conduite arrogante adoptée par le régime de Smith en Rhodésie du Sud, où les libertés fondamentales des quatre millions d'autochtones sont foulées aux pieds, la guerre d'extermination menée par le régime de Salazar en Angola et au Mozambique contre les populations qui vivent sur ces territoires, enfin les provocations militaires contre les Etats indépendants d'Afrique, ainsi que l'exploitation des populations africaines qui sont privées de la jouissance de leurs droits fondamentaux dans tous ces pays, tel est le tableau de l'Afrique méridionale aujourd'hui.

51. Nous avons vu récemment de quelle manière les colonisateurs et les racistes ont intensifié et renforcé leur coopération. La collaboration des régimes coloniaux et racistes en matière économique et l'appui qui leur est donné par les puissances occidentales membres de l'alliance de l'OTAN constituent la raison principale de l'échec du système actuel des sanctions décidées par notre organisation contre la Rhodésie du Sud, le Portugal et la République sud-africaine.

52. A ce sujet, je voudrais attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le mémorandum du Gouvernement de la République démocratique allemande [A/6491]; ce document constate que c'est la République fédérale d'Allemagne qui, avec les Etats-Unis et le Royaume-Uni, fournit l'aide la plus importante à l'Afrique du Sud, au Portugal et au régime Smith en Rhodésie du Sud. La coopération militaire dans ces régions, complétée par l'appui des pays de l'OTAN, réussit actuellement à coordonner l'action militaire contre les mouvements de libération nationale. Ainsi l'on assiste, dans le sud de l'Afrique, à l'établissement d'une coalition militaire destinée à interrompre le processus de décolonisation en Afrique méridionale et à compromettre à la fois la liberté et l'indépendance du continent africain. Après tout, le recrute-ment et l'envoi de mercenaires blancs d'Angola au Congo indiquent de façon lumineuse comment les forces réactionnaires internationales font obstacle au développement progressif des Etats africains et violent leur intégrité territoriale.

53. Nous avons suivi avec inquiétude l'évolution des événements dans la région méridionale de l'Afrique, où un bloc réactionnaire est en formation sur un territoire où plus de la moitié de la population vit encore sous le joug colonial et raciste.

54. En outre, le rapport du Comité spécial signale aussi que, dans d'autres territoires dépendants, parmi lesquels figurent des petits territoires coloniaux du Pacifique, de l'océan Indien et des Antilles, les puissances coloniales n'ont pas encore pris de mesures efficaces pour permettre aux peuples qui y vivent d'exercer librement leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Au mépris de tous les appels des Nations Unies, le Royaume-Uni maintient son régime colonial à Oman, aux Fidji et dans d'autres territoires. Les Etats-Unis renforcent leur domination sur Guam, dans les Iles du Pacifique, et ils empêchent le peuple de Porto Rico d'exercer librement son droit à l'indépendance. Les colonialistes exploitent ces territoires exclusivement à leurs propres fins et sans tenir aucun compte des intérêts de la population autochtone. L'analyse des raisons de cet état de choses révèle le rôle important que jouent les intérêts militaires et stratégiques des puissances coloniales qui conservent des bases militaires dans les territoires dépendants.

55. Les Etats-Unis et le Royaume-Uni se préparent à construire un réseau de bases militaires aux Seychelles, dans l'archipel des Chagos et aux Iles Cocos, afin de maintenir leur contrôle dans l'océan Indien. Une situation analogue existe dans le Pacifique où, par exemple, les Etats-Unis se servent de l'île de Guam comme d'une base importante pour la conduite de leur guerre d'agression contre le Viet-nam. Le U.S. News and World Report du 7 août 1967 signale que Guam fait partie du territoire des Etats-Unis et constitue, à ce titre, une base très utilisée par les bombardiers B-52 envoyés au Viet-nam et par les sous-marins nucléaires Polaris, qui patrouillent au Moyen-Orient. C'est aussi un centre logistique important pour les navires de guerre. Guam est une base idéale dans le Pacifique. La publication mentionnée ci-dessus dit encore que les Etats-Unis projettent de développer considérablement leurs bases militaires dans le territoire sous tutelle des Iles du Pacifique et envisagent de détacher les Iles Mariannes de ce groupe, pour les rattacher à Guam, afin de renforcer la structure du dispositif militaire.

56. Il est donc évident que les puissances coloniales sont en train de changer de petits territoires coloniaux en un système de bases militaires et de points stratégiques dont elles n'ont pas l'intention de partir volontairement. C'est là une violation ouverte des résolutions des Nations Unies, qui qualifient l'existence de bases militaires dans les territoires dépendants d'obstacles sérieux à l'application de la Déclaration de 1960 et invitent instamment les puissances coloniales à démanteler leurs bases et installations militaires sur ces mêmes territoires, ainsi qu'à s'abstenir d'en établir de nouvelles.

57. Au cours des délibérations de la Quatrième Commission sur le rôle des monopoles internationaux, les fondements économiques de l'existence même du colonialisme ont été nettement soulignés. La discussion a confirmé les conclusions du travail méritoire du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, qui figurent dans le rapport de celui-ci [A/6868 et Add.1]; elles indiquent comment les monopoles internationaux transforment la sueur et le sang des peuples colonisés en milliards de dollars, de livres et de marks de l'Allemagne de l'Ouest. Les conditions avantageuses du colonialisme permettent aux monopoles de réaliser des bénéfices de deux à trois fois supérieurs au taux de ceux que les investissements produisent dans d'autres parties du monde.

58. Les déclarations hypocrites sur l'aide que le capital apporte aux peuples de ces territoires ne sauraient jamais dissimuler le fait constaté par les conclusions du rapport du Comité des Vingt-Quatre et dans un certain nombre de résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, c'est-à-dire que les monopoles étrangers sont aujourd'hui le bastion des régimes coloniaux et racistes actuels et, qu'en conséquence, leurs activités dans les territoires dépendants y empêchent les peuples d'exercer leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. En outre, les conclusions du Comité des Vingt-Quatre ont montré amplement de quelle manière, en Rhodésie du Sud, les monopoles étrangers opposent un obstacle concret à l'application des sanctions décidées par les Nations Unies. Il est donc normal que notre organisation accorde chaque année plus d'importance à l'activité des monopoles étrangers, qui empêchent la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

59. Depuis peu, la lutte entreprise pour liquider entièrement les restes du système colonial se heurte à une résistance croissante de la part des colonisateurs et des régimes racistes. Ce fait se manifeste aussi dans notre organisation, où les efforts entrepris pour mener rapidement à son terme le processus de décolonisation, au sens de la Déclaration adoptée en 1960, se trouvent dans une impasse. Il est aisé de s'en rendre compte, au premier chef, en constatant que les résolutions adoptées ne sont pas appliquées, mais, dans l'énorme majorité des cas, restent sur le papier. La raison n'en est pas que nous adoptions des décisions erronées, mais qu'elles sont sabotées, sous divers prétextes, par les puissances coloniales et divers autres Etats.

60. Tandis que nous discutons aux Nations Unies, souvent sans résultat, des questions qui se rattachent à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, les peuples de ces territoires, soutenus par les forces progressistes du monde, supportent le poids principal de la lutte pour la liberté. Cependant, ni les actes agressifs des puissances coloniales ni l'aide militaire ou autre apportée aux colonialistes par leurs alliés ne peuvent étouffer le désir d'indépendance des nations. Le mouvement de libération nationale, qui s'est enraciné profondément dans la plupart des territoires soumis à des régimes colonialistes et racistes, devient de plus en plus fort. Dans les territoires où les patriotes sont allés jusqu'à libérer des régions entières, comme par exemple dans les colonies portugaises, les assises d'un nouveau régime, celui d'un Etat, commencent à s'édifier progressivement. Les représentants des peuples en lutte se tournent à bon droit vers les Etats Membres des Nations Unies et notre organisation elle-même, ainsi que vers les institutions spécialisées, pour demander qu'on les aide à chercher la solution de nouveaux problèmes.

61. Nous estimons qu'une situation intenable serait créée pour l'avenir si les colonialistes et les racistes se servaient, comme nous l'avons déjà vu faire, des avantages qui découlent pour eux de l'appartenance à des institutions spécialisées. Il faut trouver sans délai un remède à cette situation. Nous espérons que l'étude menée à bien au cours de cette session de l'Assemblée, sur l'initiative du Gouvernement de la République populaire de Bulgarie, au sujet de l'aide fournie par les institutions spécialisées dans la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, aura conduit à des résultats qui permettront de mieux atteindre ce but.

62. Pour réaliser la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration de 1969, il est nécessaire par-dessus tout que les puissances administrantes et tous les Etats appliquent sans réserve les résolutions des Nations Unies qui se rattachent à cette déclaration. En particulier, il est nécessaire que les Etats-Unis, le Royaume-Uni et la République fédérale d'Allemagne, ainsi que plusieurs autres Etats de la formation militaire de l'OTAN, se mettent à exécuter régulièrement l'ensemble des décisions des Nations Unies qui exigent l'arrêt de toute assistance économique, financière, militaire et autre aux régimes colonialistes et racistes. A notre avis, cela contribuerait de manière décisive à l'heureux achèvement de la lutte entreprise pour éliminer les vestiges du colonialisme.

63. En conclusion de sa déclaration, la délégation tchécoslovaque tient à dire à quel point elle apprécie l'important travail du Comité spécial, qui a déployé des efforts considérables pour assurer le plus rapidement possible l'application de la Déclaration de 1960 et des résolutions qui s'y rattachent dans l'intérêt des peuples colonisés. Le Comité spécial a aussi adopté cette année un certain nombre de recommandations, qui ont constitué le point de départ des délibérations actuelles de l'Assemblée générale. Au cours de son existence, le Comité spécial a vu son autorité s'accroître de façon considérable parmi les Etats Membres de notre organisation. Nous dénonçons résolument les tentatives faites par les colonialistes et leurs alliés pour affaiblir l'autorité du Comité spécial et minimiser ses activités très fructueuses.

64. La délégation de la Tchécoslovaquie estime hautement souhaitable que, l'année prochaine, le Comité spécial s'attache à une vérification complète et détaillée de toutes les résolutions des Nations Unies qui concernent la lutte des nations colonisées. Une telle vérification serait particulièrement utile pour analyser les raisons qui empêchent la mise en œuvre régulière des résolutions qui ont été adoptées.

65. En ce qui concerne la Tchécoslovaquie, les peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine savent que nous avons toujours placé nos sympathies et notre appui du côté des mouvements de libération nationale, du côté des peuples qui luttent contre le colonialisme, le racisme et l'impérialisme.

66. M. SAMMAH (Afghanistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'Assemblée générale discute en ce moment le rapport du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre relatif à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. En tant que membre du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre, l'Afghanistan a apporté sa modeste contribution aux travaux de ce comité; il ne nous est donc pas nécessaire, au point où l'on en est, d'entrer dans une discussion détaillée des questions dont l'Assemblée se trouve saisie sous cette rubrique. Nous aimerions cependant rappeler certains principes que nous avons formulés depuis que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux a été soumise à l'Assemblée générale. Nous désirons le faire à ce moment, car il nous semble nécessaire d'insister sur deux points.

67. Tout d'abord, bien que de nombreux peuples et de nombreuses nations aient accédé à l'indépendance, il existe encore un grand nombre de territoires soumis à une domination étrangère. Dans certains cas, cette domination prend la forme du colonialisme occidental classique et, dans d'autres cas, celle du néo-colonialisme et de l'hégémonie étrangère subie par des peuples contre leur volonté. Nous pensons avoir atteint maintenant un stade où nous sommes en mesure d'exiger l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux avec plus de force, en nous fondant sur la conviction indéniable que partagent tous les membres de la communauté internationale, à l'exception d'un petit nombre de puissances coloniales, qui ne tiennent pas compte des résolutions de notre organisation et qui, par là même, reconnaissent le désir de l'humanité entière, expressément déclaré au sein des Nations Unies. Cela est particulièrement regrettable, car ces mêmes puissances coloniales sont Membres de l'Organisation et le respect des décisions adoptées par celle-ci constitue pour elles à la fois une responsabilité et une obligation.

68. En second lieu, nous estimons que le moment est venu, après les progrès accomplis dans le domaine de la décolonisation, de souligner la nécessité de consacrer une attention particulière au sort des peuples dépendants qui subissent une domination étrangère. Nous n'avons pas ici l'intention d'énumérer des cas particuliers, qui sont bien connus des Membres de l'Organisation. En d'autres termes, c'est maintenant le moment d'envisager et de réaliser l'abolition de la domination étrangère sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

69. Ce n'est pas la première fois que nous attirons l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur cette question. Le 5 décembre 1960, l'ambassadeur Pazhwak, représentant de l'Afghanistan, a déclaré:

"Les peuples du monde et les Nations Unies attachent une grande importance à la nécessité de mettre immédiatement fin au système de domination sur les peuples et les nations, ainsi qu'en fait foi l'intérêt que suscite l'examen de la question aujourd'hui soulevée devant l'Assemblée générale. Je ne crois pas utile de rappeler avec quelle fer-meté mon pays a suivi sa politique traditionnelle et donné son complet appui à l'élimination radicale du système de domination sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Notre attitude en la matière a été non seulement nette, mais énergique." [935ème séance, par. 77.]

70. Au cours de la même séance, il a ajouté:

"En premier lieu, le système que nous voudrions voir immédiatement aboli est la domination de tout peuple par un peuple étranger, sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. En second lieu, l'indépendance ne devrait pas seulement s'appliquer aux territoires habituellement qualifiés de colonies, mais à tous les peuples dépendants. En troisième lieu, l'abolition de la domination par l'octroi de l'indépendance devrait être totale; elle ne peut l'être que si elle a pour objectif d'arrêter à jamais toute tentative de renaissance d'une influence étrangère sur les peuples et les nations lorsqu'ils auront acquis leur indépendance. En quatrième lieu, l'indépendance ne devrait pas signifier uniquement l'indépendance politique, mais être aussi une indépendance économique et culturelle, libérée de toute influence directe ou indirecte ou de toutes pressions, quelles qu'elles soient, exercées sur les peuples et les nations sous quelque forme et quelque prétexte que ce soit. En cinquième lieu, l'application des dispositions de la déclaration devrait être universelle et s'étendre à tous les peuples et territoires non seulement pour la réalisation, mais aussi pour la protection de leur pleine et absolue indépendance, qui ne devrait résulter que de la libre volonté et de la résolution des peuples eux-mêmes, et être soustraite à tout autre influence. [Ibid., par. 81.]

71. Je voudrais rappeler aussi une autre intervention de l'ambassadeur Pazhwak, dans laquelle il disait notamment:

"Nous voudrions que cette indépendance ne s'applique pas seulement aux territoires placés sous la domination des puissances dites coloniales, mais mais également à tous les peuples et pays soumis à une domination quelconque, parce que nous connaissons le cas de peuples que dominent contre leur volonté et contre leur gré certaines puissances qui ont été elles-mêmes des colonies, mais qui oublient leur ancienne condition et étouffent aujourd'hui la volonté des peuples placés sous leur domination." [902ème séance, par. 240.]

72. Nous espérons qu'au cours des futures délibérations de l'Assemblée générale et du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, nous serons en mesure de traiter de ces questions et d'œuvrer en prenant comme point de départ nos aspirations, qui sont en partie des aspirations universelles du genre humain et, en particulier, de ceux que l'on prive de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance sous une forme ou une autre.

73. Nous tenons à évoquer expressément la question de l'envoi des missions de visite des Nations Unies dans les territoires coloniaux ou non autonomes. Ma délégation est persuadée que ces missions aideront les Nations Unies à étudier de façon plus exacte les problèmes de ces territoires et permettront aussi aux peuples qui les habitent de prendre conscience de leur avenir. Ma délégation attache une grande importance à ces visites, qui sont le moyen de recueillir des renseignements de première main et elle insiste auprès des puissances administrantes pour qu'elles coopèrent avec les Nations Unies en rendant possible l'envoi des missions.

74. Cette année, une fois encore, le Comité des Vingt-Quatre s'est rendu dans un certain nombre de capitales africaines. Grâce à ces visites, les membres du Comité ont eu toutes les occasions souhaitables d'entrer plus étroitement en rapport avec la population des territoires dépendants et d'entendre des pétitionnaires qui, par suite de difficultés financières, n'étaient pas en mesure de se rendre à New York. Ma délégation est convaincue que des voyages de cette nature contribuent de manière essentielle à faire connaître les buts des Nations Unies en matière de décolonisation. Qu'il me soit permis de saisir cette occasion et d'adresser mes remerciements les plus sincères aux gouvernements et aux peuples de la République démocratique du Congo, de la République de Zambie et de la République-Unie de Tanzanie pour leur aimable invitation et les efforts qu'ils ont déployés afin de mettre à notre disposition tous les moyens nécessaires au travail du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre.

75. A ce propos, nous tenons à exprimer avec une insistance particulière l'espoir qu'à l'avenir les efforts des Nations Unies pour restituer aux peuples leurs droits légitimes donneront à ces missions d'enquête la possibilité de visiter les territoires qui subissent une domination étrangère contre la volonté de leur population.

76. M. RUDA (Argentine) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Ma délégation intervient tous les ans dans le débat sur le point 23 de l'ordre du jour, intitulé "Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux"; elle y trouve en effet l'occasion de procéder à une appréciation d'ensemble du travail accompli pendant l'année en cours et, plus particulièrement, du rapport du Comité spécial [A/6700/Rev.1].

77. Mon pays suit les problèmes coloniaux avec une attention des plus vigilantes, qui ne s'est pas démentie depuis une époque antérieure à la fondation des Nations Unies; depuis qu'il a lui-même accédé à l'indépendance au siècle dernier, sa politique traditionnelle a toujours été de se joindre aux mouvements destinés à mettre un terme aux agissements colonialistes.

78. C'est pourquoi nous croyons rendre justice à notre organisation en affirmant qu'elle constitue le levier politique principal pour venir à bout du problème de la décolonisation, comme cela se fait actuellement sur plus d'un continent.

79. Dans le cadre du mécanisme des Nations Unies, nous devons reconnaître que le Comité spécial a donné l'impulsion principale pour mener à bien le travail défini par la Charte et par l'Assemblée générale, et qui consiste à aboutir sans tarder à la fin du processus colonial.

80. Le rythme de l'histoire semble parfois lent; néanmoins, l'œuvre que les Nations Unies ont réalisée dans ce domaine au cours des 20 années de son existence a déjà produit de nombreux résultats; il est aujourd'hui possible de dire que les objectifs de la Charte ont été atteints en grande partie à cet égard, surtout depuis l'adoption, en 1960, de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, qui a accéléré toute cette besogne de décolonisation. Comme nous le savons tous, il a fallu adopter cette résolution et compléter ainsi le Chapitre XI de la Charte, qui contient la déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes, afin de mettre en marche une fois pour toutes ce processus irréversible.

81. Sept ans se sont déjà écoulés depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et, bien qu'à l'évidence le nombre des territoires dépendants soit sensiblement plus réduit, la tâche de la décolonisation n'est pas encore achevée et les Nations Unies affrontent même peut-être aujourd'hui des problèmes beaucoup plus difficiles et plus graves qu'à aucun moment des dernières années.

82. Au cours de l'année, nous avons eu la joie de saluer l'indépendance de deux nouveaux pays, le Nauru et la République populaire du Yémen du Sud, dont la demande d'admission aux Nations Unies a reçu l'appui de mon pays il y a quelques jours au Conseil de sécurité et, aujourd'hui, au sein de cette assemblée. Pour le second de ces pays, la République populaire du Yémen du Sud, l'accession à l'indépendance a été longue et difficile. Mon gouvernement espère que ce nouvel Etat pourra jouir de la tranquillité politique et de l'unité nationale et territoriale qui lui permettront de trouver la voie de son développement économique et social.

83. Nous ne saurions passer sous silence le travail magnifique qui a été accompli dans cette affaire par la mission spéciale des Nations Unies pour Aden, sous la présidence de l'ambassadeur du Venezuela, M. Perez Guerrero, qui a mené à bien une tâche ardue, en alliant la fermeté au tact, et qui a permis un aboutissement plus rapide à l'indépendance.

84. Nous espérons assister l'année prochaine à de nouveaux événements encourageants, avec la création de nouveaux Etats qui s'incorporeront à notre communauté internationale. Toutefois, comme je l'ai déjà dit, nous devons constater qu'il existe encore, surtout en Afrique méridionale, des territoires très importants qui sont soumis au régime colonial.

85. Nous devons rappeler, en premier lieu, le problème du Sud-Ouest africain, qui a été l'origine de la convocation de la cinquième session extraordinaire de l'Assemblée générale, au cours du premier semestre de 1967. Pendant cette session extraordinaire, l'Assemblée a adopté la résolution 2248 (S-V), réaffirmant la résolution 2145 (XXI), par laquelle on a mis fin au mandat sur le Sud-Ouest africain et décidé que l'Afrique du Sud ne pouvait invoquer aucun titre pour administrer ce territoire. Mon pays a appuyé avec un intérêt tout particulier la section I de cette résolution 2248 (S-V), qui réaffirme l'intégrité territoriale du Sud-Ouest africain. Comme nous l'avons dit à maintes reprises au sein de cette organisation, l'on ne saurait appliquer sans discrimination le principe de la libre détermination pour en faire le refuge ou la cachette du désir de certaines puissances de perpétuer le statut colonial d'un pays en désintégrant celui-ci. Nous devons rejeter toute tentative qui tendrait à briser, en tout ou en partie, l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale de certains pays où l'on est en train de liquider le régime colonial; c'est ce qu'établit la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée, qui crée le Comité spécial.

86. Par cette même résolution 2248 (S-V), l'Assemblée générale a créé le Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain et le poste de Commissaire des Nations Unies pour ce territoire. Nous sommes sûrs que le mécanisme proposé en vue de l'administration du territoire va constituer un instrument utile pour réaliser les projets de décolonisation et que le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud, après un nouvel examen du problème, pourra collaborer avec l'œuvre des Nations Unies à ce sujet.

87. Au cours de cette année, nous avons également été préoccupés par la situation en Rhodésie du Sud. Au Conseil de sécurité, en décembre 1966, mon pays a appuyé énergiquement la proposition du Gouvernement britannique tendant à appliquer certaines des mesures prévues à l'Article 41 de la Charte, c'est-à-dire celles qui n'impliquent pas l'emploi de la force armée. Mon pays estimait, et il n'a pas changé d'avis, qu'avant de recourir aux moyens ultimes il était bon d'essayer d'appliquer des mesures capables d'aboutir au même résultat, c'est-à-dire le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales, tout en évitant les confrontations armées, dont les conséquences sont absolument imprévisibles. Quant à l'utilisation de la force armée elle-même, mon pays a toujours été en faveur d'une action prudente, ce qui ne signifie pas un manque absolu de fermeté.

88. Les mesures qui ont été adoptées dans la résolution 232 (1966) du Conseil de sécurité, du 16 décembre 1966, sont obligatoires pour tous les Membres des Nations Unies. Cependant, de nombreux pays ne semblent pas avoir mis à exécution les décisions du Conseil de sécurité. Si l'on ne réalise pas un travail en collaboration, je dirai plus, si l'on n'exécute pas les obligations de la Charte, il sera impossible d'aboutir à la solution de ce problème. Cependant, nous devons aussi rappeler, comme nous l'avons dit bien des fois, que la responsabilité principale dans ce domaine incombe à la puissance administrante.

89. La situation des territoires sous administration portugaise, surtout dans la partie méridionale de l'Afrique, préoccupe elle aussi sérieusement ma délégation. L'absence de tout symptôme qui indiquerait au moins le début d'un mouvement dans le sens de l'application des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, où il ne faut voir que le signe d'un courant historique irréversible, et la persistance de la puissance coloniale à s'attacher à une thèse que la communauté internationale d'aujourd'hui ne comprend pas posent un sérieux problème à l'Organisation.

90. Le peuple de mon pays est particulièrement sensible à tous les problèmes coloniaux non seulement parce qu'au XIX^{ème} siècle il a dû effectuer un grand effort pour accéder à l'indépendance par la force des armes, mais aussi parce qu'il existe aujourd'hui une partie bien aimée de son territoire, les îles Malouines, qui reste soumis à l'étranger. Comme l'a déclaré le Ministre des affaires étrangères de mon pays lorsqu'il est intervenu dans le débat général de cette assemblée [A/PV.1569], aucun dessein ne saurait inciter notre peuple à consentir de plus grand sacrifice que l'idée de retrouver, comme dans le passé, le plein exercice de sa souveraineté sur ces îles.

91. Ma délégation a toujours estimé que la décolonisation devait être menée à bien dans tous les pays qui ont été victimes du processus colonial, même lorsqu'une partie de leur territoire a été occupée injustement et par la force et que sa population a été chassée et remplacée par un noyau de colons de la puissance occupante. L'existence de ce différend avec le Royaume-Uni a été reconnue expressément par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 2065 (XX) et dans la déclaration qu'elle a également adoptée le 20 décembre 1966, au cours de la vingt et unième session ordinaire. Dans les deux décisions, l'Organisation recommande aux parties la négociation, comme moyen de résoudre le différend.

92. Conformément à ses traditions internationales durables et respectées, l'Argentine a accepté de recourir aux négociations directes pour résoudre le différend, ce qui constitue en même temps l'exécution de la résolution de l'Organisation. Au cours de l'année dernière, des négociations actives ont été poursuivies entre le Royaume-Uni et l'Argentine au sujet de ce problème. Elles ont permis de réaliser des progrès dans le sens d'un rétrécissement de la zone de désaccord qui subsiste entre les deux gouvernements. Les négociations se poursuivent et l'on se propose ainsi d'aboutir le plus vite possible à une solution pacifique, comme les Nations Unies le recommandent; mon gouvernement espère être en mesure d'informer l'Assemblée de manière détaillée dans un avenir prochain.

93. Je ne voudrais pas conclure sans mettre en relief l'importance de deux résolutions relatives aux problèmes coloniaux, qui ont été approuvées au cours de la présente session. La première, la résolution 2288 (XXII), définit les critères généraux qui devront servir de guide dans le processus économique de la décolonisation, afin de pourvoir à ce que les nouveaux Etats indépendants soient matériellement viables. La deuxième, la résolution 2311 (XXII) qui a été adoptée aujourd'hui, contient des indications générales qui s'adressent aux institutions spécialisées ainsi qu'aux Etats membres de celles-ci et doivent permettre de dispenser une assistance humanitaire aux peuples et aux pays coloniaux dans le domaine de l'éducation, de l'alimentation et de la santé.

94. En définitive, de l'avis de ma délégation, même si tous les problèmes coloniaux n'ont pas encore été résolus et si l'on se rend bien compte que certains d'entre eux ne laissent apparaître aucun signe d'une évolution favorable, la présente session de l'Assemblée générale et l'année qui vient de s'achever marquent un nouveau pas en avant sur la voie d'un mouvement historique qui mène à la liquidation totale du colonialisme.

95. M. MATSEIKO (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) [traduit du russe]: L'essor puissant du mouvement de libération nationale qui a embrasé tous les continents depuis quelques dizaines d'années, en ébranlant le système impérialiste d'oppression coloniale, lui a porté des coups fatals. Plus de 60 nouveaux Etats sont apparus sur les ruines des anciens empires coloniaux. De nombreux pays d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine se sont libérés du joug colonial grâce à la lutte que leurs peuples ont menée avec abnégation, en s'appuyant sur le soutien fraternel et amical de toutes les forces progressistes du monde.

96. Sept années se sont écoulées depuis que notre organisation a publié la déclaration historique où elle lançait un appel pour qu'il soit mis fin résolument et à jamais à la honte du colonialisme, et que tous les peuples sans restriction jouissent de leur droit inaliénable à la liberté et à l'indépendance [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Toutefois, une mise en garde s'impose et il y a lieu d'être préoccupé, car le processus de décolonisation s'est ralenti au cours de ces derniers temps.

97. Aujourd'hui encore, au bout de sept ans, l'Assemblée générale est obligée de débattre de la question de savoir pour quelle raison cette déclaration n'a pas encore été complètement exécutée et des dizaines de millions de personnes restent soumises à la servitude coloniale.

98. Comme les faits le montrent, la raison de ce phénomène réside dans l'opposition impitoyable de l'impérialisme et du colonialisme, qui font tout pour freiner la marche du progrès de l'histoire et maintenir leur domination sur les colonies qui leur restent, car ils ne souhaitent pas abandonner les bénéfices fabuleux que leur rapportent l'exploitation et l'oppression les plus cruelles des peuples coloniaux.

100. Cette situation résulte de la gestion des colonisateurs et du capital des monopoles internationaux, qui exploitent sans merci les peuples et les richesses naturelles du continent africain.

101. L'Afrique australe est le domaine de l'hégémonie sans partage des monopoles impérialistes internationaux. Ceux-ci exercent un contrôle pour ainsi dire exclusif sur l'économie des colonies portugaises, de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain. Sur ces territoires, comme on l'a déjà dit, les investissements des puissances impérialistes s'élèvent à plus de cinq milliards de dollars. Là se déploient des activités des monopoles des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, de l'Angleterre, de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, de la Belgique et d'autres pays capitalistes.

102. La question de l'action des milieux étrangers, économiques ou autres, dans les territoires coloniaux, a d'abord été examinée par la présente session de l'Assemblée générale comme un point distinct de l'ordre du jour. A ce propos, nous voudrions attirer l'attention sur l'important travail analytique qui a été accompli par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre. Le rapport établi par le Comité sur cette question [A/6700/Rev.1] regorge d'un grand nombre de faits et présente un vaste tableau de l'activité rapace des monopoles étrangers, qui se présente comme l'obstacle principal sur le chemin qui conduit les peuples coloniaux à la liberté et à l'indépendance.

103. Nous voudrions aussi relever une importante déclaration du Gouvernement de la République démocratique allemande à ce sujet; elle figure dans le document A/6941; elle dénonce le rôle criminel et hostile au peuple que joue le capital des monopoles d'Allemagne occidentale dans les territoires coloniaux.

104. L'adoption par l'Assemblée générale, à sa présente session, d'une résolution qui condamne l'activité des milieux des monopoles étrangers dans les colonies, qui contient une série de résolutions et qui prévoit la continuation de l'examen de cette question à la prochaine session constitue un important progrès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sur la bonne voie et donne la possibilité d'élaborer des mesures concrètes pour mettre un terme à l'activité criminelle des monopoles étrangers dans les colonies, tout en découvrant de nouvelles manières de lutter contre le colonialisme.

105. Avec l'aide directe des puissances impérialistes et de leurs monopoles, une "alliance des impies" s'est formée en Afrique méridionale; c'est un bastion du colonialisme et un instrument d'oppression des peuples africains. L'impérialisme des colonisateurs veut protéger leurs intérêts politiques, militaires, stratégiques et économiques et s'efforce par tous les moyens de conserver les territoires de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée-Bissau, de la Rhodésie du Sud, du Sud-Ouest africain, qui sont aujourd'hui les principales réserves naturelles du colonialisme. Les peuples de ces pays mènent dans le sacrifice le combat pour leur libération et, à notre avis, le Comité des Vingt-Quatre est tenu de consacrer une attention particulière aux questions que pose l'aide accordée aux peuples de ces territoires.

106. Dans les colonies du Portugal, un ordre de choses vraiment médiéval continue à régner: la pire des terreur, les travaux forcés serviles et l'exploitation sans merci.

107. Le régime de Salazar extermine avec barbarie les autochtones de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée-Bissau. Des milliers de patriotes souffrent dans des camps de concentration, où ils subissent les cruautés de la torture et des traitements indignes.

108. Afin de perpétuer davantage le régime colonial, les pays occidentaux, surtout les membres de l'OTAN et les milieux de leurs monopoles, fournissent toute l'aide possible au Portugal. Environ 60 banques d'Europe et d'Amérique financent aujourd'hui la guerre coloniale du Portugal. Les avions et les chars, les bombes et le napalm, du matériel militaire ultra-moderne de toutes catégories sont fournis aux colonisateurs coloniaux par les Etats-Unis, l'Allemagne de l'Ouest, la Belgique et Israël. Seule cette aide permet au Portugal de garder son empire colonial.

109. En Rhodésie du Sud, un autre membre de "l'alliance des impies", le régime illégal et raciste d'Ian Smith, se renforce avec la bénédiction des Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis et d'autres pays occidentaux. Une poignée d'aventuriers racistes, qui s'est emparée du pouvoir, fait régner l'arbitraire et accomplit ses méfaits dans le pays tant éprouvé du peuple zimbabwe.

110. Deux années se sont écoulées depuis la proclamation de la prétendue indépendance de la Rhodésie du Sud. Depuis lors, nous avons écouté bien des explications et des assurances du Gouvernement anglais sur cette question. Il y a eu des déclarations, des mémoires, et l'on a même fixé des délais pour la chute du régime illégal d'Ian Smith. Cependant, nous en restons toujours au même point.

111. L'explication de cette situation, c'est que, derrière les racistes, il y a les grands monopoles étrangers, qui protègent et renforcent ce régime fasciste. Selon le journal londonien Labour Research, plus de 180 sociétés industrielles et commerciales anglaises disposent en Rhodésie de plus de 290 filiales. La société Rhodesian Anglo-American Limited possède en Rhodésie du Sud des mines de cuivre et des gisements d'or, de diamants, de charbon, etc. Le plus grand propriétaire foncier de Rhodésie du Sud est la British South Africa Company. Ces sociétés étrangères et beaucoup d'autres tirent des bénéfices fabuleux du territoire, se livrent au pillage et s'enrichissent avec la sueur et le sang du peuple zimbabwe. Malgré l'adoption, par le Conseil de sécurité, d'une décision qui prononçait des sanctions, les Etats-Unis, le Royaume-Uni, la République fédérale d'Allemagne et leurs monopoles soutiennent Smith dans le domaine économique et financier.

112. Il y a plus de 20 ans que l'Assemblée générale s'occupe de la question du Sud-Ouest africain. La délégation ukrainienne a déjà eu hier la possibilité d'exposer sa position sur ce problème et je ne vais pas m'étendre sur ce thème en entrant dans les détails. Je voudrais simplement dire que le peuple du Sud-Ouest africain vit encore aujourd'hui dans des conditions que caractérisent la servitude et l'oppression coloniales.

113. Voilà comment les colonisateurs occidentaux, avec les membres bien connus de l'alliance des impies, s'efforcent de sauver le dernier bastion du colonialisme dans le sud de l'Afrique, s'opposent à la libération des peuples de cette région et font fi de la décision de notre organisation.

114. A notre avis, ces exemples devraient suffire pour nous permettre de tirer des conclusions objectives.

115. La plus importante de ces conclusions, c'est que, s'il existe encore dans le monde des régimes coloniaux pourris, qui oppriment féroce ment des millions d'hommes, la responsabilité de ce fait incombe à quelques pays occidentaux. Du haut de la tribune de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ils s'efforcent hypocritement de se présenter comme soi-disant occupés à libérer les peuples des chaînes du colonialisme, mais en réalité ce sont justement ces mêmes puissances dont la politique de soutien des régimes coloniaux rend impossible l'exécution des décisions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et, en particulier, de la résolution 1514 (XV).

116. La tâche de l'Organisation des Nations Unies consiste à créer dans la communauté internationale un climat d'intolérance vis-à-vis des colonisateurs et de mobiliser toutes les forces et toutes les ressources existantes pour mener activement la lutte décisive qui doit liquider une fois pour toutes le honteux système du colonialisme.

117. Dans cette affaire, le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre a un rôle important à jouer.

118. La délégation de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine estime que ce comité a su accomplir un travail considérable et utile au cours de l'année qui s'achève.

119. Nous en trouvons une preuve éloquent e dans le rapport d'un contenu si riche et rempli de faits que ledit Comité a soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée. Il convient aussi de souligner tout particulièrement l'importance des réunions tenues par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre au cours de sa visite dans les pays d'Afrique. Elles ont permis à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de se rapprocher des mouvements de libération nationale et d'établir avec eux des contacts plus étroits, ce qui permettra de remporter de nouveaux succès dans la lutte pour la libération des peuples coloniaux.

120. A cet égard, il me paraît indispensable que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre concentre davantage son attention sur la question de l'application des résolutions qui ont déjà été adoptées par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et qu'il s'attache particulièrement à l'élaboration et à la mise en œuvre de mesures concrètes pour mettre fin à l'activité funeste des monopoles internationaux dans les territoires coloniaux; le Comité devrait aussi s'occuper des problèmes qu'il faut résoudre pour libérer du colonialisme, le plus rapidement possible, l'Angola, le Mozambique, la Guinée-Bissau, la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain, dont les peuples luttent, les armes à la main, pour la libération nationale.

121. Cette année encore, les discussions ont montré de manière convaincante que les forces de l'impérialisme et du colonialisme se servent des petits territoires coloniaux pour établir un système mondial de bases militaires, qui doivent permettre de maintenir sur place la domination coloniale, d'écraser les mouvements de libération nationale dans les différentes parties du globe terrestre et de lancer des provocations contre les Etats indépendants d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine. L'existence de ces bases sur des territoires coloniaux fait obstacle à la mise en œuvre de la résolution 1514 (XV). Aussi le Comité des Vingt-Quatre doit-il, à notre avis, se consacrer très sérieusement à ce problème. Il doit exiger que les colonisateurs liquident leurs bases militaires dans les territoires coloniaux et en retirent leurs troupes.

122. Il est également nécessaire que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre soumette à la prochaine session ordinaire de l'Assemblée générale un rapport sur les progrès accomplis dans l'application des résolutions adoptées en matière coloniale par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et qu'il présente en même temps une analyse concrète des raisons qui s'opposent à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

123. L'année qui vient de s'écouler a été marquée par le combat acharné des peuples contre les forces du colonialisme. Cette lutte a porté ses fruits. Nous saluons aujourd'hui avec une grande satisfaction un nouveau Membre de l'organisation des Nations Unies, la République populaire du Yémen du Sud, dont la population a conquis de haute main la liberté et l'indépendance. Dans un mois, la population du Nauru va être indépendante à son tour.

124. Nous sommes certains que l'année prochaine, qui va bientôt commencer, nous apportera en grand nombre les succès et les victoires sur les fronts du combat contre le colonialisme. Les Nations Unies ont le devoir de tout mettre en œuvre pour collaborer à la noble entreprise de la libération des peuples du système colonial.

125. M. BOYE (Chili) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Ce débat marque toujours un moment de réflexion et sert à établir un bilan. Un temps de réflexion, parce que la communauté internationale se livre à l'examen d'une de ses décisions les plus importantes, c'est-à-dire la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, relative à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

126. Cette résolution ne le cède en rien à d'autres, notamment à celle qui porte le numéro 2131 (XX), qui a marqué une étape importante dans les relations entre les Etats en réaffirmant solennellement le principe de la non-intervention, et elle proclame dans les termes les plus catégoriques l'intérêt vital que présente pour les nations et les peuples coloniaux l'exercice de leur droit à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance. Les Nations Unies démontrent ainsi sa façon ferme et inébranlable de lutter pour un monde plus juste et mieux organisé, où la paix et la concorde règnent entre les peuples.

127. Comme je l'ai dit au début de mon intervention, ce débat marque aussi le moment d'établir un bilan, parce qu'il permet de procéder à une évaluation globale du processus de décolonisation. Au cours des dernières années, on a constaté de remarquables progrès qui ont eu des répercussions considérables sur la politique internationale et, par voie de conséquence, au sien de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Cette année, nous sommes heureux de souhaiter la bienvenue à un nouvel Etat indépendant, la République populaire du Yémen du Sud, qui est entré ce matin même aux Nations Unies en qualité de Membre. Nous saluons en un tel jour ce peuple courageux et nous lui souhaitons la paix et la prospérité.

128. D'autre part, le bilan dont nous avons parlé révèle un solde négatif, que nous avons le devoir de dénoncer. Des foyers de résistance à la décolonisation subsistent encore ouvertement et l'on ne saurait en dissimuler la gravité. Ces foyers se développent avec une intensité particulière dans la partie australe méridionale du continent africain. C'est avec réalisme et avec regret que nous constatons qu'il faudra encore beaucoup de temps pour aboutir au règlement qui mettra fin à la situation actuelle de cette partie du globe. Ainsi, nos débats à la Quatrième Commission se sont-ils enrichis de thèmes nouveaux, notamment celui des activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui empêchent l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, ou celui de l'application des dispositions de cette déclaration par les organisations internationales et les institutions spécialisées liées aux Nations Unies.

129. Mon pays suit avec sympathie tous les efforts de nature à parfaire la politique de décolonisation définie en termes particuliers par la Déclaration qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale.

130. A mesure que des pays et des peuples coloniaux accèdent à l'indépendance en nombre croissant, on distingue mieux les situations particulièrement difficiles et les résistances acharnées. Comme nous l'avons indiqué, la première place est occupée dans ce tableau par la situation extrêmement grave qui caractérise la totalité du cône sud de l'Afrique. Il est incontestable que cette situation menace la paix et la sécurité internationales. L'Assemblée générale, pour sa part, l'a reconnu dans nombre de résolutions, de même que le Conseil de sécurité, c'est-à-dire l'organe que la Charte des Nations Unies a chargé de déterminer l'existence d'une menace contre la paix, d'une rupture de la paix, ou d'un acte d'agression.

131. Dans cette région, les éléments les plus caractéristiques du colonialisme s'associent aux méthodes de la ségrégation raciale, de la répression et de l'injustice sociale. La politique de l'apartheid, imposée par le Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine, constitue la forme la plus raffinée de l'oppression.

132. Les puissances administrantes et les pays qui appliquent l'apartheid, ou qui apportent leur appui à son application par leurs actions ou leurs omissions, se chargent d'une lourde responsabilité devant la communauté internationale. Si celle-ci n'adopte pas une attitude plus énergique et positive, les obstacles qui retardent la libération des grandes masses africaines encore opprimées ne cesseront de s'accumuler et contribueront sans cesse davantage à aggraver une situation déjà tendue.

133. En quelques mots, je voudrais indiquer ici certains principes que mon gouvernement considère comme essentiels pour accélérer le processus de la décolonisation. En premier lieu, nous attachons une importance fondamentale à toute l'œuvre que les Nations Unies accomplissent, par l'intermédiaire de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine, pour aider les mouvements de libération. Il faut intensifier cette action, car elle est le moyen de progresser, dans le sérieux et la responsabilité, vers la libération finale des peuples qui subissent encore la domination coloniale.

134. En second lieu, nous pensons que l'existence de bases militaires sur les territoires coloniaux oppose un obstacle réel à la libération des peuples qui y vivent; nous voudrions que les puissances administrantes fassent tout ce qui est en leur pouvoir pour démanteler les installations existantes et s'abstiennent évidemment d'en établir de nouvelles dans les territoires soumis à leur administration; elles coopéreront de cette manière au processus de la décolonisation.

135. En troisième lieu, nous estimons que l'Assemblée générale devrait accorder une attention particulière au problème des petits territoires. Un certain nombre de résolutions ont déjà insisté sur ce point et nous sommes persuadés que ce problème complexe devra être examiné dans un proche avenir avec toute l'attention qu'il mérite, comme l'a indiqué le Secrétaire général U Thant dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel sur les travaux de l'Organisation. Il a déclaré:

"Il est bien entendu parfaitement légitime que les territoires même les plus petits, dans l'exercice de leur droit de libre détermination, accèdent à l'indépendance par l'application effective de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Mais il semble bon d'établir une distinction entre le droit à l'indépendance et le statut intégral de Membre de l'Organisation. Ce statut risque, d'une part, d'imposer aux "micro-Etats" des obligations trop lourdes et, d'autre part, de conduire à un affaiblissement de l'Organisation elle-même." [A/6701/Add.1, par. 164.]

136. Aux termes de l'Article 4 de la Charte, les Etats qui veulent devenir Membres des Nations Unies doivent être non seulement pacifiques, mais aussi, au jugement de l'Organisation, capables de remplir les obligations de la Charte et disposés à le faire. Nous approuvons ces critères essentiels.

137. Cela nous amène à la quatrième et dernière observation que nous désirons présenter. Nous pensons que l'Assemblée générale doit demander aux puissances administrantes d'accueillir les visites des missions des Nations Unies dans les territoires soumis à leur administration.

138. Au cours des dernières années, nous avons pu constater des exemples favorables, qui servent d'illustration à notre façon de voir. Dans le Pacifique, la Nouvelle-Zélande a coopéré tout particulièrement avec les Nations Unies. Puissent les autres puissances suivre son exemple. L'Espagne, elle aussi, mérite nos félicitations. L'indépendance prochaine de la Guinée équatoriale, que nous attendons tous avec impatience, sera due en grande partie à la compréhension qui s'est manifestée entre les Etats Membres sur les problèmes véritables qui en suspendaient l'événement. Le Sous-Comité qui a visité la Guinée équatoriale a formulé un certain nombre de recommandations, qui ont servi de guide à l'Assemblée. Nous croyons sincèrement qu'il faut intensifier la coopération entre les puissances administrantes et les Nations Unies dans ce domaine si important.

139. Pour terminer, je souhaiterais formuler une idée que j'ai déjà eu l'occasion de verser aux débats de la Quatrième Commission: le Chili fait partie du Comité des Vingt-Quatre et il appuie fermement la politique de décolonisation des Nations Unies, car les principes en jeu sont les mêmes qu'il y a 150 ans, le jour où ils permirent d'édifier sa propre indépendance.

140. Lord CARADON (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Pendant les sept dernières années, j'ai eu bien souvent l'occasion de parler de la question dont nous sommes maintenant saisis, au Conseil de tutelle, dans les commissions des Nations Unies et au sein de cette assemblée.

141. Au cours de cette période de sept années, 19 autres pays autrefois sous administration britannique ont accédé à l'indépendance et tous sont maintenant représentés ici dans l'Assemblée. Le chiffre total de la population de ces pays s'élève à près de 50 millions.

142. Depuis le début de l'année dernière, cinq autres territoires britanniques sont devenus indépendants. Deux de plus les rejoindront d'ici à notre prochaine session. Cinq autres ont été décolonisés par l'exercice de leur faculté de s'administrer eux-mêmes et une association volontaire avec le Royaume-Uni.

143. Ainsi le progrès continue sans interruption et nous avons maintenant pratiquement achevé cette tâche historique de conversion d'une empire assujéti en un libre Commonwealth. En moins d'un quart de siècle, un quart de la population mondiale, autrefois sous administration britannique, a accédé à l'indépendance. Maintenant plus de 99 p. 100 des habitants du Commonwealth, c'est-à-dire plus de 700 millions d'hommes, sont devenus des citoyens dans des nations libres. C'est là, à n'en pas douter, l'un des événements marquants de notre génération et l'une des principales réussites de ce siècle. En outre, cette transformation s'est effectuée pour une grande part dans la paix et la coopération.

144. Pour l'écrasante majorité des Etats qui ont débouché de l'autorité britannique en accédant à l'indépendance, la transformation s'est faite non pas dans la division et le conflit, mais dans l'union et l'accord. Dans presque tous les territoires britanniques, l'indépendance a été acquise à l'apogée d'années de coopération et de préparation sur la base du suffrage des adultes, des parlements libres, des tribunaux indépendants et de la création d'écoles et d'universités. Certes, nous avons commis bien des erreurs, mais nous avons été constamment guidés par les principes de la consultation et du consentement. Nous nous acquitterons des responsabilités qui nous restent par les mêmes méthodes et guidés par les mêmes principes. Nous franchirons les étapes futures comme les étapes passées. Nous ne nous déroberons pas devant nos responsabilités et nous ne pouvons pas les partager. Nous conduirons les territoires dépendants dont nous sommes encore responsables à une indépendance honorable par la libre détermination.

145. Je suis moi-même en mesure de parler de ces questions avec une certaine expérience. Pendant de nombreuses années, en Arabie, en Afrique, et dans les Indes occidentales, j'ai travaillé avec des Arabes, des Africains et des Antillais, à établir des systèmes de libre gouvernement et à élaborer des constitutions en vue de l'indépendance. En même temps, j'ai travaillé avec les habitants des territoires dans lesquels m'appelaient mes fonctions pour réaliser des progrès sur la voie de développement économique, afin que l'indépendance, lorsque son heure viendrait, soit renforcée par la perspective d'une prospérité croissante. Tous les pays dans lesquels j'ai servi sont maintenant indépendants.

146. Nous n'avons certes jamais prétendu que les problèmes auxquels ces pays se heurtaient pouvaient tous être résolus à l'avance. Il en est dont il vaut mieux s'occuper après l'indépendance qu'avant. Ce que nous prétendons, c'est que nous nous sommes efforcés de donner aux pays du Commonwealth lors de leur accession à l'indépendance un bon départ dans la liberté. Nul ne pourra nous ôter ce glorieux état de services.

147. Compte tenu de cette expérience, je dois admettre qu'en lisant certains des discours prononcés ici et, surtout, certaines des interventions des membres du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, j'éprouve les plus grandes difficultés à reconnaître le tableau qu'ils présentent du processus de la décolonisation. J'ai le regret de dire que c'est bien souvent une image déformée. Souvent même il s'agit d'une image qui ne ressemble en rien à la réalité.

148. Nous aurions pu espérer qu'à l'heure où nous approchons de la fin du colonialisme il aurait été possible de travailler dans la bonne intelligence et le respect mutuel avec ceux qui représentent maintenant les nouveaux Etats aux Nations Unies. Nous espérons pouvoir le faire, afin d'appliquer les leçons du passé aux problèmes qui subsistent encore et qui, bien que relativement plus exigus, n'en sont pas moins les plus compliqués et les plus difficiles. Je constate avec regret que cette coopération, ce respect mutuel, font trop souvent défaut. Trop souvent les discours que j'entends et les discours que je lis sont la répétition de slogans périmés et d'erreurs idéologiques.

149. Nous n'attendons pas de compréhension de la part des pays qui n'ont aucune expérience du gouvernement libre. Ce ne sont pas des experts de l'affranchissement. Ils n'ont aucune expérience de l'émancipation. Cependant nous pouvons avec quelque raison attendre de la compréhension de la part des représentants de nouvelles nations. La plupart d'entre eux, j'en suis certain, comprennent fort bien les impératifs et les méthodes du progrès vers l'indépendance. Ils comprennent aussi que les rares territoires coloniaux encore dépendants n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance pour des raisons particulières, découlant souvent de la nécessité de surmonter des difficultés spéciales, comme le manque de ressources, l'exiguïté, l'éloignement géographique et, dans certains cas, les divisions raciales. Sans ces problèmes particuliers, ces pays eux aussi seraient devenus indépendants il y a bien longtemps.

150. Il subsiste certains malentendus et je me demande pourquoi. Je crois qu'ils s'expliquent par trois raisons principales. Tout d'abord, il y a la confusion entre les problèmes coloniaux, d'une part, et les problèmes raciaux, de l'autre. Deuxièmement, il y a la supposition erronée que les relations entre un peuple colonial et l'autorité administrante doivent nécessairement prendre la forme d'une querelle et d'un conflit. Troisièmement, il y a l'illusion trop facile que, malgré leur complication, les problèmes coloniaux non encore résolus peuvent l'être tous par la décolonisation immédiate, sans tenir compte des circonstances propres à chaque affaire.

151. Une grande partie de notre temps, au Comité des Vingt-Quatre, à la Quatrième Commission et au sein de cette assemblée, est naturellement consacrée aux problèmes de l'Afrique méridionale. Nous voyons les forces du nationalisme africain au nord du fleuve Zambèze et les forces de la suprématie blanche au sud de ce fleuve se faire face et s'affronter. Cet affrontement crée, j'en suis persuadé depuis longtemps, l'un des plus grands périls du monde, le péril d'un conflit racial, qui embraserait toute l'Afrique et s'étendrait au monde entier. Je ne me plains pas de ce que l'attention se fixe sur ce problème menaçant. J'ai constaté que l'ambassadeur de Tanzanie lui consacrait la plus grande partie de son discours [1627ème séance] et la plupart de ses remarques sur la gravité de cette question m'ont paru fondées. Je me bornerai maintenant à dire qu'il est de la plus grande importance que nous reconnaissions honnêtement ce que nous pouvons faire et ce que nous ne pouvons pas faire encore et que nous nous efforcions de prendre des dispositions dans les limites de nos compétences indiscutables. Nous commettrions une très grave erreur, nous encouragerions ceux qui maintiennent la suprématie blanche et nous affaiblirions les Nations Unies si nous nous persuadions que des résolutions vides de sens peuvent tenir lieu d'action efficace.

152. Ce que je voudrais souligner maintenant, c'est que les problèmes de l'Afrique méridionale ne sont pas des problèmes coloniaux: ce sont des problèmes raciaux. La Rhodésie n'a jamais été une colonie en ce sens qu'elle a été administrée par la Grande-Bretagne. Elle s'administre elle-même depuis plus de 40 ans. Le centre de l'injustice raciale, la République sud-africaine, est un Etat souverain et indépendant depuis plus longtemps encore. S'il s'était agi là de problèmes coloniaux, ils auraient été beaucoup plus faciles à résoudre. C'est parce qu'il s'agit de problèmes raciaux que les difficultés et les dangers sont si grands. Cela ne peut nous servir à rien, ni nous aider à trouver des solutions d'omettre d'établir la distinction entre, d'une part, le colonialisme, qui touche heureusement à sa fin, et, d'autre part, la domination raciale, qui constitue encore, à mon avis, le plus grave de tous les dangers qui menacent le monde.

153. La seconde erreur dont j'ai parlé, c'est la supposition erronée selon laquelle un peuple colonial doit toujours être en conflit avec la puissance administrante. Sur ce point, je peux prendre l'exemple des Fidji. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre ne tient aucun compte des preuves nombreuses qui établissent qu'une grande partie de l'opinion, aux Fidji, désire établir par ses propres moyens et le moment venu le cadre de la coopération et de la bonne entente entre les races. Il n'est pas question d'une lutte pour l'indépendance. Il n'y a pas de conflit entre la population et la puissance administrante. Au contraire, nous agissons à Fidji, comme ailleurs, sur la base des principes bien établis de la consultation et du consentement. Cependant, le Comité recommence chaque année à formuler l'exigence rigide d'une indépendance immédiate et fait appel au Royaume-Uni pour qu'il rase en une journée toutes les assises de l'édifice que les habitants eux-mêmes ont commencé d'édifier avec soin, dans un effort commun d'entente et de coopération raciales.

154. De même, en ce qui concerne les Etats associés des Antilles, le Comité a refusé de reconnaître et de respecter les vœux librement exprimés par la population. Depuis le début de cette année, les Etats associés sont devenus des entités autonomes au sein d'une association libre et volontaire avec la Grande-Bretagne, à laquelle ils peuvent mettre fin à tout moment, par une libre décision de leur part. Néanmoins, le Comité ne semble pas avoir compris l'importance de cette nouvelle expérience dans le domaine de l'idée d'autodétermination et n'avoir même pas reconnu, ni respecté, le vote unanime des parlements élus de chacun des territoires intéressés. De nombreux mois après l'établissement du nouveau statut autonome de ces territoires, et après qu'ils eurent pris leur place légitime parmi les peuples émancipés du monde, le Comité des Vingt-Quatre s'est donné en spectacle de manière ridicule en exigeant que la Grande-Bretagne leur permette d'exercer leur droit à la libre détermination.

155. Le Comité nous a donné un autre exemple éloquent de partialité lorsqu'il a fait sienne la doctrine étonnante selon laquelle les pétitions doivent être étouffées et leur distribution interdite si elles renferment des critiques à l'adresse d'un pays qui n'est plus une puissance administrante, mais elles doivent être accueillies et publiées sur le champ si elles critiquent ou insultent la puissance administrante.

156. Ce sont ces exemples de partialité qui compromettent tant la réputation du Comité et qui font tant de mal à la réputation des Nations Unies dans leur ensemble.

157. Je passe au troisième malentendu, qui consiste à croire que la décolonisation immédiate, quelles que soient les circonstances, signifie nécessairement l'accroissement de la liberté. A un autre moment de la séance d'aujourd'hui, nous avons discuté la question de Gibraltar. La population de Gibraltar exerce les droits essentiels de la liberté de parole, de réunion et d'association. Elle a des partis politiques libres et elle jouit de la liberté syndicale, du droit d'exprimer son dissentiment, du suffrage universel et du scrutin secret. Plus d'un pays indépendant ne peut pas en dire autant. De plus, la population de Gibraltar a le droit de manifester ses propres opinions et de faire respecter ses propres désirs. Conformément aux principes du Chapitre XI de la Charte, la primauté de ses intérêts est reconnue. Néanmoins, nous avons assisté au spectacle étrange d'un comité chargé de la mise en œuvre de la décolonisation qui déclarait que l'on ne devait ni entendre la voix du peuple ni tenir compte de ses désirs.

158. Malgré ces erreurs, le progrès des territoires coloniaux dont la Grande-Bretagne est responsable se poursuit. L'année prochaine, avant notre prochaine session, l'île Maurice et le Souaziland doivent atteindre aussi la plénitude de l'indépendance et de la souveraineté. A part les cas spéciaux de la Rhodésie du Sud et de Hong-kong, il va rester à peine un million de personnes dans des territoires encore soumis à l'administration britannique, à peine un million, alors que plus de 700 millions sont déjà passés de l'autorité du Royaume-Uni à l'indépendance.

159. Je voudrais qu'en traitant maintenant des territoires coloniaux, rares et dispersés, qui ne sont pas encore autonomes, nous puissions compter sur l'état d'esprit de coopération et le sens des responsabilités de tous ceux que la question concerne ici, aux Nations Unies. Toutefois, alors que les quelques problèmes coloniaux qui subsistent deviennent plus complexes, les solutions recommandées par le Comité deviennent plus frustes. A mesure que les objectifs se raréfient, le tir se dérègle. A mesure que le Comité porte moins de responsabilités, il manque davantage de sérieux.

160. Lorsque j'entends proférer des outrages et des insultes à l'adresse de ceux d'entre nous qui se consacrent à la tâche sérieuse consistant à mettre fin au colonialisme une fois pour toutes, je suis réconforté par les commentaires des dirigeants responsables au nombre desquels figurent plusieurs personnalités avec qui j'ai eu le privilège de travailler pendant de nombreuses années pour résoudre les problèmes pratiques de la décolonisation.

161. Je me souviens du jour où, au Conseil de tutelle, j'étais assis à côté de M. Julius Nyerere, aujourd'hui Président de la République-Unie de Tanzanie, peu de temps avant l'accession du Malawi à l'indépendance. Voici ce qu'il a déclaré:

"On m'a souvent demandé pourquoi cette transition vers l'indépendance s'était faite avec si peu de heurts au Tanganyika. Je suis persuadé qu'il existe de nombreuses raisons pour cela. Mais la raison capitale est le fait que nous soyons un territoire sous tutelle sous administration britannique... Trois éléments étaient nécessaires pour que ces objectifs puissent être atteints sans heurts... un Conseil de tutelle qui assume ses responsabilités avec sérieux et probité... une Autorité administrante qui soit sensible à l'opinion publique mondiale... un peuple uni et déterminé à obtenir l'indépendance... Je rends hommage à mes amis britanniques, dont nous avons exploité la sensibilité à l'opinion publique mondiale plus d'une fois, tant aux Nations Unies qu'en dehors^{4/}."

162. Ainsi s'exprimait celui qui est maintenant le Président de la Tanzanie. C'est sur des preuves de ce genre que nous nous appuyons et ce sont là les preuves qui nous donnent confiance dans notre détermination de mener à bien notre tâche sans faillir.

