48. Ces arguments d'ordre juridique auraient suffi pour justifier une opposition au projet de résolution de l'Egypte. Tout en maintenant toutes les réserves qu'elle a formulées, notamment en ce qui concerne le Comité spécial, la délégation belge s'abstiendra lors du vote sur le projet de résolution de l'Egypte car elle tient à souligner, et elle a en cela l'appui de la majorité des Membres, que toutes les populations non autonomes du globe doivent recevoir de la part de l'Organisation des Nations Unies les mêmes garanties effectives.

49. M. NORIEGA (Mexique) ne pense pas que la proposition égyptienne constitue une modification de la Charte comme l'estime le représentant du Royaume-Uni. La valeur de la Charte dépend de la bonne volonté et de la bonne foi de tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Selon le représentant de la France, les huit pays qui ont accepté volontairement de transmettre des renseignements en vertu du Chapitre XI sont parfaitement libres de cesser, à quelque moment que ce soit, de transmettre ces renseignements. Néanmoins, le Chapitre XI forme partie intégrante de la Charte et il institue des obligations internationales, à la fois pour les Membres des Nations Unies qui ont la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes et pour ceux qui n'ont pas cette responsabilité. Le projet de résolution de l'Egypte doit être examiné en tenant compte de ce fait.

50. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré que, par suite de modifications d'ordre constitutionnel survenues à Malte, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne s'occupe plus, dans ce terri-toire, des questions d'ordre économique, social et culturel. Il a reconnu cependant que la population maltaise ne s'administrerait pas encore complètement elle-même. Dans ces conditions, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni devrait continuer à transmettre des renseignements sur Malte. En somme, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a fait que déléguer des pouvoirs au Gouvernement de Malte.

51. En ce qui concerne les observations des représentants de la France et de la Belgique, M. Noriega estime que le cas de noyaux de population qui sont sous la dépendance d'une race étrangère est entièrement différent de celui des territoires non autonomes. Ces noyaux de populations, bien que pour des raisons d'ordre culturel ils ne fassent pas partie intégrante de la communauté, jouissent néanmoins des mêmes droits civils et politiques que le reste de la population. Il est vrai que certains groupes de populations sont soumis à des mesures discriminatoires et de ségrégation; la délégation du Mexique fera tout ce qui est en son pouvoir pour leur faire rendre justice.

52. Le représentant du Mexique invite les Puissances administrantes à faire preuve d'esprit de conciliation en proposant une formule qu'elles jugent acceptable et qui donne satisfaction à l'Assemblée générale. Il voudrait voir se réduire la liste des territoires non autonomes et les populations de ces territoires parvenir à s'administrer vraiment elles-mêmes. La délégation du Mexique sera la première à féliciter les Puissances administrantes lorsque ce résultat sera atteint.

53. M. CARPIO (Philippines) fait observer que le nombre des territoires pour lesquels des renseignements sont transmis en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte est tombé de soixante-quatorze à soixante-deux, sans que les Puissances administrantes fournissent, à ce sujet, la moindre explication; en effet, ces Puissances prétendent qu'il leur appartient à elles seules de décider si elles doivent ou ne doivent pas transmettre des renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes figurant dans la liste initiale. Le projet de résolution présenté par la délégation égyptienne conteste la validité de cet argument et soulève la question de savoir si l'Assemblée générale a ou n'a pas son mot à dire en la matière.

54. La délégation des Philippines estime qu'une fois qu'un territoire non autonome est inscrit sur la liste des territoires auxquels s'applique l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, il n'appartient plus à la Puissance administrante seule de décider si elle doit ou non continuer de transmettre des renseignements sur ce territoire. Par l'Article 73, les Puissances administrantes ont reconnu le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes et elles ont accepté comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser leur prospérité. Le concept primordial du système des mandats était que l'homme blanc avait des responsabilités à assumer à l'égard des populations moins évoluées. Ce concept a été énoncé, en des termes différents, dans l'Article 73. Les dispositions du Chapitre XI s'appliquent à environ 200 millions d'habitants qui, jusqu'ici, n'ont guère eu voix au chapitre dans l'administration de leurs propres intérêts. Néanmoins, des progrès sont réalisés dans ce domaine; c'est ainsi qu'en trois ans, un certain nombre de pays du sud-est de l'Asie sont parvenus à l'indépendance.

C'est une évolution historique qui s'accomplit et que rien ne peut empêcher; c'est pour cette raison qu'il importe que la décision à prendre sur le point de savoir s'il y a lieu ou non de transmettre des renseignements ne soit pas unilatérale. Le seul critère à observer, c'est de savoir si les populations sont en mesure de s'administrer entièrement elles-mêmes; jusqu'à ce que cette condition soit réalisée, les Puissances administrantes n'ont aucune raison de prétendre qu'elles ont rempli leurs obligations découlant du Chapitre XI.

55. La Charte indique aux Membres des Nations Unies les moyens de contribuer au bien-être des populations du globe. Bien souvent, le mécanisme n'a pas été créé, mais la voie est néanmoins tracée et tous les Membres des Nations Unies ont le devoir de la suivre, afin que l'Organisation des Nations Unies soit une réalité vivante, capable de faire face aux exigences changeantes des temps modernes.

56. M. Carpio comprend fort bien, comme le représentant de la Belgique, que l'établissement du critère fixant le moment à partir duquel la transmission des renseignements doit cesser offre de nombreuses difficultés, et il reconnaît la force de l'argument juridique du Royaume-Uni. Néanmoins, jusqu'à ce que les populations soient en mesure de s'administrer complètement elles-mêmes, l'obligation pour les Puissances coloniales de transmettre les renseignements reste entière.

57. La délégation des Philippines votera, en conséquence, en faveur du projet de résolution égyptien.

58. M. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) fait observer que le représentant de l'Égypte a rappelé qu'en 1946 la délégation de Cuba s'est élevée contre la proposition de définir l'expression "territoires non autonomes". Cuba a toujours désiré que l'Article 73 soit interprété dans le sens le plus large possible et s'est toujours montré hostile à une définition prématurée de ce terme qui aurait pu avoir un effet limitatif; toutefois, la délégation de Cuba estime que le moment est venu d'établir cette définition. L'Article 73 est parfaitement clair. Il parle de "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore elles-mêmes". Jusqu'à ce qu'elles soient en mesure de le faire, toutes les dispositions de l'Article 73 restent en vigueur. Il y a donc lieu de s'accorder sur le sens exact à donner à l'expression "ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". A cette condition seule, les Puissances administrantes connaîtront exactement leurs obligations touchant la transmission des renseignements. Le représentant de Cuba ne peut partager l'opinion suivant laquelle, parce qu'un territoire est parvenu à l'autonomie dans le domaine social et de l'instruction, la transmission des informations relatif à ce territoire doit cesser automatiquement.

59. Répondant au représentant de la France, M. Pérez Cisneros estime qu'une fois que la liste des territoires non autonomes a été établie, cette liste est uniquement du ressort de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et l'Assemblée générale doit, par conséquent, continuer à recevoir des informations sur tous les territoires qui y sont inscrits. Il partage l'avis du représentant de la France suivant lequel la liste des territoires non autonomes devrait être étendue et non pas réduite. Il n'existe aucune véritable différence de principe entre les Membres des Nations Unies qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer les territoires non autonomes et ceux qui n'ont pas de responsabilité de ce genre; M. Pérez Cisneros estime que la plupart des Etats Membres rentrant dans la première catégorie voteront en faveur du projet de résolution.

60. Il peut sembler que la délégation de Cuba ait modifié son point de vue, mais en réalité elle estime comme elle l'a toujours fait que l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 doit être interprété dans le sens le plus large possible. Le représentant de Cuba votera donc en faveur du projet de résolution égyptien.

61. M. GARREAU (France) souligne que la question qu'il a posée, et qu'a posée également le représentant de la Belgique, n'a reçu aucune réponse: la question fondamentale de définir exactement les populations non autonomes.

62. Le prince WAN WAITHAYAKON (Thaïlande) approuve le but visé par le projet de résolution égyptien.

63. En ce qui concerne le dernier paragraphe du dispositif de ce projet, il semble que la tâche du Comité spécial sera particulièrement difficile; il faut néanmoins que l'essai soit tenté. En conséquence, il votera en faveur de ce paragraphe.

64. Pour ce qui est du premier paragraphe du dispositif, il est acceptable en principe. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a attiré l'attention de la Commission sur la réserve concernant les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel qui est prévue par l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; toutefois, le texte de l'alinéa indique nettement que l'Assemblée générale pourra examiner les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel invoquées pour cesser de transmettre ou pour ne pas transmettre des renseignements, et elle pourra faire connaître son avis. Le prince Wan Waithayakon ne pense pas qu'il soit bon que le premier paragraphe du dispositif impose une obligation à l'Assemblée générale et il propose que le début de cet alinéa soit ainsi conçu: "Estime que l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour exprimer un avis . . ." Si cette modification est acceptée, il votera en faveur du projet de résolution. Dans le cas contraire, il s'abstiendra.

65. M. FARRAG (Egypte) accepte la proposition du représentant de la Thaïlande.

66. Il propose de lever la séance.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

La séance est levée à 13 h. 20.

CENT VINGT-CINQUIEME SEANCE

Tenue à Lake Success, New-York, le mercredi 16 novembre 1949, à 15 heures.

Président: M. H. LANNUNG (Danemark).

Renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes (suite)

1. Le PRÉSIDENT invite la Commission à poursuivre l'examen du projet de résolution relatif aux territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte, projet présenté par la délégation de l'Egypte (A/C.4/L.37/Rev.3).
2. M. FLETCHER-COOKE (Royaume-Uni) tient à présenter à nouveau la position du Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution présenté par la délégation de l'Egypte.
3. Tout d'abord, le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a pas dit, comme l'a prétendu le représentant du Mexique à la 124ème séance, qu'il y aurait lieu de modifier la Charte si l'Assemblée générale adoptait le projet de résolution en question. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré en fait que tous les Membres des Nations Unies ont souscrit au Chapitre XI, c'est-à-dire que les Puissances administrantes ont accepté une obligation déterminée en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, tandis qu'au même titre les Puissances non administrantes ont accepté certaines réserves qui figurent dans ce même Article. En outre, aucune disposition de la Charte ne permet à l'Assemblée générale de déterminer les effets de ces réserves sur l'obligation pour un Etat Membre de transmettre les renseignements exigés. En fait, les termes du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte semblent exclure spécialement cette possibilité.
4. M. Fletcher-Cooke fait observer que trois points ont été examinés au cours de la présente discussion. Le premier point a trait à la définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome"; le deuxième est relatif à la suggestion selon laquelle l'Assemblée générale a le droit de décider à quel territoire doit s'appliquer la définition établie. La délégation du Royaume-Uni estime que la définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome" est suffisamment claire. Bien que cette question ait fait l'objet de nombreux examens depuis 1946, aucune définition nouvelle n'a été donnée. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni partage les doutes exprimés à la 124ème séance par le représentant de la Thaïlande qui s'est demandé si le Comité spécial réussirait à énoncer une définition plus satisfaisante. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni estime qu'une définition plus précise n'est pas nécessaire, car il n'a jamais contesté le fait que les dispositions de l'Article 73 s'appliquent aux quarante-trois territoires non autonomes sous administration britannique énumérés dans la liste établie en 1946. Toutefois, si la Commission tient à rechercher une meilleure définition, la délégation du Royaume-Uni ne s'y opposera pas.
5. S'il est prévu de demander au Comité spécial de définir les termes "territoire non autonome", M. Fletcher-Cooke pense qu'on devrait trouver une rédaction plus explicite pour le dernier paragraphe du projet de résolution de l'Egypte (A/C.4/L.37/Rev.3). La délégation du Royaume-Uni ne serait pas opposée en principe à une définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome"; toutefois, si le but de ce paragraphe est de demander à l'Assemblée générale de décider si tel ou tel territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire non autonome, la délégation du Royaume-Uni s'y opposera, car l'Assemblée générale n'a pas compétence pour agir en ce sens. C'est exclusivement aux Puissances administrantes qu'il appartient de déterminer si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire non autonome.

6. Le troisième point a trait à la suggestion selon laquelle l'Assemblée générale est habilitée à se prononcer sur la situation créée par le recours à la réserve prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 et ainsi conçue: "sous réserve des exigences de la sécurité et de considérations d'ordre constitutionnel". De l'avis de la délégation du Royaume-Uni, il appartient aux seules Puissances administrantes de décider si, comme dans le cas de l'île de Malte, des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel empêchent la transmission de renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73. M. Fletcher-Cooke fait remarquer qu'à l'exception du représentant de la Thaïlande, aucun membre de la Commission n'a pris position sur ce point. Il répète que les raisons de l'inclusion de cette réserve à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ont été clairement exposées par le représentant du Royaume-Uni à la Conférence de San-Francisco et acceptées par celle-ci. Si toutefois les membres de la Commission désirent revenir sur ce point, ils devraient faire connaître leur position. M. Fletcher-Cooke ne peut approuver l'interprétation donnée par le représentant de la Thaïlande à la 124ème séance; il espère que ce dernier pourra reviser sa position.

7. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni précise à nouveau qu'il appartient uniquement aux Puissances administrantes de décider de la portée de la réserve énoncée à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, car elles sont seules en mesure d'apprécier les éléments de la situation. La Commission devrait donc accepter l'opinion des Puissances administrantes en la matière.

8. Se fondant sur cette thèse, la délégation du Royaume-Uni est opposée au projet de résolution de l'Egypte. Cette opposition est suscitée en particulier par les termes du premier paragraphe du dispositif de ce projet; en effet, si l'Assemblée générale a le droit d'exprimer son avis sur l'expression "territoire non autonome", elle n'a pas le droit de se prononcer sur des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel dans un cas particulier. Toutefois, bien qu'elle estime que ce projet de résolution est inutile et qu'elle partage les doutes du représentant de la France sur l'opportunité de confier cette tâche au Comité spécial, la délégation du Royaume-Uni serait moins opposée au projet de résolution si la délégation de l'Egypte consentait à supprimer la fin du premier paragraphe du dispositif après les mots "exprimer son avis" et d'insérer les mots "sur la signification de l'expression territoire non autonome". Si cette suggestion était acceptée, il conviendrait de modifier le dernier paragraphe afin de préciser qu'il s'agit bien d'une définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome".

9. M. Fletcher-Cooke partage entièrement l'opinion exprimée à la 124ème séance par le représentant de Cuba, qui a déclaré que toutes les dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 restent en vigueur jusqu'à ce qu'un territoire non autonome déterminé devienne complètement indépendant. M. Fletcher-Cooke prétend que l'une des dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, à savoir la réserve constitutionnelle, reste en vigueur et peut empêcher la transmission de renseignements dans un cas déterminé.

10. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a pas accordé une Constitution à Malte afin de justifier la cessation de la transmission de renseignements, mais parce que cela est conforme à sa politique dans ce domaine et à l'alinéa b de l'Article 73 de la Charte aux termes duquel les Puissances administrantes ont accepté la mission sacrée d'aider les populations des territoires non autonomes dans le développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques. Le Royaume-Uni est donc fondé à se prévaloir de la réserve qui a été incluse dans l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte en ce qui concerne la transmission de renseignements.

11. En conclusion, la délégation du Royaume-Uni est opposée au projet de résolution, non pas tant parce qu'il invite l'Assemblée générale à préciser la définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome", que parce qu'il reconnaît à l'Assemblée générale le droit de décider s'il convient ou non que les Puissances administrantes transmettent des renseignements concernant tel ou tel territoire. Ce droit n'appartient qu'aux Puissances administrantes intéressées.

12. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) considère que le projet de résolution de l'Egypte revêt une grande importance. La délégation du Guatemala est préoccupée par la manière dont certaines délégations tentent d'affaiblir ou de nier le caractère obligatoire des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Les Puissances administrantes se sont engagées à respecter les obligations découlant de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; c'est pourquoi la majorité de la Commission a été surprise de constater qu'elles se servent d'expédients pour se dérober à ces obligations. La question n'est pas de savoir si un territoire non autonome est une colonie ou un protectorat: il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire qui figure dans la liste dressée en 1946 est toujours soumis au même statut ou si, actuellement, ses populations s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes. Dans le cas où des changements ont été apportés, il y a lieu de savoir s'ils ont été effectués en tenant compte des aspirations des populations.

13. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a accepté une liste de soixante-quatorze territoires non autonomes et elle seule a pouvoir de la modifier, en éliminant les territoires devenus indépendants.

14. Le projet de résolution de l'Egypte sert de sauvegarde contre toute tendance à rendre sans effet les dispositions du Chapitre XI. L'Assemblée générale doit prendre d'urgence des mesures pour lutter contre toute atteinte au respect des dispositions de la Charte. C'est pour cette raison que la délégation du Guatemala appuie ce projet de résolution.

15. M. Mendoza tient à déclarer, en terminant, que sa délégation a pleinement confiance dans la bonne foi des Puissances administrantes, mais elle tient à ce que soit sauvegardé le principe de l'autorité supérieure des Nations Unies.

16. M. HOOD (Australie) est surpris que le représentant du Guatemala ait déclaré qu'il existait une tendance à rendre sans effet les dispositions du Chapitre XI. Les débats de la Quatrième Commission et du Comité spécial et les résolutions antérieures de l'Assemblée générale semblent prouver le contraire. Les projets de résolution déjà adoptés s'inspirent d'une interprétation plus large du Chapitre XI que celle qu'on lui donnait au moment de la signature de la Charte.

17. Le texte du projet de résolution de l'Égypte mettrait le Comité spécial devant une tâche difficile, car ce texte n'est pas clair. D'autre part, les propositions qu'il présente sont prématurées et semblent ne pas tenir compte de l'attitude prise par les Puissances administrantes. Le représentant de l'Australie votera donc contre le projet de résolution sous sa forme actuelle.

18. En ce qui concerne la question du statut de territoire non autonome, M. Hood estime qu'il appartient uniquement aux Puissances administrantes de déterminer si un territoire non autonome s'administre désormais complètement lui-même.

19. Le représentant de l'Australie désirerait que le représentant de l'Égypte précisât notamment le sens des deux paragraphes du dispositif de son projet de résolution. Les dispositions du premier paragraphe du dispositif ne sont pas compatibles avec celles du second. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a appelé l'attention des membres de la Commission sur l'ambiguïté du membre de phrase "dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider". Il faut en effet préciser si la décision sera prise par l'Assemblée générale ou par les Puissances administrantes elles-mêmes. D'autre part, M. Hood ne comprend pas pourquoi on parle de "principes" au premier paragraphe du dispositif, alors qu'on parle de "facteurs" au second. Il semble que ces deux mots représentent la même notion et on ne voit donc pas le rôle que jouerait le Comité spécial une fois que l'Assemblée générale aurait exprimé son avis.

20. M. FARRAG (Égypte) rappelle que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré que si les Puissances administrantes sont tenues de respecter les dispositions du Chapitre XI, il en est de même pour les autres Puissances. M. Farrag tient à souligner, à ce sujet, que nul ne cherche à aller au-delà des dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, mais que l'on demande simplement qu'elles soient strictement respectées.

21. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré que la réserve des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel s'applique au cas de Malte. M. Farrag estime qu'il s'agit d'une question d'interprétation; les représentants du Mexique et de la Thaïlande se sont déjà prononcés sur ce point. Des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel ne sauraient justifier une infraction aux dispositions de la Charte et les constitutions doivent se conformer à ces dispositions et non s'y opposer.

22. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni pense que le Comité spécial ne pourrait pas accomplir la tâche qui lui serait confiée, tâche qui consisterait à étudier "les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte", et qu'il ne saurait faire mieux que la Sous-Commission 2 en 1946. M. Farrag tient à faire observer que la Sous-Commission 2 avait simplement pour tâche d'établir la liste des territoires non autonomes et qu'on ne lui avait pas demandé d'étudier la question des critères qui serait confiée maintenant au Comité spécial.

23. M. Farrag ne voit aucune ambiguïté dans son projet de résolution, qui reproduit en substance une idée exposée en 1946 par le représentant de l'Australie.

24. Le représentant de l'Égypte regrette de ne pouvoir accepter la suggestion du représentant du Royaume-Uni concernant le premier paragraphe du dispositif, car une telle modification rendrait le projet de résolution sans objet.

25. M. MAC EACHEN (Uruguay) propose, à la suite de la modification du premier paragraphe du dispositif suggérée par le représentant du Royaume-Uni, et si ce dernier accepte cet amendement, de supprimer la dernière partie du dernier paragraphe après les mots "à étudier" et de la remplacer par le membre de phrase "à la lumière de l'opinion mentionnée au paragraphe précédent, la liste des territoires au sujet desquels des renseignements ont été reçus en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte, en informant l'Assemblée générale du résultat de cette étude".

26. M. GARREAU (France) demande si le représentant de l'Égypte a songé à concilier son projet de résolution avec le projet de résolution adopté par la Commission à sa 122ème séance et concernant la création d'un comité spécial chargé de l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte. En effet, l'Assemblée générale, par cette résolution, chargerait le Comité spécial d'examiner les résumés et analyses des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e sur les conditions économiques, sociales et culturelles des territoires non autonomes. Or, le projet de résolution de l'Égypte chargerait le Comité spécial de fonctions dont l'exécution exigerait que les Puissances administrantes transmettent à ce Comité des renseignements d'ordre politique qui ne sont pas prévus à l'Article 73 e de la Charte.

27. Il y a donc contradiction flagrante entre le mandat très précis du Comité spécial et les fonctions dont le chargerait le projet de résolution de l'Égypte.

28. M. KOLENKY (Libéria) constate que le projet de résolution de l'Égypte est celui qui a été le moins critiqué au sein de la Quatrième Commission. Ce fait prouve qu'il est conforme aux dispositions de la Charte et que ce projet mérite l'appui de la majorité de la Commission. La délégation du Libéria se prononcera en faveur du texte proposé par l'Égypte et modifié par la Thaïlande à la 124ème séance.

29. Le prince WAN WAITHAYAKON (Thaïlande) regrette de ne pouvoir modifier son point de vue, ainsi que le représentant du Royaume-Uni le lui a demandé; en effet, il est convaincu, après un nouvel examen du texte même de la Charte, que la formule employée établit nettement que l'Assemblée générale a le droit d'apprécier le bien-fondé des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel qui sont invoquées par les Puissances administrantes.

30. M. FLETCHER-COOKE (Royaume-Uni) maintient son interprétation au sujet de la réserve figurant à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

31. En ce qui concerne l'amendement proposé par l'Uruguay, M. Fletcher-Cooke répète que le Comité spécial est, à son avis, incompétent pour définir ce qu'il faut entendre par "territoire non autonome". Il partage à cet égard le point de vue du représentant de la France. Il ne saurait donc voter en faveur d'aucun projet de résolution reconnaissant cette compétence au Comité spécial.

32. De plus, l'amendement de l'Uruguay présente une difficulté d'ordre technique, à savoir qu'il est difficile d'imaginer comment le Comité spécial pourrait examiner la liste des territoires non autonomes à la lumière de l'opinion de l'Assemblée générale, alors que cette opinion n'aura pas encore été formulée.

33. Par ailleurs, la délégation du Royaume-Uni ne saurait accepter que n'importe quelle définition de "territoire non autonome" soit appliquée à un territoire particulier. Une telle définition peut seulement servir d'indication aux Puissances administrantes.

34. M. MAC EACHEN (Uruguay) rappelle que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré ne pouvoir accepter que le Comité spécial donne une définition applicable à un territoire particulier. Or, conformément au premier paragraphe du dispositif du projet de résolution de l'Égypte, amendé ainsi que le propose le représentant de l'Uruguay, c'est l'Assemblée générale qui donnerait son opinion sur ce qu'il faut entendre par "territoire non autonome". Si le Comité spécial étudie de son côté la liste des territoires, non seulement il le fera en tant qu'organe subsidiaire de l'Assemblée générale, et dans la limite de la compétence qui lui est ainsi conférée, mais il tiendra compte évidemment, en effectuant cette étude, de l'opinion qu'aura pu formuler l'Assemblée générale sur la question. En tant qu'organe subsidiaire, le Comité spécial doit renseigner l'Assemblée générale, et l'opinion publique par conséquent, sur la mesure dans laquelle les principes du Chapitre XI de la Charte sont mis en œuvre et respectés.

35. Le représentant de l'Uruguay tient à préciser, d'ailleurs, que sa proposition n'indique pas quels pourront être les effets de l'étude du Comité spécial, mais recommande simplement que ce Comité étudie la question en tenant compte de l'opinion formulée par l'Assemblée générale.

36. Le général BURNS (Canada) déclare que les populations de maints territoires actuellement non autonomes finiront par s'administrer complètement elles-mêmes et qu'il est intéressant de savoir à quel moment et dans quelles conditions on peut déclarer qu'un territoire est devenu autonome. Une telle décision, néanmoins, ne saurait être prise par le Comité spécial. Pour quelles raisons obtiendrait-il en cette matière un meilleur résultat que la Quatrième Commission? Le Comité spécial n'est pas l'organe approprié pour examiner une telle question; en effet, le Comité spécial a été créé pour effectuer un travail déterminé, et c'est dans ce sens que la délégation du Canada s'est prononcée en faveur de la création de ce Comité. En confiant une tâche supplémentaire au Comité spécial, on risquerait de le gêner dans l'accomplissement du travail pour lequel il a été spécialement créé.

37. Le général Burns tient d'ailleurs à faire observer qu'au cours de la dernière session du Comité spécial, ainsi qu'en témoigne le rapport de ce Comité (A/923), les représentants de l'Égypte, de l'Inde, de la République Dominicaine et du Venezuela, et d'autres représentants encore, ont déclaré que le Comité spécial n'était pas compétent pour décider si un territoire non autonome a acquis son autonomie ou son indépendance. On ne voit pas en quoi la prochaine session du Comité spécial pourrait différer, à ce point de vue, de la précédente session. Le projet de résolution de l'Égypte n'a pas de valeur pratique et le repré-sentant du Canada ne votera pas en sa faveur. Il ne pense pas davantage que l'amendement proposé par le représentant de l'Uruguay rende le texte plus clair et plus précis.

38. M. DE BRUYNE (Belgique) rappelle que les représentants de l'Australie et du Royaume-Uni, ainsi que lui-même, ont exprimé des doutes quant au sens précis qu'il faut donner au deuxième paragraphe du dispositif du projet de résolution de l'Égypte. Le représentant de ce pays a déclaré au cours de la séance que le texte de son projet de résolution lui paraissait très clair. M. de Bruyne constate, en fait, que le sens du paragraphe en question est de plus en plus ambiguë et il demande, à propos du membre de phrase "des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte" si c'est l'Assemblée générale elle-même ou les États Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, qui doivent tenir compte de ces facteurs.

39. M. FARRAG (Égypte) reconnaît qu'il a jugé le Comité spécial incompétent lors de sa dernière session, mais il déclare, en réponse au représentant du Canada, que c'est précisément pour que ce Comité devienne compétent pour étudier la question qu'il a présenté son projet de résolution.

40. Quant aux observations que vient de formuler le représentant de la Belgique, M. Farrag rappelle qu'en 1946 la Quatrième Commission a appelé l'attention sur l'avantage qu'il y aurait à indiquer les critères sur lesquels il conviendrait de se fonder pour déterminer quels territoires devraient relever du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Les gouvernements ont subséquemment formulé une opinion quant à ces critères et il semble qu'il appartienne logiquement au Comité spécial d'étudier la question et de se prononcer sur ces critères.

41. A la demande de M. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba), M. BENSON (Secrétariat) donne lecture des premier et second paragraphes du dispositif du projet de résolution de l'Égypte amendé par le représentant de l'Uruguay.

42. M. CARPIO (Philippines) constate qu'on a exprimé l'opinion qu'il appartient aux seules Puissances administrantes de déterminer les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel ou les considérations fondées sur les exigences de la sécurité qui pourraient justifier la cessation de la transmission de renseignements sur tel ou tel territoire non autonome. Mais dans le cas où les Puissances administrantes feraient un usage abusif de cette prérogative ou décideraient arbitrairement de cesser de transmettre des renseignements sur certains territoires, situation qui pourrait évoluer jusqu'au point où aucun renseignement ne serait plus transmis sur aucun des soixante-quatorze territoires énumérés, M. Carpio se demande si les Puissances administrantes prétendent que, dans de telles conditions, les Nations Unies n'auraient aucun recours et seraient dans l'impossibilité de procéder à une enquête.

43. M. FLETCHER-COOKE (Royaume-Uni) se félicite que le représentant de Cuba ait demandé qu'il soit donné lecture du nouveau texte du premier paragraphe du dispositif. Il constate, en effet, que la suggestion qu'il a formulée auparavant est utilisée de telle manière qu'il est obligé de ne plus la reconnaître comme sienne. En effet, il a suggéré de supprimer toute la fin du paragraphe, après les mots "d'exprimer son avis" et d'insérer les mots "sur la signification de l'expression territoire non autonome". Il constate que l'on réintroduit la notion qui figurait dans le texte primitif, à savoir l'obligation de transmettre les renseignements visés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. M. Fletcher-Cooke ne peut accepter le texte nouveau du paragraphe ainsi rédigé.

44. En réponse aux observations du représentant des Philippines, M. Fletcher-Cooke rappelle que les Puissances administrantes ont accepté l'obligation de transmettre des renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes qu'elles administrent sous réserve de certaines limitations. Le Royaume-Uni se propose de respecter cette obligation et il regrette que l'on ait pu laisser entendre que les Puissances administrantes pourraient se soustraire à leurs engagements.

45. M. CARPIO (Philippines) craint que sa question n'ait été mal comprise. Il ne veut pas laisser entendre que les Puissances administrantes décideront nécessairement d'une manière arbitraire de cesser de transmettre des renseignements en se prévalant des limitations prévues à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; mais il signale que la Charte elle-même prévoit implicitement que les Etats Membres peuvent éventuellement faire preuve de mauvaise foi. Il tient à préciser, néanmoins, qu'il n'a voulu faire allusion à aucun Etat particulier.

46. M. MUGHIR (Syrie) fait observer que le projet de résolution de l'Egypte soulève la question de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale pour décider si un territoire est indépendant ou non. Il considère que l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 n'est pas le seul qui impose des obligations aux Puissances administrantes. Les autres parties de cet Article en contiennent également, car elles sont fondées sur les grands principes de la Charte. M. Mughir pense que le projet de résolution de l'Egypte facilitera grandement la tâche du Comité spécial. En outre, le fait de confier à ce Comité le soin d'étudier "la question des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou non un territoire non autonome", permettra d'éviter que la Commission se voie à nouveau contrainte de rechercher les raisons pour lesquelles telle ou telle Puissance administrante a cessé de transmettre des renseignements. M. Mughir déclare que sa délégation se prononcera sans réserve en faveur du projet de résolution de l'Egypte.

47. M. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) rend hommage à la contribution de la délégation de l'Uruguay aux travaux de la Commission, mais il regrette, en l'occurrence, de ne pouvoir approuver l'amendement que vient de proposer cette délégation. Le premier paragraphe du dispositif du projet de résolution de l'Egypte énonce un principe général en reconnaissant la compétence de l'Assemblée générale. Le dernier paragraphe est au centre du problème, car il expose la procédure à laquelle l'Assemblée générale peut avoir recours pour donner une forme concrète à son opinion, procédure selon laquelle elle fait appel à cette fin à un organe subsidiaire, ce qui est conforme aux dispositions de l'Article 22 de la Charte. Or l'amendement de la délégation de l'Uruguay n'est pas clair en soi et fait perdre beaucoup de valeur au projet de résolution. En effet, il recommande au Comité spécial d'étudier les facteurs dont il s'agit en tenant compte de l'opinion formulée par l'Assemblée générale dont il est question au premier paragraphe du dispositif; toutefois, aucune opinion n'est formulée dans ce paragraphe, qui ne fait en réalité que reconnaître le droit de l'Assemblée générale de formuler une telle opinion, si bien que le Comité spécial ne disposera pas en fait de l'avis de l'Assemblée générale.

48. Pour une autre raison encore, l'amendement de l'Uruguay n'est pas acceptable; il fait seulement état de la liste des territoires au sujet desquels des renseignements ont été transmis, alors qu'il serait intéressant au contraire d'examiner la liste des territoires au sujet desquels aucun renseignement n'a été transmis.

49. La délégation de Cuba ne saurait donc appuyer l'amendement de l'Uruguay; elle votera par contre en faveur du texte primitif du projet de résolution de l'Egypte.

50. M. MAC EACHEN (Uruguay) pense qu'il serait peut-être possible de donner satisfaction au représentant de Cuba en ajoutant les mots "et décide par conséquent de formuler une opinion" au premier paragraphe du dispositif du projet de résolution.

51. Il fait observer, en outre, que les termes du projet de résolution de l'Egypte dépassent les limites de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale. La délégation de l'Uruguay estime, en effet, que l'Assemblée générale ne peut exprimer une opinion sur les principes qui guident ou qui ont guidé les Puissances administrantes dans l'énumération des territoires pour lesquels elles sont tenues de transmettre des renseignements. Par contre, l'Assemblée générale peut définir les caractéristiques d'un territoire non autonome et, ce faisant, elle ne risque pas d'empiéter sur la juridiction nationale de certains Etats. M. Mac Eachen pense que l'Assemblée générale, ainsi que la Quatrième Commission, sont uniquement compétentes pour formuler des conclusions en se fondant, d'une part, sur la liste des territoires non autonomes et, d'autre part, sur les caractéristiques des territoires au sujet desquels les Puissances administrantes sont tenues de transmettre des renseignements.

52. M. PÉREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) fait observer que la nouvelle modification suggérée par le représentant de l'Uruguay n'élimine pas la difficulté qu'il a signalée. En effet, il est dit que l'Assemblée générale peut formuler une opinion, mais on ignore toujours quelle est la nature de cette opinion.

53. M. FARRAG (Egypte) regrette de ne pouvoir accepter les modifications proposées par le représentant de l'Uruguay. Il estime qu'elles affaiblissent considérablement le texte de son projet de résolution et réduisent sa portée en omettant les territoires non autonomes au sujet desquels il n'est pas transmis de renseignements.

54. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) considère qu'il est inutile de se perdre en conjectures pour définir le terme "territoire non autonome", dont la Charte elle-même donne une définition claire et précise. Le véritable problème consiste à déterminer si un territoire particulier a effectivement acquis un degré d'autonomie ou d'indépendance qui permette à la Puissance administrante responsable de ne plus transmettre de renseignements à son sujet. L'Assemblée générale est en possession d'une liste de territoires au sujet desquels les Puissances administrantes ont accepté de transmettre des renseignements et il est naturel, lorsqu'une Puissance administrante cesse de transmettre des renseignements au sujet de certains de ces territoires, que l'Assemblée générale cherche à savoir quelles en sont les raisons.

55. La question devient grave lorsqu'une Puissance administrante a cessé de transmettre des renseignements sur un territoire non autonome, alors qu'il est évident que les populations de ce territoire ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes.

56. Telles sont les raisons pour lesquelles la délégation du Guatemala ne saurait appuyer l'amendement de l'Uruguay. Elle votera, par contre, en faveur du projet de résolution de l'Égypte.

57. M. Shiva RAO (Inde) regrette de constater que la discussion porte surtout sur des subtilités juridiques qui font perdre de vue l'aspect purement humain de la question.

58. Le but du projet de résolution présenté par la délégation de l'Égypte consiste simplement à affirmer que "l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour exprimer un avis". Il ne semble pas que ce soit là une prétention exorbitante. L'Assemblée générale est l'autorité suprême pour interpréter la Charte et son opinion doit recevoir la considération qu'elle mérite.

59. L'Assemblée générale invitera ensuite le Comité spécial à étudier les "facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte". Il s'agit là d'une tâche importante et délicate, qui ne pourra être accomplie efficacement qu'avec l'aide du Secrétariat, lequel devrait être invité à fournir à ce Comité spécial tous les documents de travail nécessaires.

60. Il est indéniable que l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour examiner les facteurs qui permettraient de décider qu'un territoire est, ou n'est pas, non autonome; cette étude semble s'imposer, étant donné que le nombre des territoires non autonomes est passé, depuis 1946, de soixante-quatorze à soixante-deux. Il restera ensuite à établir si l'étude de l'Assemblée générale, ou du Comité spécial créé à cet effet, conduira à des conclusions positives ou simplement à l'expression d'une opinion.

61. M. Rao appelle l'attention sur les derniers mots de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Ils montrent clairement que les Puissances administrantes doivent communiquer les renseignements sur tous les territoires autres que les Territoires sous tutelle. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a cité le cas de Malte; il a reconnu que ce territoire ne s'administre pas encore complètement lui-même, puisque le Royaume-Uni est responsable, par exemple, de ses relations diplomatiques. Par conséquent, Malte rentre dans la catégorie des territoires pour lesquels on doit communiquer des renseignements aux termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Si le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni estime qu'il n'a pas à transmettre de renseignements, en se fondant sur des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel, il devrait en informer le Comité spécial créé par l'Assemblée générale, qui aurait à étudier si, en fait, la Constitution de Malte est un des facteurs dont il y a lieu de tenir compte pour déterminer la mesure dans laquelle la population de l'île s'administre elle-même et pour justifier la cessation de la transmission de renseignements. M. Rao souligne qu'il a cité l'exemple de Malte, mais que la situation est identique pour tous les territoires qui sont dans des conditions analogues.

62. M. Rao conclut en déclarant que le projet de résolution présenté par l'Égypte est particulièrement opportun dans les conditions actuelles et qu'il votera en sa faveur.

63. M. NORIEGA (Mexique) fait remarquer que les considérations juridiques ne permettent pas toujours de trancher toutes les questions. Dans le cas actuel, si l'on se borne à interpréter la Charte en se fondant sur des critères purement juridiques, on n'aboutira à aucune solution concrète, car les interprétations ainsi obtenues peuvent être totalement différentes. Il importe avant tout de faire preuve de bonne foi et d'esprit de collaboration.

64. Si les Puissances administrantes estiment que l'opinion de l'Assemblée générale en ce qui concerne la définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome" n'a qu'une valeur académique, elles risquent de jeter ainsi le discrédit sur l'Assemblée générale et de rendre vains et sans objet les travaux de la Quatrième Commission et de l'Assemblée elle-même.

65. La définition de l'expression "territoire non autonome" ne devrait pas soulever de grandes difficultés. Après avoir reçu le texte de l'accord entre les Pays-Bas et la République d'Indonésie, on a pu conclure immédiatement que l'Indonésie était devenue un Etat souverain, pour lequel il ne saurait être question de transmettre des renseignements aux termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Par contre, lorsque le Royaume-Uni déclare que Malte ne s'administre pas encore complètement elle-même, il semble logique de conclure que l'on a affaire à un territoire non autonome, pour lequel la Puissance responsable doit transmettre des renseignements aux termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte. La situation est identique en ce qui concerne tous les territoires qui, comme Malte, n'ont pas encore obtenu l'autonomie ou l'indépendance complète.

66. M. Noriega comprend fort bien que le représentant de l'Uruguay ait présenté son amendement pour pallier certaines difficultés et éviter ainsi des objections de la part des Puissances administrantes. Il pense, néanmoins, que cet amendement ne rendra pas le projet de résolution plus acceptable pour les Puissances administrantes. Par conséquent, il semble préférable de s'en tenir au texte même du projet de résolution de l'Égypte, qui est clair et précis. Si ce projet de résolution est adopté par l'Assemblée générale, les Puissances administrantes apprécieront peut-être plus tard le fait que la situation aura été nettement exposée.

67. La délégation du Mexique votera donc en faveur du texte actuel du projet de résolution présenté par l'Égypte.

68. Le PRÉSIDENT invite la Commission à procéder au vote d'abord sur l'amendement de l'Uruguay et ensuite sur le projet de résolution de l'Égypte (A/C.4/L.37/Rev.3).

Par 28 voix contre une, avec 16 abstentions, l'amendement de l'Uruguay est rejeté.

A la demande du représentant du Brésil, il est procédé au vote par appel nominal sur le projet de résolution de l'Égypte.

Votent pour: Afghanistan, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Egypte, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Inde, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Votent contre: Australie, Belgique, Canada, France, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord.

S'abstiennent: Argentine, Chili, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Grèce, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay.

Par 30 voix contre 10, avec 7 abstentions, le projet de résolution de l'Égypte est adopté.

69. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) explique son vote. Si le projet de résolution avait été mis aux voix paragraphe par paragraphe, il aurait voté pour la plupart des paragraphes; toutefois, le vote ayant eu lieu sur l'ensemble du texte, il a été dans l'obligation de s'abstenir, car il estime que le Comité spécial n'a pas compétence pour étudier la question mentionnée. Si l'Assemblée générale, qui, elle, est compétente, approuve le projet de résolution et délègue ses pouvoirs à un organe subsidiaire, le Comité spécial, la délégation de la République Dominicaine admettra alors la compétence de ce dernier.

Sixième session
QUATRIEME COMMISSION
Sous-Commission 9

Distribution double

RENSEIGNEMENTS PROVENANT DE TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES

Territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte

Facteurs approuvés en première lecture

I. FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION EST
PARVENUE A S'ADMINISTRER ELLE-MEME DE FACON AUTONOME

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique : Le progrès politique des populations est suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations : Les populations du territoire ont exprimé librement, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, leur opinion sur le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

B. Statut international

1. Indépendance : Le territoire a obtenu son indépendance ou la gestion complète de ses relations extérieures et de ses affaires intérieures.

2. Possibilité de faire partie d'organisations internationales : Le territoire a la possibilité de devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou de devenir membre ou membre associé d'autres organisations internationales ; sa représentation est assurée par des délégués choisis par le gouvernement du territoire.

3. Relations internationales en général : Le territoire a la faculté d'entrer en relations directes avec d'autres Etats ou avec des institutions internationales et il a le droit de négocier, de signer et de ratifier des conventions internationales.

C. Autonomie interne :

1. Gouvernement du territoire : Le gouvernement interne du territoire (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) échappe à tout contrôle et à toute intervention qui seraient le fait du gouvernement d'un autre Etat.
2. Participation de la population au pouvoir : La population participe effectivement à l'exercice des pouvoirs constitutionnels du territoire.
3. Compétence en matière économique et sociale : Le gouvernement du territoire a pleine compétence pour gérer les affaires économiques et sociales du territoire.

II. FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UN TERRITOIRE EST LIBREMENT ASSOCIE, SUR UN PIED D'EGALITE (DANS UN CADRE FEDERAL OU UNITAIRE), A D'AUTRES PARTIES CONSTITUTIVES DE LA METROPOLE OU D'UN AUTRE PAYS.

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique : Le progrès politique des populations est suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.
2. Opinion des populations : Les populations du territoire ont exprimé librement, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, leur opinion sur le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.
3. Considérations d'ordre géographique : Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.
4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles : Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion, ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire de celles du pays avec lequel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel : L'association est intervenue a) en vertu de la Constitution de la métropole ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire ; il importera à cet égard de tenir compte des éléments suivants :

- i) Les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent-elles sur un pied d'égalité au territoire associé ?
- ii) Le territoire possède-t-il certaines compétences en matière constitutionnelle ?
- iii) Le territoire a-t-il le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat ?

B. Statut

1. Représentation dans les organes législatifs : Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.
2. Citoyenneté : Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.
3. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement : Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires du territoire dans les mêmes conditions que dans les autres parties de l'Etat.

C. Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote : Suffrage universel égal pour tous, élections périodiques libres, au scrutin secret ; liberté dans le choix des candidats aux élections.
2. Droits et statut des habitants et des organes locaux : Egalité de droit et de statut pour les habitants et les organes locaux du territoire et pour les habitants et les organes locaux d'autres parties de l'Etat.
3. Fonctionnaires locaux : Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires du territoire dans les mêmes conditions que dans les autres parties de l'Etat.

Ayant entrepris une révision des facteurs susdits,

Considérant que l'élaboration d'une liste plus définitive des facteurs en question exige des études prolongées et complexes fondées sur des renseignements plus complets que ceux dont on a pu disposer en 1951,

1. Décide de prendre pour base la liste de facteurs établie lors de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, et annexée à la présente résolution;

2. Invite les Membres des Nations Unies à communiquer par écrit au Secrétaire général, le 1er mai 1952 au plus tard, un exposé des vues de leur gouvernement touchant les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes;

3. Désigne un Comité ad hoc de dix membres composé des pays suivants: Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Guatemala, Irak et Venezuela, en vue de poursuivre l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes;

4. Invite le Comité ad hoc à prendre en considération tous les renseignements disponibles, y compris ceux qui auront été communiqués au Secrétaire général sur les motifs qui ont amené certains Membres administrants à cesser de communiquer des renseignements sur certains de ces territoires et à faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa septième session ordinaire;

5. Invite le Secrétaire général à réunir le Comité ad hoc de façon qu'il puisse commencer ses travaux une semaine avant l'ouverture de la session de 1952 du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes²⁷.

361ème séance plénière,
le 18 janvier 1952.

567 (VI). Procédure pour la poursuite de l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant que par sa résolution 334 (IV), adoptée le 2 décembre 1949, elle a invité tout comité spécial qui pourrait être institué pour examiner les renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte à étudier les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si tel ou tel territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes,

Ayant examiné le rapport préparé à ce sujet par le Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte²⁸, ²⁷ Ibid., sixième session, Supplément n° 14, première partie, chapitre IX.

²⁸ Ibid., quatrième partie.

ANNEXE

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

INTRODUCTION

1. Les territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte sont ceux dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. On peut noter que pour qualifier les termes "s'administrent elles-mêmes", la Charte emploie les mots "full measure" dans le texte anglais, "complètement" dans le texte français, et "plenitud" dans le texte espagnol.

2. La tâche de l'Assemblée générale consiste à l'heure actuelle à indiquer les facteurs dont il faut tenir compte pour déterminer si le résultat des progrès accomplis par la population d'un territoire donné est tel que ce territoire a atteint un degré d'autonomie qui le place en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

²⁹ Par sa résolution 569 (VI), l'Assemblée générale a décidé que le Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte serait désormais appelé: le "Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes".

3. La condition, pour que cessent de s'appliquer les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, consiste en ce que les habitants du territoire ont atteint, par le progrès politique, leur autonomie complète. Cette condition peut être remplie de différentes manières qui comportent, dans tous les cas, la libre expression de la volonté de la population. Les deux principaux moyens sont: a) l'accès à l'indépendance, et b) l'union du territoire sur la base d'une égalité de statut avec les autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays — ou son association dans les mêmes conditions avec la métropole, un autre pays ou d'autres pays. La mesure dans laquelle les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, continuent de s'appliquer au cas de territoires qui n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance ou n'ont pas été pleinement intégrés à un autre Etat, mais ont atteint une complète autonomie dans le domaine de leurs affaires intérieures, est une question qui mérite un complément d'étude.

4. Les deux formes principales du progrès politique mentionnées au paragraphe précédent postulent l'examen de différents facteurs pour déterminer si un territoire a, ou n'a pas, atteint un degré d'autonomie qui le place en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

5. En conséquence, l'Assemblée générale énumère ci-après sous deux rubriques différentes les facteurs à prendre en considération, tout en soulignant que la liste ne saurait être considérée comme complète ou définitive et qu'un facteur particulier ou une combinaison déterminée de facteurs ne peut être considéré comme décisif dans chaque cas. La question de savoir si les populations d'un territoire doivent être considérées comme ayant atteint un degré d'autonomie où il n'existe plus aucune obligation de communiquer des renseignements, doit être résolue à la lumière des situations constatées à l'un ou à l'autre titre, en tenant compte des circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier, circonstances qu'il sera nécessaire d'étudier séparément.

6. Toutefois, l'Assemblée générale estime que les facteurs essentiels dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire non autonome est parvenu à l'autonomie complète sont les suivants:

- i) Progrès politique: Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire;
- ii) Opinion des populations: Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée en connaissance de cause par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

7. Ces facteurs sont valables à la fois pour les territoires non autonomes qui ont accédé à l'indépendance et pour ceux qui se sont librement unis ou associés, sur la base d'une égalité de statut, avec d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole, d'un autre pays ou d'autres pays. Dans le dernier cas cependant, les facteurs suivants sont essentiels aussi et doivent être pris en considération:

- i) Représentation dans les organes législatifs: Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions;
- ii) Citoyenneté: Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

I. — FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÈDE À L'INDEPENDANCE OU À TOUTE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE SEPARÉE

A. — FACTEURS DE CARACTÈRE GÉNÉRAL

1. Progrès politique: Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations: Opinion des populations du territoire, librement exprimée en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

B. — STATUT INTERNATIONAL

1. Indépendance: Accès du territoire à l'indépendance ou gestion complète de ses relations extérieures et de ses affaires intérieures.

2. Possibilité de faire partie d'organisations internationales: Possibilité de devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou de devenir membre ou membre associé d'autres organisations internationales; représentation assurée par des délégués choisis par le gouvernement du territoire.

3. Relations internationales en général: Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des conventions internationales.

4. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté: Mesure dans laquelle la souveraineté du territoire a été librement et de sa propre volonté limitée au moment où ce territoire a accédé à l'indépendance ou à toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée.

C. — AUTONOMIE INTERNE

1. Gouvernement du territoire: Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement: Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire, par un système électoral et représentatif approprié.

3. Compétence en matière économique et sociale: Pleine compétence du gouvernement du territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques et sociales de ce dernier.

II. — FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UN TERRITOIRE EST LIBREMENT ASSOCIÉ SUR UN PIED D'ÉGALITÉ (DANS UN CADRE FÉDÉRAL OU UNITAIRE) À D'AUTRES PARTIES CONSTITUTIVES DE LA MÉTROPOLE OU D'UN AUTRE PAYS

A. — FACTEURS DE CARACTÈRE GÉNÉRAL

1. Progrès politique: Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations: Opinion des populations du territoire, librement exprimée en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique: Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles: Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel: Association: a) en vertu de la constitution de la métropole, ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire; en tenant compte des éléments suivants: i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au territoire associé, ii) s'il existe en faveur du territoire des domaines constitutionnels réservés, iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B. — STATUT

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif: Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Citoyenneté: Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

3. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement: Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

C. — CONDITIONS INTERNES D'ORDRE CONSTITUTIONNEL

1. Droit de vote: Suffrage universel égal pour tous, élections périodiques libres, au scrutin secret; liberté dans le choix des candidats aux élections.

2. Droits et statut des habitants: Droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux: Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties du pays.

4. Législation interne: Autonomie législative complète du territoire, au moyen de systèmes d'élections et de représentation, dans tous les domaines qui, selon les règles habituelles de l'association ne sont pas, dans le cas d'un système non unitaire, réservés au gouvernement central.

SOMMAIRE

	Pages
Examen des différentes questions à l'ordre du jour de la séance	377
Rapport du Conseil de tutelle : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2061) et de la Cinquième Commission	378
Renseignements relatifs à la mise en œuvre des résolutions du Conseil de tutelle et de l'Assemblée générale concernant les Territoires sous tutelle, rapport du Secrétaire général : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2059)	380
Développement de l'économie rurale dans les Territoires sous tutelle, rapport du Conseil de tutelle : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2058)	380
Abolition des châtiments corporels dans les Territoires sous tutelle, rapports des Autorités chargées d'administration : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2060)	380
Unions administratives concernant les Territoires sous tutelle : rapport du Conseil de tutelle : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2062)	381
Renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes : a) situation et développement économique des territoires non autonomes ; b) résumé et analyse des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte ; c) renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2057)	385
Election de deux membres du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2057) ..	386
Question du Sud-Ouest Africain : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2066 et Corr.1)	386

Président : M. Luis PADILLA NERVO (Mexique).

Examen des différentes questions à l'ordre du jour de la séance

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Vous avez devant vous l'ordre du jour de la séance ; il comprend les rapports de la Quatrième Commission, qui a maintenant terminé ses travaux, et un rapport de la Première Commission. Avant que nous n'abordions l'examen de ces rapports, je dois consulter l'Assemblée sur l'application de l'article 67 du règlement intérieur dont voici le texte :

« Le rapport d'une grande Commission fait l'objet d'une discussion en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale si le tiers au moins des Membres présents et votants en séance plénière estime cette discussion nécessaire. Les propositions à cet effet ne sont pas discutées, mais sont immédiatement mises aux voix. »

2. Quelqu'un désire-t-il proposer l'ouverture d'une discussion sur l'une des sept premières questions à l'ordre du jour ?

Il est décidé de ne pas discuter les sept premières questions (points 12, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36 et 37 de l'ordre du jour).

3. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Il est bien entendu que la décision que l'Assemblée vient de prendre ne prive nullement les représentants du droit d'expliquer leur vote sur chacun de ces points.

4. Nous passons à la huitième question sur laquelle le représentant de l'Union Sud-Africaine a demandé qu'un débat ait lieu. Je mets donc aux voix la proposition visant à ouvrir un débat sur la huitième question à l'ordre du jour de la séance.

Il y a 17 voix pour, 18 voix contre et 12 abstentions. Il est décidé de discuter la huitième question (point 38 de l'ordre du jour).

5. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Notre ordre du jour comprend une autre question, la neuvième, qui concerne le rapport de la Première Commission sur la question des mesures tendant à écarter la menace d'une nouvelle guerre mondiale et à consolider la paix et l'amitié entre les peuples.

6. Y a-t-il une proposition en faveur de la discussion de ce point ?

Il est décidé de ne pas discuter la neuvième question (point 67 de l'ordre du jour).

Renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes : a) situation et développement économique des territoires non autonomes ; b) résumé et analyse des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte ; c) renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte : rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2057)

[Point 36 de l'ordre du jour]

99. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) (traduit de l'anglais) : J'ai l'honneur de soumettre à l'Assemblée générale le rapport relatif aux renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes que la Quatrième Commission a adopté à l'unanimité.

100. L'Assemblée générale avait renvoyé trois questions à la Quatrième Commission au titre du point 36. Ces questions étaient les suivantes : Situation et développement économiques des territoires non autonomes ; Résumé et analyse des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte ; et Renseignement transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

101. En ce qui concerne la situation et le développement économiques des territoires non autonomes, le projet de résolution I qui est maintenant soumis à l'Assemblée générale tend à approuver le rapport du Comité spécial sur cette question et invite le Secrétaire général à transmettre ce rapport pour examen aux Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ayant la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes, au Conseil économique et social, au Conseil de tutelle et aux institutions spécialisées intéressées. Lorsqu'elle a rédigé ce projet de résolution, la Quatrième Commission a suivi la procédure qu'elle avait déjà adoptée à la cinquième session lorsqu'elle avait été saisie du rapport du Comité spécial sur l'enseignement dans les territoires non autonomes. Compte tenu du fait qu'un grand nombre des problèmes économiques qui se posent dans les territoires non autonomes ressemblent à ceux des régions insuffisamment développées du monde, le Comité spécial a mentionné dans son rapport les résolutions pertinentes du Conseil économique et social relatives à des questions telles que l'apport de capitaux dans les régions insuffisamment développées, la réforme agraire, etc.

102. Le projet de résolution II prend acte du rapport du Comité spécial sur les travaux de sa session de 1951 et approuve les dispositions proposées par ce comité en ce qui concerne ses travaux pour 1952. Après avoir étudié les problèmes relatifs à l'enseignement en 1950 et la question du développement économique en 1951, le Comité spécial étudiera, en 1952, les problèmes qui se posent dans le domaine social.

103. Le projet de résolution III tend à associer plus étroitement les territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité spécial et ce dernier est invité à examiner la possibilité d'une participation plus étroite.

104. Le projet de résolution IV a trait à la procédure à suivre pour continuer d'étudier les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. L'Assemblée générale déciderait de prendre pour base la liste des facteurs établie par la sous-commission 9 désignée par la Quatrième Commission pour examiner ces facteurs, liste annexée au projet de résolution ; elle inviterait les Membres des Nations Unies à transmettre par écrit au Secrétaire général un exposé des vues de leur gouvernement touchant ce problème et elle désignerait un comité ad hoc chargé de poursuivre l'étude de ces facteurs. Cette question, par l'un de ses aspects, est liée au problème de la cessation de la transmission de renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte en général.

105. Plus particulièrement, le projet de résolution V a trait à la cessation de la transmission des renseignements concernant les Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam. L'Assemblée générale remercierait le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas d'avoir communiqué tous les renseignements demandés par la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale. Enfin, aux termes de ce projet de résolution, l'Assemblée générale déciderait d'inscrire à l'ordre du jour de sa prochaine session la question de la cessation de la transmission de renseignements, compte tenu du fait que, à ce moment, le Comité ad hoc chargé de poursuivre l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte aura précisé davantage les questions qu'il a été chargé d'examiner, et du fait qu'une conférence réunissant sur un pied d'égalité les représentants des Pays-Bas, des Antilles néerlandaises et de Surinam se tiendra en mars 1952 pour décider de l'établissement d'un nouveau système constitutionnel.

106. Aux termes du projet de résolution VI, il est décidé que pour se mieux prêter à une large diffusion, le nom du Comité spécial devrait être modifié comme suit : « Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes ». Le mandat du comité demeure inchangé. En outre, agissant au nom de l'Assemblée générale, la Quatrième Commission a élu l'Equateur et l'Indonésie membres du Comité spécial, pour remplacer le Mexique et les Philippines.

107. Puisque j'ai la parole, le Président me permettra peut-être de déclarer, en tant que représentant du Danemark, que nombre de mes collègues de la Quatrième Commission et moi-même considérons que le projet de résolution IV, relatif aux facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, est une question importante à la fois au sens général de ce terme, et, plus particulièrement, conformément à la définition qu'en donne l'Article 18 de la Charte. Par conséquent, nous voudrions suggérer que l'on applique au vote sur ce projet de résolution IV les dispositions du paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte et l'article 84 du règlement intérieur.

108. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Je donne la parole au représentant de Cuba sur une question d'ordre.

109. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) (traduit de l'espagnol) : Je n'interviens qu'au sujet de la procédure que vient de proposer le représentant du Danemark pour le vote sur le projet de résolution IV. Il demande que la question soit considérée comme importante et qu'un mode spécial de vote soit exigé pour l'adoption du projet. Je me permets de faire remarquer qu'il ne s'agit pas ici du fond de la question, mais simplement de la procédure à suivre à l'avenir. Par conséquent, ma délégation ne pense pas qu'en l'état actuel du problème, il soit logique de soulever le point de savoir s'il s'agit d'une question importante. Au stade où en sont nos travaux, il ne s'agit encore que de la procédure à suivre dans l'avenir.

110. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Le rapport de la Quatrième Commission [A/2057] contient six projets de résolution que la Commission recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter. Nous voterons séparément sur chacun de ces projets.

111. Je mets aux voix le projet de résolution.

Par 48 voix contre 5, avec une abstention, le projet de résolution I est adopté.

112. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Nous passons au projet de résolution II qui a été approuvé sans opposition par la Quatrième Commission. En l'absence d'objection, je considérerai ce projet comme adopté.

Le projet de résolution II est adopté sans observation.

113. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Je mets aux voix le projet de résolution III.

Par 47 voix contre 2, avec 7 abstentions, le projet de résolution III est adopté.

114. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Je mets aux voix le projet de résolution IV.

Par 46 voix contre zéro, avec 7 abstentions, le projet de résolution IV est adopté.

115. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Nous passons au projet de résolution V.

116. Je donne la parole au représentant des Pays-Bas pour une explication de vote.

117. M. KERNKAMP (Pays-Bas) (traduit de l'anglais) : La délégation néerlandaise voudrait demander que le paragraphe 3 de ce projet de résolution soit mis aux voix séparément et, en même temps, expliquer son vote sur ce texte. Je serai très bref, car l'attitude du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas à l'égard de ce projet de résolution a déjà été exposée devant la Quatrième Commission.

118. Nous n'avons pas d'objections à soulever contre l'étude de ce que l'on a appelé les facteurs — j'entends évidemment les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Nous approuvons sans réserve l'établissement d'une telle liste de facteurs, mais nous ne pouvons l'accepter que comme un guide, car, à notre avis, la liste ne renferme que des indications.

119. Nous demeurons convaincus que, juridiquement parlant, c'est aux Puissances administrantes qu'il appartient de décider, sur le terrain constitutionnel, si un territoire déterminé cesse, à un moment donné, de tomber sous le coup de l'Article 73, e. Nous sommes persuadés que les Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam ont déjà atteint une autonomie complète ; les autorités démocratiques qui les gouvernent le reconnaissent elles-mêmes. En conséquence, nous sommes opposés à ce que le paragraphe 3 de la résolution fasse mention de la prochaine conférence de la table ronde car, si importante que cette conférence puisse être en elle-même du point de vue de la reconstruction du Royaume des Pays-Bas, nous estimons que la mention de cette conférence n'est pas pertinente dans le texte en cause, étant donné l'autonomie dont jouissent déjà les Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam.

120. C'est pourquoi nous voterons contre le paragraphe 3 de ce projet de résolution et nous nous abstiendrons lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

121. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Le représentant des Pays-Bas a demandé un vote distinct sur le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution V. Nous allons voter tout d'abord sur ce paragraphe.

Par 41 voix contre 7, avec 8 abstentions, le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution V est adopté.

122. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Je mets aux voix l'ensemble du projet de résolution V.

Par 47 voix contre zéro, avec 9 abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution V est adopté.

123. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol) : Le projet de résolution VI, qui a été approuvé sans opposition par la Quatrième Commission, a pour objet de modifier le nom actuel du Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 43, e, de la Charte. En l'absence d'objection, je considérerai le projet de résolution VI comme adopté.

Le projet de résolution VI est adopté sans observation.

Sixième session

Distribution double

Points 36 et 37 de l'ordre du jour

RENSEIGNEMENTS PROVENANT DES TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission

Rapporteur : M. Hermod LANNUNG (Danemark)

1. A sa 342ème séance plénière, tenue le 13 novembre 1951, l'Assemblée générale a renvoyé à la Quatrième Commission le point 36 de son ordre du jour, relatif aux renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes et le point 37 relatif à l'élection de deux membres du Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte.
2. Le point 36 de l'ordre du jour était subdivisé comme-suit :
 - a) Situation et développement économiques des territoires non autonomes : rapport du Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte. ⁽¹⁾
 - b) Résumé et analyse des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte : Rapport du Secrétaire général. ⁽²⁾
 - c) Renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte : rapport du Comité spécial. ⁽³⁾
3. Après des exposés préliminaires faits à la 205ème séance par le Président et le Rapporteur du Comité spécial, la discussion générale s'est ouverte sur l'ensemble du point 36 et s'est poursuivie jusqu'à la 211ème séance.
4. Au cours de la discussion générale, les représentants de l'Indonésie et des Pays-Bas ont réservé la position de leurs gouvernements respectifs sur la

- 1) A/1836, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, Sixième session, Supplément n° 14, Section V de la Première Partie, et Troisième Partie.
- 2) A/1823, Corr.1 et Add.1, 1824, et Corr.1, A/1824/Add.1 et Corr.1, A/1824/Add.2 et Corr.1, 1824/Add.3, 1826, 1827 et Corr.1 et Add.1, 1828, 1829 et Corr.1, 1830, 1835.
- 3) A/1836, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, Sixième session, Supplément n° 14.

Nouvelle-Guinée hollandaise (Irian occidental) en ce qui concerne la souveraineté et les renseignements transmis à son sujet. Les représentants du Guatemala et du Royaume-Uni ont fait des réserves au sujet de la souveraineté sur le Honduras britannique (territoire de Belize); les représentants du Yémen et du Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne le territoire d'Aden, et les représentants de l'Argentine et du Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne les îles Falkland (islas Malvinas).

TERRITOIRES AUXQUELS S'APPLIQUE LE CHAPITRE XI DE LA CHARTE

8. Au cours de ses 215 à 218ème séances, la Commission a examiné la question des Territoires auxquels s'applique le chapitre XI de la Charte; cette question est traitée à la section XI de la Première Partie du rapport du Comité spécial ainsi que dans la Quatrième Partie de ce même rapport.

9. La Quatrième Commission était saisie à cet égard des textes suivants :

I. Un projet commun de résolution, présenté par le Danemark et le Pakistan (A/C.4/L.151), dont voici le dispositif : L'Assemblée générale,

- 1) Décide d'accepter, à toutes fins utiles, le rapport du Comité spécial comme directives provisoires; 2) Invite les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à transmettre par écrit au Secrétaire général, le 1er juin 1952 au plus tard, un exposé des vues de leur Gouvernement touchant les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire est, ou n'est pas, un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes; 3.) Prie le Secrétaire général de transmettre, à cette fin, à tous les Etats Membres copie de la présente résolution ainsi que de la Quatrième Partie du rapport du Comité spécial; 4) Invite le Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte à examiner, à sa session de 1952, les exposés transmis en exécution de la présente résolution et à réexaminer, à la lumière de ces exposés, la liste qu'il a établie en 1951; 5.) Invite le Comité spécial à désigner, à cette fin, dès le début de sa session de 1952, un sous-comité qui préparera sur ces questions un rapport destiné au Comité spécial.

II. Un projet de résolution du Guatemala (A/C.4/L.152) invitant la Quatrième Commission à créer une sous-commission chargée: 1. D'étudier et de définir dans un projet de résolution les facteurs fondamentaux et généraux dont il y a lieu de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire est, ou n'est pas, un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes; 2. D'étudier s'il convient de créer un Comité qui aurait pour fonctions: a) de procéder à une étude plus approfondie de ces facteurs; b) d'analyser la situation des territoires dont les populations, de l'avis de certaines puissances administrantes, sont parvenues à s'administrer complètement elles-mêmes; et c) de soumettre à l'Assemblée générale, à sa prochaine session, des projets de résolution appropriés.

III. Le représentant du Guatemala a, par la suite, remanié son projet de résolution : le nouveau texte prévoyait que la sous-commission serait chargée d'étudier le problème à la lumière du rapport du Comité spécial et des débats de la Quatrième Commission, et qu'elle présenterait son rapport à la Commission au cours de la présente session (A/C.4/L.152/Rev.1).

IV. Un projet de résolution du Venezuela (A/C.4/L.153), dont le dispositif prévoit que l'Assemblée générale décide: 1. de réaffirmer les principes consacrés par la résolution 534 (IV) que l'Assemblée générale a adoptée le 2 décembre 1949, touchant la compétence de l'Assemblée en ce qui concerne l'examen des renseignements qui sont transmis par les autorités administrant des Territoires non autonomes, conformément à l'Article 73 e) de la Charte, 2. De créer un comité spécial composé des représentants de qui sera chargé de procéder, au cours de l'année 1952, à une étude détaillée : a) des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire est ou n'est pas un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes; b) de la situation des Territoires dont les populations, de l'avis de certaines puissances administrantes, s'administrent désormais complètement elles-mêmes; 3. d'ajourner l'examen des chapitres XI et XII de la Première Partie, ainsi que l'ensemble de la Quatrième Partie du rapport du Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte, jusqu'à ce que le Comité spécial visé dans la présente résolution ait présenté son rapport; 4. d'inviter le Comité spécial qui sera créé en vertu de la présente résolution à terminer son rapport pour le 15 août 1952 au plus tard.

V. Un amendement de l'Uruguay (A/C.4/L.154), tendant à ajouter l'alinéa suivant au paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution du Venezuela:

"c) De la possibilité de créer un organe permanent chargé de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale et de soumettre, dans chaque cas, un projet de résolution touchant les éléments visés aux alinéas a) et b) ci-dessus.

10. A la suite de consultations entre les auteurs des projets de résolution sus-mentionnés, le projet de résolution ci-après (A/C.4/L.155) a été présenté conjointement par le Danemark, le Guatemala, le Pakistan et le Venezuela :

" La Quatrième Commission

" Décide de créer une sous-commission composée des représentants des pays suivants: _____ qui sera chargée :

" 1. D'étudier, à la lumière du rapport du Comité spécial et des débats de la Quatrième Commission les facteurs fondamentaux et généraux dont il y a lieu de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire est, ou n'est pas, un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes;

" 2. D'étudier s'il convient d'arrêter une procédure permettant de poursuivre l'examen du problème, compte tenu des projets de résolution sur cette question soumis à la Quatrième Commission dans les documents A/C.4/L.151, A/C.4/L.152, A/C.4/L.152/Rev.1, A/C.4/L.153 et A/C.4/L.154."

11. A sa deux cent dix-huitième séance, la Commission a adopté le projet de résolution commun par 16 voix contre zéro avec 9 abstentions et a approuvé pour la sous-commission la composition suivante: Australie, Cuba, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Guatemala, Irak et Venezuela.

12. La Sous-Commission (Sous-Commission 9) a élu M. Awnikhalidy (Irak) Président et M. Guy Perez Cisneros (Cuba) rapporteur. La Sous-Commission a tenu onze séances et a adopté un rapport (A/C.4/L.180 et Corr.1) destiné à être soumis à la Quatrième Commission. Ce rapport se termine par un projet de résolution prévoyant que l'Assemblée générale 1) décide de prendre pour base la liste de facteurs établie par la Sous-Commission; 2) invite les Etats Membres à communiquer leurs vues touchant le problème des facteurs, le 1er mai 1952 au plus tard; 3) désigne un Comité ad hoc de huit membres chargés de procéder à de nouvelles études; 4) invite le Comité ad hoc envisagé à prendre en considération tous les renseignements disponibles et à faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale, lors de la septième session ordinaire et 5) invite le Secrétaire général à réunir le Comité ad hoc de façon qu'il puisse commencer ses travaux une semaine avant l'ouverture de la session de 1952 du Comité spécial.

13. A sa deux cent quarante-et-unième séance la Commission a examiné le rapport de la Sous-Commission. Elle a décidé de porter de huit à dix le nombre des membres du Comité ad hoc envisagé, celui-ci devant être composé des pays suivants: Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France,

Guatemala, Irak, et Venezuela. Sous réserve de cette modification, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, la Commission a adopté le projet de résolution proposé par la Sous-Commission par 39 voix contre zéro avec 6 abstentions. Les résultats du vote ont été les suivants:

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie Saoudite, Argentine, Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Brésil, Canada, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Danemark, Egypte, Equateur, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Israël, Liban, Liberia, Mexique, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pakistan, Philippines, République Dominicaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Salvador, Syrie, Thaïlande, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Se sont abstenus : Pays-Bas, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste d'Ukraine, Tchécoslovaquie, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques.

14. Le texte du projet de résolution, adopté, est tel qu'il a été joint en annexe au présent rapport sous le titre résolution IV.

La Quatrième Commission recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter les résolutions suivantes :.

RESOLUTION IV

PROCEDURE FUTURE POUR LA POURSUITE DE L'ETUDE DES FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER SI UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN
TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT
PAS ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MEMES

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant que par sa résolution 334 (IV), adoptée le 2 décembre 1949, elle a invité tout Comité spécial qui pourrait être institué pour examiner les renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte à étudier les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si tel ou tel Territoire est ou n'est pas un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, Ayant examiné le rapport préparé à ce sujet par le Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte,

Ayant entrepris une révision de ces facteurs,

Considérant que l'élaboration d'une liste plus définitive des facteurs en question exige des études prolongées et complexes fondées sur des renseignements plus complets que ceux dont on a pu disposer en 1951,

1. Décide de prendre pour base la liste de facteurs établie lors de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, et annexée à la présente résolution ;
2. Invite les Membres des Nations Unies à transmettre par écrit au Secrétaire général, le 1er mai 1952 au plus tard, un exposé des vues de leur Gouvernement touchant les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire est, ou n'est pas, un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes ;
3. Désigne un Comité ad hoc de dix membres composé des pays suivants :
Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Guatemala, Irak et Venezuela, en vue de poursuivre l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire est, ou n'est pas, un Territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes ;

4. Invite le Comité ad hoc à prendre en considération tous les renseignements disponibles, y compris ceux transmis au Secrétaire général sur les motifs qui ont amené des Puissances administrantes à cesser de communiquer des renseignements sur certains de ces Territoires et à faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa septième session ordinaire ;

5. Invite le Secrétaire général à réunir le Comité ad hoc de façon qu'il puisse commencer ses travaux une semaine avant l'ouverture de la session de 1952 du Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte.

ANNEXE

FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER SI
UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MEMES

Introduction

1. Les Territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte sont ceux dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. On peut noter que pour qualifier les termes "s'administrent elles-mêmes", la Charte emploie les mots "full mesure" dans le texte anglais, "complètement" dans le texte français, et "plenitud" dans le texte espagnol.
2. La tâche de l'Assemblée générale consiste à l'heure actuelle à indiquer les facteurs dont il faut tenir compte pour déterminer si le résultat des progrès accomplis par la population d'un Territoire donné est tel que ce territoire a atteint un degré d'autonomie qui le place en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte.
3. La condition, pour que cessent de s'appliquer les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, consiste en ce que les habitants du Territoire ont atteint, par le progrès politique, leur autonomie complète. Cette condition peut être remplie de différentes manières qui comportent, dans tous les cas, la libre expression de la volonté de la population. Les deux principaux moyens sont : a) l'accès à l'indépendance, et b) l'union du Territoire sur la base d'une égalité de statut avec les autres parties constitutives de la Métropole ou d'un autre pays ou d'autres pays - ou son association dans des conditions identiques avec la Métropole, un autre pays ou d'autres pays. La mesure dans laquelle les dispositions de l'Article 73 e) continuent de s'appliquer au cas de Territoires qui n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance ou n'ont pas été pleinement intégrés à un autre Etat mais ont atteint une complète autonomie dans le domaine de leurs affaires intérieures, est une question qui mérite un complément d'étude.
4. Les deux formes principales du progrès politique mentionnées au paragraphe précédent postulent l'examen de différents facteurs pour déterminer si un Territoire a, ou n'a pas, atteint un degré d'autonomie qui le place en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte.

5. En conséquence, l'Assemblée générale énumère ci-après sous deux rubriques différentes les facteurs à prendre en considération, tout en soulignant que la liste ne saurait être considérée comme complète ou définitive et qu'un facteur particulier ou une combinaison déterminée de facteurs ne peut être considéré comme décisif dans chaque cas. La question de savoir si les populations d'un Territoire doivent être considérées comme ayant atteint un degré d'autonomie où il n'existe plus aucune obligation de transmettre des renseignements, doit être résolue à la lumière des situations constatées à l'un ou à l'autre titre, en tenant compte des circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier, circonstances qu'il sera nécessaire d'étudier séparément.

6. Toutefois, l'Assemblée générale estime que les facteurs essentiels dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un Territoire non autonome est parvenu à l'autonomie complète sont les suivants :

i) Progrès politique : Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

ii) Opinion des populations : Opinion des populations du Territoire librement exprimée en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

7. Ces facteurs sont valables à la fois pour les Territoires non autonomes qui ont accédé à l'indépendance et pour ceux qui se sont librement unis ou associés, sur la base d'une égalité de statut, avec d'autres parties constitutives de la Métropole, d'un autre pays ou d'autres pays. Dans le dernier cas cependant, les facteurs suivants sont essentiels aussi et doivent être pris en considération :

i) Représentation dans les organes législatifs : Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

ii) Citoyenneté : Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER
SI UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS,
UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS
ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MEMES

I. Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance ou à toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique: Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du Territoire.

2. Opinion des populations: Opinion des populations du Territoire, librement exprimée en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

B. Statut international

1. Indépendance: Accès au Territoire à l'indépendance ou gestion complète de ses relations extérieures et de ses affaires intérieures.

2. Possibilité de faire partie d'organisations internationales: Possibilité de devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou de devenir membre ou membre associé d'autres organisations internationales; représentation assurée par des délégués choisis par le Gouvernement du Territoire.

3. Relations internationales en général: Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres Etats et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des conventions internationales.

4. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté: Mesure dans laquelle la souveraineté du Territoire a été librement et de sa propre volonté limitée au moment où ce Territoire a accédé à l'indépendance ou à toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée.

C. Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du Territoire: Affranchissement de tout contrôle et de toute intervention de la part du Gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le Gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'Administration du Territoire.

2. Participation de la population au pouvoir : Participation effective de la population au Gouvernement du Territoire, par un système électoral et représentatif approprié.

3. Compétence en matière économique et sociale : Pleine compétence du Gouvernement du Territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques et sociales de ce dernier.

II. Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé, sur un pied d'égalité (dans un cadre fédéral ou unitaire), à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays

A. : Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique : Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du Territoire.

2. Opinion des populations : Opinion des populations du Territoire, librement exprimée en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique : Mesure dans laquelle les relations du Territoire avec le siège du Gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles : Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du Territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel : Association : a) en vertu de la Constitution de la Métropole ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le Statut du Territoire ; en tenant compte des éléments suivants : i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au Territoire associé, ii) s'il existe en faveur du Territoire des domaines constitutionnels réservés, iii) si le Territoire a le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B. Statut

1. Représentation dans les organes législatifs : Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Citoyenneté : Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

3. Fonctionnaires du Gouvernement : Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires originaires du Territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties de l'Etat.

C. Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel :

1. Droit de vote : Suffrage universel égal pour tous, élections périodiques libres, au scrutin secret ; liberté dans le choix des candidats aux élections.

2. Droits et statut des habitants : Droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du Territoire à ceux reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties de l'Etat.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux : Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires du Territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties de l'Etat.

4. Législation interne : Autonomie législative complète du Territoire, au moyen de systèmes électoral et représentatif, dans tous les domaines qui selon les règles habituelles de l'association ne sont pas, dans le cas d'un système non-unitaire, réservés au Gouvernement central.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE

SIXIÈME SESSION

Documents officiels

28
QUATRIÈME COMMISSION, 241^e
SÉANCE

Mercredi 9 janvier 1952, à 15 heures

Palais de Chaillot, Paris

SOMMAIRE

	Pages
Rapport du Conseil de tutelle (A/1856) [suite]	257
Renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes (suite)	261
Programme des travaux de la Commission	264

Président : M. Max HENRÍQUEZ UREÑA (République Dominicaine).

Renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes (suite)

[Point 36*]

RAPPORT DE LA SOUS-COMMISSION 9 CHARGÉE D'Étudier LES FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DÉCIDER SI UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS ENCORE ELLES-MÊMES (A/C.4/L.180 ET CORR.1)

49. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) (Rapporteur de la Sous-Commission 9) présente le rapport de la Sous-Commission (A/C.4/L.180 et Corr.1). Il précise qu'en vertu d'une décision de la Sous-Commission, l'annexe I et l'annexe II constituent un tout, et que la Commission doit examiner ensemble les deux annexes.

50. Il fait observer que la Sous-Commission a adopté le paragraphe 7 du rapport, bien que le Secrétariat ait invoqué une résolution de l'Assemblée générale pour déclarer qu'il ne lui était pas possible d'assurer une large distribution des comptes rendus analytiques des séances de la Sous-Commission. La résolution en question ne s'applique qu'aux comptes rendus sténographiques et n'affecte donc pas la faculté accordée à la Sous-Commission par l'article 60 du règlement intérieur de l'Assemblée générale de fixer la forme dans laquelle seront établis ses comptes rendus. En conséquence, en sa qualité de Rapporteur, M. Perez Cisneros insiste pour que le Secrétariat fasse distribuer au moins à chaque membre de la Quatrième Commission un jeu complet de comptes rendus analytiques de la Sous-Commission en triple exemplaire.

51. M. Perez Cisneros rend hommage à tous les fonctionnaires du Secrétariat qui ont aidé la Sous-Commission dans son travail difficile, et notamment à M. Benson, Directeur de la Division des renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes. Il se réserve le droit de prendre la parole plus longuement sur le fond de la question à un stade ultérieur du débat, en qualité de représentant de Cuba, et se contente de déclarer, au stade actuel, que les textes qui figurent aux annexes I et II du rapport, marquent à son avis un net progrès par rapport aux documents antérieurs sur la question.

52. M. KHALIDY (Irak), prenant la parole en sa qualité de Président de la Sous-Commission 9, ne croit pas opportun d'examiner actuellement le fond de la question, le rapport prévoyant lui-même la procédure à suivre pour continuer l'étude du problème. Il s'agit d'un projet complexe et nouveau, et la Sous-Commission s'est acquittée de sa tâche avec beaucoup de succès.

53. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) félicite le Président et le Rapporteur de la Sous-Commission et remercie les membres de la Sous-Commission et du Secrétariat de l'œuvre qu'ils ont accomplie. La délégation du Danemark accepte d'une manière générale les propositions qui figurent à l'annexe I et à l'annexe II du rapport de la Sous-Commission. M. Lannung retrace les étapes parcourues au cours de l'étude du problème, et il estime que le rapport de la Sous-Commission constitue un pas décisif en avant, en ce qui concerne notamment le groupement systématique des facteurs.

54. La délégation du Danemark attache une importance toute spéciale aux paragraphes 3, 4 et 5 de l'introduction de l'annexe II. Toutefois, M. Lannung a toujours réalisé qu'une nouvelle étude montrerait vraisemblablement qu'il serait normal de subdiviser en deux parties la liste des facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays (Annexe II), en considérant séparément les cas où le territoire se trouve associé avec un Etat de type fédéral et les cas où il sera uni à un Etat de type unitaire; le rapport de la Sous-Commission fait d'ailleurs état de cette idée au paragraphe 12. On peut, pour prouver la nécessité d'une telle subdivision, citer le dernier facteur qui figure dans cette liste; ce facteur ne devrait être considéré que comme s'appliquant aux Etats appartenant à un système non unitaire. Dans le cas d'un Etat unitaire, le critère décisif reste l'égalité de droits et de statut entre le territoire et les autres parties constitutives de l'Etat unitaire auquel il a été rattaché.

55. En ce qui concerne la méthode à suivre pour continuer l'étude du problème, la délégation du Danemark aurait préféré que cette étude fût confiée au Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte ou à un organe subsidiaire de ce Comité, mais elle a cru possible d'adopter, par esprit de compromis, la solution proposée aux paragraphes 3 et 5 de l'annexe I.

56. M. Lannung propose à la Commission d'adopter les propositions de la Sous-Commission figurant aux annexes I et II du document A/C.4/L.180.

57. M. TOBIAS (États-Unis d'Amérique) estime que le rapport de la Sous-Commission marque un progrès utile dans l'étude d'un problème complexe. Il n'a aucune modification à suggérer et votera pour le projet de résolution. Il propose que le comité ad hoc prévu par le paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution (annexe I) se compose des mêmes pays que la Sous-Commission, à savoir l'Australie, Cuba, le Danemark, les États-Unis d'Amérique, la France, le Guatemala, l'Irak et le Venezuela.

58. M. MAVROS (Grèce) partage l'opinion de la Sous-Commission quant au caractère non définitif de la liste des facteurs qu'elle a élaborée. Le comité ad hoc envisagé devra d'abord aborder l'examen de la question méthodologique, pour déterminer si l'établissement d'une liste de facteurs constitue la méthode la plus appropriée pour la solution de la question de fond. En effet, le caractère éminemment politique de l'application des critères choisis conduira toujours à résoudre chaque cas particulier en fonction de considérations d'ordre politique, étrangères aux facteurs en question. De plus, la Sous-Commission n'a pas abordé la question de savoir quelle autorité sera chargée de constater en pratique si un facteur donné existe dans un cas particulier.

59. M. MAVROS est en plein accord avec les auteurs du rapport pour établir une distinction entre l'autonomie complète et la soi-disant autonomie qui se limite à la seule gestion des affaires intérieures.

60. La délégation de la Grèce estime qu'il faut se garder d'un optimisme exagéré au sujet des résultats que peut donner le rapport. En ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes, il se pose deux questions d'une importance capitale : à quel moment une population qui ne s'administre pas elle-même atteint-elle un degré de maturité tel que le droit de s'administrer elle-même doit lui être accordé, d'une part; d'autre part, quelle est l'autorité compétente pour décider que ce degré de maturité est atteint? Or, les Puissances administrantes estiment qu'elles ont seules le droit de trancher cette question. Il est alors inévitable qu'elles fassent intervenir des consi-dérations politiques étrangères aux intérêts et aux aspirations des populations de ces territoires, contrairement à l'esprit et à la lettre même de la Charte. Cette pratique est absolument illogique, parce qu'elle place les territoires non autonomes dans une situation moins favorable que les Territoires sous tutelle, dont l'évolution vers l'indépendance jouit de garanties internationales. Cette situation paradoxale porte atteinte au prestige même de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

61. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) estime que la Sous-Commission a accompli un travail constructif, grâce surtout à la compétence avec laquelle le représentant de l'Irak a présidé ses travaux.

62. Le représentant du Venezuela est en plein accord avec le représentant de la Grèce pour estimer que les Nations Unies doivent établir des règles précises en la matière. Chaque territoire non autonome présente des caractéristiques différentes, d'ordre géographique, ethnique, économique, etc. La meilleure manière d'étudier les facteurs de cet ordre consiste à analyser les cas où une Puissance administrante a déclaré qu'elle cessait d'envoyer les renseignements prévus par l'Article 73 de la Charte. Tout changement apporté au statut d'un territoire non autonome ne saurait être valable que s'il est reconnu sur le plan international. Seule l'Assemblée générale a qualité pour décider quand un territoire non autonome a atteint la plénitude de l'autonomie proprement dite. C'est à elle seule qu'il appartiendra d'appliquer les critères que l'on cherche actuellement à déterminer.

63. Le représentant du Venezuela espère que la Commission approuvera le projet de résolution qui figure à l'annexe I du rapport. Il estime que le comité ad hoc n'est pas appelé à examiner la question de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale en la matière, car cette compétence ressort de la Charte elle-même.

64. M. DE PAIVA LEITE (Brésil) félicite la Sous-Commission et son Président de l'excellent travail qu'ils ont accompli. Il appelle les membres de la Commission à ne pas soulever à nouveau au stade actuel les problèmes complexes qui se posent à cet égard. Le Brésil estime judicieuse la procédure envisagée par le projet de résolution pour une étude plus approfondie de la question, et il votera pour le rapport et ses annexes.

65. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) attire l'attention de la Commission sur le paragraphe 12 du rapport de la Sous-Commission. Il estime que la liste de facteurs doit être subdivisée en trois catégories selon le statut des territoires : premièrement, territoires qui jouissent d'une complète indépendance, d'une pleine souveraineté et ont leur propre représentation à l'étranger; deuxièmement, les territoires membres de fédérations, qui n'ont pas leur propre représentation diplomatique, mais jouissent en matière législative d'une large autonomie qui leur permet notamment de sauvegarder leurs droits et leurs intérêts traditionnels; troisièmement, les territoires qui ont atteint un statut de pleine souveraineté par l'incorporation à la métropole ou à un autre pays, sans disposer de représentation diplomatique propre, ni d'autonomie législative. C'est dans ce dernier cas que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait appliquer les critères les plus stricts.

66. M. Pérez Cisneros fait observer ensuite qu'il ne suffit pas d'opposer le concept d'autonomie à la notion de non-autonomie. Un territoire peut parfaitement être autonome financièrement ou administrativement, tout en restant une colonie au sens classique de ce terme, comme l'a précisé M. Georges Scelle, l'éminent juriste français. Les termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte, loin d'exclure l'accès des territoires non autonomes à l'indépendance complète, semblent au contraire la présupposer.

67. Le représentant de Cuba rappelle que la transmission de renseignements concernant les progrès accomplis par la population des territoires non autonomes dans le domaine politique n'a pas été imposée aux États Membres administrants par l'Article 73 de la Charte; toutefois, pour que les Nations Unies soient en mesure de déterminer si un territoire a cessé d'être non autonome, il est indispensable qu'elles soient informées des progrès politiques accomplis par sa population.

68. En dernier lieu, le représentant de Cuba tient à faire observer que lorsqu'un pays cesse de transmettre des renseignements sur un territoire, l'Assemblée générale, au nom de la communauté internationale, a le droit et le devoir d'examiner et de décider si la cessation de la transmission des renseignements est conforme aux critères définis. La délégation de Cuba ne comprend pas que certains pays puissent hésiter à reconnaître ce droit et ce devoir, dont le Traité de Versailles notamment a donné un exemple historique, en exigeant de l'Allemagne qu'elle renonce à ses colonies pour n'avoir pas rempli ses obligations de caractère international à leur égard.

69. M. Pérez Cisneros signale ensuite certaines ambiguïtés dans le texte de l'introduction à l'annexe II. Pour sa part, la délégation de Cuba ne peut admettre que l'on considère séparément d'une part l'autonomie dans les affaires sociales, économiques et culturelles et d'autre part l'autonomie politique; sur la réalisation de cette dernière repose toute autre forme d'autonomie véritable.

70. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) appuie sans réserves les déclarations du représentant du Brésil. A son avis, le rapport est acceptable comme solution de compromis. Il a considérablement aidé la Commission dans ses débats et la Sous-Commission mérite d'être félicitée pour avoir établi une liste de facteurs limitée que les consultations avec les gouvernements permettront de parfaire.

71. La délégation dominicaine tient cependant à ce que le compte rendu de la séance mentionne expressément son désir de voir le comité ad hoc envisagé s'attacher à élaborer une définition juridique de l'autonomie qui servira de base à ses travaux. A cette condition, elle approuve le projet de résolution et propose d'adopter le rapport aussi rapidement que possible sans prolonger inutilement le débat.

72. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) tient à préciser que le dernier facteur qui figure sur sa demande dans la liste des facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays (annexe II) ne peut s'appliquer qu'aux fédérations et autres types d'association et qu'il ne concerne pas les systèmes unitaires.

73. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) demande que cette explication soit consignée au compte rendu.

74. M. KHALIDY (Irak), appuyé par M. LANNUNG (Danemark) et M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine), demande au représentant de la France, qui se propose de ne prendre la parole qu'à la séance suivante, de ne pas retarder le débat et de ne pas empêcher la Commission de passer au vote avant de lever la séance.

75. M. DE LACHARRIERE (France) explique qu'il se dispensera d'analyser les facteurs puisque le comité ad hoc sera chargé, conformément à une procédure approuvée par la délégation française, de mettre au point la liste des facteurs en tenant compte des observations présentées par les gouvernements.

76. Il rappelle ensuite les réserves formulées par la France (A/C.4/L.180, paragraphe 15) en ce qui concerne certains facteurs qui mettent en cause la race et la religion et au sujet de l'identification entre l'autonomie et l'indépendance complète.

77. Répondant aux représentants de la Grèce, de Cuba et du Venezuela, il affirme que la détermination des territoires sur lesquels il y a lieu de transmettre des renseignements en vertu de l'article 73, e, est de la compétence exclusive de la Puissance administrante. D'autre part, relevant la comparaison faite par le représentant de la Grèce entre le régime des Territoires sous tutelle et celui des territoires non autonomes, il déclare que la distinction entre ces régimes résulte de la Charte à laquelle son Gouvernement entend se tenir. M. de Lacharrière fait observer que si la France a accepté de travailler à l'établissement des facteurs, c'est dans le cadre de la résolution 334 (IV) de l'Assemblée générale, aux termes de laquelle l'Assemblée ne peut donner qu'un avis destiné à guider les gouvernements, lesquels sont seuls compétents pour prendre une décision en la matière.

78. Enfin, la question de l'autonomie ne devrait pas se poser seulement dans le cas où un pays cesse de transmettre des renseignements sur un territoire, mais aussi dans celui des territoires pour lesquels aucun renseignement n'a jamais été transmis. De l'avis du représentant de la France, certains gouvernements ont, dans le ressort de leur juridiction, des territoires ou des populations qui devraient être protégés par le Chapitre XI de la Charte.

79. M. SPITS (Pays-Bas) explique qu'il s'abstiendra, lors du vote, parce que la question est si complexe que sa délégation a toujours douté que l'on puisse établir une liste complète de facteurs répondant à tous les cas. De plus, seules les Puissances administrantes ont compétence pour décider quels sont les territoires auxquels sont applicables les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

80. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) appuyé par M. TAJIBNAPIS (Indonésie), M. KHALIDY (Irak), M. INGLÉS (Philippines), M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) et M. DE PAIVA LEITE (Brésil), fait observer que l'Extrême-Orient devrait être représenté au Comité ad hoc que l'on va désigner et il propose la candidature de la Birmanie.

81. Le PRÉSIDENT suggère, pour maintenir la parité entre les Puissances administrantes et les autres pays, de désigner la Birmanie et la Belgique comme membres du comité ad hoc, avec l'Australie, Cuba, le Danemark, les États-Unis d'Amérique, la France, le Guatemala, l'Irak et le Venezuela.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

82. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.180 et Corr.1, annexes I et II).

83. Sur la demande de M. KHALIDY (Irak), le PRÉSIDENT annonce que le vote aura lieu par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Danemark, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Vote pour: Danemark, République Dominicaine, Équateur, Égypte, Salvador, France, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, États-Unis d'Amérique, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Australie, Belgique, Brésil, Birmanie, Canada, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba.

S'abstiennent : Pays-Bas, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Tchécoslovaquie.

Par 39 voix contre zéro, avec 6 abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution est approuvé.

84. U HLA MAUNG (Birmanie) remercie ceux de ses collègues qui ont proposé sa candidature.

85. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) déclare qu'il s'est prononcé en faveur du projet de résolution, parce qu'il présente un caractère intérimaire et que son pays est d'accord pour entreprendre les études prévues.

86. Il signale cependant une grave omission dans l'annexe II où l'on ne considère que le cas des territoires pour lesquels la Puissance administrante cesse de transmettre des renseignements. Rappelant la résolution 334 (IV) de l'Assemblée générale, il déclare que son pays, qui se réjouit de voir disparaître un territoire de la liste, se réjouirait également d'y voir apparaître certains territoires qui malheureusement n'ont jamais donné lieu à la transmission de renseignements.

87. M. MATHIESON (Royaume-Uni) dit qu'il s'est prononcé en faveur du projet de résolution malgré les doutes qui subsistent dans l'esprit de sa délégation quant à l'opportunité d'instituer un comité ad hoc.

88. Il précise, d'autre part, que la résolution ne soulève pas la question de compétence et que, par conséquent, il n'a pas à formuler de réserves à ce sujet.

89. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) déclare qu'à son avis les facteurs établis devraient s'appliquer au même titre aux territoires pour lesquels on cesse de transmettre des renseignements et à ceux pour lesquels on devrait commencer d'en transmettre.

90. Compte tenu des facteurs, tous les pays devront se demander s'ils ne doivent pas transmettre des renseignements concernant certains territoires pour lesquels ils n'en ont pas transmis jusqu'alors.

91. Quant à la résolution 222 (III) du 3 novembre 1948, la délégation du Danemark a eu l'occasion de se rallier au point de vue selon lequel un État chargé d'un territoire a le droit de fixer lui-même le statut constitutionnel du territoire qui relève de sa souveraineté.

92. Il fait observer que rien dans le Chapitre XI ne peut être interprété comme permettant d'adopter un point de vue différent. Le Danemark avisera l'Organisation des Nations Unies de tout changement de statut qui viendrait à se produire à l'égard du territoire dont il est chargé; mais ce faisant, il ne considère pas qu'une mesure prise par ses organes constitutionnels puisse faire l'objet d'une révision de la part de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

93. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) et M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) font valoir que la résolution ne préjuge en rien la question de la compétence qui, à leur avis, appartient à l'Assemblée générale.

La séance est levée à 19 h. 20.

NATIONS UNIES

ASSEMBLEE GENERALE

Septième session

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

RAPPORT DU COMITE AD HOC POUR L'ETUDE DES FACTEURS (TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES)

TABLE DES MATIERES

	Pages
I. Constitution du Comité	1
II. Bureau	1
III. Note préliminaire	1
IV. Considérations d'ordre général	1
V. Liste des facteurs proposés	3

I.—CONSTITUTION DU COMITÉ

1. Par sa résolution 567 (VI) adoptée le 18 janvier 1952, l'Assemblée générale a institué un Comité ad hoc de dix membres, composé de l'Australie, de la Belgique, de la Birmanie, de Cuba, du Danemark, des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, de la France, du Guatemala, de l'Irak et du Venezuela, en vue de poursuivre l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes.

Le Comité s'est réuni le 4 septembre 1952 au siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et a tenu six séances entre le 4 et le 9 septembre 1952.

II.—BUREAU

2. Le bureau du Comité était composé de la manière suivante :

M. Awni Khalidy (Irak), Président,
M. Benjamin Gerig (Etats-Unis d'Amérique), Vice-Président et Rapporteur.

III.—NOTE PRÉLIMINAIRE

3. C'est la troisième fois en un an qu'un Comité de l'Assemblée générale procède à une étude détaillée du problème des facteurs. Le Comité pour l'examen des renseignements provenant des territoires non autonomes a examiné la question en 1951 et a approuvé un rapport préparé par un sous-comité (A/1836, quatrième partie). A la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, la Quatrième Commission, après avoir étudié ce rapport, a constitué un sous-comité dont le rapport a servi de base à la résolution 567 (VI). Tous ces travaux préliminaires ont permis de préciser un certain nombre des éléments du problème en cause; d'autre part, la complexité et l'importance des questions fondamentales qu'ont laissé apparaître un grand nombre des discussions relatives aux territoires non autonomes qui ont eu lieu depuis les premières réunions de l'Assemblée générale, justifiaient les travaux en question.

4. L'actuel Comité ad hoc a été chargé de poursuivre l'étude entreprise. Pour procéder à cet examen, il s'est fondé sur une liste de facteurs établie par l'Assemblée générale à sa sixième session, ainsi que sur les exposés de leurs vues que les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies avaient fait parvenir au Secrétaire général en exécution du paragraphe 2 de la résolution 567 (VI). En outre, le paragraphe 4 de la même résolution autorisait le Comité ad hoc à prendre en considération tous les renseignements disponibles y compris ceux qui auraient été communiqués au Secrétaire général sur les motifs qui ont amené certains Membres administrants à cesser de communiquer des renseignements sur certains des territoires précédemment portés sur la liste des territoires non autonomes.

IV.—CONSIDÉRATIONS D'ORDRE GÉNÉRAL

5. Au cours des débats du Comité, on a fait valoir certaines considérations d'ordre général dont il convient de faire mention pour préciser la nature des travaux du Comité.

A) Le Comité devait s'occuper des territoires non autonomes auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Ce point a été précisé à trois occasions antérieures où le sujet a été discuté :

1) La résolution 334 (IV) de l'Assemblée générale, en date du 2 décembre 1949, est intitulée "Territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte"; cette résolution rappelle l'énumération de territoires contenue dans la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale et fait mention de la cessation de la transmission de renseignements au sujet de certains de ces territoires.

2) Le paragraphe 11 de la quatrième partie du rapport (A/1836) approuvé en 1951 par le Comité pour l'examen des renseignements précise que le Comité est d'avis qu'il existe de nombreux éléments dont il faut tenir compte "pour arriver à une décision sur le point de savoir si un territoire donné entre ou non dans le champ d'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte".

3) Dans le paragraphe 2 de son annexe, la résolution 567 (VI) précise que "la tâche de l'Assemblée générale consiste à l'heure actuelle à indiquer les facteurs dont il faut tenir compte pour déterminer si le résultat des progrès accomplis par la population d'un territoire donné est tel que ce territoire a atteint un degré d'autonomie qui le place en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte".

Le représentant de la Belgique a déclaré que la résolution 334 (IV) vise aussi bien le commencement que la cessation de l'envoi de renseignements; que ceux qui reconnaissent à l'Assemblée compétence pour décider qu'il y a lieu de continuer l'envoi de renseignements doivent lui reconnaître la même compétence pour décider qu'il y a lieu de commencer l'envoi de renseignements pour un territoire sur lequel aucun renseignement n'a été fourni jusqu'alors. Le représentant de la France s'est associé à cette manière de voir. Les représentants du Guatemala et du Venezuela ont formulé des réserves à cet égard.

B) On a considéré que le Comité ad hoc n'était pas compétent pour dire quelle autorité doit décider qu'un territoire s'administre lui-même dans une mesure telle qu'il se trouve en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Toutefois, divers membres du Comité ont fait connaître qu'il s'agissait, selon eux, de questions à soumettre à l'Assemblée générale.

C) L'accord s'est fait d'une manière générale parmi les membres du Comité pour considérer qu'une énumération de facteurs ne pouvait avoir que la valeur d'une indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même. Chaque cas particulier doit être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Le paragraphe 5 de l'annexe à la résolution 567 (VI) met ce principe en lumière en soulignant qu'une telle liste de facteurs "ne saurait être considérée comme complète ou définitive et qu'un facteur particulier, ou une combinaison déterminée de facteurs, ne peut être considéré comme décisif dans chaque cas. La question de savoir si les populations d'un territoire doivent être considérées comme ayant atteint un degré d'autonomie où il n'existe plus aucune obligation de communiquer des renseignements doit être résolue à la lumière des situations constatées à l'un ou à l'autre titre, en tenant compte des circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier, circonstances qu'il sera nécessaire d'étudier séparément".

D) Une troisième question d'ordre général a trait à la mesure dans laquelle les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, continuent de s'appliquer au cas de territoires qui n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance ou n'ont pas été pleinement intégrés à un autre Etat, mais ont atteint une complète autonomie dans le domaine de leurs affaires intérieures.

Le paragraphe 3 de l'annexe à la résolution 567 (VI) stipule qu'il s'agit là d'une question qui mérite un complément d'étude. Un certain nombre de réponses reçues des gouvernements expriment des opinions divergentes à propos de cette importante question de principe. Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a estimé que, dès qu'un territoire a atteint un degré d'autonomie dans les domaines mentionnés à l'Article 73, e, la Puissance administrante n'est plus tenue de communiquer des renseignements, et se fondant sur cette thèse, il a proposé une nouvelle liste de facteurs dont une Puissance administrante devrait tenir compte pour décider si elle doit cesser de communiquer des renseignements.

Des opinions diverses ont été exprimées par les membres du Comité sur le point de savoir si son mandat lui permettait d'examiner cette question. Il a été convenu de renvoyer la question à l'Assemblée générale qui souhaitera peut-être en poursuivre l'étude.

Les facteurs proposés par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas sont les suivants:

a) Le territoire a-t-il un parlement qui représente la population, et la composition de ce parlement est-elle fondée sur le résultat d'élections?

b) Comment le parlement coopère-t-il à l'exercice du pouvoir législatif dans les domaines mentionnés à l'Article 73, e?

c) Dans quelle mesure le pouvoir exécutif est-il lié par les décisions du parlement dans les domaines mentionnés à l'Article 73, e?

d) Les restrictions imposées par la métropole à l'autonomie du territoire dans les domaines mentionnés à l'Article 73, e, se limitent-elles à des cas prévus dans une constitution volontairement acceptée par le territoire?

e) Quelles exceptions sont prévues à l'autonomie du territoire, dans les domaines mentionnés à l'Article 73, e, du fait que ces questions intéressent également la métropole et le territoire? Ces questions sont-elles réglées conjointement, et quel est le rôle du territoire à cet égard?

f) Le territoire est-il indépendant du point de vue financier et son budget est-il soumis à l'approbation du parlement?

g) Quelles garanties existe-t-il du respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales?

E) Le Gouvernement de l'Irak a proposé d'ajouter à la liste actuelle un nouveau facteur concernant les forces armées. Certains membres du Comité ont été d'avis que les éléments de cette proposition soulevaient des problèmes difficiles touchant des questions de sécurité et qui échappaient à la compétence du Comité. Il a été convenu de mentionner la question générale de la compétence en matière de défense nationale dans la liste de facteurs et de reproduire, dans le présent rapport, le texte complet proposé par le Gouvernement de l'Irak. Ce texte est le suivant:

"a) Le territoire possède-t-il ses propres forces armées? Si tel est le cas, qui exerce sur ces forces armées l'autorité politique, administrative et financière? Une Puissance étrangère ou alliée contribue-t-elle financièrement à l'entretien de ces forces armées? Si tel est le cas, quel est le pourcentage de cette contribution par rapport au total des crédits inscrits au budget national pour les forces armées? Existe-t-il dans le territoire une mission militaire étrangère accréditée auprès des forces armées? Si tel est le cas, quel est le rôle de cette mission étrangère? Si elle joue le rôle de mission militaire consultative, dans quelle mesure peut-elle influencer, en théorie comme en pratique, la politique et l'administration des forces armées de ce territoire?"

"b) Une Puissance étrangère a-t-elle des unités militaires terrestres, aériennes ou navales sur ce territoire? Si tel est le cas, ces forces sont-elles là avec l'accord du territoire?"

F) Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a énuméré un certain nombre de facteurs dont il faudrait, à son avis, tenir compte, dans l'idéal, pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont la population s'administre complètement elle-même. Le Comité a incorporé dans sa liste ceux des facteurs énumérés dans la liste du Royaume-Uni qui ont trait aux droits politiques des personnes. On a émis l'opinion que d'autres facteurs, relatifs à la situation du pouvoir exécutif, au pouvoir judiciaire et à la sécurité intérieure étaient exposés de manière trop détaillée pour être incorporés également dans la liste du Comité, mais qu'il convenait d'en faire état dans le rapport. Il s'agit des facteurs suivants :

Situation du pouvoir exécutif

a) L'organe exécutif se compose-t-il de personnes qui jouissent de l'appui de la population ou de ses représentants élus ?

b) Les membres du gouvernement sont-ils choisis parmi les représentants élus par le peuple et leur maintien au pouvoir dépend-il de l'appui du peuple ? En d'autres termes, le retrait de l'appui et du consentement du peuple entraîne-t-il la chute du gouvernement ?

c) Le gouvernement est-il tenu, à des intervalles raisonnables fixés par la loi, de se démettre de ses pouvoirs et de donner à la population une nouvelle possibilité de déterminer le gouvernement du territoire ?

Pouvoir judiciaire

a) Les tribunaux sont-ils soustraits à toute influence politique, c'est-à-dire la nomination des magistrats dépend-elle ou ne dépend-elle pas de leurs affinités politiques ?

b) Existe-t-il une séparation absolue entre le pouvoir judiciaire et le pouvoir exécutif, c'est-à-dire la situation des juges est-elle indépendante au point de ne pas dépendre de tel ou tel parti politique ou de tel ou tel gouvernement particulier et de ne pas être influencée par les difficultés de ce parti ou de ce gouvernement ?

Sécurité intérieure

a) Les représentants élus par le peuple et les tribunaux sont-ils libres de toute pression exercée par la violence populaire, par des factions armées ou par des influences analogues ?

b) L'individu est-il à l'abri de toute arrestation arbitraire ? Existe-t-il des moyens (comme l'habeas corpus) de mettre fin à une détention arbitraire ?

c) Les forces armées de l'Etat et ses forces de police sont-elles subordonnées en dernier ressort aux représentants de la population ?

V.—LISTE DES FACTEURS PROPOSÉS

6. En conséquence, la liste de facteurs que le Comité ad hoc soumet à l'Assemblée générale, et dont il conviendrait de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, est la suivante :

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÉDÉ À L'INDÉPENDANCE OU À TOUTE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE SÉPARÉE

Première partie

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance

A.—Statut international

1. Responsabilité internationale.—Responsabilité internationale entière du territoire en ce qui concerne les actes inhérents à l'exercice de sa souveraineté externe ainsi que pour ce qui est des actes relatifs à son administration interne.

2. Possibilité de devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

3. Relations internationales en général.—Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des traités.

4. Défense nationale.—Liberté pour le territoire de conclure des accords relatifs à sa défense nationale.

B.—Autonomie interne

1. Forme de gouvernement.—Pleine liberté pour la population de se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'elle juge bonne.

2. Gouvernement du territoire.—Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.

3. Compétence en matière d'économie, sociale et culturelle.—Pleine compétence du gouvernement du territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles de ce dernier.

Deuxième partie

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée

A.—Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique.—Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations.—Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté.—Mesure dans laquelle la souveraineté du territoire a été librement et de sa propre volonté limitée au moment où ce territoire a accédé à une forme d'autonomie séparée.

B.—Statut international

1. Relations internationales en général.—Degré et mesure dans lesquels le territoire jouit du pouvoir d'établir librement des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier librement des traités.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

C.—Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du territoire.—Nature et degré du contrôle ou de l'intervention éventuels du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne, par exemple dans les domaines suivants :

Pouvoir législatif : Adoption des lois du territoire par une assemblée autochtone, soit élue tout entière par des voies libres et démocratiques, soit légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population ;

Pouvoir exécutif : Choix des membres du pouvoir exécutif par l'autorité compétente qui a dans le terri-toire l'agrément de la population autochtone, que cette autorité soit héréditaire ou élective, en tenant également compte, s'il y a lieu, de la nature et du degré du contrôle éventuel qu'exercerait directement ou indirectement sur la constitution et l'exercice du pouvoir exécutif un élément étranger;

Pouvoir judiciaire: Constitution des tribunaux et choix des juges.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement.—Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire: a) Existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié? b) Ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention, directe ou indirecte, d'un gouvernement étranger?

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle.—Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays

A.—Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique.—Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations.—Opinion des populations du territoire, librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique.—Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.

¹ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de se poser les questions suivantes: i) Chaque habitant adulte a-t-il le droit, en pleine égalité (sous réserve de garanties spéciales pour la protection des minorités), de déterminer le caractère du gouvernement du territoire? ii) Ce pouvoir s'exerce-t-il librement, c'est-à-dire l'électeur n'est-il soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et n'y a-t-il pas de partis politiques frappés de certaines incapacités? Pour l'application de ce facteur, on pourra vérifier les faits suivants:

a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;
b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale.

iii) Chaque personne est-elle libre d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir?

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles.—Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel.—Association: a) en vertu de la constitution de la métropole; ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire; en tenant compte des éléments suivants: i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au territoire associé; ii) s'il existe en certains domaines une compétence réservée en vertu de la constitution en faveur du territoire ou du pouvoir central; et iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B.—Statut

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif.—Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Citoyenneté.—Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

3. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement.—Accès des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire par nomination ou élection à tous les emplois publics relevant du pouvoir central dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

C.—Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote.—Suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et élections périodiques libres dans lesquelles l'électeur n'est soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et dans lesquelles aucun parti politique n'est frappé de certaines incapacités².

2. Droits et statut des habitants.—Dans un système unitaire, droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays et, dans un système fédéral, degré identique d'autonomie pour les habitants et organes locaux de toutes les parties de la fédération.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux.—Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties du pays.

4. Législation interne.—Compétence législative ou réglementaire locale égale à la compétence législative ou réglementaire dont bénéficient les autres parties du territoire et exercée dans les mêmes conditions.

² Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de vérifier les faits suivants: a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;

b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale;

g) Liberté pour chaque personne d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir.

de l'Article 73 de la Charte, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements,

Considérant que cette obligation subsiste, à l'égard de chaque territoire, tant que les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte ne sont pas atteints,

Considérant que l'Assemblée générale a déclaré, dans sa résolution 222 (III) adoptée le 3 novembre 1948, que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit nécessairement être informée de toute modification qui pourrait intervenir dans le statut constitutionnel de l'un quelconque des territoires non autonomes et précisé que, dans un délai maximum de six mois après la communication des renseignements susvisés, tous renseignements qui peuvent être nécessaires dans de tels cas devraient être communiqués, y compris des renseignements sur la constitution, les lois et les règlements concernant le gouvernement du territoire, et des renseignements relatifs aux liens constitutionnels entre le territoire et le gouvernement métropolitain,

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes)*, Reconnaissant que, lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie, une liste de facteurs pourrait servir utilement de guide, tant à l'Assemblée générale qu'au Membre administrant intéressé,

Vu la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale, en date du 18 janvier 1952,

1. Approuve provisoirement la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe, qui peut servir de guide à l'Assemblée générale ainsi qu'aux Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes, lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie;

2. Reconnaît que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes;

3. Déclare que ces facteurs, tout en servant de guide, lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les obligations énoncées à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte existent encore, ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes;

4. Déclare en outre que, pour qu'un territoire puisse être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est essentiel que sa population s'administre complètement elle-même, selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte;

5. Recommande que, provisoirement, l'Assemblée générale tienne compte de la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe chaque fois qu'elle étudie un cas, soit à la suite de toute communication reçue par le Secrétaire général en application de la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale relative à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, soit à propos d'autres questions qui peuvent se poser touchant l'existence d'une obligation de transmettre des renseignements en vertu de cet article;

6. Décide de créer un nouveau Comité ad hoc de dix membres, composé des Etats suivants: Australie,

648 (VII). Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

L'Assemblée générale,

Considérant que les Etats Membres qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes ont accepté, en vertu de l'alinéa e

* Voir le document A/2178.

Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Guatemala, Irak, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord et Venezuela, qui sera chargé de poursuivre et d'approfondir l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie;

7. Invite ledit comité à prendre notamment en considération la liste des facteurs¹ arrêtée en 1952 par le comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI) et les communications faites par les gouvernements conformément à ladite résolution, et à tenir compte, en outre, des autres éléments suivants:

a) La possibilité de définir la notion de complète autonomie, aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte,

b) Les critères permettant de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes se trouve garanti, en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI de la Charte,

c) La libre expression de la volonté des peuples, s'agissant de déterminer leur statut national et international aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte;

8. Invite tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à communiquer par écrit au Secrétaire général, le 1er mai 1953 au plus tard, leurs vues sur les questions qui figurent dans le mandat du comité;

9. Invite le Secrétaire général à réunir le Comité ad hoc de façon qu'il puisse commencer ses travaux au plus tard quatre semaines avant l'ouverture de la session de 1953 du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

402ème séance plénière,
le 10 décembre 1952.

ANNEXE

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance ou à toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée

PREMIÈRE PARTIE

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance

A.—Statut international

1. Responsabilité internationale.—Responsabilité internationale entière du territoire en ce qui concerne les actes inhérents à l'exercice de la souveraineté externe ainsi que pour ce qui est des actes relatifs à son administration interne.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

3. Relations internationales en général.—Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des traités.

4. Défense nationale.—Liberté pour le territoire de conclure des accords relatifs à sa défense nationale.

B.—Autonomie interne

1. Forme de gouvernement.—Plaine liberté pour la population de se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'elle juge bonne.

2. Gouvernement du territoire.—Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gou-vernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle.—Plaine compétence du gouvernement du territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles de ce dernier.

DEUXIÈME PARTIE

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée

A.—Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique.—Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations.—Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté.—Mesure dans laquelle la souveraineté du territoire a été librement et de sa propre volonté limitée au moment où ce territoire a accédé à une forme d'autonomie séparée.

B.—Statut international

1. Relations internationales en général.—Degré et mesure dans lesquels le territoire jouit du pouvoir d'établir librement des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier librement des traités.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

C.—Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du territoire.—Nature et degré du contrôle ou de l'intervention éventuels du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne, par exemple dans les domaines suivants:

Pouvoir législatif: Adoption des lois du territoire par une assemblée autochtone, soit élue tout entière par des voies libres et démocratiques, soit légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population;

Pouvoir exécutif: Choix des membres du pouvoir exécutif par l'autorité compétente qui a dans le territoire l'agrément de la population autochtone, que cette autorité soit héréditaire ou élective, en tenant également compte, s'il y a lieu, de la nature et du degré du contrôle éventuel qu'exercerait directement ou indirectement sur la constitution et l'exercice du pouvoir exécutif un élément étranger;

Pouvoir judiciaire: Constitution des tribunaux et choix des juges.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement.—Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire:

a) Existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié? b) Ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention, directe ou indirecte, d'un gouvernement étranger?

¹ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de se poser les questions suivantes:

i) Chaque habitant adulte a-t-il le droit, en pleine égalité (sous réserve de garanties spéciales pour la protection des minorités), de déterminer le caractère du gouvernement du territoire?

ii) Ce pouvoir s'exerce-t-il librement, c'est-à-dire l'électeur n'est-il soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et n'y a-t-il pas de partis politiques frappés de certaines incapacités? Pour l'application de ce facteur, on pourra vérifier les faits suivants:

a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;

¹ Voir le document A/2178.

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle.

Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays

A.—Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique.—Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations.—Opinion des populations du territoire, librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique.—Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles.—Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel.—Association: a) en vertu de la Constitution de la métropole; ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire; en tenant compte des éléments suivants: i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au territoire associé; ii) s'il existe en certains domaines une compétence réservée en vertu de la Constitution en faveur du territoire ou du pouvoir central; et iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B.—Statut

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif.—Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Citoyenneté.—Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

3. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement.—Accès des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire, par nomination ou élection, à tous les emplois publics relevant du pouvoir central dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

(Suite de la note a.)

- b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
- c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
- d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
- e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
- f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale.
- iii) Chaque personne est-elle libre d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir?

C.—Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote.—Suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et élections périodiques libres dans lesquelles l'électeur n'est soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et dans lesquelles aucun parti politique n'est frappé de certaines incapacités^b.

2. Droits et statut des habitants.—Dans un système unitaire, droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays et, dans un système fédéral, degré identique d'autonomie pour les habitants et organes locaux de toutes les parties de la Fédération.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux.—Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties du pays.

4. Législation interne.—Compétence législative ou réglementaire locale égale à la compétence législative ou réglementaire dont bénéficient les autres parties du territoire et exercée dans les mêmes conditions.

Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de vérifier les faits suivants:

- a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;
- b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
- c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
- d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
- e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
- f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale;
- g) Liberté pour chaque personne d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir.

ASSEMBLEE GENERALE

SEANCE PLENIERE

Mercredi 10 décembre 1952, à 10 h. 30

SEPTIEME SESSION

Documents officiels

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

	Pages
Célébration de la Journée des droits de l'homme.....	361
Rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2296).....	362
Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte: a) renseignements relatifs à la situation et au progrès dans le domaine social; b) renseignements relatifs à la situation dans d'autres domaines; c) transmission de renseignements
Question de la reconstitution du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes
Participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes
Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

Président: M. Lester B. PEARSON (Canada).

9. Les délégations auront, naturellement, la faculté d'expliquer leur vote. J'aimerais que ces explications de vote puissent avoir lieu, soit avant l'ensemble des votes sur les six projets de résolution, soit — ce qui vaudrait encore mieux — après ces votes, de telle sorte qu'il n'y ait pas besoin d'explications de vote pour chaque projet séparément. Si cette façon de procéder agréée à l'Assemblée générale, j'estime qu'il conviendrait de ne pas demander aux représentants d'abrégier leurs explications de vote comme dans le passé, lorsqu'il y avait moins de projets de résolution à examiner et moins de votes à expliquer. D'un autre côté, je suis sûr d'avoir l'assentiment de l'Assemblée si j'exprime l'espoir que l'on ne se servira pas des explications de vote pour rouvrir une discussion générale.

10. Si la procédure que je propose ne rencontre pas d'opposition, je vais inviter le Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission, M. Scott, représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande, à présenter le rapport de cette Commission.

11. M. SCOTT (Nouvelle-Zélande), Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission (traduit de l'anglais) : J'ai l'honneur de présenter à l'Assemblée générale le rapport de la Quatrième Commission sur les points 33, 34, 35 et 36 de l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée. Ce rapport, qui a été adopté par la Quatrième Commission sans opposition, constitue le document A/2296 qui vous est actuellement soumis. Je n'ai que de très brèves explications à fournir.

12. Vous constaterez que la Quatrième Commission a consacré vingt-sept séances à l'examen des questions dont elle était saisie au sujet des territoires non autonomes. Si je mentionne ce chiffre, c'est qu'il montre que la Commission a procédé à une étude approfondie du sujet; on peut dire que c'est là le résultat de l'importance croissante que l'Assemblée générale attache à l'examen des questions qui découlent des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

13. La Quatrième Commission soumet à l'Assemblée générale six projets de résolution. Les projets de résolution I et II découlent directement de l'examen, par la Quatrième Commission, des renseignements relatifs à la situation sociale des territoires non autonomes. Le projet de résolution III est étroitement lié à ce même programme de travail puisqu'il vise l'usage que l'on pourrait faire des rapports spéciaux rédigés par le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes sur la situation économique, sociale et scolaire dans ces territoires. Le projet de résolution IV a trait à la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Le projet de résolution V traite de la participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Certains aspects de ces importants projets de résolution retiendront vraisemblablement l'attention de l'Assemblée ici réunie en séance plénière, car toutes les délégations comprendront certainement l'influence qu'ils peuvent avoir sur le progrès des travaux des Nations Unies.

14. Enfin, les délégations trouveront dans le projet de résolution VI l'écho des travaux du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, créé à la dernière session de l'Assemblée générale [résolution 567 (VI)], ainsi que de l'examen du rapport de ce comité par la

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2296) :

Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte: a) renseignements relatifs à la situation et au progrès dans le domaine social; b) renseignements relatifs à la situation dans d'autres domaines; c) transmission de renseignements

[Point 33 de l'ordre du jour]

Question de la reconstitution du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes

[Point 34 de l'ordre du jour]

Participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes

[Point 35 de l'ordre du jour]

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

[Point 36 de l'ordre du jour]

8. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais) : Quelqu'un demande-t-il, conformément à l'article 67 du règlement intérieur, que l'Assemblée discute le rapport de la Quatrième Commission? Personne ne demandant la discussion, nous allons procéder, quand le Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission aura présenté son rapport, au vote sur les projets de résolution qui y figurent.

Quatrième Commission. On voit que ce projet de résolution approuve provisoirement la liste des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes; il propose en même temps la création d'un nouveau comité ad hoc chargé de poursuivre l'étude de ce problème complexe. Je pense me faire l'interprète de l'ensemble de la Quatrième Commission en déclarant que, dans notre esprit, ce nouveau comité ne serait créé que pour 1953 et ferait rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de la prochaine session.

15. Tels sont les six projets de résolution qui vous sont soumis. Le rapport donne des indications sur l'adoption de ces textes par la Commission, en précisant le résultat des votes auxquels il a été procédé; je présente donc à l'Assemblée générale ces projets de résolution en même temps que le rapport.

16. Avant de quitter cette tribune, qu'il me soit permis d'ajouter, en ma qualité de représentant de la NOUVELLE-ZELANDE, que nombre de mes collègues à la Quatrième Commission et moi-même considérons comme particulièrement importants, non seulement d'un point de vue général mais surtout au regard de l'Article 18 de la Charte, les projets de résolution IV et V qui visent respectivement la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes et la participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux de ce comité. Je voudrais donc proposer que, comme par le passé, l'on applique le paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte et l'article 84 du règlement intérieur aux projets de résolution IV et V.

17. M. LLOYD (Royaume-Uni) (traduit de l'anglais): Je désire expliquer de quelle façon ma délégation va se prononcer sur les six projets de résolution qui ont été présentés en même temps que le rapport de la Quatrième Commission.

18. Nous voterons pour le projet de résolution I.

19. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution II, ma délégation a déposé un amendement [A/L.127] qui tend à remplacer, au paragraphe 2 du dispositif, les mots "de caractère racial ou religieux" par les mots "de cet ordre". Le texte actuel du paragraphe résulte de l'adoption d'un amendement que ma délégation avait proposé à la Quatrième Commission. Par suite de l'adoption de cet amendement, certaines délégations ont jugé qu'il leur était impossible de voter pour le projet de résolution ainsi amendé, car elles estimaient que les mots "de caractère racial ou religieux" restreignaient par trop la portée du paragraphe 2 du dispositif. Or, en proposant cet amendement, ma délégation avait cherché à élargir la portée de ce paragraphe; aussi n'aimerions-nous guère voir émettre, à propos de ce projet, des votes qui seraient dus à une fausse interprétation de notre intention. Ma délégation a donc présenté l'amendement dont l'Assemblée est actuellement saisie, pour bien préciser qu'à nos yeux, la portée du paragraphe 2 du dispositif doit être la même que celle du paragraphe 1 de ce dispositif. J'espère que cet amendement sera adopté et que, de ce fait, le projet de résolution en faveur duquel ma délégation se propose de voter pourra bénéficier de l'appui le plus large. Toutefois, nous n'émettrons un vote favorable qu'avec la réserve que nous avons déjà exprimée à la Quatrième Commission, à savoir que l'appli-cation immédiate du paragraphe 4 du dispositif pourra, dans certains cas, s'avérer impossible pour des raisons d'ordre purement pratique ou administratif.

20. J'en viens maintenant au projet de résolution III. Ma délégation estime que le paragraphe 1 du dispositif de ce projet de résolution invite les Puissances administrantes à donner au Secrétaire général des renseignements dont la portée dépasse largement celle des renseignements de nature statistique ou technique que ces Etats Membres sont obligés de communiquer aux termes de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. C'est pour cette raison que ma délégation a voté contre ce paragraphe à la Quatrième Commission et qu'elle votera de nouveau contre lui s'il fait ici l'objet d'un vote séparé. Toutefois, les renseignements régulièrement transmis par le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté fournissent une documentation qui suffit largement à permettre à ceux qui les étudient de se former une opinion sur la mesure dans laquelle certains principes généraux énoncés par l'Assemblée générale trouvent leur expression dans la politique que nous suivons et les mesures que nous prenons dans les territoires dont nous avons la responsabilité. Ma délégation s'abstiendra pour cette raison lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution III.

21. Le projet de résolution IV, relatif à la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, présente pour nous de plus sérieuses difficultés. Les représentants du Royaume-Uni ont à maintes reprises indiqué quelle était l'attitude du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté à l'égard de l'existence d'un Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Il n'y a dans la Charte aucune disposition qui prévoie l'examen systématique et la critique, par un organe spécial, des renseignements communiqués par les Puissances administrantes en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte; à notre avis, il n'était pas dans les intentions des auteurs du Chapitre XI qu'un tel organe existât. Il est bien facile de s'en apercevoir si l'on met en regard la situation des territoires non autonomes et celle des Territoires sous tutelle, pour lesquels la Charte a créé Conseil de tutelle. En outre, aux termes mêmes de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, les renseignements sont communiqués "au Secrétaire général, à titre d'information". Aussi longtemps que le Comité des renseignements n'existait qu'à titre temporaire, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, comme d'autres Puissances administrantes, a estimé pouvoir participer à ses travaux. Il l'a fait pour donner une marque de son esprit de coopération aux nombreux Membres des Nations Unies qui avaient montré de l'intérêt pour le développement des territoires non autonomes et qui désiraient avoir la possibilité d'étudier avec les Puissances administrantes les renseignements qu'elles avaient communiqués.

22. Toutefois, à chacune des sessions du comité, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a formellement réservé sa position en ce qui concerne l'existence même du comité car, même implicitement, il ne pouvait souscrire à la thèse qui voudrait que les Puissances administrantes dussent rendre compte à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de l'administration des territoires non autonomes qui dépendent d'elles. Mais cette réserve ne concerne pas la contribution apportée aux travaux du comité par les représentants du Royaume-Uni; ils ont essayé de faciliter dans toute la mesure du possible la tâche du comité.

23. Pour ce qui est des travaux du comité, la plupart des Puissances non administrantes ont d'ailleurs exprimé l'avis que ses études étaient utiles, mais elles ont affirmé, au cours de la présente session, qu'il ne suffisait pas d'avoir un comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes dont le caractère serait temporaire.

24. Quant à nous, nous n'avons jamais bien compris en quoi le caractère, temporaire ou non, de ce comité pouvait affecter la qualité de son travail, et les principes qui ont déterminé jusqu'ici l'attitude du Royaume-Uni à l'égard de ce comité n'ont pas changé. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni serait néanmoins disposé, pour prouver sa bonne volonté, à participer aux travaux d'un comité restreint reconstitué sur la même base temporaire que par le passé et pour une semblable période de trois ans. A l'expiration de cette période, l'Assemblée générale devra aborder la question de la révision de la Charte, et il nous semble que ce serait alors le moment pour les Etats de soulever d'importantes questions de principe, telles que les attributions de l'Assemblée générale en fonction des dispositions actuelles de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. En attendant, le projet de création d'un comité permanent des renseignements ne tend qu'à assimiler les territoires non autonomes aux Territoires sous tutelle, malgré la claire distinction tracée par la Charte, et à préjuger les décisions qui pourraient être prises à cette époque.

25. Il ressort clairement de ce que je viens de dire que l'objection essentielle que nous faisons à ce projet de résolution est qu'il donne en fait à ce comité un caractère permanent. Il tend à interpréter le Chapitre XI de la Charte d'une manière que mon gouvernement ne peut accepter. Il préjuge le résultat des discussions qui auront sans doute lieu dans trois ans.

26. Si l'Assemblée générale tient à affirmer à tout prix une certaine façon de voir et à préjuger ces discussions, mon gouvernement saura exactement ce qui lui reste à faire. Il se trouvera dans l'impossibilité d'assister aux travaux de ce comité. Mais si la résolution adoptée limitait la reconduction de ce comité à une nouvelle période de trois ans, nous participerions comme par le passé à ses travaux. Nous pensons que, lorsqu'il y a des divergences de vues sur l'interprétation à donner à la Charte en la matière, nous devons essayer de concilier nos façons de voir dans un esprit de bonne volonté et sans reculer devant un compromis. A notre avis, ce comité n'est ni nécessaire, ni légalement constitué. Mais, dans un esprit de compromis, nous sommes prêts à participer à ses travaux pour une nouvelle période de trois ans, comme je l'ai dit tout à l'heure. D'autre part, le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté m'a chargé de déclarer que si l'Assemblée repousse cette offre, que nous considérons comme une offre raisonnable, inspirée par un esprit de conciliation, nous ne participerons plus aux travaux de ce comité.

27. J'en viens maintenant au projet de résolution V, relatif à la participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements. Nous ne pensons pas que la participation directe des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du comité puisse vraiment faciliter la marche de ces territoires et de leurs populations vers l'idéal consacré par le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Nous pourrions trouver bon d'associer quelquefois à notre délégation, dans ce comité ou dans d'autres, des représentants qualifiés venant de nos territoires non autonomes. Nous avons agi de la sorte dans le passé et nous continuerons à le faire dans l'avenir quand cela semblera utile. Mais nous tenons à demeurer seuls juges de la composition qu'il convient de donner à nos délégations aux organes internationaux et nous considérons en outre que seuls les Membres des Nations Unies doivent être éligibles aux comités de l'Assemblée générale. Ces comités doivent demeurer des réunions de gouvernements souverains et responsables. Il ne peut être question de les transformer en tribunaux où les Etats Membres des Nations Unies se verraient mis en accusation par les populations indigènes des territoires non autonomes. Pour cette raison fondamentale, nous nous verrons obligés de voter contre le projet de résolution V.

28. Pour ce qui est du projet de résolution VI, relatif aux facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte, ma délégation émettra, ici encore, un vote négatif. Le statut des territoires non autonomes pour lesquels le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté assume une responsabilité internationale ne saurait être déterminé par les Nations Unies. Il est déterminé par les actes législatifs de caractère constitutionnel que promulgue le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté. A parler franchement, nous ne croyons pas que la liste des facteurs jointe au projet de résolution puisse nous être d'une grande utilité pour l'interprétation de ces actes.

29. De plus, nous ne pouvons accepter le principe, énoncé dans le paragraphe 1 du dispositif, que l'Assemblée générale aurait qualité pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non son autonomie complète.

30. Quant au paragraphe 2 du dispositif, je ne crois pas que la Commission des droits de l'homme soit déjà parvenue à définir d'une manière satisfaisante le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes — je ne suis même pas bien sûr qu'elle en ait donné une définition. Je crois que cette question de stricte définition s'est avérée beaucoup plus complexe que beaucoup ne s'y attendaient.

31. Nous ne pouvons pas non plus accepter l'affirmation figurant au paragraphe 4 du dispositif, selon laquelle l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement est inséparable de l'autonomie totale en matière politique.

32. Pour toutes ces raisons, nous devons voter encore contre ce projet de résolution. Néanmoins, dans l'esprit que je viens de préciser, nous avons accepté de siéger au nouveau comité ad hoc que ce projet de résolution prévoit pour examiner les études qui servent de base à ce texte. Notre participation ne modifiera en rien notre attitude quant aux importantes questions de principe qui, comme je l'ai expliqué, nous obligent à nous opposer au projet de résolution. Nous espérons que cette participation nous permettra de convaincre nos collègues du bien-fondé de notre attitude sur ces questions de principe. Mais nous considérons que l'esprit de conciliation auquel je viens de faire allusion doit nous convaincre d'accepter de participer aux travaux de ce comité.

33. Pour ma part, je suis navré de voir que ma délégation ne peut que s'opposer à un si grand nombre des projets de résolution que nous soumet la Quatrième Commission. Nous avions espéré que la Quatrième Commission était sur le point d'adopter une attitude plus compréhensible, à nos yeux, à l'endroit des importantes questions qui découlent du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Nos espoirs en la matière n'ont pas encore été exaucés. Mais l'une des consolations de l'existence humaine, c'est que l'espoir renaît toujours de ses cendres et je ne désespère pas de voir une plus grande mesure de collaboration et de compréhension s'établir peu à peu au sein de cette Commission.

34. M. PIGNON (France) : La délégation française a eu l'occasion d'exposer devant la Quatrième Commission son point de vue touchant les questions qui font l'objet du rapport et des projets de résolution actuellement soumis à l'Assemblée. Elle a formulé cette opinion de façon détaillée et sans ambiguïté aucune. Elle confirme aujourd'hui les observations qu'elle a déjà présentées.

35. De plus, eu égard à la gravité des problèmes en cause, la délégation française estime indispensable de souligner certains points sur lesquels l'attention ne saurait être appelée avec trop d'insistance.

36. Tout d'abord, et de façon générale, la délégation française déplore que la plupart des projets présentés par la Quatrième Commission dans le domaine des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes procèdent d'une conception contraire à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Charte. Elle est obligée de constater, une fois de plus, la manifestation d'une volonté de modifier unilatéralement le sens et la portée d'un traité qui ne pourrait être amendé qu'en usant des procédures légales prévues à cet effet. Elle déclare de la façon la plus solennelle que la poursuite d'une telle entreprise est de nature à compromettre la collaboration et la coopération qui sont les fins de cette Organisation. Elle met en garde contre les conséquences dangereuses que pourrait entraîner, en pratique, la continuation de ces errements.

37. A la lumière des considérations qui viennent d'être énoncées, la délégation française désire maintenant préciser sa position et sa doctrine en ce qui concerne certains des projets de résolution qui figurent dans le rapport de la Quatrième Commission.

38. Premièrement, la délégation française votera pour le projet de résolution II relatif à la discrimination raciale, parce qu'elle représente un peuple passionnément opposé à toute forme de discrimination. Elle renouvelle cependant, à cette occasion, les réserves qu'elle a présentées devant la Quatrième Commission touchant la nécessité de traiter un tel problème sur le plan de l'universalité, et selon des méthodes mieux appropriées que celles qu'a suivies la Quatrième Commission.

39. Deuxièmement, la délégation française remarque que le projet de résolution V intitulé "Participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes" reprend, dans les paragraphes 2 et 3 de son dispositif, les idées les plus contestables sur lesquelles se fondait déjà la résolution 566 (VI) du 18 janvier 1952 concernant le même objet. La délégation française estime que la création, sous une forme plus ou moins déguisée, du statut de membre associé du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes est inconstitutionnelle. Elle déclare qu'il ne saurait exister, au sein des organes des Nations Unies, une dualité de représentation au bénéfice de la Puissance administrante et du territoire non autonome à la fois. Elle rappelle que le Chapitre XI de la Charte, de même que les dispositions du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2, laissent à la Puissance administrante, et à elle seule, la responsabilité de l'administration des territoires non autonomes et écartent dans ce domaine toute ingérence des Nations Unies.

40. Troisièmement, la délégation française s'abstiendra de relever à nouveau le caractère gratuit et contradictoire des dispositions du projet de résolution VI intitulé : "Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". La délégation française tient, au contraire, à souligner qu'elle ne saurait reconnaître les principes inclus dans ce projet qui, notamment, donne compétence à l'Assemblée générale pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas non autonome.

41. Si la délégation française a pu participer à l'étude des facteurs de l'autonomie, c'est parce que cette étude avait été entreprise dans le cadre tracé par la résolution 334 (IV) de l'Assemblée générale suivant laquelle l'Assemblée "a compétence pour exprimer un avis sur les principes qui ont guidé ou qui peuvent à l'avenir guider les Etats Membres intéressés dans l'énumération des territoires pour lesquels ils sont tenus de transmettre les renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte". La délégation française avait admis que l'Assemblée générale était fondée à étudier, selon les procédures qui avaient été prévues, le moyen de guider les Etats responsables par un avis portant sur les principes propres à les instruire dans la détermination des territoires auxquels s'applique l'Article 73, e, de la Charte et elle avait pu participer aux travaux préliminaires qui avaient été poursuivis à Paris, lors de la sixième session, et au sein du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes). Toutefois, la compétence de l'Assemblée générale ne saurait aller au-delà de cet avis donné sur la nature des principes susceptibles de guider les Etats Membres. A plusieurs reprises, le Gouvernement français a rappelé officiellement que la détermination des territoires dont les populations ne se dirigent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes selon les termes de la Charte relève de la compétence exclusive des Etats qui ont la responsabilité d'administrer ces territoires. La compétence des Puissances administrantes à cet égard, qui découle de la Charte, ne saurait être affectée, réduite ou contrôlée en vertu d'une décision quelconque de l'Assemblée générale. En conséquence, la délégation française se voit dans l'obligation, pour l'immédiat comme pour l'avenir, de réserver de la façon la plus expresse la compétence que son gouvernement détient à cet égard en vertu de la Charte.

42. Quatrièmement, en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution IV intitulé : "Reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes", la délégation française tient à rappeler qu'elle a toujours formulé les réserves les plus expresses touchant la légalité d'un organe appelé à examiner les renseignements qui, aux termes de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, sont communiqués seulement au Secrétaire général des Nations Unies pour information. Cet organe n'a du reste été en aucune manière prévu par la Charte. De même, la délégation française s'est toujours élevée contre cette conception fondée sur une interprétation erronée du Chapitre XI qui tend à conférer à notre Organisation une sorte de droit de contrôle sur les territoires non autonomes et dont la création de ce comité constitue à coup sûr la manifestation la plus nette. Une telle conception est en effet en contradiction avec les termes mêmes du Chapitre XI, et avec d'autres stipulations de la Charte, ainsi qu'avec les travaux préparatoires de la Conférence de San-Francisco.

43. Si, dans le passé, la délégation française a pu participer aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, c'était en raison du caractère non permanent de cet organisme. Il s'agissait là d'une situation provisoire, d'une période de durée définie durant laquelle la délégation française, avec le souci de se conformer dans la mesure du possible aux principes de coopération internationale inscrits dans la Charte, n'avait pas refusé de se prêter à un examen en commun des questions générales intéressant les territoires non autonomes afin de contribuer à mieux faire connaître ces problèmes. En posant le principe de la permanence du comité, le projet de résolution IV consacre au contraire l'illégalité à laquelle je viens de faire allusion. Il donne officiellement au Chapitre XI de la Charte l'interprétation tendancieuse et la portée induite que la délégation française ne peut accepter. Il confère à un organisme dont l'utilité apparaît, au demeurant, très contestable et dont les travaux se déroulent de plus en plus dans une atmosphère dépourvue d'objectivité et de compréhension, un caractère tout à fait incompatible avec les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte qui ont essentiellement pour objet la publicité.

44. Ceci étant, la délégation française doit, au nom de son gouvernement, déclarer, en tout état de cause, qu'elle ne prendra pas part l'an prochain aux travaux du comité si le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV est adopté sous sa forme actuelle, c'est-à-dire si le mandat du comité est renouvelé pour une période indéfinie.

45. M. VAN LANGENHOVE (Belgique): La délégation belge juge nécessaire d'exposer les raisons fondamentales pour lesquelles elle ne peut donner son approbation aux projets de résolution concernant les territoires non autonomes.

46. Les obligations énoncées par l'Article 73 de la Charte sont générales. Elles s'étendent incontestablement, selon nous, à tous les Etats Membres sur le territoire desquels vivent des populations indigènes arriérées et à qui incombe la responsabilité d'assurer leur progrès. Ces obligations sont semblables à celles qui étaient contenues dans l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations, par lequel les Etats Membres s'étaient engagés "à assurer le traitement équitable des populations indigènes dans les territoires soumis à leur administration".

47. La présente Assemblée compte de nombreux Etats qui ont été Membres de la Société des Nations. Aucun n'a jamais contesté que cette disposition s'appliquât aux populations indigènes vivant à l'intérieur de ses frontières.

48. Or, parmi ces Etats autrefois Membres de la Société des Nations, il en est seulement sept qui reconnaissent encore cette obligation. A tous les autres, nous sommes en droit de demander quelles sont les raisons pour lesquelles ce qu'ils ont accepté pendant tant d'années, sans élever la moindre protestation, leur est devenu aujourd'hui inacceptable. Cette question, nous l'avons déjà posée et elle est demeurée jusqu'ici sans réponse. En vain avons-nous souligné que restreindre le bénéfice des garanties internationales à quelques populations indigènes est commettre une injustice envers toutes les autres et que semblable restriction constitue un déplorable recul dans la poursuite de l'idéal humanitaire auquel notre Organisation est vouée.

49. Ce n'est pas le seul aspect sous lequel il faille considérer la situation actuelle. Au sein de la Société des Nations, les obligations que la Belgique assumait à l'égard des populations de ses territoires d'Afrique — sous la seule réserve de ses territoires sous mandat — étaient identiques à celles qu'assumaient tous les autres Etats Membres, aussi bien en Amérique et en Asie qu'en Afrique. Dans ce dernier continent — en Afrique — ces obligations étaient les mêmes en ce qui concernait l'Ethiopie, le Libéria ou l'Union Sud-Africaine qu'à l'égard du Congo, de l'Afrique-Equatoriale française ou de l'Ouganda. A présent, la Belgique y reste seule soumise, avec la France et le Royaume-Uni. Tous les autres Etats Membres, bien que leurs responsabilités soient semblables aux nôtres, ont cessé de reconnaître la validité de ces obligations.

50. En même temps, on s'est appliqué à étendre la portée de ces obligations d'année en année. Moins il y a d'Etats disposés à s'y soumettre, plus il s'est révélé facile de réunir des majorités prêtes à voter des résolutions qui, sans ménagements pour la souveraineté d'autrui, tendent à voir transformer progressivement les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte en un régime de quasi-tutelle que la Conférence de San-Francisco a délibérément exclu et qui, pour ce qui est de la Belgique, ne correspond aucunement aux engagements souscrits par elle et approuvés par son Parlement.

51. Bien que tous les Etats Membres administrant des populations indigènes soient placés devant les mêmes devoirs, on les a ainsi rangés en deux catégories suivant qu'ils reconnaissent ou non que l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable: les uns sont invités à accepter des obligations de plus en plus étendues tandis que les autres n'en acceptent aucune. Parmi ceux-ci, l'absence de responsabilité conduit aux exagérations et à la surenchère. On aboutit ainsi, comme le constatait récemment le Gouvernement belge, à une situation difficilement tolérable et ce serait sans doute se faire illusion que de s'imaginer qu'elle puisse durer.

52. On n'atteindra un régime stable que si les Etats placés devant les mêmes responsabilités font honneur, sans exception, aux obligations générales qui correspondent à ces responsabilités. D'autre part, c'est manquer de générosité et de justice à l'égard des populations indigènes que de ne point accorder à toutes, comme le faisaient les Membres de la Société des Nations, le bénéfice des garanties générales formulées en leur faveur. Ce sont là les principes sur lesquels est fondée l'interprétation que le Gouvernement belge donne au Chapitre XI et auxquels il entend se tenir. Les dispositions qui les méconnaissent n'auront pas son concours.

53. Le Gouvernement belge déterminera, en s'inspirant des considérations qui précèdent, s'il y a lieu pour lui de participer désormais aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Il n'y participera en tout cas pas si, conformément au projet de résolution IV soumis à l'Assemblée, ce comité est transformé en un organe quasi permanent.

54. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) (traduit de l'anglais) : Je voudrais faire quelques brèves observations au sujet du projet de résolution IV relatif à la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Depuis que la Quatrième Commission a approuvé le projet de résolution IV, on savait d'une manière générale — et nous en avons aujourd'hui été expressément informés — que le Royaume-Uni, la France et la Belgique, les trois Membres des Nations Unies qui sont responsables de l'administration de la plupart des territoires non autonomes, estimaient qu'il leur serait impossible de participer aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes si l'on décidait de le maintenir en fonctions à titre permanent ou semi-permanent, comme le recommande la Quatrième Commission.

55. Que l'on me permette de rappeler l'historique de la question et le fait que les membres du Comité des renseignements s'accordaient assez généralement pour vouloir que le comité restât en fonctions, dans les mêmes conditions que jusqu'ici, pendant une nouvelle période de trois ans; c'est la Quatrième Commission qui a remanié le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV de manière à transformer le comité en un organisme permanent ou semi-permanent.

56. L'objectif visé serait d'ailleurs pratiquement atteint si nous adoptions aujourd'hui une proposition qui tendrait à proroger le mandat du comité pour une nouvelle période de trois ans, dans les mêmes conditions que jusqu'à présent. Comme, en agissant de cette manière, on s'assurerait la coopération précieuse — et, en vérité, indispensable — des trois Puissances administrantes, ma délégation et plusieurs autres pensent que leur devoir est tout tracé et qu'elles doivent voter de façon à parvenir à ce compromis: reconduire le comité pour une nouvelle période de trois ans. Cette décision ne préjugerait en rien, bien entendu, le désir que l'Assemblée pourrait avoir de maintenir le comité en fonctions à l'expiration de cette nouvelle période de trois ans. En prorogeant ainsi son mandat, nous permettrions à ce comité, auquel plusieurs de nos collègues attachent une grande importance, de poursuivre ses travaux sans interruption et avec la participation de tous ses membres.

57. Je demanderai donc, conformément à l'article 89 du règlement intérieur relatif à la division des propositions, que l'on mette séparément aux voix la dernière partie du paragraphe 1 du projet de résolution IV à partir des mots "et qu'à l'expiration de cette période".

58. Je voterai contre cette dernière partie du paragraphe dans un esprit de compromis, de conciliation et de coopération et dans l'espoir que cette addition au texte primitif sera rejetée. Si cette addition était supprimée, le paragraphe se lirait comme suit:

"Décide que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes restera en fonctions, dans les mêmes conditions, pendant une nouvelle période de trois ans."

Nous reviendrons ainsi à la formule proposée à l'origine à la Quatrième Commission par le Comité des renseignements, formule grâce à laquelle nous serions assurés de la coopération de tous les Etats Membres aux travaux de ce comité.

59. Si la dernière partie du paragraphe est supprimée, ma délégation votera pour le reste du paragraphe ainsi que pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution; elle espère que de très nombreuses délégations feront de même.

60. M. RIEMENS (Pays-Bas) (traduit de l'anglais) : Je me bornerai à parler du projet de résolution VI, relatif aux facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. La délégation des Pays-Bas éprouve certaines appréhensions à l'égard du texte de ce projet tel que l'a arrêté la Quatrième Commission; c'est pourquoi nous avons le ferme espoir que toutes les autres délégations examineront soigneusement si ce document, sous sa forme présente, peut avoir leur agrément.

61. La réalisation de la pleine autonomie représente le but élevé que les Etats Membres responsables de l'administration de territoires non autonomes se sont engagés à viser en souscrivant à l'Article 73 de la Charte. Plusieurs Etats Membres, les Pays-Bas y compris, ont à leur actif de grandes réalisations; ils ont franchi de grandes étapes sur cette voie. Quand ils considèrent les progrès difficiles et quelque peu hésitants des principes démocratiques dans de nombreuses parties du monde au cours des récentes années, mon gouvernement ainsi que les peuples des Pays-Bas, des Antilles néerlandaises et du Surinam ont quelque raison d'éprouver une légitime fierté à l'égard de ces réalisations.

62. A notre avis, les Nations Unies doivent se réjouir d'une telle évolution qui est, de toute évidence, entièrement conforme à la lettre comme à l'esprit de la Charte. Toutefois, le projet de résolution VI dont nous sommes saisis soumet l'appréciation de cette évolution à tant de critères que nous avons grand-peur qu'au lieu d'exprimer la joie que l'Organisation ressent dans des cas comme le nôtre, cette résolution n'exprime que le chagrin.

63. Pendant plus d'un an, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a étudié la question des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour déterminer si un territoire donné a atteint sa pleine autonomie. L'Organisation des Nations Unies s'étant attachée à énumérer ces facteurs dans des listes qui portent sur les diverses formes d'indépendance et d'autonomie, nous estimons qu'il est nécessaire qu'une telle étude soit poussée jusqu'à une conclusion plus satisfaisante que celle à laquelle le Comité ad hoc a abouti au cours de cette année et qui a pris la forme d'une annexe au projet de résolution. Que dis-je? On a fait observer au cours des débats de la Quatrième Commission que ces listes étaient si complètes qu'il n'y a guère d'Etats souverains, Membres des Nations Unies, qui seraient à même de subir avec succès une épreuve d'autonomie aussi rigoureuse. Il est significatif que cette remarque soit venue, non pas de l'une des Puissances administrantes, mais d'une Puissance non administrante.

64. Après tout, il n'y a rien de bien étonnant à cela. D'une part, nous voyons dans le monde d'aujourd'hui que l'idée d'une souveraineté absolue et illimitée appartient au passé et qu'à présent, pour pouvoir survivre et prospérer, les nations sont forcées de coopérer au sein de groupes plus étendus et d'abandonner, l'une à l'autre ou aux nouvelles communautés dont elles font partie, une portion non négligeable de cette souveraineté. En face de cette évolution, qui est indéniable, nous voyons le Comité ad hoc dresser une liste qui pose des conditions tellement rigides pour la réalisation de l'autonomie sous ses diverses formes que cette liste perd tout caractère pratique quand on cherche à l'appliquer à un grand nombre de cas concrets. Une telle tendance, qui va à l'encontre de l'évolution du monde moderne — et plus particulièrement peut-être, à l'encontre de l'évolution des nations les plus avancées — est intransigeante et les résultats auxquels elle a abouti ne sont donc pas satisfaisants. Bien que le projet de résolution affirme le contraire dans une partie de son dispositif, l'établissement d'une si rigide liste de facteurs pourrait fort bien mettre en danger l'évolution future des territoires dans le sens d'une pleine autonomie. C'est être malavisé que de fixer une norme si élevée qu'il est impossible de l'atteindre dans la pratique.

65. Les critiques adressées à la liste des facteurs ont été assez générales au sein de la Commission, et l'appui dont cette liste a bénéficié était faible et indécis. Ainsi, l'idée de refaire cette étude en l'élargissant a gagné du terrain; en fait, cette idée se trouve également exprimée dans le projet de résolution dont il s'agit. Un nouveau comité pour l'étude des facteurs se créerait donc, avec un mandat plus large que celui du précédent comité, pour recevoir dans leur totalité les problèmes qui se posent.

66. Par elle-même, cette décision nous paraît sage. Sa conséquence logique, toutefois, aurait été et devrait être de laisser de côté les travaux du comité précédent et de voir, à la prochaine session de l'Assemblée générale, si le nouveau comité peut présenter une liste de facteurs d'un caractère plus pratique et plus réaliste.

67. Il est regrettable, selon notre délégation, que la Commission n'en ait pas décidé ainsi et qu'au contraire, le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution accepte comme guide la liste actuelle de facteurs. Ce fait est d'autant plus grave que la Commission propose également de donner à l'Assemblée générale un pouvoir nouveau, réel, qu'elle exercerait en appliquant cette liste de facteurs si peu réaliste. Cette liste de facteurs, dit le projet de résolution, peut servir de guide à l'Assemblée générale ainsi qu'à la Puissance administrante en cause lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie. Ce pouvoir donné à l'Assemblée générale est sans aucun fondement dans la Charte des Nations Unies. Avec la meilleure volonté du monde, on ne saurait lui trouver un fondement dans une interprétation du texte de l'Article 73, seul article pertinent.

68. Comment l'Assemblée va-t-elle exercer ce pouvoir qui ne se fonde sur rien? En appliquant précisément une liste de facteurs qui a besoin d'une révision. Non seulement c'est une piètre façon d'exprimer une idée, mais c'est aussi une dangereuse façon d'essayer de mettre en œuvre cette idée. Quelques-unes des délégations qui ont proposé cette partie du projet hybride n'ont pas laissé d'éveiller des soupçons quant aux objectifs véritables qu'elles cherchaient à atteindre.

69. Ces objectifs étaient de donner à l'Assemblée générale un pouvoir qu'elle ne possède pas aux termes de la Charte et, puisqu'il fallait lui conférer ce pouvoir sans se préoccuper de savoir si le critère à appliquer dans l'exercice de ce pouvoir était bon ou mauvais, on peut se demander si tout au moins un petit nombre des délégations qui ont formulé la proposition n'avaient pas pour seul objectif de faire condamner par l'Assemblée générale tous les efforts que font les Puissances administrantes pour établir, dans des territoires qui n'étaient pas autonomes jusqu'ici, une forme d'autonomie qui ne soit pas l'indépendance totale ou la cession à une Puissance non administrante. Certaines délégations ont eu la franchise d'exprimer des idées de cette nature au cours de la discussion.

70. Cette attitude extrémiste — qui est précisément celle de l'Union soviétique, lorsqu'il s'agit de discuter de territoires non autonomes que gouvernent d'autres Puissances que l'Union soviétique — a été partagée, notre délégation a le regret de le dire, par un petit nombre de délégations qui semblent apparemment en faveur de mouvements révolutionnaires plutôt que d'une évolution harmonieuse qui amènerait graduellement les territoires à l'autonomie. Pour ces délégations — dont le nombre est heureusement réduit — le projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis servirait de paravent pour cacher leurs véritables intentions. Ces délégations doivent accueillir avec joie les contradictions et obscurités que l'on relève actuellement dans ce document puisque, au cas où le projet de résolution serait adopté et devrait servir de base aux décisions futures de l'Assemblée, personne ne pourrait dire si la résolution est appliquée correctement ou de travers.

71. Etant donné ces considérations — et bien qu'elle soit disposée à accueillir avec satisfaction une nouvelle étude de la question des facteurs, si cette étude était entreprise dans un esprit de réalisme et de compromis — la délégation des Pays-Bas s'oppose au projet de résolution dans son ensemble et, d'une façon plus particulière, au paragraphe 1 de son dispositif. Nous espérons qu'il n'obtiendra pas la majorité requise pour une décision de cette importance, et nous nous permettons de demander au Président qu'il applique au cours du vote la règle de la majorité des deux tiers.

72. M. FOURIE (Union Sud-Africaine) (traduit de l'anglais): Nous avons déjà, en plusieurs occasions, exposé la façon dont nous envisageons la portée du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. Fidèles à cette attitude, nous considérons que le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution II ne rentre pas dans le cadre du Chapitre XI de la Charte; notre abstention signifie, par conséquent, que nous ne participons pas au vote.

73. M. AVELINO (Brésil): La position de la délégation du Brésil, quant à la question de la prolongation du mandat du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, est bien connue; nous estimons que ce comité devrait devenir permanent parce que, aussi longtemps qu'il existera des territoires non autonomes, des renseignements devront être fournis conformément à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, et que, dans ces conditions, nous avons besoin d'un organe spécial de l'Assemblée générale pour l'étude de ces renseignements.

74. Nous tenons pour nulles les objections d'ordre constitutionnel soulevées à l'encontre du caractère permanent à donner au comité dont il s'agit. Toutefois, nous sommes en présence de déclarations formelles, faites par des Puissances administrantes, quant à leur intention de ne pas participer aux travaux du comité au cas où l'Assemblée générale adopterait le projet de résolution IV qui a été approuvé par la Quatrième Commission.

75. Ma délégation a examiné avec le plus grand soin cette question. Tout en désapprouvant la position prise par les Membres en question, qui sont des Puissances administrantes, nous ne pouvons que nous rendre à l'évidence: notre travail tout entier, dans le domaine relatif aux territoires non autonomes, serait mis en danger si nous tenions à conserver notre position originale.

76. En conséquence, ma délégation, bien à contre-cœur, est arrivée à la conclusion qu'elle doit reconsidérer sa position quant à la dernière partie du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV. Nous nous abstenons de voter sur cette partie du paragraphe qui recommande qu'après trois ans, le comité soit automatiquement reconduit aussi longtemps qu'il existera des territoires dont la population ne s'administre pas encore elle-même. Nous ne souhaitons pas contribuer, par notre vote, à l'approbation d'une disposition qui, nous en sommes persuadés, rendrait impossible pour le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes de continuer ses utiles travaux sur les mêmes bases.

77. M. KHALIDY (Irak) (traduit de l'anglais): Ma délégation voudrait en quelques mots expliquer son vote et dire quelle est sa position à l'égard des projets de résolution dont est saisie l'Assemblée générale. Nous voterons pour tous les projets de résolution présentés par la Quatrième Commission, sous réserve des deux modifications que nous allons exposer.

78. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution II, la délégation du Royaume-Uni a présenté un amendement que nous sommes heureux de pouvoir accepter. Nous estimons que cet amendement au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution II améliore le texte. A notre avis, cet amendement, en mettant le paragraphe 2 en harmonie avec le paragraphe 1, s'appuie, pour ainsi dire, sur deux piliers: la Charte et la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. Il est donc inutile de donner des précisions supplémentaires qui risqueraient de compliquer la situation et de constituer un blâme. Je dirai dans un instant ce que j'entends par "blâme". Il est bon qu'il y ait plus d'harmonie entre le paragraphe 2 et le paragraphe 1; c'est pourquoi il est logique d'accepter l'amendement du Royaume-Uni. Le paragraphe 2, tel qu'il est rédigé actuellement, serait un peu trop catégorique et risquerait de constituer un blâme.

79. Permettez-moi de prendre un exemple. Il y a des musulmans au Cameroun et en Afrique occidentale, territoires qui ne sont pas autonomes. Il y a également des païens. Les païens ne demanderaient peut-être qu'à descendre de leurs montagnes pour anéantir les communautés musulmanes ou chrétiennes et leurs établissements religieux. Les Puissances administrantes ont le devoir de garantir aux habitants la liberté de culte en vertu de la Charte et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. En conséquence, ils désirent assurer — et assurent, j'en suis certain — la liberté du culte. On peut donc, en un sens, dire qu'il s'agit là d'une mesure discriminatoire en faveur des mosquées, mais ce n'est pas là le genre de discrimination qu'envisage la Charte ou la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme.

80. Voyons maintenant le texte actuel du paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution II; les deux dernières lignes sont ainsi conçues: "... en vue d'abolir toutes dispositions ou pratiques discriminatoires de caractère racial ou religieux qui pourraient exister". L'exemple que je viens de donner montre que cette disposition ne correspond pas exactement à la complète liberté de culte que les Puissances administrantes ont le devoir de garantir en vertu de tous les préceptes de la Charte et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. C'est pourquoi nous estimons que l'amendement du Royaume-Uni est de nature à améliorer le texte du projet de résolution; nous serons heureux de lui donner notre appui.

81. J'en viens maintenant au projet de résolution IV, qui a trait à la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes; la division ayant été demandée pour les deux parties du paragraphe 1 du dispositif, nous voterons pour la première partie. En ce qui concerne la deuxième, nous avons soumis la situation à un nouvel examen, très attentif, et nous sommes arrivés à la conclusion suivante:

82. Je me hâte de préciser — en particulier à l'intention de tous ceux qui, à la Quatrième Commission et ailleurs, nous ont apporté leur coopération à ce sujet — que nous n'aimerions rien tant que de voir le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes devenir un organe permanent. Et, soit dit en passant à l'intention de nos collègues des Puissances administrantes, il y a bien peu de différence, dans la pratique, entre la reconduction du comité et sa transformation en un organe permanent. Cependant, les Puissances administrantes semblent s'attacher à une question de principe, ce en quoi elles ont peut-être raison.

83. A l'heure actuelle, l'essentiel, selon nous, est que le comité continue à fonctionner et à compter parmi ses membres les Puissances coloniales qui, je le souhaite vivement, continueront à lui prêter leur concours et à participer à ses travaux. Si cette considération primordiale risque d'être compromise par une attitude qui a déjà été précisée du haut de cette tribune, nous n'insisterons pas sur un point qui, si je ne m'abuse, peut faire l'objet d'un nouvel examen et d'une nouvelle décision dans un, deux ou trois ans.

84. Plusieurs Puissances coloniales, en dehors de la Quatrième Commission et devant l'Assemblée, ont laissé entendre qu'elles modifieraient leur attitude passée à l'égard du comité si l'on exigeait le maintien de la deuxième partie du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV. Nous avions espéré qu'elles reviendraient sur leur intention de modifier leur attitude et qu'elles continueraient à assister aux séances du comité. Mais le représentant du Royaume-Uni vient de nous déclarer formellement, au nom de son gouvernement, que sa délégation ne pourrait pas siéger au comité si la deuxième partie de ce paragraphe était adoptée.

85. Il faut parfois savoir accepter des compromis nécessaires. Entre deux solutions, il faut choisir celle qui s'avérera à la longue la plus utile, la plus pratique.

Nous sommes d'avis que la deuxième partie du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV ne revêt pas, à l'heure actuelle, l'importance que certains lui attachent. La question doit, de toute façon, faire l'objet d'un nouvel examen au bout de trois ans. De plus, je ne crois pas un seul instant qu'un Membre des Nations Unies voudrait proposer de mettre un terme aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Je ne pense pas qu'une telle proposition, au cas improbable où elle se ferait jour, aurait la moindre chance d'être adoptée.

86. Pour les raisons que je viens d'exposer, ma délégation s'abstiendra lors du vote sur la deuxième partie du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV.

87. M. McINNIS (Canada) (traduit de l'anglais) : Je voudrais expliquer très brièvement l'attitude de la délégation canadienne à l'égard des deux projets de résolution qui nous préoccupent particulièrement : le projet de résolution IV, relatif à la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, et le projet de résolution VI, qui traite des facteurs.

88. Dès que la Quatrième Commission a commencé à examiner le projet de résolution VI, ma délégation a exprimé les doutes sérieux que lui inspirait ce projet. Les affirmations péremptoires qui figurent dans ce projet de résolution, et notamment celles que l'on peut lire au deuxième paragraphe du préambule et au paragraphe 4 du dispositif, ne nous paraissent guère valables. Au sein de la Commission, nous avons voté contre ces dispositions et aussi contre certaines autres. Nous nous sommes abstenus lors du vote sur le projet de résolution dans son ensemble, car toute une série d'amendements et d'additions se trouvaient incorporés au texte définitif et nous désirions avoir le temps d'étudier de façon très complète ce texte après les changements que lui avait fait subir la Commission.

89. Nous avons maintenant examiné ce projet de résolution avec le plus grand soin ; il ne nous satisfait toujours pas. S'il n'est pas apporté de modification à sa forme actuelle, nous serons obligés de voter contre ce texte.

90. L'attitude que nous venons d'exposer a une répercussion directe sur la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Qu'il me soit permis de dire qu'en principe, nous sommes partisans de la reconduction du comité. Nous avons même approuvé la disposition à cet effet qui figure dans le projet de résolution dont nous sommes actuellement saisis, bien que nous eussions nettement préféré que la durée du mandat du comité fût limitée à trois ans. Nous avons toutefois loyalement averti la Commission que si des faits nouveaux se produisaient ou si l'on introduisait de nouveaux facteurs, nous pourrions être obligés de revenir sur notre décision.

91. Il nous semble que ces nouveaux éléments se trouvent sous-entendus dans le projet de résolution VI relatif aux facteurs, même s'ils n'y figurent pas effectivement. L'interprétation que les affirmations péremptoires avancées dans les clauses en question forceraient à donner à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements dépasse tout ce que nous avons envisagé lorsque nous avons approuvé le projet de résolution qui portait reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Nos objections ne disparaîtraient pas complètement, même si l'Assemblée rejetait le projet de résolution relatif aux facteurs. L'institution du comité sur une base semi-permanente laisserait la porte ouverte à de nouvelles propositions de caractère analogue qui pourraient modifier radicalement les bases sur lesquelles nous nous sommes fondés pour approuver sa reconduction. Pour ajouter à notre souci, d'autres commissions ont marqué une certaine tendance à imposer des obligations auxquelles on ne songeait pas lors de l'adoption du projet de résolution qui porte reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

92. Aussi sommes-nous maintenant persuadés que, puisqu'il est souhaitable de se garantir contre les éventualités que je viens d'indiquer, une bonne garantie serait de renouveler le mandat du comité pour une période donnée, de façon que l'Assemblée puisse plus tard, à la lumière des événements survenus entre-temps, reprendre et examiner à fond la question de son maintien en fonctions. Ce sont ces raisons qui ont motivé notre décision, que nous avons prise avant d'avoir eu connaissance de la décision définitive des Puissances administrantes de ne pas participer aux travaux du comité si le mandat de cet organe était renouvelé sous la forme prévue dans le projet de résolution. Toutefois, l'annonce de cette décision a naturellement beaucoup renforcé notre désir de voir limiter à trois ans le mandat du comité.

93. Nous espérons donc vivement que le projet de résolution sera remanié dans le sens indiqué par la délégation du Danemark. S'il n'en est pas ainsi, nous serons dans l'obligation de refuser notre appui au projet de résolution tel qu'il se présente sous sa forme définitive.

94. M. URQUIA (Salvador) (traduit de l'espagnol) : Au paragraphe 3 du rapport de la Quatrième Commission [A/2296], on peut lire que le représentant du Guatemala a fait des réserves au sujet du territoire de Belize ; au nom de ma délégation et de trois autres délégations d'Amérique centrale, je tiens à faire à cette occasion la déclaration suivante : les délégations du Costa-Rica, du Salvador, du Honduras et du Nicaragua, apprenant que leur sœur d'Amérique centrale, la République du Guatemala, a décidé au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale qu'elle réservait les droits souverains qui sont les siens sur le territoire de Belize, et considérant qu'il s'agit là d'un problème qui touche directement à l'unité géographique de l'Amérique centrale, tiennent à déclarer qu'elles se solidarisent avec la réserve formulée par la délégation du Guatemala.

95. M. Shiva RAO (Inde) (traduit de l'anglais) : Je tiens à expliquer brièvement les votes de la délégation de l'Inde sur les divers projets de résolution dont l'Assemblée générale est actuellement saisie.

96. A la Quatrième Commission, ma délégation a estimé devoir s'abstenir lors du vote sur le projet de résolution II relatif à la discrimination raciale dans les territoires non autonomes, car il lui semblait que l'amendement apporté au paragraphe 2 du dispositif restreignait grandement l'utilité pratique de ce projet de résolution. L'amendement maintenant proposé par la délégation du Royaume-Uni rétablit, en substance, le sens primitif du paragraphe 2, tout en le rattachant au paragraphe précédent. D'après le présent amendement, toutes les lois, tous les règlements et toutes les ordonnances en vigueur dans les territoires non autonomes seraient examinés par les Puissances administrantes à la lumière des principes de la Charte et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme; l'examen ne se limiterait pas aux dispositions ou pratiques de caractère racial ou religieux. Ma délégation approuve l'amendement du Royaume-Uni, pour lequel elle votera.

97. Depuis son adoption par la Quatrième Commission, un autre projet de résolution a fait naître une controverse; il s'agit du projet de résolution IV relatif à la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. La question qui se pose est la suivante: faut-il donner au comité un caractère permanent ou ne le reconduire que pour une période de trois ans? Plusieurs des déclarations qui ont été faites aujourd'hui du haut de cette tribune font ressortir nettement que le projet de résolution IV soulève une difficulté réelle. Un très grand nombre des membres de la Quatrième Commission donneraient, je le sais, leur appui à une proposition tendant à donner immédiatement un caractère permanent au comité. Le comité, comme l'Assemblée générale l'a reconnu en plus d'une occasion, a, depuis sa création en 1946, accompli un travail très utile. Il a donné une vie nouvelle à l'Article 73 de la Charte. Dans le monde entier, les peuples non autonomes voient maintenant en lui leur agent de liaison avec l'Organisation.

98. Ma délégation a toujours participé aux travaux du comité depuis sa création et nous sommes convaincus qu'aussi longtemps que les Puissances administrantes seront dans l'obligation de fournir des renseignements au Secrétaire général, conformément à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, un comité de cette nature, quel que puisse être son nom, est indispensable à l'Assemblée générale. Un comité de seize membres, auquel des Puissances administrantes et des Puissances non administrantes sont représentées en nombre égal, qui étudie de multiples renseignements sur les conditions économiques, sociales et de l'enseignement et qui maintenant, dans plusieurs cas, s'attache aux conditions politiques dans les territoires non autonomes, présente de nombreux avantages pour toutes les parties intéressées, même pour les Puissances administrantes. Le comité a mis au point une méthode de travail qui lui est propre et il a créé, pour l'analyse et l'étude objective de tous ces renseignements, une ambiance qui, elle aussi, lui est propre.

99. La Quatrième Commission et l'Assemblée générale comptent sur le comité pour les guider de ses conseils en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes. Si cet organe devait être un jour dissous, la Quatrième Commission n'aurait plus qu'à créer une sous-commission pour s'acquitter de la tâche qui incombe actuellement au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Cette tâche, il faudrait beaucoup plus de quatre semaines pour l'accomplir et les résultats obtenus seraient bien moins satisfaisants.

100. Que cela plaise ou non aux Puissances administrantes, il semble à ma délégation que l'existence d'un comité des renseignements est inévitable aussi longtemps qu'il y aura des territoires non autonomes et que l'Article 73 continuera de figurer dans la Charte. Ma délégation ne partage pas l'avis selon lequel il faudrait réviser la Charte pour donner au comité un caractère permanent; l'Article 22 est clair; j'en citerai les termes: "L'Assemblée générale peut créer les organes subsidiaires qu'elle juge nécessaires à l'exercice de ses fonctions."

101. Ma délégation estime qu'aux termes de cet article, l'Assemblée est incontestablement en droit d'établir le comité sur une base permanente. Si, reconnaissant à la fois son utilité et son caractère inévitable, toutes les Puissances administrantes avaient accepté la proposition présentée à cet effet, ce projet de résolution n'aurait, ce matin, pas donné lieu à discussion. En l'acceptant, elles auraient, bien mieux qu'elles n'auraient jamais su le faire par le simple exercice de l'autorité politique, renforcé les liens entre Puissances administrantes et territoires non autonomes, assurant de la sorte un progrès plus rapide des populations coloniales vers la capacité à s'administrer complètement elles-mêmes, selon les termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

102. L'une au moins des Puissances administrantes — les Etats-Unis d'Amérique — s'est déclarée prête, au cours de l'une des séances précédentes de la Quatrième Commission, à accepter que le comité demeure en fonctions tant que des territoires se trouveront soumis au contrôle des Puissances administrantes, sauf décision contraire prise, après une période de trois ans, par l'Assemblée générale. Il est regrettable qu'à une très faible majorité on ait rejeté cet amendement, présenté par les Etats-Unis et le Venezuela. Maintenant, il est question de limiter l'existence du comité à une nouvelle période de trois ans, sans prévoir en rien son avenir.

103. Je me permets de rappeler aux membres de l'Assemblée générale qu'en 1948, lorsqu'elle a été d'avis de reconduire le comité pour une durée d'un an, l'Assemblée générale a ajouté les mots "sans préjuger l'avenir" [résolution 219 (III)]. Et, en 1949, lorsqu'elle l'a reconduit pour une période de trois ans, l'Assemblée générale a stipulé dans sa résolution qu'elle se prononcerait, à sa session de 1952, sur l'avenir du comité. Il est vrai que l'Assemblée générale peut, à tout moment, prendre les décisions qui lui paraissent appropriées, qu'elle y soit ou non autorisée par une résolution d'une session antérieure. Toutefois, étant donné qu'aux termes du paragraphe 6 de la résolution 332 (IV), l'Assemblée générale est invitée, à sa présente session de 1952, à examiner "la question de savoir si le Comité spécial devrait être reconstitué pour une nouvelle période, ainsi que la question de la composition et du mandat de ce nouveau Comité spécial", une simple déclaration selon laquelle le comité demeurera en fonctions pour une nouvelle période de trois ans risquerait d'être mal comprise.

104. Ma délégation est disposée, bien qu'à regret, à accepter ou à proposer elle-même un amendement qui tendrait expressément à renvoyer la décision concernant l'avenir du comité à la session de 1955 de l'Assemblée générale. A la séance de ce matin, certaines des Puissances administrantes ont exposé leur point de vue d'une façon très nette. Ma délégation a également une opinion bien définie, mais cette opinion est favorable au comité. Elle ne peut s'imaginer que l'Assemblée générale puisse adopter le point de vue de ceux qui pensent que, pour ce qui est des territoires non autonomes, l'Assemblée n'ira pas au-delà d'un point déterminé. La délégation de l'Inde estime que, d'après le Chapitre XI de la Charte, il s'agit que tous les territoires non autonomes arrivent à s'administrer pleinement eux-mêmes de façon à remplir les conditions requises pour devenir Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

105. Lorsque le représentant du Royaume-Uni a exposé, à la Quatrième Commission, la politique suivie par son pays dans les territoires qu'il administre, la délégation de l'Inde n'a pas hésité à reconnaître que l'esprit de progrès inspirait une grande partie de cet exposé. Avant la même franchise, je dois déclarer aujourd'hui que j'ai été quelque peu déçu par l'intervention du représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui a clairement indiqué que son pays ne pourrait plus participer aux travaux du comité si le projet de résolution IV était adopté sous la forme sous laquelle la Quatrième Commission l'a présenté à l'Assemblée générale.

106. Je dois néanmoins ajouter que, si désireuse que la délégation de l'Inde soit de voir donner un caractère permanent au comité, elle estime que ce serait faire un pas en arrière si les Puissances administrantes — ou même une seule d'entre elles, le Royaume-Uni — décidaient, pour une raison quelconque, de ne pas participer aux travaux du comité. On peut ne pas accepter les arguments qui ont conduit à la décision actuellement envisagée, mais, que nous soyons ou non d'accord, la participation des Puissances administrantes est, de l'avis de la délégation de l'Inde, indispensable si l'on veut que les travaux du comité soient couronnés de succès.

107. Cela étant, ma délégation est prête à accepter que l'Assemblée ne décide pas avant sa session de 1955 si elle entend ou non donner un caractère permanent au comité. Toutefois, nous voudrions que le projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée générale est saisie en ce moment en fasse mention. En conséquence, ma délégation est prête à proposer un amendement, s'il m'est permis d'invoquer l'article 79 du règlement intérieur.

108. Nous proposons donc d'ajouter un nouveau paragraphe au cas où l'Assemblée générale n'accepterait pas la deuxième partie du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV; ce nouveau paragraphe serait rédigé dans les termes suivants:

"Décide qu'à sa session ordinaire de 1955, l'Assemblée générale examinera la question de savoir si le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes devrait être reconstitué pour une nouvelle période, ainsi que la question de la composition et du mandat de tout comité de cette nature qui serait créé."

Cet amendement reproduit pratiquement le paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la résolution 332 (IV), par laquelle l'Assemblée avait décidé de reconduire le comité pour une nouvelle période.

109. Pour sa part, la délégation de l'Inde n'a à aucun moment soutenu des arguments ou formulé des demandes qui lui paraissent déborder le cadre de la Charte. Mais nous avons toujours insisté pour que l'on arrête des dispositions qui permettraient une application plus souple de la Charte. Selon nous, des dispositions de cette nature seraient le moyen d'adapter les textes à l'esprit des temps actuels et de tenir compte de l'expérience que l'on a acquise en appliquant un instrument donné. C'est précisément en s'inspirant de ces principes que l'on a accompli des progrès grâce au Comité des renseignements, et que l'on a pu assouplir l'interprétation des dispositions de la Charte qui ont trait aux territoires non autonomes. Je tiens à ajouter — et j'espère que mes paroles ne seront pas mal interprétées — qu'il serait infiniment regrettable que l'un de nous revienne sur ce qui a été accompli jusqu'à présent par l'Assemblée générale. Il est indispensable que nous allions de l'avant si l'Organisation entend maintenir et développer l'attachement que les peuples non autonomes du monde entier portent aux principes et aux buts de la Charte.

110. M. AGUIRRE (Uruguay) (traduit de l'espagnol): Au sujet du paragraphe 1 du projet de résolution IV, l'Uruguay estime qu'il est de l'intérêt de l'Organisation des Nations Unies de rendre permanent le mandat du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes: c'est dans cet esprit que sa délégation est intervenue à la Quatrième Commission. D'autre part, il estime que, pour être efficaces, les travaux du comité doivent bénéficier de la participation des Puissances administrantes.

111. C'est pourquoi, si ce que prévoit la première partie du paragraphe est acquis et devant les déclarations que viennent de faire les représentants du Royaume-Uni et de la Belgique, ma délégation, dans l'intérêt de l'harmonie et de l'adoption de résolutions efficaces et constructives, s'abstiendra de voter sur l'actuelle deuxième partie du paragraphe, bien qu'elle approuve la solution proposée par le représentant de l'Inde.

112. Pour ce qui est du projet de résolution VI dont l'Assemblée est saisie, ma délégation se trouve dans la situation suivante; d'une part, elle reconnaît pleinement l'intérêt du but que vise ce projet; d'autre part, elle répugne à accepter comme la plus sûre la voie que ce projet de résolution propose de suivre pour atteindre ce but. En effet, le deuxième considérant et le paragraphe 4 du dispositif, qui sont les dispositions du projet de résolution les plus importantes du point de vue juridique, tranchent des questions extrêmement délicates qui font toujours l'objet d'une controverse ardente, non seulement entre les parties, mais encore entre les théoriciens qui se consacrent plus particulièrement au droit des traités. Si nous procédions actuellement à une telle discussion, l'Uruguay n'hésiterait pas à prendre parti avec les auteurs du projet de résolution; toutefois, il ne s'agit pas ici de discuter, mais bien de donner notre opinion dans une polémique qui, à notre avis, est loin d'être close.

113. Le deuxième paragraphe du préambule fait allusion aux objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte, dans lequel figure l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; or, les objectifs énoncés dans cet alinéa n'ont jamais cessé de faire l'objet de vives discussions. Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif consacre le principe qu'il ne peut y avoir d'autonomie réelle tant que la population ne s'administre pas complètement elle-même; il se fonde, on le voit, sur une notion très discutée; de plus, il est lié au concept de la capacité d'un peuple à s'administrer complètement lui-même, alors que les nombreuses nuances de ce concept ne nous permettent pas — l'expérience nous le montre — de déterminer exactement, au moyen d'une définition, en quoi consiste pour un peuple le fait de s'administrer complètement lui-même.

114. Pour que ma délégation pût appuyer ce projet, il faudrait que l'on remédiât à ces insuffisances, non par l'acceptation unanime des Etats Membres de l'Assemblée générale, car elle est impossible à obtenir, mais bien en fournissant une base solide qui garantirait aux yeux de tous la cohérence juridique du projet, ainsi que son respect des réalités, dans le cadre d'une interprétation autorisée de la Charte.

115. Aller de l'avant comme le fait ce projet de résolution, sans tenir compte des réserves formulées à son encontre et sans lever les objections ni les oppositions de principe ou les interprétations qu'il soulève, serait provoquer une source de conflits insolubles et interminables qui pourraient empêcher la mise en œuvre de la résolution. Ma délégation hésite devant une telle résistance et estime que les Nations Unies ont suivi jusqu'à présent la meilleure voie en la matière. On a cherché à améliorer progressivement les modalités de mise en œuvre du texte ambigu du Chapitre XI de la Charte, grâce à diverses résolutions que l'Assemblée générale a adoptées au cours de ses première, troisième, quatrième et sixième sessions. C'est ainsi qu'ont été réalisés les conquêtes et les progrès que l'on sait; c'est en suivant cette voie, qui consiste à jeter d'abord les fondations sur lesquelles bâtir, que nous réaliserons notre idéal, quelque lointain qu'il soit.

116. En conclusion, l'Uruguay s'abstiendra lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution; si la division du vote est demandée, il s'abstiendra sur les deux paragraphes que j'ai mentionnés et que nous considérons comme les plus importants du point de vue juridique. Il votera pour les autres paragraphes; ce faisant, il ne votera pas exactement comme il l'a fait à la Quatrième Commission, car la Commission était saisie à ce moment-là d'un amendement que ma délégation estimait préférable.

117. M. PONCE YEPEZ (Equateur) (traduit de l'espagnol): La délégation de l'Equateur a appuyé, à la Quatrième Commission, le projet de résolution IV tel qu'il figure dans le rapport de cette Commission (A/2296).

118. Après avoir entendu les déclarations faites ce matin, à l'Assemblée générale, par les délégations du Royaume-Uni, de la France et de la Belgique, déclaration d'où il ressort qu'elles ne participeront pas aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes si le paragraphe 1 du dispositif est adopté sous la forme que propose la Quatrième Commission, ma délégation estime qu'il y a lieu de modifier légèrement son attitude et de s'abstenir en ce qui concerne la partie du paragraphe qui commence par les mots "... et qu'à l'expiration de cette période...", tout en votant pour la première partie de ce paragraphe. Il est évident que l'expérience et les connaissances des Puissances que je viens de citer est nécessaire au bon fonctionnement du comité qui ne devrait pas se voir privé de leur concours.

119. Bien que ma délégation n'ait pas adopté la même attitude que les Puissances administrantes, son attitude s'inspire de considérations pratiques, en présence de situations de fait qui pourraient avoir une influence considérable sur l'existence du comité. Cette prise de position de la part de ma délégation ne signifie pas, bien entendu, que nous nous inclinons devant les principes ou les arguments que les Puissances administrantes ont invoqués pour s'opposer à la reconduction automatique du comité, que nous espérons voir transformer en organe permanent dans un proche avenir.

120. Ma délégation appuiera sans réserve l'amendement que vient de présenter la délégation de l'Inde, à cause de son caractère de conciliation et du grand intérêt qu'il présente.

121. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) (traduit de l'espagnol): La délégation de la République Dominicaine désire expliquer brièvement son vote en ce qui concerne certains des projets de résolution soumis à l'Assemblée générale par la Quatrième Commission.

122. Nous nous sommes toujours inspirés de deux principes: d'abord, une interprétation modérée et exacte de la Charte et des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, surtout dans ce domaine à propos duquel il existe dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte certaines ambiguïtés de terminologie; ensuite, la grande importance que la République Dominicaine attache à la collaboration et à la coopération internationales, notamment dans la sphère d'action des Nations Unies. De là le réalisme dont notre délégation fait toujours preuve dans les travaux de la Quatrième Commission. Mais il y a certains points qui nous préoccupent dans plusieurs des projets de résolution qui nous sont soumis, car il semble que ces projets soient conçus pour les besoins d'une session donnée, sans que l'on ait réfléchi à leurs conséquences; ils font ainsi surgir des difficultés qui sont apparues année après année, au cours de chacune des sessions.

123. Nous voterons donc de la façon suivante, qui est conforme à la politique constante suivie par notre délégation. Nous voterons pour le projet de résolution II, mais en appuyant les amendements du Royaume-Uni, car nous estimons qu'ils améliorent considérablement le texte et élimineront certaines difficultés pratiques lorsque le moment sera venu de mettre la résolution en œuvre.

124. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution IV, qui porte sur la reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, notre délégation a toujours pensé qu'il faudra un jour donner à ce comité un caractère permanent. Tout dépend, toutefois, de l'interprétation correcte de l'Article 73 de la Charte et, surtout, de la nécessité d'éliminer l'ambiguïté, reconnue par tous les experts et les juristes, des termes de cet article. En raison de ce doute, notre délégation a maintenu sa façon de voir: le mandat du comité devrait être renouvelé tous les trois ans, ce qui était la proposition présentée à l'origine par les Etats-Unis. Nous avons dû nous abstenir, à la Quatrième Commission, lorsqu'il s'est agi d'introduire dans le paragraphe 1 du dispositif la notion de reconduction automatique. Nous voterons donc pour l'élimination de cette notion de caractère automatique; nous pourrions nous prononcer alors en faveur du projet de résolution IV.

125. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution VI, ma délégation désire attirer l'attention sur une légère erreur qui semble s'être glissée dans le texte espagnol du paragraphe 7 du dispositif: il s'agit de l'alinéa a qui mentionne "la possibilité de définir la notion d'autonomie, aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte" parmi les éléments qu'aura à étudier le comité que l'on envisage de reconstituer.

126. L'erreur consiste, à notre avis, dans le fait que le texte porte: "notion d'autonomie" au lieu de: "notion de complète autonomie", qui est l'idée qu'on trouve dans l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies. Comme, à notre avis, il s'agit purement et simplement d'une erreur, qui a fait omettre le mot "complète", nous voudrions que l'Assemblée générale tint compte de ce fait et nous espérons qu'elle ne s'opposera pas à ce que l'on rectifie le texte dans ce sens, c'est-à-dire de façon qu'il porte: "la possibilité de définir la notion de complète autonomie" aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies.

127. La République Dominicaine s'est abstenue lors du vote sur ce projet de résolution en premier lieu parce qu'elle estime que, du point de vue juridique, le fait d'énoncer au paragraphe 4 du dispositif le principe de l'indivisibilité de l'autonomie élimine automatiquement toute étude des facteurs. Le fait, pour l'Assemblée générale, d'adopter une déclaration de cette nature rendrait inutile, à notre avis, l'étude de ces facteurs. En conséquence, si le paragraphe 4 est maintenu, nous nous abstenons de nouveau lors du vote sur le projet de résolution.

128. Pour les mêmes raisons, nous estimons aussi que, si la Quatrième Commission jugeait nécessaire de poursuivre de façon plus approfondie l'étude de ces facteurs, il était inutile et prématuré d'approuver provisoirement une liste desdits facteurs. Nous continuerons donc à nous abstenir non seulement si l'on adopte le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution VI, mais également si le paragraphe 4 est adopté.

129. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) (traduit de l'espagnol): Je commencerai par expliquer dans quel sens la délégation du Venezuela votera sur le projet de résolution IV présenté par la Quatrième Commission. Mon gouvernement est d'avis que, tant qu'il existera des territoires non autonomes du genre de ceux qui sont mentionnés au Chapitre XI de la Charte, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes aura des fonctions à remplir. Par conséquent, la permanence de ces fonctions constitue une base suffisante pour la création d'un organe permanent. En outre, l'œuvre constructive que le comité a accomplie a été reconnue, chaque année, tant par les Puissances administrantes que par les Puissances non administrantes. La raison de ce résultat est simple: le comité a comblé une lacune, et il l'a comblée dans l'esprit de la Charte et au profit des habitants des territoires non autonomes. C'est grâce à ce comité que les renseignements que les Puissances administrantes communiquent en exécution des obligations qu'elles ont assumées en souscrivant à la Charte, et notamment au Chapitre XI, revêtent, pour ainsi dire, une signification dynamique bienfaisante pour les autochtones des territoires non autonomes, et permettent aux autres pays de comprendre l'œuvre que les Puissances administrantes accomplissent, dans les territoires non autonomes, depuis la deuxième guerre mondiale, dans les domaines social, économique et de l'enseignement.

130. Toutefois, en dépit de ces résultats et de ces bienfaits qui sont l'œuvre du comité, la méfiance que certaines Puissances administrantes ont toujours éprouvée à son égard a augmenté au lieu de diminuer. Ma délégation n'a jamais pu bien comprendre les véritables raisons de cette méfiance.

131. Nous avons entendu, au début de la présente séance, la déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni: si l'on propose de prolonger indéfiniment le mandat du comité, non seulement la délégation du Royaume-Uni se prononcera contre une telle proposition, mais elle refusera, en cas de reconduction, de participer aux travaux de cet organe. Le Royaume-Uni est la Puissance qui administre le plus grand nombre de territoires non autonomes. Ces paroles n'ont pas surpris ma délégation, qui savait, depuis les débats de la Quatrième Commission au cours de la présente session, que la délégation du Royaume-Uni adopterait, pour le moins, l'attitude qu'on vient de nous faire connaître d'une manière officielle et catégorique.

132. Désireuse d'éviter une telle prise de position, qui est sans aucun doute de nature à porter préjudice au succès des travaux du comité, ma délégation est parvenue à convaincre la délégation des Etats-Unis de présenter avec elle un amendement qui tendait à modifier la proposition alors en discussion de telle façon que le mandat du Comité fût automatiquement renouvelé de trois ans en trois ans, à moins que l'Assemblée générale n'en décidât autrement. Cet amendement vient d'être mentionné par le représentant de l'Inde. Malheureusement — et je ne fais que répéter les termes de ce représentant — la Commission n'a adopté qu'une partie de l'amendement commun des Etats-Unis et du Venezuela. C'est dans le même esprit de conciliation et le même esprit pratique que ma délégation s'abstiendra lors du vote sur la deuxième partie du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution IV. Son abstention exprimera son désir de faciliter la réalisation d'un nouveau compromis qui, après tout, ne concerne qu'une simple question de dates et de procédure, sans effet sur le fond de la question proprement dite; le fond de la question, c'est que le comité a sa base dans la Charte, qu'il est indispensable pour une mise en œuvre dynamique des dispositions du Chapitre XI et qu'il aura des fonctions à exercer tant qu'il existera des territoires non autonomes. C'est du moins ce que pense et continuera de penser le Gouvernement du Venezuela.

133. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution VI, ma délégation a été l'un des premiers auteurs du projet approuvé par la suite, après certains amendements. Le deuxième considérant et le paragraphe 4 du dispositif ont, eux aussi, suscité des réserves au sein de la Quatrième Commission. En réalité, ces réserves ne paraissent pas, à ma délégation, bien solidement fondées. Il y a un certain temps que l'Organisation des Nations Unies se livre à ce jeu de base-ball — comme j'ai appelé la discussion des facteurs à la Quatrième Commission — pour trouver une expression qui dise, sans le dire, ce que dit la Charte. Lorsque nous déclarons ici que, pour considérer qu'un territoire jouit de l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est indispensable que son peuple ait réalisé sa pleine autonomie au sens des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, nous n'avons vraiment pas inventé la poudre, nous ne révolutionnons pas l'histoire, nous ne nous livrons pas à d'impressionnants tours de force. Nous ne faisons qu'énoncer à nouveau la base fondamentale des obligations des Puissances administrantes. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte est clair: les Puissances administrantes ont l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements parce que les territoires non autonomes qu'elles administrent ne sont pas parvenus à leur autonomie complète, et, tant que ces territoires ne seront pas complètement autonomes, les obligations des Puissances administrantes subsisteront. Cette idée est simple, elle ne fait que répéter la Charte, mais il semble qu'on ait peur maintenant d'entendre citer la Charte.

134. Blatta OGBAZGY DAWIT (Ethiopie) (traduit de l'anglais): Au cours de son explication de vote, le représentant de la Belgique a cité mon pays et, pour appuyer son argumentation, a tenté d'assimiler le rôle de l'Ethiopie à celui que la Belgique joue vis-à-vis de ses colonies d'Afrique. Je tiens à rappeler au représentant de la Belgique qu'il aurait intérêt à lire l'histoire de l'Ethiopie avant de se risquer à formuler des propos aussi erronés. A la différence de la Belgique et d'un grand nombre d'autres Puissances européennes, mon pays n'administre aucun territoire non autonome.

135. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La liste des orateurs étant épuisée, j'invite l'Assemblée générale à se prononcer sur les six projets de résolution qui figurent dans le rapport et dont certains ont fait l'objet d'amendements.

136. Je vais d'abord mettre aux voix le projet de résolution I. On a demandé que le paragraphe 1 du dispositif soit mis aux voix séparément.

Par 45 voix contre 5, avec 2 abstentions, le paragraphe 1 est adopté.

Par 45 voix contre 5, avec 2 abstentions, le projet de résolution I est adopté.

137. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous passons au projet de résolution II. La délégation du Royaume-Uni a déposé un amendement (A/L.127) au paragraphe 2 du dispositif de ce projet de résolution. Cet amendement tend à remplacer, à la fin du paragraphe, les mots "de caractère racial ou religieux" par les mots "de cet ordre".

Par 37 voix contre 6, avec 11 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

Par 51 voix contre zéro, avec une abstention, le projet de résolution II, ainsi modifié, est adopté.

138. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous passons maintenant au projet de résolution III. On a demandé que le troisième considérant soit mis aux voix séparément.

Par 42 voix contre 6, avec 9 abstentions, le troisième considérant est adopté.

Par 47 voix contre 2, avec 8 abstentions, le projet de résolution III est adopté.

139. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée générale doit maintenant se prononcer sur le projet de résolution IV. On a demandé que le paragraphe 1 du dispositif soit mis aux voix séparément et même en deux parties. La délégation de l'Inde présente un amendement à ce projet de résolution au cas où la seconde partie du paragraphe serait rejetée. Je présume donc que l'Assemblée générale, avant d'examiner l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde, voudra se prononcer sur le paragraphe en question et décider si elle accepte la seconde partie. Si la seconde partie est rejetée, j'ai l'intention de mettre aux voix l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde.

140. J'invite l'Assemblée à se prononcer maintenant sur la première partie du paragraphe 1, dont voici la teneur :

"Décide que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes restera en fonctions, dans les mêmes conditions, pendant une nouvelle période de trois ans..."

Par 52 voix contre une, avec 5 abstentions, la première partie du paragraphe 1 est adoptée.

141. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je mets maintenant aux voix la seconde partie du paragraphe 1 qui est ainsi conçue :

"... et qu'à l'expiration de cette période, il sera, sauf décision contraire de l'Assemblée générale, automatiquement reconduit aussi longtemps qu'il existera des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes."

L'appel nominal éié demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Afghanistan, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Tchécoslovaquie, Salvador, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Indonésie, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Yougoslavie.

Votent contre: Australie, Belgique, Canada, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Islande, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Panama, Pérou, Suède, Turquie, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

S'abstiennent: Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Costa-Rica, Cuba, Equateur, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Inde, Iran, Irak, Israël, Libéria, Mexique, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen.

Par 18 voix contre 11, avec 30 abstentions, la seconde partie du paragraphe 1 est rejetée.

142. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La seconde partie du paragraphe 1 du projet de résolution est supprimée. L'amendement proposé par la délégation de l'Inde tend à ajouter un nouveau paragraphe, rédigé dans les termes suivants :

"Décide qu'à sa session ordinaire de 1955, l'Assemblée générale examinera la question de savoir si le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes devrait être reconstitué pour une nouvelle période, ainsi que la question de la composition et du mandat de tout comité de cette nature qui serait créé."

143. L'Assemblée générale va maintenant voter sur cet amendement que la délégation indienne propose d'apporter au projet de résolution IV.

Par 43 voix contre 3, avec 11 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

Par 53 voix contre 2, avec 3 abstentions, le projet de résolution IV, ainsi modifié, est adopté.

144. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée va maintenant voter sur le projet de résolution V.

Par 43 voix contre 11, avec 4 abstentions, le projet de résolution V est adopté.

145. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous passons maintenant au projet de résolution VI. En ce qui concerne ce projet de résolution, une délégation a proposé d'appliquer la procédure prévue pour les questions importantes.

146. Avant que nous passions au vote, qui aura lieu par appel nominal, je tiens à appeler l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le paragraphe 6 du projet de résolution qui est libellé comme suit: "Décide de créer un nouveau Comité ad hoc de dix membres, composé des Etats suivants..." Un espace est laissé en blanc pour la liste des membres de ce comité. Je crois savoir qu'à la Quatrième Commission, l'accord s'est fait sur les dix Etats qui composeraient ce comité. Je crois donc qu'il y a intérêt à rappeler, avant le vote, quels seraient les membres du comité. Ces dix Etats sont les suivants: Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Etats-Unis, Guatemala, Irak, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni, Venezuela. Les noms des dix pays sur lesquels l'accord s'est fait à la Quatrième Commission figureront par conséquent dans le projet de résolution sur lequel nous allons voter.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Uruguay, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Libéria, Mexique, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques.

Votent contre: Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, France, Islande, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

S'abstiennent: Uruguay, Costa-Rica, République Dominicaine, Grèce, Israël, Paraguay, Pérou.

Il y a 36 voix pour, 15 contre et 7 abstentions. Ayant obtenu la majorité requise des deux tiers des membres présents et votants, le projet de résolution VI est adopté.

147. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La parole est au représentant du Guatemala pour une explication de vote.

148. M. TORRILLO (Guatemala) (traduction de l'espagnol): Je voudrais faire non pas une explication de vote, mais une brève déclaration.

149. La délégation du Guatemala voudrait exprimer sa profonde gratitude aux délégations des républiques d'Amérique centrale, le Salvador, le Honduras, le Nicaragua et le Costa-Rica, pour la déclaration qu'elles ont faite au cours de cette séance plénière pour appuyer les réserves formulées par la délégation du Guatemala à la Quatrième Commission. Cette déclaration, faite par ces pays pour appuyer la juste demande de mon pays, constitue un acte d'une grande portée, non seulement par la force morale et juridique qu'elle représente, mais encore parce qu'elle est un témoignage de l'amitié et de la fraternité sincères qui unissent nos républiques respectives.

La séance est levée à 13 h. 10.

ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

Distr.
GENERALE

32

A/2296
8 décembre 1952
FRANCAIS
ORIGINAL : ANGLAIS

DOCUMENTS
INDEX UNIT

MASTER

9 DEC 1952

Septième session
QUATRIEME COMMISSION
Points 33, 34, 35 et 36 de l'ordre du jour

RENSEIGNEMENTS RELATIFS AUX TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission

Rapporteur : M. J.V. SCOTT (Nouvelle-Zélande)

1. A sa 382ème séance plénière, le 17 octobre 1952, l'Assemblée générale a renvoyé à la Quatrième Commission les questions ci-après, qui étaient inscrites à son ordre du jour :

"33. Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte : rapports du Secrétaire général^{1/} et du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes^{2/} :

"a) Renseignements relatifs à la situation et au progrès dans le domaine social^{3/}

"b) Renseignements relatifs à la situation dans d'autres domaines^{4/}

"c) Transmission de renseignements

"34. Question de la reconstitution du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.^{5/}

1/ A/2128 et Corr.1, 2129 et Add.1, 2130, 2131 et Add.1 et 2, 2131/Add.2/Corr.1, 2132 et Corr.1, 2132/Add.1, 2133, 2134 et Add.1 et 2, 2134/Add.2/Corr.1, 2134/Add.3 à 5, 2134/Add.6 et Corr.1, 2134/Add.7 à 10, 2135 et Add.1 à 3.

2/ A/2219, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, septième session, supplément n° 18.

3/ Ibid, partie I, sections VI et VII, et partie II.

4/ Ibid, partie I, sections V et VIII.

5/ Ibid, partie I, section XI.

- "35. Participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes : rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.^{6/}
- "36. Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes : rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes)".^{7/}

^{6/} A/2219, Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, septième session, supplément n° 18, partie I, section XII.

^{7/} A/2178.

FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER SI UN
TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS
NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MEMES

39. De sa 271^{ème} à sa 278^{ème} séance, la Quatrième Commission a examiné le point 36 de l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale; elle était saisie du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2178).
40. A la 273^{ème} séance, la Birmanie, Cuba, l'Egypte, le Guatemala, l'Irak et le Venezuela ont présenté en commun un projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.231) aux termes duquel l'Assemblée générale : 1) approuverait la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe, qui pourrait servir de guide à l'Assemblée générale ainsi qu'aux Etats Membres des Nations Unies qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes, lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si un territoire a ou non atteint une complète autonomie; 2) reconnaîtrait que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres; 3) déclarerait que ces facteurs, tout en servant de guide lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73 e) de la Charte existent encore, ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes; 4) déclarerait en outre que, pour qu'un territoire puisse être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est essentiel que sa population s'administre complètement elle-même, selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte; et 5) recommanderait que l'Assemblée générale tienne compte de la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe chaque fois qu'elle étudie un cas, soit à la suite de toute communication reçue par le Secrétaire général en application de sa résolution 222 (III) relative à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte, soit à propos d'autres questions qui pourraient se poser touchant l'existence d'une obligation de transmettre des renseignements en vertu de cet Article.
41. L'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques a présenté un amendement (A/C.4/L.233) au projet de résolution commun précité, qui tendait à ajouter, à la fin du troisième alinéa du préambule, le membre de phrase suivant :

"... et précisé que, dans un délai maximum de six mois après la communication des renseignements susvisés, il convient de transmettre tous autres renseignements qui peuvent être nécessaires dans de tels cas, y compris les textes constitutionnels, législatifs ou réglementaires concernant le gouvernement du territoire, et les textes relatifs aux liens constitutionnels entre le territoire et le gouvernement métropolitain".

42. La Pologne a présenté un amendement (A/C.4/L.235) au projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231) qui tendait à ajouter, à la fin du paragraphe 2 du dispositif, les mots "et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes".

43. La République Dominicaine et le Pérou ont présenté en commun un amendement (A/C.4/L.234 et Corr.1) au projet de résolution commun; cet amendement tendait 1) à supprimer le deuxième alinéa du préambule; 2) à ajouter au préambule un cinquième alinéa, ainsi conçu : "Vu la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale"; 3) à remplacer le paragraphe 1 du dispositif par le texte suivant : "1. Prend acte avec intérêt du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) contenu dans le document A/2178, et estime que ce rapport constitue une contribution importante à l'étude complète des éléments qui permettraient de déterminer si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie"; 4) à remplacer les paragraphes 2, 3, 4 et 5 du dispositif par le texte suivant :

"2. Décide de créer un nouveau Comité ad hoc de dix membres, composé des Etats suivants (énumération des Etats), qui sera chargé de poursuivre et d'approfondir l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie; 3. Invite ledit Comité à prendre notamment en considération la liste des facteurs arrêtée en 1952 (A/2178) par le Comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI), et à tenir compte, en outre, des autres éléments suivants : a) la possibilité de définir la notion d'autonomie, aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte; b) les critères permettant de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes se trouve garanti en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI de la Charte; c) la libre expression de la volonté des peuples, s'agissant de déterminer leur statut national et international;

4. Invite le Secrétaire général à réunir le Comité ad hoc de façon qu'il puisse commencer ses travaux deux semaines avant l'ouverture de la session de 1953 du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes".

44. Les Pays-Bas ont présenté un amendement (A/C.4/L.236) qui tendait à insérer après le texte proposé pour le paragraphe 3 du dispositif par l'amendement commun de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou (A/C.4/L.234 et Corr.1), les paragraphes 4 et 5 suivants : "4. Prie le Comité de tenir compte des exposés communiqués par certains gouvernements en application de la résolution 567 (VI) en date du 18 janvier 1952; 5. Invite tous les Etats Membres des Nations Unies à communiquer par écrit au Secrétaire général, le 1er mai 1953 au plus tard, leurs vues sur les questions qui figurent dans le mandat du Comité;" le paragraphe 4 du dispositif proposé par les délégations de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou devient le paragraphe 6.

45. Pour concilier les divergences entre le projet de résolution commun de la Birmanie, de Cuba, de l'Egypte, du Guatemala, de l'Irak et du Venezuela (A/C.4/L.231) et de l'amendement commun de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou (A/C.4/L.234 et Corr.1) qui s'y rapportait, la délégation de l'Argentine a proposé un nouvel amendement (A/C.4/L.237) audit amendement commun qui visait, 1) à maintenir le préambule initial du projet de résolution commun; 2) à maintenir le paragraphe 1 initial du dispositif du projet de résolution commun en y ajoutant le mot "provisoirement" entre le mot "approuve" et les mots "la liste de facteurs"; 3) à ajouter au dispositif du projet de résolution commun les trois paragraphes proposés pour le dispositif dans la quatrième partie de l'amendement commun de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou.

46. A la 278ème séance, la Commission a voté, par division, sur le projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231) présenté par la Birmanie, Cuba, l'Egypte, le Guatemala, l'Irak et le Venezuela, ainsi que sur les amendements y afférents. Les résultats des scrutins ont été les suivants :

Préambule

Le premier alinéa a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 55 voix contre zéro, sans abstention.

Ont voté pour :

Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Australie, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Canada, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Danemark, Equateur, Egypte, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Ethiopie, France, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Luxembourg, Mexique, Nicaragua, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pakistan, Pays-Bas, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, République Dominicaine, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Salvador, Suède, Syrie, Thaïlande, Tchécoslovaquie, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Union Sud-Africaine, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Néant.

Se sont abstenus : Néant.

Le deuxième alinéa a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 36 voix contre 8, avec 11 abstentions.

Ont voté pour :

Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Norvège, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre :

Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Union Sud-Africaine.

Se sont abstenus :

Danemark, France, Grèce, Israël, Luxembourg, Nicaragua, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pérou, Suède, République Dominicaine, Uruguay.

Troisième alinéa

- a) L'amendement de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques (A/C.4/L.233) a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 19 voix contre 11, avec 25 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Birmanie, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, France, Luxembourg, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine.

Se sont abstenus : Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Israël, Libéria, Nicaragua, Pérou, République Dominicaine, Salvador, Thaïlande, Uruguay, Venezuela.

- b) Le troisième alinéa, ainsi amendé, a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 35 voix contre 9, avec 11 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, France, Luxembourg, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Union Sud-Africaine.

Se sont abstenus : Colombie, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Israël, Nicaragua, Norvège, Pérou, République Dominicaine, Suède, Thaïlande, Uruguay.

Le quatrième alinéa a été adopté par 52 voix contre zéro, avec 2 abstentions.

Le cinquième alinéa a été adopté par 40 voix contre 12, avec une abstention.

Un sixième alinéa nouveau, incorporant le point 2 de l'amendement commun (A/C.4/L.234) de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou, a été adopté par 36 voix contre zéro, avec 16 abstentions.

Paragraphe 1 du dispositif

- a) L'amendement de l'Argentine (A/C.4/L.237, point 2) tendant à insérer le mot "provisoirement" entre le mot "approuve" et les mots "la liste des facteurs" a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 23 voix contre 4, avec 28 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Iran, Israël, Liban, Mexique, Pérou, Philippines, République Dominicaine, Salvador, Thaïlande, Venezuela, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, France, Luxembourg.

Se sont abstenus : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Ethiopie, Grèce, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Libéria, Nicaragua, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pakistan, Pays-Bas, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Suède, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Union Sud-Africaine, Uruguay, Yémen.

- b) Le paragraphe 1 du dispositif, ainsi amendé, a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 36 voix contre 16, avec 3 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Luxembourg, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pays-Bas, Pérou, République Dominicaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine.

Se sont abstenus : Israël, Nicaragua, Uruguay.

- c) Le représentant de la République Dominicaine a retiré l'amendement commun. (A/C.4/L.234) à ce paragraphe.

Paragraphe 2 du dispositif

- a) L'amendement de la Pologne (A/C.4/L.235) a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 39 voix contre 7, avec 9 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Danemark, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Belgique, Canada, France, Luxembourg, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Union Sud-Africaine, Uruguay.

Se sont abstenus : Australie, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Equateur, Pays-Bas, Nicaragua, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, République Dominicaine, Suède.

- b) Le paragraphe 2 du dispositif, ainsi amendé, a été adopté par 46 voix contre zéro, avec 6 abstentions.

Le paragraphe 3 du dispositif a été adopté par 49 voix contre une, avec 5 abstentions.

Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 35 voix contre 18, avec 2 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Luxembourg, Nicaragua, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pays-Bas, Pérou, Suède, République Dominicaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Union Sud-Africaine, Uruguay.

Se sont abstenus : Grèce, Israël.

Paragraphe 5 du dispositif

- a) Un amendement de l'Argentine (A/C.4/L.238) tendant à ajouter le mot "provisoirement" après le mot "tienne", a été accepté par les auteurs du projet de résolution commun.
- b) Le paragraphe 5 du dispositif, ainsi amendé, a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 38 voix contre 9, avec 8 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Birmanie, Bolivie, Brésil, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Danemark, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, République Dominicaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Union Sud-Africaine.

Se sont abstenus : Colombie, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Israël, Nicaragua, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pérou, Suède.

Nouveau paragraphe 6 du dispositif. Le paragraphe 2 du point 4 de l'amendement (A/C.4/L.234) présenté en commun par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine, a été adopté comme paragraphe 6 du dispositif par 32 voix contre 6, avec 15 abstentions.

Nouveau paragraphe 7 du dispositif. Les auteurs de l'amendement commun (A/C.4/L.234) ont accepté un amendement au point 4 de l'amendement commun présenté par l'Equateur (A/C.4/L.239), et qui tendait à ajouter à la fin de l'alinéa c) du paragraphe 3 du dispositif, le membre de phrase "aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte"; ils ont également accepté le premier point de l'amendement des Pays-Bas (A/C.4/L.236). Le texte de l'amendement commun, ainsi modifié par les amendements de l'Equateur et des Pays-Bas, est ainsi conçu :

"Invite ledit Comité à prendre notamment en considération la liste des facteurs (A/2178) arrêtée en 1952 par le Comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale; les communications faites par les gouvernements conformément à ladite résolution et à tenir compte, en outre, des autres éléments suivants :

- a) La possibilité de définir la notion d'autonomie, aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte;

- b) Les critères permettant de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes se trouve garanti en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI de la Charte;
- c) La libre expression de la liberté des peuples, s'agissant de déterminer leur statut national et international aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte".

La Commission a voté par division sur ces textes; les résultats des scrutins ont été les suivants :

- i) La clause d'introduction a été adoptée par 33 voix contre zéro, avec 20 abstentions.
- ii) L'alinéa a) a été adopté par 20 voix contre 17, avec 14 abstentions.
- iii) L'alinéa b) a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 39 voix contre 4, avec 12 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Birmanie, Bolivie, Brésil, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, République Dominicaine, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Belgique, France, Luxembourg, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord.

Se sont abstenus : Australie, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Israël, Nicaragua, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pays-Bas, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine.

- iv) L'alinéa c) a été mis aux voix en deux parties. D'abord le membre de phrase "aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte", qui figure à la fin de l'alinéa, a été adopté par 14 voix contre zéro, avec 35 abstentions, ensuite, l'ensemble de l'alinéa c) a été adopté par 39 voix contre une, avec 14 abstentions.

- v) L'ensemble du nouveau paragraphe 7 du dispositif, ainsi amendé, a été adopté par 42 voix contre zéro, avec 12 abstentions.

Nouveau paragraphe 8 du dispositif. Le deuxième point de l'amendement des Pays-Bas (A/C.4/L.236) tendant à insérer un nouveau paragraphe 8 dans le dispositif, a été adopté par 25 voix contre zéro, avec 27 abstentions.

Nouveau paragraphe 9 du dispositif

- i) Un amendement verbal du représentant de l'Irak, qui tendait à remplacer les mots "deux semaines" par "au plus tard quatre semaines" a été accepté par les auteurs de l'amendement commun (A/C.4/L.234).
- ii) Le paragraphe 4 du point 4 de l'amendement commun, tendant à insérer un nouveau paragraphe 9 dans le dispositif, a été adopté sous sa forme modifiée, par 39 voix contre zéro, avec 13 abstentions.

47. L'ensemble du projet de résolution commun, ainsi amendé, a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 34 voix contre 12, avec 8 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie saoudite, Argentine, Birmanie, Bolivie, Brésil, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Egypte, Equateur, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Salvador, Syrie, Tchécoslovaquie, Thaïlande, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Colombie, Danemark, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, France, Luxembourg, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine.

Se sont abstenus : Canada, Grèce, Israël, Nicaragua, Norvège, Pérou, République Dominicaine, Uruguay.

48. Le texte de la résolution, tel qu'il a été adopté, figure en annexe au présent rapport (projet de résolution VI).

49. A la 296ème séance, la Quatrième Commission a approuvé la composition suivante pour le Comité ad hoc envisagé : Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Guatemala, Irak, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Venezuela.

Projet de résolution VI

FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER SI UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MÊMES

L'Assemblée générale,

Considérant que les Etats Membres qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes ont accepté, en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements,

Considérant que cette obligation subsiste, à l'égard de chaque territoire, tant que les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte ne sont pas atteints,

Considérant que l'Assemblée générale a déclaré, dans sa résolution 222 (III) adoptée le 3 novembre 1948, que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit nécessairement être informée de toute modification qui pourrait intervenir dans le statut constitutionnel de l'un quelconque des territoires non autonomes et précisé que, dans un délai maximum de six mois après la communication des renseignements susvisés, tous renseignements qui peuvent être nécessaires dans de tels cas, devraient être communiqués, y compris des renseignements sur la Constitution, les lois et les règlements concernant le gouvernement du territoire, et des renseignements relatifs aux liens constitutionnels entre le territoire et le gouvernement métropolitain,

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2178),

Reconnaissant que, lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si un territoire a ou non atteint une complète autonomie, une liste de facteurs pourrait servir utilement de guide, tant à l'Assemblée générale qu'au Membre administrant intéressé,

Vu la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale, en date du 18 janvier 1952,

1. Approuve provisoirement la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe, qui peut servir de guide à l'Assemblée générale ainsi qu'aux Etats Membres des Nations Unies qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes, lorsqu'il s'agit de décider si un territoire a ou non atteint une complète autonomie;

2. Reconnaît que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes;

3. Déclare que ces facteurs, tout en servant de guide, lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73 e) de la Charte existent encore, ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes;

4. Déclare en outre que, pour qu'un territoire puisse être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est essentiel que sa population s'administre complètement elle-même, selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte;

5. Recommande que, provisoirement, l'Assemblée générale tienne compte de la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe chaque fois qu'elle étudie un cas, soit à la suite de toute communication reçue par le Secrétaire général en application de sa résolution 222 (III) relative à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73 e) de la Charte, soit à propos d'autres questions qui peuvent se poser touchant l'existence d'une obligation de transmettre des renseignements en vertu de cet Article;

6. Décide de créer un nouveau Comité ad hoc de dix membres, composé des Etats suivants (liste des pays), qui sera chargé de poursuivre et d'approfondir l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie;

7. Invite ledit Comité à prendre notamment en considération la liste des facteurs (A/2178) arrêtée en 1952 par le Comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI), les communications faites par les gouvernements conformément à ladite résolution et à tenir compte, en outre, des autres éléments suivants :

a) La possibilité de définir la notion d'autonomie, aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte;

b) Les critères permettant de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes se trouve garanti, en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI de la Charte;

c) La libre expression de la volonté des peuples, s'agissant de déterminer leur statut national et international aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte;

8. Invite tous les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à communiquer par écrit au Secrétaire général, le 1er mai 1953 au plus tard, leurs vues sur les questions qui figurent dans le mandat du Comité;

9. Invite le Secrétaire général à réunir le Comité ad hoc de façon qu'il puisse commencer ses travaux au plus tard quatre semaines avant l'ouverture de la session de 1953 du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

ANNEXE

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÈDE A L'INDEPENDANCE OU A TOUTE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE SEPARÉE

PREMIERE PARTIE

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance

A. - Statut international

1. Responsabilité internationale. - Responsabilité internationale entière du territoire en ce qui concerne les actes inhérents à l'exercice de sa souveraineté externe ainsi que pour ce qui est des actes relatifs à son administration interne.
2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.
3. Relations internationales en général. - Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des traités.
4. Défense nationale. - Liberté pour le territoire de conclure des accords relatifs à sa défense nationale.

B. - Autonomie interne

1. Forme de gouvernement. - Pleine liberté pour la population de se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'elle juge bonne.
2. Gouvernement du territoire. - Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.
3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. - Pleine compétence pour les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles.

DEUXIEME PARTIE

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée

A. - Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique. - Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations. - Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté. - Mesure dans laquelle la souveraineté du territoire a été librement et de sa propre volonté limitée au moment où ce territoire a accédé à une forme d'autonomie séparée.

B. - Statut international

1. Relations internationales en général. - Degré et mesure dans lesquels le territoire jouit du pouvoir d'établir librement des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier librement des instruments internationaux.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies

C. - Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du territoire. - Nature et degré du contrôle ou de l'intervention éventuels du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne, par exemple dans les domaines suivants :

Pouvoir législatif : Adoption des lois du territoire par une assemblée autochtone, soit élue tout entière par des voies libres et démocratiques, soit légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population;

Pouvoir exécutif : Choix des membres du pouvoir exécutif par l'autorité compétente qui a dans le territoire l'agrément de la population autochtone, que cette autorité soit héréditaire ou élective, en tenant également compte, s'il y a lieu, de la nature et du degré du contrôle éventuel qu'un organisme extérieur exercerait directement ou indirectement sur la constitution et l'exercice du pouvoir exécutif;

Pouvoir judiciaire : Constitution des tribunaux et choix des juges.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement. - Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire : a) Existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié ? b) Ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention, directe ou indirecte, d'un gouvernement étranger ^{1/} ?

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle.- Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée portant préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UN TERRITOIRE EST LIBREMENT ASSOCIE
A D'AUTRES PARTIES CONSTITUTIVES DE LA METROPOLE OU D'UN AUTRE PAYS

A.- Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique.- Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

1/ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de se poser les questions suivantes :

- i) Chaque habitant adulte a-t-il le droit, en pleine égalité (sous réserve de garanties spéciales pour la protection des minorités), de déterminer le caractère du gouvernement du territoire ?
- ii) Ce pouvoir s'exerce-t-il librement, c'est-à-dire l'électeur n'est-il soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et n'y a-t-il pas de partis politiques frappés de certaines incapacités ? Pour l'application de ce facteur, on pourra vérifier les faits suivants :
 - a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;
 - b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
 - c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
 - d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
 - e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
 - f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale;
- iii) Chaque personne est-elle libre d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir ?

2. Opinion des populations.- Opinion des populations du territoire, librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique.- Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles.- Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel.- Association : a) en vertu de la Constitution de la métropole; ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire; en tenant compte des éléments suivants : i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au territoire associé; ii) s'il existe en certains domaines une compétence réservée en vertu de la Constitution en faveur du territoire ou du pouvoir central; et iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B.- Statut

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif.- Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Citoyenneté.- Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

3. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement.- Accès des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire par nomination ou élection à tous les emplois publics relevant du pouvoir central dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

C.- Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote.- Suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et élections périodiques libres dans lesquelles l'électeur n'est soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et dans lesquelles aucun parti politique n'est frappé de certaines incapacités. 2/

2. Droits et statut des habitants.- Dans un système unitaire, droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays et, dans un système fédéral, degré identique d'autonomie pour les habitants et organes locaux de toutes les parties de la Fédération.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux.- Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties du pays.

4. Législation interne.- Compétence législative ou réglementaire locale égale à la compétence législative ou réglementaire dont bénéficient les autres parties du pays et exercée dans les mêmes conditions.

2/ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de vérifier les faits suivants :

- a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;
- b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
- c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
- d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
- e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
- f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale;
- g) Liberté pour chaque personne d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir.

Septième session
Point 34 de l'ordre du jour

RENSEIGNEMENTS RELATIFS AUX TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission

Rapporteur : M. J.V. SCOTT (Nouvelle-Zélande)

ADDITIF

ELECTION DE QUATRE MEMBRES DU COMITE DES RENSEIGNEMENTS RELATIFS AUX
TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES

A la suite de l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale, à sa 402ème séance plénière du 10 décembre 1952, de la résolution portant reconduction du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes ^{1/}, la Quatrième Commission, agissant au nom de l'Assemblée générale, a, au cours de sa 306ème séance, élu le Brésil, la Chine, l'Inde et l'Irak, membres du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

1/ A/RESOLUTION/30

Mercredi 12 novembre 1952, à 15 h. 30

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

Pages

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178] 153

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178]

[Point 36*]

1. M. KHALIDY (Irak), parlant en qualité de Président du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, présente le rapport du Comité (A/2178).

2. La question de savoir si un territoire est ou n'est pas complètement autonome est un des problèmes résultant des dispositions de la Charte qui a influencé de diverses manières les discussions de la Quatrième Commission. Ce problème s'est posé dès 1946, au cours de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée générale, lorsqu'après avoir examiné les communications adressées par les gouvernements l'Assemblée générale a décidé que la meilleure procédure à suivre à l'époque consistant à inclure dans la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale une liste des territoires qui, d'après les déclarations des Puissances administrantes, relevaient des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. En 1949, comme plusieurs Puissances administrantes avaient cessé de transmettre au sujet des certains territoires des renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, l'Assemblée générale, dans sa résolution 334 (IV) a invité le Comité spécial sur les renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte à étudier les facteurs dont il conviendrait de tenir compte pour décider si tel ou tel territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Ce comité a été en mesure de présenter à l'Assemblée générale un rapport (A/1836, quatrième partie) contenant une liste de facteurs, mais il a précisé que cette liste ne devait pas être considéré comme étant complète. La Quatrième Commission a examiné le problème en se fondant sur cette liste et elle a créé, pendant la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, un comité chargé d'étudier la question d'une manière plus approfondie. Ce comité a dressé deux listes de facteurs: la première énumère les facteurs qui permettent de conclure qu'un territoire a accédé à l'indépendance ou à toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée; la seconde énumère les facteurs qui permettent de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé, sur un pied d'égalité, à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Sur la recommandation de la Quatrième Commission, l'Assemblée générale, dans sa résolution 567 (VI), a décidé de prendre pour base ces deux listes; dans la même résolution l'Assemblée générale, considérant que l'élaboration d'une liste plus définitive des facteurs en question exigeait une étude approfondie fondée sur des renseignements plus complets, a invité les Membres des Nations Unies à faire connaître leurs vues au Secrétaire général au sujet des facteurs énumérés dans les listes préparées à la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale et elle a créé un Comité ad hoc de dix membres, chargé de poursuivre l'étude de la question. C'est du rapport de ce comité que la Quatrième Commission est maintenant saisie.

3. Le Comité ad hoc a été guidé, dans ses travaux, par certaines considérations d'ordre général. Il a été décidé, en premier lieu, que le Comité devait s'occuper uniquement des territoires non autonomes auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte; on trouvera au paragraphe 5, A, du document A/2178 le détail des circonstances antérieures dans lesquelles ce point a été discuté. En second lieu, le Comité a admis qu'il n'était pas compétent pour prévoir quelle autorité doit décider qu'un territoire s'administre lui-même dans une mesure telle qu'il se trouve en dehors du champ d'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Plusieurs membres du Comité ad hoc se sont réservé le droit de reprendre cette question à l'Assemblée générale. En troisième lieu, le Comité a convenu de renvoyer à l'Assemblée générale la question de savoir dans quelle mesure les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, continuent de s'appliquer au cas de territoires qui n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance ou n'ont pas été pleinement intégrés à un autre Etat, mais ont atteint une complète autonomie dans le domaine de leurs affaires intérieures. Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a présenté sur cette question une liste de facteurs qui a été incorporée au rapport du Comité.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

4. Après avoir ainsi réglé ces questions de compétence, le Comité a établi une liste révisée des facteurs dont il a donné le détail dans son rapport. Les deux grandes catégories générales ont été maintenues, mais la première a été subdivisée en deux: d'une part, les facteurs qui permettent de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance, d'autre part, les facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée. La deuxième catégorie générale porte, comme auparavant, le titre: "Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays".

5. Le Gouvernement de l'Irak a proposé d'ajouter à la liste un nouveau facteur concernant les forces armées; mais, comme cette proposition soulevait des questions difficiles de sécurité qui échappaient à la compétence du Comité, il a été convenu de mentionner dans la liste des facteurs la question de la compétence en matière de défense nationale et de reproduire dans le paragraphe 5, E, du rapport le texte proposé par le Gouvernement de l'Irak.

6. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a adressé au Secrétaire général une liste de facteurs dont il conviendrait, à son avis, de tenir compte dans toute la mesure possible pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont la population s'administre complète-ment elle-même. Le Comité a décidé d'incorporer dans sa liste les points ayant trait aux droits politiques des personnes. Pour ce qui est des autres points concernant la situation du pouvoir exécutif, le pouvoir judiciaire et la sécurité intérieure, il a été convenu de les mentionner dans le rapport.

7. L'accord a pu se faire sur chaque facteur de la liste sans qu'il soit nécessaire de les mettre aux voix. Cependant, lors de l'adoption de l'ensemble du rapport, par 7 voix contre zéro, avec 2 abstentions, certaines délégations ont formulé des réserves formelles et il a été décidé que toutes les délégations pourraient librement réexaminer le rapport au cours de la session de l'Assemblée générale.

8. La déclaration la plus importante qu'ait faite le Comité est la suivante. Une énumération de facteurs ne peut avoir qu'une valeur d'indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même. Chaque cas particulier doit être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Le paragraphe 5 de l'annexe à la résolution 567 (VI) met ce principe en lumière en soulignant qu'une telle liste de facteurs ne saurait être considérée comme complète ou définitive.

9. En terminant, M. Khalidy se félicite de l'esprit de collaboration dans lequel le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs a procédé à ses travaux et il rend hommage à la diligence et au dévouement du secrétariat de cet organe.

La séance est levée à 16 h. 15.

Jeudi 13 novembre 1952, à 10 h. 30

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2178) [suite] 155

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2178) [suite]

[Point 36*]

1. M. FORSYTH (Australie) rappelle que la délégation de l'Australie au Comité ad hoc a réservé sa position et s'est abstenue lors du vote sur le rapport du Comité, parce qu'elle n'approuvait pas la manière dont ce comité a abordé la question et a révisé la liste des facteurs. En effet, il n'a été donné aucune définition précise des termes fondamentaux utilisés au cours de la discussion du problème et le statut des territoires a été considéré comme un facteur permettant de déterminer le degré d'autonomie de ces territoires. De l'avis de M. Forsyth, ces deux notions ne sont pas du même ordre. La délégation de l'Australie a d'ailleurs toujours douté de la valeur pratique d'une liste de facteurs. Non seulement ceux qui ont préconisé l'étude de ces facteurs n'ont pas donné de raisons convaincantes pour justifier la nécessité de cette étude, mais, en fait, l'établissement de la liste destinée à guider les autorités compétentes s'est trouvée mêlé à d'autres questions. Les difficultés que présente ce travail ne laissent pas grand espoir quant à son succès.

2. Il y a plus de soixante-dix territoires non autonomes au sujet desquels les Puissances administrantes transmettent des renseignements à l'Assemblée générale. Ces territoires diffèrent beaucoup en ce qui concerne la situation géographique, la population et les conditions politiques et ce serait faire preuve d'un manque de réalisme que de penser que le rythme ou les modalités de leur progrès vers l'autonomie peuvent être uniformes. En outre, les débats à l'Assemblée générale et au Comité ad hoc ont montré que les Membres des Nations

Unies ont eu de la peine à se mettre d'accord sur les facteurs à élaborer, étant donné la grande variété de leurs traditions et de leurs philosophies politiques. C'est pourquoi l'Australie a adopté une attitude de réserve; elle est rarement intervenue dans les débats et a décidé de ne pas adresser au Secrétaire général l'exposé demandé dans la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale.

3. La principale critique que l'Australie tient à formuler est que l'on s'est efforcé d'établir que l'accès à l'indépendance est un des moyens d'assurer l'autonomie d'un territoire. Cette opinion, qui apparaît dans l'annexe à la résolution de l'Assemblée générale, provient d'une interprétation injustifiée des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Il conviendrait donc d'étudier avec le plus grand soin la liste de facteurs qui figure dans cette annexe.

4. Dans l'introduction de cette annexe, l'Assemblée générale déclare, notamment, que les facteurs essentiels dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire non autonome est parvenu à l'autonomie complète sont les suivants: progrès politique des populations, suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire; opinion des populations du territoire, exprimée librement et en connaissance de cause, par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent. En ce qui concerne les territoires qui se sont librement unis ou associés sur la base d'une égalité de statut avec d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole, d'un autre pays ou d'autres pays, les facteurs suivants, aux termes de cette annexe, sont également essentiels et doivent être pris en considération: représentation dans les organes législatifs et citoyenneté.

5. M. Forsyth considère que toute l'introduction de l'annexe est fort peu satisfaisante et que les notions qui y sont exposées ont rendu les discussions plus confuses. Il faudrait, à son avis, chercher à définir la terminologie fondamentale. Il a fait une suggestion dans ce sens au Comité ad hoc, mais cet organe a délibérément évité d'aborder la question. De toute façon, le rapport du Comité (A/2178) ne règle pas définitivement la question et M. Forsyth persiste à croire qu'avant d'établir une liste de facteurs, il conviendrait de savoir exactement ce que l'on entend par "autonomie complète", car cette notion est la base même du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Sans vouloir présenter une proposition concrète, il indique à la Commission que l'on pourrait, par exemple, considérer qu'une population s'administre complètement elle-même lorsque le pouvoir exécutif du gouvernement est contrôlé par la volonté de la collectivité, conformément à la constitution du territoire.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

6. L'erreur la plus grave que l'on ait commise a été de considérer l'indépendance comme le critère de l'autonomie complète. Ainsi, au paragraphe 3 de l'introduction de l'annexe, on peut lire que la condition pour que les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte cessent de s'appliquer est que les habitants du territoire aient atteint leur autonomie complète; cette condition peut être remplie de deux manières principales, soit par l'accès à l'indépendance soit par l'union du territoire, sur la base d'une égalité de statut, avec les autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays, ou son association dans les mêmes conditions avec la métropole ou un autre pays. De l'avis de la délégation de l'Australie, il est inexact de prétendre que l'accès à l'indépendance est une condition nécessaire de l'autonomie. Le terme indépendance ne figure d'ailleurs pas dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte, et l'Assemblée générale n'a pas compétence pour déclarer que l'indépendance est le principal moyen d'assurer l'autonomie complète d'un territoire. L'indépendance ou l'association avec d'autres pays ou territoires ne sont pas des caractéristiques de l'autonomie complète, elles en sont la conséquence. En effet, si une population s'administre complètement elle-même, il lui appartient de se prononcer sur son propre statut.

7. Ce même paragraphe 3 contient la phrase suivante: "La mesure dans laquelle les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, continuent de s'appliquer au cas de territoires qui n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance ou n'ont pas été pleinement intégrés à un autre Etat, mais ont atteint une complète autonomie dans le domaine de leurs affaires intérieures, est une question qui mérite un complément d'étude." C'est là, selon M. Forsyth, une déclaration erronée. En effet, lorsqu'un territoire a acquis une complète autonomie, il ne relève plus des dispositions de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte et il n'y a donc plus lieu de continuer l'examen de la question. Ce fait est un exemple typique de la confusion créée par le texte en cours d'examen. Cette confusion est due en grande partie à ce que l'on considère l'indépendance et l'autonomie comme deux notions solidaires.

8. Passant aux facteurs énoncés aux paragraphes 6 et 7 de l'introduction de l'annexe, M. Forsyth fait observer que les deux premiers facteurs, à savoir le progrès politique et l'opinion des populations, devraient être étudiés séparément des deux autres facteurs, car ils ont un caractère si général que leur examen ne devrait pas demander beaucoup de temps. Quant aux deux derniers facteurs mentionnés dans cette introduction — la représentation dans les organes législatifs et la citoyenneté — le fait de les considérer comme essentiels relève de la même conception erronée sur laquelle repose la liste en question. M. Forsyth tient à préciser que, si sa délégation prend part à la discussion de ces facteurs, il ne faudra pas en conclure qu'elle approuve cette conception.

9. Il rappelle enfin que les représentants du Royaume-Uni et de la Belgique ont souligné qu'une liste de facteurs devrait être établie de façon qu'elle puisse servir à juger non seulement les dispositions d'une constitution, mais aussi la manière dont ces dispositions sont appliquées. Il rappelle également qu'il a lui-même déclaré devant le Comité ad hoc que le terme "indépendance" ne figurait ni dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte, ni dans le mandat du Comité. La délégation de l'Australie considère que l'indépendance n'est pas une condition essentielle de l'autonomie. Elle constate, en outre, que ses vues sont partagées par les délégations de la France et du Royaume-Uni qui ont fait des déclarations analogues au Comité ad hoc et dans les exposés qu'elles ont adressés au Secrétaire général (A/AC.58/1/Add.2 et Add.3). Un territoire peut être indépendant ou associé sans être autonome au sens de l'Article 73 et vice versa. Le statut d'un territoire ne peut donc être considéré comme un critère de l'autonomie.

10. M. RIEMENS (Pays-Bas) estime que le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (A/2178) concerne un problème important et des plus complexes. Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, en sa qualité de Puissance administrante, a toujours décidé lui-même si les territoires dont il assume la responsabilité relèvent du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Lorsqu'il a jugé bon d'envoyer les rapports mentionnés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte au sujet de certains territoires, ni l'Assemblée générale, ni les organes subsidiaires des Nations Unies n'ont formulé aucune opinion sur la validité de cette décision. L'Assemblée générale n'a pas examiné non plus si des Etats Membres autres que ceux qui avaient décidé d'envoyer les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, étaient responsables de territoires dont la population ne s'administrait pas encore complètement elle-même. Il appartient uniquement aux Membres des Nations Unies de décider quels sont les territoires sur lesquels ils doivent soumettre des rapports et de déterminer si certains des territoires qu'ils administrent ont atteint le stade où leur population s'administre complètement elle-même.

11. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc avait pour objet d'aider l'Organisation à comprendre dans quelles circonstances un territoire évolue vers l'autonomie et quand il atteint le point où sa population s'administre complètement elle-même. En réalité, la Charte fait une distinction nette entre l'autonomie et l'indépendance, et il est question, dans tout le Chapitre XI, des territoires qui sont non autonomes, en tant qu'ils s'opposent aux territoires autonomes. Toute la question consiste à définir les termes "autonomie" et "self-government". Il est clair que les auteurs de la Charte pensaient aux formes de gouvernement qui ne relèvent ni de l'autonomie ni de l'indépendance. On ne peut appliquer aux territoires dont la population s'administre complètement elle-même les critères que l'on applique en général à l'indépendance.

12. M. Riemens attire également l'attention de la Commission sur une différence importante entre le texte de l'Article 73, alinéa b, qui a trait aux territoires non autonomes, et celui de l'Article 76, alinéa b, qui se rapporte au régime international de tutelle. Il fait observer que les mots "ou l'indépendance", qui figurent dans le second, ne se trouvent pas dans le premier. De plus, l'Article 73, b, insiste sur les conditions particulières des divers territoires et de leurs populations et sur leurs degrés variables de développement.

13. On dira que l'évolution des territoires non autonomes se manifeste principalement dans les modifications de leur constitution. Toutefois, cette évolution constitutionnelle est l'une des questions les plus difficiles à juger pour ceux qui ne sont pas parfaitement au courant de la situation particulière de chaque territoire. Il faut tenir compte, en effet, de nombreux facteurs géographiques et historiques. Le système juridique, les aspirations politiques de la population, son degré d'éducation, les rapports économiques du territoire avec la métropole et les autres pays jouent un rôle important. De plus, il ne suffit pas d'étudier le texte écrit de la constitution, car la pratique constitutionnelle en est souvent très éloignée; le représentant des Pays-Bas cite à ce sujet l'exemple de son propre pays. Si la Quatrième Commission tient à déterminer les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si la population d'un territoire s'administre complètement elle-même, il est nécessaire qu'elle étudie tous ces aspects de la question.

14. Le Comité n'a pas procédé à une étude adéquate des territoires qui ne sont pas devenus indépendants ou qui n'ont pas été complètement rattachés à un autre Etat, mais qui ont déjà atteint un large degré d'autonomie dans la conduite de leurs affaires intérieures. Et cependant, le paragraphe 3 de l'introduction de l'annexe de la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale a signalé que cette question méritait une étude plus approfondie. En second lieu, le Comité ne semble pas avoir examiné les motifs pour lesquels les Puissances administrantes ont cessé de transmettre des renseignements sur certains territoires. En troisième lieu, le Comité n'a pas donné son avis sur les vues transmises par les Etats Membres conformément à la résolution 567 (VI).

15. M. Riemens estime qu'il ne serait pas impossible de parvenir à définir les facteurs en question, si un organe pleinement compétent consacrait à ce problème tout le temps nécessaire. Pour les motifs qu'il a exposés précédemment, sa délégation n'est pas disposée à présenter un projet de résolution tendant à charger un nouvel organe de poursuivre l'œuvre du Comité ad hoc. Toutefois, si une proposition est formulée dans ce sens, la délégation des Pays-Bas pourra lui accorder son appui.

16. Le représentant des Pays-Bas précise de nouveau que, de l'avis de son gouvernement, les Puissances administrantes conservent la pleine responsabilité de décider à quel moment la population d'un territoire s'administre complètement elle-même, et, par suite, à quel moment les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte cessent de s'appliquer à ce territoire. Lorsqu'une Puissance administrante a amené un territoire au seuil de l'autonomie, elle ne demande pas à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de la couvrir de louanges, mais elle ne s'attend pas non plus à rencontrer une attitude de méfiance ou de censure. Rien ne serait plus nuisible au prestige des Nations Unies qu'une telle attitude.

17. S'il existe des malentendus et de la méfiance au sujet des facteurs qui permettent de décider si un territoire est autonome, une étude plus approfondie de ces facteurs est indispensable, non seulement pour éliminer ces malentendus, mais surtout parce que les Nations Unies, ayant commencé l'étude de ce problème, se doivent à elles-mêmes de la poursuivre avec le plus grand sérieux.

18. M. HOUARD (Belgique) commence par faire observer que sa délégation n'entend pas se prononcer, dès à présent, sur la valeur des différents facteurs et sur leur signification. Les importantes déclarations que viennent de faire les représentants de l'Australie et des Pays-Bas aideront sans aucun doute la délégation belge à se former une opinion sur le fond de la question.

19. Il s'agit d'une question importante, qui ne se limite nullement au problème de la cessation de la transmission des renseignements; de toute évidence, le commencement de la transmission des renseignements est un point au moins aussi important. Cela ressort clairement du paragraphe 1 du dispositif de la résolution 334 (IV) de l'Assemblée générale. Le titre même du rapport du Comité ad hoc en discussion indique que cette notion est restée présente dans l'esprit des auteurs de la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale.

20. Sous réserve des observations qu'elle pourrait formuler ultérieurement sur le fond du problème, la délégation de la Belgique tient à souligner dès maintenant que l'énumération des facteurs n'aura jamais que la valeur d'une indication tant pour les Puissances administrantes que pour les Etats Membres que n'ont pas encore répondu à la lettre du Secrétaire général, en date du 29 juin 1946¹.

21. La délégation belge est persuadée que la liste des facteurs permettra à de nombreux Etats Membres de réexaminer la situation de leurs populations non autonomes, comme le représentant de la Belgique les y a invités au début de la présente session.

22. M. NAUDY (France) rend d'abord hommage au soin et au sérieux avec lesquels le Comité ad hoc a abordé la tâche qui lui était confiée. La délégation française se félicite que certaines des considérations d'ordre général formulées dans le rapport du Comité placent des études entreprises dans leur véritable contexte. Il pense notamment aux considérations mentionnées au paragraphe 5, C, de la section IV selon lesquelles une énumération de facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'une indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même, et chaque cas particulier doit être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. De même, le Comité a été bien inspiré en évitant de se prononcer sur les questions de compétence qui risqueraient de donner lieu à des controverses sans issue.

23. En revanche, la délégation française se demande sincèrement si la liste des facteurs recommandée par le Comité ad hoc constitue une réelle amélioration par rapport à celle qui figurait en annexe de la résolution 567 (VI) et qui appelait déjà des réserves.

¹ Dans cette lettre, le Secrétaire général demandait aux gouvernements des Etats Membres de communiquer leur avis sur les facteurs à prendre en considération pour déterminer les territoires non autonomes auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI de la Charte et sur la forme sous laquelle les renseignements devraient être transmis ainsi qu'une énumération des territoires non autonomes soumis à leur juridiction.

24. M. Naudy rappelle que le Gouvernement français a formulé au sujet de l'ancienne liste des observations écrites qui sont reproduites dans le document A/AC.58/1/Add.2 et estime qu'il n'est pas sans intérêt, compte tenu des débats qui se sont déroulés récemment à la Quatrième Commission, de citer une remarque d'ordre général qui figurait parmi ces observations. Le Gouvernement français indiquait (par. 13) que l'étude des facteurs devrait fournir la base nécessaire à une extension éventuelle des obligations de l'Article 73, e, aux Etats qui, depuis l'entrée en vigueur de la Charte, ont considéré que les obligations du Chapitre XI ne les concernaient pour aucun des éléments territoriaux dépendant d'eux. Il ajoutait qu'il paraissait éminemment souhaitable que l'application des garanties inscrites au Chapitre XI pût revêtir le caractère d'universalité qui était sans aucun doute présent à l'esprit des auteurs de la Charte. De l'avis du représentant de la France, toute étude qui négligerait cet aspect du problème risquerait d'aboutir à des conclusions dépourvues à la fois d'objectivité scientifique et d'équité. Dans un ordre d'idées analogue, aucun des critères de l'autonomie ne serait pleinement acceptable s'il ne pouvait s'appliquer à des Etats qui sont déjà considérés comme autonomes ou indépendants. Toute autre solution traduirait, à l'égard des territoires dits non autonomes, une intention de discrimination à laquelle la Quatrième Commission ne voudrait certainement pas souscrire.

25. Le Gouvernement français attachait une importance particulière à celles de ses observations qui avaient trait aux considérations d'ordre géographique et aux considérations ethniques et culturelles. Cependant, malgré ses critiques, ces considérations ont été reprises par le Comité ad hoc dans la liste des facteurs qui permettent de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. M. Naudy cite à ce propos le texte des paragraphes 23 et 24 du document A/AC.58/1/Add.2. Ces observations conservent toute leur valeur aux yeux de la délégation française, qui regrette que le Comité ad hoc n'ait pas cru devoir en tenir compte.

26. On peut reprocher au nouveau texte rédigé par le Comité de continuer à placer exagérément l'accent sur les conditions qui caractérisent une indépendance se situant au delà de l'autonomie par laquelle un territoire sort du domaine de l'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Il est certain que lorsque cette indépendance internationale ou telles formes étendues d'autonomie séparée sont acquises à un territoire, celui-ci a cessé d'être un territoire non autonome. Mais on ne saurait dire que l'acquisition de statuts de ce genre soit une condition nécessaire de l'autonomie au sens de l'Article 73. Dans la voie de l'autonomie séparée, il est une étape où le territoire a pu cesser d'être non autonome sans avoir pour autant accédé à l'indépendance complète ou à toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée. C'est cette étape ultérieure que le Comité n'a justement pas caractérisée. En effet, il n'a pas estimé qu'il était compétent pour examiner la question de la mesure dans laquelle les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, continuent de s'appliquer au cas de territoires qui n'ont pas accédé à l'indépendance ou n'ont pas été pleinement intégrés à un autre Etat, mais ont atteint une complète indépendance dans le domaine de leurs affaires intérieures. Cependant, le paragraphe 3 de l'introduction de l'annexe à la résolution 567 (VI) constatait que cette question méritait un complément d'étude. Les suggestions présentées sur ce point par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas paraissent mériter d'être prises en considération. Il existe donc sur ces points capitaux une lacune dans les travaux du Comité ad hoc.

27. D'autre part, l'inclusion, dans les listes de facteurs, à côté de critères juridiques, de ce que l'on peut appeler des critères de fait, n'apporte que de la confusion, puisque ces derniers critères visent des cas particuliers, et que certains d'entre eux ne pourraient s'appliquer à des Etats qualifiés d'indépendants et souverains.

28. M. Naudy s'étonne enfin que, dans les nouveaux critères concernant l'accession à l'indépendance internationale, le progrès politique ainsi que l'opinion des populations et leur participation au gouvernement aient disparu des listes. Il se demande à ce propos s'il faut en déduire qu'à partir du moment où une collectivité a accédé à l'indépendance, le souci d'assurer le respect de l'opinion et des droits des individus ainsi que leur participation au gouvernement s'atténue au point de disparaître. Aux termes de l'Article 73, il s'agit cependant de protéger, non pas les intérêts d'un territoire considéré comme une entité, mais ceux d'une collectivité composée d'individus dont chacun a des droits et des prérogatives imprescriptibles.

29. La délégation française se réserve de présenter, au cours du débat, des remarques complémentaires.

30. M. DJERDA (Yougoslavie) rend hommage aux efforts accomplis par le Comité ad hoc, mais il estime, pour plusieurs raisons, que ce rapport ne peut pas être considéré comme satisfaisant.

31. Tout d'abord, en ce qui concerne les formes d'autonomie séparée autres que l'indépendance, ainsi que les formes d'association libre d'un territoire à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays, les auteurs du rapport ont mis au premier rang des facteurs le facteur intitulé "Progrès politique". La délégation yougoslave est d'avis que ce facteur est absolument inapplicable, car aucun des peuples qui cherchent actuellement à réaliser leurs aspirations nationales ne saurait être considéré comme incapable de décider lui-même de son propre sort.

32. Le facteur essentiel est l'opinion des populations, exprimée librement et d'une manière démocratique. Toute tentative en vue de limiter ce droit constitue une négation des principes mêmes sur lesquels est fondée l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

33. Ce facteur doit se combiner avec un deuxième élément, que l'on pourrait appeler "Conditions à remplir pour déterminer l'opinion des populations". Tous les autres facteurs doivent être tenus pour secondaires et accessoires. La volonté librement exprimée des populations, déterminée dans des conditions objectives, constitue le principal et même le seul facteur à considérer pour résoudre le problème.

34. En outre, le facteur intitulé "Défense nationale", dans la première partie de la liste, est superflu, car il est déjà contenu implicitement dans le facteur précédent, "Relations internationales en général". Dans cette même partie, les facteurs énumérés sous "B—Autonomie interne" ne sont pas pertinents. Enfin, la Yougoslavie estime que les opinions des divers gouvernements reproduites dans la section IV du document, ne devraient pas faire partie du rapport proprement dit.

35. La délégation de la Yougoslavie continuera de participer à l'étude du problème, mais elle votera, pour les raisons qu'elle vient d'indiquer, contre le rapport du Comité ad hoc.

36. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba), intervenant sur une question de procédure, demande au Secrétariat s'il serait possible de soumettre à la Commission, avant qu'elle ne soit appelée à examiner les projets de rapports du rapporteur, les textes des projets de résolution adoptés par la Commission, dans les trois langues de travail.

37. M. BENSON (Secrétariat) déclare que le Secrétariat soumettra désormais, avant les projets de rapports du rapporteur, les textes, dans les trois langues, des projets de résolution adoptés par la Commission, pour permettre aux délégations de vérifier la concordance des textes.

38. Le PRESIDENT et M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) remercient le Secrétariat.

La séance est levée à 12 h. 20.

Jeudi 13 novembre 1952, à 15 heures

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

Pages

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231] (suite)	161
Demande d'audition	165

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231] (suite)

[Point 36*]

1. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) déclare qu'au sein du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, la délégation du Venezuela s'est efforcée, comme elle le fait toujours, de concilier les vues des Puissances administrantes et des Puissances non administrantes concernant l'aspect international de la question des territoires non autonomes, et à ramener en même temps à des proportions raisonnables les divergences d'opinion qui ont fait penser à certaines Puissances administrantes que les Puissances non administrantes s'élevaient en juges à leur égard. La cessation de la communication des renseignements relatifs à certains territoires qu'une majorité d'Etats Membres ne considèrent pas encore comme pleinement autonomes a été l'un des principaux facteurs qui ont, semble-t-il, divisé la Quatrième Commission en deux camps dont chacun suspecte l'autre, et empêche l'union des efforts et de l'expérience acquise de part et d'autre en vue d'une œuvre constructive.

2. Les pays qui considèrent que certains territoires ne sont pas pleinement autonomes estiment que leur thèse est fondée en droit et en fait. Aucun de leurs arguments n'est inspiré par le désir antagoniste et illégitime d'empiéter sur la souveraineté nationale d'autres Etats; ils ne sont animés que par la volonté de poursuivre l'œuvre entreprise à San-Francisco, œuvre qui se trouvait menacée par des constructions juridiques échafaudées sur le Chapitre XI et en désaccord avec la tendance fondamentale qui a amené l'inclusion, dans la Charte des Nations Unies d'un chapitre que les propositions de Dumbarton Oaks ne prévoyaient pas. Le Venezuela a été le seul pays qui ait signalé cette lacune. Il a fait valoir que la Charte devrait poser les principes qui régiraient l'administration des colonies et protectorats, les changements de souveraineté qui pourraient se produire, compte tenu de leur situation géographique et des aspirations librement exprimées de leurs populations, ainsi que les conditions qui devaient être remplies pour qu'ils soient reconnus en temps utile comme Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, jouissant du droit de se gouverner eux-mêmes et des autres prérogatives inhérentes à ce droit.

3. En formulant ces observations, le Gouvernement du Venezuela n'a pas été guidé simplement par des principes humanitaires. Il était mû avant tout par des considérations d'ordre politique. La paix et la sécurité internationales ne pourraient être sauvegardées comme il convient, si l'on négligeait le problème représenté par des populations habitant des territoires qu'une grande distance géographique et juridique sépare de leurs métropoles respectives. Ces territoires pourraient devenir des foyers de mécontentement, voire de rébellion et de violence. Le Gouvernement du Venezuela croit sincèrement que le Chapitre XI donne aux habitants de ces territoires l'assurance qu'ils peuvent réaliser leurs aspirations par des moyens pacifiques. Il avait considéré et il continue de considérer que la communication des renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte permettrait à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de montrer aux populations des territoires non autonomes que leurs problèmes politiques sont l'objet d'une étude constante de la part de la collectivité internationale. L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, que les Puissances administrantes ont acceptée, confère aux territoires non autonomes un statut politique d'un niveau plus élevé que celui de dépendance pure et simple d'un pays plus civilisé. En dernière analyse, les territoires non autonomes sont passés sous la protection de la collectivité internationale, ce qui représente un progrès vers leur admission comme sujets, à l'état naissant, du droit international.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

4. M. Rivas cite un passage d'un discours prononcé à San-Francisco par le maréchal Smuts, présentant le texte qui est devenu par la suite celui du Chapitre XI de la Charte et montrant qu'il appliquait le principe de la tutelle à tous les territoires dépendants, qu'il s'agit de territoires sous mandat, de territoires enlevés à des pays vaincus ou des colonies existantes de certaines Puissances¹. Il imposait aux Etats, en particulier aux Puissances coloniales qui avaient la responsabilité de colonies, certaines obligations. Ainsi, les rapports que devaient présenter les Puissances administrantes sur les territoires non autonomes étaient clairement destinés à fournir à l'Organisation des Nations Unies des renseignements de nature à lui permettre d'apprécier le rythme de l'évolution des populations non autonomes vers la capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes et à suggérer des mesures d'ordre général pour assurer que cette évolution se poursuivrait dans une atmosphère pacifique. La délégation du Venezuela croyait, et continue de croire, que l'obligation acceptée par les Puissances administrantes repose sur le fait que les territoires non autonomes ne se gouvernent pas eux-mêmes et que, tant que cette base n'a pas disparu—c'est-à-dire tant que les territoires non autonomes ne s'administrent pas eux-mêmes—l'obligation en question subsiste.

5. Le Gouvernement du Venezuela estime que pour définir la "capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes" des populations, dont il est fait mention au Chapitre XI, il n'est pas essentiel de savoir si cette administration est bonne ou mauvaise, mais si elle est assurée par les habitants du territoire sans intervention d'aucun autre gouvernement à la politique générale duquel ce territoire ne participe pas sur un pied de parfaite égalité.

6. On a prétendu que les Puissances non administrantes semblaient préconiser l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux comme une sorte de panacée magique pour tous les maux dont souffre le monde. On a dit que le bien-être des habitants de ces territoires était souvent plus grand sous la tutelle d'un peuple plus civilisé que sous l'autorité de leurs propres chefs et qu'il y avait des colonies où la situation dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction, était meilleure que dans beaucoup d'Etats souverains. On a encore allégué que l'on ne gagnerait rien à accorder l'autonomie à des collectivités qui ne peuvent se suffire à elles-mêmes du point de vue économique. Ces arguments sont aussi vieux que le système colonial lui-même. A première vue, ils semblent objectifs et scientifiques; mais l'esprit humain a des besoins qui échappent quelquefois à la science. On pourrait aussi bien demander aux ressortissants des pays métropolitains s'ils seraient satisfaits de jouir des avantages sociaux, économiques et culturels que leur accorderait quelque autorité lointaine qui les gouvernerait à condition qu'ils demeurent passifs et ne demandent ni à légiférer, ni à s'administrer eux-mêmes, ni à réclamer une citoyenneté pleine et entière.

7. Certaines Puissances administrantes, qui s'en tiennent trop étroitement à la lettre de l'Article 73, e, ont prétendu que, lorsque des territoires sont parvenus à l'autonomie dans les domaines économiques, social et de l'instruction, l'obligation qui découle de cet article pour les pays métropolitains prend fin. La grande masse des habitants des territoires non autonomes ne serait cependant pas de cet avis. L'erreur traditionnelle des Puissances métropolitaines a été de considérer les mouvements séparatistes comme l'idée de quelques éléments irresponsables ne jouissant d'aucun appui de la part du reste de la population. Pourtant, chaque fois qu'une Puissance métropolitaine a été forcée de réduire ses forces dans un territoire pour faire face à une situation critique ailleurs, la masse de la population s'est montrée prête à suivre ces éléments irresponsables en particulier lorsqu'ils étaient soutenus par les rivaux politiques ou commerciaux de la Puissance métropolitaine. Le Chapitre XI est expressément destiné à minimiser cette menace internationale.

8. Il était inévitable que l'interprétation, par les Puissances administrantes, des obligations qui leur incombent aux termes du Chapitre XI, inquiète les pays qui ont été eux-mêmes des colonies. Il est probable que les éléments évolués des populations autochtones ont éprouvé la même inquiétude, ce qui en a fait une proie facile pour les organisations subversives.

9. La liste des facteurs dont la Commission est saisie représente une suite d'idées sur l'autonomie, au sujet desquelles aucun désaccord important ne s'est manifesté. Certains de ces facteurs ont un caractère évident. Aucun pays qui ne possède pas pleinement les attributs de la souveraineté extérieure et intérieure ne peut être dit indépendant. De plus, en ce qui concerne les autres formes d'autonomie séparée, la souveraineté limitée ne saurait être considérée comme satisfaisant aux besoins des habitants d'un territoire, à moins que le consentement de ceux-ci ne soit manifeste. On ne peut dire qu'un territoire participe à la direction des affaires nationales sur un pied de parfaite égalité avec d'autres régions dépendant de l'Etat dans lequel il est incorporé, si des personnes nées dans ce territoire ne sont pas, de ce seul fait, citoyens de cet Etat, ou si elles ne participent pas, sur un pied de parfaite égalité au pouvoir législatif et au pouvoir exécutif. Là encore, il est extrêmement difficile de déterminer dans quelle mesure l'égalité existe. Il serait difficile pour un territoire géographiquement très éloigné de la métropole de se considérer comme traité en égal lorsque le gouvernement tend à favoriser les intérêts du territoire métropolitain. Le facteur géographique revêt par conséquent une très grande importance. Le facteur racial importe aussi grandement. Si la distinction entre conquérants et conquis est maintenue pendant des siècles, il est très difficile à la population autochtone des territoires de ne plus considérer les blancs qui les dominent comme des étrangers.

10. Selon les observations d'ordre général que le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a formulées sur la question des facteurs (A/AC.58/1/Add.3), il serait impossible à un pays métropolitain de communiquer des renseignements sur la situation économique, sociale et de l'enseignement dans des territoires qui ont atteint leur autonomie dans ces domaines. Cependant, tout récemment encore, les Puissances administrantes ont été unanimes à affirmer que la représentation internationale des territoires non autonomes était exercée par les gouvernements métropolitains, et par eux seuls. C'est là une raison de plus pour que les Puissances administrantes assument une responsabilité internationale pleine et entière en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes.

¹ Voir la Conférence des Nations Unies pour l'organisation internationale, II/16.

11. Sur le plan intérieur, on pourrait permettre aux habitants de certains territoires non autonomes de gérer leur propre budget, d'organiser leurs écoles et de réglementer leur activité syndicale. Toutefois, aussi longtemps que ces territoires n'exerceront pas la souveraineté politique en tant qu'Etats indépendants ou parties intégrantes d'un autre Etat, sur un pied d'égalité absolue avec les autres parties constitutives de cet Etat, il est évident que la mesure d'autonomie qui leur sera accordée dépendra toujours de la bonne volonté de la métropole. En outre, les bases d'une telle autonomie sont instables, car elles ne dérivent pas de la pleine reconnaissance du territoire non autonome comme un partenaire ayant absolument les mêmes droits que la métropole du point de vue des engagements contractuels. Une autonomie partielle de ce genre ne constitue qu'une étape vers l'objectif final énoncé au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Tant que cet objectif n'est pas atteint, il est évident que les obligations imposées par le Chapitre XI à la Puissance administrante subsistent, puisque les raisons qui les ont motivées demeurent. Le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution adopté par la Quatrième Commission à sa 270ème séance concernant la participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements pourrait apporter quelque solution à la question de savoir comment les Puissances administrantes doivent faire rapport sur les progrès réalisés dans les territoires ainsi dotés d'une autonomie partielle. Les Puissances administrantes ont voté contre le paragraphe 3, et pourtant, la continuation de l'étude qu'il recommande pourrait permettre de trouver une formule propre à résoudre le problème d'ordre général soulevé par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas.

12. La liste des facteurs ne peut évidemment être considérée en aucune façon comme étant de nature à faire obstacle aux efforts des Puissances administrantes tendant à aider les populations des territoires non autonomes à parvenir progressivement à leur pleine autonomie. On ne saurait non plus la considérer comme une suite de conditions que les populations des territoires non autonomes doivent remplir avant d'être considérées comme autonomes. Bien au contraire, si ces populations manifestent librement le désir de s'administrer elles-mêmes, l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne pourra qu'inviter les Puissances administrantes à leur permettre d'exercer leur souveraineté.

13. Il est également possible d'envisager sous un angle analogue le facteur relatif au progrès politique. Sur ce point, la délégation du Venezuela partage les doutes qui ont été exprimés par le représentant de la France devant le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs. Il pourrait être difficile de tenir compte de ce facteur, dans certains cas, car il faudrait au préalable se mettre d'accord sur la nature de l'organe qui décidera si les habitants d'un territoire donné sont prêts à assumer certaines responsabilités. Vraisemblablement, on peut considérer que si la population d'un territoire choisit l'indépendance, elle est suffisamment prête à assumer ces responsabilités. Toutefois, il conviendra de déterminer avec soin le progrès politique d'une population si celle-ci semble accepter volontairement des limitations à l'exercice de son autonomie. Dans un cas de ce genre, le mieux serait d'inviter la population à choisir entre l'autonomie complète et l'autonomie partielle dont elle jouissait, et de veiller en même temps à ce que les partisans de l'autonomie complète aient la possibilité d'exprimer leur opinion en toute liberté.

14. Les délégations de la Birmanie, de Cuba, de l'Egypte, du Guatemala, de l'Irak et du Venezuela ont présenté conjointement le projet de résolution distribué sous la cote A/C.4/L.231. A l'exception de l'Egypte, tous ces pays ont été membres du Comité pour l'étude des facteurs, et c'est la délégation égyptienne qui, la première, a avancé l'idée que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait entreprendre l'étude des facteurs. Dans l'ensemble, les vues du Gouvernement du Venezuela s'accordent avec le projet de résolution. En outre, le caractère constructif et conciliant du projet de résolution est conforme à l'esprit dans lequel la délégation du Venezuela a examiné les points au sujet desquels elle est en désaccord avec certaines Puissances administrantes concernant l'interprétation de principes. Si les Puissances administrantes étudient objectivement le projet de résolution, elles reconnaîtront au moins la bonne foi et la sincérité qui l'ont inspiré. Cette reconnaissance contribuerait en soi à dissiper la méfiance qui paraît diviser la Quatrième Commission en deux camps adverses dont chacun cherche à mettre l'autre en déroute.

15. M. MCINNIS (Canada) désirerait étudier plus à fond toutes les implications du projet de résolution commun. De prime abord, cependant, il éprouve une déception et du regret à constater que ce texte paraît inacceptable. Il supprime beaucoup des larges conditions qui donnaient à la liste des facteurs proposée dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc son caractère provisoire. Le projet de résolution a un caractère beaucoup plus impératif et ne fait que parcimonieusement mention de la nécessité de tenir compte des conditions particulières à chaque territoire.

16. Le représentant du Venezuela a souligné l'idée exprimée dans le deuxième considérant du projet de résolution commun. M. McInnis doute que cette idée soit bonne: non seulement les diverses catégories de renseignements qui doivent être transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte ont été limitées avec soin, mais ces catégories limitées elles-mêmes sont sujettes à restriction selon les exigences de la sécurité et les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. En outre, il est évident que l'évolution des territoires non autonomes vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes doit être progressive, et il est infiniment probable qu'à un moment donné, ils arriveront à un stade auquel la Puissance administrante ne pourra plus exercer un contrôle effectif sur les domaines social, économique et de l'instruction, pour lesquels les renseignements doivent être communiqués. L'obligation de la Puissance administrante à cet égard prendra donc fin. Cela, toutefois, n'entraînera pas la fin de l'obligation que lui fait le Chapitre XI de la Charte de favoriser l'évolution du territoire intéressé vers l'indépendance.

17. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) dit que sa délégation approuve le projet de résolution commun A/C.4/L.231, qui reprend entre autres les idées exprimées par le Ministre d'Etat de la République de Cuba devant l'Assemblée générale à la 379ème séance plénière. Le Ministre a déclaré que Cuba persisterait à soutenir qu'il est essentiel que la collectivité internationale pèse et évalue les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel sur lesquelles une Puissance administrante quelconque pourrait fonder sa décision de cesser de communiquer les renseignements qu'exige le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Le Gouvernement cubain estimera toujours qu'aucune autonomie n'est possible dans le domaine économique, social et de l'enseignement si elle ne s'accompagne pas de l'autonomie politique.

18. En se joignant aux promoteurs du projet de résolution, la délégation cubaine a fait tout son possible pour exclure les considérations académiques ou doctrinales et pour demeurer dans les limites du problème pratique qui a retenu l'attention de l'Assemblée générale de prendre des mesures en la matière considérée. Elle estime que le problème se résume aux réponses à donner à deux questions bien simples: premièrement, dans quelles circonstances une Puissance administrante est-elle libérée de l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur un territoire déterminé, obligation que lui incombe aux termes de l'Article 73, e? Deuxièmement, dans quelles circonstances l'Organisation des Nations Unies est-elle libérée de l'obligation de recevoir des renseignements sur un territoire déterminé, obligation qui lui incombe aux termes de l'Article 73, e? Ces deux questions doivent rester présentes à l'esprit. L'année dernière, de nombreuses délégations ont exprimé la crainte que l'examen du sujet entraîne la Commission dans un débat purement académique.

19. La délégation cubaine estime qu'il s'agit d'une dualité de compétence. M. Pérez Cisneros rappelle certains passages d'une communication relative au problème des facteurs (A/AC.58/1/Add.1) envoyée, à la demande du Secrétaire général, par le Gouvernement cubain qui a déclaré que les progrès réalisés par l'adoption du Chapitre XI seraient vains dans la pratique si l'exécution régulière de la seule obligation concrète contractée par les Puissances administrantes aux termes de l'Article 73, e, dépendait uniquement de leur jugement unilatéral. Les obligations découlant du Chapitre XI ont tout autant force obligatoire que celles qu'imposent les autres chapitres de la Charte et ne peuvent cesser d'exister sans un accord préalable entre les parties. Les seuls motifs prévus à cet effet, sous réserve des circonstances dans lesquelles l'Article 73 lui-même permet d'en suspendre l'exécution, sont les exigences de la sécurité et les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel, mais, même dans ces cas, et surtout dans le deuxième cas, il est plus que douteux que la Charte autorise une action unilatérale de la Puissance administrante intéressée. Il est vrai qu'il peut y avoir des cas dans lesquels la détermination des limitations imposées par la sécurité ne pourrait être le fait que de la Puissance administrante, car un examen public des raisons de ces limitations serait de nature à porter atteinte à cette sécurité, mais en autorisant des mesures unilatérales d'ordre constitutionnel on risquerait de rendre vains tous les principes aujourd'hui reconnus par le droit international positif. Il est essentiel que l'Organisation des Nations Unies soit informée de toute modification du statut constitutionnel de l'un quelconque des territoires non autonomes en vertu de laquelle le gouvernement responsable estimerait n'être plus tenu de communiquer de renseignements.

20. Il incombe donc à la collectivité internationale de peser les facteurs d'ordre constitutionnel qu'une Puissance administrante prend en considération pour décider de ne plus communiquer de renseignements. Cette intervention ne constituerait pas une violation à l'alinéa 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte, car une décision de ce genre, par laquelle la communauté internationale tend à accomplir les desseins de la Charte, ne peut pas être considérée comme relevant de la compétence nationale de la Puissance intéressée. Les problèmes relatifs au régime colonial peuvent relever de la juridiction internationale et diverses Puissances administrantes l'ont reconnu en signant le traité de Versailles, dont les articles 119 et suivants ont exigé de l'Allemagne qu'elle renonce à ses colonies en raison de la manière dont elle les avait administrées. Il est impossible d'expliquer ces articles si on n'admet pas, en bonne logique juridique, que les Puissances coloniales ne peuvent disposer arbitrairement ni de la population, ni du territoire, ni des pouvoirs qu'elles exercent.

21. Le projet de résolution soumis à la Commission aborde le problème de la compétence avec le maximum de réserve. Il a été rédigé avec le plus grand soin, ses auteurs désirant que le texte soit aussi conciliant que possible.

22. Le paragraphe 4 du projet de résolution traite du problème de l'indivisibilité du principe de l'autonomie. Il a paru nécessaire de soumettre à l'approbation définitive de l'Assemblée générale la vérité évidente qu'il ne saurait y avoir d'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social ou de l'enseignement sans autonomie politique. Reconnaître qu'il en est ainsi éviterait bien des discussions stériles. En acceptant le principe de l'indivisibilité, on enlèverait définitivement toute valeur à l'argument selon lequel il peut être mis fin à la communication des renseignements lorsqu'un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social ou de l'enseignement. Cette autonomie partielle dans divers domaines sera illusoire s'il n'y a pas en même temps l'autonomie politique au sens où la Charte l'entend, c'est-à-dire la capacité des populations de s'administrer complètement elles-mêmes. Avant que cesse la communication de renseignements au sujet d'un territoire, il faut que l'Organisation des Nations Unies reçoive des informations supplémentaires quant au stade d'évolution politique atteint par ce territoire.

23. Pour être libérée de l'obligation de recevoir les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, il faut que la collectivité internationale soit en mesure d'affirmer qu'il existe dans le territoire intéressé des conditions politiques telles qu'elles permettent et créent l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction.

24. Il convient de remarquer aussi que le projet de résolution déclare nettement que la liste des facteurs est simplement recommandée comme guide. Aucun critère absolu ne peut être fixé pour déterminer si un territoire a acquis ou non la capacité de s'administrer lui-même et en essayant de le faire on n'arriverait qu'à créer des difficultés doctrinales. La délégation cubaine souscrit donc sans réserves au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution qui dit que chaque cas d'espèce doit être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. La liste des facteurs demeurera toujours subordonnée à une considération primordiale: l'aspiration des populations à la liberté.

25. M. Pérez Cisneros ne propose pas, pour le moment, d'augmenter ou de modifier la liste des facteurs qui, à son avis, peut servir désormais de guide général; pourtant, il n'est pas opposé à des suggestions tendant à l'améliorer. Il réserve donc sa position au sujet de cette liste.

26. Le représentant de Cuba invite les membres de la Commission à se souvenir que la question de savoir si un pays peut cesser de transmettre des renseignements soulève un problème politique plutôt que juridique, puisque chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné en particulier.

Demande d'audition

27. Le PRESIDENT annonce qu'il a reçu une demande d'audition du bloc démocratique camerounais. Si aucune objection n'est formulée, le texte de cette demande sera distribué comme document officiel².

Il en est ainsi décidé.

La séance est levée à 17 h, 20.

² Distribué ultérieurement sous la cote A/C.4/219.

Vendredi 14 novembre 1952, à 15 heures

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231] (suite) 167

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231] (suite)

[Point 36*]

1. M. EL-PHARAONY (Egypte) rappelle que l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes a été entreprise à la suite d'une proposition formulée en 1949 par la délégation de l'Egypte (A/C.4/L.37). Cette proposition était motivée par les graves préoccupations qu'avait éprouvées la délégation de l'Egypte, ainsi que certaines autres délégations, en constatant qu'en 1948 le nombre des territoires au sujet desquels des renseignements étaient transmis était tombé à soixante-trois, alors qu'en 1946, suivant la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale, le nombre de ces territoires était de soixante-quatorze. C'est pourquoi l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 222 (III) aux termes de laquelle elle accueillait avec satisfaction tout progrès réalisé dans le sens de l'autonomie, mais considérait cependant que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devait nécessairement être informée de toute modification intervenue dans la constitution et le statut de l'un quelconque des territoires non autonomes en vertu de laquelle le gouvernement responsable estime inutile la communication de renseignements aux termes de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Les Membres intéressés ont donc été invités en pareils cas à transmettre au Secrétaire général tous renseignements utiles, y compris les textes constitutionnels, législatifs ou réglementaires concernant le gouvernement du territoire et les textes relatifs aux liens constitutionnels entre le territoire et le gouvernement métropolitain. Par la suite, il est devenu évident qu'il conviendrait de tenir compte de certains critères en examinant des situations de ce genre; la résolution 334 (IV) a préconisé l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes.

2. La Commission est saisie maintenant du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (A/2178). Des orateurs précédents ont examiné en détail les divers facteurs énumérés dans le rapport; les uns ont mis l'accent sur des facteurs particuliers qui, à leur avis, devraient être considérés comme essentiels ou déterminants, alors que d'autres ont souligné les diverses lacunes du rapport. Le représentant du Venezuela, à la 273^{ème} séance, a mis en lumière les éléments du problème et a fait une analyse d'ensemble des divers facteurs, du cadre dans lequel il conviendrait de les considérer et de la valeur qu'il fallait leur attribuer. La délégation de l'Egypte appuie chaleureusement le point de vue du représentant du Venezuela. Elle estime que la liste des facteurs ne doit pas donner lieu à de sérieuses divergences de vues dès l'instant où le rapport précise nettement que les facteurs ne peuvent avoir que la valeur d'une indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même et qu'un facteur particulier, ou une combinaison déterminée de facteurs, ne peut être considéré comme décisif dans chaque cas, car chaque cas particulier doit être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. C'est dans cet esprit que le projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231), à l'élaboration duquel la délégation de l'Egypte a participé, propose d'approuver la liste de facteurs telle qu'elle figure dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc. La délégation de l'Egypte partage entièrement l'opinion exprimée par le représentant de Cuba à ce sujet, à la 273^{ème} séance.

3. La délégation de l'Egypte considère que l'opinion des populations intéressées est un élément de la plus haute importance, qui devrait être déterminant dans tous les cas. Cela est particulièrement vrai dans le cas d'une association: le processus naturel, logique et normal de l'évolution veut qu'un peuple assujéti à un autre cherche à se libérer de cette domination, à accéder progressivement à l'autonomie complète, et, finalement, à l'indépendance. Ce n'est que dans des cas exceptionnels que des peuples accèdent à l'autonomie complète ou à l'indépendance par association ou par assimilation à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays, en particulier lorsqu'il existe des différences de race, de langue, de religion, de patrimoine culturel, d'intérêts et d'aspirations entre ces populations et celles du pays auquel elles sont associées. Les termes "association" ou "assimilation", aussi bien que les termes "incorporation" ou "annexion" sous-entendent une certaine pression, un acte d'autorité de la part de la Puissance administrante. Bien entendu, il n'en est pas toujours ainsi. Cependant, d'une manière générale, l'objectif à atteindre est l'indépendance, et les autres formes d'autonomie, par assimilation ou par association, devraient être entourées de toutes les garanties nécessaires. C'est pourquoi les auteurs du projet de résolution tiennent essentiellement à ce que, dans le cas de l'assimilation d'un territoire, on s'assure de la volonté expresse, librement et nettement exprimée, de la population. Dans tous les cas de ce genre, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit avoir la preuve, sans qu'il subsiste le moindre doute, que la volonté de la population s'est exprimée librement soit par la voie d'un plébiscite organisé sous ses auspices, soit suivant toute autre procédure démocratique.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

4. L'étude des éléments constitutifs de l'autonomie complète devrait être suivie de l'examen des principes qui doivent guider les Puissances administrantes et l'Assemblée générale lorsqu'il s'agit d'appliquer ces facteurs. Dans la résolution 66 (I), l'Assemblée générale a donné la liste des territoires non autonomes d'après les indications des Puissances administrantes intéressées. Les Puissances administrantes devraient être disposées maintenant à tenir compte de toute liste de facteurs élaborée par l'Assemblée générale, lorsqu'elles examinent la question de savoir si un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie complète. La Quatrième Commission devrait également décider de tenir compte des mêmes facteurs lorsqu'elle est appelée à examiner un cas particulier dans lequel une Puissance a cessé de transmettre des renseignements. Si l'Assemblée générale se prononçait clairement sur ces deux points, il deviendrait plus facile de définir les principes en cause et la procédure à suivre.