163. M. RAKOTOMALALA (Madagascar): Voici sept ans que l'Assemblée générale a proclamé solennellement la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Depuis lors, son application a fait, chaque année, l'objet d'un point spécial et distinct de l'ordre du jour de notre assemblée. Madagascar a l'honneur d'être membre du Comité des Vingt-Quatre depuis sa création et, à ce titre, la question du colonialisme est une de celles sur lesquelles la délégation malgache s'est penchée avec le plus de conscience. Elle a participé à toutes les réunions tenues aussi bien à New York qu'en Afrique.

^{4/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, seizième session, Supplément No 4 (A/4818), chap. 6, par. 24.

164. Au cours de la dernière décennie, plusieurs nouveaux Etats indépendants ont été libérés du joug du colonialisme. Toutefois, malgré les efforts déployés par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et ses divers organes, des millions d'êtres humains continuent d'être soumis à la domination coloniale.

165. Conscients de la gravité du problème colonial dans son ensemble, le Gouvernement et le peuple malgaches estiment que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Madagascar, pour sa part, apportera sa contribution à la lutte menée pour faire disparaître les derniers vestiges du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations et sous toutes ses formes.

166. Nous sommes de l'avis de ceux qui pensent que quelques puissances n'ont pas suffisamment œuvré pour faciliter la tâche du Comité spécial dans sa recherche des moyens appropriés en vue d'assurer rapidement l'application de la déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV). D'autres Etats se montrent plus ou moins réticents pour mettre en œuvre les résolutions pertinentes des Nations Unies. Les puissances administrantes doivent bien se pénétrer de l'idée qu'elles ont la charge d'une haute mission qui est d'assurer la prospérité des territoires qui leur sont confiés. Les dispositions de la Charte stipulent que l'administration doit être faite uniquement dans l'intérêt des peuples et non dans celui de l'autorité administrante; d'ailleurs l'Article 73 affirme le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires colonisés.

167. Cependant, par exemple sur la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, ma délégation espère qu'une solution efficace sera bientôt trouvée pour amener le régime rebelle, illégal et minoritaire de Salisbury à la raison et pour restaurer la légalité constitutionnelle. Les droits des peuples opprimés du Zimbabwe ne doivent pas être méconnus par le régime d'Ian Smith, fondé sur la primauté raciale. Tous les peuples épris de paix doivent unir leurs efforts pour se conformer aux résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et à celles du Conseil de sécurité.

168. Le Gouvernement et le peuple malgaches sont contre le racisme et désapprouvent donc la politique d'apartheid appliquée en Afrique du Sud. Madagascar est solidaire de tous les Etats africains dans leurs efforts pour que le racisme soit combattu partout où il existe.

169. A l'occasion de la Journée internationale pour l'élimination de la discrimination raciale, mon chef d'Etat, Philibert Tsiranana, s'est adressé à la nation en ces termes:

"L'apartheid est non seulement une injustice profonde, mais encore un régime qui prive ses victimes de tout espoir de se libérer de l'oppression sans une mobilisation de l'opinion internationale et sans une action internationale. C'est pourquoi nous, Malgaches, nous solidarisons avec les Nations Unies pour favoriser l'élimination du racisme et faciliter l'édification, surtout en Afrique, d'une société non raciale basée sur l'égalité de tous quant aux droits de l'homme et aux libertés fondamentales."

170. En ce qui concerne le Sud-Ouest africain, ma délégation estime que la République sud-africaine n'a plus aucun droit sur ce territoire. Le mandat qui lui a été confié est terminé. De toute façon, ce gouvernement n'est pas compétent pour modifier unilatéralement le statut du Sud-Ouest africain.

171. Ma délégation a voté en faveur de la résolution [2145 (XXI)] mettant fin au mandat de la République sud-africaine sur le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain.

172. Nous déplorons l'arrestation de 37 ressortissants du Sud-Ouest africain ainsi que leur emprisonnement et leur mise en jugement par le Gouvernement de Pretoria, faits qui, aux yeux de ma délégation, constituent une violation du statut international du territoire et de la résolution 2145 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale. Nous souhaitons que l'Afrique du Sud, devant le sursaut de la conscience universelle, renonce à son comportement actuel dans cette triste affaire.

173. Ma délégation confirme également notre position pour ce qui est des territoires sous administration portugaise. La politique coloniale de Lisbonne, fondée sur la force, ne doit plus continuer. Il doit y être mis fin. Ce n'est pas en défiant l'opinion mondiale que le Portugal réussira à régler la question de ce qu'il persiste à appeler "les provinces portugaises sur le sol africain".

174. Pour ce qui est du problème de la décolonisation en général, ma délégation partage l'idée selon laquelle l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait accorder le maximum d'attention aux petits territoires. En effet, au cours de l'année 1967, on a enregistré quelques remous dans les régions des Antilles et du Pacifique. Il faudrait, de l'avis de ma délégation, que les puissances administrantes puissent, de concert avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies et ses institutions spécialisées, accroître les moyens de formation culturelle, administrative et technique dont l'insuffisance risque de freiner le processus classique de la décolonisation. Il faudrait également que l'opinion publique soit informée de toutes les possibilités qui s'offrent à elle, afin de lui permettre de se prononcer librement sur son statut futur au moyen de référendums organisés sous les auspices des Nations Unies et selon le principe démocratique "à chacun une voix".

175. Une autre solution serait également de permettre aux petits territoires qui, pour l'instant, ne sont pas dans une situation économiquement viable, de s'associer à un Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats de leur choix, sous forme de fédération ou de confédération, avec l'appui des Nations Unies. Ma délégation estime que cela pourrait répondre de façon concrète aux objectifs de la Charte et de la déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV).

176. Au cours des délibérations du Comité des Vingt-Quatre et des sous-comités subsidiaires de ce dernier, la majorité des délégations ont mis l'accent sur la nécessité de missions de visite des Nations Unies dans les petits territoires non autonomes des Antilles, de l'océan Indien et de l'océan Pacifique. Je suis sûr que la majorité des délégations reconnaîtront que ces missions de visite présentent un intérêt indiscutable; en effet, elles permettent d'obtenir des renseignements d'une valeur inappréciable sur la situation exacte dans ces territoires et de connaître sur place l'opinion, la volonté et les aspirations des habitants quand elles ne se sont pas encore manifestées par des moyens légaux.

177. Ici, je voudrais lancer un appel aux diverses puissances administrantes afin qu'elles puissent aider le Comité spécial à s'acquitter des lourdes tâches qui lui ont été confiées par l'Assemblée générale, en lui offrant pleine et entière assistance pour la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

178. Je ne voudrais pas terminer sans rendre hommage aux efforts déployés par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre au cours de l'année 1967, et j'espère que l'Assemblée générale continuera de lui fournir tous les moyens dont elle dispose pour la réussite aussi rapide que possible de sa mission.

179. C'est avec une grande satisfaction que je salue ici, au nom de la République malgache, l'indépendance de la République populaire du Yémen du Sud et son admission à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Quelle meilleure récompense de nos efforts que cette éclatante consécration, cette preuve que nos efforts n'ont pas été vains. Au nouvel Etat, nous adressons nos félicitations et nos vœux de bonheur et de prospérité.

180. Dans quelques semaines, au moins deux nouveaux Etats, Nauru et l'île Maurice, vont accéder à l'indépendance et demanderont leur admission dans notre Organisation. D'ores et déjà nous nous en réjouissons et formons le souhait que Nauru et l'île Maurice poursuivent paisiblement et heureusement leur marche vers le progrès.

181. J'ai déclaré, à maintes reprises, du haut de cette tribune, que la question coloniale n'est pas une question uniquement africaine mais doit intéresser tous les Etats, grands et petits. C'est dans cette optique que nous devons agir loyalement, courageusement afin de hâter l'avènement d'un avenir où les peuples encore sous domination coloniale pourront exercer leur droit inaliénable à la liberté, à l'indépendance et à la dignité.

La séance est levée à 17 h 50.

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite*)

43. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie, qui désire présenter le projet de résolution distribué sous la cote A/L.541.

44. M. MALECELA (République-Unie de Tanzanie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Avant de présenter le projet de résolution A/L.541, je tiens à informer l'Assemblée que la Yougoslavie doit être considérée comme l'un de ses auteurs initiaux.

45. C'est la délégation tanzanienne qui a ouvert le débat sur la question de la décolonisation. Dès le début de mon exposé, j'ai même souligné le peu de chemin qui avait été parcouru sur la voie de la décolonisation et combien il restait à faire dans ce domaine, à l'égard des derniers territoires coloniaux. Je me suis également efforcé de dégager les raisons pour lesquelles cette question ne progresse pas aussi rapidement qu'elle le devrait, en signalant certains des obstacles qui s'opposent à sa solution.

46. Si l'on considère la complexité de la situation, si l'on songe au nombre de territoires en cause et à la multiplicité des problèmes qui se posent, on comprendra certainement que ce projet de résolution soit peut-être l'un des plus longs que cette assemblée pourra adopter. Je me permets cette simple remarque parce que le dispositif du projet comporte 22 paragraphes.

47. Au nom de ses auteurs, la délégation tanzanienne a donc l'honneur de présenter ce projet. Je n'importunerai pas l'Assemblée avec la lecture de tous les paragraphes du préambule et je n'ai pas davantage l'intention de reprendre le détail de son dispositif, pour la simple raison qu'il est identique à celui des autres résolutions que nous avons adoptées au sujet de la décolonisation. Je tiens cependant à insister sur certains paragraphes que je considère de la plus haute importance. En premier lieu, je voudrais appeler l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le paragraphe 6 du dispositif de ce projet qui est libellé comme suit:

"Réaffirme qu'elle reconnaît la légitimité de la lutte que les peuples coloniaux mènent pour l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, et note avec satisfaction les progrès accomplis dans les territoires coloniaux par les mouvements de libération nationale tant par la lutte qu'ils mènent que par la mise en œuvre de programmes de relèvement, et prie instamment tous les Etats de leur apporter une aide morale et matérielle".

48. J'ai insisté sur l'importance de ce paragraphe parce que la plupart des auteurs estiment nécessaire que la communauté internationale joue efficacement son rôle en matière de décolonisation. Je sais certes que la légitimité de la lutte des combattants de la liberté a été reconnue au cours de précédentes sessions de l'Assemblée. Toutefois, comme c'est là un principe fondamental en matière de décolonisation, les auteurs du projet de résolution ont estimé qu'il y avait lieu de le répéter. Je tiens, bien sûr, à insister tout particulièrement sur la dernière partie de ce paragraphe où tous les Etats sont invités à apporter une aide morale et matérielle aux combattants de la liberté. Ces mots, certes, seraient vides de sens si les membres de cette communauté internationale que représente l'ONU se bornaient à répéter qu'ils soutiennent les mouvements en faveur de la liberté. Si nous devons continuer à affirmer que nous sommes partisans de la démocratie dans le monde — ce que nous avons dit est en fait ce que pensent de nombreuses délégations représentées ici —, il est alors capital que la communauté internationale vienne en aide à ceux qui luttent contre les régimes d'oppression et contre les régimes racistes — ceux d'Afrique australe notamment — bref, à tous ceux qui combattent l'oppression dans le monde. Il va donc de soi que ceux d'entre nous qui sont en faveur de la liberté et de l'indépendance doivent prêter assistance à ces combattants de la liberté.

49. Le paragraphe sur lequel je voudrais ensuite appeler l'attention des membres de l'Assemblée est le paragraphe 8 du dispositif qui:

"Prie tous les Etats, agissant soit directement, soit par l'intermédiaire des institutions internationales dont ils sont membres, y compris les institutions spécialisées, de s'abstenir de fournir une assistance quelconque aux Gouvernements portugais et sud-africain et au régime minoritaire raciste illégal de la Rhodésie du Sud tant que ces gouvernements et ce régime n'auront pas renoncé à leur politique de domination coloniale et de discrimination raciale".

*Reprise des débats de la 1631ème séance.

50. Point n'est besoin pour moi d'explicitier ce paragraphe; mais il est de fait que plus ces trois régimes sont aidés par la communauté internationale, plus ils sont en mesure de maintenir leurs systèmes odieux que cette même communauté internationale a condamnés. En fait, l'ONU manquerait à ses obligations si elle condamnait l'apartheid et le colonialisme portugais, alors que ceux-là mêmes qui ont dénoncé ces régimes du haut de cette tribune continuent de leur fournir une assistance économique ou autre. Ce paragraphe s'adresse donc directement à la communauté internationale. Dans ce cas particulier, je tiens à dire très franchement que l'appel pour que cesse toute aide économique à ces régimes s'adresse surtout aux pays occidentaux. Je regrette cette précision parce qu'il y a quelques jours j'ai déclaré que le système colonial était une émanation du système impérialiste occidental et nous espérons qu'un sentiment de honte incitera les impérialistes occidentaux à faire en sorte que ce colonialisme disparaisse. Les peuples d'Afrique et d'autres parties du monde qui luttent contre le colonialisme y sont fermement résolus. Ils sont donc en droit de s'attendre que la communauté internationale (ou du moins ceux de ses membres qui sont partisans de la liberté) n'aille pas aider leurs ennemis mêmes qui nient les droits fondamentaux de l'homme et suppriment la liberté dans le sud de l'Afrique, comme dans d'autres parties du monde d'ailleurs.

51. Je voudrais encore souligner aux divers représentants l'importance du paragraphe 10 du dispositif qui:

"Prie les puissances coloniales de démanteler leurs bases et installations militaires dans les territoires coloniaux, ainsi que de s'abstenir d'en établir de nouvelles et d'utiliser celles qui existent encore pour entraver la libération des peuples des territoires coloniaux dans l'exercice de leurs droits légitimes à la liberté et à l'indépendance".

52. Je sais qu'à plusieurs occasions on nous a dit ici que la question des bases militaires était d'un autre ordre. Tantôt on nous a laissé entendre qu'il s'agissait peut-être là d'une question de désarmement; tantôt on a insinué que tout Etat indépendant avait le droit de négocier la présence de ces bases sur son territoire. Ces arguments sont dénués de tout fondement et je tiens à les rejeter catégoriquement. En premier lieu, nous ne pouvons prétendre que l'installation d'une base militaire dans un pays colonial procède de la stratégie d'ensemble. D'ailleurs, si tel est le cas, tout ce que nous pouvons dire c'est que lorsqu'un pays accepte l'installation d'une base militaire sur son propre territoire, il court toujours le risque que la vie de ses ressortissants soit en péril, en cas d'attaque de cette base. Mais pour ce qui est des peuples vivant sous le joug colonial, je crains que ce ne soient pas eux qui décident, puisqu'ils sont pour ainsi dire annihilés; ils n'ont pas la liberté de décider de l'installation sur leur territoire de telle base militaire qui menace leur vie. Il est donc tout à fait faux de prétendre que cette question relève du désarmement et ce n'est du reste qu'un argument avancé par ceux qui possèdent des bases militaires dans les territoires coloniaux.

53. Je voudrais souligner ici les dangers inhérents à de telles bases. A plusieurs reprises, par exemple, le Conseil de sécurité a dû se réunir pour examiner les intentions agressives du Portugal, notamment celles visant la République démocratique du Congo. Nombre de ces noires machinations se trament sur les bases militaires de l'Angola. Ce paragraphe revêt donc une importance capitale puisqu'il prie les puissances coloniales de démanteler leurs bases militaires dans les territoires coloniaux; ces bases ne constituent pas seulement un danger pour les peuples coloniaux, elles sont aussi un instrument utilisé contre les peuples qui luttent pour la liberté.

54. J'invite maintenant l'Assemblée à examiner le paragraphe 16 du dispositif qui:

"Prie le Comité spécial d'examiner l'observation par les Etats Membres de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et des autres résolutions pertinentes relatives à la question de la décolonisation, en particulier celles qui concernent les territoires sous domination portugaise, la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain, et de rendre compte à ce sujet à l'Assemblée générale à sa vingt-troisième session".

55. Les membres de l'Assemblée admettront certainement avec moi que nous avons adopté bon nombre de résolutions sur cette question. En fait, si nous adoptons le projet de résolution qui a été présenté sur le Sud-Ouest africain, nous totaliserons au moins 75 résolutions sur ce seul problème. Il est inutile que je rappelle à l'Assemblée les résolutions que nous avons adoptées au sujet des colonies portugaises ou de la Rhodésie du Sud. On peut se demander pourquoi ces résolutions n'ont pas été appliquées, pourquoi certains Etats Membres qui ont siégé au sein de cette assemblée et adopté ces résolutions sont aussi les premiers à les ignorer. Aussi, dans ce paragraphe, prions-nous le Comité spécial de s'efforcer de tirer au clair les raisons qui empêchent leur mise en œuvre, qui empêchent des Etats Membres des Nations Unies d'appliquer des résolutions que les membres de cette assemblée ont adoptées à une écrasante majorité.

56. J'appelle maintenant l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le paragraphe 19 du dispositif qui:

"Prie le Comité spécial d'examiner et de soumettre à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa vingt-troisième session, des recommandations concernant l'organisation, au début de 1969, d'une conférence spéciale de représentants des peuples coloniaux qui serait chargée notamment d'examiner les moyens les plus efficaces par lesquels la communauté internationale peut intensifier son assistance à ces peuples dans les efforts qu'ils déploient pour parvenir à l'autodétermination, à la liberté et à l'indépendance".

57. Il est évidemment inutile que je précise les intentions des auteurs de ce paragraphe. Il me suffit de dire que nous envisageons ici deux étapes. La première serait de faire étudier par le Comité spécial les incidences d'une telle conférence, c'est-à-dire les mesures à prendre sur le plan de son organisation. Une fois réglés tous ces détails, le Comité en ferait part à l'Assemblée générale, à sa vingt-troisième session, dans l'espoir qu'après approbation du rapport la conférence pourrait effectivement avoir lieu au début de 1969.

58. Pour terminer, j'insisterai sur le paragraphe 20 du dispositif du projet de résolution qui est rédigé comme suit:

"Prie le Secrétaire général de prendre des mesures concrètes en usant de tous les moyens dont il dispose, notamment les publications, la radio et la télévision, pour donner effet aux dispositions des résolutions 2105 (XX), 2189 (XXI), 2262 (XXII), 2270 (XXII) et 2288 (XXII) de l'Assemblée générale concernant la diffusion générale et suivie d'informations sur les travaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation, la situation dans les territoires coloniaux et la lutte constante menée par les peuples coloniaux pour leur libération".

59. Ce paragraphe revêt de l'importance à nos yeux parce qu'il arrive parfois que des gouvernements démocratiques prétendent être guidés dans leurs décisions par les désirs de la population. Si nous souhaitons que certains gouvernements changent de politique, il va sans dire que les intéressés devront être informés des maux inhérents au colonialisme. Aussi demandons-nous ici au Secrétaire général d'assurer la diffusion générale et suivie d'informations sur la situation dans les territoires coloniaux.

60. Je veux espérer que l'Assemblée adoptera ce projet de résolution à une forte majorité, comme elle l'a fait pour de précédentes résolutions. Si je parle de forte majorité, c'est parce que nous avons entendu condamner le colonialisme en de multiples occasions et de la bouche de presque tous les représentants de cette assemblée. La quasi-totalité des délégations s'est ici élevée contre le racisme. Ce projet de résolution ne fait donc que refléter le désir précis de la majorité des membres de l'Assemblée d'accélérer le processus de décolonisation. Ses auteurs espèrent qu'il ralliera le plus grand nombre de suffrages possible.

61. M. EL BOURI (Libye): Il y a bientôt sept ans que l'Assemblée générale, conformément à l'un des objectifs fondamentaux de notre charte, a adopté la résolution 1514 (XV) sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples colonisés. Malgré ce laps de temps, il y a encore des peuples qui vivent dans l'humiliation et dans la misère du joug colonial et raciste.

62. Rien que pour l'Afrique, où des dizaines de milliers d'hommes sont encore privés des bienfaits de la liberté et du réconfort de l'égalité, l'objectif des Nations Unies, qui est d'éliminer le colonialisme et d'instaurer la justice fondée sur la fraternité des hommes dans le monde, est loin d'avoir été atteint. L'arrière-garde du colonialisme et du racisme s'est concentrée dans la partie méridionale du continent africain, la plus riche, pour livrer ses dernières batailles, croyant pouvoir arrêter le cours de l'histoire et retarder l'homme dans sa poursuite inlassable du bonheur et du progrès.

63. La situation qui existe en Rhodésie du Sud est l'une des plus flagrantes manifestations de ce combat d'arrière-garde que le colonialisme et le racisme traqués livrent aux forces de la liberté, du progrès et de la justice. Une infime minorité de 220 000 émigrants croit pouvoir indéfiniment opprimer 4 millions d'Africains et disposer à son gré et à sa convenance des ressources humaines et matérielles du pays. Cette minorité d'émigrants est parvenue à occuper les terres les plus riches du pays et à concentrer entre ses mains tous les éléments de la puissance publique, tous les facteurs de la richesse, tous les pouvoirs de l'éducation, jusqu'à réduire à la condition de paria le peuple du Zimbabwe qui, de mémoire d'homme, a été toujours le maître incontesté de sa terre.

64. En dépit de la résolution [232 (1966)] adoptée par le Conseil de sécurité reconnaissant que le maintien du régime Smith constituait une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales, le régime minoritaire a continué politiquement et économiquement à profiter de la confiance injustifiée placée par certains en l'efficacité des sanctions adoptées. Ce n'est plus un secret que les effets des sanctions sur l'économie de la Rhodésie du Sud ne sont pas assez importants pour provoquer la chute du régime Smith. Ces sanctions ne pourraient avoir d'effet sur l'évolution de l'économie rhodésienne que dans la mesure où elles seraient appliquées fidèlement par tous les pays, y compris l'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal.

65. Le régime Smith continue de nous défier et d'œuvrer pour neutraliser les effets des sanctions; il vise à créer la République rhodésienne et à mettre ainsi le monde devant un fait accompli. M. Smith a déclaré, le 17 février 1967, qu'il devenait de plus en plus difficile de s'opposer aux arguments qui militent en faveur de la création d'une république rhodésienne.

66. Si nous jetons un coup d'œil sur le sort de la population autochtone sud-africaine, nous constatons que la même tragédie s'y déroule. Le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud, qui jouit de tous les avantages que lui confère sa qualité de Membre de l'ONU, pratique une politique de dédain absolu à l'égard tant des principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme que des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité. Il est resté sourd à tous les appels qui lui ont été adressés en vue de la recherche d'une solution juste à la situation explosive que crée sa politique d'apartheid. Rien ne montre encore que les autorités de Pretoria veuillent exaucer le vœu unanime de la communauté internationale.

67. Nous n'insisterons pas sur le caractère du problème du Sud-Ouest africain. Un mandat de la Société des Nations avait confié à l'Afrique du Sud, en raison de sa proximité, le soin de conduire à l'indépendance les populations du Sud-Ouest africain. Comme tous les mandats de la Société des Nations, ce mandat a été transformé en tutelle en vertu de la Charte des Nations Unies. Toutes les puissances investies de tutelle ont accompli leur mission et ont aidé à accéder à l'indépendance et à la liberté les populations qui leur avaient été confiées, sauf les malheureuses populations du Sud-Ouest africain dont toutes les aspirations à la liberté ont été méconnues par le Gouvernement de Pretoria. Ces malheureuses populations gémissent encore sous l'oppression coloniale et raciste. Le Mandat, la tutelle ont été transformés, par une décision unilatérale, en une annexion pure et simple. Le Sud-Ouest africain a le malheur d'être l'une des terres les plus riches de notre planète.

68. Dans son consciencieux rapport [A/6897], le Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain nous a fourni des précisions sur l'attitude de défi de la République sud-africaine à l'égard de notre organisation ainsi que sur sa mauvaise foi évidente à respecter ses obligations internationales. Nous devons agir si nous voulons maintenir la confiance des peuples encore opprimés et sauvegarder le prestige de la communauté internationale.

69. Ma délégation est prête à adopter toutes décisions de notre assemblée, dans la ligne des recommandations du Conseil des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain, en vue de permettre à cet organisme de s'acquitter de ses fonctions et de ses responsabilités.

70. Nous avons le même drame au Mozambique, en Angola et en Guinée dite portugaise, avec cette différence qu'il n'y a jamais eu vers ces territoires d'émigration aussi massive que vers l'Afrique du Sud et la Rhodésie du Sud. Ce n'est plus une minorité qui entend opprimer une majorité autochtone; c'est une ancienne puissance coloniale qui veut désespérément s'accrocher aux vestiges de son ancienne splendeur au point de vouloir, par une sorte d'aberration incroyable, considérer comme un prolongement de son territoire métropolitain européen ces lambeaux prospères de l'Afrique situés à des milliers de kilomètres du Portugal. C'est la même tactique qu'avaient adoptée d'autres puissances coloniales dans l'illusion de perpétuer leur domination sur certaines colonies, tactique à laquelle, en fin de compte, elles ont été obligées de renoncer.

71. Pendant près de cinq siècles, le Portugal a dominé ces malheureuses contrées, a drainé impitoyablement leurs ressources pour pallier les misères de son indigence économique. Que leur a-t-il apporté en retour? Rien. Ces pays sont en plein sous-développement; leur taux d'analphabétisme est peut-être le plus élevé du monde, leur revenu per capita est l'un des plus misérables; ils souffrent d'une absence totale d'infrastructure, de la privation de toute liberté politique. Leurs habitants ont en outre l'humiliation quotidienne d'être, dans leur propre pays, considérés comme des sous-êtres humains sans droit, sans qualité et sans titre, s'ils n'ont pas eu la faveur d'être décorés "évolués".

72. Ainsi, nous trouvons donc concentrées dans cette partie méridionale de l'Afrique, la plus riche du continent, toutes les forces du colonialisme, du racisme et de l'exploitation qui tentent dans un dernier sursaut de se moquer de l'opinion publique mondiale, du cours de l'histoire et des décisions des Nations Unies, pour conserver désespérément une situation destinée à suivre, quand même, le courant historique.

73. Pour nous, Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, interprètes fidèles des millions d'opprimés dans le monde qui ont placé leurs espoirs dans l'œuvre de justice et de réhabilitation de l'homme qui est notre mission essentielle, c'est le moment d'agir. Qu'a fait notre organisation, depuis 20 ans qu'elle existe, pour rallumer l'espoir presque éteint de ces peuples en plein désarroi moral? Elle a adopté résolution sur résolution, toutes plus inefficaces les unes que les autres et qui ne font qu'enhardir et renforcer la mauvaise volonté des colons de la Rhodésie du Sud, de l'Afrique du Sud, du Mozambique, de l'Angola et des autres territoires. Nous croyons que l'heure est arrivée pour notre organisation de prendre les mesures réellement énergiques prévues par la Charte pour ramener, bon gré mal gré, dans la voie lumineuse choisie par la grande majorité des peuples de l'univers, ces frères égarés qui, par leur entêtement et leur incompréhension, peuvent conduire notre humanité à l'une des plus désastreuses aventures.

74. Bien que notre examen de ce point ait tendance à porter sur les territoires coloniaux les plus peuplés et faisant l'objet d'une controverse politique internationale, nous souhaitons néanmoins que tous les autres territoires coloniaux, petits ou grands, puissent jouir de leur droit inaliénable à l'autodétermination.

75. Dans ce même cadre, nous ne pouvons nous empêcher de mentionner la lutte héroïque du peuple de l'Arabie du Sud, qui a fini par avoir la victoire grâce à son courage et à sa bravoure. Ce peuple héroïque a, depuis des années, mené un combat acharné pour acquérir son droit à la liberté et a enfin, grâce à ses sacrifices et à ses souffrances, réussi à libérer son territoire national et à s'ériger en nation indépendante et souveraine sous le nom de République populaire du Yémen du Sud. Nous adressons nos plus vives félicitations à la nouvelle République sœur, à son peuple héroïque et à ses vaillants dirigeants. Nous lui souhaitons le plus grand succès, prospérité et progrès. Un hommage particulier doit être rendu au Comité des Vingt-Quatre pour sa contribution efficace, qui a rendu possible l'indépendance de ce territoire.

76. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre a aussi tenu plusieurs réunions dans les pays limitrophes des territoires africains qui luttent encore pour leur indépendance, afin de pouvoir étudier de plus près la situation et de permettre aux pétitionnaires de mettre le Comité au courant des derniers développements dans ces territoires.

77. Le rapport que le Comité nous a soumis [A/6700/Rev.1] abonde en détails sur la situation tragique dans laquelle vivent les populations autochtones de l'Afrique méridionale et des autres territoires colonisés, ainsi que sur leur lutte, leurs sacrifices et leur volonté de se libérer.

78. Il ressort de l'étude de ce rapport que les intérêts économiques et l'appartenance du Portugal à l'OTAN jouent un rôle important et expliquent la persistance des régimes minoritaires et colonialistes dans leur défi aux Nations Unies et à la communauté internationale.

79. La délégation libyenne souhaiterait que les puissances qui ont encore des relations commerciales et des intérêts économiques dans la partie de l'Afrique subjuguée comprennent le danger qu'elles contribuent à créer dans cette partie du monde par le soutien économique qu'elles donnent aux régimes minoritaires et colonialistes et qu'elles respectent enfin la Charte des Nations Unies, dont elles sont signataires.

80. Il est certainement dans l'intérêt de ces puissances de ne pas continuer à avoir des relations économiques avec ces régimes; il est également dans l'intérêt même des puissances administrantes des territoires du Sud-Ouest africain, de la Rhodésie du Sud et des territoires portugais d'envisager une solution compatible avec leurs intérêts économiques et le principe de la liberté et de l'autodétermination. Elles devraient prendre exemple sur l'expérience de plusieurs pays africains indépendants avec qui les anciennes puissances coloniales continuent à entretenir les meilleures relations et où une coopération et une collaboration sincères se sont établies au bénéfice des deux parties. Autrement, il est inconcevable qu'à l'époque de la bombe atomique et des grandes conquêtes scientifiques destinées au bien-être de l'humanité on puisse encore déplorer, comme une contradiction, le fait que des millions d'êtres humains doivent encore vivre dans la souffrance et l'oppression et se voient refuser le droit de disposer de leur propre destin.

81. Après avoir tant lutté pour arracher, lambeau par lambeau, leur proie au colonialisme et à l'impérialisme des siècles précédents, après avoir obtenu la participation des grandes puissances impériales d'hier à la libération de leurs anciennes colonies et à la transformation des structures d'un monde aboli, il est tout de même paradoxal que notre organisation se laisse tenir en échec, dans la partie finale de son œuvre de redressement, par quelques attardés du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme. Nous ne pouvons pas assister impuissants à la renaissance sournoise de ce que l'humanité avait pensé mettre définitivement au rancart à Nuremberg, c'est-à-dire le besoin avide d'expansion territoriale au mépris des règles de la communauté internationale, l'arrogance et la haine raciales, et l'euphorie engendrée par quelques succès militaires de circonstance.

82. Si nous n'agissons pas avec lucidité, fermeté et courage, dans le sens des objectifs de la Charte, tout sera bientôt à recommencer. Un nouvel impérialisme que rien ne justifie — ni le nombre des habitants, ni les ressources économiques, ni la puissance militaire avide d'expansion et ivre de haine — menace de remplacer les anciens impérialismes. De nouvelles formes de colonialisme au racisme exacerbé continueront à opprimer les malheureuses populations autochtones de l'Afrique méridionale et d'autres territoires qui ont été victimes de la violence et de l'ambition de la conquête.

83. Notre expérience nationale et celle d'autres peuples vaillants et glorieux, ainsi que notre connaissance de l'histoire nous amènent à la certitude réconfortante que l'on ne peut pas indéfiniment refuser la liberté et l'indépendance à ceux qui la réclament. Ceux-ci finissent toujours par l'obtenir quand ils veulent y mettre le prix en vies humaines, en sacrifices de toutes sortes que l'acquisition de ce bien précieux rend inévitables.

84. Aucune paix durable ne pourra être établie dans le monde tant qu'il existera des parties de notre globe où des minorités ethniques ou raciales essaieront de brimer et d'opprimer des millions d'êtres humains.

85. Le projet de résolution A/L.541, que le représentant de la Tanzanie vient de nous présenter, reflète notre préoccupation et indique la direction dans laquelle l'Assemblée générale devra procéder si elle veut réellement voir appliquer sa résolution 1514 (XV) et libérer les pays colonisés du joug colonial qui les opprime encore.

86. M. BUDO (Albanie): Chaque fois que l'Assemblée générale aborde l'examen de l'une des questions importantes qui figurent à son ordre du jour depuis de longues années, telles que les questions relatives au colonialisme, les Etats Membres pacifiques constatent d'emblée, à leur grand regret, l'absence de tout progrès de la part de l'ONU vers le règlement de ces questions, ou mieux l'incapacité de celle-ci de contribuer à leur solution. Cet état de choses déplorable, cette impasse dans laquelle se trouve engagée depuis longtemps l'Organisation des Nations Unies est le résultat, chacun le sait fort bien, de la politique agressive et de domination mondiale que poursuivent les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, du soutien que cette puissance impérialiste donne aux autres puissances coloniales et de l'emprise pernicieuse qu'elle exerce au sein de cette organisation, emprise qui s'est encore aggravée davantage du fait de la collusion entre l'impérialisme américain et le révisionnisme soviétique. Dans chaque cas, dans chacune des questions examinées, la même exigence s'impose aux Etats Membres qui constituent la majorité: la nécessité indispensable de débarrasser l'ONU de cette emprise, de la faire se redresser et s'engager sur la voie correspondant aux aspirations légitimes des peuples et aux buts et principes fondamentaux de la Charte. Cette exigence est d'autant plus impérieuse que l'Organisation ne cesse de glisser toujours plus profondément sur la pente du déclin, ce qui ne peut que mener à sa ruine totale si l'on n'agit pas à temps.

87. Nous ne saurions manquer de relever, à cet égard, que l'échec scandaleux de cette organisation face à l'agression impérialiste israélienne de cet été contre les pays arabes et quant aux conséquences de cette agression, l'attitude de l'ONU depuis le début de cette agression et jusqu'à la résolution [242 (1967)] adoptée par le Conseil de sécurité le 22 novembre, ont compromis encore davantage son autorité et eu comme conséquence l'abaissement ultérieur des Nations Unies. C'est ce que nous prouve en particulier et de façon très évidente la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, qui est caractérisée par une paralysie lamentable, un fiasco complet dans tous les domaines de l'activité de l'Assemblée et devant tous les problèmes importants de son ordre du jour, ainsi que par un profond sentiment de frustration que manifestent, devant une telle situation, les représentants de nombreux pays épris de liberté et de paix. Le fait même que des questions aussi importantes que celles concernant le colonialisme et la discrimination raciale contre les peuples soient laissées de côté — non sans dessein de la part des deux grandes puissances qui commandent ici — pour être examinées à la hâte aux tous derniers jours de la session, est bien édifiant à cet égard.

88. Certes, les Etats-Unis et leurs alliés, les révisionnistes soviétiques, principaux responsables de tout cela, ne manqueront pas, ainsi que par le passé, de s'efforcer par toutes sortes d'artifices de camoufler cette triste réalité et de présenter le noir en blanc. C'est d'ailleurs à ces fins fallacieuses et démagogiques qu'ont été soumises ici de leur part des questions telles que celle concernant l'interdiction de l'emploi des armes nucléaires, ou celle relative à la définition de l'agression, comme si en ce moment les peuples avaient besoin de discussions sans fin sur une telle définition et non de la protection contre les agresseurs impérialistes qui sont fort bien connus de tous nonobstant cette définition.

89. Un autre fait non moins significatif dans ce sens est leur brusque empressement à faire adopter à cette session même l'accord sur l'assistance aux astronautes et aux véhicules spatiaux, qui les intéresse particulièrement et dont ils peuvent tirer parti pour le présenter comme un élément important de l'activité de l'ONU, surtout lors des déclarations tapageuses qu'ils vont probablement faire le 19 décembre au moment de la clôture de cette partie de la présente session qui doit, paraît-il, et conformément à leur décision concertée, être suivie d'une deuxième partie.

90. Mais toutes ces pratiques et toutes ces manigances de la part des deux grandes puissances sont vaines. Les peuples et les pays pacifiques ne peuvent actuellement être induits en erreur; la triste réalité concernant l'ONU éclate à l'évidence. Les peuples sont bien conscients du fait que l'Organisation ne peut, dans cet état, servir leurs vœux et leurs intérêts vitaux, qu'elle est devenue un instrument au service de l'impérialisme américain et un centre de marchandage entre les deux grandes puissances pour la mise en œuvre de leur politique de partage des zones d'influence et de l'instauration de leur hégémonie dans le monde.

91. Les puissances impérialistes et colonialistes ont mené, au cours des siècles, des guerres barbares contre les peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine en vue de les asservir et d'exploiter leurs richesses. Elles se sont toujours efforcées, par tous les moyens, de maintenir leur domination sur des territoires étrangers et d'accroître leurs possessions coloniales. Cela a constamment été la loi régissant leur politique impérialiste de subjugation et d'exploitation des peuples. Les impérialistes et les colonialistes ne se sont jamais retirés de leur propre gré des territoires étrangers occupés. C'est là une vérité dont les peuples du monde entier sont maintenant pleinement conscients. Ils savent fort bien que les oppresseurs et les exploiters des peuples ne lâchent leur proie que par la voie de la force. Ils sont convaincus que l'unique moyen pour se délivrer des chaînes de l'esclavage colonial est leur lutte armée. C'est pourquoi ils rejettent toujours plus fermement la voie des compromis et des concessions avec l'impérialisme et le colonialisme, la prétendue voie du "passage pacifique" à la liberté et à l'indépendance que préconisent les révisionnistes soviétiques et tous les autres renégats de la cause des peuples.

92. Le mouvement de libération nationale et sociale des peuples a pris, à notre époque, un essor sans précédent. Les victoires remportées par les peuples qui ont déjà conquis l'indépendance ou par ceux qui combattent encore pour se libérer de la domination étrangère et du joug colonial ont infligé des défaites foudroyantes à l'impérialisme et au colonialisme, qui sont maintenant en voie de désagrégation et rongés sans cesse davantage par leurs contradictions intérieures et extérieures.

93. Face au redoublement d'efforts des impérialistes et des colonialistes en vue de se cramponner à leur domination coloniale, face à l'intensification de leur politique de guerre et de répression sauvage contre le mouvement mondial de libération, les peuples, de plus en plus irrités et révoltés, ripostent toujours plus fermement, plus vigoureusement, confiants en la victoire certaine de leur juste cause.

94. C'est ainsi que l'héroïque peuple du Viet-Nam, les peuples arabes, ceux de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise, du Sud-Ouest africain, de la Rhodésie du Sud, de Porto Rico, et tous les peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine qui subissent encore l'oppression impérialiste, colonialiste, néo-colonialiste et raciste, mènent une lutte inlassable qu'ils renforcent et accroissent sans relâche, ne reculant pas devant les difficultés et les sacrifices.

95. Au cours de cette année, la lutte armée des peuples pour la libération nationale et sociale s'est développée vigoureusement. Dans les vastes territoires d'Afrique se trouvant encore sous la domination coloniale et impérialiste, les flammes de la lutte armée des peuples se répandent avec toujours plus de rage. Les peuples africains, dans diverses régions, apprennent la guerre en faisant la guerre et, profitant de cette expérience, gagnent en force au fil des combats. Les vaillants combattants d'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée (Bissau) ont obtenu d'importants succès. Les patriotes angolais ont, au cours des mois de septembre et d'octobre, intensifié leur lutte contre les agresseurs portugais et ont tué ou mis hors de combat des centaines de soldats colonialistes. Une partie importante du territoire de l'Angola est libérée et se trouve sous le contrôle des forces patriotiques. Les forces partisans du Mozambique, après avoir brisé les opérations de "ratissage" des troupes colonialistes portugaises, ont étendu leur sphère d'action dans presque la moitié du territoire du pays. Elles ne cessent de mener leurs raids contre les centres militaires de l'ennemi. Les combattants de la Guinée (Bissau) attaquent sans relâche les forces portugaises; ils ont détruit récemment bon nombre de leurs casernes et tué ou blessé des centaines de soldats portugais.

96. En Rhodésie du Sud le peuple du Zimbabwe, conscient de toutes les tactiques frauduleuses et des manœuvres dilatoires des colonialistes britanniques et de leurs suppôts blancs dans ce territoire, et sachant fort bien que jamais les forces impérialistes britanniques ne pourront servir pour les délivrer de la clique des racistes blancs de Ian Smith, qui est leur propre créature, s'est résolument lancé dans des actions armées pour la libération nationale et sociale du pays, prenant ainsi en main les destinées de la nation en comptant, en premier lieu, sur ses propres forces. C'est ainsi que les forces de guérilla du Zimbabwe ont intensifié leur action contre les forces militaires de la clique de Ian Smith, infligeant à l'ennemi d'importantes défaites, ce que le régime colonial blanc reconnaît lui-même lorsqu'il annonce de "violentes batailles" avec les forces partisans depuis le mois d'août dernier.

97. De même, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, les forces patriotiques ont continué d'opérer activement, causant aux troupes des racistes de Pretoria des dizaines de morts et de blessés.

98. Ainsi, les vaillants peuples de l'Afrique subissant encore le joug colonial vont résolument de l'avant sur la voie de la lutte armée sans reculer devant les difficultés et les sacrifices, ce qui leur permettra, à coup sûr, de remporter la victoire et de chasser de leurs territoires tous les colonialistes et tous les impérialistes.

99. Dans la partie méridionale de la péninsule arabique, la lutte de libération nationale s'est constamment renforcée en dépit de tous les efforts et de toutes les tactiques frauduleuses des colonialistes britanniques et des impérialistes américains, et malgré les mesures de terreur prises par eux contre les populations arabes et les féroces opérations lancées contre elles. La victoire historique que vient de remporter le vaillant peuple du Yémen du Sud, par la conquête de son indépendance, est justement le résultat de sa longue lutte héroïque. Cette victoire contribue beaucoup à renforcer la confiance des peuples arabes en leur propre force, à encourager l'action révolutionnaire des masses populaires de l'Oman et de toute l'extrémité méridionale de la péninsule arabique.

100. L'indépendance du Yémen du Sud revêt une importance particulière pour le peuple palestinien et les autres peuples arabes qui se trouvent sous l'occupation des forces israéliennes par suite de l'agression impérialiste sioniste de l'été dernier. Le peuple palestinien et tous les peuples et pays arabes victimes de l'agression du 5 juin réalisent bien que la lutte armée est le seul moyen de libérer le territoire occupé. Israël a été créé et entretenu par les impérialistes, les Etats-Unis en tête, en vue d'être utilisé comme base d'agression contre les pays arabes. C'est ce qu'a notamment prouvé l'agression du 5 juin contre les pays arabes et l'attitude adoptée jusqu'à ce jour par les impérialistes et leurs partenaires quant aux conséquences de cette agression.

101. Tous les événements de l'été dernier, et tous les faits qui ont suivi, ont amplement prouvé aux peuples et aux pays arabes que l'impérialisme américain est leur ennemi le plus féroce et que ses collaborateurs principaux, les révisionnistes soviétiques, portent une lourde responsabilité pour tous les complots qu'ils ont ourdis et continuent d'ourdir avec les impérialistes yankees aux dépens de la cause de la paix et de la liberté des peuples arabes.

102. Mais en dépit des agressions impérialistes et des complots entre les impérialistes américains et les révisionnistes soviétiques, le peuple palestinien et les autres peuples et pays arabes sont déterminés à lutter jusqu'au bout, jusqu'à la victoire finale qui est certaine, jusqu'à la libération de tous les territoires arabes occupés par les impérialistes et leurs laquais.

103. La bataille la plus acharnée des forces révolutionnaires contre l'impérialisme et le colonialisme est livrée aujourd'hui au Viet-Nam par l'héroïque peuple de ce pays contre les agressions yankees. Les plans sinistres des impérialistes américains pour transformer le Viet-Nam en une colonie et une base d'agression contre les autres pays épris de liberté de cette région et en particulier contre la République populaire de Chine, bastion inexpugnable du mouvement mondial de libération, ont été ignominieusement brisés par la volonté de fer du glorieux peuple vietnamien qui lutte pour le salut de sa patrie.

104. Les revers cuisants et les défaites successives subis par les agresseurs américains au Viet-Nam ont mené à une aggravation des contradictions intérieures et extérieures des Etats-Unis, à un isolement sans précédent de cette puissance impérialiste dans le monde. L'aiguïsement des contradictions au sein des milieux gouvernants des Etats-Unis, par suite des échecs subis au Viet-Nam, a eu dernièrement pour conséquence la destitution du Secrétaire d'Etat à la défense, si souvent loué par les leaders américains.

105. Mais il importe de souligner que rien ne pourra sauver les Etats-Unis de leur défaite totale au Viet-Nam, ni leur intensification et leur élargissement de la guerre d'agression, ni les bombardements sauvages contre le Nord-Viet-Nam, ni encore les supercheres de négociations de paix par les bombardements, trahies de concert avec les révisionnistes soviétiques, ni les tentatives d'ingérence illégale de l'ONU dans les affaires relevant du peuple vietnamien. Les forces armées et le peuple vietnamien sont déterminés à lutter jusqu'au bout, jusqu'à ce que le dernier des agresseurs yankees ait quitté le sol sacré de leur patrie.

106. Les victoires remportées dans la lutte populaire par les héroïques combattants vietnamiens sur les impérialistes américains et leur stratégie globale constituent une contribution immense aux mouvements révolutionnaires de libération nationale et sociale des peuples du monde et une grande source d'inspiration pour ces mouvements, apportant la meilleure preuve que la lutte armée des peuples est l'unique voie menant à la conquête de la liberté et de l'indépendance.

107. Le dirigeant du peuple albanais, le camarade Enver Hoxha, déclarait:

"Les grandes défaites que les Etats-Unis d'Amérique sont en train d'essuyer et la débâcle inévitable qui attend leur aventure au Viet-Nam sont d'une importance colossale et grosses de conséquences incalculables pour la lutte des peuples contre l'impérialisme et pour la situation internationale. Elles hâtent le discrédit politique et militaire des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, démasquent sans merci la trahison des révisionnistes soviétiques, encouragent les luttes populaires et accélèrent la marche de la révolution vers la victoire. Aussi la solidarité avec le peuple vietnamien, l'appui sans réserve à sa lutte héroïque, constituent-ils un devoir impérieux pour tous les révolutionnaires, toutes les forces progressistes et éprises de paix dans le monde, qui militent dans les rangs du grand mouvement anti-impérialiste."

109. Tout cela a amené une aggravation des contradictions et des conflits entre les puissances impéria-listes et colonialistes. La dévaluation de la livre sterling et l'ébranlement de la position du dollar, dans le système monétaire et financier de l'Occident, en sont le reflet incontestable.

110. Certes, en dépit de leurs contradictions, les impérialistes et les colonialistes, avec, en tête, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, se retrouvent toujours et font cause commune lorsqu'il s'agit de s'opposer aux forces populaires révolutionnaires. C'est ainsi qu'ils agissent de concert, en redoublant d'efforts, en vue d'arrêter les flammes de la lutte de libération des peuples qui se répandent aux quatre coins du monde, et de réprimer, par le fer et par le feu, les luttes des combattants de la liberté des pays se trouvant encore sous leur domination. On ne saurait omettre de souligner, à cette occasion, que les Etats-Unis d'Amérique sont le bastion principal de la domination coloniale, néo-coloniale et raciste, qu'ils mènent une politique barbare d'oppression et d'agression contre les peuples et déploient tous leurs efforts en vue de sauvegarder, par tous les moyens, le système abhorré de la domination coloniale dans le monde.

112. De même, je n'ai pas l'intention de rappeler encore ici les moyens barbares, les gaz toxiques, les bombes au napalm, les bombardements criminels contre les populations civiles, les enfants, les femmes et les vieillards, employés par les impérialistes américains et leurs partenaires dans leurs guerres d'agression contre les peuples et les pays épris de liberté, comme au Viet-Nam, au Moyen-Orient et ailleurs. Ces faits sont bien connus de tous. Ils montrent, en particulier, la sauvagerie de ces barbares du XX^{ème} siècle que sont les impérialistes américains, l'ennemi numéro 1 des peuples.

113. Devant l'essor sans précédent du mouvement de libération nationale des peuples et la lutte que mènent les Etats pacifiques pour la sauvegarde et la consolidation de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance nationales, les puissances impérialistes et colonialistes, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique en tête, se voient obligées de recourir à de nouvelles formes néo-colonialistes d'exploitation économique et de domination politique des peuples et des nations. Elles s'emploient en particulier de leur mieux pour tirer avantage des besoins économiques des pays en voie de développement et cherchent, par l'octroi de crédits et d'"aides", par des investissements de capitaux et l'acquisition de concessions diverses — directement ou par le truchement d'organismes internationaux ou d'institutions dites spécialisées — à assurer à leurs monopoles l'exploitation des richesses de ces pays, à s'ingérer dans leurs affaires intérieures et à y établir ainsi leur domination politique.

114. Le néo-colonialisme revêt actuellement un caractère de plus en plus dangereux. Nul doute que les Etats-Unis représentent la puissance impérialiste la plus active dans la mise en œuvre de la politique néo-colonialiste et utilisent, à cette fin, les moyens les plus divers, allant des chantages économiques, politiques et militaires, de la corruption, des "corps de la paix", de la subversion jusqu'à la création de bases militaires en territoires étrangers, de blocs agressifs, et jusqu'à la perpétration d'agressions armées contre les pays pacifiques. Les peuples et les pays épris de liberté en sont parfaitement conscients et c'est ce qui explique leurs efforts communs visant à combattre la domination impérialiste sous toutes ses manifestations et avec la même force que la forme classique du colonialisme.

115. Nul doute que les méthodes, quelles qu'elles soient, dont les impérialistes et les colonialistes font usage pour l'exploitation et la domination des peuples sont vouées à l'échec. Le processus de libération nationale et sociale des peuples ira toujours de l'avant et il n'est pas de force au monde qui puisse l'arrêter. Le système impérialiste et colonialiste se désagrège toujours davantage et le jour n'est pas loin de son effondrement total.

116. Mais la question se pose de savoir si l'Organisation des Nations Unies va continuer, ainsi que par le passé, à faire le jeu des puissances impérialistes et colonialistes, en premier lieu des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, si elle va continuer à être utilisée comme un centre de marchandage entre les impérialistes américains et les révisionnistes soviétiques aux dépens de la cause des peuples et des nations pacifiques, ou si au contraire les Etats Membres attachés à la cause des peuples et aux buts et principes de la Charte vont par leurs efforts conjugués transformer l'ONU d'un instrument au service de l'impérialisme et du révisionnisme en une institution répondant réellement aux intérêts vitaux des peuples, en une organisation capable de contribuer efficacement à la lutte de libération nationale et à la sauvegarde de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance des Etats. Tout dépend de la mesure dans laquelle les Etats Membres pacifiques, qui constituent ici la majorité, feront preuve de courage et de détermination pour rejeter toutes les tentatives de diktat de la part des deux grandes puissances et pour imposer à celles-ci le respect de l'une des dispositions fondamentales de la Charte, l'égalité souveraine des Etats Membres, grands et petits.

117. La délégation albanaise, pour sa part, n'a épargné aucun effort pour apporter sa contribution modeste à cette fin. Nous continuerons fermement notre lutte et demeurerons toujours disposés à faire tout ce qui dépend de nous pour consolider toujours davantage notre collaboration avec les Etats Membres auxquels nous sommes liés par des objectifs communs.

118. Le peuple albanais et son gouvernement, guidés par les principes révolutionnaires de notre Etat socialiste, continueront comme par le passé à soutenir sans réserve la lutte des peuples pour la libération nationale et sociale et pour la consolidation de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance. Nous avons la conviction que la lutte révolutionnaire des peuples pour la liberté, la paix et le progrès social triomphera, qu'elle brisera tous les plans des impérialistes et de leurs principaux collaborateurs et anéantira à jamais le système impérialiste lui-même.

119. M. ALARCON DE QUESADA (Cuba) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le problème de l'élimination complète du colonialisme et du renforcement de l'indépendance totale pour tous les peuples garde une importance toute particulière, et il est de plus en plus urgent que l'opinion mondiale s'intéresse à sa solution effective.

120. Certes, au cours de ces dernières années, grâce à la lutte courageuse des peuples opprimés, quelques progrès ont été réalisés. Notre organisation a vu augmenter le nombre de ses membres, représentants des nouveaux Etats soumis jusqu'ici depuis des siècles à la domination étrangère. L'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale a constitué un succès appréciable pour la cause de l'indépendance nationale des peuples colonisés.

121. Cependant, les forces de l'impérialisme et le colonialisme persistent à vouloir asservir les peuples. En Amérique latine, en Afrique et en Asie il existe encore des nations soumises à la domination coloniale, et des millions d'hommes et de femmes luttent pour la libération de leur patrie. Les Etats qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance se voient menacés par les plans néo-colonialistes visant à rendre fictive la souveraineté qu'ils ont conquise, à les maintenir dans un état arriéré et à poursuivre l'exploitation de leurs richesses naturelles.

122. La lutte héroïque des peuples de la Guinée dite portugaise, de l'Angola et du Mozambique pour obtenir leur indépendance se poursuit. Comme l'ont largement prouvé les études faites par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, le Portugal s'obstine à refuser à ces peuples leurs droits légitimes, grâce à l'aide militaire, économique et financière illimitée qu'il reçoit du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, ainsi que d'autres membres de l'OTAN.

123. En Rhodésie du Sud, la nation zimbabwe a été spoliée des attributs de sa souveraineté par l'action de la minorité coloniale qui a établi un régime bâtard fondé sur le racisme et la discrimination de la plupart de ses habitants. Le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain reste soumis à l'occupation du régime de Pretoria qui, comme en Afrique du Sud, y pratique la politique exécrable de l'apartheid. Le peuple de l'Oman poursuit sa lutte contre la domination étrangère.

124. L'Assemblée générale s'est prononcée à maintes reprises sur tous ces problèmes. Notre organisation les a examinés au cours de longs débats et pendant des années. Certaines questions sont examinées ici depuis les débuts mêmes des Nations Unies. Une année après l'autre, on effectue des études et l'on adopte des résolutions qui dénoncent l'oppression colonialiste à laquelle ces peuples sont soumis et qui réaffirment leurs droits inaliénables à une pleine liberté. La plus grande utilité qu'a eue cette accumulation impressionnante de rapports, de résolutions et de déclarations a peut-être été de révéler au grand jour les contradictions profondes qui minent cette organisation, l'empêchant d'atteindre les objectifs pour lesquels elle a été créée et la maintiennent dans une impuissance qui scandalise la conscience populaire.

125. De toute évidence, les Etats représentés ici condamnent, dans leur immense majorité, le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes, rejettent l'apartheid et la discrimination raciale et plaident en faveur de l'indépendance immédiate et complète de ces peuples et de tous ceux qui sont encore soumis au colonialisme. Cette volonté de la majorité des Etats Membres s'est exprimée dans un si grand nombre de résolutions qu'il serait vain d'avoir recours aux citations. Cependant, il est tout aussi important de constater que notre organisation a été et reste totalement incapable de faire respecter ses propres résolutions et de répondre aux intérêts et aux vœux de la majorité de ses membres. Il faut aussi chercher l'explication de ce phénomène dans de nombreux documents imprimés par les Nations Unies et élaborés par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre ou par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la politique d'apartheid du Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine.

126. Il est évident qu'il ne s'agit pas simplement de vaincre la résistance de l'Afrique du Sud ou du Portugal. Derrière eux, comme derrière toute oppression coloniale ou raciste, se trouvent de puissants intérêts économiques étrangers qui, en réalité, dirigent la politique des principales puissances impérialistes, les Etats-Unis en tête. C'est pourquoi la lutte visant à éliminer les vestiges et les séquelles du vieux colonialisme ne peut être couronnée de succès que si l'on adopte logiquement une position anti-impérialiste et si l'on analyse avec justesse la conjoncture internationale actuelle. Si l'impérialisme nord-américain qui s'obstine à vouloir asservir les peuples les plus faibles n'existait pas, le colonialisme appartiendrait déjà au passé. Les machinations menées contre ces peuples sont ourdies à Washington. Le refus d'accorder les droits qui sont les leurs aux peuples des colonies portugaises, du Sud-Ouest africain, de la Rhodésie, de l'Oman et d'autres territoires coloniaux fait partie de la stratégie d'ensemble du colonialisme nord-américain. L'exploitation de ces peuples constitue l'un des fondements essentiels sur lesquels sont établis les plans des monopoles nord-américains pour piller les richesses du tiers monde, étouffer les mouvements de libération nationale et continuer d'imposer leur hégémonie à la communauté internationale. C'est pourquoi la lutte que mènent les peuples pour vaincre le colonialisme, éliminer le racisme et s'assurer un développement pleinement indépendant ne peut aboutir au moyen des discussions parlementaires qui se déroulent ici. Ces peuples gagneront la victoire définitive — ils sont déjà en train de la gagner — par la lutte directe et résolue contre leurs oppresseurs, les armes à la main.

127. On ne peut nourrir d'illusions sur les concessions que pourraient faire aux peuples opprimés ceux qui se livrent aujourd'hui à l'agression la plus monstrueuse contre celui qui est devenu, par sa volonté héroïque de lutte, le symbole le plus pur et le plus noble de l'aspiration de tous à l'indépendance et à la liberté: le peuple vietnamien.

128. L'ennemi qu'il faut vaincre dans les territoires victimes du colonialisme est le même que celui qu'il faut vaincre au Viet-Nam, qui commence à y être vaincu et qui le sera finalement: l'impérialisme nord-américain. Mais pour parvenir à la victoire, il faut faire preuve du même esprit de combat, de la même résistance indomptable, de la même volonté opiniâtre de lutte qu'incarne le peuple vietnamien.

129. La preuve la plus claire de l'opposition tenace du Gouvernement nord-américain à la décolonisation est son attitude à l'égard du problème colonial de Porto Rico. Dans le rapport que nous a présenté cette année le Comité des Vingt-Quatre [A/6700/Rev.1, chap. I, sect. G] sont rapportées les discussions qui se sont déroulées au sein du Comité sur l'inclusion de Porto Rico dans la liste des territoires auxquels s'applique la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale.

130. Les représentants du mouvement de libération nationale de Porto Rico ont été les premiers à demander audience au Comité spécial pour discuter le cas de leur pays. Ils l'ont fait exactement le jour qui a suivi la création de cet organisme. Au mois d'octobre 1965, le Gouvernement révolutionnaire de Cuba a demandé formellement au Comité spécial d'inscrire ce problème à son ordre du jour. La proposition cubaine se faisait l'écho non seulement du vœu émis par toutes les organisations patriotiques du territoire, mais aussi de la requête présentée par 47 chefs d'Etat ou de gouvernement des pays non alignés lors de la conférence tenue au Caire en octobre 1964. Toutefois, le Comité spécial s'est vu jusqu'à présent empêché de prendre une décision sur le fond de la question, à la suite des fortes pressions exercées sur lui par la délégation nord-américaine.

131. L'attitude qu'adopteront les Nations Unies dans le cas de Porto Rico sera décisive pour juger du degré de fidélité de l'Organisation à ses propres principes et sera essentielle pour le jugement que les peuples porteront sur elle.

132. Les Etats-Unis s'opposent non seulement à l'indépendance de Porto Rico mais aussi à la simple discussion de ce sujet par notre organisation. Ils allèguent l'existence de la résolution 748 (VIII), approuvée par l'Assemblée à une très faible majorité. Cependant, ils oublient que, des années après, cette même assemblée a adopté une autre résolution, la résolution 1514 (XV), qui affirme le droit de tous les peuples, sans exception, à l'indépendance.

133. La résolution 1514 (XV) est explicite: elle se réfère aux territoires sous tutelle, à ceux qui n'ont pas de gouvernement propre et à tous les autres peuples qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Personne, pas même le Gouvernement nord-américain, n'a jamais soutenu que le peuple de Porto Rico ait accédé à l'indépendance. Toutefois, le Gouvernement de Washington s'efforce encore d'empêcher que l'Assemblée discute de cette question.

134. De plus, il faut nous souvenir que la résolution 748 (VIII) de l'Assemblée était fondée sur des renseignements erronés fournis par le Gouvernement nord-américain qui avait alors affirmé que le peuple portoricain avait choisi librement son destin par un plébiscite. Cependant, nous demandons aux représentants: peut-on accepter comme légitime un plébiscite qui ne comportait pas d'option en faveur de l'indépendance, pour lequel le nombre de ceux qui ont voté contre le régime colonial et de ceux qui se sont abstenus de voter atteignait 60 p. 100 du corps électoral?

Peut-on concevoir qu'un peuple puisse choisir librement son destin lorsque son pays est entièrement occupé par des troupes étrangères, qu'il doit subir la répression la plus féroce et que ses prisons sont pleines de patriotes?

135. Si les Etats-Unis ont réussi à faire adopter à l'époque la résolution 748 (VIII), c'est aussi parce qu'alors plus de la moitié des Membres actuels de cette organisation n'en faisaient pas encore partie, précisément parce qu'ils étaient eux-mêmes soumis au joug colonial.

136. Ma délégation tient à souligner une fois de plus le devoir inéluctable qui incombe à cette organisation et à tous les Etats qui affirment leur anti-colonialisme de faire appliquer les principes de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale au peuple de Porto Rico.

137. En dépit de toutes les allégations du gouvernement yankee, les faits ne peuvent être démentis. Les Etats-Unis dominent entièrement l'économie portoricaine; Porto Rico est soumis à leur contrôle dans les domaines législatif, judiciaire et exécutif. Le Gouvernement nord-américain exerce une juridiction exclusive sur les questions de citoyenneté, de relations extérieures, de défense, d'immigration et d'émigration, de commerce extérieur, de monnaie, des postes, des télécommunications, des transports aériens et maritimes. Le territoire de l'île a été transformé en une immense forteresse militaire nord-américaine, avec des dizaines de bases militaires dont deux sont équipées de missiles nucléaires. La zone occupée par les installations de l'armée nord-américaine représente 13 p. 100 de la surface des meilleures terres cultivables du pays. Les habitants de Porto Rico sont obligés de servir dans les rangs de l'armée yankee et, actuellement, ils se voient forcés de participer à l'ignoble agression contre le peuple vietnamien. Selon des renseignements en provenance du Pentagone et reproduits dans le journal El Mundo de San Juan de Porto Rico, du 22 mai 1967, les pertes portoricaines dans la guerre du Viet-Nam sont supérieures à celles qui ont été subies par 18 Etats des Etats-Unis, plus le district de Columbia.

138. Au cours de cette année, le Gouvernement nord-américain a imposé une nouvelle farce plébiscitaire, tentant ainsi de faire taire les critiques qui se font de plus en plus nombreuses dans le monde à propos de la situation dramatique du peuple portoricain. Cependant, cette manœuvre a complètement échoué. Tout d'abord, parce que nul ne peut se laisser tromper par un prétendu plébiscite qui a lieu dans de telles conditions d'occupation militaire et de domination étrangère totale, et dans lequel le peuple n'a pas eu la moindre possibilité d'exprimer son opinion. Un nombre impressionnant d'électeurs s'est abstenu de participer à cette tragi-comédie, suivant ainsi les directives données par toutes les organisations patriotiques. La meilleure preuve de l'échec total enregistré par le prétendu plébiscite est le fait que, à la suite de celui-ci, tous les partis politiques défenseurs du régime colonial traversent aujourd'hui une crise profonde. Tous se sont divisés et fragmentés, et doivent faire face maintenant à la rébellion de leurs propres adhérents.

139. L'année qui vient, nous commémorerons le centenaire du début de la guerre d'indépendance que, Cubains et Portoricains, nous avons menée ensemble pour nous libérer de la domination espagnole. En 1868, Cuba et Porto Rico commencèrent une lutte armée héroïque qui, pendant 30 ans, a entraîné pour nos peuples de lourds sacrifices. A la fin de cette épopée, ceux-ci ont été frustrés par suite de l'intervention militaire yankee qui a soumis nos deux nations à la domination étrangère. Depuis lors, Porto Rico a dû subir l'oppression coloniale de l'empire qui est actuellement le plus puissant dans le monde. Cependant, le peuple portoricain a conservé son esprit national, il a préservé sa culture, ses croyances, sa langue et ses traditions. Tous les efforts de l'impérialisme pour détruire son sens national ont échoué. Un peuple qui a tant combattu pour sa liberté, et dans des conditions si difficiles, remportera finalement la victoire. Celle-ci résultera essentiellement de la lutte qu'il mène. Qui que ce soit qui s'y oppose, Porto Rico sera un jour libre et indépendant.

140. Pour notre part, toutefois, nous tenons à réaffirmer que les Nations Unies ont le devoir d'aider ce peuple à réaliser ses aspirations dans l'exercice intégral de sa souveraineté. Tant que le cas de Porto Rico ne sera pas étudié et résolu conformément à la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, on ne pourra pas affirmer que notre organisation a été fidèle aux idéaux anticolonialistes qu'elle dit professer.

La séance est levée à 13 h 10.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. JOUEJATI (Syrie) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'examen des succès et des échecs enregistrés par l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux fournit chaque année un excellent prétexte pour évaluer le rôle exact de l'Organisation dans un domaine d'une importance capitale pour la paix universelle. J'estime que le prétexte est excellent, car un tel exercice devrait permettre de mieux comprendre dans quel sens l'Organisation doit orienter son action pour en élargir la portée et en améliorer l'efficacité.

2. Mais j'estime que le prétexte est excellent aussi parce qu'il fournit l'occasion de mieux saisir l'importance du fossé qui sépare, en matière de décolonisation, les choses telles qu'elles devraient être selon les normes établies par l'Organisation des Nations Unies — c'est-à-dire les normes internationales de la justice et du droit — et les choses telles qu'elles sont — c'est-à-dire la conduite réelle des Etats. Tout élargissement du fossé entre les objectifs à atteindre, à savoir l'émancipation de tous les peuples coloniaux et leur accession à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté, et la réalité des faits est le signe d'une inefficacité croissante de la part de l'ONU. Inversement, tout rétrécissement du fossé donne à penser que la voie adoptée pourra aboutir à des résultats tangibles.

3. Cela étant posé, on observe un certain rétrécissement du fossé. On peut affirmer que le colonialisme a perdu du terrain au profit de la communauté internationale, qui se trouve enrichie, notamment, par l'accession à l'indépendance de la République populaire du Yémen du Sud, pays que nous avons tout récemment accueilli parmi nous, et par la très prochaine accession à l'indépendance de Nauru.

4. Permettez-moi de relever en passant un aspect de la portée de chacun de ces deux événements. Dans le premier cas, on voit combien de souffrances auraient pu être épargnées si la puissance administrante avait accepté dès le début de coopérer avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et plus particulièrement avec le Comité spécial de la décolonisation, qu'elle n'a cessé de dénigrer! Dans le second cas, on voit qu'avec de la bonne volonté de part et d'autre la décolonisation n'est pas une entreprise exagérément ardue. En tout état de cause, je voudrais souhaiter encore une fois prospérité, progrès et bien-être à ces deux pays.

5. Force nous est malheureusement de reconnaître que le colonialisme devient plus exacerbé à mesure que s'amenuisent les zones de domination coloniale, posant ainsi un problème des plus sérieux à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, car il s'agit en fait d'une politique appliquée au mépris de l'ONU et qui, restée impunie, offre l'exemple de la réussite aux personnes qui pourraient, à l'avenir, porter atteinte aux droits des peuples et des communautés. Le renforcement du règne de la force dans le seul intérêt de la minorité raciste du Zimbabwe, et au détriment de 4 millions d'Africains, de même que la menace que ce régime illégal fait peser sur les pays africains voisins n'ont d'égal que le renforcement du règne de la force en Palestine accompli au détriment de la population arabe, à cette différence près que les Arabes ont été expulsés de leurs foyers dans l'espoir qu'ils perdraient ainsi tous leurs droits, et à la différence aussi que le régime de la Rhodésie du Sud fait peser sur les pays voisins une menace en puissance, tandis que la menace sioniste dirigée contre les pays arabes voisins d'Israël s'est matérialisée dans les faits par une succession d'agressions et d'invasions.

6. La politique d'intégration appliquée aux Africains du Mozambique, de l'Angola et de la Guinée (Bissau) vise à détruire en eux l'essentiel de leur individualité proprement africaine, mais la politique du "Grand Israël" consiste à supprimer, sur la voie de l'expansionnisme qu'il s'est tracée, jusqu'aux difficultés pourtant inhérentes à l'intégration forcée en détruisant tout un peuple. Il y a colonialisme et colonialisme, et les nouvelles formes sont plus proches du génocide que de l'asphyxie. On saisit mieux sans doute, dans ces conditions, les raisons de l'intensification de la recherche nucléaire et de la production de bombes atomiques.

7. Non content de fonder son existence sur l'inégalité et la pratique de l'apartheid, le régime de l'Afrique du Sud étend son "noble message" et sa domination "bienveillante" au Sud-Ouest africain.

8. Des martyrs africains, accusés d'avoir défendu la cause de la liberté et de l'égalité, meurent dans les prisons. Ils sont ainsi punis pour avoir défendu les principes et les objectifs qui constituent le fondement même de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, principes et objectifs qu'elle s'efforce de faire respecter et auxquels, dans ses résolutions, elle invite tous les Etats à donner leur appui moral et matériel. Dans ce qui constitue actuellement la dernière phase du colonialisme britannique, une légende est répandue dans le dessein de masquer les survivances de la domination et l'exclusivité des intérêts.

9. C'est ainsi que le territoire de l'Oman, quoique occupé, est déclaré souverain. On cherche par ce subterfuge à réduire définitivement au silence la voix du peuple de l'Oman. Le Royaume-Uni parle volontiers de la solide amitié qui le lie au sultan, mais passe sous silence le fait qu'il existe un seul établissement public d'enseignement élémentaire dans l'ensemble du territoire.

10. Voilà sans doute la meilleure illustration de ce que le colonialisme accomplit dans l'intérêt des peuples coloniaux. Toutes ces formes de colonialisme ne diffèrent d'ailleurs pas quant à l'essentiel. Pour prévenir les accusations de violation du droit international qui pourraient être portées contre eux, les colonialistes tentent de se justifier en répandant une légende, en invoquant tantôt la "mission sacrée du multicontinentalisme", tantôt un rêve millénaire ou bimillénaire. Les souffrances infligées aux populations sont néanmoins les mêmes, qu'il s'agisse ici de travail forcé et là de la multiplication du nombre des réfugiés.

11. Intimement conscients du caractère fallacieux de leurs arguments, les colonialistes essaient alors de rétablir l'équilibre en conférant à la terreur et à la force valeur de faits accomplis. Pour y parvenir, ils ont besoin d'appuis considérables, qu'ils sont prêts à obtenir en sacrifiant les droits des autochtones au profit des grandes puissances et des vastes monopoles.

12. Les armes utilisées pour perpétrer les actes d'agression et de terreur portent la marque de leurs fournisseurs, encore que les alliances d'intérêts et les pactes conclus par les colonialistes soient négociés sous le couvert de la défense. Enfin, pour couronner le tout, les colonialistes se hâtent de s'établir afin d'usurper les droits de leurs victimes pour leur propre compte et afin d'opposer à toute tentative de règlement une situation nouvelle, compliquée d'aspects humains surajoutés.

13. Le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)] n'a négligé aucune des formes de pression possibles. Il a eu recours à des méthodes variées, il a multiplié le nombre des enquêtes et des missions de visite et transmis aux mouvements de libération l'assurance du plein appui moral de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Des per-sonnalités dévouées à la cause de l'émancipation des hommes ont consacré leur temps, leur énergie et leurs facultés intellectuelles à l'entreprise. D'éminents hommes d'Etat d'Asie et d'Afrique ont dirigé les travaux du Comité spécial, dont le président en exercice, l'ambassadeur de la République-Unie de Tanzanie, n'a reculé devant aucun sacrifice, n'a épargné aucun effort concevable et a fait preuve d'une totale abnégation pour mener la tâche à bien.

14. On commence à mieux connaître ce centre du colonialisme. Un examen minutieux du colonialisme sous ses formes détournées a révélé l'existence d'intérêts stratégiques et économiques solidaires et a précisé l'orientation de l'action future, mais l'ultime effort reste à faire. Il demeure nécessaire de brandir la menace des moyens d'action dont dispose l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Les pays épris de paix, au nombre desquels, à côté de nos pays frères, figurent les pays socialistes, demeurent vigilants et attentifs. Le soutien actif qu'ils n'ont cessé d'apporter à la cause de la décolonisation se passe de toute démonstration.

15. Qu'il me suffise de rappeler pour mémoire que le représentant de la Bulgarie a pris l'initiative d'obtenir que les institutions spécialisées s'engagent à aider les mouvements de libération, dont la lutte a été reconnue, aux termes mêmes des résolutions de l'ONU, comme étant légitime et digne d'un appui moral et matériel, et à suspendre toute assistance aux adversaires de la décolonisation, qui sont aussi les adversaires de l'ONU; cette idée constructive a abouti à l'adoption, à une forte majorité, de la résolution 2311 (XXII). Sans être membre du Comité spécial, la Tchécoslovaquie a apporté une précieuse contribution à ses travaux. La République démocratique allemande enfin, bien qu'elle ne soit pas encore membre de l'ONU, a saisi toutes les occasions qui se sont présentées pour exprimer son adhésion et pour fournir au Comité spécial d'intéressants renseignements sur le comportement de certaines sociétés impérialistes.

16. Il reste donc à surmonter les réticences de quelques grandes puissances et à les convaincre de faire passer la décolonisation avant leurs intérêts égoïstes et d'élever les idéaux de paix et d'harmonie internationales, ainsi que la cause de l'égalité entre tous les hommes, au-dessus de la loi du plus fort. Le Conseil de sécurité ne peut agir sans leur accord; combien de temps encore refuseront-elles de le lui donner?

17. Notre dernier espoir est que les mouvements de libération se trouveront, en vertu de l'appui moral que leur apportent nos résolutions, renforcés dans la lutte qu'ils mènent par la conviction que leur cause est partagée, comprise et, nous l'espérons, activement soutenue.

18. Je ne saurais rien ajouter à la précision et à la clarté avec lesquelles le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie a présenté un projet de résolution (A/L.541/Rev.1), dont ma délégation a l'honneur d'être coauteur. L'adoption de ce projet de résolution à l'unanimité pourrait faire naître un nouvel espoir.

19. M. DE LA ROSA (Philippines) [traduit de l'anglais]: Permettez-moi tout d'abord de déclarer, au sujet de l'accession à l'indépendance de la République populaire du Yémen du Sud, que ma délégation souhaite vivement s'associer aux paroles de bienvenue qui ont marqué l'entrée de ce pays à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Nous espérons qu'une coopération fructueuse s'instaurera avec les représentants de ce pays. Permettez-moi aussi de signaler que nous aurons le plaisir, au cours de la présente session, de décider à l'unanimité que l'Accord de tutelle pour le territoire de Nauru cessera d'avoir effet, donnant ainsi à ce pays la possibilité d'accéder à l'indépendance le 31 janvier 1968.

20. Presque tous les pays qui ont acquis leur indépendance au cours des 20 dernières années sont maintenant représentés dans notre assemblée, où ils apportent l'espoir d'un renforcement de l'action menée en faveur d'une application rapide de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. En revanche, on en est encore réduit à espérer l'appui de ceux qui sont demeurés sourds ou hostiles aux intentions de la Déclaration. Sans nous exagérer la difficulté de la tâche qui reste à accomplir, car de nombreux territoires et des millions d'hommes attendent encore leur libération, il nous faut stimuler la lutte pour la libération des peuples et la disparition de la sujétion coloniale.

21. Pour user d'une métaphore, aucune lueur d'espoir ne pointe à l'horizon dans les territoires de l'Afrique centrale. Les peuples de ces territoires encore colonisés n'entrevoient aucune perspective d'indépendance. Nous voyons au contraire que le joug colonial pèse de plus en plus lourdement sur eux. En disant cela, je pense évidemment au Sud-Ouest africain, à la Rhodésie du Sud et aux territoires sous domination portugaise.

22. Songez à la résolution quasi unanime de l'Assemblée générale mettant fin au Mandat de l'Afrique du Sud sur le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain [2145 (XXI)]. Songez aussi à la décision de l'Assemblée générale refusant de reconnaître à l'Afrique du Sud, en termes catégoriques, aucun droit sur ce territoire. Or, l'Afrique du Sud a opposé à ces décisions de l'Assemblée générale une totale indifférence; elle n'a rien fait en vue de quitter le territoire, elle a multiplié les provocations à l'égard de la population et a redoublé d'arrogance envers l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

23. En Rhodésie du Sud, le régime illégal soutenu par la minorité raciste subsiste malgré les sanctions ayant force obligatoire décidées par le Conseil de sécurité. La minorité raciste a au contraire raffermi sa position et a institué une nouvelle forme d'apartheid. Invité à recourir à la force en Rhodésie du Sud, le Royaume-Uni a révélé que cela risquait d'avoir des conséquences graves en raison de l'énorme influence dont bénéficiait le régime illégal.

24. Venons-en maintenant aux territoires sous domination portugaise. Ma délégation déplore sincèrement que la politique coloniale de la puissance administrante n'ait rien perdu de son intransigeance. Comme nous le savons, cette politique repose sur l'affirmation selon laquelle les colonies constituent "les provinces portugaises d'outre-mer" et ne peuvent prétendre à l'autodétermination puisque faisant partie intégrante du Portugal. Est-ce un poncif de dire que l'histoire va inexorablement dans le sens de la libération des pays et des peuples coloniaux? A notre avis, le Portugal devrait être invité à renouveler son adhésion à la Charte des Nations Unies et à donner son accord à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

25. En ce qui concerne le Sud-Ouest africain, la Rhodésie du Sud et les territoires sous administration portugaise, ma délégation estime que le sort des habitants repose maintenant entre les mains du Conseil de sécurité, et en particulier des membres permanents de celui-ci. En vertu de la Charte, le Conseil de sécurité jouit de certains pouvoirs qui, à notre avis, devraient permettre d'obtenir des résultats tangibles.

26. Je voudrais aborder maintenant la question des bases militaires dans les territoires dépendants. Ma délégation a déjà eu l'occasion d'exposer devant notre assemblée sa position à cet égard, mais j'aimerais y revenir. Notre position est la suivante: la décolonisation et le désarmement sont deux notions distinctes. La question des bases militaires étrangères ressort de la décolonisation s'il est clairement établi qu'une base militaire située sur un territoire non autonome où des troupes, quelles qu'elles soient, stationnées sur ce territoire sont utilisées par la puissance administrante pour réprimer les aspirations de la population à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Nous sommes dans ce cas favorables à la suppression de la base en question et au retrait des troupes incriminées. En harmonie avec la position ainsi définie, nous avons approuvé, dans les résolutions sur le Sud-Ouest africain, la Rhodésie du Sud, les territoires sous administration portugaise, Aden et l'Oman, les dispositions concernant la suppression des bases militaires ou le retrait des forces armées. En revanche, une disposition générale et absolue demandant que toutes les bases militaires établies sur tous les territoires non autonomes soient démantelées et que de nouvelles bases n'y soient pas installées ressort non plus de la décolonisation, mais du désarmement. Toujours en harmonie avec notre position, nous n'avons pu souscrire aux dispositions de cette nature contenues dans certaines résolutions, et nous ne sommes toujours pas en mesure de le faire.

27. Pour ce qui est de l'envoi de missions de visite dans les territoires non autonomes, ma délégation déplore vivement que les principales puissances administrantes persistent à en rejeter le principe, car ce procédé permettrait à l'Assemblée générale de recueillir directement des renseignements sur la situation dans chacun d'eux et sur la manière dont les autochtones envisagent l'avenir. L'Assemblée générale pourrait ainsi beaucoup plus facilement formuler les recommandations qui s'imposent. Nous voulons donc espérer que les puissances administrantes en question reconsidéreront leur position en la matière.

28. Pour les petits territoires à faible population, ma délégation estime que les conditions qui leur sont particulières doivent être pleinement prises en considération lors de l'élaboration des recommandations appropriées concernant leur avenir. Nous sommes également d'avis que, dans ces territoires tout autant que dans les territoires plus vastes, les vœux de la population doivent être l'élément déterminant pour décider de leur avenir. L'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait proposer ses bons offices pour faire connaître les différentes solutions, permettant ainsi aux populations d'opter librement, et en pleine connaissance de cause, pour la meilleure possible. Dans l'espoir que le rythme de la décolonisation ira s'accéléralant jusqu'à la libération de la dernière colonie, nous devons renouveler le mandat du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre.

29. A titre de conclusion, je tiens à dire que notre attitude envers le colonialisme s'explique aisément si l'on songe que nous avons dû lutter pendant 400 ans pour acquérir notre indépendance. Mais il y a plus, car nous croyons qu'à l'ère de l'Organisation des Nations Unies toute théorie ou conception destinée à justifier la survie du colonialisme sous l'un quelconque de ses aspects est un affront porté à la conscience de l'humanité.

30. M. MIRDHA (Inde) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'un des objectifs premiers de l'Organisation des Nations Unies est d'aider les territoires non autonomes à effectuer la transition entre la sujétion coloniale et l'indépendance souveraine. Depuis 20 ans, divers organes de l'ONU consacrent toute leur attention aux problèmes relatifs au colonialisme. L'inscription des mêmes questions, pendant toutes ces années, à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale, témoigne des progrès accomplis, ou plus exactement de l'absence de tout progrès. Ma délégation s'inquiète de la lenteur désespérante avec laquelle se poursuit l'application du principe de la libération et de l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les peuples non autonomes, principe que la quasi-totalité des Membres de l'Organisation ont pourtant reconnu, à l'exception, comme de règle, du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud.

31. Il est vrai qu'un assez grand nombre de pays ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance, notamment à la fin des années 1950 et au début des années 1960, alors qu'un puissant courant de changement traversait le continent africain. Ma délégation nourrissait l'espoir que ce courant ne se limiterait pas à l'Afrique, mais gagnerait rapidement d'autres régions du monde, réalisant ainsi l'un des principaux objectifs qui avaient inspiré la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Nos espoirs ont malheureusement été déçus parce que les puissances administrantes, dont bon nombre proclament respecter le principe du droit à l'autodétermination, refusent de remplir les obligations qui leur incombent aux termes de la Charte.

32. L'Afrique australe pose les problèmes les plus ardues en matière de décolonisation. Le Secrétaire général a excellemment défini la situation qui y règne, et que nous connaissons tous très bien, dans une allocution prononcée à l'occasion de la quatrième session de la Conférence des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine, qui a eu lieu à Kinshasa en septembre 1967, lorsqu'il déclarait:

"Néanmoins, c'est pour moi, comme je sais que c'est pour vous, une source de très vif regret que le dernier chapitre de l'histoire du colonialisme reste encore à écrire, que, en particulier dans le sud du grand continent africain, la volonté collective des Nations Unies de mener les choses à leur terme semble se heurter à un mur de méfiance. Je suis sûr que la communauté internationale n'acceptera pas cet état de choses comme un fait accompli — elle doit redoubler d'efforts pour faire disparaître du globe, dans les moindres délais possibles, les dernières traces du colonialisme. L'ONU restera incontestablement le point central d'où s'exercera ce noble effort international."

33. Ma délégation partage pleinement les sentiments exprimés par le Secrétaire général. Nous sommes convaincus que ce "mur de méfiance" s'écroulera si tous les Etats Membres, et notamment ceux dont le rayonnement est le plus grand, contribuent sans réserve à l'application des résolutions pertinentes de l'ONU. Ce qui fait défaut, ce n'est pas la possibilité d'entreprendre une action efficace, mais la volonté, de la part de certains Etats Membres, de s'acquitter pleinement de leurs obligations.

34. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre est l'un des organes de l'ONU le plus directement engagés dans la lutte commune visant à éliminer le colonialisme. Le Comité spécial, dont ma délégation a l'honneur de faire partie, a été créé afin de servir en quelque sorte de "chien de garde" à l'Assemblée générale, afin aussi d'envisager et de recommander des mesures propres à accélérer l'application de la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. L'adoption de cette déclaration et la création du Comité spécial ont incontestablement imprimé un nouvel élan au processus de décolonisation. Le rapport du Comité spécial pour l'année 1967 [A/6700/Rev.1] est important. Le Comité spécial a conduit ses travaux tant à New York qu'en Afrique. Les réunions tenues en Afrique ont été extrêmement utiles, car elles ont permis aux membres du Comité, et notamment aux représentants des puissances administrantes, d'observer personnellement certains aspects de l'action constructive menée par les mouvements de libération nationale dans diverses colonies. Le Comité a également entendu des pétitionnaires représentant un grand nombre de mouvements de libération et de partis politiques des territoires coloniaux d'Afrique.

35. Ma délégation souhaite saisir cette occasion pour remercier les Gouvernements de la République démocratique du Congo, de la Zambie et de la République-Unie de Tanzanie d'avoir invité et accueilli le Comité spécial, lui permettant ainsi de se réunir en Afrique.

36. Ma délégation tient à rendre un hommage sincère au Président du Comité spécial, l'ambassadeur de Tanzanie, M. Malacela, qui s'est acquis notre profonde admiration par son total dévouement à la cause de la décolonisation.

37. Je voudrais aussi saisir cette occasion pour exprimer l'admiration que ma délégation éprouve pour la lutte héroïque menée par les peuples coloniaux d'Afrique et d'ailleurs pour obtenir leur libération. La lutte a été très souvent sanglante, mais nous savons tous qu'aucun moyen n'est à négliger lorsqu'il s'agit de traiter avec les autorités coloniales.

38. Je tiens aussi à inviter instamment les puissances administrantes à coopérer avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies à la réalisation de la noble tâche qu'elle s'est fixée, à savoir l'instauration d'une société fondée sur la justice et la liberté; je les invite par ailleurs à comprendre qu'il y va de leur propre intérêt de s'incliner devant l'irrévocable et d'assurer sans heurt la passation des pouvoirs aux peuples placés sous leur domination.

39. Au cours de la présente session, l'Assemblée générale a abordé deux aspects nouveaux de la décolonisation. Pour la première fois, le point 24 relatif aux activités des intérêts étrangers, économiques et autres, qui font obstacle à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)], a fait l'objet d'un débat séparé. La Quatrième Commission a ainsi pu consacrer plus de temps et d'attention à l'examen de cette importante question. Le point 97 relatif à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux figure également pour la première fois à notre ordre du jour, à la suite d'une initiative de la République populaire de Bulgarie. La question a fait l'objet d'un long débat à la Quatrième Commission. Nous espérons que l'adoption de la résolution présentée au titre de ce point de l'ordre du jour [2311 (XXII)] ouvrira, dans ce domaine, la voie à une coopération à la fois plus étroite et plus active entre l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les institutions spécialisées.

40. La situation coloniale n'a sans doute pas sensiblement évolué au cours de l'année écoulée, mais un événement marquant en a été l'accession à l'indépendance de l'ancien territoire de l'Arabie du Sud. Ma délégation, à l'instar de tous les peuples épris de paix, a salué la naissance de la République populaire du Yémen du Sud comme une nouvelle étape dans la lutte commune contre le colonialisme. L'île Maurice et le Souaziland doivent également devenir indépendants l'année prochaine. Ces modestes succès encourageront certainement le Comité spécial à redoubler d'efforts et à essayer par tous les moyens d'accélérer la disparition des derniers vestiges du colonialisme. Le programme de travail du Comité spécial reste cependant très chargé, car la Déclaration s'applique encore à quelque 51 territoires non autonomes, qui représentent une population de près de 29 millions d'habitants. Ma délégation espère que l'année qui vient sera de nouveau marquée par un effort soutenu dans l'entreprise difficile qui consiste à traduire dans les faits notre volonté commune de donner aux peuples du monde entier la possibilité de jouir du droit inaliénable de choisir un destin conforme à leurs vœux et à leurs aspirations.

41. Mlle GROZA (Roumanie): De nos jours, une condition essentielle de la sauvegarde de la paix consiste dans le respect du droit de chaque nation de se développer librement et de chaque pays de décider lui-même de son sort, conformément à ses aspirations nationales et à ses propres intérêts. L'ampleur acquise par les mouvements de libération nationale et sociale au cours du dernier demi-siècle, l'apparition sur la carte du monde d'un grand nombre d'Etats indépendants qui apportent une contribution précieuse à la cause de la paix et de la sécurité internationales attestent avec une vigueur accrue la force des aspirations des peuples à l'indépendance, à la dignité humaine, au bien-être.

42. L'une des réalités contemporaines qui se reflètent aussi dans le cadre de notre Organisation est que la moitié environ des pays qui composent actuellement le monde est formée par des Etats ayant conquis leur indépendance après la seconde guerre mondiale. Par suite de ces grandes transformations structurales, les relations internationales ont acquis, pour la première fois dans l'histoire, un caractère vraiment mondial et le rôle des pays, petits et moyens, s'est sensiblement accru. Dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, il y a encore de nombreux peuples qui luttent pour la consolidation de leur indépendance, pour une existence nationale exempte de toute domination, pour l'affirmation de leur propre personnalité.

43. Mais ces légitimes aspirations des peuples se voient encore opposer une résistance acharnée de la part des forces du colonialisme. Sept ans après la proclamation par l'Assemblée générale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, les liens d'asservissement colonial, la politique de discrimination raciale, les pratiques de l'apartheid se maintiennent toujours sur une vaste région du globe.

44. Ainsi, le gouvernement raciste de la République sud-africaine méconnaît les décisions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en ce qui concerne le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain. En éludant ses responsabilités à l'égard de la population africaine, la politique du Royaume-Uni a conduit à l'instauration, en Rhodésie du Sud, d'un régime illégal raciste qui défie l'opinion publique mondiale. Ayant recours à une large gamme de moyens et de procédures allant des artifices juridiques jusqu'aux actions militaires de répression, les colonialistes portugais empêchent les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise et d'autres territoires de réaliser leurs aspirations à une existence indépendante.

45. En dépit des aspirations et de la lutte menée par les peuples pour leur développement indépendant, nous continuons à nous trouver devant un état de choses qui contraste d'une manière frappante avec les progrès enregistrés par l'humanité dans le domaine de la science et de la technique.

46. En tenant toute une série de peuples à l'écart du processus du développement, le colonialisme constitue un phénomène antisocial nuisible qui entrave, d'une manière dangereuse et dans une mesure appréciable, les efforts entrepris pour remédier à l'inégalité entre ceux qui ont et ceux qui n'ont pas, inégalité qui est une source de dangers pour la paix générale.

47. Le caractère anachronique du système colonial, contraire aux intérêts de tous les peuples, découle du fait que ce système est fondé sur un concept suranné de maintien de la misère économique et un état retardataire, au point de vue politique, social et culturel, des peuples opprimés, à l'avantage de ceux qui réalisent d'énormes bénéfices par suite de l'exploitation coloniale. Or, l'histoire contemporaine témoigne que le bien-être d'un peuple ne peut être fondé sur l'exploitation d'un autre peuple et que, tout comme la paix et la sécurité internationales, le bien-être des peuples est, à l'échelle mondiale, indivisible.

48. Au fond, c'est bien l'une des raisons des efforts multiples déployés dans le cadre et en dehors de l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour favoriser et développer une coopération multilatérale avec les peuples ayant acquis récemment leur indépendance d'Etat et qui s'efforcent de consolider leur indépendance économique et d'accéder à un niveau de vie comparable à celui des pays avancés.

49. Il est évident que la ferme opposition à l'égard du maintien du système d'exploitation coloniale s'étaye autant sur des critères d'ordre moral et sur les principes de la défense de la légalité dans la vie internationale que sur la conscience du fait que le système colonial est devenu incompatible avec la paix et la sécurité internationales.

50. L'expérience démontre chaque jour, d'une manière convaincante, qu'il est impossible de maintenir un pareil état de choses au mépris de la soif de liberté des peuples opprimés. En effet, la paix internationale et la sécurité mondiale ne peuvent être convenablement assurées aussi longtemps que, dans telle ou telle partie du monde, ce système condamné par l'histoire, incompatible avec la dignité humaine et les commandements de l'éthique internationale, se maintient sous une forme ouverte ou dissimulée.

51. Je voudrais aussi m'arrêter un instant sur le lien intime qui existe entre la lutte anticolonialiste et les efforts déployés par tous les peuples en vue d'assurer le respect des droits de l'homme et de ses libertés fondamentales, ce qui, au point de vue juridique et moral, implique l'égalité de droits pour tous les êtres humains, sans distinction de race, de couleur ou de nationalité.

52. Le colonialisme constitue la méconnaissance la plus brutale de ces droits et principes consacrés par la Charte des Nations Unies et la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme.

53. Comment pourrait-on parler de respect des droits de l'homme dans une colonie où la population autochtone se voit contester — précisément parce qu'elle appartient à une autre race que celle dominante — le droit élémentaire d'être maître dans son propre foyer? Les preuves de la violation des droits élémentaires des peuples soumis à la domination coloniale ne font que s'accumuler de jour en jour.

54. Je n'ai pas l'intention d'évoquer ici tous les aspects revêtus par le colonialisme et le racisme. On peut néanmoins se poser une question légitime: comment est-il possible que le phénomène anachronique du colonialisme, avec toutes ses conséquences maléfiques pour la société contemporaine, se maintienne en dépit des décisions de l'ONU, qui exigent la liquidation de tous les régimes coloniaux, et au mépris de l'opinion mondiale?

55. En considérant de plus près certains aspects du monde contemporain, ainsi que les conclusions qui se dégagent des discussions qui ont eu lieu à l'Assemblée plénière et dans les commissions à ce sujet, on se rend bien compte que les facteurs qui agissent contre l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux sont, tout d'abord, les intérêts économiques et financiers des monopoles internationaux qui opèrent dans les territoires soumis à la domination coloniale.

56. Les rapports du Comité des Vingt-Quatre démontrent, faits à l'appui, que nous avons assisté, ces dernières années, à une pénétration toujours plus puissante du capital étranger dans les territoires soumis à la domination coloniale, phénomène qui, loin de favoriser l'émancipation économique, sociale et culturelle des peuples de ces territoires, ne fait qu'intensifier la domination et l'exploitation et accroître les profits des monopoles.

57. En désespoir de cause, les puissances coloniales cherchent à unir leurs forces pour sauver ce qu'elles peuvent des anciens privilèges coloniaux, et même pour reconquérir les positions perdues. Eloquente à cet égard est la manière solidaire dont elles agissent pour appuyer le régime raciste illégal de la Rhodésie du Sud.

58. Il est certain que les colonialistes sud-africains et portugais n'auraient pas résisté à la lutte des peuples opprimés et n'auraient pas eu le courage de défier la volonté de la communauté internationale, exprimée aussi dans de nombreuses résolutions de notre Organisation, sans l'aide directe ou indirecte accordée par leurs alliés, notamment par l'intermédiaire des blocs militaires. La vie confirme, une fois de plus, que les blocs militaires offrent des prétextes d'ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'autrui et contribuent à la perpétuation d'un système condamné par l'histoire, au maintien du joug colonial.

59. Je voudrais retenir à présent l'attention de l'Assemblée sur un autre phénomène. A mesure que se rapproche le moment de la liquidation des derniers vestiges du système colonial s'accroît la tendance à substituer aux anciennes méthodes colonialistes des méthodes plus raffinées. Les pratiques néo-colonialistes qui portent atteinte à la souveraineté des Etats et méconnaissent le droit des peuples au libre développement sont favorisées par la longue domination coloniale qui a déformé l'économie des anciennes colonies, en la faisant dévier de son développement normal vers une production unilatérale de matières premières agricoles et industrielles.

60. Entre le vieux système colonial et le néo-colonialisme, il existe une étroite liaison, les deux représentant en somme des formes variées de manifestation du même phénomène: la domination du plus faible par le plus fort, l'opposition des éléments colonialistes à l'exercice du droit qu'ont les peuples de décider librement de leur sort.

61. Profondément attachée aux idées de liberté et d'indépendance nationale, la Roumanie socialiste a toujours exprimé — et exprime une fois de plus — son entière solidarité et son appui à la juste lutte menée par les peuples pour s'affranchir de la domination coloniale, pour affirmer leur entité nationale et assurer leur progrès social. Le peuple roumain, qui a connu jadis toutes les rigueurs de la domination étrangère et qui a conquis son indépendance au terme d'une lutte multiséculaire, est naturellement aux côtés des peuples qui luttent pour renverser la domination coloniale et parvenir à un développement indépendant. L'histoire démontre que la voie la plus sûre pour réaliser cet objectif fondamental consiste dans l'intensification des efforts déployés par les peuples eux-mêmes, la mobilisation du potentiel humain et matériel, la concentration et l'union de toutes les forces avancées des nations en cause.

62. Nous nous associons aux opinions exprimées ici selon lesquelles l'Organisation des Nations Unies pourrait et devrait intensifier son appui à la lutte des peuples des colonies, dans l'esprit de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et des nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité, qui n'ont pas toujours été respectées par ceux-là mêmes qui ont voté en leur faveur, ce qui a sérieusement entravé le processus de décolonisation.

63. Par les mécanismes et les moyens dont elle dispose, l'Organisation des Nations Unies est en mesure de contribuer davantage à l'élimination des pratiques colonialistes et néo-colonialistes. Décisifs pour l'obtention de la victoire seront bien sûr la lutte et les efforts déployés par ces peuples mêmes contre les régimes coloniaux et racistes, pour la défense de leur droit sacré, inaliénable et imprescriptible d'être maîtres de leur destinée, de disposer librement de leurs richesses et ressources, de choisir selon leurs propres aspirations et sans aucune immixtion étrangère le système social qui leur convient.

64. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, chargé d'examiner la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, a déployé une activité utile dans l'accomplissement du mandat qui lui a été confié. L'intensification de son activité visant à dénoncer les puissances coloniales, à attirer l'attention de l'opinion publique mondiale sur la situation des colonies et des territoires non autonomes, à veiller à l'application des décisions prises en vue de la liquidation du colonialisme, accroîtra sans doute l'efficacité de ce mécanisme. Nous considérons de ce fait que tous les Etats ont le devoir d'aider de leur mieux le Comité à mener sa tâche à bon terme.

65. Il est en outre nécessaire que de nouveaux efforts soient entrepris, que de nouvelles mesures soient adoptées afin de renforcer la lutte menée, à l'échelon mondial, pour faire disparaître toutes les formes, ouvertes ou déguisées, du colonialisme. A la recherche de ces méthodes et moyens nouveaux, à leur application aussi énergique et prompte que possible, sont intéressés non seulement les peuples qui se trouvent encore sous le joug colonialiste ou néo-colonialiste, mais absolument tous les peuples, car le maintien de ce fléau ne peut qu'avoir des effets maléfiques sur les perspectives de paix, de sécurité et de développement continu de chaque pays.

66. La délégation roumaine, pour sa part, est profondément convaincue que l'aspiration des peuples à la liberté et à une vie meilleure s'avérera plus forte que les obstacles dressés par les colonialistes et les néo-colonialistes et qu'elle finira par triompher.

67. M. WILLIAMS (Sierra Leone) [traduit de l'anglais]: Il y a quelques semaines, l'accession à l'indépendance, sous le nom de République populaire du Yémen du Sud, des territoires non autonomes d'Aden et de l'Arabie du Sud s'est produite dans des circonstances qui ne semblent pas avoir recueilli l'approbation de tous les Etats Membres de notre organisation. Nous avons cependant tous accueilli avec joie la naissance d'une nouvelle nation, fruit de la sueur, du sang et des larmes de la population arabe, mais aussi des pressions exercées par notre organisation. Nous nous sommes tous accordés pour adresser nos meilleurs vœux à ce nouvel Etat et pour exprimer l'espoir que les populations qui le composent renforceront encore leur unité pour assurer leur survie et leur avenir. Hier, nous nous sommes associés aux paroles de bienvenue que d'autres délégations ont prononcées à l'occasion de l'arrivée de ce nouvel Etat parmi nous.

68. L'île Maurice, Nauru et le Souaziland doivent obtenir leur indépendance en 1968, et nous voulons encore espérer que le Gouvernement espagnol et les habitants de la Guinée équatoriale parviendront à s'entendre sur les modalités de l'indépendance qui pourrait être octroyée à ce territoire au cours de la même année.

69. Nombreux sont néanmoins les peuples et les territoires qui sont encore sous le joug colonial. Le nombre des colonisés dans les îles du Pacifique et de l'Atlantique, ainsi que sur le continent africain, atteint près de 30 millions. La volonté et les efforts sincères des puissances administrantes devraient permettre de décoloniser rapidement ces régions selon les principes énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV). Il est de mon devoir solennel, à ce stade, de réaffirmer notre conviction profonde selon laquelle tout territoire colonial doit avoir la possibilité de devenir indépendant et de choisir la forme d'autodétermination qu'il désire, mais aussi de souligner que, dans chaque territoire, les autochtones doivent être consultés, par des moyens acceptables pour notre organisation, sur leurs aspirations concernant l'avenir.

70. Cette règle, qui ne souffre aucune exception, s'applique aussi bien aux vastes territoires tels que l'Afrique australe, le Mozambique, la Rhodésie du Sud et l'Angola qu'aux territoires de dimensions plus modestes tels que les îles Pitcairn, Nioué et Tokélaou. Le principe du droit à l'autodétermination n'est d'ailleurs pas seulement énoncé dans la Charte; il a aussi été réaffirmé dans des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et d'autres organes et comités appelés à traiter de certains aspects de la décolonisation.

71. Mon gouvernement croit que l'œuvre de décolonisation doit être rapidement menée à son terme. Depuis des dizaines d'années, le colonialisme n'a guère perdu de terrain dans la plupart de ces territoires. L'exemple des Etats nouvellement indépendants a montré qu'après un léger fléchissement initial ces jeunes nations connaissent un nouvel essor, même si des difficultés d'ordre économique les empêchent de rattraper les pays développés.

72. Les questions dont nous sommes saisis semblent se diviser en trois catégories, à savoir celles qui ont trait à l'ensemble du continent africain, celles qui se rapportent aux îles, enfin celles qui concernent des territoires faisant l'objet de pourparlers multilatéraux. Je m'arrêterai brièvement sur chacune de ces trois catégories, ma délégation ayant déjà longuement exposé son point de vue, devant la Quatrième Commission et le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, sur certaines questions appartenant à chacune d'elles.

73. De l'avis de ma délégation, les problèmes de l'Afrique australe sont essentiellement d'ordre racial. Les Sud-Africains refusent de reconnaître la décision historique que l'Assemblée générale a prise en 1966 au sujet du Sud-Ouest africain [résolution 2145 (XXI)]. Ils multiplient les opérations contre la population du Sud-Ouest africain, pour qui les perspectives de justice et de liberté, ainsi que la jouissance des droits de l'homme, s'estompent de jour en jour. En Angola et au Mozambique, les Portugais livrent une guerre contre les Africains, qui sont blessés ou tués pour avoir simplement cherché à se libérer de leurs chaînes pour vivre librement, comme des êtres humains.

74. En Rhodésie du Sud, après la déclaration unilatérale d'indépendance de 1965, Ian Smith a osé braver l'Organisation des Nations Unies parce que le Royaume-Uni, la puissance administrante, n'a pris aucune des mesures efficaces recommandées dans diverses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale pour mettre fin à cet acte séditieux. Or, nous constatons que ces trois régimes ont constitué en Afrique australe ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler "l'alliance impie" dans le seul but de s'entraider et de préserver la suprématie des Blancs dans la patrie des Noirs. La région doit être décolonisée, faute de quoi l'ONU risque fort d'achopper sur des problèmes plus complexes.

75. Il est peut-être bon de rappeler que le maintien de la paix est la fonction essentielle de l'ONU. Or, nous le déclarons une fois encore, des opérations de maintien de la paix pourraient devenir nécessaires dans ces régions si les Etats Membres refusent de prendre conjointement les mesures indispensables pour que toute la partie méridionale de l'Afrique devienne véritablement indépendante. Les problèmes du maintien de la paix que doit résoudre notre organisation, par l'intermédiaire du Comité spécial des opérations de maintien de la paix, se compliqueraient encore de ce fait et exigeraient, en cas de conflit armé dans la région, la mobilisation de toutes les ressources en énergie, en hommes et en matériel. Un conflit racial de cette nature garderait difficilement, en effet, un caractère limité et risquerait de s'étendre au monde entier.

76. Nous disons cela parce que nous estimons que certaines grandes puissances, en particulier des puissances occidentales, ne se sont pas conformées aux résolutions, d'une portée pourtant modeste, que l'Assemblée générale et le Conseil de sécurité avaient adoptées au sujet des territoires coloniaux de la région. Les activités étrangères, financières et autres ont suscité une condamnation massive. Ma délégation a déjà eu l'occasion de préciser, dans une autre instance, que ce n'est pas le principe des investissements étrangers qui est mis en cause, mais les méthodes utilisées par les investisseurs étrangers pour accroître leurs bénéfices, de même que la législation locale, en vertu de laquelle les autochtones ne retirent presque aucun profit de l'exploitation de leurs ressources minérales et autres. Nous nous adressons de nouveau à ces grands pays pour les inviter à ne pas se complaire dans leur propre inaction, mais à appliquer les mesures recommandées par ceux d'entre nous qui se trouvent à proximité de la zone où le danger est imminent.

77. A mesure que la décolonisation se poursuit, les petits territoires non autonomes occupent de plus en plus le devant de la scène. Ma délégation partage entièrement le point de vue du Secrétaire général, aux yeux duquel le problème de l'admission de ces territoires dans le concert des nations mérite de recevoir une solution juste et viable. Ainsi que je l'ai dit précédemment, nous croyons vraiment que même l'île Pitcairn, qui ne compte que 80 habitants environ, doit bénéficier du droit à l'autodétermination. Les habitants devraient pouvoir donner librement leur avis sur l'avenir de leur île. Nous continuons à espérer qu'avec l'assistance du Secrétaire général le Comité des Vingt-Quatre pourra nous indiquer la voie à suivre pour atteindre cet objectif.

78. L'Assemblée a instamment prié les parties en cause dans tous les territoires coloniaux qui sont le théâtre de conflits bilatéraux ou multilatéraux de rechercher ensemble, sur la base de la Charte et de la résolution 1514 (XV), des solutions de nature à servir les intérêts à la fois des parties en présence et des habitants des territoires. Nous ne pouvons qu'encourager les parties en cause à entamer des pourparlers en vue de mettre au point, avec la collaboration des populations intéressées, une formule qui permettrait d'accélérer la décolonisation.

79. Pour les territoires dont le statut est mal défini, c'est-à-dire ceux qui, sans être tout à fait indépendants, ne sont pas considérés comme des colonies, il serait utile que notre organisation étudie leur cas, afin que, ayant fait table rase de ces chimères, nous sachions une fois pour toutes lesquels de ces territoires sont indépendants et lesquels ne le sont pas. L'Assemblée générale devrait avoir la possibilité d'habiliter le Comité des Vingt-Quatre à prendre la décision audacieuse d'examiner ces questions avant de soumettre des recommandations à la prochaine session de l'Assemblée générale. Pour sa part, l'Assemblée générale devrait faire porter ses efforts plus particulièrement sur l'Afrique australe. A cet égard, ma délégation a écouté avec attention le débat sur la question des intérêts étrangers, financiers et autres qui entrent en jeu en Afrique australe, car c'est là le domaine où apparaissent le plus clairement les réalités à la fois de la puissance administrante et des autres nations intéressées. Nous avons également pris note des difficultés que rencontre le Conseil du Sud-Ouest africain dans l'accomplissement de la tâche que lui a confiée cette assemblée.

80. Je terminerai en rappelant que presque tous les Etats représentés ici ont connu, à une époque plus ou moins éloignée, la condition de territoire colonial. Que chacun d'entre nous songe aux infamies et aux souffrances infligées à ses ancêtres; que chacun d'entre nous se remette en mémoire ses aspirations et la lutte qu'il a menée pour l'indépendance. A l'inverse de Salazar et de Vorster, souvenons-nous du passé et rappelons-nous comment nous nous sommes tous libérés de la tyrannie colonialiste des époques précédentes pour devenir indépendants, et prenons ensemble la décision de libérer les territoires coloniaux.

81. M. TCHERNOUCHTENKO (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) [traduit du russe]: Permettez-moi de commencer par un bref historique de l'activité de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et par une évaluation de sa participation au processus de décolonisation durant ces dernières années.

82. Il y a sept ans, le 14 décembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale adoptait un document de grande portée historique: la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [1514 (XV)]. Son texte est bien connu, notamment, j'en suis certain, de tous ceux qui sont présents ici, tant ceux qui ont applaudi son adoption ou qui ont enfin obtenu l'indépendance et siègent parmi nous en qualité de représentants de pays souverains que ceux qui, de toute évidence, ne la portent pas dans leur cœur.

83. Néanmoins, je voudrais rappeler le passage dans lequel l'Assemblée générale "proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations". Ce sont là des paroles remarquables, inspirées par une exigence de notre époque — la volonté des peuples du monde entier qui ne peuvent en aucun cas accepter le fait qu'il y ait encore sur notre planète des foyers d'esclavage colonial, l'héritage le plus honteux du passé.

84. Depuis 1961, c'est-à-dire à partir de la seizième session, l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale comprend un point relatif à la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration. Cette question y figure cette fois encore car les puissances coloniales et ceux qui les soutiennent directement ou indirectement ont empêché et empêchent par tous les moyens la libération totale des pays et des peuples coloniaux du joug étranger.

85. Point n'est besoin de m'arrêter en détail sur chaque session depuis 1961. Chacune d'elles a apporté une contribution toujours plus grande et plus valable à la cause de la lutte contre le colonialisme. Ainsi, une résolution [2105 (XX)], adoptée déjà à la vingtième session, en 1965, reconnaît la légitimité de la lutte que les peuples sous domination coloniale mènent pour l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et invite tous les Etats à apporter une aide matérielle et morale aux mouvements de libération nationale dans les territoires coloniaux. Elle prie aussi les puissances coloniales de démanteler les bases militaires installées dans les territoires coloniaux et de s'abstenir d'en établir de nouvelles.

86. On y lit également que l'Assemblée générale prie tous les Etats et les institutions internationales, y compris les institutions spécialisées des Nations Unies, de refuser toute assistance, quelle qu'elle soit, aux Gouvernements portugais et sud-africain tant qu'ils n'auront pas renoncé à leur politique de domination coloniale et de discrimination raciale.

87. Une autre résolution, adoptée à la vingt et unième session, condamne les activités de ceux des intérêts économiques et financiers étrangers qui appuient les régimes coloniaux et constituent, de ce fait, un sérieux obstacle à la décolonisation. A la présente session, l'Assemblée générale a également adopté une série de décisions positives contribuant à la lutte des peuples contre le joug colonial.

88. Tout récemment, nous avons salué l'apparition d'un nouvel Etat, la République populaire du Yémen du Sud qui, depuis hier, est Membre des Nations Unies. Que ses représentants ici reçoivent de cette tribune nos félicitations.

89. Cependant, la décolonisation se poursuit dans une lutte complexe et tendue. Les peuples coloniaux ont affaire à un adversaire dangereux et perfide qui possède des forces armées dotées de l'équipement le plus moderne, et des ressources économiques et financières énormes. En outre, il jouit de l'appui direct ou indirect des membres du bloc atlantique et d'autres blocs militaires occidentaux.

90. Soulignons encore le fait que le colonialisme moderne est non seulement dangereux mais perfide. Il camoufle sa nature et son activité sous les oripeaux multicolores de la démagogie et s'adapte aux tendances du moment. Le néo-colonialisme se sert de toutes les armes possibles; il attise les haines entre tribus et encourage les penchants séparatistes, il recourt aux diverses formes d'asservissement politique et économique des peuples telles que l'exportation de capitaux, les échanges commerciaux inégaux, l'aide assortie de conditions politiques bien définies. Il peut créer des bases militaires sur les territoires d'autres pays, imposer des régimes fantoches, etc.

91. La vie même a confirmé la justesse de la conclusion selon laquelle l'autonomie politique, la proclamation de l'indépendance de tel ou tel territoire ne mettent pas fin à la lutte pour la liberté réelle et les droits souverains qui se poursuit contre le néo-colonialisme, au nom de la libération économique de l'emprise impérialiste, au nom du progrès social.

92. Dans ces conditions, notre organisation doit être beaucoup plus active qu'elle ne l'a été jusqu'à présent, non seulement parce que les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de l'Afrique du Sud, de l'Oman, de la Rhodésie du Sud, de Porto Rico, des îles du Pacifique, de l'Atlantique et de l'océan Indien portent encore les chaînes de l'esclavage, mais aussi parce que les colonisateurs s'accrochent avec acharnement à ce qu'ils n'ont pas encore perdu. Là aussi, les pays occidentaux sont les protecteurs des forces du colonialisme et du racisme.

93. En effet, le Portugal, un des pays le plus arriérés d'Europe, pourrait-il conserver sa domination coloniale et poursuivre de sales guerres en Angola, au Mozambique et en Guinée dite portugaise sans l'aide et l'appui de ses partenaires du bloc militaire et colonialiste de l'OTAN, avant tout des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, de la Grande-Bretagne et de l'Allemagne occidentale?

94. De même, Ian Smith aurait-il pu se maintenir en Rhodésie du Sud, après avoir asservi le peuple du Zimbabwe? Les racistes sud-africains qui occupent le Sud-Ouest africain seraient-ils si impudents s'ils n'avaient pour eux les pays occidentaux qui, en paroles, prêchent la décolonisation mais, en pratique, empêchent de toutes leurs forces qu'elle ne se réalise?

95. Les monopoles internationaux sont un autre ennemi dangereux pour les peuples qui combattent pour la liberté et l'indépendance. Nous pouvons dire avec certitude que ce sont précisément eux les principaux responsables du maintien du joug colonial. Néanmoins, d'aucuns se mettraient en quatre pour prouver que l'activité des monopoles est prétendument utile à l'économie et au développement des territoires coloniaux et que même elle sert les intérêts des peuples.

96. Toute l'histoire de l'impérialisme est une succession de pillages des peuples des colonies et des pays dépendants au nom des bénéfices extraordinaires qu'en retirent les monopoles des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni et des autres puissances coloniales. Plusieurs preuves éloquentes témoignent de cet état de choses. Prenons-en une.

97. Selon des données fournies par le GATT, entre 1953 et 1958, l'exportation de capitaux privés des pays occidentaux en Asie, en Afrique et en Amérique latine représentait 7,6 milliards de dollars environ, alors que les revenus que les monopoles occidentaux en ont obtenus sous forme de bénéfices, d'intérêts et de dividendes, s'élevaient à 13,8 milliards de dollars. En d'autres termes, les bénéfices nets ont en cinq ans doublé presque la somme des capitaux privés investis.

98. Voilà des faits qui montrent toute la monstruosité avec laquelle les monopoles internationaux dépouillent les pays coloniaux et dépendants. Ils démentent complètement les assertions des colonisateurs et de leurs acolytes selon lesquelles l'afflux des capitaux étrangers dans ces pays aurait une "influence bénéfique" sur le développement de leur économie. L'état actuel des choses prouve que le retard économique, social et culturel dans lequel vivent les pays coloniaux et les pays nouvellement indépendants est dû en premier lieu à l'activité néfaste des monopoles internationaux qui les ont pillés et continuent à le faire. En revanche, l'exemple de bon nombre de pays, devenus récemment indépendants, montre qu'ils n'obtiennent de grands succès dans le développement de leur économie et de leur culture que lorsqu'ils luttent contre la pression des capitaux étrangers et déclarent hors la loi ou limitent l'activité des monopoles internationaux.

99. La délégation de la Biélorussie, comme bien d'autres délégations, estime que la résolution 2288 (XXII), adoptée la semaine dernière par l'Assemblée générale, condamnant l'activité des monopoles internationaux dans les colonies, est un énorme pas en avant que les Nations Unies ont fait vers la décolonisation. Notre tâche consiste maintenant à développer et à renforcer davantage encore les dispositions de cette résolution et à veiller à son application.

100. L'histoire du colonialisme est étroitement liée à l'activité militaire des puissances coloniales et aux points d'appui qu'elles se sont constitués sur les territoires asservis. Nous le savons tous: les premiers acheteurs et les premiers industriels y ont été suivis de près par les soldats.

101. Il va de soi qu'à l'heure actuelle la situation se présente différemment: les acheteurs ne sont plus les mêmes, les soldats ne sont plus armés de halberdes. En fait, les temps ont tellement changé que souvent il n'y a que les soldats qui arrivent. Cependant, la nature du problème reste la même car les intérêts des monopoles continuent à être défendus par les forces armées des puissances coloniales.

102. A cet égard, il convient de souligner le fait que de nos jours, sous la pression du mouvement de libération nationale, les colonialistes se voient forcés de quitter les colonies qui, de ce fait, deviennent de moins en moins nombreuses. Pourtant, "même en partant, ils s'arrangent pour rester" et souvent s'implantent quelque part tout près en installant de nouvelles bases militaires dans des îles faiblement peuplées. Les bases militaires situées sur les territoires coloniaux en Asie, en Afrique, en Amérique latine, dans les îles de l'Atlantique, de l'océan Indien et du Pacifique, représentent non seulement une arme pour opprimer les peuples qui luttent pour leur liberté et leur indépendance, mais aussi un instrument dangereux de la politique néo-colonialiste de l'impérialisme lui permettant de s'immiscer dans les affaires intérieures des Etats. L'exemple qui illustre le mieux cet état de choses est la base de Guam que les Etats-Unis utilisent pour mener leur guerre de pirates contre le peuple vietnamien. Il est donc bien évident que le problème de la décolonisation et celui du démantèlement des bases militaires sont étroitement liés l'un à l'autre. Mieux encore, ils représentent, à notre avis, l'un des aspects importants de la décolonisation.

103. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie a examiné attentivement le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il n'y a pas le moindre doute que durant l'année en cours un travail considérable a été effectué, dont les résultats en sont la meilleure preuve. Toutefois, nous n'avons pas le droit de nous laisser leurrer ou de nous reposer sur nos lauriers. Notre tâche principale consiste à ne pas permettre qu'il reste sur notre planète une seule colonie, un seul pays asservi par l'impérialisme. Or, cette tâche n'est pas encore accomplie, et notre devoir à tous, aux Nations Unies, est d'appuyer de toutes nos forces la lutte des peuples coloniaux pour leur libération, de leur accorder notre aide totale, tant morale que matérielle.

104. Il faut condamner résolument l'activité néfaste que déploient les monopoles internationaux dans les colonies car, si elle est enrayée, l'un des principaux obstacles sur la voie de la décolonisation sera supprimé.

105. L'Assemblée générale doit se prononcer, avec tout le poids de son autorité, à l'égard des pays qui se refusent à détruire les bases militaires situées dans les territoires soumis au joug colonial et rappeler à l'ordre les institutions spécialisées qui, en violation des décisions des Nations Unies, continuent à accorder une assistance financière et autre au Portugal et à la République sud-africaine.

106. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre doit avant tout veiller à la mise en œuvre effective des décisions des Nations Unies et concentrer ses efforts sur l'application des décisions que celles-ci ont prises au sujet de la décolonisation. Son devoir est aussi de faire en sorte que de nouvelles propositions soient approuvées afin de contribuer à la réalisation progressive de ce processus historique.

107. Nous estimons que l'Assemblée générale, dans ses décisions relatives à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, doit désigner par leur nom les principaux responsables de l'oppression coloniale continue, à savoir les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, le Royaume-Uni, la République fédérale d'Allemagne, la République sud-africaine, le Portugal et certains autres pays occidentaux. Ceux-ci doivent être condamnés résolument pour avoir refusé d'appliquer la Déclaration.

108. Notre délégation appuiera les décisions des Nations Unies visant à la réalisation de ces objectifs.

109. La RSS de Biélorussie, comme les autres pays socialistes, a toujours été et reste un ami fidèle des peuples à toutes les étapes de leur combat pour la libération nationale. Elle a accordé et accordera son aide et son appui à ceux qui luttent pour leur libération du joug et de l'oppression impérialistes.

110. La situation actuelle dans le monde fait sentir encore davantage la nécessité d'unité et de cohésion des forces du mouvement de libération nationale, le besoin de renforcer leurs liens avec tous ceux qui luttent contre l'impérialisme et le colonialisme au nom de la victoire des idéaux de liberté, de progrès et de paix. Cette cohésion et cette unité d'action sont le gage du succès de la lutte anticolonialiste de libération des peuples.

111. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée vient d'entendre le dernier orateur qui désirait participer aux débats sur le point 23 de l'ordre du jour. Je donne la parole au représentant du Portugal, qui a manifesté le désir d'exercer son droit de réponse.

112. M. LOURENCO (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation a demandé la parole afin de faire une brève déclaration au titre de son droit de réponse.

113. Nous avons écouté avec attention les interventions que de très nombreux représentants ont faites au sujet du point 23 de l'ordre du jour, dont l'Assemblée générale est maintenant saisie. Cette année encore, comme les années précédentes, nous avons eu droit à un débat prolongé qui nous a permis d'entendre diverses affirmations, insinuations et allégations mettant en cause la politique que mon gouvernement applique dans les provinces portugaises situées par-delà les mers.

114. Nous nous plaisons à penser que certaines de ces déclarations n'étaient pas inspirées par la malveillance, mais imputables à une connaissance hâtive et imparfaite des conditions de vie dans nos provinces, doublée de la volonté de poursuivre avec trop de zèle cette prétendue campagne de décolonisation. Mais, nous regrettons vivement d'avoir à le dire, d'autres déclarations tendancieuses ont été formulées dans un but évident par les partisans d'un style de vie en tous points opposé au nôtre, lesquels s'emploient activement, par tous les moyens dont ils disposent, à atteindre des objectifs bien connus. Ma délégation s'estime donc dans l'obligation d'apporter certaines précisions afin de remettre les choses au point.

115. Avant d'apporter ces quelques précisions, toutefois, j'aimerais faire observer que la position de mon gouvernement à l'égard de la question à l'étude, et en particulier de la résolution 1514 (XV) adoptée en 1960 et de celles qui lui ont succédé, a été si souvent et si clairement définie tant à l'Assemblée générale que dans d'autres instances de l'ONU qu'il me paraît superflu d'y revenir une fois encore.

116. Ma délégation a saisi la première occasion qui s'est offerte pour exposer en termes clairs les raisons profondes qui nous ont poussés à adopter, à l'égard de la lettre et de l'esprit de la résolution 1514 (XV), la position que tout le monde connaît. Même nos détracteurs les plus virulents devront admettre que nous avons fait preuve d'honnêteté et de constance envers nous-mêmes en restant fidèles à nos convictions pendant toutes ces années.

117. On ne peut cependant en dire autant de nos détracteurs, et notamment de quelques-uns des principaux architectes de la résolution 1514 (XV), mais aussi de la résolution 1541 (XV) adoptée à la même époque dans le but de définir expressément les modalités d'application de la résolution 1514 (XV), mais à laquelle il n'est désormais plus de mise de faire même allusion.

118. À cet égard, il est intéressant de noter que même le projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée générale est saisie [A/L.541/Rev.1] ne tient aucun compte de la résolution 1541 (XV) qui, adoptée à la même époque que la résolution 1514 (XV), je le répète, était jugée extrêmement importante pour la poursuite de l'idéal cher à certains Etats Membres.

119. Au cours du débat, quelques représentants pleins de fougue ont suggéré que l'Assemblée générale décide d'établir une étude analytique de ces résolutions et des autres résolutions portant sur le même sujet que l'ONU a adoptées par la suite, cela afin de déterminer quels sont les obstacles et les difficultés qui s'opposent à la pleine application de ces résolutions dans le monde entier.

120. Ma délégation ose affirmer que si l'entreprise envisagée était menée en toute honnêteté, elle serait sans doute on ne peut plus utile. Mais une étude analytique de cette nature pourrait et devrait absolument porter aussi sur les méthodes utilisées pour appliquer la résolution 1514 (XV) à des situations prétendument "coloniales", sans jamais perdre de vue les principes que l'Organisation des Nations Unies avait alors adoptés à cette fin, et en particulier le principe IX, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la résolution 1541 (XV). Les conclusions de cette étude devraient réellement nous fournir ample matière à réflexion.

121. En ce qui nous concerne, personne ne saurait ou ne devrait, en toute bonne foi, nous blâmer de ne pas nous conformer à des résolutions adoptées à la majorité par l'Assemblée générale, mais que ma délégation n'a jamais acceptées. En revanche, nous pouvons affirmer ici, sans crainte d'être contredits, qu'alors que nous nous obstinions à défendre, par tous les moyens réguliers et légitimes prévus dans la Charte des Nations Unies, les principes dont nous sommes les tenants fidèles, nous avons été sans cesse attaqués, diffamés et nous avons eu à souffrir d'actes qui, même envisagés sous l'angle le plus favorable et le plus indulgent, n'échappent pas à la catégorie des actes d'agression. C'est ainsi que certaines de nos possessions nationales ont été soustraites à notre juridiction par la force, au cours d'une agression manifeste comportant l'intervention de forces armées, pour être abusivement placées, sans raison valable, sous la garde d'une autre puissance, et cela en recourant à des manœuvres frauduleuses et à des artifices de procédure qui ne figurent nullement parmi les principes énoncés dans la résolution 1541 (XV).

122. Tout cela prétendument perpétré au nom d'une légalité contestable de prime abord et que personne n'a encore osé prôner ouvertement. Il est bon de ne pas oublier que ces résolutions ont été approuvées par la majorité des membres de l'Assemblée générale, quoique ma délégation ne les ait pas jugées acceptables; il appartient donc maintenant à l'Assemblée d'en évaluer les résultats.

123. Je dois ici préciser, entre parenthèses, qu'à l'exception des territoires qui ont été envahis, puis soustraits à l'administration légitime de la nation portugaise, de la manière indiquée plus haut, et dont aucun n'est situé sur le continent africain, aucune autre portion, petite ou grande, de nos provinces africaines, n'est tombée aux mains des prétendus mouvements de libération, contrairement aux affirmations avancées par un ou deux représentants à l'appui de la thèse selon laquelle les institutions spécialisées des Nations Unies et les autres organismes internationaux chargés de dispenser une aide matérielle et humanitaire devraient transférer au bénéfice de ces mouvements l'assistance qu'ils refuseraient, sans raison valable, au Gouvernement portugais.

124. A l'heure même où nous discutons et délibérons, certaines des populations portugaises d'outre-mer sont victimes d'actes d'agression commis par des éléments anarchistes dont la violence est le mot d'ordre, et qui se trouvent encouragés à bafouer les principes du droit dans les relations internationales par un grand nombre de ceux qui ne se lassent jamais, à l'ONU ou ailleurs, d'en appeler au caractère sacré et inviolable de ces mêmes principes.

125. Il semble qu'une attitude partisane et aveugle, doublée d'intolérance, ait engendré un climat de confusion où le bien et le mal se mêlent pour le plus grand malheur des populations dont nos détracteurs prétendent avoir l'ardent désir d'améliorer le sort. Quelle autre explication trouver aux événements et aux déchaînements de violence qui se produisent tout au long des frontières de quelques-unes de nos provinces africaines? Quelle autre explication trouver au cynisme persistant dont sont empreintes les accusations de discrimination raciale sans cesse portées contre le Portugal et le mode de vie portugais? Le monde entier connaît, et cela depuis fort longtemps, la structure sociale du Portugal, qui est véritablement dénuée de tout caractère racial, dans toutes les couches de la nation. Depuis des siècles, nous suivons tout naturellement dans la pratique, tranquillement et sans tapage, ce que beaucoup d'autres peuples n'ont que récemment découvert comme étant la voie de l'honneur et de la vertu. La vérité est que le Portugal met en pratique les idées auxquelles il croit, là où d'autres se contentent de prêcher. Il n'y a pas si longtemps que bon nombre de ceux qui critiquent aujourd'hui le Portugal à ce propos avec tant d'éloquence considéraient les Portugais comme des Européens de seconde zone parce que frayant librement avec les gens de couleur dans leurs provinces d'outre-mer. De nombreux autres acceptent encore difficilement la présence d'hommes de couleur dans leur propre pays. Cela devrait nous donner à réfléchir.

126. Les allégations dirigées contre le Portugal à ce sujet n'exigent donc pas de réfutation, car elles tombent sous le poids de leur propre ineptie. En revanche, les allégations lancées par ceux qui entendent délibérément tirer parti de ce climat de confusion pour répandre l'idée chimérique et monstrueuse d'alliances impies, qui seraient conclues en Afrique australe avec la participation du Portugal, ou celle de puissantes bases militaires, qui seraient construites en Angola ou au Mozambique avec l'aide de certains de nos alliés, et autres faits imaginaires, appellent un démenti formel. En fait, nous avons déjà essuyé de temps en temps, de la part de nos détracteurs, des allégations de même nature, mais dans les diverses instances de l'ONU, ma délégation a montré ce qu'elles valaient. Nous sommes aujourd'hui en mesure d'ajouter que rien ne serait plus facile à vérifier, à condition que nos détracteurs se montrent honnêtes, équitables et objectifs. Le Gouvernement portugais a invité plus d'une fois le Secrétaire général et le Conseil de sécurité à enquêter librement et franchement sur les conditions qui règnent dans nos provinces africaines.

127. Ma délégation a maintes fois déclaré, mais la chose mérite d'être répétée, qu'aucune base militaire n'a été établie dans un but agressif, de longue ou de fraîche date, dans l'une quelconque de nos provinces africaines, en particulier en Angola et au Mozambique. Ce fait aussi peut être vérifié par tous ceux qui ont un esprit juste, objectif et impartial.

128. J'en viens maintenant au projet de résolution [A/L.541/Rev.1] qui, je tiens à le signaler, contient très peu d'éléments nouveaux; il s'agit, en fait, d'une redite de la plupart des dispositions déjà anciennes contenues dans les résolutions antérieurement adoptées par l'Assemblée générale au sujet de la politique que mon gouvernement applique dans ses provinces d'outre-mer. Je me garderai donc de laisser les membres de l'Assemblée en m'arrêtant sur chacune de ces dispositions, ce qui a déjà été fait. Je me bornerai à préciser que ma délégation les rejette dans leur totalité comme étant sans aucun rapport avec la réalité des faits.

129. Le PRESIDENT: Avant de lever la séance, je dois informer l'Assemblée que le vote sur le projet de résolution A/L.541/Rev.1 aura lieu demain. Ainsi que cela a été annoncé à la 1634ème séance, le vote sur les projets de résolution A/L.536 et Add.1 et 2 et A/L.540, qui concernent le point 64 de l'ordre du jour, aura également lieu demain.

La séance est levée à 17 h 10.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite*)

28. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée va poursuivre l'examen du point 23 de l'ordre du jour. Hier, à sa 1634ème séance, l'Assemblée générale a terminé le débat sur les aspects généraux de cette question. L'Assemblée est maintenant appelée à se prononcer sur le projet de résolution A/L.541/Rev.1 et Add.1.

29. Le rapport de la Cinquième Commission sur les incidences financières qui résulteraient de l'adoption de ce projet de résolution est publié sous la cote A/6999.

*Reprise des débats de la 1634ème séance.

30. Des votes séparés ont été demandés sur: 1) le septième considérant; 2) le paragraphe 3; 3) les mots "l'étude des activités militaires", au paragraphe 4; 4) les paragraphes 8 et 9 dans leur ensemble; 5) le paragraphe 10; 6) le paragraphe 13.

31. S'il n'y a pas d'objections, je mettrai aux voix les parties visées dans l'ordre où elles apparaissent dans le projet de résolution.

Par 90 voix contre 2, avec 13 abstentions, le septième considérant est adopté.

Par 79 voix contre 2, avec 27 abstentions, le paragraphe 3 est adopté.

Par 75 voix contre 8, avec 22 abstentions, les mots "l'étude des activités militaires", au paragraphe 4, sont adoptés.

Par 90 voix contre 3, avec 15 abstentions, l'ensemble du paragraphe 4 est adopté.

Par 80 voix contre 8, avec 22 abstentions, les paragraphes 8 et 9 sont adoptés.

Par 72 voix contre 22, avec 14 abstentions, le paragraphe 10 est adopté.

Par 84 voix contre 2, avec 24 abstentions, le paragraphe 13 est adopté.

Par 86 voix contre 6, avec 17 abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution est adopté [résolution 2326 (XXII)].

32. Le PRESIDENT: Je vais donner la parole aux représentants qui désirent expliquer leur vote.

33. Lord CARADON (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Afin d'expliquer le vote que je viens d'émettre, je tiens à préciser que, s'il y a des parties de cette résolution que je désapprouve et d'autres que je ne puis appuyer, mon vote ne saurait être interprété comme un vote contre la décolonisation. Aucun pays du monde n'a un palmarès de décolonisation comparable à celui du mien. J'ai eu souvent l'occasion de rappeler à l'Assemblée qu'en moins de 25 ans un quart de la population du monde jadis sous administration britannique a accédé à l'indépendance. C'est nous qui sommes les décolonisateurs.

34. Aujourd'hui, alors qu'approche de son terme la tâche que nous nous sommes assignée, celle de transformer un empire colonial en un Commonwealth de nations libres, nous prenons l'engagement d'aller jusqu'au bout dans la voie que nous nous sommes tracée. Dans les quelques territoires dépendants qui sont encore sous administration britannique, nous continuerons à appliquer les principes de la consultation et du libre consentement et nous agirons dans l'intérêt des populations intéressées pour leur donner un bon départ dans l'indépendance au moment et sous la forme qu'elles choisiront elles-mêmes.

35. Je répète ce que j'ai souvent dit à l'Assemblée: nous ne nous déroberons pas à cette responsabilité et nous ne pourrions pas non plus la partager. Nous sommes fiers de ce que nous avons fait et nous ne nous laisserons pas détourner des objectifs que nous nous sommes fixés et que nous poursuivons avec foi.

M. Mena Solórzano (Nicaragua), vice-président, prend la présidence.

36. M. BOYE (Chili) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation du Chili voudrait faire quelques observations au sujet de la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée.

37. Nous avons voté en faveur de l'ensemble du projet de résolution, car le Chili contribue activement au processus de décolonisation. Cependant, la résolution contient divers éléments qui ne nous ont pas semblé satisfaisants et qui ont motivé notre abstention dans deux cas, au sujet desquels je veux faire les observations suivantes.

38. Premièrement, une résolution aussi importante que celle-ci exigeait une étude plus approfondie; malheureusement, elle a été présentée et votée trop précipitamment.

39. Deuxièmement, au sujet du paragraphe 3 du dispositif, le Chili maintient les réserves qu'il avait formulées devant le Comité spécial au moment de l'adoption de son rapport [A/6700/Rev.1]. Nous avons cependant voté en sa faveur.

40. Troisièmement, la délégation chilienne a hésité au sujet du paragraphe 4. Nous ne pensons pas que le Comité spécial soit l'organe le plus approprié pour étudier des activités militaires; peut-être ce problème devrait-il être examiné par la Première Commission qui a une longue expérience en la matière. C'est pourquoi nous sommes abstenus de voter la phrase en question.

41. Quatrièmement, le paragraphe 5 suscite de notre part une remarque que nous avons faite à plusieurs reprises: le Conseil de sécurité est l'organe chargé de juger si une situation déterminée constitue ou non une menace pour la paix et la sécurité internationales; nous ne doutons pas que le maintien de la domination coloniale constitue un danger pour la paix et la sécurité internationales, mais nous préférierions laisser au Conseil de sécurité le soin de le déclarer.

42. Cinquièmement, le paragraphe 6 ne nous semble pas satisfaisant. Nous répétons ce que nous avons déjà déclaré à ce sujet au cours de la discussion générale: nous pensons en effet que l'aide apportée aux mouvements de libération nationale doit être fournie par les Nations Unies par l'intermédiaire de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine. Ce serait procéder d'une façon sérieuse et objective. Si l'on abandonnait cette tâche aux seuls Etats, pris individuellement, on pourrait faire naître de graves malentendus et nuire à la réalisation de l'objectif essentiel que nous recherchons.

43. Sixièmement, le paragraphe 11 comporte plusieurs défauts de rédaction qui le rendent confus; il aurait dû être corrigé.

44. Septièmement, le paragraphe 13 nous semble inutile et — disons-le franchement — un peu prétentieux. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre remplit déjà les fonctions qui y sont mentionnées; nous pensons qu'il est inutile d'en parler dans une résolution de l'Assemblée générale, et c'est pourquoi nous nous sommes abstenus de voter ce paragraphe.

45. Huitièmement, le paragraphe 14 ne nous semble pas tenir compte de la réalité. Nous souhaitons tous voir s'achever la décolonisation — nous sommes d'accord sur ce point —, mais nous ne pensons pas que ce processus puisse être accéléré si l'on fixe des dates limites. Les Nations Unies ont le devoir de travailler en tenant compte de toute la réalité, si complexe soit-elle; simplifier les choses à l'excès peut être une solution de facilité capable de créer de nouvelles difficultés. Nous préfererions définir des orientations générales qui nous permettraient d'avancer aussi vite que possible. Nous éviterions ainsi de nous soumettre à des normes trop rigides qui pourraient nous conduire à de véritables impasses.

46. Pour terminer, je tiens à dire que, si nous avons eu du temps pour étudier cette question, notre délégation aurait certainement pu se dispenser de ces observations.

47. M. PEON DEL VALLE (Mexique) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La résolution que vient d'adopter l'Assemblée générale comporte de très nombreux points sur lesquels la délégation mexicaine a réservé sa position au cours des débats antérieurs.

48. Dans ces conditions, nous n'avons pu voter en sa faveur, mais je tiens à souligner que, étant donné l'esprit de liberté, de démocratie et d'anti-colonialisme qui, nous en sommes sûrs, inspire cette résolution, et les objectifs d'ensemble qu'elle recherche, ma délégation n'a pas non plus émis un vote défavorable.

49. M. M. I. BOTHA (République d'Afrique du Sud) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation a voté contre la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée. Dans la mesure où elle constitue une répétition de la résolution 2189 (XXI) que l'Assemblée a adoptée l'an dernier, ma délégation s'y oppose pour les mêmes raisons que celles que nous avons exposées devant l'Assemblée générale le 13 décembre 1966 [1492ème séance]. Comme nous l'avons dit à cette époque, nous pensons que cette résolution, pour ce qui regarde l'Afrique du Sud, est inspirée par des préjugés politiques et fondée sur des inventions mensongères et des déformations des buts et des objectifs de mon gouvernement en ce qui concerne le peuple de l'Afrique du Sud et celui du Sud-Ouest africain.

50. Nous avons expliqué la politique de notre gouvernement à maintes reprises devant l'Organisation, et je n'ai pas l'intention de répéter ces explications dans le contexte du débat sur cette résolution politiquement partielle.

51. Ma délégation estime également répréhensible que la recommandation faite aux institutions spécialisées et aux autres institutions internationales de s'abstenir de fournir toute assistance à mon gouvernement soit répétée dans cette résolution. Pour ce qui est de l'Afrique du Sud, le paragraphe en question est dépourvu de sens, car, comme nous l'avons souvent dit ici, notre pays compte parmi ceux qui fournissent l'assistance technique et non pas parmi ceux qui la reçoivent. Cependant, ce contre quoi nous protestons c'est qu'une telle recommandation soit adressée aux institutions spécialisées alors que l'Assemblée générale sait parfaitement que, si elles s'y conformaient, certaines d'entre elles devraient violer leurs statuts et toutes devraient substituer aux critères techniques des critères politiques pour l'octroi d'une assistance technique. Je suggère aux Etats Membres de bien peser les conséquences de cette injonction formulée par l'Assemblée générale.

52. Il faut que je répète également une fois de plus qu'il n'existe ni alliance ni entente entre les pays de l'Afrique australe au sens où l'Assemblée pourrait interpréter le paragraphe 9 de la résolution. Il y a entre eux une coopération, une coopération très fructueuse, dans l'esprit de la Charte. Rien au monde, surtout pas une résolution de ce genre, ne nous détournera de notre but, qui est d'entretenir et de renforcer la coopération et les relations de bon voisinage qui se sont développées en Afrique australe. Tout cela est parfaitement conforme à la Charte, et j'affirme que les Etats Membres ne peuvent à la fois appuyer le paragraphe 9 de cette résolution et prétendre respecter les dispositions de la Charte.

53. Je regrette également de façon catégorique le paragraphe 5 du dispositif de la résolution qui dit que la pratique de l'apartheid constitue un crime contre l'humanité. C'est là une affirmation qui n'a aucune base juridique ni morale et qui procède d'une conception absolument erronée de ce que nous essayons de faire en Afrique du Sud.

54. Enfin, je dois également signaler, au sujet des résolutions 2145 (XXI) et 2248 (S-V) relatives au Sud-Ouest africain et mentionnées dans le préambule de cette résolution, que le Ministre des affaires étrangères de mon pays, dans une lettre en date du 26 septembre 1967 adressée au Secrétaire général [A/6897, annexe II] a nettement exposé les raisons pour lesquelles mon gouvernement estime que lesdites résolutions sont illégales et, partant, inacceptables. Nous continuerons d'administrer le Sud-Ouest africain dans l'esprit du Mandat jusqu'à ce que les peuples de ce territoire aient, en exerçant leur droit à l'autodétermination, décidé de leur propre avenir.

55. Pour ces raisons, et pour d'autres encore que je n'ai pas besoin d'exposer en détail, ma délégation a voté contre ce projet de résolution et contre ses divers paragraphes mis aux voix séparément.

56. M. MOROZOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Monsieur le Président, j'ai essayé d'attirer votre attention juste à temps avant que vous ne leviez la séance.

57. Nous voudrions expliquer brièvement les raisons de notre vote sur ce projet de résolution.

58. La délégation soviétique a voté pour chaque paragraphe mis aux voix séparément et pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution que vient d'adopter l'Assemblée générale. Je ne vous cacherai pas, cependant, que ce texte ne nous paraît pas entièrement satisfaisant à certains égards surtout en raison du fait qu'il ne désigne pas nommément les puissances coloniales qui, par leur politique et leurs agissements, s'opposent à l'élimination complète des séquelles du colonialisme et à la mise en œuvre des dispositions de la Déclaration du 14 décembre 1960 sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale].

59. Mais je dois dire que ces pays nous ont aidé dans un certain sens. Bien qu'il n'y ait pas eu de vote nominal, je tiens à faire remarquer que les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, le Royaume-Uni, le régime raciste de la République d'Afrique du Sud et les délégations du Portugal, de la Nouvelle-Zélande et de l'Australie ont été ceux qui ont voté en bloc contre la résolution. Je ne compliquerai pas à présent les choses en passant en revue la position prise par 22 délégations, parmi lesquelles vous trouvez les noms de celles que je viens de nommer, sur des dispositions aussi essentielles que celles qui prévoient la liquidation des bases et des installations militaires dans les territoires coloniaux, l'engagement de n'en pas établir de nouvelles et de ne pas utiliser celles qui existent encore pour faire obstacle à la libération des peuples des territoires coloniaux dans l'exercice de leurs droits légitimes à la liberté et l'indépendance (c'est-à-dire à propos du paragraphe 10).

60. Cela démontre une fois de plus la justesse de la position des délégations qui ont attiré l'attention sur cet aspect important de la question en insistant que soient désignés nommément ceux qui entravent la décolonisation et qui sont responsables de ce que plus de 30 millions d'individus sur cette terre continuent à souffrir et à subir le joug du colonialisme.

61. Nous avons voté en faveur du projet de résolution, étant entendu que les mesures qu'il préconise donneront au Comité des Vingt-Quatre, puis à l'Assemblée générale et à l'Organisation des Nations Unies tout entière la possibilité de prendre en 1968 des mesures énergiques pour vaincre la résistance des grandes puissances impérialistes — au premier chef, des Etats-Unis et du Royaume-Uni — dont les intérêts économiques, militaires et stratégiques continuent encore à jouer un rôle déterminant dans l'attitude que les gouvernements de ces pays adoptent à l'égard de la solution des questions coloniales, fait qui, malheureusement, et à la grande indignation de ma délégation et, j'en suis sûr, de nombreuses autres délégations, a été démontré de façon éclatante aujourd'hui.

62. Il est du devoir de l'Organisation des Nations Unies de se fonder sur la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée pour prendre de nouvelles mesures afin que le système honteux du colonialisme soit aboli aussi rapidement que possible et rejeté dans le passé.

La séance est levée à 16 h 50.

2357 (XXII). Question d'Antigua, des Bahamas, des Bermudes, de la Dominique, de la Grenade, de Guam, des îles Caïmanes, des îles Cocos (Keeling), des îles Gilbert-et-Ellice, de l'île Maurice, des îles Salomon, des îles Samoa américaines, des îles Seychelles, des îles Tokélaou, des îles Turks et Caïques, des îles Vierges américaines, des îles Vierges britanniques, de Montserrat, de Nioué, des Nouvelles-Hébrides, de Pitcairn, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, de Sainte-Hélène, de Sainte-Lucie, de Saint-Vincent et du Souaziland

L'Assemblée générale,

Ayant étudié la question des territoires suivants : Antigua, Bahamas, Bermudes, Dominique, Grenade, Guam, îles Caïmanes, îles Cocos (Keeling), îles Gilbert-et-Ellice, île Maurice, îles Salomon, îles Samoa américaines, îles Seychelles, îles Tokélaou, îles Turks et Caïques, îles Vierges américaines, îles Vierges britanniques, Montserrat, Nioué, Nouvelles-Hébrides, Pitcairn, Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, Sainte-Hélène, Sainte-Lucie, Saint-Vincent et Souaziland,

Ayant examiné les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatifs à ces territoires ²⁸,

Rappelant ses résolutions 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960, 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, 1810 (XVII) du 17 décembre 1962, 1956 (XVIII) du 11 décembre 1963, 2066 (XX) du 16 décembre 1965, 2069 (XX) du 16 décembre 1965, 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966, 2232 (XXI) du 20 décembre 1966 et 2288 (XXII) du 7 décembre 1967,

Notant les changements constitutionnels qui ont été adoptés en février et mars 1967 dans les territoires d'Antigua, de la Dominique, de Grenade, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla et de Sainte-Lucie et ceux qui sont envisagés pour le territoire de Saint-Vincent,

Prenant note en outre de la décision du Comité spécial selon laquelle la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, contenant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et les autres résolutions pertinentes continuent de s'appliquer à ces territoires,

Profondément préoccupée par les renseignements contenus dans le rapport du Comité spécial concernant la persistance de politiques visant notamment à la destruction de l'intégrité territoriale de certains de ces territoires et à l'établissement, par les puissances administrantes, de bases et d'installations militaires en violation des résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale,

Déplorant l'attitude de certaines puissances administrantes qui persistent à refuser d'autoriser des missions de visite de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à se rendre dans ces territoires,

Sachant que, dans ces conditions, l'attention soutenue et l'assistance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sont nécessaires si l'on veut que les peuples de ces territoires atteignent leurs objectifs, énoncés dans la Charte des Nations Unies et dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux,

Consciente de la situation géographique et des conditions économiques particulières de certains de ces territoires,

1. Approuve les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatifs à ces territoires ²⁹;

2. Réaffirme le droit inaliénable des peuples de ces territoires à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance;

3. Invite les puissances administrantes à appliquer sans retard les résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale;

4. Réitère sa déclaration selon laquelle toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale des territoires coloniaux et à établir des bases et des installations militaires dans ces territoires est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale;

5. Demande instamment aux puissances administrantes d'autoriser les missions de visite de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à se rendre dans les territoires et de leur offrir toute leur coopération et toute leur assistance;

6. Décide que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devra prêter toute l'aide nécessaire aux peuples de ces territoires dans les efforts qu'ils déploient pour décider librement de leur statut futur;

7. Prie le Comité spécial de continuer à accorder une attention spéciale à ces territoires et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa vingt-troisième session, sur l'application de la présente résolution;

8. Prie le Secrétaire général de continuer à prêter toute l'assistance possible dans l'application de la présente résolution.

1641^e séance plénière,
19 décembre 1967.

RAPPORT DE LA QUATRIEME COMMISSION (A/7013)

M. Dashteren (Mongolie), rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission, présente les rapports de cette commission et poursuit en ces termes.

6. Le cinquième et dernier rapport [A/7013] porte sur tous les autres territoires relevant du point 23 de l'ordre du jour qui n'ont pas été examinés séparément par la Quatrième Commission. Comme il n'y en a pas moins de 39 et que plusieurs de ces territoires sont l'objet de revendications contradictoires de souveraineté ou présentent un intérêt spécial pour certains Etats membres pour des raisons économiques, géographiques et historiques ou autres, ils ont provoqué des débats prolongés en commission.

7. Dans son rapport, la Quatrième Commission recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter cinq projets de résolution: projet de résolution I, intitulé "Question de Gibraltar"; projet de résolution II, intitulé "Question d'Ifni et du Sahara espagnol"; projet de résolution III, intitulé "Question de la Guinée équatoriale"; projet de résolution IV, intitulé "Question de la Côte française des Somalis"; et projet de résolution V, intitulé "Question d'Antigua, des Bahamas, des Bermudes, de la Dominique, de la Grenade, de Guam, des îles Caïmanes, des îles Cocos (Keeling), des îles Gilbert-et-Ellice, de l'île Maurice, des îles Salomon, des îles Samoa américaines, des îles Seychelles, des îles Tokélaou, des îles Turques et Caïques, des îles Vierges américaines, des îles Vierges britanniques, de Montserrat, de Nioué, des Nouvelles-Hébrides, de Pitcairn, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, de Sainte-Hélène, de Sainte-Lucie, de Saint-Vincent et du Souaziland" [A/7013, par. 39].

8. Comme on le verra au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution V, l'Assemblée approuverait les chapitres pertinents du rapport du Comité spécial [A/6700/Rev.1, chap. XI, XIV à XVIII, XX et XXIII]. A ce propos, j'aimerais appeler l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le chapitre ayant trait au territoire du Souaziland, où figure un consensus adopté par le Comité spécial le 23 octobre 1967 [ibid., chap. XI, par. 144]. En approuvant ce chapitre du rapport, l'Assemblée générale déciderait notamment comme le recommande le Comité spécial par son consensus, sous réserve de l'assentiment des gouvernements donateurs, que les contributions faites jusqu'à présent au Fonds constitué en vertu de sa résolution 2063 (XX) soient transférées au Fonds général du Programme des Nations Unies pour le développement, en vue de procurer une aide accrue au Botswana, au Lesotho et au Souaziland.

Conformément à l'article 68 du règlement intérieur, il est décidé de ne pas discuter les rapports de la Quatrième Commission.

*Reprise des débats de la 1636ème séance.

64. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée a ainsi achevé l'examen des points 63 et 71 de l'ordre du jour.

65. La dernière question, pour cet après-midi, porte sur le point 23 de l'ordre du jour. La discussion générale sur ce point s'est terminée le 16 décembre 1967 par l'adoption de la résolution 2326 (XXII). L'Assemblée générale doit maintenant se prononcer sur les projets de résolution de la Quatrième Commission relatifs aux territoires qui n'ont pas été examinés séparément [A/7013, par. 39].

66. Je vais tout d'abord donner la parole aux représentants qui désirent expliquer leur vote sur les divers projets de résolution avant le scrutin. Je mettrai ensuite ces projets aux voix dans l'ordre dans lequel ils ont été soumis par la Quatrième Commission, puis je donnerai la parole aux représentants qui voudraient expliquer leur vote après le scrutin.

67. Ce point ayant été examiné en détail en commission, je prierai les représentants de limiter le plus possible la durée de leurs interventions.

68. M. BOUATTOURA (Algérie): Avant que notre assemblée se prononce sur le projet de résolution II, concernant les territoires d'Ifni et du Sahara espagnol, la délégation algérienne désirerait faire quelques observations. Son intervention ne débordera pas les limites traditionnelles du cadre de nos travaux, qui consistent essentiellement à rechercher et à trouver une solution à tout problème d'essence coloniale, sur la base de principes généralement admis par la communauté internationale.

69. De même, avant d'expliquer son vote, l'Algérie voudrait rappeler certains éléments déterminant son attitude. L'intitulé même de la question pourrait prêter à confusion, tant il donne à penser qu'il s'agit de problèmes de même nature et que les principes régissant la solution de l'un pourraient être automatiquement applicables à l'autre. Bien entendu, le caractère colonial est le dénominateur commun aux deux situations et, partant, la solution devra être recherchée dans le cadre précis de la résolution 1514 (XV). Mais les deux problèmes — et cela a été admis dans un passé récent — diffèrent essentiellement par leur nature.

70. Dans le premier cas, la situation est nette et ne souffre aucune exégèse. Dans l'autre, la réalité apparaît plus complexe, plus composite et est déterminée par de multiples phénomènes superposés.

71. Cette voie étant tracée, la délégation algérienne désire donc donner son point de vue sur les deux problèmes dont elle a eu à souligner, préalablement à tout examen, la différence de nature. Elle est d'autant plus à l'aise pour le faire que des affinités multiformes la lient avec toutes les parties en cause.

72. Tout d'abord, Ifni. La situation de ce territoire nous semble claire et paraît contenir en elle tous les éléments d'une solution juste et acceptable par les deux parties en cause. La géographie et l'histoire ne laissent aucun doute quant au caractère spécifique de cette enclave territoriale. Le Gouvernement algérien a toujours considéré comme anachronique la présence, sur le territoire maghrébin, d'un flot de colonisation que l'évolution du monde contemporain ne justifie plus.

73. Certaines indications — notamment le communiqué hispano-marocain du 24 septembre 1967 — donnent à penser qu'une solution est en voie d'être trouvée en conformité avec la résolution 2229 (XXI), par laquelle l'Assemblée générale demandait à l'Espagne de reconnaître le droit du territoire à l'autodétermination et "d'arrêter avec le Gouvernement marocain, compte tenu des aspirations de la population autochtone, des modalités de transfert des pouvoirs".

74. La délégation algérienne estime que la volonté d'aboutir des deux parties en cause, en dépit d'appréciations souvent divergentes, est une contribution importante à la cause de la décolonisation, et espère que les déclarations d'intention de la Puissance administrante s'inséreront le plus rapidement possible dans la réalité des choses.

75. Une même attitude de réalisme devrait présider à la solution du problème du Sahara dit espagnol. Nous sommes tous conscients que la recherche d'une solution à ce problème ne doit pas seulement tenir compte des intérêts exprimés jusqu'ici concernant cette région. Au premier chef, l'impératif auquel nous devons tous nous soumettre, parce qu'il est à la base de la décolonisation, est le désir librement exprimé des populations elles-mêmes. Aux termes du paragraphe 4 de la résolution 2229 (XXI), l'Assemblée générale invitait

"la Puissance administrante à arrêter le plus tôt possible, en conformité avec les aspirations de la population autochtone du Sahara espagnol et en consultation avec les Gouvernements marocain et mauritanien et toute autre partie intéressée, les modalités de l'organisation d'un référendum qui sera [it] tenu sous les auspices de l'Organisation des Nations Unies afin de permettre à la population autochtone du territoire d'exercer librement son droit à l'autodétermination".

76. L'essentiel des dispositions de cette résolution est repris dans le projet qui nous est soumis. A ce propos, le Gouvernement algérien tient à rappeler son adhésion entière à cette résolution car, de toute évidence, elle contient tous les éléments de nature à accélérer le processus de décolonisation, à maintenir la paix et la concorde dans cette région dont l'importance n'est plus à démontrer.

77. Sans doute la mission confiée à la Puissance administrante et aux parties intéressées se révèle-t-elle très délicate; mais nous sommes encouragés par le fait que les efforts déployés jusqu'ici pourront tendre à une stricte application du présent projet de résolution et qu'aucun élément nouveau n'est venu la remettre en cause.

78. A ce stade, la délégation algérienne voulait très brièvement rappeler son attitude à l'égard d'un territoire qui jouxte trois entités politiques distinctes, dont l'Algérie, et auquel de multiples liens tant ethniques qu'économiques et culturels la rattachent depuis toujours.

79. L'intérêt manifesté par l'Algérie pour le problème du Sahara dit espagnol a toujours été dicté par des raisons d'équité, d'équilibre, de paix et de stabilité, et aussi par son souci de maintenir des liens de bon voisinage, conformément à l'éthique internationale. De la réussite ou de l'échec de la décolonisation dépend, dans une large mesure, l'avenir de la paix dans cette région. C'est pourquoi mon pays considère le projet de résolution comme la pierre angulaire d'une politique de développement harmonieux entre les Etats de cette partie du nord-ouest de l'Afrique.

80. En tout état de cause, l'accord qui s'est manifesté sur le projet de résolution ne doit pas nous faire perdre de vue la responsabilité qu'a notre organisation de s'assurer de son application.

81. Comme nous l'indiquons le 14 septembre 1967, à la 560ème séance du Comité spécial:

"Etant donné les profondes répercussions que l'évolution de cette question est de nature à avoir sur notre pays, on ne s'étonnera pas de l'intérêt que nous portons au problème des modalités d'évolution de cette situation."

82. Dans cette optique, l'Algérie affirme sa satisfaction à l'Assemblée, qui a bien voulu incorporer et faire sien l'intérêt que nous portons à la solution de ce problème et aux procédures devant y conduire.

83. En outre, l'esprit constructif qui a animé d'une part les parties en cause, de l'autre les parties intéressées — en l'occurrence l'Algérie et l'Espagne, le Maroc et la Mauritanie — a permis de rédiger et d'accepter largement un projet de résolution qui met suffisamment en relief le caractère spécifique et la nature contingente qui marquent les deux territoires.

84. C'est pourquoi la délégation algérienne, comme elle l'a indiqué précédemment, demeurera très ouverte à toutes les suggestions qui tiendront compte des impératifs explicites et implicites qui se dégagent de ce projet de résolution. S'il subsiste des difficultés, celles-ci n'ont pas trait au fond du problème et leur élimination, nous en sommes convaincus, résultera de la volonté maintes fois exprimée par les parties intéressées d'accélérer le processus de décolonisation.

85. La délégation algérienne formule l'espoir qu'une telle solution, conforme à la doctrine et à l'idéologie de la décolonisation entreprise dans le cadre des Nations Unies, amènera dans cette région une ère d'entente, de coopération fraternelle et de renforcement des liens entre des pays attelés à la construction d'un ensemble équilibré et prospère.

86. M. FARREL (Nouvelle-Zélande) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le projet de résolution V contenu dans le rapport de la Quatrième Commission sur le point 23 [A/7013, par. 39] est ce que l'on appelle communément la résolution des "petits territoires". Etant donné que deux des territoires nommés au premier paragraphe du préambule sont les îles Nioué et Tokélaou, je voudrais faire quelques brefs commentaires et déterminer dans quelle mesure ce projet de résolution peut être appliqué à ces quatre petites îles pour lesquelles la Nouvelle-Zélande assume certaines responsabilités.

87. D'abord, laissez-nous dissiper certaines idées préconçues. Il n'y a ni bases ni installations militaires sur ces îles. Leur intégrité territoriale n'est pas menacée. Il n'y a pas d'intérêts économiques étrangers. Il n'y a pas de planteurs étrangers sur ces îles, et aucune terre ne leur a été cédée. A vrai dire, une telle aliénation est interdite par la loi. La Nouvelle-Zélande n'a aucun intérêt économique de quelque importance que ce soit dans ces îles; Les subventions annuelles que la Nouvelle-Zélande consent à ces îles sont au moins le quadruple de la valeur totale de toutes les exportations produites par la population. Il découle de ces faits que plusieurs sections du projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis et de la résolution passe-partout [2288 (XXII)] sur le colonialisme que l'Assemblée a adoptée le 7 décembre ne sauraient de toute évidence s'appliquer aux îles Nioué et Tokélaou.

88. Le projet de résolution V rappelle également la déclaration historique contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) et réaffirme le droit des populations de ces territoires à "l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance". Nous n'avons pas d'objection à cela. Ce droit n'est pas contesté dans les territoires de Nouvelle-Zélande, mais il n'y a pas de raison pour qu'il ne soit pas confirmé. Nous observerons seulement, en passant, que la résolution 1514 (XV) elle-même n'assimile pas tout à fait "autodétermination" à "indépendance" de la même façon que ce texte.

89. Ce n'est pas ici le lieu ni le moment d'exposer longuement ce que la Nouvelle-Zélande a fait, en toute sincérité, pour tenir les engagements que comportait son vote en faveur de la résolution 1514 (XV). Le Samoa-Occidental et les îles Cook ont exercé le droit à l'autodétermination depuis 1960 et les 5 000 habitants de Nioué et les 1 800 habitants de Tokélaou pourront choisir leur futur statut dès qu'ils le voudront. Le fait que leurs patries sont petites, pauvres, isolées et tributaires de façon permanente de l'aide extérieure ne diminue pas leur droit à l'autodétermination, mais les populations elles-mêmes ont reconnu qu'elles doivent tenir compte du milieu physique où elles vivent lorsqu'elles ont à choisir leur avenir. Qui pourrait leur reprocher d'avoir les pieds sur terre?

90. La Nouvelle-Zélande s'est engagée à les aider, quel que soit leur choix définitif. Nous avons fait traduire la résolution 1514 (XV) dans les langues de Nioué et de Tokélaou et elle a été largement diffusée. Les autorités de Nouvelle-Zélande ont fait clairement comprendre aux populations de ces îles que nous ne désirions pas prolonger indéfiniment cette situation coloniale. Les populations n'ont pas fait leur choix définitif. En attendant qu'elles le fassent, nous travaillons en complète coopération avec les populations de Nioué et de Tokélaou à développer les institutions démocratiques grâce auxquelles les populations pourront exprimer leurs aspirations en toute liberté.

91. On ne peut guère s'attendre que mon gouvernement accepte que l'on critique inconsidérément cette situation ou que l'on minimise les progrès accomplis. Les faits parlent d'eux-mêmes. L'évolution significative qui s'est produite cette année à Nioué vers un système ministériel complet — déjà tout le budget, y compris la subvention de la Nouvelle-Zélande, est administré par les autochtones — et la participation des habitants de Tokélaou à la préparation du budget ont été qualifiés de "lents progrès". Etant donné que, comme l'ont souligné les autorités de Nouvelle-Zélande et comme les habitants de l'île eux-mêmes le savent, le rythme de l'évolution doit être décidé par la population elle-même, nous ne saurions accepter cette critique à l'égard des habitants des îles. Il s'agit d'une population pragmatique et rationnelle qui façonne sa destinée comme bon lui semble. Nous ne pouvons pas non plus accepter, ni ces populations d'ailleurs, que l'on dise de la législature librement élue qu'elle n'est "pas un organe du peuple... mais un instrument de la Puissance administrante". Nous pouvons encore moins accepter l'allégation d'une délégation selon laquelle le jugement de l'Assemblée de Nioué pourrait ne pas être "correct".

92. Ces dernières opinions sont celles d'une minorité du Comité spécial mais on ne peut les laisser passer sans les relever. Et c'est parce que nous avons entendu de tels commentaires que nous n'appuierons pas le paragraphe 1 du dispositif de la résolution V, qui demanderait à l'Assemblée d'approuver le chapitre du rapport du Comité des 24 qui a trait aux îles Nioué et Tokélaou [A/6700/Rev.1, chap. XVI].

93. Dans le passé, mon pays a toujours coopéré avec l'ONU pour décoloniser la poignée de petites îles dont l'administration nous était confiée. Nous avons toujours pensé que cette organisation devait beaucoup contribuer à encourager et faciliter ce processus qui marque notre époque, processus qui a entièrement changé les rapports dans ces régions où l'autodétermination est acceptée comme un droit sacré.

94. Nous estimons que si, aux Nations Unies, nous voulions substituer nos propres opinions à celles librement exprimées des peuples coloniaux, nous ne respecterions pas les dispositions de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme. En relisant de plus près la résolution 1514 (XV), nous n'y trouvons rien qui nous demande de ne pas tenir compte des opinions connues d'un peuple sous prétexte d'observer de prétendus impératifs doctrinaux. Au contraire, nous lisons que le transfert de tous les pouvoirs au peuple doit répondre seulement à la volonté et au désir librement exprimés de ce dernier. C'est un principe auquel nous adhérerons strictement.

95. Le projet de résolution demande au Comité spécial d'accorder une attention particulière l'an prochain aux petits territoires. Nous souscrivons chaleureusement à cette demande. Nous savons que ce comité, accablé de travail, aux prises avec l'inflexibilité sud-africaine et un lourd programme de réunions, a de la difficulté à insérer dans son emploi du temps un débat détaillé sur la situation dans les petits territoires. Nous espérons qu'il sera porté remède à cette situation en 1968. Compte tenu non seulement des contraintes imposées par les facteurs du milieu dont il a été fait mention dans le projet de résolution mais également des opinions librement exprimées par les populations elles-mêmes, le Comité sera, nous l'espérons, en mesure de fournir des suggestions et des conseils utiles qui ne pourront que rehausser le rôle des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation.

96. Lord CARADON (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous avons été saisis aujourd'hui de cinq résolutions et d'un consensus [A/7013, par. 39 et 40]. Pour chacun de ces textes nous avons expliqué minutieusement nos points de vue à la Quatrième Commission, et il n'est pas nécessaire de les répéter maintenant. Je tiens cependant à réaffirmer brièvement la position de mon pays sur le projet de résolution I, relatif à Gibraltar.

97. Cette question préoccupe profondément mon gouvernement et le peuple de mon pays, qui sont très conscients de notre obligation de faire triompher la justice. Tout au long des débats de la Quatrième Commission, aussi bien cette année que les années précédentes, nous avons insisté sur le fait qu'il y a deux principes fondamentaux que nous ne saurions trahir, en premier, le principe que l'intérêt du peuple doit être primordial et, en second, que le peuple a le droit d'exprimer librement ses désirs quant à son avenir. Ces principes nous ont guidés et continueront à nous guider dans notre tâche qui consiste à assumer nos responsabilités à l'égard des populations des territoires dont nous sommes responsables. Pendant toute la décolonisation, nous avons eu recours à la consultation et sollicité l'acquiescement. Nous ne renoncerons pas à ces principes dans le cas des quelques territoires dépendants dont nous sommes encore responsables.

98. En conséquence, nous avons soutenu et constamment déclaré que remettre contre sa volonté cette petite communauté fière et unie d'hommes libres pour la lier à jamais à un régime qui a tant fait pour lui nuire serait une injustice intolérable. Nous pensons que l'on doit tenir compte de ses intérêts en décidant de son avenir et pas seulement après que son sort aura été tranché.

99. Tout en étant prêts et désireux de poursuivre les négociations avec le Gouvernement espagnol, nous avons aussi fait valoir qu'un différend territorial devrait être tranché non par un vote de notre assemblée mais par un processus judiciaire. C'est pour cette raison que nous avons déclaré être prêts à soumettre ce litige sur la souveraineté à la Cour internationale.

100. Rien ne nous détournera de notre voie qui est de nous acquitter de nos obligations. Par conséquent, je répète que mon gouvernement ne pourrait pas accepter une résolution qui chercherait à prendre parti dans un différend territorial entre deux Etats Membres et qui en même temps chercherait à ignorer les désirs librement exprimés par une majorité écrasante de la population en cause.

101. M. COE COLE (Sierra Leone) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation estime nécessaire d'intervenir afin que soient consignées dans le compte rendu les explications relatives à notre vote sur la question de Gibraltar. Cette question a éveillé l'intérêt de la Quatrième Commission au point de susciter des échanges de paroles un peu vifs au sujet des revendications dont Gibraltar fait l'objet.

102. L'an dernier, ma délégation a parrainé un amendement à la résolution 2231 (XXI) de l'Assemblée qui rappelait, entre autres choses, que les intérêts de la population primaient tout. Cette résolution a été adoptée à la quasi-unanimité. Cette année, lorsque l'on a discuté à la Quatrième Commission de la question de Gibraltar, les principes de l'intérêt et des vœux de la population de Gibraltar et de la décolonisation du territoire sont devenus secondaires par rapport à ceux de l'intégrité et de l'unité territoriale, comme on peut le voir au paragraphe 17 du rapport que l'Assemblée examine à présent [A/7013]. Nous trouvons maintenant dans le projet de résolution qui a trait à Gibraltar les termes du paragraphe 17 du rapport. Je me réfère au paragraphe 5 du préambule et au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet.

103. Pour ces raisons, ma délégation votera contre le projet de résolution [ibid., par. 39]. Nous voterons contre parce que nous avons toujours considéré que l'intérêt de la population est primordial et aussi parce que nous trouvons que le projet de résolution contient des propositions qui vont très loin et qui auront comme conséquence d'étouffer sérieusement la décolonisation — un principe auquel ma délégation a toujours cru et qu'elle a toujours défendu.

104. Quant aux projets de résolution II à V [ibid.], ma délégation votera en leur faveur.

105. M. BENHIMA (Maroc): Ma délégation se serait volontiers abstenue de prendre la parole devant l'Assemblée générale à propos de la question d'Ifni et du Sahara, estimant que les explications qui ont été données au cours du débat de la Quatrième Commission, et notamment à la suite du vote à une très large majorité du projet de résolution II étaient suffisantes. Malheureusement, la délégation de l'Algérie a cru devoir, aujourd'hui, en expliquant son vote sur ce projet de résolution, aller au-delà du contexte de l'examen du problème et de ses données réelles.

106. Ceci m'oblige à revenir aussi brièvement que possible sur les arguments qui font rejeter, par mon pays, les explications données par l'Algérie en ce qui concerne tant la lettre de certains paragraphes du projet de résolution que l'esprit que la délégation de l'Algérie veut attribuer à ce texte pour lui donner une signification conforme à ses propres vues. Je dis bien que ces explications reflètent les vues exclusives de l'Algérie, puisqu'au moment du débat aucun orateur n'a pris la parole, pas même les auteurs du projet; aucun de ceux qui se sont abstenus n'a cru devoir, devant la majorité qu'à recueillie ce texte, donner les explications que nous avons entendues.

107. Le projet de résolution comporte en effet deux aspects: le premier, c'est la contestation du caractère unitaire des deux questions, Ifni et Sahara.

108. Je suis dans l'obligation d'allonger un peu mon intervention en rappelant que depuis six ans exactement, à la demande du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, les questions d'Ifni et du Sahara ont été réunies sous une rubrique unique, mise au singulier, faisant l'objet d'un débat unique; depuis cette date, le débat a été clos avec une résolution [2229 (XXI)] comprenant un préambule où les considérants concernant l'affaire d'Ifni étaient intimement mêlés aux considérants concernant l'affaire du Sahara espagnol. Les résolutions précédentes des Nations Unies ont toujours englobé les deux problèmes de façon identique.

109. Voici pour la valeur de la forme, qui n'est pas inutile dans une organisation comme celle-ci.

110. Quant au fond, la revendication marocaine sur ces deux parties de son territoire national — Ifni et le Sahara espagnol — n'est guère altérée dans sa nature profonde par le fait qu'Ifni se trouve dans une enclave que la souveraineté du Maroc encercle, et que les territoires du Sahara espagnol se trouvent à l'extrême sud de nos frontières, partie de notre territoire qui a déjà fait l'objet d'un examen à propos du contentieux territorial avec l'Espagne, qui nous a rendu en 1958 une partie de ce Sahara espagnol au niveau du 27ème parallèle, c'est-à-dire le Sahara méridional.

111. Ceci dit, on a essayé de voir, à cause d'une présentation matérielle qui a placé sous I le libellé "Ifni" et sous II le libellé "Sahara espagnol", une distinction à laquelle je m'oppose de la façon la plus énergique. Le problème demeure, à notre avis, un problème de revendication de territoires marocains. Cette revendication s'adresse à une seule puissance administrante qui a peut-être administré de façon différente les deux territoires, comme cela est très fréquent de la part des puissances coloniales. Mais le caractère historique de ces deux territoires, qui ont fait l'objet de traités soit bilatéraux, dans le cadre des rapports du Maroc avec l'Espagne, soit de conventions internationales devant la Cour internationale de Justice, conserve à l'heure actuelle sa validité au point de vue du droit international.

112. D'ailleurs, dès le lendemain de notre indépendance, la délégation du Maroc, dans tous les organes qui ont eu à connaître de ces problèmes, s'est expliquée amplement et s'est référée aux documents internationaux de la fin du siècle dernier et à l'activité diplomatique internationale qui a précédé le Traité de protectorat^{3/} ainsi qu'à l'esprit qui a animé nos rapports avec l'Espagne au lendemain de l'indépendance.

^{3/} Traité franco-marocain signé à Fez le 30 mars 1912.

113. Les négociations successives sur l'évacuation des troupes espagnoles et sur le contentieux territorial ont donné lieu à des échanges de notes ou à des discussions à Madrid ou à Rabat qui établissent l'existence de ce contentieux territorial entre nous et l'Espagne.

114. J'ai entendu à la Quatrième Commission des revendications mauritaniennes. Je n'ai certainement pas l'intention de ranimer une querelle, mais je voudrais tout de même éliminer le doute qui pourrait exister sur l'opportunité d'une telle revendication.

115. Nous assistons depuis deux ou trois ans à une sorte de manœuvre tactique qui, à la faveur de telle ou telle présentation matérielle ou de telle ou telle rédaction d'une résolution, cherche à faire passer de la forme au fond. Je ne me souviens pas qu'il ait existé à un moment quelconque de l'histoire de la colonisation dans cette région de l'Afrique des rapports de puissance colonisatrice à puissance colonisée entre la Mauritanie et l'Espagne. Dans l'hypothèse même où une entité territoriale serait reconnue à la Mauritanie, ce serait un territoire qui a été, dans des conditions précises, sous administration française, et je ne vois pas quand ni comment la Puissance administrante qui a élevé la Mauritanie au statut d'Etat indépendant aurait consciemment ou à la légère abandonné une portion quelconque du territoire mauritanien, publiquement ou confidentiellement, à l'Espagne. C'est peut-être là l'argument le plus simpliste mais ce n'est pas le plus proche du bon sens.

116. La délégation algérienne a cru devoir montrer un intérêt à la solution de ce problème. Je ne conteste nullement que l'Algérie poursuive énergiquement une politique anticolonialiste et anti-impérialiste et je souscris à la volonté de l'Algérie de prendre un intérêt spécial à la libération d'un territoire situé sur le continent africain. Cet intérêt est légitime de la part de toutes les puissances qui ont suivi ici de façon constante une politique anti-impérialiste. Mais l'argument que l'Algérie voudrait invoquer pour pouvoir prendre un intérêt spécial à cette question est celui d'un certain voisinage; c'est un argument tout à fait fallacieux parce que la région dont on pourrait dire à la rigueur qu'elle crée un certain voisinage entre l'Algérie et le Sahara espagnol est justement un territoire contesté entre le Maroc et l'Algérie, un territoire au sujet duquel la souveraineté est suspendue puisqu'il fait l'objet depuis 1963 d'un examen de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine et que cet examen se poursuit dans un cadre précis.

117. Je ne reviendrai pas sur les arguments de fond qui militent en faveur du rejet d'une telle revendication. D'après l'Algérie, il existe un certain voisinage qui donne à un pays limitrophe un droit spécial de s'intéresser de façon tout à fait particulière au destin et à l'avenir d'un territoire et d'une population. Sur le destin de cette population, la délégation marocaine, à la Conférence des ministres des affaires étrangères de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine, en juin 1965, a précisé dans une déclaration solennelle rendue publique par la presse et communiquée à beaucoup de chancelleries, la philosophie du Maroc sur l'évolution de ce territoire et sur le destin de sa population. Cette politique a été également exposée ici [1500ème séance] et à la Quatrième Commission [1661ème séance] en décembre 1966. Or, dans la résolution [2229 (XXI)] qui avait été adoptée à l'époque, mention était faite de la Mauritanie et du Maroc comme étant des pays qui pourraient être invités par l'Espagne à une consultation à propos du règlement de ce problème. Cette résolution utilisait aussi l'expression "et toute autre partie intéressée". Cette formule, qu'elle soit utilisée au singulier ou au pluriel, ne signifie nullement qu'un pays bien déterminé est visé. L'expression "toute autre partie intéressée" ne donne nullement le droit à un voisin quelconque de se croire le pays visé par cette mention.

118. Je mets beaucoup de clarté à expliquer cette affaire parce que le représentant de l'Algérie a cité tout à l'heure, se fondant sur la mention de ces mots: "toute autre partie intéressée" le nom de l'Espagne, de la Mauritanie, du Maroc et de l'Algérie comme celui des puissances ayant un intérêt à examiner cette affaire au cours d'une consultation. Je précise que dans l'esprit des rédacteurs du texte de la résolution 2229 (XXI) du 16 décembre 1966 et des rédacteurs du projet de résolution II, présenté initialement à la Quatrième Commission le 15 décembre 1967, le fait d'introduire la mention "toute autre partie intéressée" ne signifiait pas qu'ils visaient un pays spécial.

119. Le PRESIDENT: Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Algérie, qui désire exercer le droit de réponse.

120. M. BOUATTOURA (Algérie): Ma délégation et moi-même ne nous attendions pas à la diatribe, à peine retenue, du représentant du Maroc. Nos relations avec le Maroc sont trop fraternelles pour qu'elles puissent souffrir, en aucune manière, ce genre d'échange, particulièrement dans un forum comme celui-ci.

121. Nous avons cru que notre explication ne pouvait offenser qui que ce soit. Nous avons essayé d'être aussi fidèles que possible à la fois au texte qui nous est soumis et aux démarches qui ont permis d'aboutir à un accord unanime, accord dû, comme je l'ai déjà dit, d'une part, à l'entente réalisée entre les délégations du Maroc, de la Mauritanie et de l'Algérie, et, d'autre part, au vote positif qui a permis à la Puissance administrante — en l'occurrence l'Espagne — d'apporter son soutien au projet de résolution lors de son examen à la Quatrième Commission.

122. On nous a prêté des intentions qui n'étaient pas les nôtres. On a dit que nous avons sollicité le texte, sur deux points principalement, à savoir sur ce que l'on a appelé le caractère unitaire des deux questions et sur l'intérêt porté par l'Algérie à la libération, à l'exercice du droit à l'autodétermination du Sahara espagnol.