5. M. Shiva RAO (Inde) déclare que, quels que soient ses avantages ou ses inconvénients, le projet de résolution commun en cours d'examen est utile en ce qu'il appelle spécialement l'attention de la Commission sur les aspects pratiques de la question des facteurs.

6. A sa première session, en 1946, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 9 (I) indiquant que les Nations Unies se rendaient pleinement compte des problèmes et des aspirations des populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes et qui ne sont pas directement représentées à l'Organisation. Cette résolution soulignait également que des obligations acceptées par tous les Membres de l'Organisation aux termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte n'étaient nullement liées à la conclusion d'accords de tutelle ou à la constitution du Conseil de tutelle, et qu'elles étaient en fait dès lors en vigueur. Le dispositif de cette résolution invitait le Secrétaire général à inclure dans son rapport annuel un résumé des renseignements que pourraient lui transmettre des Etats Membres des Nations Unies en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

7. Dès le début, l'Assemblée générale s'est vivement intéressée, sur le plan pratique, à l'étude des renseignements fournis par les Puissances administrantes. Elle a constaté que le Secrétaire général n'était pas en mesure de préparer une liste des territoires non autonomes parce qu'il était difficile de définir le sens exact de l'expression "dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". L'Assemblée générale s'est donc contentée de noter que les Puissances administrantes transmettraient des renseignements au sujet des territoires énumérés dans la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale. L'Assemblée générale n'a pas précisé que la liste qui figure dans cette résolution était complète, mais elle n'a pas mis en cause le contenu de cette liste et elle l'a acceptée comme base de travail. En 1947 et en 1948, certaines Puissances administrantes n'ont pas transmis de renseignements au sujet de certains territoires et n'en ont pas donné les raisons. C'est alors que l'Assemblée générale a adopté son importante résolution 222 (III) par laquelle elle rappelait l'intérêt qu'elle porte au développement des territoires non autonomes et affirmait que l'Organisation des Nations Unies est en droit de recevoir des renseignements d'ordre politique et constitutionnel, tout au moins aux derniers stades de l'évolution des territoires non autonomes. Enfin, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 448 (V) relative au développement des territoires non autonomes. Cette résolution, dont le préambule et le dispositif sont aussi importants l'un que l'autre, reliait la résolution 222 (III) à l'accession de l'Indonésie à l'autonomie.

8. M. Rao reconnaît pleinement la nécessité d'étudier le problème comme un tout sans en négliger aucun aspect. Cependant, il faut également tenir compte des principes énoncés dans le Chapitre XI et des résolutions par lesquelles l'Assemblée générale les a mis en vigueur depuis plus de six ans. L'objectif du Chapitre XI de la Charte est la complète autonomie. Comme l'Assemblée générale n'a pas pu donner une définition satisfaisante de cette notion en 1946, elle a accepté la liste des territoires préparée unilatéralement par les Puissances administrantes, afin que l'Article 73 de la Charte puisse être appliqué sans délai. En 1947 et en 1948, cette liste a commencé à décroître; l'Assemblée générale a immédiatement pris note de ce fait et en a demandé les raisons. La résolution 222 (III) prouve que l'intérêt que l'Assemblée porte à la question, et sa compétence, ne sont pas limités par une interprétation littérale de l'Article 73, e. Les territoires énumérés dans la résolution 66 (I) sont des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. M. Rao cite un passage des comptes rendus officiels de la Conférence de San-Francisco d'où il ressort que les mots "pas encore" doivent se rapporter à tous les degrés d'autonomie partielle qui précèdent l'autonomie complète, qui seule peut libérer la Puissance administrante de sa responsabilité.

9. Un territoire non autonome ne peut être supprimé de la liste que pour deux raisons: l'accès à l'autonomie complète, comme c'est le cas de l'Indonésie, qui, après avoir été territoire non autonome, est devenu Membre des Nations Unies, et le passage du statut de territoire non autonome à celui de Territoire sous tutelle. L'Assemblée générale ne perd de vue un territoire non autonome à aucun stade de son évolution; elle continue à s'y intéresser activement soit en vertu de Chapitre XI, soit en vertu des Chapitres XII et XIII, soit en l'admettant comme Membre de l'Organisation.

10. La délégation de l'Inde ne trouve rien à critiquer dans les termes du projet de résolution. Elle ne comprend pas les objections que le représentant du Canada a formulées à la 273ème séance au sujet du deuxième considérant. Il semble évident que les obligations des Puissances administrantes, à l'égard de chaque territoire, subsistent tant que les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte ne sont pas atteints. Sous sa forme actuelle, le projet de résolution semble ne devoir soulever aucune objection, puisqu'il expose des faits, rappelle les buts légitimes que l'Assemblée générale s'est fixés, et aboutit à une suggestion quant à la bonne méthode à employer pour étudier à l'avenir le cas de territoires non autonomes au sujet desquels les Puissances administrantes cesseraient de transmettre des renseignements.

11. Enfin, la délégation de l'Inde considère que le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs contient des éléments concrets qui peuvent très utilement contribuer à l'étude de ce problème complexe.

12. M. NAUDY (France) déclare que la première impression éprouvée par la délégation française à la lecture du projet de résolution commun est qu'il se classe dans la catégorie des propositions ambitieuses qui prétendent interpréter les dispositions de la Charte, alors qu'en réalité, elles les transgressent. Ce n'est pas la première fois que la Quatrième Commission résout d'un trait de plume des questions complexes et grosses de conséquences. En outre, le projet de résolution suppose résolues les difficultés signalées par la plupart des orateurs qui ont pris la parole pour signaler les lacunes du travail effectué par le Comité ad hoc.

13. Le deuxième considérant du projet déclare que l'obligation de transmettre les renseignements subsiste, à l'égard de chaque territoire, tant que les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte ne sont pas atteints. Comme le représentant du Canada l'a souligné, cette position de principe est absolument gratuite. Il existe, dans l'évolution des territoires non autonomes vers l'autonomie, des degrés et des étapes. L'obligation énoncée à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, avec ses réserves et ses limitations, est la seule obligation formelle que comporte l'engagement général contracté en vertu du Chapitre XI, et cette obligation cesse lorsqu'elle n'a plus d'objet, c'est-à-dire lorsque les territoires non autonomes ont atteint l'autonomie dans les domaines visés à l'Article 73, e. Il est impossible d'imposer aux Puissances administrantes des obligations plus importantes que celles qu'elles ont souscrites. La transmission de renseignements doit cesser lorsque le degré d'évolution d'un territoire est suffisant pour libérer les Puissances administrantes de cette obligation particulière. L'évolution dont il s'agit a fait parvenir le territoire intéressé à une situation qui n'est peut-être pas encore celle de l'autonomie, mais qui n'est plus celle de la non-autonomie à laquelle s'appliquent les dispositions de l'Article 73, e. Le Comité des facteurs n'a pas étudié des cas limites de ce genre, ni défini les critères qu'il faudrait leur appliquer. La délégation française estime donc que le problème reste entier et ne saurait approuver des dispositions qui le supposent résolu. Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif repose sur un principe analogue que l'on semble également considérer comme acquis et que le représentant de Cuba a appelé l'indivisibilité du concept d'autonomie. La délégation de la France rejette ce paragraphe pour les mêmes raisons qu'elle rejette le deuxième considérant.

14. Le cinquième considérant et les paragraphes 1 et 5 du dispositif supposent que l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour décider si un territoire a ou n'a pas atteint une complète autonomie, ou pour étudier les questions qui se posent à propos de la cessation de la transmission de renseignements ou de l'obligation de transmettre des renseignements. Les résolutions précédentes adoptées par l'Assemblée générale, et notamment la résolution 334 (IV), ne donnaient pas à l'Assemblée générale une telle compétence et la laissaient, implicitement au moins, aux Puissances administrantes. Or, les dispositions du projet de résolution commun tendent à donner aux Nations Unies certains pouvoirs de contrôle sur les territoires non autonomes, qui sont contraires à l'esprit et à la lettre du Chapitre XI, ainsi qu'aux principes énoncés au paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. L'administration des territoires non autonomes et les mesures prises pour assurer leur évolution politique entrent dans les attributions des Puissances administrantes dont les parlements statuent à cet égard en dernier ressort. Toute intervention des Nations Unies dans ce domaine constituerait une ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Puissances intéressées et entraînerait une dualité de responsabilités tout à fait inconcevable et dangereuse.

15. Le Gouvernement français a formulé une réserve formelle à cet égard à la Conférence de San-Francisco¹. Il a rappelé chaque année, dans les communications par lesquelles il transmettait des renseignements au Secrétaire général en vertu de l'Article 73, e, que la détermination des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes relève de la compétence exclusive des Puissances administrantes. Les questions de principe qui sont traitées avec désinvolture dans le projet de résolution commun revêtent, en réalité, une importance capitale et la délégation française réitère solennellement ces réserves. Elle s'opposera au projet de résolution commun si celui-ci demeure dans sa forme actuelle.

16. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) estime qu'il ne peut y avoir de réponse pratique au problème des facteurs si l'on ne tient pas dûment compte de deux considérations préliminaires, mais indispensables. En premier lieu, qui a qualité pour déterminer si un territoire a atteint le stade d'autonomie envisagé dans l'ensemble de l'Article 73? M. Winiewicz insiste sur les mots "l'ensemble de l'Article 73", en raison de l'obstination avec laquelle les Puissances coloniales essaient de limiter exclusivement le problème des territoires non autonomes à l'alinéa e de cet article. En second lieu, quel sens faut-il attribuer dans la Charte aux mots "territoire dont les populations... s'administrent... complètement elles-mêmes"?

17. Au cours des sept années d'existence de l'Organisation, les Puissances coloniales ont décidé unilatéralement de cesser de transmettre des renseignements pour treize territoires non autonomes, en se contentant de porter ce fait à la connaissance du Secrétaire général. L'Assemblée générale n'a jamais reçu aucune explication valable au sujet de la cessation de la transmission des renseignements. Les Puissances coloniales continuent de traiter les territoires non autonomes comme leur domaine exclusif. Leur attitude à cet égard constitue une nouvelle violation des dispositions de la Charte.

¹ Voir Conférence des Nations Unies pour l'organisation internationale, II/4/8.

18. Les Puissances coloniales sont tenues de transmettre des renseignements en vertu d'une convention obligatoire; la responsabilité internationale assumée par ces Puissances ne peut cesser qu'en vertu d'une décision internationale prise par l'Assemblée générale elle-même. Avant qu'une Puissance administrante quelconque puisse être libérée de son obligation de transmettre les renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, le Comité des renseignements doit examiner toutes les données concernant la modification du statut du territoire en question, et soumettre à l'Assemblée générale, à qui appartient la décision finale en la matière, un recommandation tendant à ce que les renseignements cessent d'être transmis au sujet du territoire en question.

19. Les territoires non autonomes ne sont pas de simples provinces qui relèvent de la puissance souveraine du pays métropolitain; le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte ne peut leur être appliqué. L'objet du Chapitre XI est d'établir un rapport particulier entre les territoires non autonomes et l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Les Puissances administrantes ne sont pas seules responsables du sort présent et futur de populations non autonomes; ce sort intéresse au premier chef tous les Etats Membres.

20. En ce qui concerne le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, il est instructif d'étudier les raisons données par les Puissances administrantes pour justifier leur décision unilatérale de cesser de transmettre des renseignements sur certains territoires non autonomes. Ces explications sont de deux sortes. La première excuse consiste à prétendre hypocritement que les renseignements sur la situation économique, sociale et de l'instruction ne sont plus transmis parce que ces territoires sont devenus autonomes dans ces domaines et qu'on concevrait mal qu'un gouvernement puisse continuer d'être lié par une obligation au sujet d'activités qui ne relèvent plus de lui. Le Gouvernement français a réitéré cet argument dans ses observations sur certains facteurs (A/AC.58/4). C'est là une déformation complète du sens du Chapitre XI. L'Article 73 montre clairement que les territoires non autonomes sont les colonies dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Les Puissances administrantes ont donc l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements à leur sujet jusqu'au jour où elles seront devenues complètement autonomes. Une prétendue autonomie en matière économique et sociale et dans le domaine de l'enseignement ne saurait délier les Puissances coloniales des obligations que leur impose le Chapitre XI de la Charte ni les dispenser de transmettre des renseignements.

21. La deuxième excuse qu'on a présentée pour esquiver les obligations de la Charte est l'association du territoire non autonome à la métropole (il vaudrait mieux dire l'absorption) au moyen d'une mesure constitutionnelle. On a eu recours à ce procédé à plusieurs reprises, et il est probable qu'on emploiera le même procédé à l'avenir au détriment des populations non autonomes. Que l'identité nationale des autochtones soit détruite brutalement et ouvertement ou bien par des méthodes en apparence constitutionnelles, ce genre d'association n'a absolument rien de commun avec l'autonomie complète envisagée par la Charte. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit s'opposer à ces mesures de toute son autorité.

22. Il convient de souligner que l'alinéa e n'est qu'une partie de l'Article 73. Aux termes du préambule et des alinéas a, b, c, et d de l'Article 73, les Puissances administrantes se sont engagées à assurer et à favoriser le progrès politique des populations non autonomes, à respecter leurs aspirations et à assurer leur progrès économique et social et le développement de leur instruction. Le texte de l'Article 73 ne laisse aucun doute: par les mots "territoires dont les populations . . . s'administrent . . . complètement elles-mêmes" la Charte entend des territoires politiquement indépendants. La résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale et les autres textes cités par le représentant de l'Inde conduisent tous à la même conclusion.

23. Parmi les territoires non autonomes au sujet desquels les renseignements ne sont plus transmis, seule l'Indonésie est devenue indépendante et Membre des Nations Unies. Les autres territoires ont été exclus du système de la responsabilité internationale et sont apparemment laissés à la merci des intérêts égoïstes des Puissances métropolitaines. Cette évolution n'a jamais été envisagée dans la Charte ni dans les nombreuses résolutions adoptées ultérieurement au sujet des territoires non autonomes.

24. Avant qu'un territoire non autonome puisse assumer en toute indépendance la responsabilité de son avenir, il doit être libéré de la domination et de la pression de la Puissance coloniale. L'alinéa 4 du paragraphe A de la première partie de la liste des facteurs, qui figure dans le rapport du Comité, fait état de la "liberté pour le territoire de conclure des accords relatifs à sa défense nationale". Des bases militaires ont été établies dans plusieurs territoires non autonomes par les Puissances coloniales, et tant que ces bases existeront, aucun peuple non autonome ne pourra assurer librement la responsabilité de son propre avenir.

25. Un autre facteur qui doit, paraît-il, permettre de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance est la "pleine compétence pour gérer les affaires économiques". Chacun sait que tous les territoires non autonomes sont sous la domination économique absolue des métropoles. Il n'est possible d'instaurer une parfaite indépendance économique qu'en expropriant les intérêts étrangers. Tant que ces intérêts conserveront la direction économique des territoires non autonomes, les populations non autonomes ne seront pas libres.

26. La deuxième partie de la liste des facteurs dit que pour déterminer "le statut ou le changement de statut" que les populations désirent, il faut que l'opinion des populations du territoire soit "librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques". Même dans les territoires coloniaux où la population autochtone a déjà atteint une grande maturité politique, il n'existe que des simulacres de la démocratie. Dans les rares cas où ces voies démocratiques existent, les prétendus organes législatifs sont trop souvent composés de représentants désignés, dont la plupart sont des colons venus de la métropole et qui n'ont rien en commun avec la population autochtone. Les autochtones aspirent à la liberté et à l'indépendance, les colons font tout en leur pouvoir pour prolonger la domination coloniale.

27. L'alinéa 3 du paragraphe A de la deuxième partie parle de "limitation volontaire de souveraineté". Ce paragraphe, de même que l'alinéa 1 du paragraphe C, pourrait faire croire que, "de sa propre volonté", la population d'un territoire pourrait opter pour le joug colonial. On pourrait, alors qualifier d'autonomes des territoires auxquels la Puissance administrante aurait imposé un pouvoir législatif et un conseil exécutif fantoches. Dans l'alinéa 1 du paragraphe C il est question d'une assemblée législative "légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population", et non d'une assemblée élue; cela peut signifier que les membres d'une assemblée législative constituée par une Puissance coloniale agissent d'une manière librement approuvée par la population. Cette interprétation est à rejeter de façon catégorique, car son adoption signifierait que les Nations Unies approuvent le système actuel, fort peu démocratique, en vertu duquel le régime colonial s'exerce par l'intermédiaire d'assemblées législatives désignées.

28. Adopter comme des définitions obligatoires les facteurs "permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays" permettrait de sanctionner un régime colonial déguisé, comme les Français le pratiquent par l'intermédiaire de l'Union française, comme les États-Unis ont essayé de l'instaurer par le "Commonwealth" de Porto-Rico ou comme le Royaume-Uni l'applique dans ses colonies. Si, par exemple, la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland formaient une fédération avec la Rhodésie du Sud, comme il en est question, il est probable que la fédération tout entière deviendrait "autonome" et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne s'estimerait plus tenu de présenter des rapports concernant la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland.

29. Il est significatif que dans l'énoncé des facteurs présenté par le Comité ad hoc il est souvent question de limitation "volontaire" de la souveraineté et d'association "librement" décidée avec la métropole ou d'autres colonies. C'est seulement quand le joug colonial aura été supprimé que la libre volonté des peuples non autonomes pourra s'exprimer pleinement. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc ne précise pas ce point.

30. Le Comité ad hoc a complètement échoué dans sa tentative de porter un jugement neuf sur la question essentielle du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes; or, ce droit est clairement défini au paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte comme l'un des principaux objectifs des Nations Unies. A un moment historique donné, ce droit peut être exercé par l'un quelconque des peuples non autonomes. Ces peuples ne consulteront pas un dictionnaire pour savoir s'ils répondent parfaitement à la définition d'une nation libre: ils demanderont simplement que soit reconnu leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes et la question sera résolue non par une classification mécanique, mais par la lutte qu'ils mèneront pour leur entière indépendance.

31. La délégation polonaise n'est pas pour les formules rigides qui s'appliqueraient à tous les territoires non autonomes en toutes circonstances. Si l'Assemblée générale ne fait pas preuve de réalisme, les Puissances administrantes cesseront de transmettre des renseignements sans que les territoires soient devenus autonomes ou indépendants et le nombre des territoires non autonomes dont la situation est étudiée chaque année par les Nations Unies sera réduit à zéro.

32. Le Comité spécial lui-même a reconnu les limitations de son travail au paragraphe 5, C, de son rapport quand il déclare qu'il faudra tenir "compte des circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier, circonstances qu'il sera nécessaire d'étudier séparément". Il faut éviter les généralisations dangereuses et l'Assemblée générale devrait faire un examen critique et objectif de chaque cas, sans se reporter uniquement à des facteurs pour déterminer si le territoire intéressé s'administre complètement lui-même, aux termes de la Charte. Le principe essentiel dont il faut tenir compte est le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes; on doit mettre tout en œuvre pour éviter d'affaiblir ou de fausser ce droit, et pour éliminer les obstacles que les Puissances administrantes essaient de susciter pour différer le jour où les peuples non autonomes l'invoqueront. La délégation polonaise doit faire certaines réserves en ce qui concerne le principe même du rapport du Comité ad hoc, qui, dans certains cas, pourrait être incompatible avec le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

33. M. GERIG (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) déclare que sa délégation approuve le rapport du Comité ad hoc. Le rapport témoigne de l'étude minutieuse et attentive qui a été consacrée à cette question complexe. Il convient que l'Assemblée générale adopte le rapport, car il représente le maximum d'accord auquel il soit possible de parvenir pour le moment. Bien entendu, le texte pourrait être perfectionné et la délégation des Etats-Unis est disposée à prendre en considération toute proposition présentée à cette fin.

34. En approuvant le rapport, la délégation des Etats-Unis tient à préciser, que, comme le Comité l'a dit lui-même, il est bien entendu qu'une énumération de facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'une indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non lui-même. Elle partage également l'avis du Comité selon lequel chaque cas particulier doit être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres et qu'un facteur particulier ou une combinaison de facteurs ne peut être considérée comme décisive dans chaque cas. Il faut louer le Comité d'avoir évité les conclusions simplistes qui ne faciliteraient pas la recherche du critère qui doit permettre de juger si un territoire s'administre lui-même.

35. Les facteurs se rangent en trois catégories. Premièrement, ceux qui permettent de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance; deuxièmement, ceux qui permettent de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée; troisièmement, ceux qui permettent de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Les listes de facteurs sont plus ou moins pertinentes; certains éléments complémentaires mériteraient peut-être d'y figurer. Cependant, la délégation des Etats-Unis ne propose aucun facteur nouveau, en partie parce qu'il serait peut-être dangereux d'avoir une liste si longue que les populations des territoires non autonomes elles-mêmes risquent de s'y méprendre et de se laisser décourager en s'imaginant qu'elles doivent répondre à trop de conditions pour atteindre le but désiré, à savoir l'autonomie. A vrai dire quand elle a étudié la liste des facteurs, la délégation des Etats-Unis s'est demandée si certains Etats indépendants Membres des Nations Unies remplissaient les conditions requises pour se dire autonomes.

36. La délégation des Etats-Unis félicite le Comité ad hoc d'avoir clairement indiqué la différence entre l'indépendance et l'autonomie: alors que les gouvernements indépendants sont autonomes, les gouvernements autonomes ne sont pas tous indépendants.

37. Il est en outre nettement reconnu dans le rapport que les territoires non autonomes ne progressent pas tous dans la même direction et peuvent ne pas tous désirer prendre le même chemin. Si les uns évoluent vers l'indépendance, d'autres vont manifestement vers une libre association avec la métropole ou un autre Etat ou groupe d'Etats.

38. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.231, la délégation des Etats-Unis est reconnaissante aux représentants du Venezuela et de Cuba d'avoir clairement expliqué à la 273^{ème} séance sur quels postulats leur texte est fondé. Il ressort des termes employés dans le projet de résolution et des explications fournies par ses auteurs que ce projet de résolution se fonde sur deux hypothèses que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis doit, vu sa constitution, rejeter l'une et l'autre. La première de ces hypothèses veut que l'autonomie soit indivisible et qu'en conséquence les Puissances administrantes soient tenues de transmettre les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, jusqu'au moment où le territoire en question sera autonome non seulement sur le plan économique, social et de l'enseignement, mais encore sur le plan politique. La seconde hypothèse veut que la responsabilité et le droit de décider qu'un territoire est devenu autonome et ne doit plus faire l'objet de communications de renseignements appartienne non seulement à la Puissance administrante seule mais conjointement à l'Assemblée générale et à la Puissance administrante intéressée.

39. En ce qui concerne le premier de ces points, la délégation des Etats-Unis estime que la population et le gouvernement d'un territoire et la population et le gouvernement de la métropole peuvent, s'ils le désirent, déterminer librement la nature de leurs relations mutuelles et que, dans un arrangement ainsi librement convenu, ils peuvent décider que certaines questions comme les problèmes économiques, sociaux et de l'enseignement, doivent à l'avenir relever exclusivement du gouvernement du territoire tandis que le gouvernement métropolitain doit avoir la responsabilité de certaines autres questions, d'ordre politique, telles que les relations extérieures et la défense. Si, dans le cadre d'un arrangement de ce genre, le gouvernement du territoire ne désire pas soumettre de rapport sur ses affaires économiques et sociales au gouvernement métropolitain, ou ne désire pas que les renseignements fournis soient transmis aux Nations Unies, non seulement il serait contraire à l'accord de l'obliger à le faire, mais encore cela aboutirait en fait à priver le territoire d'une grande partie de l'autonomie nouvellement acquise par lui. Il est difficile de croire que telle est l'intention du représentant de Cuba ou des autres auteurs du projet de résolution. Quoi qu'il en soit, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis ne saurait s'associer à une action qui limiterait l'autonomie d'un territoire; il ne pourra appuyer une résolution fondée sur de telles prémisses.

40. Quant au second point, la délégation des Etats-Unis considère que chaque Puissance administrante a le droit de fixer la position constitutionnelle et le statut des territoires soumis à sa souveraineté. La décision de cesser de communiquer les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, appartient uniquement à la Puissance administrante. Cela ne veut pas dire que l'Assemblée générale n'a pas de rôle à jouer. Au contraire, elle pourrait utilement préciser l'interprétation convenable d'expressions telles que "territoires non autonomes" ou "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". Puisque ces expressions se trouvent dans la Charte, la définition en doit être décidée collectivement plutôt que de façon unilatérale. L'Assemblée générale devrait pouvoir discuter ces expressions, tenter de les définir et recommander à l'attention des Puissances administrantes la définition qu'elle aura adoptée. L'Assemblée générale pourrait en outre exprimer son opinion en termes généraux sur les principes que les Puissances administrantes ont pris ou pourraient prendre comme guide pour décider de transmettre des renseignements sur tels ou tels territoires; mais une résolution relative à la décision d'une Puissance administrante de cesser de transmettre des renseignements ne doit pas sous-entendre que cette décision est sujette à l'approbation ou au désaveu de l'Assemblée générale. Si la population d'un territoire choisit librement de devenir partie intégrante d'un autre Etat et que le gouvernement de cet Etat prend, dans le cadre de sa constitution, les mesures législatives nécessaires en vue de cette union, ces mesures législatives ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un nouvel examen ni d'une éventuelle révision de la part de l'Assemblée générale, car l'Assemblée générale ne peut s'ingérer dans les dispositions législatives par lesquelles les gouvernements s'acquittent, conformément à leur constitution, des devoirs qui leur sont confiés. Aucun des Membres des Nations Unies n'admet que la législation des Etats Membres relève de la compétence de la Quatrième Commission ou de l'Assemblée générale. L'Organisation des Nations Unies n'est pas un gouvernement mondial. Les Etats-Unis n'ont pas renoncé à leur droit de décider quand un territoire a suffisamment évolué pour devenir un Etat et ne peuvent céder ce droit à la Quatrième Commission, puisqu'il s'agit d'une question constitutionnelle au sujet de laquelle le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis ne peut renoncer à sa souveraineté et à son droit de décision.

41. Pour ces raisons, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis ne pourra voter en faveur du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.231. Il serait plus prudent d'adopter simplement le rapport du Comité ad hoc, que les Etats-Unis appuieront.

42. M. C. LIU (Chine) estime, compte tenu des objectifs définis au Chapitre XI de la Charte, que le projet de résolution commun est fort bien venu et qu'il exprime de façon correcte l'interprétation évolutionnaire que l'Assemblée générale a donnée du Chapitre XI dans les diverses résolutions que les orateurs précédents ont rappelées.

43. Néanmoins, le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution est quelque peu obscur. M. Liu ne peut concevoir qu'on puisse interpréter les facteurs comme "faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète". Les obstacles ne peuvent venir que de la population autochtone, de la Puissance administrante ou d'autres parties intéressées. Le représentant de la Chine aimerait quelques explications à ce sujet.

44. Le paragraphe 2 constitue pratiquement la répétition de la seconde phrase du paragraphe 5, C, du rapport du Comité ad hoc et devrait donc logiquement être rattaché au dernier considérant; ces deux passages ne sont que deux aspects d'une seule et même idée et ne devraient pas être séparés.

45. La relation qui existe entre les termes "autonome" et "s'administre complètement elle-même" employés au paragraphe 4 ne paraît pas très claire. Le représentant de Cuba a déclaré que le paragraphe 4 était destiné à souligner l'indivisibilité de tous les aspects de l'autonomie. Cette idée ressortirait plus clairement si l'on ajoutait les mots "dans le domaine politique" après "s'administre complètement elle-même".

46. M. Liu n'insistera pas sur les amendements qu'il a suggérés; de toute façon, il votera en faveur du projet de résolution commun.

47. Sir Alan BURNS (Royaume-Uni) dit que sa délégation a toujours pensé que la question des facteurs était plutôt étrangère aux principes et objectifs du Chapitre XI. Aussi n'a-t-elle pas pris une part très active au débat. Néanmoins, en application de la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale, elle a communiqué au Comité ad hoc son opinion dûment réfléchie. Il est regrettable que l'exposé du Royaume-Uni (A/AC.58/1/Add.3), ainsi que les autres exposés où les divers Etats Membres ont soigneusement présenté leurs arguments, n'aient pas apparemment reçu du Comité toute l'attention qu'ils méritaient; le rapport du Comité aurait eu beaucoup plus de valeur si le texte intégral de ces exposés y avait été inséré et soumis à l'examen de la Quatrième Commission. Il ressort clairement de certaines déclarations faites à la Quatrième Commission que l'on n'a pas pleinement tenu compte des opinions exprimées dans les exposés des Etats Membres.

48. Passant au projet de résolution, Sir Alan Burns souligne que l'obligation de transmettre des renseignements, dont il est question dans les deux premiers considérants, est sujette aux limitations que pourraient imposer des considérations de sécurité ou d'ordre constitutionnel. Sous réserve de ces limitations, la délégation du Royaume-Uni admet que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements existe pour un territoire donné tant que les objectifs définis au Chapitre XI n'ont pas été atteints en ce qui regarde ce territoire.

49. La rédaction du dernier considérant esquivait certaines des difficultés que présente l'interprétation de la Charte. Le problème en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI est de déterminer si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations — ce sont là les mots essentiels — ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Une certaine confusion apparaît dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc: tantôt les caractéristiques mentionnées s'appliquent à un territoire autonome, et tantôt elles s'appliquent à une population autonome. Il aurait été prudent de la part du Comité ad hoc de définir les mots "territoire" et "population". Le Comité apparemment a reculé devant les définitions.

50. La même confusion entre "territoire" et "populations" apparaît dans le paragraphe 1 du projet de résolution. En principe, l'Assemblée générale, si tant est qu'elle doive examiner la question, s'intéresse à l'existence de populations qui ne sont pas encore parvenues à l'autonomie complète. Ce problème l'intéresse non seulement du point de vue de la cessation de la transmission de renseignements mais aussi de celui de la reconnaissance de leurs obligations par les Etats qui n'ont pas jugé jusqu'ici que des obligations leur incombaient aux termes du Chapitre XI.

51. Le Royaume-Uni n'aura guère de difficulté à décider si l'un quelconque de ses territoires a ou non atteint une autonomie complète et le Gouvernement britannique n'a pas besoin d'approuver la liste des facteurs. Par exemple, si le Royaume-Uni décidait d'accorder l'autonomie complète aux populations d'un territoire non autonome, il pourrait promulguer un ordre en conseil spécialement à cet effet. Un tel instrument, qui aurait autorité sur le plan international, retirerait le territoire en question de la catégorie des territoires qui relèvent du Chapitre XI. Il est parfaitement possible que le progrès politique des populations en question ne soit pas suffisant pour leur permettre de décider en connaissance de cause de l'avenir du territoire, et ses populations pourraient ne pas être en mesure de manifester leurs opinions en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles peuvent désirer. Néanmoins, leur statut serait fixé en droit international d'une manière effective par ledit ordre-en-conseil. En conséquence, étant donné la procédure constitutionnelle du Royaume-Uni, la liste des facteurs est une question qui est étrangère à la question fondamentale du statut du territoire, tant du point de vue du droit international que du point de vue du Chapitre XI.

52. Le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution fait preuve de sagesse et est conforme à la pratique constamment suivie par le Gouvernement britannique. Sir Alan se félicite de la présence du paragraphe 3, car il servira à dissiper l'impression, qui va grandissant dans les territoires non autonomes, que les Nations Unies hésiteraient à reconnaître le progrès politique d'un territoire donné, à moins qu'il ne soit possible, au moyen d'une série de critères presque incompréhensibles, de convaincre soixante pays que ce territoire est parvenu à un degré d'évolution supérieur de loin à celui de la majorité des Etats Membres.

53. Sir Alan ne comprend pas les mots du paragraphe 4 "sa population s'administre complètement elle-même, selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte". Le rapport du Comité ad hoc ne contient aucune définition de mots "qui s'administre complètement elle-même". Le Gouvernement britannique juge qu'un pays s'administre lui-même en ce qui concerne les questions économiques, sociales ou de l'éducation, lorsque les pouvoirs législatif et exécutif de ce pays prennent leur décision dans ces domaines en toute indépendance. L'orateur est convaincu que les auteurs du projet de résolution commun seront en mesure de proposer une définition.

54. Sir Alan approuve le dernier membre de phrase du paragraphe 5 qui reconnaît nettement qu'il existe plus de huit Membres des Nations Unies à qui pourrait incomber l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements.

55. Cependant, la délégation britannique ne votera pas le projet de résolution et n'approuvera pas le rapport du Comité ad hoc. Il reste beaucoup à faire avant qu'il ne soit possible de considérer cette question comme élucidée, même provisoirement. On a exprimé de nombreux doutes au sujet de la valeur réelle de la liste des facteurs et on a introduit de nombreux éléments nouveaux dans la discussion. Les exposées mûrement réfléchis que plusieurs gouvernements ont présentés n'ont fait l'objet que d'un examen très rapide et presque tous les termes essentiels restent à définir. En conséquence, Sir Alan pense qu'il serait sage que la Commission invite le Secrétaire général à préparer une nouvelle étude d'ensemble sur la question en tenant compte de tous les éléments dont il vient de parler et de la présenter à la huitième session de l'Assemblée générale. Dans le passé, l'Assemblée générale a paru attacher une grande importance à l'étude des facteurs, qu'elle dépêche maintenant de façon si légère.

56. Sir Alan ne s'opposera pas à une tentative visant, au moyen de ce projet de résolution commun, à retirer de l'ordre du jour un problème quelque peu irréal. Cependant, avant de passer au vote, il tient à réserver entièrement la position de son gouvernement à l'égard de toutes prétentions que l'on jugerait pouvoir émettre au nom de l'Assemblée générale. Si ce projet de résolution est adopté et si, par la suite, on émet des prétentions quelconques, la délégation britannique sera contrainte de rappeler les réserves expresses qu'elle vient de formuler.

57. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) dit que sa délégation a toujours soutenu que l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas autonome et par conséquent s'il faut ou non continuer de communiquer des renseignements au sujet de ce territoire. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte est une déclaration des Puissances administrantes, mais c'est également un traité entre ces Puissances et la collectivité internationale représentée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Conformément à l'Article 10 de la Charte, l'Assemblée générale est sans aucun doute compétente pour discuter le Chapitre XI et pour interpréter les obligations que les Puissances administrantes ont assumées en vertu de ce chapitre. La délégation de la République Dominicaine a en conséquence préconisé l'établissement du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs et a participé à ses travaux. Elle est convaincue, comme le représentant de la République Dominicaine l'a déclaré à la 396ème séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale, que le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est un principe sacré; ce principe fait partie intégrante du droit international et a été reconnu sans réserve dans la Charte des Nations Unies.

58. La délégation de la République Dominicaine a toujours soutenu qu'il est très difficile d'établir des critères absolus de l'autonomie. Néanmoins, elle a répondu à la lettre par laquelle le Secrétaire général l'a priée de présenter ses observations sur la liste des facteurs. Un tiers seulement des Etats Membres ont cru pouvoir présenter leurs observations à ce sujet; plusieurs Etats ont réservé leur opinion jusqu'au moment où ils auraient eu connaissance du rapport du Comité ad hoc et plusieurs Etats réservent encore leur opinion à l'heure actuelle. Il est évident qu'un grand nombre d'Etats Membres conservent encore des doutes sérieux au sujet de la liste des facteurs et l'on peut vraiment se demander, par conséquent, si l'Assemblée générale devrait considérer cette liste comme définitive et l'adopter.

59. M. de Marchena partage l'opinion des représentants qui ont fait allusion aux aspects politiques de la question. Néanmoins, le problème a toujours été présenté à la Commission comme un problème juridique; il doit donc être résolu par des formules juridiques tirées du droit international public. Les dispositions constitutionnelles qui régissent les relations entre un territoire métropolitain et les territoires non autonomes dont il est responsable soulèvent de toute évidence des problèmes juridiques considérables. C'est pourquoi, à la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, la délégation de la République Dominicaine a suggéré à la Quatrième Commission (216ème séance) que l'étude des facteurs soit confiée à la Commission du droit international. Elle est toujours de cet avis. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc devrait être soumis à un organe technique qui procéderait à une plus ample étude et adapterait la terminologie aux nécessités juridiques du problème. Une telle mesure est particulièrement nécessaire dans le cas présent, car la liste des facteurs sera un document d'une importance décisive lorsque l'on entreprendra un jour la révision de la Charte. La délégation de la République Dominicaine appuiera donc toute suggestion tendant à ce que ce problème fasse l'objet d'une étude plus approfondie, notamment par la Commission du droit international; elle se réserve le droit de présenter un projet de résolution à cet effet.

60. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc pêche par une grave omission: il ne contient aucune définition de l'autonomie. La délégation de la République Dominicaine a déclaré à la 216ème séance de la Quatrième Commission qu'avant toute détermination des facteurs, il faudrait définir le principe de l'autonomie du point de vue du droit international car ce principe dérive de l'application du droit constitutionnel au droit international public. L'ambiguïté du Chapitre XI à ce sujet, et notamment de l'Article 73, b, a été soulignée à plusieurs reprises par différents commentateurs et en particulier par MM. Hans Kelsen et Lauterpacht. En droit français et en droit romain, la définition d'un crime, par exemple, contient toujours la définition des éléments du crime. De même, toute définition de l'autonomie doit définir les éléments du gouvernement autonome, c'est-à-dire les facteurs. Il semble que l'on ait tendance, à la Quatrième Commission à prétendre que l'Assemblée générale doit tout d'abord déterminer les facteurs, puis plus tard, définir l'autonomie. M. de Marchena ne voit aucune raison pour que l'on n'entreprenne pas ces deux tâches simultanément; en fait il serait sans doute préférable de procéder de la sorte. La délégation de la République Dominicaine a déjà proposé de définir l'autonomie comme suit: le fait pour un peuple ou un groupe de population, de rendre ses institutions indépendantes du territoire métropolitain auquel il était jusque là lié légalement et politiquement. Toute définition de l'autonomie doit nécessairement contenir le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

61. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc, aussi bien que le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution, reconnaissent qu'aucune énumération de facteurs ne peut faire plus que de servir de guide. Etant donné que beaucoup d'autres formules pourraient résoudre les ambiguïtés du Chapitre XI, la délégation de la République Dominicaine adoptera une attitude intermédiaire à l'égard du projet de résolution.

62. Le préambule du projet de résolution lui paraît acceptable, puisqu'il ne fait qu'énumérer les conséquences des résolutions précédentes de l'Assemblée générale. La déclaration liminaire du premier paragraphe est bien formulée mais, comme M. de Marchena l'a déjà déclaré, il serait prématuré de considérer la liste des facteurs comme définitive. Elle devrait être examinée d'une manière plus approfondie par un nouveau comité ad hoc ou par la Commission du droit international. Le libellé trop vague du paragraphe 2 diminue la valeur de l'ensemble du projet de résolution. Le paragraphe 4 semble être une déclaration de l'Assemblée générale, énonçant le principe formel qu'il ne peut y avoir d'autonomie dans les domaines économique et social et dans celui de l'enseignement sans autonomie politique. Ce principe est acceptable mais, en pratique, s'il était approuvé, il rendrait inutile toute la liste des facteurs. Si l'Assemblée générale désire faire une telle déclaration, elle peut le faire dans une résolution séparée. Toutefois, M. de Marchena n'est pas du tout certain qu'une déclaration de ce genre ne violerait pas le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Comme il est indiqué au paragraphe 4, cette idée introduit un élément nouveau et fondamental lourd de conséquences juridiques et politiques très graves. Il serait prématuré, pour le moment, que l'Assemblée générale adopte ce qui est, au fond, une révision du Chapitre XI. C'est pourquoi M. de Marchena ne votera pas le paragraphe 4.

63. En résumé, la délégation de la République Dominicaine n'est pas opposée au projet de résolution, mais elle estime qu'il est prématuré. Elle s'abstiendra par conséquent au cours du vote sur l'ensemble de la résolution, mais demandera peut-être un vote séparé sur certains paragraphes, à propos desquels elle émettra un vote négatif.

64. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) tient à appeler l'attention de la Commission sur certains points qui paraissent avoir échappé aux précédents orateurs. Il ne s'agit pas pour la Commission de déterminer sous quelles conditions les gouvernements peuvent être autorisés à cesser de transmettre des renseignements, il s'agit simplement de décider quels sont les territoires pour lesquels il convient de fournir des renseignements. Les textes à soumettre à l'Assemblée générale doivent être rédigés en termes précis. La question qui se pose est donc la suivante: quels sont les territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes?

65. En second lieu, chaque Etat est libre — c'est son droit souverain — de décider quels sont, parmi les territoires qu'il administre, ceux qui relèvent du Chapitre XI de la Charte. C'est lui qui décide pour quels territoires il fournira des renseignements et pour quels territoires il n'est plus nécessaire d'en transmettre.

66. La délégation de la Belgique doute sérieusement de la valeur de la liste des facteurs préparée par le Comité spécial. Peut-être cette liste a-t-elle été établie un peu au hasard. Certaines suggestions ont été présentées au Comité, on en a ajouté d'autres, quelques-unes ont été supprimées, certaines ont été retenues. M. Ryckmans est convaincu qu'aucun membre de la Commission n'a l'impression que la question a fait l'objet d'une étude minutieuse. Le Comité n'a pas accompli ce qui aurait dû être sa tâche essentielle: définir l'autonomie.

67. La délégation de la Belgique ne prend pas position en ce qui concerne la liste des facteurs. Tous ces facteurs méritent considération; cependant, pris ensemble ou isolément, ils ne sauraient constituer un critère permettant de décider automatiquement si un territoire relève ou non du champ d'application de l'Article 73, e.

68. La liste des facteurs vient toutefois corroborer l'opinion de la délégation de la Belgique selon laquelle il existe beaucoup de peuples auxquels on pourrait appliquer ces critères et à propos desquels on ne transmet pourtant pas de renseignements. De deux choses l'une: ou bien ces critères sont valables et, dans ce cas, il convient de transmettre des renseignements sur tous les territoires auxquels on peut les appliquer, ou bien ils s'appliquent à certains territoires pour lesquels la Puissance administrante — ou, suivant certains, l'Assemblée générale — estime qu'il n'est pas nécessaire de transmettre des renseignements, et dans ce cas, ils ne sont alors pas valables.

69. M. Ryckmans va donner quelques exemples des territoires auxquelles, de l'avis de sa délégation, ces facteurs s'appliquent incontestablement. Parmi les facteurs qui permettent de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance, on trouve: l'opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent; la mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels; enfin, la mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

70. Le représentant de la Belgique se réfère à ce propos au rapport sur les travaux de la première session de la Commission d'experts pour le travail des autochtones, tenue par l'Organisation internationale du Travail à La Paz en 1951, dans lequel sont décrites les conditions d'existence de la population indienne au Brésil. D'après ce rapport, il existe trois catégories d'Indiens: les Indiens appartenant à la première catégorie vivent dans les mêmes agglomérations que les gens civilisés; la deuxième catégorie est constituée par des tribus qui entretiennent des relations pacifiques avec les gens civilisés, mais qui habitent des régions éloignées, proches des points où les fleuves ont leur source; la troisième est composée de tribus absolument sauvages, vivant isolées dans des régions inaccessibles et qui résistent par les armes à toute tentative que font les gens civilisés pour entrer en contact avec eux.

71. Il est dit, dans un rapport publié par le Gouvernement du Venezuela pour l'année 1949-1950 que l'on essaie de civiliser les Indiens du bassin supérieur de l'Orénoque en les initiant à la religion, en leur enseignant l'espagnol, l'agriculture et le commerce, ainsi que des principes d'hygiène et de salubrité publique. Dans un rapport du même gouvernement pour l'année 1950-1951, il est dit que, désireux d'améliorer la situation des autochtones qui vivent dans des régions lointaines et inaccessibles, le gouvernement a confié la tâche de les civiliser à des missions catholiques et qu'en dépit des difficultés rencontrées l'œuvre des missionnaires fait des progrès.

72. D'après une loi vénézuélienne de 1882, le Gouvernement fédéral continuera d'administrer les populations autochtones selon un régime spécial, jusqu'au moment jugé opportun pour leur donner un statut différent. La législation applicable à ces populations est donc différente de celle qui s'applique à la majorité des habitants du Venezuela. Une loi de 1915 a porté création de plusieurs missions chargées d'initier à la vie urbaine les groupes barbares qui subsistaient encore dans diverses parties du territoire de la République et de coloniser les régions les moins peuplées du Venezuela. Les missions ont reçu les pouvoirs nécessaires pour assurer le maintien de l'ordre parmi les Indiens et pour demander l'intervention du Gouvernement fédéral au cas où des mesures importantes devraient être prises. On fera l'éducation des Indiens, qui sont disposés à renoncer à l'existence nomade, dans des centres spéciaux où on leur apprendra où et comment s'établir de façon permanente. C'est le chef de la mission qui décidera de l'endroit où ils doivent se fixer.

73. M. Ryckmans donne à la Commission l'assurance que lorsqu'il parle des pays où l'on trouve encore des habitants non assimilés, il n'entend formuler aucune critique. La Belgique n'éprouve aucune honte à avoir sous sa souveraineté des populations à demi civilisées, et elle ne peut que sympathiser avec les autres pays qui ont à faire face aux mêmes problèmes. Les pays administrants ne sont pas responsables des problèmes, mais seulement de la manière dont ils travaillent à les résoudre.

74. Dans un rapport du Commissioner of Scheduled Castes Tribes du Gouvernement de l'Inde, publié en décembre 1951, il est question de la demande par laquelle la tribu des Nagas a réclamé son indépendance — situation que les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'ignorent pas, puisqu'ils ont reçu de cette tribu une pétition à cet effet, datée du mois de novembre 1949. Dans cette pétition, le peuple naga affirme n'avoir jamais perdu son indépendance et être déterminé à la conserver. Récemment, les Nagas ont effectué une incursion, et le Président du Conseil, M. Nehru, a déclaré devant le Parlement que les territoires éprouvés n'étaient administrés ni par le Gouvernement de l'Inde ni par un autre gouvernement; ils ne sont soumis à aucune administration et leur population est livrée à elle-même, sauf en cas de troubles.

75. M. Ryckmans ne voit pas pourquoi l'on ne transmettrait pas de renseignements sur toutes les populations qu'il a mentionnées. Les facteurs énumérés dans la liste de la Commission s'appliquent autant à ces populations qu'à celles des territoires non autonomes sur lesquels l'Organisation reçoit des renseignements conformément à l'Article 73, e.

76. Il a déjà cité l'exemple du Libéria à la 259ème séance. Sans songer à prétendre que les fonctionnaires du Libéria sont moins compétents ou moins dévoués aux intérêts de la population que les fonctionnaires français de la Côte-d'Ivoire, il ne voit pas pourquoi le Libéria ne fournirait pas de renseignements sur les populations qui habitent la région frontière limitrophe.

77. La nation somalie, qui est divisée en plusieurs parties, constitue un autre exemple. L'Organisation reçoit chaque année des renseignements au sujet de la Somalie sous administration britannique, de la Somalie sous administration française et la Somalie sous administration italienne. La Somalie dont le territoire a été conquis par les Ethiopiens n'est probablement pas autonome; il faudrait que l'Ethiopie fournisse des renseignements sur ce territoire. M. Ryckmans ne voit pas pourquoi l'Ethiopie serait moins liée par cette obligation que ne le sont le Royaume-Uni, la France ou l'Italie.

78. D'après un livre intitulé Government and Nationalism in Southeast Asia publié par l'Institute of Pacific Relations, à New-York en 1942, il existe aux Philippines des tribus arriérées qui vivent dans les montagnes et dans la brousse. Les colonisateurs espagnols ne s'étaient pas occupés d'elles, en raison de leur combativité et parce que leur territoire ne possédait aucune ressource permettant de compenser les dépenses qu'entraîneraient des opérations militaires. Il est affirmé, dans ce livre, que les membres de cette tribu détestent les fonctionnaires philippins et que ces derniers les considèrent comme des barbares. Toujours aux Philippines, les Moros n'élisent pas leurs fonctionnaires dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont élus dans les autres parties du pays. Leur territoire et ceux des autres tribus qui habitent les Philippines entrent dans les définitions proposées par le Comité ad hoc dans la liste des facteurs.

79. On peut également citer le cas des Dyaks qui vivent dans l'île de Bornéo et au sujet desquels le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a fourni des renseignements en 1947, 1948 et 1949. Selon ces renseignements, un certain nombre des tribus qui vivent dans cette partie de Bornéo se trouvent complètement isolées et elles sont très arriérées et primitives; on trouve encore parmi ces tribus des chasseurs de tête. On ne peut affirmer que ces populations jouissent de l'autonomie complète telle qu'on l'entend dans la Charte.

80. On objectera sans doute que la Charte mentionne non pas les populations mais les territoires; M. Ryckmans a cependant démontré qu'un grand nombre de ces populations habitent dans des territoires distincts et nettement délimités et qu'elles ne sont pas autonomes. Il y a aussi le cas de certains territoires qui sont séparés par la mer des pays qui les administrent. Ainsi, les îles Andaman et les îles Nicobar ne sont pas entièrement indépendantes et l'île de Pâques se trouve sous la souveraineté du Chili; pourtant, l'Inde et le Chili ne communiquent aucun renseignement à leur sujet.

81. On a prétendu que la thèse belge est contraire aux principes de la souveraineté des Etats et qu'elle rendrait le colonialisme universel. Toutefois, le terme "colonie" ne figure ni au Chapitre XI de la Charte ni à l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations, aux termes duquel les Membres de la Société des Nations s'étaient engagés à assurer le traitement équitable des populations indigènes dans les territoires soumis à leur administration. Il n'a été établi à cet égard aucune distinction entre les pays dits métropolitains et les territoires coloniaux.

82. On a également invoqué le principe de la compétence nationale. M. Ryckmans ne voit pas le rapport que ce principe peut avoir avec les territoires qui ne sont pas situés dans les limites des frontières du territoire métropolitain.

83. La plupart des Etats qui se sont opposés à la thèse de la délégation belge étaient Membres de la Société des Nations; ils n'ont pas expliqué pourquoi l'obligation imposée par l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations, qui était admissible il y a vingt-cinq ans, ne l'est plus aujourd'hui. L'argument selon lequel l'Article 73 s'applique aux territoires et non pas aux populations n'est qu'une pure chicanerie juridique. Les territoires ne sont importants que parce qu'ils sont habités par des êtres humains. L'opinion publique belge ne pourra pas croire à la sincérité de personnes qui se livrent à de tels sophismes tout en exprimant de beaux sentiments au sujet du bien-être des populations non autonomes, et en en appelant à l'esprit de la Charte, à l'esprit de coopération internationale, etc. La Belgique n'admettra jamais que le Chapitre XI de la Charte s'applique uniquement aux populations des territoires au sujet desquels des renseignements n'ont été librement transmis que par huit Etats. En fait, ces huit Etats ont fait preuve d'un esprit de coopération internationale bien plus grand que tous les autres Etats Membres de l'Organisation. La moitié au moins des Etats Membres des Nations Unies comprennent des populations au sujet desquelles des renseignements devraient être transmis en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte; le fait que ces Etats refusent de transmettre ces renseignements a pour conséquence que les huit Puissances en question, les Puissances dites coloniales, sont victimes d'une discrimination qui, à la longue, affectera gravement le fonctionnement de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

84. M. CALERO RODRIGUES (Brésil) déclare que les observations du représentant de la Belgique sont totalement étrangères à la question dont s'occupe la Commission. Il est vrai qu'il y a des Indiens au Brésil. Le Gouvernement brésilien a d'ailleurs étudié, en commun avec diverses institutions internationales, organisations interaméricaines et institutions spécialisées telles qu l'OIT et l'UNESCO, des questions touchant les intérêts de ces Indiens, mais il est d'avis que les problèmes qui intéressent ces populations ne relèvent pas de la Quatrième Commission. Si la question est de nouveau soulevée à la Commission, le représentant du Brésil se verra obligé de présenter une motion d'ordre. Sa délégation ne voit pas d'inconvénient à ce que les problèmes ethniques, sociaux et culturels de ces populations autochtones fassent l'objet de discussions, mais elle estime que ces discussions ne doivent pas avoir lieu à la Quatrième Commission.

85. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) rappelle que l'historique de la question est bien connu de la délégation belge. Les territoires ou les provinces du Venezuela habités par des populations arriérées ne sont pas assez peuplés pour justifier l'élection d'un sénateur. Il s'agit là cependant d'une question très différente de la question des territoires non autonomes au sens de la Charte. Les territoires non autonomes comme le Congo belge n'ont jamais fait légitimement partie du territoire métropolitain; ce sont des territoires placés provisoirement sous l'autorité des Puissances métropolitaines jusqu'à ce qu'ils deviennent autonomes. Au contraire, les régions du Venezuela auxquelles on a fait allusion ont toujours fait partie intégrante du territoire vénézuélien depuis que le pays a conquis son indépendance.

86. Le PRESIDENT dit qu'il était visible, depuis le début de sa déclaration que le représentant de la Belgique avait abordé des questions touchant de près un certain nombre d'Etats souverains, dont la plupart sont représentés à la Quatrième Commission. Les représentants de ces Etats désireront vraisemblablement présenter des observations sur ces questions et ils le feront sans aucun doute avec leur compétence et leur talent habituels. Il fait observer qu'il aurait pu interrompre le représentant de la Belgique et lui demander d'être plus bref et de ne pas s'étendre de nouveau sur un argument qu'il avait déjà avancé à propos du premier point de l'ordre du jour, puisque cela ne pouvait en aucune manière aider la Commission à examiner la question dont elle est saisie. Il s'est cependant abstenu d'interrompre le représentant de la Belgique parce qu'il a estimé qu'il devait avoir, comme tous les autres représentants, toute possibilité d'exprimer ses opinions, parce qu'il a voulu faire preuve de la plus grande courtoisie à son égard et parce qu'il n'a pas voulu donner l'impression de favoriser les nations sœurs auxquelles le représentant de la Belgique a fait allusion dans sa déclaration. En tout cas, les membres de la Commission ont le droit de soulever des questions d'ordre et ils peuvent le faire à tout moment.

La séance est levée à 18 h. 30.

ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

37

SEANCE

SEPTIEME SESSION

Documents officiels

Samedi 15 novembre 1952, à 10 h. 30

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234] (suite)	179
Programme de travail	186

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234] (suite)

[Point 36*]

1. M. YOURANS (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) rappelle que le Chapitre XI de la Charte impose certaines obligations aux Puissances qui administrent des territoires non autonomes. Dans sa résolution 66 (I), l'Assemblée générale a indiqué la liste de ces territoires. En vertu de la Charte, les Puissances coloniales sont tenues de transmettre des renseignements qui doivent permettre à l'Organisation de déterminer si elles s'acquittent des obligations qu'elles ont contractées.

2. Certaines Puissances administrantes ont décidé arbitrairement de ne plus soumettre de renseignements sur plusieurs territoires non autonomes comme la Guadeloupe, la Nouvelle-Calédonie, la Zone du Canal de Panama, Malte, les Antilles néerlandaises, et d'autres, parce qu'elles craignent de révéler à l'opinion publique mondiale la situation qui règne dans ces territoires. C'est ainsi que s'est posée la question des facteurs.

3. La liste de ces facteurs, qui figure dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/2178) marque un progrès, mais elle ne peut être considérée comme définitive ou complète. Lorsque l'Assemblée générale aura adopté une liste de critères, il faudra encore déterminer de quelle manière elle réunira les données nécessaires pour s'assurer que les populations d'un territoire donné s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes.

4. L'Union soviétique estime qu'aucune Puissance administrante ne peut cesser de fournir des renseignements sur un territoire non autonome quelconque avant que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes ait examiné tous les renseignements concernant le statut de ce territoire et fait savoir à l'Assemblée générale que ce territoire ne relève plus de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Les Puissances coloniales ne pourront cesser de transmettre des renseignements que lorsque les territoires non autonomes seront devenus des Etats indépendants et souverains dont la population exerce tous les pouvoirs: pouvoir législatif, pouvoir exécutif et pouvoir judiciaire.

5. L'Union soviétique votera le projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231) mais elle présente un amendement (A/C.4/L.233) tendant à ajouter le membre de phrase suivant à la fin du troisième considérant:

"et précisé que, dans un délai maximum de six mois après la communication des renseignements susvisés, il convient de transmettre tous autres renseignements qui peuvent être nécessaires dans de tels cas, y compris les textes constitutionnels, législatifs ou réglementaires concernant le gouvernement du territoire, et les textes relatifs aux liens constitutionnels entre le territoire et le Gouvernement métropolitain."

6. M. RIFAI (Syrie) estime que la question examinée par le Comité ad hoc est délicate et complexe. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc ne peut être considéré que comme un guide utile. Comme le représentant des Etats-Unis l'a déclaré au cours de la 274^{ème} séance de la Commission, on risquerait, en essayant d'établir une liste trop complète, de conclure qu'aucune population n'est digne de se gouverner elle-même. La délégation syrienne estime qu'une nouvelle étude n'est pas nécessaire à cet égard; elle votera pour le projet de résolution commun.

7. M. Rifai juge inquiétantes les déclarations faites au cours du débat par les représentants de certaines Puissances administrantes. Selon ces représentants, seules les Puissances administrantes ont qualité pour déterminer si un territoire donné est autonome ou ne l'est pas, et la Charte ne limiterait en rien leur souve-

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

raineté à cet égard. Si le Gouvernement syrien estime qu'il n'appartient pas aux seules Puissances administrantes de déterminer si un territoire donné a atteint le stade du "self-government", ce n'est pas pour entraver le progrès de ces territoires vers l'indépendance, mais afin de s'assurer que cette indépendance n'est pas illusoire. M. Rifai précise que dans son esprit les mots indépendance et "self-government" sont synonymes. Toute tentative d'établir une distinction subtile entre l'indépendance et le "self-government" serait contraire aux objectifs de la Charte. Cette distinction injustifiée a pour seul objet de permettre aux Puissances coloniales de prétendre qu'un territoire peut être considéré comme se gouvernant lui-même dès qu'il jouit d'une certaine autonomie en matière sociale, économique et scolaire. Une telle conception, jointe à la théorie de la compétence exclusive des Puissances administrantes, réduirait à néant tout espoir d'émancipation des peuples coloniaux et enlèverait toute raison d'être au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Si l'on adoptait cette interprétation, on s'apercevrait bientôt qu'aucun territoire non autonome ne relève plus des Nations Unies. C'est ainsi par exemple que le Maroc pourrait soudain atteindre une prétendue autonomie en étant simplement rattaché à l'Union française.

8. Les obligations du Chapitre XI de la Charte lient tous les Membres des Nations Unies. Les Puissances administrantes ne peuvent prendre de décisions unilatérales sur l'avenir des territoires non autonomes. Comme l'a déclaré le représentant de l'Inde, le statut des territoires non autonomes ne peut changer que de deux manières : ou bien ces territoires peuvent accéder à l'indépendance complète, comme dans le cas de l'Indonésie, ou bien ils peuvent être transformés en Territoires sous tutelle. L'Organisation des Nations Unies, en envisageant une modification du statut d'un territoire non autonome, devra tenir compte de la volonté librement exprimée de sa population.

9. La Syrie pense que si les graves divergences de vues qui séparent à ce sujet les Membres des Nations Unies ne s'atténuent pas, il conviendrait de demander un avis consultatif à la Cour internationale de Justice.

10. M. ABOU KHADRA (Arabie saoudite) estime que le caractère complexe de la question ressort du rapport du Comité ad hoc. Il est réconfortant de constater que les membres du Comité ad hoc ont pu se mettre d'accord sur les deux principes qui figurent dans le paragraphe 5, C, du rapport.

11. La délégation de l'Arabie saoudite est d'avis que l'Assemblée générale a qualité pour décider si un pays a atteint le stade du "self-government" et si la Puissance qui l'administre peut cesser de transmettre des renseignements à son sujet. S'il existe un doute quelconque à ce sujet, peut-être conviendrait-il de rechercher l'avis consultatif de la Cour internationale ou de renvoyer la question à la Sixième Commission.

12. Il serait dangereux d'accorder une importance excessive au régime politique en vigueur dans un territoire pour déterminer le stade qu'il a atteint sur la voie de l'autonomie. La situation et les traditions diffèrent considérablement à cet égard d'un territoire à l'autre et les facteurs énumérés dans le rapport du Comité ne peuvent être appliqués d'une manière rigide aux diverses régions qui relèvent du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

13. L'Arabie saoudite pense que la liste des facteurs qui figurent dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc est concise et adéquate. Pour ce qui est des facteurs concernant l'indépendance, il convient de tenir particulièrement compte de la mesure dans laquelle la population autochtone a pris conscience de son unité politique, économique et sociale. Ce facteur est également très important dans le cas de l'association d'un territoire donné avec la métropole ou avec un autre Etat, car il permet de juger si les populations se sont prononcées pour une telle association en toute liberté.

14. En réponse aux observations formulées au cours de la séance précédente par le représentant des Etats-Unis, M. Abou Khadra déclare qu'il est certes possible qu'un territoire désire librement s'associer à la métropole ou à un autre Etat, mais que de tels cas ne sauraient jamais être que de rares exceptions à la règle. Il serait très dangereux d'en faire un principe applicable à tous les territoires. En règle générale, les territoires non autonomes doivent ou bien accéder à l'indépendance et devenir membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou bien être placés sous le régime international de tutelle.

15. Le représentant de l'Arabie saoudite regrette que plusieurs Puissances coloniales aient cessé pour certains territoires, de transmettre les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

16. Le projet de résolution commun demande à l'Assemblée générale d'approuver le rapport du Comité ad hoc. En dépit des divergences d'interprétation auxquelles certaines parties de ce rapport ont donné lieu, la délégation de l'Arabie saoudite estime que ce document est satisfaisant. Elle votera donc en faveur du projet de résolution.

17. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) considère que la liste des facteurs qui figure dans l'annexe à la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale constitue une base de discussion acceptable. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc n'appelle pas d'observations particulières de la part du Gouvernement danois.

18. M. Lannung a constaté avec satisfaction que le Comité a maintenu la distinction fondamentale entre les facteurs qui permettent de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance ou à une forme d'autonomie et ceux qui permettent de conclure qu'un territoire s'est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. En ce qui concerne ces derniers facteurs, il conviendrait peut-être de procéder à une subdivision en envisageant, d'une part, les cas où le territoire est rattaché à un Etat du type fédéral, et d'autre part les cas où il est rattaché à un Etat du type unitaire. Mais, que cette division soit faite ou non, la question est secondaire. La question essentielle est que l'on soit d'accord pour admettre que la population d'un territoire qui, de sa propre volonté — librement exprimée en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques — s'associe à la métropole ou à un autre pays, a acquis de ce fait une autonomie complète. Dans le cas d'un Etat unitaire, il est essentiel que le territoire rattaché à cet Etat jouisse du même statut que les autres parties constitutives de cet Etat. Dans ce cas, le degré d'autonomie locale n'est pas un facteur capital, car il dépend du caractère plus ou moins centralisé de cet Etat. Il convient de se souvenir que pour un territoire dont la population est très faible et n'est guère assez nombreuse pour lui permettre de former un Etat indépendant, le rattachement à un autre Etat constitue le seul moyen pratique de permettre à la population de ce territoire de s'administrer complètement elle-même, conformément aux vœux librement exprimés par cette population.

19. M. Lannung mentionne à ce sujet les vœux et l'attitude de la population du Groenland; la position de la délégation danoise en ce qui concerne la question des facteurs a été influencée par cette attitude. Le Gouvernement du Danemark rappelle à ce propos que le Conseil national du Groenland a examiné au cours de l'été 1952 la question du statut futur de ce territoire. M. Augot Lynge, membre du Conseil national groenlandais, a déclaré notamment que le Groenland désire être associé ou intégré au Danemark. Sur la proposition de M. Lynge, le Conseil national groenlandais, composé de représentants élus au suffrage universel et égal pour tous par la population du Groenland, a adopté à l'unanimité une résolution tendant à ce que la nouvelle constitution du Danemark fasse du Groenland un amt — c'est-à-dire un comté ou une province du Danemark et à ce que le Groenland envoie des représentants au Parlement danois. Le Gouvernement et le Parlement danois ont l'intention, avec l'accord de tous les partis politiques, de modifier la Constitution du Danemark conformément aux aspirations de la population du Groenland. Cela pourrait prendre un certain temps car la procédure d'amendement est complexe.

20. M. Lannung considère que le facteur fondamental doit être la volonté librement exprimée de la population. Si la population d'un territoire et la Puissance administrante estiment toutes deux que la population du territoire s'administre complètement elle-même au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte, il est évident que l'Organisation ne devrait placer aucun obstacle sur leur chemin.

21. D'ailleurs, la délégation danoise pense que les facteurs qui figurent dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc doivent servir à déterminer non seulement si une Puissance peut cesser de transmettre les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, mais aussi si certaines Puissances ne devraient pas commencer d'envoyer ce genre de renseignements sur certains territoires qu'elles administrent.

22. Le Danemark a déjà affirmé, lors de l'adoption de la résolution 218 (III), de l'Assemblée générale, que l'Etat responsable de l'administration d'un territoire a le droit de déterminer lui-même le statut constitutionnel des territoires qui sont placés sous sa souveraineté. Le Danemark fournira à l'Organisation des renseignements sur toute modification apportée au statut du Groenland, mais, ce faisant, il estime qu'aucune mesure prise à ce sujet par ses organes constitutionnels n'est sujette à révision par les Nations Unies. L'attitude du Danemark à l'égard du projet de résolution commun sera déterminée par ces considérations.

23. M. PONCE YEPEZ (Equateur) déclare que l'obligation pour les Puissances administrantes de transmettre des renseignements sur la situation des territoires non autonomes résulte d'un accord multilatéral conclu par ces Puissances avec les autres signataires de la Charte. Les Puissances administrantes ne peuvent donc cesser de transmettre ces renseignements que si la situation des territoires en question s'est radicalement modifiée. C'est pourquoi il est important de déterminer les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour déterminer si les populations d'un territoire s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc constitue une étude précieuse sur ce problème particulièrement complexe. Aucun facteur ne peut être considéré comme décisif et il convient de tenir compte de la situation particulière de chaque territoire.

24. Il serait extrêmement utile de pouvoir énoncer un critère général, qui tienne compte du principe de l'indivisibilité de l'autonomie. M. Ponce Yépez rappelle à ce sujet qu'au cours de la sixième session, à la 242ème séance de la Commission, le représentant d'une Puissance administrante a déclaré que l'autonomie économique n'était pas possible sans autonomie politique et que l'autonomie est une et indivisible. Le projet de résolution commun, et notamment le paragraphe 4 de son dispositif, marquent un net progrès dans ce sens.

25. En ce qui concerne l'extension qu'une certaine Puissance administrante voudrait donner au Chapitre XI de la Charte, M. Ponce Yépez soutient que l'Article 73, e, s'applique uniquement et exclusivement aux territoires non autonomes et jamais aux populations qui sont des éléments constitutifs et essentiels des Etats indépendants et pleinement souverains. Toute interprétation contraire constituerait une violation évidente du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte et un danger pour l'intégrité même des Etats modernes.

26. M. COOPER (Libéria) rappelle que le représentant de la Belgique a déclaré au cours de la 259ème séance que le Libéria a été une colonie. M. Cooper demande au représentant de la Belgique si son pays n'a jamais été soumis à l'oppression d'une Puissance étrangère. A la suite de violations commises par certaines Puissances coloniales, le Libéria a dû proclamer son indépendance vingt ans à peine après sa constitution en colonie, sur les conseils amicaux des Etats-Unis. Le Libéria a été fondé par des noirs qui avaient été enlevés à leurs foyers par certaines Puissances coloniales et qui sont ensuite revenus dans leur pays grâce à la générosité de puissants amis. La Constitution du Libéria stipule expressément que seuls les noirs ou les personnes d'ascendance noire peuvent devenir citoyens du Libéria et posséder des terres dans ce pays. Certains représentants pourraient estimer qu'il s'agit là d'une disposition discriminatoire, mais c'est en partie grâce à cette clause que le Libéria a préservé son indépendance. Si, comme l'a déclaré le représentant de la Belgique, les habitants du Libéria parlent une langue étrangère, la faute en est aux Puissances coloniales qui les ont arrachés à leur pays.

27. Le représentant de la Belgique a prétendu à nouveau à la 274ème séance que le Libéria devrait transmettre des renseignements sur certaines tribus autochtones. Il a fait valoir que la Charte ne mentionne pas le mot "colonie", mais il est évident que le terme "territoire non autonome", qui figure dans la Charte, est synonyme de colonie, comme en témoignent les rapports adressés par les Puissances coloniales elles-mêmes à l'Assemblée générale. Il est absurde de prétendre que la portée des mots "territoire non autonome" peut également s'étendre aux Etats souverains. C'est pour éviter toute interprétation de cet ordre que les auteurs de la Charte ont expressément interdit à l'Organisation d'intervenir dans les affaires qui relèvent essentiellement de la compétence nationale d'un Etat. Si l'on essayait d'appliquer le principe énoncé par le représentant de la Belgique à des Etats comme le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis, l'Union soviétique ou la Belgique elle-même, on en apercevrait immédiatement toute l'inanité.

28. On a créé le Comité ad hoc parce que certaines Puissances administrantes ont cessé de transmettre des renseignements sur plusieurs territoires qu'elles administrent, sous prétexte que ces territoires ont atteint un certain degré d'autonomie. Même s'il était possible d'établir une liste des facteurs qui permettent de déterminer si la population d'un territoire s'administre complètement elle-même, la question essentielle serait de savoir qui a qualité pour appliquer ces critères à un territoire donné. Certains représentants estiment que ce droit appartient à l'Assemblée générale; de leur côté les Puissances administrantes déclarent qu'elles sont seules compétentes dans ce domaine; enfin les populations autochtones des territoires non autonomes peuvent également faire valoir qu'elles sont directement intéressées en la matière et que c'est pour elles qu'a été rédigé le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Tant que cette question n'aura pas été réglée, toute résolution adoptée ne pourra être appliquée qu'avec le bon vouloir des Puissances administrantes, et le but qu'on a recherché en créant un Comité ad hoc ne sera pas atteint. Les auteurs du projet de résolution commun ont d'ailleurs conscience de ce fait. Le Libéria estime que l'adoption du projet de résolution ne pourra donner aucun résultat concret. Les Puissances administrantes conserveront en effet, de toute manière, la liberté d'appliquer à chaque territoire les critères qui leur conviennent.

29. On a souvent demandé en quoi consiste le "self-government". Le représentant du Libéria rappelle à ce sujet la disposition des alinéas b et e de l'Article 73 de la Charte et il fait observer qu'on peut en conclure que la question de savoir si la population d'un territoire s'administre complètement elle-même dépend de facteurs politiques, sociaux, économiques et culturels ou d'une combinaison de ces facteurs. Il semble ressortir du paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun qu'un territoire ne peut être considéré comme s'administrant lui-même que lorsqu'il a atteint un certain degré de développement politique, économique et social. Bien que telle ne soit certainement pas l'intention de ses auteurs, l'adoption du projet de résolution risque de retarder l'évolution des territoires non autonomes vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance. Le Libéria estime donc préférable d'adopter simplement une résolution approuvant le rapport du Comité ad hoc, jusqu'au moment où l'Assemblée générale aura réglé la question de savoir quels sont les organes compétents pour décider si un territoire est prêt ou non à s'administrer lui-même.

30. Si les auteurs du projet de résolution commun insistent pour que leur projet soit mis aux voix tel qu'il est, la délégation du Libéria votera en faveur de ce texte, mais elle estime qu'il n'a guère de chance d'accélérer l'évolution des populations autochtones vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance.

31. M. NAJAR (Israël) constate que le projet de résolution commun n'est pas très détaillé en ce qui concerne les facteurs dont il est question dans le rapport; par contre, il aborde de front divers problèmes sur lesquels le Comité ad hoc ne s'est pas prononcé directement. Les débats ont montré que ce projet soulève les questions suivantes: Qui a le droit de décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont la population ne s'administre pas encore complètement elle-même? Qui a le droit de décider qu'un territoire non autonome a cessé de l'être et s'administre complètement lui-même? Quelle est la définition exacte de l'expression "capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes" ou "self-government" utilisée au Chapitre XI de la Charte? Ce "self-government" se distingue-t-il de l'indépendance dont il est question au Chapitre XII de la Charte et, dans l'affirmative, en quoi? La transmission des renseignements, dont il est question à l'Article 73, e, peut-elle cesser avant qu'un territoire soit devenu un pays dont la population s'administre complètement elle-même? Qui peut décider que la transmission des renseignements peut prendre fin? Et, finalement, qui peut décider de la validité d'un accord politique intervenu entre une Puissance administrante et un territoire dont elle avait autrefois l'administration, mais qui, suivant elle, a accédé à l'autonomie?

32. Dans l'ensemble, ces questions mettent en cause l'étendue des pouvoirs de l'Assemblée générale et sortent du cadre de la transmission des informations et de leur libre discussion par la Quatrième Commission. Sur chacune d'elles, les vues des huit Puissances administrantes s'opposent totalement aux opinions exprimées dans le projet de résolution commun. Les Puissances administrantes fondent leur conception de leurs obligations sur les Articles 73 et 76 de la Charte et, aussi, sur le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. Des problèmes constitutionnels fondamentaux se posent donc sur le plan du droit international autant que sur le plan du droit interne.

33. La solution réelle des difficultés auxquelles se heurte la Commission ne réside pas dans le vote d'une résolution de caractère doctrinal et d'importance majeure par une majorité qui ne compterait aucune des Puissances administrantes. Le trouble des esprits est bien traduit par le fait que deux délégations qui ont appuyé le projet de résolution ont évoqué en même temps l'éventuelle nécessité de solliciter un avis consultatif de la Cour internationale de Justice. On se trouve ainsi en présence tantôt d'une accumulation de thèses juridiques, tantôt d'une analyse de plus en plus poussée des conditions de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance, dont on ne sait si elle sert ou dessert la cause du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes que l'on veut promouvoir.

34. En agissant comme le préconise le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun, c'est-à-dire en examinant le cas de chaque territoire selon les circonstances particulières, on éviterait un conflit juridique que la Quatrième Commission ne pourrait pas résoudre et on réaliserait des progrès bien plus substantiels. La délégation d'Israël suggère que l'on recherche la solution du problème dans la conciliation ou dans des consultations renouvelées, car elle ne croit pas que l'adoption d'une résolution qui demeurerait sans effet servirait la cause des Nations Unies et celle des territoires non autonomes.

35. Quant au rapport du Comité ad hoc, il représente certes un effort, mais on peut se demander s'il était nécessaire. En effet, le titre que ce rapport donne à la liste des facteurs signifie qu'il considère que l'objectif final du Chapitre XI de la Charte est l'indépendance politique totale, qui peut revêtir des formes diverses d'autonomie séparée ou associée librement acceptées par les populations des territoires intéressés. Une vue aussi claire ne demandait pas une longue et laborieuse énumération de facteurs et ne résout pas du reste les difficultés. Le problème réel, qui demeure entier, consiste à conclure un modus vivendi constructif avec les Puissances administrantes en ce qui concerne la portée des dispositions pertinentes de la Charte.

36. M. TAJIBNAPIS (Indonésie) rappelle qu'à la séance précédente, le représentant de la Belgique a demandé pourquoi certains Etats qui n'administrent pas de territoires n'ont pas envoyé au Secrétaire général des renseignements concernant les groupes arriérés de leur population. La réponse à cette question est fort simple. L'Article 73 ne s'applique pas aux territoires métropolitains. Cette interprétation n'est pas seulement fondée sur les travaux préparatoires de San-Francisco, mais également sur l'Article 74 de la Charte.

37. M. Tajibnapis cite des extraits du compte rendu sténographique de la onzième séance du Comité II/4 de la Conférence de San Francisco¹ pour prouver que l'on n'avait pas eu l'intention d'étendre aux territoires métropolitains les dispositions relatives aux territoires non autonomes. Tout en reconnaissant que cette question ne pouvait être tranchée par une décision présidentielle, le Président du Comité II/4 avait estimé que les dispositions en question ne s'appliquaient manifestement pas aux territoires métropolitains. Tel avait été également l'avis des représentants de la Grèce et du Royaume-Uni. M. Tajibnapis ne doute pas que le gouvernement actuel du Royaume-Uni n'interprète de la même manière les dispositions de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

38. Par ailleurs, il voudrait savoir pourquoi le représentant de la Belgique n'a pas adressé également aux Etats-Unis et au Canada les questions qu'il a posées à l'Indonésie. Pourquoi les a-t-il adressées seulement à des Etats d'Asie, d'Amérique latine ou du Moyen-Orient? M. Tajibnapis demande au Président de déclarer que le représentant de la Belgique est sorti du cadre de la discussion, au cours de la séance précédente, lorsqu'il a fait allusion à la situation dans certains Etats souverains.

39. Le PRESIDENT rappelle qu'il a fait une déclaration à ce sujet à la fin de la séance précédente. Il invite le représentant de l'Indonésie à s'y reporter.

40. M. Shiva RAO (Inde) déclare qu'il n'a pas soulevé une motion d'ordre lorsqu'à la séance précédente, le représentant de la Belgique a traité des questions relevant exclusivement de la compétence nationale d'Etats Membres des Nations Unies. Il n'a pas voulu donner l'impression que l'Inde avait quoi que ce soit à cacher. Il tient cependant à affirmer que le représentant de la Belgique est sorti manifestement du cadre de la discussion.

41. Sans vouloir s'engager sur la même voie que lui, M. Rao tient à répondre aux observations que le représentant de la Belgique a faites en ce qui concerne la tribu des Nagas, dans le nord-est de l'Inde, et des îles Andaman et Nicobar. Comme la délégation de l'Inde l'a fait remarquer déjà au sein du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, le Gouvernement de l'Inde consacre des efforts considérables au développement de toutes ces tribus et castes arriérées, et notamment des Nagas. A ce propos, M. Rao cite des extraits d'un discours qu'a prononcé le Premier Ministre de l'Inde à Shillong, capitale de l'Etat d'Assam, le 19 octobre 1952; il ressort de ce discours que les tribus se développent dans le cadre de leur culture et de leurs traditions propres et que la population jouit d'une autonomie considérable. D'autre part, l'Inde s'est attachée à développer les îles Andaman et Nicobar, dont le potentiel économique est considérable mais qui n'ont été utilisées que comme colonies pénitenciaires jusqu'à l'accession de l'Inde à l'indépendance; ces îles constituent d'ailleurs un Etat de l'Union indienne.

42. Le représentant de la Belgique n'a cessé de défendre la thèse suivant laquelle l'administration des territoires non autonomes relève exclusivement de la compétence nationale des Puissances administrantes. Ce point de vue n'est cependant pas universellement partagé et M. Rao rappelle la déclaration qu'a faite le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la Suède devant la Commission politique spéciale, le 12 novembre 1952²; il ressort de cette déclaration que la question des relations entre les Etats Membres et les territoires non autonomes revêt un caractère international et ne relève plus exclusivement de la compétence nationale des Puissances administrantes.

43. M. Rao a écouté avec beaucoup d'intérêt les observations formulées par le représentant d'Israël. Dans les circonstances actuelles il est vain, en effet, de rechercher une interprétation purement théorique de certaines dispositions et il serait préférable de rechercher un accord avec les Puissances administrantes, aux termes duquel ces dernières, tout en continuant d'exercer leur autorité sur les territoires non autonomes, permettraient aux Etats non administrants d'exercer une influence sur l'administration de ces territoires. La délégation de l'Inde n'a cessé de préconiser la conclusion d'accords particuliers et M. Rao cite l'exemple de l'accord qui a abouti au maintien de la République indienne dans le cadre du Commonwealth britannique. Il ne faut jamais reculer devant les formules nouvelles.

44. M. INGLES (Philippines) rappelle que sa délégation a déjà eu l'occasion de faire connaître son point de vue au Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, à sa session de 1951, et au cours de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale. De plus, le Gouvernement des Philippines a formulé des observations écrites qui figurent dans les documents A/AC.58/1 et A/AC.58/1/Add.4. Dans ce dernier document, le Gouvernement des Philippines, s'appuyant sur les travaux préparatoires de San-Francisco, rejette la thèse du Gouvernement belge suivant laquelle le Chapitre XI de la Charte s'applique aux groupes minoritaires moins développés qui habitent sur le territoire métropolitain d'un Etat Membre. La délégation des Philippines a cité des extraits du compte rendu de la onzième séance du Comité II/4 de la Conférence de San-Francisco, pour prouver que le Chapitre XI ne s'applique qu'aux territoires non autonomes. M. Inglès tient cependant à répondre aux observations du représentant de la Belgique qui, parlant des tribus prétendument sauvages de l'île de Luzon, a dit qu'elles étaient plus arriérées que les Congolais. Or, ces tribus avaient une civilisation à elles bien avant la création de l'Etat belge. Leurs méthodes de culture du riz sur les terrasses s'élevant à pic des vallées jusqu'au sommet des montagnes s'avèrent, maintenant encore, des merveilles d'ingéniosité.

¹ United Nations Conference on International Organization, Committee II/4, May 31, 1945, Volume 69.

² Voir les Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, septième session, Commission politique spéciale, 13ème séance.

45. Qu'ils soient païens, chrétiens ou musulmans, les Philippins constituent une seule race, et ils ont eu l'occasion de manifester leur solidarité au cours de la dernière guerre mondiale. En vertu de la Constitution de 1935, tous les citoyens philippins ont les mêmes droits, sans aucune distinction. Il n'existe notamment aucune distinction entre les chrétiens et les non-chrétiens. Un Moro de l'île de Mindanao fait partie du Sénat dont les membres sont élus au suffrage universel dans tout le pays. Les non-chrétiens élisent leurs représentants à la Chambre des députés, ainsi que leurs représentants aux organes régionaux et municipaux; il en est de même dans tout le reste du pays. Si les Congolais jouissaient des mêmes droits fondamentaux que les non-chrétiens philippins, ils seraient bien proches de l'autonomie complète dont il est question au Chapitre XI de la Charte.

46. Si les Philippines étaient tenues, par une convention internationale, de communiquer des renseignements sur leur situation intérieure, elles s'exécuteraient bien volontiers et n'hésiteraient pas notamment à fournir des renseignements sur leur progrès politique, car elles sont fières de leurs réalisations dans ce domaine.

47. Abordant ensuite le fond de la question, M. Inglès tient à répondre à certaines observations formulées par les représentants de l'Australie et du Royaume-Uni, qui ont estimé qu'il importait de définir d'abord les termes "territoires", "populations" et self-government. Au cours du débat général, le Gouvernement des Philippines a démontré que le Chapitre XI ne s'applique qu'aux populations dépendantes vivant dans les territoires dépendants.

48. Le représentant de l'Australie a insisté, d'autre part, au cours de la 272^{ème} séance, sur le fait que le mot "indépendance" ne figure pas dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte. A ce propos, M. Inglès cite un extrait d'une déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Australie à la Conférence de San-Francisco d'où il ressort que les dispositions relatives aux territoires non autonomes n'excluent pas la possibilité pour ces territoires d'accéder finalement à l'indépendance, qui est en fait la forme d'autonomie la plus haute et la meilleure. M. Inglès cite également une déclaration faite à l'époque par le représentant du Royaume-Uni qui avait estimé que le terme self-government n'exclut pas l'indépendance.

49. De son côté, le représentant des Etats-Unis avait déclaré à la onzième séance du Comité II/4 de la Conférence de San-Francisco que la Charte comporte quatre parties importantes intéressant les territoires non autonomes, à savoir le Préambule, qui énonce les principes fondamentaux de l'Organisation, le Chapitre I qui énonce les buts et principes généraux de l'Organisation, le Chapitre XI qui contient une déclaration de politique générale en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes et enfin le Chapitre XII relatif au régime international de tutelle. Le représentant des Etats-Unis avait ajouté que c'était dans le cadre de ces principes que devait se produire l'évolution des peuples vers l'autonomie complète, qui, finalement, les placerait sur un pied de souveraine égalité avec les autres nations. Ainsi donc, il est évident que, pour les Puissances administrantes elles-mêmes, l'expression self-government comprend l'idée d'indépendance. Les Puissances administrantes ne sauraient donc prétendre aujourd'hui que le mot "indépendance" n'a pas sa place dans la liste des facteurs parce qu'il n'a pas été explicitement mentionné dans le Chapitre XI.

50. Par ailleurs, M. Inglès fait observer que l'Article 73 de la Charte mentionne les populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore "complètement" elles-mêmes. On peut déduire sans hésitation de l'Article 73 que seule l'indépendance des territoires non autonomes peut libérer les Puissances administrantes des obligations qui leur incombent en vertu du Chapitre XI. Le représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande a d'ailleurs déclaré à la troisième séance de la Commission II de la Conférence de San-Francisco, le 20 juin 1945³, que pour les dominions du Commonwealth britannique, les mots self-government et indépendance sont synonymes.

51. Lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer à qui il appartient de décider si le Chapitre XI cesse de s'appliquer à un territoire particulier, il convient de rechercher d'abord quelles sont exactement les obligations qu'impose le Chapitre XI. Ces obligations ressortent clairement de l'Article 73. Pour sa part, le représentant de la France a déclaré, au cours de la 274^{ème} séance, que seul l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte imposait des obligations aux Puissances administrantes. M. Inglès souligne à ce propos que dans l'Article 73 de la Charte les Puissances administrantes ont accepté comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser la prospérité des populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Il existe d'ailleurs une similitude entre les obligations qu'impose le Chapitre XI de la Charte et l'article 22 du Pacte de la Société des Nations. Seulement les modalités d'application de l'article 22 du Pacte correspondent plus étroitement aux dispositions des Chapitres XII et XIII de la Charte et aux Accords de tutelle qu'aux dispositions de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Mais les obligations que suppose la "mission sacrée" confèrent aux territoires non autonomes à qui s'appliquent le Chapitre XI, tout comme aux territoires jadis sans mandat, un statut international spécial qui ne saurait être modifié unilatéralement par les Puissances administrantes sans le consentement des Nations Unies, ainsi qu'il ressort de l'avis consultatif de la Cour internationale de Justice sur le statut du Sud-Ouest africain⁴.

52. Certes, comme l'ont déclaré les Puissances administrantes, le Chapitre XI de la Charte constitue une déclaration unilatérale de leur part. Mais s'il en était ainsi au moment où cette déclaration a été faite, son incorporation dans la Charte lui donne désormais un caractère obligatoire. Il s'ensuit que tous les signataires de la Charte ont le droit et le devoir de veiller au respect des obligations qu'impose le Chapitre XI.

³ Voir Conférence des Nations Unies pour l'organisation internationale, II/16.

⁴ Voir Statut international du Sud-Ouest africain, Avis consultatif: C. I. J., Recueil 1950, p. 128.

53. Il est vrai que les Gouvernements de la France, de la Nouvelle-Zélande et des Etats-Unis ont formulé des réserves en transmettant des renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes qu'ils administrent. Ils ont déclaré qu'ils transmettaient ces renseignements sans préjudice de la définition du terme "territoire autonome" qui pourrait être donnée ultérieurement. Ce faisant, ils n'ont pas nié la compétence de l'Assemblée générale, mais ont, au contraire, indiqué qu'ils attendaient une définition de l'Assemblée générale.

54. Au sujet de la liste des facteurs soumis à l'examen de la Commission, M. Inglès ne peut que réitérer les déclarations que son gouvernement a faites dans l'exposé (A/AC.58/1/Add.4) qu'il a adressé au Secrétaire général en vertu de la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale. Le Gouvernement des Philippines estime que si l'on admet qu'il peut y avoir autonomie complète sans indépendance, rien ne s'oppose plus à ce que l'on établisse une classification de tous les degrés possibles d'autonomie en décidant arbitrairement que certains de ces degrés constituent une autonomie complète; autrement dit, on aurait la possibilité de bloquer à n'importe quel moment l'évolution d'un territoire vers l'indépendance. Dans l'esprit des auteurs de la Charte, il ne pouvait y avoir que deux cas possibles d'autonomie complète sans proclamation d'indépendance, à savoir le statut de dominion tel qu'il existe dans le Commonwealth britannique et la qualité de Membre des Nations Unies. Dans un cas comme dans l'autre, cette autonomie se distingue à peine de l'indépendance.

55. La délégation des Philippines ne peut donc accepter sans réserve le principe de l'association d'un territoire sur un pied d'égalité à d'autres parties de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Elle estime que l'union ou l'association ne peuvent être que la conséquence de l'indépendance ou d'un plébiscite où la population, ayant à choisir entre l'indépendance et l'association, se sera librement prononcée en faveur de cette dernière solution. La délégation des Philippines accepte la première partie de la liste des facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance, mais elle ne pourra accepter la deuxième partie que s'il est entendu que l'indépendance ou une complète liberté d'action sont une condition préalable de l'association à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Avec ces réserves, la délégation des Philippines approuve le projet de résolution en cours d'examen, qui exprime des idées qu'elle a elle-même soutenues.

56. M. SALAZAR (Pérou) rappelle que trois thèses différentes ont été exposées au cours des débats. Les délégations des démocraties populaires estiment que le facteur essentiel est le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Les Puissances administrantes prétendent que c'est à elles seules qu'il appartient de prendre une décision. Les délégations du troisième groupe estiment qu'il convient d'élaborer un ensemble de principes et de normes permettant de déterminer si un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie. M. Salazar considère que les deux premières thèses ne tiennent pas compte d'un nombre suffisant d'éléments. La première ne tient pas suffisamment compte du degré d'évolution économique, politique et social des territoires intéressés et la deuxième est partiale. D'autre part, la liste du Comité ad hoc présente certains défauts et, notamment, ne donne pas une définition satisfaisante de la notion d'indépendance. M. Salazar considère qu'il suffirait d'étudier les définitions données par des experts en la matière, et de choisir celle qui semble la plus complète, ou d'élaborer une nouvelle définition qui contienne les éléments essentiels des définitions étudiées.

57. La liste préparée par le Comité ad hoc est le résultat d'un effort méritoire, mais le Comité n'a pas disposé du temps nécessaire pour résoudre ce problème si complexe. La liste est incomplète et devrait être améliorée, mais elle n'en est pas moins utile en tant que travail préparatoire. L'élément temps ne doit pas intervenir lorsqu'il s'agit d'une question d'un intérêt aussi exceptionnel. C'est pourquoi les délégations du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine présentent conjointement une série d'amendements (A/C.4/L.234) au projet de résolution en cours d'examen, visant notamment à charger un nouveau comité de continuer l'étude du problème des facteurs afin d'établir une liste qui soit acceptable à la fois par les Puissances administrantes et par la majorité des autres gouvernements.

58. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) explique que le premier point de l'amendement commun de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou consiste à supprimer le deuxième considérant du projet de résolution. En effet, ce considérant découle du principe fondamental sur lequel repose le Chapitre XI de la Charte, et son contenu est implicite dans le premier considérant du projet de résolution. Le deuxième point de l'amendement consiste à rappeler la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale et constitue un lien nécessaire entre le préambule et le dispositif. Diverses délégations ayant formulé des objections quant à l'adoption par la Quatrième Commission de la liste préparée par le Comité ad hoc, les délégations de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou ont pensé qu'il serait préférable de se borner à prendre acte de cette liste. Tel est le but du troisième point de l'amendement commun. En ce qui concerne le quatrième point de cet amendement, M. De Marchena appelle l'attention de la Commission sur l'alinéa b du nouveau paragraphe 3 proposé. Les éléments spécifiés dans cet alinéa sont en rapport direct avec le facteur énoncé à l'alinéa 2 du paragraphe A de la deuxième partie de la liste, à savoir l'opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques. Il semble indispensable d'étudier les éléments qui garantissent cette liberté d'expression. M. De Marchena ajoute que les auteurs des amendements sont disposés à accueillir toutes les suggestions utiles que pourraient faire les membres de la Commission.

59. M. EGUIZABAL (Salvador) déclare que, de l'avis de sa délégation, la situation des territoires non autonomes est essentiellement provisoire. Tous ces territoires sont appelés à changer de statut rapidement, compte tenu, bien entendu, de la situation particulière dans laquelle ils se trouvent. D'ailleurs la situation de ces territoires ne relève plus exclusivement de la juridiction nationale des Etats métropolitains; elle pose des questions qui intéressent la communauté des nations. En effet, le Chapitre XI de la Charte contient des dispositions contractuelles de caractère multilatéral qui représentent une garantie donnée par les Nations Unies aux populations des territoires non autonomes. C'est grâce aux dispositions de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte que les Nations Unies sont mises au courant de l'évolution de ces territoires.

60. Le Gouvernement du Salvador appuiera toujours les mesures visant à assurer l'émancipation politique, économique et administrative des territoires non autonomes. Il a déjà adopté maintes fois cette attitude dans le passé, notamment à la IX^{ème} Conférence internationale américaine de Bogota, en 1948, et à la réunion préliminaire des Ministres des affaires étrangères des Etats d'Amérique centrale, tenue à San-Salvador en 1951, où il s'est prononcé en faveur de l'élimination du colonialisme en Amérique. Cette libération pourra s'effectuer par la reconnaissance de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance des peuples, ou tout au moins de l'autonomie complète, qui équivaut pratiquement à l'indépendance. Cette autonomie complète doit être accordée aux populations elles-mêmes et non pas aux gouvernements locaux constitués pour servir les intérêts de la métropole. En effet, dans ce dernier cas, l'autonomie ne serait qu'une façade destinée à masquer la continuation d'un régime colonial.

61. L'autonomie complète signifie essentiellement l'autonomie politique, dont découle logiquement l'autonomie économique, sociale, administrative et culturelle. Il est inadmissible que les Puissances administrantes se considèrent dégagées de l'obligation contenue dans l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte en ce qui concerne un territoire déterminé, sous prétexte qu'à leur avis le gouvernement de ce territoire jouit d'un certain degré d'autonomie dans les domaines social, économique et scolaire.

62. Contrairement à certains représentants, M. Eguizabal estime que l'absence de définition n'est pas un obstacle insurmontable. Bien au contraire, une définition présenterait des inconvénients; en effet, si parfaite qu'elle puisse être, elle ne pourra jamais être absolument rigoureuse et ne fera qu'établir des limitations et créer des problèmes d'interprétation. Il y a des notions qui sont immanentes et qui font partie de la conscience même des hommes et des peuples. La meilleure manière de les définir est de les mettre en pratique, de les rendre vivantes. La notion d'autonomie est issue du sentiment de la liberté, de l'indépendance qui, comme le sens de la justice, sont des attributs de l'âme humaine.

63. La délégation du Salvador ne saurait admettre que la faculté de décider si un territoire est devenu autonome appartient exclusivement à la Puissance administrante. Dans ce domaine, il est hors de doute que la décision appartient à la communauté internationale; malgré les efforts du Salvador et du Guatemala, l'Assemblée générale a éludé l'étude de cet aspect de la question, bien qu'il s'agisse d'un problème fondamental qui touche non seulement aux principes essentiels du droit international mais aussi à la vie même de millions d'êtres humains.

64. La délégation du Salvador considère que la liste de facteurs contenus dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc est acceptable. Elle est le résultat d'une étude laborieuse dont il convient de remercier le Comité. Toutefois, M. Eguizabal aurait préféré que les facteurs soient classés en trois catégories: facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire a accédé à l'indépendance, facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire s'est librement associé à la métropole ou à un autre pays, et facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire s'est uni à la métropole ou à un autre pays et en est devenu partie intégrante. Cette classification a été proposée par le Salvador et le Guatemala dans l'exposé qu'ils ont présenté en commun au Secrétaire général (A/AC.58/1/Add.3). Elle permettrait d'appliquer des critères qui seront moins susceptibles d'interprétations divergentes.

65. Les deux gouvernements ont également déclaré qu'ils jugeaient essentiel d'accorder aux populations non autonomes le droit de modifier, de leur propre gré, en toute liberté et d'une manière démocratique, le statut ou les liens qui peuvent les rattacher à l'ancienne métropole ou à tout autre pays. Ils ont également jugé indispensable de prévoir expressément, conformément au droit international, qu'aucun gouvernement métropolitain ne pourra décider de modifier le statut politique d'un territoire non autonome qui ferait l'objet d'une revendication d'un autre Etat ou serait la cause d'un différend avec un autre Etat, tant que la situation qui fait l'objet du litige n'aurait pas été réglée.

66. La délégation du Salvador appuiera volontiers le projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231), car la plupart des dispositions qu'il contient sont conformes à la position qu'elle a toujours soutenue.

Programme de travail

67. Le PRESIDENT rappelle que la Commission est saisie d'une demande d'audition du Bloc démocratique camerounais (A/C.4/219). Il propose d'inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour d'une prochaine séance.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

68. M. TAJIBNAPIS (Indonésie) rappelle qu'en vertu de la résolution 568 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale, la Commission devrait étudier la question de la cessation de la transmission, en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, de renseignements concernant les Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam. Il conviendrait d'attendre, pour aborder cette question, que le rapport du Comité ad hoc soit adopté. Aussi, propose-t-il à la Commission de discuter le point 6 de son ordre du jour, c'est-à-dire le rapport du Conseil de tutelle, avant le point 5.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

La séance est levée à 13 h. 55.

Lundi 17 novembre 1952, à 10 h. 30

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

	Page
Demande d'audition	187
Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234, A/C.4/L.235] (suite)	187

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Demande d'audition

1. Le PRESIDENT annonce que l'Union des chefs du Nord-Togo et le Parti togolais du progrès ont présenté une demande aux fins d'audition¹; puisqu'il n'y a pas d'opposition, cette requête sera distribuée aux membres de la Commission.

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234, A/C.4/L.235] (suite)

[Point 36*]

2. M. RIEMENS (Pays-Bas) déclare que le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (A/2178) apparaît sous une lumière différente si, au lieu de constituer une simple étude, il doit servir de guide pour les décisions futures de l'Assemblée générale. Or, c'est là une des idées maîtresses du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231).

3. Il pourrait être utile, comme le représentant du Royaume-Uni l'a dit, d'envisager la question de savoir comment ce projet de résolution s'appliquerait, s'il était adopté, à un cas particulier, par exemple à celui d'une grande île entourée d'un certain nombre d'îles plus petites et située quelque part au milieu de l'océan. M. Riemens part de l'hypothèse que ces îles imaginaires, qu'il va appeler les îles Alan Burns, ont été colonisées il y a trois cents ans environ et que leur population se compose d'Écossais, d'Irlandais, de Scandinaves et d'Africains, ainsi que d'un certain nombre d'Hindous, de quelques Chinois et de quelques Syriens. Depuis plus d'un siècle les habitants ont joui d'une certaine autonomie, le bénéfice d'institutions démocratiques a été étendu à toutes les classes de la population et le suffrage universel a été institué il y a quelques années. M. Riemens suppose en outre qu'après avoir examiné la question avec soin le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a décidé d'octroyer aux îles Alan Burns une autonomie complète. Il a pris cette décision après avoir procédé à des consultations étendues avec les habitants, par l'intermédiaire d'organes déjà existants, leur assemblée législative et leur conseil exécutif, et ces deux organes ont accueilli sa décision avec enthousiasme, parce qu'elle signifie qu'à l'avenir ils jouiront d'une autonomie complète dans toutes les questions intérieures. Un ordre en conseil a été signé à cet effet.

4. Or, si le projet de résolution dont la Commission est saisie était adopté, la Puissance administrante serait tenue de suivre les indications données dans la liste des facteurs, qui devrait lui servir de guide. Elle consulterait bien entendu le conseil exécutif des îles, car ce conseil est l'organe suprême chargé de représenter les intérêts des habitants, et le conseil passerait à l'examen de cette liste des facteurs.

5. Cette liste lui paraîtrait sans aucun doute étrange, car le Comité ad hoc a établi une liste des facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance, ainsi qu'une liste des facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à "une autre forme d'autonomie séparée", ce qui constitue une exception au cas de l'indépendance. Cependant, les membres du conseil exécutif viendraient finalement à bout de cette liste. Ils ne tiendraient pas compte des facteurs qui permettent de conclure à l'indépendance, car l'indépendance n'est pas réalisable pratiquement pour une région si petite, mais ils trouveraient que la deuxième partie de la liste s'applique, du moins partiellement, à leur cas. C'est en effet la seule partie qui puisse intéresser leurs îles, car ils ne tiennent pas à devenir une subdivision administrative du Royaume-Uni, ce qui signifierait pour eux renoncer à une grande partie de l'autonomie dont ils jouissent déjà depuis si longtemps.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

¹ Ultérieurement distribuée sous la cote A/C.4/220.

6. Les trois premiers facteurs ne seraient source d'aucune difficulté. Au contraire, en ce qui concerne les facteurs déterminant le statut international, les membres du conseil seraient sans doute très surpris de constater que l'aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies est un des facteurs. Les îles imaginaires dont il s'agit ne seraient certainement pas en mesure de verser une contribution à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou de faire face aux dépenses qu'entraîne l'envoi de représentants aux sessions de l'Organisation. D'autre part, depuis un certain temps un grand nombre d'Etats souverains attendent en vain d'être admis comme Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et aucun territoire non autonome n'en fait encore partie.

7. L'examen de ce cas hypothétique permet donc de conclure que la liste des facteurs est absolument inapplicable à un grand nombre de territoires qui sont encore non autonomes mais qui peuvent accéder à l'autonomie complète dans un avenir rapproché.

8. Le représentant de l'Inde a affirmé que deux possibilités seulement s'offraient aux territoires non autonomes qui voulaient accéder à l'autonomie : ou bien ils devaient devenir indépendants, ou bien la Puissance administrante devait en faire des Territoires sous tutelle. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique semble partager cette opinion. M. Riemens invite la Commission à se montrer plus réaliste. Ce serait une récompense étrange à accorder aux habitants d'un territoire qui a déjà fait des progrès considérables dans la voie d'une autonomie complète, que d'octroyer à leur territoire un statut politique moins avancé, en le plaçant sous la double tutelle de la Puissance administrante et du Conseil de tutelle. Il est difficile de comprendre pourquoi les membres de la Commission qui défendent cette opinion ont besoin d'une liste de facteurs, puisque le résultat de leur examen est déterminé d'avance. Qui plus est, le droit des habitants à décider eux-mêmes de leur sort perdrait tout son sens si en réalité on ne leur offrait que le choix entre l'indépendance et le statut de Territoire sous tutelle, alors qu'ils ne souhaitent ni l'une ni l'autre de ces solutions.

9. A la 273^{ème} séance, les représentants du Venezuela et de Cuba ont fait des déclarations qui comportaient un certain nombre d'idées auxquelles M. Riemens souscrit sans réserve, alors que certaines autres idées demandent à être éclaircies. Tout en reconnaissant qu'à défaut d'autonomie politique il ne peut y avoir d'autonomie réelle dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction, le représentant des Pays-Bas estime qu'il vaudrait mieux formuler cette idée de façon différente et dire qu'une véritable autonomie dans ces trois domaines ne peut exister que lorsqu'on a déjà octroyé à la population une autonomie assez vaste dans le domaine politique. En d'autres termes, l'autonomie politique constitue une condition préalable. On ne peut accorder l'autonomie dans certains domaines et la refuser dans d'autres. La portée de cette autonomie constitue une autre question et dépend de la définition que l'on donne au terme "autonomie complète", définition que l'on n'est pas encore parvenu à établir.

10. Dans le cas d'un territoire auquel on a accordé l'autonomie, dont le gouvernement a reçu l'autonomie politique et l'entière responsabilité dans toutes les affaires d'ordre intérieur, notamment en ce qui concerne les conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction, l'obligation imposée à la Puissance administrante de communiquer des renseignements relatifs à ces questions doit prendre fin, étant donné que la communication de ces renseignements ne présenterait plus d'intérêt pour les objectifs que vise l'ensemble de l'Article 73; en fait, il n'y aurait même plus personne qui puisse communiquer ces renseignements. La Puissance administrante ne serait plus en charge et ne disposerait plus elle-même des renseignements nécessaires, et elle devrait demander au gouvernement du territoire d'établir le rapport; or, il est peu probable que le gouvernement d'un territoire qui vient d'accéder à l'autonomie marque beaucoup d'empressement à présenter à l'Organisation des Nations Unies des rapports sur sa politique dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction et à se soumettre aux enquêtes de cette Organisation. Dans ces conditions, imposer la tutelle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies constituerait une parodie des intentions de l'Article 73 et équivaldrait à créer un nouveau type de colonialisme. Certains représentants semblent regretter que les territoires non autonomes soient moins nombreux en 1952 qu'ils ne l'étaient en 1946. Il semble que ces représentants soient par trop désireux de continuer à exercer un contrôle dont la nécessité ne se fait plus sentir.

11. Le représentant du Venezuela estime, puisque le territoire qui a accédé à l'autonomie est représenté à l'étranger par la Puissance administrante, que cette dernière est responsable de tous les actes dudit territoire et qu'elle pourra continuer à communiquer des renseignements relatifs aux conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction dans ce territoire. Cette déclaration semble par trop générale; représenter un territoire à l'étranger implique seulement la responsabilité de ses relations extérieures.

12. Le même représentant a en outre soutenu qu'en octroyant volontairement l'autonomie la Puissance administrante n'était nullement dispensée de présenter des rapports, étant donné que cette liberté pourrait être retirée ultérieurement. Cette éventualité paraît toutefois fort peu probable, sauf en cas de circonstances très extraordinaires. A supposer même que le fait se produise, il se passerait simplement, d'après l'Article 73, que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements serait remise en vigueur.

13. L'Article 73 a pour objet de favoriser la prospérité des habitants des territoires non autonomes, les rapports prévus au paragraphe e constituant l'un des moyens utilisés à cette fin. Il n'y a pas lieu de continuer à envoyer ces rapports lorsqu'ils cessent de servir à cette fin.

14. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution commun, le représentant des Pays-Bas n'a pas d'observations à présenter au sujet du premier considérant. Il estime toutefois que le deuxième considérant peut prêter à confusion, puisque, d'une part, il se réfère aux objectifs de l'ensemble du Chapitre XI et que, d'autre part, il modifie l'obligation visée à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, en la séparant de son contexte et en la plaçant sur le même plan que l'obligation générale visée par l'ensemble du chapitre. Ainsi qu'il l'a déjà dit, l'obligation de présenter un rapport ne constitue qu'un moyen utilisé à une fin précise et deviendra sans objet lorsque le terri-toire en question aura acquis l'autonomie dans les domaines visés par les rapports. C'est pourquoi le représentant des Pays-Bas ne pourra accepter ce considérant tel qu'il est rédigé.

15. En ce qui concerne le paragraphe 1 du dispositif, M. Riemens demande aux auteurs du projet de résolution si la liste des facteurs doit être considérée comme complète ou comme une simple énumération à laquelle d'autres facteurs pourraient venir s'ajouter lorsque la nécessité s'en fera sentir. Il ne peut pas considérer la présente liste comme complète; par exemple, ce que l'on appelle le troisième cas d'autonomie, sur lequel sa délégation a souvent appelé l'attention et dont une résolution [567 (VI)] adoptée par l'Assemblée générale à sa sixième session a dit qu'elle méritait un complément d'étude, ne figure pas dans la liste².

16. Toutefois, la principale objection de la délégation des Pays-Bas est la suivante; confier une lourde responsabilité nouvelle à l'Assemblée générale au moment précis où une large autonomie est accordée à un territoire équivaldrait à reconnaître à l'Assemblée générale le droit d'intervenir lorsqu'elle aurait le moins de raison de le faire, c'est-à-dire lorsqu'une partie essentielle des objectifs du Chapitre XI auraient été atteints.

17. M. Riemens ne présente pas d'objection au paragraphe 2 du dispositif, pourvu que ce soit la Puissance administrante, conjointement avec le gouvernement du territoire, et non l'Assemblée générale, qui prenne la décision finale en ce qui concerne l'autonomie. Il réserve la position de son gouvernement à cet égard.

18. Au sujet du paragraphe 4, ses observations sont semblables à celles qu'il a présentées sur le deuxième considérant. Tant que l'Assemblée générale n'aura pu donner une définition de l'autonomie, le paragraphe ne semble pas avoir de sens et, par conséquent, d'utilité. Puisque l'Assemblée générale n'a pas pu définir clairement la notion d'autonomie, il faut manifestement laisser à la Puissance administrante, conjointement avec le gouvernement du territoire, le soin d'apprécier la situation et de décider à quel moment le stade de l'autonomie complète est atteint.

19. M. Riemens demande aux auteurs du projet quelle est la signification qu'ils attachent à la dernière phrase du paragraphe 5. Il se demande si les mots "autres questions" se rapportent à des territoires visés par le Chapitre XI mais au sujet desquels aucun rapport n'a jusqu'à présent été communiqué, ou bien aux obligations d'un caractère plus général auxquelles le représentant de la Belgique et d'autres représentants ont fréquemment fait allusion.

20. Le représentant des Pays-Bas se verra obligé de voter contre le projet de résolution tel qu'il est rédigé. Il considère l'amendement au projet de résolution commun, présenté par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234), comme proposant une nette amélioration du texte et constituant un heureux compromis entre les vues opposées qui ont été exprimées au cours de la discussion.

21. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) dit qu'on a laissé entendre qu'une tentative était faite en vue d'imposer de nouvelles obligations aux Puissances administrantes en ce qui concerne la question des facteurs. Ce que l'on cherche, en réalité, c'est une formule qui puisse contribuer à la solution du problème.

22. La nécessité de dresser une liste des facteurs résulte du fait qu'au cours des dernières années le nombre des territoires non autonomes a diminué à une allure qui menace de retirer tout champ d'application au Chapitre XI. On n'aurait qu'à se féliciter de cette diminution si elle résultait de l'octroi de l'autonomie aux territoires en question, mais il n'en est pas ainsi. Dans la plupart des cas, la raison en est l'adoption unilatérale par la Puissance administrante intéressée du principe de la divisibilité de l'autonomie, en octroyant l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction, et en rendant ainsi les dispositions de l'Article 73 inapplicables au territoire, sans toutefois lui accorder l'autonomie politique. Il est manifeste que la majorité des membres de la Commission n'acceptent pas ce principe, parce que la Charte exige que l'autonomie soit complète dans tous les domaines et parce qu'il ne peut y avoir d'autonomie véritable si elle existe dans ces trois domaines seulement et non pas aussi dans le domaine politique, qui est le plus important.

23. Certains représentants ont également soutenu que l'indépendance ne serait pas l'objectif visé par le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Cette assertion se fonde apparemment sur le fait que le mot "indépendance" ne figure pas dans le texte du Chapitre XI. Néanmoins, en dépit des efforts que les Puissances administrantes ont déployés à San-Francisco pour faire omettre ce mot, ce chapitre tout entier est imprégné de la notion d'indépendance.

24. Lorsqu'un peuple doit choisir entre deux maux, il choisit naturellement le moindre, mais cela ne signifie pas que ce choix reflète ses véritables aspirations. Pour déterminer la véritable volonté d'un peuple, il faut lui offrir le choix entre l'indépendance réelle et absolue, et l'annexion ou l'incorporation à la métropole. Si le peuple en question choisit cette dernière solution, il sera évident que ce choix est l'expression de sa véritable volonté.

25. D'autres représentants ont soutenu la thèse que la délégation du Guatemala ne peut accepter, suivant laquelle il appartiendrait exclusivement à la Puissance administrante de décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas autonome. Les clauses contractuelles ne peuvent être subordonnées à une décision unilatérale de l'une des parties; or, l'Article 73 est une clause contractuelle.

26. Il n'y a pas de doute que l'on pourrait améliorer la liste des facteurs, mais en fait elle contient de nombreux éléments utiles. Certaines objections ont été élevées contre l'inclusion du facteur géographique. La délégation du Guatemala attache une grande importance à ce facteur non seulement parce qu'il détermine les rapports entre un territoire non autonome et la métropole dont il relève, mais aussi parce qu'il faut l'envisager du point de vue de la sécurité et des intérêts généraux de la région à laquelle appartient ce territoire. Pendant la dernière guerre, les États américains se sont beaucoup préoccupés des conséquences que les opérations militaires en Europe pourraient avoir sur les colonies et les possessions des pays européens en Amérique. C'est pourquoi ils ont signé la Convention relative à l'administration provisoire des colonies et possessions européennes en Amérique; aux termes de cette convention, ils étaient convenus, en raison de la situation difficile dans laquelle se trouvaient les Puissances administrantes, de se charger de l'administration des territoires qui pourraient devenir une menace contre la paix et la sécurité de l'Amérique du fait de l'occupation de la métropole par l'ennemi ou pour toute autre raison. Cette convention est toujours en vigueur.

² Voir le document A/2178, par. 5, D.

27. Le représentant du Salvador a mentionné un autre point important, le principe suivant lequel aucune Puissance administrante ne peut modifier unilatéralement le statut d'un territoire qui fait l'objet d'une revendication de la part d'un autre Etat, tant qu'un règlement ne sera pas intervenu.

28. En ce qui concerne le document présenté par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234), M. Mendoza ne peut accepter qu'une proposition tendant à supprimer presque tout le texte et à le remplacer par un autre texte soit considérée comme un amendement, et il réserve le droit de sa délégation de soulever cette question au moment du vote. Le représentant du Guatemala est disposé à accepter les paragraphes 2, 3 et 4 du dispositif tels qu'ils figurent dans ce document, si ces paragraphes sont destinés à être ajoutés aux paragraphes existants et non à les remplacer. Il y aurait lieu de faire figurer le mot "provisoirement" dans le texte des paragraphes 1 et 5, en ce qui concerne l'utilisation de la liste des facteurs et sans préjudice des nouvelles études dont elle fera l'objet.

29. M. FORSYTH (Australie) a deux observations à formuler en réponse au représentant des Philippines, qui a fait mention à la séance précédente de l'attitude adoptée par l'Australie à la Conférence de San-Francisco. Tout d'abord, l'Australie reconnaissait certainement à cette époque, et elle reconnaît toujours le principe de la tutelle qui veut que le progrès des peuples dépendants constitue une obligation et une mission sacrée. Ce principe général vaut pour tous les territoires dépendants, mais, en ce qui concerne les méthodes et les procédures à suivre pour atteindre cet objectif, la Charte établit une distinction très nette entre les Territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes. Deuxièmement, l'Australie avait proposé à San-Francisco³ que la surveillance soit exercée par un groupe d'experts et qu'une conférence coloniale détermine quels territoires seraient placés sous le régime de tutelle; ces propositions ayant été rejetées, il n'y a donc pas lieu de s'y référer dans la discussion qui est en cours devant la Quatrième Commission. La Charte a été adoptée sous sa forme actuelle et l'Australie s'est scrupuleusement acquittée des obligations qui en découlent pour elle.

30. Au sujet des mots "les Etats Membres qui ont ou qui assument la charge d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes", qui figurent au premier considérant du projet de résolution commun, M. Forsyth a noté l'observation du représentant de la Belgique qui a indiqué que les Membres des Nations Unies ne s'acquittent pas tous de l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, qu'ils ont acceptée en signant la Charte.

31. M. Forsyth s'associe entièrement à la déclaration faite par le représentant du Canada à la 273ème séance au sujet du deuxième considérant: il se peut que l'obligation, imposée par l'Article 73, e, de communiquer des renseignements sur les conditions économiques, sociales, et de l'instruction, prenne fin avant que le territoire s'administre complètement lui-même. De plus, M. Forsyth estime, comme le représentant des Etats-Unis, que l'autonomie n'est pas indivisible; il cite à ce sujet l'exemple de l'Etat de Victoria, en Australie, pleinement autonome dans certains domaines tels que celui de l'enseignement, mais qui, dans d'autres domaines, tels que ceux de la défense nationale et des affaires étrangères, dépend du Gouvernement fédéral.

32. Au XIXème siècle, l'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande, qui n'étaient pas considérées comme territoires non autonomes, s'administraient elles-mêmes à tous égards sauf pour la défense nationale et la politique étrangère; par la suite, elles ont obtenu l'autonomie en ces deux domaines. Le Samoa-Occidental paraît évoluer dans le même sens. Il est à remarquer que certains membres de la Commission ont une conception dynamique des Nations Unies, notamment du Chapitre XI de la Charte mais n'admettent pas la possibilité d'une évolution pour les territoires non autonomes.

33. Un certain nombre de contradictions analogues se sont fait jour pendant les débats de la Commission. Les délégations qui interprètent la Charte dans un sens dynamique insistent sur la nécessité de se guider sur l'esprit plutôt que sur la lettre. Mais quand le représentant de la Belgique propose, dans le même esprit, d'étendre les dispositions de l'Article 73, e, à tous les peuples qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement eux-mêmes, ces délégations se rétractent et déclarent la proposition irrecevable.

34. La Commission éviterait bien des difficultés si elle s'en tenait strictement à la lettre du Chapitre XI, qui consacre trois catégories de droits: premièrement, les droits des populations qui ne s'administrent pas elles-mêmes; deuxièmement, les droits et responsabilités des Puissances administrantes; troisièmement, le droit de l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'être informée des conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction dans les territoires non autonomes. En premier lieu, il semble que, si plusieurs membres de la Commission refusent de s'en tenir à l'interprétation stricte de ces droits, on doive imputer ce refus à leur manque de confiance dans la bonne foi des Puissances administrantes. Il ne suffit pas à ces délégations que les Puissances administrantes se soient acquittées de leur obligation de communiquer des renseignements; apparemment, elles voudraient imposer le contrôle de la Quatrième Commission en ce qui concerne les mesures prises pour donner effet aux dispositions du Chapitre XI. M. Forsyth condamne énergiquement cette attitude et rappelle le conseil donné par le représentant des Etats-Unis à la Commission politique spéciale, lorsqu'il a dit qu'il valait mieux éviter de prendre des décisions qui avaient toutes chances de ne pas aboutir et qu'il était préférable, si l'on voulait réaliser certains objectifs que l'on se proposait, de s'en remettre à la conscience des pays intéressés et à l'influence de l'opinion publique mondiale.

35. En deuxième lieu, certains représentants paraissent concevoir l'Organisation des Nations Unies comme un gouvernement mondial, qui devrait prendre en charge l'administration de tous les territoires non autonomes. Mais l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'est pas un gouvernement mondial; la Charte ne l'autorise pas à administrer des territoires non autonomes et elle ne serait du reste pas en mesure de le faire. Toute mesure "impérialiste" que la Quatrième Commission pourrait prendre pour arracher aux Puissances administrantes, que la Charte reconnaît, l'autorité qu'elles exercent sur les territoires non autonomes aboutirait, non pas à l'indépendance des peuples intéressés, mais à leur gouvernement par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et au chaos intégral. Aucune commission internationale composée de nombreux membres ne peut assumer les responsabilités que la majorité des membres de la Quatrième Commission semblent vouloir confier à cette dernière. Les populations des territoires non autonomes, surtout celles qui suivent de près les discussions de la Quatrième Commission, n'envisageraient certes pas avec confiance une telle mesure qui les priverait, au demeurant, de l'aide et des conseils que la Charte considère comme essentiels.

³ Voir Conférence des Nations Unies pour l'Organisation internationale, G/14/1.

36. En troisième lieu, une tendance se dessine au sein de la Commission en faveur de l'indépendance immédiate de toutes les populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore elles-mêmes. Les tenants de cette thèse semblent ignorer qu'elle contredit l'argument selon lequel l'Organisation des Nations Unies a des responsabilités dans ce domaine. On a suggéré qu'à défaut de l'indépendance, on pourrait envisager la tutelle, mais cette solution présenterait les mêmes défauts de rigidité qu'un contrôle direct international, sans compter que la Quatrième Commission a souvent montré qu'elle n'a que peu de confiance dans le Conseil de tutelle et le régime de tutelle. Il n'est pas exact de dire que le choix se limite à l'indépendance et à la tutelle, car la Charte, en mentionnant à l'alinéa 1, c, de l'Article 77, les "territoires volontairement placés sous ce régime [de tutelle] par les Etats responsables de leur administration", reconnaît explicitement une autre forme d'administration: le contrôle exercé par les Puissances administrantes. En fait, il existe encore une autre solution, la libre association au sein d'un ensemble gouvernemental autonome plus vaste.

37. On pourrait interpréter le troisième considérant comme exigeant des renseignements complets sur le progrès politique des territoires non autonomes, bien que cela soit absolument exclu aux termes de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. A cet égard, M. Forsyth rappelle la déclaration que le représentant du Danemark a faite à la séance précédente, lorsqu'il a dit que son pays fournirait à l'Organisation des renseignements sur toutes modifications apportées au statut des territoires qu'il gèrait, mais estimait qu'aucune mesure prise à ce sujet par ses organes constitutionnels n'était sujette à examen ou à révision par les Nations Unies.

38. Les mots "ayant examiné" par lesquels commence le quatrième considérant ne sont pas tout à fait conformes à la vérité, puisque la Commission n'a pas procédé à une étude détaillée du rapport du Comité ad hoc.

39. La présente liste des facteurs ne saurait, de l'avis de M. Forsyth, "servir utilement de guide", comme le prétend le cinquième considérant du projet de résolution, car l'on n'y trouve la définition d'aucun des termes essentiels. Les mots "tant à l'Assemblée générale qu'au Membre administrant intéressé" soulèvent l'ensemble de la question de compétence, dont la Commission devrait examiner tous les aspects au cours d'une discussion générale avant de prendre une décision quelle qu'elle soit. Si l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider du moment où les autorités responsables doivent cesser de communiquer des renseignements, elle est également compétente, en toute logique, pour décider des moments où ces autorités doivent commencer à communiquer ces renseignements, ce qui l'habiliterait à s'informer de la situation dans chaque Etat Membre du point de vue constitutionnel comme du point de vue des faits. Toute décision relative à la compétence serait prématurée à ce stade.

40. Le paragraphe 1 soulève lui aussi la question de la compétence; il est par conséquent inacceptable. En outre, M. Forsyth estime qu'il a déjà précisé d'une façon tout à fait claire qu'à son avis la liste des facteurs existante va se révéler un guide très peu sûr dans les difficultés juridiques et politiques à travers lesquels l'Assemblée générale devra se frayer un chemin pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non sa pleine autonomie.

41. M. Forsyth n'a pas d'objection sérieuse à formuler à l'égard du paragraphe 2, bien que ce dernier lui paraisse un peu plat.

42. Il s'élève contre l'idée implicite contenue dans le paragraphe 3, selon laquelle les Puissances administrantes pourraient utiliser la liste des facteurs pour empêcher les territoires non autonomes d'évoluer vers leur autonomie. Les Puissances administrantes sont liées par les obligations que le Chapitre XI leur impose et elles s'acquittent de ces obligations. M. Forsyth se demande pourquoi le mot "progressive" a été supprimé, par un corrigendum, du texte anglais primitif du paragraphe 3, où il figurait dans le membre de phrase "the progressive attainment of a full measure of self-government"; l'idée d'évolution progressive est cependant exprimée dans tout l'Article 73.

43. Son point de vue sur le paragraphe 4 est analogue à celui qu'il a déjà exprimé à propos du deuxième considérant. Il est tout à fait normal et conforme à l'Article 73 que, lorsqu'un certain degré d'évolution est atteint, les Puissances administrantes cessent de faire rapport sur des domaines dans lesquels le gouvernement du territoire a assumé une responsabilité complète. Ce stade peut être atteint avant que le territoire ait obtenu sa pleine autonomie dans tous les domaines. L'Assemblée générale ne devrait pas pour l'instant demander des rapports au gouvernement du territoire, car on peut concevoir que ce soit contraire aux désirs de ce gouvernement; une demande de ce genre serait une négation totale de l'autonomie.

44. Enfin, en ce qui concerne le paragraphe 5, M. Forsyth doute fortement qu'il convienne de recommander à l'Assemblée générale d'adopter la liste des facteurs sous sa forme actuelle.

45. Il y a beaucoup à dire en faveur des amendements présentés par les délégations de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou. Si ces amendements sont acceptables pour la majorité, M. Forsyth pourra peut-être voter en leur faveur, bien qu'il ait déjà souligné que les mots "autres éléments" soulèvent des questions extrêmement complètes qui n'entrent pas forcément toutes dans le cadre de l'étude envisagée.

* Le mot "progressive" ne figurait que dans le texte anglais.

46. En conclusion, M. Forsyth réserve l'attitude de son gouvernement à l'égard du projet de résolution commun, pour le cas où ce projet serait adopté.

47. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) déclare que les auteurs du projet de résolution commun ont constaté avec plaisir le ton objectif et l'esprit constructif des critiques qui ont été dirigées contre le projet par certaines des Puissances administrantes, ainsi que des réserves formulées à son égard par d'autres délégations. Les diverses réserves formulées et les amendements proposés semblent appeler des explications supplémentaires en ce qui concerne la portée du projet de résolution.

48. Le représentant de la République Dominicaine a souligné la nécessité de définir l'autonomie. Il est vrai, et cela va de soi, que l'autonomie, à l'exemple de l'agression, a besoin d'être définie. Toutefois, l'une et l'autre sont extrêmement difficiles à définir dans une situation sans cesse en évolution. Le problème est plus politique qu'académique, et il serait peu sage de la part de l'Organisation des Nations Unies de se lancer dans un débat théorique prolongé en laissant la difficulté pratique sans solution. Il est notoire qu'en Asie et en Afrique, la menace ne cesse de croître; la déception des habitants de certains territoires non autonomes pourrait bien être utilisée comme une arme contre les Puissances occidentales. La sécurité de l'Occident intéresse le Venezuela, qui préférerait que les forces militaires de ces Puissances ne gaspillent pas leur énergie à des tâches de police. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte est précisément destiné à empêcher les territoires non autonomes de devenir une menace contre la paix et la sécurité internationales. Il faut maintenir et renforcer la foi des peuples des territoires non autonomes dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies; tout ce que le Venezuela désire à cet égard est que les territoires non autonomes ne perdent pas confiance dans leurs administrateurs.

49. Il faut donner aux populations des territoires non autonomes l'assurance que l'Organisation ne peut accepter de considérer comme autonomes des territoires qui ne jouissent pas de l'autonomie dans tous les domaines, dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction et dans le domaine politique. Les représentants du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine sont d'avis que l'Organisation ne peut adopter cette position en l'absence d'une définition scientifique de l'autonomie. Or, l'Organisation n'a pas, jusqu'à présent, donné une définition officielle de l'agression, et pourtant aux mois de juin 1950 et de janvier 1951 elle a officiellement déclaré que les actes commis par les autorités de la Corée du Nord et le Gouvernement central du peuple de la République populaire de Chine constituaient une agression. L'Organisation n'a pas pu attendre qu'une définition scientifiquement parfaite de l'agression fût élaborée. Certes, la situation des territoires non autonomes n'est pas aussi grave que celle de la Corée. Il est cependant significatif que des questions qui, en temps normal, auraient été examinées à la Quatrième Commission soient actuellement renvoyées à la Première Commission. La Quatrième Commission examine les questions politiques qui ne constituent pas encore des cas d'urgence. La structure des Commissions de l'Assemblée générale et les objectifs qui leur sont assignés leur confèrent à toutes un caractère politique; cependant, ce qui rend la Première Commission différente des autres, c'est le degré d'urgence des problèmes qui lui sont confiés. La tâche de la Première Commission consiste à examiner des crises, alors que celle des autres Commissions consiste à empêcher ces crises de se produire. C'est l'objectif que vise le projet de résolution commun.

50. Le représentant d'Israël a objecté que la conclusion qui figure au paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution serait prématurée. Or, les mesures que les Puissances administrantes ont prises en se fondant sur une interprétation unilatérale et restrictive de la notion de "populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes", telle qu'elle figure au Chapitre XI de la Charte, le sont encore bien davantage. Les Puissances administrantes auraient agi plus sagement si elles avaient attendu qu'une série de facteurs aient été établis d'un commun accord ou qu'une interprétation satisfaisante de cette expression ait été élaborée.

51. Les conclusions énoncées au paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution ne sont pas uniquement celles des six auteurs de ce texte. A sa session de 1951, le Comité spécial chargé de l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, a reconnu que trois systèmes seulement permettaient à un territoire non autonome d'atteindre une autonomie complète. Lors de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, à Paris, la Sous-Commission 9 créée par la Quatrième Commission a fait sienne cette opinion; de plus, le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs a indiqué dans son rapport que les Puissances administrantes et les Puissances non administrantes étaient d'accord sur l'existence des trois systèmes suivants: l'indépendance, toute autre forme d'autonomie séparée, et l'union ou l'association, sur un pied d'égalité, à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Les progrès réalisés depuis 1951 n'ont porté que sur des points de détail d'importance secondaire. Il ne faut pas en conclure que la délégation du Venezuela s'oppose à ce que le Comité poursuive l'étude des facteurs, comme le recommande l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine; cependant on ne peut attendre les conclusions d'une discussion abstraite pour régler des problèmes concrets. On peut fort bien nommer un comité chargé de procéder à une étude scientifique et politique du problème de l'autonomie. On peut également prolonger le mandat du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs afin de lui permettre d'examiner la portée des facteurs relatifs aux considérations d'ordre géographique ou racial, ou les facteurs relatifs aux limitations volontaires de la souveraineté. Pendant ce temps, l'Organisation doit néanmoins agir.

52. La délégation du Venezuela ne peut comprendre les doutes qu'éprouvent les délégations d'Israël, du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine sur la compétence de l'Assemblée générale à établir un critère. Le représentant d'Israël a dit que ce critère ne servirait à rien si les Puissances administrantes ne l'acceptaient pas. Cependant, le cas n'est pas le même que celui du différend qui avait surgi au sujet de la prolongation du mandat du Comité des renseignements. Dans ce dernier cas, il s'agissait d'un système auquel la participation des Puissances administrantes était essentielle. Au contraire, le projet de résolution relatif aux facteurs constitue une expression technique d'opinion de la part de l'Organisation. L'Assemblée générale exprime son opinion par le vote affirmatif des deux tiers des membres présents et votants. L'opinion selon laquelle la Corée du Nord et la République populaire de Chine avaient commis une agression n'a pas été adoptée à l'unanimité; cependant, du point de vue juridique et du point de vue politique, cette opinion représente le jugement que l'Organisation a porté sur les événements de Corée.

53. L'opinion que l'Assemblée générale exprimera sur la question des facteurs n'élargira pas la portée du Chapitre XI. Il n'est pas demandé aux Puissances administrantes d'aller au-delà des engagements auxquels elles ont souscrit à l'origine. Le but visé est d'amener les Puissances administrantes à réfléchir et à renoncer à l'attitude négative qu'elles ont prise. En adoptant le projet de résolution, l'Assemblée générale ne fera que déclarer qu'à son avis l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction ne suffit pas pour relever les Puissances administrantes des obligations qu'elles ont contractées aux termes du Chapitre XI. En exprimant nettement cette opinion, l'Assemblée générale montrera que les Nations Unies ne considèrent pas qu'une semi-autonomie dispense les Puissances administrantes de se conformer aux obligations qu'elles ont contractées aux termes du Chapitre XI, et que la validité, sur le plan international, de toute décision de leur part de cesser la communication des renseignements, restera toujours douteuse. Il est peu probable que des Etats comme les Puissances administrantes, qui respectent le droit international et en favorisent le développement, veuillent s'opposer à l'opinion exprimée par la communauté internationale tout entière.

54. En outre, si l'on déniait aux Nations Unies le droit d'examiner si la décision prise par une Puissance administrante de cesser la communication des renseignements relatifs à un territoire non autonome est fondée, cela équivaldrait à permettre à l'une des parties à un accord d'interpréter seule cet accord. Le fait que les Nations Unies examinent la question ne signifie pas qu'elles s'arrogent le droit d'étudier les dispositions d'une législation nationale. Les Nations Unies ne peuvent déclarer à la population d'un territoire non autonome qu'elle n'est pas soumise à certaines lois métropolitaines pour la raison que, de l'avis d'un organe des Nations Unies, ces lois ne seraient pas équitables. Une telle attitude constituerait une violation flagrante des dispositions de l'alinéa 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. Toutefois, lorsque des lois métropolitaines ou des dispositions administratives sont d'un intérêt international, comme dans le cas de la reconnaissance de l'accession d'un territoire à l'autonomie, les Nations Unies sont fondées à examiner la documentation fournie à l'appui d'une demande faite en vue de cette reconnaissance. Tel est le sens dans lequel doit être compris et interprété le dernier considérant du projet de résolution et le paragraphe 1 de son dispositif. La délégation du Venezuela ne peut accepter l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine, qui tend à éliminer cet aspect du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet.

55. Le représentant des Etats-Unis a suggéré que les territoires non autonomes auxquels a été octroyée l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction peuvent ne pas désirer que les Puissances administrantes communiquent aux Nations Unies des renseignements sur ces questions. Le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution, qui reconnaît que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres, répond à cette éventualité. De plus, une Puissance administrante d'esprit progressif peut se réclamer du refus opposé par un territoire non autonome de communiquer des renseignements par l'intermédiaire de cette Puissance, pour demander que le territoire non autonome en question soit directement représenté au Comité des renseignements.

56. Le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution précise que ni la liste des facteurs ni la résolution elle-même ne doivent être interprétées comme constituant une critique des progrès qui ont pu être accomplis par un territoire vers l'autonomie, ou comme imposant certaines conditions aux territoires non autonomes. Tout au contraire, ce sont les Puissances administrantes qui doivent remplir ces conditions si elles désirent que la communauté internationale reconnaisse que leur tâche est terminée et qu'un territoire a atteint une complète autonomie.

57. Le projet de résolution approuve la liste des facteurs qui doivent servir de guide et ne la considère pas comme une liste complète de conditions à remplir. La liste des facteurs n'est, en effet, pas complète et certains des facteurs qui y figurent ne s'appliquent pas à tous les cas. Si le mot "Approuve" gêne certaines délégations, on pourrait lui substituer l'expression "Prend acte avec intérêt de", comme le propose l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine.

58. Le représentant de l'Indonésie a élevé une objection à l'égard du dernier membre de phrase du paragraphe 5 du dispositif, qui se lit : "soit à propos d'autres questions qui peuvent se poser touchant l'existence d'une obligation de transmettre des renseignements en vertu de cet article". Cette partie du texte est assez vague et la délégation du Venezuela ne s'oppose pas à la proposition de l'Indonésie qui tend à la supprimer. Cette suppression donnera également satisfaction à la délégation de l'Australie.

59. La délégation de l'URSS désire voir ajouter un membre de phrase à la fin du troisième considérant. Toutefois, les auteurs du projet de résolution ont surtout cherché à éviter de donner l'apparence d'une pression quelconque exercée sur les Puissances administrantes; puisque l'amendement de l'URSS impose un délai maximum et exige des renseignements relatifs aux textes constitutionnels, législatifs ou réglementaires, la délégation du Venezuela estime qu'il ne convient pas de l'incorporer dans le projet des six Puissances. Si la délégation de l'URSS insiste pour que son amendement soit mis aux voix, la délégation du Venezuela sera obligée de s'abstenir. Pour les mêmes raisons, elle devra s'abstenir sur l'amendement de la Pologne au paragraphe 2 du dispositif (A/C.4/L.235).

60. Le projet de résolution n'est pas dirigé contre les Puissances administrantes, mais contre le risque croissant de voir se transformer en une menace contre la paix et la sécurité internationales la naturelle impatience des populations des territoires non autonomes qui veulent pouvoir gérer leurs propres affaires. En réservant leur attitude, des Puissances administrantes telles que le Danemark, les Etats-Unis, la France, les Pays-Bas et le Royaume-Uni n'ont pas prêté aux auteurs du projet de résolution l'intention de jeter sur elles le discrédit. C'est là, tout au moins, un premier signe de compréhension mutuelle. La délégation du Venezuela est convaincue que des pays unis par des sentiments de profonde amitié et qui sont des alliés dans la lutte politique mondiale peuvent poursuivre leur collaboration malgré des divergences de vues. Les six Puissances et plus de trente-cinq pays représentés à la Quatrième Commission croient sincèrement que, quelque louables que soient les intentions des Puissances administrantes, la cessation de la communication de renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'autonomie politique ne contribuerait pas à assurer la sécurité de ces territoires, de la Puissance administrante intéressée ou du reste du monde.