123. Pour ce qui est du caractère unitaire, je ne tiens pas à suivre mon distingué ami et collègue le représentant du Maroc dans une polémique inutile et sans aucun doute stérile; je laisserai simplement aux membres de cette assemblée le soin de juger. La délégation algérienne aura, en d'autres circonstances plus appropriées, l'occasion de revenir sur ce point et de clarifier quelque peu la situation.

124. Pour ce qui est de la revendication du Maroc, ma délégation n'a, dans aucune de ses interventions, ni aujourd'hui ni auparavant apporté le moindre démenti ou la moindre contestation. Sans doute l'Algérie veut-elle rester fidèle à un principe qui lui a permis d'accéder à l'indépendance, ce fameux principe du droit à l'autodétermination. Ce fut pourquoi, peut-être, nous avons cru devoir mettre en relief le droit à l'autodétermination du peuple du Sahara espagnol, comme de celui d'Ifni, et peut-être avons-nous donné l'impression que nous accordions une place quelque peu accessoire aux notions de revendication. Que l'on ne nous en blâme pas. Nous voudrions simplement faire observer que cette espèce de fidélité au droit à l'autodétermination qui a donné naissance à l'Algérie indépendante nous impose souvent d'accorder une certaine priorité à ce droit, au détriment peut-être de certaines notions revendicatrices.

125. Des formules comme "argument fallacieux", "souveraineté suspendue", et d'autres ont été utilisées. Je ne voudrais pas que cette assemblée fût le théâtre de propos de cette nature qui, en tout état de cause, ne peuvent que nuire d'abord à ceux qui les tiennent, ensuite aux relations entre ceux-ci et ceux-là mêmes auxquels ils s'adressent. Notre débat ne porte pas sur des "souverainetés suspendues", ni sur des revendications émises il y a un instant. Nous avons cru que l'objet de notre discussion ici était essentiellement d'accélérer le processus de la décolonisation. Nous avons cru aborder ce problème sans aucune arrière pensée.

126. Pour ce qui est de l'intérêt de l'Algérie, aussi bien les auteurs du projet de résolution et ceux qui ont aidé les trois délégations du Maroc, de la Mauritanie et de l'Algérie à aboutir à un accord, que ceux qui ont voté pour le projet savaient parfaitement de quoi il s'agissait en votant pour le paragraphe où il est question de consultations avec les Gouvernements du Maroc, de la Mauritanie et de "toute autre partie intéressée".

127. Le PRESIDENT: Je donne la parole au représentant de la Mauritanie, qui désire exercer le droit de réponse.

128. M. OULD DADDAH (Mauritanie): La délégation de la République islamique de Mauritanie s'est fait inscrire pour expliquer son vote après le vote. Elle maintient cette inscription et expliquera tout à l'heure le vote qu'elle aura exprimé sur le projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée générale est saisie, et cela prouve qu'il n'entraîne pas dans notre intention de prendre la parole à cette phase du débat.

129. Cependant, à la suite de la déclaration du représentant de l'Algérie et de la réponse qu'elle a suscitée de la part de M. Benhima, nous nous voyons dans l'obligation de préciser un certain nombre de points qui viennent d'être évoqués ici.

130. La délégation de la Mauritanie a expliqué devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, devant la Quatrième Commission, devant l'Assemblée générale à d'autres moments, et devant l'Organisation de l'unité africaine, dont on a parlé tout à l'heure, sa position sur cette question.

131. Le représentant du Maroc ici présent était Ministre des affaires étrangères de son pays avant son retour parmi nous; il été également le représentant permanent du Maroc auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en 1960. A ce moment-là, un document extrêmement important a été publié par le Ministère des affaires étrangères du Maroc et diffusé par M. Benhima avec le talent que nous lui connaissons au sein de cette organisation; ce document présentait le Sahara comme partie intégrante de la Mauritanie et revendiqué par le Maroc uniquement parce que ce dernier réclamait la Mauritanie. Cet argument et ce témoignage nous paraissent importants et ne nous paraissent pas soulever d'objections de la part de ceux qui les ont fournis gracieusement à la Mauritanie.

132. Je dois dire par ailleurs que les revendications du Maroc sur le Sahara remontent seulement à la date où furent émises les revendications du Maroc sur la Mauritanie, c'est-à-dire au moment où la Mauritanie se préparait, en même temps que d'autres, dont il a partagé le sort en tant que colonie française, à son autonomie et à son indépendance. C'est à ce moment-là que le Maroc a revendiqué le Sahara et la Mauritanie mais, je le répète, le Sahara uniquement parce qu'il était partie intégrante de la Mauritanie.

133. En plus de ce document que nous venons d'évoquer et qui est de date récente, mais qui a un poids considérable en raison même de sa source, il y a d'autres documents.

134. Au XVIII^{ème} siècle dans un traité, connu de tous, signé à Marrakech en 1767 entre les souverains du Maroc et de l'Espagne — ce traité est dans toutes les chancelleries, il existe à la mission permanente de la Mauritanie et existe certainement dans les archives du Maroc — le sultan du Maroc de l'époque reconnaissait qu'au sud de l'actuelle enclave d'Ifni et de l'oued Noun, qui est une rivière au sud du Maroc, sa souveraineté cessait de s'étendre et qu'il ne pouvait pas être tenu pour responsable de ce qui pouvait arriver à ceux qui allaient au-delà de cette limite.

135. Telle a été la ligne de conduite continue du Maroc jusqu'aux années 1957-1958, à partir desquelles nous avons vu s'élever des revendications qui étaient les revendications de la Mauritanie.

136. La position de la Mauritanie sur cette question — nous avons eu l'occasion de le dire à maintes reprises — est suffisamment claire, suffisamment solide, pour être continue. Quant au Sahara, dont nous avons entendu parler cet après-midi, la politique du Maroc a subi un certain nombre de changements significatifs. Vous savez que le Maroc l'a réclamé, comme la Mauritanie, en tant que partie intégrante de son territoire. Vous savez aussi qu'après avoir mis une sourdine à ses revendications sur la Mauritanie, qu'il considère comme maintenues, il a demandé l'indépendance pour le Sahara, qui — je me plais à le souligner — compte seulement 25 000 habitants. Et l'on se permet de demander l'indépendance pour cette région alors que l'on continue de reconnaître un pays de plus de 1 500 000 habitants qui est Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies depuis plusieurs années. C'est là une contradiction qui, à mon sens, mérite d'être soulignée.

137. A la suite de l'indépendance de la Mauritanie, avec le changement d'ambassadeurs et l'arrivée de M. Benhima, une interprétation nouvelle a vu le jour. Nous avons assisté à une tentative visant à dire que ce que le Maroc entendait par l'indépendance n'altérerait pas ce qu'il considérerait comme ses droits fondamentaux, c'est-à-dire qu'il demande l'indépendance pour le Sahara, mais que le Sahara est partie intégrante du Maroc.

138. Chaque délégation peut donner l'interprétation qu'elle souhaite à une attitude ou à un texte. Je dois avouer que la délégation mauritanienne éprouve certaines difficultés à comprendre une telle interprétation.

139. Pour ce qui est du Sahara — et je ne voudrais pas être très long, étant entendu que j'expliquerai le vote de la délégation de la Mauritanie après le vote sur le projet de résolution — nous avons indiqué que la Mauritanie reconnaît le droit à l'autodétermination de ces populations. Nous avons dit, sur instructions de notre gouvernement, que la Mauritanie se soumettra au résultat du référendum dont on parle, à un résultat acquis dans des conditions ne permettant pas de mettre en cause sa véracité et son authenticité.

140. Cela, nous l'avons dit et nous le répétons. Mais nous avons par ailleurs indiqué que tant que ce résultat n'aura pas été acquis et compte tenu du fait que notre conviction de l'appartenance de cette région à la Mauritanie est importante et fondamentale pour nous, nous maintenons notre position, à savoir que le Sahara est une partie intégrante de la Mauritanie.

141. Nous avons par ailleurs indiqué que nous comprenions et que nous entendions continuer à comprendre, en entourant cela de toutes les précisions nécessaires, que des pays voisins de cette région soient eux aussi intéressés à une solution susceptible d'intervenir dans une région qui peut paraître importante pour leur sécurité parce qu'elle touche de près à des zones à l'égard desquelles ils souhaitent qu'une solution soit trouvée qui ne porte pas préjudice à leur sécurité. C'est de cette manière et sur ce plan que la délégation et le Gouvernement de la République islamique de Mauritanie ont accueilli avec compréhension l'attitude du Gouvernement de la République populaire d'Algérie sur cette question.

142. Pour ce qui est du Maroc, il est évident qu'il pourra continuer à développer de la manière qu'il souhaite et qui lui paraît la plus adéquate sa façon de voir, mais nous persistons à croire que le Maroc n'a rien à voir avec le Sahara, que ces populations de Mauritanie — il est peut-être inutile de remonter à l'histoire — n'ont jamais eu de rapports de souveraineté avec le Maroc, que ce sont ces populations — cela, on peut le dire en souriant, mais cela existe — qui ont envahi à quelque moment de l'histoire le royaume du Maroc. C'est de ces populations que le souverain du Maroc parlait avec peur et avec un certain dédain, mais un certain dédain trouvant surtout sa signification dans le fait qu'on les redoutait. Ce sont ces populations-là qui ont habité le Sahara, qui sont encore dans le Sahara, qui sont en Mauritanie, et qui entendent continuer avec la même détermination qui les a fait connaître dans l'histoire à préserver et à défendre leurs droits.

^{4/} Le représentant du Sierra Leone a déclaré ultérieurement (voir par. 168) qu'il désirait que le nom de son pays figure au nombre de ceux qui ont voté pour le projet de résolution.

154. Le PRESIDENT: Je donne la parole aux délégations qui désirent expliquer leur vote.

155. M. OULD DADDAH (Mauritanie): La délégation de la République islamique de Mauritanie ne voudrait pas laisser passer cette occasion sans présenter ses plus vives félicitations à M. George F. Tomeh, président de la Quatrième Commission, pour la sagesse, la patience, le doigté, la compréhension et la fermeté avec lesquels il a su diriger les travaux de la Commission. Les efforts sans cesse renouvelés du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, du Groupe afro-asiatique et de la Quatrième Commission, sous la direction impartiale et efficace de son distingué président, ont permis à la présente session d'accomplir des pas positifs vers les solutions heureuses et justes qu'exigent les problèmes encore nombreux et souvent complexes soulevés par la décolonisation. La délégation mauritanienne voudrait, en particulier, renouveler ses remerciements à tous ceux qui ont consacré des efforts inlassables et beaucoup de temps à la recherche d'une solution acceptable pour la question du Sahara dit espagnol. Cette question, chacun le sait, est de la plus haute importance pour mon pays.

156. Samedi dernier, lors du vote de la résolution traitant du Sahara dit espagnol au sein de la Quatrième Commission [1755ème séance], la délégation de la République islamique de Mauritanie a fait des observations et réserves que je voudrais renouveler devant l'Assemblée générale afin qu'elles figurent au compte rendu de la présente séance.

157. Dans la résolution sur le Sahara dit espagnol qui vient d'être adoptée, la délégation de la République islamique de Mauritanie trouve des éléments positifs qui lui ont permis d'émettre un vote favorable sur ce texte. L'un de ces éléments positifs réside dans une nette distinction faite, dans le dispositif de la résolution, entre l'enclave d'Ifni et le territoire du Sahara dit espagnol. Une telle manière de voir correspond à une réalité que la délégation mauritanienne a toujours soulignée. En effet, le Sahara dit espagnol et Ifni constituent deux régions tout à fait distinctes. Ces deux régions géographiquement séparées posent des problèmes de nature fondamentalement différente. Elles devraient donc, pour cette raison, et pour la clarté du débat soulevé par chacune d'entre elles, être traitées de manière différente.

158. C'est pourquoi la délégation mauritanienne formule des réserves sur le fait que le Sahara dit espagnol et Ifni sont maintenus dans la même résolution. Ma délégation prend toutefois acte de ce qu'Ifni et le Sahara dit espagnol sont nettement séparés dans le corps de la résolution que nous venons d'adopter. La délégation mauritanienne prend également acte du fait qu'à la fin de la partie du dispositif consacrée à chacune des deux régions, il est demandé au Comité spécial de poursuivre l'examen portant sur ces terri-toires et de faire rapport à ce sujet à l'Assemblée générale. Il est ainsi dit, à la fin de la partie du dispositif concernant Ifni, que ce territoire doit faire l'objet par le Comité spécial d'un rapport à part, et l'on trouve la même disposition au sujet du Sahara dit espagnol. Nous considérons cependant qu'il aurait été plus logique, plus juste et plus simple — donc plus clair — de traiter d'Ifni et du Sahara dit espagnol dans deux résolutions distinctes.

159. La délégation de la République islamique de Mauritanie voudrait par ailleurs souligner, avec le désir de voir l'ensemble de ses observations et réserves figurer dans le compte rendu de la présente séance de l'Assemblée générale, que la résolution que nous venons d'adopter ne fait pas ressortir avec toute la clarté voulue l'un des aspects essentiels de la question du Sahara dit espagnol. En effet, si les pays voisins de cette région, en tant que tels, sont intéressés, nous pouvons par contre affirmer que, pour ce qui a trait à l'appartenance du Sahara dit espagnol, la République islamique de Mauritanie est la partie intéressée. La présente résolution aurait dû faire ressortir cette réalité avec davantage de clarté. La délégation mauritanienne s'attendait à bon droit à voir cette réalité inscrite dans la présente résolution.

160. A ce propos, nous voudrions rappeler et confirmer les déclarations faites par les responsables mauritaniens et par la délégation mauritanienne au sujet du Sahara dit espagnol devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, devant la Quatrième Commission et devant l'Assemblée générale. Le fait que le Maroc soit nommé en même temps que la République islamique de Mauritanie à propos du Sahara dit espagnol dans la présente résolution ne signifie absolument pas que le Gouvernement de la République islamique de Mauritanie lui reconnaisse un droit quelconque sur cette région. Nous considérons le Maroc uniquement comme un pays limitrophe du Sahara dit espagnol et, à ce seul titre, susceptible, comme d'autres, d'être intéressé au destin de cette région.

161. Enfin, la délégation de la République islamique de Mauritanie considère que l'alinéa a du paragraphe 3 de la section II du dispositif de la résolution adoptée au cours de la présente séance de l'Assemblée générale sur le Sahara dit espagnol vise uniquement les quelques habitants autochtones du Sahara dit espagnol libres de tout engagement vis-à-vis des pays étrangers. Il s'agit donc, pour la délégation mauritanienne, d'habitants autochtones du Sahara dit espagnol qui, pour une raison ou pour une autre, se trouvent momentanément en dehors de leurs foyers. A ceux-là, et à ceux-là seuls, doit et peut raisonnablement s'appliquer l'alinéa a du paragraphe 3 de la section II du dispositif de la résolution que l'Assemblée générale vient d'adopter sur le Sahara dit espagnol.

162. M. DE PINIES (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La résolution qui vient d'être adoptée à une écrasante majorité par les membres de l'Assemblée générale au sujet de Gibraltar met fin à une période de l'histoire coloniale de ce territoire. L'Espagne l'accepte, et ma délégation ne veut pas poursuivre avec celle de Grande-Bretagne une polémique qui irait au-delà de ce que la communauté internationale ici représentée a décidé. C'est pourquoi je m'abstiendrai de réfuter les arguments que mon illustre ami et représentant distingué du Royaume-Uni, lord Caradon, a avancés pour justifier l'opposition de son pays à cette résolution.

163. En un jour comme celui-ci, ma délégation estime que les mots, quels qu'ils soient, sont superflus. Par la résolution qu'elle vient d'adopter, et qui est la suite logique des résolutions 2070 (XX) et 2231 (XXI) adoptées par l'Assemblée générale en 1965 et 1966, notre organisation a montré la voie normale, correcte et juste qu'il faut suivre pour liquider la situation coloniale de Gibraltar.

164. Le territoire dont ma patrie a été amputée doit de nouveau lui être rattaché; les intérêts des sujets britanniques qui, jusqu'à maintenant, ont bénéficié de cette situation coloniale, doivent être respectés.

165. Dans quelques semaines reprendront à Madrid les négociations entre l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni, que ce dernier avait suspendues au mois d'avril dernier. Comme je l'ai déjà dit devant la Quatrième Commission, mon gouvernement participera à ces négociations en respectant les décisions des Nations Unies, et animé du meilleur esprit de collaboration à l'égard du Royaume-Uni.

166. Pendant 263 ans, la situation coloniale à Gibraltar a constitué un obstacle important à l'amitié hispano-britannique, au détriment non seulement de nos deux pays mais aussi de la communauté internationale. Aujourd'hui, notre organisation a montré la voie à suivre pour franchir cet obstacle, et ma délégation espère que, lorsqu'il aura disparu, le Royaume-Uni et les sujets britanniques que ce pays a installés sur le Rocher sauront un jour se montrer reconnaissants d'une décision qui est à l'honneur de l'Organisation qui l'a prise. L'Espagne pour sa part exprime dès maintenant à celle-ci sa reconnaissance et forme les vœux pour que, l'année prochaine, nous puissions déclarer ici que le problème de la décolonisation de Gibraltar est résolu.

167. Quant aux résolutions qui ont été adoptées au sujet d'Ifni, du Sahara espagnol et de la Guinée équatoriale, je dois dire que ma délégation a voté en leur faveur. Elle a fait une déclaration à ce propos devant la Quatrième Commission [1750^{ème} séance] et a jugé inutile d'avoir à parler de nouveau en séance plénière, puisqu'elle s'en tient à ce qui a été dit et au vote qu'elle a émis dans cette assemblée.

168. M. COE COLE (Sierra Leone) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation aimerait expliquer son vote sur le projet de résolution V. Nous avons l'intention de voter pour ce projet de résolution en appuyant sur le bouton vert, mais il ne semble pas avoir fonctionné.

La séance est levée à 18 h 10.

RECOMMANDATIONS DE LA QUATRIEME COMMISSION

38. La Quatrième Commission recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter les projets de résolution suivants :

PROJET DE RESOLUTION V

Question d'Antigua, des Bahamas, des Bermudes, de la Dominique, de la Grenade, de Guam, des îles Caïmanes, des îles Cocos (Keeling), des îles Gilbert et Ellice, de l'île Maurice, des îles Salomon, des îles Samoa américaines, des îles Seychelles, des îles Tokélaou, des îles Turks et Caïques, des îles Vierges américaines, des îles Vierges britanniques, de Montserrat, de Nioué, des Nouvelles-Hébrides, de Pitcairn, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, de Sainte-Hélène, de Sainte-Lucie et de Saint-Vincent et du Souaziland

L'Assemblée générale,

Ayant étudié la question des territoires suivants : Antigua, Bahamas, Bermudes, Dominique, Grenade, Guam, îles Caïmanes, îles Cocos (Keeling), îles Gilbert-et-Ellice, île Maurice, îles Salomon, îles Samoa américaines, îles Seychelles, îles Tokélaou, îles Turks et Caïques, îles Vierges américaines, îles Vierges britanniques, Montserrat, Nioué, Nouvelles-Hébrides, Pitcairn, Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, Sainte-Hélène, Sainte-Lucie et Saint-Vincent et Souaziland,

Ayant examiné les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatifs à ces territoires^{1/},

Rappelant ses résolutions 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960, 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, 1810 (XVII) du 17 décembre 1962, 1956 (XVIII) du 11 décembre 1963, 2066 (XX) du 16 décembre 1965, 2069 (XX) du 16 décembre 1965, 2189 (XXI) du 13 décembre 1966, 2232 (XX) du 20 décembre 1966 et 2288 (XXII) du 1er décembre 1967,

Notant les changements constitutionnels qui ont été adoptés en février et mars 1967 dans les territoires d'Antigua, de la Dominique, de Grenade, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla et de Sainte-Lucie et qui sont envisagés pour le territoire de Saint-Vincent,

Prenant note en outre de la décision du Comité spécial selon laquelle la résolution 1514 (XV) contenant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et les autres résolutions pertinentes continuent de s'appliquer à ces territoires,

^{1/} A/6700/Add.8, 10, 13 et 14, chap. XI, XIV à XVIII, XX et XXIII.

Profondément préoccupée par les renseignements contenus dans le rapport du Comité spécial concernant la persistance de politiques visant notamment à la destruction de l'intégrité territoriale de certains de ces territoires et à l'établissement, par les puissances administrantes, de bases et d'installations militaires en violation des résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale,

Déplorant l'attitude de certaines puissances administrantes qui persistent à refuser d'autoriser des missions de visite de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à se rendre dans ces territoires,

Sachant que, dans ces conditions, l'attention soutenue et l'assistance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sont nécessaires si l'on veut que les peuples de ces territoires atteignent leurs objectifs, énoncés dans la Charte des Nations Unies et dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux,

Consciente de la situation géographique et des conditions économiques particulières de certains de ces territoires,

1. Approuve les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux relatifs à ces territoires;
2. Réaffirme le droit inaliénable des peuples de ces territoires à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance;
3. Invite les puissances administrantes à appliquer sans retard les résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale;
4. Réitère sa déclaration selon laquelle toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale des territoires coloniaux et à établir des bases et des installations militaires dans ces territoires est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale;
5. Demande instamment aux puissances administrantes d'autoriser les missions de visite de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à se rendre dans les territoires et de leur offrir toute leur coopération et toute leur assistance;

6. Décide que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devra prêter toute l'aide nécessaire aux peuples de ces territoires dans les efforts qu'ils déploient pour décider librement de leur statut futur;

7. Prie le Comité spécial de continuer à accorder une attention spéciale à ces territoires et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa vingt-troisième session, sur l'application de la présente résolution;

8. Prie le Secrétaire général de continuer à prêter toute l'assistance possible dans l'application de la présente résolution.

40. La Quatrième Commission recommande également à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter le texte d'accord suivant :

Question des îles Falkland (Malvinas)

L'Assemblée générale, compte tenu de sa résolution 2065 (XX) du 16 décembre 1965 et du texte d'accord adopté par elle le 20 décembre 1966 touchant la question des îles Falkland (Malvinas), prend acte des communications, datées du 14 décembre 1967, que les représentants permanents de l'Argentine et du Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont adressées au Secrétaire général (documents A/C.4/703 et A/C.4/704), et à cet égard, compte tenu du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux^{1/}, elle adopte un texte d'accord tendant à prier instamment les deux parties de poursuivre leurs négociations en vue de trouver une solution pacifique au problème le plus tôt possible. En outre, l'Assemblée prie instamment les deux parties de tenir, au cours de l'année prochaine, en gardant présents à l'esprit la résolution 2065 (XX) et le texte d'accord du 20 décembre 1966, le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et l'Assemblée générale dûment au courant de l'évolution des négociations sur cette situation coloniale dont l'Organisation des Nations Unies souhaite l'élimination dans le contexte de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale du 14 décembre 1960.

DISCUSSION GENERALE ET EXAMEN DE PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (A/C.4/L.876 ET ADD.1 ET 2, A/C.4/L.877)

23. M. ESFANDIARY (Iran) [Rapporteur du Comité spécial] appelle l'attention des membres de la Quatrième Commission sur les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial (A/6700/Rev.1) relatifs aux territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément. Ces chapitres portent sur les territoires suivants: Guinée équatoriale; Ifni et Sahara espagnol; Gibraltar; Souaziland; Côte française des Somalis; Ile Maurice, Iles Seychelles et Sainte-Hélène; Iles Gilbert-et-Ellice, Pitcairn et Iles Salomon; Nioué et Iles Tokélaou; Nouvelles-Hébrides; Guam et Samoa américaines; Territoire sous tutelle des Iles du Pacifique; Iles Cocos (Keeling), Territoires sous tutelle de Nauru, Papoua et Territoire sous tutelle de la Nouvelle-Guinée; Brunéi; Hong-kong; Iles Vierges américaines, Iles Vierges britanniques, Antigua, Dominique, Grenade, Montserrat, Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, Sainte-Lucie, Saint-Vincent, Bermudes, Bahamas, Iles Turques et Caïques, Iles Caïmanes, Iles Falkland (Malvinas) et Honduras britannique.

24. Le programme du Comité spécial en 1967 a été particulièrement chargé, car, on le sait, ses travaux ont été interrompus par la session extraordinaire et la session extraordinaire d'urgence de l'Assemblée générale. En raison de ces interruptions, de nombreuses questions n'ont pu être examinées qu'avec un retard important, et le Comité spécial n'a pas été en mesure d'achever ses séances de 1967 avant le 5 décembre. Malgré cela, et bien que les chapitres que le Comité spécial consacre aux nombreux territoires qui restent sous domination coloniale soient nécessairement volumineux, la plupart de ces chapitres ont été distribués, grâce aux efforts des membres du Comité et des divers services du Secrétariat.

*Reprise des débats de la 1737ème séance.

25. Les chapitres déjà publiés du rapport du Comité spécial qui ont trait aux territoires relevant du point à l'examen sont les suivants: chapitre VIII: Guinée équatoriale; chapitre IX: Ifni et Sahara espagnol; chapitre XII: Côte française des Somalis; chapitre XIV: île Maurice, îles Seychelles et Sainte-Hélène; chapitres XV à XXII: territoires d'Asie et du Pacifique. En ce qui concerne les chapitres relatifs aux autres territoires, à savoir Gibraltar, le Souaziland et les territoires des Antilles, aucun effort n'est épargné pour les publier le plus rapidement possible et M. Esfandiary croit savoir qu'ils seront prêts le 11 décembre au plus tard.

26. Le Comité spécial a recommandé diverses mesures propres à garantir que la Déclaration sera appliquée d'une manière satisfaisante et efficace dans les territoires en question. M. Esfandiary espère que ces mesures recevront un large appui à l'Assemblée générale, et il recommande vivement à la Quatrième Commission d'adopter le rapport du Comité spécial.

27. M. LUARD (Royaume-Uni) rappelle à la Commission qu'étant donné l'importance de la question à l'examen il a été décidé que la délégation britannique pourrait traiter à part le problème de Gibraltar. Les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Espagne, principaux intéressés, ont décidé d'un commun accord d'avoir des entretiens à Madrid à ce sujet en janvier 1968. Presque toutes les délégations représentées à la Commission se sont, à un moment ou à un autre, déclarées en faveur de négociations entre l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni, et M. Luard, pour sa part, évitera de dire quoi que ce soit qui puisse compromettre les résultats de ces entretiens. Rappelant brièvement l'évolution du problème, M. Luard signale qu'en octobre 1964, au moment où le Comité spécial a recommandé pour la première fois que des discussions aient lieu entre l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni au sujet de Gibraltar, l'Espagne a commencé à imposer des restrictions sur les communications entre le Royaume-Uni et Gibraltar; le Royaume-Uni n'en a pas moins appuyé la résolution 2070 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale. L'année suivante ont eu lieu des entretiens au cours desquels l'Espagne a proposé que Gibraltar lui soit transféré, certaines mesures étant prises pour assurer la protection de la population; elle offrait au Royaume-Uni la possibilité de continuer à utiliser la base de Gibraltar. Le Royaume-Uni, de son côté, a présenté diverses propositions qui portaient notamment sur des mesures pratiques de coopération dans des domaines d'intérêt mutuel et une forme spéciale de représentation du Gouvernement espagnol à Gibraltar, tenant compte des intérêts et de la situation particulière de l'Espagne aux termes du Traité d'Utrecht; il a proposé également que la Cour internationale de Justice soit saisie des aspects juridiques du différend, en s'engageant à se conformer à la décisions de la Cour. L'Espagne n'a encore accepté aucune des propositions britanniques mais, en revanche, elle a imposé des restrictions accrues sur la population de Gibraltar. La Quatrième Commission a examiné le problème à nouveau lors de la vingt et unième session; la discussion a abouti à l'adoption de la résolution 2231 (XXI) du 20 décembre 1966 dont les deux dispositions principales étaient la poursuite des conversations entre le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne, et la décision de tenir compte des intérêts de la population du territoire.

28. En ce qui concerne la première disposition, le Gouvernement britannique a proposé de reprendre les entretiens à Londres en avril 1967; mais, quelques jours avant la date prévue, l'Espagne a appliqué des mesures restrictives encore plus sévères, interdisant, entre autres choses, le survol de la zone contiguë à l'unique aéroport de Gibraltar. Le Gouvernement britannique a considéré ces mesures comme des tentatives, auxquelles il n'était pas disposé à céder, pour lui forcer la main, et il n'a eu d'autre recours que d'ajourner les entretiens. Il a été entendu que l'interdiction des vols à Gibraltar ferait l'objet de discussions, mais la condition préalable posée par l'Espagne a obligé le Royaume-Uni à porter le différend devant l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale (OACI). Au mois de septembre 1967, le Secrétaire d'Etat aux affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni et le Ministre des affaires étrangères d'Espagne ont étudié les relations entre les deux pays, et des entretiens entre les deux gouvernements se poursuivront en janvier 1968.

29. En ce qui concerne la deuxième disposition de la résolution 2231 (XXI), selon laquelle les deux parties étaient invitées à poursuivre leurs négociations "en prenant en considération les intérêts des habitants du territoire", il est évident qu'elle s'adresse à l'une et l'autre partie. Or, depuis trois ans, l'Espagne impose à Gibraltar des mesures qui équivalent pratiquement à un blocus, s'attaquant aux moyens d'existence de la population et restreignant ses moyens de communication; ces mesures, outre qu'elles sont contraires aux dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI), ne sont guère de nature à susciter parmi les Gibraltariens des sentiments favorables à l'Espagne.

30. Le Royaume-Uni, de son côté, a toujours considéré comme l'un des principes sacrés de la décolonisation le souci des intérêts des peuples et le respect de leurs désirs, et, en conséquence, il a décidé de consulter les habitants de Gibraltar en organisant un référendum qui leur permettrait de choisir entre deux possibilités: se placer sous la souveraineté espagnole dans les conditions que le Gouvernement espagnol avait proposées au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté le 18 mai 1966, ou maintenir volontairement leurs liens avec le Royaume-Uni, en ayant des institutions locales démocratiques. Le représentant permanent du Royaume-Uni a informé le Secrétaire général de ce projet le 13 juin 1967 (A/AC.109/254¹, par. 16), en précisant que le Gouvernement britannique accepterait volontiers la présence d'un observateur de l'ONU à ce référendum. Ce gouvernement a également proposé à l'Espagne d'envoyer un observateur, en offrant de lui donner les moyens d'exposer son point de vue aux Gibraltariens. Le Gouvernement espagnol a rejeté les deux offres. Le référendum a eu lieu le 10 septembre; pour être admis à voter il fallait être résident permanent dans le territoire; 12 182 résidents permanents ont donc voté sur un total de 12 757 inscrits: 44 seulement se sont prononcés pour la première option, 12 138 pour la seconde — le maintien des liens existant entre le Royaume-Uni et le territoire. Ainsi, dans un référendum libre et démocratique, la population de Gibraltar a fait connaître sans ambiguïté et d'une manière quasi unanime ce qu'elle estimait être ses intérêts. La délégation britannique rejette catégoriquement l'idée, exprimée dans un des projets de résolution présentés, selon laquelle ce référendum n'était pas conforme à la résolution 2231 (XXI). Où iraient les Nations Unies si l'un de ses organismes considérait comme un acte répréhensible de consulter une population coloniale au sujet de son avenir? Certaines délégations ont prétendu que le référendum avait été organisé sans tenir compte de la résolution 2231 (XXI), l'Espagne n'ayant pas été consultée; cette critique n'est pas plus fondée: l'Espagne, invitée à participer, ne l'a pas fait.

31. D'un point de vue général, ce problème semble faire intervenir deux principes essentiels. L'un de ces principes est celui de l'intégrité territoriale, mentionné dans un des projets de résolution distribués; à cet égard, il convient d'établir une distinction entre des concepts fondamentaux. L'expression "intégrité territoriale", telle qu'elle est employée au paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la résolution 1514 (XV), s'entend de l'intégrité et de l'indivisibilité d'un territoire qui formait un tout sous une administration antérieure: par exemple l'ancien Congo belge, le Kenya, etc. C'est le concept que l'Organisation de l'unité africaine (OUA) a eu la sagesse d'accepter, en reconnaissant toutes les frontières coloniales antérieures, aussi absurdes qu'elles soient. Mais ce concept doit être distingué de celui de l'intégrité géographique, qui a trait à des zones adjacentes ou paraissant faire partie d'une même unité géographique. Il est évident que l'on n'a jamais envisagé cette acception dans la résolution 1514 (XV), car cela aurait signifié que pratiquement tous les territoires coloniaux pouvaient être revendiqués par leurs voisins immédiats, ce que l'OUA a voulu éviter. Le principe de l'unité géographique pose un problème, car il est difficile de définir cette unité. Si, en vertu d'un tel principe, Gibraltar devait faire partie de l'Espagne, on pourrait en dire autant du Portugal; l'Alaska pourrait être revendiqué par le Canada, Saint-Marin par l'Italie, Singapour par la Malaisie, et, en fait, l'Amérique du Sud tout entière devrait former un seul et même pays, comme d'ailleurs l'Afrique. On ne saurait faire de ce principe un facteur déterminant dans les différends frontaliers.

32. D'après l'Article 73 de la Charte, les Membres des Nations Unies qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes ont, à l'égard de ces territoires, l'obligation de développer leur capacité de s'administrer eux-mêmes, de tenir compte des aspirations politiques des populations et de les aider dans le développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques. Il n'est pas question d'assurer l'unité géographique par la décolonisation et jamais aucun territoire n'a été ainsi annexé après la décolonisation. Bien plus, quand très souvent l'intégrité territoriale a été remise en cause en vertu du principe selon lequel les peuples doivent pouvoir décider de leur avenir, l'Organisation a toujours soutenu le principe en question: c'est ainsi que l'avenir du Cameroun britannique a été décidé en fonction des souhaits librement exprimés au cours d'un plébiscite et non pas selon des critères géographiques. Lorsque se posera prochainement la question de l'avenir du Sahara espagnol, qui, comme Gibraltar, est l'objet d'une revendication territoriale, il conviendra également de faire prévaloir l'opinion de la majorité de la population; les Nations Unies ont décidé en 1966 que la population autochtone du territoire exercerait par référendum son droit à l'autodétermination; même l'Espagne affirme, en ce qui concerne Ceuta et Melilla, villes espagnoles situées dans la zone géographique du Maroc, que les vœux des habitants l'emportent sur les considérations géographiques. Certains ont dit qu'il fallait adopter un principe différent dans le cas de Gibraltar; un des arguments avancés est que la situation n'est pas la même que dans les autres territoires vu le petit nombre d'habitants. Or la Quatrième Commission vient d'approuver la libre détermination et l'accession à l'indépendance de Nauru, dont la population n'est que de 3 000 habitants, et le Comité spécial a réaffirmé le droit à la libre détermination de Nioué qui est encore moins peuplée.

33. Un autre argument avancé pour faire prévaloir le critère géographique sur les aspirations des habitants est que, dans un certain sens, il ne s'agit pas d'une population pleinement autochtone, mais d'une création artificielle importée de la métropole par la puissance coloniale. C'est faux: les habitants de Gibraltar ne viennent pas du Royaume-Uni, pas plus qu'ils ne sont étroitement liés aux Britanniques: ce sont principalement des gens d'origine méditerranéenne, et ils sont venus d'Italie ou de Malte à diverses époques entre 1715 et la fin du XIX^{ème} siècle. Ce ne sont ni des Anglais, ni des Espagnols. Ils forment une communauté qui a ses traditions et sa vie propres, ils ont la liberté de presse, la liberté syndicale, la liberté d'expression, la liberté politique et le droit au suffrage universel libre; l'opposition peut participer aux élections dans les mêmes conditions que le parti de la majorité. Ils ont des tribunaux libres et peuvent librement exprimer leur opinion. La seule chose qu'ils demandent est de ne pas être incorporés contre leur volonté à une puissance totalement étrangère à leurs traditions sociales et politiques. Comment pourrait-on dire qu'une population qui occupe un territoire depuis 250 ans est une population artificielle ou temporaire, et que ses intérêts et ses aspirations doivent être sacrifiés au moment de la décolonisation. Il y a peu de populations dans le monde d'aujourd'hui qui pourraient être assurées de conserver leur territoire si ce principe était appliqué, et la délégation britannique ne pense pas que, dans ce cas, pas plus qu'en aucun autre, une revendication posée pour des raisons géographiques doive l'emporter sur le principe fondamental selon lequel les habitants du territoire ont le droit de décider de leur avenir. Incorporer les Gibraltariens, contre leur volonté, à un pays dont ils détestent le système politique et qui serait maître de leur destin, ce ne serait pas de la décolonisation mais de la recolonisation et dans une forme bien moins acceptable.

34. Se référant aux projets de résolution présentés (A/C.4/L.876 et Add.1 et 2 et A/C.4/L.877), M. Luard souligne qu'il faut éviter de compromettre l'issue des conversations de janvier 1968 et de préjuger la question fondamentale de la souveraineté ou des droits respectifs de l'Espagne et du Royaume-Uni. Cette question doit assurément faire l'objet d'un arrêt de la

Cour internationale de Justice ou d'un arbitrage, mais elle ne relève pas de la Quatrième Commission, qui est un organe politique. En outre, ni la Quatrième Commission ni aucun autre organe politique des Nations Unies ne sont compétents pour rendre un jugement au sujet d'un différend territorial entre deux Etats Membres. La Quatrième Commission examine le problème de Gibraltar du point de vue colonial et non pas du point de vue de la revendication territoriale de l'Espagne; dès lors, les aspirations et les intérêts des Gibraltariens doivent passer avant tout.

35. Pour les raisons exposées, la délégation britannique ne peut accepter le projet de résolution présenté par un certain nombre de pays d'Amérique latine (A/C.4/L.876 et Add.1 et 2) parce qu'il tente d'établir une relation entre le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) et la question de Gibraltar, qu'il déplore l'organisation du référendum jugé contraire à la résolution 2231 (XXI), et qu'il laisse entendre implicitement que c'est seulement quand on aura "mis fin à la situation coloniale" qu'il conviendra de protéger les intérêts des habitants de Gibraltar; or, la résolution 2231 (XXI) dit clairement que ces intérêts doivent être pris en considération au cours des négociations entre les parties.

36. La Commission ayant été saisie de ce projet, la délégation britannique en a fait distribuer un autre, ce qui permettra à la Commission de déterminer les positions des deux parties. Dans le projet de résolution qu'il a présenté (A/C.4/L.877), le Royaume-Uni reconnaît clairement que les aspirations des habitants du territoire sont l'un des facteurs essentiels de la situation; en évoquant les restrictions imposées par l'Espagne à Gibraltar, il souligne que cela, plus que toute autre chose, empêche le règlement pacifique du différend, et, en demandant la levée de ces restrictions, il s'efforce de faire disparaître cet obstacle essentiel.

37. L'un des objectifs les plus élevés de la Quatrième Commission consiste à tenter de trouver des points d'accord entre les parties et à ne pas aggraver les controverses. Dans le cas de Gibraltar, l'avenir des 25 000 habitants du territoire est en jeu, et il faudra toute la bonne volonté, l'objectivité et la patience des membres de la Commission pour faciliter une solution. Celle-ci devra respecter deux principes de base: celui du règlement pacifique des controverses et la règle selon laquelle, en matière de décolonisation, les vœux d'une population touchant son avenir doivent être l'élément primordial à considérer.

38. M. DE PINIES (Espagne) dit qu'il n'exercera pas immédiatement son droit de réponse, mais qu'il se référera brièvement à certains aspects de l'intervention du représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui a dit à peu près la même chose que son secrétaire d'Etat aux affaires étrangères, M. Brown, en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale (1567ème séance). Ce sont là tergiversations et demi-vérités auxquelles M. de Piniés répondra à la séance suivante. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a parlé de l'aérodrome de Gibraltar, mais il n'a pas dit que c'est un aérodrome militaire, qui est catalogué comme tel à l'OACI et ne peut être utilisé qu'avec l'autorisation de la Royal Air Force ou en cas d'urgence. Quant au projet de résolution présenté par les quatre pays d'Amérique latine, il est à peu près identique à un projet approuvé antérieurement par le Comité spécial, avec seulement deux voix contre. Enfin, M. de Piniés affirme que l'Espagne sera toujours prête à respecter les intérêts de la population de Gibraltar.

La séance est levée à 13 h 50.

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément (suite) [A/6661, A/6662, A/6700/Rev.1, chap. DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE ET EXAMEN DE PROJETS DE RÉSOLUTION (suite) A/C.4/L.876 ET ADD.1 A 6, A/C.4/L.877, A/C.4/L.884)

1. M. JOUEJATI (Syrie) dit que la question de Gibraltar fait partie de l'héritage d'une époque où la force régnait. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a été créée au lendemain de la défaite infligée aux champions du règne de la force par les champions du règne du droit et a substitué le principe de la souveraineté, de l'association et de la coopération, dans des conditions d'égalité dans le domaine des relations internationales, au colonialisme et à l'expansion territoriale par la force qu'elle a répudiés.

2. Gibraltar a été occupée de force et les 6 000 survivants de la bataille ont été chassés et ont dû se réfugier à San Roque, d'où ils pouvaient voir leur cité occupée par les troupes étrangères. Cet épisode est à la racine même du problème de Gibraltar et le passage du temps ne lui a pas ôté sa validité.

3. Il y a quatre éléments principaux dont il convient de tenir compte lorsque l'on examine ce problème: premièrement, la souveraineté sur le roc de Gibraltar; deuxièmement, les droits inhérents des habitants espagnols qui ont été déplacés et de leurs successeurs; troisièmement, le statut des habitants qui se sont fixés à Gibraltar; quatrièmement, l'expansion postérieure de l'occupation britannique qui s'est étendue au territoire adjacent. Ainsi le problème met en jeu des considérations d'ordre territorial, humain et juridique qui sont à la base même de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale et que la Commission devrait garder présentes à l'esprit.

4. Les revendications britanniques à la souveraineté sur Gibraltar reposent sur le Traité d'Utrecht; or ce traité prévoyait une cession de propriété sans aucune juridiction territoriale. Il est évident qu'il s'agissait seulement de la cession à bail, à titre gracieux, d'une portion du territoire espagnol, d'autant qu'une autre clause du Traité disposait que, si l'Angleterre décide de céder, de vendre ou d'aliéner de toute autre manière le territoire de la ville de Gibraltar, la préférence devait être accordée à l'Espagne. Autrement dit, le territoire ne peut être vendu ou cédé à bail sans l'autorisation de la partie qui en détient la souveraineté, c'est-à-dire l'Espagne. La décolonisation du territoire signifierait la fin de l'occupation britannique et la souveraineté, qui a été suspendue de force mais non aliénée, reviendrait à l'Espagne.

5. Sur les 6 000 Espagnols qui habitaient Gibraltar à l'époque de l'occupation anglaise, seul Juan Romero de Figueroa, curé de l'Eglise Sainte-Marie, était demeuré et son acte de courage est passé à la postérité dans un poème sur cette tragédie, qu'il a composé. En attendant la libération de leur cité, les habitants qui en avaient été chassés ont construit à San Roque une ville dont les armes étaient celles de Gibraltar avec en exergue: "La très loyale cité de San Roque, dans laquelle réside celle de Gibraltar". San Roque continue d'être le symbole de l'attachement puissant qu'éprouvent les exilés pour leur patrie d'origine. Leur cité a été enlevée par la force, mais les habitants conservent leurs droits inaliénables sur elle. Il n'existe aucun document qui donne un caractère définitif à l'expropriation dont les habitants ont été l'objet et à leur exil. Les descendants des habitants légitimes se chiffrent maintenant à une cinquantaine de mille éparpillés autour de Gibraltar. Les travailleurs espagnols qui contribuent tous les jours à la prospérité de Gibraltar en sont les descendants; ce ne sont pas des travailleurs frontaliers ordinaires, car ils sont liés par un lien indissoluble à la terre de leurs ancêtres. Malgré cela, la Puissance administrante les considère comme des étrangers à Gibraltar et les empêche de faire entendre leur voix sur la question de l'avenir de Gibraltar.

6. Les multiples possibilités qu'offre Gibraltar érigée en port franc par la Reine d'Angleterre et la présence d'une base militaire ont attiré des colons d'origines diverses. Ils ont commencé par former une classe commerçante, mais le XIX^{ème} siècle a vu l'apparition d'une classe de privilégiés. Il est humain de vouloir profiter des occasions qui s'offrent et de vouloir faire des affaires, mais les nouveaux venus gardaient plutôt la nostalgie de leur ancienne patrie qu'ils n'étaient animés d'un sentiment de fidélité envers leur nouvelle patrie, dont 70 p. 100 de la superficie dépend de l'autorité militaire. Gibraltar est une colonie; il n'existe pas de citoyenneté de Gibraltar; seule la résidence à Gibraltar est reconnue et encore le droit à la résidence est limité par la loi aux fidèles sujets de la Couronne et est accordé par le Gouverneur, son représentant. De la sorte, les fils des habitants autochtones de Gibraltar, demeurés loyaux à leurs origines, s'entendent traiter d'étrangers et les travailleurs espagnols ne sont pas autorisés à passer la nuit à Gibraltar de crainte qu'ils ne revendiquent le droit d'être enregistrés comme résidents. Ainsi, ceux qui sont considérés comme des étrangers sont en fait les habitants autochtones de Gibraltar.

7. L'Espagne a protesté contre l'extension de l'occupation britannique à l'isthme adjacent et à la zone de l'aéroport militaire, mais, au lieu de répondre à cette protestation, la Puissance administrante a invoqué le fait que l'Espagne a jadis toléré la construction de l'aéroport militaire. Certes, l'Espagne a toléré la construction de l'aéroport mais à une époque où il en allait de l'existence même du Royaume-Uni. Elle l'a fait par solidarité et par courtoisie; un tel geste aurait dû normalement susciter la gratitude mais le Royaume-Uni l'a interprété comme une concession permanente, comme un acte de cession d'une portion du territoire d'un Etat souverain. La Puissance administrante s'efforce de masquer le fait qu'elle a porté atteinte à la souveraineté de l'Espagne en proposant que la question soit portée devant la Cour internationale de Justice. Toutefois, cette atteinte à la souveraineté de l'Espagne, qui tire son origine de l'existence d'une situation coloniale, ne constitue pas un différend d'ordre juridique que la Cour internationale de Justice est compétente pour connaître, mais un acte illicite interdit par la Charte des Nations Unies.

8. Le Comité spécial, la Quatrième Commission et l'Assemblée générale ont reconnu la complexité du problème et ont cherché à maintenir l'équilibre entre les divers éléments en jeu. Si le principe de l'autodétermination seul était appliqué en l'espèce, on ne tiendrait pas compte des aspirations, tout aussi valides, des descendants des anciens habitants espagnols; il s'agirait alors d'une détermination de l'avenir de Gibraltar par le Royaume-Uni, sans considération de l'élément essentiel qu'est la souveraineté espagnole, et non de l'exercice de l'autodétermination et on perpétuerait ainsi l'occupation coloniale. Les résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale, notamment la résolution 2231 (XXI), ont posé trois principes devant servir de base de solution: négociations et consultations entre les parties intéressées, respect des intérêts des habitants et accélération du processus de décolonisation. Ces résolutions ne prévoient toutefois pas la renonciation à la souveraineté, la perpétuation de l'occupation, ni le maintien d'une base militaire contre les intérêts de tous les peuples et contre la tendance moderne à la décolonisation.

9. L'Espagne s'est engagée à respecter les intérêts des habitants, leurs droits personnels, la liberté religieuse, la liberté de la presse et la sécurité de l'emploi et à maintenir en place les institutions municipales. Elle a même garanti aux ressortissants britanniques qui en exprimeraient le désir qu'ils pourraient conserver leur nationalité et s'est déclarée prête à élaborer un statut garantissant tous ces droits qui serait enregistré auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il faut reconnaître que l'Espagne a fait des concessions importantes en vue de faciliter une solution. La Puissance administrante affirme que ce qui compte ce sont les vœux de la population et non simplement leurs intérêts et qu'elle était allée bien au-delà des dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI) en organisant un référendum le 10 septembre 1967 afin de s'assurer de ses vœux. Or ce référendum est une mesure unilatérale et ne constitue pas réellement une consultation, élément essentiel de la résolution 2231 (XXI). Certes l'Espagne a été invitée à envoyer un observateur, mais c'est l'esprit dans lequel le référendum a été organisé, son but et ses modalités qui sont contestables. Il n'y a rien à redire à l'idée d'un référendum; cependant le référendum en question a été organisé de telle façon qu'il préjuge la question tout entière, aggrave le problème et va à l'encontre des intentions du Comité spécial et de la Quatrième Commission de favoriser un règlement négocié. La Puissance administrante a pris cette décision malgré la mise en garde que lui a adressée le Comité spécial dans sa résolution du 1^{er} septembre 1967 (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X, par. 215).

10. Les comparaisons avec l'Alaska sont superflues. La question se pose plutôt dans les termes suivants: l'Angleterre se serait-elle inclinée devant l'occupation espagnole si l'Espagne avait envahi la pointe de Cornouaille ou l'Angleterre aurait-elle revendiqué Cadix si l'amiral Locke avait réussi à occuper cette ville également?

11. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit s'efforcer de trouver une solution satisfaisante à la question de Gibraltar en respectant les principes de la décolonisation. A la séance précédente, lord Caradon a émis le vœu que Gibraltar devienne le symbole de l'amitié entre le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne. L'attitude de l'Espagne est empreinte d'un esprit de coopération, mais il ne saurait y avoir d'amitié si une question qui présente un intérêt primordial pour l'Espagne est préjugée avec partialité avant que les négociations ne soient entamées, il ne saurait y avoir d'amitié fondée sur l'exil permanent des habitants et l'expropriation permanente du territoire. La bonne volonté est essentielle si l'on veut parvenir à une solution satisfaisante et amicale.

12. M. ESFANDIARY (Iran) dit que la seule procédure préconisée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies depuis 1964 pour décoloniser le territoire de Gibraltar consiste dans l'ouverture de négociations entre le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne. Par le consensus adopté par le Comité spécial le 16 octobre 1964^{1/} et les résolutions 2070 (XX) et 2231 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale, les deux parties ont été invitées à négocier. La raison pour laquelle l'Organisation a recommandé des négociations plutôt que l'autodétermination dans le cas de Gibraltar tient au fait que l'objectif primordial qu'elle poursuit est la décolonisation au sens de la résolution 1514 (XV). Or, les habitants actuels de Gibraltar ont clairement indiqué qu'ils ne sont pas vraiment intéressés par la décolonisation. Le problème est toutefois beaucoup plus complexe. Dans tous les cas où les forces du colonialisme ont mis la main sur une partie intégrante d'un autre Etat, par exemple les îles Falkland (Malvinas), le Honduras britannique et Ifni, sans parler de Gibraltar, l'Assemblée générale a recommandé des négociations entre la Puissance administrante et l'ancienne métropole. La substitution des négociations à l'autodétermination non seulement est juste et équitable puisqu'elle vise à réparer les maux du colonialisme, mais elle sert les objectifs de la décolonisation. En pareil cas, les habitants actuels sont souvent les bénéficiaires du régime colonial et ne sont pas d'aussi chauds partisans de la décolonisation que les victimes directes du colonialisme. Etant donné que Gibraltar fait partie intégrante de l'Espagne, c'est l'Espagne qui a subi une perte et non la population actuelle de Gibraltar qui est en fait le bénéficiaire de l'ère coloniale.

13. En recommandant les négociations comme base de la décolonisation de Gibraltar, l'Assemblée générale a agi en pleine conformité du paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV). La délégation iranienne est d'avis que l'interprétation de ce paragraphe qu'a donnée le représentant de l'Espagne est correcte. Il était clairement dans les intentions des rédacteurs de ce paragraphe d'énoncer un nouveau principe fondamental afin de préciser l'application du droit à l'autodétermination, ce paragraphe signifie que le principe de l'autodétermination ne peut d'aucune manière affecter le droit à l'intégrité territoriale ni toute revendication légitime que peut avoir un Etat sur un territoire. Ce principe fondamental a été renforcé par la pratique ultérieure de l'ONU qui accorde aux revendications d'Etats dont des territoires tels que les îles Falkland (Malvinas), le Honduras britannique ou Ifni faisaient autrefois partie intégrante, la priorité sur les vues des habitants actuels qui ont parfois bénéficié du colonialisme. Au cours de la discussion que le Comité spécial a consacrée à Gibraltar en 1967, le représentant de l'Australie a affirmé que, si l'interprétation que donne l'Espagne du paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) était acceptée, il s'ensuivrait que le Comité devrait examiner toutes les revendications de nature historique présentées par un Etat souverain contre un autre (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X, par. 137). Mais une telle analogie ne saurait jouer étant donné que le Comité spécial s'occupe des problèmes de la décolonisation et non des différends territoriaux entre Etats indépendants.

14. Il est beaucoup plus important que, dans ses résolutions concernant Gibraltar, l'Assemblée générale ait omis de réaffirmer le droit du peuple de

Gibraltar à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, réaffirmation qui constitue un élément essentiel de toutes les résolutions relatives à la Rhodésie du Sud, aux territoires administrés par le Portugal, au Sud-Ouest africain et à la plupart des autres territoires, qu'elle ait ajouté la phrase "en prenant en considération les intérêts des habitants du territoire". L'Article 73 de la Charte, que plusieurs orateurs ont évoqué, porte sur les responsabilités de la Puissance administrante et vise à prévenir tout abus de la Puissance administrante contre la population d'un territoire. On ne trouve dans cet article pas plus que dans aucune autre disposition de la Charte la moindre indication que les intérêts de la population devraient être la considération primordiale dans le contexte de la décolonisation. Lorsque les vues des habitants locaux sur la question de la décolonisation sont identiques à celles de la Puissance administrante, le principe selon lequel les intérêts de la population doivent constituer la considération primordiale est plus difficile à appliquer. Pour cette raison, le mot "vues" a été omis de la résolution 2131 (XXI), et le mot "intérêts" lui a été substitué.

15. En ce qui concerne les conversations qui doivent avoir lieu en janvier 1968, M. Esfandiary rend hommage au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni pour l'attitude souple et ouverte qu'il a adoptée et il espère que le résultat du référendum ne compromettra pas l'issue des conversations. Il offre à ce propos ses meilleurs vœux de succès aux parties intéressées.

16. M. N'JIE (Gambie) dit que le fait que la population de Gibraltar se trouve sous la domination coloniale ne prête pas à contestation. Au paragraphe 2 de sa résolution 2231 (XXI), l'Assemblée générale a demandé à la Puissance administrante de hâter, sans aucune entrave et en consultation avec le Gouvernement espagnol, la décolonisation de Gibraltar. Etant la Puissance administrante, le Royaume-Uni aurait pu demander de quelle façon l'Espagne se trouve intéressée. L'histoire même du territoire en donne la réponse. Le Rocher de Gibraltar a été occupé au début du VIII^{ème} siècle par les Maures qui y sont restés jusqu'à leur expulsion en 1462. Ensuite, Gibraltar est passée sous l'autorité personnelle des Grands d'Espagne jusqu'en 1502, date à laquelle elle a été intégrée au Royaume de Castille. Elle est demeurée aux mains des Espagnols jusqu'en 1704; à cette date, pendant la guerre de la Succession d'Espagne, elle a été capturée par des forces anglo-hollandaises. Le Commandant espagnol s'est rendu et a été autorisé à quitter Gibraltar et la plupart des civils ont décidé de le suivre. Par le Traité d'Utrecht qui a mis fin à la guerre, la Reine Anne d'Angleterre a accepté de reconnaître Philippe, prince de France, comme roi d'Espagne, mais celui-ci a dû céder Gibraltar à la Couronne d'Angleterre "avec toute sorte de droit à jamais". Le Traité disposait aussi que, si la Couronne d'Angleterre jugeait bon d'aliéner les biens en question, la Couronne d'Espagne aurait un droit de préemption pour recouvrer le Rocher de Gibraltar.

17. Si les Nations Unies reconnaissent que les clauses de ce traité sont encore en vigueur et si le Royaume-Uni n'était pas disposé à abandonner Gibraltar, il n'y aurait apparemment pas matière à discussion. Jusqu'au XIX^{ème} siècle, il était d'usage courant d'envahir et de prendre possession d'Etats, et aussi de vendre, d'échanger ou de faire don de territoires, avec les populations qui les habitaient, de la même façon qu'une exploitation agricole est vendue avec le bétail. Depuis que l'ONU existe, le Gouvernement britannique a reconnu qu'il ne pouvait pas conserver Gibraltar indéfiniment, mais, en se retirant de Gibraltar, la Puissance administrante ne peut pas céder purement et simplement le territoire et sa population à une autre puissance, cette pratique n'étant plus de mise. En tant que territoire dépendant, Gibraltar doit être décolonisée conformément aux dispositions des résolutions 1514 (XV) et 2231 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale. Les dispositions de la Charte et les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale sont également applicables à l'Espagne.

18. Le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.884 sur la question de Gibraltar, dont la délégation gambienne est coauteur, indique les bases sur lesquelles la Puissance administrante et l'Espagne devraient négocier. De l'avis de la délégation gambienne, il est entendu que les résolutions mentionnées dans le projet de résolution ne préjugent pas le droit de la population à l'autodétermination. Malgré leurs opinions divergentes, la Puissance administrante et l'Espagne se sont toutes deux déclarées prêtes à reprendre les négociations dans quelques semaines. La Commission devrait faire sienne cette proposition, sans prendre position touchant les causes des parties en présence. Le meilleur moyen d'aider à la solution du problème serait pour la Commission de créer une atmosphère propice au déroulement de négociations pacifiques qui seraient menées compte tenu des intérêts du peuple colonial intéressé.

19. M. SABEV (Bulgarie) déclare que la politique fondamentale de son gouvernement consiste à appuyer le droit inaliénable des peuples des territoires coloniaux à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, conformément à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Sept ans se sont écoulés depuis l'adoption de cette déclaration et pourtant bon nombre de peuples subissent encore la domination coloniale. En ce qui concerne les petits territoires coloniaux, le Comité spécial a adopté des recommandations bien précises tendant à assurer l'application, dans les plus brefs délais, de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée. Néanmoins, en raison de l'opposition des puissances coloniales, aucun progrès appréciable n'a été réalisé dans le processus de décolonisation au cours de la période considérée. La délégation bulgare estime que l'Assemblée générale devrait dénoncer le refus, de la part de ces puissances, d'appliquer la résolution 1514 (XV). L'examen de la question par le Comité spécial a montré que cette résolution était pleinement applicable aux petits territoires coloniaux: la délégation bulgare estime donc qu'il est du devoir de l'Organisation d'aider ces territoires à recouvrer leurs droits. Tous les petits territoires rencontrent les mêmes difficultés: leur économie est entre les mains de colonialistes étrangers qui exploitent leurs ressources naturelles et privent les habitants autochtones de leurs droits démocratiques les plus élémentaires; qui plus est, les puissances administrantes se servent d'eux pour favoriser leurs propres intérêts militaires, soit en y maintenant des bases militaires, soit en permettant à d'autres puissances de le faire, sans l'assentiment de la population autochtone. On peut citer comme exemple caractéristique de ces méthodes le cas de l'île de Guam, qui est utilisée par les Etats-Unis comme base pour les bombardements aériens qu'ils font subir chaque jour au Viet-Nam. On peut également citer la base sous-marine expérimentale d'essais établie par les Etats-Unis aux Bahamas, territoire administré par le Royaume-Uni.