61. M. LESCURE (Argentine) félicite le Comité ad hoc pour le travail qu'il a accompli et l'excellent rapport qu'il a élaboré. Il s'associe notamment aux déclarations des représentants du Venezuela, de Cuba, de l'Égypte et de l'Inde.

62. Il interprète le paragraphe 4 de la section A de la première partie de la liste des facteurs comme se référant uniquement à la liberté, pour le territoire, de participer à sa propre défense nationale, et non au maintien de bases militaires, qui pourrait impliquer une restriction de sa souveraineté.

63. Il partage l'opinion que le Comité ad hoc a exprimée au paragraphe 5, C, de son rapport, selon laquelle une énumération de facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'une indication, chaque cas particulier devant être tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres.

64. Certains représentants ont estimé qu'il y aurait lieu de définir le terme "autonomie" avant d'essayer d'énumérer les facteurs qui la constituent. On peut dire non seulement qu'une telle procédure semblerait absolument contraire à la logique, mais encore que pareille définition serait extrêmement dangereuse dans sa nature même. Une définition rigoureuse ne pourrait évidemment prévoir tous les cas imaginables et serait donc de nature à provoquer de sérieuses complications. A vrai dire, la Commission ne paraît unanime que sur un seul point, à savoir que la liste des facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'une indication et ne peut être considérée comme complète.

65. On a comparé les textes de l'Article 73, b, et de l'Article 76, b, de la Charte. De l'avis de M. Lescure, la différence entre les mots "de développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes" et les mots "favoriser... leur évolution progressive vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes ou l'indépendance" est due seulement au fait que le Chapitre XI a trait aux territoires non autonomes, alors que l'Article 76 figure dans le Chapitre XII qui a trait au régime international de tutelle. L'inclusion du mot "indépendance" à l'Article 76, b, n'implique pas que les auteurs de la Charte aient voulu établir une différence fondamentale entre les deux catégories de territoires; le moins qu'on puisse dire est que cette inclusion tend à élargir la portée de la Charte en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes. Le problème a fait l'objet d'une discussion prolongée à San-Francisco, où il y a eu accord sur le principe selon lequel la "capacité [des populations] de s'administrer elles-mêmes" (self-government) est l'objectif final. Certains représentants auraient voulu que l'indépendance soit mentionnée comme autre objectif du Chapitre XI de la Charte, mais cette idée a été rejetée, après qu'il a été expressément entendu que l'autonomie n'excluait aucunement l'accession éventuelle à l'indépendance.

66. L'Organisation interaméricaine a affirmé à de nombreuses reprises que l'autonomie constitue l'objectif final. A la neuvième Conférence interaméricaine, la résolution 33, relative aux colonies et aux territoires occupés d'Amérique latine, a déclaré que l'évolution historique de l'émancipation de l'Amérique ne sera pas achevée aussi longtemps que des peuples, des régions ou des territoires du continent américain seront soumis au régime colonial ou occupés par des pays non américains⁵. On peut étendre cette théorie à toutes les parties du monde dont les populations autochtones ont encore besoin de la protection des Nations Unies dans leur lutte pour l'autonomie. Le Gouvernement de l'Argentine tient à souligner qu'aucun gouvernement métropolitain n'est habilité à modifier le statut politique d'un territoire non autonome qui fait l'objet d'un différend avec un autre Etat.

67. M. Lescure s'adresse aux représentants du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine en leur demandant instamment d'accepter que leurs amendements viennent s'ajouter aux paragraphes pertinents du projet de résolution commun et non les remplacer. Il serait utile de poursuivre l'étude de la question des facteurs.

68. En terminant, M. Lescure annonce que le vote de sa délégation sera déterminé par les considérations qu'il vient d'exposer et il réserve le droit de sa délégation d'expliquer son vote le cas échéant.

69. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) dit qu'il est très difficile à sa délégation de comprendre comment, suivant une objection que l'on a présentée, l'Assemblée générale pourrait entrer en conflit avec la législation interne d'Etats souverains en adoptant le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.231. Les auteurs du projet de résolution ont pris particulièrement soin de ne rien mettre dans leur proposition qui soit contraire ou étranger à la lettre et à l'esprit de la Charte. La Charte ne peut être en conflit avec le droit interne, car elle a été ratifiée par les Parlements des divers Etats, qui ont contracté en la ratifiant des obligations précises envers la communauté internationale. Une obligation comme celle que les Puissances administrantes ont contractée aux termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte ne peut être résiliée unilatéralement et il est clair qu'il faut qu'il y ait un accord entre la communauté internationale et les Puissances administrantes avant que l'on puisse cesser de transmettre des renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes.

70. Cuba a fait valoir à plusieurs reprises que l'Article 73, e, de la Charte constitue un contrat entre les Puissances administrantes et l'Organisation des Nations Unies. A l'appui de cette thèse, M. Pérez Cisneros cite un passage de la déclaration prononcée au cours de la 216ème séance de la Quatrième Commission par le représentant de l'Uruguay qui a dit que l'organe qui doit représenter les Nations Unies ne peut être que l'Assemblée générale et qu'il est inadmissible que l'une des parties intéressées décide de façon unilatérale si un territoire déterminé a atteint l'indépendance ou l'autonomie. Le représentant de L'Uruguay a ajouté que c'est à l'Organisation des Nations Unies qu'il appartient d'examiner la situation dans chaque territoire pour déterminer si la population de ce territoire s'administre complètement elle-même ou non. On a énuméré un certain nombre de facteurs qui doivent servir de guide pour déterminer si un territoire est ou n'est pas autonome, mais il faut également décider quel organe, au nom de l'Assemblée générale, prendra cette décision dans chaque cas. Le représentant de l'Uruguay s'est déclaré convaincu que cet organe ne peut être que l'Assemblée générale. Il serait inadmissible que l'une des deux parties intéressées décide de façon unilatérale si un territoire déterminé a atteint l'indépendance ou la plénitude du "self-government".

⁵ Voir Organisation des Etats américains, Annales, vol. I, No 1, 1949, Washington, p. 137 et 138.

71. Il est également assez difficile à la délégation cubaine de comprendre pourquoi les adversaires du projet de résolution prétendent que le rôle de l'Assemblée générale doit se limiter à donner une définition du concept de "self-government" alors qu'ils savent bien et reconnaissent eux-mêmes qu'aucun facteur ni aucune combinaison de facteurs ne peuvent s'appliquer dans tous les cas. Il est précisé au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.231 que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Chaque cas devant être tranché selon ses mérites propres, l'approbation de la liste des facteurs en tant que guide ne devrait soulever aucune difficulté.

72. Le représentant d'Israël a dit que les Puissances administrantes rejettent unanimement la thèse de Cuba sur l'indivisibilité de l'autonomie. Or, cette thèse a été présentée d'abord par une Puissance administrante et le représentant des Pays-Bas vient de confirmer ce que sa délégation a dit sur ce point au cours de la sixième session. A la 242ème séance de la Quatrième Commission, le représentant des Pays-Bas a dit qu'il ne croyait pas que l'autonomie économique fût possible sans autonomie politique, et que l'autonomie était indivisible.

73. Les divers éléments du "self-government" sont fondus et confondus ensemble, comme le prouve la devise avec laquelle un grand Etat a lutté pour son indépendance: "pas d'imposition sans représentation". Cela montre à quel point les conditions économiques sont étroitement liées à la structure politique. L'autonomie n'est ni la somme ni la moyenne d'un certain nombre de facteurs, mais un vaste tout; parvenir à l'autonomie complète signifie parvenir à l'autonomie dans tous les domaines à la fois.

74. En ce qui concerne les Etats qui jouissent de l'autonomie au sein d'une fédération, dont a parlé le représentant de l'Australie, M. Pérez Cisneros fait observer que, dans les cas de cet ordre, l'intervention du gouvernement fédéral dans certains domaines est définie par la constitution et que cette constitution est la loi qui a été adoptée dans des conditions d'égalité par tous les Etats qui forment la fédération. D'ailleurs, tous les Etats membres de la fédération sont représentés au sein du gouvernement fédéral; par conséquent, l'intervention du gouvernement fédéral ne peut vraiment être considérée comme une intervention extérieure puisqu'elle a été, d'avance et librement, acceptée par tous.

75. Plusieurs représentants ont objecté au représentant de Cuba que la question est plutôt d'ordre politique que juridique. Il est exact que le problème de la définition des facteurs est un problème juridique et qu'il doit être abordé dans un esprit juridique. Mais ce n'est pas là le vrai problème à résoudre; le vrai problème est celui de la cessation de la communication des renseignements sur tels ou tels territoires; examiner des cas concrets pour déterminer si les territoires en question sont parvenus ou non à l'autonomie complète — qui est un statut politique — ne peut être qu'un problème avant tout politique. Pour prouver que l'application des facteurs ne donnerait pas toujours des résultats très nets, l'orateur rappelle qu'il y a eu, au cours de l'histoire, des cas où des pays ont été jugés complètement souverains et ont été admis officiellement dans la communauté des nations et, cependant, de par leur constitution même, ils ont pu subir, du moins dans certains cas et pour un certain temps, une intervention étrangère. Mais il y a eu du moins ce fait politique que constitue la reconnaissance de la souveraineté du pays par la communauté des nations.

76. Le PRESIDENT fait observer qu'en raison de l'heure tardive, M. Pérez Cisneros préférerait peut-être remettre à plus tard la suite de sa déclaration, si la Commission décidait de tenir une autre séance pendant l'après-midi.

Par 20 voix contre 12, la Commission décide de tenir sa 277ème séance l'après-midi à 15 heures.

77. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) accepte de poursuivre son intervention au cours de la séance de l'après-midi.

La séance est levée à 13 h. 10.

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234, A/C.4/L.235, A/C.4/L.236] (suite) 197

Président: Mr. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234, A/C.4/L.235, A/C.4/L.236] (suite)

[Point 36*]

1. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba), reprenant l'exposé qu'il avait commencé à la 276ème séance, dit que, si l'on essaie de définir l'expression "territoires dont les populations . . . s'administrent . . . complètement elles-mêmes" employée à l'Article 73 de la Charte sans tenir compte des circonstances politiques qui peuvent entourer certains cas ni des intentions des signataires de la Charte, on ne peut que la juger équivalente au terme "indépendance". Sur ce point, les Puissances non administrantes n'ont pas adopté une attitude intransigeante, car elles savaient que l'on créerait de grandes difficultés si l'on voulait donner à ce terme un sens trop exclusif. Elles s'efforcent au contraire de tenir compte de l'aspect pratique du problème. C'est ainsi que le Comité ad hoc, avec le vote affirmatif de ses membres représentant des Puissances non administrantes, a proposé dans son rapport (A/2178) divers éléments permettant d'interpréter le terme "territoires dont les populations . . . s'administrent . . . complètement elles-mêmes" au sens de l'indépendance ou d'autres formes d'autonomie ou de l'association du territoire avec des éléments constitutifs de la métropole ou un autre pays.

2. La solution du problème qui se pose aux Nations Unies réside dans les réponses aux deux questions suivantes: Quand une Puissance administrante est-elle libérée de l'obligation contractée en vertu de l'Article 73, e, à l'égard d'un territoire déterminé? Quand les Nations Unies sont-elles libérées de l'obligation, qui découle du même article, de recevoir des renseignements sur un territoire au sujet duquel elles en reçoivent actuellement? Les réponses dépendent de deux éléments: un élément doctrinal, l'interprétation à donner à l'expression "territoires dont les populations . . . s'administrent . . . complètement elles-mêmes" et un élément pratique, la nécessité pour les Nations Unies et la Puissance administrante intéressée de décider d'un commun accord que la transmission de renseignements sur un territoire peut cesser, la population de ce dernier s'administrant complètement elle-même.

3. L'élément doctrinal ne peut se définir avec une parfaite précision et l'Assemblée l'a reconnu dans le paragraphe 5 de l'introduction de l'annexe à sa résolution 567 (VI). Il est en effet très difficile de concevoir et de formuler une règle juridique dont l'application démontre automatiquement que la population d'un territoire donné s'administre désormais complètement elle-même. S'il est utile que les Nations Unies donnent des directives sur ce que devrait être une telle règle, ces directives ne peuvent permettre à elles seules de résoudre aucun problème concret, car l'évolution des territoires non autonomes prend des formes infiniment variées.

4. Il est évident que la délégation de Cuba souhaite voir diminuer progressivement la liste des territoires non autonomes; mais elle juge indispensable que chaque fois que le nom de l'un de ces territoires est rayé de la liste, l'Assemblée générale ait pu constater que cette suppression est motivée. M. Pérez Cisneros est convaincu que, dans le cas concrets qui se présenteront, il n'y aura aucune difficulté à parvenir à un accord entre la majorité des membres de l'Assemblée générale et les Puissances administrantes. C'est dans cet esprit qu'est rédigé le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231). En effet, chacun sait qu'il y a fort peu de territoires, et même d'Etats souverains, dont le statut répond à tous les facteurs établis. Ainsi, il faut avant tout éviter que les Puissances administrantes puissent estimer que les territoires doivent répondre à tous les facteurs, parce qu'alors elles ne pourraient presque jamais considérer que les populations de ces territoires s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

5. En réponse au représentant des Pays-Bas qui lui a fait observer que le premier considérant du projet de résolution mentionne uniquement l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 alors que le deuxième considérant mentionne le Chapitre XI dans son ensemble, le représentant de Cuba déclare que tant qu'il s'agit de la transmission des renseignements et des effets de ces renseignements, les réserves de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 sont légitimes, mais pour que puisse cesser la transmission des renseignements au sujet d'un territoire donné, il faut que ce territoire sorte de la catégorie des territoires non autonomes et entre dans celle des territoires dont les populations s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes, et qu'il faut donc examiner s'il a atteint tous les objectifs du Chapitre XI, et notamment les objectifs politiques. Il est évident que l'Article 73, e, ne peut jamais être en contradiction avec le chapitre dont il fait partie, car les diverses parties de la Charte doivent s'interpréter dans le cadre de l'ensemble du texte. En passant, le représentant de Cuba signale que le terme "autonomie" doit être évité dans ce contexte, car il peut prêter à des malentendus; c'est l'expression de la Charte "territoires dont les populations . . . s'administrent . . . complètement elles-mêmes" qu'il faut employer; de nombreux juristes spécialistes du droit international, comme par exemple le professeur Georges Scelle, assimilent parfois le terme "autonomie" au "statut colonial"; c'est ainsi que le juriste en question, en parlant des colonies qui sont et demeurent des colonies au sens classique du terme, dit qu'elles peuvent avoir un "statut de décentralisation ou d'autonomie"¹; ce n'est certainement pas dans ce sens qu'il faut interpréter le Chapitre XI.

6. En ce qui concerne l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234), M. Pérez Cisneros demande aux représentants de ces deux pays s'ils accepteraient que les nouveaux paragraphes qu'ils proposent soient ajoutés au projet de résolution commun au lieu d'en remplacer certains paragraphes. Il y aurait avantage à présenter un texte unique.

7. En réponse au représentant de l'Australie qui a fait observer que le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun ne contenait pas ce mot "progressive" pour qualifier l'expression "autonomie complète", le représentant de Cuba fait observer que la Charte, en effet, emploie parfois ce qualificatif, mais seulement dans les cas où le Chapitre XI s'applique encore aux territoires en question; pour que ces territoires échappent aux dispositions de ce chapitre, cas envisagé dans le projet de résolution, leurs populations doivent s'administrer complètement elles-mêmes. Il est par conséquent logique de ne pas employer le qualificatif "progressive" dans ce contexte.

8. La délégation de Cuba désire que la Commission parvienne à un accord qui ne soit pas le résultat d'un compromis mais d'une reconnaissance en toute bonne foi de la situation concrète à régler. Un tel accord serait un important facteur de paix.

9. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) déclare que, de l'avis de sa délégation, le projet de résolution commun n'est pas parfait mais contient plusieurs éléments positifs importants. Il réitère les obligations contractées par les Puissances administrantes, qui sont d'une grande importance pour l'avenir des territoires non autonomes, notamment l'obligation de transmettre des renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte jusqu'à ce que ces territoires aient acquis leur autonomie. La délégation de la Pologne a déjà parlé en ces termes (264ème séance) au cours de la discussion générale sur la reconstitution du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux Territoires non autonomes; elle considère que le projet de résolution est conforme à son attitude, à cet égard, et elle apprécie l'esprit dans lequel il a été présenté. Le préambule tient dûment compte de la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale qui souligne que les Nations Unies doivent nécessairement être informées de toutes modifications qui pourraient intervenir dans le statut constitutionnel de l'un quelconque des territoires non autonomes. La majorité des délégations sont convaincues de la nécessité de disposer de tels renseignements pour déterminer si un territoire évolue vers l'indépendance ou si, au contraire, son évolution est freinée dans l'intérêt de la Puissance administrante.

10. La délégation de la Pologne appuie fermement l'amendement de la délégation de l'URSS (A/C.4/L.233) au troisième considérant du projet de résolution; cet amendement rendra le texte initial plus clair et plus explicite; de plus, il permettra de se rendre plus exactement compte des liens constitutionnels qui unissent un territoire à la métropole et d'éviter l'intégration du territoire dans la métropole, question qui a toujours préoccupé la délégation de la Pologne; il évitera que les Nations Unies ne se trouvent un jour devant un fait accompli. Quant à la liste des facteurs, au sujet desquels M. Winiewicz a formulé certaines réserves (274ème séance), il constate que le projet de résolution ne l'envisage que comme un guide à l'intention de l'Assemblée générale et des Puissances administrantes.

11. Le paragraphe 3 du dispositif contient une disposition très importante selon laquelle les facteurs ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes. Cette disposition est conforme au point de vue de la délégation de la Pologne qui estime que le problème doit être abordé d'une manière réaliste.

12. M. Winiewicz ne peut accepter l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine, car il supprimerait du projet des éléments que la délégation de la Pologne juge très importants.

13. La délégation polonaise propose un amendement (A/C.4/L.235) au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun. Cet amendement consiste à ajouter à la fin du paragraphe les mots "et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes." Ce droit est énoncé au paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte et il semble qu'il y ait lieu de le mentionner dans le projet de résolution.

14. En conclusion, M. Winiewicz déclare que sa délégation est disposée en principe à voter pour le projet de résolution commun.

15. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) juge indispensable de dissiper certains malentendus auxquels a donné lieu son intervention à la 274ème séance. Il estime qu'il ne s'est écarté en rien du problème en discussion. Il s'est borné à analyser les facteurs proposés et il a dit que la Belgique était prête à les accepter en bloc, tous méritant à divers degrés d'être pris en considération. Toutefois, il a appelé l'attention de la Commission — et il avait parfaitement le droit de le faire — sur les conséquences qu'impliquerait l'application de tel ou tel facteur. M. Ryckmans fait observer que la Charte parle non de "populations" mais de "territoires dont les populations . . ." Or, que faut-il pour qu'une région soit un territoire au sens de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte? Les facteurs font allusion à des territoires séparés du siège du gouvernement par des obstacles géographiques naturels. M. Ryckmans a cité l'exemple de populations vivant dans des régions considérées officiellement comme inaccessibles aux civilisés. Certains estiment que, pour qu'un territoire soit considéré comme séparé du siège du gouvernement, il faut qu'il le soit par une étendue de mer. M. Ryckmans a cité le cas d'une île. Pourquoi n'aurait-il pas le droit de mentionner de tels cas d'espèce?

¹ Voir Georges Scelle, Précis du droit de gens, Paris, 1932, Première partie, p. 145.

16. Un des facteurs proposés est le progrès politique de la population et sa participation à la vie nationale du territoire. M. Ryckmans avait le droit de citer le cas des populations sauvages reconnues comme telles dans des actes officiels. Il n'a rien fait d'autre qu'd'appliquer à des cas concrets les facteurs proposés et d'appeler l'attention sur les conséquences inéluctables de certains critères. Si la Commission adoptait ces critères, force lui serait de considérer les territoires auxquels ils s'appliquent comme relevant de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

17. Certains ont prétendu que M. Ryckmans aurait mis en cause le territoire national d'États souverains et aurait ainsi justifié une motion d'ordre. Or la Belgique est un État souverain tout comme les autres États Membres. Elle a examiné si les termes de la Charte s'appliquaient à des territoires placés sous sa souveraineté. Elle a décidé qu'il en était ainsi pour le Congo belge et elle n'y a vu aucune atteinte à sa souveraineté ou à sa dignité nationale. Elle demande seulement que certains États souverains procèdent, eux aussi, en ce qui les concerne, à cet examen. Il est vrai que les représentants de l'Indonésie et des Philippines ont déclaré que les travaux de San-Francisco montrent que le Chapitre XI de la Charte ne concerne pas les populations vivant à l'intérieur des frontières nationales, mais M. Ryckmans fait observer que cette idée n'est pas consignée dans la Charte. Le représentant de l'Indonésie a réfuté lui-même ce qu'il cherchait à prouver en rappelant que le Président du Comité II/4, invité à trancher la question, avait refusé de le faire en déclarant qu'elle était trop importante pour faire l'objet d'une décision présidentielle.

18. D'autre part, on invoque le terme "métropolitain" employé dans l'Article 74 de la Charte, pour conclure que le Chapitre XI ne s'applique qu'à des territoires autres que des territoires métropolitains. Or, que faut-il entendre par "territoire métropolitain"? C'est le territoire dominant par rapport au territoire dépendant, d'où il s'ensuit qu'il ne peut y avoir de territoires métropolitains quand il n'y a pas de territoires coloniaux. A la Quatrième Commission, il n'y a que huit membres qui ont des territoires métropolitains, ce sont les Puissances administrantes qui, en fournissant des renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73, reconnaissent que leur territoire national se compose d'un territoire métropolitain et de territoires dépendants. S'il en existe d'autres, ils n'ont pas respecté leurs obligations, puisqu'ils n'ont pas fourni de renseignements sur leurs dépendances; ce sont ceux-là mêmes qui invoquent de tels arguments pour se soustraire à leurs obligations qui accusent les Puissances administrantes de se livrer à des arguties juridiques!

19. La prétention de priver le représentant de la Belgique de son droit de libre discussion est d'autant plus arbitraire et osée qu'elle émane de délégations qui prétendent que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider si un territoire est autonome ou non. Dès l'instant où une délégation a le droit de demander l'inscription à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale de la question de savoir si le Surinam relève ou non de l'Article 73 de la Charte, de quel droit peut-on empêcher la délégation belge de demander à son tour que l'on étudie la question de savoir si la Somalie éthiopienne est dans une situation analogue?

20. Certains ont reproché à M. Ryckmans d'avoir parlé de territoires placés sous la souveraineté de leurs gouvernements et ont pris ses paroles pour des accusations. M. Ryckmans n'a voulu attaquer ni accuser personne. Il a simplement dit qu'aux yeux de son gouvernement les critères proposés semblent pouvoir s'appliquer à d'autres territoires que ceux au sujet desquels les Puissances administrantes transmettent des renseignements.

21. M. Ryckmans est fier d'être un vieux colonial. Il connaît le sens péjoratif que l'on donne à ce terme, mais pour lui ce fut un honneur que de consacrer sa carrière à la mission sacrée qu'a acceptée son pays. Parmi les grands coloniaux, certains noms méritent d'être mentionnés: Lyautey, qui n'a jamais pensé à la victoire sans penser à la paix qui allait suivre; Lugard, père de la Nigéria, créateur de ce qui devint une nation; le général Rondon, qui n'a jamais accepté une bataille contre les autochtones. M. Ryckmans ne songerait jamais à attaquer l'œuvre de cet homme, le service de protection des Indiens au Brésil, et il y cherche encore des leçons. Il rappelle qu'il a déjà dit à quel point les coloniaux rendent hommage au Gouvernement de l'Inde pour les efforts qu'il déploie en vue de relever les castes déshéritées. Tout comme les Puissance administrantes en Afrique noire, l'Inde doit lutter contre la pauvreté, l'ignorance et la routine de ces castes, mais aussi contre les préjugés séculaires des castes influentes. Voulant hâter la réforme, elle prend des mesures qui risquent d'être impopulaires et donne des privilèges à ceux qui étaient autrefois victimes des privilèges d'autrui. M. Ryckmans se garde de porter un jugement sur ces mesures, mais, lorsque le Premier Ministre de l'Inde propose aux Nagas une politique intégrée en disant qu'un esprit isolationniste serait désastreux dans le monde moderne, son langage est presque identique à celui du représentant de la France. Sans vouloir critiquer l'œuvre ainsi entreprise, M. Ryckmans estime qu'il a le droit de prétendre qu'à la lumière des critères élaborés par le Comité ad hoc, la question des Nagas mériterait, sur le plan de l'autonomie, de faire l'objet d'un examen sérieux.

22. Il n'a pas reproché au Libéria d'être une ancienne colonie. Il a dit simplement que les fondateurs du Libéria ont acquis des droits sur la côte du Bénin dans les mêmes conditions que les fondateurs des établissements néerlandais, danois, anglais ou français. Les nègres venant d'Amérique ont pénétré dans l'arrière-pays en utilisant les mêmes méthodes que les Anglais ou les Français dans les territoires voisins. Il n'a pas reproché aux fondateurs du Libéria d'avoir une langue, une culture et une religion différentes de celles des autochtones du pays qu'ils occupaient, mais la différence est aussi grande que celle qui existe entre les Français et les autochtones de la Côte-d'Ivoire. Il n'a pas davantage contesté la souveraineté du Libéria sur tout son territoire, que ce soit sur les tribus de l'intérieur ou sur les comtés civilisés de la côte.

23. De son côté, l'Indonésie a reproché au représentant de la Belgique d'avoir choisi des exemples parmi les petits pays. M. Ryckmans a choisi des exemples typiques, et il aurait pu en citer d'autres. Si l'on se reporte à l'exposé communiqué par le Gouvernement de la Belgique (A/AC.58/1), on peut voir qu'au nombre des territoires qui, de l'avis de ce gouvernement, méritent de faire l'objet d'un examen, figurent les régions habitées par des Esquimaux au Canada, par des Indiens au Canada et aux Etats-Unis, et par des noirs en Afrique du Sud. La délégation de la Belgique n'a jamais prétendu que toutes ces populations relevaient de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Elle a seulement dit qu'elles méritent de faire l'objet d'un examen, et elle a choisi les cas dans lesquels cet examen donnerait le plus probablement un résultat positif.

24. Le représentant de l'Inde a dit que la délégation de la Belgique se faisait le champion le plus obstiné de la théorie de la compétence nationale exclusive dans le domaine colonial. A cette théorie réactionnaire, il a opposé l'interprétation de plus en plus libérale de la Charte et il a rappelé les paroles du représentant de la Suède qui a déclaré que les territoires non autonomes relèvent en principe de la compétence des Etats souverains, mais qu'il faut reconnaître que le sort de ces territoires est devenu dans une certaine mesure une question d'intérêt international.

25. Or, la Belgique constate que, depuis plusieurs années, la majorité des Membres de l'Assemblée générale cherchent, par une interprétation unilatérale de la Charte, à étendre la protection internationale que cet instrument accorde à certaines populations, tout en s'efforçant, par une interprétation également unilatérale, de priver de nombreuses autres populations de cette protection dont les premières jouissent depuis un quart de siècle. Le représentant de l'Inde a dit également que le sort des territoires non autonomes suscitait l'intérêt croissant de la communauté internationale. Le contraire est vrai. Les débats à la Quatrième Commission viennent d'en faire la preuve la plus éclatante. Lorsque M. Ryckmans a demandé aux représentants d'Etats responsables de l'administration de certaines populations autochtones d'examiner si ces populations relevaient du Chapitre XI de la Charte, plusieurs délégations ont protesté, estimant qu'il empiétait sur les prérogatives de leurs gouvernements souverains.

26. De 1929 à 1934, la question du traitement des indigènes par un certain Etat souverain fut longuement débattue à la Société des Nations. Personne alors, pas même l'Etat en cause, n'a songé à contester le droit de l'accusateur ni le droit du Conseil de la Société des Nations de prendre des mesures. Cet Etat est maintenant Membre des Nations Unies; il n'a pas fourni de renseignements et il est un de ceux dont le représentant a protesté contre les déclarations de M. Ryckmans. Comment peut-on dire que la communauté internationale s'intéresse de plus en plus aux territoires non autonomes et comment peut-on accuser la Belgique d'être réactionnaire? La Belgique déplore que la sollicitude dont témoigne le Chapitre XI soit moindre que celle dont témoignait l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations. Cet article était clair et demandait à tous les Membres de s'engager à assurer un traitement équitable à toutes les populations de tous les territoires. La Belgique et sept autres nations ont reconnu que le Chapitre XI concerne des territoires qu'elles administrent. Les autres pays ont profité de l'ambiguïté de l'Article 73 pour se dérober, alors qu'ils ne l'auraient pas fait si l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations était en vigueur. Ils ont pu adopter cette attitude grâce à une interprétation restrictive de l'Article 73. Ces pays invoquent la souveraineté nationale quand il s'agit d'eux-mêmes; ils sont contre ce principe quand il s'agit des autres. La Belgique accepte le principe de la primauté des intérêts des autochtones, pour tous les autochtones, mais elle n'accepte pas la discrimination. M. Ryckmans a déjà signalé l'exemple de la Nouvelle-Zélande, qui a appliqué ce principe en faveur d'autochtones de son propre territoire national, dans les îles Cook et Tokelau, sans y voir aucune atteinte à sa souveraineté. La Belgique demande seulement que certains autres Etats fassent de même.

27. Ato AMDE MIKAEL (Ethiopie) rappelle, en réponse aux observations du représentant de la Belgique, que les territoires somalis ont fait partie de l'Ethiopie depuis de nombreux siècles. C'est seulement à la fin du XIX^e siècle que ces territoires ont été arrachés provisoirement à l'Ethiopie par les impérialistes européens. Il est donc impossible de comparer ces territoires avec les colonies africaines des pays européens.

28. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) estime que, pour combiner le projet de résolution commun avec l'amendement présenté par la République Dominicaine et le Pérou, il faut maintenir l'élimination du deuxième considérant, qui est déjà contenu implicitement dans le premier considérant; il convient également de modifier le paragraphe 5 du dispositif du projet de résolution afin de le mettre en harmonie avec le paragraphe 1 du dispositif de l'amendement. Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun ne peut être maintenu dans un texte refondu, car il contient une affirmation qui concerne le fond du problème et ne peut se concilier avec une invitation à poursuivre l'étude de la question des facteurs. Peut-être pourrait-on toutefois adopter ce paragraphe sous la forme d'une proposition distincte.

29. M. KHATTAK (Pakistan) estime que la liste établie par le Comité ad hoc (A/2178) constitue un guide utile, étant entendu que le cas de chaque territoire doit être examiné en fonction des circonstances qui lui sont propres.

30. Les débats de la Commission ont mis en lumière deux conceptions divergentes de la Charte, l'une statique, l'autre dynamique. Selon la première conception, la Charte est un document rigide et immuable. Selon la deuxième, la Charte doit évoluer en fonction des modifications de la situation internationale et elle constitue plutôt un point de départ qu'un but à atteindre. M. Khattak fait toutefois observer que les Puissances administrantes, qui adoptent à la Quatrième Commission une attitude rigide, prennent figure d'idéalistes au sein de la Commission politique.

31. Les Puissances administrantes refusent de reconnaître une compétence quelconque aux Nations Unies au sujet de l'avenir des territoires non autonomes, qu'elles considèrent comme une question purement interne. Le Pakistan estime au contraire que le bien-être et l'avenir des territoires non autonomes intéressent au premier chef l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Pour déterminer si un territoire a atteint le stade de l'autonomie complète, il ne suffit pas d'examiner les textes constitutionnels. Il faut encore apprécier la sincérité des intentions des Puissances administrantes et c'est là une question qu'aucune liste de facteurs ne permettra de trancher.

32. C'est parce que le cas des colonies administrées par des peuples dont la langue, la culture et la religion sont différentes est absolument distinct du cas des régions métropolitaines que les auteurs de la Charte ont consacré aux territoires non autonomes un chapitre distinct. L'Organisation ne peut relever une Puissance administrante de l'obligation de transmettre les renseignements prévus par l'Article 73, e, que lorsqu'elle a acquis la conviction que le territoire en question peut devenir Membre des Nations Unies, et l'admission aux Nations Unies doit précéder la cessation de la transmission des renseignements.

33. Le Pakistan votera pour le projet de résolution commun.

34. M. LOPEZ VILLAMIL (Honduras) rappelle que le Chapitre XI de la Charte fait partie du droit international positif et que les Puissances administrantes ont assumé, aux termes de l'Article 73, certaines obligations précises d'ordre juridique.

35. Certaines Puissances administrantes semblent oublier la portée exacte du Chapitre XI, tout comme le représentant de la Belgique semble oublier que son pays a été autrefois une colonie espagnole. En soulevant hors de propos des questions qui ont trait aux Etats souverains, ce représentant a uniquement pour but de détourner l'attention de la Commission du point en discussion. Certes, il existe dans certains pays d'Amérique latine des populations dont le niveau de civilisation est inférieur, mais elles vivent sur le territoire d'Etats souverains et jouissent de droits égaux à ceux des autres habitants de ces pays. M. Villamil rappelle qu'en Amérique latine beaucoup de personnes sont fières d'avoir du sang indien dans les veines et que la discrimination raciale y est inconnue.

36. Si la Commission adoptait le point de vue des Puissances administrantes, qui prétendent être seules juges du moment où elles peuvent cesser de transmettre des renseignements sur chaque territoire, elle ne ferait qu'entériner le colonialisme. Or, même si l'Organisation n'existait pas, nul ne pourrait arrêter la marche de l'histoire et la lutte des peuples asservis pour leur liberté et leur indépendance.

37. Le représentant du Honduras rappelle également que l'Amérique centrale, même après s'être libérée du joug espagnol, a continué de faire l'objet des convoitises impérialistes de certaines Puissances européennes. C'est ainsi que le Royaume-Uni s'est illégalement emparé du territoire de Belize (Honduras britannique), qu'il occupe encore.

38. M. López Villamil retrace brièvement l'histoire du régime de tutelle, qui a succédé au régime des mandats institué par la Société des Nations; il montre que l'Article 73 constitue une norme d'ordre phénoménologique et non pas ontologique et que l'alinéa b de cet article impose aux Puissances administrantes certaines obligations de nature politique.

39. La délégation du Honduras votera pour le projet de résolution commun qui lui semble un texte très modéré. Elle estime que le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est d'une importance fondamentale en la matière et que ce principe comprend également le droit des peuples indépendants de disposer librement de leurs ressources naturelles.

40. Le texte présenté par la République Dominicaine et le Pérou constitue plutôt un projet de résolution distinct qu'un amendement. Le Honduras peut accepter la suppression du deuxième considérant du projet de résolution commun, mais ne voit aucune raison de modifier le paragraphe 1 du dispositif. Il peut accepter les paragraphes 2, 3 et 4 proposés par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine, à condition que ces paragraphes viennent s'ajouter au texte du projet de résolution commun au lieu de s'y substituer.

41. U THANT (Birmanie) n'a pas été convaincu par les arguments du représentant de la Belgique, qui ne concernent nullement la question en cause. Il reconnaît que dans son pays, comme dans la plupart des autres, se posent certaines problèmes relatifs à une minorité. Toutefois, l'immense majorité des Karens eux-mêmes collaborent sans réserve avec le Gouvernement birman dans ses efforts pour stabiliser l'indépendance encore récente de la Birmanie. Les observations formulées par le représentant de la Belgique au sujet d'un pays pleinement indépendant sont absolument hors de propos.

42. La Birmanie estime acceptables les modifications que le Pérou et la République Dominicaine proposent d'apporter au préambule du projet de résolution commun, mais elle ne peut accepter la modification proposée au paragraphe 1 du dispositif, car elle estime que la liste des facteurs établie par le Comité ad hoc peut constituer un guide utile afin de déterminer si un territoire est devenu complètement autonome. Il serait d'ailleurs impossible d'établir une liste absolument complète des facteurs en question.

43. La Birmanie peut accepter les paragraphes 2, 3 et 4 proposés dans l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine à condition qu'ils s'ajoutent aux paragraphes correspondants du projet de résolution commun au lieu de les remplacer. Dans ce dernier cas il conviendrait de mettre les paragraphes 1 et 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution en harmonie avec les paragraphes de l'amendement.

44. Enfin, la Birmanie votera pour l'amendement de l'URSS qui a pour effet de renforcer le texte primitif et pour l'amendement de la Pologne qui rappelle utilement l'importance du principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

45. M. AGUIRRE (Uruguay) rend hommage aux sentiments élevés qui ont inspiré leurs auteurs du projet de résolution commun. Néanmoins, tout en partageant entièrement le point de vue des auteurs quant aux objectifs à atteindre, la délégation de l'Uruguay estime que le projet de résolution va trop loin en considérant comme réglés certains problèmes qui font l'objet de divergences de vues fondamentales.

46. En effet, le deuxième considérant fait état des objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte alors que ces objectifs sont diversement interprétés non seulement par les parties intéressées, mais encore par des théoriciens du droit international. Il serait fâcheux de vouloir interpréter d'une manière particulière les dispositions du Chapitre XI avant que l'Organisation des Nations Unies elle-même se soit explicitement prononcée sur ce point. Si l'on veut accomplir œuvre utile, il faut s'appuyer sur des éléments juridiques solides.

47. Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif contient la même erreur puisqu'il y est question de la capacité de la population de s'administrer complètement elle-même alors que ce terme n'a pas encore fait l'objet d'une interprétation précise de la part de l'Organisation.

48. La délégation de l'Uruguay pourrait donc accorder son appui au projet de résolution commun si l'on en supprimait les deux paragraphes qu'elle critique. En outre, il conviendrait d'incorporer dans le projet commun les amendements du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine.

49. M. ULLRICH (Tchécoslovaquie) déclare que les Puissances administrantes tentent d'attacher à l'Article 73 de la Charte une signification analogue à celle des Articles 22 et 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations; elles prétendent notamment qu'elles sont seules compétentes pour décider si un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie complète. De plus, elles appliquent cette théorie et, contrairement aux dispositions de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, elles cessent de transmettre des renseignements au sujet de certains territoires.

50. L'attitude des Puissances administrantes, qui prétendent avoir seules la responsabilité des territoires non autonomes, est contraire non seulement au droit international mais encore aux dispositions mêmes de la Charte. En effet, le Chapitre XI énonce des principes et impose des obligations qui ont force de loi pour tous les Membres de l'Organisation. Les Membres non administrants ont donc le droit et le devoir de veiller à ce que les dispositions du Chapitre XI soient respectées.

51. Le Chapitre XI ne se borne pas à énoncer les principes suivant lesquels les territoires non autonomes doivent être administrés ainsi que les objectifs à atteindre; l'Article 73, e, impose également des obligations précises aux Puissances administrantes. Il est évident que les droits et les obligations que prévoit le Chapitre XI ne revêtent un caractère obligatoire que jusqu'au moment où un territoire non autonome accède à l'autonomie complète. Il en résulte que, tôt ou tard, l'Organisation des Nations Unies devra se prononcer sur la question de savoir si un territoire déterminé a accédé à l'autonomie complète. C'est d'ailleurs sur ce principe que reposent les résolutions 222 (III) et 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale. Il en résulte également que la décision sur le point de savoir si un territoire relève de l'Article 73 de la Charte appartient non seulement aux

Puissances administrantes mais également aux autres Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Seule l'Assemblée générale est habilitée à se prononcer sur le commencement et la cessation de la transmission de renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. L'Assemblée générale ne peut accepter qu'il soit mis fin à la transmission de renseignements que si elle est convaincue que le territoire intéressé a accédé à l'indépendance, c'est-à-dire si la population de ce territoire dispose entièrement des pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire.

52. C'est à la lumière de ces considérations qu'il faut examiner les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Or, tels qu'ils sont actuellement énumérés, ces critères offrent aux Puissances administrantes la faculté de cesser de transmettre des renseignements au sujet de certains territoires sous prétexte que ces derniers ont pratiquement accédé à l'autonomie.

53. Malgré ses lacunes, le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs constitue un pas en avant, mais le travail de ce Comité serait vain si l'Assemblée générale ne possédait pas les données nécessaires et notamment les renseignements que les Puissances administrantes sont tenues de transmettre en vertu de la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale.

54. Pour les raisons qu'elle vient d'indiquer, la délégation de la Tchécoslovaquie votera pour tous projets de résolution et tous amendements s'élevant contre la cessation arbitraire de la transmission de renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes et tendant à atteindre les objectifs de la Charte.

55. M. ARAOZ (Bolivie) ne tient pas à répéter les arguments qui ont déjà été avancés par un grand nombre de délégations.

56. Il exprime sa satisfaction à l'égard des travaux effectués par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs et il souligne que, de l'avis même du Comité, une énumération de facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'une indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même. Il est évident que c'est à la lumière de l'expérience que l'on pourra finalement énoncer les principes. C'est donc à juste titre que le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun reconnaît que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Il serait vain de vouloir définir dès à présent le terme "autonomie complète"; il est préférable de prendre comme point de départ certains facteurs essentiels, de réaliser des expériences pratiques et enfin d'élaborer les définitions en se fondant sur ces enseignements.

57. M. Aráoz estime d'autre part que l'on ne peut établir de distinction entre l'autonomie complète ou l'indépendance d'un territoire et son autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement. D'ailleurs, certains pays, tels que la Bolivie, ont accédé à l'indépendance politique avant d'avoir atteint l'autonomie économique.

58. La délégation de la Bolivie se prononce en faveur du projet de résolution commun ainsi que des amendements du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine; elle estime cependant qu'au lieu de se substituer à certaines parties du projet commun, ces amendements devraient être ajoutés à ce projet.

59. M. CALERO RODRIGUES (Brésil) estime que les déclarations faites par le représentant de la Belgique à la 274ème séance et à la présente séance révèlent une conception erronée de l'objectif principal de l'Article 73 de la Charte, notamment du paragraphe b de cet article. Le représentant de la Belgique a tenté d'établir un parallèle entre les obligations des Etats souverains à l'égard des éléments moins développés de leur population et les obligations des Puissances coloniales à l'égard des populations des territoires non autonomes; il faut apparemment en déduire qu le Gouvernement belge n'assume aucune obligation de caractère politique en ce qui concerne l'avenir du Congo belge. Il conviendrait que la Quatrième Commission prenne acte de cette attitude négative.

60. Par ailleurs, le représentant de la Belgique a parlé du général Rondon; M. Calero Rodrigues ne croit cependant pas que le général Rondon, Brésilien éminent, de sang indien, aimerait se voir comparer à certains colonialistes fameux.

61. La délégation du Brésil se prononce en faveur du projet de résolution commun qui aborde correctement le problème. En effet, tout en approuvant la liste de facteurs, elle reconnaît que ces derniers doivent servir de guide et que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Comme l'ont dit plusieurs orateurs, une liste de facteurs ne suffirait jamais à résoudre le problème, bien que le Comité ad hoc ait accompli un travail fort utile; il ne faut donc pas accorder à ces facteurs une valeur absolue.

62. La délégation du Brésil partage l'opinion exprimée par le représentant du Royaume-Uni (274ème séance) en ce qui concerne l'utilité du paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet commun; en effet, des facteurs sont des éléments de sauvegarde et il ne faudrait donc pas qu'ils fassent obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes. Toutefois, comme l'a dit le représentant de la Chine, la rédaction de ce paragraphe pourrait être améliorée.

63. Comme d'autres délégations, la délégation du Brésil estime que l'on pourrait difficilement s'opposer à l'adoption du deuxième considérant et du paragraphe 4 du dispositif, qui ne sont autre chose que des truismes. On peut même juger inutile le paragraphe 4 du dispositif, car l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement est une expression qui n'a pas de sens; il est évident que l'autonomie ne peut que signifier la capacité pour un peuple de gérer entièrement ses propres affaires.

64. Certes, la délégation du Brésil reconnaît qu'un territoire non autonome peut décider de s'associer avec l'Etat sous l'administration duquel il se trouvait auparavant; mais elle ne peut admettre que les Puissances administrantes se libèrent des obligations qu'impose l'Article 73, e, en se bornant à affirmer qu'elles ont transféré à un peuple non autonome l'entière responsabilité des questions économiques, sociales et de l'enseignement. En effet, la Charte ne prévoit pas d'autonomie limitée.

65. En outre, M. Calero Rodrigues partage l'opinion exprimée par le représentant de Cuba en ce qui concerne l'indivisibilité de l'autonomie; il ne peut admettre la thèse du représentant de la France suivant laquelle il existerait des territoires qui ne sont pas entièrement autonomes, mais qui ne sont plus non autonomes. Cette conception ne repose sur aucun fondement juridique. En vertu des dispositions du Chapitre XI, l'autonomie complète doit être atteinte avant que prenne fin la transmission des renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

66. M. FOURIE (Union Sud-Africaine) déclare que sa délégation ne peut accepter le deuxième considérant et le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun parce qu'ils font état du Chapitre XI, en termes ambigus.

67. Il fait observer à ce propos que le Chapitre XI de la Charte revêt deux aspects distincts. D'une part, il contient une déclaration unilatérale de la part des Puissances administrantes, déclaration qui s'étend au domaine politique; d'autre part, il impartit certaines obligations, lesquelles se limitent cependant à la transmission des renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e. On aurait donc tort, aux fins du Chapitre XI, de considérer comme des idées synonymes la capacité d'une population à s'administrer elle-même et l'indépendance d'un territoire sous forme d'entité internationale distincte ou en association avec d'autres entités, et de prétendre en conséquence que la capacité d'une population à s'administrer elle-même ne peut exister, au sens de l'Article 73, e, que dans l'indépendance.

68. M. Fourie tient à rappeler que ce sont les Puissances administrantes elles-mêmes qui ont décidé unilatéralement quels étaient les territoires au sujet desquels elles transmettraient des renseignements. Par conséquent, il est logique de conclure qu'elles sont également seules compétentes pour décider si certains de ces territoires ont accédé à l'autonomie, dans les divers domaines qui sont énumérés à l'Article 73, e.

69. La délégation de l'Union Sud-Africaine estime qu'il serait prématuré d'approuver dès à présent la liste de facteurs qui a été élaborée, comme le préconise le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun. En outre, le paragraphe 5 de ce dispositif tend à imposer aux Puissances administrantes des obligations qu'elles n'ont pas assumées en signant la Charte et à attribuer à l'Assemblée générale des fonctions qu'elle ne possède pas en vertu de la Charte.

70. Enfin, en ce qui concerne les amendements du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine, M. Fourie se prononce en faveur de l'idée d'un complément d'étude. Toutefois, il a des doutes quant à la signification et la portée de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 3 du dispositif que le Pérou et la République Dominicaine proposent de substituer au dispositif du projet commun.

71. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande à la délégation des Pays-Bas, à propos de l'amendement (A/C.4/L.236) soumis par celle-ci, si elle accepterait d'incorporer le nouveau paragraphe 4 qu'elle propose dans le paragraphe 3 proposé dans l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine. Le nouveau paragraphe 5 proposé par les Pays-Bas viendrait à la suite du paragraphe 4 proposé dans l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine.

72. M. RIEMENS (Pays-Bas) accepte la proposition du représentant de la République Dominicaine.

73. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) ne peut accepter les propositions des délégations du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine, notamment en ce qui concerne la suppression du deuxième considérant et du paragraphe 4 du dispositif. Toutefois, la délégation de Cuba voterait pour les amendements du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine s'ils venaient s'ajouter au projet de résolution commun.

74. M. LESCURE (Argentine) propose d'ajouter au projet de résolution commun les paragraphes du dispositif que le Pérou et la République Dominicaine ont proposé de substituer au dispositif de ce projet. Il présentera un amendement écrit dans ce sens.

La séance est levée à 18 h. 20.

Mardi 18 novembre 1952, à 10 h. 30

Siège permanent, New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234, A/C.4/L.235, A/C.4/L.236, A/C.4/L.237, A/C.4/L.238, A/C.4/L.239] (suite) 205

Président: M. Rodolfo MUNOZ (Argentine).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2178, A/C.4/L.231, A/C.4/L.233, A/C.4/L.234, A/C.4/L.235, A/C.4/L.236, A/C.4/L.237, A/C.4/L.238, A/C.4/L.239] (suite)

[Point 36*]

1. M. COCK (Colombie) dit que son pays considère le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes comme l'un des droits les plus sacrés. Chaque Etat a le droit de s'administrer comme il l'entend. C'est un principe du droit international que le seul facteur dont il faille tenir compte est la volonté des populations intéressées. Cependant, les populations de certains territoires ne se trouvent évidemment pas en mesure d'exercer leur droit de disposer d'elles-mêmes; c'est pourquoi la Charte leur accorde dans son Chapitre XI, un statut international particulier.

2. On a présenté un grand nombre de brillants arguments pour ou contre la liste des facteurs qui figure dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (A/2178). Toute énumération est, par essence, limitative; si la liste proposée est tenue pour complète, le paragraphe 5 du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231) limiterait la liberté d'action de l'Assemblée générale. On commettrait une grave erreur si l'on écartait définitivement la possibilité de tenir compte de facteurs nouveaux; une telle mesure semblerait, à vrai dire, contredire la réserve que l'on trouve au paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution. Toute liste limitative ne peut que mettre la confusion dans l'application de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; cela est d'autant plus évident qu'il ressort clairement du paragraphe 4 du projet de résolution — que l'on devrait, du reste, supprimer — que la notion d'autonomie n'est pas encore définie d'une façon assez précise.

3. La délégation colombienne est disposée à accepter la liste de facteurs que propose le rapport mais à titre d'indication, et à condition que cette liste ne lie par l'Assemblée générale. Point n'est besoin d'adopter une résolution à ce sujet. M. Cock ne voit pas d'inconvénient, toutefois, à ce que la Commission prenne acte de la liste de facteurs et qu'elle poursuive ses études dans ce domaine; elle devrait veiller toutefois à ne pas accentuer le caractère déjà limitatif de la liste. M. Cock votera donc en faveur des amendements présentés par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234), mais il se prononcera contre le nouveau texte qu'ils proposent pour le paragraphe 2.

4. L'amendement de la Pologne (A/C.4/L.235) et celui de l'URSS (A/C.4/L.233) n'apportent aucune importante modification de fond au projet primitif; les observations que la délégation colombienne a présentées à propos du projet de résolution s'appliquent donc également à ces deux amendements.

5. La délégation des Pays-Bas mérite des félicitations pour l'amendement constructif qu'elle a proposé (A/C.4/L.236); la délégation colombienne ne peut cependant, à son grand regret, considérer comme opportun d'adopter une telle proposition. En politique internationale, en effet, il faut toujours tenir compte de l'imprévu.

6. La délégation colombienne ne pourra pas non plus accorder sa voix au texte issu de la fusion du projet primitif avec les amendements de la République Dominicaine et du Pérou selon la formule proposée par la délégation de l'Argentine (A/C.4/L.237 et A/C.4/L.238).

7. M. MIKAOUÏ (Liban) déclare que les auteurs du projet de résolution commun ont exposé avec clarté des idées qui sont celles de sa propre délégation. Il votera en faveur du projet de résolution avec les amendements proposés par l'Argentine, sauf en ce qui concerne la proposition de supprimer le deuxième considérant.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

8. La délégation du Liban, qui a toujours défendu le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, est prête à voter pour l'amendement polonais. Elle votera aussi en faveur de l'amendement de l'URSS, qui reprend une formule déjà adoptée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies. M. Mikaoui ajoute qu'il parle également au nom de la délégation de l'Irak.

9. M. PONCE YEPEZ (Equateur) propose (A/C.4/L.239) d'ajouter à la fin de l'alinéa c du nouveau paragraphe 3 du dispositif proposé dans l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234, par. 4) les mots "aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte". Il demande que ce paragraphe 3 fasse l'objet d'un vote séparé.

10. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) appuie la demande en faveur d'un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 3, mais ni sa délégation ni celle du Pérou ne peuvent accepter l'amendement proposé par la délégation de l'Equateur à leur amendement.

11. Les deux délégations sont prêtes, toutefois, à faire place dans leur amendement aux deux sous-amendements proposés par les Pays-Bas.

12. Le PRESIDENT annonce qu'il mettra aux voix, paragraphe par paragraphe, le projet de résolution commun; les amendements à ce projet seront mis aux voix immédiatement avant le paragraphe auquel ils s'appliquent.

13. Il invite les membres de la Commission à se prononcer sur le premier considérant du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231).

14. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Danemark, dont le nom a été tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, France, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Luxembourg, Mexique, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Pakistan, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Suède, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Australie, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie.

Vote contre: néant.

Par 55 voix contre zéro, sans abstention, le premier considérant est adopté.

15. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le deuxième considérant du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231).

16. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par Cuba, dont le nom a été tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Norvège, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine.

Votent contre: Pays-Bas, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie.

S'abstiennent: Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Grèce, Israël, Luxembourg, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Pérou, Suède, Uruguay.

Par 36 voix contre 8, avec 11 abstentions, le deuxième considérant est adopté.

17. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) explique qu'il a voté contre le deuxième considérant parce que le texte renferme une inexactitude. L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au sujet d'un territoire donné prend fin dès qu'il accède à l'indépendance.

18. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement que l'URSS propose (A/C.4/L.233) d'apporter au troisième considérant du projet de résolution commun.

19. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Irak, dont le nom a été tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Irak, Liban, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Tchécoslovaquie, Inde, Indonésie, Iran.

Votent contre: Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie, Belgique, Canada, France.

S'abstiennent: Israël, Libéria, Nicaragua, Pérou, Thaïlande, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Venezuela, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras.

Par 19 voix contre 11, avec 25 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

20. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le troisième considérant, ainsi amendé.

21. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, dont le nom a été tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine.

Votent contre: Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie, Belgique, Canada, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande.

S'abstiennent: Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Colombie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Israël, Nicaragua, Norvège, Pérou, Suède, Thaïlande.

Par 35 voix contre 9, avec 11 abstentions, le troisième considérant amendé, est adopté.

Par 52 voix contre zéro, avec 2 abstentions, le quatrième considérant est adopté.

Par 41 voix contre 12, avec une abstention, le cinquième considérant est adopté.

22. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le considérant que les délégations du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine proposent d'ajouter au préambule (A/C.4/L.234, par. 2)

Par 36 voix contre zéro, avec 17 abstentions, ce considérant est adopté et devient le sixième considérant.

23. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement (A/C.4/L.237, par. 2), que l'Argentine propose d'apporter au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun.

24. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la Norvège, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Pérou, Philippines, Thaïlande, Venezuela, Yougoslavie, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Iran, Israël, Liban, Mexique.

Votent contre: Australie, Belgique, France, Luxembourg.

S'abstiennent: Norvège, Pakistan, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Suède, Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Yémen, Afghanistan, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, Ethiopie, Grèce, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Libéria, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua.

Par 23 voix contre 4, avec 28 abstentions, cet amendement est adopté.

25. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le paragraphe 1 du dispositif (A/C.4/L.231) ainsi amendé.

26. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Egypte, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur.

Votent contre: France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, République Dominicaine.

S'abstiennent: Israël, Nicaragua, Uruguay.

Par 36 voix contre 16, avec 3 abstentions, le paragraphe 1 du dispositif amendé est adopté.

27. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) et M. SALAZAR (Pérou) retirent le paragraphe 3 de leur amendement (A/C.4/L.234) au projet de résolution commun.

28. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement de la Pologne (A/C.4/L.235) au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun.

29. M. KHALIDY (Irak) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Nicaragua, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Pakistan, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique.

Votent contre: Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Uruguay, Belgique, Canada, France, Luxembourg.

S'abstiennent: Nicaragua, Norvège, Suède, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande.

Par 39 voix contre 7, avec 9 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

Par 47 voix contre une, avec 6 abstentions, le paragraphe 2 amendé du dispositif du projet de résolution commun est adopté.

Par 49 voix contre une, avec 5 abstentions, le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun est adopté.

30. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) a voté contre le paragraphe 3 parce que sa délégation a maintenu sa proposition initiale qui figure dans l'amendement commun (A/C.4/L.234) et qui tendait à supprimer les paragraphes 2, 3, 4 et 5 du dispositif du projet de résolution.

31. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231).

32. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la Suède, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite.

Votent contre: Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Pérou.

S'abstiennent: Grèce, Israël.

Par 35 voix contre 18, avec 2 abstentions, le paragraphe 4 du dispositif est adopté.

33. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) a voté contre le paragraphe 4 du dispositif pour les mêmes motifs que ceux pour lesquels il a voté contre le paragraphe 3 et aussi parce que sa délégation estime qu'il faudrait définir les mots "s'administre complètement elle-même".

34. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le paragraphe 5 du dispositif du projet de résolution commun (A/C.4/L.231); le mot "provisoirement" y figure conformément à la proposition de la délégation argentine (A/C.4/L.238) et est accepté par les six auteurs du projet de résolution.

35. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la Birmanie, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil.

Votent contre: Canada, République Dominicaine, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie, Belgique.

S'abstiennent: Colombie, Israël, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Pérou, Suède, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

Par 38 voix contre 9, avec 8 abstentions, le paragraphe 5 amendé du dispositif est adopté.

36. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix, en tant que nouveau paragraphe, le paragraphe 2 du dispositif, proposé dans le point 4 de l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234).

Par 32 voix contre 6, avec 15 abstentions, ce paragraphe est adopté et devient le paragraphe 6 du dispositif du projet de résolution.

37. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie du paragraphe 3 du dispositif proposé dans le point 4 de l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234), complété par le texte du paragraphe 4 proposé par les Pays-Bas (A/C.4/L.236). Le texte mis aux voix se lira donc comme suit:

"Invite ledit comité à prendre notamment en considération la liste des facteurs (A/2178) arrêtée en 1952 par le Comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI), les communications faites par les gouvernements conformément à ladite résolution et à tenir compte, en outre, des autres éléments suivants:"

Par 33 voix contre zéro, avec 20 abstentions, le texte est adopté et devient la première partie du paragraphe 7 du dispositif du projet de résolution.

38. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'alinéa a du paragraphe 3 du dispositif qui figure dans le point 4 de l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234).

Par 20 voix contre 17, avec 4 abstentions, cet alinéa est adopté et devient l'alinéa a du paragraphe 7 du dispositif.

39. M. DJERDA (Yougoslavie) demande le vote par appel nominal sur l'alinéa b du paragraphe 3 du dispositif qui figure dans le point 4 de l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par les Pays-Bas dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Pakistan, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique.

Votent contre: Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Belgique, France, Luxembourg.

S'abstiennent: Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, Israël.

Par 39 voix contre 4, avec 12 abstentions, l'alinéa b est adopté et devient l'alinéa b du paragraphe 7 du dispositif.

40. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement de l'Equateur (A/C.4/L.239) à l'alinéa c du paragraphe 3 du dispositif, dans l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234, par. 4).

Par 14 voix contre zéro, avec 35 abstentions, cet amendement est adopté.

Par 39 voix contre une, avec 14 abstentions, l'alinéa c amendé du paragraphe 3 du dispositif est adopté et devient l'alinéa c du paragraphe 7 du dispositif.

Par 42 voix contre zéro avec 12 abstentions, l'ensemble du paragraphe 3 amendé du dispositif qui figure dans le point 4 de l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234) est adopté et devient le paragraphe 7 du dispositif.

Par 25 voix contre zéro, avec 27 abstentions, le paragraphe 5 du dispositif qui figure dans l'amendement des Pays-Bas (A/C.4/L.236) est adopté et devient le paragraphe 8 du dispositif.

41. M. KHALIDY (Irak) propose de remplacer les mots "deux semaines", qui figurent au paragraphe 4 du dispositif proposé dans le point 4 de l'amendement du Pérou et de la République Dominicaine (A/C.4/L.234), par les mots "au plus tard quatre semaines", afin de donner au Comité ad hoc le temps de terminer l'étude prévue.

42. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) et M. SALAZAR (Pérou) acceptent cette proposition.

Par 39 voix contre zéro avec 13 abstentions, le paragraphe, ainsi modifié, est adopté et devient le paragraphe 9 du dispositif.

43. M. GERIG (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) suggère qu'avant de voter sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution, la Commission demande au Secrétaire général d'établir une prévision des dépenses qu'entraînera l'adoption de ce projet de résolution.

44. M. FOURIE (Union Sud-Africaine) fait observer qu'aux termes de l'article 152 du règlement intérieur, l'Assemblée générale ne peut adopter en séance plénière aucune recommandation susceptible d'entraîner des dépenses sans qu'une prévision de dépenses ait été préparée par le Secrétaire général.

45. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) dit que le texte français de l'article 152 précise nettement qu'aucune commission ne peut recommander de résolution comportant engagement de dépenses à l'approbation de l'Assemblée générale sans que cette résolution soit accompagnée d'une prévision des dépenses préparée par le Secrétaire général.

46. Le PRESIDENT estime que cette question aurait dû être soulevée à un stade antérieur du débat.

47. M. KHALIDY (Irak) fait remarquer que l'adoption du projet de résolution n'entraînera aucune dépense. Les seules dépenses occasionnées par les décisions de l'ancien Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs ont été des frais minimes d'imprimerie peu élevés, dont l'Assemblée ne tient généralement pas compte.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.231) modifié.

L'appel commence par le Panama dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Equateur, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan.

Votent contre: Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Colombie, Danemark, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande.

S'abstiennent: Pérou, Uruguay, Canada, République Dominicaine, Grèce, Israël, Nicaragua, Norvège.

Par 34 voix contre 12, avec 8 abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution est adopté sous sa forme amendée.

48. Mme SKOTTSBERG-AHMAN (Suède) voudrait indiquer les raisons pour lesquelles sa délégation a voté contre le projet de résolution.

49. Le vote négatif de la délégation de la Suède ne doit pas être interprété comme une objection de principe contre les tentatives faites pour établir une liste des facteurs. A la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, la délégation suédoise a appuyé la décision prise de désigner un Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs étant entendu, comme il est expressément indiqué dans l'annexe à la résolution adoptée par l'Assemblée, que la tâche de l'Assemblée générale se bornerait à indiquer ces facteurs. Ce fait est indiqué encore plus nettement dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc, qui souligne qu'une liste des facteurs ne peut servir que de guide pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes.

50. Le projet de résolution qui figure dans le document A/C.4/L.231 reconnaît ce principe dans le préambule, et dans les paragraphes 1 et 2 du dispositif, mais la délégation suédoise estime que le paragraphe 4 du dispositif est contraire à ce principe. Si un territoire ne doit être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement que lorsqu'il est parvenu également à l'indépendance politique, aucun cas d'espèce ne peut plus être examiné. Cette déclaration de principe générale va au-delà du but que l'on s'était fixé, qui était seulement d'indiquer les facteurs pouvant servir de guide; en fait, elle va à l'encontre de ce but.

51. La délégation suédoise aurait appuyé l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine en tant que texte destiné à remplacer le projet initial des six Puissances. Elle n'approuve pas l'incorporation de certaines parties de cet amendement dans le projet initial et elle n'a pas pu, par conséquent, voter pour le texte définitif en raison, notamment, du fait que l'on a conservé le paragraphe 4.

52. M. PEON DEL VALLE (Mexique) a voté en faveur de la proposition soumise par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine, étant entendu que le mandat du Comité comprendra l'obligation de faire rapport à la huitième session de l'Assemblée générale. Si telle n'est pas l'intention de la Commission, il réserve la position que prendra sa délégation en séance plénière.

53. M. GERIG (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) a voté contre le projet de résolution pour des raisons similaires à celles qu'a indiquées la représentante de la Suède. Le projet de résolution semble postuler que l'autonomie est indivisible et que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider du statut atteint par un territoire. Ce sont là deux thèses contestables que la délégation des Etats-Unis n'est pas en mesure d'accepter. Ce genre de thèses aurait pu faire l'objet d'une étude par un comité semblable à celui qui vient d'être créé.

54. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) s'est abstenu de voter sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution pour les raisons qu'il a indiquées au cours de la discussion générale. L'incorporation, dans le projet de résolution, de certaines dispositions de l'amendement soumis par le Pérou et la République Dominicaine ne lui a pas permis de voter pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution, car le deuxième considérant et le paragraphe 4 du dispositif ont été conservés.

55. M. NAJAR (Israël) n'a pas été en mesure de voter pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution parce qu'il estime que ce projet considère comme réglées des questions sur lesquelles les consultations auraient dû être poursuivies. Il conviendrait de souligner le caractère empirique des travaux de la Commission et conserver la possibilité d'entreprendre de nouveaux efforts pour régler les questions de principe qui sont en jeu.

56. M. PEREZ CISNEROS (Cuba) soulève la question de l'établissement de la liste des pays qui seront désignés pour faire partie du Comité ad hoc.

57. Le PRESIDENT pense que la Commission reviendra sur cette question après que le projet de résolution aura été soumis à l'Assemblée générale. Toutefois, rien n'empêche les membres de la Commission de présenter des candidats avant cette date, si tel est leur désir.

La séance est levée à 14 h. 30.

AUG 31 1953

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes¹

Cessation de la transmission, en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, de renseignements relatifs à un territoire non autonome: Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam¹

Rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes)

TABLE DES MATIERES

	Pages
I. Constitution du Comité ad hoc	1
II. Bureau	1
III. Historique de l'étude des facteurs	1
IV. Autres éléments relatifs à l'autonomie et au droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.....	2
V. Examen de la liste des facteurs	3
VI. Liste de facteurs approuvée par le Comité ad hoc	4
VII. Cessation de la transmission de renseignements concernant les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam	6

I. CONSTITUTION DU COMITÉ ad hoc

1. Par sa résolution 648 (VII), adoptée le 10 décembre 1952, l'Assemblée générale a créé un Comité ad hoc de dix membres, composé des Etats suivants: Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, Cuba, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Guatemala, Irak, Pays-Bas, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord et Venezuela, qui serait chargé de poursuivre et d'approfondir l'étude des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie. Elle a invité le Comité à prendre en considération la liste des facteurs arrêtée en 1952 par le Comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale et les communications faites par les gouvernements conformément à ladite résolution. Elle l'a invité en outre à tenir compte de certains autres éléments (voir section IV ci-après).

2. Par la résolution 650 (VII), adoptée le 20 décembre 1952, l'Assemblée générale a invité le Comité ad hoc à étudier avec soin, compte tenu de la résolution 648 (VII), les documents présentés par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas et relatifs à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements concernant les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam.

3. Le Comité ad hoc s'est réuni au Siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies le 21 juillet 1953 et a tenu huit séances entre cette date et le 30 juillet 1953.

II. BUREAU

4. Le bureau du Comité était composé de la manière suivante:

M. Awni Khalidy (Irak), Président

M. Benjamin Gerig (Etats-Unis d'Amérique), Vice-Président et Rapporteur.

III. HISTORIQUE DE L'ÉTUDE DES FACTEURS

5. Par la résolution 334 (IV), adoptée le 2 décembre 1949, l'Assemblée générale a invité le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes "à étudier les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si tel ou tel territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes".

6. En 1951, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes a rédigé un rapport qu'il a présenté à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa sixième session². Au cours de cette session, la Quatrième Commission a constitué une sous-commission (Sous-Commission 9) qu'elle a chargée de poursuivre l'étude de la question; sur rapport de cette Sous-Commission, elle a adopté une résolution que l'Assemblée générale a fait sienne à son tour [résolution 567 (VI)].

7. Par la résolution 567 (VI), l'Assemblée générale a décidé de prendre pour base la liste de facteurs établie lors de la sixième session et de désigner un comité qui poursuivrait l'étude des facteurs, compte tenu de tous les renseignements disponibles. Au nombre de ces renseignements se trouvaient un exposé des vues que l'Assemblée générale invitait les Etats Membres à transmettre par la même résolution et ceux que le Secrétaire général aurait reçus sur les motifs qui auraient amené certaines Puissances administrantes à cesser de communiquer des renseignements sur certains des territoires précédemment portés sur la liste des territoires non autonomes.

8. Le Comité ad hoc créé en 1952 a adressé un rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa septième session³. Après examen du rapport par la Quatrième

² Voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, sixième session, Supplément n° 14, document A/1836, quatrième partie.

³ Ibid., septième session, Annexes, point 36 de l'ordre du jour, document A/2178.

¹ Respectivement points 33 et 34, a, de l'ordre du jour provisoire de la huitième session (A/2416).

Commission, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 648 (VII), par laquelle elle a approuvé provisoirement la liste de facteurs arrêtée en 1952, mais a créé le Comité ad hoc actuel dont le mandat est énoncé au paragraphe ci-dessus.

9. Les faits rappelés dans les paragraphes précédents montrent l'attention qui a été consacrée au problème au cours des dernières années et en font ressortir la complexité. Dès le début des discussions, on s'est accordé à considérer qu'une liste de facteurs ne pouvait avoir que la valeur d'une indication lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même. En outre, comme l'Assemblée l'a déclaré dans la résolution 648 (VII), chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché compte tenu des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Dans ces conditions, et bien qu'il soit encore possible de perfectionner et de préciser la liste des facteurs, on peut estimer qu'on a peut-être atteint dans l'étude du sujet un point tel qu'aucune décision immédiate ne s'impose, la liste actuelle étant suffisante pour servir de guide conformément à la résolution 648 (VII) et permettre d'examiner à fond chaque cas d'espèce.

10. Le représentant de l'Irak a proposé que l'Assemblée générale renvoie au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, dans le cadre de ses tâches et responsabilités normales, la liste des facteurs et la question de leur interprétation et des mises au point à y apporter pour tenir compte des changements qui surviennent dans la situation. Les représentants de la Birmanie, de Cuba, du Guatemala et du Venezuela ont appuyé cette proposition. Le représentant de la Belgique s'y est opposé, déclarant que, même à le supposer constitutionnel, le Comité des renseignements ne pouvait connaître de questions politiques, celles-ci n'étant pas visées par l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

IV. AUTRES ÉLÉMENTS RELATIFS À L'AUTONOMIE ET AU DROIT DES PEUPLES À DISPOSER D'EUX-MÊMES

11. Au paragraphe 7 de sa résolution 648 (VII), l'Assemblée générale a invité le Comité ad hoc "à prendre notamment en considération la liste des facteurs arrêtée en 1952 par le Comité créé aux termes de la résolution 567 (VI) et les communications faites par les gouvernements conformément à ladite résolution, et à tenir compte, en outre, des autres éléments suivants :

"a) La possibilité de définir la notion de complète autonomie, aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte ;

"b) Les critères permettant de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes se trouve garanti, en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI de la Charte ;

"c) La libre expression de la volonté des peuples, s'agissant de déterminer leur statut national et international aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte."

En ce qui concerne l'alinéa a ci-dessus, le Comité ad hoc a conclu qu'il n'était pas possible de trouver une définition satisfaisante de la notion de complète autonomie aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Même si l'on pouvait définir la notion d'autonomie d'une manière satisfaisante, cette définition serait inadéquate si elle n'était pas complétée par une définition de la notion d'autonomie "complète" dans le cadre du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

12. En revanche, le Comité a conclu qu'un certain nombre d'éléments fournissaient des indications utiles sur le point de savoir si l'autonomie complète avait été atteinte dans tel ou tel cas particulier. Certains de ces éléments figuraient sur la liste des facteurs. D'autres étaient suggérés dans les réponses des gouvernements.

13. Ainsi, l'absence d'une définition satisfaisante n'était pas un grave inconvénient puisque, pour chaque situation particulière, la notion se dégagerait de l'étude des éléments de cette situation.

14. Etant donné le rapport étroit qui existe entre les alinéas b et c, le Comité a examiné ces alinéas conjointement.

15. Au sujet de ces deux alinéas, le Comité ad hoc a constaté qu'en exécution de la résolution 637 (VII) de l'Assemblée générale, le Conseil économique et social et la Commission des droits de l'homme poursuivent l'étude des voies et moyens destinés à assurer le respect, sur le plan international, du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Pour sa part, le Comité a jugé que, parmi les critères qui permettent de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes se trouve garanti en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI de la Charte, il conviendrait de mentionner les éléments suivants :

A. Un progrès politique des populations assez grand pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, par des voies démocratiques, de l'avenir du territoire.

B. L'existence d'un régime représentatif caractérisé par des élections périodiques auxquelles les populations participent pleinement ou par d'autres procédés démocratiques qui permettent aux populations d'exprimer librement leur volonté.

C. La jouissance de droits individuels dont :

a) La liberté individuelle et le droit pour chaque individu de prendre part à la direction des affaires publiques de son pays ;

b) La garantie de droits fondamentaux, comme la liberté de parole, la liberté de la presse, le droit de réunion, la liberté de conscience et le droit à un procès équitable ;

c) Le suffrage universel des adultes, la base étant la possibilité de s'instruire ;

d) La liberté pour l'individu d'adhérer aux partis politiques et la liberté pour tous les partis de participer librement à la vie politique du territoire.

D. L'absence de toute pression ou coercition exercée sur les populations, de telle sorte qu'elles soient en mesure d'exprimer librement leur opinion sur le statut national et international qu'elles désirent (accession à l'indépendance, accession à d'autres systèmes d'autonomie en association permanente ou libre, en tant que partie intégrante avec la métropole ou un autre pays).

E. Assurance que les vues de la population seront respectées.

16. Pour ce qui est du point E ci-dessus, le représentant des Etats-Unis d'Amérique a déclaré que le texte paraissait comporter, pour une métropole ou pour tout autre Etat, l'obligation d'assurer à l'avance qu'il se conformerait au désir exprimé par un territoire d'accéder à la qualité d'Etat membre d'une union ou à toute autre forme d'intégration, et que la délégation des Etats-Unis devait entièrement réserver sa position car la décision à prendre rendait nécessaire le consentement des deux parties.

17. Les représentants de l'Australie, de la Belgique, des Pays-Bas et du Royaume-Uni ont également formulé des réserves.

18. Le représentant de l'Australie a déclaré qu'il s'abstiendrait sur toute proposition en ce domaine parce que la question du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes n'avait pas de rapport direct avec le Chapitre XI de la Charte, et le représentant de la Belgique a reconnu que la phase d'évolution envisagée sortait du cadre du Chapitre XI et, par conséquent, de la compétence du Comité.

19. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'est trouvé dans l'obligation de réserver la position de sa délégation en ce qui concerne le point E ci-dessus, qu'il a interprété comme signifiant que, chaque fois qu'une population aurait exprimé ses désirs, il y aurait lieu de s'y conformer. Il a fait remarquer que dans un territoire non autonome pouvaient se trouver des "populations" différentes dont les désirs librement exprimés pourraient diverger et que la reconnaissance pure et simple de ces désirs pourrait conduire à l'anarchie et au chaos. Ce genre de discussion comportait toujours une difficulté insurmontable due au fait que l'on n'était jamais arrivé à définir de façon convenable le mot "population" du point de vue du principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Sa délégation avait toujours considéré ce principe comme extrêmement utile en tant que guide d'action politique, mais il y avait d'autres principes très utiles tels que la nécessité de maintenir dans le monde la cohésion et la stabilité, la nécessité d'établir des niveaux de vie acceptables et la nécessité de tenir compte des intérêts de toutes les parties dans les relations entre les populations. Il convenait d'accorder au principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes tout le respect qui lui revient, mais on ne pouvait s'y conformer aveuglément en négligeant d'autres principes d'égale valeur.

20. Le représentant des Pays-Bas s'est associé aux réserves des autres représentants.

21. Le représentant du Guatemala a proposé d'ajouter à la liste d'éléments ci-dessus un nouveau point F, ainsi conçu: "Liberté pour les habitants des territoires non autonomes qui ont librement consenti une limitation de leur souveraineté en faveur de la métropole ou d'un autre pays, de modifier leur statut par des voies démocratiques". Les représentants de Cuba, de l'Irak et du Venezuela se sont associés à cette proposition; le représentant du Venezuela a déclaré que l'ensemble de la liste devait être considéré comme une simple énumération de critères qu'il convenait d'appliquer sans rigueur inflexible. Le représentant des Etats-Unis a proposé d'améliorer la formule en posant comme condition le respect des accords en vigueur, mais le représentant du Guatemala a jugé que cette proposition n'était pas acceptable car, selon lui, elle ôterait toute valeur à la formule en question.

22. Le texte original proposé par le représentant du Guatemala ayant été maintenu, les représentants de l'Australie, de la Belgique, de la Birmanie, des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, des Pays-Bas et du Royaume-Uni ont formulé des réserves à son sujet.

23. Les représentants de l'Australie et des Pays-Bas ont estimé que la proposition était inacceptable sous sa forme actuelle.

24. Le représentant de la Belgique a répété que cette question ne rentrait pas dans le cadre du Chapitre XI de la Charte et n'était donc pas de la compétence du Comité ad hoc.

25. Le représentant de la Birmanie a déclaré que la décision finale concernant le statut international futur d'un Territoire devrait être prise par les habitants du Territoire. Une fois que la population, compte tenu de tous les facteurs et de toutes les circonstances, avait librement décidé de s'associer à la métropole ou à un autre pays, la sécession ne pouvait avoir lieu que conformément aux dispositions de l'accord qui avait été conclu. La position du représentant de la Birmanie était fondée sur l'hypothèse que la décision concernant l'association avait été prise librement, comme il était dit au point E qu'il avait lui-même proposé.

26. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré que sa délégation était opposée à l'adoption du point F, car ce paragraphe visait des situations qui ne pouvaient se produire que dans un territoire auquel ne s'appliquaient plus les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte et qui ne relevait donc pas du mandat du Comité ad hoc. En outre, une telle disposition encouragerait la dénonciation unilatérale des accords, à laquelle la délégation du Royaume-Uni était opposée.

27. Le représentant des Etats-Unis d'Amérique a appuyé certaines des réserves ci-dessus, en faisant observer que le droit de sécession unilatéral et sans restriction ou la dénonciation unilatérale d'accords n'étaient pas des principes acceptables.

28. Enfin, le représentant du Guatemala a estimé qu'il importait d'établir qu'un gouvernement métropolitain ne pouvait pas modifier le statut politique d'un territoire non autonome qui faisait l'objet d'une revendication de la part d'un autre Etat, ou d'un litige, tant que cette revendication ou ce litige n'avaient pas été dûment réglés.

29. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a fait observer qu'il ne voyait pas le rapport de cette proposition avec la liste des facteurs ou avec un point quelconque de l'ordre du jour du Comité ad hoc. Tout différend quant à la souveraineté sur un territoire pouvait être tranché par l'organisme international compétent. Cependant, la Puissance exerçant l'autorité de fait sur le territoire en question avait certainement pour devoir de favoriser dans toute la mesure du possible la réalisation des desseins du Chapitre XI, car, s'il y avait transfert de souveraineté, la nouvelle Puissance administrante devrait assumer toutes les obligations qui incombait à l'ancienne en vertu de ce chapitre de la Charte.

V. EXAMEN DE LA LISTE DES FACTEURS

30. Le Comité ad hoc a examiné et adopté avec les modifications suivantes la liste des facteurs que l'Assemblée générale avait adoptée provisoirement en 1952.

31. La liste de 1952 comportait deux parties et la deuxième partie se divisait en deux sections. La première partie était constituée par les facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance. La deuxième partie comportait, premièrement, les facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée et, deuxièmement, les facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à d'autres parties constitutives de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Après que diverses opinions eurent été exprimées sur d'autres façons de présenter la liste, il a été décidé qu'aucun changement fondamental n'était nécessaire, mais le représentant du Royaume-Uni a proposé de la diviser en trois parties différentes concernant: I. L'indépendance; II. L'autonomie réalisée dans le cadre d'une association permanente avec la métropole conformément à un traité ou à des instruments constitutionnels; et III. L'autonomie dans le cadre d'un Etat fédéral ou unitaire.

32. La première partie concernant les facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance a été adoptée sans modification.

33. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a proposé de rédiger comme suit le titre de la deuxième partie: "Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme d'autonomie séparée, en association permanente avec la métropole". Le représentant du Guatemala a formulé une réserve concernant la possibilité d'une association avec un pays autre que l'ancienne métropole. Le représentant du Venezuela a, par suite, proposé d'élargir la portée du titre en ajoutant les mots "ou d'une autre façon", formule que le Comité a adoptée.

34. Le facteur A.3 de la deuxième partie porte sur la limitation volontaire de souveraineté. Le représentant du Guatemala a rappelé que son gouvernement et celui du Salvador en avaient proposé la suppression. Il a exprimé des doutes sur la question de savoir si un territoire pouvait renoncer de sa propre volonté à une souveraineté qu'il ne possédait pas. Plusieurs membres ayant fait valoir que le facteur en question pouvait, dans certains cas, présenter un intérêt pratique, un membre de phrase a été ajouté sur la proposition du représentant du Venezuela, avec un amendement présenté par la représentante de Cuba. Le texte se trouve donc ainsi rédigé: "Mesure dans laquelle il est prouvé que l'attribut ou les attributs de la souveraineté qui ne s'exercent plus à titre individuel seront exercés à titre collectif par l'entité plus vaste ainsi constituée".

35. Le représentant des Pays-Bas a proposé d'ajouter après le facteur B.1 un nouveau paragraphe destiné à prévoir le cas complémentaire des obligations de la métropole. Après un court débat, le Comité a décidé d'ajouter ce qui suit:

"Degré et mesure dans lesquels la métropole est liée, en vertu de dispositions constitutionnelles ou législatives, par les désirs librement exprimés du territoire, lorsqu'il s'agit de négocier, de signer ou de ratifier des conventions internationales qui peuvent influencer sur la situation du territoire".

36. Le représentant des Pays-Bas, qui avait demandé la suppression, dans la deuxième partie, du facteur B.2 intitulé "Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies", a retiré sa proposition, estimant que le nouveau titre de la deuxième partie permettait de conserver ce facteur.

37. Sur la proposition du représentant du Royaume-Uni, il a été décidé de rédiger comme suit le titre de la troisième partie: "Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à la métropole ou à un autre pays, et en constitue une partie intégrante".

38. Le représentant du Guatemala a estimé que ce titre, comme celui de la deuxième partie, était trop restrictif, impliquait l'idée d'association permanente et, de ce fait, excluait toute autre forme d'association.

39. Aucun changement n'a été apporté à la troisième partie, dont on a dit qu'elle avait fait l'objet d'une étude minutieuse et que l'on a jugé être la plus satisfaisante des trois parties.

40. Le représentant de la Belgique a fait les réserves suivantes concernant la question des facteurs:

a) Le Chapitre XI de la Charte apparaît comme s'appliquant à tous "les territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". Il est, en effet, conçu en termes généraux: il ne prévoit aucune exception. Le bénéfice des obligations internationales que les Etats ont solennellement assumées par le Chapitre XI n'est donc pas réservé aux populations des colonies et protectorats.

b) Il appartient aux Etats, et à eux seuls, chacun pour ce qui le concerne, de déterminer avec effet juridique si des territoires se trouvant sous leur autorité relèvent, ne relèvent pas ou ne relèvent plus du Chapitre XI. C'est une faculté qu'ils tiennent du droit international et à laquelle ils n'ont pas renoncé, notamment, au profit des organes des Nations Unies. L'Assemblée générale, en particulier, ne saurait leur imposer des définitions. Le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte est d'ailleurs formel: aucune disposition de la Charte n'autorise les Nations Unies à intervenir dans des affaires qui relèvent essentiellement de la compétence nationale d'un Etat. L'Assemblée excéderait donc ses pouvoirs si, à quelque titre et sous quelque forme, elle se prononçait sur la situation d'un Etat particulier, d'un territoire particulier.

c) L'Assemblée peut certes s'exprimer d'une manière générale sur les facteurs susceptibles, selon elle, de servir de guide aux Etats. Toutefois, ce ne sont là que des avis, qui ne lient pas les Etats.

d) Si les facteurs énoncés par l'Assemblée sont jugés propres à servir de guide pour discerner si un territoire est autonome, ils doivent être a contrario jugés propres à servir de guide pour discerner si un territoire n'est pas autonome et, partant, doit jouir des garanties du Chapitre XI. L'Etat qui tient ces facteurs pour valables ne saurait contester leur validité pour l'appréciation de sa propre situation à l'égard du Chapitre XI, alors qu'il affirmerait cette validité pour l'appréciation de la situation des autres Etats.

e) La délégation belge n'a été pour rien dans les initiatives qui ont conduit à entreprendre la détermination des facteurs. Elle n'est pas satisfaite des résultats: son attitude, concernant les facteurs énoncés, est une attitude d'abstention. Toutefois, en dépit des inexactitudes et des imprécisions, les travaux auxquels il a été procédé ont mis en valeur des éléments d'appréciation suffisants pour confirmer que nombreuses sont, de par le monde, les populations ne s'administrant pas encore complètement elles-mêmes et que, par conséquent, nombreux sont les Etats liés par le Chapitre XI. Aussi serait-il désormais futile de tenter de faire prévaloir l'idée que sont seuls tenus des obligations de ce chapitre les huit Etats qui ont reconnu ces obligations, et notamment l'obligation de fournir les renseignements prévus par le paragraphe e de l'Article 73.

VI. LISTE DE FACTEURS APPROUVÉE PAR LE COMITÉ ad hoc

41. La liste des facteurs approuvée par le Comité ad hoc est la suivante:

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÉDÉ À L'INDÉPENDANCE OU À TOUTE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE SÉPARÉE

Première partie

Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance

A. Statut international

1. Responsabilité internationale. Responsabilité internationale entière du territoire en ce qui concerne les actes inhérents à l'exercice de la souveraineté externe ainsi que pour ce qui est des actes relatifs à son administration interne.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

3. Relations internationales en général. Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des traités.

4. Défense nationale. Liberté pour le territoire de conclure des accords relatifs à sa défense nationale.

B. Autonomie interne

1. Forme de gouvernement. Pleine liberté pour la population de se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'elle juge bonne.

2. Gouvernement du territoire. Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. Pleine compétence du gouvernement du territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles de ce dernier.

Deuxième partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÉDÉ À UNE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE, EN ASSOCIATION PERMANENTE AVEC LA MÉTROPOLE OU D'UNE AUTRE FAÇON

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique. Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations. Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté. Mesure dans laquelle la souveraineté du territoire a été librement et de sa propre volonté limitée au moment où ce territoire a accédé à une forme d'autonomie séparée. Mesure dans laquelle il est prouvé que l'attribut ou les attributs de la souveraineté qui ne s'exercent plus à titre individuel seront exercés à titre collectif par l'entité plus vaste ainsi constituée.

B. Statut international

1. Relations internationales en général. Degré et mesure dans lesquels le territoire jouit du pouvoir d'établir librement des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier librement des traités. Degré et mesure dans lesquels la métropole est liée, en vertu de dispositions constitutionnelles ou législatives, par les désirs librement exprimés du territoire, lorsqu'il s'agit de négocier, de signer ou de ratifier des conventions internationales qui peuvent influencer sur la situation du territoire.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

C. Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du territoire. Nature et degré du contrôle ou de l'intervention éventuels du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne, par exemple dans les domaines suivants :

Pouvoir législatif: Adoption des lois du territoire par une assemblée autochtone, soit élue tout entière par des voies libres et démocratiques, soit légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population ;

Pouvoir exécutif: Choix des membres du pouvoir exécutif par l'autorité compétente qui a dans le territoire l'agrément de la population autochtone, que cette autorité soit héréditaire ou élective, en tenant également compte, s'il y a lieu, de la nature et du degré de contrôle éventuel qu'exercerait directement ou indirectement sur la constitution et l'exercice du pouvoir exécutif un élément étranger ;

Pouvoir judiciaire: Constitution des tribunaux et choix des juges.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement. Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire : a) Existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié ? b) Ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention directe ou indirecte d'un gouvernement étranger ?⁴

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire ; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

Troisième partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UN TERRITOIRE EST LIBREMENT ASSOCIÉ À LA MÉTROPOLE OU À UN AUTRE PAYS ET EN CONSTITUE UNE PARTIE INTÉGRANTE

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Progrès politique. Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

2. Opinion des populations. Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique. Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gou-

⁴ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de se poser les questions suivantes :

i) Chaque habitant adulte a-t-il le droit, en pleine égalité (sous réserve de garanties spéciales pour la protection des minorités), de déterminer le caractère du gouvernement du territoire ?

ii) Ce pouvoir s'exerce-t-il librement, c'est-à-dire l'électeur n'est-il soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte et n'y a-t-il pas de parties politiques frappées de certaines incapacités ? Pour l'application de ce facteur, on pourra vérifier les faits suivants :

a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique ;

b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire ;

c) Existence d'un scrutin secret ;

d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale ;

e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents ;

f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale.

iii) Chaque personne est-elle libre d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir ?

vernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels.

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles. Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. Association : a) en vertu de la Constitution de la métropole ; ou b) en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire ; en tenant compte des éléments suivants : i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au territoire associé ; ii) s'il existe en certains domaines une compétence réservée en vertu de la Constitution en faveur du territoire ou du pouvoir central ; et iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer, sur un pied d'égalité, aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B. Statut

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif. Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Citoyenneté. Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

3. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement. Accès des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire, par nomination ou élection, à tous les emplois publics relevant du pouvoir central dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

C. Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote. Suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et élections périodiques libres dans lesquelles l'électeur n'est soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et dans lesquelles aucun parti politique n'est frappé de certaines incapacités¹.

2. Droits et statut des habitants. Dans un système unitaire, droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays, et, dans un système fédéral, degré identique d'autonomie pour les habitants et organes locaux de toutes les parties de la Fédération.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux. Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties du pays.

4. Législation interne. Compétence législative ou réglementaire locale égale à la compétence législative ou réglementaire dont bénéficient les autres parties du territoire et exercée dans les mêmes conditions.

¹ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de vérifier les faits suivants :

- a) Existence des mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique ;
- b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire ;
- c) Existence d'un scrutin secret ;
- d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale ;
- e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents ;
- f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale ;
- g) Liberté pour chaque personne d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir.

VII. CESSATION DE LA TRANSMISSION DE RENSEIGNEMENTS CONCERNANT LES ANTILLES NÉERLANDAISES ET LE SURINAM

42. Par sa résolution 650 (VII) du 20 décembre 1952, l'Assemblée générale a décidé que le Comité ad hoc étudierait avec soin les documents relatifs aux territoires des Antilles néerlandaises et du Surinam présentés par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas à la lumière de la résolution sur les facteurs adoptée par l'Assemblée générale, et ferait rapport à la huitième session de l'Assemblée générale.

43. Le principal document présenté par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas revêtait la forme d'une communication en date du 31 août 1951, complétée par une communication en date du 30 novembre 1951 (A/C.4/200). Ce document contenait une note explicative du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, ainsi que des textes constitutionnels comportant certains articles de la Constitution des Pays-Bas (1948), le Statut provisoire de gouvernement pour les Antilles néerlandaises (1950) et la Constitution des Antilles néerlandaises (1950). Ces textes ont été soumis en anglais, et le texte complet en néerlandais des dispositions législatives concernant les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam y était joint.

44. Lorsque le Comité ad hoc s'est réuni, il a été saisi d'une nouvelle communication sous forme d'une lettre en date du 23 juillet 1953 adressée au Secrétaire général par le représentant permanent des Pays-Bas aux Nations Unies (A/AC.67/3).

45. Dans cette dernière communication, le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a déclaré qu'aux termes de l'Article 73, e, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements existe sous réserve des exigences de la sécurité et de considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. C'est en se fondant sur ces réserves que le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas avait décidé, en 1951, de cesser de transmettre des renseignements. Après la promulgation des statuts provisoires de gouvernement qui ont accordé un nouveau statut au Surinam et aux Antilles néerlandaises, il avait des raisons d'ordre constitutionnel pour ne pas continuer à transmettre des renseignements. Le Gouvernement néerlandais ajoutait qu'il était douteux que la question de la cessation de la communication de renseignements sur les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam puisse être facilement examinée si l'on prenait comme règles les termes de la résolution relative aux facteurs. Selon le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, "la question qui se pose est la suivante : Un territoire a-t-il atteint un degré d'autonomie tel qu'il est pleinement responsable dans les trois domaines mentionnés à l'Article 73, e, à savoir les conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction ?"

46. Le représentant des Pays-Bas a présenté cette communication au Comité et a déclaré que le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas se trouvait dans l'impossibilité de transmettre des renseignements du fait que les gouvernements des territoires en question s'y étaient opposés. Il a prié le Comité, et le Comité a accepté, d'entendre à ce sujet MM. Pos et Debrôt, représentants généraux du Surinam et des Antilles néerlandaises auprès du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas à La Haye, qui avaient été habilités par leurs gouvernements respectifs à exercer les fonctions de membres de la délégation des Pays-Bas.

47. Les représentants de l'Australie, de la Belgique, des Etats-Unis d'Amérique et du Royaume-Uni, bien que pour des raisons diverses, se sont accordés avec la délégation des Pays-Bas à reconnaître que le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas pouvait désormais cesser de transmettre, au sujet du Surinam et des Antilles néerlandaises, daïses, les renseignements qu'il avait fournis jusqu'ici en application de l'Article 73, e.

48. Les représentants de la Birmanie, de Cuba, du Guatemala et de l'Irak ont estimé que les raisons invoquées par la délégation des Pays-Bas ne suffisaient pas à justifier la cessation des renseignements parce qu'elles n'étaient pas conformes aux dispositions de la résolution 648 (VII) de l'Assemblée générale. Le représentant du Venezuela a soutenu que, bien que le Comité ad hoc soit habilité par son mandat à s'occuper de la question, il valait mieux cependant, pour des raisons d'ordre pra-tique, que le problème soit renvoyé directement à l'Assemblée générale.

49. Les opinions exprimées par les membres du Comité ad hoc figurent dans les comptes rendus analytiques des sixième et septième séances du Comité (A/AC. 67/SR.6 et 7), que le Comité signale à l'attention de l'Assemblée générale.

50. En raison des profondes divergences de vues qui se sont manifestées entre ses membres, le Comité ad hoc a décidé de renvoyer la question à l'Assemblée générale sans formuler de recommandation.

742 (VIII). Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

L'Assemblée générale,

Tenant compte des principes énoncés dans la Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes et des objectifs fixés dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte,

Rappelant que, dans ses résolutions 567 (VI) et 648 (VII) adoptées les 18 janvier et 10 décembre 1952 respectivement, elle a indiqué qu'il serait utile de dresser une liste de facteurs dont il conviendrait de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie,

Tenant compte du fait que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour examiner les principes qui devraient guider l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les Etats Membres en ce qui concerne le respect des obligations qui découlent des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et faire des recommandations à leur sujet, Ayant examiné le rapport¹ du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) créé par la résolution 648 (VII),

1. Prend acte des conclusions du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) ;

2. Approuve la liste de facteurs adoptée par la Quatrième Commission ;

3. Recommande à l'Assemblée générale et aux Puissances administrantes de prendre pour guide la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe lorsqu'il s'agira de déterminer si, du fait de modifications de son statut constitutionnel, un territoire est ou n'est plus visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, afin que l'Assemblée générale puisse décider, d'après la documentation fournie en vertu de la résolution 222 (III), adoptée le 3 novembre 1948, s'il y a lieu de continuer ou de cesser de communiquer les renseignements prévus au Chapitre XI de la Charte ;

4. Réaffirme que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes ;

5. Considère que la validité de toute forme d'association entre un territoire non autonome et la métropole ou tout autre pays dépend essentiellement de la volonté de la population intéressée, librement exprimée au moment où cette association est décidée ;

6. Considère que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance que les territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent atteindre l'autonomie complète, bien qu'il soit admis qu'un territoire peut aussi devenir autonome en s'associant à un Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats, à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue ;

7. Réaffirme que ces facteurs, tout en servant de guide lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les obligations énoncées au Chapitre XI de la Charte existent encore, ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète d'un territoire non autonome ;

8. Réaffirme également que, pour qu'un territoire puisse être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est essentiel que sa population s'administre complètement elle-même ;

9. Charge le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes d'étudier toute documentation qui sera désormais communiquée en vertu de la résolution 222 (III), en tenant compte de la liste de facteurs approuvée par la présente résolution et d'autres considérations pertinentes qui pourront intervenir à propos de chaque cas où l'on aura cessé de communiquer des renseignements ;

10. Recommande que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes prenne l'initiative de proposer, lorsqu'il le jugera utile du fait des circonstances, des modifications propres à améliorer la liste de facteurs.

459^eme séance plénière,
le 27 novembre 1953.

ANNEXE

Liste de facteurs

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÉDÉ À L'INDÉPENDANCE OU À UNE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE SÉPARÉE

Première partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÉDÉ À L'INDÉPENDANCE

A. — Statut international

1. Responsabilité internationale. — Responsabilité internationale entière du territoire en ce qui concerne les actes inhérents à l'exercice de la souveraineté externe ainsi que pour ce qui est des actes correspondants relatifs à son administration interne.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

3. Relations internationales en général. — Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des traités.

4. Défense nationale. — Droit souverain de pourvoir à sa défense nationale.

B. — Autonomie interne

1. Forme de gouvernement. — Pleine liberté pour la population de se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'elle juge bonne.

2. Gouvernement du territoire. — Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. — Pleine compétence du gouvernement du territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles de ce dernier.

Deuxième partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCÉDÉ À UNE AUTRE FORME D'AUTONOMIE SÉPARÉE

A. — Facteurs de caractère général

1. Opinion des populations. — Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

2. Liberté de choix. — Liberté pour la population de choisir entre plusieurs possibilités, y compris l'indépendance, en vertu du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

3. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté. — Mesure dans laquelle il est prouvé que l'attribut ou les attributs de la souveraineté qui ne s'exercent plus à titre individuel seront exercés à titre collectif par l'entité plus vaste ainsi constituée et liberté, pour la population d'un territoire qui s'est associé à la métropole, de modifier ce statut à tout moment, en exprimant sa volonté par des voies démocratiques.

4. Considérations d'ordre géographique. — Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire non autonome avec le siège du gouvernement métropolitain peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels ; et mesure dans laquelle les intérêts des Etats limitrophes peuvent être affectés, compte tenu du principe général de bon voisinage mentionné à l'Article 74 de la Charte.

5. Considérations d'ordre ethnique et culturel. — Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

6. Progrès politique. — Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

¹ Voir le document A/2428.

B. — Statut international

1. Relations internationales en général. — Degré et mesure dans lesquels le territoire jouit du pouvoir d'établir librement des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements exprimés du territoire, lorsqu'il s'agit de négocier, de négocier, signer et ratifier librement des traités. Degré et mesure dans lesquels la métropole est liée, en vertu de dispositions constitutionnelles ou législatives, par les désirs librement exprimés du territoire, lorsqu'il s'agit de négocier, de signer ou de ratifier des Conventions internationales qui peuvent influencer sur la situation du territoire.

2. Changement de statut politique. — Droit de la métropole ou du territoire de modifier le statut politique de ce dernier, compte tenu de la question de savoir si le territoire fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat.

3. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

C. — Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du territoire. — Nature et degré du contrôle et de l'intervention éventuelle du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne, par exemple dans les domaines suivants :

Pouvoir législatif : adoption des lois du territoire par une assemblée autochtone, soit élue tout entière par des voies libres et démocratiques, soit légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population.

Pouvoir exécutif : choix des membres du pouvoir exécutif par l'autorité compétente qui a, dans le territoire, l'agrément de la population autochtone, que cette autorité soit héréditaire ou élective, en tenant également compte, s'il y a lieu, de la nature et du degré de contrôle éventuel qu'exercerait directement ou indirectement sur la constitution et l'exercice du pouvoir exécutif un organisme extérieur.

Pouvoir judiciaire : constitution des tribunaux et choix des juges.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement. — Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire : a) existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié ? b) ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention directe ou indirecte d'un gouvernement étranger ?

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. — Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire ; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de

* Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de se poser les questions suivantes :

i) Chaque habitant adulte a-t-il le droit, en pleine égalité (sous réserve de garanties spéciales pour la protection des minorités), de déterminer le caractère du gouvernement du territoire ?

ii) Ce pouvoir s'exerce-t-il librement, c'est-à-dire l'électeur n'est-il soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte et n'y a-t-il pas de partis politiques frappés de certaines incapacités ? Pour l'application de ce facteur, on pourra vérifier les faits suivants :

a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique ;

b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire ;

c) Existence d'un scrutin secret ;

d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale ;

e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents ;

f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale.

iii) Chaque personne est-elle libre d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir ?

l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

Troisième partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UN TERRITOIRE EST LIBREMENT ASSOCIÉ SUR UN PIED D'ÉGALITÉ À LA MÉTROPOLE OU À UN AUTRE PAYS COMME PARTIE INTÉGRANTE DU PAYS EN QUESTION, OU SOUS TOUTE AUTRE FORME

A. — Facteurs de caractère général

1. Opinion des populations. — Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

2. Liberté de choix. — Liberté pour la population d'un territoire non autonome qui s'est associé avec la métropole comme partie intégrante de ce pays, ou sous toute autre forme, de modifier ce statut en exprimant sa volonté par des voies démocratiques.

3. Considérations d'ordre géographique. — Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels. Droit de la métropole ou du territoire de modifier le statut politique de ce dernier, compte tenu de la question de savoir si le territoire fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat.

4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles. — Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

5. Progrès politique. — Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

6. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. — Association en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire, en tenant compte des éléments suivants : i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent dans des conditions égales au territoire associé ; ii) s'il existe dans certains domaines une compétence réservée, en vertu de la Constitution, en faveur du territoire ou du pouvoir central ; et iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer sur un pied d'égalité aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B. — Statut

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif. — Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement. — Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire : a) existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié ? b) ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention directe ou indirecte d'un gouvernement étranger ?

3. Citoyenneté. — Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

4. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement. — Accès des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire, par nomination ou élection, à tous les emplois publics relevant du pouvoir central dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

C. — Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote. — Suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et élections périodiques libres dans lesquelles l'électeur n'est soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et dans lesquelles des incapacités ne frappent pas tels ou tels des partis politiques^b.

^b Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de vérifier les faits suivants :

a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique ;

b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire ;

c) Existence d'un scrutin secret ;

2. Droits et statut des habitants. — Dans un système unitaire, droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays, et, dans un système fédéral, degré identique d'autonomie pour les habitants et organes locaux de toutes les parties de la fédération.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux. — Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que dans les autres parties du pays.

4. Législation interne. — Autonomie locale de même étendue et s'exerçant dans les mêmes conditions que dans les autres parties du pays.

5. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. — Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une position économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

(Suite de la note ^b de la page précédente).

d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;

e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;

f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale;

g) Liberté pour chaque personne d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir.

ASSEMBLEE GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION

Documents officiels

SEANCE PLENIERE

Vendredi 27 novembre 1953, à 15 heures

New-York

SOMMAIRE

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission :

Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte: a) renseignements relatifs à la situation dans le domaine de l'enseignement; b) renseignements relatifs à la situation dans d'autres domaines; c) transmission de renseignements; d) participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes

327

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

Cessation de la communication des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte: a) Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam; b) Porto-Rico

Présidente: Mme Vijaya Lakshmi PANDIT (Inde).

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission (A/2556 et Corr.1):

Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte: a) renseignements relatifs à la situation dans le domaine de l'enseignement; b) renseignements relatifs à la situation dans d'autres domaines; c) transmission de renseignements; d) participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes

[Point 32 de l'ordre du jour]

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes

[Point 33 de l'ordre du jour]

Cassation de la communication des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte: a) Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam; b) Porto-Rico

[Point 34 de l'ordre du jour]

1. M. RIFAI (Syrie), Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission (traduit de l'anglais): Au nom de la Quatrième Commission, j'ai l'honneur de présenter à l'Assemblée générale le rapport de la Commission [A/2556 et Corr.1] sur les points 32, 33 et 34 de l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée. Les points en question ont trait aux renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, aux facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes et à la cessation de la communication des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, en ce qui concerne, d'une part, les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam et, d'autre part, Porto-Rico.

2. La Quatrième Commission a consacré trente-sept séances à l'examen de ces questions. Je cite ce chiffre pour montrer toute l'attention qu'elle a accordée aux problèmes dont elle était saisie.

3. Le SECRETAIRE GENERAL (traduit de l'anglais): Dans le projet de résolution V relatif à l'emploi de fonctionnaires internationaux originaires des territoires non autonomes et des Territoires sous tutelle, il est dit que le Secrétaire général a déjà pris acte des vœux que la Quatrième Commission a exprimés à ce sujet. Ce projet de résolution recommande au Secrétaire général de tenir compte du fait qu'il est souhaitable de poursuivre et d'accroître le recrutement, pour le Secrétariat des Nations Unies, de personnes dûment qualifiées originaires des territoires non autonomes et des Territoires sous tutelle.

4. Je voudrais faire remarquer à cette occasion que la façon la plus satisfaisante de répondre aux vœux exprimés dans ce projet de résolution serait, tout d'abord, de prendre des mesures pour organiser des cours et un service de formation. Cette possibilité sera étudiée et les résultats auxquels on sera parvenu seront communiqués à l'Assemblée générale pour que la Cinquième Commission, organe compétent en matière d'administration du personnel, les examine.

5. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Avant de mettre aux voix les projets de résolutions proposés par la Quatrième Commission, je vais donner la parole aux membres de l'Assemblée qui désirent expliquer leur vote. Je crois que l'on gagnerait du temps si les orateurs pouvaient se limiter à une seule intervention pour dire de quelle façon ils entendent voter sur les projets de résolutions dont l'Assemblée générale est saisie.

6. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) (traduit de l'espagnol): J'invite les membres de l'Assemblée à se reporter à l'Article 18 de la Charte. Ma délégation estime — et elle se propose de le démontrer documents en main — que toute question qui se rattache au Chapitre XI de la Charte, quelle qu'en soit l'importance, doit être tranchée à la majorité simple et que la majorité des deux tiers, requise pour d'autres questions importantes, ne peut s'appliquer à ce chapitre, à moins que l'Assemblée générale ne crée une nouvelle catégorie à cet effet.

7. Au nombre des projets de résolution que nous devons examiner aujourd'hui s'en trouve un qui a trait à la "liste des facteurs"; de l'avis de certaines délégations, elle doit être votée à la majorité des deux tiers en raison de son importance. Je tiens à préciser avant tout que rien de ce que nous dirons ici ne doit en aucun cas être interprété comme minimisant l'importance de la question. Ma délégation part du principe que toutes les questions dont l'Assemblée générale s'occupe sont importantes. Quant au projet de résolution relatif à la "liste des facteurs", l'intérêt que lui porte ma délégation ressort du fait que nous sommes, avec d'autres délégations, les auteurs des principaux amendements qui ont été apportés à ce projet.

8. Pour le moment, nous nous proposons uniquement de montrer comment, indépendamment de l'importance des cas concrets qu'il nous arrive d'étudier, il est clair et indubitable, d'après notre règlement intérieur, que les questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes doivent être tranchées à la majorité simple et non à la majorité des deux tiers. En énonçant ce principe, nous sommes mus par un sentiment de loyauté envers l'Organisation et par un esprit de collaboration désintéressée, car il est manifeste que, si l'on observe à cet égard une règle fixe, tantôt elle jouera en faveur des projets que nous présenterons, et tantôt elle jouera contre eux. Nous allons maintenant user du droit qu'invoqueront d'autres délégations pour défendre une thèse opposée à la nôtre. Nous allons exposer quelle est notre conviction et soumettre les arguments solides qui l'étayent. Il va sans dire que, si la majorité de l'Assemblée générale entend adopter un autre principe, la délégation mexicaine, comme toujours, s'inclinera devant sa volonté.

9. Au paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 on lit ce qui suit :

"Les décisions de l'Assemblée générale sur les questions importantes sont prises à la majorité des deux tiers des membres présents et votants."

A lire l'expression "questions importantes", beaucoup se sont demandé si elle s'applique de manière générale ou si elle ne comprend que les catégories énumérées dans le cours du même article et celles qui, comme prévu, pourront être déterminées par la suite. Comme cette confusion provient d'une simple imperfection dans le texte de la Charte et que nombreux sont ceux qui ont peine à croire qu'un document si solennel puisse présenter des lacunes aussi flagrantes, il est normal que je veuille m'appuyer, à cet égard, sur une autorité à laquelle songent naturellement la plupart de ceux qui ont affaire, de près ou de loin, avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Hans Kelsen, dans son livre célèbre, intitulé : The Law of the United Nations, pages 180 et 181, dit ce qui suit :

"Pour la procédure de vote... la Charte distingue entre les "questions importantes" et les "autres questions". Cette distinction n'est pas très heureuse. Du moment que l'Assemblée générale s'occupe d'une question, il n'est guère possible de considérer que cette question ne présente pas d'importance. Dans l'intention des auteurs, il s'agissait de distinguer entre les décisions qui exigent une majorité des deux tiers et celles qui n'exigent qu'une majorité simple..."

Mais il ne faut pas croire que cet éminent commentateur soit notre seul guide. Après être remontés à l'origine de la question et à l'autorité véritable qui doit guider tous les Membres des Nations Unies, c'est-à-dire aux documents de San-Francisco, nous indiquerons ce que d'autres auteurs écrivent sur ce même sujet.

10. Il est facile de comprendre la confusion qu'aurait provoquée la Charte si elle avait parlé de "questions importantes" sans donner de précisions à leur sujet et s'il s'était présenté ensuite à l'Assemblée générale des questions que certains eussent considérées comme "importantes" et d'autres comme "moins importantes". Il n'y aurait pas eu lieu d'énumérer ensuite les questions auxquelles s'applique la majorité des deux tiers et encore moins de laisser la porte ouverte à l'établissement de nouvelles catégories de questions. La confusion commence à se dissiper lorsqu'on lit plus avant, au paragraphe 3 du même Article 18 de la Charte :

"Les décisions sur d'autres questions, y compris la détermination de nouvelles catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers, sont prises à la majorité des membres présents et votants."

On voit clairement ici que l'expression "questions importantes" a fait place à sa définition exacte de "questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers...". C'est cette partie intégrante de l'Article 18 de la Charte, dont nous allons retracer l'origine jusqu'à la Conférence de San-Francisco, qui précise, sans laisser place au doute, que les créateurs des Nations Unies pensaient aux "catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers", lesquelles, étant donné leur importance, avaient fait l'objet de discussions détaillées et prolongées, comme ce fut le cas de la catégorie de questions relatives à l'expulsion de Membres.

11. Pour illustrer ce point, il suffit de faire observer, par exemple, qu'en aucun cas on ne pourrait considérer plusieurs des questions énumérées au paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18, telles que les recommandations relatives au maintien de la paix et de la sécurité, les questions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle et les questions budgétaires, comme "une question", mais comme "des catégories ou des rubriques" sous lesquelles se rangent une multitude de questions différentes.

12. Nous ferons tout d'abord un premier raisonnement pour bien éclaircir ce point. La Charte déclare nettement que les "questions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle" seront votées à la majorité des deux tiers. Jusqu'ici, nous avons adopté, dans cette catégorie, une cinquantaine de résolutions, toutes, bien entendu, à la majorité des deux tiers. J'ai déjà dit que la délégation mexicaine ne met en doute l'importance d'aucun des problèmes que nous examinons ici. Cependant, nul ici ne peut manquer de se demander si toutes les résolutions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle peuvent être considérées comme "importantes". Autrement dit, peut-on affirmer que chacune d'entre elles est plus importante que d'autres, manifestement capitales, adoptées à la majorité simple au sujet de questions qui n'entraient pas dans les catégories définies à l'Article 18? Pour bien illustrer ma thèse, j'invite les membres de l'Assemblée à se reporter, par exemple, à la résolution 651 (VII), par laquelle l'Assemblée générale, sans un seul considérant, a décidé d'ajourner à sa huitième session l'examen de la question du Sud-Ouest Africain. Tous les représentants qui sont ici savent que l'Assemblée a adopté cette résolution parce que la session touchait à sa fin et qu'elle n'avait plus le temps d'examiner la question. Il n'y avait pas d'autre solution. Prenons, au hasard encore, la résolution 654 (VII), que l'Assemblée a adoptée également sans considérants et par laquelle elle prend acte du rapport du Conseil de tutelle et recommande au Conseil de tenir compte, lors de ses sessions futures, des observations et suggestions formulées à la septième session de l'Assemblée générale. La délégation mexicaine ne méconnaît l'importance d'aucune de nos résolutions. Mais la plupart de ceux qui sont ici conviendront que l'importance des deux décisions que j'ai citées, qui ont été prises à la majorité des deux tiers, est moindre que celle de résolutions très sérieuses adoptées à la majorité simple.

13. Voyons maintenant l'autre aspect de la question. Qui, dans cette salle, niera qu'une session extraordinaire de l'Assemblée générale ne peut être convoquée que pour examiner une question particulièrement importante. Eh bien, une décision aussi grave, aussi coûteuse et aussi importante que celle de la convocation d'une session extraordinaire ne se prend pas à la majorité des deux tiers, mais à la majorité simple, car telles sont les dispositions expresses de l'Article 20 de la Charte, auquel j'invite les représentants à se reporter. L'importance de la question saute aux yeux. Or, l'affaire est décidée à la majorité simple.

14. Pour en finir avec cet aspect de notre discussion, examinons un cas particulièrement impressionnant. Nous venons de voir l'Article 18 de la Charte. Qui d'entre nous, considérant le caractère sérieux de nos débats sur les questions importantes, songerait à nier que la "détermination de nouvelles catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers" est un problème particulièrement ardu, grave et d'une importance évidente? Que les membres de l'Assemblée en jugent par eux-mêmes: selon le paragraphe 3 de l'Article 18, ce problème fondamental, qui, pour beaucoup, équivaut à une réforme de la Charte, est résolu à la majorité simple des membres présents et votants, parce que la Charte en dispose ainsi. Une question qui, à San-Francisco, a donné lieu aux discussions les plus complexes et les plus mouvementées, à cause de son importance évidente, qui, à moi personnellement, me semble supérieure à celle de la liste des facteurs, est tranchée à la majorité simple. Et cependant, cette majorité simple ne suffit pas à recommander que l'on arbore le drapeau de l'Organisation dans les Territoires sous tutelle. La majorité simple n'a le droit d'exprimer aucun avis, même le plus insignifiant, quand il s'agit de questions relatives au régime de tutelle ou de questions budgétaires.

15. Il est donc hors de doute que, tant que l'Assemblée générale n'aura pas déterminé de nouvelles catégories, rien dans la Charte ne saurait autoriser que d'autres questions soient tranchées à la majorité des deux tiers. S'il est arrivé, comme certains voudront certainement me le rappeler, que, dans certains cas, l'Assemblée ait accepté de voter à la majorité des deux tiers sur des questions pour lesquelles ce mode de scrutin n'était pas prévu, il ne faut pas en chercher la raison dans l'Article 18, mais dans l'Article 10 de la Charte, qui autorise l'Assemblée, d'une manière générale, à agir comme elle l'entend.

16. Le seul point qu'il semble juste et légitime de déterminer ici, dans des cas comme celui qui nous occupe, est de savoir si la question sur laquelle il faut voter entre ou non dans l'une des catégories déjà définies à l'Article 18. Goodrich et Hambro¹ citent à cet effet une résolution fondamentale relative à l'Afrique du Sud; après l'avoir étudiée sous cet angle, l'Assemblée a décidé, malgré son importance manifeste, de voter à la majorité simple, car la question ne rentrait dans aucune des catégories déjà définies.

17. Il s'agit expressément, au paragraphe 3 de l'Article 18 de la Charte, de la détermination de nouvelles catégories. Si une délégation veut proposer que les questions relatives au Chapitre XI soient votées à la majorité des deux tiers, ce qu'elle propose en réalité c'est que l'on établisse une catégorie nouvelle. L'établissement d'une nouvelle catégorie de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers pourrait, à n'en pas douter, constituer un sujet de discussion pour l'Assemblée générale. Si quelqu'un désire le proposer, puisque cette question ne figure pas à notre ordre du jour, il lui faudra certainement attendre la prochaine session, ou bien, s'il attribue à la question une importance extrême, il pourrait mettre en mouvement les rouages que le règlement intérieur prévoit pour que la question puisse encore être discutée à la présente session.

18. Nous avons vu que, dans le paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte, figure la catégorie des "questions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle", mais non celle des questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes. Les seules questions qui entrent dans cette catégorie sont celles qui relèvent des Chapitres XII et XIII de la Charte. J'ai donc des raisons d'affirmer que les questions relatives au Chapitre XI en sont expressément exclues.

19. Ma délégation ne fait pas partie du groupe de délégations qui portent la responsabilité d'avoir réussi vers la fin de la Conférence de San-Francisco, à scinder en deux le chapitre qui avait trait aux questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes et aux Territoires sous tutelle. La plupart de ceux qui sont ici savent comment ces deux séries de questions — c'est-à-dire l'ensemble des questions qui avaient trait aux peuples non autonomes — ont été, à San-Francisco, étudiées par une même commission, la Commission II, par un même comité, le Comité 4, en tant que parties A et B, d'un même projet qui s'appelaient, à cette conférence, "le régime de tutelle". Plus d'un représentant ici présente se rappellera avec amertume comment cette généreuse tentative d'ouvrir une ère nouvelle dans le domaine colonial n'a finalement abouti à rien. C'est un fait qu'au moment où la Commission II a tenu sa troisième séance, le 20 juin 1945, le Chapitre XI avait déjà été disjoint des Chapitres XII et XIII. On avait enlevé au Chapitre XI l'essentiel de sa force. Quant aux obligations claires et précises que les Chapitres XII et XIII imposaient aux autorités administrantes, les intéressés avaient réussi à dresser contre ces obligations l'obstacle de la majorité des deux tiers.

20. Rappelons-nous tout d'abord comment ont vu le jour les catégories de questions à trancher par la majorité des deux tiers. Au cours de sa première séance qu'elle a tenue le matin du 30 mai 1945, la Commission II a entendu le Rapporteur, rendant compte d'un rapport du Comité I, déclarer que le Comité recommande que les questions importantes énumérées ci-après soient décidées par une majorité des deux tiers à l'Assemblée générale; suivait une énumération de six catégories de questions, qui furent toutes approuvées. Au nombre de ces questions ne figuraient, après pourtant deux mois de travail, ni les questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes, ni les questions relatives aux Territoires sous tutelle. Je me permets de souligner, en passant, l'interprétation précise que ceux qui rédigeaient alors la Charte ont donnée à l'expression "questions importantes" qui désignait pour eux des catégories expressément définies dans la Charte.

21. C'est seulement après avoir réussi à séparer les territoires non autonomes du régime de tutelle proprement dit que le Comité 4 a présenté au Comité 1 la proposition relative à la procédure de vote. Le Secrétaire du Comité 1 l'a enregistrée dans les procès-verbaux de la quinzième réunion en précisant que "les questions relatives aux opérations du régime de tutelle" peuvent être ajoutées à la liste des questions importantes qui exigent la majorité des deux tiers à l'Assemblée générale². Après quoi, le Président du Comité s'est adressé au Comité et a déclaré qu'il s'agissait d'ajouter à la liste des questions importantes mentionnées dans la Charte les questions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle³. La proposition a été acceptée à l'unanimité. L'unité du chapitre commun, auquel on avait travaillé jusque là, était brisée. Les deux tronçons du chapitre, qui portaient alors des titres apparentés, "Politique générale" et "Régime international de tutelle", ont pris alors des titres distincts, ceux qu'ils portent aujourd'hui dans la Charte, et dans l'Article 18 on a naturellement eu soin de préciser, sans laisser place au doute, que la catégorie à laquelle s'applique la majorité des deux tiers ne comprend que le régime de tutelle.

¹ Voir Charter of the United Nations, Commentary and documents, deuxième édition revue et corrigée, 1949, Leland M. Goodrich et Edward Hambro.

22. Je ne doute pas que quelques-uns des représentants ici présents ne veuillent renvoyer à deux résolutions importantes relatives aux territoires non autonomes : les résolutions 567 (VI) du 18 janvier 1952 et 648 (VII) du 10 décembre 1952, auxquelles on a voulu appliquer la règle des deux tiers. Dans le cas de la première, le Danemark a demandé la majorité des deux tiers et Cuba s'y est opposé. Dans le deuxième cas, le Président a signalé qu'une délégation avait demandé un vote à la majorité des deux tiers et personne, semble-t-il, n'a élevé d'objection.

23. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais) : Je regrette, mais l'orateur a déjà largement dépassé le temps qui lui était fixé.

24. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) (traduit de l'espagnol) : Il convient de dire que la légalité de cette procédure peut être mise en doute, car il est clair qu'aucune disposition n'autorisait le Président à prendre seul cette décision.

25. Comme beaucoup d'autres délégations, la délégation du Mexique estime qu'il n'est pas juste d'essayer d'appliquer au Chapitre XI de la Charte des restrictions qui s'appliquent typiquement à la tutelle, sans accorder en contrepartie aucun des avantages des Chapitres XII et XIII. Dans les efforts constants que nous avons faits pour concilier nos vues avec celles des Puissances administrantes, nous nous sommes heurtés à cette faiblesse. Lorsqu'on a créé le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes et le Comité des facteurs, nous avons vu sans cesse planer sur nous l'ombre du Conseil de tutelle ; ces comités, en effet, ne devaient jamais avoir une composition différente de celle de la Quatrième Commission ou de celle de l'Assemblée. Autrement dit, dans les cas de crise, nous avons vu disparaître notre majorité et nous avons discuté les questions essentielles sur un pied d'égalité avec les Puissances administrantes, bien que celles-ci ne constituent nettement qu'une minorité, importante il est vrai. Quand on applique les procédés démocratiques, la majorité est la force logique qui décide de l'action commune.

26. La procédure à laquelle je fais allusion a provoqué une crise au cours même de la session actuelle, parce qu'on nous a proposé de créer un comité qui correspondait une fois de plus à la composition paritaire du Conseil de tutelle. Comme il se heurtait à une vigoureuse opposition, le représentant qui avait présenté ce projet a aussitôt retiré cette partie de sa proposition et, sous cette nouvelle forme, son texte a failli l'emporter.

27. J'ai encore une page d'arguments touchant cette question, mais je ne la lirai pas, puisque, comme la Présidente me l'a fait remarquer, j'ai dépassé le temps réglementaire. Je tiens ces arguments à la disposition de...

28. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais) : En raison du nombre d'orateurs qui figurent encore sur ma liste, je suis au regret de devoir interrompre le représentant du Mexique. Je crois que tous ses arguments, qu'il a très clairement exposés, ont été parfaitement compris par l'Assemblée. S'il désire conclure, je lui accorderai encore une minute.

29. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) (traduit de l'espagnol) : Le problème des "facteurs" que nous étudions en ce moment est typique de cette anomalie. C'est parce que la majorité a renoncé à ses prérogatives que nous discutons vainement cette question depuis des années. Loin de moi l'idée de méconnaître son importance. Les éléments que l'on nous présente ne sont pas à proprement parler des "facteurs", mais de simples listes de considérations destinées à orienter la discussion, chacun exposant librement ses vues et votant en conséquence. Il suffit d'examiner au hasard n'importe lequel des "facteurs" pour voir que la liste ne prévoit jamais dans quelle mesure tel facteur détermine l'autonomie d'un territoire. Je peux vous dire en toute sincérité que, si notre Assemblée rejetait aujourd'hui le projet de résolution proposé, la perte ne serait pas irréparable. Nous avons déjà la liste de la résolution 648 (VII) ; d'ailleurs, au cours de la présente session, nous avons tranché trois cas relatifs à l'autonomie et personne n'a eu besoin d'aucun guide. Il semblerait vraiment inconcevable que les représentants de pays indépendants qui sont réunis ici et qui sont tous si jaloux de leurs droits ne sachent pas définir ce qu'est l'autonomie complète.

30. Je viens d'exposer quelles sont nos intentions légitimes et dans quel esprit nous soumettons ces considérations. En conclusion, nous demandons que, dans tous les travaux relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, on procède au vote à la majorité simple.

31. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais) : Je demanderai aux représentants de faire en sorte que leurs interventions soient aussi brèves que possible.

32. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) (traduit de l'anglais) : Je m'efforcerai d'être très bref. Contrairement à l'opinion exprimée par le représentant du Mexique, la délégation danoise souhaiterait que la Présidente confirme que la question à laquelle a trait le projet de résolution I, à savoir les "facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes", est une question importante, tant au sens général du terme — et plus particulièrement au sens du paragraphe 2 de l'article 18 de la Charte — qu'au sens de l'article 84 du règlement intérieur ; autrement, ces deux dispositions seraient vraiment dépourvues de toute signification.

33. La Présidente se rappellera certainement que déjà en 1951, et de nouveau en 1952, on avait suggéré qu'il s'agissait là d'une question importante, exigeant par conséquent la majorité des deux tiers, et que c'est dans cet esprit que l'Assemblée générale avait procédé au vote. Le projet de résolution dont nous sommes maintenant saisis aurait pour effet de fixer certains critères à prendre en considération pour déterminer le champ d'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte. De l'avis de ma délégation, il s'agit incontestablement là d'une question importante et je demanderai à la Présidente de décider qu'il en est bien ainsi et de confirmer par là la pratique des présidents précédents, à laquelle s'est rangée l'Assemblée. Les opinions des auteurs cités par le représentant du Mexique étaient déjà connues de l'Assemblée lorsqu'elle a antérieurement adopté un point de vue opposé. L'Assemblée voudra certainement rester logique avec elle-même.

² Voir Documents de la Conférence des Nations Unies sur l'Organisation internationale, II/1/40.

³ Voir Verbatim records of the United Nations Conference on International Organization, Commission II, Committee I, 18 juin 1945, vol. 60.

34. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Afin d'accélérer nos travaux, je voudrais résumer la situation, telle que les deux représentants qui viennent de prendre la parole l'ont exposée. Les représentants du Mexique et du Danemark ont soulevé la question de savoir quelle était la majorité requise pour l'adoption du projet de résolution qui va être mis aux voix.

35. On ne voit nulle part que l'Assemblée ait jamais été appelée à se prononcer expressément sur ce point, bien qu'elle ait approuvé de façon tacite une décision présidentielle aux termes de laquelle la question dont il s'agit devait être votée à la majorité des deux tiers. Puisque maintenant ce point est soulevé, j'estime que le mieux serait de laisser l'Assemblée se prononcer elle-même.

36. Je vais donc mettre aux voix la motion du représentant du Mexique, selon laquelle le projet de résolution peut être adopté à la majorité simple.

Par 30 voix contre 26, la motion est adoptée.

37. M. LAWRENCE (Libéria) (traduit de l'anglais): Je prends la parole pour expliquer brièvement la raison pour laquelle ma délégation votera en faveur du projet de résolution VII de la Quatrième Commission, présenté à l'origine par sept Puissances de l'Amérique latine. Dans ce projet de résolution, l'Assemblée prend acte de l'opinion exprimée par le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis concernant la cessation de la transmission des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte en ce qui concerne Porto-Rico et considère qu'il convient de mettre fin à la transmission de ces renseignements.

38. Par des déclarations antérieures, ma délégation a fait savoir de façon catégorique quelle interprétation elle donnait au membre de phrase "qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes", que l'on trouve au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Si je prends la parole aujourd'hui c'est, entre autres raisons, pour confirmer cette interprétation et pour déclarer expressément que notre vote, dans ce cas particulier, ne doit pas être considéré comme signifiant que nous modifions nos vues dans quelque mesure que ce soit.

39. Je ne crois pas qu'un seul membre de cette Assemblée veuille soutenir que Porto-Rico est indépendant ou qu'il s'administre complètement lui-même au sens que ma délégation a maintes fois donné à ces termes; mais le représentant des Etats-Unis nous a fait savoir que le statut actuel de Porto-Rico, tel qu'il résulte de la nouvelle constitution, a été adopté librement lors d'un référendum par plus de 80 pour 100 de la population porto-ricaine; personne n'a contesté cette affirmation d'une façon qui aurait pu justifier une opinion différente. La Commission ayant refusé d'entendre les représentants de partis politiques porto-ricains qui désiraient lui présenter au sujet des Porto-Ricains et des conditions qui règnent sur leur territoire des vues qui auraient pu être différentes, nous n'avons, pour nous faire une opinion, que la déclaration du représentant des Etats-Unis. Dans cette déclaration, ma délégation a relevé avec intérêt l'affirmation selon laquelle le Gouvernement de Porto-Rico, sous sa forme actuelle, résulte du choix effectué librement et sans contrainte par le peuple de Porto-Rico par voie d'élections populaires. Dans ces circonstances, il ne faut pas, à notre avis, rechercher quelque arrière-pensée dans la déclaration de la délégation des Etats-Unis, et il y a lieu d'accorder la foi la plus entière à l'exposé qu'elle nous a soumis, en reconnaissance du principe de respect et de considération mutuels.

40. Pour ce qui est du projet de résolution VII, les dispositions du paragraphe 9 ne ferment pas la porte à l'établissement final de l'indépendance absolue du territoire lorsque les deux pays en exprimeront le désir. Etant donné que toute modification du statut de Porto-Rico exige l'accord des deux parties, on pourrait croire que la situation de Porto-Rico envers les Etats-Unis sera indéfiniment, comme elle l'est à l'heure actuelle, celle d'un simple associé. Certes, c'est là une possibilité; toutefois, la générosité traditionnelle et l'amour de la liberté — qui ont poussé le peuple des Etats-Unis à accorder spontanément la liberté et l'indépendance aux populations des Philippines et de Cuba et qui, aujourd'hui, ont fait de Porto-Rico l'un des territoires non autonomes les plus avancés — apporteront, nous en sommes convaincus, en temps voulu, au peuple de Porto-Rico l'autonomie complète, telle que nous l'avons toujours définie dans cette enceinte.

41. L'histoire des Etats-Unis en matière d'affaires coloniales confirme cette perspective libérale. A la fin de la grande guerre de 1914, alors que leurs alliés étaient occupés à se partager le butin des pays conquis sans égard pour leurs habitants, les Etats-Unis refusèrent obstinément de participer en quoi que ce soit à ces tractations. Lorsque prit fin la seconde guerre mondiale, les Etats-Unis, qui étaient pourtant à même d'étendre considérablement leurs territoires, refusèrent obstinément de déroger à leur opposition traditionnelle aux transactions coloniales, et ils se tinrent à l'écart. On leur offrit la tutelle de la Libye, mais ils refusèrent cette responsabilité; au lieu de cela, ils contribuèrent à la création de ce qui est aujourd'hui une Libye libre et indépendante.

42. Nous ne connaissons aucune autre Puissance qui puisse se targuer de réalisations semblables. En présence de tels exemples, ma délégation est fermement convaincue que prévaudra l'esprit traditionnel de liberté et de respect pour le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes qui sont au fond des cœurs et des esprits du peuple américain; ma délégation votera donc en faveur du projet de résolution VII.

43. Qu'il nous soit permis d'espérer que les exemples donnés par les Etats-Unis dans le domaine colonial inspireront un nouveau sens des valeurs aux Puissances qui, à l'heure actuelle, oppriment, dépossèdent et subjuguent les peuples de l'Afrique et de l'Asie, et leur feront comprendre que le grand principe de la "paternité de Dieu et de la fraternité des hommes" auquel elles ont rendu — du bout des lèvres — de si fervents hommages chaque fois que cela pouvait servir leurs fins impérialistes, deviendra un jour une réalité.

44. M. VAN LANGENHOVE (Belgique): La délégation belge désire exposer les principales raisons pour lesquelles elle votera contre le projet de résolution I relatif aux facteurs dont il faut tenir compte pour déterminer si un territoire est ou non autonome.

45. En premier lieu, le projet de résolution tend à investir l'Assemblée de pouvoirs que la Charte ne lui a pas conférés et à priver les Etats Membres d'une souveraineté qu'ils n'ont pas abdiquée. Semblable résolution, votée malgré l'opposition justifiée de tous les Etats qu'elle vise, demeurerait lettre morte; son seul effet serait de porter atteinte au prestige des Nations Unies.

46. Le projet de résolution tend, d'autre part, à consacrer une interprétation restrictive de la Charte, interprétation contre laquelle la délégation belge n'a cessé de protester; cette interprétation est celle des Etats qui veulent limiter le bénéfice des dispositions du Chapitre XI, relatif aux territoires non autonomes, aux seules populations indigènes des colonies et protectorats.

47. A cette interprétation restrictive, la délégation belge oppose une interprétation large, suivant laquelle le bénéfice des dispositions dont il s'agit doit s'étendre à toutes les populations indigènes non autonomes, quel que soit le territoire où elles vivent. En soutenant cette interprétation large, la délégation belge s'appuie sur trois arguments fondamentaux.

48. Nous nous appuyons d'abord sur un argument de texte: les mots "colonies et protectorats" ne figurent pas dans la Charte; celle-ci désigne les territoires visés par ces termes: "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". Il est évident que les populations des colonies et protectorats ne sont pas les seules qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Sans doute, fait-on valoir, il résulte des termes de l'Article 74 de la Charte que les dispositions dont il s'agit ne s'étendent pas aux populations des territoires métropolitains; mais ceux qui croient pouvoir en conclure qu'elles sont dès lors limitées aux populations des colonies et protectorats n'ont pas lu avec une suffisante attention les termes mêmes de la Charte. C'est dans l'Article 73, et non pas dans l'Article 74, que se trouve la seule définition des territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI. L'Article 74 se borne à se référer à cet égard à l'Article 73. On commet, par conséquent, une grossière erreur de raisonnement en cherchant cette définition dans l'Article 74 et en essayant de la fonder sur une interprétation de l'expression "territoires métropolitains", à ce point arbitraire qu'elle aboutit à la conséquence absurde de comprendre, par exemple, parmi les territoires métropolitains, des îles situées à plus d'un millier de kilomètres du territoire continental de l'Etat auquel elles appartiennent et habitées par des populations primitives à peine connues.

49. Nous nous appuyons, en second lieu, sur un argument de fait. Prétendre que les colonies et protectorats sont les seuls territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes revient à prétendre que les populations indigènes primitives ou semi-primitives d'Amérique, d'Asie ou de Malaisie s'administrent déjà complètement elles-mêmes au sens de la Charte. Or, leur état arriéré est tel que, quand elles n'échappent pas à toute administration de l'Etat dont elles relèvent, elles sont soumises à un régime constitutionnel juridique ou administratif spécial, tout comme les populations des colonies. D'autre part, elles sont, non seulement par leur caractère primitif, mais par la race, la langue et la culture, totalement différentes des populations dont le gouvernement de l'Etat est l'émanation. Ces populations, qui se chiffrent par millions, vivent à peu près complètement isolées des centres gouvernementaux. Elles en sont généralement séparées par d'énormes étendues de jungle presque impénétrable. Elles sont souvent à peu près les seuls habitants de vastes territoires soustraits au droit commun. Sans doute constituent-elles une partie intégrante de l'Etat sur le territoire duquel elles vivent, mais il n'en est pas autrement, par exemple, des populations congolaises, le Congo belge étant, de même, partie intégrante de l'Etat belge.

50. Nous nous appuyons, troisièmement, sur un argument moral. Les nombreux Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui étaient précédemment membres de la Société des Nations avaient pris l'engagement, dans l'article 23 du Pacte, d'"assurer le traitement équitable des populations indigènes dans les territoires soumis à leur administration". Cet engagement se retrouve, formulé en des termes qui ne sont guère différents, dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Nul n'a jamais prétendu, à l'époque de la Société des Nations, que cet engagement se limitât aux populations des colonies et protectorats; nul n'a jamais contesté qu'il s'étendit à toutes les populations indigènes. Il fut invoqué devant la Société des Nations dans des conditions qui prouvent qu'il constituait pour ces populations indigènes une garantie effective. Personne n'affirmera que les populations indigènes dont il s'agit ont réalisé, depuis, des progrès tels que l'Organisation internationale n'a plus à s'en soucier. Au contraire, le Comité d'experts chargé par les Nations Unies d'étudier le problème de l'esclavage a récemment procédé à une enquête révélant qu'elles sont victimes de graves abus. Elles trouvaient autrefois, dans l'article 23 du Pacte, une protection qui leur est aujourd'hui contestée. Leur situation, loin de s'améliorer, a ainsi empiré. Il y a donc un devoir élémentaire d'humanité à restituer aux populations indigènes les garanties dont, par millions, elles ont été dépouillées, bien qu'elles y aient droit suivant les termes mêmes de la Charte, et à ne point laisser subsister un état de choses qui constituerait, s'il devait durer, une déplorable régression du droit international. C'est là une tâche à laquelle la délégation belge convie tous les esprits généreux.

51. Permettez-moi, maintenant, d'expliquer en deux mots notre vote sur le projet de résolution VII relatif à la cessation de la communication des renseignements visée à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, en ce qui concerne Porto-Rico. La délégation belge partage sans hésitation l'opinion exprimée dans ce projet sur l'autonomie acquise par le peuple de l'Etat libre associé de Porto-Rico. Elle considère, par conséquent, que la décision du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis de cesser de transmettre des renseignements est pleinement justifiée. Si néanmoins nous ne pouvons voter en faveur de la résolution, c'est parce que nous ne reconnaissons à l'Assemblée aucune compétence pour formuler un jugement ou pour statuer à ce sujet.

52. La même raison fondamentale détermine l'attitude de la délégation belge à l'égard du projet de résolution VI concernant les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam.

53. M. CAÑAS (Costa-Rica) (traduit de l'espagnol): Ma délégation désire expliquer son vote sur le projet de résolution VII qui a trait à Porto-Rico.

54. Dans mon pays, lorsque nous parlions de Porto-Rico, il y a une quinzaine d'années, nous pensions aussitôt à ce pays comme à une nation sœur captive et subjuguée, mais qui aspirait au progrès et à un avenir meilleur, et en tant que citoyens d'un Etat indépendant, nous attendions le moment où nous pourrions saluer et accueillir avec satisfaction Porto-Rico dans la famille des nations américaines.

55. Dans mon pays, lorsque nous parlons de Porto-Rico, aujourd'hui, nous évoquons une île en plein progrès et en plein essor, où chacun jouit pleinement des libertés civiques, où une équipe laborieuse d'hommes honnêtes et consciencieux travaille sans relâche à donner à son pays un gouvernement capable, doté de tous les pouvoirs, et nous évoquons une île en plein progrès et en plein essor, où les étudiants de notre pays vont s'instruire et dont ils rapportent des enseignements.

56. On demande à l'Assemblée générale de reconnaître officiellement que Porto-Rico est aujourd'hui, avec son statut d'Etat libre associé, qui a été accepté par ses habitants au cours d'un libre plébiscite, non plus une colonie comme jadis, mais un territoire avec un gouvernement bien à lui et, qui plus est, un bon gouvernement.

57. Il y a quelques semaines, nous avons hissé à Costa-Rica le drapeau de Porto-Rico à l'occasion de la visite du Gouverneur de cet Etat. Pour nous qui vivons dans la région du monde où est située cette île, dont le destin ne dépend pas de nous mais des hommes qui y vivent et travaillent, Porto-Rico est une belle, une exemplaire réalité; Porto-Rico offre l'exemple d'un gouvernement stable et démocratique, d'un peuple qui jouit pleinement des libertés essentielles, et même de celles qui ne le sont pas, s'il en existe. Pour nous, les habitants de la région des Antilles, Porto-Rico est aujourd'hui un exemple stimulant. Les Antilles, l'Amérique, le monde entier ont besoin d'avoir sous les yeux l'exemple de gouvernements stables et démocratiques qui regardent vers l'avenir et se lancent dans d'audacieuses réalisations sociales et économiques, dans d'audacieux programmes de perfectionnement social, humain et culturel, tels les programmes que le Gouvernement actuel de Porto-Rico, de sa propre volonté et sans aucune ingérence étrangère, réalise de nos jours, au milieu de l'admiration de tous ceux qui se préoccupent de ces questions.

58. Si Porto-Rico a cessé d'être une colonie, comme les faits le prouvent, si le peuple porto-ricain, au cours de plébiscites et d'élections entièrement libres et dont personne n'a contesté la liberté et la bonne foi, a suivi la voie qu'il souhaitait, l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies va-t-elle dire aux Porto-Ricains qu'elle estime que la voie qu'ils ont eux-mêmes décidé de suivre n'est pas celle qu'elle aurait voulu les voir suivre? Allons-nous leur dire que le gouvernement qui leur convient n'est pas celui qu'ils ont librement choisi, dans le cadre de la plus moderne des constitutions, mais un autre gouvernement choisi par nous? Une telle attitude serait contraire à la logique et aux réalités.

59. La délégation de Costa-Rica, n'arrive pas à comprendre comment, lorsqu'un peuple a choisi son propre gouvernement, l'Assemblée générale peut dire à ce peuple qu'elle le considère toujours comme un peuple colonial. Ma délégation n'arrive pas à comprendre comment, alors que les Etats-Unis ne sont plus Puissance administrante à Porto-Rico, l'Assemblée générale peut dire aux Etats-Unis qu'ils se sont trompés et qu'ils doivent continuer à agir à Porto-Rico en qualité de Puissance administrante, alors que ni les Etats-Unis ni Porto-Rico ne veulent qu'il en soit ainsi.

60. On semble croire dans certains milieux que le destin de cette nation, qui est pour nous une nation sœur, dépend des décisions de l'Assemblée générale. Cette croyance est illusoire. Un de nos collègues l'a déjà fait remarquer lorsqu'on a débattu cette question devant la Quatrième Commission: pour être autonome, a-t-il dit, Porto-Rico n'a pas besoin de notre vote, car avec ou sans ce vote le territoire est autonome. Et il a ajouté, employant une image, que la cérémonie du sacre n'a jamais fait un chevalier mais qu'elle était, tout au plus, un moyen de reconnaître la qualité de chevalier.

61. On répète beaucoup — les livres et les auteurs le répètent — que l'Amérique latine est la terre des révolutions et des dictatures. Or voici un pays qui n'est pas la terre des révolutions et qui a recours à nous, non pour cesser de l'être, mais pour que nous proclamions aux quatre coins du monde qu'il ne l'est pas. La délégation de Costa-Rica tient à s'adresser aux délégations des autres pays d'Amérique latine pour leur demander de voter en faveur du projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis, pour que ce vote soit comme une consécration que les nations sœurs accordent à ce peuple libre et sans entraves, à cette belle démocratie qui représente l'idéal dont parle en termes si éloquents la constitution de notre organisation régionale.

62. Qu'allons-nous demander d'autre? Que les Porto-Ricains changent d'idée et que, dans la voie de l'autonomie, ils suivent le chemin que leur montre l'Assemblée? Il y a peu de temps, à Costa-Rica, le Gouverneur de Porto-Rico a déclaré en termes brusques: "Nous autres Porto-Ricains, nous avons le genre d'autonomie que nous voulons et non celui que veulent les autres."

63. L'Assemblée générale est pleinement compétente pour se prononcer sur la question qui lui a été posée. Il n'est pas nécessaire de prouver cette compétence de façon explicite, puisqu'elle est reconnue tacitement du fait que ce point figure à notre ordre du jour et que personne n'en a encore contesté l'inscription. C'est pourquoi, la délégation de Costa-Rica n'attache pas une importance particulière au paragraphe 6 du projet de résolution, puisqu'il ne fait que répéter ce que nous admettons tous en fait.

64. Mais plusieurs délégations ont jugé inadmissible le projet de résolution, parce que ce paragraphe y figure. En conséquence, s'il est procédé au vote paragraphe par paragraphe, la délégation de Costa-Rica votera contre le paragraphe 6 pour qu'on le retire du projet de résolution; ainsi, l'ensemble du projet de résolution obtiendra le plus grand nombre de voix possible. Mais ma délégation demandera aux autres délégations de voter en faveur du projet de résolution qui va être mis aux voix, même si le paragraphe en question continue d'y figurer. Il convient en effet que l'Organisation des Nations Unies reconnaisse pleinement que Porto-Rico est autonome et que l'île possède actuellement son propre gouvernement.

65. M. LODGE (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) (traduit de l'anglais): Les Etats-Unis sont fiers des nouveaux rapports qui les unissent à Porto-Rico et de l'effort commun accompli par nos deux peuples dans le sens du progrès politique. Il va sans dire que j'approuve fermement le nouveau statut de Porto-Rico, qui est devenu un Etat autonome associé aux Etats-Unis; toutefois, il n'entre pas dans mes intentions de passer en revue ici les faits que mes collègues, Mme Bolton et M. Fernoz, ont déjà exposés en détail devant la Quatrième Commission. Si j'ai demandé la parole, c'est pour apporter à l'Assemblée générale un message important du Président des Etats-Unis.

66. Au nom du Président, je suis autorisé à déclarer que, si l'Assemblée législative de Porto-Rico adopte à n'importe quel moment une résolution en faveur d'une indépendance plus complète, voire absolue, le Président recommandera immédiatement au Congrès d'accorder cette indépendance. Le Président désire également que je déclare qu'il accueillerait avec satisfaction, en pareille circonstance, l'adhésion de Porto-Rico au Traité de Rio et à la Charte des Nations Unies.

67. Ce message du Président marque l'intérêt traditionnel des Etats-Unis pour la liberté politique de tous les peuples, dans tous les pays du monde, chaque fois que la situation qui règne est telle que cette liberté ne puisse être mise en péril par des pressions intérieures ou extérieures.

68. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) (traduit de l'espagnol): C'est avec un vif plaisir que la délégation du Guatemala a écouté la déclaration du représentant des Etats-Unis. Cette déclaration confirme entièrement ce que ma délégation a eu l'honneur de dire devant la Quatrième Commission: nous sommes certains que, lorsque le peuple porto-ricain dira aux Etats-Unis: "Nous avons été amis et associés; maintenant nous ne voulons plus être que des amis", le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, fidèle à sa glorieuse tradition, accordera à ce peuple l'indépendance totale qu'il réclame.

69. Pour ce qui est des projets de résolution dont nous sommes saisis, ma délégation ne tient pas à reprendre ici au sujet des facteurs les arguments qu'elle a exposés devant la Quatrième Commission et qu'elle a empruntés aux auteurs mêmes de la Charte de San-Francisco, pour démontrer que la thèse que la délégation belge nous a maintes fois exposée à l'Assemblée générale, et en plusieurs sessions, s'oppose totalement à l'interprétation légitime que les auteurs mêmes de la Charte ont donnée au Chapitre XI, savoir que le Chapitre XI s'applique exclusivement aux populations des territoires qui n'ont pas encore atteint l'autonomie complète, et non aux populations plus ou moins évoluées qui vivent à l'intérieur des frontières nationales de territoires indépendants.

70. Je veux parler particulièrement du projet de résolution VII que la Quatrième Commission a soumis à l'Assemblée générale et qui a trait à Porto-Rico. A plusieurs reprises, ma délégation a reconnu que la population de Porto-Rico, grâce à ses mérites et à la bonne volonté du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, a déjà atteint un haut degré d'autonomie. La délégation du Guatemala, qui représente un peuple frère du peuple porto-ricain et qui a suivi depuis des siècles la lutte de ce peuple pour sa liberté, applaudit avec enthousiasme aux progrès effectués par le peuple porto-ricain sur la voie de l'accession à l'autonomie; en applaudissant à ces progrès, elle félicite de tout cœur ce peuple frère, ainsi que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis qui a rendu ces progrès possibles.

71. Cependant, il ne s'agit pas ici de déterminer si le statut que l'on a donné au peuple porto-ricain est satisfaisant ou non, si ce statut aide ou non le peuple porto-ricain à réaliser intégralement ses aspirations nationales; il ne s'agit pas ici d'accorder ou de refuser la liberté au peuple porto-ricain: notre tâche est tout autre, mais c'est une tâche très simple, dénuée de toute complication. Notre tâche consiste uniquement à savoir si le degré d'autonomie que le peuple porto-ricain a atteint à ce jour correspond ou ne correspond pas à la faculté de "s'administrer complètement lui-même", suivant l'expression employée par la Charte.

72. Compte tenu de cette idée et de cette interprétation limitée, ma délégation a la conviction absolue que le Gouvernement actuel de Porto-Rico se trouve à tel point limité dans l'exercice de ses prérogatives et dépend à tel point des Etats-Unis qu'il n'est pas possible de considérer qu'il a atteint l'autonomie complète que demande l'Organisation des Nations Unies. C'est pourquoi ma délégation votera une fois encore contre le projet de résolution adopté par la Quatrième Commission; en même temps, elle formule des vœux très sincères pour que le noble peuple porto-ricain se rapproche chaque jour de l'autonomie complète et puisse, de sa propre initiative et en toute liberté, réaliser intégralement ses aspirations. Quelles sont ces aspirations? C'est une question qui intéresse les Porto-Ricains, et uniquement les Porto-Ricains. C'est à eux qu'il appartient, de leur propre volonté, de définir ces aspirations et d'affirmer ce que désire la population. Qu'il s'agisse d'indépendance absolue, d'association plus ou moins étroite avec les Etats-Unis ou qu'il s'agisse du statut actuel, ma délégation, mon peuple et mon gouvernement y applaudiront de tout cœur.

73. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Nous allons mettre aux voix chacun des projets de résolution présentés par la Quatrième Commission [A/2556 et Corr.1]. Les délégations pourront expliquer leur vote avant ou après chaque scrutin.

Par 32 voix contre 19, avec 6 abstentions, le projet de résolution I, y compris son annexe, est adopté.

A l'unanimité, le projet de résolution II est adopté.

Par 43 voix contre 8, avec 7 abstentions, le projet de résolution III est adopté.

Par 48 voix contre zéro, avec 8 abstentions, le projet de résolution IV est adopté.

Par 39 voix contre 15, avec 6 abstentions, le projet de résolution V est adopté.

74. M. MUNRO (Nouvelle-Zélande) (traduit de l'anglais): Je n'oublie pas que l'Assemblée générale vient de voter sur le projet de résolution I, relatif aux facteurs, et sur la question de la majorité requise pour l'adoption des projets de résolution dont nous sommes saisis, mais c'est une autre question que je veux aborder maintenant. Avant que la Présidente n'invite l'Assemblée générale à voter sur les projets de résolution VI et VII, je voudrais lui demander de considérer qu'ils traitent tous les deux de questions importantes et qu'il y a par conséquent lieu d'appliquer à leur sujet l'article 84 du règlement intérieur. Ces projets de résolution concernent la cessation de la communication des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte en ce qui concerne, d'une part, les territoires non autonomes des Antilles néerlandaises et du Surinam et, d'autre part, Porto-Rico. Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas et celui des Etats-Unis ont déjà décidé de ne plus envoyer au Secrétaire général, pour ce qui est de ces territoires, les renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

75. Je voudrais simplement dire en quelques mots pourquoi ma délégation considère que ces projets de résolution traitent de questions importantes. L'Article 73, e, de la Charte impose aux Etats Membres qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes l'obligation de communiquer régulièrement au Secrétaire général des renseignements d'ordre statistique sur ces territoires. J'estime que les décisions de l'Assemblée générale relatives à la détermination de Puissances administrantes de ne plus communiquer ces renseignements ont un rapport très étroit avec les obligations de ces Etats Membres. Les décisions de l'Assemblée générale sur ces deux questions sont en outre d'une importance primordiale pour les habitants des territoires en cause, qui doivent observer avec le plus grand intérêt ce qui se passe ici aujourd'hui et qui peut avoir d'importantes conséquences pour leur avenir politique.

76. Enfin, ces décisions de l'Assemblée générale constituent, dans une certaine mesure, un jugement porté sur l'action de deux Etats Membres, et un tel jugement ne doit certes pas être porté à la légère. Je veux donc croire que les membres de l'Assemblée donneront à ces projets de résolutions la sérieuse attention qu'ils méritent. Si la Présidente estime devoir mettre ma proposition aux voix, je prierai tous ceux des membres de l'Assemblée qui ont à cœur le bien-être et le progrès des territoires non autonomes de l'appuyer, et je ferai très respectueusement remarquer que, si ces questions n'ont pas d'importance, c'est que ce mot a cessé d'en avoir aussi.

77. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Je regrette de ne pouvoir mettre aux voix la proposition du représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande, car la proposition du Mexique visait les projets de résolution VI et VII aussi bien que le projet de résolution I, et la décision que l'Assemblée a déjà prise s'applique aux trois projets.

78. M. MUNRO (Nouvelle-Zélande) (traduit de l'anglais): Je serais certainement le dernier à m'élever contre une décision de la Présidente. Tout ce que je veux dire — et j'ignore combien de représentants sont de mon avis — c'est que, si j'ai bien compris, mais je puis me tromper, le vote de l'Assemblée portait sur le projet de résolution I relatif aux facteurs et que la Présidente a autorisé tous les représentants à exprimer leur avis, sous forme d'explication de vote, sur chacun des projets de résolution. Mais, dans mon esprit, le vote de l'Assemblée ne concernait pas les projets de résolution particuliers que j'ai mentionnés.

79. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): L'intervention du représentant du Mexique portait sur l'ensemble de la question. Je crois donc qu'il avait en vue aussi bien les projets de résolution VI et VII que le projet de résolution I. Je voudrais que le représentant du Mexique confirme ou contredise cette interprétation.

80. Sir Percy SPENDER (Australie) (traduit de l'anglais): Je proposerais que cette question soit laissée à la décision de l'Assemblée. Je ne me propose pas de contester l'interprétation que la Présidente a donnée de la décision prise sur la proposition du représentant du Mexique. Tout ce que je puis dire c'est que je ne suis pas le seul membre de l'Assemblée à avoir compris autrement. Si tel n'avait pas été le cas, j'aurais certainement demandé la possibilité d'exprimer mon avis sur les questions en cause.

81. Comme il semble qu'il y ait eu un malentendu assez sérieux, je suis certain que la Présidente conviendra avec moi que nous devrions laisser à l'Assemblée le soin de décider si elle entend appliquer, pour les deux projets de résolution, la règle de la majorité des deux tiers ou celle de la majorité simple. Je puis en toute sincérité assurer la Présidente que, lorsque l'Assemblée a été saisie de la première motion concernant les vues du représentant du Mexique, je n'avais nullement l'impression que cette proposition visait les projets de résolution VI et VII.

82. Sir Gladwyn JEBB (Royaume-Uni) (traduit de l'anglais): J'estime qu'avant de prendre une décision sur ce point extrêmement important, nous devrions essayer de voir où nous allons. Je ne crois vraiment pas que l'on puisse trancher des questions de ce genre en votant sur elles en un tournemain, si je puis dire. Il convient d'en discuter davantage. A mon avis, la chose est très importante, et je ne vois pas pourquoi les représentants n'auraient pas le droit d'exposer leurs vues. Je voudrais donc expliquer, en deux minutes, pourquoi j'ai cru, moi aussi, comme le représentant de l'Australie, que ce dont il s'agissait, lorsque nous avons voté après l'intervention du représentant du Mexique, n'était pas de savoir si toutes les questions que peut soulever le Chapitre XI devaient être décidées à la majorité simple, mais plutôt si la question des facteurs exigeait cette majorité.

83. Si, comme je crois le comprendre, il s'agit maintenant de décider que toutes les questions concernant le Chapitre XI doivent invariablement être tranchées à la majorité simple, j'estime, en raison surtout de la faible majorité à laquelle a été prise la décision sur les facteurs, que l'on devrait donner à l'Assemblée l'occasion de débattre cette question. Il ne s'agit de rien moins qu'une question importante.

84. C'est à mon avis une étrange théorie que celle que nous a présentée le représentant du Mexique. Il a dit, si j'ai bien compris sa pensée telle qu'elle vient d'être précisée, que toutes les questions découlant du Chapitre XI devraient être décidées à la majorité simple. Or, que dit la Charte? En son Article 18, elle prescrit que les questions importantes doivent être tranchées à la majorité des deux tiers. Le libellé de cet article est le suivant: "Les décisions de l'Assemblée générale sur les questions importantes sont prises à la majorité des deux tiers..." Toutes les questions importantes doivent donc être décidées à la majorité des deux tiers. Cet article énumère même certaines questions qui, par définition, sont considérées par la Charte elle-même comme importantes. L'Article dit encore, et je reconnais qu'il peut y avoir une certaine ambiguïté dans la Charte elle-même:

"Les décisions sur d'autres questions, y compris la détermination de nouvelles catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers, sont prises à la majorité des membres présents et votant."

85. En un sens, la question qui se pose est la suivante: le mot "importantes" signifie-t-il oui ou non "importantes"? De toute évidence, la Charte ayant expressément déclaré que les questions importantes doivent être tranchées à la majorité des deux tiers, le mot "autres" ne peut se rapporter qu'à des questions non importantes. A ce propos, nous savons que, parmi les questions expressément énoncées dans la Charte comme importantes figure le fonctionnement du système de tutelle. Or, si le fonctionnement du système de tutelle est en fait mentionné dans la Charte elle-même comme une question importante, et si par conséquent les résolutions qui s'y rapportent doivent être adoptées à la majorité des deux tiers, le sens commun n'exige-t-il pas que l'on considère, par analogie, les questions relevant du Chapitre XI comme également importantes? Pourquoi les questions relevant du Chapitre XI devraient-elles être considérées comme non importantes et les questions touchant au système de tutelle comme importantes? Il n'y aurait là rien de logique.

86. A mon humble avis, et de l'avis de ma délégation, la thèse mexicaine revient à dire — et doit en réalité être ainsi considérée — que les questions relatives au Chapitre XI de la Charte ne sont pas des questions importantes. Ce n'est pourtant pas là l'opinion exprimée par le représentant du Mexique, qui a dit, au contraire, que ces questions sont très importantes, de toute première importance. Il semble donc qu'il y ait contradiction dans sa déclaration. Le représentant du Mexique a tout d'abord dit qu'il s'agissait de questions extrêmement importantes. Puis il a dit que les décisions de l'Assemblée générale concernant les questions importantes sont sans rapport avec le sujet qui nous occupe. Comment expliquer cela? A première vue, il me semble impossible que l'Assemblée ait pu prendre pareille décision, même à propos des facteurs. Mais si cette décision doit s'étendre à tout le Chapitre XI, cela devient assez grave.

87. Je n'ignore pas, bien entendu, qu'aux termes du paragraphe 3 de l'Article 18 il est en fait possible à l'Assemblée générale — et elle vient de montrer que la chose est possible — de décider à la majorité simple, si elle en décide ainsi dans sa sagesse, qu'une question quelconque, quelle que soit son importance, n'est pas en réalité importante mais qu'elle est simplement l'une des "autres" questions prévues par la Charte. Rien ne peut empêcher l'Assemblée d'en décider ainsi. En fait, l'Assemblée a manifesté sa sagesse il y a seulement un instant. Nul ne peut donc empêcher l'Assemblée générale d'agir ainsi si elle se prononce en ce sens à la majorité simple. Nous n'en estimons pas moins, avec tout le respect que nous devons à tous ceux qui professent une opinion différente, que c'est là une décision irréfléchie de la part de cet important organe.

88. Il a été particulièrement regrettable, à notre avis, qu'au lieu de décider, comme l'autorise le paragraphe 3 de l'Article 18, qu'une nouvelle catégorie de questions serait tranchée à la majorité des deux tiers, l'Assemblée a été invitée au contraire à décider — comme on le lui demande maintenant, si je comprends bien — qu'une nouvelle catégorie de questions, en l'espèce des questions touchant au Chapitre XI, sera tranchée à la majorité simple, ce qui est absolument le contraire de ce que voulait manifestement la Charte.

89. Je voudrais dire enfin, et je n'en ai plus que pour quelques minutes à vous infliger mes vues, qu'au fond, si les auteurs de la Charte ont prévu que certaines questions spéciales et d'autres questions, du fait de leur importance, doivent être tranchées à la majorité des deux tiers, c'est vraisemblablement parce qu'ils pensaient — avec raison je crois — qu'une résolution adoptée à la majorité des deux tiers, bien que n'étant pas obligatoire comme nous le savons tous, jouirait tout au moins d'une certaine autorité morale aux yeux de tous les membres. Je crois donc qu'il appartient à ceux qui ont appuyé — et qui appuient maintenant — la proposition dont nous sommes saisis de dire s'ils ont consciemment voulu et s'ils veulent consciemment diminuer l'autorité morale de toute résolution que l'Assemblée générale pourrait désormais adopter à propos du Chapitre XI. Si c'est là ce qu'ils attendent de nous, agissons donc.

90. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) (traduit de l'anglais): J'ai cru, moi aussi, que nous ne votions que sur les facteurs. Je me demande si, pour nous permettre à tous — y compris la délégation des Etats-Unis — de sortir d'une confusion qui semble être générale, vous ne pourriez avoir l'obligeance de nous faire lire le compte rendu sténographique de vos propres observations, en tant que Présidente, lorsque vous avez mis la question aux voix. Nous vous en serions très reconnaissants.

91. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Je suis intervenue il y a un instant pour donner une interprétation du discours du représentant du Mexique. Celui-ci a ensuite confirmé l'exactitude de mon interprétation. Cependant, étant donné la tournure qu'a prise le débat, je suis tout à fait disposée à demander à l'Assemblée si elle désire préciser que la décision adoptée tout à l'heure doit être comprise comme s'étendant aux projets de résolution VI et VII.

92. Sir Percy SPENDER (Australie) (parlant de sa place: (traduit de l'anglais)): Pour être présentée correctement, la question ne doit pas être posée de la façon proposée par la Présidente; il convient de demander si l'Assemblée applique ou non la règle des deux tiers.

93. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Je ne vois pas comment je pourrais soulever cette question pour l'instant. La décision adoptée parlait de majorité simple et c'est de cela que nous nous occupons en ce moment.

94. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) (traduit de l'espagnol): Ma délégation ne voit aucun inconvénient à ce que l'on consulte l'Assemblée sur cette question, mais elle tient à attirer l'attention des Membres de l'Assemblée sur le règlement intérieur. En premier lieu, nous avons une décision de l'Assemblée qui a été adoptée par 30 voix contre 26. Une majorité des deux tiers est nécessaire pour modifier cette décision. En second lieu, la Présidente de l'Assemblée a déjà donné son interprétation et, pour modifier sa décision, une majorité des deux tiers est également nécessaire.

95. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Il ne s'agissait pas d'une décision; ce n'était qu'une interprétation.

96. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) (traduit de l'espagnol): Je vous remercie de m'avoir montré l'erreur que j'ai commise.

97. M. MUNRO (Nouvelle-Zélande) (traduit de l'anglais): Vous savez, Madame la Présidente, je crois pouvoir le dire sans me tromper, que ni ma délégation ni moi-même ne voudrions méconnaître une de vos décisions. Mais nous savons tous ici qu'un vote peut donner lieu à des malentendus.

98. Il me déplairait qu'en changeant d'avis, l'Assemblée vienne annuler une de vos conclusions — une de vos décisions — et, avec tout le respect que je vous dois, il me déplairait que la question soit abordée sous la forme que vous proposez. Si vous me permettez de m'exprimer ainsi, je crois qu'il serait conforme à la dignité de vos hautes fonctions et aux responsabilités de cette Assemblée que vous acceptiez, à propos d'une question qui a donné lieu à un malentendu, que nous votions en notre qualité de représentants d'Etats souverains, sur la très importante question de savoir si la règle des deux tiers est applicable ou non.

99. M. KYROU (Grèce) (traduit de l'anglais): Si je comprends bien l'ensemble de la situation, vous n'avez pris aucune décision, Madame la Présidente. Vous n'avez fait qu'interpréter la motion présentée par le représentant du Mexique, et je crois que nous pourrions continuer cette discussion pendant des heures. C'est pourquoi, dans ces conditions, je crois que la seule solution est celle que vous venez de proposer. Vous avez interprété la motion présentée par le représentant du Mexique comme s'appliquant aux sept projets de résolution, et cette interprétation a été confirmée par le représentant du Mexique lui-même; je crois donc que la seule façon de sortir de la difficulté présente consiste à demander à l'Assemblée si elle approuve votre interprétation.

100. Sir Percy SPENDER (Australie) parlant de sa place (traduit de l'anglais): Plus précisément, la question à poser à l'Assemblée devrait être celle de savoir s'il s'agit ou non d'une question importante au sens du paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte.

101. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Je voudrais attirer l'attention des honorables représentants qui ont insisté sur ce point qu'un vote a déjà eu lieu. La seule façon de résoudre la question est donc celle que je viens de proposer à l'Assemblée. Je ne vois pas comment, après que le vote a eu lieu et que l'auteur même de la proposition a déclaré qu'elle devait s'entendre de la façon indiquée par la Présidente, nous pourrions maintenant, au point où nous en sommes, revenir subitement en arrière. Peut-être cela sera-t-il possible lorsque la situation aura été éclaircie.

102. Sir Gladwyn JEBB (Royaume-Uni) (traduit de l'anglais): Je voudrais demander un éclaircissement. Je dois dire que je trouve la situation assez confuse. J'avais compris — je me suis peut-être trompé — que la Présidente n'avait initialement mis aux voix la proposition du Mexique que pour le projet de résolution relatif aux facteurs. Si j'avais cru qu'on votait sur l'ensemble de la question du Chapitre XI — ce qui, si je comprends bien, est ce qu'on suggère maintenant — j'aurais certainement demandé à prendre la parole et je pense que la Présidente m'en aurait accordé le droit.

103. Quelle est exactement la situation en ce moment? Dois-je comprendre que la Présidente estime que le vote auquel nous avons procédé sur la proposition du Mexique se rapportait à toutes les questions, quelles qu'elles soient, qui se posent à propos du Chapitre XI, ou considère-t-elle que ce vote ne se rapportait qu'aux sept projets de résolution? C'est encore là un point obscur, pour moi du moins. Notre décision et notre attitude dépendront de ce qui s'est exactement passé lorsque la proposition a été mise aux voix. C'est pourquoi je voudrais me joindre au représentant des Etats-Unis pour demander qu'on donne lecture du passage du compte rendu sténographique correspondant au moment où la Présidente a effectivement mis la proposition aux voix. De cette manière, nous saurions tous où nous en sommes et ce sur quoi nous pouvions supposer que nous votions.

104. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Ce qui s'est probablement passé, à mon sens, c'est qu'un certain nombre des représentants n'ont pas écouté très attentivement la déclaration du représentant du Mexique. Mon interprétation se fondait uniquement sur ce qu'il avait dit; je ne lui ai pas prêté des propos qu'il n'avait pas tenus. Sa déclaration m'a donné l'impression qu'elle se rapportait aussi bien aux projets de résolution VI et VII qu'au projet de résolution I.

105. M. VYCHINSKY (traduit du russe): La délégation soviétique respecte toujours avec le plus grand soin et la plus grande attention les lois qui régissent l'activité de l'Assemblée générale et de toute notre Organisation.

106. Au nom de ma délégation, je dois dire que moi aussi j'ai compris, comme l'a précisé la Présidente, que le vote auquel nous avons déjà procédé sur la question posée par un représentant, avant la mise aux voix de ces sept projets de résolutions, portait sur l'ensemble des projets. La chose m'a semblé évidente d'après la façon dont la question était posée, mais aussi d'après le fond même de ces textes. Le contenu d'aucun de ces projets de résolution — tel que je le vois, le comprends et le considère — ne revêt un caractère tel qu'on puisse le ranger parmi les questions importantes, telles que celles qui concernent le régime de la tutelle, que visent l'Article 18 de la Charte et l'article 84 du règlement intérieur.

107. Se référant à la Charte, le représentant du Royaume-Uni vient de déclarer que, d'après celle-ci, les questions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle font partie des questions importantes à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers. Or, je me permets d'affirmer que le projet de résolution VI, que nous examinons actuellement, ne traite nullement de questions relatives au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle. Si vous voulez bien l'examiner en détail, paragraphe par paragraphe, vous constaterez qu'il ne contient justement rien sur le fonctionnement du régime de tutelle.

108. Ce n'est pas là, évidemment, un effet du hasard. Si nous nous reportons au règlement intérieur qui reproduit l'article correspondant de la Charte, c'est-à-dire l'Article 18, nous voyons qu'il n'y est pas fait mention de la tutelle en général, mais des questions qui intéressent le fonctionnement du régime de tutelle. Le seul passage du projet de résolution VI où l'on parle, si peu que ce soit, de tutelle, c'est le dernier paragraphe, qui prie le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas de communiquer régulièrement au Secrétaire général les renseignements visés à l'Article 73, c; mais ce n'est pas une question relative au fonctionnement du régime de tutelle. Il s'agit simplement de l'obligation, pour le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, de s'acquitter des obligations dont il est tenu actuellement. On y lit: "en ce qui concerne les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam ... jusqu'au moment où l'Assemblée générale aura décidé qu'il y a lieu de cesser la communication des renseignements relatifs à ces territoires". Par conséquent, pour moi — et, j'en suis convaincu, pour de nombreux autres représentants — la situation était claire; il ne s'agissait nullement d'une question relative au régime de tutelle et exigeant, à ce titre, la majorité des deux tiers, mais simplement d'une invitation à continuer de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général. La communication de renseignements est une chose; le régime de tutelle en est une autre. Les questions relatives au régime de tutelle, ce sont, par exemple, telles ou telles modifications nécessaires pour le fonctionnement de ce régime. Je n'en vois pas ici. C'est pourquoi, tout naturellement, j'ai pensé qu'il fallait un vote à la majorité simple.

109. Je voudrais appeler l'attention de l'Assemblée sur un point. Nous en sommes au projet de résolution VI. Nous avons donc voté sur cinq projets de résolution avant d'en arriver là, et personne n'a demandé s'il fallait un vote à la majorité des deux tiers. Nous avons voté à la majorité simple sur les projets de résolution I, II, III, IV et V, puis soudain, avant que nous n'abordions le vote sur le projet de résolution VI, voilà qu'on fait valoir que ce projet présente une importance telle qu'il exige une décision prise à la majorité des deux tiers. A mon avis, ce projet de résolution, quant à son importance, ne diffère nullement des précédents, pas plus que du projet de résolution VII. C'est pourquoi j'estime — et cela va de soi — que nous devons voter sur ce projet de résolution à la majorité simple, et que la décision prise a été correcte.

110. Si la Présidente pose la question de savoir si la décision que nous avons prise touchant le vote à la majorité simple était fondée ou non, le représentant du Guatemala a évidemment raison d'insister pour que l'on applique l'article 82 du règlement intérieur, qui prévoit un vote à la majorité des deux tiers. Si, sur ce point, on juge nécessaire de soumettre à un vote l'opinion de la Présidente, opinion qui me semble parfaitement correcte, cela revient à demander à l'Assemblée un nouveau vote sur une décision qu'elle a déjà adoptée. Dans ce cas, nous serons obligés de voter en conformité avec l'article 82, c'est-à-dire que cette décision, qui a déjà été prise, ne peut être modifiée ou rejetée à la présente session que si l'Assemblée générale se prononce pour la majorité des deux tiers.

111. M. MENON (Inde) (traduit de l'anglais) : La délégation de l'Inde ne voit pas très clairement quel est le sujet de la discussion actuelle. S'il s'agit d'une motion d'ordre, on peut, autant que je sache, donner la parole à deux orateurs pour et à deux orateurs contre. Néanmoins, puisqu'il y a eu un précédent de discussion générale à ce propos, je voudrais dire qu'à l'avis de ma délégation une proposition a été présentée par le représentant du Mexique et que le représentant du Danemark s'est déclaré contre cette proposition. La Présidente a fait connaître son interprétation, ou plutôt, puisque aucun texte ne prévoit d'interprétation, sa décision, lorsqu'on lui a demandé si la proposition se rapportait à l'ensemble des sept projets de résolution. En conséquence, la seule procédure possible est que quelqu'un en appelle de la décision présidentielle, ou que celle-ci soit volontairement mise aux voix. Je ne vois pas comment nous pourrions procéder à un nouveau vote sur cette question s'il n'était pas fait appel de la décision présidentielle et si une nouvelle décision n'était pas prise.

112. Je voudrais aussi souligner que, depuis l'examen du projet de résolution I, nous en avons déjà discuté d'autres relatifs à l'éducation, à l'autonomie et à des questions de même nature; or ce n'est qu'actuellement qu'on soulève des objections de cet ordre. Je ne pense pas qu'il convienne que je discute du fond de l'Article 18 de la Charte, mais on peut noter que dans cet article, il est fait expressément mention des questions qui doivent être soumises à la règle de la majorité des deux tiers. Quand, dans un texte juridique quelconque, figure une mention expresse, non seulement il est sous-entendu, mais encore c'est le sens et l'intention mêmes de la clause en question que, dans le cas de toutes les autres questions, les dispositions énoncées ne s'appliquent pas.

113. Pour ces raisons, je suggère que nous poursuivions le débat conformément à la décision prise par la Présidente.

114. M. PIGNON (France) : Il me paraît évident, après les explications qui ont déjà été données par un certain nombre des orateurs qui m'ont précédé, que nous avons voté dans la confusion. Avons-nous même voté sur une motion? Il semble bien, en fait, que nous ayons voté sur un discours, lequel comportait, évidemment, des conclusions, mais également des arguments ou des exemples qui semblent avoir été confondus avec des conclusions au sens juridique du terme.

115. Quelle a été la base de l'interprétation donnée par la Présidente? Une confirmation du représentant du Mexique. Mais cette confirmation a été rétrospective, elle a été tardive; elle est venue après que le vote ait été acquis. Par conséquent, il me semble qu'elle ne présente qu'une valeur en tout cas relative.

116. Dans ces conditions, j'ai une solution à proposer, si elle convient au représentant du Mexique. Etant donné que c'est sa décision qui, en quelque sorte, a été à la base de la décision même de la Présidente, si le représentant du Mexique consentait à admettre dans l'intérêt de la clarté et de la bonne entente qui doit régner au cours des travaux de l'Assemblée, que sa motion — si j'ose ainsi qualifier ce qui a été, en fait, un discours — n'avait qu'une portée relative aux facteurs d'autonomie et s'il nous permettait d'avoir maintenant un nouveau vote, il nous rendrait certainement un très grand service.

117. La PRÉSIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais) : Un véritable débat semble s'engager. Plusieurs représentants m'ont donné l'impression — mais mes impressions mêmes deviennent un peu confuses — qu'il existe une certaine confusion. Ce que je cherche, c'est à dissiper la confusion; c'est pourquoi j'ai modifié les termes de la motion que je voulais mettre aux voix. Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Australie, qui a manifesté le désir de faire connaître son opinion à ce sujet, mais je demande que, puisque nous cherchons à éclaircir une situation confuse, nous n'ajoutions pas à la confusion.

118. Sir Percy SPENDER (Australie) (traduit de l'anglais) : J'obéirai de mon mieux aux instructions de la Présidente et je chercherai à ne pas ajouter à la confusion, mais je crois que la question est très simple.

119. En premier lieu, qu'il me soit permis de rappeler qu'un discours ne constitue pas une motion. Dans un discours, on touche à un grand nombre de points. Le seul problème est de savoir quel était le point, l'affaire, la question dont l'Assemblée était saisie. Je me suis donné la peine de chercher quelle était cette question. Il y avait un certain nombre de points inscrits à l'ordre du jour de cet après-midi. Le vote a porté sur la question des facteurs relatifs aux territoires non autonomes; personne ne le conteste. Dans son discours, le représentant du Mexique a évoqué un certain nombre d'autres problèmes, comme il est normal quand on présente une argumentation; mais la seule question est de savoir de quelle nature était la motion qu'il entendait proposer au cours de la présente séance de l'Assemblée. A vrai dire, aucune motion n'a été soumise à l'Assemblée, mais la Présidente a interprété les intentions du représentant du Mexique et, autant que je comprenne, la seule question qui ait été posée à l'Assemblée se rapportait au premier point de l'ordre du jour. En mettant cette question aux voix, la Présidente a dit : "La motion selon laquelle le projet de résolution" — le projet de résolution au singulier — "peut être adopté à la majorité simple."

120. Le représentant des Etats-Unis a demandé que l'on donne lecture du compte rendu sténographique. En ce qui me concerne, je puis seulement dire que j'ai suivi la discussion comme, je crois, la majorité d'entre nous et que j'ai compris exactement, je pense, quelle était la question posée. Je me permets de suggérer qu'on donne lecture du compte rendu sténographique; en tout cas, aucune considération de procédure ne doit empêcher l'Assemblée de résoudre par elle-même ce problème d'un intérêt considérable: la question qui se pose est-elle ou non une question importante au sens du paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte?

121. La PRÉSIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais) : C'est précisément pour la raison évoquée par le représentant de l'Australie — c'est-à-dire parce que je veux que l'Assemblée ait toute possibilité de prendre la décision qui lui conviendra en pleine connaissance de ce qu'elle a décidé antérieurement — que je me suis efforcée de donner une nouvelle forme à la motion. Comme je l'ai dit précédemment, je cherche uniquement à préciser dans quel esprit on a voté la première fois; il n'est pas du tout clairement établi que tous aient compris le vote de la même façon. C'est pourquoi je suggère que nous abordions la question de la façon suivante: assurons-nous si l'intention de l'Assemblée est de considérer que la décision prise au sujet de la procédure de vote s'applique uniquement au projet de résolution I.

122. En conséquence, je mets aux voix la proposition ci-après: "La décision prise au sujet de la procédure de vote ne s'applique qu'à la résolution I". Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, dont le nom est tiré au sort par la Présidente.

Votent pour: Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Brésil, Canada, Colombie, Costa-Rica, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, France, Islande, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord.

Votent contre: Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques.

S'abstiennent: Chili, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua.

Par 34 voix contre 21, avec 4 abstentions, la proposition est rejetée.

123. La PRÉSIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Nous devons maintenant prendre une décision en ce qui concerne les projets de résolution VI et VII, et je voudrais mettre aux voix une motion selon laquelle la majorité simple seulement est requise pour l'approbation des projets de résolution VI et VII.

124. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) (traduit de l'espagnol): Je vais être très bref. Je tiens à déclarer que, dans toute mon intervention, je me suis efforcé de faire comprendre que la demande du Gouvernement mexicain tendait à faire adopter la majorité simple et non la majorité des deux tiers pour toute question touchant au Chapitre XI. J'ai abondamment soutenu cette thèse dans tout mon exposé; même si, par suite de circonstances malheureuses, je n'ai pu conclure mon exposé, il sera facile de voir dans le compte rendu sténographique, que j'ai terminé en disant ceci:

"Nous demandons que, dans tous les travaux relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, on procède au vote à la majorité simple."

125. La délégation mexicaine estime qu'il convient de maintenir sur ce point la décision présidentielle; elle estime que le scrutin qui vient de se terminer doit consacrer la juste interprétation que la Présidente a donnée de mes paroles. La délégation mexicaine ne croit pas qu'il convienne en l'occurrence de procéder à un nouveau scrutin. Il va de soi que la délégation mexicaine se conformera, comme toujours, à la décision de la Présidente.

126. M. MATES (Yougoslavie) (traduit de l'anglais): Je reconnais qu'il est regrettable qu'au lieu de poursuivre le scrutin sur les projets de résolution, nous ayons laissé se développer une discussion de semi-procédure. Je n'aurais pas tenu à participer à cette discussion si l'on n'avait présenté à nouveau une interprétation de la Charte qui me paraît entièrement erronée, et c'est précisément cette mauvaise interprétation qui, à mon avis, est à l'origine de la plupart des difficultés rencontrées au cours de ce débat.

127. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni et quelques autres représentants ont soutenu qu'aux termes de l'Article 18 de la Charte la majorité des deux tiers est requise pour certaines questions importantes, et que l'Assemblée peut décider que d'autres questions importantes doivent également être tranchées à la majorité des deux tiers. Tout d'abord, je crois qu'il est très difficile de voter pour décider si une question est importante ou non; il est possible que cette question ne revête pas la même importance dans l'esprit des différentes délégations, et il serait peut-être malaisé de convenir d'un dénominateur commun pour tous les cas. On est allé jusqu'à demander qu'un vote soit pris sur le point de savoir si la question traitée dans certains projets de résolutions était importante ou non. Toutefois, je crois que cette discussion est hors de propos. L'Article 18 de la Charte stipule que les décisions de l'Assemblée sur les questions importantes sont prises à la majorité des deux tiers; vient ensuite une énumération complète des questions qui ont été déclarées importantes; le paragraphe 3 de l'Article 18 stipule que les décisions sur d'autres questions, y compris la détermination de nouvelles catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers, sont prises à la majorité simple.

128. Il est possible que le texte anglais de la Charte ait induit en erreur le représentant du Royaume-Uni; en effet, nous lisons au paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18: "These questions shall include"; vient ensuite une énumération. Je tiens à rendre hommage une fois de plus depuis cette tribune à la langue française. Le texte français de la Charte est un texte officiel, et lorsqu'il existe des textes d'un document juridique en deux ou plusieurs langues faisant également foi, si l'un des textes prête à équivoque et si l'autre est précis, il convient d'interpréter ce document d'après le texte le plus précis. C'est là un concept juridique que personne dans cette Assemblée, je présume, ne contestera. Or, que dit le texte français de l'Article 18 de la Charte?

"Les décisions de l'Assemblée générale sur les questions importantes sont prises à la majorité des deux tiers des membres présents et votants."

Ceci est la règle. Vient ensuite la définition: "Sont considérées comme questions importantes", et nous trouvons ensuite une énumération des questions importantes.

129. Ces mots ne peuvent avoir d'autre sens que de signifier que les décisions de l'Assemblée générale sur les questions importantes sont prises à la majorité des deux tiers, ces questions importantes étant énumérées ensuite. "Sont considérées" est une définition des mots "questions importantes" que l'on retrouve dans la première phrase du paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18. "Sont considérées comme questions importantes" toutes les questions qui y sont énumérées comme telles. Cette énumération ne contient rien qui se rapporte au Chapitre XI de la Charte. En outre, il est stipulé au paragraphe 3:

"Les décisions sur d'autres questions, y compris la détermination de nouvelles catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers, sont prises à la majorité des membres présents et votants."

Cela signifie que, si une question quelconque ne fait pas partie des catégories énumérées au paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18, il est procédé au vote à la majorité simple.

Ces mots ne laissent subsister aucun doute, et toute discussion de procédure à ce sujet est complètement en dehors du cadre de la Charte.

130. Si j'ai demandé la parole, c'est parce que je crois qu'il s'agit d'un problème beaucoup plus grave que d'un simple vote sur un ou deux projets de résolution. Il s'agit d'une interprétation de la Charte. J'ai voulu éclaircir ce point, et j'ai tenu plus particulièrement à signaler à nouveau qu'à mon avis tout vote visant à déterminer si une question est importante ou non irait à l'encontre de la Charte; en effet, celle-ci ne nous demande pas de nous prononcer sur l'importance des questions, mais elle donne un sens technique aux questions importantes; elle définit et énumère ces catégories et stipule:

"Les décisions sur d'autres questions, y compris la détermination de nouvelles catégories de questions à trancher à la majorité des deux tiers..."

Cela signifie que l'Assemblée peut, à titre exceptionnel, décider de trancher d'autres catégories de questions à la majorité des deux tiers sans décider si ces questions sont importantes ou non.

131. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique): Le représentant du Mexique vient de nous exposer très clairement que l'objet de sa motion était de décider que les projets de résolution qui nous étaient soumis aujourd'hui et, d'une façon générale, les projets de résolution relatifs au Chapitre XI de la Charte devaient être soumis à la règle de la majorité simple.

132. Je ne crois pas que cette motion aurait dû être mise aux voix; en effet, toutes les questions présentées à l'Assemblée générale font l'objet de décisions prises à la majorité simple, à l'exception des questions importantes, et ces questions importantes sont celles qui sont mentionnées au paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte et celles que l'Assemblée générale décide, par un vote à la majorité simple, d'inclure dans la catégorie des questions importantes.

133. Aujourd'hui, la question ne se pose pas de savoir si l'Assemblée veut que les décisions soient prises à la majorité simple, ce qui est la règle; il s'agit de savoir si l'Assemblée générale est prête à décider que les deux questions qui lui sont actuellement présentées doivent être soumises à la règle de la majorité des deux tiers. Ces deux questions sont les suivantes: d'une part, la cessation de la communication des renseignements sur les Antilles néerlandaises et sur le Surinam est-elle justifiée? D'autre part, la décision des Etats-Unis relative à Porto-Rico est-elle justifiée?

134. Si la Présidente le juge nécessaire, je proposerai de mettre aux voix une motion tendant à ce que l'Assemblée générale considère ces deux questions comme étant des questions importantes.

135. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Nous allons mettre aux voix la question de savoir si les projets de résolution VI et VII peuvent être adoptés à la majorité simple.

136. Je donne la parole au représentant du Guatemala pour une motion d'ordre.

137. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) (traduit de l'espagnol): Je vous prie de m'excuser si je ne comprends pas bien ce que nous sommes en train de faire. J'ai l'impression que nous allons décider pour la troisième fois que nous ne voulons pas voter sur ces projets de résolution à la majorité des deux tiers. Nous l'avons fait une première fois lorsque la Présidente a mis aux voix la motion du représentant du Mexique; nous venons de le faire une deuxième fois. Si j'ai bien compris l'interprétation en espagnol, la Présidente a mis aux voix la proposition suivante: l'Assemblée veut-elle interpréter cette décision comme signifiant que la majorité simple s'applique uniquement au projet de résolution I? L'Assemblée a répondu nettement par la négative. Que signifie cette réponse? Elle signifie que l'Assemblée veut que la décision sur les sept projets de résolution soit prise à la majorité simple. Pourquoi procéder à un nouveau scrutin sur la question de savoir si la décision sur les deux derniers projets de résolution devra être prise à la majorité simple ou à la majorité des deux tiers?

138. Il convient à mon avis de mettre aux voix immédiatement les deux projets de résolution VI et VII; la décision sur ces projets de résolution devra, conformément à la décision de l'Assemblée générale, être prise à la majorité simple.

139. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique): La présidence se propose de mettre aux voix la question de savoir si les projets de résolution qui nous sont soumis peuvent être votés à la majorité simple; ceci revient à demander à l'Assemblée générale si la Charte peut être obéie. Car la Charte dit que toutes les questions sont votées à la majorité simple, à l'exception des questions importantes, et sont considérées comme importantes les questions présumées importantes en vertu du paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18, de la Charte ainsi que les questions dont l'Assemblée générale elle-même décide qu'elles sont importantes. Telle est l'interprétation qui a été donnée d'une façon constante à ce terme depuis que l'Organisation des Nations Unies existe.

140. Je ne crois pas, je le répète, qu'il soit possible de mettre aux voix la question de savoir si nous devons obéir à la Charte. Toutes les questions soumises à l'Assemblée générale sont tranchées à la majorité simple, sauf si, par une décision prise à la majorité simple, l'Assemblée générale décide qu'il s'agit d'une question importante.

141. Pour mettre fin à cette confusion, je sou mets la motion — et je fais une proposition formelle en ce sens si la Présidente l'estime nécessaire — que l'Assemblée générale considère comme importants les deux projets de résolution sur lesquels nous allons avoir à voter.

142. M. VYCHINSKY (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) (traduit du russe): Si j'ai bien compris, la question posée est de savoir si le vote sur les projets de résolution VI et VII doit être pris à la majorité simple ou à la majorité des deux tiers. Dans ce cas, je dois vous demander une précision: sur quoi venons-nous de voter? En quoi consistait notre dernier vote?

143. A mon avis, voici ce qui s'est passé; l'histoire est brève et très claire: le représentant du Mexique a proposé que nous nous prononcions sur tous les projets de résolution à la majorité simple. Nous avons voté sur le projet de résolution I à la majorité simple, puis successivement sur les projets II, III, IV et V. Quand nous en sommes venus au projet de résolution VI, on a posé la question de savoir si la proposition du représentant du Mexique s'appliquait également à ce projet, ainsi qu'au projet VII, c'est-à-dire, si elle s'étendait à tous les projets de résolution en question, ou bien si elle ne visait que le premier de ces projets.

144. La Présidente a alors déclaré que la proposition du représentant du Mexique avait trait à tous les projets de résolution. Mais comme, évidemment, la Présidente a préféré ne pas imposer son opinion, elle a consulté l'Assemblée, et tout d'abord le représentant du Mexique. Celui-ci a confirmé que sa proposition s'étendait à tous les projets de résolution. Nous avons voté: par 34 voix contre 21, si je ne me trompe, l'Assemblée a décidé que la proposition visait tous les projets de résolution, c'est-à-dire que nous devions donc nous prononcer sur tous ces projets à la majorité simple.

145. Maintenant, la Présidente pose la question suivante: faut-il voter sur le projet de résolution VI à la majorité simple ou à la majorité des deux tiers? Or, cette question a déjà été tranchée. Je pense, tout à fait comme le représentant du Guatemala, que la question a été réglée. S'il en est ainsi, à quoi bon prendre une nouvelle décision? La Présidente éprouve, me semble-t-il, quelque hésitation. S'il en est ainsi, je comprends ses scrupules: elle veut faire preuve d'une objectivité absolue, et elle a raison de s'y efforcer, mais nous ne devons pas être victimes de cet excès de scrupule. Nous ne devons pas en être les victimes et continuer indéfiniment à parler de la même question, à voter sur le même texte. A mon avis, nous devrions suivre la décision qui a été prise.

146. Enfin, si la Présidente ou un représentant désirent procéder à une nouvelle épreuve, cela signifiera que l'Assemblée devra réexaminer une décision déjà prise. Cette décision, c'est que le vote sur tous les projets de résolution — donc aussi sur les projets VI et VII — doit être pris à la majorité simple. Si l'on veut remettre la chose en question, nous devons nous reporter à l'article 82 du règlement intérieur. Cet article nous permet de procéder ainsi. Mais je m'oppose catégoriquement à l'application de cet article; en effet, le vote qui vient d'avoir lieu a confirmé que tous les projets de résolution — du projet I au projet VII inclus — doivent faire l'objet d'un vote à la majorité simple. C'est pourquoi je prie respectueusement la Présidente de mettre aux voix ces projets de résolution.

147. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) (traduit de l'anglais): J'appuie la proposition du représentant de la Belgique. En particulier, le projet de résolution relatif à Porto-Rico intéresse directement les Etats-Unis ainsi que le Gouvernement et le peuple de Porto-Rico; il constitue pour ma délégation l'élément le plus important du rapport de la Quatrième Commission. En outre, ce projet de résolution est étroitement lié à l'exécution et à l'accomplissement d'une obligation expressément énoncée dans un article de la Charte, à savoir l'Article 73. Mon gouvernement a fait tous les efforts en son pouvoir en vue de s'acquitter en toute bonne foi de cette obligation; en fait, il a accompli plus que n'exigeait la lettre de la Charte. Ma délégation estime que c'est là une question importante au sens de l'Article 18 de la Charte et sur laquelle une décision ne peut être prise qu'à la majorité des deux tiers. Je veux espérer que la Présidente mettra aux voix la proposition du représentant de la Belgique.

148. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Pour autant que je sois sensible aux tentatives faites par divers représentants, et plus particulièrement à l'effort du représentant de la Belgique, en vue d'éclaircir la situation, je regrette qu'il me soit impossible de faire quoi que ce soit au point où nous en sommes. Nous venons de voter sur l'interprétation de la motion relative à la procédure de vote, et l'Assemblée générale a marqué sa volonté de ne pas limiter l'application de cette motion au seul projet de résolution I. Il nous reste encore à voter sur les projets de résolution VI et VII. Il me semble que cela est très clair, et la seule chose que nous puissions faire à l'heure actuelle est de continuer et de procéder au vote sur ces deux projets de résolution. La décision que l'Assemblée générale vient d'adopter s'applique aux projets de résolution VI et VII. Nous allons voter séparément sur ces deux projets de résolution.

149. Je mettrai d'abord aux voix le projet de résolution VI. Un vote par division a été demandé sur les troisième et sixième paragraphes de ce projet de résolution.

Par 30 voix contre zéro, avec 15 abstentions, le préambule et les paragraphes 1 et 2 sont adoptés.

Par 33 voix contre 5, avec 13 abstentions, le paragraphe 3 est adopté.

Par 39 voix contre 2, avec 15 abstentions, les paragraphes 4 et 5 sont adoptés.

Par 35 voix contre 13, avec 2 abstentions, le paragraphe 6 est adopté.

Par 33 voix contre 13, avec 8 abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution est adopté.

150. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée générale votera maintenant sur le projet de résolution VII.

151. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) (traduit de l'anglais): J'ai deux demandes à présenter en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution VII; je demanderais premièrement qu'il soit procédé à un vote distinct, par appel nominal, sur le dernier paragraphe du préambule, et, deuxièmement, qu'il soit procédé à un vote par appel nominal sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

152. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Avant de mettre aux voix le projet de résolution VII, je donne la parole au représentant des Pays-Bas qui désire expliquer le vote de sa délégation sur le projet de résolution VI.

153. M. SPITS (Pays-Bas) (traduit de l'anglais): Lorsque la Quatrième Commission de l'Assemblée générale a recherché s'il y avait lieu de cesser la communication des renseignements relatifs aux Antilles néerlandaises et au Surinam, la délégation des Pays-Bas a informé la Commission qu'aux termes des arrangements provisoires qui constituent actuellement les constitutions des deux territoires en question, leurs parlements — librement élus au suffrage universel direct et secret — ont plein pouvoir pour légiférer dans les domaines économique et social et dans le domaine de l'instruction sans aucune intervention de la part du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas. La transmission par le Gouvernement néerlandais de renseignements sur ces questions, et la prise de responsabilités que cette transmission de renseignements comporterait, constitueraient une atteinte à l'autonomie du Surinam et des Antilles néerlandaises et seraient contraires aussi bien aux dispositions constitutionnelles des deux territoires intéressés qu'à la Constitution des Pays-Bas.

154. L'Article 73, e, de la Charte stipule que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général s'exerce "sous réserve des exigences de la sécurité et de considérations d'ordre constitutionnel". Le Gouvernement néerlandais a estimé que, dans les conditions que je viens de décrire, cet article l'autorisait pleinement à cesser la communication des renseignements. Cette opinion était partagée par les représentants des Antilles néerlandaises et du Surinam qui ont déclaré que leurs parlements et leurs gouvernements considéraient la transmission de renseignements par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas comme incompatible avec la réalisation et les progrès de l'autonomie déjà proclamée dans leur pays. Ils ont ajouté que, du point de vue constitutionnel, ils n'avaient pas à communiquer ces renseignements au Gouvernement néerlandais afin que ce dernier les communique à son tour à l'Organisation des Nations Unies conformément à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

155. Cependant, la Quatrième Commission a adopté le projet de résolution VI contenant un amendement de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques aux termes duquel le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas est prié "de communiquer régulièrement au Secrétaire général, en ce qui concerne les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam, les renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, jusqu'au moment où l'Assemblée générale aura décidé qu'il y a lieu de cesser de communiquer des renseignements relatifs à ces territoires".

156. Maintenant que ce projet de résolution, dont je viens de citer le paragraphe 6 du dispositif, a été adopté par l'Assemblée générale, je ne m'attarderai pas sur la question de savoir si l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour décider à quel moment peut cesser la communication des renseignements concernant un territoire non autonome. Cette compétence, le Gouvernement néerlandais refuse de la reconnaître. Je désire simplement exprimer le regret de ma délégation concernant l'insertion du paragraphe 6 dans la résolution, et déclarer que, quelle que soit l'opinion de la majorité de l'Assemblée générale sur ce point, le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas ne peut agir contrairement à ses propres lois et à sa constitution; il ne saurait pas davantage adopter des mesures allant à l'encontre de l'opinion et de la volonté des Gouvernements et Parlements des Antilles néerlandaises et du Surinam dont les intérêts sont en jeu dans ce débat.

157. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): J'invite l'Assemblée générale à se prononcer sur les cinq premiers paragraphes du préambule du projet de résolution VII.

Par 39 voix contre zéro, avec 17 abstentions, les paragraphes sont adoptés.

158. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Nous allons maintenant voter sur le sixième paragraphe du préambule. Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, dont le nom est tiré au sort par la Présidente.

Votent pour: Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Egypte, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine.

Votent contre: Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Canada, Colombie, Costa-Rica, Danemark, France, Islande, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Panama, Paraguay, Suède, Turquie, Union Sud-Africaine.

S'abstiennent: Brésil, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Honduras, Israël, Nicaragua, Pérou.

Par 34 voix contre 19, avec 7 abstentions, le paragraphe est adopté.

159. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): Je mets maintenant aux voix le dispositif du projet de résolution.

Par 26 voix contre 11, avec 19 abstentions, le dispositif est adopté.

160. La PRESIDENTE (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée votera maintenant sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution VII. L'appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Union Sud-Africaine, dont le nom est tiré au sort par la Présidente.

Votent pour: Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Bolivie, Brésil, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Costa-Rica, Cuba, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Ethiopie, Grèce, Haïti, Honduras, Iran, Israël, Libéria, Nicaragua, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Philippines, Thaïlande, Turquie.

Votent contre: Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Yougoslavie, Australie, Belgique, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Tchécoslovaquie, Guatemala, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Mexique, Pologne, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine.

S'abstiennent: Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Venezuela, Yémen, Afghanistan, Argentine, Danemark, Egypte, France, Islande, Liban, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pakistan, Arabie saoudite, Suède, Syrie.

Par 26 voix contre 16, avec 18 abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution est adopté.

161. Sir Percy SPENDER (Australie) (traduit de l'anglais): Ma délégation s'est vue obligée de voter contre le projet de résolution concernant la cessation de la transmission de renseignements relatifs à Porto-Rico, parce qu'elle a toujours estimé que l'Assemblée générale n'a pas compétence pour décider du moment où un territoire a atteint un degré de développement suffisant pour que cesse la communication des renseignements, prévue à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, sur les conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction. Ma délégation estime que seule l'Autorité chargée de l'administration — en l'occurrence les Etats-Unis d'Amérique — a compétence pour prendre une telle décision.

162. Nous reconnaissons que, sous la direction sage et bienveillante des Etats-Unis, Porto-Rico a atteint un degré de développement tel qu'il n'est plus nécessaire, ni même possible, pour les Etats-Unis de communiquer des renseignements sur ce territoire. Les Etats-Unis ont pris une décision à cet égard et l'Assemblée générale n'a pas, aux termes de la Charte, à formuler de conclusion sur ce point. Ma délégation a adopté exactement la même attitude, dictée par le principe que je viens d'énoncer, en ce qui concerne les Antilles néerlandaises et le Surinam. Nous estimons que la façon dont nous interprétons la Charte n'autorisait ni ne justifiait aucune autre attitude.

163. La résolution qui vient d'être adoptée affirme que l'Assemblée générale a compétence pour prendre une décision sur ce point. Bien que la conclusion de cette résolution concorde avec la décision prise par le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, nous estimons qu'elle est contraire au principe très net que je viens d'énoncer. Il ne faut donc pas interpréter notre vote comme un refus de reconnaître le fait indiscutable qu'il n'est plus nécessaire que les Etats-Unis continuent de communiquer des renseignements relatifs à Porto-Rico; notre vote est une protestation contre ce qui nous paraît être, de la part de l'Assemblée, une usurpation de compétence.

164. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) (traduit de l'anglais): La délégation des Etats-Unis a voté en faveur des projets de résolution II, IV et VII. A son regret, elle n'a pu voter en faveur des projets de résolution I, III, V et VI.

165. En ce qui concerne, en particulier, le projet relatif à Porto-Rico, je tiens à dire que les Etats-Unis ont voté en faveur du projet de résolution VII parce que, aux termes de ce projet, l'Assemblée générale était d'accord avec mon gouvernement pour reconnaître que Porto-Rico a cessé d'être un territoire non autonome au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies. Dans des questions de ce genre, les dispositions de la Charte limitent le rôle de l'Assemblée générale, qui ne peut que discuter, exprimer des opinions et faire des recommandations. En dernière analyse, seule la Puissance administrante peut décider qu'un territoire a cessé d'être un territoire non autonome.

166. Dans le cas de Porto-Rico, l'Assemblée générale a discuté le statut de ce territoire; dans la résolution qui vient d'être votée, elle a exprimé l'opinion que Porto-Rico n'est plus un territoire non autonome au sens de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Quels que soient les termes employés dans la résolution, l'Assemblée générale ne peut et ne saurait décider du statut d'un territoire en se fondant sur les dispositions de l'Article 73. L'Assemblée ne peut que discuter la question, exprimer des opinions et faire des recommandations. C'est sous réserve de cette interprétation que ma délégation a voté pour la résolution que nous venons d'adopter.

167. Pour terminer, je désire rendre hommage à ce grand homme d'Etat porto-ricain, le gouverneur Luis Muñoz Marín. Sous sa direction, le peuple si cultivé de Porto-Rico apporte une contribution magnifique à la démocratie et à la liberté. Son administration continuera à protéger dans l'avenir, comme elle l'a fait par le passé, les droits légitimes des minorités et les libertés qui leur sont chères et qui sont garanties par la Constitution de l'Etat associé de Porto-Rico. C'est pour défendre ces idéaux que les soldats de Porto-Rico ont combattu en Corée avec les forces des Nations Unies, et nous pouvons être sûrs que les objectifs élevés des Nations Unies ne trouveront nulle part un soutien plus chaleureux que dans l'Etat associé de Porto-Rico.

168. M. de MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) (traduit de l'espagnol): La délégation de la République Dominicaine a eu le plaisir de voter de nouveau pour le projet de résolution relatif à la cessation de la communication des renseignements concernant Porto-Rico, comme elle l'avait fait à la Quatrième Commission. Notre délégation, conformément aux instructions officielles du Gouvernement de la République Dominicaine, a fondé son attitude sur le fait que Porto-Rico, en raison de son statut constitutionnel et de sa transformation en Etat libre associé aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique, a accédé à l'autonomie, d'où il résulte que les Etats-Unis, devenus l'ex-Puissance administrante, ne sont plus tenus de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

169. En outre, nous avons tenu particulièrement compte du principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, qui, par l'intermédiaire des divers processus électoraux, a servi d'argument dominant pour réaffirmer en droit international la situation de Porto-Rico dans le cadre du Chapitre XI de la Charte et même dans l'évolution locale de ses institutions de droit public.

170. Ma délégation ne peut dissimuler l'émotion qu'elle a éprouvée en écoutant la déclaration officielle qu'a faite cet après-midi M. Lodge au nom du président Eisenhower. Ces paroles donnent un éclat magnifique à la résolution proposée par la Quatrième Commission, et en même temps elles font honneur aux Etats-Unis, elles renforcent notre conviction et elles réaffirment que le destin de Porto-Rico est solidaire du nôtre, de celui de notre Amérique, de celui de l'Organisation des Nations Unies; aujourd'hui plus que jamais, le peuple porto-ricain peut compter sur l'appui fraternel et enthousiaste de la communauté internationale.

171. Mme MENON (Inde) (traduit de l'anglais): Nous avons entendu avec beaucoup d'intérêt la déclaration faite par le représentant des Etats-Unis au nom du Président de son pays. Au nom de ma délégation, j'aimerais donner au représentant des Etats-Unis l'assurance que, lorsque les Porto-Ricains seront entièrement libres, l'Inde sera le premier pays à féliciter le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis d'avoir mené à bien sa noble tâche et d'avoir ainsi donné l'exemple aux autres Etats Membres qui administrent des territoires. Ma délégation s'est vue cependant obligée de voter contre le projet de résolution VII autorisant le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis à cesser de transmettre des renseignements relatifs à Porto-Rico, parce qu'elle estime que l'Assemblée générale n'a pas étudié la question comme il convenait de le faire.

172. Lorsque la question a été examinée par le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, ma délégation a jugé que la décision finale revenait à l'Assemblée générale, et elle a voté dans ce sens pour deux raisons: d'abord, parce qu'à son avis l'Assemblée générale est seule compétente pour prendre une décision sur une question aussi importante; ensuite parce que ma délégation estimait que cette question pouvait être examinée d'une façon beaucoup plus complète par la Quatrième Commission. Le Secrétaire général avait, dans l'intervalle, reçu de nombreuses communications émanant de partis politiques importants et de représentants de ces groupes, qui demandaient à être entendus avant que la Commission ne prenne une décision. Ma délégation, avec plusieurs autres, estimait qu'il fallait faire droit à ces pétitions, et elle a voté en ce sens, mais l'opinion opposée a prévalu. Nous avons alors présenté un amendement au projet de résolution, dans lequel nous demandions la création d'un comité spécial chargé d'étudier la question, d'examiner les pétitions, d'accorder les audiences et de présenter l'an prochain un rapport à la Commission. Cette procédure signifiait évidemment un délai d'un an. C'était peu de chose, car nous considérions que l'avenir et le bien-être de plus de 2 millions de Porto-Ricains dépendaient de notre décision.

173. Ma délégation a toujours rendu l'hommage qui s'imposait à la loyauté, à la sincérité et au dévouement dont les Etats-Unis ont constamment fait preuve en s'acquittant des obligations de la Charte, et elle comprend les principes généraux qui motivent son attitude actuelle à l'égard de Porto-Rico. Mais cet hommage sincère ne doit pas nous faire oublier qu'il s'agit de l'avenir d'un peuple civilisé, héritier d'une riche culture dont il est fier; cette question mérite donc toute notre attention. Rien ne peut justifier la hâte dans ce domaine, car toutes les mesures que nous pourrions prendre auront des répercussions lointaines, non seulement sur l'avenir de Porto-Rico et de ses 2 millions d'habitants, mais sur les autres 18 millions d'êtres humains qui, pour faire reconnaître leurs droits, livrent courageusement un combat désespéré contre la discrimination raciale, l'exploitation économique et la domination politique. Ils ont mis leur espoir dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et nos décisions doivent contribuer à justifier cet espoir.

174. C'est en tenant compte de tout cela que ma délégation a voté contre le projet de résolution. On a affirmé que Porto-Rico avait atteint l'autonomie complète que prévoit le Chapitre XI de la Charte et que, par conséquent, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis n'avait plus à remplir les obligations qui lui incombent aux termes de l'Article 73, e. Nous ne doutons pas que des changements constitutionnels soient intervenus à Porto-Rico, ni que les Porto-Ricains soient parvenus à un accord avec les Etats-Unis. Nous avons étudié avec beaucoup de soin les documents qui se rapportent à cette question. Cette étude nous a permis d'aboutir à deux conclusions :

175. Tout d'abord, malgré le degré d'autonomie que lui confèrent les nouvelles dispositions constitutionnelles, Porto-Rico continue à relever des dispositions de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Deuxièmement, tout en reconnaissant que Porto-Rico a le droit de passer des accords de tout ordre avec les Etats-Unis ou d'autres pays, nous estimons que, pour être valables, ces accords doivent remplir deux conditions : il faut que Porto-Rico ne soit soumis à aucune pression extérieure au moment de la signature d'un tel accord et il est indispensable que les méthodes démocratiques dont il est fait mention, telles que le référendum ou le plébiscite, soient appliquées dans une atmosphère de complète liberté démocratique. Ma délégation n'est pas certaine que ces deux conditions aient été remplies dans l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies.

176. Nous pensons d'autre part que l'Autorité chargée de l'administration ne peut abandonner la mission sacrée qui lui a été confiée, et que l'Assemblée générale ne peut se dégager de cette responsabilité sans avoir longuement et mûrement réfléchi. Nous estimons que les populations des territoires non autonomes ont besoin de la protection qui leur est promise en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte pour accéder progressivement à l'autonomie complète. Cette protection ne saurait faire l'objet d'aucun troc et l'Assemblée ne peut abandonner cette garantie sur la recommandation de la seule Puissance administrante. Les Etats Membres qui n'administrent pas de territoire ne doivent pas traiter ces questions hâtivement ou à la légère. Souvenons-nous qu'il faut avant tout penser aux intérêts des populations des territoires non autonomes.

177. Pour me résumer, je dirai que ma délégation n'est pas convaincue que Porto-Rico, dans son association actuelle avec les Etats-Unis, soit devenu un territoire autonome. Il ne saurait, à notre avis, y avoir d'association ou d'accord équitables et valables entre deux pays ou deux territoires si ce n'est sur la base de l'égalité. Nous estimons que l'indépendance doit précéder toute association volontaire ; les liens qui se forment entre deux peuples, dans un désir véritable de collaboration, ne sont nullement incompatibles avec l'indépendance ; mais une association d'Etats où subsiste une inégalité de statut ne peut que masquer les reliques d'un passé colonial. Cela serait contraire à la Charte qui tend, non pas à créer ou à perpétuer le colonialisme sous une forme quelconque, mais à l'éliminer complètement des systèmes et de la pensée politiques du monde moderne. C'est pourquoi ma délégation s'est vue contrainte de voter contre un projet de résolution qui ne tient pas compte du désir de Porto-Rico de bénéficier des garanties internationales pendant la période de non-autonomie, et dans laquelle il n'est pas question de donner aux Porto-Ricains la liberté à laquelle ils aspirent.

La séance est levée à 18 h. 30

ASSEMBLEE
GENERALEDistr.
GENERALE

A/2556

17 novembre 1953

FRANCAIS

ORIGINAL : ANGLAIS

DOCUMENTS
INDEX UNIT REGISTER

Huitième session

Points 32, 33 et 34 de l'ordre du jour

NOV 20 1953

RENSEIGNEMENTS RELATIFS AUX TERRITOIRES NON AUTONOMES

Rapport de la Quatrième CommissionRapporteur : M. N. RIFAI (Syrie)

1. A sa 435^{ème} séance plénière, le 17 septembre 1953, l'Assemblée générale a renvoyé à la Quatrième Commission les points suivants de son ordre du jour :

"32. Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes transmis en vertu de l'Article 73 e de la Charte : rapports du Secrétaire général^{1/} et du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes^{2/} :

a) Renseignements relatifs à la situation dans le domaine de l'enseignement^{3/}

b) Renseignements relatifs à la situation dans d'autres domaines^{4/}

c) Transmission de renseignements^{5/}

d) Participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes : recommandations du Comité^{6/}

33. Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes : rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes)^{7/}

^{1/} A/2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2410/Add.1, 2411, 2411/Add.1, 2413, 2413/Add.1-8, 2414, 2414/Add.1 et 2.

^{2/} Voir les Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, Huitième session, Supplément n° 15, document A/2465

^{3/} Ibid., première partie, section VI et deuxième partie.

^{4/} Ibid., première partie, sections VIII et IX.

^{5/} Ibid., première partie, section XII.

^{6/} Ibid., première partie, section XIII.

^{7/} A/2428

34. Cessation de la communication des renseignements visés à l'Article 73 e de la Charte : rapports du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) et du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes :

a) Antilles néerlandaises et Surinam^{8/}

b) Porto-Rico^{9/}

35. Election de deux membres du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes."

^{8/} A/2428.

^{9/} A/2465, première partie, section VII.

FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER SI UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MEMES

2. Ayant décidé d'examiner d'abord le point 33 de son ordre du jour, la Quatrième Commission a discuté cette question, de sa 322ème séance à sa 331ème séance. Elle était saisie du rapport de 1953 du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2428), contenant une liste de facteurs permettant de décider si les territoires non autonomes s'administrent complètement eux-mêmes.

3. A la 325ème séance, le Brésil a présenté un projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.272) aux termes duquel l'Assemblée générale aurait :

1) Pris acte des conclusions du rapport du Comité ad hoc; 2) approuvé la liste de facteurs contenue dans ce rapport; 3) recommandé aux Puissances administrantes qui sont Membres de l'Organisation et à l'Assemblée générale de prendre pour guide la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe et d'appliquer ces facteurs en tenant compte de toute circonstance propre à chaque cas particulier, lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si, du fait de modifications de son statut constitutionnel, un territoire est visé, ou n'est plus visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, afin que l'on puisse décider, d'après la documentation fournie en vertu de la résolution 222 (III), s'il y a lieu de continuer ou de cesser la communication des renseignements prévus au Chapitre XI de la Charte; 4) recommandé que, lors de l'étude de chaque cas particulier, on accorde une importance primordiale aux éléments qui prouveraient que la population intéressée a exercé son droit à disposer d'elle-même; 5) réaffirmé que ces facteurs, tout en servant de guide lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les obligations énoncées à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte existent encore, ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes; 6) réaffirmé également que, pour qu'un territoire puisse être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est essentiel que sa population s'administre complètement elle-même selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte; 7) chargé en outre le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, lorsqu'il s'acquittera des fonctions qui lui sont dévolues par le paragraphe 1 de la résolution 334 (IV) adoptée le 12 décembre 1949 et le paragraphe 2 de la résolution 448 (V) adoptée le 2 décembre 1950, d'étudier toute documentation qui sera désormais communiquée en vertu de la résolution 222 (III) adoptée le 3 novembre 1948, en tenant compte de la liste de facteurs approuvée par la présente résolution, et d'autres considérations qui pourront intervenir à propos de chaque cas concret où l'on aura cessé de communiquer des renseignements; 8) recommandé que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes prenne l'initiative de proposer à l'Assemblée générale de reviser, d'interpréter ou de compléter la liste de facteurs, chaque fois que, du fait de difficultés d'application ou de circonstances nouvelles, le Comité le jugerait utile.

4. L'Arabie saoudite, la Bolivie, l'Egypte, le Guatemala, l'Indonésie, l'Irak, le Mexique, la Syrie, le Venezuela, le Yémen et la Yougoslavie ont présenté des amendements communs (A/C.4/L.273) à ce projet de résolution. Ces amendements avaient pour objet : 1) d'ajouter après le deuxième alinéa du préambule un nouveau paragraphe ainsi conçu : "Tenant compte du fait que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour examiner les principes qui devraient guider l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les Etats Membres en ce qui concerne le respect des obligations qui découlent des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et faire des recommandations à leur sujet;" 2) de supprimer le quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution; 3) de remplacer le paragraphe 2 du dispositif par le texte suivant : "Approuve la liste de facteurs qui, jointe en annexe, forme partie intégrante de la présente résolution;" 4) de modifier comme suit le début du paragraphe 3 du dispositif : "Recommande à l'Assemblée générale et aux membres administrants de prendre pour guide...etc"; de supprimer dans le même paragraphe les mots "et d'appliquer ces facteurs en tenant compte de toutes circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier"; de remplacer à la fin du même paragraphe les mots "afin que l'on puisse décider" par les mots "afin que l'Assemblée générale puisse décider"; 5) de remplacer le paragraphe 4 du dispositif par le texte suivant : "réaffirme que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes"; 6) d'ajouter, après le paragraphe comme paragraphes 5 et 6, les paragraphes suivants : "5. Considère que la validité de toute forme d'association entre un territoire non autonome et la métropole ou tout autre pays dépend essentiellement de la volonté de la population intéressée, librement exprimée au moment où cette association est décidée."; 6. Considère que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance que les territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent atteindre l'autonomie complète, bien qu'il soit admis qu'un territoire peut aussi devenir autonome en s'associant à un Etat ou à :

un groupe d'Etats, à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue."; 7) de donner le numéro 7 au paragraphe 5 du dispositif et de remplacer les mots "à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73" par les mots "au Chapitre XI"; 8) de donner le numéro 8 au paragraphe 6 du dispositif et, à la fin du paragraphe, de supprimer les mots "selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte"; 9) de donner le numéro 9 au paragraphe 7 du dispositif et de modifier comme suit le début du paragraphe : "9. Charge le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes d'étudier toute documentation qui ..."; 10) de modifier comme suit le dernier paragraphe du dispositif : "Recommande que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes prenne l'initiative de proposer lorsqu'il le juge utile des modifications propres à améliorer la liste de facteurs en fonction des circonstances".

5. Les onze auteurs des amendements précités ont proposé d'autres amendements (A/C.4/L.274) à la liste de facteurs approuvée par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2428). Ces amendements étaient les suivants :

Première partie (Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance) : - modifier le facteur A.4 comme suit : "Défense nationale. Droit souverain d'assurer sa défense nationale".

Deuxième partie : 1) remplacer le titre de cette partie par le titre suivant "Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme distincte d'autonomie"; 2) faire du facteur A.1 le facteur A.6; 3) faire du facteur A.2 le facteur A.1; 4) ajouter le texte suivant, comme facteur A.2 : "Liberté de choix. Liberté pour la population de choisir entre plusieurs possibilités, y compris l'indépendance, en vertu du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes"; 5) rédiger le facteur A.3 comme suit : "Limitation volontaire de souveraineté. Mesure dans laquelle il est prouvé que l'attribut ou les attributs de la souveraineté qui ne s'exercent plus à titre individuel seront exercés à titre collectif par l'entité plus vaste ainsi constituée et liberté, pour la population d'un territoire qui s'est associé à la métropole, de modifier ce statut à tout moment, en exprimant sa volonté par voies démocratiques"; 6) ajouter un nouveau facteur A.4 ainsi conçu : "Considérations d'ordre géographique. Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire non autonome avec le siège du gouvernement métropolitain peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels; et mesure dans laquelle les intérêts des Etats limitrophes peuvent être affectés, compte tenu du principe général de bon voisinage mentionné à l'Article 74 de la Charte"; 7) ajouter un facteur A.5 ainsi conçu : "Considérations d'ordre ethnique et culturel. Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement"; 8) ajouter un nouveau facteur B.2 ainsi conçu : "Changement de statut politique. Droit de la métropole ou du territoire de modifier le statut politique de ce dernier, compte tenu de la question de savoir si le territoire fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat."; 9) faire du facteur B.2 actuel le facteur B.3.

Troisième partie. (Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à la métropole ou à un autre pays et en constitue une partie intégrante). 1) ajouter dans le titre ci-dessus les mots "sur un pied d'égalité" entre le mot "associé" et les mots "à la métropole"; 2) remplacer à la fin du titre les mots "et en constitue une partie intégrante," par les mots "comme partie intégrante de ces pays, ou sous toute autre forme"; 3) faire du facteur A.1 le facteur A.5; 4) faire du facteur A.2 le facteur A.1; 5) ajouter un facteur A.2 ainsi conçu : "Liberté pour la population d'un territoire non autonome qui s'est associé avec la métropole comme partie intégrante de ce pays, ou sous toute autre forme, de modifier ce statut en exprimant sa volonté par des voies démocratiques."; 6) ajouter le texte suivant au facteur A.3 actuel : "Droit de la métropole ou du territoire de modifier le statut politique de ce dernier, compte tenu de la question de savoir si le territoire fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat."; 7) supprimer, dans le facteur A.5, qui deviendrait le facteur A.6, les mots "...a) en vertu de la Constitution de la métropole; ou b)"; 8) reproduire, comme facteur B.2, le texte du facteur C.2 de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs, les facteurs B.2 et B.3 devenant les facteurs B.3 et B.4; 9) reproduire comme facteur C.5 le texte du facteur C.3 de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs.

6. Le Président a proposé à la Quatrième Commission que le vote ait lieu sur la base du projet de résolution brésilien et des amendements à ce projet. En conséquence, lorsqu'elle en viendrait au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution, qui proposait d'approuver la liste de facteurs contenue dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc, la Commission examinerait l'amendement approuvant une liste à joindre à la résolution; si elle l'adoptait, elle étudierait, immédiatement après, la liste de facteurs et les amendements à cette liste.

7. Toutefois, à sa 329^{ème} séance, à la suite d'une proposition verbale du représentant du Guatemala, la Commission a décidé, par 26 voix contre 22, avec 4 abstentions, de voter sur la liste de facteurs approuvée par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (A/2428) et sur les amendements à cette liste proposés par l'Arabie saoudite, la Bolivie, l'Egypte, le Guatemala, l'Indonésie, l'Irak, le Mexique, la Syrie, le Venezuela, le Yémen et la Yougoslavie (A/C.4/L.274), qui sont indiqués au paragraphe 5 ci-dessus.

8. Le vote a donné les résultats suivants :

Première partie

1. Le texte proposé pour remplacer le facteur A.4 a été adopté par 31 voix contre 9, avec 10 abstentions.
2. L'ensemble de la première partie, dans sa forme remaniée, a été adopté par 34 voix contre 7, avec 10 abstentions.

Deuxième partie

1. Le texte proposé pour remplacer le titre actuel a été adopté par 27 voix contre 15, avec 9 abstentions.
2. L'amendement tendant à faire du facteur A.1 le facteur A.6 a été adopté par 21 voix contre 12, avec 16 abstentions.
3. L'amendement tendant à ajouter à la liste un nouveau facteur portant le numéro A.2 a été adopté par 27 voix contre 15, avec 8 abstentions.
4. L'amendement tendant à remplacer le texte actuel du facteur A.3 a été mis aux voix en deux parties. La première partie jusqu'aux mots "l'entité plus vaste ainsi constituée" a été adoptée par 30 voix contre 8, avec 12 abstentions. La seconde partie a été adoptée, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 25 voix contre 18, avec 10 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Chili, Costa-Rica, Cuba, Egypte, Salvador, Guatemala, Haïti, Indonésie, Iran, Irak; Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre: Australie, Belgique, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord.

Se sont abstenus : Brésil, Birmanie, Chine, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Ethiopie, Grèce, Inde, Israël, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

L'ensemble de l'amendement a été adopté par 25 voix contre 18, avec 9 abstentions.

5. L'amendement tendant à ajouter à la liste un nouveau facteur portant le numéro A.4 a été mis aux voix en deux parties. La première partie, jusqu'aux mots "ou par d'autres obstacles naturels;", a été adoptée par 26 voix contre 14, avec 11 abstentions. La deuxième partie a été adoptée par 23 voix contre 18, avec 10 abstentions. L'ensemble de l'amendement a été adopté par 24 voix contre 19, avec 10 abstentions.
6. L'amendement tendant à ajouter à la liste un nouveau facteur portant le numéro A.5 a été adopté par 26 voix contre 17, avec 8 abstentions.
7. L'amendement tendant à ajouter à la liste un nouveau facteur portant le numéro B.2 et à faire du facteur B.2 le facteur B.3 a été adopté par 23 voix contre 18, avec 12 abstentions.

8. L'ensemble de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs, dans sa forme remaniée, a été adopté par 24 voix contre 18, avec 11 abstentions.

Troisième partie

1. L'amendement tendant à ajouter dans le titre les mots "sur un pied d'égalité" entre le mot "associé" et les mots "à la métropole" a été adopté par 25 voix contre 15, avec 13 abstentions.
2. L'amendement tendant à ajouter les mots "ou sous toute autre forme" à la fin du titre a été adopté par 26 voix contre 14, avec 13 abstentions.
3. L'amendement tendant à faire du facteur A.1 le facteur A.5 et du facteur A.2 le facteur A.1 a été adopté par 23 voix contre 9 avec 18 abstentions.
4. L'amendement tendant à ajouter à la liste un nouveau facteur portant le numéro A.2 a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 25 voix contre 17, avec 10 abstentions :

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Chili, Costa-Rica, Cuba, Egypte, Salvador, Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, France, Grèce, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord.

Se sont abstenus : Brésil, Birmanie, Chine, Colombie, République Dominicaine, Ethiopie, Israël, Norvège, Pérou, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

5. L'amendement tendant à compléter le texte actuel du facteur A.3 a été adopté par 22 voix contre 18, avec 11 abstentions. L'ensemble du facteur A.3, sous sa forme modifiée, a été adopté par 23 voix contre 18, avec 8 abstentions.
 6. L'amendement tendant à supprimer dans le texte du facteur A.5, qui portera désormais le numéro A.6 les mots "...a) en vertu de la Constitution de la métropole, ou b) "a été adopté par 28 voix contre 13, avec 10 abstentions. L'ensemble du facteur ainsi modifié a été adopté par 23 voix contre 18, avec 9 abstentions.
 7. L'amendement tendant à faire du facteur C.2 de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs le facteur B.2, les facteurs P.2 et B.3 de la liste actuelle devenant les facteurs B.3 et B.4 respectivement, a été adopté par 25 voix contre 16, avec 9 abstentions.
 8. L'amendement tendant à faire du facteur C.3 de la deuxième partie de la liste le facteur C.5 a été adopté par 25 voix contre 17, avec 8 abstentions.
 9. L'ensemble de la troisième partie de la liste de facteurs, ainsi modifié, a été adopté par 23 voix contre 16, avec 11 abstentions.
9. L'ensemble de la liste de facteurs, dans sa forme remaniée, a été adopté par 25 voix contre 18, avec 8 abstentions. La nouvelle liste de facteurs est jointe au projet de résolution I qui est reproduite à la fin du présent rapport.

10. A sa 330ème séance, la Commission a voté sur le projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272), paragraphe par paragraphe; elle a voté aussi sur les amendements qui se rapportaient à ce texte (A/C.4/L.273, L.275, L.277).

11. Dans une déclaration prononcée avant que la Commission ne passe au vote, le représentant du Brésil a annoncé que, vu l'adoption d'une liste de facteurs modifiée à la 329ème séance, la délégation brésilienne avait envisagé de retirer son projet de résolution. Cependant, afin de ne pas compliquer le travail de la Commission, elle s'était résolue à maintenir ce projet puisqu'il aurait pour effet, au cas où la Commission adopterait le paragraphe 2 du dispositif, d'annuler la liste de facteurs modifiée. Le représentant du Brésil a tenu à déclarer formellement que sa délégation cherchait ainsi à faciliter le travail de la Commission et qu'elle réservait la position qu'elle prendrait au cours des débats ultérieurs sur cette question en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale.

12. Le vote sur le préambule du projet de résolution a donné les résultats suivants :

Le premier et le deuxième alinéas ont été adoptés à l'unanimité.

L'amendement tendant à ajouter, après le deuxième alinéa du préambule, un troisième alinéa, rédigé dans les termes indiqués dans le document A/C.4/L.273, a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 37 voix contre 11, avec 2 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, République Dominicaine, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, Danemark, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

Se sont abstenus : Norvège, Sude.

Le troisième paragraphe du texte initial, qui devient ainsi le quatrième alinéa, a été adopté à l'unanimité.

A la suite du vote sur le paragraphe 2 du dispositif, dont le résultat est consigné plus loin, le quatrième alinéa du texte initial du préambule a été supprimé.

13. Le vote sur le dispositif du projet de résolution a donné les résultats suivants :

Le paragraphe 1 a été adopté à l'unanimité.

Paragraphe 2. A la demande du représentant d'Haïti, la proposition d'amendement présentée dans le document A/C.4/L.273 a été mise aux voix en deux parties. La première partie, ainsi conçue : "Approuve la liste de facteurs qui est jointe en annexe," a été rejetée par 24 voix contre 20, avec 3 abstentions. En conséquence, la deuxième partie : "comme partie intégrante de la présente résolution" n'avait plus lieu d'être et n'a pas été mise aux voix. L'Inde a proposé un amendement (A/C.4/L.277) au projet de résolution, tendant à remplacer les mots "contenue dans ce rapport", par les mots "adoptée par la Quatrième Commission". La Commission a décidé, par 25 voix contre 19, avec 4 abstentions, de mettre aux voix cet amendement qui a été adopté, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 30 voix contre 18, avec 4 abstentions :

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Egypte, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Brésil, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

Se sont abstenus : Chine, Grèce, Philippines, Thaïlande.

Le paragraphe 2, ainsi modifié, a été adopté à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 25 voix contre 23, avec 4 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, Chili, Cuba, Egypte, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Brésil, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

Se sont abstenus : Chine, Grèce, Philippines, Thaïlande.

Paragraphe 3. Le Brésil ayant accepté la première partie de l'amendement au paragraphe 3, dont le texte figure dans le document A/C.4/L.273, ce texte a été adopté sans objection, sinon de la part de la Pologne. L'amendement tendant à supprimer les mots "et d'appliquer ces facteurs en tenant compte de toutes circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier" a été adopté par 26 voix contre 18, avec 6 abstentions. Deux amendements proposés par les Philippines (A/C.4/L.275), tendant l'un à ajouter les mots "dans les consultations auxquelles elles procéderont" après les mots "pour guide", l'autre à ajouter après les mots "que l'on puisse décider" les mots "d'un commun accord" ont été rejetés, le premier par 26 voix contre 15, avec 9 abstentions, le second par 19 voix contre 13, avec 4 abstentions.

L'amendement (A/C.4/L.273) tendant à remplacer les mots "afin que l'on puisse décider" par les mots "afin que l'Assemblée générale puisse décider" a été adopté par 30 voix contre 15, avec 5 abstentions.

L'ensemble du paragraphe 3, ainsi modifié, a été adopté par 25 voix contre 23 avec 3 abstentions.

Paragraphe 4. L'amendement tendant à remplacer le paragraphe 4 par le texte présenté dans le document A/C.4/L.273, a été adopté par 25 voix contre 11, avec 4 abstentions.

Paragraphe 5. L'amendement tendant à ajouter le texte nouveau présenté dans le document A/C.4/L.273 a été adopté par 29 voix contre 19, avec 4 abstentions.

Paragraphe 6. A la demande du représentant de la Pologne, l'amendement tendant à ajouter un nouveau paragraphe 6 rédigé dans les termes indiqués dans le document A/C.4/L.273, a été mis aux voix en deux parties. La première partie, ainsi conçue : "Considère que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance que les territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent atteindre l'autonomie complète" a été adoptée, à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal, par 25 voix contre 13, avec 4 abstentions.

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, République Dominicaine, Egypte, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Canada, Danemark, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

Se sont abstenus : Chine, Ethiopie, Pakistan, Thaïlande.

La deuxième partie ainsi conçue : "bien qu'il soit admis qu'un territoire peut aussi devenir autonome en s'associant à un Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue", a été adoptée par 28 voix contre 7, avec 15 abstentions. L'ensemble du paragraphe a été adopté par 28 voix contre 18, avec 3 abstentions.

Paragraphe 7. Le paragraphe 5 du texte initial, portant maintenant le numéro 7 et dans lequel les mots "à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73" sont remplacés par les mots "au Chapitre XI" a été adopté sans objection.

Paragraphe 8. Le paragraphe 6 du texte initial, qui porte maintenant le numéro 8, et dans lequel on a supprimé les mots "selon les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte", a été adopté sans objection.

Paragraphe 9. Le paragraphe 7 du texte initial, qui porte maintenant le numéro 9 et dont le début a été modifié comme suit : "Charge le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes", a été adopté par 23 voix contre 2, avec 21 abstentions. L'amendement tendant à supprimer les mots "lorsqu'il s'acquittera des fonctions... le 2 décembre 1950", a été adopté par 23 voix contre 3, avec 13 abstentions. L'ensemble du paragraphe, ainsi modifié, a été adopté par 28 voix contre 21, avec 2 abstentions. Les Etats-Unis d'Amérique ont retiré un amendement (A/C.4/L.276) tendant à ajouter entre les paragraphes 7 et 8 un nouveau paragraphe ainsi conçu : "Invite le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, chaque fois qu'il examinera la possibilité de reviser de nouveau la liste de facteurs, d'étudier les opinions que les Etats Membres ont exprimées à la huitième session de l'Assemblée générale, telles qu'elles sont consignées dans les comptes rendus analytiques pertinents".

Paragraphe 10. L'amendement tendant à remplacer le paragraphe 8 du texte initial par le texte nouveau présenté dans le document A/C.4/L.273, qui porterait le numéro 10, a été adopté par 33 voix contre 13, avec 4 abstentions.

14. L'ensemble du projet de résolution, dans sa forme remaniée, ainsi que l'ensemble de la liste de facteurs modifiée ont été adoptés à la suite d'un vote par appel nominal par 27 voix contre 23, avec 2 abstentions :

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, Chili, Cuba, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie.

Ont voté contre : Australie, Belgique, Brésil, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

Se sont abstenus : Chine, Thaïlande.

15. Le texte du projet de résolution que la Commission a adopté, accompagné de la liste de facteurs modifiés, est reproduit à la fin du présent rapport (projet de résolution I).

Résolution I

FACTEURS DONT IL CONVIENT DE TENIR COMPTE POUR DECIDER SI UN TERRITOIRE EST, OU N'EST PAS, UN TERRITOIRE DONT LES POPULATIONS NE S'ADMINISTRENT PAS ENCORE COMPLETEMENT ELLES-MEMES

L'Assemblée générale,

Tenant compte des principes énoncés dans la Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes et des objectifs fixés dans le Chapitre XI de la Charte,

Rappelant que, dans ses résolutions 567 (VI) et 648 (VII) adoptées les 18 janvier et 10 décembre 1952 respectivement, elle a indiqué qu'il serait utile de dresser une liste de facteurs dont il conviendrait de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie,

Tenant compte du fait que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour examiner les principes qui devraient guider l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les Etats Membres en ce qui concerne le respect des obligations qui découlent des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et faire des recommandations à leur sujet,

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) créé par la résolution 648 (VII) (A/2428),

1. Prend acte des conclusions du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes);
2. Approuve la liste de facteurs adoptée par la Quatrième Commission;
3. Recommande à l'Assemblée générale et aux Puissances administrantes de prendre pour guide la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe lorsqu'il s'agira de déterminer si, du fait de modifications de son statut constitutionnel, un territoire est ou n'est plus visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, afin que l'Assemblée générale puisse décider, d'après la documentation fournie en vertu de la résolution 222 (III) adoptée le 3 novembre 1948, s'il y a lieu de continuer ou de cesser de communiquer les renseignements prévus au Chapitre XI de la Charte
4. Réaffirme que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes;

5. Considère que la validité de toute forme d'association entre un territoire non autonome et la métropole ou tout autre pays dépend essentiellement de la volonté de la population intéressée, librement exprimée au moment où cette association est décidée;

6. Considère que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance que les territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent atteindre l'autonomie complète, bien qu'il soit admis qu'un territoire peut aussi devenir autonome en s'associant à un Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats, à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue;

7. Réaffirme que ces facteurs, tout en servant de guide lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les obligations énoncées au Chapitre XI de la Charte existent encore, ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète d'un territoire non autonome;

8. Réaffirme également que, pour qu'un territoire puisse être considéré comme autonome dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, il est essentiel que sa population s'administre complètement elle-même;

9. Charge le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes d'étudier toute documentation qui sera désormais communiquée en vertu de la résolution 222 (III), en tenant compte de la liste de facteurs approuvée par la présente résolution et d'autres considérations qui pourront intervenir à propos de chaque cas concret où l'on aura cessé de communiquer des renseignements;

10. Recommande que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes prenne l'initiative de proposer, lorsqu'il le jugera utile, des modifications propres à améliorer la liste de facteurs en fonction des circonstances.

ANNEXE

LISTE DE FACTEURS

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION
A ACCEDE A L'INDEPENDANCE OU A TOUTE AUTRE FORME
D'AUTONOMIE SEPARÉE

Première partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCELE A L'INDEPENDANCE

A. Statut international

1. Responsabilité internationale. Responsabilité internationale entière du territoire en ce qui concerne les actes inhérents à l'exercice de la souveraineté externe ainsi que pour ce qui est des actes relatifs à son administration interne.

2. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

3. Relations internationales en général. Capacité d'établir des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier des traités.

4. Défense nationale. Droit souverain d'assurer sa défense nationale.

B. Autonomie interne

1. Forme de gouvernement. Pleine liberté pour la population de se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'elle juge bonne.

2. Gouvernement du territoire. Absence de contrôle ou d'intervention de la part du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne (pouvoirs législatif, exécutif et judiciaire) et l'administration du territoire.

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. Pleine compétence du gouvernement du territoire pour gérer les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles de ce dernier.

Deuxième partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UNE POPULATION A ACCEDE A UNE AUTRE FORME
DISTINCTE D'AUTONOMIE

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Opinion des populations. Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause, et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.

2. Liberté de choix. Liberté pour la population de choisir entre plusieurs possibilités, y compris l'indépendance, en vertu du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

3. Limitation volontaire de souveraineté. Mesure dans laquelle il est prouvé que l'attribut ou les attributs de la souveraineté qui ne s'exercent plus à titre individuel seront exercés à titre collectif par l'entité plus vaste ainsi constituée et liberté, pour la population d'un territoire qui s'est associé à la métropole, de modifier ce statut à tout moment, en exprimant sa volonté par des voies démocratiques.

4. Considérations d'ordre géographique. Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire non autonome avec le siège du gouvernement métropolitain peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels; et mesure dans laquelle les intérêts des Etats limitrophes peuvent être affectés, compte tenu du principe général de bon voisinage mentionné à l'Article 74 de la Charte.

5. Considérations d'ordre ethnique et culturel. Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.

6. Progrès politique. Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.

B. Statut international

1. Relations internationales en général. Degré et mesure dans lesquels le territoire jouit du pouvoir d'établir librement des relations directes de toute nature avec d'autres gouvernements et avec des institutions internationales ainsi que de négocier, signer et ratifier librement des traités. Degré et mesure dans lesquels la métropole est liée, en vertu de dispositions constitutionnelles ou législatives, par les désirs librement exprimés du territoire, lorsqu'il s'agit de négocier, de signer ou de ratifier des conventions internationales qui peuvent influencer sur la situation du territoire.

2. Changement de statut politique. Droit de la métropole ou du territoire de modifier le statut politique de ce dernier, compte tenu de la question de savoir si le territoire fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat.

3. Aptitude à devenir Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

C. Autonomie interne

1. Gouvernement du territoire. Nature et degré du contrôle et de l'intervention éventuelle du gouvernement d'un autre Etat sur le gouvernement interne, par exemple dans les domaines suivants :

Pouvoir législatif : Adoption des lois du territoire par une assemblée autochtone, soit élue tout entière par des voies libres et démocratiques, soit légalement constituée d'une manière librement approuvée par la population;

Pouvoir exécutif : Choix des membres du pouvoir exécutif par l'autorité compétente qui a, dans le territoire, l'agrément de la population autochtone, que cette autorité soit héréditaire ou élective, en tenant également compte, s'il y a lieu, de la nature et du degré de contrôle éventuel qu'exercerait directement ou indirectement sur la constitution et l'exercice du pouvoir exécutif un élément étranger;

Pouvoir judiciaire : Constitution des tribunaux et choix des juges.

2. Participation de la population du gouvernement. Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire : a) Existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié ? b) Ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention directe ou indirecte d'un gouvernement étranger ? 1/

3. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

1/ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de se poser les questions suivantes : i) Chaque habitant adulte a-t-il le droit, en pleine égalité (sous réserve de garanties spéciales pour la protection des minorités), de déterminer le caractère du gouvernement du territoire ? ii) Ce pouvoir s'exerce-t-il librement, c'est-à-dire l'électeur n'est-il soumis à aucune influence injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte et n'y a-t-il pas de partis politiques frappés de certaines incapacités ? Pour l'application de ce facteur, on pourra vérifier les faits suivants :

a) Existence de mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;

b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;

c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;

d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;

e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;

f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale.

iii) Chaque personne est-elle libre d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir ?

Troisième partie

FACTEURS PERMETTANT DE CONCLURE QU'UN TERRITOIRE EST LIBREMENT ASSOCIE SUR UN PIED D'EGALITE A LA METROPOLE OU A UN AUTRE PAYS COMME PARTIE INTEGRANTE DE CES PAYS, OU SCUS TOUTE AUTRE FORME

A. Facteurs de caractère général

1. Opinion des populations. Opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent.
2. Liberté de choix. Liberté pour la population d'un territoire non autonome qui s'est associé avec la métropole comme partie intégrante de ce pays, ou sous toute autre forme, de modifier ce statut en exprimant sa volonté par des voies démocratiques.
3. Considérations d'ordre géographique. Mesure dans laquelle les relations du territoire avec le siège du gouvernement central peuvent être affectées par des circonstances tenant à leur situation géographique respective, telles que le fait qu'ils sont séparés par une étendue de terre ou de mer ou par d'autres obstacles naturels. Droit de la métropole ou du territoire de modifier le statut politique de ce dernier, compte tenu de la question de savoir si le territoire fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat.
4. Considérations ethniques et culturelles. Mesure dans laquelle la race, la langue, la religion ou le patrimoine culturel, les intérêts ou les aspirations différencient les populations du territoire d'avec celles du pays auquel elles s'associent librement.
5. Progrès politique. Progrès politique des populations suffisant pour leur permettre de décider elles-mêmes, en connaissance de cause, de l'avenir du territoire.
6. Considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. Association en vertu d'un traité ou d'un accord bilatéral affectant le statut du territoire, en tenant compte des éléments suivants : i) si les garanties constitutionnelles s'appliquent d'une façon égale au territoire associé; ii) s'il existe dans certains domaines une compétence réservée, en vertu de la Constitution, en faveur du territoire ou du pouvoir central; et iii) si le territoire a le droit de participer sur un pied d'égalité aux modifications qui peuvent être apportées au régime constitutionnel de l'Etat.

B. Statut

1. Représentation sur le plan législatif. Représentation sans discrimination au sein des organes législatifs centraux, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants et les autres régions.

2. Participation de la population au gouvernement. Participation effective de la population au gouvernement du territoire : a) Existe-t-il un système électoral et représentatif adéquat et approprié ? b) Ce système électoral fonctionne-t-il sans intervention directe ou indirecte d'un gouvernement étranger ? 1/

3. Citoyenneté. Citoyenneté sans discrimination, sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres habitants.

4. Fonctionnaires du gouvernement. Accès des fonctionnaires originaires du territoire, par nomination ou élection, à tous les emplois publics relevant du pouvoir central dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont originaires des autres parties du pays.

C. Conditions internes d'ordre constitutionnel

1. Droit de vote. Suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et élections périodiques libres dans lesquelles l'électeur n'est soumis à aucune influence

1/ Voir la note précédente.

injustifiée ni à aucune contrainte, et dans lesquelles aucun parti politique n'est frappé de certaines incapacités.^{1/}

2. Droits et statut des habitants. Dans un système unitaire, droits et statut égaux pour les habitants et organes locaux du territoire à ceux qui sont reconnus aux habitants et aux organes locaux d'autres parties du pays, et, dans un système fédéral, degré identique d'autonomie pour les habitants et organes locaux de toutes les parties de la Fédération.

3. Fonctionnaires locaux. Nomination ou élection des fonctionnaires dans le territoire dans les mêmes conditions que ceux qui sont nommés ou élus dans les autres parties du pays.

1/ Il y aurait lieu, par exemple, de vérifier les faits suivants :

- a) Existence des mesures efficaces pour garantir que la population exprime sa volonté de façon démocratique;
- b) Existence de plus d'un parti politique dans le territoire;
- c) Existence d'un scrutin secret;
- d) Existence d'interdictions légales visant le recours à des pratiques non démocratiques en période électorale;
- e) Possibilité pour l'électeur de choisir entre des candidats qui appartiennent à des partis politiques différents;
- f) Absence de "loi martiale" et de mesures analogues pendant la période électorale;
- g) Liberté pour chaque personne d'exprimer ses opinions politiques, de se prononcer pour ou contre un parti ou une cause politique, et de critiquer le gouvernement au pouvoir.

4. Législation interne. Compétence législative ou réglementaire locale égale à la compétence législative ou réglementaire dont bénéficient les autres parties du territoire et exercée dans les mêmes conditions.

5. Compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle. Degré d'autonomie en ce qui concerne les affaires économiques, sociales et culturelles, tel qu'il peut ressortir de l'absence plus ou moins complète de pression économique exercée, par exemple, par un groupe minoritaire étranger qui aurait acquis, grâce à l'aide d'une Puissance étrangère, une situation économique privilégiée, portant ainsi préjudice à l'intérêt économique de l'ensemble de la population du territoire; et tel qu'il peut ressortir également du degré de liberté et de l'absence de discrimination contre la population autochtone du territoire en matière de législation sociale et de progrès sociaux.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

45
QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 322^e
SEANCE

Jeudi 1er octobre 1953,
à 10 h. 45

New-York

SOMMAIRE

	Page
Demandes d'audience (suite).....	35
Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite].....	35

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2428) [suite]

[Point 33 *]

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

9. Mme MENON (Inde) fait remarquer que le problème des facteurs a été porté devant l'Assemblée générale dès sa création. En 1946, les Membres administrants se sont engagés à communiquer au Secrétaire général des renseignements sur soixante-quatorze territoires. Cette liste, bien qu'incomplète, a été acceptée sans discussion par l'Assemblée générale [résolution 66 (I)]. Toutefois, dès 1948, certains gouvernements avaient cessé de communiquer des renseignements pour onze de ces territoires. De nombreux États Membres ont estimé que l'Assemblée générale était en droit de connaître les motifs de cette omission, d'où la résolution 22 (III). Cette résolution est à l'origine de l'étude des facteurs.

10. Le dernier rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (A/2428) n'ajoute pas grand-chose au rapport présenté à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa septième session (A/2178). La délégation de l'Inde doute qu'il soit utile de poursuivre une discussion purement théorique sur ce point, d'autant plus que les membres de la Commission s'accordent à reconnaître qu'une liste de facteurs du genre de celle que le Comité ad hoc a approuvée ne serait guère qu'un guide et que chaque cas d'espèce exigerait de toute façon une étude spéciale et un examen attentif.

11. Les représentants de Puissances administrantes ne sont pas d'accord avec les autres Membres de la Commission sur la définition de l'autonomie. C'est là, toutefois, une question qu'il faut examiner séparément, compte tenu des circonstances propres à chaque cas. La Commission ne s'occupe pour le moment que du rapport du Comité ad hoc, que la délégation de l'Inde est disposée à approuver, car elle estime qu'il peut à l'avenir guider utilement les membres de la Commission dans l'examen des problèmes d'ordre pratique. Comme les notions fondamentales de souveraineté nationale et d'autonomie évoluent constamment en fonction des exigences sans cesse accrues de la coopération internationale, il est impossible d'énumérer ou de définir avec une précision absolue les facteurs qui viendraient à être approuvés. S'il est impossible de ramener l'autonomie à une série de facteurs, puisque la lutte pour la liberté symbolise la volonté des peuples dressés contre la domination, la liste des facteurs peut néanmoins aider la Commission à mieux comprendre certaines situations particulières faussées par les conflits d'intérêts entre Puissances administrantes et peuples dépendants.

12. Il se peut fort bien que chaque délégation interprète cette liste des facteurs à sa guise, mais il ne servirait de rien de chercher à définir plus avant. La Commission doit s'opposer à toute manœuvre tendant à limiter le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et le droit à une complète autonomie prévu au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Elle doit veiller à ce que les Puissances administrantes, en cherchant à dégager leur responsabilité tout en conservant la haute main sur un territoire, ne retardent pas l'accession de ce territoire à l'autonomie. Dans cet esprit, et pleinement consciente des objectifs du Chapitre XI, la délégation de l'Inde approuve le rapport du Comité ad hoc.

13. M. SPITS (Pays-Bas) fait observer que le Comité ad hoc, si l'on en croit le paragraphe 9 de son rapport, estime qu'il n'y a pas lieu de poursuivre l'examen de la question. Les facteurs ont été étudiés successivement, en 1951, par le Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte et par un de ses sous-comités, ainsi que par la Quatrième Commission — lors de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale — et la Sous-Commission de la Quatrième Commission; en 1952 par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) et, à la septième session de l'Assemblée générale, par la Quatrième Commission; enfin, en 1953, par le Comité ad hoc dont la Commission étudie actuellement le rapport. La délégation des Pays-Bas estime que si cette étude dure depuis si longtemps, c'est que l'Assemblée générale cherche à s'acquitter d'une tâche impossible. Lorsque le dernier Comité ad hoc a voulu définir la notion de "complète autonomie", il a échoué pour la simple raison que cette notion échappe à la définition. Il s'ensuit que si l'on veut poser des principes dans ce domaine, on va nécessairement au-devant d'un échec ou, tout au moins, d'un demi-échec.

14. En 1931, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni avait demandé à la Société des Nations d'être déchargé de son mandat sur l'Irak. Lors de l'examen de cette requête par la Commission permanente des mandats, on a proposé de fixer des critères généraux d'après lesquels il serait possible de déterminer si un territoire sous mandat a atteint un degré de développement politique qui permet de le considérer comme un territoire complètement autonome. Après un examen approfondi de cette proposition, la Commission des mandats en est venue à la conclusion qu'il est impossible d'arrêter des règles générales, savoir si un territoire doit être ou non considéré comme autonome n'étant pas une question de principes mais une question de faits. Cette conclusion demeure valable aujourd'hui.

15. Le Comité ad hoc a néanmoins approuvé une liste de facteurs et le mieux que la Quatrième Commission puisse faire, c'est de considérer cette liste comme définitive. Les facteurs énumérés pourront servir de guide à une Puissance administrante qui, ayant décidé de ne plus communiquer de renseignements sur un territoire déterminé, voudrait faire tenir au Secrétaire général les données requises par la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale. Dans bien des cas, ces facteurs ne seront pas applicables; en effet, pour savoir si un territoire est ou non autonome, il ne suffit pas d'appliquer mécaniquement les formules de la liste, il faut aussi — et c'est là le plus important — bien connaître les conditions politiques et sociales qui règnent dans le territoire et les liens qui peuvent exister entre ce territoire et un autre pays. Tous ces éléments déterminent le statut du territoire et seuls ceux qui les connaissent intimement — c'est-à-dire le gouvernement du territoire et le gouvernement de l'ancienne Puissance administrante — sont à même de décider si un territoire s'administre lui-même.

16. M. DJERDJA (Yougoslavie) appelle l'attention des membres de la Commission sur le fait que, des soixante-quatorze territoires non autonomes pour lesquels, à l'origine, la communication de renseignements avait été la règle, quinze échappent aujourd'hui à la surveillance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. En d'autres termes, les Puissances administrantes tendent de plus en plus à modifier le statut des territoires non autonomes sans en référer à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Cette procédure compromet les buts mêmes que la communauté internationale s'est proposé d'atteindre lorsqu'elle a adopté le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Envisagée à la lumière de ces considérations, la question des facteurs est loin d'être de pure rhétorique et l'on ne saurait la traiter comme telle. C'est une question qui pose des problèmes juridiques et politiques ardues. Il est notamment d'une importance capitale de savoir si la Commission conclura que des populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore elles-mêmes peuvent être légitimement privées de la protection internationale par une action unilatérale.

17. M. Djerdja félicite ceux qui ont participé aux travaux du Comité ad hoc des efforts qu'ils ont consacrés à l'élaboration du présent rapport. On y trouve l'énumération d'un certain nombre de concepts relativement clairs et cohérents, à partir desquels on pourra utilement chercher à préciser encore la liste des facteurs, comme le Comité ad hoc l'a lui-même reconnu au paragraphe 9 de son rapport.

18. Pour arrêter la liste des facteurs il faut tenir compte des buts et principes de la Charte ainsi que des obligations qui peuvent incomber à l'Assemblée générale dans les cas d'espèce. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte a pour objet de garantir la protection internationale des populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore elles-mêmes et d'assurer leur libre évolution vers l'émancipation. Le sort de ces populations est aujourd'hui si étroitement lié aux vastes efforts que la communauté internationale déploie en faveur du progrès et de la paix du monde, qu'il n'est plus possible de l'abandonner à la compétence exclusive des États: il s'agit maintenant d'une question d'intérêt international. La protection des populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore elles-mêmes doit s'exercer à tous les stades de leur développement et ne cesser que lorsqu'elles ont atteint le but final, qui est l'indépendance ou l'autonomie complète.

19. Le paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte renferme les éléments essentiels dont les Membres administrants et l'Organisation des Nations Unies doivent tenir compte pour résoudre les problèmes relatifs aux territoires non autonomes; ces éléments sont le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, le principe de leur égalité, et le lien entre ces considérations et les tentatives entreprises par l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour affermir la paix du monde. Le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est consacré dans le Chapitre XI, aux termes duquel les Membres administrants reconnaissent la primauté des intérêts des populations des territoires non autonomes, leur obligation d'aider ces populations à réaliser des progrès dans l'ordre politique, économique et social, de développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes et de tenir compte de leurs aspirations politiques, en vue de les amener, en dernière analyse, à l'autonomie complète. En assumant ces obligations, les Membres administrants avaient indiqué qu'ils ne les répudieraient pas avant que ne soient atteints les buts ultimes du Chapitre XI, et, à la première session de l'Assemblée générale, ils avaient déclaré leur intention de communiquer des renseignements concernant soixante-quatorze territoires. Mais, depuis, certains Membres administrants ont interprété de façon unilatérale les buts énoncés au Chapitre XI et ont cessé de communiquer des renseignements au sujet d'un territoire donné, en alléguant que ce territoire avait accédé à une certaine autonomie dans tel ou tel domaine ou s'était associé à la métropole ou à l'un de ses territoires. L'Organisation des Nations Unies s'est donc vue dans l'obligation d'assumer la tâche de déterminer si le degré d'autonomie atteint par un territoire donné était bien tel que ce territoire cessait de relever des dispositions du Chapitre XI et que les droits et obligations mutuels stipulés dans la Charte étaient devenus caducs. Il a fallu qu'elle examine si les mesures prises par les Membres administrants étaient légales et qu'elle établisse si elles étaient conformes à la Charte.

20. Il faut bien reconnaître que le rapport dont la Commission est saisie n'apporte pas une réponse claire et nette aux questions précises que posent les décisions des Membres administrants. Il convient d'en remanier le texte si l'on veut en faire un instrument capable d'assurer la mise en œuvre du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

21. Le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes implique que toute population doit avoir la liberté pleine et entière de faire un choix entre plusieurs solutions, l'une de ces solutions étant l'indépendance, et de réserver la faculté de modifier à une date ultérieure sa décision définitive. Au i la délégation yougoslave appuierait elle sans réserve la proposition présentée au Comité ad hoc par le représentant du Guatemala et exposée au paragraphe 21 du rapport. Aucune mesure n'est possible sur la portée de cette proposition, étant donné que la question inscrite à l'ordre du jour concerne les territoires non autonomes. Le facteur qui doit gouverner en tête de toute liste est la volonté clairement et librement exprimée des populations; cette volonté doit constituer la loi suprême. Tous les autres facteurs que la Commission jugerait nécessaire d'approuver doivent être retenus, non pas en tant que facteurs décisifs en eux-mêmes, mais en tant que conditions indispensables du respect de ce facteur fondamental. La reconnaissance du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est le fondement le plus ferme des relations démocratiques, de la collaboration dans l'égalité et de la paix internationale. La méconnaissance ou la violation de ce droit est la principale source des troubles et des dangers qui assaillent le monde.

22. L'argument selon lequel un territoire pourrait être habité par des populations diverses aspirant chacune à une solution différente ne saurait l'emporter sur le principe que la volonté des populations doit être respectée en toutes circonstances. Au surplus, cet argument ne fait que confirmer le représentant de la Yougoslavie dans ses doutes sur la valeur des diverses unions administratives, fédérations et autres groupements analogues qui ne font qu'entraver les justes aspirations des populations des territoires non autonomes à une existence indépendante, en les incorporant dans des systèmes fondés sur des principes qui ne favorisent pas la réalisation de ces aspirations. Créer de façon artificielle la cohésion et la stabilité là où les conditions ne s'y prêtent pas naturellement doit nécessairement aboutir à l'instabilité et au conflit.

23. La délégation yougoslave ne partage pas l'opinion suivant laquelle il faudrait accorder la première place au progrès politique. On ne saurait mettre en doute la prise de conscience politique ni la maturité d'aucun des peuples qui exigent que l'on donne satisfaction à leurs aspirations nationales, pas plus que leur capacité de décider de leur propre sort. De toute façon, qui serait compétent pour trancher la question, et sur quelle norme s'appuierait-on? Le fait pour un peuple de revendiquer obstinément, au prix de sacrifices considérables, son indépendance, suffit à prouver cette prise de conscience politique et rend superflue toute définition légale ou technique.

24. On pourrait abrégier la liste des facteurs énumérés dans la première partie de la liste approuvée par le Comité ad hoc (A/2428, section VI) puisque l'accession à l'indépendance est la seule conclusion normale de l'évolution des territoires non autonomes. Le facteur A. 1 (Responsabilité internationale) englobe tous les autres facteurs compris dans cette partie, et, de ce fait, les rend plus ou moins superflus. Le droit qu'a un Etat de solliciter son admission dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ou d'entretenir des relations sur le plan international et de conclure des accords militaires, est propre à la souveraineté extérieure; il ne pourrait être aliéné et n'a pas à être mentionné à part. Quant aux facteurs relatifs à l'administration intérieure, la délégation yougoslave ne pense pas qu'ils soient nécessaires, ni même qu'il faille les recommander. Il va sans dire qu'un Etat indépendant a compétence dans les domaines politique, économique, social et culturel. Seule la population de chaque Etat a voix au chapitre lorsqu'il s'agit du régime politique, et toute tentative pour associer le destin d'un peuple à son régime violerait la Charte et le droit international.

25. La délégation yougoslave trouve difficile d'admettre que le stade ultime du développement politique puisse résider dans l'établissement de régimes autonomes autres que l'indépendance, dans le cadre d'une union permanente avec la métropole ou sous d'autres aspects. Néanmoins, on peut admettre qu'un peuple se prononce librement en faveur d'un statut d'association, pourvu que ledit statut ne constitue qu'une étape dans la voie de l'indépendance, que l'Organisation des Nations Unies permettrait d'atteindre en continuant d'accorder activement son aide et en exerçant à cette fin son contrôle. En pareil cas, il faudrait s'assurer que certaines conditions sont remplies, et notamment le libre choix entre plusieurs formules, dont l'indépendance, la libre acceptation de ce statut par les habitants du territoire — auquel cas l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit avoir la possibilité de vérifier, au préalable, que la population est à même de prendre sa décision sans contrainte aucune — l'absence de toute ingérence de l'étranger dans les affaires extérieures et intérieures du territoire, la possibilité de demander librement à être reconnu par les autres Etats et l'assurance qu'il sera fait droit à cette requête, l'établissement de relations diplomatiques et autres et la faculté de solliciter à être admis dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

26. Quoique la rédaction du facteur A. 3 (Limitation volontaire de souveraineté) dans la deuxième partie de la liste ait été un peu améliorée par l'adoption de la proposition du représentant du Venezuela (A/2428, par. 34), on n'en devrait pas moins soit supprimer ce facteur — puisque aucun cas de limitation de souveraineté ne s'est encore produit — soit le rédiger conformément à la proposition du représentant du Guatemala formulée dans le paragraphe 21 du rapport.

27. Incorporer un territoire non autonome à la métropole ou à l'une des régions faisant partie de la métropole est absolument inadmissible. Pareil état de choses serait incompatible avec la Charte, puisqu'il remplacerait l'indépendance totale par une autonomie locale décentralisée à l'échelon provincial ou régional. Il serait encore moins admissible que cette situation résulte d'actes unilatéraux de la métropole, et non de l'application d'une décision souveraine, d'un accord contractuel auquel la métropole serait arrivée après avoir consulté la population, et qu'elle mettrait à exécution avec le concours actif de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

28. On pourrait améliorer sensiblement la liste des facteurs si la Commission créait un sous-comité analogue à celui qui a été institué à la sixième session. Ce sous-comité pourrait isoler tous les facteurs essentiels, leur donner la rédaction qui convient et les mettre à la place qui leur revient. Cette tâche pourrait être menée à bien relativement vite, et la Commission devrait se trouver à même de faire usage de la liste définitive pendant les débats relatifs au point 3 de son ordre du jour. La délégation yougoslave réserverait un accueil favorable à toute initiative destinée à atteindre cet objectif. Si l'on ne modifiait pas la liste des facteurs, la délégation yougoslave, sans en contester l'utilité, serait contrainte d'étudier de très près si elle peut émettre un vote favorable. De toute façon, il convient de s'attacher davantage à la question afin de parvenir à une solution générale.

29. U ON SEIN (Birmanie) fait remarquer que, pour l'examen de la question assez complexe qu'elle étudie, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a le choix entre deux méthodes. La première consisterait à créer des comités destinés à revoir continuellement les mêmes points dans l'espoir d'établir finalement une liste entièrement satisfaisante. La seconde consisterait à reconnaître en toute sincérité, comme l'a fait l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 648 (VII), que la liste des facteurs ne peut, dans le cas le plus favorable, être qu'un guide, et que chaque cas doit être examiné compte tenu des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Si l'on s'en tient à la seconde solution, on pourrait adopter la liste des facteurs à la présente session; quoique imparfaite, cette liste contribuerait à aider et les Membres administrants et l'Assemblée générale à déterminer si un territoire a atteint l'autonomie complète. Si l'on considère les choses sous cet angle, la seconde solution paraît préférable; en effet, si l'on ne l'adoptait pas, il faudrait en déduire que certaines délégations ne veulent pas laisser l'Assemblée générale élaborer des facteurs qui puissent servir d'étalon pour mesurer le progrès politique accompli par les territoires non autonomes.

30. Dans sa réponse du 3 juillet 1952 (A/AC.58/1/Add.3), le Gouvernement de l'Union birmane a déjà fait valoir des considérations de cet ordre; il continue de penser que, lorsqu'on veut savoir si un territoire est devenu autonome en tant qu'entité distincte, ou s'il s'est associé avec la métropole dans des conditions d'égalité, il s'agit là de questions de fait, qu'il faut régler en tenant compte des circonstances propres à chaque cas.

31. Le Gouvernement birman soutient toujours que c'est à l'Assemblée générale qu'il doit appartenir de déterminer si un pays a atteint l'autonomie complète. Néanmoins, il sait que tel n'est pas l'avis des Membres administrants. En outre, par sa résolution 648 (VII), l'Assemblée générale a adopté, à titre provisoire, une liste de facteurs propre à guider éventuellement l'Assemblée générale et les Membres administrants, sans indiquer qui, de l'Assemblée ou des Puissances intéressées, aura le droit de décision. On peut procéder de la même manière à la présente session, en adoptant une liste de facteurs qui puisse être généralement utilisée. Il peut se faire, par la suite, que l'Assemblée générale et l'un des Membres administrants se trouvent en désaccord sur le point de savoir si le Membre administrant est fondé à cesser de communiquer des renseignements relatifs à un certain territoire. En pareil cas, on examinerait, d'après un cas concret, toutes les questions complexes que cette divergence de vues soulèverait sur le plan international. Tant qu'il ne présente aucun cas concret de ce genre, il est inutile d'insister pour savoir si, en théorie, c'est l'Assemblée générale qui a le dernier mot, ou si ce sont les Membres administrants.

32. U On Sein fait remarquer que le représentant de la Birmanie au Comité ad hoc a insisté sur la nécessité d'assurer que la décision définitive qui fixe le statut international futur d'un territoire non autonome est bien le résultat du libre choix de la population de ce terri-toire. Il faut prouver que les habitants ont pu se décider en toute indépendance, et qu'en optant pour un statut qui n'est pas l'indépendance totale ils savaient parfaitement qu'ils auraient pu opter pour l'indépendance totale s'ils l'avaient voulu. Faute de quoi, le choix de tout statut international autre que l'indépendance totale demeure sujet à caution. Lorsqu'un peuple s'est prononcé en toute liberté en faveur de l'association avec la métropole ou avec un autre pays, les conditions de retrait de cette association doivent être réglées par l'accord conclu, quel qu'il soit.

33. La délégation birmane réserverait un accueil favorable à toute résolution tendant à l'adoption de la liste des facteurs, étant entendu que cette liste sera utilisée avec souplesse, à titre indicatif, et que chaque cas concret sera examiné compte tenu des circonstances qui lui sont propres.

34. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) rappelle que si l'on a éprouvé la nécessité d'établir une liste des facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a ou n'a pas atteint l'autonomie complète et surtout pour s'assurer que cette autonomie existe bien en fait, c'est parce que la liste des territoires non autonomes que les Membres administrants ont présentée en 1946 s'est rapidement réduite à la suite de déclarations unilatérales dans lesquelles les pays métropolitains signalaient qu'en vertu d'une nouvelle législation intérieure ils n'étaient plus en mesure de continuer à communiquer des renseignements relatifs à ces territoires. Chaque réduction de la liste aurait reçu un accueil favorable auprès de l'Organisation si elle avait résulté de mesures concrètes tendant à accorder aux territoires dépendants l'autonomie complète. Mais il ne semble pas, en général, qu'il en ait été ainsi, et si l'on avait approuvé cette procédure sans faire d'objections, le Chapitre XI aurait bientôt perdu sa raison d'être sans que l'on ait pu atteindre les buts des Nations Unies. C'est pourquoi il a fallu établir une liste de facteurs. Cette liste n'a pas pour objet de retarder le progrès politique des territoires non autonomes, mais plutôt d'assurer que les Membres administrants demeureront bien soumis aux mêmes obligations à l'égard des populations intéressées tant que les objectifs des Nations Unies n'auront pas été intégralement atteints.

35. Après avoir étudié avec soin l'important rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, la délégation du Guatemala a cessé d'attacher une importance particulière à la mise au point d'une définition de la notion d'"autonomie complète". Elle a compris, en effet, qu'il serait extrêmement difficile d'aboutir à un accord sur ce point et qu'en adoptant une définition qui serait probablement vague et technique, on ne ferait que compliquer la situation au lieu de faire progresser la cause des territoires non autonomes. En outre, la délégation du Guatemala a la conviction que ce que l'on appelle compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle ne pourra jamais constituer, quel que soit le degré de cette compétence, l'autonomie complète, car il s'agit là d'une notion essentiellement politique. Un peuple ne peut avoir compétence pleine et entière dans un domaine particulier tant qu'il ne jouit pas de l'autonomie complète dans le domaine politique.

36. La délégation du Guatemala a toujours éprouvé une certaine inquiétude en ce qui concerne l'accession d'un peuple à l'autonomie complète par association, union ou intégration à la métropole. Elle ne considère pas qu'un peuple soumis à un régime colonialiste qui accepte l'un de ces statuts pour améliorer son sort renonce à tout jamais, par la même occasion, à l'indépendance totale à laquelle il aspirera toujours. C'est pourquoi la délégation du Guatemala insiste sur le fait qu'il est indispensable de garantir aux peuples de ces territoires que leur droit inaliénable d'amender leur statut politique sera toujours respecté.

37. La plupart des Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et notamment plusieurs Membres administrants, ont reconnu que les questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes présentaient un intérêt international. Par conséquent, la réserve du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte ne s'applique pas ici. Si la situation actuelle de ces territoires présente un intérêt international, le sort des populations intéressées et les problèmes connexes sont également des questions d'intérêt international. En outre, le Chapitre XI, comme d'ailleurs la Charte tout entière, est un contrat multilatéral que tous les Etats Membres ont formellement signé et ratifié. Aucune des parties contractantes ne peut en modifier les dispositions par un acte unilatéral. Ainsi, c'est à l'Organisation dans son ensemble qu'il appartient de décider si un territoire non autonome a atteint l'autonomie complète.

38. A ce propos, la délégation du Guatemala tient à souligner la nécessité de réaffirmer le principe qu'aucun gouvernement métropolitain ne peut changer par un acte unilatéral le statut politique d'un territoire non autonome qui fait l'objet d'une revendication ou d'un litige mettant en cause un Etat tiers avant le règlement formel de cette revendication ou de ce litige. Il est bien entendu qu'une garantie de cet ordre n'a pas pour objet de faire obstacle à l'accession à une véritable autonomie d'un territoire qui se trouverait dans la situation envisagée, ni de retarder cette accession.

39. La délégation du Guatemala voudrait formuler quelques observations au sujet de la liste des facteurs que le Comité ad hoc a approuvée. Elle en appuiera l'adoption par la Commission et par l'Assemblée générale s'il demeure entendu que cette liste pourra faire l'objet de modifications ultérieures qui tiennent compte de l'expérience acquise. La délégation du Guatemala déplore la tendance qui consiste à nier à l'avance l'utilité de la liste; elle préconise l'adoption de la liste, qui servira obligatoirement de base pour l'étude de tous les cas particuliers.

40. La délégation du Guatemala désapprouve le mot "permanente" qui figure dans le titre de la deuxième partie de la liste. Ce mot porte préjudice au droit inaliénable des peuples des territoires non autonomes de modifier le régime qui les associe aux pays métropolitains, et semble impliquer que ces territoires renoncent à l'autonomie complète. La délégation du Guatemala se prononce également contre le début du facteur A. 3 de la deuxième partie (Limitation volontaire de souveraineté); en effet, une limitation de cet ordre a toujours été considérée comme dangereuse et illégale. Elle n'a pas d'objections à formuler au sujet de la fin de ce facteur.

41. La délégation du Guatemala se réserve le droit de faire d'autres observations en temps utile et de présenter éventuellement des amendements formels au rapport.

42. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) regrette que le Comité ad hoc n'ait pas été en mesure d'établir une liste de facteurs plus précise. La majorité des délégations aurait certainement souhaité que l'on y insérât d'autres stipulations; ainsi, il eût été utile de faire figurer dans les deuxième et troisième parties une disposition prévoyant que les territoires devraient passer par une période de liberté et de souveraineté complètes avant de participer aux associations dont il est question. Ce point peut néanmoins être soulevé lors de l'examen de cas particuliers.

43. On ne saurait adopter la liste approuvée par le Comité ad hoc qu'à titre de guide auquel on ne se reporterait qu'en tenant dûment compte des éléments particuliers de chaque cas.

44. On ne peut laisser au Membre administrant intéressé le soin de décider si un territoire a bien cessé d'être non autonome; une décision de cet ordre relève de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale.

45. En ce qui concerne le facteur A. 4 de la première partie, M. Espinosa y Prieto maintient que la liberté pour un territoire de conclure des accords relatifs à sa défense nationale n'indique pas que ce territoire soit complètement indépendant; il demande que la fin de la phrase en question soit remplacée par la formule "en vue d'assurer sa défense nationale".

46. M. HURE (France) déclare que la délégation française a toujours estimé que l'étude des facteurs revêtait une importance réelle, à la fois théorique et pratique. Importance théorique, puisque au terme de "territoires non autonomes" qu'emploie la Charte il manque non pas seulement les éléments d'une définition, mais même un début d'interprétation. Importance pratique, puisqu'une telle étude devrait d'une part aider les Etats qui se sont déclarés responsables des territoires à déterminer le moment où cessent les obligations de l'Article 73 et, d'autre part, fournir la base nécessaire à une extension de ces obligations aux Etats qui ont toujours considéré que les obligations du Chapitre XI ne les concernaient pas. Ainsi, et grâce à cette étude, l'application des principes de la Charte ne serait pas limitée à certains, mais revêtirait un caractère d'universalité.

47. Il semble toutefois que dans l'esprit de certaines délégations l'intérêt de cette question a revêtu un tout autre aspect. Au lieu d'étudier les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, certains pays ont préféré déterminer les moyens que pourrait employer une majorité de l'Assemblée pour empêcher qu'un Etat, ayant une fois proclamé ses devoirs envers les peuples qu'il administre, ne puisse un jour estimer qu'il les avait remplis et n'avait plus à rendre compte à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Vu sous cet angle, ce difficile problème juridique et scientifique devenait un problème politique très simple et constituait une tentative de plus pour transgresser les dispositions de la Charte sous prétexte de les interpréter. Affirmer peu à peu la compétence de l'Assemblée au détriment de la compétence des Etats qui se sont reconnus administrants, c'est bien ce qui paraît l'objet sous-entendu de la résolution 648 (VII) puisque celle-ci postule qu'une liste de facteurs pourrait servir de guide non seulement à l'Etat membre intéressé mais encore à l'Assemblée générale. On peut demander en vertu de quel texte de droit l'Assemblée générale aurait cette compétence. Le Gouvernement français a déclaré à plusieurs reprises que l'Assemblée ne pouvait donner que des avis. Déterminer quels sont les territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes est la prérogative exclusive des Etats qui ont la responsabilité d'administrer ces territoires.

48. Ce désir de décider à l'encontre de la souveraineté des Etats s'aperçoit encore dans la multiplication des critères de faits dont fait mention le rapport. On peut se demander si les rédacteurs ont pensé à vérifier si tous les Etats indépendants satisfaisaient à ces critères, ou s'ils ont compris qu'à vouloir ainsi accumuler les obstacles pour prévenir toute initiative des Membres qui se sont reconnus administrants, ils retardaient du même coup indéfiniment l'accession des territoires à l'indépendance ou à l'autonomie. Ce désir de décider à l'encontre de la souveraineté des Etats s'aperçoit aussi dans l'observation avec laquelle on estime que l'Article 73 doit continuer de s'appliquer aux territoires devenus complètement autonomes dans le domaine intérieur, et dans l'élaboration d'une notion d'indivisibilité de l'autonomie, notion contre laquelle la délégation française n'a cessé de s'élever. Lorsque les compétences gouvernementales et administratives ont été transférées dans le domaine des affaires économiques, sociales, et dans celui de l'instruction publique, qui sont les matières sur lesquelles doivent porter les renseignements aux termes de l'Article 73, e, on conçoit mal qu'un gouvernement puisse conserver la charge d'informer l'Organisation des Nations Unies sur les activités qui ont cessé de relever de lui. Sous cet aspect, l'énumération des facteurs méconnaît l'état intermédiaire entre la non-autonomie et l'indépendance, faussant ainsi la notion même qu'il s'agit de préciser.