20. Les débats consacrés à Aden et aux autres territoires coloniaux ont montré que l'existence de bases militaires constituait un obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). C'est ce qu'ont fait ressortir nombre de résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Comité spécial, notamment la résolution 2232 (XXI) de l'Assemblée. La délégation bulgare estime que les puissances coloniales devraient être à nouveau invitées à démanteler leurs bases militaires dans les territoires coloniaux et à s'abstenir d'en établir de nouvelles.

21. A maintes reprises, le Comité spécial a demandé aux puissances coloniales de se conformer aux décisions de l'Assemblée générale et d'accepter que des missions de visites se rendent dans les territoires qu'elles administrent. Le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis et d'autres puissances coloniales ne souhaitent nullement coopérer avec les Nations Unies en vue de favoriser le progrès de ces territoires vers l'indépendance. Après la proclamation du prétendu statut associé des petits territoires coloniaux aux Antilles, la Puissance administrante a adopté une attitude négative en ce qui concerne l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Cette attitude est regrettable, d'autant plus que le Comité spécial a décidé que la résolution en question était applicable à ces territoires. La situation dans cette région offre un nouvel exemple des tentatives que fait la Puissance administrante pour garder la mainmise sur ses territoires coloniaux. La délégation bulgare a maintes fois affirmé que tous les territoires coloniaux, quelles que soient leur étendue et leur population, doivent être libérés et que les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) doivent leur être appliquées. L'ONU a le devoir de recommander les mesures qui permettront d'atteindre ces objectifs.

22. M. HEZEKIAH (Trinité-et-Tobago) rappelle que sa délégation a toujours bien précisé sa position sur la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Tous les peuples coloniaux ont un droit absolu à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance nationales. Il n'appartient pas à la puissance coloniale de décider du moment où un peuple est prêt à gérer ses propres affaires. La délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago souhaiterait que les puissances coloniales fixent des dates limites pour l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires qui subissent encore leur domination, conformément aux vœux des peuples coloniaux eux-mêmes.

23. En ce qui concerne la question de Gibraltar, la délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago a étudié avec soin l'article X du Traité d'Utrecht et trouve ses termes ambigus. Il a été dit que le maintien en vigueur du Traité compromettait l'unité et l'intégrité nationales de l'Espagne, et qu'il en résultait une situation coloniale sur le sol espagnol. Si la délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago reconnaît que le Traité d'Utrecht est un document de caractère colonial, il n'en demeure pas moins que cet instrument reste toujours en vigueur et qu'il engage les puissances qui y sont parties, celles-ci devant donc, en toute bonne foi, respecter les obligations qui en découlent. Ce traité serait violé notamment au cas où le Gouvernement britannique, après avoir renoncé à sa souveraineté sur le territoire, céderait Gibraltar à une puissance métropolitaine autre que l'Espagne, mais il est inconcevable que dans la situation mondiale actuelle le Royaume-Uni envisage de prendre une telle mesure. Le transfert de Gibraltar à l'Espagne soulèverait la question du droit des peuples des territoires non autonomes à l'autodétermination. Dans sa résolution 2231 (XXI), l'Assemblée générale invite les Gouvernements de l'Espagne et du Royaume-Uni à garder présents à l'esprit les intérêts des peuples coloniaux.

24. La délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago ne pense pas que le principe de l'autodétermination soit nécessairement synonyme d'indépendance totale. L'autodétermination nationale peut simplement signifier le droit des peuples à décider librement de leurs propres intérêts nationaux et de leur statut politique. Ils peuvent, dans le libre exercice de ce droit, décider de maintenir une association plus ou moins étroite avec une puissance souveraine, au point même de conserver officiellement un "statut colonial". A propos de la question de Gibraltar, M. Hezekiah se demande si le terme de "décolonisation" doit signifier ipso facto l'incorporation du territoire à l'Espagne. Il existe une contradiction flagrante dans l'attitude d'un Etat qui, tout en étant du XXème siècle par les sentiments qu'il exprime en faveur de la décolonisation, n'en invoque pas moins un traité du XVIIIème siècle pour étayer son argument selon lequel, si le statut de Gibraltar était modifié, le territoire devrait être rattaché à l'Espagne. La délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago espère que les questions juridiques et politiques qui sont à la base du différend seront résolues à une date rapprochée. Toutefois, sans préjuger la solution qui leur sera donnée, il semble que, s'il y a conflit entre les obligations que la Charte confère à un Etat Membre et celles qui engagent cet Etat aux termes de tout autre accord international, ce soient les obligations contractées en vertu de la Charte — en l'occurrence de l'Article 103 — qui doivent l'emporter. En tout état de cause, l'Article 73 de la Charte énonce une règle absolue à laquelle il ne peut être dérogé. Par conséquent, si l'article X du Traité d'Utrecht touchant le droit de réversion de l'Espagne sur Gibraltar va à l'encontre des dispositions de l'Article 73 de la Charte relatif aux droits et aux intérêts des peuples non autonomes, ce sont les dispositions de la Charte qui doivent prévaloir.

25. La délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago ne voit pas comment l'organisation d'un référendum par la Puissance administrante pour connaître les vœux de la population de Gibraltar puisse être en contradiction avec les dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale. La résolution elle-même ne peut pas non plus limiter la puissance souveraine dans l'exercice de l'un quelconque des pouvoirs légitimes inhérents à la souveraineté, en particulier le pouvoir d'organiser un référendum à quelque fin que ce soit. Quoi qu'il en soit, il semble évident que le fait de consulter la population de Gibraltar pour con-naître son opinion sur la manière dont elle envisage ses propres intérêts est conforme aux dispositions de cette résolution et à l'esprit de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Au demeurant, cette consultation n'empêche pas la poursuite d'un dialogue et de négociations entre les deux parties, compte tenu des intérêts de la population.

26. Pour conclure, la délégation de la Trinité-et-Tobago fait sienne l'opinion selon laquelle la décolonisation ne peut pas simplement consister en un transfert d'une population, aussi réduite qu'elle soit, sous la domination d'une autre puissance, sans égard à la volonté et aux intérêts librement exprimés par la population elle-même.

27. Le PRESIDENT, appuyé par M. CASTALDO (Italie), parlant au nom des pays occidentaux, M. PEREZ GUERRERO (Venezuela), parlant au nom des pays d'Amérique latine, M. BENHIMA (Maroc), parlant au nom des Etats arabes, M. EL HADI (Soudan), parlant au nom du Soudan et du Togo, M. CHAKHOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques), parlant au nom des pays socialistes, et M. NKAMA (Zambie) souhaitent la bienvenue à la délégation de la République populaire du Yémen du Sud à la Commission.

28. M. DHALEE (Yémen du Sud) remercie la Commission de ses souhaits chaleureux de bienvenue.

29. Le PRESIDENT donne la parole au représentant de l'Espagne qui voudrait faire une brève déclaration concernant la Guinée équatoriale.

30. Selon M. DE PINIES (Espagne), il ne fait pas de doute que le peuple de la Guinée équatoriale avance vers l'accomplissement de sa destinée historique. La délégation espagnole tient à donner à la Commission l'assurance que le Gouvernement espagnol est prêt à organiser un référendum lors duquel on demanderait à la population du territoire de donner son opinion sur le souhait exprimé à la Conférence constitutionnelle tendant à ce que le territoire accède à l'indépendance avant le 15 juillet 1968. Si le peuple de la Guinée équatoriale décide de faire siens les vœux des représentants à la Conférence constitutionnelle, le Gouvernement espagnol lui accordera son indépendance sans tarder, conformément à la promesse solennelle faite par le Chef de l'Etat espagnol.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément (suite) [A/6661, A/6662, A/6700/Rev.1, chap. VIII à XII et XIV à XXIII; A/6802, A/6845, A/6876, A/6882, A/C.4/L.876 et Add.1 à 6, A/C.4/L.877, A/C.4/L.884, A/C.4/L.887 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.888 à 890]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE ET EXAMEN DE PROJETS DE RÉSOLUTION (suite) [A/C.4/L.876 ET ADD.1 à 6, A/C.4/L.877, A/C.4/L.884]

1. M. ALLIMADI (Ouganda) se référant à la question de Gibraltar, rappelle que l'entente a toujours présidé aux travaux de la Quatrième Commission concernant ce territoire et souligne que cette entente est pour elle absolument essentielle si elle veut s'acquitter des responsabilités qui lui incombent en vertu de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. La délégation ougandaise, qui a toujours déploré toute tentative fait pour semer la discorde, s'est de tout temps efforcée de rallier à la cause de la décolonisation tous les Membres des Nations Unies, convaincue que de l'entente de tous dépend l'efficacité de l'action entreprise. Ainsi, dans la question de Gibraltar, c'est à une écrasante majorité que les Nations Unies, reconnaissant le caractère spécial du problème en cause, ont recommandé que les parties en présence, le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne, entament des négociations. Ce faisant, les Nations Unies se sont engagées dans une voie qui est la bonne et dont il est essentiel qu'elles ne s'écartent pas, en se laissant influencer par les événements survenus entretemps.

2. La Quatrième Commission ne doit en aucun cas revenir sur l'intention et le désir qu'elle a exprimés d'aider les deux pays à régler leur différend par voie de négociations et doit tout faire pour empêcher que le désaccord n'aille en s'amplifiant. M. Allimadi adresse un appel dans ce sens à tous les membres de la Commission, et cela, bien qu'il déplore que le Royaume-Uni, agissant au mépris des recommandations du Comité spécial, ait organisé à Gibraltar un référendum qui ne pouvait que nuire aux négociations et compromettre les efforts des deux pays pour régler leur différend, et bien qu'il juge déplacées et injustifiées les critiques qui ont été adressées au Comité spécial. Le Comité mérite au contraire d'être complimenté pour l'action qu'il mène en vue de la décolonisation. La Quatrième Commission aura fait œuvre constructive si elle parvient à élaborer une résolution pouvant rencontrer l'agrément de l'Espagne et du Royaume-Uni, c'est-à-dire si elle réussit à atténuer les divergences et à trouver un terrain d'entente. Sans doute cela serait-il possible si l'on omettait de la résolution qui sera adoptée toute mention du référendum, puisque c'est sur ce point que la Commission est divisée et que c'est là un des principaux éléments qui différencient l'un de l'autre les projets de résolution présentés l'un par le Royaume-Uni (A/C.4/L.877) et l'autre par l'Equateur au nom d'un groupe de pays (A/C.4/L.876 et Add.1 à 6). Une telle mesure ferait sans doute avancer les négociations et de ce fait rapprocherait les parties de la solution du problème qui les oppose.

3. La Commission est, toutefois, pour le moment saisie de trois projets de résolution; la délégation ougandaise, pour sa part, ne pourra pas voter pour celui du Royaume-Uni (A/C.4/L.877). Le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.876 et Add.1 à 6 lui semble pouvoir être accepté, mais elle éprouve quelques doutes concernant le paragraphe 2 du dispositif, où les auteurs déplorent que le référendum ait eu lieu et le déclarent contraire aux dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI) et de la résolution du 1er septembre 1967 du Comité spécial (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X, par. 215); elle aurait préféré que ce paragraphe rapporte l'opinion du Comité spécial en la matière. Quant au projet de résolution publié sous la cote A/C.4/L.884, qui ne mentionne pas le référendum, la délégation ougandaise le juge satisfaisant, encore qu'elle eût souhaité que le deuxième alinéa du préambule ne se borne pas à noter mais note "avec approbation" la résolution adoptée par le Comité spécial le 1er septembre.

4. M. LUARD (Royaume-Uni), qui prend la parole au sujet des petits territoires administrés par le Royaume-Uni, fait observer que dans la plupart de ceux qui relèvent encore de son pays des progrès importants ont été réalisés dans la voie de l'autonomie. Le processus de décolonisation dans les petits territoires insulaires est, comme on le sait, difficile étant donné que ces territoires ont des ressources limitées, qu'ils sont situés à l'écart des principales voies de communications et qu'il s'y pose des problèmes particuliers exigeant une attention spéciale. Il convient toutefois de signaler que deux territoires, comptant au total plus d'un million d'habitants, doivent devenir indépendants d'ici à la prochaine session de l'Assemblée générale.

5. Le Souaziland doit accéder à l'indépendance le 6 septembre 1968, comme en ont exprimé le désir les représentants élus de ce territoire, qui, depuis le mois d'avril 1967, a obtenu l'autonomie interne en même temps qu'il devenait Etat protégé. Des pourparlers sont en cours en ce qui concerne l'organisation d'une conférence relative à l'indépendance et il est probable que cette conférence se tiendra prochainement.

6. L'île Maurice, qui a une population de 750 000 habitants, doit accéder à l'indépendance le 12 mars 1968; cette décision a été prise à la suite de consultations entre le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et le Gouvernement mauricien, celui-ci en ayant fait la demande une fois élue la nouvelle Assemblée législative. A ce propos, M. Luard précise que les élections générales d'où est issue cette assemblée ont eu lieu en présence d'une équipe d'observateurs de pays du Commonwealth — Canada, Inde, Malte, Trinité-et-Tobago et Royaume-Uni — qui se sont accordés à reconnaître qu'elles s'étaient déroulées de façon irréprochable et que les résultats reflétaient les aspirations véritables du peuple mauricien.

7. Aux Seychelles, une nouvelle constitution va bientôt entrer en vigueur. Cette constitution prévoit la création d'un conseil de gouvernement unique composé de 12 à 15 membres qui assumeront à la fois des fonctions exécutives et législatives. Les élections à ce nouveau conseil, fondées sur le suffrage universel des adultes, ont eu lieu le 12 décembre. C'est là pour l'île un pas important dans la voie de l'autonomie interne.

8. Des progrès importants sur le plan constitutionnel ont été réalisés également à Sainte-Hélène. Le 1er janvier, l'ancien conseil consultatif a été remplacé par un conseil législatif composé de majorité de membres élus. Il a été créé au début de l'année des commissions du Conseil législatif au sein desquelles les membres exercent, outre leurs fonctions législatives, des fonctions ministérielles. Le Conseil exécutif a lui aussi été remanié de façon à comprendre parmi ses membres le Président des commissions du Conseil législatif, en remplacement de 6 membres qui autrefois étaient des fonctionnaires nommés. Les élections du nouveau Conseil législatif se feront sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes et auront lieu au début du mois de janvier 1968 au plus tard.

9. Des progrès ont également été réalisés dans les territoires du Pacifique. Le 1er avril est entrée en vigueur aux îles Salomon une nouvelle constitution qui prévoit, par le Conseil législatif, une augmentation sensible du nombre des représentants élus. La nouvelle constitution crée, par ailleurs, un conseil exécutif composé de 8 membres — 5 membres non fonctionnaires, au maximum, et pas plus de 4 membres fonctionnaires — qui doit jouer un rôle consultatif auprès du Haut Commissaire. La Constitution prévoyait des élections générales qui ont eu lieu en mai et en juin et qui, dans 13 districts électoraux, se sont faites sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes; dans un des districts périphériques éloignés, il a fallu organiser des élections au suffrage indirect — collèges électoraux — en raison des difficultés de transport et des difficultés d'ordre administratif.

10. Les îles Gilbert-et-Ellice ont également une nouvelle constitution. Précédemment, le pouvoir législatif était entièrement entre les mains du Commissaire résident, lequel nommait les membres du Conseil exécutif et du Conseil consultatif. La nouvelle constitution, adoptée en août, prévoit l'institution de deux nouveaux organes: d'une part, le Conseil de gouvernement, qui sera un organe législatif composé de 5 membres fonctionnaires, dont le Commissaire résident, et de 5 membres élus et qui assistera le Commissaire résident de ses avis sur les questions relevant du pouvoir exécutif; d'autre part, la Chambre des représentants, qui doit comprendre 30 membres au maximum, dont 23 élus au suffrage universel des adultes et qui donnera des avis au Conseil de gouvernement sur la législation envisagée et sur toutes autres questions qu'il lui soumettra ou qui seront soulevées par des membres de la Chambre des représentants. En outre, la Chambre des représentants doit nommer parmi ses propres membres les 5 membres non fonctionnaires du Conseil de gouvernement. Les élections à la nouvelle chambre des représentants ont eu lieu en octobre.

11. Dans le condominium franco-britannique des Nouvelles-Hébrides, les deux puissances administrantes poursuivent leurs efforts communs pour faire progresser le territoire sur le plan économique et social. La question du développement des Nouvelles-Hébrides a fait et continue de faire l'objet d'entretiens ministériels qui commencent à porter leurs fruits. Même dans la minuscule île de Pitcairn, qui a 88 habitants, des changements appréciables sont intervenus dans le système d'administration du territoire dont les habitants s'administrent eux-mêmes.

12. Dans les îles Vierges britanniques, des progrès très sensibles ont été réalisés au cours de l'année écoulée. La nouvelle constitution est entrée en vigueur il y a 6 mois. Le nouveau conseil législatif se compose de 7 membres élus; il ne comprend que deux membres fonctionnaires, à savoir l'Attorney général et le Secrétaire aux finances, et un membre nommé par l'administrateur après consultation avec le Ministre principal. Les 7 membres élus représentent 7 circonscriptions qui sont à peu près égales par le nombre de leurs habitants et dont les limites ont été établies par un commissaire venant de l'extérieur du territoire. A la suite des élections qui ont eu lieu en avril, 4 sièges sont allés au United Party, 2 au Democratic Party et 1 au People's Own Party. En vertu des nouvelles dispositions, le Conseil exécutif comprend 3 ministres — dont le Ministre principal — qui sont nommés parmi les membres élus du Conseil législatif. Le Conseil exécutif ne comprend que 2 membres d'office, à savoir l'Attorney général et le Secrétaire aux finances.

13. A Montserrat, la nouvelle constitution a créé un Conseil exécutif, ayant à sa tête le Ministre principal, et un conseil législatif composé de 7 membres élus, de 2 membres d'office et de 1 membre nommé. Bien que les élections qui se sont déroulées l'année précédente n'aient pas porté sur des questions d'ordre constitutionnel, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni est néanmoins disposé à réunir une conférence pour examiner les réformes d'ordre constitutionnel qu'il y aurait lieu d'apporter dans le territoire, cela aussitôt que les partis politiques en manifesteront le désir.

14. Dans les îles Caïmanes, après des consultations détaillées entre le corps électoral et les membres élus du corps législatif, il est apparu que, pour le moment, la population du territoire ne souhaitait pas de changements importants sur le plan constitutionnel.

15. Aux Bermudes, des progrès extrêmement importants sur les plans politique et constitutionnel ont été enregistrés au cours de l'année écoulée. Ce territoire, qui est autonome depuis déjà longtemps, va bientôt voir entrer en vigueur sa nouvelle constitution écrite. Il doit être créé une chambre haute, le Conseil législatif, composé d'une majorité de membres élus, et une chambre basse, une chambre d'assemblée qui comprendra 40 membres élus au suffrage universel des adultes. Le Conseil législatif sera doté de pouvoirs limités s'apparentant à ceux de la Chambre des lords britanniques. Une fois que la Chambre d'assemblée sera élue, un nouveau Conseil exécutif, comprenant des membres des deux chambres, sera désigné compte tenu de l'avis du représentant de la Chambre d'assemblée qui aura la confiance de ses collègues. Aux termes de la Constitution, le Gouvernement doit demander l'avis du Conseil exécutif pour toutes questions, à l'exception de celles qui intéressent les affaires extérieures, la défense, la sécurité intérieure et la police. La nouvelle constitution comporte également des dispositions garantissant les libertés et droits fondamentaux et garantit l'indépendance du pouvoir judiciaire et de la fonction publique.

16. Aux Bahamas, des élections générales ont eu lieu pour la première fois sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes. Les élections avaient pour but de pourvoir de nouveaux sièges à la Chambre d'assemblée, dont la composition a été élargie. Ces élections ont donné la majorité au parti libéral, de tendance progressiste, qui a formé le gouvernement.

17. En ce qui concerne des établissements de jeu aux Bahamas, question qui a été soulevée par le Comité spécial, le représentant du Royaume-Uni précise que le mois précédent la Commission d'enquête nommée par le nouveau gouvernement des Bahamas a présenté son rapport à ce dernier qui a annoncé qu'il allait étudier les recommandations formulées par la commission afin de pouvoir préciser à l'intention du parlement local les dispositions qu'il envisagerait de prendre.

18. Au sujet des îles Falkland, qui rentrent dans une catégorie du fait qu'elles font l'objet d'un différend entre l'Argentine et le Royaume-Uni, les gouvernements de ces deux pays adresseront prochainement au Secrétaire général des rapports d'activités concer-nant l'état actuel des pourparlers, qui seront distribués comme documents de la Quatrième Commission^{1/}. Les deux gouvernements informeront en temps voulu les Nations Unies des résultats de leurs entretiens.

19. En ce qui concerne la question du Honduras britannique, les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et du Guatemala ont d'un commun accord, comme la Commission le sait, décidé de recourir à la médiation, laquelle est en cours à l'heure qu'il est.

20. M. McDOWELL (Nouvelle-Zélande) constate que la Commission a débattu sept jours de suite d'un territoire aussi peu étendu que Gibraltar, comptant 28 000 habitants et dépourvu de ressources naturelles d'importance. Sans vouloir critiquer l'ordre de priorité de la Commission, il estime de son devoir de faire observer que l'examen du cas du Papua et de la Nouvelle-Guinée, territoire étendu qui compte 2 250 000 habitants et qui se heurte à des problèmes redoutables, sera, de ce fait, malheureusement abrégé et moins approfondi.

21. Toutefois, l'intérêt profond que suscite en Espagne et au Royaume-Uni, sans compter à Gibraltar, la question de l'avenir du Rocher et de ses habitants est compréhensible.

22. La délégation néo-zélandaise reconnaît que, si Gibraltar était séparé de façon permanente de l'arrière-pays placé sous souveraineté espagnole, il aurait à faire face à des problèmes qui menaceraient à la longue sa viabilité politique et économique. Elle estime toutefois que le différend actuel a plutôt gêné l'examen réfléchi de la question de la viabilité et de la façon de régler cette question.

23. La délégation néo-zélandaise a toujours pensé que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux visait avant tout à aider la population même d'un territoire, et non son sol inerte, à se libérer d'une domination étrangère non acceptée. Si la population de Gibraltar voulait rompre tous les liens qui l'unissent au Royaume-Uni et n'était pas en mesure de le faire, cette situation exigerait sûrement que l'on invoque fermement le principe majeur de la Déclaration. Or, cette population a fait savoir, tant à l'ONU par l'intermédiaire de ses représentants élus, qu'à l'occasion du référendum du 10 septembre, ce qu'elle souhaitait.

24. La délégation néo-zélandaise s'élève contre l'affirmation que contient l'un des projets de résolution, selon laquelle il est inadmissible de consulter la population d'un territoire colonial sur ce qu'elle juge être ses intérêts. Elle ne peut accepter, non plus, que l'on dise que le référendum ne s'est pas déroulé dans une atmosphère d'impartialité, alors que des observateurs venus de quatre pays du Commonwealth ont surveillé les opérations. On ne saurait douter des sentiments actuels des habitants de Gibraltar.

25. On a dit qu'en adoptant une résolution proposant de tenir compte des aspirations de la population, la Commission agirait de manière contraire à ce qu'avait décidé le Comité spécial. Or, la situation actuelle est différente de celle dont était saisi le Comité spécial puisque les deux Etats Membres intéressés ont accepté de reprendre les négociations. La Commission devrait donc éviter, en se prononçant manifestement pour l'une des parties, de risquer de compromettre des négociations pour lesquelles une date a été fixée.

^{1/} Distribués ultérieurement sous les cotes A/C.4/703 et A/C.4/704.

26. Quant au choix que viennent de faire les habitants de Gibraltar, il est certain qu'il n'affecte en rien leur droit de modifier ultérieurement ce statut en demandant leur rattachement à l'Espagne. Dans la lettre qu'il a adressée au Secrétaire général le 13 juin 1967 (voir A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X, annexe 1, par. 15), le Gouvernement britannique a expressément indiqué que la population de Gibraltar conserverait ce droit-là. Cet engagement pris par le Royaume-Uni devrait permettre de trouver une solution au différend actuel.

27. Ce n'est pas en s'aliénant les sympathies des habitants de Gibraltar que l'Espagne peut espérer un jour régner sur le territoire. Telle n'a sans doute pas été l'intention, mais cela a sûrement été le résultat — ainsi que les pétitions des représentants élus du peuple en ont témoigné — de ce que l'Espagne a dit et fait ces dernières années. En effet, les attaques dont sont l'objet leurs représentants librement élus et les tentatives faites pour rompre les communications et les relations commerciales entre Gibraltar et l'Espagne n'ont pu que provoquer l'hostilité des habitants du territoire. Une attitude différente de la part de l'Espagne serait sans aucun doute plus propice à la réconciliation et à un règlement qui aurait l'approbation unanime de la communauté internationale.

28. La délégation néo-zélandaise votera sur les projets de résolution présentés conformément aux considérations qu'elle vient d'exposer. Elle fait des réserves en ce qui concerne certains aspects du projet de résolution de compromis, mais, étant donné qu'il est le plus équilibré, le plus constructif et le plus susceptible d'aboutir à un règlement à l'amiable, elle votera en faveur de ce texte.

29. Se référant à un échange ayant eu lieu précédemment entre la délégation espagnole et la délégation néo-zélandaise, M. McDowell déclare avoir consulté l'ouvrage intitulé Jane's Fighting Ships, qui contient des renseignements sur les navires des forces navales de tous les pays, ouvrage qu'il recommande à la délégation espagnole. Il confirme que les quatre unités navales qui, d'après le représentant de l'Espagne, se seraient trouvées à Gibraltar au moment du référendum ne sont pas néo-zélandaises. La délégation espagnole aurait pu se donner elle-même la peine de vérifier.

30. M PEREZ GUERRERO (Venezuela) déclare que la position de sa délégation sur le problème de Gibraltar, exposée à différentes occasions, demeure inchangée. Au Comité spécial, la délégation vénézuélienne s'est élevée contre la façon de procéder du Royaume-Uni, le 10 septembre 1967. On ne peut certes admettre que les habitants d'un territoire utilisé à des fins militaires se considèrent comme les habitants autochtones au sens où on l'entend dans les autres territoires coloniaux.

31. Le consensus adopté par le Comité spécial le 16 octobre 1964^{2/} et les résolutions postérieures de l'Assemblée et du Comité spécial ont fait clairement ressortir que la seule façon de régler ce problème colonial est de rendre le territoire à la souveraineté espagnole. Le principe de l'intégrité territoriale consacré par la Charte des Nations Unies et le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) s'applique bien à Gibraltar. Les intérêts des habitants de ce territoire doivent être respectés. Toutefois, s'il est normal qu'on en tienne compte, on ne peut admettre que ce principe, interprété par certains de façon arbitraire, puisse empêcher l'application du principe de l'intégrité territoriale.

32. La délégation vénézuélienne a voté pour la résolution du Comité spécial du 1er septembre 1967 déclarant que le référendum était contraire aux dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI). L'Assemblée générale a, en effet, recommandé de procéder à la décolonisation de Gibraltar en consultation avec le Gouvernement espagnol et "en prenant en considération les intérêts des habitants", établissant ainsi une distinction entre ces habitants et ceux des autres territoires coloniaux.

33. Le Venezuela, comme beaucoup d'autres Etats Membres, défend et défendra à tout moment cette position de principe jusqu'à ce que la souveraineté espagnole s'exerce sur Gibraltar. Il espère que Gibraltar fera à nouveau rapidement partie du territoire espagnol dont il n'aurait jamais dû être séparé.

34. M. BISWAS (Pakistan) déclare que son pays a toujours défendu la cause des peuples qui luttent pour l'indépendance et appuyé les efforts de l'ONU visant à accélérer la décolonisation.

35. Au cours de l'examen de la question de la Côte française des Somalis en 1966 (1664ème séance), M. Biswas s'était félicité de la décision du Gouvernement français d'organiser un référendum devant permettre à la population de décider librement de son avenir politique. En louant la décision de la Puissance administrante, la délégation pakistanaise avait souligné qu'il serait important que l'ONU soit présente dans le territoire avant et pendant le référendum afin d'en garantir l'impartialité. Du reste, lorsqu'a lieu une consultation sous forme de référendum ou d'élections, l'Organisation prie toujours la Puissance administrante intéressée de permettre à une délégation de l'ONU de se rendre dans le territoire pour surveiller le déroulement des opérations. L'ONU a toujours recommandé l'application de cette procédure, non pas que les Etats Membres doutent de la bonne foi de la Puissance administrante ou du caractère équitable de la consultation, mais parce qu'ils estiment que la présence de l'ONU pour superviser ces consultations permet normalement d'éviter que l'on conteste la validité des résultats.

36. Aux termes du paragraphe 4 du dispositif de la résolution 2228 (XXI), la Puissance administrante était priée de prendre, en consultation avec le Secrétaire général, les mesures nécessaires en vue d'une présence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies avant le référendum et d'une surveillance de l'Organisation au cours de celui-ci. Par le paragraphe 5 du dispositif de ladite résolution, le Secrétaire général était prié de transmettre le texte de la résolution à la Puissance administrante et de faire rapport sur la suite qui y serait donnée au Comité spécial. Or, la Puissance administrante n'a pas répondu à la communication que lui a adressée le Secrétaire général et n'a pris aucune mesure pour que l'ONU puisse être présente lors du référendum du 19 mars 1967. Il en résulte que l'objectivité du référendum est mise en doute par certains.

37. La délégation pakistanaise est convaincue que le peuple français et son gouvernement sont entièrement acquis à l'idée de la décolonisation. Il aurait donc été opportun que le Gouvernement français consulte le peuple de la Côte française des Somalis, en coopération avec l'ONU, conformément aux dispositions de la résolution 2228 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale.

38. C'est dans un esprit constructif et amical, conforme aux résolutions adoptées par l'ONU sur la question de la Côte française des Somalis, que la délégation pakistanaise fait ces observations. Il faut espérer que la France, fidèle à ses traditions, s'acquittera de ses obligations de puissance administrante et facilitera l'accession rapide du territoire à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance.

39. M. BERRO (Uruguay) dit que sa délégation a décidé d'être un des auteurs de l'amendement contenu dans le document A/C.4/L.887 et Add.1. Il tient à préciser qu'elle a pris cette décision de manière indépendante et qu'elle n'a voulu, en la prenant, servir les intérêts de personne, ni nuire aux intérêts de quiconque. L'incident déplorable auquel a donné lieu quelques jours auparavant le projet présenté par un groupe nombreux de représentatif d'Etats latino-américains lui donne l'occasion de préciser la position de son pays en matière de décolonisation, tant à la Quatrième Commission que dans tous les autres organes des Nations Unies. Cette position correspond d'ailleurs à la tradition juridique claire, nette et inébranlable qui, au-delà des intérêts, des considérations d'opportunité, des inimitiés et des ambitions, a toujours guidé l'Uruguay dans les diverses instances de l'organisation mondiale, ainsi que dans l'organe régional dont il fait partie.

40. Lorsqu'il défend une thèse, l'Uruguay ne le fait ni pour attaquer ni pour appuyer la position d'une puissance quelconque. Il s'efforce simplement de préconiser l'application de règles de droit et de principes de justice, sans pour autant méconnaître les réalités politiques et les circonstances de fait qui sont compatibles avec ces règles et ces principes, essayant ainsi de concilier la pensée juridique théorique et la spéculation intellectuelle avec les intérêts de la paix mondiale et de la sécurité collective. L'Uruguay n'est mû par aucun intérêt, direct ou indirect, d'ordre économique, politique, racial ou autre, dans cette trame embrouillée d'ambitions, de vanités nationales, d'hégémonies financières, de luttes raciales, ainsi que d'aspirations légitimes à l'indépendance, à la liberté, à l'autonomie, à l'égalité de droits, etc., que constitue le vaste et complexe problème d'un colonialisme désuet dont l'arrêt de mort est déjà signé et d'une décolonisation qu'anime l'impulsion vigoureuse et irrésistible de tous les grands mouvements historiques qui ont changé le cours et le destin de l'humanité.

41. Par conséquent, soutenir les principes de la Charte ainsi que la nette interprétation de ces principes que contient la résolution 1514 (XV) n'est pas plaider en faveur d'un territoire déterminé, à l'encontre de la puissance coloniale qui l'administre encore. C'est défendre l'idéal de la liberté et appliquer les principes de droit nouveau que connaît le monde. Alors que l'humanité a prononcé son verdict, il est inutile de se cramponner aux vieilles institutions et aux concepts caducs.

42. La vague des conceptions humaines modernes fondée sur la libération de l'homme est plus forte que la furie d'une mer démontée. Pour confirmer cette réalité, M. Berro rappelle la déclaration faite à ce sujet par son prédécesseur, l'ambassadeur C. M. Velázquez, dans son opuscule intitulé Las Naciones Unidas y la descolonización, publié à Montevideo en 1964:

"Il est peut-être exagéré de dire que les grands empires coloniaux ont été perdus à New York (Raymond Aron, Paix et guerre entre les nations, Paris, 1962, p. 547), mais aucun observateur impartial ne saurait manquer de reconnaître le rôle décisif que joue l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation. Non seulement cette organisation a contribué à accélérer un processus qui a commencé à la fin de la deuxième guerre mondiale et représente pour beaucoup une tendance irréversible de notre temps mais, au stade actuel, il paraît même difficile d'imaginer que les situations de type colonial qui existent encore puissent résister à la pression considérable et double de l'opinion publique mondiale, que l'ONU exprime, et de l'action souvent intelligemment concertée de ses principaux organes."

43. Pour montrer que son pays n'improvise pas des opinions à l'occasion de chaque cas concret (obéissant à des intérêts, sympathies ou animosités qu'il n'a pas), M. Berro tient à rappeler que, le 21 juin 1966, lors de l'examen au Conseil de sécurité, à sa 1287ème séance, de la demande d'admission de la Guyane, il a déclaré notamment:

"Il est évident qu'en adoptant la résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960 l'Assemblée générale a permis un bouleversement géographique du monde en transformant les principes juridiques, politiques et économiques qui étaient à la base de l'équilibre de l'humanité pour faire naître subitement des dizaines et des dizaines de pays indépendants là où existaient précédemment des territoires asservis par le colonialisme.

"Ces remarques ne reflètent évidemment aucune intention hostile ou outrageante envers les puissances administrantes. Lorsque la civilisation avance, en détruisant et en créant, il n'est pas offensant de constater l'œuvre du progrès en même temps que la disparition de certaines idées et de certaines réalités après qu'ait été accomplie en son temps la mission qui correspond à une époque et à une idéologie données.

"A propos de la résolution mentionnée ci-dessus, M. Velázquez fait observer ce qui suit: "... bien que nous n'ayons pas voulu sortir du domaine de l'exégèse juridique, nous ne pouvons manquer de reconnaître qu'en tant que document politique la Déclaration constitue une innovation radicale tant du point de vue des méthodes que de celui des objectifs. Comme cela arrive dans beaucoup de situations où l'histoire change de cap, les auteurs de cette résolution eux-mêmes n'ont pas soupçonné l'énorme force explosive qu'elle avait. Nous avons vu que cette déclaration a déjà porté ses fruits, et, sans aucun doute, nous en verrons encore les résultats dans un avenir relativement proche. On peut se demander si la Déclaration est strictement conforme à la Charte, mais il semble difficile de nier que, pour le moins, elle est en harmonie avec sa philosophie politique. Même si elle a été plus loin que la lettre de la Charte, elle permet néanmoins, à celle-ci, d'atteindre les fins qui, en définitive, sont sa raison d'être. Les pays qui ont voté pour la Déclaration ont certainement eu raison, si tant est que la lettre tue et que l'esprit vivifie ^{3/}."

M. Berro répète ensuite ce qu'il avait alors ajouté:

"Je me range, pour ma part, parmi ceux qui estiment que la lettre et l'esprit s'identifient et se complètent.

"Cependant, en dehors de ces considérations de caractère juridique qui sont déjà dépassées par les événements historiques, il convient de signaler que la Déclaration a, au premier chef, et de manière directe, servi les intérêts des territoires coloniaux d'Afrique et d'Asie, dont l'entrée en masse à l'Organisation des Nations Unies a été le phénomène international le plus significatif de ces dernières années.

"Ma délégation a suivi cet admirable mouvement vers l'indépendance en s'inspirant, non pas d'intérêts quelconques, mais uniquement d'idées, de principes et d'une affinité dont l'origine profonde se trouve peut-être dans les événements qui ont marqué la lutte que nous avons menée il y a un siècle et demi pour devenir, aux yeux du monde, un peuple libre et souverain, maître et seigneur de son destin ^{4/}."

44. Telle a toujours été la ligne de conduite de l'Uruguay. S'il a parfois refusé certaines solutions parce qu'il les considérait incompatibles avec sa tradition juridique, il n'a jamais abdiqué le principe cardinal de la décolonisation. Il n'a jamais été non plus hostile aux puissances administrantes. Il a toujours été guidé par des idées et des principes, s'efforçant de marquer sa position du sceau de l'objectivité et du rationalisme.

45. Etant donné que l'Uruguay a intimé avec tant de force son adhésion inébranlable aux solutions juridiques, on pourrait lui demander pourquoi il n'a pas accepté la proposition britannique tendant à soumettre le différend concernant Gibraltar à la Cour internationale de Justice. Bien qu'une explication lui paraisse inutile, elle donnera à la délégation uruguayenne l'occasion de répondre à une question qui ne lui a pas été posée, ce qui lui permettra, en échange, de présenter avec une netteté absolue sa thèse sur le fond du problème à l'étude.

46. En premier lieu, pour qu'une affaire puisse être soumise à l'organe judiciaire principal des Nations Unies, il faut non seulement que le différend ait un caractère essentiellement juridique, mais aussi que les parties litigantes soient d'accord pour en saisir la Cour (Article 36 du Chapitre II du Statut de la Cour internationale de Justice, relatif à la compétence de la Cour). En conséquence, l'opinion de l'Uruguay ou celle du Comité spécial n'a aucun poids si les deux parties ne tombent pas, mutuellement, d'accord pour soumettre l'affaire à la juridiction de la Cour.

47. En deuxième lieu, les aspects historiques, politiques, géopolitiques, économiques, démographiques, sociaux, etc., de la question de Gibraltar dépassent l'horizon explicitement juridique de La Haye, et la Cour ne peut donc étudier celle-ci à fond et prendre une décision adéquate à son sujet.

48. En troisième lieu, l'arrêt regrettable rendu par la Cour dans l'affaire du Sud-Ouest africain a laissé un mauvais souvenir; l'Uruguay est le premier à le déplorer, mais il n'est pas en son pouvoir de trouver le moyen de rendre à la justice internationale le prestige dont elle a besoin et le crédit qu'elle a perdu. Le livre publié récemment à Genève par la Commission internationale de juristes sous le titre Le Sud-Ouest africain et l'arrêt de la Cour révèle bien des dessous de cet important procès qui a ému les Nations Unies au cours de la vingt et unième session de l'Assemblée générale et de la cinquième session extraordinaire d'avril 1967. Les opinions de plusieurs des juges qui ont soutenu la bonne thèse sont maintenant connues et le partage égal des voix au sein de la Cour (il convient de rappeler que l'arrêt a été rendu sur la base d'une majorité statutaire, grâce à la voix prépondérante dont dispose le Président en cas de partage des voix) a démontré qu'elle avait l'appui juridique, politique et moral non seulement des experts de droit international, mais aussi de l'opinion publique mondiale, cette chose invertébrée et anonyme qui unit dans leur pensée et dans leur sentiment les hommes de toutes les races et de toutes les convictions. Il suffit de citer quelques-unes des justifications de vote, étant donné que leur similitude avec les autres en rend la lecture inutile. Le juge Jessup a dit:

"... le défendeur a ... [fait] valoir qu'il avait, eu égard au Sud-Ouest africain, un titre fondé sur la conquête. Le 27 mai 1965, le Conseil du défendeur a déclaré (C.R. 65/39, p. 37): "Le défendeur prétend que la nature juridique de son droit est celle qui est reconnue en droit international comme découlant d'une conquête militaire." Il est douteux que le défendeur ait attaché beaucoup de prix à cet argument qui est, de toute manière, dénué de tout fondement juridique.

"C'est une banalité de dire que le droit international ne reconnaît pas de titre fondé sur la conquête militaire. Il suffira de citer un passage de l'ouvrage Oppenheim (par Lauterpacht, 8ème éd., vol. I, p. 567) ^{5/}."

^{3/} Sud-Ouest africain, deuxième phase, arrêt C.I.J., Recueil 1966, p. 418.

^{1/} Documents officiels du Conseil de sécurité, vingt et unième année, 127ème séance, par. 43 à 45.

^{4/} Ibid., par. 45 à 47.

49. M. Berro rappelle qu'il a déjà cité l'opinion du professeur de Cambridge dans le long exposé qu'il a fait le 28 août 1967 (A/AC.109/SR.546).

50. Le juge Padilla Nervo a souligné en justifiant son vote:

"... la communauté internationale a adopté d'importants instruments dont la Cour doit naturellement tenir compte, comme la Charte des Nations Unies, la Constitution de l'Organisation internationale du Travail, la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, la Déclaration sur l'élimination de toutes les formes de discrimination raciale, ainsi que de nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité, tous instruments qui ont une importance en l'espèce pour l'interprétation et l'application des dispositions du mandat...

"La Cour doit tenir compte de tout cela pour déterminer s'il y a eu violation du droit international ou de l'obligation imposée au défendeur par le Mandat telle que la Cour l'interprète.

"Il est des cas où, en l'absence de règles coutumières, il est permis d'appliquer des règles et des "standards" découlant de certains principes juridiques non contestés. Les principes formulés dans la Charte des Nations Unies ont indiscutablement ce caractère.

"Les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale résultent de la reconnaissance universelle des principes consacrés par la Charte et de la nécessité d'ordre international de veiller à ce que ces principes soient dûment appliqués, comme ils sont censés l'être dans la pratique des Etats^{6/}."

51. De son côté, le juge Azevedo a dit: "L'Assemblée générale a conservé un droit de surveillance sur toutes les questions concernant les Nations Unies." On a également reconnu que:

"La Cour doit coopérer en vue de réaliser les buts de l'Organisation et s'efforcer de donner effet aux décisions des autres principaux organes et de ne pas aboutir à des résultats qui les rendraient inefficaces^{7/}."

52. Le juge Padilla Nervo a ajouté ensuite, se référant sub lite, qu'il s'agissait d'"un fait sociologique qui doit être évalué et interprété d'après les principes, les règles et les "standards" acceptés à l'heure actuelle par l'écrasante majorité des Etats Membres des Nations Unies, tels qu'ils n'ont cessé d'être énoncés au cours de nombreuses années dans les résolutions et les déclarations pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale et d'autres organes de la communauté internationale, conformément aux dispositions conventionnelles obligatoires de la Charte"^{8/}.

53. On peut constater que, selon d'éminents internationalistes, juges à la Cour de Justice, dont les vues coïncident avec celles des savants professeurs de Cambridge, Oppenheim et Lauterpacht, le droit international contemporain ne reconnaît aucun titre fondé sur la conquête militaire, une dérogation implicite ou tacite — mais qui n'en est pas moins efficace qu'une dérogation expresse — ayant été faite en ce qui concerne tous les traités coloniaux, qui, comme celui d'Utrecht, ont servi à l'époque à valider ou à légitimer les actes de guerre au moyen desquels s'était effectuée la prise de possession de terres d'autrui.

54. Dans sa déclaration du 28 août, M. Berro s'est montré très explicite sur ce point. Aux termes du Pacte de la Société des Nations (Articles 10 à 15), comme à ceux du Pacte Briand-Kellogg du 27 août 1928, de la Charte des Nations Unies et du Traité général de renonciation à la guerre, tous les traités qui ont servi à justifier, en les recouvrant d'une apparence juridique, les conquêtes territoriales arrachées par la force, sont sans valeur à la lumière du nouveau droit international, qui a condamné la guerre en la déclarant illégale et par conséquent incapable de créer aucun titre qui puisse être invoqué valablement, en droit, pour conserver des terres obtenues en perpétrant des actes illégaux et par conséquent nuls et nonavenus. Telle est l'opinion des grands juristes de réputation mondiale qui sont les lumières des universités britanniques. Telle est l'opinion des éminents spécialistes du droit international que sont les membres de la Cour de justice de la Haye, telles est l'opinion de la communauté internationale consacrée par la Charte des Nations Unies. Telle est l'opinion soutenue par l'Organisation des Etats américains dont le statut constitue un imposant corps de doctrines juridiques. M. Berro doit rappeler enfin, pour contraster avec la position actuelle du Gouvernement britannique sur la question de Gibraltar, que, devant les revendications des territoires africains et asiatiques, les traités coloniaux qui dans chaque cas avaient servi à légitimer la conquête armée par laquelle avaient été établis des liens de subordination entre l'Empire britannique et les colonies, n'ont constitué aucun obstacle au processus de décolonisation de ces territoires. On a appliqué pleinement et sans heurt la Charte des Nations Unies interprétée à la lumière de l'instrument adopté par l'Assemblée générale le 14 décembre 1960. Déjà, avant la proclamation de la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV), plusieurs ex-colonies britanniques avaient accédé à l'indépendance sous l'influence de la philosophie politique et de la nouvelle conception du droit international qui s'étaient concrétisées à San Francisco sans qu'il vienne à l'idée de personne de soumettre à la Cour internationale de Justice la question de la validité des traités consacrant les systèmes, désormais universellement répudiés, du colonialisme et de la guerre.

55. En résumé: a) l'instrument juridique applicable à Gibraltar est la Charte des Nations Unies; b) l'Assemblée générale est le seul organe compétent pour adopter des résolutions tendant à la décolonisation de ce territoire; c) la résolution 1514 (XV) a prévu aux paragraphes 6 et 7 la façon de restituer la souveraineté sur le territoire occupé à son titulaire légitime; d) la résolution 2231 (XXI) adoptée à la 1500^{ème} séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale par 101 voix, y compris celles du Royaume-Uni et de l'Espagne, sans aucune opposition, a défini la façon de procéder à la décolonisation de Gibraltar. Il n'y est question ni de la Cour internationale de Justice ni d'un plébiscite. Il s'agit uniquement de négociations bilatérales entre la Puissance administrante et les titulaires de la souveraineté sur le territoire occupé, compte dûment tenu des "intérêts des habitants". "Telle a été la décision de la communauté internationale, et elle a été acceptée par les deux parties; e) les considérations juridiques liées à l'interprétation de l'anachronique et poudreux Traité d'Utrecht n'a rien à voir avec le nouveau droit applicable à la décolonisation de Gibraltar; f) en admettant que l'acceptation par le Royaume-Uni du système prévu par la résolution 2231 (XXI), incompatible avec la soumission de l'affaire à la Cour internationale (étrangère à la volonté manifeste de l'Assemblée) ne soit pas suffisante et définitive, il faudrait, conformément aux enseignements des plus renommés spécialistes britanniques des traités, examiner pourquoi, dans le seul cas de Gibraltar, il ne faudrait pas appliquer les normes et principes qui ont été admis et demeurent admis pour les autres colonies britanniques. M. Berro hésite à penser que le Royaume-Uni veuille appliquer un traitement discriminatoire à l'Espagne.

56. Il convient d'écarter, dès le début, toute intervention de la Cour internationale de Justice dans cette affaire coloniale, dont les aspects politiques, juridiques, économiques, géographiques, géopolitiques, démographiques, sociaux, religieux, etc., peuvent et doivent être réglés par les organes des Nations Unies conformément aux dispositions de la Charte et des résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale. S'écarter de cette voie naturelle serait une grave erreur et constituerait un très fâcheux précédent.

57. Ce point établi, M. Berro doit revenir à l'étude de cette colonie britannique sur le sol espagnol, qui constitue le dernier vestige d'un système vraiment incompatible avec la civilisation européenne et avec l'histoire et la culture des deux pays engagés dans cette douloureuse et interminable querelle.

58. M. Berro ne va pas répéter les arguments qu'il a exposés au Comité spécial (A/AC.109/SR.546) dans sa déclaration sur le plébiscite britannique. Il rappellera seulement que, dans cette analyse détaillée du référendum organisé unilatéralement par le Royaume-Uni sans consulter l'Espagne ainsi que l'exigeait la résolution 2231 (XXI) et sans l'intervention des Nations Unies exigée par la résolution 1514 (XV), il avait distingué trois parties: a) le référendum à la lumière du Traité d'Utrecht; b) le référendum à la lumière de la résolution 1514 (XV), et c) le référendum à la lumière de la résolution 2231 (XXI). M. Berro se contentera de résumer chacun de ces points.

59. En ce qui concerne le Traité d'Utrecht, il convient de souligner que, tout d'abord, le roi d'Espagne a préservé un principe essentiel lié à la souveraineté sur le territoire cédé. En effet, l'article X prévoit "que ladite propriété [est] cédée à la Grande-Bretagne sans aucune juridiction territoriale, et sans aucune communication ouverte par terre, avec les pays d'alentour". Et un autre paragraphe de l'article cité ajoute:

"Et au cas, que la Couronne de la Grande-Bretagne jugeât à propos de donner, de vendre ou d'aliéner en aucune manière, la propriété de ladite ville de Gibraltar, on a de plus, arrêté et conclu, que la préférence en serait donnée à la Couronne d'Espagne, exclusivement à qui que ce puisse être."

60. Ces stipulations contractuelles enlèvent à la cession son caractère absolu en ce qu'elles établissent que la propriété est cédée "sans aucune juridiction territoriale" et que l'Espagne maintient son droit de récupérer les biens cédés par préférence au cas où la Grande-Bretagne chercherait à s'en dessaisir de quelque manière que ce soit.

61. Il y a en outre d'autres limitations fondées sur des raisons militaires qui contribuent à ôter à ce traité anachronique la valeur et la portée qu'on a prétendu lui donner. Et même en admettant qu'il soit applicable à la lumière du droit international contemporain, il n'en reste pas moins que le Royaume-Uni ne peut changer le statut de Gibraltar unilatéralement, de sa seule volonté, puisque, aux termes de l'article X, avant de "donner, de vendre ou d'aliéner en aucune manière", les biens visés par ce Traité, il faut faire jouer, ainsi qu'il est prévu, l'option reconnue en faveur de l'Espagne en ce qui concerne son droit de récupérer le territoire qui lui a été arraché par la force en 1704.

62. Mais on a déjà vu que la thèse dominante du droit international moderne, sans parler des normes relatives à la décolonisation définies par les Nations Unies, est radicalement contraire aux interprétations périmées des principes du XVIII^{ème} siècle qui ont inspiré le Traité d'Utrecht.

63. Ce ne sont que les prétentions vétustes et les antiques égoïsmes datant de 260 années qui doivent déterminer l'interprétation d'instruments juridiques élaborés en cette lointaine époque toute pleine de préjugés, de rancœurs et d'obscurités alliances où les luttes armées servaient d'instruments légitimes dans les relations entre Etats et où la paix était considérée comme une simple trêve entre deux guerres. Telle est l'opinion d'Oppenheim et de Lauterpacht, illustres professeurs de Cambridge.

64. Il est évident que dans le cas de Gibraltar il ne convient d'invoquer aucun titre en faveur du démembrement territorial de l'Espagne en se fondant sur la conquête par la violence de 1704 et sur le traité qui a cherché à la confirmer en 1713.

65. Enfin, il y a l'invalidité du référendum à la lumière du Traité, et notamment de l'article X qui prévoit une option préférentielle en faveur de l'Espagne pour la récupération du territoire, qui enlève toute valeur juridique et pratique à un référendum organisé pour les sujets britanniques qui habitent ledit territoire. D'après le Traité, en admettant sa validité (et l'on a démontré qu'il n'en avait pas), ce serait l'Espagne qui aurait le dernier mot à dire en la matière. Par conséquent, le référendum est incompatible avec la thèse inacceptable, par ailleurs, selon laquelle le traité colonial de 1713 serait toujours en vigueur.

66. M. Berro passe au second point: le plébiscite à la lumière de la Déclaration historique du 14 décembre 1960. Il convient d'indiquer tout d'abord que, d'après cette déclaration, il existe deux grands critères, fondés sur des principes distincts, mais qui répondent à une même fin. Les deux critères tendent, solidairement, à promouvoir et faciliter la liberté et l'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux.

67. On a soutenu, de façon équivoque, que toute entreprise de décolonisation repose sur le principe de la libre détermination. Sans nier que ce postulat constitue le plus puissant levier pour la libération des peuples, il serait erroné de méconnaître l'existence de situations typiquement coloniales dont les caractéristiques très particulières ne permettent de solutions fondées sur la libre détermination et auxquelles il faut appliquer en échange le critère d'intégrité territoriale et d'unité nationale des Etats, car de toute autre façon on irait à l'encontre des très nets objectifs de la résolution 1514 (XV). Plus grave encore, l'organisation d'un référendum, dans certains de ces cas, pourrait conduire à de véritables aberrations, en servant d'instrument à la perpétuation du système que l'on a voulu abolir, en laissant aux mains des puissances coloniales la décision de continuer à disposer de territoires appartenant à d'autres pays et dont le destin doit être réglé par les véritables titulaires de la souveraineté sur eux.

68. La délégation uruguayenne n'a pas à recourir à l'improvisation pour donner son avis sur ce problème. Depuis la première heure, lorsqu'il s'est agi de voter sur la résolution 1514 (XV), elle a précisé clairement sa position, libre qu'elle était de tout lien et de tout engagement, sans avoir en vue aucune situation concrète. L'Uruguay n'est pas une puissance colonisatrice. Il a conquis son indépendance en luttant héroïquement, voilà un siècle et demi. Il n'est mû par aucun intérêt. Sa conduite obéit à des principes. On peut lui pardonner, en vertu de son attachement au droit et à la justice, les erreurs qu'il peut commettre ou le préjudice qu'il peut causer, involontairement, à certains intérêts dont la coexistence est inconciliable avec les principes qu'il défend.

69. L'Uruguay a toujours soutenu que le principe de la libre détermination devait s'appliquer à l'immense majorité des problèmes coloniaux, mais que l'unique façon de régler certaines situations, comme celles des îles Malvinas et de Gibraltar, est celle qui est prévue au paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) et dans d'autres dispositions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale. On a débattu à la Commission du sens et de la portée du paragraphe 6. La teneur littérale du principe qui y est énoncé est d'une clarté lumineuse et son interprétation, à la lumière des dispositions qui l'entourent, n'offre aucune difficulté. Mais même en admettant, par hypothèse, que le texte en soit obscur et qu'il ne soit pas logiquement conciliable avec les autres dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV), il suffirait de se reporter à l'historique digne de foi de son adoption pour que soient dissipés les doutes de quiconque sur le sens de ce paragraphe.

70. M. Berro rappelle que, lors de l'exposé qu'il a fait le 28 août 1967 devant le Comité spécial, il a fait l'exégèse de cette disposition. Il croit avoir alors complètement démontré le sens authentique et véritable qu'il convenait de lui donner d'après ses propres auteurs. Malgré cela, on a entendu sur ce point, au cours du présent débat, certaines des opinions qui avaient été avancées alors pour contester le sens et la portée que les auteurs de la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) ont voulu donner et ont donné à la disposition essentielle qui consacre le principe de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale des Etats.

71. Il serait vain d'étudier de façon approfondie les systèmes d'interprétation juridique. On sait que, quand le texte est clair, il ne faut pas négliger son sens littéral sous prétexte d'être fidèle à son esprit. On sait de même que, devant un texte ambigu, il convient de se reporter à l'historique digne de foi de son adoption. On sait enfin qu'une interprétation rationnelle authentique ne doit pas contredire la lettre du texte et qu'elle doit, en cas de doute, respecter l'intention qui résulte de l'ensemble des éléments logiques et psychologiques exposés par les rédacteurs de la disposition controversée, au moment même de son élaboration. Les opinions émises ultérieurement ne méritent que le respect intellectuel auquel ont droit ceux qui les ont émises, mais elles sont dépourvues de toute valeur en tant que critère d'interprétation faisant autorité sur le plan juridique. En dernier ressort, l'Assemblée générale elle-même serait le seul organe compétent pour imposer un critère d'interprétation général et obligatoire.

72. En ce qui concerne le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV), il est vraiment insolite et étonnant que son sens puisse prêter à discussion. La clarté du texte exclut le recours à toute autre méthode subsidiaire d'interprétation. Il suffit de lire ce paragraphe pour avoir, sans aucune hésitation, une idée complète et définitive de la pensée et de l'intention de ses auteurs. Le texte est, en effet, ainsi conçu :

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

73. L'ambassadeur Velázquez, que M. Berro a cité intégralement le 28 août, a montré qu'il n'y avait qu'une seule façon d'interpréter cette disposition, dans son opuscule intitulé Las Naciones Unidas y la descolonización. M. Berro pense toutefois que son exposé serait incomplet s'il ne reproduisait pas le passage suivant de cet important ouvrage de son compatriote :

"Le sens de ce paragraphe ressort clairement à la lumière de certains antécédents des débats qui ont eu lieu à l'Assemblée. En effet, au cours de la discussion du projet des 43 pays afro-asiatiques (document A/L.323), le Guatemala avait présenté un amendement (document A/L.325) tendant à ajouter, après ledit paragraphe 6, un nouveau paragraphe ainsi conçu :

"7. Le principe de la libre détermination des peuples ne pourra affecter en aucun cas le droit d'aucun Etat à l'intégrité territoriale et aux revendications territoriales."

"Pour justifier sa demande de vote, le représentant du Guatemala avait précisé que, bien que le paragraphe 6 contînt une déclaration très nette, la délégation du Guatemala voulait que son point de vue soit exposé d'une manière encore plus claire.

A son sens, cette sauvegarde s'imposait manifestement, étant donné que de nombreux territoires faisant l'objet d'un litige ou réclamés par d'autres Etats en tant que partie intégrante de leur propre territoire appartenaient encore indûment à des puissances coloniales, et que, dans les cas en question, la solution du conflit ne pouvait être obtenue par l'application du principe de la libre détermination, car cette procédure porterait atteinte à un autre principe d'une extrême importance, à savoir celui de l'intégrité territoriale des pays.

"Ultérieurement, l'amendement fut retiré, à la suite des déclarations faites au sujet de l'interprétation du paragraphe 6 par plusieurs des auteurs du projet, qui soulignèrent que les droits qu'il s'agissait ainsi de sauvegarder étaient déjà dûment protégés par ledit paragraphe 6.

"Les déclarations à la suite desquelles le représentant du Guatemala a retiré son amendement étaient notamment celles qu'avait faites au cours de la même session le représentant de l'Indonésie. Celui-ci avait en effet dit que sa délégation, en demandant l'inclusion du paragraphe en question dans le projet de résolution, tenait compte du fait que la subsistance du colonialisme hollandais en Irian occidental constituait une rupture partielle de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale de son pays, et que l'idée contenue dans l'amendement du Guatemala était déjà pleinement exprimée dans le projet de résolution, le paragraphe 6 de ce projet tenant dûment compte des peuples et territoires auxquels la délégation du Guatemala se référait.

"Ce serait évidemment sortir du cadre de ce commentaire que de prétendre analyser le sens ou l'interprétation qu'il faut donner au principe de la libre détermination des peuples, qui, on le sait, a déjà soulevé nombre de controverse, mais nous ne pouvons pourtant manquer de reconnaître la sagesse politique que reflète cette interprétation du paragraphe 6, et avant tout pour les pays qui, en raison de leur faible superficie ou de leur faiblesse, ont été dépouillés, par la force, de portions parfois très importantes de leur territoire national.

"La stricte application du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes remettrait l'avenir de ces territoires entre les mains d'un groupe restreint de colons installés là par la Puissance administrante, et généralement après que les populations autochtones ont dû se retirer. Comme il ne peut exister de doute quant aux résultats auxquels aboutiraient des "plébiscites" réalisés dans ces conditions, cette procédure ne servirait qu'à légaliser une situation de force, ce qui ne peut être considéré que comme contraire au droit international."

74. Telle est, selon M. Berro, la seule interprétation que l'on puisse donner du paragraphe 6. Ceux qui lui attribuent ce sens ne sont pas des hommes d'aujourd'hui, intéressés aux conflits actuels. Ce sont les pionniers de la décolonisation, qui ont forgé en 1960 l'instrument historique qui a transformé la géographie du monde et créé une humanité nouvelle. L'interprétation catégorique du paragraphe 6 donnée par l'Indonésie, interprétation qui a motivé le retrait de l'amendement guatémaltèque, n'a été contestée par personne lorsque la résolution 1514 (XV) a été votée.

75. Il convient de signaler que cette même interprétation a été ratifiée par l'Uruguay, le 12 septembre 1963^{9/}, lorsqu'il a "analysé le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) et montré que l'objet de ce paragraphe avait été d'éviter l'application sans condition et sans discernement du principe de l'autodétermination, application qui risquait, dans des cas exceptionnels, de porter atteinte au principe, consacré par la Charte des Nations Unies, de l'intégrité territoriale des Etats"^{10/}.

76. L'Uruguay a également précisé le critère sur lequel il convenait de se fonder pour interpréter le paragraphe 6, lorsque la question de Gibraltar a été débattue pour la première fois. M. Velázquez a soutenu, avec son habituelle clarté de juriste, que le paragraphe 6

"s'adressait non seulement aux Etats qui administraient des territoires coloniaux, mais aussi au Comité spécial. Celui-ci avait l'obligation spécifique d'appliquer sans réserve la résolution 1514 (XV), compte tenu de l'interdiction figurant au paragraphe 6. En d'autres termes, aucune des recommandations ou résolutions adoptées par cet organe pour l'application de la Déclaration ne devait contribuer, directement ou indirectement, à détruire l'unité nationale ou l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays. Si donc, par une décision précipitée, qui ne tiendrait pas compte de la nature particulière du problème, le Comité devait faire une chose qui pourrait porter atteinte à l'unité nationale d'un pays, il aurait manqué gravement à son mandat en contribuant au maintien d'une situation coloniale"^{11/}.

77. M. Velázquez a donc lancé un cri d'alarme pour rappeler aux Etats Membres leurs responsabilités. Si, comme il le déclarait, ceux-ci, par négligence ou précipitation, toléraient l'organisation d'un référendum qui porte préjudice à l'unité nationale d'un pays, ils failliraient gravement à leur mandat, en contribuant à maintenir une situation coloniale. La résolution 1514 (XV) doit s'appliquer sans entraîner de conflit entre les deux principes essentiels qui la sous-tendent: le principe de l'autodétermination d'une part, et le principe du respect de l'intégrité territoriale et de l'unité nationale d'autre part.

78. M. Berro souligne que l'Uruguay n'a pas été seul à préconiser l'interprétation qu'il a exposée. Dans leurs déclarations au Comité spécial^{12/}, les délégations du Venezuela, de la Tunisie, de l'Irak et de la Syrie ont démontré de manière définitive que le paragraphe 6 devait s'appliquer sans qu'il y ait lieu de distinguer s'il s'agissait de litiges entre territoires et puissances coloniales ou entre Etats indépendants.

79. Les arguments invoqués par le Venezuela pour écarter l'application de la formule du référendum à la place de Gibraltar ont été extrêmement clairs et précis. Le représentant du Venezuela, en concluant son savant exposé, a déclaré:

"Le principe de l'autodétermination ne pouvait être faussé de façon à perpétuer une situation de fait qui ne tenait aucun compte du principe fondamental du respect de l'intégrité territoriale d'un Etat. La seule forme de décolonisation applicable aux territoires coloniaux qui avaient été arrachés à d'autres Etats était leur réintégration dans l'Etat auquel ils avaient été enlevés. L'Assemblée générale avait déjà émis un avertissement à ce sujet lorsqu'elle avait exprimé, au sixième considérant de sa résolution 1654 (XVI), son inquiétude devant le fait que "contrairement aux dispositions du paragraphe 6 de la Déclaration, des actes visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale sont encore perpétrés dans certains pays en voie de décolonisation^{13/}."

80. Le référendum organisé par le Royaume-Uni est incompatible non seulement avec les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) mais encore avec les buts et les principes de la Charte. Il importe de faire observer que ce plébiscite, décidé unilatéralement, sans qu'il y ait d'accord entre les deux parties comme l'a demandé l'Assemblée générale, a eu et a encore des répercussions pour le moins fâcheuses sur les données du problème, non encore résolu, que pose la souveraineté territoriale et politique de Gibraltar. Il s'agit, en fait, d'une violation du principe de non-ingérence dans une affaire intérieure qui relève de la juridiction de l'Espagne. Etant donné que la question de Gibraltar fait l'objet de négociations entamées, sous les auspices et dans le cadre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, par les Gouvernements de Londres et de Madrid, tout acte unilatéral de nature à mettre en question la souveraineté territoriale et le destin politique du territoire en litige constitue une violation de la procédure convenue et revêt le caractère d'une intervention illégitime relevant de la juridiction interne de l'autre partie. Cette idée de "non-ingérence" en matière de décolonisation est énoncée, au paragraphe 7 de la résolution 1514 (XV), en termes clairs et précis qui ne peuvent donner lieu à aucune interprétation spéculative ou ambiguë.

81. En conséquence, l'Uruguay réaffirme sa position traditionnelle et déclare que le référendum du 10 septembre constitue une violation du principe de l'intégrité territoriale et de l'unité nationale énoncé dans la Charte et dans les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI). En d'autres termes, ce référendum apparaît, à la lumière de ces résolutions, tout à fait sans valeur en tant qu'instrument de décolonisation.

82. Il convient d'analyser maintenant la résolution 2231 (XXI), ouvertement violée par la Puissance administrante lors de l'organisation du plébiscite du 10 septembre, violation d'autant plus grave que le Comité spécial avait adopté le 1er septembre une autre résolution sur cette question.

83. La délégation de l'Uruguay a répété à maintes reprises que le cas des habitants de Gibraltar ne posait en l'occurrence aucun problème juridique du point de vue de la décolonisation, mais un problème humain particulier qui, bien qu'évidemment fort respectable, ne peut faire obstacle à l'application des dispositions du paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV). Les sujets britanniques qui résident à Gibraltar ne constituent pas les habitants du territoire au sens précis où l'entend la résolution, et le statut juridique qui ressort de cette résolution ne leur est pas applicable car il concerne évidemment les habitants indigènes et autochtones des territoires coloniaux.

84. Dans le cas de Gibraltar, il s'agit d'un groupe humain, d'une communauté civile au service d'une base militaire. Ces personnes ne sont pas les habitants indigènes du territoire, ce sont des Britanniques ou des descendants de Britanniques qui servent les intérêts de la Puissance administrante.

85. Il est évident que le référendum organisé le 10 septembre porte atteinte au régime spécial institué pour décoloniser Gibraltar et est en contradiction avec la lettre et l'esprit de la résolution 2231 (XXI). Les interventions éclairées faites par les représentants de l'Irak, du Venezuela, du Chili et de la Syrie au Comité spécial sont décisives à cet égard.

86. Les intentions de l'Assemblée en ce qui concerne ce problème sont sans équivoque. Il convient de noter que dans les résolutions 2170 (XX) et 2231 (XXI) concernant Gibraltar, ce n'est pas par inadvertance que l'on a omis de faire mention du principe de libre détermination, invoqué invariablement dans la presque totalité des autres cas de décolonisation.

87. Il importe de souligner à cet égard que dans les deux résolutions adoptées respectivement à la vingtième et à la vingt et unième sessions l'Assemblée générale a invoqué "les intérêts des habitants du territoire" et non "la volonté de la population", évitant d'employer les termes couramment utilisés, et elle l'a fait, manifestement, pour se référer à la notion de "l'unité nationale et [de] l'intégrité territoriale", qui trouve son expression dans le paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la résolution 1514 (XV), et non pas au principe de la "libre détermination", qui est applicable de façon générale aux cas ordinaires de décolonisation. Dans un passage particulièrement marquant de sa lettre, en date du 20 décembre 1966, adressée au Président de l'Assemblée générale, le Président de la Quatrième Commission, qui était l'ambassadeur du Soudan, M. Fakhreddine Mohamed, apporte une preuve concluante du fait que l'Assemblée, dans sa résolution 2231 (XXI), avait pour objectif de sauvegarder les intérêts humains, économiques et sociaux, etc., des habitants de Gibraltar, mais sans attribuer d'une manière quelconque à ces habitants le droit de manifester leur volonté politique dans le cadre d'un référendum colonial organisé par la Puissance administrante. Il s'agit du passage suivant:

"Une autre catégorie de problèmes dont la Commission s'est occupée a trait aux territoires qui font l'objet soit de prétentions rivales de souveraineté, soit de l'intérêt particulier de certains gouvernements par suite de circonstances géogra-

phiques, historiques, économiques ou autres. Au nombre de ces territoires figurent les îles Falkland (Malvinas), la Côte française des Somalis, Gibraltar et l'Inî et le Sahara espagnol. Bien que les objectifs de la Commission quant à ces territoires soient les mêmes, à savoir la décolonisation, les mesures spécifiques recommandées ont pris en considération les particularités de chacun d'eux, en vue d'arriver au règlement pacifique de prétentions ou d'intérêts divergents dans le cadre de l'application de la Déclaration 14/.

88. C'est le Président de la Quatrième Commission, lors de la vingt et unième session de l'Assemblée générale, qui indique ainsi, avec tout le poids de son autorité, que le principe général de libre détermination ne s'applique pas à des cas comme celui de Gibraltar, des îles Malvinas, etc., lesquels doivent être envisagés et réglés en fonction des revendications contradictoires relatives à la souveraineté territoriale et mettant en jeu des faits géographiques, historiques, économiques, etc., sans perdre de vue les objectifs de la décolonisation et conformément aux règles applicables à chaque cas d'espèce.

89. La délégation uruguayenne l'a déjà affirmé, mais il importe de rappeler que le problème de décolonisation qui se pose à Gibraltar concerne, bien que cela semble paradoxal, non pas les habitants britanniques du Rocher mais le territoire lui-même, morceau de sol qui a été soustrait à l'Espagne en violation de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale de ce pays. Bref, le référendum britannique contrevient ouvertement aux dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI), qui indique la seule voie possible pour résoudre ce problème complexe. Il faut, néanmoins, que se poursuivent les négociations bilatérales jusqu'à ce qu'on parvienne à un accord qui garantisse et protège les "intérêts des habitants du territoire", sans exclure aucun de ces intérêts mais sans que ceux-ci se confondent avec des mobiles politiques visant à perpétuer une situation coloniale.

90. La délégation uruguayenne a exprimé pour la dernière fois son opinion au sujet de l'affaire de Gibraltar 13 jours avant la date fixée par le Royaume-Uni pour le plébiscite; elle ne pensait pas alors que la Puissance administrante feindrait d'ignorer la résolution adoptée le 1er septembre 1967 par le Comité spécial et passerait outre à cette résolution. Elle ne pensait pas non plus que le Secrétaire d'Etat aux affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni proférerait en pleine assemblée des paroles humiliantes et, d'une certaine façon, méprisante non seulement pour ceux qui s'emploient de toutes leurs forces, avec idéalisme et désintéressement, à réaliser la grande entreprise qu'est la décolonisation mais également pour l'organe même créé à cet effet par l'Assemblée générale.

91. La délégation uruguayenne est néanmoins capable de s'élever au-dessus de tout cela; elle conserve intacte la considération que lui ont toujours inspirée le Royaume-Uni et les dirigeants illustres de ce pays et elle continuera d'agir selon l'esprit de justice et d'objectivité dont elle a toujours tenu à faire preuve dans tous ses actes et dans toutes ses déclarations au sein de la communauté internationale.

92. M. Berro juge cependant utile de rappeler, dans le cadre de la discussion, et en réponse au Secrétaire aux affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni, M. Brown, certains passages du discours pénétrant et éloquent prononcé à l'Assemblée générale par M. Ulloa, représentant du Pérou, personnalité internationale éminente, qui, évoquant à la fois le cas de Gibraltar et des îles Malvinas, a déclaré notamment:

"Le problème de Gibraltar n'est un problème ni politique ni juridique au sens où on l'entend normalement, suivant l'acceptation courante de ces mots. C'est un problème de décolonisation qui présente des caractéristiques particulières. On s'est approprié Gibraltar abusivement à la faveur des circonstances politiques et militaires, avec des visées d'ordre stratégique et politique. On s'est également emparé d'une partie du territoire dont l'appartenance ne faisait aucun doute et que la Grande-Bretagne ne possédait en aucune façon, au départ; et il y a eu un transfert des populations autochtones tandis que l'occupation territoriale s'étendait au-delà des limites précises de la concession primitive.

"A l'heure où l'Espagne entre dans cette nouvelle phase du problème de Gibraltar, elle a en sa faveur le témoignage de l'histoire ainsi que le simple raisonnement logique et moral qui découle des antécédents du problème, et elle recherche une solution en tenant compte des réalités et des principes actuels; en effet les objectifs politiques et militaires qui ont expliqué le succès initial de l'entreprise ont aujourd'hui disparu et le sentiment contemporain à l'égard de la décolonisation doit la pousser à l'encourager à hisser à nouveau son drapeau sur le Rocher de Gibraltar dont le sol historique a désormais une valeur symbolique.

"Les îles Malvinas sont un autre vestige de la prépondérance passée et un témoin de la prépondérance actuelle des grandes puissances sur le plan international: la Grande-Bretagne a étendu sa domination aux îles Malvinas, profitant des circonstances, alors que la République Argentine est l'héritière légitime des titres de l'Espagne sur ces îles et sur le littoral voisin. Dans ce cas, comme dans celui de Gibraltar, il est inutile d'examiner la dialectique diplomatique employée par la puissance dominante, car les principes et les réalités actuelles du droit et de la politique internationale indiquent qu'il s'agit d'un cas de décolonisation et il est certain que les antécédents historiques ne justifient pas l'autonomie ou l'indépendance de ces îles et qu'il faut envisager le retour et la reconnaissance de l'autorité souveraine légitime. Les raisons d'ordre stratégique qui, dans le cas des îles Malvinas comme dans celui de Gibraltar, ont déterminé la prise de possession par la Grande-Bretagne ont aujourd'hui perdu toute valeur.

"Dans le cas de Gibraltar et dans celui des îles Malvinas, il ne convient pas non plus d'appliquer à tort le principe de la libre détermination, qui est faussé par deux faits fondamentaux qui constituent la négation même du principe selon lequel c'est la population d'origine qui doit exprimer sa volonté. Etant donné que les détenteurs du pouvoir ont été directement ou indirectement expulsés, qu'au terme d'une longue évolution la situation économique et sociale est devenue telle qu'il était impossible de se fixer sur un sol stérile, impropre au travail et au bien-être de l'homme, que la population à laquelle il appartiendrait légitimement d'exercer le droit à la libre détermination n'existe plus, cette dernière cesse de correspondre au principe d'une haute valeur morale et juridique pour devenir un instrument destiné à dissimuler la vérité à l'aide de formules creuses ou mensongères^{15/}."

93. M. Berro dit qu'on aurait pu éviter cette fausse application du principe de la libre détermination dont parle M. Ulloa, si l'on avait appliqué la résolution du Comité spécial. Le référendum du 10 septembre ne mettait pas en jeu "un principe d'une haute valeur morale et juridique", "mais un instrument destiné à dissimuler la vérité à l'aide de formules creuses et mensongères". Gibraltar n'a aucune population autochtone pouvant exercer son droit à l'autodétermination. Tels sont les faits. Quelle valeur peut-on attribuer en outre à un plébiscite s'adressant uniquement aux loyaux sujets de la Couronne britannique, qui possède et domine le sol espagnol qu'elle a occupé, et où elle s'est maintenue par la force depuis 1704.

94. La déclaration et les propositions présentées par l'Espagne au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, qui ont ouvert les négociations bilatérales prévues par les Nations Unies contiennent des éléments d'informations qui révèlent nettement les caractéristiques démographiques du Rocher; mais le référendum qui a eu lieu le 10 septembre a malheureusement faussé le problème. Ce document indique notamment:

"Gibraltar est aussi un groupe humain et c'est un autre aspect du problème. Car, aujourd'hui, la Grande-Bretagne prétend faire décider de l'avenir du Rocher par les "Gibraltariens" et crée ainsi, par le système de l'autodétermination, un lien entre un territoire et ses habitants. Ce faisant, elle altère profondément les termes originaux de la situation, qui établissent une relation bilatérale entre l'Angleterre et l'Espagne, dont celle-ci a été écartée au bénéfice d'un tiers. Or, ce tiers n'est pas valide car, en premier lieu, Gibraltar n'est rien d'autre qu'une base militaire et une base ne peut appartenir qu'au pays qui l'occupe ou au pays sur le territoire duquel elle se trouve. Toute autre chose serait aussi absurde que de vouloir par exemple que la base américaine de Guantanamo cesse d'être américaine mais ne soit pas rendue à Cuba, et que son sort fût décidé par quelque pseudo-population y résidant. Dans une situation qui n'est pas absolument identique mais, au fond, très semblable, celle de Hong-kong, un journal anglais, l'Observer, disait, le 10 juillet 1949, qu'il ne fallait pas chercher à préparer l'île à l'indépendance, car Hong-kong devait continuer à être anglais ou revenir à la Chine.

"En second lieu, il n'y a pas de lien véritable et profond entre les habitants de Gibraltar et le territoire, car, en dehors du fait que la population authentique du Rocher dut s'enfuir devant l'occupation militaire, les habitants ultérieurs y sont venus en vertu d'une opération politique britannique destinée à fabriquer et à refabriquer constamment cette prétendue population avec des groupes ethniques déracinés de leur pays d'origine. Ce sont des habitants qui ne constituent pas une entité politique propre et qui n'ont pas en conséquences d'autonomie réelle. Ils forment un groupe démographique entièrement subsidiaire de la base, enfermé dans une zone de 2 milles carrés qui est presque entièrement zone militaire et propriété de la Couronne. Comment ce groupe pourrait-il être une population véritable, ayant une capacité d'autodétermination politique et le droit de disposer d'un territoire, alors que celui-ci n'est ni historiquement ni juridiquement le sien?

"En troisième lieu, le problème de Gibraltar consiste en une économie née à l'ombre de l'implantation britannique en Espagne, c'est-à-dire en soi fatalement problématique, car il ne peut y avoir d'économie normale dans une base militaire de faible étendue manquant de ressources propres, sans agriculture, sans industrie, et dont le commerce emprunte presque exclusivement la voie illégale de la contrebande.

"... La description objective que nous venons de faire, véritable anatomie du problème de Gibraltar — base militaire au fondement juridique essentiel de laquelle on a porté atteinte, population artificielle sans autonomie véritable et ayant une économie soutenue en partie d'une manière artificielle et illégale — démontre l'importance de la question de Gibraltar et la nécessité de la résoudre d'urgence^{16/}."

95. M. Berro dit que Gibraltar n'a et ne peut avoir de vocation nationale. Il ne pourra jamais être une entité indépendante et autonome. Il ne pourra jamais non plus réunir les caractéristiques d'un Etat libre associé. Il ne réunit même pas les conditions requises pour constituer une colonie apte à vivre par ses propres moyens. Il est dépourvu de tout. Suivant le document du Secrétaire général:

"Le territoire n'a pas de ressources agricoles ni d'autres ressources en matières premières. L'industrie locale se limite à une usine de conserves de fruits et de conserves de poisson, et à des activités telles que le traitement du tabac, les mélanges de café et la fabrication de vêtements.

"En 1964, les importations se sont élevées à 14 928 148 livres, dont 2 894 419 livres représentaient les produits alimentaires. Les réexportations soumises aux droits de douane se sont chiffrées, au cours de la même année, à 4 710 478 livres. Les exportations de produits d'origine locale sont négligeables.

"Les principales recettes du gouvernement proviennent des droits de douane, des licences, des impôts indirects, des frais de justice, de la location de biens de l'Etat et de loteries d'Etat. Le produit de l'impôt sur le revenu correspond à environ 14 p. 100 des recettes. En 1964, les recettes totales se sont élevées à 2 086 556 livres et les dépenses à 2 407 298 livres, dont 1 913 298 livres représentaient les dépenses courantes.

"... Les statistiques de la main-d'œuvre ne concernent que les personnes employées à des travaux manuels et d'autres travailleurs dont la rémunération ne dépasse pas 500 livres par an. A la fin de 1964 on comptait, à Gibraltar, 5 641 travailleurs de nationalité britannique et 9 600 travailleurs étrangers; la plupart de ces derniers vivaient en Espagne et se rendaient chaque jour à Gibraltar. Quarante-trois pour cent environ de tous les travailleurs sont employés par le Gouvernement de Gibraltar, les services des forces armées, le Ministère des bâtiments et des travaux publics et le Conseil municipal 17."

13. Le tableau dressé officiellement par le Secrétariat n'est guère brillant: absence d'agriculture et de matières premières; déficit budgétaire; exportations insuffisantes; absence d'industries propres; salaires insuffisants; main-d'œuvre étrangère; le principal employeur est le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et, en particulier, ses forces armées.

97. Sur ces bases, le Royaume-Uni prétend construire un Etat souverain, associé à la Couronne, en conservant à cet effet un morceau de l'Espagne qu'elle lui a arraché par la force, dans un but stratégique. Ce rocher inhospitalier qui ne doit être considéré que comme l'extrémité géographique de la péninsule Ibérique, conformément à sa destinée normale, ne présente aucun des attributs indispensables pour être utilisé en tant que centre de peuplement et ne peut être qu'une base militaire. A propos de la question de la base militaire, M. Berro donne lecture d'un passage qui est extrait de la déclaration et des propositions espagnoles déjà mentionnées et qui illustrent son propos:

"Mais outre tous les préjudices qu'il a causés directement par l'activité de sa base militaire, Gibraltar a fait le vide autour de lui. Ce fut d'abord le vide démographique du Rocher, car, en raison de la fuite forcée de sa population d'origine espagnole, le nombre de ses habitants passa de 6 000 avant l'occupation à 900 en 1721, 17 ans après, et à 2 890 en 1791, près d'un siècle plus tard, c'est-à-dire moins de la moitié de la population à l'époque espagnole. L'unité démographique espagnole qui avait son centre à Gibraltar fut donc mutilée et profondément altérée 18/."

Suit un passage qui met la dernière touche à ce tableau et où il est dit:

"... Ce groupement humain qui n'a même pas pu constituer une population solide, enracinée et ayant des intérêts permanents ni une entité politique autonome dans son essence a été également incapable de se créer une main-d'œuvre propre. Cette incapacité quasiment congénitale est devenue un des caractères particuliers des habitants du Rocher, dont, de nos jours encore, un journal britannique, le Manchester Guardian du 11 mai 1950, a pu dire

"que le Gibraltarien a une répulsion innée pour le travail manuel et préfère le white collar (le "col dur" des employés) ou le white apron (le "tablier blanc" des domestiques)".

"Il fut donc nécessaire d'importer aussi une population ouvrière. Comme une tentative de la constituer de bagnards échoua, il fallut naturellement aller chercher en Espagne des ouvriers, parce que l'Espagne est l'espace naturel de Gibraltar. Le Rocher devint un point d'absorption de main-d'œuvre non seulement de la région immédiatement voisine, mais même des provinces du sud de l'Espagne. Les agents de recrutement anglais étendirent leur rayon d'action à une grande distance du Rocher, et de nos jours encore, en 1945, un consul britannique à Cadix provoqua un incident en faisant publier des annonces offrant du travail à Gibraltar. Peu à peu, cette absorption attira dans la zone du Campo des groupes de personnes déracinées de leur province d'origine qui se rapprochaient du Rocher dans l'espoir d'y trouver du travail. Une véritable situation coloniale se créa ainsi, car le Campo de Gibraltar se peupla de gens qui dépendaient de patrons vivant au-delà de la frontière et qui imposaient leurs conditions de travail. D'autre part, le déploiement sur cette zone de l'activité presque unique des habitants du Rocher — le commerce illicite — a contribué à la priver de bases économiques solides en la maintenant dans des conditions très semblables à celles d'un simple dépôt de main-d'œuvre à la disposition de Gibraltar.

"... Le développement des travaux et des installations du Rocher augmenta peu à peu le nombre des travailleurs espagnols qui, à la fin du XIX^{ème} siècle, passa rapidement de 2 500 ou 3 000 unités à 6 500 ou 7 000 quand on effectua les grands travaux du port de la Place, les installations de la base moderne et surtout lorsqu'on entreprit la construction des tunnels qui traversent le Rocher. Ces années étaient celles de la dépression économique en Espagne — et aussi celles de la paralysation des travaux de défense espagnols dans cette zone par la volonté britannique. La main-d'œuvre afflua donc rapidement et massivement à Gibraltar qui eut à sa disposition pratiquement toute une région et celle-ci devint une véritable colonie du Rocher. L'autre grand afflux de la main-d'œuvre espagnole à Gibraltar se produisit lors de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Le nombre des travailleurs qui passaient chaque jour d'Espagne à Gibraltar s'éleva à 13 000. Comme on avait évacué, nous l'avons vu, l'immense majorité — 16 700 sur 18 000 — des Gibraltariens qui y résidaient, les Espagnols furent, durant ces années-là, les vrais habitants du Rocher, où ils exercèrent leurs activités professionnelles au milieu des difficultés et des risques inhérents à une guerre, faisant ainsi un apport décisif aux intérêts britanniques du moment...

"Cette force ouvrière, véritable muscle de la vie de Gibraltar, a travaillé sous un régime qui ne peut être qualifié autrement que de colonial. Les salaires ont été fixés selon le bon plaisir de l'employeur, le nombre d'heures de travail a atteint 90 par semaine — et plus; pas de périodes de vacances, pas de prévoyance sociale ni d'allocation familiales.

18/ La position espagnole devant le problème de Gibraltar, 1966. p. 39.

Lors de la création à Gibraltar des premiers syndicats ouvriers, il fut même interdit aux ouvriers espagnols de s'y affilier. On ne leur accordait même pas la protection d'un syndicat.

"...Mais les travailleurs espagnols, véritable population active de Gibraltar, n'ont jamais pu résider sur le Rocher parce que les lois militaires britanniques le leur ont interdit. Ils ont dû passer chaque jour la frontière et quitter chaque jour le théâtre de leur effort quotidien. Ce sont les exilés de Gibraltar, les parias historiques de la ville, ceux qui n'ont eu ni voix ni vote dans les affaires de Gibraltar; c'est vraiment l'autre population de Gibraltar, celle dont personne ne parle, celle qu'on ne mentionne jamais quand il s'agit de l'avenir du Rocher mais qui est là et dont dépend — tout au moins aujourd'hui — la vie quotidienne de Gibraltar. Derrière eux, dans la zone espagnole voisine, leurs familles forment un groupe démographique qui compte peut-être 40 ou 50 000 personnes, qui ont subi — je le répète — les conséquences d'un véritable colonialisme.

"Il est donc clair que le vide créé par l'implantation militaire britannique sur le Rocher a produit un élément démographique réel — habitants de la Place, travailleurs espagnols et familles du Campo — sur lequel a pesé un régime colonial et qui doit être considéré dans son ensemble au moment d'aborder le problème de Gibraltar et de son avenir^{19/}."

98. M. Berro dit qu'en fait on n'aurait pu trouver un meilleur cadre, une base plus solide ni une meilleure "matière première" pour la réalisation d'un référendum. Répondant aux questions posées par la Couronne, les loyaux sujets ont répondu par l'affirmative à toutes les questions. Que dire de la population autochtone de Gibraltar, des descendants des familles expulsées il y a deux siècles et demi et de la main-d'œuvre espagnole qui travaille dans la journée sur le Rocher et doit évacuer le territoire le soir afin que rien ne puisse donner à penser qu'elle est établie, qu'elle réside ou qu'elle est domiciliée à Gibraltar?

99. L'Order in Council de 1873, l'Immigration and Aliens Order de 1885 ou la Gibraltarian Status Ordinance de 1962 constituent, sans aucun doute, les pierres angulaires du référendum. En effet, ces ordonnances, qui ont toujours interdit aux Espagnols de résider sur le territoire occupé, ont facilité l'établissement des registres électoraux dont a parlé, quelques jours auparavant (1743ème séance), M. de Piniés, représentant de l'Espagne, et permettaient de prévoir facilement les résultats du référendum et de déceler les objectifs transparents poursuivis par ses promoteurs.

100. En résumé, la manière dont le plébiscite a été préparé et dont il s'est déroulé constitue le plus grand éloge que l'on puisse adresser à la résolution adoptée le 1er septembre par le Comité spécial. La réaffirmation du principe de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale, contenu dans la Charte des Nations Unies, a préservé l'autorité et le prestige des organes chargés de la décolonisation. La Quatrième Commission n'a plus maintenant qu'à adopter l'amendement contenu dans le document A/C.4/L.887 et Add.1.

101. La délégation uruguayenne a voulu se montrer loyale vis-à-vis d'elle-même, de l'Espagne et de la Puissance administrante. Malgré l'amitié traditionnelle que son pays entretient avec le Royaume-Uni et l'admiration que l'Uruguay lui porte pour de nombreuses raisons, la délégation uruguayenne se devait cependant d'exposer, en toute sincérité, sa thèse sur Gibraltar, qui diffère profondément de la position britannique — divergences dont l'origine est ancienne mais qui ont été accentuées par les récents événements, malgré les efforts déployés par le Gouvernement uruguayen pour rechercher une solution à l'amiable qui permette d'éviter les bouleversements, les erreurs et les heurts. L'Uruguay a agi de concert avec le Royaume-Uni en différentes occasions, en matière de décolonisation. Il en sera encore ainsi, lorsque les circonstances le permettront. Il est également probable que des divergences apparaîtront encore. La délégation uruguayenne a toujours estimé que les divergences dans le domaine élevé des principes sont une caractéristique du monde civilisé, cultivé et démocratique. La délégation uruguayenne ne nourrit aucune hostilité à l'égard des participants au référendum du 10 septembre dont elle comprend et respecte les "intérêts", et n'a eu en aucune façon l'intention de blesser la sensibilité britannique; cependant elle doit conclure son exposé en indiquant qu'elle figure parmi les auteurs du document A/C.4/L.887 et qu'elle l'appuiera lors du vote.

102. M. Berro tient à terminer sur des paroles empreintes de beauté et de sagesse, d'équilibre et de modération qui sont tirées d'un ouvrage espagnol sur Gibraltar et qui s'adressent au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté britannique:

"Cet enchaînement de problèmes que nous venons de décrire débouche sur une constatation dont la valeur n'est nullement diminuée par le fait qu'elle intéresse le domaine affectif. Gibraltar n'est pas seulement une base qui pose certains problèmes mais constitue pour la Grande-Bretagne un symbole: la proud fortress, symbole de sa puissance et de ses glorieuses traditions navales et militaires. Nous le savons et nous comprenons qu'en abordant ce thème il se peut que nous touchions un point sensible et douloureux. C'est pourquoi nous croyons qu'il faut parvenir à un accord qui ne cause à aucune des deux nations de l'humiliation ou du ressentiment. Il faut comprendre, en effet, que, pour l'Espagne aussi, Gibraltar représente un symbole: celui d'une série d'iniquités et d'affronts; le souvenir de la manière dont elle a été lésée, des humiliations subies, des intolérables obligations politiques, militaires et économiques qui lui ont été imposées, en outre, à une époque de stagnation nationale, et ce souvenir demeure vivace. Gibraltar est la seule colonie étrangère située sur le territoire d'une nation européenne. Enfin, on peut appliquer à Gibraltar les déclarations récentes de l'éminent historien britannique Arnold Toynbee: "Gibraltar? C'est une épine dans la chair espagnole. Les Anglais aimeraient-ils voir une forteresse russe ou chi-noise à Land's End ou dans les îles Anglo-Normandes?".

M. Berro rappelle que la question n'est pas posée par lui-même. La formule est d'une éminente personnalité britannique.

103. M. GAMIL (Yémen) propose que la déclaration du représentant de l'Uruguay figure intégralement dans le compte rendu.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

La séance est levée à 13 h 25.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément (suite) [A/6661, A/6662, A/6700/Rev.1, chap. DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE ET EXAMEN DE PROJETS DE RÉSOLUTION (suite) [A/C.4/L.876 ET Add.1 A 6, A/C.4/L.877, A/C.4/L.884]

1. M. MIRDHA (Inde) regrette que, malgré l'appel lancé par sa délégation à la session précédente (1674^{ème} séance) pour demander qu'à la session suivante les chapitres du rapport du Comité spécial relatifs à tous les autres territoires soient abordés plus tôt, la Commission ait attendu une fois encore d'être arrivée à la fin de ses travaux pour entreprendre l'examen de ces chapitres, exception faite de ceux qui ont trait à Gibraltar et aux colonies espagnoles d'Afrique; aussi peut-elle difficilement procéder à un examen complet de la situation dans les territoires en question. M. Mirdha a le ferme espoir qu'à la vingt-troisième session la Commission abordera l'examen de ce point de son ordre du jour suffisamment tôt pour pouvoir lui consacrer l'attention qu'il mérite.

2. Il ressort du rapport du Comité spécial (A/6700/Rev.1) que, dans la plupart des fles non autonomes considérées, les progrès réalisés dans la voie de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance ont été en général lents et que les conditions économiques et sociales dans ces territoires laissent beaucoup à désirer.

Le rapport du Comité spécial renferme un certain nombre de recommandations précises qui sont formulées à l'intention des puissances administrantes et qu'il est essentiel de mettre en œuvre si l'on veut décoloniser rapidement les territoires. Il est regrettable que certaines puissances administrantes n'aient réagi de façon positive ni devant ces recommandations ni devant les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale.

3. La délégation indienne note avec plaisir que le nouveau gouvernement élu de l'île Maurice a exprimé le désir de voir le territoire accéder à l'indépendance en mars 1968 et que la Puissance administrante a donné son accord pour cette date. Les Mauritiens constituent un peuple formé d'ethnies différentes qui vivent ensemble dans la paix et l'harmonie, sous la direction progressiste de sir Seewoosagur Ramgoolam, et que l'on pourrait donner en exemple à toutes les sociétés composées elles aussi de plusieurs ethnies. Il faut espérer que viendra bientôt le jour où l'île Maurice deviendra Membre des Nations Unies. Le Gouvernement indien a déjà exposé, au sein de l'Organisation et ailleurs, sa position au sujet des installations militaires qui selon certaines indications doivent être établies dans le territoire artificiellement créé sous le nom de territoire de l'océan Indien britannique. Cette position vaut toujours. Le Gouvernement indien a souscrit à la Déclaration de Bandoung de 1955 et à la Déclaration du Caire de 1964 sur la question de l'installation de bases dans l'océan Indien, et aux résolutions 1514 (XV) et 2066 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale. Aux termes de la résolution 2066 (XX), toute mesure prise par la Puissance administrante pour détacher certaines fles du territoire de l'île Maurice afin d'y établir une base militaire constituerait une violation de la résolution 1514 (XV). Le Gouvernement indien est contre l'établissement de bases militaires dans l'océan Indien, car il pourrait en résulter une tension accrue dans la région et il espère que les autorités britanniques tiendront compte des sentiments des pays de cette région et s'abstiendront d'y installer une base militaire.

4. Dans les fles Seychelles, très peu de progrès ont été réalisés sur la voie de l'autonomie interne. Les conseils législatif et exécutif qui existent à l'heure actuelle se composent essentiellement de membres non élus, et ils n'exercent aucun pouvoir ni aucune fonction; la délégation indienne adresse un appel à la Puissance administrante pour lui demander de donner plus d'efficacité à ces organes et d'en faire des instruments de gouvernement autonome. M. Mirdha a pris note de la déclaration faite par le représentant du Royaume-Uni à la séance précédente selon laquelle une nouvelle constitution doit entrer en vigueur aux fles Seychelles.

5. La délégation indienne est heureuse que le Gouvernement espagnol, dans un esprit de coopération, ait accepté de recevoir une mission de visite du Comité spécial en Guinée équatoriale et de lui accorder les facilités nécessaires. M. Mirdha a pris note avec satisfaction de la déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Espagne affirmant que ce pays reconnaît pleinement les droits des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, ajoutant qu'une conférence constitutionnelle a eu lieu en octobre 1967. Il regrette cependant que le principal objectif de la conférence, à savoir l'établissement d'une date pour l'indépendance, n'ait pas été atteint, et cela alors que la population du territoire a, en 1966, lors de la visite du Sous-Comité de la Guinée équatoriale dans le territoire, exprimé le désir d'accéder à l'indépendance en juillet 1968 au plus tard. Le représentant de l'Espagne a dit que son gouvernement donnerait son accord quelle que soit la date fixée par la population; or, jusqu'à présent, il ne semble pas que la Puissance administrante ait pris l'engagement d'accorder l'indépendance avant juillet 1968. M. Mirdha lance un appel à la Puissance administrante pour lui demander d'appliquer les dispositions de la résolution 2230 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale afin que la population de la Guinée équatoriale puisse accéder à l'indépendance sans avoir à attendre plus qu'il ne faut.

6. Nul ne peut contester que l'envoi de missions de visite dans les territoires éloignés soit utile aux Nations Unies qui, de cette façon, peuvent être informées de la situation qui règne dans ces territoires. Les renseignements communiqués par les puissances administrantes sont précieux mais ils ne peuvent pas remplacer le contact direct entre la population des colonies et les représentants d'Etats Membres. La délégation indienne a du mal à comprendre que certaines puissances administrantes persistent dans leur refus de recevoir des missions de visite dans les territoires qu'elles administrent et elle espère qu'à force d'insistance il sera possible de les convaincre qu'il est de leur propre intérêt de permettre aux Nations Unies d'envoyer des missions de visite.

7. M. Mirdha lance un appel aux puissances administrantes pour leur demander d'adopter les mesures nécessaires pour appliquer les diverses résolutions des Nations Unies concernant les territoires en question et, ainsi, d'assurer une transition pacifique à l'état d'autonomie et d'indépendance.

8. Selon M. EL-FARRA (Jordanie), la question de Gibraltar est une question coloniale qui relève de la résolution 1514 (XV). Le Comité spécial étudie la question depuis 1963; il a suivi l'évolution de la situation dans le territoire et a entendu des pétitionnaires. Il est donc bien placé pour juger de la situation; c'est pourquoi la délégation jordanienne accorde une grande valeur aux recommandations venant de lui. Passant outre au fait que le Comité spécial, dans sa résolution du 1er septembre 1967 (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X, par. 215), a déclaré que l'organisation du référendum envisagé serait contraire aux dispositions de la résolution 2231 (XXI), le Royaume-Uni a organisé ce référendum, et il ne semble pas à la délégation jordanienne que cette mesure ait contribué à trouver la solution appropriée, juste et réaliste du problème.

9. La délégation jordanienne ne saurait rester indifférente devant une situation de nature coloniale, quelle qu'elle soit, qui détruit partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale ou l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays quelconque et elle estime de son devoir de mettre en garde contre les risques que comporte une situation coloniale semblable à celle qui a abouti à la création d'un Etat juif contre la volonté des habitants légitimes de la Palestine.

10. De l'avis de M. El-Farra, le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.876 et Add.1 à 6 et l'amendement qui figure dans le document A/C.4/L.887 et Add.1 sont de nature à aider la Commission dans l'examen du problème. A propos du paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution, M. El-Farra déclare que sa délégation est heureuse d'apprendre que les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Espagne ont décidé de procéder à de nouveaux entretiens concernant Gibraltar en janvier 1968. Il espère que rien ne viendra compromettre le succès de ces négociations.

11. M. LUARD (Royaume-Uni) rappelle que les territoires d'Antigua, de la Dominique, de la Grenade, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, de Sainte-Lucie et de Saint-Vincent, qui font partie certains des îles Leeward et les autres des îles Windward, dans la région des Antilles orientales, se sont constitués en fédération en 1871. Après la fin de la guerre, en 1945, il est apparu clairement aux populations des îles ainsi qu'au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni que le meilleur moyen, et peut-être le seul, pour ces territoires et d'autres territoires des Antilles, de former un tout indépendant était de s'associer dans une fédération, étant donné que chacun des six territoires était trop petit pour être livré à lui-même et qu'aucun d'entre eux n'en avait jamais manifesté le désir. Après des discussions et des négociations prolongées, naissait en janvier 1958, la Fédération des Indes occidentales, composée de ces six territoires, ainsi que de la Jamaïque, de la Trinité, de la Barbade et d'un certain nombre d'autres petits territoires, et il était entendu que cette fédération accéderait à l'indépendance en mai 1962. Il est cependant apparu clairement, avant cette date, que la Fédération ne pourrait pas se maintenir après la décision prise par les deux plus grandes îles de s'en retirer et de demander chacune séparément l'indépendance; aussi, en 1962, la Fédération a-t-elle été dissoute. Les territoires restants ont manifesté le désir, et en cela ils ont été encouragés par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, de former une nouvelle fédération qui pourrait elle-même devenir un Etat indépendant dans le cadre du Commonwealth. Des propositions dans ce sens ont été examinées à partir de mai 1962 jusqu'en 1965; cependant, la Grenade et Antigua s'étant retirées des négociations, la première pour s'associer à la Trinité, et la Barbade ayant annoncé son intention de demander l'indépendance séparément, il est apparu clairement qu'il ne serait pas possible de parvenir à un accord. Certaines des îles ont alors informé le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni qu'elles souhaitaient une plus grande autonomie interne étant bien entendu, aussi bien dans les îles qu'à Londres, que l'on n'exclurait pas la possibilité de former une nouvelle fédération à l'avenir. La formule de l'association a été mise au point compte tenu de cette possibilité. C'est ainsi qu'en 1965 le Gou-vernement du Royaume-Uni a décidé d'étudier des propositions en vue d'établir sur de nouvelles bases les relations entre les territoires et le Royaume-Uni, en tenant compte de la maturité politique des territoires, mais en prenant également en considération les difficultés que connaissent les très petits Etats.

12. A l'automne de 1965, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a envoyé au gouvernement de chacun des territoires un document contenant, comme base de discussion, des propositions détaillées portant sur des questions constitutionnelles; selon ces propositions, chaque territoire se gouvernerait lui-même sur le plan interne et jouirait d'une pleine autonomie. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni continuerait, aussi longtemps que le souhaiterait chacun des territoires, à assumer la responsabilité de la défense et des affaires étrangères et chaque Etat associé pourrait, quand il le voudrait, demander l'indépendance séparée et assumer lui-même cette responsabilité en jouissant de tous les attributs de la souveraineté. Il était donné à chacun des six territoires la possibilité de formuler des contre-propositions ou de rejeter les propositions du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Par ailleurs, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a demandé à chacune des fles de présenter, comme base de discussion, ses propres propositions en vue d'une constitution d'autonomie interne. Les propositions du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ont été acceptées provisoirement par les ministres des territoires, ministres désignés parmi les organes législatifs démocratiquement élus dans les six fles, et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a alors publié ses propositions en décembre 1965 sous forme d'un Livre blanc^{1/} de façon qu'elles puissent être examinées et étudiées attentivement dans les fles par toutes les tendances de l'opinion.

13. Une série de conférences constitutionnelles, pour Antigua, la Dominique, Sainte-Lucie, Saint-Vincent et la Grenade ainsi que pour Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla se sont tenues entre février et mai 1966, et à chacune d'elles assistait une délégation de l'île ou des fles intéressées comprenant les représentants de chaque parti politique représenté aux organes législatifs locaux issus d'élections. Etant donné que dans chacune de ces fles les élections se faisaient depuis longtemps au suffrage universel des adultes, sur la base du principe "à chacun une voix", et qu'il existait un système de partis politiques bien rodé et doué d'une grande vitalité politique, les membres des organes législatifs représentés avaient pleinement qualité pour parler et décider au nom des populations de ces fles. Après des discussions approfondies et parfois laborieuses, les conférences sont parvenues à un accord total et complet sur les objectifs fondamentaux de la formule de l'association, en tant que lien volontaire et démocratique entre le Royaume-Uni et les fles, étant entendu que le Gouvernement britannique continuerait à assumer la responsabilité des affaires extérieures et de la défense des fles, mais que chacune de celles-ci serait libre à n'importe quel moment de rechercher une indépendance séparée si elle le souhaitait. Aucun parti politique, majoritaire ou minoritaire, n'a manifesté de désaccord ni formulé de réserves concernant ces questions fondamentales que soulevait la formule de l'association. Les conférences sont également parvenues à un accord pratiquement unanime sur les propositions soumises par les délégations des fles au sujet des constitutions internes des territoires, encore que dans le cas de trois territoires les délégations aient formulé des réserves au sujet de certaines caractéristiques de la constitution qui était envisagée pour eux. Tous les participants aux conférences, aussi bien les représentants des partis gouvernementaux que ceux des partis d'opposition, ont signé et adopté les rapports des conférences, lesquels avaient été publiés aussi bien au Royaume-Uni que dans les territoires et avaient fait l'objet de nombreuses discussions sur place.

14. Dans quatre des six territoires, Antigua, la Dominique, Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla et Saint-Vincent, des élections ont eu lieu avant que ces territoires ne deviennent des Etats au sens des propositions relatives à l'association avec le Royaume-Uni. S'il y avait eu opposition à ces propositions de la part d'une partie représentative de l'opinion, il ne fait pas de doute que celle-ci aurait contesté les élections, mais il ne s'est rien produit de tel dans aucun des territoires. Dans deux des territoires, la Grenade et Sainte-Lucie, il n'y a pas eu d'élections pendant la période au cours de laquelle se sont déroulées les consultations et les discussions relatives aux nouveaux arrangements avant l'adoption de la formule de l'association, au début de 1967; toutefois, dans ces territoires, tous les partis politiques ont appuyé les propositions relatives à la nouvelle formule et ont envoyé à la conférence de Londres des représentants qui ont signé les rapports de cette conférence. Même en l'absence d'élections, par conséquent, il y a manifestement unanimité en faveur de l'autonomie et de l'association avec le Royaume-Uni. Si des élections n'ont pas eu lieu c'est parce que les constitutions des territoires ne les prévoyaient pas pour cette période-là. En outre, dans aucune des résolutions pertinentes des Nations Unies ni dans la Charte il n'est dit qu'il faut procéder à des élections ou à un référendum lorsqu'un territoire colonial doit accéder à l'autonomie, étant entendu que des mesures doivent être prises pour s'assurer que la décision de devenir autonome est prise au su de la grande majorité de la population du territoire intéressé, avec son accord et en connaissance de cause de sa part. Enfin, la délégation du Royaume-Uni ne pense pas qu'il soit particulièrement utile d'organiser un référendum ou des élections avant qu'un territoire n'opte pour un nouveau statut qui offre entre autres possibilités celle de l'indépendance à n'importe quel moment, surtout si l'on considère que les Nations Unies n'ont jamais elles-mêmes considéré qu'il fallait organiser des élections ou un référendum avant qu'un territoire n'accède à l'indépendance.

15. Aucun des partis politiques des territoires ne s'est opposé à un moment quelconque à la notion d'Etat associé. Les seules divergences qui ont surgi concernent des questions telles que la date des élections et les détails des constitutions internes. La meilleure preuve de l'appui populaire dont jouit la notion d'Etat associé est fournie par le fait qu'après la conférence de Londres les propositions ayant fait l'objet d'un accord ont été soumises à l'examen de chacun des organes législatifs librement élus des diverses îles. Chacun de ces organes a examiné, puis adopté sans opposition, une résolution approuvant les propositions de la conférence de Londres. Que ces organes élus soient indubitablement habilités à parler et à agir au nom de la population est une preuve suffisante que les populations des territoires approuvent à l'unanimité leur nouveau statut. M. Luard estime qu'il est difficile d'imaginer un processus de consultation et d'approbation plus complet que celui qu'il vient de décrire.

16. Aux termes des dispositions établissant le nouveau statut d'Etats associés, qui jusqu'à présent est en vigueur dans cinq des six Etats associés et qui le sera bientôt à Saint-Vincent, les rapports entre chaque Etat et le Royaume-Uni sont dans l'ensemble analogues à ceux qui existent entre le Gouvernement britannique et un pays indépendant si ce n'est que le Gouvernement britannique conserve la responsabilité de la conduite des affaires étrangères et de la défense de l'Etat associé intéressé. Même pour ce qui est des pouvoirs législatifs dont le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni dispose en matière d'affaires étrangères et de défense, ils ne seront exercés qu'après consultations avec le gouvernement de l'Etat associé intéressé. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni s'est engagé, à l'égard des Etats qui en ont exprimé le désir, au cas où des consultations approfondies n'aboutiraient pas à un accord au sujet de l'application de cette législation, à donner autant que possible à ce gouvernement, avant d'exercer ses propres pouvoirs, la faculté de prendre des mesures pour mettre un terme à son association avec le Royaume-Uni s'il le souhaite. Certains pouvoirs en matière d'affaires étrangères ont été délégués aux gouvernements des Etats, et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni s'est engagé à les consulter avant de souscrire des obligations internationales les concernant. En outre, étant donné que les Etats associés ne constituent pas officiellement des entités souveraines, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni doit continuer d'exercer les prérogatives de la souveraineté, par exemple en ce qui concerne la citoyenneté et la monarchie.

17. Les liens dont il s'agit sont avant tout libres et volontairement consentis, chaque partie pouvant y mettre fin à n'importe quel moment sans le consentement de l'autre. Comme toute décision visant à mettre fin à l'association devient irrévocable une fois qu'elle est entrée en vigueur, les conférences constitutionnelles ont, afin d'éviter toute décision hâtive ou ne recueillant pas l'appui requis, établi une procédure pour mettre fin à l'association qui prévoit un délai de 90 jours entre la présentation et l'examen d'un instrument juridique à cet effet, ainsi que l'approbation à la majorité des deux tiers des membres élus de l'organe législatif dans chaque cas. Au cas où l'on mettrait fin à l'association en faveur d'une association avec un autre pays du Commonwealth de la région des Antilles, cette procédure suffirait. Dans tout autre cas, il faudrait en outre l'approbation des deux tiers du corps électoral, par voix référendaire, avant l'entrée en vigueur d'une telle loi. Il a été décidé qu'il ne serait pas organisé de référendum si un Etat désirait s'associer à un autre pays membre du Commonwealth dans la région des Antilles, pour faciliter la création d'une éventuelle fédération en temps voulu au cas où les Etats de la région seraient prêts à le faire. Chaque Etat associé désirant appartenir à cette fédération n'aurait qu'à faire connaître ses désirs et donner son approbation à ce que les mesures nécessaires soient prises à cette fin par le Gouvernement et le Parlement britanniques. La fédération serait donc tout aussi aisée, voire plus facile qu'auparavant, et rien ne s'y opposerait au cas où elle redeviendrait une possibilité viable.

18. Chaque Etat associé a l'entière responsabilité de ses affaires intérieures, y compris celle de modifier sa propre constitution, et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne peut modifier ou suspendre les constitutions internes qu'à la demande expresse de l'Etat intéressé. Mises à part les conditions nécessaires aux pouvoirs réservés du Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne la défense et les affaires étrangères et le maintien d'une citoyenneté commune, la constitution de chaque Etat associé comporte les dispositions habituelles d'une constitution d'un Etat moderne et indépendant, y compris les dispositions pour la protection des droits et des libertés fondamentaux, le maintien des institutions démocratiques et la modification ou le remplacement de la constitution par l'organe législatif conformément aux procédures prévues à cet effet. Chaque Etat aura une assemblée législative, élue au suffrage universel des adultes, un cabinet ministériel ou toute autre forme de gouvernement ministériel; le Gouverneur, représentant la Reine, se bornera strictement au rôle d'un monarque constitutionnel.

19. Le nouveau statut des Etats associés se distingue donc des rapports unissant un territoire colonial à une puissance métropolitaine par trois aspects importants: les Etats associés sont pleinement compétents, sans aucune restriction, en ce qui concerne leurs affaires intérieures; le Gouvernement et le Parlement britanniques ont abandonné tous pouvoirs et responsabilités les concernant sauf dans certains secteurs bien précis ayant fait l'objet d'un accord; chaque Etat associé est libre de choisir l'indépendance ou tout autre statut, et ce faisant de mettre fin à son association avec le Royaume-Uni sans l'approbation de ce dernier. Il est donc évident que les Etats associés sont pleinement autonomes, que les responsabilités du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni aux termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte ont été intégralement respectées et que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne communiquerait plus de renseignements au sujet de ces territoires.

20. Le problème de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla qui en fait concerne les rapports entre Anguilla et le Gouvernement de l'Etat n'est apparu qu'à la fin du mois de mai 1967, trois mois après que cet Etat eut acquis son nouveau statut d'association avec le Royaume-Uni. Depuis 1882, Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla ont été administrés comme une entité. En vertu du système électoral en vigueur avant l'association, Anguilla était une circonscription élisant son représentant au Conseil législatif au suffrage universel des adultes. Le représentant d'Anguilla, élu par les seuls habitants d'Anguilla, M. Peter Adams, a assisté à la Conférence constitutionnelle de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla qui s'est tenue du 12 au 26 mai 1966 en qualité de représentant élu d'Anguilla. La Conférence a décidé que la future constitution de l'Etat associé prévoirait un conseil local pour Nièves et un conseil pour Anguilla et que les dispositions relatives à un conseil élu entreraient en vigueur à la fin de 1967. A aucun moment de la Conférence il n'a été question d'avoir un statut distinct pour Anguilla ni de séparer Anguilla et Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves. Le nouveau statut arrêté concernait l'association de l'ensemble du territoire de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla avec le Royaume-Uni, et M. Peter Adams a signé le rapport de la conférence de Londres en signe d'acceptation de ce nouveau statut et de la Constitution du territoire, estimant apparemment que cet accord était dans l'intérêt des habitants d'Anguilla. Le 25 juillet 1966, les électeurs d'Anguilla ont réélu M. Adams, montrant ainsi qu'ils ratifiaient son acceptation du statut d'Etat associé pour l'ensemble du territoire de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla.

21. Ce n'est qu'après, au cours des deux mois précédant le jour de l'accession au statut d'Etat associé, que les intentions du Gouvernement de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla à l'égard de la création d'un conseil pour Anguilla, conformément à l'accord réalisé lors de la Conférence de Londres, ont été mises en doute par le dirigeant du People's Action Movement, M. Herbert, qui n'avait pas obtenu de siège dans l'Assemblée législative. Avant que le territoire n'accède à son nouveau statut, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni s'est assuré que la constitution, devant être octroyée par un ordre du conseil, respectait les décisions de la Conférence et qu'aucune des allégations dirigées contre le Premier Ministre et son gouvernement ne constituait un motif suffisant pour revenir sur les accords réalisés alors. C'est en ayant pleinement connaissance des préparatifs faits par le Gouvernement du territoire en vue d'introduire la législation nécessaire que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a agi conformément aux accords réalisés et mis Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla en mesure d'accéder à un nouveau statut le 27 février 1967.

22. Les responsabilités et les pouvoirs du Royaume-Uni se limitent depuis à ceux qui ont été prévus par le West Indies Act de 1967; par conséquent, toute responsabilité en ce qui concerne le gouvernement de l'Etat associé de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla et les problèmes relatifs aux rapports entre les populations des différentes fies constituant cet Etat, d'une part, et les autorités de cet Etat, d'autre part, sont du ressort du Gouvernement de l'Etat.

23. Etant donné la publicité faite au problème d'Anguilla, on a suggéré que l'emploi abusif des slogans d' "indépendance" de la part de certains habitants d'Anguilla et leur désir de rompre les liens les unissant à Saint-Christophe permettent de douter des déclarations de la délégation britannique selon lesquelles les populations des six Etats associés ont été amplement consultées sur ledit statut et que cette nouvelle forme constitutionnelle avait pratiquement été acceptée à l'unanimité. La population de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla a été consultée tant par la voie électorale que par l'intermédiaire de leurs représentants élus; même à l'heure actuelle, on ne peut mettre en doute ni l'opinion de la majorité de l'Etat ni le fait que le représentant élu par ceux-là mêmes qui actuellement s'opposent à ce statut d'Etat associé y a lui-même contribué. Ce n'est qu'après l'entrée en vigueur du statut d'Etat associé que l'on s'est inquiété d'une éventuelle sécession.

24. Par conséquent, le problème d'Anguilla ne saurait en aucune façon être considéré comme une question coloniale. La revendication de l'indépendance pour Anguilla est un mouvement de sécession plutôt que d'indépendance. La Commission mesure sans aucun doute les conséquences qu'aurait à longue échéance tout semblant d'ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un Etat autonome ou toute approbation d'un tel mouvement.

25. Le Gouvernement de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ont apprécié les efforts constructifs des pays indépendants voisins, la Trinité, la Guyane, la Jamaïque et la Barbade, afin d'arriver à une juste solution du problème, bien que ces efforts n'aient pas encore été couronnés de succès. La délégation britannique approuve pleinement la déclaration du Procureur général de la Guyane sur la nécessité d'arriver à une solution satisfaisant la légalité et les pratiques établies d'un gouvernement constitutionnel. La délégation britannique espère que si les deux parties font preuve de bonne volonté il sera possible d'arriver à une solution juste et pacifique qui permette aux fies de revenir sur le chemin de la légalité constitutionnelle. Une délégation parlementaire s'est récemment rendue à Anguilla où les dirigeants locaux l'ont assurée de leur collaboration. M. Luard espère que cette délégation contribuera à l'élaboration d'une solution à ce problème complexe.

26. M. Luard précise que, depuis l'accession au statut d'Etat associé, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a participé à la recherche d'une solution que sur l'invitation du Gouvernement de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla. Le fait que le Royaume-Uni soit responsable devant l'Organisation des Nations Unies et ailleurs des affaires extérieures de l'Etat en question n'altère en rien la nature essentiellement interne du problème d'Anguilla. De même, ce problème qui est celui d'un Etat doté d'autonomie interne a, dès l'accession de Saint-Christophe à la pleine autonomie, cessé d'être de la compétence des commissions de l'Assemblée générale s'occupant des territoires non autonomes. Toutefois, la délégation britannique a jugé bon, sans que cela modifie son attitude officielle, de fournir à la Quatrième Commission les renseignements susmentionnés.