49. On se demande par contre pour quelle raison l'expression des volontés des populations qui se trouvaient mentionnées dans la première rédaction des facteurs a soudainement disparu. Il est à bon droit permis de s'étonner qu'une accession à l'indépendance puisse être l'occasion d'une atténuation du droit des individus, alors que certaines Puissances se montrent si jalouses de ce droit lorsqu'il ne s'agit que d'autonomie séparée ou d'association. On se demande pourquoi, à l'opposé, on voit apparaître la question du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. C'est une notion qui ne figure pas dans l'Article 73 de la Charte et qui échappe complètement à la compétence de la Commission.

50. La délégation française a formulé ces réserves maintes fois, non pour défendre un point de vue de Membre administrant, mais pour défendre des règles générales d'une très grande portée. L'une de ces règles se définit par le respect des contrats et le refus de se prêter à des interprétations abusives. Une autre règle est l'universalité des principes, qui doivent être applicables à tous. La présente discussion fournit un exemple manifeste de discrimination faite entre, d'une part, les Etats qui ont eu la sincérité de se reconnaître administrants et, d'autre part, des Etats qui, pour échapper à leurs obligations, ont préféré se taire sur leurs responsabilités. Une troisième règle tient aux garanties de sérieux, de science et de conscience dont on doit s'entourer lorsqu'on entreprend une étude aussi importante. Or les préoccupations politiques ont pris le pas sur le souci d'exactitude juridique ou scientifique. C'est pourquoi la délégation française réserve sa position, non sur le principe de l'étude des facteurs, mais sur l'esprit dans lequel cette étude paraît avoir été entreprise et sur les résultats qu'elle a produits.

51. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) déclare que les Etats-Unis, qui ont été représentés au Comité ad hoc, approuvent la liste contenue dans le rapport de la Commission (A/2428). La délégation des Etats-Unis approuve le paragraphe 9 du rapport où il est dit qu'une liste de facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'une indication. Elle fait sienne également la conclusion à laquelle la Commission est parvenue lorsqu'elle a jugé que la liste actuelle, bien qu'il soit encore possible de l'améliorer, était suffisante. Le Comité ad hoc a rendu de précieux services et il n'est pas nécessaire de le proroger et de le charger de poursuivre ses travaux. Il a réussi à élucider les éléments complexes et divers qui composent une autonomie complète. La délégation des Etats-Unis approuvera le rapport du Comité ad hoc.

52. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) déclare que sa délégation a abordé l'étude des facteurs avec une entière objectivité. En 1946, la Belgique a déclaré le Congo belge territoire non autonome administré par elle et, depuis lors, elle a régulièrement communiqué des renseignements sur les conditions économiques, sociales et scolaires dans ce territoire. Elle n'a pas l'intention de cesser de communiquer ces renseignements et la liste de facteurs ne présente donc pour elle qu'un intérêt purement théorique puisque aucune des décisions que pourrait prendre l'Assemblée générale au sujet de cette liste ne la touchera directement.

53. Si la délégation belge a abordé l'étude des facteurs avec objectivité, elle l'a fait sans enthousiasme. Elle a pensé qu'il serait impossible de dresser une liste de facteurs qui soient applicables rigoureusement, scientifiquement et automatiquement. Nul n'a encore réussi à donner une définition satisfaisante de l'autonomie complète, et il est peu probable que la Quatrième Commission y parvienne.

54. Quant à la liste des facteurs, M. Ryckmans fait observer que puisque cette liste peut servir à déterminer si un territoire a cessé d'être un territoire non autonome, elle peut également permettre de décider qu'un territoire donné n'est pas encore devenu autonome. On ne devrait faire aucune différence entre le fait de cesser de communiquer des renseignements et le fait de commencer à en communiquer. Ou la liste n'a aucune valeur, ou elle est valable dans les deux cas. Une autorité qui a qualité pour décider du moment où il y a lieu de cesser de communiquer des renseignements a, pour les mêmes raisons et dans la même mesure, qualité pour décider à partir de quel moment il y a lieu de communiquer des renseignements. La délégation belge estime que la Puissance administrante a seule qualité pour décider s'il faut commencer, cesser ou continuer de communiquer des renseignements. Les délégations qui soutiennent l'opinion contraire et prétendent que l'Assemblée générale a qualité pour décider si un Membre administrant doit continuer à communiquer des renseignements doivent être logiques avec elles-mêmes. Si la majorité des membres de la Commission reconnaît à l'Assemblée générale compétence pour décider qu'un Membre administrant doit continuer à communiquer des renseignements, il faut également qu'elle reconnaisse à l'Assemblée le droit de contraindre d'autres Etats à commencer à communiquer des renseignements sur les peuples non autonomes placés sous leur administration. Les décisions de l'Assemblée générale doivent s'appliquer indistinctement à tous les Etats Membres.

55. La délégation belge s'abstiendra de voter sur la question en discussion, mais elle tient à avertir les membres de la Commission qu'elle veillera à ce que l'Assemblée prenne des décisions logiques.

La séance est levée à 12 h. 30.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 323^e 46

SEANCE

Jeudi 1er octobre 1953,
à 15 h. 15

New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]..... 43

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]

[Point 33*]

1. M. PACHACHI (Irak) rappelle que depuis 1949, date à laquelle l'Assemblée générale a adopté sa résolution 334 (IV), la question des facteurs a fait, tant à deux comités spéciaux qu'à la Commission elle-même, l'objet de délibérations détaillées auxquelles la délégation de l'Irak a pris une part active — et, espère-t-elle, utile — et qui ont abouti à l'élaboration de la liste contenue dans le présent rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428].

2. Le représentant de l'Irak tient tout d'abord à formuler quelques observations à propos de certaines opinions émises au cours des débats. En premier lieu, aussi bien dans les réponses qu'ils ont fait parvenir au Secrétaire général qu'au cours des délibérations à la Commission et au Comité ad hoc, les Membres administrants ont, sans exception, catégoriquement affirmé qu'ils étaient seuls compétents lorsqu'il s'agissait de décider si ce territoire était parvenu à l'autonomie complète. La délégation de l'Irak s'élève vigoureusement contre cette prétention, absolument incompatible avec l'esprit de la Charte et, en particulier, avec les dispositions du Chapitre XI qui proclament que l'obligation d'assurer la prospérité des populations des territoires non autonomes est une mission sacrée incombant à la collectivité mondiale.

3. S'il fallait admettre la thèse des Puissances coloniales, que la délégation belge a formulée à la 322^e séance avec tant de dogmatisme, le Chapitre XI deviendrait nul et sans effet, car l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies devrait se borner à entériner la décision du Membre administrant sans pouvoir même la discuter; or, le Chapitre XI n'est pas uniquement un ensemble de déclarations pieuses: il marque une étape essentielle sur la voie qui doit permettre à l'humanité d'atteindre un de ses principaux objectifs: la liberté, pour tous les peuples et pour toutes les nations. A en croire les Puissances coloniales, l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'aurait à connaître, en vertu de l'Article 73, e, que du développement économique et social et du développement de l'instruction dans les territoires non autonomes; ces Puissances paraissent oublier que le Chapitre XI, et notamment l'alinéa b de l'Article 73, vise aussi le développement politique des territoires non autonomes. En outre, l'Assemblée générale a déclaré à plusieurs reprises qu'il lui appartenait d'exprimer son opinion sur les principes qui régissent le statut des territoires non autonomes.

4. D'autre part, la Commission devrait repousser catégoriquement, parce qu'elle compliquerait la question en y introduisant des considérations étrangères et illégales, la tentative de la délégation belge visant à appliquer les dispositions du Chapitre XI aux habitants de certains Etats souverains qui ne jouiraient pas d'une complète autonomie.

5. En ce qui concerne l'impossibilité de trouver une définition satisfaisante de la notion d'autonomie complète, la délégation de l'Irak est disposée à accepter les conclusions du Comité ad hoc, puisque chaque cas particulier doit être examiné séparément; mais elle demeure persuadée que l'indépendance totale, à l'intérieur comme à l'extérieur, constitue la meilleure norme de l'autonomie complète.

6. La liste des facteurs qui figure dans le document A/2428 n'est ni complète ni définitive; il faut plutôt l'envisager comme un ensemble de principes directeurs qui aiderait l'Assemblée à prendre une décision sur la cessation de la communication de renseignements. La délégation de l'Irak accepte la présente liste des facteurs, qui diffère d'ailleurs fort peu de la liste que l'Assemblée générale avait adoptée à titre provisoire à la session précédente [résolution 648 (VII)]. La division de la liste en trois parties est logique et pratique. Il faut espérer que la Commission adoptera cette liste, admirablement établie par le Comité ad hoc dans sa forme définitive, et qu'elle la transmettra au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

7. En conclusion, M. Pachachi indique qu'une fois de plus les divergences de vues qui séparent les Puissances coloniales et les Puissances non coloniales se sont manifestées à la Commission. Mais celle-ci ne se laissera détourner par aucune argutie juridique de sa mission sacrée: aider les peuples dépendants à accéder, par des moyens pacifiques, à l'autonomie complète.

8. M. DOMINGUEZ (Cuba) rappelle que la délégation cubaine, représentant un pays qui a tant souffert du colonialisme, a toujours travaillé, au Comité ad hoc comme à la Commission, à favoriser un rapprochement entre les Membres administrants et les autres Puissances.

9. Bien qu'il ne soit pas possible de donner une définition satisfaisante de la notion d'autonomie complète, la délégation cubaine tient à souligner qu'on ne saurait prétendre qu'un territoire qui jouit de l'autonomie dans le domaine économique et social, mais qui n'y a pas encore accédé dans le domaine politique, est parvenu au stade de l'autonomie complète.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

10. A propos du paragraphe 15 du document A/2428, M. Domínguez fait remarquer que l'absence de toute pression ou coercition exercée sur la population d'un territoire (point D) ne suffirait pas à garantir que cette population pourra décider elle-même de l'avenir de ce territoire (point A) si l'on ne prenait pas les dispositions nécessaires pour assurer que les vues de la population seront respectées (point E); on peut donc dire que le point E est essentiel, puisqu'il complète les dispositions prévues aux points A et D et qu'il en permet la mise en œuvre; la délégation cubaine ne comprend pas pourquoi certaines délégations ont cru devoir formuler des réserves à propos du point E.

11. C'est également pour mieux défendre les intérêts des populations des territoires non autonomes qui aspirent à l'indépendance totale que la délégation cubaine a appuyé, au Comité ad hoc, la proposition du représentant du Guatemala tendant à reconnaître aux habitants des territoires non autonomes, qui ont librement consenti une limitation de leur souveraineté en faveur de la métropole ou d'un autre pays, la liberté de modifier leur statut par des voies démocratiques (A/2428, par. 21).

12. Contrairement à ce que certaines délégations ont affirmé, l'interprétation et l'application des obligations qui, en vertu des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, incombent aux Membres administrants ne doivent pas relever de la compétence exclusive de ces membres; c'est dire qu'il ne peut y avoir cessation de la communication de renseignements qu'après accord, au sein de la collectivité internationale que constitue l'Organisation des Nations Unies, entre les Membres administrants d'une part et les autres Etats Membres. Il est faux d'invoquer en l'occurrence les dispositions du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte, car le sort d'un territoire non autonome ne dépend pas uniquement du pays qui en a assumé l'administration; le colonialisme est une doctrine du passé et le droit international moderne pose des principes différents pour l'administration des territoires non encore autonomes. C'est donc l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et non pas les seuls Membres administrants, qui devra s'inspirer des facteurs énumérés dans la liste pour décider si un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie complète. Dans la réponse (A/AC.58/1/Add.1) qu'il a fait parvenir au Secrétaire général en exécution de la résolution 567 (VI), le Gouvernement cubain indiquait déjà que, si la cessation de la communication de renseignements sur un territoire non autonome pouvait être, à la rigueur et dans des cas bien déterminés, le résultat d'une simple mesure unilatérale de la part du Membre administrant lorsque la sécurité de ce Membre l'exigeait, il était absolument inadmissible que cette cessation eût lieu à la suite d'une décision purement unilatérale prise en raison "de considérations d'ordre constitutionnel".

13. M. Domínguez ne saurait mieux définir la position de la délégation cubaine qu'en rappelant le discours prononcé au cours de la discussion générale par le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba (441ème séance plénière); celui-ci a déclaré que son pays, si résolu qu'il fût à défendre le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, ne cesserait de faire preuve dans ce domaine de la plus extrême prudence pour éviter tout désaccord fondamental qui risquerait d'affaiblir la position des pays libres en face du bloc totalitaire.

14. La liste des facteurs qui figure dans le document A/2428 est satisfaisante, mais elle gagnerait à être étendue. Sa division en trois parties semble judicieuse. Il convient de rappeler que cette liste n'a rien de définitif ou d'obligatoire, car chaque cas de cessation de la communication de renseignements sera étudié en fonction des circonstances particulières qui l'entourent. La délégation cubaine accueillera avec sympathie toute proposition tendant à compléter et à améliorer la présente liste de facteurs.

15. M. KOUTCHKAROV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) déclare que la question des facteurs a son origine dans le refus de certains Membres administrants: la France, le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis et les Pays-Bas, de continuer à fournir, au sujet de certains territoires non autonomes, les renseignements qu'ils sont tenus de communiquer en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. L'attitude de ces Etats est contraire à la Charte; elle traduit un refus de remplir les obligations que celle-ci leur impose à l'égard des territoires non autonomes. A la quatrième session de l'Assemblée générale et aux sessions suivantes, de nombreuses délégations ont déclaré que la décision unilatérale que ces Etats avaient prise était inacceptable.

16. M. Koutchkarov fait l'historique des travaux qui ont abouti à la mise au point d'une liste de facteurs (A/2178) que l'Assemblée a examinée à sa septième session. La délégation de l'URSS a déclaré alors que cette liste permettait de se rapprocher un peu de l'objectif visé par l'Assemblée mais qu'elle était loin d'être complète et qu'il fallait y apporter des améliorations.

17. La liste actuellement présentée à la Commission par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs ne diffère guère de celle que l'Assemblée avait approuvée à sa septième session. Elle comporte de sérieuses lacunes, en ce sens, notamment, qu'elle ne contient pas de définition de la notion d'autonomie complète. A cet égard, M. Koutchkarov ne peut partager l'opinion du Comité, selon laquelle l'absence d'une définition satisfaisante ne serait pas un grave inconvénient. En effet, il serait très difficile d'élaborer une liste des facteurs qui permettraient de déterminer si un territoire a atteint l'objectif fixé, si l'on ne possède pas une définition précise de cet objectif suprême. La délégation de l'URSS estime que les territoires non autonomes auront accédé à l'autonomie complète lorsqu'ils seront devenus des Etats souverains et indépendants, où le pouvoir législatif, exécutif et judiciaire sera exercé par la population autochtone. Jusqu'à là, les Membres administrants sont tenus de communiquer les renseignements prévus par l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Telle est la conception dont il faut s'inspirer pour déterminer si un territoire a atteint l'objectif d'autonomie complète fixé par la Charte.

18. Examinant la liste des facteurs établie par le Comité ad hoc, M. Koutchkarov indique que la délégation de l'URSS est en principe disposée à en accepter la première partie, qui devrait cependant être précisée et complétée. Par contre, les deuxième et troisième parties lui paraissent inacceptables, car elles ne prévoient pas l'accès des territoires non autonomes à la position d'Etats souverains et indépendants. C'est ainsi qu'au facteur A. 3 de la deuxième partie, on étudie la question de la limitation volontaire de la souveraineté, alors qu'il est clair qu'il faut, avant de parler de limiter la souveraineté, accorder la souveraineté et l'indépendance et prendre les dispositions nécessaires pour donner aux autochtones de ces territoires le droit de décider eux-mêmes de leur sort. Le représentant de l'URSS constate que les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste contiennent des facteurs qui permettent à d'autres Etats d'exercer un contrôle sur les affaires intérieures des territoires ou d'intervenir dans ces affaires.

19. M. Koutchkarov tient à réfuter les déclarations des Membres administrants qui prétendent posséder en la matière une compétence exclusive. Il souligne que cette position est contraire à la Charte et aux résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. En terminant, il exprime l'espoir que les facteurs que l'Assemblée générale élabore actuellement constitueront un obstacle au refus arbitraire des Membres administrants de communiquer les renseignements requis et qu'ils contribueront à répondre aux dispositions de la Charte touchant les populations des territoires non autonomes.

20. M. TARZI (Afghanistan) rappelle que, depuis sa création, l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'est préoccupée, conformément à l'esprit de la Charte, de la libération des territoires non autonomes et de la question des facteurs. Certes, cette question est difficile à résoudre et, jusqu'en septembre 1952, la délégation de l'Afghanistan doutait qu'il fût possible d'y apporter une solution juste et raisonnable, car les opinions variaient suivant les Membres administrants.

21. Bien que le Comité ad hoc de 1952 eût étudié, conformément aux dispositions de la résolution 567 (VI), la liste des facteurs que l'Assemblée générale avait établie, il apparut difficile tout d'abord, lorsque la question fut reprise à la septième session, de trouver un organisme compétent qui pût décider si la nouvelle liste des facteurs était complète. On a estimé alors que la liste des facteurs devait tout simplement être considérée comme un guide permettant de décider si un territoire a atteint l'autonomie complète, et ne devait pas jouer d'autre rôle.

22. Les facteurs que les deux comités ad hoc ont proposés à l'Assemblée générale sont des éléments indispensables à l'étude des questions sociales qui intéressent les territoires non autonomes; mais, si ces facteurs et les travaux du Comité ad hoc de 1953 sont adoptés, il est à craindre qu'ils ne soient considérés comme contraires au principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, droit qui est le fondement essentiel de la liberté des peuples et des nations. Si les facteurs proposés peuvent servir de guide, ils ne suffisent cependant pas pour décider de la libération d'un territoire. Ce qui est essentiel pour résoudre cette question, c'est l'opinion des peuples intéressés, et il est indispensable que cette opinion soit exprimée sous les auspices de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, sans l'intervention d'intérêts étrangers.

23. Mlle ROESAD (Indonésie) a l'impression que la plupart des délégations estiment que la Quatrième Commission peut enfin adopter la liste de facteurs proposée. Certaines délégations estiment cependant qu'elles ne peuvent reconnaître la compétence de l'Assemblée générale pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. En fait, le représentant de la France a déclaré à la séance précédente que si l'Assemblée générale devait se considérer seule compétente pour se prononcer sur cette question, aucun territoire non autonome ne deviendrait indépendant. La délégation indonésienne ne parvient pas à comprendre sur quels arguments cette opinion se fonde. Au contraire, c'est l'Assemblée générale qui est compétente pour décider si le Chapitre XI de la Charte s'applique à tel ou tel territoire. Il ne semble pas nécessaire de répéter les arguments juridiques sur lesquels se fonde cette opinion: les représentants du Guatemala et du Mexique l'ont fait avec beaucoup d'éloquence à la séance précédente.

24. Mlle Roesad attire l'attention des membres de la Commission sur le paragraphe 5 de la résolution 648 (VII) de l'Assemblée générale d'où il ressort que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour prendre une décision relative à la cessation de la transmission des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. De l'avis de la délégation indonésienne, l'Assemblée générale doit décider si la cessation de la transmission de renseignements est justifiée, c'est-à-dire si la population d'un territoire non autonome s'administre complètement elle-même.

25. En ce qui concerne le rapport du Comité ad hoc, ce comité, que la délégation indonésienne félicite de s'être si bien acquitté de sa mission, n'a pas jugé bon de modifier sensiblement la liste de facteurs que l'Assemblée générale avait approuvée provisoirement en 1952. La Quatrième Commission pourrait donc recommander l'adoption d'une résolution aux termes de laquelle l'Assemblée générale approuverait la liste actuelle, sous réserve des considérations qui figurent au paragraphe 2 de la résolution 648 (VII).

26. Il importe, en outre, de confirmer le principe énoncé au paragraphe 4 de ladite résolution, d'autant plus que certains gouvernements soutiennent que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73, e, cesse lorsque les questions énumérées dans cet article relèvent de la compétence propre d'un territoire. La nécessité pour l'Assemblée générale de prendre position vis-à-vis de cette affirmation paraît urgente; en effet, c'est un point sur lequel le représentant des Pays-Bas a insisté, notamment au sujet de la cessation de la transmission des renseignements relatifs aux Antilles néerlandaises et au Surinam.

27. Enfin, il paraît essentiel de renouveler la déclaration faite dans la résolution 648 (VII) au sujet de la question générale des facteurs.

28. La délégation de l'Indonésie appuiera toutes propositions tendant à améliorer la liste de facteurs proposée, et réserve sa position vis-à-vis de toutes autres propositions dont la Commission pourrait être saisie ultérieurement au sujet de cette question.

29. M. L. S. BOKHARI (Pakistan) rappelle que la délégation du Pakistan a déclaré à la septième session, au sein de la Quatrième Commission (277ème séance), que la liste des facteurs constituait un guide utile et que le cas de chaque territoire devait être examiné compte tenu des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Elle a déclaré aussi que l'Organisation des Nations Unies portait un intérêt constant au bien-être et à l'avenir des territoires non autonomes et que la communication de renseignements relatifs à ces territoires ne devait pas cesser sans le consentement de l'Organisation. Son attitude n'a pas changé.

30. Après avoir examiné attentivement le rapport du Comité ad hoc, la délégation du Pakistan constate, comme la représentante de l'Inde (322ème séance), que le Comité n'a pas pu ajouter grand-chose à la liste de facteurs que l'Assemblée générale avait approuvée en 1952. Bien que cette liste puisse sans aucun doute être améliorée, elle est assez complète, et il n'y aurait aucun avantage à entreprendre une nouvelle étude. La délégation du Pakistan est disposée à accepter le rapport du Comité ad hoc, tout en se réservant le droit d'intervenir plus tard si des propositions particulières étaient présentées à la Commission.

31. Se référant aux déclarations faites par certaines délégations au sujet de la réduction du nombre des territoires qui font l'objet de rapports à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, la délégation du Pakistan souscrit à une telle réduction, à condition toutefois que l'Organisation ait la certitude que les territoires intéressés ont atteint un degré de développement tel qu'une surveillance n'est plus nécessaire.

32. En fait, il tarde au Pakistan de voir arriver le jour où l'Assemblée générale n'aura plus besoin de s'occuper de cette question, le jour où il n'y aura plus de territoires administrés. Les Membres administrants figurent en quelque sorte sur une liste noire; ils doivent rendre compte à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de ce qu'ils font dans certains domaines à l'égard des territoires non autonomes. Ces Membres seraient certainement heureux de voir leurs noms rayés de cette liste. Pour sa part, le Gouvernement du Pakistan verra avec plaisir la liste diminuer, mais il soutient que la décision finale appartient à l'Organisation et c'est à elle qu'il demande aux Membres administrants de faire confiance.

La séance est levée à 16 h. 10.

SOMMAIRE

	Pages
Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite].....	47
Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.....	53
Comptes rendus de la Commission.....	55

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428] (suite)

[Point 33*]

1. M. ABOU-AFIA (Egypte) souligne l'intérêt que la délégation égyptienne attache au Chapitre XI de la Charte et rappelle les initiatives qu'elle a prises ou appuyées pour en maintenir la portée. A l'occasion des débats sur cette question, les représentants des Membres administrants ont affirmé que l'Assemblée générale n'était pas compétente pour examiner si un territoire avait atteint l'autonomie complète; ils ont allégué qu'aucun texte ne lui conférerait ce pouvoir. Leur point de vue s'est notamment exprimé dans les réserves formulées par le représentant de la Belgique, réserves qui sont rappelées à l'alinéa b du paragraphe 40 du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428] et dont M. Abou-Afia cite à nouveau le texte. Fidèle à la Charte et à ses propres principes, la délégation égyptienne ne peut que s'élever contre cette manière de voir. Le Chapitre XI énonce des engagements contractuels qui ont fait l'objet d'un accord entre tous les Etats Membres et auxquels aucun Etat Membre ne peut se soustraire par un acte ou une déclaration de caractère unilatéral. Admettre le contraire serait permettre aux Membres administrants d'annuler trop aisément les dispositions du Chapitre XI. Il ne fait aucun doute que le sens de ce chapitre ne dépend aucunement de l'interprétation unilatérale qu'en donnent les Membres administrants.

2. Rien n'autorise à invoquer en l'occurrence les dispositions du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. En effet, de même qu'en droit privé les obligations contractuelles sont conçues comme une restriction volontaire de la liberté individuelle, de même les engagements internationaux constituent une restriction volontaire de la souveraineté des Etats — sous réserve, bien entendu, de l'objet de ces engagements. Ce principe s'applique à tous les engagements internationaux; il s'ensuit que les restrictions prévues au paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte ne sont valables que pour les questions qui ne sont pas traitées dans la Charte, ce qui n'est pas le cas en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes, puisque ceux-ci font l'objet du Chapitre XI. L'Assemblée générale a donc le droit, et même le devoir, de veiller à ce que tous les Etats qui ont signé la Charte remplissent les engagements qui en découlent. A cet effet, l'Assemblée a pris une série de décisions; notamment, elle a créé le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, dont les travaux ont abouti à l'élaboration d'une liste de facteurs.

3. La délégation égyptienne tient à remercier le Comité du travail qu'il a accompli; elle estime que, dans l'ensemble, la liste qu'il a mise au point est satisfaisante. Avec quelques modifications, destinées à assurer plus effectivement le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, cette liste pourra servir des fins pratiques, sans que l'Assemblée soit pour autant dispensée d'examiner chaque cas particulier en fonction des éléments qui le caractérisent. La délégation égyptienne se propose de présenter un projet de résolution tendant à modifier la liste des facteurs dans le sens que M. Abou-Afia vient d'indiquer.

4. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) s'associe aux remerciements adressés aux membres et au secrétariat du Comité ad hoc, dont les travaux ont éclairé les divers aspects du problème et permis aux délégations de préciser leur position. La délégation danoise est disposée à approuver le rapport et à accepter la liste des facteurs qui y figure. La classification de ces facteurs en trois parties lui semble judicieuse. Enfin, elle est d'avis que les travaux accomplis jusqu'à présent sont suffisants et que, par conséquent, il n'est pas nécessaire de proroger le Comité ad hoc.

5. Parmi les facteurs énumérés dans le rapport du Comité, il en est un qui revêt une importance essentielle: l'opinion des populations du territoire librement exprimée, en connaissance de cause et par des voies démocratiques, en ce qui concerne le statut ou le changement de statut qu'elles désirent. Ce facteur s'applique non seulement à la cessation de la communication des renseignements, mais encore au fait de commencer à fournir ces renseignements. Tous les Etats Membres devront s'inspirer de la liste des facteurs pour s'interroger et se prononcer sur la question de savoir s'ils devraient communiquer des renseignements au sujet de territoires pour lesquels ils n'ont pas adressé de rapport jusqu'à présent.

6. En ce qui concerne la question de compétence, la position que la délégation danoise a prise aux précédentes sessions n'a pas varié: elle estime que c'est à l'Etat responsable de l'administration d'un territoire qu'il appartient de déterminer le statut constitutionnel du territoire placé sous sa souveraineté. Aucune des dispositions du Chapitre XI ne saurait être interprétée comme modifiant ce principe de quelque façon que ce soit. Le Danemark a toujours été disposé à communiquer à l'Organisation des Nations Unies des renseignements relatifs non seulement à la situation économique, sociale et de l'enseignement touchant le territoire qu'il administre, mais encore à la situation politique et à l'évolution du statut constitutionnel de ce territoire. Néanmoins, il n'a jamais considéré que l'Organisation des Nations Unies pourrait, de ce fait, examiner ou reviser une mesure qui aurait été adoptée par les organes constitutionnels du Danemark.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

7. M. Lannung retrace pour la Commission les étapes de l'évolution constitutionnelle du Groenland. En 1951, la délégation danoise avait déjà annoncé au Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte¹ que le Groenland souhaitait être représenté directement au Parlement danois. En 1952, le Conseil national du Groenland a adopté, à l'unanimité, une motion exprimant le désir de voir le Groenland associé au Danemark en tant que partie intégrante de la métropole, sur un pied d'entière égalité avec les autres parties du Danemark, et représenté au Parlement danois; il demandait, en outre, que la Constitution danoise fût amendée à cet effet. Le Gouvernement et le Parlement danois ont fait droit à ces aspirations. La nouvelle Constitution danoise, adoptée par le Parlement et ultérieurement approuvée par un référendum de la population danoise, dispose en son article premier que le Groenland est devenu une partie intégrante du Danemark, et qu'il a, de ce fait, le même statut que les autres parties de ce pays. La population du Groenland jouit actuellement des mêmes droits que le reste de la population danoise. En raison de ce changement constitutionnel, le Groenland n'est donc plus un territoire non autonome au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Aussi, conformément à la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale, le Gouvernement danois a envoyé au Secrétaire général une note datée du 3 septembre 1953, par laquelle il l'informait de cette évolution et à laquelle étaient joints un mémoire explicatif, une traduction de la Constitution danoise et les procès-verbaux des séances auxquelles le Conseil national du Groenland avait examiné, puis adopté à l'unanimité, les changements en question. Le Gouvernement danois sait que, conformément à la résolution 448 (V), cette documentation sera présentée au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, à sa prochaine session, mais la délégation danoise a tenu à en informer dès à présent la Quatrième Commission.

8. La décision du Gouvernement danois est entièrement conforme au facteur fondamental que M. Lannung a souligné, à savoir la volonté librement exprimée des populations du territoire. Elle a été accueillie avec joie tant par la population du Groenland que par la population du Danemark, toutes deux persuadées que cet ordre nouveau servira au mieux les intérêts du Groenland et que le gouvernement et le Parlement, où les habitants du Groenland siègent maintenant avec leurs compatriotes, continueront de faire tout leur possible pour favoriser le bien-être de la population de ce territoire.

9. M. ABOU KHADRA (Arabie saoudite) déclare que la Commission est chargée de lourdes responsabilités, dont elle doit s'efforcer de s'acquitter dans un esprit de coopération en s'appuyant sur les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte et en s'inspirant des buts et principes que la Charte a proclamés. Il est possible de remplir cette mission en recherchant des solutions qui s'inscrivent dans le cadre de la Charte, mais encore faut-il que tous les membres de la Commission s'entendent sur leur interprétation qu'ils donnent de ceux des articles qui doivent inspirer ses travaux. Il s'est trop souvent manifesté une tendance à restreindre la portée des travaux de la Commission, voire même sa compétence, à l'aide d'arguments juridiques qui s'écartent du sens réel de la Charte ou d'une interprétation rigide de ses dispositions. Si l'on veut atteindre les buts fixés par la Charte, il faut interpréter celle-ci plus largement et M. Abou Khadra espère que les débats sur la question des facteurs ne donneront pas lieu à de sérieuses controverses et que, grâce à un esprit de coopération sincère, la Commission pourra aboutir à des résultats féconds, qui permettront de rapprocher les points de vue de certains groupes.

10. La délégation de l'Arabie saoudite tient à rendre hommage à la façon dont le Comité ad hoc s'est acquitté de sa tâche. Elle estime cependant que, si nombreux que soient les facteurs qui y figureraient, aucune liste ne saurait être considérée comme complète ou définitive. Cette liste doit donc demeurer constamment à l'étude et être soumise à des revisions. L'Assemblée générale devrait donc renvoyer au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, dans le cadre de ses tâches et responsabilités normales, la liste des facteurs et la question de leur interprétation et des mises au point à y apporter pour tenir compte des changements qui surviennent dans la situation. Il serait bon qu'un projet de résolution à cet effet soit déposé et que la Commission l'adopte. D'autre part, la liste des facteurs ne peut constituer qu'un guide, un ensemble de critères permettant de mesurer le degré de développement d'un territoire et de se prononcer, dans de meilleures conditions, sur la question de savoir si ce territoire a accédé à l'autonomie complète. En outre, étant donné la diversité des caractéristiques des différents territoires dépendants, ces critères doivent être appliqués avec une grande souplesse. Cet élément est de la plus haute importance.

11. Contrairement au Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, M. Abou Khadra ne pense pas que la définition de la notion d' "autonomie complète" doive poser de sérieuses difficultés. Pour l'élaborer, il suffit de prendre conscience des aspirations des peuples dépendants et de se fonder sur deux principes: celui du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, consacré au paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte, et celui de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes, énoncé à l'Article 73. On peut aisément définir la notion d'autonomie complète, objectif suprême fixé par la Charte, en fonction de ces principes: autonomie complète signifie indépendance souveraine. Si l'on considère les mouvements populaires qu'on enregistre actuellement en faveur de l'indépendance complète, on peut douter que les peuples dépendants choisissent librement une forme d'autonomie qui n'équivaudrait pas à la souveraineté pleine et entière. Il importe peu qu'après avoir accédé à l'indépendance un territoire non autonome décide de s'associer à la métropole ou à un autre pays, dans la mesure où cette association est postérieure à l'indépendance; sinon l'on aurait de sérieuses raisons de douter que le territoire dépendant l'ait librement choisie.

12. En ce qui concerne les critères qui permettent de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est garanti, la délégation de l'Arabie

¹ Voir A/AC.35/SR.34.

saoudite accepte la liste que le Comité a donnée dans la section IV de son rapport; elle attache une importance particulière aux points D, E et F; en effet, si l'on veut assurer le respect du principe de la primauté des intérêts des autochtones, il faut absolument que la population puisse exprimer son opinion sans aucune pression de la part des Puissances administrantes. Le point E (A/2428, par. 15) apporte au point D (A/2428, par. 15) un complément indispensable, car, si les Puissances administrantes ne donnent pas l'assurance que l'opinion de la population sera respectée, rien ne permettra de déterminer les aspirations réelles des populations intéressées. Enfin, le point F (A/2428, par. 21) est le seul facteur sur lequel on puisse se fonder pour décider si un territoire a volontairement consenti une limitation de sa souveraineté en faveur de la métropole ou d'un autre pays. Certaines régions demeurent associées à la métropole contre la volonté de leurs habitants; les pays métropolitains ont toujours prétendu que cette association avait été effectuée avec le plein accord des deux parties. Si tel est bien le cas, ces pays n'ont aucune raison de faire des réserves quant au point F; s'ils l'acceptaient, les doutes qui peuvent exister dans l'esprit de certains disparaîtraient. Le fait même qu'un territoire non autonome est libre de modifier son statut par des voies démocratiques — c'est-à-dire, en l'occurrence, de se retirer d'une association dont il faisait partie — prouve irréfutablement que cette association ne lui a pas été imposée.

13. M. Abou Khadra passe à la liste des facteurs présentée par le Comité ad hoc (A/2428, section VI). A son avis, il faudrait supprimer le facteur A. 3 de la deuxième partie, qui vise en fait une limitation de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance. Il est vrai que le droit d'abandonner une partie de sa souveraineté en faveur d'une entité plus large constitue l'un des attributs de la souveraineté; mais les Etats qui ont récemment acquis leur indépendance en sont bien trop jaloux pour accepter de conclure un accord qui pourrait la limiter. La situation du Proche-Orient, où les éléments d'une même nation ont été partagés pour servir les intérêts des Puissances coloniales et s'efforcent de réaligner progressivement une union plus étroite, ne joue pas en l'occurrence. La délégation de l'Arabie saoudite accepte sans réserve les autres facteurs, étant bien entendu que l'association visée dans les deuxième et troisième parties doit être effectuée conformément aux aspirations réelles de la population et sans qu'aucune pression ait été exercée sur elle.

14. En ce qui concerne la question de compétence, l'Assemblée générale devrait être consultée chaque fois qu'il s'agit de déterminer si un territoire a atteint l'autonomie complète et étant donné qu'elle doit se prononcer sur chaque cas en fonction des éléments qui le caractérisent. Ce n'est que lorsqu'un territoire a atteint le degré d'indépendance qui lui permet d'être admis dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies que peut cesser la communication des renseignements prévus par la Charte.

15. M. DOBROSIELSKI (Pologne) constate que les analyses purement théoriques auxquelles on a procédé depuis plusieurs années n'ont pas permis d'établir une liste définitive et complète de facteurs. Il est à craindre qu'aucun progrès sensible ne puisse être réalisé si l'on continue de traiter la question de façon purement théorique. Pour en avoir la preuve, il suffit de constater que la liste élaborée par le Comité ad hoc ne diffère guère de celle de 1952 [résolution 648 (VII) de l'Assemblée générale, annexe] et qu'elle doit simple-ment avoir la valeur d'un ensemble d'indications générales. Il est difficile d'accepter certains des facteurs qui sont énumérés à la deuxième et à la troisième parties de la liste, et qui ont du reste soulevé des objections de la part des représentants de l'URSS et du Guatemala (322ème et 323ème séances).

16. L'étude de l'historique du problème permet de conclure que les Membres administrants s'efforcent de maintenir la question sur le plan théorique et d'empêcher l'Assemblée générale de prendre les mesures qui s'imposent pour modifier la situation actuelle. Cette situation résulte du refus arbitraire de certains Membres administrants — les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, la France, le Royaume-Uni et les Pays-Bas — de continuer à communiquer des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes qu'ils administrent, en violation des obligations qu'ils ont acceptées en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Les Membres administrants ont cessé de communiquer des renseignements au sujet de quinze des soixante-quatorze territoires non autonomes énumérés dans la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale. La tendance à prendre une décision unilatérale persiste, comme le prouve le cas des Antilles néerlandaises, du Surinam et de Porto-Rico. Les Membres administrants prétendent que les territoires non autonomes relèvent de leur compétence exclusive. Or, il s'agit d'un problème international, et l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit attacher un intérêt tout particulier à la situation actuelle et à l'avenir des populations en cause.

17. C'est pourquoi, sans sous-estimer l'importance d'une étude théorique du problème, la délégation polonaise considère qu'il importe de prendre des mesures pratiques pour résoudre la question. Elle espère que l'Assemblée générale élaborera très prochainement un ensemble de principes qui mettront les Membres administrants dans l'impossibilité de prendre unilatéralement la décision de cesser de communiquer des renseignements relatifs aux territoires qu'ils administrent. Les Membres administrants sont tenus de transmettre ces renseignements aussi longtemps que les territoires en question ne sont pas devenus des Etats indépendants et souverains dont la population exerce sans réserves le pouvoir exécutif, législatif et judiciaire. C'est l'Assemblée générale qui est compétente pour décider si un territoire a atteint l'autonomie complète et pour se prononcer sur la cessation de la communication des renseignements. La délégation polonaise appuiera toute proposition positive qui permette de régler le problème dans cet esprit.

18. M. NAJAR (Israël) dit que la délégation israélienne a été quelque peu déçue de voir que les débats ont porté essentiellement sur la question de savoir qui devait décider si un territoire non autonome avait réellement accédé à l'autonomie et quand il était devenu autonome. La question de la cessation de la communication des renseignements figurant au point 3 de l'ordre du jour de la Commission, il aurait mieux valu, pour l'avancement des travaux de la Commission, s'attacher davantage à l'étude de la question des facteurs en soi et moins à l'étude des questions relatives à l'emploi de ces facteurs, sources de querelles sur l'interprétation de la Charte; il serait plus fructueux de rechercher la manière de contribuer utilement au règlement humain et constructif des problèmes politiques difficiles et concrets qui se posent à l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

19. La délégation israélienne n'attache pas une importance fondamentale à l'étude des facteurs, car l'expérience que possèdent les soixante Etats Membres est une garantie pratiquement absolue qu'aucun aspect des problèmes rattachés à toutes les formes concevables d'autonomie ou d'indépendance ne peut être perdu de vue au moment de la discussion de tel ou tel cas particulier. Le présent rapport du Comité ad hoc ne fait que confirmer la délégation israélienne dans cette manière de voir. En effet, le Comité ad hoc était chargé notamment de définir la notion d'autonomie complète aux fins du Chapitre XI. Le problème consisterait à rechercher si elle se situe en deçà de l'indépendance dont parle le Chapitre XII et, dans l'affirmative, si elle se situe au-delà de l'autonomie dans les domaines économique, social et de l'instruction mentionnés à l'Article 73, e. Le Comité a répondu que la définition n'était pas possible et que la notion se dégagerait de l'étude de chaque situation particulière. Le Comité devait également rechercher les critères permettant de décider si le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est garanti en ce qui concerne le même chapitre. Aucune condition bien précise ni aucun accord entre les membres du Comité n'ont été atteints. Si l'on examine la liste des facteurs, on est frappé de constater qu'elle ne reflète plus rien de la complexité des problèmes soulevés et des attitudes adoptées par les différents membres du Comité ad hoc.

20. La délégation israélienne regrette de constater une fâcheuse tendance à négliger de plus en plus, dans l'étude des voies et moyens destinés à assurer le respect, sur le plan international, du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, l'aspect individuel de ce droit, qui en constitue pourtant la véritable base. Du point de vue historique, le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes repose sur la liberté et l'égalité des hommes liés par ce qu'on a appelé le contrat social. Il ne faut pas non plus oublier que, dans les quatorze points du président Wilson, il y avait identité entre le principe des nationalités et les principes démocratiques.

21. La première partie de la liste des facteurs traite de l'indépendance; on serait donc fondé à penser, d'après le titre général de la liste contenue dans le paragraphe 41 du document A/2428, que les deuxième et troisième parties traiteraient des autres formes d'autonomie séparée. Or, ces parties traitent de l'autonomie en association permanente avec la métropole et des facteurs permettant de conclure qu'un territoire est librement associé à la métropole ou à un autre pays et en constitue une partie intégrante.

22. La délégation israélienne estime qu'il était inutile d'introduire dans un rapport fort complexe une liste des facteurs qui semble bien établir que, si les territoires non autonomes doivent un jour accéder à l'indépendance, cette indépendance est cependant susceptible de revêtir les formes les plus diverses selon la volonté librement exprimée des populations intéressées. On peut donc se demander si une analyse théorique plus poussée et de plus en plus délicate des notions d'autonomie et d'indépendance ne risquerait pas de desservir la cause du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Il conviendrait donc de mettre un terme à cette étude des facteurs.

23. Les travaux du Comité ad hoc auront toutefois permis de réduire sur un point important l'écart qui existe entre les conceptions des Puissances administrantes et des Puissances non administrantes, puisque le paragraphe 13 du rapport admet que la notion d'autonomie se dégagera de l'examen de chaque situation particulière.

24. Un exemple des débats sans issue dans lesquels la Commission s'engagerait si elle se plaçait constamment sur un terrain doctrinal serait la discussion de la thèse belge selon laquelle le Chapitre XI ne contenant pas de définition limitative des territoires non autonomes, l'Assemblée pourrait en découvrir qui n'auraient pas été déclarés par les Etats responsables. Cependant, il ressort de l'Article 74 qu'un territoire métropolitain ne peut en aucun cas tomber sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI. Serait-il sage de s'engager dans une discussion de la notion de territoire métropolitain?

25. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) se félicite de l'évolution qui, en cent cinquante ans, a conduit le monde de la révolte des esclaves de Saint-Domingue à la séance de la présente Commission, où les représentants de nations libres et indépendantes cherchent à fixer les conditions essentielles que doivent réunir, pour accéder à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance, quelque soixante territoires disséminés à travers le monde et comptant plus de 200 millions d'êtres humains.

26. En dépit de leur bonne volonté, de leur compétence et de leur désir de remplir fidèlement le mandat qui leur était imparti, les membres des divers sous-comités chargés de l'étude des facteurs n'ont pu ni définir le concept d'autonomie complète ni établir une liste des facteurs qui donnât entièrement satisfaction à tous. Le document A/2428 est un exercice intellectuel sans portée pratique: d'une part on reconnaît que l'énumération des facteurs n'est qu'indicative, d'autre part on admet qu'il ne peut y avoir que des cas d'espèce. Le travail accompli n'aura cependant pas été inutile, car il a permis d'examiner dans toutes ses applications juridiques, politiques, économiques et sociales la situation de vastes territoires dont il faut bien se demander quel est leur avenir. M. Dorsinville cite un passage du livre de M. Pierre Ryckmans, Dominer pour servir, où s'exprime une profonde sagesse: "Le problème politique ne se pose pas encore au Congo. Il n'est pas temps de le résoudre, mais il est temps déjà d'y penser, de prévoir et de préparer l'avenir... Quand l'heure est venue, les peuples n'attendent pas. Si l'on tarde, ce n'est plus l'émancipation qui termine la crise, c'est la haine, la révolte, la rupture" (p. 74).

27. C'est en vue précisément d'éviter des explosions de haine que la délégation haïtienne a toujours approuvé les différents rapports présentés sur la question des facteurs et qu'elle votera encore pour le document A/2428, bien qu'elle estime que l'unique facteur, en l'occurrence, eût dû être la libre expression de l'opinion des populations. Puisque les Puissances administrantes ont accepté une limitation de leur souveraineté, elles ne sauraient soustraire "arbitrairement" un territoire au régime de l'Article 73. Il devrait être possible d'assurer que les populations expriment leur opinion en toute liberté si les parties intéressées faisaient preuve de bonne volonté et permettaient à l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'exercer le contrôle nécessaire.

28. Devant la nette prise de position des Puissances administrantes, la délégation haïtienne craint que le Chapitre XI de la Charte ne soit très bientôt vidé de son contenu; elle demande, pour apaiser ses scrupules, que l'évolution ait lieu réellement dans le meilleur intérêt des populations des territoires non autonomes, et c'est afin que chaque cas d'espèce soit étudié conformément à des normes guides, convenues et acceptées, qu'elle votera pour l'adoption du rapport A/2428, sans admettre pour autant que les facteurs énumérés dans la liste sont désormais intangibles.

29. M. CHTOKALO (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) déclare que si certains Membres administrants se dérobent à l'obligation que leur impose la Charte de transmettre des renseignements relatifs aux territoires qu'ils administrent, c'est parce qu'ils veulent dissimuler la situation difficile qui règne dans ces territoires. De nombreux éléments d'information montrent que ces Membres exploitent sans vergogne les populations des territoires en question et que, loin de s'efforcer d'assurer le progrès des populations dans le domaine économique, social et de l'enseignement, ils ne cherchent qu'à obtenir des bénéfices aussi élevés que possible. Il suffit de rappeler à ce propos que le nombre des pétitions et des plaintes adressées à l'Organisation des Nations Unies augmente sans cesse. L'élaboration de facteurs permettant de déterminer si un territoire a ou non accédé à l'autonomie complète doit permettre de mettre les Membres administrants à même de s'acquitter des obligations que la Charte leur impose. La question des facteurs a été longuement discutée sans qu'on y ait apporté de solution satisfaisante et l'on constate une fois de plus que le Comité ad hoc n'a pas suivi son mandat. La liste de facteurs qu'il a élaborée est incomplète; il faut l'améliorer. Bien plus, le Comité n'a même pas été en mesure de mettre au point une définition de la notion d'autonomie complète; il a prétendu que l'absence de cette définition n'était pas un inconvénient grave. C'est là une conclusion tout à fait erronée; en effet, comment serait-il possible d'énumérer de façon précise tous les facteurs dont il faut tenir compte pour déterminer si un territoire est devenu absolument autonome, alors qu'on ignore ce qu'il faut entendre par autonomie complète?

30. La délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine estime que la première partie de la liste approuvée par le Comité ad hoc est acceptable, bien qu'il faille y apporter certaines améliorations. Par contre, la deuxième et la troisième partie ne sauraient être retenues, car elles visent non pas l'accès d'un territoire à l'autonomie complète, mais son association, permanente ou non, avec la métropole, c'est-à-dire une limitation de son indépendance. Les facteurs indiqués à la troisième partie donneraient aux Membres administrants le droit de cesser de communiquer des renseignements. Les travaux du Comité ad hoc ont donc abouti à un résultat exactement contraire au mandat que l'Assemblée avait donné au Comité. Adopter ces deux dernières parties serait faire le jeu des Puissances coloniales, qui tentent de s'arroger le droit exclusif de régler le destin des territoires non autonomes et dont les vues trouvent une illustration particulièrement frappante dans les réserves de la Belgique que le Comité ad hoc a reproduites dans son rapport (par. 40).

31. En terminant, M. Chtokalo exprime l'espoir que la Commission apportera à la liste des facteurs les modifications nécessaires pour que les Puissances administrantes soient mises en demeure de remplir les obligations que la Charte leur impose.

32. M. CAMPOS CATELIN (Argentine) tient tout d'abord à féliciter le Comité ad hoc du soin avec lequel il s'est acquitté de sa tâche sous la présidence de M. Khalidy.

33. La délégation argentine approuve sans réserve les conclusions formulées au paragraphe 9 du document A/2428. Les facteurs énumérés dans la liste actuelle ne constituent que de simples indications et n'ont aucun caractère définitif.

34. Comme le représentant du Mexique l'a fait remarquer (322ème séance), le facteur A. 4 de la première partie de la liste des facteurs n'est pas acceptable. En effet, un Etat a accédé à l'autonomie complète lorsqu'il peut assurer lui-même sa défense nationale et non seulement y participer; en outre, le facteur A. 4 ne peut s'appliquer à l'établissement et à l'utilisation de bases militaires dans un territoire, qui impliqueraient une atteinte à la souveraineté du pays intéressé dont la défense nationale est un attribut essentiel.

35. Il conviendrait de supprimer, dans le titre de la deuxième partie, l'adjectif "permanente", d'autant que l'association visée dans cette partie ne peut avoir d'autre caractère que celui que les parties veulent lui donner, cette association devant toujours jouer au profit du territoire qui a accepté une limitation volontaire de sa souveraineté; or, pareille association pourrait, à une date ultérieure, porter atteinte aux intérêts du territoire en question. En outre, la notion de limitation volontaire de souveraineté est éminemment dangereuse et ne devrait donc pas paraître dans la liste, à moins de l'assortir de la garantie que le représentant du Guatemala a proposée et qui figure au paragraphe 21 du rapport.

36. Certaines délégations ont éprouvé des difficultés à élaborer une définition satisfaisante de la notion de "peuple" en tant que sujet du droit à l'autodétermination. M. Campos Catelin cite à ce propos la définition que le professeur Georges Scelle donne dans son Précis de droit des gens et d'après laquelle le peuple est l'entité collective capable d'exercer le droit à l'autodétermination, condition indispensable de son existence; le peuple serait la cohésion des volontés des sujets qui le composent; cette cohésion de volontés implique une unité de buts qui repose sur une unité de traditions, sur un patrimoine commun, historique et spirituel.

37. A propos du paragraphe 40 du rapport du Comité ad hoc, la délégation argentine tient à réfuter une fois de plus la thèse soutenue par le représentant de la Belgique. Le fait que les Puissances administrantes aient accepté les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte ne place sous la tutelle de la collectivité internationale que les peuples visés par ce chapitre, dont les dispositions ne s'appliquent qu'aux territoires qui n'ont jamais formé partie intégrante d'un Etat métropolitain ou n'ont jamais été considérés comme en faisant partie. Il est impossible d'invoquer en l'occurrence le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2, car des questions de cet ordre ne relèvent pas de la compétence intérieure des Puissances administrantes; c'est une position que le Gouvernement argentin a maintes fois défendue. Ces questions sont liées au régime de la protection internationale des territoires non autonomes créé par la Charte et librement accepté par les Puissances administrantes. Ces dernières ont assumé une obligation qui, aux termes mêmes de la Charte, constitue pour elles une mission sacrée. C'est à l'Assemblée générale qu'il appartient de décider si un territoire a cessé d'être non autonome, ou s'il continue d'être non autonome aux fins du Chapitre XI.

38. La délégation argentine tient à répéter une fois de plus qu'en cas de litige ou de différend, le gouvernement de l'Etat métropolitain administrant n'a pas le droit de modifier le statut politique de ce territoire.

39. Enfin, conformément aux termes de la résolution XXXIII adoptée par la IXème Conférence internationale américaine qui s'est tenue à Bogota en 1948, le Gouvernement de la République Argentine estime que "le processus historique de l'émancipation de l'Amérique ne sera pas terminé tant qu'il existera sur le continent des peuples et des régions soumis au régime colonial ou des territoires occupés par des pays non américains".

40. M. S. S. LIU (Chine) estime que l'étude de la question des facteurs, qui a fait l'objet de longs et fructueux travaux tant à la Commission qu'aux divers sous-comités, est parvenue, avec l'élaboration de la liste actuelle, à un stade où il serait certes possible de perfectionner et de préciser cette liste, mais où il devient inutile pour l'instant de poursuivre les efforts dans ce sens, comme le Comité ad hoc l'indique au paragraphe 9 de son rapport. La présente liste peut servir utilement de guide pour décider si un territoire a atteint ou non une complète autonomie. Mais il ressort nettement des termes de la résolution 648 (VII) que la décision n'appartient pas unilatéralement au Membre administrant; c'est à l'Assemblée générale qu'il appartient de trancher en dernier ressort. Cette thèse est en conformité absolue avec la théorie de la responsabilité internationale à peu près universellement admise aujourd'hui.

41. La délégation chinoise accueillerait avec la plus vive satisfaction la cessation de toute communication de renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes s'il fallait voir là une preuve que tous les territoires non autonomes sans exception ont accédé à l'indépendance, atteignant ainsi l'objectif que vise le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Mais, tant qu'il existera des territoires qui ne jouissent pas encore de l'autonomie complète, les Membres administrants devront continuer à fournir des renseignements. C'est de cette manière seulement que l'Assemblée générale peut assurer la protection des peuples non autonomes et sauvegarder leurs droits et leurs intérêts légitimes.

42. La délégation chinoise tient à formuler trois observations à propos de la théorie, maintes fois défendue par certaines Puissances administrantes, selon laquelle les dispositions du Chapitre XI s'appliquent non seulement aux territoires non autonomes mais également à certains Etats indépendants dont la population ou une fraction de la population ne jouit pas d'une complète autonomie. En premier lieu, le titre même du Chapitre XI indique que ce chapitre vise exclusivement les territoires non autonomes. En deuxième lieu, les Membres administrants, qui ont accusé certains Membres non administrants de sortir du cadre des dispositions du Chapitre XI, seraient malvenus à essayer d'étendre l'application de ce chapitre sans y être légalement fondés. Enfin, l'élargissement de la portée du Chapitre XI ne saurait aucunement dégager les Membres administrants des obligations qu'ils ont assumées à l'égard des territoires non autonomes qui sont réellement visés par ce chapitre.

43. En conclusion, la délégation chinoise est disposée à appuyer tout projet de résolution qui s'inspire des conclusions formulées par le Comité ad hoc; elle se réserve le droit d'intervenir ultérieurement à ce sujet.

44. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) constate avec satisfaction que le rapport du Comité ad hoc tient compte des diverses questions de nature juridique que la délégation de la République Dominicaine a soulevées dès le début de l'étude de la question des facteurs. Cette étude peut permettre d'élaborer des principes qui s'inscriront éventuellement dans le droit international.

45. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte présente une importance toute particulière; d'une part, il donne aux populations des territoires non autonomes l'espoir que leurs aspirations à l'indépendance et à la liberté seront un jour réalisées; d'autre part, il est un témoignage de la bonne volonté avec laquelle les Puissances métropolitaines ont accepté, à San-Francisco, de se charger de la mission sacrée de favoriser la prospérité des populations des territoires non autonomes. M. de Marchena rappelle que sa délégation a vivement admiré la générosité des Puissances qui ont souscrit aux obligations énoncées dans le Chapitre XI.

46. Etant donné l'importance capitale du Chapitre XI, il convient d'en préciser la véritable portée, car, depuis la Conférence de San-Francisco, il a donné lieu à de nombreuses interprétations divergentes. Alors que les Nations Unies envisagent actuellement, conformément aux dispositions de l'Article 109, de procéder à une révision de la Charte, il serait utile de renforcer l'efficacité du Chapitre XI en y introduisant une définition de la notion de complète autonomie. C'est là une tâche fort ardue, ainsi que le sait fort bien le représentant de la République Dominicaine, qui a participé aux efforts entrepris par l'Organisation des Nations Unies en vue de donner une définition de l'agression. La difficulté vient en grande partie de ce qu'il existe diverses manières de concevoir une définition: une définition doit-elle être générique, descriptive, énumérative, ou doit-elle participer de ces trois caractères? Dans la première partie de la liste des facteurs, le Comité ad hoc est parvenu à donner une définition de l'indépendance par énumération. Il convient de le féliciter de cette brillante réussite.

47. M. de Marchena est convaincu que la liste des facteurs ne saurait jamais être définitive ni complète, mais qu'elle constituera toujours un guide permettant d'étudier chaque cas particulier en fonction des circonstances qui lui sont propres. La liste actuelle paraît tout à fait rationnelle; elle comble une lacune dans l'interprétation du Chapitre XI et permet une meilleure mise en œuvre de la résolution 222 (III) de l'Assemblée générale. La délégation de la République Dominicaine estime que la Commission pourrait maintenant recommander à l'Assemblée générale de mettre fin à l'étude de la question des facteurs, car les résultats obtenus sont assez satisfaisants pour que ce point disparaisse de l'ordre du jour.

48. La première partie de la liste des facteurs renferme de très précieux critères sur lesquels on pourra désormais se fonder pour conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'indépendance. En ce qui concerne les deux autres parties, M. de Marchena souligne que toute entité collective, lorsqu'elle en exprime le désir, doit avoir le droit de dissocier ses institutions politiques et parlementaires de celles de l'Etat métropolitain auquel elle était rattachée par des liens historiques. Dans le cas d'association avec la métropole ou avec un autre pays, le critère fondamental est l'opinion librement exprimée de la population du territoire intéressé; il convient d'adopter en cette matière des formules souples conformes aux conceptions modernes.

49. La délégation de la République Dominicaine est disposée à appuyer toute proposition visant à recommander l'utilisation de la présente liste de facteurs comme guide lorsqu'il s'agira de déterminer si un territoire s'administre ou non complètement lui-même, étant bien entendu que le facteur primordial doit demeurer l'opinion, librement exprimée par des voies démocratiques, des populations des territoires intéressés.

50. Le PRESIDENT propose, puisqu'il n'y a plus d'orateurs inscrits au sujet de la question des facteurs, de renvoyer la suite de l'examen de cette question à la séance suivante et d'aborder dès maintenant la question des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte.

Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte

[Point 32*]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE

51. M. HOPKINSON (Royaume-Uni) rappelle que lors de la septième session, à la Quatrième Commission (251ème séance), il avait ouvert la discussion générale sur le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes (A/2219 et Corr.1) en faisant un exposé général de la politique suivie et de l'œuvre accomplie par le Royaume-Uni dans les territoires qu'il administre. Cette année, M. Hopkinson aurait aimé participer plus longuement aux débats. Malheureusement, en sa qualité de Ministre des colonies, il a un programme de travail extrêmement chargé qui l'oblige à quitter New-York sous peu. C'est pourquoi il a demandé à prendre la parole dès maintenant.

52. Le présent rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes (A/2463) traite, au chapitre VI, de la situation de l'enseignement dans les territoires non autonomes, objet principal de ses travaux de cette année. La deuxième partie du document contient en outre un rapport spécial du Comité sur l'éducation dans les territoires non autonomes.

53. M. Hopkinson s'intéresse personnellement au problème de l'éducation, car il préside le Comité consultatif que le Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies du Royaume-Uni a institué pour lui donner des avis sur les questions relatives à l'enseignement. Ce comité, créé en 1929, avait à l'origine pour mandat de donner des avis au Secrétaire d'Etat en vue de l'élaboration de la politique de l'enseignement dans les territoires sous administration britannique. Par suite de l'évolution, d'ordre constitutionnel et autre, qui s'est produite dans les colonies, la nature des travaux de ce comité consultatif a beaucoup changé au cours de ces dernières années. Alors que dans le passé la politique de l'enseignement était définie à Londres, le développement considérable de l'initiative locale en matière d'enseignement et l'extension des pouvoirs et des attributions des corps législatifs des territoires coloniaux ont modifié sensiblement le rôle du Comité consultatif. Certes, lorsqu'un avis extérieur leur paraît nécessaire, les autorités locales renvoient encore certaines questions au Secrétaire d'Etat, qui les fait examiner par le Comité consultatif. Mais, actuellement, le Comité peut être considéré beaucoup plus comme un groupe d'experts chargés d'offrir à la demande des autorités des territoires coloniaux une assistance technique d'un ordre supérieur. Cette évolution illustre la nature des rapports qui existent maintenant entre le gouvernement métropolitain et les territoires dont il a la responsabilité.

54. En ce qui concerne le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, le représentant du Royaume-Uni déclare que sa délégation le considère comme l'expression d'une opinion générale qu'elle respecte et dont elle fera part aux autorités des territoires sous administration britannique, pour qu'elles en tiennent compte dans la mesure qu'elles jugeront appropriée lorsqu'elles élaboreront et appliqueront leur politique scolaire, tout comme elles tiendraient compte des avis du Comité consultatif du Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

55. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni croit cependant devoir faire une légère critique. A son avis, le rapport du Comité insiste peut-être un peu trop sur la nécessité de développer rapidement l'instruction primaire. Certes, la lutte contre l'analphabétisme est d'une importance vitale, mais la délégation du Royaume-Uni considère aussi qu'un territoire doit assurer un certain équilibre à tous les degrés du développement de l'instruction. Il ne peut exister un système efficace d'enseignement primaire sans un système satisfaisant de formation du personnel enseignant. Un tel système ne peut être édifié sans un nombre suffisant d'écoles secondaires qui assurent la formation des maîtres. Il ne faut pas sacrifier la qualité à la quantité, car on risque de causer un grave préjudice au développement des territoires. Si l'on n'insiste pas sur la qualité et sur l'enseignement général, professionnel et technique, on ne saurait espérer atteindre les objectifs énoncés au paragraphe 12 du rapport spécial sur l'éducation.

56. Le but fondamental de la politique scolaire du Royaume-Uni est de développer la capacité à assumer des responsabilités. Les objectifs du Chapitre XI de la Charte ne pourront pas être atteints si les Membres administrants des territoires non autonomes ne s'efforcent pas constamment d'imposer une responsabilité de plus en plus grande à un nombre de plus en plus élevé d'habitants des territoires. Toutefois, ce transfert actif des responsabilités, dont les territoires administrés par le Royaume-Uni offrent plusieurs exemples récents et importants, ne peut pas s'effectuer aveuglément. Par exemple, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne croit pas que sous le seul prétexte qu'il existe dans un territoire quelconque une poignée de politiciens brillants et instruits, ce territoire a nécessairement atteint le degré de maturité nécessaire pour assumer la responsabilité complète de ses propres affaires.

57. Il faut établir les bases d'une démocratie stable. Une compétence éclairée doit exister à tous les niveaux de la société et un afflux de gens éduqués et disciplinés doit permettre de remplacer les quelques individus brillants que l'on trouvera dans les territoires, comme on les trouve dans la plupart des pays du monde. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni est convaincu qu'il faillirait à son devoir s'il abandonnait tous les pouvoirs aux populations des territoires qu'il administre tant que ces territoires n'auront acquis qu'un sens superficiel de la discipline et de la responsabilité. Dans certains cas il faut courir des risques, mais si l'on court ces risques il faut être toujours prêt à reconnaître une erreur quand on la voit. Si l'on ne fait pas preuve de prudence, on pourrait très bien, après un demi-siècle de construction patiente de la démocratie, retomber dans l'instabilité, et la majeure partie de la population, au lieu de participer à la conduite de ses propres affaires, serait abandonnée à la tyrannie et à l'inexpérience d'une oligarchie locale.

58. La délégation du Royaume-Uni estime que l'une des principales raisons pour lesquelles un certain nombre de territoires britanniques sont passés si facilement du régime impérial ou colonial à l'indépendance est que depuis longtemps l'administration britannique avait créé un corps de fonctionnaires compétents et instruits et une magistrature impartiale.

59. Il ne faut pas sous-estimer l'importance de l'enseignement supérieur pour la formation des chefs, car cet enseignement permet de développer le sens des valeurs. M. Hopkinson rappelle qu'en 1952 il y avait approximativement 3.500 étudiants à temps complet dans les établissements d'enseignement supérieur des terri-toires administrés par le Royaume-Uni, à savoir les trois universités de Malte, de Hong-kong et de Malaisie britannique et les collèges universitaires des Antilles britanniques, de l'Afrique orientale, de la Côte-de-l'Or et de la Nigéria. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a l'intention de créer prochainement une université en Afrique centrale.

60. Aucun système d'enseignement ne saurait se développer ni même survivre s'il n'est alimenté par des ressources croissantes provenant de la prospérité économique. Puisque le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes se penchera de nouveau l'année prochaine sur les problèmes que pose le développement économique, il est peut-être bon de rappeler que, dans les territoires qu'administre le Royaume-Uni, le problème essentiel est celui de l'utilisation rationnelle des terres. M. Hopkinson souligne que, dans les pays à économie agricole, les populations doivent être conscientes du devoir impérieux de développer et de conserver les ressources de leurs terres, d'autant plus que dans de nombreux pays le problème du surpeuplement est de plus en plus grave. M. Hopkinson énumère les raisons de ce phénomène ainsi que les raisons pour lesquelles, malgré les ressources de la science agricole moderne, le rendement des terres n'a pas augmenté dans la même proportion que le chiffre de la population. Comme on l'a dit justement, "un sol pauvre signifie une population pauvre et une population pauvre rend le sol encore plus pauvre". Il convient de changer le régime foncier et les méthodes agricoles, et de le faire d'une manière et à une cadence qui ne risquent pas de briser l'édifice de la société. On entend parfois demander, dans certains territoires de l'Afrique orientale et de l'Afrique occidentale, que de petites superficies de terres cultivées de manière efficace depuis des générations par des communautés européennes soient transférées à des tribus africaines. Une telle mesure pourrait tout au plus apporter un soulagement très faible et temporaire à la congestion africaine. Ce genre d'expropriation, qui livrerait à la destruction des terres convenablement cultivées, ne serait pas seulement un acte d'injustice mais une folie. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni étudie actuellement les meilleurs moyens d'utiliser les vastes superficies de terres inexploitées ou insuffisamment exploitées qui existent encore en Afrique, en les mettant en culture de façon efficace et permanente.

61. Toutefois, l'agriculture ne doit pas être l'élément unique de la prospérité économique des territoires. Une certaine industrialisation est nécessaire pour absorber au moins une partie du surpeuplement. La production de force motrice à bon marché est nécessaire pour l'exécution de n'importe quel programme d'industrialisation. A ce propos, M. Hopkinson cite deux grands projets d'aménagement hydro-électrique en Afrique: l'aménagement de la Volta, en Côte-de-l'Or, dont la construction coûtera 144 millions de livres sterling, sur lesquels 57 millions seront fournis par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, 42 millions par le Gouvernement de la Côte-de-l'Or et le reste par la Compagnie canadienne d'aluminium qui participe à la réalisation de cette entreprise, et d'autre part le barrage que l'on construit aux chutes Owen, en Ouganda. Non seulement ce barrage stimulera le développement industriel de l'Ouganda, mais il permettra en outre de régulariser les eaux du Nil. Le Royaume-Uni travaille à ce projet en collaboration étroite avec les gouvernements des autres pays intéressés, notamment le Gouvernement égyptien.

62. Des développements de ce genre dans le domaine économique posent inévitablement des problèmes sociaux: problème du logement, transformation de la société tribale, relations entre les diverses races, etc. La notion d'association entre les différentes races est une notion juste; elle est la seule qui permette d'espérer l'avènement d'un monde dans lequel les différences de races ne seront pas une source de discorde mais fourniront plutôt l'occasion aux meilleurs éléments de toutes les races de se fondre en une société forte et harmonieuse.

63. Faisant allusion à une remarque que le représentant du Liban a faite à la 447^{ème} séance plénière, M. Hopkinson croit lui aussi que le monde moderne exige quelque chose de plus qu'une fragmentation fondée sur la notion surannée du nationalisme pur. Le monde évolue sans aucun doute vers la création de groupes plus importants et vers une cohésion et une stabilité fondées sur ce qui unit les hommes plutôt que ce qui les sépare. Cette évolution se produit en Europe, et la délégitimation du Royaume-Uni est convaincue qu'elle se produira inévitablement dans le monde entier. Le Royaume-Uni attache la plus grande importance au développement de la coopération internationale pour assurer le progrès des territoires non autonomes. Il contribuera pour sa part énergiquement à la formation de groupements régionaux chargés de résoudre les problèmes techniques communs.

64. Le Royaume-Uni constate avec plaisir l'intérêt que les institutions spécialisées des Nations Unies portent, dans le domaine de l'assistance technique, aux territoires non autonomes et considère que l'un de ses principaux devoirs envers les territoires non autonomes consiste à favoriser l'exécution d'un programme efficace d'assistance technique. L'aide qu'il apporte déjà aux territoires qu'il administre peut soutenir la comparaison avec celle qui est mise à la disposition de n'importe quel autre pays dans le monde. Il considère cependant qu'il est extrêmement utile de collaborer dans ce domaine avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les institutions spécialisées. Seules des raisons financières empêchent les territoires britanniques de participer dans une plus grande mesure à l'exécution du programme élargi d'assistance technique. Les demandes que le Royaume-Uni a faites dépassent le montant des ressources qui peuvent lui être allouées. Le Royaume-Uni est très heureux que l'Administration de l'assistance technique examine ses demandes dans un esprit de compréhension et il est satisfait de l'énergie et de l'efficacité avec lesquelles elle a fourni des services très divers aux territoires britanniques.

65. Pour conclure, le représentant du Royaume-Uni tient à affirmer que son pays ne souscrira jamais à l'opinion selon laquelle il doit y avoir deux camps à la Quatrième Commission, le camp peu nombreux des Puissances administrantes, c'est-à-dire des Puissances qui, par définition, peuvent être considérées comme des pays réactionnaires pratiquant l'obstruction, et le camp important des pays qui n'administrent pas de territoires et qui, par définition, sont censés avoir le monopole des bonnes intentions. Le Royaume-Uni est convaincu que les objectifs fondamentaux de tous sont les mêmes. Il ne croit pas que les problèmes soient toujours abordés sans un certain degré de parti pris et sans un certain degré d'ignorance.

66. M. Hopkinson considère qu'il est de la plus haute importance, pour l'utilité des travaux de la Quatrième Commission et pour le prestige de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, que les discussions et recommandations de la Quatrième Commission reposent sur une évaluation exacte du caractère des problèmes et une compréhension généreuse des difficultés à résoudre. Pour sa part, le Royaume-Uni s'est toujours efforcé d'envoyer aux réunions de ce genre, notamment à celles du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, des représentants qui peuvent parler avec autorité et compétence des problèmes qui se posent dans les territoires administrés par le Royaume-Uni. Il serait peut-être très utile que d'autres Etats Membres s'efforcent de faire de même.

67. Au cours du débat qui s'engage, la délégation du Royaume-Uni présentera des propositions concrètes tendant à ce que les questions que la Quatrième Commission examine soient traitées non pas dans un cadre politique préconçu, mais en tant que problèmes mondiaux à la solution desquels tous les pays peuvent contribuer.

68. Il est impossible d'apporter aux problèmes humains que la Quatrième Commission est appelée à traiter une solution absolument isolée. La plupart d'entre eux dépassent le cadre du mandat de la Quatrième Commission et relèvent également de la compétence d'autres commissions de l'Assemblée. Ces problèmes ne peuvent être jugés qu'en fonction des réalisations de chaque pays, car, en somme, seules les connaissances acquises dans sa propre administration apprennent à un pays à juger du succès ou de l'échec des autres. Si, comme c'était certainement l'intention des rédacteurs de la Charte, les Etats Membres peuvent collaborer dans un esprit d'équipe, s'ils peuvent dissiper certains doutes et des soupçons qui existent de part et d'autre, s'ils peuvent apporter à l'œuvre commune le maximum de sagesse et de connaissances techniques qu'ils ont acquises individuellement, il est probable que les travaux de la Quatrième Commission progresseront harmonieusement et rapidement vers le but que toutes les nations cherchent à atteindre: le progrès politique, économique, social et scolaire des populations des territoires intéressés.

69. M. CAMPOS CATELIN (Argentine) déclare qu'il fait, au nom de son gouvernement, une réserve formelle: le fait que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni communique des renseignements sur les îles Malouines — improprement dénommées îles Falkland dans le document A/2413 — n'affecte nullement la souveraineté argentine sur ce territoire, dont le Royaume-Uni s'est assuré l'occupation grâce à un coup de force que la République Argentine n'acceptera jamais. M. Campos Catelin ajoute qu'il affirme de nouveau les droits inaliénables et imprescriptibles de la République Argentine sur les îles Malouines, la Géorgie du Sud, les Sandwich du Sud et la zone antarctique argentine, qui font partie intégrante du territoire argentin. Il demande au Secrétariat d'employer l'expression Islas Malvinas dans tous les documents rédigés en espagnol.

70. M. HOPKINSON (Royaume-Uni) répond que son gouvernement est souverain sur ce territoire, dont les populations, de souche purement anglaise, ne parlent que l'anglais. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni affirme les droits de souveraineté de son pays sur les îles en question et demande que tous les documents rédigés en anglais portent le nom exact de ces îles, à savoir: îles Falkland.

Comptes rendus de la Commission

71. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) tient à protester contre le fait que le compte rendu de la 321ème séance de la Quatrième Commission consacre douze lignes seulement à la déclaration faite par la délégation de la République Dominicaine, alors que le texte complet de cette déclaration, qui a été remis aux rédacteurs de séance, était de cinquante-cinq lignes en espagnol. Il demande que son intervention soit introduite dans ledit compte rendu sans mutilation.

72. La façon dont cette déclaration a été résumée est d'autant plus regrettable qu'il s'agissait d'une question très importante: la demande d'audience du président du Puerto Rican Independence Party. La délégation de la République Dominicaine a déclaré en effet à cette occasion que son pays a toujours entretenu les meilleurs rapports avec le peuple porto-ricain. M. de Marchena se demande pourquoi on a jugé bon d'omettre ce passage et pourquoi sa déclaration a été réduite dans des proportions beaucoup plus grandes que les déclarations faites par d'autres délégations.

73. Il signale en plus qu'à son avis la méthode des comptes rendus est défectueuse. En effet, déclare-t-il, les interventions des délégations de langue espagnole sont traduites en anglais ou en français et ensuite retraduites en espagnol, d'où résultent des erreurs et des contresens fréquents dans le résumé des interventions faites en langue espagnole. Il a à se plaindre, en plus, du fait que les corrections aux comptes rendus ne sont acceptées par le Secrétariat qu'en anglais ou en français et non en espagnol.

74. La délégation de la République Dominicaine demande que sa réclamation figure au procès-verbal et, s'il n'en était pas tenu compte, elle se verrait obligée de demander au Président de convoquer devant la Quatrième Commission les fonctionnaires responsables.

75. Le PRESIDENT est certain que le Secrétariat fera le nécessaire pour donner satisfaction à la délégation de la République Dominicaine.

La séance est levée à 18 h. 15.

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]..... 57

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428, A/C.4/L.272] (suite)

[Point 33 *]

1. Le PRESIDENT annonce que la délégation brésilienne a présenté, au sujet de la question des facteurs, un projet de résolution qui est distribué sous la cote A/C.4/L.272.

2. M. FERREIRA DE SOUZA (Brésil) rappelle qu'à la septième session la délégation brésilienne a exposé devant la Commission (277^e séance) la position qu'elle avait adoptée vis-à-vis de la question des facteurs.

3. Après avoir étudié attentivement le rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428] et lu la volumineuse documentation présentée à la Quatrième Commission, la délégation brésilienne avait pensé qu'il serait superflu d'intervenir dans le débat relatif à ce point de l'ordre du jour. Elle avait pensé qu'après trois ans de discussions les membres de la Quatrième Commission étaient parvenus à un accord sur les prémisses, sur les points essentiels et sur les considérations préliminaires, ce qui devait éviter de longues digressions sur la valeur de la liste présentée par le Comité ad hoc, sur son intérêt et sur les limites de son application. Malheureusement, la délégation du Brésil a dû constater qu'il n'en était rien. Quelques-uns des orateurs qui ont pris la parole au cours des précédentes séances en sont presque arrivés à remettre toute la question en cause.

4. A la réflexion, cependant, la délégation brésilienne estime plus que jamais qu'il est inutile de reprendre au fond l'examen de la question des facteurs et de s'égarer dans les définitions. Les critères déjà arrêtés correspondent d'une façon satisfaisante au désir que l'Assemblée générale a exprimé lorsqu'elle a souligné l'utilité d'établir une liste de facteurs qui pût lui servir de guide pour décider de mettre fin aux obligations énoncées au Chapitre XI. Le rapport du Comité ad hoc démontre que l'étude de ces facteurs en est arrivée au point où aucun perfectionnement appréciable ne pourrait être apporté au travail déjà accompli. Il est certes toujours possible d'apporter des améliorations à une œuvre de ce genre, mais toute modification de rédaction ou de système ne pourrait être qu'une question de préférences personnelles, risquant par conséquent de provoquer de nouvelles divergences au lieu d'augmenter les possibilités de conciliation. C'est donc avec un certain découragement que la délégation brésilienne a entendu proposer la création d'un troisième comité chargé d'élaborer une troisième édition de la même liste, au sujet de laquelle des débats stériles pourraient se poursuivre à l'infini.

5. Pour échapper à cet engrenage, il conviendrait donc, semble-t-il, de renoncer à attribuer à cette liste une importance plus grande que celle qu'elle doit avoir en réalité. Il convient notamment de reconnaître que les réalités politiques, essentiellement variables, ne se soumettront jamais à des mesures rigides. Elles se déroberont toujours à l'application stricte de principes établis à priori. Dès lors, la liste actuelle ne saurait être jugée bonne ou mauvaise que dans la mesure où elle remplit son objet: fournir des points de repère et servir d'instrument de travail.

6. Les grands critères qui peuvent servir à juger de la plénitude de l'autonomie sont connus de tous. Les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73 de la Charte ne peuvent cesser qu'au moment où le peuple d'un territoire aura, en toute liberté politique, décidé lui-même de son avenir. Cette décision librement prise doit nécessairement amener le peuple considéré à l'un des deux statuts suivants: indépendance complète et admission dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ou association avec un Etat souverain. Si les conditions de cette association laissent à l'ancien territoire dépendant l'exercice des attributs de la souveraineté politique interne, le problème cessera d'exister. Ce n'est pas à la Quatrième Commission de juger si le choix de cette association a été prudent. Toute ce qu'elle peut faire, c'est examiner si l'autonomie administrative, économique et sociale peut découler de l'autonomie politique interne. Tant qu'un peuple n'aura pas un pouvoir souverain et absolu dans le domaine interne, il sera vain de prétendre que les dispositions de l'alinéa b de l'Article 73 de la Charte, qui est la clé de voûte du Chapitre XI tout entier, ont été appliquées. Tels sont les vrais critères de l'autonomie en ce qui concerne la population d'un territoire. Les éléments d'appréciation que fournit la liste de facteurs sont de nature subsidiaire et ne doivent en aucun cas faire perdre de vue les considérations fondamentales.

7. La délégation brésilienne était donc disposée à appuyer tout projet de résolution qui envisagerait la liste de facteurs comme elle le fait elle-même et qui permettrait de mettre cette liste à l'épreuve.

8. Si les membres de la Quatrième Commission s'attachaient à analyser objectivement les cas concrets, les divergences portant sur des questions de principe se réduiraient sensiblement et il en résulterait une atmosphère de sérénité propice à des solutions qui, dans l'esprit de la Charte, correspondraient aux aspirations des peuples dépendants, sans porter atteinte aux intérêts des Puissances administrantes dans ce qu'ils pourraient avoir de juste et de légitime.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

9. C'est dans cet esprit que la délégation brésilienne présente officiellement le projet de résolution qui porte la cote A/C.4/L.272. Elle a rédigé ce projet dans l'intention de concilier les vues que plusieurs délégations ont exposées aux dernières séances et qui, sur quelques points très importants, sont à peu près identiques aux vues de la délégation brésilienne, surtout en ce qui concerne la façon d'appliquer les facteurs. Sans rien enlever à la valeur qu'auront ces éléments d'appréciation lorsqu'il s'agira de décider de la portée des changements constitutionnels signalés par les Membres administrants conformément à la résolution 222 (III), le projet vise à préciser dans quel esprit il convient d'appliquer les critères politico-juridiques qui viennent d'être établis, en insistant sur leur relativité et sur l'importance qu'il faut attribuer, selon le principe énoncé dans la résolution 648 (VII), aux circonstances qui sont propres à chaque cas d'espèce.

10. Certes, la résolution 648 (VII) fait, en énumérant les considérations fondamentales qui doivent entrer en ligne de compte dans l'analyse de toute situation où l'on peut prétendre trouver la réalisation de l'autonomie complète, une allusion un peu trop discrète au droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. En outre, la liste de facteurs n'a pas exactement ni suffisamment souligné l'importance que cette donnée devrait avoir. C'est pourquoi la délégation brésilienne a jugé bon de classer au premier rang des considérations indispensables pour étayer toute démonstration dans cet ordre d'idées le respect du droit qu'ont les populations intéressées de choisir leur statut politique.

11. Le représentant du Brésil est convaincu que de nombreuses délégations partageront sa manière de voir et admettront la solution que propose le texte brésilien. Ce texte reprend les paragraphes 3 et 4 de la résolution 648 (VII), car il paraît indispensable de réaffirmer les principes qui sont énoncés dans cette résolution, notamment celui de l'indivisibilité de l'autonomie, qui est repris au paragraphe 6 du document A/C.4/L.272. Cette notion qui, dans le droit des gens et dans le droit public interne, ne souffre aucune contestation, a reçu à la Quatrième Commission certaines interprétations restrictives que la délégation brésilienne ne saurait admettre. En effet, la pleine responsabilité politique est l'essence même du concept d'autonomie tel que l'envisage l'Article 73 de la Charte. Certes, cette idée aurait pu être exprimée d'une façon moins vague que dans la résolution 648 (VII), mais un nouveau texte qui, en dernière analyse, reviendrait à dire la même chose, aurait fort bien pu soulever d'autres discussions sur le sens des mots, sans aucun résultat pratique.

12. La délégation brésilienne laisse l'initiative de la révision de la liste de facteurs au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes qui, conformément aux résolutions 334 (IV) et 448 (V), est compétent pour examiner en première instance la documentation demandée par la résolution 222 (III). Bien entendu, toute décision définitive doit être prise par l'Assemblée générale, car une délégation de pouvoirs habilitant le Comité des renseignements à trancher ces questions en dernier ressort serait contraire au principe de l'échelonnement des compétences, qu'il faut maintenir. En revanche, on ne saurait trop insister sur l'importance des attributions du Comité des renseignements en ce qui concerne l'examen préliminaire de tout cas de cessation de communication des renseignements prévus par l'Article 73, e. En présentant son projet de résolution, la délégation brésilienne est animée du désir sincère d'offrir à ce comité un document de travail concret.

13. La délégation brésilienne accueillera avec bienveillance tout amendement destiné à apporter plus de force, plus de précision ou plus de clarté à son texte. Cependant, une résolution de cette nature ne gagnerait rien à être alourdie par des détails ou des considérations accessoires.

14. M. RIFAI (Syrie), après avoir rappelé les débats précédents relatifs à la question, insiste sur la nécessité de dresser une liste des facteurs qui doivent servir de guide pour déterminer si les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte existent encore. Il est bien entendu, toutefois, que ces principes directeurs ne doivent pas constituer des critères immuables. A ce propos, la délégation syrienne approuve le paragraphe 9 du document A/2428. Toutefois, quelle que soit la variété des circonstances propres aux divers territoires, un facteur demeure constant: la volonté des peuples librement exprimée.

15. En ce qui concerne la liste de facteurs proposée, la délégation syrienne présente deux observations d'ordre général. Premièrement, on constate dans la liste, d'ailleurs satisfaisante dans son ensemble, des faiblesses et des lacunes auxquelles on pourrait remédier sans en renvoyer le texte à un comité ad hoc. A ce propos, la délégation syrienne partage l'avis des délégations du Guatemala et de la Yougoslavie; elle est prête à soutenir tout amendement qui tendrait à améliorer cette liste. Deuxièmement, dans un monde en pleine évolution, aucune définition ne saurait avoir une valeur permanente. Il faut donc reviser cette liste au fur et à mesure que les circonstances l'exigeront. On peut la transmettre au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes pour qu'il s'en inspire et signale les imperfections qu'il aura relevées en l'appliquant.

16. Le problème qui se pose ne semble pas résider dans la valeur de la liste elle-même, car tout le monde admet qu'elle doit être considérée uniquement comme un guide; ce problème a un caractère plus fondamental: c'est celui de la division qui existe à la Quatrième Commission quant à l'interprétation des devoirs qui incombent aux Etats Membres en vertu du Chapitre XI. Deux opinions essentielles s'affrontent: les Membres administrants soutiennent qu'il leur appartient exclusivement, en vertu du Chapitre XI, de dire si un territoire est autonome ou non. Les Puissances non administrantes, au contraire, soutiennent qu'aux termes du Chapitre XI, l'Assemblée générale est nettement compétente pour se prononcer à ce sujet. La Syrie partage cette dernière opinion. Il n'appartient pas exclusivement aux Membres administrants de décider si un territoire a atteint ou non l'autonomie complète. S'il en était autrement, l'établissement de la liste de facteurs en question serait une pure perte de temps et d'énergie. La délégation syrienne ne veut pas entraîner la Commission dans une discussion juridique, mais elle croit devoir répéter que l'Assemblée générale ne peut pas se dérober à sa responsabilité collective envers les territoires non autonomes.

17. Le représentant de la Belgique a déclaré (322ème séance) qu'il ne serait pas logique d'appliquer la liste de facteurs à la cessation de la communication des renseignements visés par l'Article 73, e, de la Charte sans l'appliquer également au commencement de la communication de ces renseignements. Le représentant de la Syrie ne peut pas croire que le représentant de la Belgique ait voulu ainsi parler de renseignements relatifs à des Etats souverains, Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Si le souci de logique de M. Ryckmans allait jusqu'à vouloir appliquer les dispositions du Chapitre XI à des Etats souverains, on ne pourrait que se demander comment une interprétation aussi extravagante peut naître dans un esprit.

18. Dans la période d'événements graves que traverse le monde, il est tragique de constater que de nombreux pays prétendent encore prolonger la discussion sur le désir de liberté des peuples, comme si le provisoire pouvait durer indéfiniment. Il faut prier Dieu de donner aux hommes le courage de supporter ce qui ne peut pas être changé et de changer ce qui peut l'être, et de leur donner la sagesse de faire la distinction.

19. M. BENITES VINUEZA (Equateur) déclare que le problème qui consiste à déterminer les facteurs en question est l'un des plus ardues qui se soient posés à l'Assemblée générale, car de sa solution dépend la réalisation des espoirs de millions d'êtres humains qui vivent sous la dépendance de gouvernements étrangers, bien que des Puissances administrantes aient cherché à les conduire à l'indépendance. Le colonialisme est un anachronisme et la survivance de la conception coloniale ne peut être que provisoire.

20. La délégation de l'Equateur se réserve le droit de présenter des observations au sujet du projet de résolution dont la Commission est saisie. Pour l'instant, elle tient à commenter le rapport du Comité ad hoc.

21. Le représentant de l'Equateur tient d'abord à féliciter le Comité du travail qu'il a accompli. La question des facteurs comprend deux éléments distincts: d'une part, l'élaboration des facteurs et, d'autre part, la détermination de critères pour l'application de ces facteurs. En ce qui concerne le deuxième élément, chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché individuellement, et il est bien entendu que la liste de facteurs ne peut qu'orienter une décision.

22. Dans son rapport, le Comité ad hoc a conclu qu'il n'était pas possible de trouver une définition satisfaisante de la notion d'autonomie complète. Cette conclusion est logique, car il s'agit d'une tâche extrêmement difficile qui consiste d'abord à analyser les caractéristiques de l'autonomie, puis à en faire une synthèse. Le Comité ad hoc a accompli la première partie de cette tâche, mais la liste qu'il propose n'est pas définitive puisqu'elle n'est pas complète. Le principe de la libre disposition des peuples et le principe de l'autonomie sont deux notions étroitement liées qu'il est impossible de séparer. La capacité des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est subordonnée à la liberté complète. Toute pression fausserait le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Il faut donc apporter des améliorations à la liste de facteurs.

23. Quant au problème brûlant de l'application des critères, la délégation de l'Equateur n'a nullement l'intention de se dérober à son examen. Examinant la question de savoir qui, des Membres administrants ou de l'Assemblée générale, est compétent pour déterminer si un territoire a ou n'a pas atteint l'autonomie complète, M. Benites Vinueza souligne qu'en signant la Charte, les Etats Membres ont contracté, au titre du Chapitre XI comme au titre des autres chapitres, une série d'obligations qui forment un tout indivisible. Du point de vue juridique, il ne peut y avoir aucun doute sur la nature des obligations qui découlent du Chapitre XI. Selon les Membres administrants, le Chapitre XI ne contiendrait pas des obligations juridiques mais constituerait un simple témoignage de bonne volonté, une déclaration d'ordre moral, comme il ressortirait du titre même de ce chapitre: "Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes". Le représentant de la France a fait observer (322ème séance) que les critères appliqués par certaines délégations pour résoudre la question de compétence étaient non juridiques mais politiques, et il a demandé quelles étaient les considérations juridiques qu'on entendait faire valoir pour interpréter le Chapitre XI comme imposant des obligations aux Membres administrants. La réponse est très claire: en premier lieu, le titre du Chapitre XI ne modifie en rien le caractère juridique de son contenu. La déclaration dont il s'agit n'est pas unilatérale; elle figure dans la Charte, instrument juridique que plusieurs Etats ont signé et qui emporte, à ce titre, des engagements multilatéraux. La nature de ces engagements découle du texte même de l'Article 73. Il y est question des Etats Membres qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires non autonomes. La notion de responsabilité exclut la possibilité d'une action unilatérale des Membres administrants. En signant la Charte, ces Puissances ont accepté de rendre compte à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de leur gestion des territoires non autonomes; elles ont reconnu le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires. Ce n'est nullement porter atteinte à leur souveraineté que de les inviter à remplir leurs engagements, qui ne prendront fin que lorsque l'Organisation des Nations Unies et le Membre administrant intéressé auront décidé, d'un commun accord, que les dispositions du Chapitre XI ont cessé d'être applicables à tel territoire non autonome. L'Assemblée générale est donc compétente en la matière. D'autre part, on n'est pas fondé à reprocher à certaines délégations d'invoquer à la fois des critères juridiques et des critères politiques, puisque la mise en œuvre des engagements énoncés dans la Charte s'effectue à la fois sur le plan politique et sur le plan juridique.

24. M. LYNKOV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) estime que si tous les Etats appliquaient strictement la Charte, dans sa lettre comme dans son esprit, et si les Puissances administrantes respectaient les dispositions de l'Article 73 dans leur gestion des territoires non autonomes, le nombre de ces territoires diminuerait de jour en jour. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie serait la première à s'en féliciter, car cette évolution serait non pas le résultat d'une décision arbitraire, unilatérale, ne correspondant à aucun changement de fait dans la situation des territoires non autonomes, mais le témoignage du progrès naturel des peuples vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance. Les débats de la Commission deviendraient sans objet, et il n'aurait pas été nécessaire d'établir la liste de facteurs que celle-ci examine actuellement.

25. Telle n'est pas la situation; il importe donc d'élaborer une liste de facteurs dont l'application mettra les Membres administrants dans l'impossibilité de cesser arbitrairement de communiquer les renseignements visés à l'Article 73. La liste établie par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs constitue un progrès dans la bonne voie; cependant, cette liste est loin d'être complète et il convient d'y apporter certaines améliorations. De plus, certaines des conclusions du Comité ad hoc sont inacceptables: en particulier, il ne devrait pas être impossible de trouver une définition satisfaisante de la notion d'autonomie complète, et l'absence de cette définition est un grave inconvénient. Le Comité ad hoc ne s'est donc pas parfaitement acquitté du mandat que l'Assemblée générale lui avait donné.

26. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie est en mesure d'accepter, en principe, les facteurs énumérés à la première partie de la liste; par contre, elle est opposée à l'adoption de ceux qui figurent à la deuxième et à la troisième partie; ces deux parties donnent aux Membres administrants la possibilité d'interpréter et d'appliquer les facteurs d'une façon qui ne garantirait nullement ni le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes ni leur accès à l'indépendance.

27. En ce qui concerne la question de compétence, la délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie tient à rappeler que les problèmes relatifs aux territoires non autonomes sont des problèmes internationaux; les Membres administrants ne peuvent donc décider unilatéralement qu'un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie complète, ni cesser, de leur propre chef, de communiquer des renseignements concernant ce territoire. A ce propos, la RSS de Biélorussie a précisé sa position dans une lettre datée du 29 avril 1952 qu'elle a adressée au Secrétaire général (A/AC.58/1/Add.2); cette position est analogue à celle qu'a adoptée l'URSS: de l'avis de la délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie, les Membres administrants ne peuvent cesser de communiquer des renseignements tant que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes n'aura pas, après avoir étudié l'évolution de la situation dans le territoire intéressé, recommandé à l'Assemblée générale que l'Article 73 cesse de s'appliquer audit territoire et tant que ce territoire ne sera pas devenu un Etat souverain où la population autochtone exercera pleinement le pouvoir exécutif, législatif et judiciaire. C'est en vain que les Membres administrants s'efforcent de donner au Chapitre XI une interprétation restrictive, en alléguant que l'Organisation n'est pas compétente pour se prononcer sur le progrès politique d'un territoire puisque les renseignements visés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 concernent uniquement les conditions économiques, sociales, et de l'instruction. En effet, en vertu de l'alinéa a les Membres administrants sont tenus d'assurer le progrès politique des populations autochtones.

28. De même que la délégation polonaise, la délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie souhaite que le problème des facteurs passe du plan théorique où il est demeuré jusqu'à présent au plan pratique des décisions concrètes. Elle juge donc inacceptable le point de vue du représentant de la Belgique tel qu'il est exposé au paragraphe 40, c, du document A/2428. Elle est persuadée qu'il est utile de poursuivre les travaux entrepris et d'apporter des précisions et des améliorations à la liste approuvée par le Comité et dont le Comité lui-même a reconnu qu'elle n'était nullement parfaite.

29. En terminant, M. Lynkov exprime l'espoir que la liste que la Commission mettra au point permettra d'aider les populations des territoires non autonomes à accéder à l'indépendance.

30. M. ARAOZ (Bolivie) dit que l'étude des comptes rendus des séances que les divers organes de l'Assemblée générale ont consacrées à la question des facteurs, ainsi que l'examen des rapports qu'ils ont élaborés et des décisions qu'ils ont adoptées permettent de mesurer les progrès accomplis. Il semble que le régime international mis au point au bénéfice des territoires non autonomes puisse recevoir une application pratique. La destinée de plus de 200 millions d'hommes est liée au sort même de l'Organisation. Les obligations de la Charte ne peuvent être annulées par la décision unilatérale que certains Etats ont prise en s'inspirant uniquement de leurs propres intérêts. L'Assemblée générale est compétente en la matière et peut guider les peuples dépendants vers l'objectif fixé par la Charte.

31. La liste de facteurs établie par le Comité ad hoc n'est pas définitive. En l'approuvant, la Commission ne fera qu'affirmer à nouveau la nécessité d'utiliser, dans la pratique, les éléments d'appréciation qu'elle contient pour se prononcer sur chaque cas dans de meilleures conditions. Cette liste représente un guide, et chaque cas doit être tranché à la lumière des circonstances qui lui sont propres et, notamment, des circonstances historiques. La délégation bolivienne appuiera toute proposition tendant à maintenir la surveillance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies jusqu'au moment où les objectifs fixés au Chapitre XI auront été atteints et où des peuples soumis depuis des siècles à l'oppression coloniale deviendront complètement autonomes.

32. La définition de la notion d'autonomie complète représente la première étape à accomplir. Si chacune des nations qui sont représentées à l'Organisation peut conserver son unité nationale, c'est parce qu'elle jouit non seulement de l'indépendance économique et sociale, mais encore de l'indépendance politique. Il est faux de prétendre qu'il suffit d'appliquer des critères d'ordre économique et social pour déterminer si un territoire est complètement autonome. L'indépendance politique constitue une condition préalable à l'indépendance économique et sociale. Les peuples des territoires non autonomes doivent déterminer eux-mêmes leur destinée, avec l'aide des Puissances administrantes et de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. La liste élaborée par le Comité ad hoc contient des critères relatifs à la situation politique, dont semble se dégager une définition de la notion d'autonomie complète. Il apparaît qu'à cet égard, on est parvenu à un accord.

33. Parmi les critères que l'Assemblée doit appliquer, il en est un auquel la délégation bolivienne attache une importance fondamentale: le respect du principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, droit conçu comme la réalisation des aspirations d'une large majorité et non pas comme la prérogative de petites minorités représentant des intérêts étrangers. C'est pourquoi le critère relatif au suffrage universel lui semble revêtir un intérêt tout particulier, car le suffrage universel permet à toute la population, sans discrimination aucune, d'exprimer librement sa volonté. A ce sujet, M. Araz souligne qu'il ne convient pas de restreindre le suffrage universel en introduisant la notion de "possibilité de s'instruire" dont il est question à l'alinéa c du point C du paragraphe 15 du rapport, qui risque de permettre à des minorités de gêner l'évolution souhaitée par l'ensemble de la population.

34. La délégation bolivienne est disposée à accepter la liste de facteurs élaborée par le Comité ad hoc. Cependant, elle ne considère pas que la tâche de la Commission sera terminée pour autant. Ce problème est, en effet, étroitement lié à celui de la cessation de la communication de renseignements. C'est à l'Assemblée générale qu'il appartient de se prononcer; aussi M. Araz appuiera-t-il la proposition faite par le représentant du Mexique à la 322ème séance, car les nécessités de la défense nationale ne sauraient conduire à l'adoption de mesures contraires au principe de la souveraineté.

35. En ce qui concerne le titre de la deuxième partie de la liste, il faudrait supprimer le mot "permanente", qui qualifie l'association du territoire avec la métropole. En effet, la population doit demeurer libre d'exprimer son opinion par des voies démocratiques quant à la forme de gouvernement qu'elle désire sans faire l'objet d'aucune pression; ainsi l'exige le respect du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

36. Enfin, M. Araoz appuie la suggestion du représentant du Guatemala, qui est reproduite au paragraphe 28 du rapport du Comité ad hoc.

37. En terminant son examen de la liste de facteurs, M. Araoz souligne que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit continuer de se montrer vigilante et qu'elle doit élaborer des principes propres à favoriser l'accès des peuples non autonomes à l'autonomie complète. C'est une tâche à laquelle la Bolivie est d'autant plus prête à contribuer que, dans le même esprit, elle s'est engagée avec les autres pays de l'Amérique latine à lutter aussi longtemps qu'il le faudra pour permettre aux populations des régions d'Amérique latine encore occupées par des Puissances étrangères à la zone culturelle latino-américaine d'accéder à l'indépendance.

38. M. Araoz ne veut pas achever son intervention sans revenir sur la théorie que le représentant de la Belgique, dont les arguments d'ailleurs ne peuvent qu'ajouter à la complexité du problème dont la Commission s'occupe actuellement, a défendue avec une intelligence que la délégation bolivienne est la première à admirer; mais ces arguments n'ont aucun fondement juridique; bien mieux, on relève au paragraphe 40 du document A/2428, qui expose la thèse de la délégation belge, une contradiction flagrante entre les termes de l'alinéa b et ceux de l'alinéa c. La délégation bolivienne ne saurait admettre le principe de l'application des dispositions du Chapitre XI aux territoires métropolitains, car ce principe est absolument incompatible tant avec ses propres traditions nationales qu'avec l'esprit de la Charte, qui impose à chacun des États Membres l'obligation de respecter les grandes conceptions de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un État, du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et de la liberté. En aucun cas, un État souverain ne doit accepter que son territoire métropolitain fasse l'objet des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte; c'est ainsi que la Bolivie, qui mène toujours la lutte en vue d'accéder à l'indépendance dans le domaine économique, ne se laissera jamais considérer comme une colonie ou comme un territoire non autonome.

39. Dans un esprit de coopération, la délégation bolivienne est disposée à accueillir favorablement tout projet de résolution ou tout amendement qui répondra aux considérations que M. Araoz vient de formuler.

40. M. FERNANDEZ (Uruguay) fait observer que le problème que la Commission s'efforce de résoudre se caractérise par son importance d'une part et par sa complexité d'autre part; en effet, le sort de 200 millions d'êtres humains est en jeu et l'Organisation des Nations Unies a consacré des années de travail à examiner ce problème sans parvenir à le résoudre d'une manière qui donne satisfaction à tous.

41. La résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale énumère soixante-quatorze territoires pour lesquels les Membres administrants se sont engagés à fournir des renseignements. Par la suite, ce nombre a diminué sans que ces Membres aient jugé bon d'indiquer pourquoi les territoires en question avaient cessé de tomber sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI. Bien entendu, il est souhaitable que le nombre des territoires non autonomes aille toujours en diminuant, dans la mesure où la cessation de la communication de renseignements signifie réellement que ces territoires ont accédé à l'indépendance ou à l'autonomie et qu'ils occupent désormais leur place légitime dans le concert des nations; mais il est évident que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit veiller à ce qu'un territoire non autonome ne soit pas indûment privé du bénéfice de la protection internationale. Il ne faut voir dans ce souci aucune preuve de méfiance à l'égard des Membres administrants, mais plutôt une manifestation du zèle que l'Assemblée générale apporte à la mise en œuvre des principes énoncés dans la Charte. C'est en vue d'aider l'Assemblée générale et les Membres administrants à s'acquitter d'une manière aussi satisfaisante que possible des fonctions qui leur incombent qu'il est utile de dresser une liste de facteurs propres à servir de guide pour discerner si un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie.

42. L'établissement d'une liste de facteurs de ce genre pose deux problèmes distincts: l'élaboration de la liste proprement dite, et le choix de l'autorité qui doit décider si un territoire est autonome. Les Membres administrants prétendent jouir dans ce domaine d'une compétence exclusive et être les seuls à décider s'il convient de poursuivre ou d'arrêter la communication de renseignements relatifs à ce territoire. La délégation de l'Uruguay a toujours estimé, comme M. Mattos l'indiquait déjà à la Quatrième Commission, lors de la sixième session (216ème séance), que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et plus particulièrement l'Assemblée générale, doit examiner la situation qui règne dans un territoire déterminé en vue de décider si ce territoire a accédé à l'autonomie; il est inadmissible que la Puissance qui administre ce territoire puisse prendre à cet égard une décision unilatérale. Lorsqu'elles ont souscrit aux obligations qui figurent au Chapitre XI, les Puissances administrantes ont par là même reconnu la compétence de la collectivité internationale; d'autre part, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a assumé la mission d'aider les peuples des territoires non autonomes à parvenir à la liberté par des voies démocratiques et pacifiques.

43. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a donc le droit et le devoir d'étudier avec la plus grande attention les motifs d'ordre constitutionnel sur lesquels une Puissance qui administre un territoire non autonome s'appuie pour cesser de communiquer des renseignements au sujet de ce territoire. Le Chapitre XI perdrait toute raison d'être si une Puissance administrante pouvait se dégager, par une décision unilatérale, de l'obligation qu'elle a assumée au titre de ce chapitre.

44. Le représentant de l'Uruguay tient à affirmer une fois de plus que la thèse de l'universalité du Chapitre XI n'a aucune valeur juridique, car l'Article 74 de la Charte établit une distinction très nette entre territoires non autonomes et territoires métropolitains. Il est donc évident que les auteurs de la Charte n'ont jamais eu en vue que les territoires non métropolitains lorsqu'ils ont rédigé l'Article 73. Cette thèse est inacceptable en ce qui concerne tant la détermination des sujets des obligations énoncées à l'Article 73 que les facteurs qui permettent de préciser l'objet de ces obligations.

45. Abordant alors la liste de facteurs qui figure dans le document A/2428, la délégation de l'Uruguay tient à féliciter le Comité ad hoc du soin et de l'intelligence avec lesquels il s'est acquitté de sa tâche. Etant donné que la situation varie considérablement d'un territoire à l'autre, il est impossible d'établir des critères qui s'appliquent d'une manière rigide et absolue à tous les territoires non autonomes; la liste de facteurs ne doit donc fournir que des indications permettant d'examiner chaque cas particulier à la lumière des circonstances qui lui sont propres, ainsi que le Comité ad hoc le déclare aux paragraphes 9 et 13 de son rapport. La liste de facteurs proprement dite ne soulève aucune objection fondamentale de la part de la délégation de l'Uruguay, qui demeure néanmoins disposée à appuyer toute proposition visant à améliorer cette liste.

46. M. Fernández réserve le droit de sa délégation d'intervenir sur ce sujet au cours des débats.

47. M. CALLE Y CALLE (Pérou) accueille favorablement le projet de résolution déposé par la délégation du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) dont le dispositif, particulièrement aux paragraphes 3, 4 et 6, énonce des principes éminemment acceptables. Il convient d'étudier ce projet de résolution en tenant compte de diverses considérations.

48. En premier lieu, l'Article 73 de la Charte et les obligations qui en découlent ne sauraient être affectés par l'adoption de la présente liste de facteurs. En deuxième lieu, le Comité ad hoc a recherché s'il était possible de donner une définition de la notion d'autonomie complète, et non une définition de l'autonomie proprement dite. En troisième lieu, si chacun des facteurs énumérés dans la liste représente un aspect de l'autonomie complète, on ne peut pas considérer que l'ensemble des facteurs énumérés dans cette liste constitue une définition définitive de la pleine autonomie. En quatrième lieu, le fait que la liste comprend trois parties ne signifie nullement qu'il existe trois formes, ou davantage, d'autonomie; en réalité, l'autonomie est indivisible. En cinquième lieu, la liste devrait avoir pour titre: "Facteurs permettant de conclure qu'une population a accédé à l'autonomie complète", car l'indépendance, l'association permanente et la libre association ne peuvent exister que si un territoire est parvenu à l'autonomie complète; si, au contraire, on pense que l'autonomie complète ne vient qu'avec l'indépendance, il faut parler d'autres "degrés" d'indépendance et non de "formes". En sixième lieu, la limitation volontaire de la souveraineté, comme l'ont exprimé certaines délégations, est un attribut de l'autonomie complète, et certaines formes d'association peuvent se produire au moment même où le territoire a accédé à l'autonomie.

49. En résumé, la liste actuelle ne présente aucune amélioration importante par rapport à la liste précédente contenue dans la résolution 648 (VII). Etant donné, d'autre part, que le Comité n'est pas parvenu à établir une définition de la notion d'autonomie complète, la délégation péruvienne ne peut pas approuver la présente liste à titre définitif mais uniquement à titre provisoire, en tant que guide et ensemble de principes directeurs.

50. La délégation péruvienne se réserve le droit d'intervenir à nouveau à une étape ultérieure des débats.

51. M. L. S. BOKHARI (Pakistan) estime que les débats ont montré qu'il était inutile, au stade actuel, de poursuivre l'étude de la question des facteurs et qu'il suffirait de modifier cette liste si l'examen d'un cas particulier l'exigeait. Le projet de résolution déposé par la délégation brésilienne ne paraît pas devoir soulever de controverse et la délégation du Pakistan entend l'appuyer. Il ressort des débats qui se sont déroulés tant à la présente session qu'aux sessions précédentes qu'une profonde divergence de vues quant à l'interprétation de la Charte sépare les Membres administrants des autres Etats Membres de l'Organisation. Il est temps de régler un conflit de cette nature et, à cette fin, la délégation du Pakistan invite les Membres administrants à s'engager à poursuivre la communication de renseignements si l'Organisation des Nations Unies, après avoir examiné la documentation pertinente, conclut qu'un territoire déterminé n'a pas encore accédé à l'autonomie complète. M. Bokhari fait appel à la bonne volonté des Membres administrants et tient à leur affirmer que l'Organisation des Nations Unies se rend compte de l'impossibilité d'appliquer des critères rigides à chaque cas particulier. Les rapports entre individus aussi bien que les rapports entre collectivités se modifient perpétuellement, particulièrement dans le domaine politique. Les Membres administrants peuvent être certains que l'Organisation des Nations Unies examinera chaque cas avec la plus grande impartialité. Si toutefois ces Membres ne sont pas en mesure, pour des raisons qui échappent à la délégation du Pakistan, de donner suite à sa proposition et de faire confiance à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, il faudra renvoyer les parties adverses à la plus haute instance qui existe actuellement, savoir la Cour internationale de Justice.

52. Le PRESIDENT annonce qu'il a l'intention de clore la liste des orateurs à la prochaine séance.

La séance est levée à 12 h. 30.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

49

QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 326^e

SEANCE

Mardi 6 octobre 1953,
à 10 h. 55

New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]..... 63

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428, A/C.4/L.272, A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1] (suite)

[Point 33 *]

1. Le PRESIDENT invite la Commission à poursuivre l'examen du rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) (A/2428). Les délégations de l'Arabie saoudite, de la Bolivie, de l'Egypte, du Guatemala, de l'Indonésie, de l'Irak, du Mexique, de la Syrie, du Venezuela, du Yémen et de la Yougoslavie proposent d'apporter au projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) des amendements dont le texte constitue le document A/C.4/L.273. Les délégations peuvent, si elles le désirent, proposer de nouveaux amendements jusqu'à la fin de la prochaine séance.

2. Ato Katama ABEBE (Ethiopie) estime que tous les Etats Membres qui ont signé le document international que constitue la Charte ont par là même souscrit l'obligation de coopérer en vue de donner aux populations des territoires non autonomes la liberté et l'indépendance politique que leur promet le Chapitre XI. Par conséquent, les Membres administrants ne sont pas habilités à prendre des décisions unilatérales dans ce domaine. Les aspirations des peuples à l'autonomie complète sont encore loin d'être entièrement satisfaites; l'établissement de la présente liste de facteurs est une étape dans la voie qui doit mener à la pleine autonomie tous les peuples de l'univers.

3. La délégation éthiopienne regrette que le Comité ad hoc n'ait pu trouver une définition satisfaisante de la notion d'autonomie complète aux fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte; mais elle reconnaît que l'absence de cette définition ne présente pas d'inconvénient grave puisque, pour chaque cas particulier, la notion se dégagera de l'étude des éléments de la situation.

4. En ce qui concerne le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, le point E du paragraphe 15 du rapport du Comité ad hoc revêt une importance toute particulière, car l'assurance que les vues de la population intéressée seront respectées peut seule garantir le plein exercice de ce droit.

5. Certains Membres administrants ont affirmé qu'ils avaient accordé l'autonomie à certains territoires qui relevaient de leur autorité et qu'ils n'avaient donc plus à transmettre les renseignements prévus par l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Il est nécessaire, en pareil cas, de disposer de critères bien établis qui permettent de déterminer si un territoire a véritablement accédé à l'autonomie complète. Il est indispensable aussi que l'Organisation des Nations Unies ait non seulement le droit mais le devoir d'appliquer ces critères à chaque cas particulier et de parvenir ensuite à une décision.

6. La délégation éthiopienne tient, d'autre part, à réfuter la thèse selon laquelle les dispositions du Chapitre XI pourraient s'appliquer au territoire métropolitain d'Etats souverains.

7. En conclusion, la délégation éthiopienne considère que la présente liste de facteurs constitue un ensemble satisfaisant de principes directeurs. Il suffira de mettre ces principes en œuvre pour découvrir si des modifications s'imposent. Rien ne s'oppose donc à ce que la Commission adopte cette liste sans plus tarder.

8. La délégation éthiopienne appuiera le projet de résolution déposé par la délégation du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) ou tout autre projet de résolution analogue.

9. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) déplore que deux groupes adverses et apparemment irréconciliables, du moins lorsqu'il s'agit de chercher à définir la notion d'autonomie complète et de déterminer s'il appartient à l'Assemblée générale de décider qu'un territoire a accédé à l'autonomie, se livrent à la Commission à une controverse qui affaiblit l'unité sans laquelle il eût été impossible, à la Conférence de San-Francisco, d'élaborer le Chapitre XI. Renonçant à l'attitude intelligente et généreuse qu'elles avaient adoptée lors de la mise au point de la Charte, les Puissances administrantes s'efforcent de faire admettre une interprétation étroite des dispositions du Chapitre XI que rien, dans la lettre ou dans l'esprit de ce chapitre, ne vient justifier. On est donc fondé à penser que ce sont des motifs étrangers à la Charte qui inspirent les Puissances administrantes et les amènent à remettre en avant des arguments que l'on croyait à tout jamais périmés: l'autonomie ne suffirait pas à assurer la prospérité des populations d'un territoire; l'indépendance pourrait être un fléau pour les pays qui ne sont pas encore en état d'en jouir. Oubliant la terrible menace qui, au cours de la deuxième guerre mondiale, a pesé sur leur propre indépendance, ces Puissances semblent vouloir porter atteinte à l'indépendance de certains Etats souverains qu'elles n'hésitent pas à mettre sur le même plan que des colonies ou des protectorats. Cette survivance du colonialisme va directement à l'encontre des dispositions du paragraphe 4 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. D'autre part, lorsqu'ils invoquent le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte pour dénier à la collectivité internationale toute compétence en ce qui concerne le sort d'un territoire non autonome, les Membres administrants méconnaissent le fait qu'il a été entendu, au moment où le Chapitre XI a été adopté, que les questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes ne relevaient pas des dispositions énoncées dans cet alinéa.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

10. Rien ne saurait mieux démontrer l'inexactitude de l'affirmation selon laquelle l'autonomie dans le domaine économique et social ainsi que dans le domaine de l'enseignement constitue la complète autonomie aux fins du Chapitre XI que les conclusions auxquelles sont parvenus, tant en 1951 qu'en 1952 et 1953, les divers comités qui ont étudié la question. Tous ces comités composés à égalité de Membres administrants et de Membres non administrants — ce qui donne à leur opinion une impartialité fort précieuse — ont proclamé qu'un territoire qui jouissait de l'autonomie dans tous les domaines de la vie publique à l'exclusion du domaine politique ne pouvait appartenir à aucune des trois catégories entre lesquelles se répartissent les territoires ayant accédé à l'autonomie complète. Bien plus, en 1953, le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs a déclaré, en réponse à une question du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, qu'on ne saurait prévoir de quatrième catégorie de territoires entièrement autonomes pour des territoires privés de l'autonomie politique mais possédant l'autonomie économique, sociale et culturelle. La raison en est claire: tant qu'un territoire ne satisfait pas aux conditions énoncées aux paragraphes a, b, c, d et e de l'Article 73, il ne saurait être considéré comme entièrement autonome et le Membre administrant dont il relève demeure tenu de s'acquitter des obligations qui figurent au Chapitre XI. Ces obligations ne sont, comme le voudraient certains Membres, ni unilatérales, ni uniquement d'ordre moral. Il est anachronique, au XX^e siècle, de concevoir qu'une convention puisse être conclue avec une entité abstraite; pour être objectif et valable, le droit international doit être appliqué et exercé par un organisme concret, en l'occurrence l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il s'ensuit que l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies est habilitée à déterminer, dans chaque cas particulier, si un territoire tombe toujours sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI ou si, au contraire, il a atteint l'autonomie complète. Le fait que les Membres administrants aient été chargés d'établir la liste des territoires qui figurent dans la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale prouverait, aux dires de certaines délégations, que l'Assemblée a implicitement reconnu la compétence exclusive des Membres administrants. Or, cette liste n'a eu qu'un caractère provisoire jusqu'au moment où l'Assemblée générale l'a confirmée par sa résolution 66 (I) et elle ne visait qu'à faciliter la tâche de l'Assemblée. Il est significatif que cette liste ne comprenne que les territoires sur lesquels les Etats les plus forts ou les plus ingénieux se sont attribués arbitrairement une compétence exclusive sans leur accorder les mêmes droits qu'à la métropole.

11. C'est à ces pays défavorisés que s'appliquent les dispositions du Chapitre XI dont on ne saurait étendre l'application à d'autres territoires sans mettre en danger la sécurité et la souveraineté des petits pays. C'est pour parer à ce danger que la IX^e Conférence internationale américaine a adopté, en 1948, à Bogota, la résolution XXXIII dans laquelle elle déclare que l'œuvre d'émancipation américaine ne sera pas achevée tant que demeurera sur le continent américain un vestige du régime colonial européen. Il est certain que dans d'autres régions du globe, où existent encore des colonies et des protectorats, les petites Puissances partagent la même manière de voir, sinon les mêmes craintes. Il est indéniable que ces Puissances pourraient collaborer d'une manière beaucoup plus féconde avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies si les grandes Puissances, particulièrement les Puissances européennes, abordaient ce problème politique dans l'esprit de bonne foi et de coopération constructive qui les ont inspirées à San-Francisco.

12. Depuis la première guerre mondiale, certaines Puissances ont subjugué des peuples sans défense ou ont créé des Etats d'une indépendance toute fictive. Mais le monde reconnaît aujourd'hui bien mieux qu'à l'époque de la Société des Nations que le soin de favoriser l'évolution des populations de territoires autres que des Etats souverains incombe à la collectivité des nations civilisées réunies à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Comme le maréchal Smuts l'a proclamé à San-Francisco, le droit de regard qui appartient à la collectivité internationale doit s'exercer jusque dans les colonies et les protectorats des pays vainqueurs des Puissances de l'Axe.

13. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte marque une étape importante dans la voie qui doit mener tous les peuples à la liberté, car, désormais, il est inconcevable que des pays soient transformés en colonies.

14. Il est temps de mettre fin à l'étude des facteurs. En effet, la présente liste est pratiquement identique à celle qui a été élaborée en 1952 [résolution 648 (VII), annexe]. Toute prolongation du débat offre aux Membres administrants la possibilité de menacer dans leurs interventions l'indépendance des petits pays qui luttent encore pour se libérer des derniers vestiges du colonialisme. Le document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1 ne s'inspire que des principes qui sont énoncés dans la Charte; ces amendements ne sauraient donc manquer de recueillir l'approbation des Etats Membres qui ne veulent pas sortir du cadre de la convention internationale qu'ils ont signée.

15. En conclusion, M. Rivas attire l'attention de la Commission sur le danger qu'il peut y avoir à retarder la solution de certains problèmes, notamment le développement politique des populations des territoires non autonomes et des Territoires sous tutelle, car ces problèmes risqueraient alors de prendre un caractère aigu et de déclencher des crises fort graves.

16. M. JUSTINIANO (Chili) dit que la délégation chilienne félicite le Comité ad hoc et approuve sans réserve son rapport, en demeurant disposée à accueillir toute proposition tendant à permettre une meilleure mise en œuvre de la Charte. La Charte (plus particulièrement le Chapitre XI) définit nettement, quoi qu'en disent certaines délégations, les obligations des Membres administrants et il ne fait pas le moindre doute que ces obligations, loin d'être uniquement morales, sont d'ordre juridique. De même, le Chapitre XI de la Charte établit sans la moindre contestation possible que les Membres administrants n'ont pas compétence exclusive pour décider si un territoire est parvenu ou non à l'autonomie.

17. La délégation chilienne regrette que certains Membres administrants s'efforcent, par une interprétation injustifiée du Chapitre XI, d'en étendre les dispositions aux pays qui étaient autrefois des colonies. M. Justiniano vise tout particulièrement la thèse, défendue par le représentant de la Belgique, qui est exposée au paragraphe 40 du document A/2428. A la fin de la première guerre mondiale, les possessions de l'Allemagne et de la Turquie ont perdu leur statut de colonies et ont été confiées aux Puissances victorieuses en vue de mettre fin au partage de l'Afrique et de certaines régions de l'Asie; ces anciennes colonies ont fait l'objet d'un mandat du type A, B ou C, selon le degré de civilisation atteint par leurs populations. On ne saurait valablement se fonder sur le degré plus ou moins élevé de civilisation qui existe dans un État souverain ou dans une partie du territoire de cet État pour prétendre qu'il tombe sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. C'est pourquoi la délégation chilienne repousse toute tentative visant à établir une comparaison entre les populations des territoires non autonomes et les populations autochtones d'Amérique latine, quel que soit le degré de civilisation de ces dernières. D'ailleurs, au Chili, le problème des populations autochtones ne se pose pas.

18. Lord HUDSON (Royaume-Uni) déclare qu'il convient, de l'avis de sa délégation, d'adopter le présent rapport du Comité ad hoc et de ne pas confier à un autre organe spécialement désigné à cette fin le soin de poursuivre l'étude de la liste de facteurs. Dans la mesure où le projet de résolution de la délégation brésilienne formule les mêmes conclusions, la délégation du Royaume-Uni pourrait l'appuyer; malheureusement, le projet renferme un certain nombre d'éléments que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne saurait accepter.

19. On peut, par exemple, se demander ce qu'il faut entendre exactement au paragraphe 6 du dispositif par les mots "il est essentiel que la population s'administre complètement elle-même", puisque le Comité ad hoc n'est pas parvenu à définir d'une manière satisfaisante la notion de la complète autonomie. Ce paragraphe risque, dans la pratique, de donner lieu à certaines interprétations que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni pourrait ne pas admettre. Lorsqu'une Puissance administrante et la population d'un territoire non autonome ont décidé, d'un commun accord et par des voies parfaitement légales, que le gouvernement de ce territoire s'acquittera désormais en pleine indépendance de certaines fonctions administratives, ou lorsqu'elles ont reconnu que le territoire a accédé à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance, ces décisions doivent être considérées comme définitives et entraînent, comme conséquence logique, la cessation de la communication de renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, car les dispositions de cet article ne régissent plus les rapports du territoire et du gouvernement métropolitain. En outre, dans le cas d'un territoire qui accède par étapes successives à l'indépendance, il peut arriver un moment où les renseignements qui doivent être communiqués en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 concernent des domaines qui ne relèvent plus de la compétence de la Puissance administrante. Il est d'ailleurs invraisemblable que, dans ces conditions, la Puissance administrante prétende que le territoire en question échappe de ce fait aux dispositions du reste de l'Article 73. Telle est la principale objection que la délégation du Royaume-Uni formule à l'encontre de la proposition du Brésil.

20. Lord Hudson ajoute qu'en dépit de tout l'art avec lequel le paragraphe 3 est rédigé, la délégation du Royaume-Uni n'est pas en mesure d'accepter le principe de la compétence égale du Membre administrant et de l'Assemblée générale en ce qui concerne le soin de déterminer si un territoire est visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Il est évident que le soin de prendre en ce domaine la décision initiale appartient au Membre administrant; l'Assemblée générale ferait preuve de sagesse en entérinant cette décision après avoir reçu tous éclaircissements nécessaires. Il est exact que les Membres administrants et l'Assemblée générale ont un objectif identique au regard du Chapitre XI, mais il est à craindre que le projet de résolution brésilien ne donne l'impression, en dépit des termes du paragraphe 5, que l'Assemblée ne cherche à entraver par quelque veto l'évolution qui doit mener les territoires non autonomes vers l'autonomie.

21. La délégation du Royaume-Uni regrette également que les mots "la population intéressée a exercé son droit à disposer d'elle-même" figurent au paragraphe 4. Cette expression a un sens trop vague; il faudrait la supprimer.

22. En outre il est superflu de charger à titre permanent le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes du soin d'étudier la documentation pertinente en tenant compte de la liste de facteurs, comme il est recommandé au paragraphe 7.

23. C'est en s'inspirant de ces diverses considérations que la délégation du Royaume-Uni se prononcera lorsque les différents paragraphes du projet de résolution soumis par la délégation brésilienne, ainsi que le projet dans son ensemble, seront mis aux voix.

24. M. KAISR (Tchécoslovaquie) déclare que la cessation arbitraire de la communication de renseignements sur la situation de quelques territoires non autonomes et la violation fréquente des principes de la Charte — notamment de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 — par les Membres administrants ont eu pour conséquence d'obliger l'Assemblée générale à chercher un moyen d'empêcher ces Membres de prendre des décisions unilatérales dans ce domaine. Ce moyen devait prendre la forme de la liste de facteurs.

25. La délégation tchécoslovaque a toujours pensé que, même si elle était établie de la meilleure façon possible, cette liste n'aurait qu'une valeur plus ou moins théorique. Elle ne permettrait d'obtenir des résultats pratiques que dans l'application concrète des facteurs, dans chaque cas particulier, compte tenu de l'objectif à atteindre, à savoir la réalisation du droit incontestable des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. La liste de facteurs, comme l'indique clairement la résolution 648 (VII), ne doit pas avoir pour conséquence d'empêcher les territoires non autonomes d'atteindre l'autonomie complète. Bien au contraire, elle doit servir de guide qui permette de favoriser le progrès vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance et d'empêcher les Puissances administrantes de changer d'une façon arbitraire et unilatérale le statut des territoires non autonomes. C'est pour cette raison que la délégation tchécoslovaque voit dans l'élaboration des facteurs une idée relativement utile.

26. La délégation tchécoslovaque a examiné soigneusement la liste de facteurs que le Comité ad hoc a établie conformément à la résolution 648 (VII). Elle regrette d'avoir à constater que cette liste, dite nouvelle, ne diffère guère de la liste de 1952, et croit devoir en rechercher les raisons. Parmi les dix membres du Comité ad hoc se trouvaient cinq Puissances administrantes qui, comme le document A/2428 le prouve, ont déployé des efforts considérables pour affaiblir le plus possible le sens et la portée des facteurs. Ainsi, la composition même du Comité ad hoc a été l'un des principaux obstacles qui ont empêché le Comité d'accomplir un travail plus efficace et d'obtenir des résultats plus satisfaisants.

27. La délégation de la Tchécoslovaquie ne considère pas la liste de facteurs comme une règle qui puisse s'appliquer automatiquement. Elle la considère comme une sorte de guide et elle a pu constater, au cours de la longue discussion à laquelle cette question a donné lieu à la Quatrième Commission, que cette opinion était aussi celle de la majorité des délégations, à la seule exception des Membres administrants.

28. Comme plusieurs autres délégations, la délégation tchécoslovaque considère que l'Article 73 de la Charte forme un tout et, comme tel, constitue une norme obligatoire pour tous les Etats Membres sans exception. C'est pourquoi les Membres administrants n'ont pas le droit de considérer l'alinéa e de cet article comme une norme purement et formellement déclaratoire, alors qu'il s'agit d'une norme juridiquement positive et par conséquent obligatoire pour les Membres administrants.

29. Il s'ensuit logiquement que la décision de déclarer qu'un territoire visé au Chapitre XI de la Charte a atteint l'autonomie complète n'appartient pas exclusivement aux Membres administrants. C'est également — c'est même avant tout — à la fois le droit et l'obligation de tous les autres Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Or, pour permettre à l'Assemblée générale de prendre des décisions de ce genre, qu'elle doit prendre exclusivement, la liste de facteurs peut être d'une certaine utilité.

30. Passant à l'examen détaillé de la liste des facteurs qui figure dans le document A/2428, M. Kaisr se voit obligé de présenter quelques objections.

31. Dans le titre de la deuxième partie figurent les mots "association permanente" du territoire avec la métropole. Or, la résolution 648 (VII) déclare nettement que la liste de facteurs ne doit constituer en aucune manière un obstacle à l'accès des territoires à l'autonomie. Le mot "permanente" employé dans le titre n'est ni logique ni approprié, car dans certains cas son interprétation pourrait faire obstacle à la réalisation de l'indépendance de tel ou tel territoire. Même en supposant le cas improbable où la population d'un territoire non autonome renoncerait librement, sans intervention ni pression, à sa pleine indépendance pour pouvoir s'associer au pays métropolitain, il est inconcevable que la population en question puisse accepter que cette association ait un caractère permanent, car elle renoncerait ainsi à l'indépendance d'une manière définitive.

32. La délégation tchécoslovaque ne peut accepter sans réserve le facteur A. 1 de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs. En effet, la rédaction de ce facteur n'est pas non plus celle qui convient, car le fait que la population d'un territoire demande l'autonomie et l'indépendance est en lui-même une preuve suffisante de la maturité politique de cette population et tout autre critère que l'on pourrait invoquer dans l'avenir en interprétant le facteur A. 1, en dehors du désir d'indépendance et d'autonomie complète librement exprimé, pourrait facilement faire obstacle à la réalisation de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance du territoire intéressé.

33. Dans les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste de facteurs figurent des critères qui admettent l'ingérence d'un pays dans les affaires intérieures d'un autre pays. Des critères de ce genre sont en contradiction avec le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et avec la notion d'autonomie complète, notion pour laquelle le Comité ad hoc, comme il le déclare lui-même au paragraphe 11 du document A/2428, n'a pas pu trouver une définition satisfaisante.

34. Le représentant de la Tchécoslovaquie se demande s'il n'est pas possible d'améliorer les facteurs présentés par le Comité ad hoc, en les faisant étudier plus à fond par un organe qui pourrait offrir une plus grande garantie d'impartialité. Par leurs déclarations, les diverses délégations qui ont pris part au débat ont répondu d'avance que la chose était possible. Dans ces conditions, la délégation tchécoslovaque appuiera toute proposition tendant à améliorer, rectifier et préciser les facteurs, avant de les adopter définitivement.

35. Résumant son exposé, le représentant de la Tchécoslovaquie déclare que sa délégation est disposée à accepter la première partie de la liste de facteurs proposée dans le document A/2428. En ce qui concerne les deuxième et troisième parties de cette liste, elle ne peut, pour les raisons qu'elle vient d'exposer, les accepter. En conséquence, la délégation tchécoslovaque demande que les trois parties de cette liste soient mises aux voix séparément.

36. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution présenté par la délégation du Brésil, la délégation tchécoslovaque demande également qu'il soit mis aux voix paragraphe par paragraphe. Elle est en effet disposée à voter pour les paragraphes 1, 4, 5, 6 et 8 du dispositif, mais elle se verra obligée de voter contre les paragraphes 2, 3 et 7 parce que les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste de facteurs ne lui paraissent pas atteindre le but visé. Elle accepte les trois premiers considérants, mais elle est opposée au quatrième considérant; en effet, elle considère que la liste de facteurs présentée ne répond pas d'une manière satisfaisante aux intentions que l'Assemblée générale a exprimées dans sa résolution 648 (VII), notamment aux paragraphes 6 et 7 de cette résolution.

37. En conséquence, la délégation tchécoslovaque demande que le projet de résolution présenté par le Brésil (A/C.4/272) soit mis aux voix paragraphe par paragraphe.

38. M. ITANI (Liban) estime qu'il n'est pas surprenant que tous les orateurs qui ont pris la parole aient souligné l'importance particulière de la question des facteurs, car cette question est étroitement liée à celle de la liberté des peuples en général. Le Liban, qui a toujours défendu le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et élevé la voix en faveur de la liberté de tous les pays du monde, ne peut pas ne pas adopter une position conforme à son passé et à ses traditions.

39. M. Itani tient à rappeler que l'étude des facteurs a été décidée par l'Assemblée générale parce que certains Membres administrants ont cessé de communiquer des renseignements au sujet de treize territoires non autonomes. Ces Membres ont ainsi pris, à l'égard de ces territoires, une décision unilatérale, alors que la responsabilité qu'ils y assumaient avait un caractère international et ne pouvait légalement cesser qu'en vertu d'une décision de l'Assemblée générale.

40. L'objet du Chapitre XI de la Charte est avant tout d'établir les relations particulières qui doivent exister entre l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les territoires non autonomes. A moins qu'on ne veuille s'écarter de la lettre et de l'esprit de l'Article 73 de la Charte, les Membres administrants sont loin d'être seuls compétents quand il s'agit de décider si un territoire non autonome est parvenu à l'autonomie complète.

41. En ce qui concerne la liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc, la délégation libanaise voudrait présenter quelques observations d'ordre général, tout en réservant la position de son gouvernement vis-à-vis de tout amendement ou de toute proposition dont la Commission pourrait être saisie.

42. Premièrement, l'opinion des habitants des territoires non autonomes devrait être le facteur décisif. C'est pourquoi la délégation libanaise formule des réserves formelles au sujet d'expressions telles que "association", "assimilation", "incorporation" ou "annexion", surtout lorsqu'il existe des différences de race, de langue, de religion, de culture, etc.

43. Deuxièmement, il est de la plus haute importance d'indiquer la procédure à suivre pour l'application de la liste de facteurs; en effet, si les Membres administrants ne se déclaraient pas disposés dès maintenant à respecter les décisions prises par l'Assemblée, conformément à cette liste, tout le travail du Comité ad hoc serait pure perte de temps et le prestige de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en serait gravement atteint.

44. Troisièmement, il est très difficile, sinon impossible, de trouver une définition complète et définitive de la notion d'autonomie complète. C'est pourquoi la liste de facteurs est une simple indication, un guide, qu'il appartient à l'Assemblée de compléter quand de nouvelles circonstances l'exigeront.

45. Quatrièmement, tout en reconnaissant la nécessité d'apporter à la liste des éléments complémentaires, la délégation du Liban tient à remercier le Comité ad hoc des efforts qu'il a déployés et qui ont abouti à l'établissement de ce texte.

46. Cinquièmement, la délégation du Liban fait appel aux Puissances intéressées pour que, conformément à leurs traditions libérales, elles ne manquent pas aux obligations qui leur incombent depuis le jour où elles ont adhéré à la Charte des Nations Unies et pour qu'elles s'efforcent d'affermir la collaboration internationale, la fraternité des peuples et le prestige de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Ces Puissances permettront ainsi de sortir de l'impasse actuelle et d'atteindre l'objectif de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

47. Le représentant du Liban ne veut pas s'engager dans un examen détaillé des facteurs proposés puisque aussi bien cette liste a besoin d'être améliorée; mais il estime que l'essentiel est de faire preuve de bonne foi, de manifester le désir sincère de trancher cette question conformément au droit international et au droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, en mettant de côté toutes sortes d'intérêts économiques ou politiques qui seraient de nature à empêcher l'application intégrale, sincère et ferme de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

48. M. NAUDE (Union Sud-Africaine) indique que sa délégation ne se proposait pas d'intervenir dans le débat actuel; mais, à la suite de la discussion qui a eu lieu, elle estime qu'elle doit au moins féliciter le Comité ad hoc du travail qu'il a accompli et cela d'autant plus qu'il a dû s'occuper de notions qui ne se prêtent pas à une définition.

49. La délégation sud-africaine avait espéré, après les vues exprimées à l'origine, qu'il ne serait pas nécessaire de proposer à l'Assemblée générale de prendre une décision formelle au sujet de la liste de facteurs. Malheureusement, la question de la compétence s'est introduite dans le débat et la délégation de l'Union Sud-Africaine a senti que cette question était devenue l'élément principal de la discussion. Les amendements qui sont proposés au projet de résolution du Brésil la confirment dans cette opinion.

50. Dans les circonstances actuelles, la délégation de l'Union Sud-Africaine estime que ce n'est pas cette tendance à soulever la question de compétence qui pourra conduire la Quatrième Commission au succès, c'est-à-dire à l'élaboration de textes acceptables pour tous.

51. Bien souvent déjà, la délégation de l'Union Sud-Africaine a été obligée de signaler le danger de présenter des amendements par interprétation. Elle a le regret de constater que la Quatrième Commission se trouve actuellement devant un cas de ce genre. C'est une situation grave.

52. La position de l'Union Sud-Africaine est la suivante: il appartient exclusivement aux Membres administrants de décider si les territoires qu'ils administrent sont parvenus à l'autonomie dans les domaines énumérés à l'Article 73, e. L'Union Sud-Africaine comprend l'idéal très élevé des délégations qui veulent une liste précise de facteurs; mais il convient de remarquer que l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'est pas un parlement mondial. Cependant, la loi qui régit l'Organisation, c'est-à-dire la Charte, semble à la délégation de l'Union Sud-Africaine aussi claire que possible.

53. Il importe donc que la Quatrième Commission réfléchisse mûrement avant de prendre une décision sur la suite à donner à la liste de facteurs qui lui est soumise.

54. M. WORM-MULLER (Norvège) déclare que le Gouvernement norvégien considère l'acheminement des territoires non autonomes vers l'autonomie comme une question d'une importance primordiale; l'opinion publique norvégienne appuie chaleureusement l'émancipation des peuples de ces territoires. Il appartient donc à l'Assemblée des Nations Unies de prendre toutes mesures appropriées pour hâter cette évolution.