27. Saint-Vincent est le seul des six territoires qui ne soit pas encore un Etat associé. A la Conférence constitutionnelle de Londres de mai 1966, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a pu obtenir l'accord des deux partis politiques de Saint-Vincent sur deux aspects de la nouvelle constitution envisagée: l'établissement d'un sénat et l'âge électoral. Le Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies d'alors avait, en conséquence, suggéré que, puisqu'une élection était prévue avant que les propositions n'entrent en vigueur, ces questions fassent l'objet d'un nouvel examen une fois que la population se serait prononcée à leur sujet aux élections. Le résultat de ces élections, orga-nisées en août 1966, n'a pas été concluant; en effet, sur 27 000 suffrages exprimés, le parti de l'opposition a obtenu 500 voix de plus que le parti du gouvernement, tandis que le parti du gouvernement obtenait un siège de plus que le parti de l'opposition. A la suite de quoi le parti de l'opposition a contesté l'élection de deux membres appartenant au parti du gouvernement et ce dernier a contesté l'élection de deux membres de l'opposition. Il était alors admis que si les contestations avaient eu pour résultat de faire perdre un siège au gouvernement au profit de l'opposition, le Gouvernement de Saint-Vincent serait tombé. Un autre facteur est encore venu compliquer la situation. Il avait été convenu à Londres que le nombre des membres élus de l'Assemblée législative serait porté de 9 à 13 et que, comme mesure transitoire, l'Assemblée législative serait autorisée à désigner elle-même quatre circonscriptions qui éliraient les quatre membres supplémentaires du premier parlement. Il aurait donc été théoriquement possible que le parti du gouvernement profite de sa majorité pour désigner les quatre circonscriptions devant élire les quatre membres supplémentaires avant l'examen des contestations, s'assurant ainsi de la majorité quelle que soit la décision prise à leur sujet. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni avait invité le Premier Ministre et ses collègues ainsi que des représentants de l'opposition à se réunir à Londres pour tenter de réconcilier leurs points de vue. Au cours des entretiens, il a été convenu que Saint-Vincent deviendrait un Etat associé le 1er juin 1967 au plus tard. Il a été décidé d'apporter plusieurs modifications aux accords issus de la Conférence de 1966, notamment l'organisation d'élections générales sur la base de 13 circonscriptions avant le 31 décembre 1968. Entre-temps, il ne serait procédé à aucune augmentation du nombre de membres de la législature. Il semblait donc qu'au début de février il y ait eu un accord sur une solution satisfaisant les deux partis. Cependant, en mars, une nouvelle crise politique a surgi lorsque l'un des Ministres élus, appartenant au parti du gouvernement, a démissionné et est passé à l'opposition qui devenait ainsi majoritaire. Conformément aux avis du Premier Ministre, le Conseil législatif a été dissous le 7 avril 1967. Lors des élections générales organisées le 19 mai 1967, l'ancien parti d'opposition — le St. Vincent Labour Party — a obtenu 6 des 9 sièges pourvus par voie électorale et son chef a été nommé Premier Ministre. Des pourparlers sont actuellement en cours avec le Gouvernement de Saint-Vincent sur les détails du projet de constitution, et il est impossible avant leur aboutissement de fixer une nouvelle date pour l'accession au statut d'Etat associé.

28. Bien que les propositions du Gouvernement britannique et les résultats des conférences de Londres aient été exposés en détail devant le Sous-Comité III du Comité spécial dès le 8 septembre 1966^{2/}, ce n'est que six jours avant la date fixée pour l'accession d'Antigua et de Saint-Christophe au statut d'Etat associé que le Comité spécial a commencé à examiner la question. Pendant cette période d'examen, les cinq territoires ont accédé à leur nouveau statut et jouissent d'une pleine autonomie. Le Comité a néanmoins adopté une résolution qui préjuge gravement tout nouvel examen de la situation. Conformément à l'attitude du Gouvernement britannique, selon laquelle la compétence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte a pris fin avec l'accession au statut d'Etat associé, la délégation britannique n'a plus participé à l'examen de la question des Etats associés des Antilles occidentales après l'adoption de ladite résolution. Toutefois, le Gouvernement britannique accepte que la question même de l'association et de l'élaboration des procédures à cet effet soit considérée comme étant de la compétence de la Commission à la présente session.

29. Les territoires coloniaux sont définis au Chapitre XI de la Charte comme étant ceux dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Un territoire cesse d'appartenir à cette catégorie non pas quand les Nations Unies adoptent une résolution déclarant qu'il a cessé d'être un territoire colonial, mais lorsque sa population en est effectivement arrivée à s'administrer complètement elle-même, ce qui marque le moment où la puissance coloniale qui l'administrait précédemment cesse d'être responsable de ses affaires intérieures. Il en résulte donc, en fait et en droit, que le Gouvernement britannique n'est plus responsable des affaires intérieures des cinq Etats associés dès lors qu'ils ont accédé à leur nouveau statut. Au titre des responsabilités qu'il continue d'assumer en ce qui concerne les affaires extérieures de ces Etats, le Gouvernement britannique demeure disposé à faciliter et encourager les contacts entre lesdits Etats et les Nations Unies, y compris les institutions spécialisées, pour ce qui est des questions extérieures qui intéressent les Etats associés. Il ressort clairement des modalités des accords relatifs aux affaires extérieures conclus entre chacun de ces Etats et le Royaume-Uni que le Gouvernement britannique et les Etats souhaitent que ces contacts soient maintenus.

30. Le processus de la décolonisation arrivant enfin à son terme, les seuls territoires coloniaux qui subsisteront seront ceux dont la superficie et les ressources naturelles sont limitées et qui n'ont en conséquence que des perspectives limitées de développement économique. L'indépendance complète et la souveraineté absolue ne sont pas nécessairement les seules formes de décolonisation dans ces cas-là, et nombreux sont les petits territoires qui ne peuvent envisager une indépendance complète et ne le souhaitent du reste pas. Certains territoires ont librement choisi l'intégration soit totale, soit partielle avec la puissance coloniale qui les administrait précédemment, et l'Assemblée générale a, à plusieurs reprises, reconnu formellement dans ses résolutions que ce processus était conforme aux dispositions de la Charte relatives à la décolonisation. Le statut des fies Cook, qui se sont librement associées à la Nouvelle-Zélande, a été approuvé et reconnu par la résolution 2064 (XX) de l'Assemblée générale, et l'on a reconnu que leur cas constituait un précédent permettant aux petits territoires qui ne désirent pas accéder à l'indépendance d'envisager de nouvelles solutions en matière de décolonisation. Les principaux éléments du nouveau statut des Etats associés des Indes occidentales sont les mêmes que pour les fies Cook. La question fondamentale est de savoir quel type de décolonisation préfèrent les peuples des territoires. Le statut colonial des Etats des Antilles occidentales a été remplacé par de nouveaux rapports librement consentis qui satisfont le désir fondamental d'autonomie de ces Etats tout en tenant compte de l'exiguité de leur territoire. On espère que ces relations ne représenteront qu'une étape sur la voie de la fédération. Les peuples des Etats associés des Indes occidentales ont droit aux félicitations et aux vœux de la Commission.

31. M. NACER (Maroc) déclare que sa délégation a toujours appuyé les efforts déployés par l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour mettre un terme à la domination coloniale sous toutes ses formes. Pour son pays, qui a lui-même connu la sujétion étrangère, la défense du droit des peuples à la liberté et à l'indépendance est un principe fondamental.

32. La question d'Ifni et du Sahara dit espagnol résulte du contentieux territorial hérité du régime colonial imposé au Maroc. Le problème de l'intégrité territoriale s'est posé au Maroc depuis le XVIème siècle. Jusqu'à 1912, année où le Traité de protectorat a été signé, les problèmes relatifs aux frontières de l'Est et du Sud marocains ont donné lieu à une intense activité diplomatique. Lorsque le Maroc est devenu indépendant en 1956, il a estimé qu'il était indispensable de réaliser l'unité nationale et, partant, de revendiquer le retour de tous les territoires marocains sous domination étrangère. Depuis cette date, le Gouvernement marocain n'a cessé d'exposer à l'ONU ses légitimes revendications concernant Ifni, Sakiet el Hamra et le Rfo de Oro. Ce gouvernement croit fermement à la vertu des solutions négociées et pacifiques et a toujours cherché en conséquence à résoudre ses problèmes territoriaux dans un esprit de coopération amicale et constructive. Tout en poursuivant des pourparlers sur le plan bilatéral, il s'est tourné vers l'ONU avec la ferme conviction que l'attitude dynamique de l'Organisation au sujet des questions coloniales contribuerait au règlement de la question d'Ifni et du Sahara.

33. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Maroc a déclaré au cours de la discussion générale de l'Assemblée, à sa 1585ème séance plénière, le 10 octobre 1967, que le Roi du Maroc et le chef de l'Etat espagnol, conscients des liens qui existent entre les deux peuples et des relations traditionnelles qui unissent les deux pays et tenant compte d'autre part des dispositions de la résolution 2229 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale, avaient entamé des négociations sur le problème d'Ifni et du Sahara. M. Nacer a également déclaré qu'un accord de principe venait d'être conclu sur l'application pratique de la résolution concernant Ifni.

34. A la 552ème séance du Comité spécial, le 6 septembre 1967, le représentant de l'Espagne a manifesté son optimisme quant aux résultats du dialogue sincère qui se poursuivait entre l'Espagne et le Maroc à propos d'Ifni. S'agissant du Sahara, le représentant de l'Espagne a réaffirmé que le respect de la volonté des habitants constituait la base essentielle de la politique de son pays dans cette région et que, pour faciliter l'évolution politique du Sahara, le Gouvernement espagnol avait créé une assemblée générale du Sahara espagnol en tant qu'organe représentatif du territoire. A la 559ème séance, le 13 septembre, le chef de la délégation marocaine a exprimé sa satisfaction devant l'attitude de l'Espagne à propos de cette question. Il a dit à nouveau la confiance que le Maroc mettait dans la Puissance administrante et a exprimé l'espoir que les deux pays pourraient résoudre à l'amiable les problèmes demeurant en suspens. Il a également dit que le Maroc avait cherché par tous les moyens possibles à obtenir la restitution de ce territoire et exprimé à maintes reprises son désir de voir le problème résolu dans le même esprit de compréhension que celui qui avait permis au Maroc et à l'Espagne de résoudre par le passé un certain nombre de problèmes, mais que, comme le dialogue n'avait pas permis d'arriver à des conclusions satisfaisantes, le Maroc avait été obligé de rechercher d'autres solutions.

35. Depuis 11 ans, le Maroc a cherché à résoudre les problèmes que pose le retour de ses territoires avec la France, l'Espagne ou tout autre pays intéressé. Le désir de parvenir à une solution par l'intermédiaire de la discussion, de la compréhension mutuelle et du respect mutuel des intérêts a guidé le Maroc dans ses pourparlers avec l'Espagne et lui a permis de résoudre de nombreux problèmes.

36. La méthode envisagée par la Puissance administrante pour la décolonisation du Sahara est différente de celle qui est prévue dans le cas d'Ifni, mais cela ne signifie pas que le statut juridique des deux territoires cesse d'être similaire et ne saurait non plus constituer un fait opposable à l'intégrité territoriale du Maroc. Il est regrettable que la Puissance administrante n'ait pas estimé que les entretiens bilatéraux, qui ont été couronnés de succès en ce qui concerne la zone septentrionale et la province de Tarfaya et qui s'annoncent prometteurs pour la solution du problème d'Ifni, pouvaient se poursuivre dans le cas du Sahara. Le Gouvernement marocain continue à penser que la reconnaissance du droit à l'autodétermination de la population du Sahara dit espagnol accélérerait le processus de décolonisation dans ce territoire. L'application des résolutions 2072 (XX) et 2229 (XXI) serait une mesure utile en ce sens.

37. La délégation marocaine estime qu'une consultation populaire entreprise sous les auspices des Nations Unies constituerait le meilleur moyen de déterminer la volonté de la population, étant donné que les entretiens avec l'Espagne n'ont encore pas produit de résultat. La délégation marocaine est disposée à étudier toute conception constructive tendant à permettre la décolonisation des territoires d'Ifni et du Sahara dit espagnol.

38. M. DE PINIES (Espagne) déclare qu'il lui est agréable de faire savoir à la Commission que les entretiens entre l'Espagne et le Maroc à propos de la décolonisation d'Ifni se poursuivent à l'échelon le plus élevé. L'Organisation des Nations Unies sera tenue au courant des progrès accomplis.

39. Au Sahara, le Gouvernement espagnol est désireux d'appuyer le droit de la population à l'autodétermination. Afin de l'aider à exercer ce droit, il a créé une assemblée générale, qui est un organe représentatif devant permettre à la population d'envisager l'avenir avec les meilleures garanties de stabilité et l'assurance qu'elle sera représentée de manière appropriée.

40. Le fait que l'Espagne a pris des mesures spéciales pour accélérer la décolonisation de la Guinée équatoriale et d'Iní ne signifie pas qu'elle considère que la décolonisation du Sahara grâce à l'application du principe de l'autodétermination à sa population n'est pas tout aussi importante. L'invitation faite par le Gouvernement espagnol à l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour qu'elle envoie au Sahara une mission chargée d'étudier la situation dans ce territoire demeure toujours valable.

41. En ce qui concerne la Guinée équatoriale, M. de Piniés rappelle qu'il a dit devant la Commission, à la 1750^{ème} séance, que le Gouvernement espagnol a l'intention d'organiser un référendum au début de 1968; la population du territoire pourra ainsi se prononcer sur la position adoptée à la récente conférence constitutionnelle par ses représentants, qui ont demandé l'indépendance pour le 15 juillet 1968 au plus tard. S'ils appuient cette demande, le Gouvernement espagnol accordera l'indépendance au territoire conformément à la promesse solennelle faite par le chef de l'Etat espagnol. La position du Gouvernement espagnol est donc entièrement conforme aux principes directeurs formulés par l'ONU pour ce qui est du processus de décolonisation.

42. A la vingtième session de l'Assemblée générale, la délégation espagnole avait proposé d'organiser une conférence constitutionnelle au cours de laquelle devaient être élaborées les institutions politiques propres à faire en sorte que la Guinée équatoriale puisse accéder à l'indépendance sans qu'il soit fait obstacle à ses volontés. Par suite de certaines difficultés, il n'a pas été possible de réunir la Conférence en mai 1967 comme on l'avait prévu. Le 12 septembre 1967, le Comité spécial a adopté une résolution (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. VIII, par. 87) demandant à l'Espagne de réunir d'urgence cette conférence. Le Gouvernement espagnol s'est conformé à cette demande et a accepté que la Conférence commence ses travaux le 30 octobre. Les participants représentaient tous les mouvements d'opinion du territoire. A la séance d'ouverture, le Ministre des affaires étrangères de l'Espagne a clairement indiqué que le but principal de la Conférence était d'arriver à des conclusions qui, après que le Gouvernement espagnol les aurait étudiées, pourraient être soumises à la population de la Guinée équatoriale, sous forme de référendum. Les représentants de la population de la Guinée équatoriale à la Conférence constitutionnelle ont fait connaître leurs vœux; le Gouvernement espagnol souhaite que ce soit maintenant la population elle-même qui confirme ces vœux à l'occasion d'une consultation populaire qui serait organisée conformément au principe "à chacun une voix".

43. En ce qui concerne les îles Malvinas, M. de Piniés déclare que ce territoire devrait être restitué au Gouvernement argentin. La seule manière de réparer le tort causé à ce gouvernement est d'appliquer les dispositions du paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. Il faut qu'un dialogue sincère s'engage sur cette question et que les intérêts de la population du territoire soient pris en considération.

M. Braithwaite (Guyane), vice-président, prend la présidence.

44. M. OULD DADDAH (Mauritanie) déclare que sa délégation se réserve le droit de prendre à nouveau la parole sur la question du Sahara dit espagnol.

45. M. SHAW (Royaume-Uni) déclare que sa délégation se réserve le droit de revenir sur la question des îles Falkland, mais qu'elle tient à préciser très clairement à ce stade que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni rejette l'allégation selon laquelle ce territoire a été usurpé.

46. M. KANNANGARA (Ceylan) rappelle que sa délégation est un des auteurs du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.884 sur la question de Gibraltar, projet qui a pour but de permettre la reprise des négociations, à brève échéance, entre la Puissance administrante et l'Espagne, de manière à garantir la décolonisation de la population de Gibraltar dans les meilleurs délais. On sait que la situation à Gibraltar a fait l'objet de débats plutôt acrimonieux à la Commission; or, les auteurs estiment que, si en outre la Commission devait se prononcer de manière inflexible et définitive entre les deux positions extrêmes qui sont en présence, la possibilité de reprendre les négociations ou celle de les voir aboutir rapidement à des résultats satisfaisants disparaîtraient certainement, quelle que soit la résolution qui obtiendrait la majorité à la Commission. Aussi espèrent-ils que les représentants de l'Espagne et du Royaume-Uni comprendront que le projet de résolution représente un effort, de la part de pays amis qui ont la plus grande estime pour les peuples et les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Espagne, en vue de mettre fin au différend qui les oppose et d'aboutir à une solution amiable permanente, qui soit pleinement conforme aux véritables intérêts de la population de Gibraltar. Ces véritables intérêts, pour ce qui est de la formule d'association sur laquelle la population de Gibraltar ferait porter son choix à l'avenir, ne pourraient être déterminés que par cette population elle-même, sans que la Puissance administrante ou le Gouvernement espagnol puissent exercer aucune sorte de pression.

47. Dans la trame sacrée de la Charte des Nations Unies et des résolutions de l'Organisation relatives à la décolonisation, brille en quelque sorte un fil d'or qui représente le grand principe du droit des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination. Ce principe a été reconnu dans la Charte et dans les décisions successives de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en termes si forts et de manière si définitive que tous les sophismes et toutes les subtilités dictés par les exigences particulières de telle ou telle situation coloniale ne sauraient faire passer à l'arrière-plan ou faire négliger le droit d'un peuple à la libre détermination. Depuis quelques jours les membres de la Commission assistent, non sans appréhension, à une tentative visant à faire accepter par celle-ci une proposition qui violerait un principe considéré comme inviolable par la Commission elle-même.

48. La question dont la Commission est saisie est suffisamment importante pour justifier un bref rappel des propositions pertinentes de la Charte et des résolutions prises ultérieurement par l'ONU en ce qui concerne la décolonisation. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte, et en particulier l'Article 73, expose la raison d'être de la décolonisation, sur laquelle toutes les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale sur cette question ont été fondées. Le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes y est posé en termes clairs et catégoriques. A sa première session, le 9 février 1946, l'Assemblée générale, consciente des problèmes et des aspirations politiques des populations qui ne s'administraient pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, a jugé utile, dans sa résolution 9 (I), d'appeler expressément l'attention des Etats Membres sur ce qui suit:

"Par le Chapitre XI, tous les Membres des Nations Unies qui ont ou assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, reconnaissent le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires. Ils acceptent, comme une tâche sacrée, l'obligation de développer le plus possible le bien-être des habitants de ces territoires. A cet effet, ils acceptent également certaines obligations particulières, y compris l'obligation de développer la capacité des peuples dont il s'agit à s'administrer eux-mêmes et de les aider dans le développement progressif de leurs institutions politiques."

49. Le 12 décembre 1959, l'Assemblée générale, par sa résolution 1467 (XIV), a décidé de créer un comité spécial composé de six membres et chargé d'étudier les principes qui devaient guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation prévue à l'Article 73 de la Charte leur était applicable ou non. Dans la subdivision B de la section V de son rapport^{3/}, le Comité spécial des Six a adopté 12 principes fondamentaux qui ont été entérinés par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 1541 (XV). M. Kannangara tient à citer les principes VI et VII, qui non seulement illustrent les principes sur lesquels il veut lui-même mettre l'accent, mais sont de plus rédigés en termes catégoriques. Selon le principe VI, on peut dire qu'un territoire non autonome a atteint la pleine autonomie: "a) Quand il est devenu Etat indépendant et souverain; b) Quand il s'est librement associé à un Etat indépendant; ou c) Quand il s'est intégré à un Etat indépendant". Quant au principe VII, il stipule que:

"a) La libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question, exprimé selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées. Elle doit respecter l'individualité et les caractéristiques culturelles du territoire et de ses populations, et conserver aux populations du territoire qui s'associe à un Etat indépendant la liberté de modifier le statut de ce territoire en exprimant leur volonté par des moyens démocratiques et selon des méthodes constitutionnelles;

"b) Le territoire associé doit avoir le droit de déterminer sa constitution intérieure, sans ingérence extérieure, conformément aux méthodes constitutionnelles régulières et aux vœux librement exprimés de ses populations. Cela n'exclut pas les consultations que pourraient appeler ou exiger les clauses de la libre association."

50. Le 14 décembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 1514 (XV) que l'on considère comme la grande charte de la décolonisation. Le troisième alinéa du préambule de cette résolution reconnaît "le désir passionné de liberté de tous les peuples dépendants et le rôle décisif de ces peuples dans leur accession à l'indépendance". Le paragraphe 2 prévoit que "tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination" et que, "en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel". Ces termes sont lourds de signification, et la Quatrième Commission ne doit jamais permettre qu'on les relègue dans l'oubli. Le paragraphe 4, qui découle logiquement du paragraphe 2, où l'accent est mis particulièrement sur la liberté, se lit comme suit: "Il sera mis fin à toute action armée et à toutes mesures de répression, de quelque sorte qu'elles soient, dirigées contre les peuples dépendants, pour permettre à ces peuples d'exercer pacifiquement et librement leur droit à l'indépendance complète, et l'intégrité de leur territoire national sera respectée."

51. Le sens de ces dispositions ne saurait être plus clair, mais il convient de le rappeler, car on l'a parfois oublié dans l'ardeur des discussions. Il était opportun de rappeler ces dispositions dans le consensus que le Comité spécial a adopté sur Gibraltar à sa 291ème séance, le 16 octobre 1964^{4/}, et le Comité a donc affirmé que "les dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux s'appliquent intégralement au territoire de Gibraltar". Le Comité prenait ensuite note, dans ce consensus, du différend opposant le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne au sujet de Gibraltar, mais, de l'avis de la délégation ceylanaise, reconnaître qu'il existe un différend ne saurait être interprété comme signifiant que les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) doivent passer au second plan. La Quatrième Commission ne saurait considérer que le fait de reconnaître la nécessité, pour le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne, d'engager des négociations sur la question de Gibraltar signifie que le droit des habitants de Gibraltar à l'indépendance souveraine est de ceux qui peuvent se marchander. Les arguments pour ou contre la restitution et le transfert des territoires d'une puissance à l'autre ont leur origine dans un obscur passé colonial, placé sous le signe de divers traités signifiant la guerre ou la paix: ils sont sans rapport avec les questions dont s'occupe la Quatrième Commission, et en tous cas sans valeur pour elle.

52. Pour la délégation ceylanaise, les dispositions susmentionnées constituent une clause de sauvegarde visant à faire en sorte que, lorsqu'un peuple assujéti est décolonisé, il ne soit jamais remis à une autre puissance coloniale, à moins qu'il n'en décide ainsi expressément. Toujours selon cette délégation, il appartient à la Quatrième Commission — sauf accord exprès des populations appelées à bénéficier de la décolonisation — de veiller à ce que la décolonisation entreprise en vertu des résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale ne serve jamais de prétexte au transfert ou à la restitution de territoires cédés par des accords intervenus entre d'anciennes puissances coloniales, ceci indépendamment de la question de savoir si ces transferts ont été ou non approuvés par la communauté internationale au moment de la session. Les intérêts de la population doivent toujours l'emporter.

53. Etant donné ces circonstances et ces raisons de force majeure, la délégation ceylanaise se voit contrainte à regret de s'élever contre la revendication formulée par le représentant de l'Espagne à la 1743ème séance de la Commission. La délégation ceylanaise s'élève en particulier contre la déclaration ci-après du représentant de l'Espagne:

"En effet, les Nations Unies, dans la résolution 2070 (XX), qui confirme le consensus adopté par le Comité spécial le 16 octobre 1964, manifestaient leur désir de voir la décolonisation de Gibraltar se faire selon une formule négociée entre l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni, formule qui serait conforme aux dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) et qui tiendrait compte des intérêts des habitants de Gibraltar. La résolution 2231 (XXI) reprenait le même thème en le précisant; ce texte insiste en effet sur la nécessité de décoloniser Gibraltar, déplore les difficultés élevées par le Royaume-Uni au sujet des négociations recommandées par les Nations Unies et, en invitant l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni à prendre en considération les intérêts des habitants de Gibraltar, exclut la possibilité d'appliquer à ces habitants le principe de l'autodétermination, ce que faisait déjà le consensus adopté par le Comité spécial en 1964 et confirmé par la résolution 2070 (XX) déjà mentionnée.

"... L'un [de ces principes], le principe de l'autodétermination, énoncé au paragraphe 2 [de la résolution 1514 (XV)] et complété dans les paragraphes 3, 4 et 5 de cette même résolution, a déjà été jugé par les Nations Unies, à juste titre, comme ne s'appliquant pas au cas concret de Gibraltar. Il est évident que seul le paragraphe 6, complété par le paragraphe 7 de la résolution 1514 (XV), offre la base d'une solution au problème de Gibraltar."

54. La position du représentant de l'Espagne est celle-ci: les habitants de Gibraltar ne peuvent pas avoir recours au droit à l'autodétermination. Il affirme que l'Assemblée générale et le Comité spécial se sont mis d'accord ou sont de connivence pour refuser l'exercice d'un droit fondamental et que, pour s'en tenir au sens et à la portée des résolutions 1514 (XV), 2070 (XX) et 2231 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale, le Royaume-Uni doit engager des négociations avec l'Espagne en vue de remettre les habitants de Gibraltar à la juridiction de celle-ci, même si cela doit se faire contre leur volonté expresse. La délégation ceylanaise juge absolument inacceptable chacune des propositions qui figurent dans cette partie de l'argument de l'Espagne.

55. La délégation ceylanaise ne trouve pas dans les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale déjà mentionnées la moindre preuve à l'appui de l'interprétation selon laquelle l'Assemblée entendrait refuser à la population de Gibraltar l'exercice d'un droit fondamental qu'elle a toujours accordé à tous les peuples décolonisés. L'examen des comptes rendus des débats du Comité spécial montre que la décision du Comité a été prise à la suite d'une plainte formulée par l'Espagne selon laquelle le Royaume-Uni avait, contrairement à la ligne de conduite définie par l'Assemblée, annulé des entretiens qui devaient avoir lieu avec l'Espagne à une date déjà fixée et organisé unilatéralement un référendum déloyal. Le Comité spécial a donc suivi la méthode qui, vu les circonstances, lui semblait être la plus pratique pour ramener les parties à la table de conférence.

56. Les déclarations faites par le représentant du Sierra Leone (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X, par. 197 à 201), par le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie (ibid., par. 202) et par le représentant du Mali (ibid., par. 183) brossent de la situation un tableau extrêmement clair.

57. Le représentant du Sierra Leone a en effet déclaré que, si sa délégation avait proposé l'amendement qui avait conduit à insérer au paragraphe 2 du dispositif de la résolution 2231 (XXI) les mots "en prenant en considération les intérêts des habitants du territoire", c'était parce qu'elle estimait que la question de Gibraltar ne pouvait être réglée par de simples négociations entre le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne. Il n'était pas douteux que les habitants d'un territoire quelconque pouvaient être consultés sur leurs intérêts par voie de référendum; dans le cas particulier de Gibraltar, la question était de savoir si la Puissance administrante aurait d'abord dû consulter l'Espagne. Pour ce qui était du paragraphe 6 de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, la délégation du Sierra Leone estimait que cette disposition, à l'instar de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale dans son ensemble, intéressait spécifiquement les territoires non autonomes; en conséquence, lorsque l'Espagne affirmait qu'il y avait eu atteinte à son intégrité territoriale, sa plainte n'était pas recevable et ne pouvait être examinée par le Comité, qui n'était compétent qu'en matière coloniale.

58. La délégation ceylanaise fait entièrement sienne cette opinion du représentant du Sierra Leone.

59. Le représentant de la République-Unie de Tanzanie, de son côté, avait déclaré que, tout en appuyant en principe le projet de résolution commun, sa délégation avait quelques réserves à faire à propos notamment du cinquième alinéa du préambule. Son interprétation du paragraphe 6 de la Déclaration différerait en effet très sensiblement de celles des auteurs du projet de résolution sur la question de l'application de ce paragraphe à Gibraltar. A son avis, en effet, le paragraphe 6 ne s'appliquait qu'aux territoires coloniaux: le lier à la question de la souveraineté d'Etats indépendants aurait des conséquences incalculables. La délégation tanzanienne, avait ajouté le représentant de ce pays, voterait pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution, mais en maintenant ses réserves en ce qui concernait le cinquième alinéa du préambule.

60. Quant au représentant du Mali, il avait déclaré que, tout en souscrivant sans réserve aux arguments du représentant du Royaume-Uni concernant la décolonisation et le droit à l'autodétermination, il tenait à préciser la position de sa délégation sur certains points.

61. Ces déclarations faites par trois avocats de la cause des peuples coloniaux opprimés montrent on ne peut plus clairement que le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) ne concerne que les territoires coloniaux, et contribuent à éclaircir le véritable sens de ce paragraphe.

62. Selon le représentant de l'Espagne, le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) est le seul paragraphe qui s'applique à la situation de Gibraltar. Il semble inconcevable à la délégation ceylanaise que les diplomates expérimentés du Comité spécial aient été amenés à conclure que le paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) se prête en quelque façon à l'interprétation que le représentant de l'Espagne cherche à lui donner. La délégation ceylanaise ne pense pas que le Comité spécial ait eu l'intention, dans le cas de Gibraltar, de faire abstraction en quoi que ce soit du principe de l'autodétermination. En outre, la délégation ceylanaise estime que, si le Comité avait agi ainsi, il aurait manifestement outre-passé le mandat que lui a confié l'Assemblée générale et il mériterait le blâme de la Quatrième Commission.

63. La lecture des comptes rendus des débats du Comité spécial, tels qu'ils sont reproduits au paragraphe 94 de son rapport (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. X), permet de comprendre exactement la raison d'être du cinquième alinéa du préambule de la résolution du Comité spécial. On peut lire en effet ce qui suit au paragraphe 94:

"Le représentant de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques aimerait savoir s'il est vrai, comme l'indiquent certains articles de presse, que le Gouvernement espagnol est prêt à régler la question de Gibraltar sur la base suivante: le Royaume-Uni reconnaîtrait la souveraineté espagnole sur Gibraltar et l'Espagne accepterait la présence d'une base britannique à Gibraltar."

64. La délégation ceylanaise pense que si le Comité spécial a conservé le cinquième alinéa du préambule de sa résolution c'est parce qu'il était peut-être à craindre que l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni, au cours de leurs négociations — qui avaient été approuvées par l'Assemblée générale —, ne concluent entre elles un "marché" en vertu duquel l'Espagne exercerait sa souveraineté sur Gibraltar tout en laissant au Royaume-Uni la possibilité de conserver sa base, formule qui serait contraire à l'esprit de la décolonisation telle qu'elle a été menée sous l'égide de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. L'adoption du texte de cet alinéa du préambule devait obvier à cette éventualité et permettre de réaffirmer le principe cardinal de l'autodétermination et le caractère souverain que revêtent les volontés des populations d'un territoire colonial.

65. La délégation ceylanaise souligne que le principe de l'autodétermination est inviolable, mais non pas uniquement parce qu'il est énoncé dans la Charte des Nations Unies. C'est un principe de la plus grande importance pour l'humanité chaque fois que sa conscience est troublée par le problème de la libération d'un peuple colonial. M. Kannangara lance un appel aux petits pays représentés à la Commission pour les inviter instamment à réaffirmer unanimement ce principe en rejetant l'interprétation du représentant de l'Espagne. Il lance également un appel aux grandes puissances et en particulier aux deux superpuissances, l'Union soviétique et les Etats-Unis. L'amitié et la coopération de ces deux grands et nobles peuples, pendant et après la seconde guerre mondiale, sont à l'origine de la fondation de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. L'appui qu'ils accordent aux institutions de l'ONU, en dépit de divergences de vues sur de nombreuses questions, permet à l'Organisation de poursuivre son œuvre vigoureuse et active en faveur de la paix. M. Kannangara leur demande instamment de ne pas permettre, par leur réserve, que le principe de la libre détermination soit bafoué ou tenu à l'écart par un vote de la Commission. Au nom de tous les petits pays du monde, M. Kannangara leur demande leur aide pour que ce principe soit réaffirmé ainsi que l'obligation qu'il entraîne.

66. En résumé, les auteurs du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.884 demandent à la Commission, premièrement, d'inviter instamment les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de l'Espagne à reprendre leurs négociations et à mettre ainsi un terme à la situation coloniale de Gibraltar; deuxièmement, de les prier de tenir compte, dans leurs consultations, des intérêts des habitants de Gibraltar; et troisièmement, de les inviter solennellement à faire en sorte que les intérêts des habitants de Gibraltar, dans la mesure où ils sont liés à l'avenir du territoire en tant que territoire indépendant et autonome, ne fassent l'objet d'aucune décision qui soit contraire aux volontés librement exprimées de ces habitants.

67. La délégation ceylanaise ne demande pas que la Commission reconnaisse ou conteste la validité du référendum qui a déjà eu lieu. Elle a pris note des arguments avancés par les deux parties à cet égard. Bien que M. Kannangara s'élève contre toute accusation de partialité implicitement ou explicitement dirigée contre ses collègues du Commonwealth — Kenya, Nouvelle-Zélande et Pakistan — qui ont assisté au référendum en qualité d'observateurs, il estime qu'il serait oiseux de débattre cette question.

68. L'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni ont été invités à reprendre leurs entretiens et c'est à ces deux puissances de faire en sorte que ces entretiens soient possibles et fructueux. La délégation ceylanaise a passé en revue et réaffirmé les principes absolument essentiels qui régissent la décolonisation et ne pense pas que l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni n'en tiendront aucun compte. L'Organisation ne les autorise pas à le faire.

69. En conclusion, M. Kannangara déclare que sa délégation voudrait, par la voie d'un consensus, faire en sorte que le différend entre le Royaume-Uni et l'Espagne cesse d'être publiquement débattu, et que l'Assemblée invite les parties à agir d'urgence pour mettre un terme au différend concernant leurs revendications territoriales, les questions douanières, l'espace aérien, etc., ainsi qu'à rendre rapidement effective la décolonisation des habitants de Gibraltar.

70. M. DE PINIES (Espagne), prenant la parole en vertu du droit de réponse, déclare que l'argument qu'il a utilisé à propos du paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la résolution 1514 (XV) ne doit pas lui être attribué. Les documents de l'Assemblée générale montrent qu'au moment de l'adoption de cette résolution le même argument a été invoqué par un certain nombre d'autres délégations. Gibraltar est un territoire colonial, une base militaire sur le sol espagnol, et il doit être décolonisé.

71. M. NKAMA (Zambie), prenant la parole au sujet de la procédure, déclare qu'à son avis le Président devrait, pour accélérer les travaux de la Commission, donner d'abord la parole aux représentants inscrits sur la liste des orateurs devant participer au débat général et laisser ensuite les délégations exercer leur droit de réponse si elles le désirent.

72. M. McCOMIE (Barbade) propose que la déclaration du représentant de Ceylan figure intégralement dans le compte rendu de la séance.

73. M. AL-RACHACH (Arabie Saoudite) se déclare opposé à l'adoption de cette proposition; le représentant de Ceylan aurait fait une déclaration bien différente si l'enclave en question s'était trouvée sur le sol de son propre pays.

74. M. BARNETT (Jamaïque) appuie la proposition du représentant de la Barbade.

75. MM. DEBRAH (Ghana) et GATUGUTA (Kenya) estiment que, puisque la Commission s'est précédemment montrée accommodante lorsqu'il s'est agi de faire figurer des déclarations intégrales, il serait logique d'adopter la proposition du représentant de la Barbade.

76. M. KANNANGARA (Ceylan), répondant au représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, déclare que Ceylan a, en fait, reconnu le principe de l'autodétermination dans le cas des îles Maldives, sur lesquelles il aurait pu faire valoir des droits.

77. M. EL HADI (Soudan) demande au représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite de ne pas maintenir ses objections.

78. M. AL-RACHACH (Arabie Saoudite) déclare qu'il accédera à la demande du représentant du Soudan, mais qu'il reviendra ultérieurement sur les raisons pour lesquelles il s'est déclaré contre la proposition de la Barbade.

79. Le PRÉSIDENT déclare que, s'il n'y a pas d'objection, la proposition de la Barbade sera adoptée.

80. M. CHTOUROU (Tunisie) déclare qu'il ne veut faire aucune objection formelle à l'égard de cette proposition, mais qu'à son avis des propositions de ce genre peuvent constituer de dangereux précédents et entraîner de lourdes charges financières pour l'Organisation.

La proposition de la Barbade est adoptée.

81. M. SLOWIKOWSKI (Pologne) dit que, tout en soutenant fermement la lutte des peuples de tous les territoires, notamment du Souaziland, de la Guinée équatoriale, de la Côte française des Somalis et des Antilles, pour l'autodétermination et l'indépendance, la délégation polonaise souhaite se pencher plus particulièrement sur le problème des petits territoires. Récemment, cette question a retenu plus spécialement l'attention de la Commission, ceci à juste titre. En effet, quelles que soient les conditions particulières qui existent dans ces territoires, leurs habitants n'en ont pas moins le droit inaliénable de décider de leur avenir, avec une entière liberté et en pleine connaissance de leurs droits, au même titre que les habitants des grands territoires, et les griefs des populations des petits territoires sous domination coloniale sont aussi sérieux que ceux des populations plus nombreuses. C'est précisément en raison des facteurs particuliers aux petits territoires insulaires, tels que l'éloignement, le faible niveau de développement économique, les communications peu fréquentes avec le monde extérieur et le fait qu'ils sont à l'écart des pressions de l'opinion publique mondiale, qu'ils doivent recevoir une attention toute particulière et qu'un ensemble de principes de base doit être élaboré pour résoudre le problème, conformément à la Charte et à la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée.

82. Certains grands territoires, notamment dans le sud de l'Afrique, sont considérés comme importants par les forces colonialistes pour des raisons essentiellement économiques. L'importance des petits territoires, par contre, vient du rôle qu'ils assument dans la stratégie militaire d'ensemble des puissances coloniales. La tendance croissante des puissances administrantes à utiliser les petits territoires pour y établir des bases et des installations militaires, dans le but d'encercler le globe tout entier, constitue une menace, non seulement à la sécurité et à l'intégrité territoriales des pays qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance, mais à la paix et à la sécurité internationales. Certaines de ces bases ont déjà été utilisées dans des buts d'agression contre d'autres nations, notamment l'île de l'Ascension, qui a servi de base à des attaques contre la République démocratique du Congo, et l'île de Guam, utilisée pour des interventions militaires au Viet-Nam. La militarisation des territoires non autonomes par les puissances administrantes est contraire à l'esprit de la Charte et aux dispositions des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, notamment de la résolution 2189 (XXI), aux termes de laquelle l'Assemblée générale, au paragraphe 11 du dispositif, prie les puissances coloniales de démanteler leurs bases et installations militaires dans les territoires coloniaux, ainsi que de s'abstenir d'en établir de nouvelles, et de la résolution 2232 (XXI), en vertu de laquelle l'Assemblée, au paragraphe 4 du dispositif, réitère que l'établissement de bases militaires dans les territoires est incompatible avec la Charte et la résolution 1514 (XV). L'île de Guam, à laquelle ces deux résolutions sont applicables, a été transformée par le Gouvernement des États-Unis en une forteresse militaire utilisée à des fins d'agression contre le Viet-Nam. Le 22 mars 1967, le New York Times a signalé que l'économie de Guam était maintenant centrée essentiellement autour des installations navales et aériennes situées dans le territoire, qui servent de base à 6 sous-marins Polaris et à plus de 50 bombardiers B-52.

83. La résolution 2232 (XXI) réitère également que toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale des territoires coloniaux est incompatible avec la Charte et la résolution 1514 (XV). Presque aussitôt après l'adoption de cette résolution, en décembre 1966, les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et des Etats-Unis ont échangé les dernières communications touchant leur utilisation commune de ce qu'on appelle le "territoire britannique de l'océan Indien". Le même jour, un autre accord a été conclu au sujet de l'utilisation d'une partie des îles Seychelles. La portée réelle de ces accords est révélée par un article paru dans l'Economist du 11 novembre 1967, intitulé "The Case for Aldabra", qui signale que des avions de transport de troupes peuvent faire le trajet du Royaume-Uni à Aldabra — dans le territoire britannique de l'océan Indien — en faisant escale à la base américaine de l'île de l'Ascension et que, à partir d'Aldabra, ils peuvent voler dans toutes les directions. L'article mentionne par ailleurs qu'Aldabra peut également être utilisée comme base pour des forces aériennes de choc servant à appuyer l'infanterie dans des opérations en Afrique centrale et orientale. Les Nations Unies sont en droit de réclamer aux puissances administrantes des explications nettes en ce qui concerne leurs politiques touchant le démembrement des territoires non autonomes et leur utilisation de ces territoires pour l'établissement de bases militaires.

84. La militarisation des territoires non autonomes porte également atteinte à l'évolution de ceux-ci vers l'émancipation politique. Après l'établissement d'une base sur un territoire quel qu'il soit, son économie est subordonnée aux besoins de la base, et l'équilibre harmonieux de son développement économique futur est compromis. Par ailleurs, la population se trouve en première ligne en cas de conflit, sans disposer d'aucune possibilité de choix. L'Assemblée générale doit condamner les politiques pratiquées par les puissances administrantes et réitérer la demande adressée à ces puissances au paragraphe 4 du dispositif de la résolution 2232 (XXI). En outre, le Comité spécial doit continuer à étudier les activités et arrangements militaires des puissances coloniales dans les territoires non autonomes, qui font obstacle à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV), et présenter ses conclusions à l'Assemblée générale, à sa prochaine session.

85. Les puissances administrantes, en refusant de permettre aux missions de visite de se rendre dans les territoires, ont empêché les Nations Unies de contribuer d'une façon plus efficace aux progrès de la décolonisation dans les petits territoires. L'Assemblée doit à nouveau demander instamment à ces puissances d'accueillir les missions de visite. Malgré les nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée, les puissances administrantes cherchent encore à perpétuer leur domination coloniale. La délégation polonaise estime que le moment est venu de demander aux puissances coloniales de soumettre des plans et des dates pour la mise en route du processus d'autodétermination dans les différents territoires. Les intérêts des populations des petits territoires ont été longtemps négligés, et les Nations Unies ne devraient ménager aucun effort pour les aider à obtenir leur indépendance.

86. M. AL-RACHACH (Arabie Saoudite) dit que sa délégation s'inquiète de la situation qui règne dans la Côte française des Somalis et déplore que la Puissance administrante ait ignoré la demande formulée par l'Assemblée générale au paragraphe 4 du dispositif de la résolution 2228 (XXI), aux termes duquel elle aurait dû prendre les mesures nécessaires en vue d'une présence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le territoire avant le référendum et au cours de celui-ci. Par ailleurs, le Gouvernement français n'a pas créé le climat politique voulu pour un référendum organisé sur une base entièrement libre et démocratique, comme il en était prié au paragraphe 3 du dispositif. Le référendum a été organisé dans des conditions telles que les résultats obtenus sont extrêmement contestables, notamment du fait que le droit de vote a été refusé à un grand nombre de personnes qui auraient dû normalement avoir accès aux urnes.

87. La délégation de l'Arabie Saoudite déplore également la politique poursuivie par la Puissance administrante depuis le référendum. Le nouveau statut n'a pas amélioré le sort de la population. La situation anormale qui règne dans le territoire est mise en relief par le rapport du Comité spécial (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. XII). Il est également regrettable que les représentants de la Puissance administrante n'aient pas jugé bon d'assister aux réunions du Comité spécial où la question de la Côte française des Somalis a été discutée et qu'ils se soient également abstenus de participer à la séance en cours.

88. L'Assemblée générale doit réaffirmer le droit inaliénable de la population de la Côte française des Somalis à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et prier le Comité spécial de poursuivre ses efforts en vue de hâter la décolonisation du territoire; elle doit en outre demander instamment à la Puissance administrante d'accorder sans retard l'indépendance au territoire. M. Al-Rachach espère que le Gouvernement français réglera le problème en s'appuyant sur les principes de justice et de liberté qui ont inspiré la Révolution française et qui sont reflétés dans la politique que la France a suivie envers la plupart de ses anciennes colonies.

89. En ce qui concerne Gibraltar, M. Al-Rachach, en réponse aux remarques formulées par le représentant de Ceylan au début de la séance, dit qu'on ne peut pas mettre en parallèle le cas des îles Maldives et celui de Gibraltar. En effet, les habitants des îles Maldives vivent sur leur propre territoire, tandis que, dans le cas de Gibraltar, la situation actuelle est un fait accompli résultant de l'expulsion de la population par la puissance coloniale et de l'importation d'aventuriers d'origines diverses. M. Al-Rachach voit mal comment le résultat d'un référendum déterminant la volonté de cette population ainsi importée peut être qualifié d'autodétermination.

90. M. NKAMA (Zambie) dit qu'en ce qui concerne la question de la Côte française des Somalis le climat politique actuel ne fait que justifier les craintes exprimées par sa délégation à la session précédente (1664ème séance), au cours de laquelle elle avait demandé l'organisation d'un référendum libre et équitable et exprimé l'opinion que les résultats du référendum seraient dénués de toute signification si une majorité aussi nombreuse que possible de la population n'y participait pas. Malheureusement, la Puissance administrante n'a pas accédé à cette requête. Le 20 mars 1967, en signe de protestation contre les résultats du référendum qui venaient d'être publiés, de violentes émeutes ont éclaté à Djibouti, au cours desquelles on a dénombré 11 morts pour cette seule journée et 20 pour l'ensemble des manifestations. De hauts fonctionnaires de l'administration, notamment des ministres, ont démissionné. En dépit de la résolution 2228 (XXI) de l'Assemblée générale, la France n'a pas pris les mesures nécessaires en vue d'assurer la présence de l'ONU dans le territoire. On ne peut guère prétendre que le référendum a été organisé sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes. En effet, sur une population totale de 58 000 Somalis, 700 seulement ont été inscrits sur les listes électorales, et pour les Afars le nombre des inscrits était de 22 000 sur un total de 48 000. Ainsi, même si l'on se base sur ces chiffres qui ont été publiés par le Gouvernement français, on constate qu'un tiers seulement de la population autochtone a participé au référendum, tandis que la majorité des expatriés français, y compris les militaires, ont pu voter. Par ailleurs, n'ont pu voter que ceux qui avaient atteint l'âge requis en 1958. La commission de recensement et de jugement créée pour étudier les réclamations ayant suivi le référendum se composait de trois ressortissants français, alors qu'une commission autochtone aurait semblé plus appropriée. Il y avait 35 nouveaux bureaux de vote, pour la plupart situés dans des zones d'accès difficile. Seuls les partis politiques autorisés ont pu mener une campagne électorale, les groupements indépendants ou non officiels n'en ayant pas le droit. En outre, la durée maximum de cette campagne, même pour les partis politiques autorisés, était de 12 jours, et devait se terminer 2 jours avant le scrutin. Les représentants de pays ayant accédé récemment à l'indépendance et dont les routes sont souvent encore impraticables sont mieux à même que d'autres d'apprécier les obstacles que représente ce règlement pour les chefs des partis politiques.

91. Si les Nations Unies avaient été autorisées à jouer un rôle dans l'organisation du référendum, beaucoup des anomalies qui ont été constatées auraient sans nul doute pu être évitées. Et pourtant, malgré les conditions dans lesquelles le référendum a eu lieu, 40 p. 100 de la population a voté pour l'indépendance totale. Si l'on considère qu'il s'agit d'un pays où des milliers de personnes se trouvent dans des camps d'internement et où certaines ont été contraintes de fuir à l'étranger pour conserver leur liberté, il est clair que la volonté de la population de la Côte française des Somalis est d'accéder à l'indépendance.

92. En raison des circonstances dans lesquelles le référendum a été organisé et de l'absence d'un contrôle de l'ONU, la Commission manquerait à son devoir si elle entérinait le résultat du vote intervenu en mars 1967. Les puissances administrantes ont souvent déclaré à la Commission que leurs colonies pesaient lourdement sur l'économie de la métropole. S'il en était ainsi, elles devraient permettre aux Nations Unies d'alléger ce fardeau. Les obligations de la France envers la Côte française des Somalis ne sont pas de faire de ce pays un territoire français mais de conduire la population à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et de préserver le patrimoine culturel du peuple colonial.

93. On comprend mal pourquoi la question posée aux électeurs de la Côte française des Somalis était rédigée comme suit: "Voulez-vous que le territoire demeure au sein de la République française avec le statut renouvelé de gouvernement et d'administration dont les éléments essentiels ont été portés à votre connaissance?" Le devoir de la Puissance administrante n'est pas de poser des questions ambiguës et difficiles aux peuples coloniaux, il est d'aider ceux-ci à accéder à l'indépendance. Il est clair qu'aucun peuple au monde ne refuserait la liberté et l'indépendance.

94. En résumé, la délégation zambienne regrette que la Puissance administrante n'ait pas répondu d'une façon positive à la résolution 2228 (XXI), notamment au paragraphe 4 de son dispositif; elle déplore la perte de 20 vies humaines qui a immédiatement suivi le référendum et estime que la Puissance administrante devrait appliquer sans retard la résolution 1514 (XV). Il est manifeste que la population de la Côte française des Somalis ne souhaite pas maintenir son association avec la France. M. Nkama espère qu'à la présente session le représentant de la France voudra bien expliquer à la Commission la position de son gouvernement, et il souhaite que cette position soit conforme à la Charte des Nations Unies.

95. En ce qui concerne la Guinée équatoriale, M. Nkama se félicite des déclarations de l'Espagne, qui semblent indiquer que ce pays va réagir de façon positive à l'opinion exprimée par la population du territoire et reconnaître que les représentants de celle-ci ont exprimé leur volonté d'indépendance et de liberté. Le Gouvernement espagnol a également précisé son intention de conduire la Guinée équatoriale à l'indépendance nationale, et M. Nkama espère que les déclarations de l'Espagne se traduiront pleinement dans les faits.

96. En ce qui concerne Ifni et le Sahara espagnol, le représentant de la Zambie exprime le vœu que l'Espagne, qui s'est déclarée prête à se conformer aux décisions des Nations Unies à cet égard, décolonisera sans retard ces territoires, dont les populations peuvent prétendre à juste titre à l'autodétermination. La Zambie attend avec impatience le jour où le Nord et le Sud du continent africain seront libérés de toutes les formes de domination et d'exploitation étrangères.

97. M. Nkama espère que le silence qu'il a gardé lorsqu'on a soulevé le problème de certains territoires, notamment des îles Falkland (Malvinas) et de Gibraltar, ne sera pas mal interprété. En effet, on ne peut s'attendre à ce que la Zambie, qui est devenue une nation indépendante grâce à une révolution menée contre le colonialisme, approuve des politiques coloniales d'aucune sorte. L'attitude que ce pays adoptera en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution relatif à ces questions sera dictée uniquement par les principes de la Charte.

98. M. CASTILLO ARRIOLA (Guatemala) rappelle la déclaration qu'il a faite à la 1746^{ème} séance, dans laquelle il a indiqué la position de sa délégation en ce qui concerne le différend territorial relatif à Belize, et éclairci certains points soulevés par M. Rogers, à qui la Commission avait accordé une audience. L'intervention du représentant de la Jamaïque à la même séance semble indiquer que ce représentant a mal compris la déclaration de la délégation guatémaltèque, étant donné qu'il a prétendu que la conclusion logique découlant des arguments de cette délégation serait que les Guatémaltèques, en tant que descendants des conquistadores, devraient rendre leur pays aux Indiens mayas. En fait, M. Castillo Arriola a précisé que le différend territorial qui oppose le Guatemala au Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne le territoire de Belize remonte à une centaine d'années, et que la médiation lui a paru être un moyen approprié pour régler le litige, sans nuire aux intérêts et au bien-être de la population. Les deux parties au différend ont d'ailleurs suggéré au médiateur certaines mesures tendant à protéger les intérêts de cette population. Le Guatemala s'intéresse vivement au bien-être de la population de Belize, qui se compose d'une part d'indiens de langue espagnole et d'autre part de personnes venant des Antilles qui se sont fixées sur ce territoire. Le Guatemala est le résultat de la fusion d'un grand nombre de races et il a acquis à la longue un fort sentiment national et de profondes convictions démocratiques.

99. M. BARNETT (Jamaïque) répond que le représentant du Guatemala a probablement mal compris la déclaration qu'il a faite à la 1746ème séance. Cependant, il tient à noter que le représentant du Guatemala vient de préciser nettement que la population du Honduras britannique comprend non seulement des Indiens mayas et leurs descendants, mais également une population en provenance des Antilles, qui s'est fixée sur ce territoire et fait désormais partie intégrante de sa population, et dont les intérêts et les vœux doivent être respectés dans tout processus de décolonisation entrepris au Honduras britannique.

100. Le PRESIDENT dit qu'à la séance suivante la Commission devra conclure la discussion générale du point à l'étude et voter sur les projets de résolution concernant la question de Gibraltar et sur les amendements y relatifs.

101. M. MAKKAWI (Liban) propose que la Commission ajourne le vote sur les projets de résolution relatifs à Gibraltar et sur les amendements y relatifs jusqu'à la séance du lendemain matin, 16 décembre 1967.

102. Après un échange de vues, le PRESIDENT met aux voix la proposition du Liban.

Par 47 voix contre 20, avec 15 abstentions, la proposition du Liban est adoptée.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: territoires n'ayant pas été examinés séparément (suite) [A/6661, A/6662, A/6700/Rev.1, chap. VIII à XII et XIV à XXIII; A/6802, A/6845, A/6876, S/6882, A/C.4/703, A/C.4/704, A/C.4/L.876/Rev.1, A/C.4/L.893 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.894 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.898 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.899, A/C.4/L.901, A/C.4/L.902]

EXAMEN DE PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (fin) [A/C.4/L.876/REV.1, A/C.4/L.893 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.894 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.898 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.899]

Par 72 voix contre zéro, avec 26 abstentions, le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 concernant vingt-six territoires est adopté.

41. M. GARCIA (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) indique que les Etats-Unis se sont abstenus de voter sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 et auraient voté contre le paragraphe 4 du dispositif si ce paragraphe avait fait l'objet d'un vote séparé. On connaît bien la position des Etats-Unis sur la question des installations militaires dans les territoires non autonomes. Aucune disposition de la Charte des Nations Unies ne peut être interprétée comme s'opposant à l'établissement d'installations de cet ordre, que les Etats sont en droit de maintenir en vue de défendre leur territoire et leurs ressortissants.

42. M. BARNETT (Jamaïque) déclare que sa délégation s'est abstenue de voter sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 pour deux raisons. D'une part, elle était surprise que la résolution en question ne contienne aucune allusion au Honduras britannique, et d'autre part elle considérait que les six territoires antillais ayant opté pour l'association avec le Royaume-Uni auraient dû, à son avis, faire l'objet d'une résolution séparée et non pas dû figurer dans un projet portant sur des territoires non autonomes proprement dits. La Jamaïque approuve cependant les clauses de la résolution touchant les autres territoires. Par ailleurs, elle partage l'opinion selon laquelle la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale continue à être applicable aux territoires ayant choisi un statut d'association.

43. M. DE LA ROSA (Philippines) signale que si sa délégation a voté pour le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 les réserves qu'elle a déjà exprimées lors de la 1634^{ème} séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale, le 15 décembre 1967, en ce qui concerne la question des bases militaires dans les territoires non autonomes n'en subsistent pas moins.

44. M. KANNANGARA (Ceylan) indique que le vote de sa délégation pour le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 témoigne de l'appui qu'elle prête aux principes énoncés dans cette résolution, mais qu'elle souhaite toutefois exprimer certaines réserves sur le texte de celle-ci. Elle estime que les modifications survenues dans certains territoires et qui sont mentionnées au quatrième paragraphe du préambule auraient justifié un examen séparé des territoires en question; elle pense en effet que certaines des dispositions de la résolution leur sont difficilement applicables.

45. M. McCOMIE (Barbade) rappelle que sa délégation s'est abstenue de voter pour la résolution A/C.4/L.899. Cela n'indique pas un affaiblissement de l'appui que sa délégation a toujours apporté au principe du droit des peuples coloniaux à l'autodétermination, mais, étant donné que la résolution note les changements constitutionnels qui ont été adoptés ou sont envisagés dans six territoires antillais et du fait que la délégation barbadienne sait de source sûre que ces changements sont survenus conformément à la volonté de la population, elle n'a pu appuyer le projet de résolution dans sa forme actuelle. La Barbade aurait préféré que les six territoires en question fassent l'objet d'une résolution spéciale, car elle considère qu'ils restent des territoires non autonomes et que la Puissance administrante doit encore répondre, à l'égard de l'Assemblée générale, des changements constitutionnels qui y surviennent. La position de la délégation barbadienne provient également du fait que les nouvelles dispositions constitutionnelles permettent aux territoires de choisir l'indépendance quand ils le veulent, conformément aux principes énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale.

46. La délégation barbadienne n'est pas satisfaite du libellé du paragraphe 2 du dispositif, car elle ne pense pas que l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les territoires non autonomes puisse être considéré comme un remède universel. C'est aux populations elles-mêmes de décider de la forme et du rythme que doit prendre la décolonisation de leurs territoires respectifs.

47. La délégation barbadienne s'inquiète du fait que la résolution ne fasse aucune allusion au Honduras britannique, territoire non autonome reconnu comme tel, d'autant que le paragraphe 4 du dispositif reprend d'une façon explicite le principe énoncé au paragraphe 6 de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, en des termes qui évitent même la légère ambiguïté présentée par ce paragraphe. En effet, le paragraphe 4 parle expressément de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale des "territoires coloniaux". Il est regrettable que, dans un document qui est censé protéger l'intégrité territoriale des territoires coloniaux, le Honduras britannique soit exclu, car cela semblerait vouloir indiquer que ce territoire ne rentre pas dans le champ d'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale.

48. M. NOOR ADLAN (Malaisie) déclare que sa délégation a voté en faveur du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 mais tient à réserver sa position en ce qui concerne la mention d'Antigua, de la Dominique, de la Grenade, de Saint-Christophe-et-Nièves et Anguilla, de Sainte-Lucie et de Saint-Vincent, car la position de ces territoires est différente de celle des autres territoires dont il s'agit et ne doit pas être confondue avec elle. Sans doute le quatrième alinéa du préambule de la résolution cherche-t-il à établir une certaine distinction, mais le fait est que les territoires intéressés ont exercé l'autodétermination conformément à la Charte et à la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée et ont opté pour leur association avec le Royaume-Uni. Il aurait donc mieux convenu de s'en occuper dans une résolution séparée. La délégation malaisienne se serait abstenue lors du vote sur le sixième alinéa du préambule et le paragraphe 4 du dispositif s'ils avaient fait l'objet de votes séparés, les questions dont ils traitent n'étant pas du ressort de la Quatrième Commission.

49. M. SOYLEMEZ (Turquie) dit que sa délégation a voté en faveur du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899. Toutefois, elle se serait abstenue sur le sixième alinéa du préambule et le paragraphe 4 du dispositif s'ils avaient été mis aux voix séparément.

50. M. BERRO (Uruguay) dit que sa délégation s'est abstenue lors du vote sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899, conformément aux opinions qu'elle a exprimées au Comité spécial sur les territoires des Antilles orientales et notamment compte tenu des déclarations des pétitionnaires que le Comité a entendus à propos de la situation à Anguilla. M. Berro renvoie la Commission aux documents du Comité spécial (A/6700/Rev.1, chap. XXIII) à cet égard.

51. M. MARTINEZ (Argentine) dit que sa délégation appuie le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.899 en raison de l'importance qu'elle attache à la sauvegarde de l'intégrité territoriale des pays. Son appui à la deuxième partie de ce paragraphe est sans préjudice de sa position juridique en ce qui concerne la hiérarchie institutionnelle au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et des réserves qu'elle a exprimées touchant des paragraphes analogues dans la résolution antérieure relative aux bases militaires dans les territoires non autonomes. Ces réserves s'appliquent également au paragraphe 1 du dispositif dans la mesure où elle approuve les conclusions du Comité spécial sur ces bases.