55. La question doit être considérée d'un point de vue objectif. Une première décision a été prise à San-Francisco lors de l'élaboration du Chapitre XI. Aux termes de ce chapitre, les Puissances administrantes ont accepté une mission sacrée. L'obligation de fournir des renseignements, conformément à l'Article 73, e, les incite à améliorer la situation des territoires qu'elles administrent. Toute Puissance administrante se fait un point d'honneur de prouver qu'elle a pris des mesures constructives à cette fin.

56. Il est de l'intérêt des territoires non autonomes qu'il existe un sentiment de confiance réciproque entre les Membres administrants et les organes des Nations Unies qui s'occupent particulièrement de ces questions. S'il y a méfiance, les territoires non autonomes n'en tireront guère de profit.

57. Il paraît évident que des divergences de vues très nettes existent à la Quatrième Commission et que les Membres administrants ne sont pas disposés à voter pour le projet de résolution présenté par la délégation du Brésil. Le représentant de la Norvège rappelle notamment la déclaration que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a faite à la présente séance.

58. Puisqu'il n'a pas été possible de trouver une formule de compromis généralement acceptable, peut-être vaut-il mieux, dans l'intérêt d'une collaboration fructueuse à la Quatrième Commission et dans l'intérêt des territoires non autonomes, abandonner les questions de principe qui prêtent à controverse et s'orienter vers des décisions appropriées concernant le rapport du Comité ad hoc dont la Commission est saisie.

59. En conséquence, la délégation norvégienne n'est pas en mesure de voter pour le projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil.

60. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) tient à dissiper le malentendu qui semble s'être manifesté à la séance pré-cédente, notamment entre le représentant de la Bolivie et lui.

61. Le représentant de la Bolivie a relevé ce qu'il croit être une contradiction dans les réserves faites au Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs par le représentant de la Belgique. D'après lui, le représentant de la Belgique aurait reconnu à l'alinéa a du paragraphe 40 du document A/2428 que le Chapitre XI de la Charte ne s'appliquait qu'aux colonies et protectorats tout en déclarant, à l'alinéa e du même paragraphe, que le Chapitre XI s'applique à de nombreuses populations de territoires souverains.

62. En réalité, le représentant de la Belgique n'a jamais dit que le Chapitre XI ne s'appliquait qu'aux populations des colonies et protectorats. Au contraire, ses réserves avaient précisément pour objet de faire remarquer que les expressions "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes", d'une part, et "colonies et protectorats", d'autre part, ne sont pas synonymes. La seule définition que donne la Charte des populations auxquelles s'étend la protection du Chapitre XI se trouve dans l'Article 73. Les mots "colonie" et "protectorat" ne se trouvent pas dans cet article, qui dit simplement: "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes", sans établir d'autre distinction. Cet article est susceptible d'une interprétation large et d'une interprétation étroite. L'interprétation large étend la protection de la Charte aux populations de tous les territoires dont les habitants ne s'administrent pas entièrement eux-mêmes, que ces territoires soient compris dans les frontières continentales d'un Etat ou qu'ils soient situés outre-mer. C'est cette interprétation large que la Belgique adopte et propose. L'autre interprétation est restrictive. Elle limite l'application du Chapitre XI aux territoires d'outre-mer de certaines Puissances dites coloniales. Elle prive de la protection internationale toutes les autres populations arriérées.

63. Qu'il y ait ailleurs que dans les colonies, protectorats et Territoires sous tutelle des populations qui ne se gouvernent pas elles-mêmes, nul ne le contestera. Les mémoires déposés par la délégation belge (A/AC.58/1, A/AC.67/2) en ont dressé une liste impressionnante. Il est indubitable, par exemple, que des populations vivant dans un état de sauvagerie totale, sans contacts avec les populations civilisées, ne sont pas des populations jouissant de la plénitude de l'autonomie, au sens que la Charte donne à cette expression.

64. Le représentant de l'Uruguay a dit, à la séance précédente, que les auteurs de la Charte n'avaient jamais eu l'intention de faire passer sous l'empire du Chapitre XI les populations qui ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes, mais vivent dans les limites d'Etats souverains.

65. La question ne se pose pas ainsi. Les populations autochtones de tous les territoires sans distinction étaient visées par les dispositions protectrices du Pacte de la Société des Nations. Tous les Membres de la Société avaient pris l'engagement solennel d'assurer à toutes les populations autochtones vivant sur tous leurs territoires, métropolitains ou coloniaux, continentaux ou d'outre-mer, un traitement équitable. L'interprétation large de l'Article 73 maintient cette universalité de la protection due aux populations autochtones. L'interprétation restrictive la retire à de nombreuses populations. La question est donc de savoir si les partisans de l'interprétation restrictive ont entendu exclure de la protection de la Charte des populations qui jouis-saient depuis vingt-cinq ans de la protection garantie par l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations, et si ceux d'entre eux qui avaient signé le Pacte ont entendu répudier leurs engagements solennels et refuser d'accepter les mêmes obligations en vertu de la Charte des Nations Unies. Dans l'affirmative, la délégation belge demande qu'ils l'avouent. Et elle demandera qu'ils expliquent la raison de ce retour en arrière. Les populations autochtones des territoires métropolitains étaient-elles moins dignes d'intérêt en 1945 qu'en 1919? L'Organisation des Nations Unies a-t-elle voulu leur retirer la sollicitude que leur avait vouée la Société des Nations? A ces deux questions, la thèse belge répond par la négative. L'interprétation restrictive de l'Article 73 donnant aux mots "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore entièrement elles-mêmes" le sens de "populations des seuls territoires coloniaux" répond par l'affirmative. La délégation belge demande à chacun des Etats Membres de choisir.

66. Le représentant de la Syrie a demandé avec ironie à la séance précédente si la délégation belge visait les territoires dépendants abusivement présentés comme autonomes. La délégation belge répond sans ironie qu'elle vise tous les territoires, dépendants ou non, dont les populations ne s'administrent pas entièrement elles-mêmes et au sujet desquelles le Secrétaire général des Nations Unies ne reçoit pas de renseignements.

67. Le représentant de la Bolivie a dit à la même séance qu'il ne pourrait pas admettre que son pays soit jamais considéré comme une colonie. Le représentant de la Belgique répond que si, à la lumière des travaux du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, un Etat reconnaît que le Chapitre XI de la Charte s'applique à certaines des populations dont il a la responsabilité et prend la décision, sans aucune pression de la part de l'Assemblée, de fournir les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73, e, tout le monde rendra hommage à la générosité dont il fait preuve par son interprétation libérale de la Charte. Nul ne songera pour autant à contester sa pleine souveraineté ou à le considérer comme une colonie.

68. En ce qui concerne les textes dont la Commission est saisie, le représentant de la Belgique est d'avis que la Quatrième Commission prenne note du travail méritoire accompli par le Comité des facteurs.

69. La délégation belge s'abstiendra de voter sur le paragraphe du projet de résolution qui approuve en bloc tous les facteurs proposés par le Comité. Elle sera obligée de voter contre tous les articles du projet de résolution et contre tous les amendements qui, expressément ou implicitement, affirment la compétence de l'Assemblée, soutiennent la théorie, contraire à la réalité des faits, de l'indivisibilité de l'autonomie, ou établissent une distinction, non justifiée par la Charte, entre le devoir de continuer à fournir des renseignements et le devoir de commencer à les fournir si on ne l'a pas fait jusqu'ici.

70. M. LAWRENCE (Libéria) déclare que la délégation libérienne a écouté avec beaucoup d'intérêt toutes les déclarations faites par les divers représentants qui ont pris part au débat actuel et dont une grande partie ont exposé des vues qu'elle partage.

71. Tout d'abord, il convient de féliciter le Comité ad hoc, dont les efforts ont abouti aux résultats exposés dans le document A/2428. La délégation du Libéria est d'accord avec les délégations qui considèrent que la liste de facteurs proposée ne peut que servir de guide et que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné compte tenu des circonstances qui lui sont propres.

72. Toutefois, il est une question qui a particulièrement animé la discussion, c'est celle de la procédure à adopter pour appliquer ces facteurs à un territoire. Les Membres administrants ont prétendu qu'eux seuls étaient compétents pour les appliquer. Cependant, un Membre administrant ne peut pas, juridiquement, annuler ou modifier de façon unilatérale le statut d'un territoire sans en aviser l'Assemblée générale. En effet, en vertu de la Charte, l'Assemblée générale seule est compétente pour dire si la population d'un territoire a atteint une complète autonomie.

73. Mais une nouvelle difficulté surgit. Qu'entend-on par autonomie complète? Deux opinions ont été exprimées à la Commission. Celle des Membres administrants et celle des pays qui n'administrent pas de territoires. Les premiers estiment que des populations peuvent avoir atteint l'autonomie complète tout en restant fermement liées à la Puissance administrante, les autres estiment que le bien-être des populations de ces territoires doit être la loi suprême, que leur désir doit pouvoir être librement exprimé à propos de toute modification envisagée quant à la forme de leur gouvernement.

74. Tout en comprenant parfaitement les idéaux élevés qui, de tout temps, ont inspiré les Puissances administrantes quand il s'agissait du bien-être des populations de ces territoires, la délégation du Libéria estime que les désirs et aspirations de ces populations doivent être déterminés par les bons offices de l'Assemblée générale.

75. Une autre question de procédure préoccupe la délégation du Libéria: il s'agit du moment auquel les facteurs pourront être appliqués. Il semble ressortir du débat que ces facteurs devraient, de l'avis de certaines délégations, être appliqués après qu'un Membre administrant aurait signalé une modification dans le statut du territoire et cesserait ensuite de communiquer des renseignements, plaçant ainsi l'Organisation des Nations Unies devant un fait accompli.

76. La délégation du Libéria se demande comment les idéaux de paix, de bien-être et de liberté, en vertu desquels les gouvernements des divers Etats Membres ont envoyé des représentants à l'Assemblée générale, pourront être réalisés tant que des millions d'êtres humains dans le monde subiront l'oppression, la misère et la souffrance. Il s'agit d'un problème que l'on ne peut pas résoudre en l'éluant. Il faut au contraire regarder la situation en face et chercher une solution avec conscience et résolution.

77. L'Assemblée générale ne doit pas être placée devant un fait accompli par les Membres administrants; au contraire, chaque fois qu'un Membre administrant estime que la population d'un territoire donné a réellement atteint l'autonomie complète, il doit en informer l'Assemblée générale, afin que celle-ci puisse prendre les mesures nécessaires de vérification et se prononcer.

78. M. ARAOZ (Bolivie) déclare que le représentant de la Belgique a de nouveau fait appel à des sophismes pour tenter de déformer les propos de certaines délégations et prétendre qu'en parlant de colonies et protectorats, on entendait revenir au système colonial. Tel est peut-être le but que visent les Puissances administrantes; ce n'est certainement pas celui que la Commission s'est fixé.

79. Si M. Araoz a donné un aperçu de l'évolution de la situation en Bolivie, c'est qu'il a jugé utile de montrer comment un pays qui lutte encore pour obtenir l'indépendance complète dans certains domaines a pu réaliser son unité nationale; il a voulu ainsi permettre aux débats de se cristalliser sur certains points précis. Il n'existe en Bolivie aucun groupe qui fasse l'objet de discrimination. Les programmes entrepris dans le domaine économique et dans le domaine de l'enseignement, ainsi que la réforme agraire, sont destinés à toute la population; leurs résultats apporteront des bienfaits pour tous sans aucune distinction. Si le représentant de la Belgique visitait la Bolivie, il pourrait se convaincre de la véracité de ce que M. Araoz avance: il y verrait un peuple uni, qui travaille à resserrer plus étroitement encore les liens entre les divers groupes qui le composent, et il y retrouverait le témoignage de ces hautes valeurs culturelles qui sont l'héritage séculaire laissé par les diverses races qui ont peuplé la Bolivie.

80. La délégation bolivienne participe aux débats de la Commission dans un esprit constructif, animé du seul souci d'aider les peuples dépendants à conquérir leur autonomie. Elle sera toujours prête à défendre les principes fondamentaux qui doivent régir le progrès de l'humanité. Si la délégation bolivienne a élevé certaines objections contre les réserves du représentant de la Belgique, ce n'est nullement parce qu'elle a été blessée de se voir comparer à une colonie. Au contraire, le peuple bolivien, ce peuple jadis méprisé et opprimé, est fier de s'être libéré de cette oppression et d'être actuellement dirigé par un gouvernement qui le représente effectivement. Il ne rougit pas, non plus, de la situation semi-féodale qui est encore la sienne, car il tire orgueil des efforts entrepris pour la surmonter. L'exemple de la Bolivie est donc à citer dans un débat portant sur les territoires non autonomes dont les populations ont, elles aussi, le droit de régler leur propre destinée conformément aux vœux d'une large majorité et non pas d'une minorité oligarchique représentant des intérêts étrangers.

81. En conclusion, M. Araoz maintient son point de vue quant à la contradiction qu'il a relevée dans les réserves de la Belgique; il souligne que ces réserves n'ont d'autre objet que de détourner la Commission de ce qui doit être sa tâche essentielle: assurer le progrès des peuples dépendants, dans la voie de l'autonomie complète.

82. M. TRIANTAPHYLAKOS (Grèce) rend hommage au Comité ad hoc et se déclare prêt à accepter la liste de facteurs qu'il a élaborée, avec cependant deux réserves. En premier lieu, il doit être bien entendu que cette liste ne peut constituer qu'un guide permettant d'examiner chaque cas dans de meilleures conditions, à la lumière des circonstances qui lui sont propres. D'autre part, comme le représentant du Guatemala l'a indiqué ainsi que d'autres délégations, il convient de supprimer le mot "permanente" qui figure dans le titre de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs, et qui qualifie l'association du territoire non autonome et de la métropole. C'est à la lumière des considérations qu'elle vient d'exposer, et en tenant compte de la nécessité primordiale de maintenir la coopération entre toutes les parties pour assurer l'application du Chapitre XI, que la délégation grecque se prononcera sur le projet de résolution du Brésil et les amendements dont il a fait l'objet.

83. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) rend hommage aux efforts que le représentant du Brésil a déployés pour mettre au point un projet de résolution qui puisse être généralement accepté. Cependant, la délégation des Etats-Unis ne peut accepter le principe sur lequel se fonde le paragraphe 3 du dispositif de ce texte. Aucun Etat Membre, qu'il assure ou non l'administration d'un territoire non autonome, ne saurait abandonner son droit de déterminer le statut constitutionnel du territoire qui se trouve sous sa souveraineté. C'est donc aux seuls Membres administrants intéressés qu'il appartient de prendre la décision de cesser de communiquer les renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e.

84. Il ne s'ensuit nullement que le rôle de l'Assemblée ne puisse être d'aucune utilité. Au contraire, l'Assemblée a déjà accompli une œuvre féconde à cet égard. En vertu de l'Article 10 de la Charte, l'Assemblée a le droit d'étudier le concept de territoires non autonomes et celui de territoires dont la population ne s'administre pas encore complètement elle-même et de s'efforcer d'en établir une définition. L'Assemblée générale a également le droit de recommander aux Etats Membres d'étudier la définition qu'elle pourrait adopter et même d'exprimer en termes généraux son avis sur les principes dont les Membres administrants pourraient ou ont pu s'inspirer pour décider de cesser de communiquer les renseignements relatifs aux territoires qu'ils administrent. Cependant, les résolutions de l'Assemblée ne doivent pas impliquer que la décision des Membres administrants doit être sanctionnée par l'approbation ou la désapprobation de l'Assemblée générale.

85. La délégation des Etats-Unis se verra donc obligée de voter contre le projet de résolution du Brésil, comme contre toute proposition qui contiendrait les mêmes implications.

86. M. PIGNON (France) ne pense pas qu'il soit nécessaire de réitérer la position du Gouvernement français, qui a été déjà assez clairement indiquée. Il tient cependant à étudier les théories juridiques présentées au cours des débats; la délégation française les a écoutées avec intérêt, mais elle n'a pas été convaincue et ne pouvait pas l'être, car ces théories s'appuient sur une interprétation erronée d'un traité, c'est-à-dire de la Charte. Pour interpréter un traité, il faut déterminer, en se rapportant aux travaux préliminaires et notamment aux procès-verbaux des discussions, la volonté de ses auteurs, c'est-à-dire, en l'occurrence, la volonté des cosignataires de la Charte — tout comme, pour interpréter une loi, on se rapporte en premier lieu au procès-verbal des débats parlementaires. Or, il est bien certain que les auteurs de la Charte n'ont ni prévu ni voulu les développements et les additions que l'on essaie maintenant d'introduire par voie de résolutions.

87. Il est facile de s'en convaincre en étudiant l'histoire du problème de la cessation de la communication des renseignements. A sa troisième session, l'Assemblée générale se sentait si peu sûre de son terrain et de ses droits que, dans sa résolution 222 (III), elle s'est bornée à déclarer que l'Organisation doit nécessairement être informée de toute modification intervenue dans la constitution et le statut de l'un quelconque de ces territoires en vertu de laquelle le gouvernement responsable estime inutile la communication des renseignements visés par l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. Les souvenirs de San-Francisco étaient encore trop proches pour qu'on osât mettre en cause la compétence exclusive du Membre administrant. Avec la résolution 334 (IV), l'Assemblée générale a franchi une nouvelle étape, puisqu'elle a estimé qu'elle avait compétence pour exprimer un avis sur les principes qui ont guidé ou qui peuvent guider des Etats intéressés dans l'énumération des territoires en question. L'Assemblée tendait donc déjà à restreindre la liberté d'appréciation des gouvernements responsables, mais elle n'affirmait sa compétence qu'à l'égard des principes; le pouvoir des décisions dans chaque cas d'espèce demeurait impartie au Membre administrant. A la cinquième session, par sa résolution 448 (V), l'Assemblée est délibérément sortie du domaine de la théorie en invitant le Comité spécial pour l'examen des renseignements transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte à étudier les renseignements qui pourraient être à l'avenir communiqués au Secrétaire général en application de la résolution 222 (III) et à faire rapport à leur sujet à l'Assemblée générale. Avec cette résolution, les frontières qui avaient été jadis respectées ont été franchies et l'Assemblée s'est arrogé le droit non plus de donner des avis d'ordre général, mais bien d'examiner et de discuter chaque cas d'espèce. A la sixième session, l'Assemblée s'est trop préoccupée de la liste de facteurs pour s'aventurer dans le domaine périlleux de la compétence. Cependant, elle a réaffirmé, dans sa résolution 568 (VI), les règles posées par la résolution 448 (V). Le pas décisif a été franchi à la septième session, où l'Assemblée a affirmé sa compétence comme allant de soi et sans chercher à la fonder en droit ou en fait.

88. Cet historique des conquêtes successives de la majorité démontre clairement que cette construction juridique a été fondée sur des bases qui ne sont pas celles de la Charte strictement interprétée. En effet, à sa troisième session, l'Assemblée n'aurait pas hésité, si elle avait cru possible de le faire conformément à la Charte, à affirmer hautement sa compétence face au cas d'espèce qui préoccupait alors la Quatrième Commission. Déjà, dans un enthousiasme qui fait oublier le point de départ, on envisage de nouveaux progrès. Certaines délégations ont proposé de ne retenir que la première partie de la liste de facteurs; d'autres ont déclaré que la notion d'autonomie complète, prévue par la Charte, ne pouvait avoir d'autre signification que celle d'indépendance. Il ne faut pas oublier pour autant que cette construction juridique, dont la majorité semble estimer qu'elle n'est plus qu'à parfaire dans les détails, demeurera sans fondement et sans force exécutoire tant qu'elle n'aura pas revêtu la forme d'un nouveau traité ou d'une addition à la Charte dans les conditions prévues à l'Article 109.

89. La délégation française a écouté avec un vif intérêt la thèse de la responsabilité des Membres administrants développée par le représentant de l'Equateur. Cette responsabilité, les Membres administrants ne la nient pas; ils l'acceptent sans réticence. Cependant, cette responsabilité reste d'ordre moral et elle n'entraîne pas de conséquences juridiques, parce qu'on a expressément et volontairement exclu de la Charte tout organisme de contrôle, toute juridiction spécialisée dont l'existence donnerait un sens juridique à cette responsabilité. Certains peuvent regretter ce qu'ils considèrent comme une lacune, mais ils doivent également comprendre qu'il n'est pas en leur pouvoir d'essayer de la combler par la voie inappropriée et inefficace des recommandations.

90. Il est donc clair que la délégation française ne pourra donner son adhésion au projet de résolution soumis par le représentant du Brésil, bien qu'elle tienne à rendre hommage aux efforts sincères que celui-ci a déployés en vue de trouver une issue à l'impasse où la Commission se trouve actuellement engagée. En effet, au paragraphe 3 du dispositif, le projet de résolution réaffirme la compétence de l'Assemblée générale. La même objection est valable en ce qui concerne le paragraphe 4, car il est clair que c'est à l'Assemblée générale que reviendrait le soin de décider si la preuve que les populations ont exercé leur droit à disposer d'elles-mêmes a bien été fournie. Le paragraphe 6 introduit à nouveau les difficultés d'interprétation auxquelles on avait cherché à remédier en établissant une liste de critères. La notion d'autonomie complète n'a toujours pas été définie, et si certains ont pris parti sans hésitation, leur opinion n'équivaut pas à une décision. Enfin, les paragraphes 7 et 8 confèrent au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes une compétence que la délégation française estime inacceptable et contraire au compromis qui lui a permis de continuer à participer aux travaux de cet organisme. Pour les mêmes raisons, la délégation française s'opposera aux amendements présentés conjointement par onze délégations (A/C.4/L.273). Le fait même que ces amendements aient été présentés illustre la thèse que M. Pignon a défendue et justifie pleinement, si besoin était, la position du Gouvernement français. Tout ce que le texte initial du Brésil contenait de conciliant a été en effet systématiquement éliminé dans ces amendements. Au moins, il ne subsiste plus de doute ou d'équivoque.

91. Etant donné l'importance du problème, la délégation française ne peut se contenter d'émettre un vote négatif. Conformément aux instructions formelles qu'elle a reçues de son gouvernement, elle est obligée de renouveler expressément les réserves qu'elle avait présentées au sujet de la résolution 647 (VII) et qui sont rappelées au compte rendu de la 279ème séance de la Quatrième Commission (A/C.4/SR.279, par. 1 à 3). Le Gouvernement français n'avait pas accepté que la résolution 647 (VII) pût le lier en quoi que ce fût : il n'acceptera pas davantage que le projet de résolution du Brésil puisse l'engager si, comme il est probable, ce texte est adopté. La délégation française est d'autant plus à l'aise pour faire cette déclaration qu'elle avait pris la précaution, à San-Francisco, d'exprimer une réserve de compétence que l'on trouvera dans le rapport du Comité 4 de la Commission II et dans l'annexe D à ce rapport, en date du 20 juin 1945¹. Personne ne saurait donc aujourd'hui se dire surpris ou choqué d'une attitude qui reste constamment claire, franche et cohérente. Toutefois, c'est à regret que la délégation française se voit acculée à cette position négative et défensive. Ce n'est certainement pas ainsi qu'elle avait envisagé la collaboration à l'Organisation ; il est encore possible à la Commission de se ressaisir et de retrouver les voies d'un travail fécond. Il y a quelques jours, M. Maurice Schumann a déclaré à la 445ème séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale que le Gouvernement français acceptait complètement et sans arrière-pensée les fins du Chapitre XI de la Charte. A la Commission même, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a insisté sur l'identité de buts, identité qui devrait unir les membres de la Commission. Il suffirait d'essayer d'appliquer la Charte sans chercher pour le moment à la compléter ou à la modifier. Le Gouvernement français a donné de multiples preuves de sa bonne volonté ; il est prêt à de nouveaux efforts, mais il ne saurait se contenter d'exhortations à la conciliation qui ne comprennent aucune preuve tangible de compréhension et qui supposent toujours que les Puissances administrantes ont à se faire pardonner un péché originel.

92. En terminant, M. Pignon expose les raisons qui motivent la position du Gouvernement français. Ces raisons sont évidentes : la délégation française ne saurait admettre que l'Assemblée générale discute de l'évolution constitutionnelle des territoires administrés par la France précisément parce qu'il s'agit de questions constitutionnelles, qui relèvent de la politique intérieure et qui sont du ressort exclusif du pouvoir législatif. La Constitution française limite strictement les pouvoirs de l'exécutif. En matière de politique internationale, le gouvernement peut négocier et s'engager sous réserve de l'approbation ultérieure du Parlement. En ce qui concerne le statut des territoires, c'est le Parlement qui a l'initiative de la décision et il n'est pas possible au gouvernement ou à la délégation française d'aliéner en quelque mesure que ce soit la souveraineté du Parlement. Il est du reste facile de prévoir quelles seraient les conséquences du processus qui a été actuellement déclenché et les exigences toujours plus grandes qui seraient présentées pour soumettre les Puissances administrantes à un contrôle toujours accru de l'Organisation. Il suffit de réfléchir pour concevoir les dangers qui résulteraient, sur le plan interne, de l'ingérence d'une organisation internationale qui finirait par se mêler arbitrairement, avec des intentions pures ou non, de la politique intérieure. De même, dans l'époque troublée où le monde vit actuellement, cette intrusion engendrerait une situation d'infériorité constante sur le plan international, par la possibilité de chantages et de manœuvres qui ne serviraient ni la cause de la paix ni celle de la coopération entre nations. Ce que la délégation française demande une fois de plus, c'est que certains membres de la Commission veuillent bien consentir l'effort de se mettre de temps à autre à la place du Gouvernement français pour juger avec objectivité de la situation. Quelle que soit la décision que la Commission adoptera en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution du Brésil, les débats qui ont eu lieu auront eu le grand mérite de permettre à la Commission de toucher au fond du problème. La Commission en est arrivée au point précis où les conceptions idéologiques se heurtent aux faits. Elle devra décider si elle doit continuer à prendre des décisions sur le plan de la théorie ou si, consciente de l'inanité de cette entreprise, elle doit se tourner résolument vers les tâches qui sont les siennes.

93. M. LOPEZ (Philippines) déclare que les Philippines, qui sont devenues un Etat indépendant après la deuxième guerre mondiale, après avoir connu quatre siècles d'oppression, portent un profond intérêt à la question des facteurs et à celle, plus vaste, des territoires non autonomes.

94. A la Conférence de San-Francisco, la délégation des Philippines avait indiqué que le mot "indépendance" devrait remplacer ou, tout au moins, compléter le mot "autonomie", dans toutes les dispositions de la Charte où ce dernier mot figurait ; elle craignait, en effet, que si la notion d'indépendance était remplacée par celle, plus vague, d'autonomie, des malentendus ne puissent s'élever. L'expérience a prouvé que ces craintes étaient fondées. A San-Francisco, la délégation des Philippines n'avait pas insisté sur sa suggestion, parce que les Puissances administrantes lui avaient donné l'assurance qu'autonomie était synonyme d'indépendance et que c'était bien dans ce sens que la notion d'autonomie serait interprétée dans la pratique. Or, il s'est trouvé que l'imprécision du terme d'autonomie a été à l'origine de bien des malentendus, qu'elle a entraîné de longues études et de longs débats. Il était illogique de parler seulement d'autonomie au Chapitre XI, alors qu'au Chapitre XII on employait également le mot indépendance. Quoi qu'il en soit, il importe actuellement de préciser la notion d'autonomie. Les travaux du Comité ad hoc ont, à cet égard, une très grande valeur.

¹ Voir Conférence des Nations Unies pour l'organisation internationale, II/4/44, 1, a.

95. M. López rend hommage au Comité et croit, comme le représentant du Venezuela, qu'il est temps de mettre un terme aux études et de passer à l'application des facteurs que le Comité ad hoc a élaborés. Cette tâche n'est possible que s'il existe entre les Puissances administrantes et les Puissances non administrantes une sincère coopération. M. López a la conviction que les membres de la Commission peuvent résolument écarter les sujets de controverse et reconnaître d'un commun accord qu'il est indispensable de hâter le progrès des populations des territoires non autonomes, pour assurer le maintien de la paix, mission qui intéresse tous les Etats, qu'ils administrent ou non des territoires non autonomes. Les Puissances administrantes doivent comprendre qu'en se retranchant derrière les dispositions du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 pour défendre leur compétence exclusive, elles donnent l'impression de vouloir conserver à tout prix ce qu'elles considèrent comme leur propriété. Si elles reconnaissent que le problème colonial ne se pose plus dans les mêmes termes depuis que la Charte a fait de l'avenir des territoires non autonomes un problème international, il sera possible de passer au stade des réalisations concrètes.

96. Pour pouvoir rechercher un terrain d'entente, il faut tout d'abord poser en principe que les Membres administrants ne peuvent décider unilatéralement si un territoire est devenu autonome et que cette décision doit être prise, d'un commun accord, après consultation, par ces Membres et l'Assemblée générale. La liste de facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'un ensemble d'indications générales, dont l'application est fonction des réalités politiques variables de chaque territoire.

97. D'autre part, M. López estime que le problème de la cessation de la communication de renseignements comporte un double aspect : dans certains cas, les territoires non autonomes peuvent estimer qu'en continuant de communiquer des renseignements à leur sujet, la Puissance administrante fait douter de leur autonomie réelle, ce qui peut froisser les susceptibilités nationales des populations intéressées. Dans d'autres cas, les Puissances administrantes peuvent chercher à dissimuler par ce moyen la situation réelle du territoire dont elles prétendent qu'il est devenu autonome.

98. La délégation des Philippines croit que le projet de résolution du Brésil constitue le cadre dans lequel l'accord pourra intervenir. Elle espère qu'il sera étudié dans un esprit de bonne volonté et que les difficultés de principe posées par le paragraphe 3 pourront ainsi être résolues.

99. En terminant, M. López souligne que les décisions de la Commission ne pourront être fécondes que si l'on aboutit à un accord fondé sur les réalités politiques.

100. Le PRESIDENT annonce la clôture de la liste des orateurs qui demandent à intervenir dans la discussion générale et invite les délégations qui veulent expliquer leur vote à se faire inscrire.

La séance est levée à 13 h. 20.

Mardi 6 octobre 1953
à 15 h. 25

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]..... 73

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428, A/C.4/L.272, A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, A/C.4/L.274] (suite)

[Point 33 *]

1. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) tient à répondre aux questions que le représentant de la Belgique a posées à la 326^{ème} séance. Il rappelle qu'au moment où l'argument de la Belgique avait été présenté, à la septième session de l'Assemblée générale, il avait été reconnu que le Guatemala n'assumait aucune responsabilité en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte. M. Mendoza estime qu'il convient néanmoins de répondre à une thèse adroite, qui tend à détourner la Commission de son objectif véritable.

2. En fait, l'argument de la Belgique a été discuté à San-Francisco. La question avait surgi au cours de l'examen de la classification des territoires dépendants et il avait été précisé clairement que "les populations qui ne sont pas encore en état de se diriger elles-mêmes, dans les conditions difficiles du monde moderne" mentionnées dans une première version de l'Article 73 de la Charte n'étaient pas les populations vivant à l'intérieur des frontières métropolitaines d'un Etat quelconque. M. Mendoza donne lecture d'extraits du document de travail établi par le Secrétariat sur la définition de la notion de complète autonomie (A/AC.67/L.1), où sont cités les passages des documents officiels des réunions de San-Francisco, au cours desquelles la déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes a fait l'objet d'un examen, d'où il ressort que cette question a été soulevée et réglée. Le sous-comité de rédaction qui a rédigé cette partie de la Charte a certainement tenu compte de ces débats lors de l'établissement de la version définitive de l'Article 73. L'affirmation du représentant de la Belgique, selon laquelle le membre de phrase "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes" peut s'appliquer aux territoires qui font partie de la métropole, se trouve donc réfutée si l'on se reporte aux intentions exprimées par les auteurs de la Charte.

3. Sir Douglas COPLAND (Australie) déclare que le projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) tend à rapprocher les deux points de vue divergents qui se sont manifestés à la Commission; à ce titre, il mérite de retenir l'attention de la Commission. Il convient de ne pas oublier que les Membres administrants ont pris l'initiative de se consacrer au progrès des populations des territoires non autonomes et ont pris, librement aussi, l'engagement de communiquer à l'Assemblée générale des renseignements relatifs aux conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction dans ces territoires. L'Australie a elle-même connu la transition de la dépendance à l'autonomie complète; elle est donc en mesure de comprendre que le problème est extrêmement complexe et qu'il n'est pas possible de formuler de règles absolues. Le représentant de l'Australie demande à la Commission d'examiner le projet de résolution du Brésil en tenant compte des difficultés qui ont surgi à propos de la définition de l'autonomie complète; il propose que la Commission renonce à trouver une définition juridique. La délégation australienne considérera cette résolution non pas comme une interprétation juridique définitive de l'autonomie, mais plutôt comme une formule dans le cadre de laquelle elle pourra s'acquitter de ses responsabilités envers le territoire non autonome dont elle est responsable.

4. L'objection la plus importante contre la liste de facteurs contenue dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/2428) réside en ce que l'indépendance y est considérée comme critère de l'autonomie complète. La délégation australienne estime que l'indépendance est sans rapport avec la question de l'autonomie. L'indépendance est un attribut externe alors que l'autonomie est un attribut interne, dont la réalisation est normalement suivie de l'indépendance extérieure. Toutefois, un territoire peut être autonome sans être indépendant, tout comme il peut être indépendant sans être autonome. Le rapport reconnaît aussi que le Comité ad hoc n'a pas été en mesure de définir l'autonomie complète. En conséquence, la Commission devra veiller, lors de l'examen du projet de résolution du Brésil, à ne pas donner l'impression de l'unanimité sur une question qui, en réalité, provoque un désaccord fondamental. Enfin, le rapport fait ressortir clairement que la liste de facteurs ne peut servir qu'à titre indicatif, mais qu'elle ne doit pas être considérée comme une série de règles absolues.

5. Les paragraphes 1 et 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil prennent acte des conclusions du rapport du Comité ad hoc et approuvent la liste de facteurs contenue dans le rapport. La délégation australienne peut difficilement accepter le paragraphe 2, parce qu'elle estime qu'il est inutile d'approuver la liste si, dans le paragraphe premier, on se borne à prendre acte des conclusions du rapport.

6. Le paragraphe 6 du dispositif du projet de résolution semble être fondé sur l'hypothèse que la réalisation de l'autonomie est un acte complet. La délégation australienne estime qu'en fait l'autonomie s'atteint par étapes et sous des formes diverses. Etant donné que le Comité ad hoc n'a pas été en mesure de définir l'"autonomie complète", la délégation australienne ne peut approuver le paragraphe 6. Les Etats Membres qui se sont déclarés responsables de certains territoires non autonomes se sont engagés à communiquer des renseignements sur les conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction dans ces territoires. Le Comité des renseignements a tout pouvoir pour juger si les renseignements communiqués sont suffisants et pertinents. Toutefois, si le Comité des renseignements devait déclarer qu'un Membre administrant doit continuer à communiquer ces renseignements, malgré l'accord qu'il a conclu avec un territoire non autonome au sujet de toutes les questions sur lesquelles des renseignements doivent être communiqués, cela équivaldrait à demander audit Membre de supprimer l'autonomie convenue. Un territoire qui exerce un contrôle absolu sur les questions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction à l'intérieur de ses frontières est en mesure d'affirmer que le Membre administrant n'a pas le droit de continuer à rendre compte de ces questions à l'Assemblée générale. Si l'Assemblée générale exige que l'on continue à lui adresser des rapports de ce genre, elle n'encouragera pas l'autonomie dans les territoires non autonomes, ni n'aidera les Membres administrants à s'acquitter de leurs obligations.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

7. Les paragraphes 7 et 8 du dispositif sont trop précis; la question des facteurs a été examinée à maintes reprises et si, compte tenu de l'expérience, la liste est jugée insuffisante, il est possible de conclure un arrangement au terme duquel elle sera révisée au bout de cinq ans ou de toute autre période dont on pourra convenir.

8. Malheureusement, le projet de résolution du Brésil a fait l'objet de toute une série d'amendements importants, présentés conjointement par un certain nombre de délégations (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1). Telle qu'elle serait amendée, cette résolution correspondrait à un point de vue diamétralement opposé à celui que les Membres administrants sont accusés de défendre. Le représentant de l'Australie invite la Commission à s'efforcer de parvenir à un compromis raisonnable sur cette question, de crainte que l'Assemblée générale n'adopte une résolution à laquelle il serait impossible de donner effet.

9. M. FRAZAO (Brésil) tient à répéter que la délégation brésilienne soutient, comme elle l'a toujours fait par le passé, que la décision concernant la cessation de la communication de renseignements sur un territoire non autonome appartient en dernier ressort à l'Assemblée générale.

10. De l'avis de la délégation brésilienne, il ne faut pas voir dans la Charte un accord multilatéral emportant certaines obligations juridiques. Elle était bien un contrat au moment où on l'a signée, mais elle a cessé de l'être. La Charte est un acte constitutif, qui détermine la compétence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies vis-à-vis des territoires non autonomes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a assumé certaines des attributions des parties contractantes. Ses objectifs sont plus que la somme des objectifs des parties contractantes. Cette conception de l'institution est familière pour les pays où l'on a adopté les principes du Code Napoléon. C'est sur ce concept que le représentant du Brésil fonde sa déclaration relative à la juridiction institutionnelle des Nations Unies sur les territoires non autonomes.

11. M. Frazão estime que les amendements contenus dans le document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1 ne sont pas des amendements à proprement parler. Il est néanmoins disposé à accepter l'amendement premier.

12. Il ne saurait par contre approuver l'amendement 2, qui tend à supprimer le quatrième considérant du projet de résolution brésilien; à son avis, en effet, le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes ne peut pas être considéré comme un facteur ou interprété de façon différente selon les cas. Il faut redonner au droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes son rang de postulat.

13. M. Frazão ne saurait davantage accepter l'amendement 5, qui ne fait que rétablir l'ancienne confusion entre principes généraux et circonstances propres à chaque cas.

14. Il n'a aucune objection à opposer à l'amendement 3 et pense même qu'il améliore le texte brésilien.

15. En ce qui concerne l'amendement 4, la délégation brésilienne approuve les termes du paragraphe 2 du dispositif de la résolution 648 (VII) de l'Assemblée générale, à savoir que chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres. Quant à la question de compétence, il ne peut faire de doute que le paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution brésilien signifie que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider si un territoire est ou n'est plus visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. La conclusion est indubitable, mais on a jugé préférable, étant donné les conflits d'opinions que cette question soulève à la Commission, de ne pas le dire catégoriquement de manière à éviter toute friction. Dans sa résolution 222 (III), l'Assemblée générale a déclaré que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit nécessairement être informée de toute modification intervenue dans le statut de l'un quelconque des territoires non autonomes, afin qu'il soit possible de décider s'il y a lieu de poursuivre ou d'interrompre la communication de renseignements concernant ce territoire. De toute évidence, c'est là une obligation pour le Membre administrant et c'est à l'Assemblée générale qu'il appartient de décider. Il faut que les membres de la Quatrième Commission abordent la question à la lumière des principes généraux en cause, au lieu de chercher à marquer des points au cours du débat. La délégation brésilienne ne voit donc en principe aucun inconvénient — bien que cet amendement lui paraisse inutile — à ce que l'on remplace les mots "afin que l'on puisse décider" par les mots "afin que l'Assemblée générale puisse décider", au paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution brésilien. La rédaction qu'elle a proposée dit la même chose sans heurter les Membres administrants.

16. En ce qui concerne l'amendement 6 qui vise à ajouter deux nouveaux paragraphes, les paragraphes 5 et 6, M. Frazão estime que le texte brésilien dit la même chose, de façon plus heureuse et en termes plus généraux. Les aspirations des populations doivent être connues, non seulement dans le cas où il y a association, mais dans tous les cas, y compris l'intégration dans le territoire métropolitain. Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution brésilien recommande déjà d'accorder une importance primordiale aux éléments qui prouveraient que la population intéressée a exercé son droit à disposer d'elle-même. En insistant sur le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes dans certains cas particuliers, les auteurs de l'amendement affaiblissent plutôt la portée générale de ce principe, qui doit être une considération primordiale dans tous les cas. Le nouveau paragraphe 6 proposé dans l'amendement a tendance à grouper un trop grand nombre d'idées dans un seul paragraphe. Il est un peu illogique d'approuver la liste des facteurs tout en laissant entendre que les trois formes d'autonomie n'ont pas la même valeur. La délégation brésilienne reconnaît que le but de l'évolution politique dans les territoires non autonomes doit être l'indépendance complète et la qualité de Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies; mais il n'en reste pas moins que le Chapitre XI de la Charte contient la notion d'autonomie sur le plan intérieur, forme de souveraineté politique interne qui n'est pas encore l'indépendance. Un Etat pourrait se sentir en droit, en s'appuyant sur le Chapitre XI, de ne plus communiquer de renseignements lorsqu'une population a librement choisi un système d'intégration ou d'association qui la laisse libre d'orienter sa politique intérieure tout en laissant à un autre Etat les attributs de la souveraineté sur le plan des relations internationales. Le paragraphe 6 proposé remet donc en question un point que le Comité ad hoc a déjà réglé.

17. La délégation brésilienne est disposée à accepter les amendements 7 et 8 qui améliorent le texte brésilien.

18. M. FRAZÃO ne comprend pas le sens de l'amendement 9, qui tend à modifier comme suit le paragraphe 7 du projet de résolution brésilien: "Charge le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes d'étudier toute documentation qui...". Il est disposé à accepter cet amendement si ce dernier vise simplement à abrégier le texte, mais non pas s'il vise à écarter les dispositions du paragraphe 2 de la résolution 448 (V). La délégation brésilienne estime que, lorsqu'il s'agit de favoriser le progrès des territoires non autonomes, le Comité des renseignements a un rôle important à jouer, rôle que l'on ne doit pas chercher à amoindrir.

19. M. FRAZÃO est d'avis que le texte du dernier paragraphe proposé dans l'amendement 10 semble mettre en doute par avance la valeur de la liste de facteurs; il préfère donc le texte initial, à savoir le paragraphe 8 du projet de résolution brésilien.

20. Le représentant du Brésil espère qu'après avoir entendu ses explications, les Membres administrants accepteront le texte brésilien. Il espère également qu'ils voudront bien faire preuve de bonne volonté, consentir quelques concessions et, par là même, inaugurer une ère nouvelle dans les relations entre les Membres administrants et les Membres non administrants.

21. M. KOUTCHKAROV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) déclare que si la délégation de l'URSS souscrit d'une manière générale à la première partie de la liste de facteurs approuvée par le Comité ad hoc, elle ne peut accepter les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste, qui ne lui donnent aucunement satisfaction. En effet, ces parties n'envisagent pas que les territoires non autonomes deviennent finalement des Etats indépendants et souverains; en outre, elles permettent que leur souveraineté soit limitée et que d'autres interviennent dans leurs affaires intérieures. C'est pourquoi M. Koutchkarov ne peut approuver le quatrième considérant du projet de résolution du Brésil. Il votera contre l'adoption de toutes les parties du projet de résolution qui impliqueraient que la Commission approuve la liste de facteurs dans son ensemble, mais pour l'adoption des paragraphes 1, 4, 5, 6 et 8. Il demande qu'il soit procédé au vote paragraphe par paragraphe.

22. M. SPITS (Pays-Bas) n'élève, d'une manière générale, aucune objection contre le dispositif du projet de résolution, dans la mesure où ce texte charge le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes de tenir compte de la liste de facteurs dans l'étude de cas concrets. Lorsqu'un Membre administrant cesse de communiquer des renseignements il est normal, ne fût-ce d'ailleurs que par courtoisie, qu'il informe l'Assemblée générale des motifs de sa décision. Il est logique aussi que le Comité des renseignements examine ces motifs. Mais l'Assemblée générale n'en a pas pour autant qualité pour approuver ou désapprouver le Membre administrant qui cesse de communiquer des renseignements. Plusieurs représentants ont fondé la compétence de l'Assemblée sur les termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte, assimilé par eux à un accord international. M. Spits est disposé dans une certaine mesure à admettre le bien-fondé de cette affirmation pourvu que l'on reconnaisse que le Chapitre XI a été introduit comme un énoncé de principes. L'imprécision du Chapitre XI est un fait bien connu. Aussi la Commission aurait-elle intérêt à s'en remettre à la pratique pour dissiper ses doutes. En 1946, les Membres administrants ont indiqué les territoires au sujet desquels ils étaient disposés à communiquer des renseignements et, par sa résolution 66 (I), l'Assemblée générale a pris note — sans l'approuver — de la liste de ces territoires. Dans ces conditions, on voit mal pourquoi la décision de cesser de communiquer des renseignements devrait être soumise à l'approbation de l'Assemblée. C'est là l'objection principale que la délégation néerlandaise élève contre le projet de résolution. De plus, le paragraphe 6 est rédigé en termes vagues et équivoques. C'est pourquoi, tout en appréciant les excellentes intentions de la délégation du Brésil, la délégation des Pays-Bas devra voter contre le projet de résolution et, en vertu des mêmes principes, contre les amendements des onze Puissances.

23. M. SCOTT (Nouvelle-Zélande) demande si les mesures proposées à l'Assemblée générale tiennent compte des réalités. La délégation néo-zélandaise a eu maintes fois l'occasion de définir son attitude et il n'a pas jugé nécessaire d'intervenir dans la discussion générale. M. Scott espérait que la Commission serait disposée à adopter simplement la liste de facteurs et à reconnaître la difficulté que présente la définition d'expressions telles que "territoires non autonomes" et "l'autonomie complète". L'absence de définitions valables de ces expressions sera toujours une cause de mésentente entre les Membres administrants et les autres Etats Membres, et il serait plus sage de ne pas aller aussi loin que le propose le projet de résolution et plus spécialement aussi loin que le proposent les amendements envisagés. Il est certainement contraire aux intérêts des populations non autonomes de perpétuer le désaccord qui oppose les Membres administrants aux autres Etats Membres. C'est pourquoi la délégation néo-zélandaise n'a pas répondu à la demande par laquelle le Secrétaire général invitait le Gouvernement de la Nouvelle-Zélande à présenter des observations au sujet de la liste de facteurs.

24. Au sujet de la question principale, qui est celle de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale, la position de la délégation néo-zélandaise est très nette. Chaque Etat Membre est seul compétent pour décider si les territoires placés sous sa souveraineté ou sa juridiction tombent sous le coup du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et, pareillement, pour décider du moment auquel ces territoires ont atteint dans leur développement le stade auquel les obligations que lui impose l'Article 73 cessent de s'appliquer. C'est pourquoi M. Scott votera contre l'adoption de tout paragraphe qui impliquerait que la responsabilité d'une telle décision pourrait être partagée entre les Membres administrants et l'Assemblée générale.

25. Mme SKOTTSBERG-AHMAN (Suède) annonce que la délégation suédoise est disposée à approuver la liste de facteurs dans sa teneur actuelle et à appuyer le projet de résolution du Brésil dans la mesure où il recommande que cette liste serve de guide. La délégation suédoise a toujours soutenu que la liste ne devrait servir qu'à titre indicatif et que l'on devrait tenir compte des circonstances propres à chaque cas concret. C'est l'idée qui est énoncée au paragraphe 3. Mais le paragraphe 6, par une sorte d'inconséquence, semble vouloir poser une règle rigoureuse, qui ne permettrait pas de tenir compte des circonstances particulières à chaque cas. De plus, l'impossibilité de définir l'expression "l'autonomie complète" aux fins de l'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte est un fait reconnu; c'est pourquoi il est douteux qu'on puisse valablement faire de l'acquisition de ce statut qui échappe à toute définition la condition préalable de l'autonomie économique, sociale ou culturelle d'un territoire. Pour toutes ces raisons, la délégation suédoise votera contre le paragraphe 6, et, si celui-ci est maintenu, elle s'abstiendra de voter sur le projet de résolution dans son ensemble.

26. Les amendements des onze Puissances soulignent la compétence de l'Assemblée générale sans presque faire état de celle des Membres administrants. C'est sur ce point surtout que les vues des membres de la Commission diffèrent et il ne serait pas raisonnable d'élargir et de perpétuer le fossé qui sépare les Membres administrants des Etats Membres qui n'administrent pas de territoires non autonomes. Il n'y aurait aucun intérêt à adopter des définitions rigoureuses que les Membres administrants, dont la coopération est pourtant indispensable, n'accepteraient certainement pas. C'est pourquoi la délégation suédoise votera contre les amendements. S'ils sont acceptés, elle sera tenue de voter contre le projet de résolution dans son ensemble.

27. M. PATTERSON (Canada) déclare que sa délégation reconnaît pleinement la valeur des travaux du Comité ad hoc et n'a aucune objection de principe à formuler contre l'étude d'une liste de facteurs ni contre la liste elle-même, car une telle liste pourrait faciliter l'examen de certaines des questions dont s'occupent la Commission et le Conseil de tutelle et qui pourrait être de quelque utilité pour les Puissances administrantes. Dans ces conditions, la délégation canadienne peut accepter les paragraphes 1 et 2 du projet de résolution brésilien.

28. Pour les raisons que le représentant canadien a exposées devant la Quatrième Commission (273^{ème} séance) lors de la septième session, M. Patterson se voit contraint de s'élever contre le principe énoncé dans le paragraphe 6 et contre ceux qui sont sous-entendus dans les paragraphes 3 et 7. Les représentants d'un pays tel que le Canada peuvent difficilement accepter le principe énoncé dans le paragraphe 6. En effet, le Canada est un pays qui, à un certain stade de son évolution constitutionnelle, jouissait d'une autonomie complète dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement, sans cependant s'administrer complètement lui-même. En ce qui concerne la rédaction des paragraphes 3 et 7, la délégation canadienne ne saurait admettre que l'Organisation des Nations Unies soit seule habilitée à décider si un territoire est encore ou n'est plus non autonome ou que tous les Membres administrants doivent continuer à transmettre des renseignements jusqu'au moment où les objectifs du Chapitre XI de la Charte ont été atteints. Les territoires non autonomes doivent normalement progresser par étapes dans la voie de l'autonomie et, à un moment donné, ils parviendront à un stade où les Membres administrants n'exerceront plus un contrôle effectif et réel sur les domaines à propos desquels ils doivent fournir des renseignements. En toute logique, ils ne seraient plus tenus alors de fournir des renseignements, ce qui n'impliquerait pas pour autant qu'ils cesseraient de devoir, conformément au Chapitre XI, favoriser l'accès à l'autonomie complète du territoire en cause.

29. La délégation canadienne est reconnaissante à la délégation brésilienne de l'effort qu'elle a fait pour parvenir à un compromis et est heureuse que le projet de résolution n'envisage pas une étude permanente des facteurs par un Comité spécial. La délégation canadienne doute vivement que l'on puisse parvenir à une solution plus satisfaisante en poursuivant les études. Néanmoins, les objections que M. Patterson a formulées intéressent des problèmes tellement fondamentaux que sa délégation ne saurait appuyer le projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil tel qu'il est rédigé actuellement. Sous réserve de ces observations, elle est prête à approuver la liste de facteurs qui figure dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc, à condition qu'on l'utilise uniquement comme guide et qu'elle ne soit pas considérée comme une formule rigide que l'Assemblée générale appliquerait d'une manière automatique à tous les territoires non autonomes. La délégation canadienne s'opposera aux amendements des onze Puissances et à tout autre amendement à la proposition de la délégation brésilienne qui pourraient aller à l'encontre des principes fondamentaux qui l'ont inspirée.

30. M. NAJAR (Israël) pense que le mandat de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, tel qu'il se trouve défini tout au long de la Charte, ainsi que les attributions dont l'Assemblée générale est investie en vertu de l'Article 10 sont suffisamment étendus pour que la Commission n'ait pas à discuter de la compétence et des pouvoirs de l'Assemblée. Il semble qu'on ait généralement tendance à confondre la compétence et les pouvoirs de l'Assemblée. Il est évident que l'Assemblée reçoit les renseignements prévus par l'Article 73 ainsi que des documents relatifs à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements, afin de pouvoir exprimer un avis. Ce n'est donc pas sa compétence en ce qui concerne le vote de recommandations qui est en cause, mais ses pouvoirs et ses droits touchant la possibilité de traduire ces recommandations dans les faits.

31. Au cours de la discussion générale, M. Najar a fait savoir que la délégation israélienne préférerait examiner séparément chaque cas de cessation de transmission de renseignements, compte tenu des circonstances particulières. D'une manière générale, si l'Assemblée désire conserver son prestige et continuer à travailler de manière efficace il faut que les recommandations qu'elle formule tiennent compte des réalités. En adoptant des résolutions sur le plan théorique, l'Assemblée risquerait d'entrer en conflit avec la réalité.

32. Dans le cas dont il s'agit, les Membres administrants pensent qu'il appartient à eux seuls de décider s'ils doivent continuer ou non à transmettre des renseignements. Si l'Assemblée devait affirmer dans une résolution solennelle et de principe que les pouvoirs dont il est question lui appartiennent exclusivement, elle pourrait fort bien découvrir que l'évolution constitutionnelle des territoires non autonomes ne se fait pas conformément aux résolutions qu'elle adopte. Ce serait là chose fort regrettable. L'Assemblée générale devrait hésiter à s'aventurer dans des conflits déclarés de ce genre et les Membres administrants et non administrants feraient bien d'observer la vieille maxime diplomatique "Toujours négocier".

33. La délégation israélienne aurait préféré que l'on se bornât à adopter une liste de facteurs, différant toute décision sur les questions de principe théoriques soulevées dans le projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil jusqu'au moment où la Commission aura appliqué le critère des facteurs aux deux cas concrets de cessation de renseignements qu'elle examinera prochainement. Bien qu'elle doute de l'opportunité d'affirmer en principe la compétence de l'Assemblée générale, plutôt qu'à l'occasion de chaque cas particulier, la délégation israélienne appréciera le projet de résolution sur ce point, tout en réservant sa position en ce qui concerne la définition des termes. Une telle définition équivaldrait à interpréter la Charte, ce qui ne devrait pas être fait dans une résolution, d'autant plus que plusieurs délégations ont déclaré à l'Organisation des Nations Unies qu'il serait sage de demander sur les questions controversées l'avis de la Cour internationale de Justice.

34. M. MENDEZ (Philippines) déclare que la discussion a fait nettement apparaître que l'Assemblée générale doit nécessairement intervenir dans la décision relative à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements. Il est évident que si l'Article 73, e, prévoit la transmission de renseignements, c'est pour aider l'Assemblée générale à déterminer si la situation dans les territoires non autonomes peut être jugée comme satisfaisante, compte tenu des dispositions de la Charte. Il en résulte implicitement que l'Assemblée générale a le droit de décider à quel moment il n'est plus nécessaire de continuer à communiquer des renseignements. On ne trouve rien dans le Chapitre XI qui permette de prouver que les Membres administrants peuvent agir de façon unilatérale. Quoi qu'il en soit, des échanges de vues et des accords valent toujours mieux que des décisions unilatérales et l'on pourrait améliorer le paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution brésilien en ajoutant les mots "dans les consultations auxquelles elles procéderont" après les mots "à l'Assemblée générale de prendre pour guide" et en ajoutant, après les mots "que l'on puisse décider", les mots "d'un commun accord".

35. M. LANNUNG (Danemark) indique qu'il n'a pas l'intention d'étudier quant au fond les amendements proposés, mais il aimerait que leurs auteurs lui fournissent quelques éclaircissements.

36. L'amendement 3 semble impliquer que la liste des facteurs est acceptée telle qu'elle est, ou avec des amendements d'importance secondaire; en fait, cette liste a déjà été acceptée par trois des auteurs des amendements, le Guatemala, l'Irak et le Venezuela, qui étaient membres du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs. Cependant, le nouveau paragraphe 6 que l'on propose d'ajouter semble être, sinon en complète contradiction avec l'amendement 3, tout au moins illogique. L'orateur propose de donner à ce paragraphe la rédaction suivante: "Considère que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance, ou encore en s'associant à un Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats, à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue, que les territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent atteindre l'autonomie complète."

37. M. DJERDJA (Yougoslavie) déclare que les amendements proposés à la liste des facteurs (A/C.4/L.274), que sa délégation propose avec d'autres, contiennent les propositions constructives qui ont été faites par différentes délégations au cours du débat consacré au rapport du Comité ad hoc. Ces amendements sont inspirés par la conviction que si l'essentiel du travail de rédaction de la liste des facteurs a été fait, il importe néanmoins de mettre cette liste au point pour tenir compte des hautes responsabilités de l'Assemblée générale et de l'esprit de notre époque.

38. L'élaboration d'une liste des facteurs n'est pas une œuvre abstraite ou théorique. Le but essentiel d'une telle liste, qui doit être conçue sous une forme aussi utile et aussi pratique que possible, est d'aider l'Organisation des Nations Unies à protéger les territoires non autonomes. Comme M. Djerdja l'a dit déjà, les populations de ces territoires ont placé de grands espoirs dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui ne doit pas les décevoir ou créer une situation qui contraindrait les populations intéressées à suivre une autre voie et à rechercher des solutions différentes, ce qui pourrait avoir des conséquences graves pour la paix mondiale.

39. Il est possible que certaines délégations jugent que les amendements proposés sont inacceptables et ne peuvent être conciliés avec leur manière de voir et leur interprétation de la Charte. Néanmoins, la délégation yougoslave estime qu'il est de son devoir, aujourd'hui plus que jamais, de défendre la cause des populations des territoires non autonomes, à la fois pour des raisons de principe et pour des raisons pratiques, aussi longtemps que ce problème demeurera à l'ordre du jour. La délégation yougoslave serait très heureuse si ce problème disparaissait de l'ordre du jour du fait que ces populations auraient acquis un statut égal à celui des peuples libres du monde, mais puisqu'elles n'y sont pas encore parvenues la seule solution possible est de lutter dans le cadre de la Charte, et en tenant compte des exigences de notre temps, pour améliorer la situation des populations des territoires non autonomes et pour hâter leur évolution vers un avenir meilleur.

40. La délégation yougoslave est convaincue que les amendements proposés rendraient la liste des facteurs plus claire et plus précise. Un seul amendement a été proposé pour la première partie de la liste et cet amendement rend plus claire l'idée qu'il s'agit d'exprimer sans en modifier la substance. La proposition tendant à changer la place des facteurs A. 1 et A. 2 dans la deuxième partie de la liste est due au fait que de nombreuses délégations ont souligné que l'opinion des populations des territoires non autonomes devait constituer le facteur fondamental. Ce principe justifie l'introduction d'un nouveau facteur A. 2, liberté de choix, car il est bien évident que les populations doivent pour exprimer leurs opinions en toute liberté avoir le choix entre plusieurs possibilités, y compris l'indépendance.

41. C'est de ce même facteur que découle la nécessité d'introduire le facteur A. 3 et dans une certaine mesure d'en modifier le libellé, étant donné les conditions dans lesquelles les décisions modifiant le statut des territoires non autonomes sont fréquemment prises.

42. Les mêmes observations s'appliquent également aux amendements proposés à la troisième partie de la liste des facteurs, qui serait ainsi rendue un peu plus précise et plus complète. L'opinion librement exprimée des populations suppose l'association sur un pied d'égalité et il s'ensuit qu'il ne saurait y avoir d'association sur la base de la constitution de la métropole.

43. M. KHOMAN (Thaïlande) estime que la liste des facteurs pourrait utilement servir de guide à l'Assemblée générale et aux Membres administrants lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer le statut d'un territoire et s'il y a lieu de continuer à communiquer des renseignements sur ce territoire. C'est de toute évidence le Membre administrant intéressé, chargé de conduire les affaires d'un territoire conformément aux principes énoncés par la Charte, qui doit décider s'il y a lieu de continuer à transmettre des renseignements. Cependant, lorsqu'une décision a été prise, elle peut être modifiée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies conformément au principe énoncé à l'Article 73; dans le cas contraire, l'Organisation des Nations Unies renoncerait à exercer l'une des attributions essentielles que lui confère la Charte. La Thaïlande est prête à donner son appui au principe selon lequel l'autonomie complète ne saurait être soumise à certaines conditions, mais, s'il est exact que l'autonomie a plusieurs aspects, elle doit porter sur les domaines politique, économique et social.

44. M. Khoman déclare qu'il votera pour le projet de résolution proposé par le Brésil. Il n'est pas en mesure d'accepter certains des amendements proposés et en particulier ceux qui figurent au paragraphe 6. Si le vote sur ces amendements a lieu par division, il s'abstiendra sur certains d'entre eux.

45. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique), répondant à la critique que le représentant du Danemark a formulée contre le nouveau projet de paragraphe 6, précise que les mots "en accédant à l'indépendance" sont précédés dans le document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1 des mots "avant tout", rédaction qui ne figurait pas dans le premier projet d'amendements auquel s'est référé le représentant du Danemark.

46. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) propose qu'étant donné la difficulté et l'importance de cette question, la discussion soit renvoyée au jeudi 8 octobre.

47. M. DE HOLTE CASTELLO (Colombie) appuie cette proposition.

48. M. L. S. BOKHARI (Pakistan) se réfère aux observations formulées par le représentant de la France à la séance précédente et explique qu'en employant l'expression "liste noire", lors de son intervention à la 323ème séance, il n'avait aucunement l'intention d'être désobligeant. Il reconnaît que les Puissances administrantes accomplissent dans les territoires non autonomes une tâche honorable et difficile. Il avait simplement voulu dire que si le nom d'un territoire demeurerait indéfiniment sur la liste des territoires non autonomes, on pourrait arriver à concevoir certains doutes.

La séance est levée à 17 h. 25.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

51 QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 328^e

SEANCE

Jeudi 8 octobre 1953,
à 10 h. 50

New-York

SOMMAIRE

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]..... 79

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428, A/C.4/L.272, A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, A/C.4/L.274, A/C.4/L.275] (suite)

[Point 33 *]

1. Le PRESIDENT appelle l'attention des membres de la Commission sur un amendement des Philippines (A/C.4/L.275) au projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272). Il précise que cet amendement avait été présenté verbalement à la séance précédente, c'est-à-dire avant l'expiration des délais fixés par la Commission.

2. Le Président donne la parole au représentant de l'Iran, qui avait réservé son droit d'intervenir dans la discussion générale.

3. M. GHASSEMZADEH (Iran) souligne que la question des facteurs touche de très près des dizaines de millions d'hommes, qui, malgré les différences qui existent entre eux quant à la race, la langue, la religion, les mœurs, la culture ou la situation géographique du territoire qu'ils habitent, n'en constituent pas moins une partie inaliénable de la communauté humaine. S'inspirant des principes que l'on a pu énoncer à la suite de la deuxième guerre mondiale, les Etats Membres qui ont participé à la Conférence de San-Francisco ont consacré le Chapitre XI de la Charte aux territoires non autonomes et les deux chapitres suivants au régime international de tutelle. En ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes, les Membres administrants ont reconnu, en vertu de l'Article 73, le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires; ils ont accepté comme une mission sacrée de favoriser leur prospérité. A cette fin, ils ont pris vis-à-vis de la communauté internationale les engagements énumérés aux alinéas a et b de l'Article 73. Pour que l'Organisation des Nations Unies puisse contrôler l'exécution de ces dispositions il a été prévu que les Membres administrants communiqueraient régulièrement au Secrétaire général les renseignements visés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73.

4. Pour déterminer le sens véritable de l'Article 73 et connaître les vues et les intentions des Membres administrants à ce sujet, il suffit de se reporter aux déclarations prononcées à San-Francisco par le représentant des Pays-Bas et le représentant du Royaume-Uni. On peut en retrouver le texte dans le document A/AC.67/L.1 (par. 46, 48 et 49). Le représentant des Pays-Bas avait déclaré que lorsque le développement des institutions économiques, sociales et politiques d'un territoire dépendant atteignait un certain stade, on parvenait inévitablement au but. L'instauration d'un gouvernement autonome pouvait prendre la forme d'une association permanente sur un pied d'égalité au sein d'une même communauté ou celle de la création d'une nation indépendante, selon ce que décidaient les habitants du territoire intéressé. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni avait comparé les empires coloniaux normalement constitués à une échelle, dont les peuples non autonomes gravissaient les divers degrés au fur et à mesure qu'ils atteignaient une plus grande autonomie. Il avait cité l'exemple de l'Empire britannique et du Commonwealth, où l'on trouvait des peuples primitifs qui ne pouvaient participer que dans une mesure très limitée à la gestion de leurs affaires, puis des territoires dont les peuples prenaient une part de plus en plus grande à l'administration de leur pays et dont certains jouissaient d'un degré élevé d'autonomie locale, et enfin, les grands dominions indépendants. Il avait ajouté que cette conception progressive, dynamique, était celle qui s'imposait, que les territoires dépendants ne pouvaient courir les risques que comporte une indépendance pour laquelle ils étaient mal préparés et qu'il fallait les entraîner progressivement à assurer la direction de leurs propres affaires afin qu'ils soient prêts à recevoir l'indépendance à laquelle ils accéderaient un jour.

5. La délégation iranienne estime elle aussi que des populations très arriérées ne peuvent prétendre à l'indépendance, ni même à l'autonomie complète, ces deux états devant être précédés d'une évolution politique, économique et sociale des populations intéressées. A cet égard, aucune divergence de vues ne peut exister entre Puissances administrantes et Puissances non administrantes. Cependant, les Puissances administrantes doivent reconnaître qu'en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte, elles se sont formellement engagées à préparer les peuples dépendants, si arriérés soient-ils, à l'autonomie complète et même à l'indépendance. Un peuple ne peut rester indéfiniment soumis à l'exploitation économique et à la domination politique d'un autre peuple. Le Chapitre XI ne peut aucunement être considéré comme une déclaration unilatérale des Puissances administrantes. Il contient des engagements vis-à-vis de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, il constitue une partie inaliénable de la Charte et, comme tous les autres chapitres, il a été signé par tous les Etats Membres et ratifié par leurs organes législatifs. En outre, conformément au principe — consacré par la Charte — du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, tous les peuples dépendants qui ont atteint un degré suffisant de développement pourront se déclarer indépendants.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

6. En ce qui concerne la définition de la notion d'autonomie complète, la délégation iranienne croit qu'il n'est pas possible de trouver une définition précise et complète qui soit applicable à tous les cas particuliers. Elle croit également que la liste des facteurs ne peut avoir que la valeur d'un ensemble d'indications générales et que chaque cas particulier devra être tranché à la lumière des circonstances qui lui sont propres.

7. Enfin, en ce qui concerne la question de compétence, le représentant de l'Iran déclare qu'on n'est pas fondé à invoquer le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte pour défendre la thèse de la compétence exclusive des Puissances administrantes; en effet, cette disposition ne s'applique qu'aux domaines dont il n'est pas question dans la Charte.

8. La délégation iranienne appuiera tout projet de résolution et tout amendement qui ne seront pas contraires aux vues que M. Ghassemzadeh vient d'exposer.

9. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) déclare que les auteurs de l'amendement commun (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) envisageaient tout d'abord de présenter un projet de résolution. Toutefois, comme la délégation du Brésil a été la première à déposer un texte sur le même sujet, le projet commun a pris, par la force des choses, la forme d'une série d'amendements. Les délégations en question ont également présenté une série d'amendements (A/C.4/L.274) à la liste de facteurs établie par le Comité ad hoc (A/2428, section VI). M. Espinosa y Prieto voudrait donner en premier lieu quelques explications sur cette dernière proposition, étant donné que le texte en a été distribué plus récemment que celui des amendements au projet de résolution du Brésil.

10. Les auteurs des amendements à la liste de facteurs ne pensent pas, contrairement à ce que préconise le représentant du Brésil, que la Commission puisse adopter la liste de facteurs sous sa forme actuelle. Cependant, quoi que les vives divergences de vues qui se sont manifestées lors du débat puissent permettre de penser, ces amendements n'apportent à la liste aucune modification profonde. Il s'agit, à quelques exceptions près, d'amendements de rédaction. C'est ainsi, par exemple, que les amendements communs visent à remplacer le texte qui figure au facteur A.4 du texte initial de la première partie par la formule suivante: "Défense nationale. Droit souverain d'assurer sa défense nationale." Cette formule convient mieux que la formule initiale pour indiquer qu'un Etat a accédé à l'indépendance, sans porter nullement atteinte au droit d'un Etat souverain de conclure des accords régionaux pour assurer sa défense. D'autres modifications de forme ont pour objet de faire passer dans la deuxième partie des facteurs qui sont énumérés dans la troisième, et inversement. C'est le cas, notamment, des facteurs relatifs aux considérations d'ordre géographique — actuellement inscrits dans la troisième partie, et du facteur relatif à la compétence en matière économique, sociale et culturelle — qui figure actuellement dans la deuxième partie. D'autre part, les amendements communs visent à changer l'ordre de certains facteurs selon leur degré d'importance et à modifier le titre de la deuxième et de la troisième parties: dans le texte initial, la deuxième et la troisième parties concernent toutes les deux une association à laquelle participe le territoire et il serait parfois difficile de déterminer si c'est la deuxième ou la troisième partie qui s'applique à un territoire donné. L'amendement commun dissipe toute confusion sur ce point.

11. Les amendements de fond sont au nombre de trois: ils concernent respectivement la liberté pour la population de choisir entre plusieurs possibilités, y compris l'indépendance, en vertu du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes; la limitation volontaire de souveraineté, disposition où il est précisé que la population d'un territoire qui s'est associé à la métropole conserve à tout moment la liberté de modifier ce statut en exprimant sa volonté par des voies démocratiques (une disposition analogue serait introduite dans la troisième partie); le droit de modifier le statut du territoire compte tenu de la question de savoir s'il fait ou non l'objet d'une revendication ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat.

12. Ces amendements ne constituent nullement une critique de l'excellent travail accompli par le Comité ad hoc; mais, étant donné l'importance de la liste de facteurs que la Commission est appelée à adopter, les auteurs des amendements communs ont estimé qu'ils ne pouvaient l'appuyer en toute conscience sans y apporter les modifications qu'ils jugeaient nécessaires.

13. M. Espinosa y Prieto en vient alors aux amendements des onze délégations (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) au projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272). Il tient tout d'abord à remercier le représentant de la France d'avoir reconnu que ces amendements avaient le mérite d'apporter de la clarté dans les travaux de la Commission. Si ces amendements ont recueilli un si large appui, c'est qu'ils sont purs de toute intransigeance et de toute hostilité. C'est ainsi qu'en ce qui concerne la question de compétence, le texte des amendements se borne à déclarer que l'Assemblée est compétente pour examiner les principes qui doivent guider l'Organisation et les Etats Membres en la matière et faire des recommandations à leur sujet, ce qui équivaut simplement à rappeler les pouvoirs indiscutables de l'Assemblée. M. Espinosa y Prieto pense que la question de savoir si l'Assemblée peut prendre une décision pourra être résolue, et que le malentendu qui s'est élevé à cet égard pourra être dissipé étant donné le désir de coopération et d'harmonie qui anime les membres de la Commission. De l'avis de très nombreuses délégations, il ne fait aucun doute qu'après avoir accepté certaines obligations vis-à-vis de l'Assemblée générale, les Puissances administrantes ne peuvent s'y soustraire par une action unilatérale. D'aucuns ont prétendu que les Puissances administrantes étaient seules compétentes, que le rôle de l'Assemblée se bornait à prendre acte de la déclaration par laquelle la Puissance administrante intéressée lui fait savoir qu'un territoire non autonome a cessé de relever du Chapitre XI, et que l'Assemblée ne pouvait ni étudier l'affaire, ni exprimer une opinion. Pour la délégation mexicaine, cet état de choses serait inconcevable et porterait atteinte au prestige de l'Organisation. Néanmoins, les amendements ne visent pas à conférer à l'Assemblée un pouvoir que la Charte ne lui aurait pas attribué. En vertu de ces amendements, l'Assemblée pourrait examiner chaque cas et se prononcer par une résolution; au cas où elle aboutirait à une conclusion contraire à celle de la Puissance administrante intéressée, l'Assemblée pourrait recommander à celle-ci de continuer à communiquer des renseignements. Si la Puissance administrante se refuse à suivre cette recommandation, perspective que la délégation mexicaine envisagerait avec le plus profond regret, rien ne peut l'y contraindre.

14. L'amendement 5 mentionne le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes; c'est à dessein que ce principe essentiel, qui doit régler le destin de l'humanité, a été réaffirmé. Au paragraphe 6 proposé dans l'amendement 6, les auteurs ont souligné que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance que les territoires non autonomes peuvent atteindre à l'autonomie complète; cependant, le texte n'exclut pas la possibilité d'une association du territoire avec un ou plusieurs Etats dans les conditions énumérées aux deuxième et troisième parties de la liste de facteurs. La délégation mexicaine apprécie comme ils le méritent les avantages d'un système analogue à celui du Commonwealth; cependant, elle préfère l'indépendance, expression d'un autre principe consacré dans la Charte et auquel les peuples de l'Amérique latine sont très profondément attachés. Des pays comme les Etats-Unis, la France, le Royaume-Uni, la Belgique, les Pays-Bas, dont les populations sont si profondément attachées à la notion d'indépendance et dont l'exemple a guidé les hommes luttant pour leur indépendance, porteraient atteinte à leur prestige s'ils semblaient refuser à d'autres territoires cette indépendance dont ils jouissent actuellement.

15. En terminant, M. Espinosa y Prieto tient à assurer les Membres administrants que les auteurs de l'amendement commun sont animés de la plus grande objectivité; ils ne sous-estiment pas l'œuvre accomplie par ces Membres, ni l'ampleur des problèmes qui se posent à eux tant en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes qu'en ce qui concerne l'opinion publique métropolitaine, qui accueille parfois avec une certaine défiance l'accès des peuples dépendants à l'autonomie.

16. Lord HUDSON (Royaume-Uni) ne peut cacher la surprise qu'il éprouve devant la tournure que les débats ont prise au cours des dernières séances. Nouveau venu à la Commission, le représentant du Royaume-Uni pensait participer à une discussion féconde dont les résultats auraient contribué, conformément à l'idéal humanitaire si élevé de la Charte des Nations Unies, à favoriser la prospérité des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, et à encourager dans leur tâche — souvent ingrate — les administrateurs qui s'efforcent d'améliorer la situation de ces territoires.

17. La question de l'établissement d'une liste de facteurs a déjà fait l'objet de longues recherches. Le dernier Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs a déposé un rapport (A/2428) que ses membres ont adopté à l'unanimité; au début de la discussion générale, la Commission paraissait généralement disposée à adopter la présente liste comme étant la plus satisfaisante qu'il fût possible d'élaborer actuellement. Il est donc fort surprenant de constater qu'un certain nombre de délégations — dont trois délégations qui faisaient partie du Comité ad hoc — ont proposé d'apporter à cette liste d'importants amendements (A/C.4/L.274). Si la Commission accepte de remettre ainsi en cause la liste établie par le Comité ad hoc, il est à craindre que les divergences de vues ne s'accroissent encore, car certains Etats Membres croient voir dans quelques-unes des thèses défendues devant la Commission une tentative d'inférence dans leurs affaires intérieures. Ces dissensions ne peuvent que porter atteinte à l'harmonie sans laquelle la Commission ne saurait faire œuvre utile. Si, d'autre part, la Commission — qui compte soixante membres — entreprend de reviser la liste de facteurs à laquelle un organe de huit membres s'est consacré si longtemps, les débats seront interminables. Pour parer à ce double danger, le représentant du Royaume-Uni invite instamment la Commission à se satisfaire de la liste de facteurs qui figure dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc et à ne pas mettre en péril par de longues et stériles délibérations le respect que des millions d'êtres humains ont à l'égard de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

18. Lord Hudson rend hommage à l'esprit de conciliation dont le représentant du Brésil et les orateurs qui ont appuyé le projet de résolution de la délégation brésilienne n'ont cessé de faire preuve. Il ne faut pas que les divergences de vues qui séparent les membres de la Commission empêchent cet organe de se consacrer à la mise en œuvre constructive des principes du Chapitre XI de la Charte. On peut d'ailleurs espérer que l'avenir apportera une solution aux problèmes qui paraissent actuellement si ardues.

19. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni invite donc le Président à mettre aux voix immédiatement le projet de résolution déposé par la délégation du Brésil et prie les membres de la Commission d'adopter le paragraphe 2 du dispositif de ce projet, ce qui implique le rejet de l'amendement 3 du document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1. De la sorte, la Commission adopterait la liste de facteurs telle qu'elle figure dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc.

20. M. LOPEZ (Philippines) estime que le moment est venu de mettre fin à l'étude de la question des facteurs et d'aborder le problème de leur mise en œuvre; en d'autres termes, il convient de quitter maintenant le plan théorique et juridique pour en venir au plan pratique et politique. Alors que les principes juridiques, par exemple ceux qui sont énoncés dans la liste de facteurs, doivent être formulés avec la plus grande précision et même avec un certain dogmatisme, l'application de ces mêmes principes exige une grande souplesse et la volonté de n'avancer que progressivement ou même de s'arrêter, s'il le faut, pour faire le point de la situation. Il suffirait à la Commission d'adopter le projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil pour effectuer cette transition, dont la nécessité paraît de plus en plus impérieuse. Cette décision aurait pour effet de consolider les résultats déjà obtenus par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et d'ouvrir la voie à de nouveaux progrès dans ce domaine.

21. M. López rappelle que l'Organisation des Nations Unies a déjà accompli une œuvre considérable en l'espace de huit ans et qu'elle exerce une influence toujours grandissante sur la destinée des territoires non autonomes. Le Chapitre XI de la Charte est comparable en importance à la Magna Carta, à la Déclaration d'indépendance et à la Déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen. Mais, contrairement à ces trois documents, il n'a pas été arraché par la force à un pouvoir despotique, il a été accordé librement et généreusement par les Puissances métropolitaines sous l'irrésistible impulsion de l'idéal pour lequel elles avaient combattu au cours de la deuxième guerre mondiale. Le Chapitre XI représente une grande victoire des forces morales et donne la mesure véritable de l'évolution de la philosophie politique au cours des derniers siècles. Si l'on envisage ce chapitre à la lumière de ces considérations, on verra qu'il n'y a aucune raison de désespérer de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, les divers comités spéciaux chargés de l'étude des facteurs, la Commission elle-même ont offert à l'opinion publique mondiale la possibilité de se faire entendre. Le processus qui conduit de l'élaboration des textes juridiques à leur mise en œuvre, avec toute la souplesse et le dynamisme indispensables, est lent; mais rien ne saurait l'arrêter.

22. C'est dans cet esprit que la délégation philippine a proposé d'apporter au projet de résolution du Brésil l'amendement qui figure dans le document A/C.4/L.275. L'heure n'est peut-être pas venue de trancher la question de compétence et de déterminer s'il appartient à la Puissance administrante seule ou à l'Assemblée générale de décider qu'un territoire a accédé ou non à l'autonomie. Il est plus sage d'adopter la présente liste de facteurs; les parties pourraient alors engager des consultations en s'inspirant de cette liste; dans ces échanges de vues, la raison et le bon sens l'emportent infailliblement sur le dogmatisme et l'intransigeance. C'est l'unique moyen pour la Commission de réconcilier les points de vues opposés et de contribuer ainsi à la détente de la tension internationale qui s'annonce tant au Conseil de sécurité qu'à la Première Commission et à la Commission politique spéciale.

23. Sir Douglas COPLAND (Australie) constate avec satisfaction que les délégations ont adopté à la présente séance une attitude plus conciliante. Il partage l'avis du représentant du Royaume-Uni et du représentant des Philippines: l'examen du document A/C.4/L.274 aurait pour effet de prolonger indûment les débats — alors que d'autres tâches urgentes attendent la Commission — et d'accentuer plus que jamais les divergences d'opinions qui séparent les divers Etats Membres. La liste de facteurs élaborée avec tant de patience et de soin par le Comité ad hoc n'est ni complète, ni définitive et ce n'est qu'après l'avoir appliquée pendant un certain temps qu'on pourra y apporter les modifications qui se révéleraient nécessaires. Il n'est ni possible, ni opportun de prendre actuellement une décision définitive. Sans préjuger l'attitude que la délégation australienne adoptera au moment où la liste de facteurs sera mise aux voix, sir Douglas fait observer que les auteurs du document A/C.4/L.274 devraient accepter la liste présentée par le Comité ad hoc s'ils souhaitent que la Commission adopte cette année une liste de facteurs; en effet, l'examen des amendements proposés amènerait inévitablement la Commission à renvoyer la question au Comité ad hoc et à perdre ainsi une nouvelle année. Le représentant de l'Australie espère fermement qu'il sera possible d'éviter la discussion et la mise aux voix du document A/C.4/L.274, ce qui permettra à la Commission de se prononcer sur la liste de facteurs dans son ensemble et sous la forme que lui a donnée le Comité ad hoc.

24. M. RIVAS (Venezuela) regrette que le représentant du Brésil ait vu dans les amendements à son projet de résolution un projet de résolution distinct. En effet, les amendements proposés visent simplement à développer les prémisses et les conclusions bien fondées du projet de résolution brésilien. Du reste, la délégation du Brésil a fait connaître qu'elle était disposée à accepter certains de ces amendements, montrant ainsi qu'elle ne prétendait pas qu'il fût impossible de développer son texte.

25. Le représentant du Venezuela attire l'attention des membres de la Commission sur les amendements 4 et 5 du document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1 et fait observer qu'ils visent simplement à modifier la répartition des éléments des paragraphes 3 et 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution brésilien. Le principe selon lequel "chaque cas d'espèce doit être examiné et tranché compte tenu des circonstances qui lui sont propres et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes" n'a jamais causé la moindre divergence d'opinion entre Puissances administrantes et Puissances non administrantes. C'est un principe qui a déjà été admis, et le réaffirmer dans un paragraphe distinct, comme on l'a toujours fait, c'est conserver intacte une base d'entente.

26. L'élément nouveau — ou qui peut paraître nouveau — figurait déjà implicitement dans le projet de résolution du Brésil, comme le représentant du Brésil l'a lui-même déclaré à la séance précédente: la décision en la matière appartient à l'Assemblée générale. D'ailleurs, que ce principe soit exprimé ou non, les délégations des Puissances administrantes observeraient la même attitude d'opposition puisque, selon leur thèse, seule la Puissance administrante intéressée est compétente.

27. Pour faire mieux comprendre le paragraphe 5 proposé dans l'amendement 6, le représentant du Venezuela explique d'abord le but du nouveau paragraphe 6. Celui-ci encore tend à compléter la proposition brésilienne, et non à la contredire quant au fond. Il se borne en effet à considérer que c'est avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance que les territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent accéder à l'autonomie complète. Toutefois, ces considérations appellent aussitôt la conclusion formulée à maintes reprises par le Comité des facteurs à savoir qu'il est admis qu'un territoire peut aussi devenir autonome en s'associant à un Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats, à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue. Une fois inscrite dans le dispositif d'une résolution, cette conclusion, admise tant par les Puissances administrantes que par les Puissances non administrantes, cesse d'être une simple directive pour devenir un principe de l'Assemblée générale.

28. La raison pour laquelle l'accès à l'indépendance doit être considéré comme le moyen essentiel pour les territoires en question de parvenir à l'autonomie complète est si évidente qu'elle n'a pas, elle non plus, fait l'objet de discussions, ni à la Quatrième Commission, ni au Comité ad hoc. C'est en réalité la forme d'autonomie la moins douteuse, et qui se prête le moins aux interprétations erronées ou au maintien d'un état de dépendance dissimulé. C'est pourquoi les facteurs relatifs à l'indépendance sont les moins nombreux. C'est aussi pourquoi le facteur du progrès politique et celui de l'opinion des populations ne figurent pas parmi eux. Il serait inconcevable en effet que l'indépendance puisse être imposée par la force à un territoire, ou que la population d'un territoire non autonome qui se prononce pour l'indépendance n'ait pas atteint une maturité suffisante pour faire cette démarche. Le seul fait de se prononcer dans ce sens est un signe de progrès politique suffisant. Du reste, ce n'est pas cette question-là qui divise les Membres administrants et les Membres non administrants. Ce qui suscite la méfiance des premières, c'est la crainte que la majorité des Etats Membres des Nations Unies ne jugent l'indépendance comme le moyen exclusif d'atteindre à l'autonomie complète. L'adjonction du nouveau paragraphe 6, proposé par les délégations de onze Etats qui n'administrent pas de territoires, vise donc à détruire cette cause de malentendus.

29. La notion de l'indépendance comme moyen essentiel d'atteindre à l'autonomie complète a pour corollaire la condition posée à la validité de toute forme d'association entre un territoire non autonome et la métropole ou toute autre pays, "la volonté de la population intéressée, librement exprimée au moment où cette association est décidée", formulée au nouveau paragraphe 5 proposé dans l'amendement 6. Il peut arriver en effet que non seulement la Puissance administrante, mais encore un autre Etat, annexe un territoire non autonome par la force et prétende que, de cette façon, le territoire a atteint à l'autonomie complète. La condition posée ne vise donc pas seulement le gouvernement métropolitain, mais tout Etat, Membre ou non membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. D'ailleurs, aucune Puissance administrante n'a, depuis la Conférence de San-Francisco, cherché à fonder le changement de statut d'un territoire sur des circonstances étrangères à la volonté de la population intéressée. De même, quelle que soit la force avec laquelle elles préconisent l'exclusivité de la compétence de la Puissance administrante, les délégations des Puissances métropolitaines n'ont jamais prétendu ignorer cette condition inévitable de la validité de tout changement de statut.

30. En ce qui concerne l'amendement 9, la délégation du Venezuela n'a aucune observation à présenter. Toutefois, si les autres auteurs des amendements A/C.4/L.273 consentaient à retirer cet amendement, elle en serait très heureuse. En effet, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes tient ses attributions des résolutions 334 (IV) et 448 (V).

31. En revanche, l'amendement 10 propose une rédaction qui convient mieux au caractère du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Ce comité est, en quelque sorte, un organe chargé d'étudier des questions de procédure, et non de prendre des décisions. Son rôle se borne à organiser le travail et à proposer des solutions à l'Assemblée générale. Le texte de l'amendement charge le Comité de proposer des modifications propres à améliorer la liste de facteurs, c'est-à-dire des modifications qui la rendent plus claire et de plus en plus facile à appliquer.

32. Le représentant du Venezuela en arrive enfin aux amendements 3 et 4, qui ont le plus inquiété la délégation du Brésil et quelques autres délégations. Cette inquiétude aurait été atténuée dans une grande mesure si les amendements (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) au projet de résolution du Brésil et les amendements (A/C.4/L.274) à la liste de facteurs avaient été distribués simultanément. En raison des amendements qu'il est proposé d'apporter à la liste de facteurs, il a paru inapproprié, et même illogique, de laisser subsister le paragraphe 2 du projet brésilien.

33. Le représentant du Venezuela passe à l'examen des amendements à la liste de facteurs. La rédaction de ces amendements est le résultat de négociations et de compromis entre les différentes délégations qui en sont les auteurs. Il importait, en effet, en raison de la chaleur des débats auxquels ce problème a donné lieu, de dissiper la méfiance qui en avait résulté. Si chaque délégation avait proposé individuellement les amendements que lui suggérerait l'étude de la liste des facteurs, aucune résolution définitive n'aurait pu être adoptée au sujet des facteurs et il aurait été impossible de mettre un terme à cette discussion byzantine qui a séparé en deux camps les délégations de pays amis et solidaires dans la politique mondiale. La délégation du Venezuela a toujours été opposée aux propositions extrêmes. En outre, elle est persuadée que la plupart des divergences de vues proviennent de la forme sous laquelle les opinions sont présentées et non pas du fond même de ces opinions; par conséquent, elle s'est toujours efforcée de concilier et d'harmoniser les vues divergentes. Elle a le plaisir de déclarer qu'elle a rencontré le même désir d'entente chez les délégations qui présentent avec elle le projet d'amendements en question.

34. De nouveaux facteurs ne sont pas nécessairement de nouvelles conditions inévitables, mais de nouvelles directives, de nouveaux éléments d'appréciation que l'on pourra utiliser ou ne pas utiliser, selon les circonstances propres à chaque cas et conformément au principe affirmé l'année passée dans la résolution 648 (VII) et confirmé dans le paragraphe 5 du projet brésilien, à savoir, qu'ils "ne doivent nullement être interprétés comme faisant obstacle à l'autonomie complète des territoires non autonomes".

35. Au sujet de l'amendement au facteur A.4, "Défense nationale", de la première partie de la liste de facteurs, le représentant du Venezuela estime que nul ne contestera l'opportunité de cette proposition, due à l'initiative de la délégation mexicaine.

36. En ce qui concerne la deuxième partie, l'amendement 1 vise simplement à rétablir le titre de cette partie qui avait été adopté à la sixième session par la Sous-Commission 9 de la Quatrième Commission¹ et qui, alors, donnait entière satisfaction aux représentants des Puissances administrantes, notamment au représentant de l'Australie qui, à juste titre, demandait que l'on tienne compte du statut des dominions ou membres du Commonwealth britannique. Il est certain que ce ce Commonwealth est une association d'Etats indépendants qui limitent leur souveraineté dans une certaine mesure, limitation qu'ils exercent collectivement. Cependant, le terme "association" n'est pas seulement de nature à introduire un doute; il peut aussi faire confondre cette forme distincte d'autonomie avec l'union ou l'association que prévoit la troisième partie de la liste.

37. Les amendements 2 et 3 relatifs à la deuxième partie se passent de commentaires, puisqu'il s'agit d'un simple déplacement de l'ordre des facteurs.

38. Quant à l'amendement 4, on pourrait prétendre qu'il s'agit d'un nouvel élément. Cependant, il serait difficile que ces autres formes distinctes d'autonomie méritent leur nom si les Etats intéressés n'ont pas, au moment de s'associer, la faculté et la possibilité de choisir l'indépendance, comme ce fut le cas pour la Birmanie par exemple, aussitôt après la deuxième guerre mondiale.

39. L'amendement 5 ne tend qu'à supprimer la première partie, c'est-à-dire la partie négative, du facteur A.3 et à laisser subsister la partie positive. En effet, la mesure dans laquelle un territoire a limité sa souveraineté librement et de sa propre initiative n'est pas un facteur positif. Ce dont il faut tenir compte pour conclure qu'une population a accédé à une autre forme distincte d'autonomie, c'est la façon dont s'exercent les attributs de souveraineté qui sont ainsi restreints. Le représentant du Venezuela rappelle que cet élément positif a été introduit cette année par le Comité ad hoc sur la proposition de sa délégation (A/2428, par. 34).

40. M. Rivas signale que, par suite des modifications successives qu'ont subies les propositions des diverses délégations auteurs des amendements, et dans le désir de présenter ceux-ci le plus tôt possible on a rédigé à l'amendement 8, sous le titre "Changement de statut politique", une phrase qui aurait pu terminer l'amendement 5.

¹ Voir A/C.4/L.180 et Corr.1.

41. De toute façon, en raison du caractère même de cette accession à l'autonomie complète, les Etats ainsi associés, parce qu'ils sont indépendants, peuvent se séparer et constituer des unités distinctes. Autrement, on ne saurait appeler ce système "autres formes distinctes d'autonomie".

42. Quant aux additions que proposent les amendements 6 et 7, elles visent à fonder la nécessité de donner aux territoires la possibilité de se séparer de l'association pour des raisons géographiques, culturelles ou ethniques. Le membre de phrase à l'amendement 6 "et mesure dans laquelle les intérêts des Etats limitrophes peuvent être affectés, compte tenu du principe général de bon voisinage mentionné à l'Article 74 de la Charte", s'inspire de la Charte.

43. Le représentant du Venezuela signale une erreur d'impression à l'amendement 9; il faut lire comme suit: "Le facteur B.2 actuel devient le facteur B.1."

44. Passant ensuite à la troisième partie, le représentant du Venezuela fait remarquer qu'il serait inconcevable qu'un territoire non autonome atteigne à l'autonomie complète en s'associant avec la métropole ou un autre pays, ou en en devenant partie intégrante, si l'incorporation ou l'association n'a pas lieu sur un pied d'égalité absolue avec les autres parties de l'Etat en question, à moins que l'inégalité ne laisse au territoire la possibilité de modifier sa décision dans l'avenir.

45. Cette considération appelle l'addition des mots "ou sous tout autre forme" et motive l'amendement 5 qui envisage l'existence d'Etats ayant des pouvoirs constitutionnels pour l'octroi de cet avantage. A ce propos, la délégation du Venezuela tient à déclarer qu'en souscrivant à l'adjonction de ce nouveau facteur, elle ne prétend nullement que les Etats métropolitains ou tous autres Etats modifient leur constitution pour donner effet audit facteur. Si telle était son attitude, elle enfreindrait les dispositions du paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte. Il ne faut pas non plus voir dans le fait que la délégation du Venezuela appuie cet amendement l'intention de créer des obstacles aux territoires non autonomes qui, en exprimant librement leur volonté, choisissent comme moyen d'atteindre à l'autonomie complète l'association ou l'intégration, sur un pied d'entière égalité, aux autres parties constitutives de l'Etat auquel ils s'incorporent ou avec lequel ils s'associent.

46. L'amendement 6 n'est pas dû à l'initiative de la délégation vénézuélienne. Elle a néanmoins accepté de le patronner en vertu des obligations que le Venezuela a contractées en approuvant la résolution XXXIII de la IX^{ème} Conférence internationale américaine.

47. Quant à l'amendement 9, il est assez rationnel. En effet, si, en vertu de la constitution d'un pays métropolitain à l'élaboration de laquelle les représentants de territoires non autonomes n'auraient pas participé, ces territoires étaient déclarés incorporés à la métropole, il serait possible, semble-t-il, que cette incorporation puisse s'effectuer même sans le consentement des habitants des territoires non autonomes, ce qui serait contraire au Chapitre XI ainsi qu'à l'esprit général de la liste de facteurs et au principe qui sera consacré par la résolution de l'Assemblée générale si les amendements proposés sont adoptés.

48. Le représentant du Venezuela tient à souligner qu'en s'associant aux autres délégations qui ont rédigé les amendements qu'il vient de commenter, la délégation vénézuélienne n'a pas eu l'intention, contrairement à ce qui a été dit, de corriger la liste de facteurs et de reprendre le travail du Comité ad hoc. Toutefois, on ne saurait considérer que cette liste, à l'élaboration de laquelle la délégation du Venezuela a participé en tant que membre du Comité ad hoc, ne peut faire l'objet d'amendements qui visent à la préciser sans la modifier en substance.

49. Il est permis d'espérer que, de cette façon, l'Assemblée générale adoptera à la présente session une résolution définitive sur cette question et qu'ainsi prendra fin une discussion reprise périodiquement et génératrice de divisions entre pays amis.

50. M. CALLE Y CALLE (Pérou) indique que la liste de facteurs répond à un désir de l'Assemblée générale de disposer, pour elle-même et pour les Puissances administrantes, d'une règle qui permette d'appliquer les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Grâce à ces critères, l'Assemblée générale pourra apprécier le bien-fondé de toute communication annonçant la cessation de la communication de renseignements et, par conséquent, se prononcer sur les motifs de cette cessation. L'Assemblée générale aura alors le choix entre les trois décisions suivantes: soit prendre acte de la cessation, soit apprécier le fondement juridique de cette cessation en appliquant les critères de la liste de facteurs et en tenant compte des circonstances particulières à chaque cas, soit désapprouver la décision de cesser de communiquer les renseignements. Dans ce dernier cas, on peut supposer que la Puissance administrante continuera à communiquer lesdits renseignements.

51. En approuvant les facteurs, la Quatrième Commission ne prend pas de décision au sujet de la question de compétence. Elle n'entend pas non plus transformer ces critères en normes destinées à régir l'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Par conséquent, il ne convient pas d'attribuer à la résolution qui sera adoptée la rigidité d'un texte législatif. Si la liste de facteurs n'a pour but que de servir de guide — et c'est ainsi que la délégation du Pérou l'entend — il suffirait de dire dans la résolution que l'Assemblée générale approuve la liste de facteurs présentée dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc et que cette liste est destinée, pour l'instant, à servir de guide en vue de l'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

52. La délégation du Pérou reconnaît que le projet de résolution brésilien s'inspire d'une intention conciliatrice et du désir de faciliter aussi bien la tâche de l'Assemblée générale que celle des Puissances administrantes. Ce texte représente en outre un progrès évident par rapport à la résolution 648 (VII) et ne contient que des formules prudentes, dont on pourra apprécier les effets pratiques dans l'avenir; cette dernière observation s'applique aussi au projet d'amendement des Philippines.

53. La délégation du Pérou votera pour le projet de résolution du Brésil. Elle ne peut appuyer ni les amendements à ce projet ni les amendements à la liste de facteurs.

54. M. PETERSON (Canada) rappelle que la délégation canadienne a déjà fait connaître sa position vis-à-vis du projet de résolution du Brésil et des amendements proposés à ce projet de résolution. Elle voudrait maintenant faire connaître sa position vis-à-vis des amendements à la liste de facteurs (A/C.4/L.274).

55. On a déjà souligné que la liste que le Comité ad hoc présente dans son rapport représente une synthèse d'opinions exprimées au cours de trois années d'étude continue pendant lesquelles la liste a même été soumise aux gouvernements de tous les Etats Membres pour qu'ils présentent leurs observations. Dans ces conditions, la délégation canadienne estime, comme plusieurs autres délégations, qu'il serait vain de vouloir que cette Commission de soixante membres rouvre une discussion sur la liste de facteurs actuelle. Il semble bien peu probable qu'une discussion de ce genre puisse avoir la moindre utilité.

56. Le représentant du Venezuela a dit que les amendements qui figurent dans le document A/C.4/L.274 semblaient avoir suscité des craintes injustifiées et qu'ils étaient en fait simples et clairs. Cela peut être vrai pour certains d'entre eux. Toutefois, dans les délais très courts dont elle a disposé pour examiner ces amendements, la délégation canadienne a constaté qu'un certain nombre des modifications proposées donnaient lieu à des difficultés d'interprétation et posaient des questions de principe que de brèves explications ne suffisaient pas à éclaircir.

57. Comme elle l'a déclaré à la séance précédente, la délégation canadienne est prête à voter pour la liste de facteurs telle que le Comité ad hoc l'a présentée. Elle espère que cette liste sera mise aux voix dans son ensemble. Si, toutefois, la Commission était invitée à se prononcer sur les amendements contenus dans le document A/C.4/L.274, la délégation canadienne se verrait obligée, en raison de l'impossibilité où elle se trouve de l'examiner comme il convient à l'heure actuelle, de voter contre tous les amendements proposés.

58. M. FERREIRA DE SOUZA (Brésil) tient à faire connaître la position de sa délégation vis-à-vis des amendements présentés sous la cote A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1. La délégation brésilienne accepte l'amendement 1, qui, à son avis, représente une importante contribution à la proposition brésilienne. Elle n'accepte pas l'amendement 2. Elle n'accepte pas non plus l'amendement 3, qui suppose une modification de la liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc. Elle accepte la première partie de l'amendement 4, car elle croit que ses auteurs ont voulu souligner, par cette transposition, la responsabilité primordiale de l'Assemblée générale. Quant à la deuxième partie de cet amendement, la délégation brésilienne votera d'abord pour son propre texte, car elle considère qu'il est assez clair pour trancher la question de compétence. Elle ne croit pas qu'il soit utile de répéter les raisons qu'elle a fournies à ce sujet à la séance précédente. Elle n'accepte pas les amendements 5, 6, 9 et 10. Elle accepte l'amendement 7, ainsi que l'amendement 8.

59. En ce qui concerne l'amendement proposé par la délégation des Philippines (A/C.4/L.275), la délégation brésilienne en comprend parfaitement l'intention, à laquelle elle rend hommage; mais elle ne croit pas que ces amendements s'accordent avec sa propre doctrine, sur laquelle elle fonde la compétence de l'Assemblée.

60. Le PRESIDENT donne lecture du document de séance no 1², dans lequel il expose la procédure de vote qu'il propose au sujet de la question des facteurs.

61. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) fait remarquer qu'il ne doit pas être nécessaire de voter sur l'amendement 1 proposé dans le document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, puisque la délégation du Brésil a accepté cet amendement. Ce vote ne serait nécessaire que si une délégation demandait un vote séparé.

62. M. SCOTT (Nouvelle-Zélande) demande pourquoi les mots "et les Etats Membres" figurent après les mots "l'Organisation des Nations Unies" dans l'amendement 1 du document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1.

63. Le PRESIDENT déclare que réponse sera donnée à la prochaine séance aux deux observations qui viennent d'être faites.

La séance est levée à 13 heures.

² Distribué aux membres de la Commission seulement.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

52
QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 329^e
SEANCE

Jeudi 8 octobre 1953,
à 15 h. 30

New-York

SOMMAIRE

	Page
Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite].....	87

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428, A/C.4/L.272, A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, A/C.4/L.274, A/C.4/L.275] (suite)

[Point 33 *]

1. Le PRESIDENT attire l'attention des membres de la Commission sur le document de séance No 1¹, qui contient ses propres propositions au sujet de la procédure à suivre pour le vote.
2. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) propose que la Commission, avant d'examiner le projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) et les amendements apportés à ce projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, A/C.4/L.275), étudie les amendements proposés à la liste de facteurs du Comité ad hoc (A/C.4/L.274) et vote à leur sujet.
3. M. BOZOVIC (Yougoslavie) appuie cette proposition. Logiquement, la Commission devrait tout d'abord statuer sur la liste de facteurs, puis examiner le projet de résolution du Brésil, qui propose l'adoption de cette liste, et les amendements proposés à ce projet de résolution. On doit considérer la liste du Comité ad hoc comme la proposition primitive et, conformément à l'article 129 du règlement intérieur, les amendements à cette liste doivent donc être mis aux voix en premier lieu.
4. M. KAISR (Tchécoslovaquie) rappelle que sa délégation avait proposé (326^e séance) que l'on vote sur chacune des sections de la liste de facteurs; il appuie, au nom de sa délégation, la proposition du représentant du Guatemala.
5. Lord HUDSON (Royaume-Uni) suggère que la proposition du Président soit mise aux voix immédiatement.
6. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) soutient que la liste de facteurs établie par le Comité ad hoc ne constitue pas une proposition au sens de l'article 129 mais que, par contre, les paragraphes 1 et 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil constituent une proposition. La Commission devrait donc voter tout d'abord sur les amendements à ce projet de résolution.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

¹ Distribué aux membres de la Commission seulement.

7. M. FERREIRA DE SOUZA (Brésil) estime que la Commission devrait tout d'abord statuer sur la question essentielle: veut-elle ou non adopter la liste de facteurs dans sa forme actuelle? Si elle rejette cette liste, elle pourra alors voter sur les amendements.

8. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) appuie cette proposition.

9. M. ARAOZ (Bolivie) appuie la proposition du Guatemala.

10. M. DE HOLTE CASTELLO (Colombie) suggère que le Président mette tout d'abord aux voix la proposition du Guatemala, puis, si celle-ci est rejetée, sa propre proposition.

Par 26 voix contre 22, avec 4 abstentions, la proposition du Guatemala est adoptée.

11. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) propose que l'amendement 3 des onze Puissances (A/C.4/L.273) soit mis aux voix immédiatement.

12. Le PRESIDENT invite la Commission à examiner les amendements à la liste de facteurs (A/C.4/L.274).

13. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) dit qu'elle n'abordera pas le fond de la question parce que, pour des raisons de procédure, la délégation des Etats-Unis doute très sérieusement du caractère pratique de la mesure que l'on demande à la Commission de prendre. La liste de facteurs contenue dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/2428) est le résultat des délibérations de plusieurs comités spéciaux qui ont consacré un grand nombre de séances à une étude très approfondie des vues des gouvernements sur la question des facteurs. Les gouvernements des Etats Membres sont saisis du rapport du Comité ad hoc depuis des semaines. Le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis considère que le Comité ad hoc a poussé l'étude des facteurs aussi loin qu'il est possible de le faire pour le moment. Et voilà que l'on saisit la Quatrième Commission de plusieurs amendements qu'elle devrait examiner en quelques jours. Au mieux, l'examen auquel la Commission pourrait procéder serait hâtif et incomplet. D'ailleurs, même cet examen hâtif provoquerait une longue discussion et prendrait plus de temps que la Commission ne peut lui en accorder.

14. La délégation des Etats-Unis estime par conséquent que la Commission ne devrait pas essayer d'amender la liste du Comité ad hoc, mais l'approuver telle quelle.

15. M. PIGNON (France) partage entièrement les vues de la représentante des Etats-Unis. Toutefois, étant donné que la majorité des membres de la Commission est, de toute évidence, décidée à voter sur les amendements, il désire expliquer la position de sa délégation.

16. La position de la délégation française sur cette question a toujours été parfaitement claire. Tout en faisant les réserves les plus sérieuses en ce qui concerne la compétence de l'Assemblée générale pour appliquer la liste de facteurs établie par le Comité ad hoc, elle persiste à considérer que l'étude de cette liste est légitime et utile, étant entendu que cette liste devrait constituer non pas un code rigide et inflexible, mais plutôt un guide dont les Etats s'inspireraient lorsqu'ils auraient à s'occuper de cas précis. En dépit de ses imperfections évidentes, la liste du document A/2428 pourrait en effet servir de guide.

17. Toutefois, les amendements proposés à la liste de facteurs, sans aucun doute dans l'intention louable d'améliorer l'œuvre du Comité ad hoc, l'invalident complètement et détruisent une structure qui, bien qu'inégale, avait néanmoins un certain équilibre. Les amendements aggravent les défauts de la liste à un tel point qu'ils la rendent inacceptable.

18. Ces défauts proviennent principalement du fait que, pour un nombre croissant de délégations, les considérations politiques l'emportent sur l'objectivité qui est si indispensable lorsqu'on traite ces questions. Il est contraire à la méthode scientifique d'ériger une théorie générale sur la base de cas particuliers; c'est pourtant ce qui a été fait dans la deuxième partie de la liste lorsqu'on a introduit des notions aussi controversées que celles qui sont contenues dans les amendements 6, 7 et 8 de la deuxième et de la troisième partie des amendements des onze Puissances. Pour préserver le prestige des Nations Unies, la Quatrième Commission doit veiller jalousement à la qualité de ses travaux. Par exemple, le nouveau facteur A. 4 de la deuxième partie de la liste introduit un principe d'intervention contraire à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Charte, et qui compromettrait précisément les relations de bon voisinage qu'il voudrait encourager. On a essayé d'établir un lien factice entre cette idée et l'Article 74 de la Charte.

19. Cependant, aux yeux de la délégation française, le défaut le plus grave des amendements est qu'ils créent de la confusion entre les trois parties de la liste de facteurs. Les facteurs permettant de conclure à l'indépendance, à l'autonomie avec association et à l'autonomie avec intégration sont totalement confondus et le représentant de la France doute, dans ces conditions, de l'utilité que pourrait présenter une telle liste dans le domaine des travaux de la Commission, à savoir le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Il est à peine nécessaire de répéter que l'autonomie peut exister — et existe en fait — sans indépendance. M. Pignon se contentera de souligner que les auteurs des amendements ont voulu créer l'impression que les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste de facteurs sont inutiles dans la pratique. Ce faisant, ils ont délibérément méconnu le mandat de la Quatrième Commission et l'objet même de ses travaux, à savoir le progrès de certains territoires vers l'autonomie.

20. Pour ces raisons, la délégation française votera contre l'ensemble des amendements.

21. Lord HUDSON (Royaume-Uni) regrette que les efforts qu'il a déployés à la séance précédente pour éviter un débat stérile et pour parvenir à une entente aient échoué.

22. Sa délégation n'a pas caché que le contenu de la liste de facteurs était, en ce qui la concerne, relativement sans importance. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a point besoin de listes de facteurs et le fait que d'autres gouvernements en tiennent compte ne saurait affecter le statut des territoires dont il est responsable. Du même coup, l'application de la liste de facteurs se trouve ainsi limitée à un tiers tout au plus des territoires qui font actuellement l'objet de rapports.

23. Cependant, en tant que Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et du Comité ad hoc, le Royaume-Uni a ses responsabilités. N'ayant aucun intérêt politique en cette affaire, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a simplement cherché à aider le Comité à élaborer une liste de facteurs qui réponde à une conception de la vérité fondée sur la cohérence et soit conforme aux réalités politiques du monde moderne. Neuf autres délégations ont collaboré à l'élaboration de cette liste, qui n'a été approuvée qu'après huit mois de travaux et deux semaines de débats, au cours desquels les vues de tous les gouvernements qui avaient émis le désir de soumettre des observations écrites furent prises en considération. Au moment où la Quatrième Commission va voter sur le projet de résolution, toute une série d'amendements sont présentés par onze délégations, dont trois faisaient partie du Comité ad hoc; mieux encore, un des membres de ces délégations a été le Président du Comité.

24. Aux yeux des membres de la délégation britannique, ces amendements constituent un exemple flagrant d'incohérence intellectuelle. La plupart de ces amendements reflètent un désir de faire prévaloir certaines maximes politiques dont bon nombre sont inacceptables pour la délégation du Royaume-Uni. On reconnaît dans plusieurs de ces amendements les préoccupations politiques de telle ou telle délégation. C'est là un fait dont il faut tenir compte au moment de passer au vote.

25. En ce qui concerne l'amendement à la première partie de la liste, lord Hudson fait remarquer que si un Etat existe, il dispose manifestement du droit d'assurer sa défense nationale. Ce dont on peut douter, c'est de l'aptitude de cet Etat à assurer sa propre défense et ce facteur peut évidemment entrer en ligne de compte dans le choix de son orientation politique.

26. Les amendements 6 et 7 à la deuxième partie de la liste tendent à ajouter deux facteurs empruntés à la troisième partie de la liste, auxquels la délégation britannique n'a jamais pu souscrire. Le paragraphe 6 n'est rien d'autre que la réaffirmation de ce qu'on a appelé "le mirage de l'eau salée" (salt water fallacy), qui fait trouver moralement admirable l'impérialisme continental et moralement haïssable la possession de territoires outre-mer. L'expérience du Royaume-Uni est que l'océan constitue un lien plutôt qu'une barrière. Quant au paragraphe 7, il constitue pratiquement une approbation du principe de la discrimination raciale et est indigne de la Quatrième Commission.

27. En ce qui concerne l'amendement 8, la délégation britannique ne peut souscrire au point de vue selon lequel le développement politique des territoires non autonomes serait entravé par l'existence d'un différend entre Etats revendiquant la souveraineté sur eux. Comme l'a très justement dit le représentant de l'Australie, il y a une énorme différence entre le statut international et la responsabilité dans les affaires intérieures. La tâche de tout Etat Membre responsable de l'administration d'un Territoire sous tutelle est de favoriser, dans toute la mesure du possible, la réalisation des objectifs visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte, et, notamment, de développer au maximum sa capacité à s'administrer lui-même. Tous les membres de la Commission reconnaîtront sans aucun doute que, si un territoire non autonome passait de l'administration d'un Etat Membre à celle d'un autre, la nouvelle Puissance administrante hériterait de l'ancienne toutes les obligations du Chapitre XI. Le représentant du Guatemala a parlé de la souveraineté indépendante comme du but évident à atteindre par les territoires non autonomes, alors que cet objectif n'est pas mentionné dans le Chapitre XI. Il serait étrange qu'une Puissance administrante ne puisse poursuivre les objectifs visés au Chapitre XI en raison de l'existence d'une revendication de la part d'un autre Etat, qui serait tenu lui aussi de respecter les principes de ce chapitre. Car, comment interpréter l'existence d'une telle revendication si ce n'est comme le désir de cet Etat de s'annexer le territoire en question au mépris des objectifs du Chapitre XI.

28. Si les amendements sont adoptés, leur seul effet sera d'empêcher les territoires non autonomes de parvenir à l'indépendance.

29. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) regrette que sa délégation soit obligée de voter contre presque tous les projets d'amendements à la liste de facteurs contenue dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/C.4/L.274). Il n'est d'accord que sur la première moitié du nouveau facteur A. 4, proposé pour la seconde partie, qui semble reconnaître l'erreur que l'on avait commise en supposant qu'un océan constituerait un obstacle plus grand qu'une frontière terrestre. M. Rickmans ne peut cependant accepter la seconde moitié du nouveau facteur.

30. Le représentant de l'Iran a déclaré à la séance précédente que, s'il y avait certes des populations arriérées qui n'étaient pas en mesure de revendiquer leur indépendance, il ne fallait cependant pas que ces populations continuent indéfiniment à être exploitées par les nations plus évoluées. Le Gouvernement de la Belgique n'est pas d'accord sur ce point; il a toujours estimé que les populations arriérées ne devaient jamais être exploitées. La tâche des Puissances administrantes est d'administrer les territoires non autonomes au nom des populations de ces territoires, jusqu'à ce que celles-ci soient en mesure de s'administrer elles-mêmes; il va de soi que les intérêts de ces populations sont primordiaux. Par conséquent, si la délégation de la Belgique se voit forcée de voter contre les projets d'amendements à la liste de facteurs, c'est en raison uniquement de certaines considérations de principe; cela ne signifie nullement que la Belgique ne reconnaît pas ses obligations en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte, ni qu'elle a l'intention de ne plus s'en acquitter en toute conscience.

31. M. M. S. ESFANDIARY (Iran) déclare que le représentant de la Belgique, dans son intervention, a fait allusion à plusieurs reprises à l'exposé du représentant de l'Iran. Tout en lui sachant gré de ses paroles, M. Esfandiary tient à réserver la position de la délégation iranienne sur ces observations.

32. M. PACHACHI (Irak) déclare que, bien que l'Irak ait été membre du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs, la délégation de ce pays avait laissé entendre alors qu'elle ne considérerait pas la liste de facteurs, telle qu'elle avait été approuvée, comme définitive et parfaite. Les amendements présentés conjointement par onze délégations (A/C.4/L.274) tendent à améliorer la liste originale, à la rendre plus cohérente et à mieux protéger les populations des territoires non autonomes. M. Pachachi déplore l'opposition inflexible des délégations du Royaume-Uni et de la Belgique.

33. M. CALLE Y CALLE (Pérou) déclare que sa délégation n'est pas opposée aux principes dont s'inspirent les amendements communs, mais elle a l'intention cependant de voter contre tous les amendements, parce qu'il n'est guère possible de poursuivre plus avant l'examen de la liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc. La Quatrième Commission devrait se contenter de prendre acte des résultats des délibérations du Comité ad hoc et ne pas essayer de poursuivre les travaux de ce comité aux dépens des autres questions inscrites à son propre ordre du jour.

34. M. MENDEZ (Philippines) rappelle que le représentant de la Belgique avait dit que la Quatrième Commission gagnerait beaucoup de temps en mettant aux voix l'amendement 3 des amendements communs (A/C.4/L.273) au projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272), ce qui rendrait inutile l'examen point par point des projets d'amendements à la liste de facteurs. La Commission aurait certes été bien inspirée en mettant aux voix la proposition de la Belgique.

35. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) rappelle, à propos de certaines observations de la délégation du Royaume-Uni, qu'à la 322ème séance, la délégation du Guatemala a clairement indiqué sa position à l'égard des territoires dépendants qui font l'objet d'une réclamation ou d'une contestation de la part d'un autre Etat. Le Gouvernement du Guatemala accueillera avec satisfaction la réalisation de l'indépendance complète de ces territoires non autonomes, mais il désire s'assurer que le statut politique des territoires illégalement occupés qui font l'objet d'une contestation n'est pas modifié par une forme quelconque d'association avant que cette contestation ne soit réglée.

36. Au sujet des projets d'amendements à la liste de facteurs, M. Mendoza fait observer que l'on complique trop la question. L'objet de la liste de facteurs n'est pas d'aider l'Assemblée générale à décider si le statut accordé à un territoire non autonome convient à ce territoire ou s'il est conforme aux désirs du territoire, mais simplement de permettre à l'Assemblée d'analyser la situation et de constater si la Puissance administrante est effectivement libérée de son obligation de transmettre aux Nations Unies des renseignements sur le territoire en question. Si le nombre des territoires non autonomes au sujet desquels des renseignements sont transmis restait constant, aucune liste ne serait nécessaire, mais si ce nombre continue à diminuer, il est essentiel que l'Assemblée générale dispose d'un critère. Le représentant du Guatemala n'est pas de l'avis de ceux qui pensent que l'Assemblée générale ne dispose pas du temps nécessaire pour améliorer la liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc; en fait, les divers organes qui ont préparé la liste de facteurs ont exécuté ce travail en très peu de temps.

37. Le PRESIDENT invite la Commission à se prononcer sur les amendements (A/C.4/L.274) à la liste de facteurs contenue dans le rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/2428, section VI).

38. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement à la première partie de la liste.

Par 31 voix contre 9, avec 10 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

39. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie de la liste (A/2428, section VI), sous sa forme amendée.

Par 34 voix contre 7, avec 10 abstentions, la première partie est adoptée sous sa forme amendée.

40. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix les amendements (A/C.4/L.274) à la deuxième partie de la liste.

Par 27 voix contre 15, avec 9 abstentions, l'amendement 1 est adopté.

41. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 2. L'adoption de cet amendement entraînera automatiquement l'adoption de l'amendement 3.

Par 21 voix contre 12, avec 16 abstentions, l'amendement 2 est adopté.

42. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 4.

Par 27 voix contre 15, avec 8 abstentions, l'amendement 4 est adopté.

43. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) demande que la première partie du texte de l'amendement 5, jusqu'aux mots "ainsi constituée", soit mise aux voix séparément. Il a l'intention de voter contre les deux parties de cet amendement; toutefois, de nombreuses délégations pourraient être en faveur de la première partie de ce texte, mais non pas en faveur du droit universel de sécession qu'énonce la deuxième partie.

44. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie de l'amendement 5.

Par 30 voix contre 8, avec 12 abstentions, la première partie de l'amendement 5 est adoptée.

45. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) demande le vote par appel nominal sur la deuxième partie de l'amendement 5.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Liban, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Chili, Costa-Rica, Cuba, Egypte, Salvador, Guatemala, Haïti, Indonésie, Iran, Irak.

Votent contre: Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie, Belgique, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, France.

S'abstiennent: Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Brésil, Birmanie, Chine, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Ethiopie, Grèce, Inde, Israël.

Par 25 voix contre 18, avec 10 abstentions, la deuxième partie de l'amendement 5 est adoptée.

46. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble de l'amendement 5.

Par 25 voix contre 18, avec 9 abstentions, l'amendement 5 est adopté.

47. M. CALLE Y CALLE (Pérou) explique qu'il a voté contre la deuxième partie de l'amendement 5 et s'est abstenu lors du vote sur l'ensemble de l'amendement parce qu'il ne peut souscrire au droit de sécession dans tous les cas.

48. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) ayant demandé un vote distinct sur les deux parties de l'amendement 6, qui n'ont rien en commun, le PRESIDENT met aux voix successivement les première et deuxième parties de cet amendement.

Par 26 voix contre 14, avec 11 abstentions, la première partie de l'amendement 6 est adoptée.

Par 23 voix contre 18, avec 10 abstentions, la deuxième partie de l'amendement 6 est adoptée.

49. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble de l'amendement 6.

Par 24 voix contre 19, avec 10 abstentions, l'amendement 6 est adopté.

50. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 7.

Par 26 voix contre 17, avec 8 abstentions, l'amendement 7 est adopté.

51. Le PRESIDENT déclare que le texte du facteur B. 1 n'a fait l'objet d'aucune proposition d'amendement et que, si aucune objection n'est formulée, il le considérera comme adopté.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

52. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 8, dont l'adoption entraînera automatiquement l'adoption de l'amendement 9.

Par 23 voix contre 18, avec 12 abstentions, l'amendement 8 est adopté.

53. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble de la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs (A/2428, section VI), sous sa forme amendée.

Par 24 voix contre 18, avec 11 abstentions, la deuxième partie de la liste de facteurs est adoptée sous sa forme amendée.

54. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix les amendements (A/C.4/L.274) à la troisième partie de la liste.

Par 25 voix contre 15, avec 13 abstentions, l'amendement 1 est adopté.

Par 26 voix contre 14, avec 13 abstentions, l'amendement 2 est adopté.

55. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 3, dont l'adoption entraînera automatiquement l'adoption de l'amendement 4.

Par 23 voix contre 9, avec 18 abstentions, l'amendement 3 est adopté.

56. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) demande le vote par appel nominal sur le paragraphe 5.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la France, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Guatemala, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Chili, Costa-Rica, Cuba, Egypte, Salvador.

Votent contre: France, Grèce, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie, Belgique, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark.

S'abstiennent: Israël, Norvège, Pérou, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Brésil, Birmanie, Chine, Colombie, République Dominicaine, Ethiopie.

Par 25 voix contre 17, avec 10 abstentions, le paragraphe 5 est adopté.

57. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) appelle l'attention du Secrétariat sur certaines modifications qu'il conviendrait d'apporter au texte espagnol de l'amendement 6.

58. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 6.

Par 22 voix contre 18, avec 11 abstentions, l'amendement 6 est adopté.

59. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le texte du facteur A. 3 de la troisième partie de la liste (A/2428, section VI), tel qu'il a été amendé par l'adoption de l'amendement 6.

Par 23 voix contre 18, avec 8 abstentions, le texte du facteur A. 3 est adopté sous sa forme amendée.

60. Le PRESIDENT déclare que le texte du facteur A. 4 n'a fait l'objet d'aucun amendement et que, si aucune objection n'est formulée, il le considérera comme adopté.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

61. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 7 (A/C.4/L.274).

Par 28 voix contre 13, avec 10 abstentions, l'amendement 7 est adopté.

62. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le texte du facteur A. 5 de la troisième partie de la liste (A/2428, section VI), tel qu'il a été amendé par l'adoption de l'amendement 7.

Par 23 voix contre 18, avec 9 abstentions, le texte du facteur A. 5 amendé est adopté.

63. Le PRESIDENT déclare que le facteur B. 1 n'a fait l'objet d'aucun amendement et qu'en l'absence d'objections il le considérera comme adopté.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

64. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 8 (A/C.4/L.274).

Par 25 voix contre 16, avec 9 abstentions, l'amendement 8 est adopté.

65. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 9.

Par 25 voix contre 17, avec 8 abstentions, l'amendement 9 est adopté.

66. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble de la troisième partie de la liste de facteurs (A/2428, section VI), sous sa forme amendée.

Par 23 voix contre 16, avec 11 abstentions, la troisième partie de la liste de facteurs est adoptée sous sa forme amendée.

67. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble de la liste de facteurs, sous sa forme amendée.

Par 25 voix contre 18, avec 8 abstentions, la liste de facteurs est adoptée sous sa forme amendée.

68. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) s'est abstenue de voter sur les amendements à la liste de facteurs parce qu'elle estime que leur examen par la Commission a été hâtif et incomplet. Elle réserve la position de sa délégation quant au fond même des amendements et regrette que le Président n'ait pas suivi la procédure suggérée par les représentants de la Belgique, des Philippines et des Etats-Unis.

69. M. S. S. LIU (Chine) déclare que son abstention ne doit pas être considérée comme une prise de position quant au fond même des amendements. La liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc semblait un guide satisfaisant et sa délégation n'a pas vu l'utilité de l'amender pour le moment. En outre, cette liste, qui représente tant d'efforts, aurait pu recueillir plus de suffrages à l'Assemblée générale elle-même. Aucune liste de facteurs ne saurait être complète ou définitive.

70. M. DE HOLTE CASTELLO (Colombie) déclare que son abstention ne constitue ni une prise de position quant au fond même des amendements ni un jugement de valeur. Sa délégation appuie le projet de résolution brésilien (A/C.4/L.272) et votera en sa faveur.

71. M. NAJAR (Israël) déclare qu'il ne faut pas voir dans son abstention lors du vote sur les différents amendements un jugement sur les principes et les définitions qu'ils contiennent. Mais il y a une grande différence entre adopter des propositions en deux jours et adopter une liste qui a fait l'objet d'un examen prolongé et minutieux. Il est regrettable que la Commission ait préféré adopter la liste amendée à une majorité relativement faible, alors qu'elle avait la possibilité d'arriver à un accord beaucoup plus général sur la liste présentée par le Comité ad hoc. M. Najar craint qu'une liste adoptée en de pareilles circonstances ne donne pas les résultats escomptés.

72. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) explique qu'il se serait abstenu de voter sur la liste primitive, qui représente plusieurs années de travail, mais qu'il s'est vu dans l'obligation de voter contre les amendements que la Commission vient d'adopter dans la confusion.

73. M. DONS MOELLER (Danemark) aurait été disposé à voter en faveur de la liste de facteurs présentée par le Comité ad hoc. La présentation d'amendements au stade présent de la discussion a causé quelque surprise à sa délégation, et le temps a manqué pour les étudier. Il a voté en faveur de quelques-uns d'entre eux mais la plupart ne semblent pas apporter la moindre amélioration au texte primitif. Par exemple, le nouveau facteur A. 2 de la troisième partie, qui traite des vœux éventuels des populations d'un territoire non autonome, n'est même pas à proprement parler un facteur, car il a trait à des événements subséquents. De plus, ou bien il signifie que l'intégration à la métropole n'est pas complète, ou bien il constitue une intervention dans les affaires intérieures d'un autre Etat, ce qui est contraire à la Charte. M. Dons Moeller s'est donc vu dans l'obligation de voter contre l'adoption de ce nouveau facteur et contre certains autres amendements.

74. M. PIGNON (France) constate avec regret que la majorité qui a approuvé la liste amendée n'a même pas cherché à répondre aux critiques qui avaient été formulées contre les amendements.

75. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) tient à bien préciser une fois encore que sa délégation a toujours désiré que l'on élabore une liste de facteurs et était disposée à approuver la liste du Comité ad hoc. Elle a vu avec surprise certaines délégations présenter de nouveaux amendements et n'a pu voter en leur faveur, car elle aurait préféré voir la Commission adopter la liste primitive.

76. M. FERREIRA DE SOUZA (Brésil) explique que sa délégation, en s'abstenant de prendre part au vote sur les différents amendements, a été animée du même esprit de conciliation qui l'avait poussée à présenter son projet de résolution. De plus, l'examen des amendements a été trop hâtif et il réserve la position de sa délégation à leur égard lors du vote à l'Assemblée générale.

77. M. NAUDE (Union Sud-Africaine) tient à bien préciser que son vote ne constitue pas une prise de position quant au fond même des amendements.

La séance est levée à 18 h. 5.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 330^e
SEANCE

Vendredi 9 octobre 1953,
à 15 h. 15

New-York

SOMMAIRE

Page

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite]..... 93

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428, A/C.4/L.272, A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, A/C.4/L.274, A/C.4/L.275, A/C.4/L.276, A/C.4/L.277] (suite)

[Point 33*]

1. M. L. S. BOKHARI (Pakistan) dit qu'avant la présentation par onze délégations du projet d'amendement A/C.4/L.274 à la liste de facteurs (A/2428, sect. VI), sa délégation avait l'intention de voter pour le projet de résolution brésilien (A/C.4/L.272), car elle était en faveur de la liste de facteurs présentée par le Comité ad hoc et elle estimait qu'il était inutile que la Commission poursuive cette discussion. M. Bokhari avait espéré que le projet de résolution brésilien recevrait un appui général et que son adoption contribuerait à réduire le désaccord entre Puissances administrantes et Puissances non administrantes. A la séance précédente, la délégation du Pakistan a voté contre la proposition du représentant du Guatemala, qui tendait à ce que les amendements à la liste de facteurs fussent examinés avant le projet de résolution brésilien et les amendements qui s'y rapportent. Par la suite, cependant, comme elle n'était pas opposée aux amendements à la liste de facteurs quant au fond, elle a voté en leur faveur, mais, en raison de la très faible majorité à laquelle la plupart des amendements ont été adoptés, elle n'est pas très satisfaite du résultat.

2. M. FRAZAO (Brésil) indique qu'à la suite de la procédure de vote adoptée à la séance précédente la Commission a pris certaines décisions qui ont amené la délégation brésilienne à reconsidérer sa position en ce qui concerne son projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.272). Ce projet de résolution était fondé sur la conviction que l'Assemblée générale devait adopter certains principes fondamentaux en matière de responsabilité internationale et qu'il incombait aux Membres administrants certaines responsabilités fondamentales. La délégation du Brésil avait espéré que la Commission adopterait ce projet de résolution à une forte majorité. Sa disposition essentielle est l'adoption de la liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc, mais le paragraphe 8 du dispositif laisse au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes la possibilité de reviser cette liste ultérieurement. La liste proposée par le Comité ad hoc est le résultat de près de trois années de travail, et la délégation brésilienne avait préconisé son adoption parce qu'elle était convaincue qu'on faciliterait ainsi la collaboration internationale en vue d'atteindre les objectifs du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Le représentant du Brésil regrette profondément les décisions que la Commission a prises à la séance précédente. Sa délégation a tout d'abord songé à retirer son projet, puisque le paragraphe 2 est incompatible avec les décisions adoptées; mais, pour ne pas compliquer le travail de la Commission, elle a finalement décidé de maintenir son projet de résolution, y compris le paragraphe 2. Elle demande à la Commission d'adopter ce paragraphe tel qu'il est, ce qui aura pour effet d'annuler les décisions de la séance précédente.

3. La délégation du Brésil tient à déclarer officiellement que tel est le motif pour lequel elle maintient son projet de résolution; elle se réserve le droit d'appuyer toute formule de compromis qui pourrait être proposée à l'Assemblée générale.

4. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) dit que la délégation des Etats-Unis comprend parfaitement l'initiative de la délégation du Brésil. Le projet de résolution du Brésil ne donne pas entièrement satisfaction à la délégation des Etats-Unis; mais, pour faire preuve d'esprit de conciliation, celle-ci votera pour onze des douze paragraphes dans leur forme actuelle. Si le troisième paragraphe du dispositif était modifié, la délégation des Etats-Unis pourrait l'appuyer aussi et voter pour la résolution dans son ensemble. Mme Bolton espère que d'autres délégations voteront dans le même esprit.

5. L'Assemblée générale a déjà fait œuvre utile en précisant les facteurs complexes et divers qui doivent permettre de vérifier si un territoire a atteint à l'autonomie complète. La délégation des Etats-Unis ne peut accepter le principe du paragraphe 3 du projet brésilien, mais sa position à son égard n'est pas négative. En vertu de l'Article 10 de la Charte, l'Assemblée est compétente pour examiner et essayer de définir les expressions "territoires non autonomes" et "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". Elle a qualité pour recommander aux Membres administrants en général d'examiner toute définition qu'elle aura adoptée et elle peut même donner son avis, en termes généraux, sur les principes dont s'inspirent ou pourraient s'inspirer lesdits Membres pour décider au sujet de quel territoire ils communiqueront des renseignements. De plus, la délégation des Etats-Unis ne voit pas d'inconvénient à ce que l'Assemblée générale examine les données fournies par les Membres administrants à l'appui de leur décision de cesser de communiquer des renseignements au sujet de territoires qui seraient devenus autonomes. Mais la Constitution des Etats-Unis donne au Congrès des Etats-Unis le pouvoir souverain et exclusif de décider des modifications à apporter au statut constitutionnel des territoires des Etats-Unis. Les Etats-Unis seuls peuvent décider à quel moment l'un de leurs territoires aura atteint à l'autonomie complète, au sens de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Mme Bolton a donc été extrêmement surprise de constater que certaines délégations appuient des recommandations qui ne sauraient avoir un effet juridique obligatoire pour le Congrès des Etats-Unis et seront mal comprises par la population des Etats-Unis. Dans la pratique, ces recommandations n'auront, dans l'ensemble, aucune valeur et, pour cela même, seront nuisibles. La représentante des Etats-Unis demande instamment aux délégations intéressées de ne pas insister pour que la Commission adopte ces recommandations.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

6. Dans l'espoir que son appel sera entendu, Mme Bolton voudrait proposer une modification au paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution brésilien. Elle demande au Président de mettre aux voix séparément l'expression "aux Puissances administrantes qui sont Membres de l'Organisation et à l'Assemblée générale" qui figure au paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution brésilien, ainsi que la dernière partie de ce paragraphe, qui commence par les mots "afin que l'on puisse décider ...".

7. La délégation des Etats-Unis est prête à accepter plusieurs des amendements du document A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1 au projet de résolution brésilien, mais elle votera contre les amendements 2 et 3 parce qu'elle appuie la liste de facteurs du rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/2428). Si ces paragraphes sont rejetés, la Commission aura la possibilité, en votant sans les modifier les paragraphes correspondants du projet brésilien, de revenir sur la décision hâtive et regrettable qu'elle a prise à la séance précédente et d'approuver la liste de facteurs proposée par le Comité ad hoc. Afin de répondre aux vœux des onze auteurs des amendements à la liste de facteurs, la Commission pourrait envisager la possibilité d'adresser les comptes rendus de ses débats sur la question des facteurs au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, en le priant d'examiner les suggestions de Membres de l'Assemblée, s'il décide d'étudier de nouvelles revisions de la liste de facteurs¹.

8. M. FRAZAO (Brésil) accepte l'amendement de la délégation des Etats-Unis, car il le considère comme une solution raisonnable à la difficulté actuelle. Il espère que les auteurs des amendements contenus dans le document A/C.4/L.274 seront en mesure de voter cet amendement et, par conséquent, le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution brésilien. La délégation du Brésil étudiera bien volontiers, au Comité des renseignements, les amendements à la liste de facteurs et acceptera sans doute un grand nombre de ces amendements. Mais il est certain qu'à la séance précédente, la Commission a adopté ces amendements sans les avoir examinés comme il convient.

9. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala), appuyé par M. BOZOVIC (Yougoslavie) et M. ESPINOSA Y

PRIETO (Mexique), fait observer que voter le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution du Brésil équivaldrait à revenir sur les décisions que la Commission a prises à sa séance précédente. En vertu de l'article 122 du règlement intérieur, la Commission ne peut le faire que si elle en décide ainsi à la majorité des deux tiers.

10. M. ARAOZ (Bolivie) fait observer que si la Commission adopte le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution du Brésil ou le paragraphe 3 des amendements (A/C.4/L.273), le résultat sera le même. La Commission n'est saisie que d'une seule liste de facteurs, à savoir la liste amendée; en effet, du fait même qu'elle a été amendée, la liste initiale proposée par le Comité ad hoc a cessé d'exister. Si la Commission désire revenir sur sa décision d'amender la liste de facteurs, il convient d'appliquer strictement les articles pertinents du règlement intérieur.

11. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) et M. FRAZAO (Brésil) ne peuvent accepter l'argument selon lequel la liste du Comité ad hoc aurait cessé d'exister. De toute façon, à sa précédente séance, la Commission n'a examiné aucune partie du projet de résolution du Brésil, pas plus que les amendements dont ce texte faisait l'objet. La Commission a simplement voté sur les amendements à la liste de facteurs. Elle doit maintenant passer au vote sur le projet de résolution et les amendements dont il fait l'objet.

12. Le PRÉSIDENT décide qu'en votant sur le projet de résolution du Brésil et sur les amendements dont il fait l'objet, la Commission ne revient pas sur les décisions qu'elle a prises antérieurement et que par conséquent l'article 122 ne s'applique pas en l'occurrence.

13. Aucun amendement n'a été déposé en ce qui concerne les deux premiers considérants du projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) et, s'il n'y a pas d'objections, le Président considérera que ces considérants sont adoptés.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

14. Le PRÉSIDENT annonce que l'amendement 1 (A/C.4/L.273), visant à insérer au préambule un nouveau considérant qui deviendrait le troisième, a été accepté par le représentant du Brésil.

15. M. PIGNON (France) demande que ce paragraphe soit néanmoins mis aux voix.

16. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

Le vote commence par l'Irak dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Thaïlande, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, République Dominicaine, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran.

Votent contre: Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Canada, Danemark, France.

S'abstiennent: Norvège, Suède.

¹ La délégation des Etats-Unis a présenté ultérieurement au cours de la séance un amendement à cet effet, qui a été distribué sous la cote A/C.4/L.276.

Par 37 voix contre 11, avec 2 abstentions, cet amendement est adopté.

17. Le PRESIDENT annonce qu'aucun amendement n'a été déposé en ce qui concerne le considérant du projet de résolution du Brésil qui était à l'origine le troisième et qui est maintenant devenu le quatrième; s'il n'y a pas d'objections, le Président considérera que ce considérant est adopté.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

18. Le PRESIDENT fait observer que le vote sur le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution décidera automatiquement du sort de ce qui constituait antérieurement le quatrième considérant du projet de résolution et, par conséquent, du sort de l'amendement 2 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1).

19. Aucun amendement n'a été déposé en ce qui concerne le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil et, s'il n'y a pas d'objections, le Président considérera que ce paragraphe est adopté.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

20. M. FRAZAO (Brésil) fait observer que l'addition du nouveau paragraphe proposé par les Etats-Unis peut influencer le vote qu'un certain nombre de délégations émettront en ce qui concerne tant le paragraphe 2 du projet de résolution du Brésil que les amendements à ce paragraphe. M. Frazao propose donc de suspendre la séance jusqu'à ce que le texte de l'amendement des Etats-Unis ait été distribué.

21. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la motion de suspension.

Par 17 voix contre 12, avec 14 abstentions, cette motion est rejetée.

22. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) demande qu'il soit procédé à un vote distinct sur la première partie de l'amendement 3 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) jusqu'aux mots "jointe en annexe".

23. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie de l'amendement 3.

Par 24 voix contre 20, avec 3 abstentions, la première partie est rejetée.

24. Le PRESIDENT constate que la deuxième partie de ce paragraphe n'aurait en elle-même aucun sens; il est donc impossible de la mettre aux voix.

25. Mme MENON (Inde) propose de supprimer les mots "contenue dans ce rapport", qui figurent au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil, et de les remplacer par les mots "adoptée par la Quatrième Commission".

26. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) appuie cette proposition à la fois quant au fond et pour des raisons de procédure. Etant donné que la Commission a déjà approuvé la liste de facteurs sous sa forme amendée, il est inutile de procéder à un vote sur une disposition qui a pour objet d'approuver la liste élaborée par le Comité ad hoc.

27. M. MATHIESON (Royaume-Uni) soutient que, malgré le vote intervenu à la précédente séance, il existe encore deux listes de facteurs: celle qu'a proposée le Comité ad hoc et celle qu'a approuvée la Quatrième Commission. Il n'y a aucune raison pour que la Commission ne vote pas sur un projet de résolution approuvant la première de ces listes si tel est le désir de la délégation brésilienne.

28. M. FRAZAO (Brésil), intervenant sur une question de procédure, estime qu'on ne peut présenter un nouvel amendement au moment où la Commission a déjà commencé à voter sur les amendements des onze Puissances.

29. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) ne pense pas que l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde puisse être mis aux voix, car cela reviendrait en fait à présenter à nouveau l'amendement que la Commission vient de rejeter.

30. M. PIGNON (France) déclare que l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde porte sur une question de fond; on ne peut interrompre le vote sur les amendements des onze Puissances pour se prononcer sur le texte de l'Inde.

31. Mme MENON (Inde) souligne qu'en rejetant le paragraphe 3 des amendements des onze Puissances, la Commission a, en fait, rejeté la liste de facteurs modifiée qu'elle avait adoptée au cours de la précédente séance. D'autre part, en adoptant la liste de facteurs modifiée, la Commission a automatiquement rejeté la liste originale. En réalité, il n'existe donc plus de liste sur laquelle la Commission puisse se prononcer.

32. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) demande à la Commission de se prononcer sur le projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil.

33. Le PRESIDENT propose de mettre aux voix l'amendement déposé par la délégation de l'Inde.

34. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) fait observer qu'aux termes de l'article 127 du règlement intérieur, l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde n'est pas recevable. En outre, cet amendement remet en cause une question sur laquelle la Commission a déjà pris une décision.

35. Le PRESIDENT invite la Commission à décider si elle désire que l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde soit mis aux voix.

Par 25 voix contre 19, avec 4 abstentions, la Commission décide de mettre aux voix l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde.

36. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) présente une motion d'ordre; en exécution des dispositions de l'article 119 du règlement intérieur, l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde doit être distribué par écrit et les membres de la Commission doivent avoir le temps de l'étudier.

37. Le PRESIDENT déclare que la séance sera suspendue pendant un quart d'heure pour permettre la distribution du texte écrit de l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde.

La séance est suspendue à 17 h. 15; elle est reprise à 17 h. 45.

38. M. CALLE Y CALLE (Pérou) déclare que si l'article 119 du règlement intérieur permet au Président d'autoriser la discussion d'amendements qui n'ont pas été distribués par écrit, ce même article ne lui permet pas de mettre ces amendements aux voix avant qu'ils n'aient été distribués. En outre, l'article 127 prévoit qu'aucun représentant ne peut interrompre le scrutin sauf s'il s'agit d'une motion d'ordre ayant trait à la manière dont s'effectue le scrutin en question. L'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde (A/C.4/L.277) ne constitue pas une motion d'ordre et a été déposé au cours du scrutin.

39. M. DE MARCHENA (République Dominicaine) reconnaît que l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde ne porte pas uniquement sur une question de forme, mais, en admettant même qu'il en soit ainsi, ce serait créer un très sérieux précédent que de le déclarer recevable car il a été déposé au cours d'un scrutin. En raison des conséquences importantes qui pourraient en résulter, la Commission devrait avoir le temps d'étudier l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde. M. de Marchena propose donc de lever la séance.

Il y a 19 voix pour, 19 voix contre et 11 abstentions. La proposition n'est pas adoptée.

40. Mme MENON (Inde) déclare que l'amendement déposé par la délégation de l'Inde n'est pas un amendement de fond mais tend uniquement à apporter une modification de forme rendue nécessaire par le fait que la Commission a adopté, au cours de la séance précédente, une liste de facteurs modifiée.

41. M. FRAZAO (Brésil) fait observer, aux fins tant du présent compte rendu que du rapport de la Commission, que sur la proposition du Président, la Commission a rejeté la première partie de l'amendement 3 des amendements des onze Puissances (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) et doit se prononcer sur l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde après avoir rejeté l'amendement des onze Puissances.

42. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix l'amendement (A/C.4/L.277) que la délégation de l'Inde propose d'apporter au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution présenté par la délégation du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272).

43. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la Suède, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Egypte, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Pologne, Arabie saoudite.

Votent contre: Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Brésil, Canada, Colombie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou.

S'abstiennent: Thaïlande, Chine, Grèce, Philippines.

Par 30 voix contre 18, avec 4 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

44. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) sous sa forme amendée. Il fait observer que cet amendement entraîne la suppression du quatrième considérant.

45. M. MENDOZA (Guatemala) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par les Philippines, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Arabie saoudite, Syrie, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, Chili, Cuba, Egypte, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan.

Votent contre: Pologne, Suède, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Brésil, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou.

S'abstiennent: Philippines, Thaïlande, Chine, Grèce.

Par 25 voix contre 23, avec 4 abstentions, le paragraphe 2 modifié est adopté.

46. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) retire la proposition de la délégation des Etats-Unis visant à voter par division le paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil.

47. Le PRÉSIDENT dit que s'il n'y a pas d'objections il déclarera adoptée la première partie du paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) jusqu'aux mots "la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe".

Il en est ainsi décidé.

48. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) fait observer que si ce paragraphe avait fait l'objet d'un vote, la délégation polonaise se serait prononcée contre la première partie.

49. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix l'amendement des Philippines (A/C.4/L.275, alinéa a) tendant à ajouter les mots "dans les consultations auxquelles elles procéderont" après les mots "pour guider" au paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution brésilien.

Par 26 voix contre 15, avec 9 abstentions, l'amendement est rejeté.

50. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix la deuxième partie de l'amendement 4 des onze Puissances (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) tendant à supprimer, dans le paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution brésilien, les mots "et d'appliquer ces facteurs en tenant compte de toutes circonstances propres à chaque cas particulier".

Par 26 voix contre 18, avec 6 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

51. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix l'amendement des Philippines (A/C.4/L.275, alinéa b) tendant à ajouter les mots "d'un commun accord" après les mots "que l'on puisse décider".

Par 19 voix contre 13, avec 4 abstentions, l'amendement est rejeté.

52. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix la troisième partie de l'amendement 4 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) tendant à remplacer les mots "afin que l'on puisse décider" par les mots "afin que l'Assemblée générale puisse décider", au paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution brésilien.

Par 30 voix contre 15, avec 5 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

53. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble du paragraphe 3 du dispositif du projet de résolution brésilien (A/C.4/L.272), tel qu'il a été amendé.

Par 25 voix contre 23, avec 3 abstentions, l'ensemble du paragraphe 3, ainsi amendé, est adopté.

54. Le PRÉSIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 5 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) proposant un nouveau texte pour le paragraphe 4 du projet de résolution brésilien.

Par 35 voix contre 11, avec 4 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

55. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le nouveau paragraphe 5 proposé dans l'amendement 6 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1).

Par 29 voix contre 19, avec 4 abstentions, le nouveau paragraphe 5 est adopté.

56. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie du nouveau paragraphe 6 proposé dans l'amendement 6 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1), jusqu'aux mots "l'autonomie complète", ainsi que le représentant de la Pologne l'a demandé.

57. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Pakistan, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Arabie saoudite, Syrie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Chili, Colombie, Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, République Dominicaine, Egypte, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Liban, Libéria, Mexique.

Votent contre: Suède, Union Sud-Africaine, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Canada, Danemark, France, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège.

S'abstiennent: Pakistan, Thaïlande, Chine, Ethiopie.

Par 35 voix contre 13, avec 4 abstentions, la première partie du nouveau paragraphe 6 est adoptée.

58. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le reste du nouveau paragraphe 6.

Par 28 voix contre 7, avec 15 abstentions, le reste du nouveau paragraphe 6 est adopté.

59. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'ensemble du paragraphe 6.

Par 28 voix contre 18, avec 3 abstentions, l'ensemble du paragraphe 6 est adopté.

60. Le PRESIDENT déclare qu'en l'absence d'opposition aux amendements 7 et 8 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1), qui ont été acceptés par le Brésil, les paragraphes 5 et 6 du projet de résolution brésilien ainsi amendés, qui deviennent maintenant les paragraphes 7 et 8, seront considérés comme adoptés.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

61. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie de l'amendement 9 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1) tendant à donner le numéro 9 au paragraphe 7 du dispositif du projet de résolution brésilien et à supprimer les mots "en outre" dudit paragraphe.

Par 23 voix contre 2, avec 21 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

62. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la fin de l'amendement 9 visant à supprimer, au même paragraphe du projet de résolution brésilien, le membre de phrase commençant par les mots "lorsqu'il s'acquittera" et finissant par les mots "le 2 décembre 1950".

Par 23 voix contre 3, avec 13 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

63. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le nouveau paragraphe 9 du projet de résolution brésilien, sous sa forme amendée.

Par 28 voix contre 21, avec 2 abstentions, le paragraphe 9, sous sa forme amendée, est adopté.

64. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement 10 (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1), qui propose un nouveau texte pour le dernier paragraphe, anciennement paragraphe 8, du projet de résolution brésilien.

Par 33 voix contre 13, avec 4 abstentions, l'amendement est adopté.

65. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) indique que, s'il a voté contre l'amendement, ce n'est pas parce qu'il estime impossible d'améliorer la liste.

66. Le PRESIDENT annonce que l'amendement des Etats-Unis (A/C.4/L.276) a été retiré.

67. Il met aux voix l'ensemble du projet de résolution brésilien, sous sa forme amendée, avec la liste de facteurs telle qu'elle a été modifiée.

68. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) demande le vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Bolivie, Birmanie, Chili, Cuba, Egypte, Ethiopie, Grèce, Guatemala, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Liban, Libéria, Mexique, Pakistan, Philippines, Arabie saoudite, Syrie.

Votent contre: République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union Sud-Africaine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Belgique, Brésil, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Canada, Colombie, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, France, Israël, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Norvège, Pérou, Pologne, Suède.

S'abstiennent: Chine, Thaïlande.

Par 27 voix contre 23, avec 2 abstentions, le projet de résolution brésilien, sous sa forme amendée, est adopté.

69. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) déclare que l'attitude de sa délégation au sujet de la liste de facteurs s'explique par son adhésion au principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. La délégation polonaise a pu accepter et voter la première partie de la liste, mais a considéré qu'elle ne pouvait accepter la deuxième et la troisième partie, car elles ne prévoient pas l'accession des territoires non autonomes au statut d'Etat souverain. La deuxième et la troisième partie risquent de ce fait de prêter à une interprétation qui serve à perpétuer le régime colonial sous une forme différente, au lieu de faciliter l'accession des peuples non autonomes à l'indépendance.

70. La délégation polonaise s'est vue dans l'obligation de voter contre le projet de résolution brésilien, même sous sa forme amendée, parce que sa disposition essentielle avait pour objet d'approuver une liste de facteurs qui n'est pas satisfaisante. Les amendements à la liste de facteurs et au projet de résolution n'ont pas amélioré le texte original, ni dissipé les graves appréhensions de la délégation polonaise.

71. M. Winiewicz tient à souligner encore une fois une autre considération fondamentale déjà formulée par la délégation polonaise au cours de la discussion précédente que la Quatrième Commission avait consacrée à la question. L'obligation qu'ont assumée les Puissances coloniales de transmettre des renseignements est une obligation qui les lie et elles ne peuvent être relevées de cette responsabilité internationale que par une décision internationale de l'Assemblée générale. Pour qu'une Puissance administrante puisse être dégagée de son obligation de fournir des renseignements conformément à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, il faut que l'Assemblée générale étudie toutes les données concernant les changements intervenus dans le statut du territoire et se prononce en tenant compte de toutes les circonstances pertinentes. Telles sont les considérations qui guideront la délégation polonaise chaque fois que l'Assemblée générale sera appelée à décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire dont les populations s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes.

La séance est levée à 18 h. 45.

Nations Unies
ASSEMBLEE
GENERALE

HUITIEME SESSION
Documents officiels

54
QUATRIEME COMMISSION, 331^e

SEANCE

Lundi 12 octobre 1953,
à 10 h. 45

New-York

SOMMAIRE

	Pages
Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [suite].....	99
Renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte [suite]..	103

Président: M. Santiago PEREZ PEREZ (Venezuela).

Facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire est, ou n'est pas, un territoire dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes: rapport du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) [A/2428] (suite)

[Point 33 *]

1. Lord HUDSON (Royaume-Uni) précise que sa délégation a voté à la 330^{ème} séance contre le projet de résolution du Brésil (A/C.4/L.272) pour les raisons que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a exposées dans la première intervention qu'il a faite au cours des débats sur ce point de l'ordre du jour (326^{ème} séance). De plus, la délégation du Royaume-Uni réserve expressément sa position au cas où un Membre quelconque de l'Assemblée générale invoquerait cette résolution pour appuyer une revendication ultérieure.

2. Mme MENON (Inde) dit que la délégation de l'Inde était prête à accepter tel quel le rapport du Comité ad hoc (A/2428); cependant, elle n'a pas vu d'objection à ce que les principes énoncés dans la liste des facteurs contenue dans la section VI du rapport et dans le projet de résolution du Brésil soient précisés et mis au point. La délégation de l'Inde a donc voté les amendements des onze Puissances à la liste des facteurs (A/C.4/L.274) et au projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1). Certaines délégations se sont opposées à ce que la Commission étudie à nouveau la liste des facteurs parce que cette liste avait déjà été étudiée par le Comité ad hoc; elles se sont également prononcées contre les amendements en alléguant que la Quatrième Commission n'avait pas eu le temps de les étudier. Il est évident qu'un Comité ad hoc, qui ne comprend qu'un petit nombre de délégations, ne peut représenter les vues de l'ensemble des soixante pays qui siègent à la Quatrième Commission; par contre, certains des amendements proposés avaient déjà été examinés à San-Francisco et les idées qu'ils contiennent sont connues depuis longtemps. Il a été entendu que la liste des facteurs constituera simplement un guide, qu'on y trouvera des indications générales plutôt qu'une énumération complète et que chaque cas soumis aux Nations Unies sera examiné séparément, en fonction de circonstances qui lui sont propres. On a donc à la fois limité et étendu la portée et le champ d'application de la liste des facteurs. La liste représente un effort sincère en vue de faire cadrer les faits avec la théorie, au lieu de plier la théorie aux faits, et sa valeur est purement formelle.

3. La délégation de l'Inde attache une grande importance à deux éléments du problème: en premier lieu, pour que la Commission puisse poursuivre ses travaux, il est essentiel de parvenir à une certaine compréhension entre les Membres administrants et les Membres non administrants; en second lieu, les décisions adoptées par la Commission doivent accélérer le rythme du progrès envisagé au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Ces résultats ne peuvent être acquis que par un effort de coopération. Il est vrai qu'aucune disposition de la Charte n'oblige les Membres administrants à adopter telle ou telle autre ligne de conduite; cependant, dans les limites qui lui sont propres, la Quatrième Commission s'efforce de mettre en œuvre les décisions de l'Assemblée générale. Lorsqu'on a pris conscience de ces limites, il semble inutile de débattre les thèses respectivement défendues par les Membres administrants et par l'Organisation des Nations Unies. En réaffirmant à tout propos que les décisions qu'ils prendront quant au statut des territoires non autonomes qu'ils administrent seront unilatérales, qu'en acceptant le Chapitre XI ils ont fait toutes les concessions qu'ils étaient disposés à consentir et que ce serait violer la Charte que leur demander autre chose, les Membres administrants ne favorisent nullement cette compréhension et ils enlèvent tout sens au Chapitre XI. La délégation de l'Inde estime que lorsqu'un Etat Membre accepte la Charte, il ne peut accepter certaines dispositions comme obligatoires, et d'autres comme non obligatoires. Elle pense, comme d'autres délégations, que les dispositions du Chapitre XI ne sont pas et ne sauraient être considérées comme des déclarations unilatérales faites par certains Etats Membres; elles constituent un traité auquel tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sont parties contractantes. L'obligation de transmettre des renseignements n'est donc pas limitée de façon permanente à quelques Membres administrants, car il n'est pas exclu que d'autres Etats Membres puissent assumer des obligations de cette nature. Il incombe à tous les Etats Membres de remplir les fins énoncées au Chapitre XI, et c'est là l'une des raisons pour lesquelles les Membres non administrants s'intéressent si vivement au bien-être des populations des territoires non autonomes.

4. La délégation de l'Inde ne sous-estime pas la valeur des définitions, mais elle attache plus d'importance aux faits. L'association de plusieurs pays ne peut être volontaire que dans la mesure où les pays intéressés sont placés sur un pied d'entière égalité. L'association et la coopération sur le plan international ne sont donc valables et possibles que lorsqu'un territoire a été libéré de toute pression politique extérieure. La méthode qu'il convient de suivre, dans tous les cas de cette nature, consiste donc à assurer tout d'abord l'indépendance et à passer ensuite à l'association, comme ce fut le cas de l'Inde elle-même. La Charte dispose que les Etats Membres ont accepté les diverses obligations qui leur incombent en vertu de l'Article 73 comme une mission sacrée; on comprend donc difficilement pourquoi les Membres administrants pourraient craindre les mots "indépendance" et "droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes". Les arguments qu'ils invoquent ne tiennent aucun compte de la façon dont la pensée politique a récemment évolué. Les événements ont montré qu'il n'est plus possible de résister au désir de liberté des masses populaires en s'appuyant sur des théories ou des interprétations juridiques. Les Puissances administrantes devraient devancer les événements au lieu d'être à leur remorque. En Europe, des Etats souverains abandonnent actuellement leurs droits en matière de défense nationale, droit où l'on a reconnu l'un des attributs caractéristiques de la souveraineté; pendant ce temps, dans le monde entier, les peuples dépendants revendiquent le droit à l'indépendance. Tels sont les faits qui ont servi de toile de fond à l'examen de la liste des facteurs à la Quatrième Commission.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

5. Il est étrange et regrettable que certains Etats Membres, qui remplissent fidèlement les obligations du Chapitre XI, aient manifesté leur indifférence vis-à-vis de la liste des facteurs et réaffirmé la thèse, souvent exprimée par eux, selon laquelle ni l'Assemblée générale ni aucune Puissance ne pourront influencer les décisions qu'ils prendront quant au statut des territoires non autonomes qu'ils administrent. La délégation de l'Inde se préoccupe du sort des peuples des territoires non autonomes et, comme elle l'a toujours fait, elle appuiera pleinement toute mesure qui hâtera ou contribuera à hâter l'évolution de ces territoires vers l'indépendance.

6. La délégation de l'Inde ne partage pas les vues des délégations qui ont souligné la difficulté d'une définition satisfaisante de la notion de complète autonomie. Le problème qui se pose n'est pas celui de l'absence d'une définition, mais de l'absence d'accord sur cette définition. Pour la délégation de l'Inde, il n'existe aucune différence entre l'autonomie complète et l'indépendance. Il peut exister divers degrés d'autonomie, mais une autonomie complète doit être synonyme d'indépendance.

7. C'est parce que la délégation de l'Inde est convaincue de ces principes qu'elle a accepté les amendements des onze Puissances ainsi que les principes énoncés dans le projet de résolution du Brésil.

8. M. RYCKMANS (Belgique) déclare que la délégation de la Belgique a voté en s'inspirant de certains principes immuables qui sont d'une application universelle et en tout point conformes au droit.

9. La représentante des Etats-Unis a clairement fait comprendre que c'est au Congrès des Etats-Unis qu'appartient le pouvoir souverain de prendre des décisions concernant le statut des territoires des Etats-Unis. De même, c'est au Parlement belge, et à lui seul, qu'il appartient de décider du sort des territoires belges, qui forment partie intégrante de l'Etat belge. Lorsque la Belgique a décidé que l'Article 73, e, de la Charte s'appliquait au Congo belge, elle a décidé, sans pour cela consulter l'Assemblée générale, de communiquer les renseignements prévus à cet article; l'Assemblée générale n'a fait que prendre acte de cette décision et n'a nullement été appelée à l'approuver. Lorsque la Belgique estimera que le Congo belge ne relève plus de l'Article 73, e, elle décidera de même, sans davantage consulter l'Assemblée générale ni lui demander son approbation, de cesser de communiquer des renseignements à son sujet. Tel est le droit, et ni un vote de la Quatrième Commission, ni une recommandation de l'Assemblée générale ne peuvent y changer quelque chose, car ils sont impuissants à investir l'Assemblée générale de pouvoirs que la Charte ne lui a pas conférés et ils sont impuissants à priver les Etats signataires d'une souveraineté qu'ils n'ont pas abdiquée. C'est pourquoi la résolution qui a été adoptée à la séance précédente restera lettre morte.

10. La thèse de la Belgique, suivant laquelle toute population non autonome a le droit d'être traitée équitablement et d'être protégée contre les abus, et suivant laquelle tout Etat qui possède des territoires habités par des populations qui ne s'administrent pas elles-mêmes est tenu, aux termes de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, de fournir certains renseignements au Secrétaire général, n'a jamais été réfutée. Le représentant du Guatemala a tenté de lui opposer les vues exprimées à la Conférence de San-Francisco par les représentants de la Grèce et du Royaume-Uni, mais des opinions individuelles n'ont aucun poids au regard de la déclaration claire qui figure dans la Charte. Aucune attaque sérieuse n'a pu être lancée contre l'argument irréfutable qui est exposé aux paragraphes 59 et suivants du mémoire belge du 30 avril 1953 (A/AC.67/2).

11. Si la Charte était appliquée dans sa lettre et dans son esprit, il n'y aurait rien d'alarmant dans la thèse de la Belgique. Tous les hommes ont droit à un traitement équitable et à la protection contre les abus, simplement parce qu'ils sont des êtres humains, même si ce droit n'était pas formulé dans la Charte. Toutes les nations civilisées ont reconnu ce droit en acceptant l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations. Et même les Etats qui prétendent aujourd'hui avoir refusé de le reconnaître dans la Charte n'oseraient pas prétendre qu'ils ont cessé de le reconnaître au for de leur conscience et qu'ils ont l'intention de dépouiller leurs populations autochtones d'une garantie internationale qu'ils leur avaient reconnue auparavant. Tous les Etats civilisés qui administrent des populations autochtones ont créé des services pour leur protection et tous publient des rapports. La Charte n'exige pas de ces Etats, et nul ne leur demande, de tenir l'Assemblée générale au courant de leurs problèmes politiques. Tout ce qu'il leur est demandé et tout ce que la Charte leur impose est d'extraire de ces rapports certains renseignements statistiques et autres, de nature technique, relatifs aux questions économiques, sociales et culturelles, et de les communiquer officiellement au Secrétaire général.

12. Il est difficile de comprendre que certains Etats souverains ne puissent accepter cette thèse. Si certains Etats la repoussent, c'est parce qu'ils désirent imposer aux quelques Puissances qui reconnaissent leurs obligations et qui s'en acquittent une interprétation tellement abusive de la Charte qu'ils ne peuvent plus l'accepter quand il s'agit de l'appliquer à eux-mêmes. Cependant, la logique a des lois qui ne se laissent pas violer. Ce qui est vrai à la Commission l'est également ailleurs. Si les décisions qui ont été prises aux deux séances précédentes sont destinées à manquer leur but, elles auront cependant certaines répercussions qui pourraient bien être très différentes de celles qu'on avait voulues. Les théories inattendues dont s'inspirent ces décisions — identité des concepts de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance, droit de sécession présenté comme inhérent au droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, compétence exclusive de l'Assemblée pour décider du moment auquel un territoire cesse de tomber sous l'application de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte — feront sans doute sourire dans les écoles de droit; et peut-être leurs auteurs ne les auraient-ils pas soutenues ailleurs qu'à la Quatrième Commission. Mais, le fait est qu'elles ont été soutenues, et à ceux qui les ont soutenues devant cette commission on est en droit de les opposer ailleurs. Si les facteurs qui ont été adoptés comme critères sont valables, ils le sont dans tous les pays, et pas seulement dans les territoires coloniaux. S'ils permettent de décider quand un Etat peut cesser de fournir des renseignements, ils permettent au même titre de décider quand un Etat doit commencer d'en fournir. Si l'Assemblée est compétente, elle l'est à l'égard de tous les Etats et pas seulement à l'égard des Puissances coloniales.

13. Des membres de la Commission ont affirmé dans un vote par appel nominal que le droit des peuples coloniaux à disposer d'eux-mêmes comporte le droit de sécession. Il est douteux que certains gouvernements aient applaudi aux votes émis à la Quatrième Commission par leurs représentants. Il est douteux que ces gouvernements confirment ce vote quand ils en auront pesé les conséquences et quand il s'agira pour chacun d'eux de prendre leurs responsabilités devant l'Assemblée générale. Il y a, ailleurs que dans les territoires coloniaux, des peuples soumis à un Etat qu'ils n'ont pas choisi et dont ils voudraient bien se séparer. Lorsque ces peuples demanderont que l'on applique les principes sous-entendus dans les votes émis en faveur de la liste des facteurs et du projet de résolution amendé, on leur répondra, bien entendu, que ces principes ne s'appliquent qu'aux peuples des territoires "supérieurs" et non aux peuples qui vivent à l'intérieur des frontières continentales d'un Etat souverain. Il est à craindre qu'ils ne saisissent pas la petite nuance. Il y a dans de nombreux Etats des groupes nationaux qui demandent une certaine autonomie. La résolution qui vient d'être adoptée leur apprendra qu'il n'y a pas d'autonomie vraie en dehors de l'indépendance totale. Peut-être ne se contenteront-ils plus désormais de réclamer l'autonomie. M. Ryckmans rappelle aux membres de la Commission le proverbe "Qui sème le vent récolte la tempête". Ceux qui ont adopté le projet de résolution amendé sont en train de semer le vent et, lorsque soufflera la tempête, il sera trop tard pour eux de dire qu'ils ne l'avaient pas voulu.

14. M. FRAZAO (Brésil) tient, pour éviter les malentendus, à exposer les raisons qui l'ont amené à voter contre les amendements au projet de résolution de sa délégation.

15. Il a souligné, au cours des débats, qu'aucune divergence fondamentale n'existe entre la délégation du Brésil et les auteurs des amendements en ce qui concerne tant le principe que le but des modifications proposées. On peut en voir la preuve dans le fait que la délégation du Brésil a accepté d'ajouter au préambule un nouveau paragraphe relatif à la compétence de l'Assemblée générale en ce qui concerne le respect des obligations qui découlent des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1, amendement 1).

16. Mais pour ce qui est des autres amendements, la délégation du Brésil a tenu à marquer qu'elle préférerait la manière dont elle-même avait défini la compétence de l'Assemblée générale en ce qui concerne la cessation de la communication de renseignements et le principe de relativité qui doit présider à l'application de la liste. En outre, M. Frazao ne considère pas que la suppression du paragraphe 4 du dispositif améliore le projet de résolution. Il aurait préféré que la Commission conservât le texte original, qui précise que le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes est l'élément primordial auquel tous les autres éléments doivent être subordonnés. De plus, le représentant du Brésil estime que le libellé des paragraphes 5 et 6 du texte modifié n'est pas très satisfaisant. Le paragraphe 5 reprend l'idée déjà exprimée au paragraphe 4 du texte de la délégation du Brésil. Le paragraphe 6 émet un jugement sur la valeur de deux formes d'autonomie; le texte de ce paragraphe implique une certaine réserve à l'encontre de l'association sous toutes ses formes: on pourrait en déduire que la Commission condamne l'association et préfère que les populations des territoires non autonomes ne choisissent pas cette forme d'autonomie. Cesser de communiquer des renseignements fondés parce que le territoire intéressé a accédé à une complète égalité avec l'Etat métropolitain n'est possible que dans trois cas: l'union, la fédération du type classique et le Commonwealth sous sa forme actuelle, car les Dominions, à un moment donné de leur évolution, ne possédaient pas l'égalité absolue avec le Royaume-Uni. Le texte que la Commission vient d'adopter renferme donc une contradiction. Aux termes du paragraphe 6, un territoire peut devenir autonome en s'associant à un autre Etat, à condition que cette association soit effectuée sur un pied d'égalité absolue. Or, cette disposition exclut l'incorporation ou l'intégration à une fédération, puisque la personnalité juridique des Etats qui ont signé un pacte fédéral est subordonnée à celle de l'union. On ne peut donc pas dire que l'intégration au sein d'une union déjà existante s'effectuerait sur un pied d'égalité absolue. Le paragraphe 6 n'envisage pas davantage la possibilité d'un autre type d'intégration, à savoir l'intégration à un Etat unitaire. Toutefois, le représentant du Brésil ne s'étendra pas sur ce sujet.

17. M. Frazao pense avoir suffisamment exposé les inquiétudes que la délégation du Brésil éprouve à l'encontre du texte modifié; il tient en outre à déclarer qu'il désapprouve la hâte avec laquelle la Commission a apporté des modifications de fond à la liste des facteurs. En présentant son projet de résolution, la délégation du Brésil avait voulu mettre à profit le compromis auquel étaient parvenus les membres du Comité ad hoc. Il aurait été souhaitable que les Membres administrants acceptent de bon gré une liste des facteurs. Certes, ils n'avaient pas accueilli très favorablement la liste établie par le Comité ad hoc, mais ils ne pouvaient cependant pas la rejeter, car ils avaient contribué à l'élaborer. Une résolution qui aurait recueilli l'approbation des Membres administrants aurait été d'un grand poids. En dépit de l'opposition de certaines délégations, le texte brésilien aurait rallié une forte majorité en faveur de la liste des facteurs. La Commission a gâché une occasion propice.

18. Rien, dans l'expérience acquise au cours des années précédentes, n'autorisait la Commission à penser qu'elle serait en mesure d'améliorer, en l'espace de quelques jours, le résultat de trois années de travail. La Commission s'est départie de la prudence avec laquelle elle avait entrepris l'étude et la classification des facteurs. En 1952, certains membres de la Commission ont réservé la position de leur délégation sur cette question, car leur gouvernement n'avait pas eu le temps d'examiner la liste. A la 330ème séance, la Commission a pris des décisions d'une importance considérable. La délégation du Brésil a estimé que la liste des facteurs avait été suffisamment étudiée et qu'il vaudrait mieux, pour l'instant, en rester là pour ne pas risquer de provoquer de sérieuses dissensions. Le Comité ad hoc et les deux tiers des orateurs qui ont participé à la discussion générale ont été du même avis. Puis on a assisté à un brusque revirement et un grand nombre d'orateurs se sont ralliés à l'opinion contraire. La délégation du Brésil n'a pas estimé pouvoir les imiter et n'a pas eu le temps de demander des instructions à son gouvernement au sujet des amendements, qui exigeaient une étude approfondie. La délégation du Brésil s'est donc abstenue de prendre part aux débats et n'a même pas indiqué qu'à son avis l'amendement de la délégation de l'Inde (A/C.4/L.277) touchait le fond de la question. La dernière possibilité de conciliation a disparu au moment où la Commission a refusé d'examiner l'amendement de la délégation des Etats-Unis (A/C.4/L.276).

19. Le représentant du Brésil en vient alors à la déclaration du représentant de la Belgique. Il s'étonne qu'une thèse semblable puisse être défendue à l'heure actuelle. M. Frazao ne s'attardera pas, pour l'instant, sur les conclusions du représentant de la Belgique, soit du point de vue juridique, soit du point de vue de la Charte, mais il reviendra sur la question lorsque la Commission étudiera le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes (A/2465).

20. M. CHTOKALO (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) rappelle que le 2 octobre, à la 324^{ème} séance, la délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine a déclaré que la première partie de la liste des facteurs, bien qu'exigeant certaines précisions, lui paraissait acceptable, mais que les facteurs énumérés dans la seconde et la troisième partie de la liste n'étaient pas de nature à répondre aux fins de la Commission. En effet, ces facteurs ne se rapportent pas à l'accession à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance, mais seulement à l'association avec la métropole ou avec d'autres pays. Ils ne peuvent donc que faire le jeu des Puissances coloniales qui désirent décider du sort des territoires non autonomes sans contrôle extérieur. La délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine a donc voté pour la première partie de la liste et contre la seconde et la troisième partie. Elle a également voté contre les paragraphes correspondants du projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil ainsi que contre l'ensemble de ce projet de résolution et contre les paragraphes correspondants des divers amendements.

21. M. FERNANDEZ (Uruguay) déclare qu'il a voté tous les amendements du texte des onze Puissances (A/C.4/L.273 et Corr.1), car à son avis ces amendements donnent une forme claire et précise au projet de résolution relatif à la liste des facteurs et l'inscrivent dans le cadre juridique de la Charte.

22. M. L. S. BOKHARI (Pakistan) déclare qu'il avait appuyé le projet de résolution de la délégation du Brésil, car ce dernier s'efforçait de concilier les divers points de vue et aurait dû paraître acceptable aux Membres administrants. Toutefois, les débats ayant montré que ces derniers n'en approuvaient pas le dispositif, le représentant du Pakistan a voté la majorité des amendements des onze Puissances, d'autant que ces amendements ne soulevaient aucune objection de principe sérieuse. M. Bokhari pense néanmoins que le projet de résolution qui a été finalement adopté par la Commission ne sera pas accepté sans lutte à l'Assemblée générale.

23. En dépit du vote qu'elle a émis, la délégation du Pakistan espère toujours que la Commission parviendra à ne pas s'engager dans une impasse et à trouver un terrain d'entente entre les Membres administrants et les Membres non administrants. M. Bokhari invite instamment les deux groupes à reconsidérer leur position; il est convaincu que des décisions prises dans un esprit de bonne volonté et de coopération se révéleront plus efficaces que des décisions imposées aux Membres administrants malgré leur opposition résolue.

24. M. KAISR (Tchécoslovaquie) déclare que le Chapitre XI de la Charte fait clairement un devoir à tous les Etats Membres d'accepter comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser dans toute la mesure du possible la prospérité et les aspirations politiques des populations non autonomes. Seuls sont acceptables les facteurs qui traduisent fidèlement un respect absolu pour la volonté librement exprimée des populations et leur désir d'accéder pleinement à une véritable indépendance.

25. La délégation tchécoslovaque a voté en faveur de la première partie de la liste des facteurs et des amendements qui s'y rapportent (A/C.4/L.274); elle estime en effet qu'on aidera ainsi les territoires non autonomes dans leur lutte pour l'autonomie et l'indépendance. Par contre, les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste n'ajoutent rien aux principes proclamés dans la première partie; bien au contraire, elles les affaiblissent; M. Kaisr a donc voté contre ces parties de la liste et contre la plupart des amendements qui s'y rapportent. Les mouvements de libération nationale se caractérisent toujours par le désir sincère d'accéder à une complète indépendance, jamais par celui de s'associer d'une façon ou d'une autre à la métropole. Il est donc absurde que les deuxième et troisième parties de la liste des facteurs viennent juridiquement sanctionner cette association. Même avec les amendements des onze Puissances, elles autorisent encore un pays étranger à intervenir dans les affaires intérieures d'autres territoires; c'est là placer un instrument dangereux entre les mains des Membres administrants et les aider à perpétuer le régime d'oppression coloniale dans les territoires non autonomes.

26. La délégation tchécoslovaque a accepté huit paragraphes du projet de résolution brésilien et les amendements s'y rapportant, mais elle a voté contre les parties du projet de résolution et les amendements qui traduisaient une approbation de la liste des facteurs; elle a également voté contre l'ensemble du projet de résolution amendé.

27. M. ESPINOSA Y PRIETO (Mexique) annonce que les onze délégations qui ont présenté les amendements à la liste des facteurs et au projet de résolution brésilien ont soumis un mémoire explicatif qui sera distribué comme document de séance.

28. Mme BOLTON (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) déclare que sa délégation partage les regrets exprimés notamment par les représentants du Brésil et du Pakistan, et déplore les décisions hâtives et inconsidérées que la Commission a prises à ses deux précédentes séances. Ces décisions ne seront d'aucune aide pour les populations des territoires non autonomes et compromettront la coopération et l'harmonie qui ont, par le passé, permis à la Commission de travailler efficacement au bien-être de ces populations. Le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis n'épargne aucun effort pour s'acquitter des obligations que lui impose la Charte à l'égard des territoires non autonomes qui sont sous son administration.

29. M. LYNKOV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) déclare que sa délégation a toujours soutenu que la première partie de la liste des facteurs était acceptable, mais que la deuxième et la troisième ne l'étaient pas, puisqu'elles ne protègent pas les intérêts des populations des territoires non autonomes et ne leur garantissent ni l'indépendance ni la souveraineté. Il a voté contre le quatrième considérant et les paragraphes 2, 3 et 7 du projet de résolution brésilien, contre les amendements s'y rapportant et contre l'ensemble du projet de résolution; un vote en faveur de ces textes aurait en effet signifié qu'il approuvait la liste des facteurs. Il a également voté, et pour les mêmes raisons, contre la liste des facteurs et les amendements qui s'y rapportent.

Renseignement relatifs aux territoires non autonomes transmis en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte (suite)

[Point 32*]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

30. Mme MENON (Inde), parlant en sa qualité de rapporteur du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, présente le rapport du Comité (A/2465). L'harmonie et l'esprit de coopération ont présidé aux travaux du Comité et les deux parties du rapport ont été adoptées à l'unanimité.

31. Deux projets de résolution sont soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale; l'un concerne la situation de l'enseignement et l'autre la participation de représentants des territoires non autonomes aux travaux du Comité des renseignements. Ces deux projets de résolution figurent à l'annexe II de la première partie du rapport. Le Comité a adopté une troisième résolution, relative à la cessation de la transmission de renseignements concernant Porto-Rico, qui figure dans le corps du rapport (A/2465, première partie, par. 67). Cette dernière résolution a été adoptée sans opposition, avec 3 abstentions. Elle n'est soumise à l'Assemblée générale qu'à titre d'information.

* Numéro affecté à la question dans l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

32. Le Comité s'est efforcé d'étudier ces problèmes en toute objectivité et le nouvel esprit de conciliation qui a animé ses membres apparaît tout particulièrement dans le projet de résolution concernant la participation de représentants autochtones aux travaux du Comité. Il reste malgré tout beaucoup à faire encore avant que l'on atteigne les objectifs du Chapitre XI et Mme Menon demande la coopération constructive des membres de la Quatrième Commission.

33. M. LOOMES (Australie), parlant en sa qualité de Président du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, signale l'intérêt que présente le rapport du Comité. Le Comité a procédé à une étude détaillée de la situation de l'enseignement en se fondant sur les résumés et les analyses préparés par le Secrétariat d'après les renseignements transmis par les Membres administrants¹. Le Comité était également saisi d'un certain nombre d'excellents rapports que le Secrétariat des Nations Unies, l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'éducation, la science et la culture, l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'alimentation et l'agriculture, l'Organisation internationale du Travail et l'Organisation mondiale de la santé avaient rédigés à son intention. Il a en outre profité de l'expérience des spécialistes de l'enseignement qui faisaient partie des délégations de certains Membres administrants. Tous les débats se sont déroulés dans une atmosphère de cordialité et de coopération; la question de la participation de représentants autochtones aux travaux du Comité a bien fait apparaître certaines divergences de vues, mais il a finalement été possible de les concilier dans une très large mesure: le projet de résolution en question a été adopté par 12 voix contre une, avec 2 abstentions. Le projet de résolution concernant la situation de l'enseignement a été adopté à l'unanimité.

La séance est levée à 11 h. 55.

¹ Voir A/2407, A/2408, A/2409, A/2410 et Add.1, A/2411 et Add.1, A/2413 et Add.1 à 6, A/2414 et Add.1 et 2.

1514 (XV). Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

L'Assemblée générale,

Consciente de ce que les peuples du monde se sont, dans la Charte des Nations Unies, déclarés résolus à proclamer à nouveau leur foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites, et à favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande,

Consciente de la nécessité de créer des conditions de stabilité et de bien-être et des relations pacifiques et amicales fondées sur le respect des principes de l'égalité de droits et de la libre détermination de tous les peuples, et d'assurer le respect universel et effectif des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion,

Reconnaissant le désir passionné de liberté de tous les peuples dépendants et le rôle décisif de ces peuples dans leur accession à l'indépendance,

Consciente des conflits croissants qu'entraîne le fait de refuser la liberté à ces peuples ou d'y faire obstacle, qui constituent une grave menace à la paix mondiale,

Considérant le rôle important de l'Organisation des Nations Unies comme moyen d'aider le mouvement vers l'indépendance dans les territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes, Reconnaissant que les peuples du monde souhaitent ardemment la fin du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations,

Convaincue que le maintien du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération économique internationale, entrave le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples dépendants et va à l'encontre de l'idéal de paix universelle des Nations Unies,

Affirmant que les peuples peuvent, pour leurs propres fins, disposer librement de leurs richesses et ressources naturelles sans préjudice des obligations qui découlent de la coopération économique internationale, fondée sur le principe de l'avantage mutuel, et du droit international,

Persuadée que le processus de libération est irrésistible et irréversible et que, pour éviter de graves crises, il faut mettre fin au colonialisme et à toutes les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination dont il s'accompagne,

Se félicitant de ce qu'un grand nombre de territoires dépendants ont accédé à la liberté et à l'indépendance au cours de ces dernières années, et reconnaissant les tendances toujours plus fortes vers la liberté qui se manifestent dans les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, ³⁶ Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Supplément No 2 (A/4494).

Convaincue que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national,

Proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations;

Et, à cette fin,

Déclare ce qui suit :

1. La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales.

2. Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination; en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel.

3. Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance.

4. Il sera mis fin à toute action armée et à toutes mesures de répression, de quelque sorte qu'elles soient, dirigées contre les peuples dépendants, pour permettre à ces peuples d'exercer pacifiquement et librement leur droit à l'indépendance complète, et l'intégrité de leur territoire national sera respectée.

5. Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes.

6. Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies.

7. Tous les Etats doivent observer fidèlement et strictement les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la présente Déclaration sur la base de l'égalité, de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats et du respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les peuples.

*947ème séance plénière,
14 décembre 1960.*

*
* *
*

Note

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. 1037

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

1. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Nous, les représentants de presque 100 Etats du monde, nous sommes réunis ici pour examiner une question d'une importance vitale pour le monde entier, celle de la suppression définitive et totale du système colonial, de la libération de tous les pays et peuples coloniaux et pour prendre une décision historique à ce sujet.

2. Nos descendants, en étudiant le développement de la société humaine, auront toutes les raisons d'appeler le milieu du XX^{ème} siècle, après la grande révolution socialiste d'Octobre, une époque marquante pour l'édification d'un monde nouveau, d'un monde de liberté et d'indépendance des peuples.

3. L'écroulement du colonialisme — le phénomène le plus honteux dans tout le cours de l'humanité — est devenu le signe de notre temps. Du vivant de notre génération, des coups mortels ont été infligés au système colonial. Après la seconde guerre mondiale, l'Inde, l'Indonésie, la Birmanie, Ceylan, le Cambodge, la République arabe unie, l'Irak, le Maroc, la Tunisie, le Ghana, la Guinée et de nombreux autres pays se sont affranchis de la domination des colonialistes. Au cours de la seule année 1960, 17 nouveaux pays ont brisé leurs chaînes coloniales et ont acquis l'indépendance. Un milliard 500 millions d'êtres, qui, tout récemment encore, vivaient sous l'esclavage colonial, sont aujourd'hui libérés et engagés sur la voie de la renaissance nationale.

4. La lutte libératrice a entièrement changé le visage de l'Asie d'aujourd'hui. Des changements historiques immenses, qui font vraiment époque, se sont opérés et s'opèrent encore sur le continent africain. Des mouvements profonds de libération nationale sont en cours dans les pays d'Amérique latine, dont les peuples se dressent, toujours plus résolus, pour lutter contre l'impérialisme. Tout proche est l'écroulement total de tout le système colonial de l'impérialisme, prévu par les meilleurs esprits de l'humanité, et prédit par le grand Vladimir Ilyitch Lénine.

5. Mais le colonialisme n'est pas encore mort. Tous les Etats et tous les peuples — il s'en faut — ne sont pas libérés du joug et de l'asservissement coloniaux.

6. D'autre part, ceux qui sont devenus indépendants sont loin d'en avoir terminé avec la domination coloniale et avec les tentatives des colonialistes qui essaient de reprendre leurs positions perdues, comme le démontrent de façon concrète les derniers événements du Congo qui ont fait l'objet d'un vif débat à l'Assemblée générale.

7. De nombreux pays, en Asie, en Afrique, en Amérique latine et en Océanie, souffrent sous le joug des envahisseurs étrangers. Il serait erroné de croire que la lutte contre les colonialistes est terminée. Il suffit de jeter un coup d'œil sur la carte du monde pour y constater — telles des envies sur la peau — des marques du passé, des vestiges des empires coloniaux écroulés, dans lesquels les colonialistes réussissent encore à maintenir dans l'esclavage des dizaines de millions d'êtres humains. Des guerres coloniales y font toujours leurs sanglantes moissons. Des centaines, des milliers de patriotes qui luttent pour la liberté de leur peuple y sont détenus dans des prisons ou des camps de concentration. C'est là justement, dans les colonies, qu'on enregistre, du fait des rapines exercées par les colonialistes, la durée de la journée de travail la plus longue, en même temps que le niveau de vie le plus bas, le pourcentage d'analphabétisme le plus haut, la durée de vie la plus courte, la mortalité la plus élevée parmi les populations. On y pratique, sous ses pires aspects, une abjecte discrimination qui est une insulte et une humiliation pour la dignité humaine.

8. L'Organisation des Nations Unies et ses Etats Membres peuvent-ils accepter cet état de choses? Qui, sinon nous-mêmes, devrait militer pour la suppression totale et immédiate du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et toutes ses manifestations, et par là même mener à bien la tâche qui nous incombe d'affirmer la foi dans les droits de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personnalité humaine, dans l'égalité des droits des nations grandes et petites?

9. Expriment la volonté de millions de citoyens soviétiques, Nikita Serguéievitch Khrouchtchev, président du Conseil des ministres de l'URSS et chef de la délégation de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, a proposé, le 23 septembre 1960, à l'examen de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale de l'Organisation des Nations Unies [869^{ème} séance] la Déclaration que voici sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/4502 et Corr.1].

[L'orateur donne lecture du texte du document A/4502 et Corr.1.]

10. L'importance extraordinaire du problème de la libération des pays et des peuples qui demeurent encore sous la domination coloniale doit apparaître à tous de façon évidente. Le temps est venu d'en finir avec le colonialisme et d'affranchir l'humanité de ce honteux vestige du passé.

^{1/} Voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Annexes, point 87 de l'ordre du jour.

11. C'est cela qu'ont souligné à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale dans leurs interventions le Premier Ministre de l'Inde, M. Nehru [880ème séance], le Président de la République arabe unie, M. Nasser [873ème séance], le Président de la République d'Indonésie, M. Sukarno [880ème séance], le Président du Ghana, M. Nkrumah [869ème séance], le Premier Ministre de Cuba, M. Castro [872ème séance], le Président de la République de Guinée, M. Sekou Touré [903ème séance], le chef de la délégation de l'Arabie Saoudite, M. Shukairy [879ème séance], et de nombreux autres délégués.

12. Prenant la parole dans cette enceinte, le 12 octobre dernier [902ème séance], le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, M. Khrouchtchev, a souligné que l'Assemblée générale doit, en pleine conscience de ses responsabilités, se rendre compte du fait que, si on ne prend pas des mesures de toute urgence, le colonialisme est capable de causer encore beaucoup de souffrances, de faire beaucoup de victimes, de sacrifier encore de nombreux millions de vies humaines, de provoquer des conflits armés et des guerres, en menaçant la paix et la sécurité, non seulement dans des régions isolées du globe, mais dans le monde entier.

13. La délégation soviétique voit comme un signe encourageant la décision unanime de l'Assemblée générale [903ème séance] de discuter la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux en séance plénière, c'est-à-dire en assemblée suprême de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. On peut considérer cet acte comme un nouveau coup infligé au colonialisme, comme une nouvelle victoire des forces pacifiques dans la grande lutte pour la paix et la liberté des peuples.

14. La délégation de l'Union soviétique exprime sa certitude que la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale sera un jalon historique sur le chemin de la suppression totale et définitive du colonialisme; quant à l'année 1960, elle sera, à juste titre, appelée non seulement "l'année de l'Afrique", mais aussi celle de la libération du joug du colonialisme de tous les peuples où qu'ils habitent: en Afrique, en Asie ou en Amérique latine, en un mot sur le globe tout entier.

15. La déclaration proposée par le Gouvernement soviétique est un document-programme de lutte pour la libération de tous les peuples coloniaux. Les tâches fondamentales y sont formulées, la grande ligne principale de solution de ce problème historique y est tracée. Nous sommes persuadés que les peuples de tous les continents, que toutes les délégations présentes à cette session, qui sont intéressées à la solution la plus rapide et radicale de cette tâche historique qu'est la suppression du honteux système colonial, appuieront cette déclaration et ses principes humains et progressistes, comme étant un appel noble et énergique à l'affranchissement total de l'humanité d'un passé honteux, à la pleine liberté et à l'indépendance de tous les peuples coloniaux.

16. M. ORMSBY-GORE (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Mon premier devoir sera de féliciter M. Zorine de nous avoir donné lecture, avec un soin méticuleux, du document A/4502, présenté par M. Khrouchtchev le 23 septembre 1960. J'ai suivi ce texte, que j'avais lu il y a deux mois, et j'ai constaté que sa diction était claire et impeccable, mais je dois admettre que je n'y ai rien découvert aujourd'hui de plus utile ou de plus constructif qu'il y a deux mois, lorsque j'en avais pris connaissance pour la première fois.

17. Lorsque la délégation de l'URSS a demandé l'inscription à notre ordre du jour de la question que nous examinons en ce moment, sous l'énoncé de "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", j'avais espéré que les débats que nous y consacrerions nous donneraient l'occasion d'examiner en détail les moyens par lesquels nous pourrions aider les populations qui, pour reprendre les termes de la Charte, "ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes" à réaliser leurs aspirations. C'est là en effet un aspect des affaires internationales dont le Royaume-Uni se préoccupe tout particulièrement et depuis longtemps déjà. Nous connaissons la force puissante que représente de nos jours le nationalisme dans le monde. Nous avons constaté que l'accession à l'indépendance a donné aux dizaines de millions de personnes que nous étions chargés d'administrer le stimulant nécessaire pour qu'elles mettent leur pays en valeur avec une énergie et une vigueur nouvelles. Nous avons vu comment, en prenant ici leur place au sein de l'ONU, elles ont acquis la possibilité de servir la communauté universelle en même temps que la cause de la paix et de la sécurité internationales. L'exemple des nouvelles nations d'Asie ou d'Afrique, grandes et petites, nous a puissamment encouragés dans les efforts qui nous unissent aux populations des territoires qui ne sont pas encore autonomes. Cet exemple nous a incités à intensifier la politique que nous poursuivons pour aider ces populations à édifier des nations vigoureuses et fortes, inaccessibles aux querelles tribales, idéologiques ou raciales, et jouissant de la force que seules la liberté et la prospérité peuvent conférer.

18. J'ai été choqué — et je suis sûr que de nombreux autres représentants l'auront été comme moi — par la manière dont la délégation soviétique et ceux qui l'appuient ont cherché à exploiter, à leurs propres fins, les aspirations à l'indépendance si profondément et sincèrement ressenties par tant de millions d'êtres humains alors que ces aspirations rencontrent l'appui et l'approbation d'une grande partie de l'humanité. Ni dans le document dont M. Zorine nous a donné lecture ce matin et dans lequel la délégation de l'Union soviétique a demandé l'inscription de ce point à notre ordre du jour, ni dans le discours par lequel le représentant de l'URSS a ouvert le présent débat, nous n'avons pu relever le moindre indice qui eût permis de reconnaître la réalité dont ce document et ce discours ont fait la caricature. L'un et l'autre semblent avoir pour unique objet d'engendrer la haine plutôt que l'amitié, la violence plutôt que la paix et le chaos plutôt que l'ordre.

19. Le représentant de l'URSS ne semble voir dans ce débat qu'une nouvelle occasion de vilipender mon pays et d'autres puissances administrantes et de porter la guerre froide en Afrique dans l'espoir qu'elle s'y envenimera et servira ses intérêts. Je crois devoir lui signaler que, si je décidais de m'engager dans la même voie, je pourrais recourir à des arguments bien plus pertinents que les siens. Depuis 1939, environ 500 millions de personnes, autrefois sous domination britannique, ont obtenu leur liberté et leur indépendance, et leurs représentants siègent parmi nous. Pendant la même période, six pays représentant une population de 22 millions d'habitants ont été incorporés de force, en totalité ou en partie, à l'Union soviétique; parmi ceux-ci figurent les trois colonies les plus récemment établies dans le monde: celles de Lituanie, d'Estonie et de Lettonie. En outre l'Union soviétique exerce une domination économique, politique et militaire sur des millions d'autres personnes, hommes et femmes, qui vivent dans les pays voisins. Les mouvements de libération nationale des pays soumis à l'autorité soviétique se sont efforcés un nombre incalculable de fois d'obtenir l'indépendance. Toutes ces tentatives ont été réprimées. En Asie centrale, nous avons eu des exemples d'une politique coloniale qui, ainsi que M. Khrouchtchev lui-même nous l'a déjà dit avec force détails au cours de la présente session [869ème séance], a connu sur le plan matériel un succès remarquable. Toutefois, il ne nous a pas parlé des déportations massives de populations, ni des impitoyables répressions de nationalismes dont cette politique s'est accompagnée. Je ne mettrai pas à l'épreuve la sensibilité des membres de cette assemblée en donnant intégralement lecture de ce lugubre répertoire; un exemple ou deux suffiront. La prétendue République autonome allemande de la Volga a été abolie d'un trait de plume et les Allemands qui l'habitaient ont été transférés dans diverses localités de l'Est. Ce groupe ethnique nombreux s'est ainsi trouvé dispersé et liquidé en tant que communauté. En outre les populations entières des Républiques socialistes soviétiques "autonomes" des Tatars de Crimée, des Kalmouks et des Tcherkesses qui, avec quelques autres communautés moins importantes, représentaient près d'un million d'habitants ...

20. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Union soviétique pour une motion d'ordre. Puis-je demander à l'orateur qui se trouve à la tribune de se placer de côté pendant les explications du représentant de l'Union soviétique?

21. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Au cours de l'intervention que je viens de faire, je n'ai pas dit un mot du Royaume-Uni et je n'ai jamais fait mention de ce pays.

22. Son représentant, cependant, vient de chercher à discuter des questions intérieures de l'Union soviétique. Il s'agit là d'une violation du principe généralement admis qui régit le travail de cette assemblée, et je demande, au Président, de mettre la délégation de l'Union soviétique et d'autres délégations à l'abri des tentatives d'ingérence dans les affaires intérieures de l'Union soviétique.

23. Que le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'ait pas dit un mot des "bienfaits" que la Grande-Bretagne répand sur les territoires coloniaux qui sont, suivant son expression, "sous administration britannique", cela va tout à fait de soi. C'est que, certainement, il ne peut rien dire de positif à ce sujet. Néanmoins, ses tentatives d'ingérence dans les affaires intérieures de l'Union soviétique sont inadmissibles, nous protestons contre de tels agissements et nous considérons comme tout à fait illégaux toutes les tentatives d'avoir recours à de telles méthodes dans les discussions.

24. M. Ormsby-Gore a dit qu'il voulait éviter la guerre froide, mais il est le premier à s'engager sur cette voie du haut de cette tribune. S'il continue sur ce ton, il recevra, de l'Union soviétique et d'autres pays intéressés à la discussion de la liquidation du système colonial qui existe encore dans les territoires qui dépendent des puissances coloniales, la réponse qui s'impose. Mais nous ne permettrons pas que l'on intervienne dans les affaires des pays et des peuples qui vivent librement dans le cadre de l'Union soviétique et des autres pays socialistes.

25. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La motion d'ordre présentée par le représentant de l'URSS me place dans une situation assez délicate. Comme le savent toutes les délégations ici présentes, des accusations semblables à celle contre laquelle vient de s'élever le représentant de l'Union soviétique sont malheureusement devenues monnaie courante dans les débats au sein de l'Assemblée. Elles ne sont pas le fait d'une seule délégation ou d'un seul groupe de délégations, mais bien d'un grand nombre de délégations, des tendances les plus diverses.

26. L'objet, comme bien souvent le fond de ces diverses accusations, restent les mêmes. Je ne suis pas en mesure d'établir des distinctions entre elles. Il me serait impossible, sans porter des jugements arbitraires et difficilement justifiables, d'en déclarer certaines recevables et d'autres irrecevables. Les déclarer toutes irrecevables pourrait à juste titre paraître une restriction inadmissible du droit à la liberté de parole. Dans ces conditions, c'est aux délégations elles-mêmes qu'il appartient de prouver leur sens de leurs responsabilités. Des accusations du genre de celles dont la délégation soviétique vient de se plaindre ajoutent rarement à la force d'un argument et contribuent sensiblement à avilir le ton des débats de l'Assemblée. J'en appelle donc au jugement et au bon sens des membres des délégations, et je leur demande de s'abstenir de porter gratuitement des accusations de cette nature et, par là, de contribuer à maintenir le ton du débat à un niveau correspondant à l'importance de la question examinée.

27. Puis-je demander au représentant du Royaume-Uni de bien vouloir poursuivre?

28. M. ORMSBY-GORE (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Il va sans dire que je m'incline devant la décision du Président.

29. J'avais estimé que certaines accusations avaient été portées contre nous. On nous avait traités de voleurs, on nous avait dit que nous nous livrions à d'incessants carnages, que sais-je encore. Pourtant je ne pensais pas que les paroles que j'avais prononcées en parlant de l'Union soviétique eussent pu rendre M. Zorine hypersensible. Je sais fort bien que l'Union soviétique n'aime pas que l'on évoque ici certains aspects de sa politique intérieure, et je sais aussi que le Gouvernement soviétique ne facilite pas la publication par la presse libre du monde des éléments de cette politique. Soit. Admettons-le.

30. Il est exact, hélas! qu'au sein de l'ONU nous ne pouvons guère venir en aide aux peuples soumis à la domination soviétique. Dans le reste du monde, les peuples si passionnément préoccupés par leur désir d'indépendance ne serviraient guère leur propre cause en jouant le jeu soviétique et en ripostant à l'aide des mêmes arguments, car ils exposeraient les affaires d'Afrique et d'Asie à un déluge d'accusations et de contre-accusations sous lequel elles risqueraient d'être noyées. Tout ce que je souhaite, c'est que les rouages mis en place par l'ONU pour régler les questions intéressant les territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes, ainsi que la structure édiflée au cours des années pour rendre une coopération possible, ne soient pas détruits par les attaques vaines et inconsidérées de la délégation soviétique et de celles qui l'appuient. C'est pourquoi je ne perdrai pas plus de temps à examiner le projet de déclaration sur ce sujet présenté par le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique.

31. En ce qui concerne la question du colonialisme, mon gouvernement écoutera avec la plus grande attention les voix venues d'Asie et d'Afrique; nous ne voyons cependant pas pourquoi les débats attentifs que nous consacrons à cette importante question seraient avilis par les calomnies et les contre-vérités qui sont les armes courantes du plus grand oppresseur que connaisse notre époque.

32. C'est pour moi une source de satisfaction de constater que les Etats africains et asiatiques Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne semblent pas eux-mêmes considérer comme très sérieuse la contribution que la délégation soviétique apporte à nos débats, et qu'ils ont l'intention de présenter un projet de déclaration qu'ils ont préparé eux-mêmes. Qu'il me soit permis de préciser tout de suite que la délégation du Royaume-Uni partage sans réserve les sentiments de ces délégations et souscrit à leur objectif principal, celui-ci étant, je ne l'ignore pas, de permettre aux populations qui ne jouissent pas encore de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance d'y accéder dans les plus brefs délais. S'il est arrivé que des divergences de vues nous séparent à cet égard, ces divergences portaient sur le choix des méthodes, quelquefois sur le choix du moment, mais jamais sur les intentions. Il s'agissait donc de divergences de vues dont on peut discuter entre Etats Membres, sur un pied d'égalité et en toute bonne foi, comme peuvent en discuter ceux qui se sont fixé les mêmes buts.

33. Examinons objectivement la nature du problème. On entend souvent dire, à l'Organisation des Nations Unies et ailleurs, que le colonialisme se meurt ou qu'il disparaît. C'est en effet exact dans les régions du monde où nous-mêmes, ou ceux qui partagent nos idées, exercent une responsabilité. Le colonialisme y disparaît comme mourait le Phénix, à l'apogée de sa gloire, et pour donner naissance à des nations nouvelles. A vrai dire, le colonialisme, dans la mesure où il implique l'assujettissement permanent d'un peuple à un autre, était déjà considéré comme un lien politique désuet par tous ceux qui, comme le Royaume-Uni, avaient souscrit sans réserve aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies et ont, depuis lors, honoré leur engagement dans la pratique.

34. Il me serait difficile de choisir de meilleurs termes que ceux de l'Article 73 de la Charte pour définir le concept britannique des relations coloniales modernes qui, par définition, sont en cours d'évolution constante et qui, en raison de leur nature même, doivent rapidement faire place à quelque chose de nouveau. Je me permettrai de citer quelques passages de cet article. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, en sa qualité de Membre fondateur de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, reconnaît "le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants" des territoires non autonomes. Il accepte "comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser dans toute la mesure du possible leur prospérité". A ce propos, j'ai relevé que le représentant de l'Inde, M. Krishna Menon, a fait observer l'autre jour, en séance de commission, que nous n'avions jamais cherché à angliciser les autres populations. En outre, le Gouvernement britannique accepte "de développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes, de tenir compte des aspirations politiques des populations et de les aider dans le développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques, dans la mesure appropriée aux conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations et à leurs degrés variables de développement".

35. Nous avons honoré ces obligations et chacun sait dans le monde comment nous l'avons fait. Il est juste, je crois, de reconnaître, compte tenu de ce que le monde pouvait espérer en 1946, que nous avons développé avec une célérité remarquable la capacité des peuples non autonomes à s'administrer eux-mêmes. Le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes vient d'examiner les progrès accomplis dans ces territoires au cours des 10 premières années. Il a remarqué avec raison que:

"La force des aspirations des peuples à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance a trop souvent dépassé le rythme plus lent de leur progrès économique et social ..." [A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 24.]

36. Cela est exact. Le développement économique et social, bien que régulier, n'a jamais été aussi spectaculaire que le progrès politique. Il ne faudrait pas en conclure que le progrès politique doit être ralenti. Loin de là. Nul ne saurait nier que le progrès politique est influencé par le succès des programmes économiques et sociaux, mais il est impossible de retarder l'accession d'un pays à l'indépendance jusqu'au moment où toutes les questions économiques et sociales seront réglées. Inversement, il est évident que l'accession à l'indépendance n'apporte pas automatiquement la solution de toutes ces questions. D'ailleurs l'inscription de certaines autres questions à notre ordre du jour prouve la nécessité de continuer à élargir les activités de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans les Etats qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance, afin d'aider ceux-ci à s'attaquer aux problèmes qui subsistent et à les résoudre.

37. Etudions pendant quelques instants les faits et les chiffres qui témoignent de ce progrès politique. Nous nous occupons ici d'êtres humains et non pas seulement de territoires; les chiffres que je vais citer sont donc des chiffres touchant les populations. Les quelque 450 millions de personnes qui habitaient l'Inde, le Pakistan, Ceylan, la Birmanie ont tous accédé à l'indépendance après la guerre. Abstraction faite de ces populations, l'ensemble de la population des territoires sous tutelle et des territoires non autonomes du monde entier était d'environ 225 millions de personnes en 1946. Dix ans plus tard, cette population était tombée à 125 millions environ, y compris un accroissement naturel de population de 25 millions de personnes environ, qui s'était produit pendant cette période dans les territoires en question. Depuis 1956, la cadence s'est encore accrue, et environ 75 millions de personnes de plus ont accédé à l'indépendance, toutes en Afrique. C'est dire, pour parler des populations qui habitent en dehors de l'empire soviétique, que 650 millions de personnes ont accédé à une indépendance complète au cours des 15 dernières années. Les seules personnes habitant à l'intérieur de l'empire soviétique qui aient obtenu leur liberté sont les quelques millions de réfugiés qui se sont enfuis. Sur le nombre de personnes qui restent dans les territoires dépendants, environ 40 millions vivent dans les territoires sous tutelle ou dans les territoires non autonomes dont le Royaume-Uni a la charge. En ce qui nous concerne, ce sont ces personnes qui font l'objet du présent débat.

38. Toutefois, dans ces territoires aussi, les progrès accomplis vers l'indépendance sont extrêmement rapides. Plus de 2 millions de ces êtres humains habitent le Sierra Leone où, s'il faut en croire ce que le représentant de l'Union soviétique a dit au début de la session, "la lutte pour la libération se poursuit". La "lutte" en question ne peut être considérée que comme le fruit de l'imagination du représentant de l'Union soviétique, surchauffée peut-être par la lecture de manuels marxistes périmés et par la force incantatoire de slogans léninistes usés jusqu'à la trame. En fait, la population du Sierra Leone sait parfaitement bien qu'elle sera indépendante dans cinq mois. Le Ministre du Sierra Leone qui s'occupe déjà des questions concernant les affaires étrangères était à New York il y a quelques semaines pour étudier les problèmes que pose à un petit pays sa représentation auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Un grand nombre de délégations l'ont vu. De même, 3 millions de personnes se trouvent dans la Fédération des Antilles qui, elle aussi, accédera incontestablement à l'indépendance dans un proche avenir. Il faut citer aussi les 9 millions d'habitants du Tanganyika, le plus vaste territoire dont le Royaume-Uni soit encore responsable et où, si l'on en croit le représentant soviétique, régnerait un "carnage perpétuel". Il n'en est rien. Au contraire, ce territoire offre l'exemple édifiant de l'harmonie qui règne entre ses diverses communautés, qui l'a déjà conduit au seuil de l'indépendance et qui lui prépare un avenir paisible et passionnant. A la suite d'une requête présentée par M. Julius Nyerere, premier ministre du Tanganyika, le Royaume-Uni se propose de soumettre, à une date ultérieure mais au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, un projet de résolution dont l'objet serait de mettre fin à l'Accord de tutelle relatif au Tanganyika lorsque ce pays accédera à l'indépendance, celle-ci prenant effet à une date à convenir entre le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et les chefs élus du Tanganyika. Nul ne saurait douter que cette date soit proche; du moins, nul n'en doute au Tanganyika ou dans le Royaume-Uni. C'est ainsi que, progressant à sa cadence propre et selon des méthodes de son choix — méthodes qui témoignent de son esprit de coopération et de son habileté à gouverner — le peuple du Tanganyika trace la voie aux autres peuples de l'Afrique orientale.

39. Quels sont, dans ces conditions, les problèmes qui continuent à se poser? Qu'est-ce qui différencie si profondément les autres territoires — ceux que je n'ai pas mentionnés — et qu'est-ce qui les empêche d'accéder immédiatement à l'indépendance? Il existe, à mon sens, deux catégories de problèmes qui diffèrent selon les circonstances propres au territoire considéré. La première caractérise les territoires de dimensions restreintes, et souvent isolés. Il n'existe pas moins de 29 territoires non autonomes, placés sous l'administration du Royaume-Uni et dont la population est inférieure, dans chaque cas, à 1 million de personnes. Dans 14 de ces territoires, la population n'atteint pas 100.000 âmes. Les habitants de ces petits territoires doivent mûrement réfléchir à leur avenir. Il existe, dans chaque cas, des facteurs différents qui peuvent faire hésiter ces populations à se prononcer en faveur d'une indépendance séparée. Ces territoires peuvent en effet se trouver isolés géographiquement et dotés d'une économie à peine suffisante pour subvenir aux besoins toujours plus importants de leur population. Il se peut fort bien que ces populations n'aient aucun désir de sacrifier le progrès économique et social auquel elles ont droit pour assumer la responsabilité d'entretenir l'appareil coûteux d'un Etat indépendant moderne.

40. Ou encore, dans certains cas, la population de ces territoires se sent menacée — à tort ou à raison — par un voisin puissant. Elle craint que son indépendance ne soit de courte durée et que, laissée sans protection, elle ne risque de perdre la liberté politique dont elle jouit.

41. Les populations de ces petits territoires méritent que nous examinons leur cas, au même titre que les populations qui habitent les grands Etats du monde. Chacune d'entre elles se heurte à des problèmes politiques particuliers et le Royaume-Uni se considère comme tenu par l'obligation solennelle, qui découle des dispositions de l'Article 73, b, de la Charte, de définir avec les populations intéressées la forme d'indépendance répondant le mieux à leurs aspirations.

42. L'autre jour, la Quatrième Commission a adopté, par 62 voix contre 3^{2/}, un projet de résolution [A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1] approuvant 12 principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer s'ils sont tenus de communiquer au Secrétaire général, conformément aux dispositions de l'Article 73, g, de la Charte, des renseignements relatifs à certains territoires particuliers. Les principes VI, VII, VIII et IX traitent des circonstances dans lesquelles un territoire peut être considéré comme s'administrant complètement lui-même. Je vais donner lecture du principe VI:

"On peut dire qu'un territoire non autonome a atteint la pleine autonomie:

"a) Quand il est devenu Etat indépendant et souverain;

"b) Quand il s'est librement associé à un Etat indépendant; ou

"c) Quand il s'est intégré à un Etat indépendant."

43. Les principes VII, VIII et IX définissent ensuite avec la précision nécessaire les circonstances dans lesquelles la libre association ou l'intégration peuvent être considérées comme la pleine autonomie.

44. Une importante disposition de ces principes est que le choix libre et volontaire d'un statut de cette nature par les populations intéressées doit résulter — et je cite les termes du projet de résolution — "de méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées".

^{2/} Voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Quatrième Commission, 1045ème séance.

Or, si ces méthodes exigent moins de temps qu'elles n'en exigeaient autrefois, elles continuent cependant à en exiger beaucoup.

45. Le Royaume-Uni fait tout ce qui est en son pouvoir pour accélérer le plus possible le processus d'accession à l'autonomie, mais il est certain que nous trahirions l'esprit même du Chapitre XI de la Charte en disant, par exemple, que la population des îles Seychelles ou des îles Gilbert doit se prononcer immédiatement sur la forme que devra prendre, selon elles, l'indépendance qu'elles obtiendront en définitive. Pour citer d'autres exemples, on pourrait faire les mêmes remarques au sujet des populations du Bassoutoland ou de Hong-kong.

46. Ce qui précède s'appliquait aux petits territoires. Etudions maintenant la nature des difficultés qui se présentent dans les grands territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'autonomie. Ceux-ci sont peut-être plus importants dans l'esprit de la plupart des Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Ils sont habités par des populations plus nombreuses et ils se trouvent en Afrique.

47. Il me faut maintenant revenir sur le thème que j'ai exposé antérieurement. Chacun des actes du Royaume-Uni à l'égard de ces territoires a pour objet la formation de nations nouvelles, de nations qui seront unies et libres, et qui donneront aux populations éprises de paix, d'indépendance, de prospérité et de liberté individuelle la possibilité de satisfaire ces aspirations. Il est d'une importance capitale pour la paix et la prospérité futures de l'Afrique que les pays de ce continent préservent leur intégrité et que leur accession à l'indépendance ne soit pas suivie de la guerre civile et de l'effondrement économique.

48. Au cours des dernières années pendant lesquelles nous incombe encore la responsabilité directe de ces territoires, nous formulons notre politique de telle manière que les différentes tribus et communautés qui les habitent puissent apprendre à se faire confiance les unes aux autres. Unissant constamment nos efforts à ceux de la population, nous essayons d'obtenir, avant que la date d'accession à l'indépendance ne soit fixée, que les nouveaux Etats soient assurés de la loyauté et des efforts de toutes les tribus et de toutes les communautés, sans distinction aucune.

49. Nous estimons que ce résultat a déjà été obtenu au Tanganyika. Dans les territoires voisins de cette région d'Afrique, certaines craintes subsistent encore. Or le processus à suivre est délicat. Il existe en effet dans tous ces pays des groupes parfois africains, parfois européens, parfois asiatiques qui craignent d'être lésés lorsque l'indépendance sera proclamée. Il s'agit de dissiper cette crainte, comme il a fallu dissiper des craintes analogues dans les pays qui ont déjà obtenu leur indépendance.

50. Nul ne conteste, pour ces territoires, le droit de la population à l'indépendance; il ne s'agit pas de savoir si la population sera indépendante ou non. La question est tranchée: elle le sera. Il s'agit seulement de savoir à quelle date, et sur ce point nous devons répondre qu'elle le sera lorsqu'on pourra avoir la certitude que les nouvelles nations seront prospères, que leur indépendance sera effective, qu'elle aura véritablement un sens et ne sera pas sapée par des luttes intestines ou des pressions s'exerçant de l'extérieur. Les populations de ces pays veulent l'indépendance sous une forme qui leur convienne, et non pas dans un cadre idéologique imposé de l'étranger. Elles veulent éviter la violence et le désordre, car ces éléments s'accompagnent de pressions et d'ingérences étrangères.

51. Nous sommes tenus de veiller à ce que leurs aspirations véritables soient satisfaites, et de les aider à tenir en échec ceux qui veulent leur nuire. Je suis convaincu que nous aurons dans cette tâche l'appui de la vaste majorité des Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Je voudrais seulement que nous puissions avoir l'appui de tous.

52. Etant donné certains propos qui ont été tenus ici au cours de la présente session, je tiens à préciser une fois de plus que la politique suivie par le Royaume-Uni dans les régions de l'Afrique dont il a la responsabilité, comme d'ailleurs dans le reste du monde, n'est pas une politique raciale. Je me permettrai de répéter ici les paroles qu'a prononcées de cette tribune, le 17 septembre 1959 à la quatorzième session, M. Selwyn Lloyd, représentant du Royaume-Uni:

"Dans les territoires où vivent côte à côte plusieurs races ou tribus, notre tâche consiste à veiller à ce que l'ensemble de la population jouisse de la sécurité et de la liberté, et à ce que chaque individu ait la possibilité de contribuer au progrès et au bien-être de son pays. Nous rejetons toute idée de supériorité naturelle d'une race sur une autre. Notre politique fait donc abstraction des différences raciales; elle ouvre la perspective d'un avenir où Africains, Européens, Asiatiques, habitants des îles du Pacifique et tous autres dont nous nous occupons, rempliront pleinement leur rôle de citoyens dans les pays où ils vivent, les sentiments raciaux faisant place à l'allégeance envers une nouvelle nation." [798ème séance, par. 30.]

53. En résumé, nous avons la conviction que les populations des territoires dépendants doivent progresser vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance aussi rapidement qu'il est humainement possible. Nous avons la conviction que ces nouvelles nations doivent être fortes et prospères, et en paix avec elles-mêmes aussi bien qu'avec leurs voisins. Ces convictions sont les nôtres parce que nous les croyons manifestement bien fondées et parce que nous savons que les populations de ces pays désirent ardemment tout cela. Une autre raison est qu'elles correspondent à nos propres intérêts et à vrai dire aux intérêts de chacun des pays représentés au sein de cette assemblée. En effet, si ces nations nouvelles sont fortes et pacifiques, elles contribueront beaucoup à assurer dans le monde la paix qui est indivisible. Si elles sont prospères et poursuivent leur progrès avec dynamisme, elles contribueront beaucoup à élever les niveaux de vie, à développer les ressources du monde et à améliorer le progrès et le bien-être de l'ensemble de l'humanité. Telles sont les convictions sincères et profondes du peuple britannique. Depuis de nombreuses années, elles ont guidé nos actes à l'égard des populations des territoires d'outre-mer. C'est sur ces convictions que continueront à s'appuyer les efforts que nous déploierons en commun, jusqu'à ce que nous ayons atteint les buts que nous nous sommes fixés dans notre politique et que les peuples de ces pays aient réalisé leurs aspirations nationales.

54. M. CARDOSO (Congo) [Léopoldville]: Il m'est pénible, en tant que représentant du Congo, de prendre la parole après une "prise de bec" entre deux puissantes délégations. Il ne nous suffit pas d'entrer à l'Organisation des Nations Unies par la porte de secours; il fallait de plus passer par le baptême du feu.

55. Quoi qu'il en soit, nous tenons à remercier le Président, ainsi que tous ceux qui nous ont permis de nous faire entendre ici.

56. Le 22 novembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale [924ème séance] a décidé que désormais les représentants de la République du Congo (Léopoldville) auraient ici non seulement droit de cité, mais aussi droit à la parole. Admise à l'unanimité à l'Organisation des Nations Unies dès le 20 septembre 1960 [864ème séance], la République du Congo ne pouvait être privée plus longtemps du droit de se faire entendre.

57. Si toutes les nations Membres de l'Organisation ont usé et même abusé du droit de parler du Congo, au point que quelques-unes ont parlé en son nom, il doit être admis que ce droit revient au premier chef aux Congolais eux-mêmes. Personne d'autre ne peut mieux parler du Congo que les Congolais eux-mêmes qui sont les premiers à souffrir de la crise gouvernementale qui n'a que trop duré.

58. La décision intervenue le 22 novembre vient d'entériner sur le plan international l'autorité incontestée de l'institution suprême de notre pays, l'institution du chef de l'Etat. Le peuple congolais est en effet résolument déterminé à défendre toutes les institutions qu'il a librement choisies. Notre chef de l'Etat, le président Kasa-Vubu, rappelé à Léopoldville par des tâches qui ne souffrent aucun délai, m'a prié d'exprimer à l'Assemblée générale ses regrets de n'avoir pu lui-même traduire la satisfaction qu'il éprouve à la suite de la décision du 22 novembre et il m'a chargé de lire à l'Assemblée le message suivant:

"La République du Congo apprécie à sa juste valeur l'aide que l'Organisation des Nations Unies a décidé de lui apporter dans cette période exceptionnellement difficile de son évolution. Elle n'ignore pas l'importance des sacrifices humains et financiers que plusieurs Etats Membres se sont imposés pour contribuer à une solution heureuse des problèmes critiques.

"En formant le vœu que cette aide se poursuive, je m'engage en ma qualité de chef de l'Etat congolais à faire tout ce qui sera en mon pouvoir afin d'utiliser au mieux cette aide dans l'intérêt du maintien de la paix et du progrès au Congo. Plus que quiconque, le Congo a besoin d'unité et d'entente nationales. Il sera fait appel le temps venu à toutes les bonnes volontés qui peuvent concourir à cette fin."

59. Tel est le message du Président de notre République. Comprenez donc que le peuple congolais, dans sa détermination de se libérer de tout impérialisme, sous quelque forme que ce soit, n'est à la solde de personne. Il est aussi vain qu'injurieux de vouloir faire croire que toute révolution qui n'épouse pas une certaine idéologie soit nécessairement condamnée par l'histoire.

60. La dialectique dont certains n'ont jamais approuvé la légitimité intellectuelle ne semble donc tolérer aucune surprise. Le Congo, hélas! est un pays à surprises. Les impérialistes de tous bords s'y affrontent pour échouer tous lamentablement. Le peuple congolais a définitivement vaincu le colonialisme. Les colonialistes de l'Ouest comme ceux de l'Est, trop longtemps habitués à considérer l'Afrique comme une terre d'élection de colonisation, semblent aujourd'hui s'acharner à la décoloniser. La nouvelle vague veut aujourd'hui qu'ils entendent décoloniser à tout prix comme pour se soulager d'une mauvaise conscience. Mais l'Afrique reste vigilante et elle refuse d'être dupe des colporteurs de bonnes intentions.

61. Ce sont ces mêmes colporteurs de bonnes intentions qui, hier, ont dévasté nos pays par l'odieuse traite des noirs et par le colonialisme. Ce sont les mêmes aujourd'hui qui nous promettent monts et merveilles. Tout se passe comme si on avait affaire non seulement à un sous-développement économique et social, mais aussi à un sous-développement intellectuel congénital.

62. L'Afrique, toutefois, se tient sur ses gardes pour sauvegarder sa liberté et sa personnalité culturelle. Tous les moyens pacifiques seront mis en œuvre pour promouvoir l'unité de l'Afrique et la seule magie des mots et des slogans ne prévaudra pas contre elle. Demain, l'Afrique une et indivisible décolonisera les peuples encore soumis à l'arbitraire; elle ne peut en effet être l'unique continent de décolonisation. Demain, l'Afrique donnera au monde un visage plus humain afin que ne soit pas trompé le véritable espoir des hommes: vivre en paix.

63. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de la Chine qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

64. M. LIU (Chine) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au cours de son intervention, marquée par les extravagantes déformations de la vérité qu'il a généreusement prodiguées, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a mentionné l'île de Taïwan "victime", a-t-il dit, "d'une agression de la part des Etats-Unis". Je n'ai pas voulu à ce moment-là interrompre le cours normal des débats de l'Assemblée en frappant sur la table ou en présentant une motion d'ordre, mais j'ai demandé la parole maintenant pour exercer mon droit de réponse et déclarer que le personnel militaire des Etats-Unis stationné à Taïwan se trouve dans l'île sur l'invitation de mon gouvernement, et dans le cadre du programme de défense de mon gouvernement contre l'agression communiste dans cette région. Je n'ai pas besoin d'ajouter que tous les efforts du représentant de l'Union soviétique ne changeront rien au fait que le Gouvernement de la République de Chine, actuellement à Taïwan, est un gouvernement indépendant et souverain et qu'il est absolument faux de prétendre que les Etats-Unis ont commis une agression contre la Chine.

La séance est levée à 12 h 50.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE
OCT 19 1961
UN/SA COLLECT

SÉANCE PLÉNIÈRE

Lundi 28 novembre 1960,
à 15 heures

QUINZIÈME SESSION

Documents officiels

NEW YORK

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1045

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée générale va poursuivre l'examen de la question intitulée "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux".

2. Avant d'inviter l'orateur suivant inscrit sur ma liste à présenter son intervention, je donne la parole au représentant du Portugal qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

3. M. GARIN (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je remercie le Président de m'accorder le droit de réponse. Ma délégation regrette profondément que le représentant de l'Union soviétique ait cru bon de troubler ces débats — qui, en fait, ne devraient avoir pour objet que l'examen de principes généraux et d'idéaux élevés — en venant à cette tribune faire des remarques et des déclarations qui ne contribuent assurément pas à l'harmonie et à l'entente. En effet, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a porté des accusations que ma délégation se voit obligée de repousser catégoriquement. Il n'est pas surprenant que ce soit la délégation de l'Union soviétique qui ait tenu de tels propos détracteurs: comme chacun sait, la délégation de l'Union soviétique donne toujours sa pleine mesure lorsqu'elle se livre à une propagande de basse classe et lorsqu'elle porte contre d'autres des accusations qui se justifieraient mieux si c'était contre elle qu'elles étaient portées.

4. Ma délégation proteste vivement contre les déclarations faites par le représentant de l'Union soviétique au sujet du Portugal et les rejette catégoriquement. Elles sont entièrement dénuées de fondement et, si le représentant de l'Union soviétique prétendait en donner la preuve, il devrait une fois de plus recourir à de nouvelles inventions.

5. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a accusé mon pays de se livrer à d'incessantes représailles dans les territoires portugais d'outre-mer et d'y faire régner le travail forcé, l'esclavage virtuel, la tyrannie coloniale et d'autres méthodes de ce genre. Ce sont là d'outrageantes calomnies et ma délégation, au nom de la nation portugaise et de son gouvernement, nie avec véhémence la teneur de ces accusations et les repousse intégralement.

6. Lorsque le représentant de l'Union soviétique se grise de grands mots et de propos inconsidérés — en particulier lorsqu'il sent que l'Assemblée tolérera ses exagérations verbales à l'égard de mon pays et de mon gouvernement — il est probable que rien ne l'arrêtera tant qu'il sentira que cette tribune lui confère une certaine immunité.

7. Nous sommes fiers du labeur et des travaux incessants que nous avons accomplis pendant près de quatre siècles dans nos territoires d'outre-mer. Ce travail a consisté à maintenir l'ordre, à organiser la vie en collectivité, à favoriser le développement économique, à assurer le fonctionnement d'un système d'éducation comportant tous les cycles d'enseignement, à investir des capitaux et à relever les niveaux de vie. Toutefois, il est au moins une chose certaine, c'est que le progrès et le développement que nous avons apportés, et que nous apportons encore, à nos provinces d'outre-mer ne sont pas le fruit de méthodes qui répugnent à la conscience humaine, ni de violations des droits de l'homme. Nos progrès, nous ne les devons pas et nous ne les devrons pas à l'asservissement des peuples et des territoires, ni à l'esclavage physique et moral, ni à la répression politique totale, ni aux déportations massives de populations, ni aux migrations forcées, ni à la suppression totale de liberté — politique ou intellectuelle — ni aux menaces constantes contre les autres nations et autres peuples, ni à l'exploitation des faibles, ou autres procédés analogues.

8. J'espère que le représentant de l'Union soviétique comprendra pourquoi je me suis élevé contre les observations inconsidérées qu'il a faites au sujet du Portugal. Toutefois, s'il insiste et continue à faire des remarques totalement dénuées de fondement, qui ne sont que pures inventions au sujet du prétendu colonialisme portugais, je me verrai contraint de revenir à cette tribune en temps opportun pour lui rappeler, en entrant dans tous les détails, un certain genre de colonialisme qu'il connaît bien, j'en suis persuadé.

9. M. NONG KIMNY (Cambodge): J'ai l'honneur de présenter formellement devant l'Assemblée générale le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/L.323], au nom des auteurs suivants: Afghanistan, Arabie Saoudite, Birmanie, Cambodge, Ceylan, Ethiopie, Ghana, Guinée, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Jordanie, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Maroc, Népal, Nigéria, Pakistan, Soudan, Tchad, Togo, Tunisie et Turquie.

10. Depuis la distribution du texte de ce projet, trois autres délégations se sont jointes à ces auteurs. Ce sont celles de Chypre, du Mali et de la République arabe unie [A/L.323/Add.1].

11. En présentant ce projet de déclaration, nous tenons à informer l'Assemblée générale que nous avons apporté le plus grand soin à sa rédaction et à sa mise au point. Nous nous sommes efforcés, en particulier, au cours de nos travaux, de trouver des formules et des solutions qui puissent — du moins nous l'espérons — recueillir l'agrément du plus grand nombre possible de délégations, sinon de l'unanimité de l'Assemblée générale. Les auteurs de ce document lancent donc un appel à toutes les délégations pour qu'elles examinent ce projet avec un esprit ouvert et dans le but de mettre un terme à une situation désormais périmée dans l'histoire de l'humanité: celle de la domination d'un pays par un autre pays, celle de l'exploitation d'un peuple par un autre peuple.

12. Depuis la Conférence historique de Bandoung en 1955, d'énormes progrès ont été accomplis dans la mise en application des principes énoncés au cours de cette première réunion des pays africano-asiatiques. Nous voudrions que le présent projet de déclaration constitue un pas de plus en avant dans le processus irrésistible de l'émancipation des peuples. Nous espérons que tous les pays intéressés, plus particulièrement ceux qui ont la responsabilité de préparer l'avenir des peuples encore dépendants, jugeront possible de se joindre à cette déclaration, et c'est afin de permettre une évolution pacifique et un avenir radieux de liberté pour tous ces peuples qui n'ont pas encore atteint l'indépendance que nous avons adopté, dans notre projet de déclaration, un langage strictement conforme à celui de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme.

13. Mon intervention ayant uniquement pour but de présenter formellement notre projet de déclaration, j'ai l'honneur de vous informer que les coauteurs de cette dernière se réservent le droit d'intervenir de nouveau pour présenter leurs vues. Je voudrais également annoncer que nous pensons que d'autres délégations, qui attendent actuellement les instructions de leurs gouvernements, se joindront à nous plus tard, comme coauteurs de ce projet.

14. M. VAKIL (Iran): Le débat qui s'est ouvert ce matin revêt, sans nul doute, une importance historique et exceptionnelle. Le colonialisme est en proie aux affres de l'agonie face au mouvement irrésistible et irréversible des peuples vers leur émancipation totale et nous voilà, nous, peuples des Nations Unies, appelés à exprimer face à l'histoire ce moment de la conscience universelle.

15. C'est un moment qui se place entre un passé marqué par l'inégalité et un avenir édifiant où tous les peuples du monde semblent décidés à rétablir la fraternité humaine enfin reconquise et à participer à la réalisation de leur bonheur commun, sur un pied d'égalité et sur la base de la libre solidarité des hommes.

16. En tant que représentant de l'un des plus anciens Etats libres et indépendants du monde, mais vivant dans un continent longtemps ravagé par le fléau du colonialisme, je ressens profondément le grand honneur de vous exposer la position de mon pays sur le problème qui nous préoccupe.

17. A l'heure où la lutte victorieuse des peuples colonisés a amené la désintégration du régime colonial, et au moment où plus de 45 pays ont accédé à leur indépendance depuis la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, plus de 100 millions de nos frères et sœurs subissent encore les sévices d'un régime qui a infligé aux peuples dépendants d'indicibles souffrances.

18. Il me semble, avant d'aborder son analyse, qu'il est peut-être utile de tenter de définir le colonialisme. A notre sens, le colonialisme peut être défini comme un régime politique et économique imposé et maintenu par les puissances étrangères sur le territoire national d'autres peuples, régime qui a été caractérisé dans ces territoires par un ordre établi arbitrairement de l'extérieur, sans le consentement des peuples administrés et visant primordiallement à servir les intérêts des puissances administrantes.

19. Ainsi qu'il ressort de cette définition, l'un des traits caractéristiques du colonialisme a donc été l'application de la force avec ou sans justification, de la force à l'état brut ou de la force savamment camouflée dans les plus belles traditions paternalistes. On peut dire, sans risque de partialité, que, débarrassé de ses appareils, le colonialisme, qui s'est installé par la force, s'est ensuite développé, s'est raffiné, s'est même humanisé en quelque sorte, grâce à la force et je dois ajouter grâce à une force qui tendait essentiellement à arrêter le développement des peuples colonisés chaque fois que ce développement n'était pas, d'une façon ou d'une autre, indispensable au développement des intérêts coloniaux. Il s'agissait donc essentiellement d'une force qui s'opposait au développement de ces peuples, agissait dans un sens antagoniste à celui de leur développement et, en un mot, partait de considérations souvent étrangères au sort des populations soumises.

20. Soit dit en passant, cela ne signifie pas qu'un colon était par nature un abject exploiteur. Non, pas nécessairement. Il était semblable à tant d'autres catégories humaines; c'était un homme qui pouvait être individuellement aussi gentil que tout autre, aussi serviable et aussi bon que le noir exploité; mais son mal provenait de la nature même de sa condition, de la nature même du système colonial qui cherchait à exploiter les pays conquis dans les meilleures conditions de rendement, de rentabilité et de rassurante tranquillité.

21. C'est pour arriver à cette fin que le système colonial se trouvait, de par sa nature, dans le camp opposé aux peuples colonisés, qu'il considérait inconsciemment, mais à juste titre, tout progrès véritable et toute prise de conscience des peuples colonisés comme un danger réel pour sa propre existence, qu'il ne permettait un développement quelconque de ces peuples que dans la mesure où ce développement était indispensable à sa propre existence et ce dans les conditions de paix et de stabilité, ou pour mieux dire de stagnation sociale, les plus appropriées au statut colonial.

22. Le colonialisme, qui s'était d'abord ainsi implanté par la force, n'a pas mis longtemps pour s'ériger en un système particulièrement complexe de domination directe ou indirecte, politique et économique, de tous les peuples moins développés. Ainsi, selon la nature des intérêts en cause et des avantages qu'elle pouvait en retirer, la puissance coloniale a eu recours soit au contrôle direct des territoires soumis, soit à leur contrôle indirect en appuyant systématiquement des classes dirigeantes maintenues au pouvoir pour défendre les intérêts coloniaux contre les populations autochtones.

23. Quel que fût le système de contrôle de ces territoires par la métropole, le colonialisme réussit, en conséquence, à y établir et à y maintenir un appareil puissant dont l'objectif était de retirer le maximum de profits possible, sans égard aux intérêts des habitants autochtones. Aussi, c'est le phénomène colonial qui, par le soutien qu'il a accordé, dans les territoires soumis, aux forces de réaction sociale et aux classes ethiérarchies tribales autrement appelées à disparaître, y a faussé le jeu dynamique des forces de développement et y a figé l'évolution politique et sociale à son stade primitif. C'est bien pour cette raison que le colonialisme doit être tenu pour responsable du retard considérable du développement des pays dépendants par rapport au progrès général dans le monde, et du fossé tragique qui sépare ces pays dépendants des pays industrialisés.

24. Pour maintenir et accroître ses profits, pour protéger l'entreprise coloniale contre tous risques et périls, pour perpétuer son règne, le colonialisme se trouvait obligé de maintenir un ordre essentiellement fondé sur la stagnation sociale et le maintien du statu quo et caractérisé par la paralysie des forces du progrès. A ces fins, le régime colonial s'est servi, entre autres, de la discrimination raciale, de l'asservissement par l'humiliation, la peur et l'ignorance, de l'exploitation sous des étiquettes paternalistes et d'autres pratiques tendant à priver l'homme colonisé de son identité et de sa dignité humaine. Il n'a donc permis, comme je l'ai indiqué plus haut, un progrès quelconque des peuples soumis que dans la mesure où cela se révélait indispensable à sa propre existence.

25. Il est un fait certain cependant, c'est que, pour arriver à ses propres fins et pour pouvoir mieux exploiter les richesses des territoires conquis, pour pouvoir les exploiter dans les meilleures conditions de rendement, de rentabilité et de sécurité relative, le colonialisme a été amené à y introduire des éléments appartenant à des sociétés plus avancées.

26. Là, comme on le voit, le colonialisme ne pouvait guère échapper à cette loi générale de la contradiction inhérente à tout processus vivant. Là se trouve aussi un point qui est particulièrement important à mettre en lumière pour arriver à comprendre la nature complexe et quelquefois trompeuse du problème colonial. Car il serait inexact de pousser la haine, par ailleurs bien compréhensible, du colonialisme au point de vouloir tout simplement nier ou rejeter les phénomènes positifs certains que le caractère précisément exploiteur de ce régime a produits et entraînés. Il n'est nullement vrai que le colonialisme n'a absolument rien fait dans les colonies. Il nous semble, quant à nous, impossible de nier certains apports évidents du colonialisme, et notamment certains éléments d'importance capitale pour le développement ultérieur des colonies. Cependant, il s'agit de préciser aussitôt la nature de ces apports et les expliquer dans leur contexte historique, pour éviter toute confusion de nature à déformer la réalité. Une analyse objective des faits montrera alors clairement que les prétendus bienfaits du régime colonial, loin de représenter les traits essentiels du colonialisme, en constituent simplement les conséquences secondaires inévitables et représentent les phénomènes nés des contradictions mêmes du système colonial.

27. Il est important que l'analyse en soit poussée plus loin. La source de la contradiction résidait dans le développement même de la société moderne et les exigences d'un système d'exploitation rentable des pays colonisés qui devraient entraîner entre autres une plus grande participation des populations à l'entreprise coloniale. Le régime avait notamment besoin d'une main-d'œuvre non seulement à bon marché, mais aussi qualifiée et bien organisée. Il avait besoin de la mise sur pied de ce qu'on a appelé l'infrastructure économique nécessaire au développement des transports, du commerce et de l'économie en général. Il ne pouvait se passer de routes, de constructions, d'écoles, ni même d'hôpitaux, autant d'installations qui font aujourd'hui partie de toute entreprise commerciale à grande échelle, bien gérée et en pleine expansion. Comme je l'ai indiqué plus haut, tout en étant réels, ces aspects indéniables de la présence coloniale, loin d'être des manifestations d'une quelconque mission sacrée des puissances coloniales, doivent être expliqués comme les conséquences inévitables d'un régime essentiellement fondé sur le profit et les intérêts coloniaux en cause. C'étaient aussi précisément ces conséquences qui allaient amener la désintégration progressive du système.

28. Les contradictions inhérentes au régime colonial se sont, en effet, accentuées à mesure que ce dernier a élargi ses capacités d'action. Le développement des moyens de communication, la création de centres urbains, l'introduction du nouveau système d'échanges et de la main-d'œuvre organisée, ainsi que la paupérisation progressive des autochtones, entre autres, furent à même de briser les cadres artificiellement maintenus par les colons et finalement amener la prise de conscience des peuples coloniaux contre le règne colonialiste dans son ensemble.

29. Les transformations révolutionnaires qui suivirent la dernière guerre mondiale et changèrent le destin d'environ 1 milliard et demi d'hommes appartenant aux peuples asiatiques donnèrent au mouvement d'indépendance des peuples africains un sens nouveau. En un sens, elles servirent à coaguler ce que j'ai tout à l'heure qualifié de conséquences secondaires du socialisme. Ceux qu'on avait pensé entraîner et préparer pour mieux servir les maîtres d'hier prirent conscience de leur force humaine et nationale et refusèrent de servir d'instrument à leur propre destitution.

30. Ainsi, la prise de conscience africaine, qui constitue l'élément le plus important de l'histoire du continent noir au cours des 15 dernières années, a permis d'opposer au colonialisme en Afrique une force dont la puissance, l'ampleur et l'extraordinaire rapidité de développement surprisent non seulement les colonisateurs, mais quelquefois ceux-là mêmes qui l'avaient mise en action, c'est-à-dire les promoteurs du mouvement d'émancipation africaine.

31. La période qui suivit la prise de conscience africaine, après la seconde guerre mondiale, est marquée par un certain désarroi dans le camp colonial. Allait-on encore renforcer davantage la force brutale et continuer à employer de vieilles méthodes coloniales en accentuant les procédés d'oppression et de répression? Était-il préférable d'adapter ceux-ci aux conditions plus démocratiques de l'époque? Ou bien le temps était-il enfin venu de procéder à une révision déchirante des pratiques traditionnelles en se mettant tout simplement au pas des insurgés?

32. Les chancelleries coloniales ne s'étaient jamais trouvées devant un déploiement si extraordinairement rapide de forces dont elles n'arrivaient même pas à reconnaître la nature. Et pendant que l'on alternait des solutions, que chacun essayait d'employer la méthode qui lui semblait la plus efficace pour faire face à la situation, les peuples, eux, continuaient la lutte à un rythme qui faisait boule de neige et menaçait de se transformer en un mouvement général dépassant les objectifs que les peuples colonisés eux-mêmes s'étaient fixés d'avance.

33. Il n'est pas difficile d'imaginer que les conditions politiques nées de la guerre froide n'étaient pas de nature à faciliter la tâche de ceux qui devaient faire face à la montée de plus en plus menaçante de la marée anticoloniale. Ceux qui avaient une vision plus claire de l'histoire et aussi plus de clairvoyance pratique se décidèrent alors à s'adapter aux conditions nouvelles et à réaliser le seul équilibre possible nécessaire au maintien des positions devenues précaires. Il semble bien que c'est un souci analogue qui a donné son nom au fameux "new wind", ou vent nouveau, en Afrique que les Africains ont accueilli avec satisfaction, tout en comprenant sa nature, vent enfin qui traduit bien la réalité des forces en présence, car il doit son existence, bien entendu et tout d'abord, au courage et à la lutte des peuples africains pour leur indépendance, mais aussi à l'intelligence pratique et à la lucidité des puissances coloniales intéressées.

34. C'est dans le cadre de ce "new wind" que le Royaume-Uni est en train de liquider son ancien empire colonial avec un succès incontestable et avec la participation souvent très effective des peuples intéressés. A cet égard, l'Angleterre a démontré, encore une fois, son génie politique qui est de s'adapter aux conditions mouvantes des temps.

35. C'est ce vent nouveau qui a amené la France, avec gloire et succès, à rétablir, dans la plupart de ses anciennes possessions africaines, les grands principes nés de la Révolution française et de ses droits de l'homme et du citoyen.

36. L'admission au sein des Nations Unies de 10 Etats nouveaux, tous membres de la Communauté française, fait honneur au courageux effort de décolonisation entrepris par la Cinquième République. Et il est à souhaiter que ce vent nouveau soit assez puissant non seulement pour souffler sur les anciens territoires français déjà libérés, mais aussi pour s'étendre à tout autre territoire où cet effort sincère se voit encore neutralisé par des intérêts difficiles à justifier.

37. Ce vent est donc là établi comme un phénomène nouveau dans les annales du colonialisme. Il exprime ce moment de la conscience coloniale où, réalisant la portée même du mouvement d'émancipation et le nouvel équilibre, le seul équilibre possible des forces en présence, elle se voit forcée de procéder à une revision déchirante de son attitude générale envers le problème même de l'existence coloniale.

38. Le colonialisme, qui avait plus ou moins solidement établi ses assises sur la force brutale, alors l'élément le plus sûr et le plus pratique de la suprématie, passe à une stratégie nouvelle. Au lieu de s'opposer à la marée, il va maintenant la suivre. Au lieu de l'arrêter par une force qui n'est plus effective, il va tenter de s'en servir dans un nouveau courant, où il cherchera à s'associer aux rebelles d'hier, essayant de maintenir cette fois, autant que possible, la seule position qui lui reste désormais, c'est-à-dire sa suprématie économique et technique.

39. Il est de la plus haute importance théorique et pratique, pour les peuples sous-développés, d'étudier les aspects complexes de ce vent nouveau, qui a commencé à souffler sur l'Afrique et qui a ouvert le dernier chapitre du colonialisme. C'est un vent qui ne doit pas tromper les peuples africains, pour une certaine fraîcheur qu'il leur apporte et le nouveau sens de dignité et de liberté qu'il leur amène. Mais c'est un vent qui ne doit pas non plus être négligé et simplement combattu, sous prétexte qu'il a sa source dans les hauteurs blanches de l'Ouest. Comme tout phénomène historique, comme le colonialisme lui-même, il est fait de forces contraires. Il nous incombe, à nous, peuples des pays en développement, d'en tirer le meilleur parti sans tomber dans les pièges ni de la crédulité impardonnable, ni d'une certaine orthodoxie anachronique et dogmatique.

40. Les peuples coloniaux feront face, j'en suis sûr, à cette situation nouvelle, avec tout ce qu'elle peut comporter d'espoirs et de dangers, de possibilités de coopération ou de pièges et de dilemmes posés à leur conscience. Cependant, il est bien clair que cela exige de tous les peuples le plus grand degré de vigilance et de clairvoyance. Car le vent nouveau dans ce qu'il a de positif et de prometteur n'est, après tout, qu'une manifestation intelligente et une évaluation réaliste du nouvel équilibre que l'histoire a imposé aux puissances coloniales. Il est à saluer et à encourager là où, effectivement et véritablement, il exprime une certaine vision réaliste et claire de l'histoire, là où il part de ces prémisses aujourd'hui évidentes et bien établies qu'une entreprise politique quelle qu'elle soit ne saurait durer dans les conditions de tyrannie et de subjugation des peuples.

41. Il en serait cependant bien autrement si d'autres puissances, plus obstinées et moins imaginatives, voulaient le concevoir comme une simple manœuvre tactique ou comme l'expression machiavélique d'une soupape de sûreté à enlever lorsque la pression devient explosive. Les événements de l'année dernière ont en effet dégagé deux tendances assez significatives dans l'évolution du problème colonial à son stade actuel. D'un côté, ils nous ont familiarisés avec la politique plus intelligente et à longue échéance du nouveau vent, mais, d'un autre côté aussi, ils nous ont prouvé à nouveau que, dans leur lutte désespérée pour l'existence, les intérêts coloniaux ont plus d'un tour dans leur sac et que le néo-colonialisme est un enfant bien plus astucieux, et par là autrement plus dangereux, que les parents qui lui donnèrent naissance.

42. En fait, le colonialisme sous sa forme spécifique et traditionnelle peut, d'ores et déjà, être considéré comme une catégorie historique révolue. Même si, dans certains territoires, il continue de sévir et de provoquer des crises marquées par le sang et les larmes des populations autochtones, même s'il est encore présent dans un nombre considérable de territoires dont la population totale s'élève à 100 millions d'habitants, le régime colonial dans son ensemble n'est déjà plus qu'un organisme agonisant, ayant la mort à son chevet, dont les crises hystériques de violence démontrent encore davantage la fin proche et inévitable. Ce n'est donc plus le vieux colonialisme asthmatique et mourant, mais le néo-colonialisme jeune et virulent qui menace aujourd'hui l'indépendance véritable des peuples. C'est le néo-colonialisme, avec son réseau complexe de moyens politiques, économiques, idéologiques et autres, qui cherche à défendre les mêmes intérêts coloniaux sur le cadavre du vieux colonialisme. Leur nature et leur mission restent les mêmes et, dans l'ensemble, seule la tactique semble avoir changé pour s'adapter aux exigences politiques, économiques et psychologiques du monde actuel. Les apparences ne doivent tromper personne et c'est pour cette raison précisément que, déjà en 1955, tous les peuples africains et asiatiques ont cru bon, à Bandoung, de le dénoncer en proclamant solennellement que "le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et ses manifestations constitue un mal auquel il doit être mis rapidement fin".

43. En effet, il est certain que les intérêts qui ont motivé l'apparition du fléau colonial dans le monde et lui ont permis de se maintenir continueront d'exister encore bien longtemps après la liquidation nominale du colonialisme. Aussi il est naturel de s'attendre à ce que ces intérêts se refusent à se plier au verdict des peuples libérés et mettent tout en œuvre pour se réintroduire et recréer le colonialisme sous des formes nouvelles, plus appropriées aux conditions du monde moderne. Dans ces circonstances, il est impératif que la lutte des peuples contre le phénomène colonial continue à s'étendre à toutes les formes données au colonialisme économique ou politique, qui menaceraient de façon directe ou indirecte leur souveraineté nationale et le jeu des institutions démocratiques qui en émanent.

44. Les problèmes et les circonstances auxquels je me suis permis de faire allusion montrent clairement que la question générale du colonialisme est loin d'être simple. Elle a des aspects théoriques qu'il conviendrait plus particulièrement d'analyser pour mettre les peuples du monde en mesure de mieux suivre son développement dans l'avenir et se préparer à faire face aux dangers qui en émanent. Mais une telle analyse dépasserait de loin le cadre de ce débat. Aussi, avec votre permission, je tâcherai d'exposer aussi brièvement que possible des considérations d'ordre général et les problèmes les plus concrets qui se posent aujourd'hui sur le plan pratique, en essayant en même temps de poser certains principes qu'il nous semble nécessaire de porter à l'attention des Etats Membres intéressés.

45. Premièrement, qu'il me soit permis de répéter la joie de mon pays de constater que 17 anciens territoires coloniaux sont venus cette année grossir nos rangs en qualité de Membres souverains et indépendants de plein droit. Cela représente non seulement une victoire éclatante pour les peuples intéressés, mais aussi pour la communauté internationale dans son ensemble et, bien entendu, pour l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il est bien entendu que la contribution de nouveaux Etats renforce non seulement la position et le prestige des Nations Unies, mais constitue aussi un facteur important pour la consolidation de la paix et de la sécurité collectives.

46. Deuxièmement, tout en reconnaissant les mérites et la nature progressive des efforts récemment déployés par certaines puissances administrantes pour conduire un grand nombre de territoires sous leur administration vers l'indépendance, ma délégation souhaite que la politique de décolonisation ainsi amorcée soit adoptée et poursuivie par toutes les puissances administrantes des territoires d'outre-mer, et s'étende à tous les territoires coloniaux où les populations autochtones sont encore privées du droit fondamental de disposer d'elles-mêmes. En vertu de ce droit reconnu des peuples, ceux-ci peuvent déterminer librement leur statut politique et assurer librement leur développement économique, social et culturel. L'article premier, paragraphe 2, des projets de pactes internationaux relatifs aux droits de l'homme, déjà adoptés par la Troisième Commission de l'Assemblée générale, reconnaît en outre:

"Pour atteindre leurs fins, les peuples peuvent disposer librement de leurs richesses et de leurs ressources naturelles, sans préjudice des obligations qui découlent de la coopération économique internationale fondée sur le principe de l'intérêt mutuel et du droit international. En aucun cas un peuple ne pourra être privé de ses propres moyens de subsistance^{1/}."

47. Troisièmement, les Nations Unies peuvent se féliciter de leur contribution au mouvement d'émancipation des peuples des territoires sous tutelle et des territoires non autonomes et de l'appui qu'elles ont apporté au principe de l'autodétermination. Le régime international de tutelle et l'interprétation dynamique de l'esprit du Chapitre XI de la Charte ont servi d'instruments efficaces pour aider les peuples à réaliser leur émancipation progressive et les préparer graduellement à l'indépendance. Il est cependant regrettable de constater que dans ce domaine la résistance de certaines puissances administrantes aux efforts constructifs des Nations Unies, et leur politique systématique consistant à opposer à l'esprit libéral de la Charte une certaine interprétation étroite et dépassée de sa lettre, n'ont pas manqué de réduire considérablement, voire de paralyser, les possibilités d'action de la communauté internationale.

48. Quatrièmement, l'évolution du monde, plus particulièrement au cours des 15 dernières années, prouve indubitablement que, dans les circonstances actuelles, les exigences d'une coopération internationale durable, basée sur le respect des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, non seulement coïncident avec la préservation des intérêts économiques et politiques légitimes des grandes puissances, mais en constituent la condition sine qua non. L'obstination incompréhensible de quelques puissances à maintenir certaines pratiques coloniales qui dans le passé avaient réussi à réaliser les fins coloniales ne peut aujourd'hui que ruiner les dernières chances de coopération entre les peuples en développement et les puissances plus privilégiées.

49. Il est plus particulièrement de la plus haute importance que les pays inspirés par les idéaux de la liberté et de la démocratie se rendent à l'évidence des réalités nouvelles et ne précipitent pas, par indifférence ou par manque de vision, des situations qui ne profiteraient qu'aux ennemis de tous les peuples. La logique effrénée du développement des peuples coloniaux se poursuit à un rythme tel qu'il n'est plus aujourd'hui permis de s'en tenir à une conception étroite de ses intérêts immédiats. Aujourd'hui, plus que jamais, un dialogue sincère et franc s'impose entre les puissances coloniales et les peuples coloniaux, et de ce dialogue dépend l'avenir du monde entier. S'il prend place et se développe dans l'amitié, tout porte à croire qu'une ère de coopération fructueuse peut s'ouvrir à l'avantage commun, non dans la défaite de tous, mais dans la victoire des uns et des autres.

^{1/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, dixième session, Annexes, point 28 de l'ordre du jour (1ère partie), document A/3077, par. 77.

50. Les soupçons bien compréhensibles de part et d'autre, les malentendus, les acrimonies pourraient ainsi graduellement disparaître dans une atmosphère caractérisée par l'effort commun des peuples libres et indépendants, aux fins de créer une nouvelle communauté de nations, libres de liens injustes, libres de préjugés raciaux ou autres, libres de la tyrannie des choses et des hommes.

51. Une coopération de ce genre est, à notre sens, la seule d'ailleurs qui puisse aider les anciens peuples coloniaux à suivre harmonieusement la voie de leur développement et leur permettre de résoudre les problèmes surtout d'ordre économique qui se posent le long de cette voie ardue. Elle est aussi la seule qui permette de poser les fondations d'une paix solide et durable dans les régions en question comme dans le monde entier. Si, par malheur, elle ne se réalise pas à temps et si le dialogue ne se poursuit pas dans la confiance mutuelle et dans l'égalité, il serait alors à craindre que le tourbillon des événements n'engloutisse tous les hommes de bonne volonté pour ouvrir la voie à la tyrannie, alors seule capable de mettre fin au chaos que l'on aura ainsi précipité.

52. Il faudrait donc que tous les peuples et tous les Etats libres et indépendants, et plus particulièrement les puissances administrantes, se rendent compte de cette situation complexe, aussi grosse de dangers que de possibilités de coopération. A cette fin, ils doivent donc fonder et développer leurs relations avec les anciens peuples coloniaux sur ce principe fondamental et sacré selon lequel tous les peuples sans exception ont le droit inaliénable à l'indépendance complète, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national, et, en conséquence, sont décidés à prendre en main leurs destinées en toute liberté, sans pression quelconque de l'étranger. Ils doivent considérer une fois pour toutes que le mouvement général des peuples vers leur émancipation totale est un phénomène irréversible et irrésistible, et que toute tentative directe ou indirecte de résistance à ce mouvement non seulement est immorale et contraire au droit des gens, mais d'avance vouée à l'échec le plus certain. Ils doivent faire confiance à tous les peuples et s'abstenir de toute intervention d'ordre politique, économique ou autre dans leurs affaires intérieures. Les peuples libres et les puissances qui avaient et continuent d'avoir la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires coloniaux se doivent enfin de contribuer, dans toute la mesure possible, à assurer les meilleures chances de succès à ce mouvement historique dont dépendent en grande partie l'avenir et le bonheur de toute l'humanité.

53. Cinquièmement, la situation actuelle impose donc aux anciennes puissances coloniales des responsabilités nouvelles. Ces nouvelles responsabilités, en premier lieu, doivent les conduire à mettre tout en œuvre pour combler le fossé qui les sépare actuellement des peuples coloniaux et, à cette fin, rechercher les solutions qui s'imposent dans une sincère coopération avec les peuples intéressés.

54. Ces responsabilités doivent ensuite les conduire non pas à maintenir le front commun du colonialisme traditionnel, mais à créer un nouveau front commun des peuples libres contre tous ceux qui, dans le monde, voudraient maintenir et créer des positions de force et des suprématies injustifiées. Les peuples libérés sont encore trop marqués par le joug de la tyrannie pour vouloir en rechercher de nouveaux ou se laisser tromper par d'autres. Leurs alliés les plus naturels sont donc ceux qui, sincèrement et véritablement, cherchent à faire de la liberté un idéal universel. Les peuples coloniaux, plus particulièrement, lutteront comme par le passé contre toute forme de domination, de subjugation et d'exploitation pour défendre leur dignité nationale et leur liberté si chèrement acquise. Il est donc de la plus haute importance, pour toutes les puissances éprises des mêmes idéaux de liberté, de dignité humaine et de justice sociale, de comprendre ce fait et surtout de ne pas compromettre, par manque de vision ou de patience, ou par suite de réactions hâtives et défensives dictées par l'émotion ou la peur, les chances d'un front uni de liberté et de démocratie avec les anciens peuples coloniaux.

55. Il serait grand dommage que le souci étroit de préserver certains avantages politiques, économiques ou autres de caractère immédiat, et le maintien de certaines méthodes d'action, incompatibles avec la liberté d'action de ces peuples et avec leurs intérêts fondamentaux, entraînent une aggravation des malentendus, élargissent le fossé existant et, par surcroît, arrivent à forcer, par défaut ou par provocation, les nouveaux peuples libérés à rechercher leurs alliés ailleurs que dans le camp des hommes et des peuples épris des mêmes idéaux.

56. Sixièmement, les puissances coloniales doivent reconnaître que l'une des premières et des plus importantes manifestations de l'indépendance des peuples se trouve dans l'exercice même de la souveraineté, qui est uniquement l'attribut des peuples qui vivent sur leur territoire national. La souveraineté leur appartient de fait et de droit, et nul ne peut l'exercer en leur nom sans leur libre consentement. Les puissances qui, dans les territoires soumis à leur administration, l'ont exercée au nom des populations intéressées conformément aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies doivent donc prendre des mesures immédiates aux fins de son transfert aux représentants dûment qualifiés de ces populations.

57. Septièmement, afin de réaliser l'indépendance inconditionnelle des territoires non autonomes et sous tutelle ainsi que de tout autre territoire colonial n'ayant pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, ces puissances administrantes doivent prendre des mesures urgentes et immédiates afin de transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs aspirations librement exprimées, sans considération de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin qu'ils soient en mesure de jouir de l'indépendance complète et de la liberté d'édifier, sans conditions ni réserves, leurs Etats nationaux.

58. Huitièmement, le niveau insuffisant des progrès politiques, économiques, sociaux et de l'instruction a, par le passé, toujours été invoqué par les puissances administrantes pour différer l'indépendance aux pays coloniaux. Un examen plus objectif de ce problème révèle le caractère dangereux de ce prétexte et la mauvaise foi qui a souvent caractérisé cet argument. Il s'agit là, en fait, d'un cercle vicieux que les intérêts coloniaux dans l'ensemble ont cherché à maintenir. Ainsi, d'un côté, ils ont retardé la préparation nécessaire dans les domaines divers de leur vie nationale et, de l'autre, ils ont avancé que, l'indépendance exigeant un degré minimum de préparation, elle ne pouvait leur être accordée sans cette préparation nécessaire. Dans ces conditions, il n'est pas étonnant de constater, d'une part, que, dans la plupart des colonies, rien de substantiel n'a été fait pour préparer les cadres nécessaires et, de l'autre, que l'accession à l'indépendance a toujours posé des problèmes sérieux en ce qui concerne le manque des cadres nécessaires et appropriés.

59. Aujourd'hui, malgré les difficultés qui naissent toujours du degré insuffisant de développement et du manque de cadres dans les territoires coloniaux — et dont l'entière responsabilité incombe aux puissances coloniales — les peuples intéressés ne s'en effraient pas outre mesure. C'est que, en plus des avantages certains que leur offre l'indépendance, ils ont confiance dans la solidarité des peuples et dans des organisations telles que les Nations Unies pour les aider à combler leurs lacunes.

60. De plus, même si le retard économique, social et politique doit nécessairement imposer à certains pays peu développés un degré relatif de dépendance, il n'y a aucune raison de croire que cette dépendance doive leur être imposée par l'ancienne puissance administrante. La communauté internationale et les Nations Unies, entre autres, peuvent bien facilement leur apporter l'aide et l'assistance nécessaires sans leur imposer des obligations incompatibles avec leur indépendance.

61. Les peuples savent qu'ils ne sont plus seuls dans un monde indifférent. En outre, ils ont maintenant confiance en eux-mêmes et ceux qui en ont eu l'occasion n'ont pas tardé à démontrer que cette confiance est justifiée. Plus particulièrement, la prise en main de ses propres destinées donne toujours à un peuple libéré de l'esclavage la force nécessaire pour surmonter tous les obstacles, y compris ceux nés de l'héritage colonial et du degré insuffisant de préparation politique, économique et autre.

62. Neuvièmement, dans les territoires coloniaux où la paix se trouve être troublée par suite d'un conflit armé ou par suite des mesures de répression dirigées contre le peuple, les puissances responsables doivent prendre des mesures immédiates afin de rétablir les conditions de paix nécessaires à l'exercice, par le peuple, de son droit sacré et inaliénable à l'indépendance complète et à l'intégrité du territoire national. Il est en même temps nécessaire que toute action armée ou répressive de tout genre soit prohibée et bannie dans l'avenir.

63. Dans ce domaine, il est nécessaire de rappeler que la liberté et la paix sont indivisibles; un peuple qui en opprime un autre viole non seulement les droits souverains de ce peuple, mais la liberté, la conscience et la dignité de l'humanité entière; par là, il commet aussi une violence contre la paix et la sécurité collectives, dont il doit assumer l'entière responsabilité. La communauté internationale et les Nations Unies ont alors le droit et le devoir de mettre tout en œuvre pour aider les peuples ainsi soumis à l'oppression et à la violence à reconquérir leur droit sacré à l'autodétermination.

64. Dixièmement, il est certain que le transfert des pouvoirs se trouvera nécessairement soumis aux conditions propres de chaque territoire. Cependant, il nous semble qu'aux fins de réaliser l'indépendance véritable et complète de ces territoires, dans les conditions les plus compatibles avec les exigences d'un système démocratique du pouvoir national, l'intérêt des populations exige que leur accession à l'indépendance soit précédée, partout où les conditions nationales les rendent possibles et pratiques, par une consultation populaire et des élections générales au suffrage universel et au scrutin secret, de préférence sous le contrôle et la surveillance des Nations Unies. Une telle procédure permet de poser les fondements des Etats, accédant ainsi à l'indépendance, sur des assises solides et démocratiques, et constitue une garantie sérieuse contre le retour du colonialisme sous des formes nouvelles.

65. Onzièmement, il est alors de l'intérêt des peuples dépendants que la date et les modalités d'indépendance de leurs pays puissent être fixées à la suite de négociations, sur un pied d'égalité, entre les autorités administrantes et les représentants dûment qualifiés de ces peuples.

66. Les puissances administrantes doivent s'abstenir de soumettre l'indépendance à des conditions ou réserves limitant l'exercice de la souveraineté populaire. Des traités inégaux et restrictifs, de caractère économique, politique, financier ou militaire, signés avant l'indépendance et limitant d'une façon ou d'une autre l'exercice de la souveraineté nationale, constituent pour l'avenir des sources de malentendus et de friction, incompatibles avec le maintien d'une atmosphère de confiance mutuelle et le maintien de relations amicales et pacifiques.

67. Douzièmement, pour les peuples accédant à l'indépendance, la liberté étant essentiellement un processus de libération progressive et graduelle des jougs anciens, en particulier de la tyrannie du besoin et de la peur, aucun facteur étranger ne doit pouvoir entraver ce processus qui doit être réalisé, en premier lieu, par les peuples intéressés eux-mêmes. Toutefois, la nature indivisible de la liberté et de la paix et la cause de la solidarité humaine exigent que la communauté internationale ne ménage aucun effort pour les aider à accélérer ce processus de libération, si les peuples intéressés lui en font la demande.

68. Treizièmement, étant donné qu'un Etat nouvellement indépendant doit aussitôt faire face aux problèmes graves de toute nature, en premier lieu, à ceux qui découlent de l'héritage colonial, il est particulièrement nécessaire que les Nations Unies lui portent toute assistance économique, technique, sociale, culturelle ou autre dont il aurait besoin pour franchir les premières étapes de son indépendance. Il est dans l'intérêt des peuples nouvellement indépendants que les grandes puissances, soucieuses de leur porter aide et assistance, le fassent aussi, autant que possible, par l'intermédiaire des Nations Unies et de leurs institutions spécialisées, afin qu'aucune obligation susceptible de limiter la liberté d'action de ces peuples par une puissance quelconque ne puisse entraver leur marche indépendante vers leur propre destinée.

69. Quatorzièmement, afin de permettre aux peuples nouvellement émancipés de mobiliser la totalité de leurs ressources humaines et économiques pour leurs plans de reconstruction et de développement national, tous les Etats Membres, et, en particulier, les grandes puissances, doivent agir de façon que ces peuples ne soient jamais entraînés, par des considérations de défense, à allouer des fonds indispensables à leur développement national aux dépenses de caractère militaire. Les grandes puissances ont plus particulièrement le devoir de se retenir de toute action qui conduirait, directement ou indirectement, à alourdir le fardeau militaire de ces pays ayant accédé à l'indépendance.

70. Quinzièmement, il est bien entendu que tout acte d'agression contre un Etat indépendant constitue un crime contre l'humanité. Ce crime prend un caractère encore plus grave lorsqu'il est dirigé contre un pays qui vient d'accéder à l'indépendance ou qui traverse les étapes initiales et difficiles de son développement.

71. Les Etats Membres, et à plus forte raison les anciennes puissances administrantes, doivent, de plus, se retenir de toute atteinte visant à la dislocation partielle ou totale de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays. Ainsi, il serait souhaitable que, dans la déclaration sur la fin du colonialisme, tous les Etats Membres réitérent solennellement leur engagement, proclamé par la Charte des Nations Unies, de ne jamais violer la souveraineté nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un autre Etat, sous quelque forme que ce soit.

72. Seizièmement, les peuples du monde doivent enfin être vigilants pour empêcher que le colonialisme, mettant à profit les faiblesses et les difficultés intérieures des petits Etats indépendants, ne puisse se réintroduire ou s'infiltrer sous des formes nouvelles. Toute intervention, de la part d'un Etat plus puissant, dans les affaires intérieures d'un autre, toute pression d'ordre économique, politique ou idéologique qui viserait à fausser le jeu normal des institutions intérieures d'un pays, venant de l'extérieur, constituent ainsi les éléments d'un néo-colonialisme incompatible avec l'indépendance et la souveraineté des peuples, et avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies.

73. Tels étaient les quelques principes que ma délégation a pensé opportun de rappeler, au moment où s'engage le débat sur le problème général de l'accession des pays coloniaux et de leurs peuples à l'indépendance. Ce sont là des principes que nous avons toujours été fiers de défendre et de soutenir, tout au long de notre participation aux travaux des Nations Unies. Mon pays, qui n'a jamais souffert du colonialisme dans sa conception directe, s'honore pourtant d'avoir toujours, et sans exception, plaidé la cause des pays frères mais infortunés d'Asie et d'Afrique, et d'avoir apporté son soutien moral à la cause de tous les peuples coloniaux luttant pour leur droit à l'indépendance. Tout récemment encore, S. M. le Chahincha s'est fait l'interprète des sentiments unanimes du peuple iranien lorsqu'à la séance inaugurale du Sénat il a félicité les peuples africains ayant accédé à l'indépendance. Il s'est exprimé en ces termes:

"Nous sommes heureux qu'un nombre considérable de pays coloniaux aient accédé à la liberté et à l'indépendance et participent déjà aux travaux des Nations Unies, et que d'autres les suivront dans l'avenir. Du fond du cœur, nous les félicitons à l'occasion de leur liberté et de leur indépendance et nous leur souhaitons tout le bonheur et toute la prospérité possibles dans la voie de leurs progrès véritables, conformément aux principes de la démocratie et à l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies."

74. Ma délégation est particulièrement fière d'avoir activement participé à la préparation du projet de déclaration qui vous est soumis [A/L.323 et Add.1], au nom d'une grande majorité de puissances africano-asiatiques, et qu'il s'honore d'avoir contresigné. Ce projet de déclaration, qui proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre une fin rapide et inconditionnelle au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et ses manifestations, contient en outre la plupart des principes qu'il nous paraît nécessaire de faire adopter par l'Assemblée générale dans son ensemble.

75. Ceux qui ont participé à la rédaction de ce projet peuvent, plus particulièrement, témoigner de l'esprit constructif qui a animé ses promoteurs. Il est notamment clair que beaucoup des signataires de ce projet de déclaration, qui ont particulièrement souffert des sévices du colonialisme, auraient préféré un texte plus expressif, comportant entre autres des clauses condamnatoires à l'encontre du colonialisme dans ses aspects les plus critiquables. Cependant, afin de rallier tous les courants d'opinions de l'Assemblée autour d'un texte acceptable par les Nations Unies dans leur unanimité, ils ont accepté, dans un esprit de conciliation, certaines formulations de caractère beaucoup plus modéré. Nous espérons que le même esprit de coopération constructive animera tous les membres de cette assemblée et nous avons également l'espoir qu'ils pourront se rallier unanimement autour d'un texte historique de si grande importance qui est appelé à exprimer un moment solennel de la conscience universelle concernant le problème du colonialisme à notre époque.

76. C'est avec empressement que ma délégation a l'honneur de recommander à l'attention des membres de l'Assemblée le projet de déclaration [A/L.323 et Add.1] et plus particulièrement de faire appel aux puissances administrantes afin qu'elles lui accordent leur soutien sans réserve.

77. En conclusion, ma délégation voudrait remercier la délégation de l'Union soviétique qui a pris l'initiative de porter ce problème à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale. Toutefois, pour des raisons qui relèvent d'abord des idées positives contenues dans notre projet de résolution, comme pour des raisons relatives à la nécessité de rallier la plus grande majorité possible autour des principes devant régir notre attitude anticoloniale, comme enfin pour des raisons dues à la nécessité de limiter toute action de l'Assemblée sur ce point aux aspects ayant essentiellement trait au seul problème du colonialisme, ma délégation ne serait pas en mesure d'appuyer la déclaration soviétique. Par contre, elle souhaite de tout cœur que la délégation soviétique, comprenant les raisons qui ont poussé la majorité des puissances africano-asiatiques à présenter leur propre projet de résolution, veuille bien retirer son projet, ouvrant ainsi la voie à l'adoption unanime, par cette assemblée, du projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1] présenté par ces puissances africano-asiatiques. Une telle unanimité, on ne le répétera jamais assez, donnera au projet actuel la place historique qu'il mérite d'occuper dans les annales de l'anticolonialisme.

78. M. NOSEK (Tchécoslovaquie) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'Assemblée générale est maintenant parvenue à l'un des points les plus importants de son ordre du jour, c'est-à-dire à la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

C'est une question d'une portée internationale exceptionnelle dont la solution immédiate est d'importance vitale pour les populations opprimées et exploitées des pays coloniaux et dépendants, et aussi pour les peuples qui, dans le monde entier, tiennent particulièrement à la liberté.

79. A l'heure actuelle, le colonialisme tient encore en esclavage, exploite sans merci et opprime des dizaines de millions d'êtres humains en Afrique, en Asie, en Amérique latine et dans le Pacifique. L'humanité se couvrirait de honte si, à une époque où elle a appris à désintégrer l'atome, à dominer les forces de la nature et où elle se prépare à conquérir les espaces extra-atmosphériques, elle ne parvenait pas à secouer le joug d'un colonialisme impudent et à obliger les colonialistes à accorder, sans délai, la liberté et l'indépendance aux millions d'êtres humains qui mènent une existence misérable dans les pays coloniaux.

80. Le processus de liquidation complète du colonialisme est une nécessité historique de notre époque. Le mouvement de libération nationale des pays coloniaux et dépendants apporte chaque année une modification de la carte politique du monde. Si, avant la seconde guerre mondiale, de vastes territoires d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'autres régions du monde figuraient sur la carte sous les quelques couleurs qui représentaient les systèmes coloniaux de plusieurs puissances coloniales, il suffit de jeter un coup d'œil à cette carte aujourd'hui pour apprécier les profonds changements qui sont survenus dans le monde. De territoires qui étaient précédemment des colonies, sont nés des dizaines d'Etats souverains qui ont acquis leur liberté et leur indépendance après une longue et pénible lutte. Les colonialistes ont opposé divers obstacles aux luttes menées par les nations coloniales pour leur libération nationale. Ils ont eu quelquefois recours à des moyens aussi peu scrupuleux que les bombes au napalm et les grenades, quelquefois à la tactique qui consiste à dresser les nations coloniales les unes contre les autres. Récemment, nous avons souvent entendu invoquer le prétexte que telle ou telle nation n'est pas assez développée, assez mûre pour assumer les responsabilités qui découleraient de sa liberté et de son indépendance et pour s'organiser en Etat. Point n'est besoin aux colonialistes de s'inquiéter indûment et de masquer leur répugnance à mettre une fin au honteux système colonial, en se préoccupant de savoir si les nations coloniales seront capables de diriger leur pays. L'exemple offert par de nombreux pays qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance montre qu'une fois libérées de l'esclavage colonial ces populations savent bien comment diriger leur pays et édifier leur économie.

81. Un autre argument invoqué par certains pays colonialistes consiste à dire que leurs territoires coloniaux ne sont pas à proprement parler des colonies, mais, disent-ils, des provinces d'outre-mer, c'est-à-dire qu'elles font partie de la métropole. Cet argument est aussi peu logique et aussi peu véridique que celui qui consisterait à dire que certains pays métropolitains ne font pas partie de l'Europe, mais du continent africain ou de la péninsule de l'Inde.

82. Le déclin du colonialisme dû au mouvement de libération nationale des peuples coloniaux est inévitable et ne saurait être enrayé par aucune force, intrigue ou formule juridique quelles qu'elles soient.

C'est une évolution historique qui doit immanquablement être couronnée par la victoire de l'idée de liberté et d'indépendance.

83. Toutefois, il s'agit maintenant de savoir si le déclin complet du colonialisme sera le fruit de luttes sanglantes au cours desquelles périront encore des centaines de milliers d'êtres humains, ou si l'on trouvera des moyens d'accélérer et de faciliter la chute inévitable du colonialisme.

84. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit elle aussi aider à trouver ces moyens. Elle doit s'efforcer d'obtenir qu'il n'y ait plus dans le monde entier une seule nation sous le joug d'autres nations, et que les peuples des territoires coloniaux et des territoires sous tutelle accèdent à l'indépendance complète.

85. Il y a longtemps que les peuples du monde entier ont prononcé leur verdict sur le colonialisme, et ce verdict irrévocable doit maintenant bénéficier de l'appui total de l'autorité des Nations Unies. Il s'agit là, de toute façon, d'une dette que l'Organisation des Nations Unies a contractée depuis 15 ans en énonçant dans la Charte des buts et principes. Maintenir une seule nation ou même une tribu sous le joug du colonialisme reviendrait à tourner en dérision les idéaux élevés de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

86. Une comparaison même superficielle entre le développement des pays métropolitains et celui de leurs colonies suffit à mettre en évidence la monstruosité que cache l'essence même du colonialisme. Dans les pays métropolitains, nous trouvons des exemples de richesse et de prospérité qui sont le résultat d'un vol perpétré sans scrupule depuis de longues années sur les millions d'habitants des colonies ainsi que du pillage des ressources naturelles de pays étrangers. En revanche, dans les pays opprimés, l'administration colonialiste est telle que les populations de ces pays vivent dans des conditions d'extrême pauvreté, d'analphabétisme et de maladie, qu'elles sont condamnées à la plus courte espérance de vie qui puisse être et que plus de la moitié de ces populations meurent en bas âge.

87. Lorsque les nations qui luttent contre les colonialistes pour acquérir leur indépendance parviennent à leurs fins, elles retrouvent leur pays dans une situation qui témoigne de façon surprenante des soins et de la mission civilisatrice de leurs anciens maîtres coloniaux. Des exemples tels que l'inexistence de toute usine ou de toute entreprise qui puisse répondre aux besoins de la population ne sont pas rares. Le cas du Congo, qui a accédé à l'indépendance alors qu'il n'y avait encore dans le pays aucun médecin ou avocat, ingénieur ou officier congolais, n'est pas un cas isolé. Les statistiques dont dispose l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les renseignements qui filtrent des pays coloniaux donnent un tableau choquant des résultats d'un siècle de régime colonial. De nombreux renseignements sur ce sujet ont été fournis par les autorités les plus compétentes en la matière, à savoir les représentants des pays africains, au cours de la discussion générale, à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale.

88. Il ne peut d'ailleurs en être autrement, car toutes les activités des colonialistes dans leurs colonies n'ont toujours eu qu'un seul objectif, celui d'assurer un maximum de profits aux monopoles métropolitains. C'est pourquoi les pays coloniaux ont servi d'annexes aux pays impérialistes comme sources de matières premières et comme débouchés pour les produits métropolitains; la main-d'œuvre à bon marché dans les colonies, l'approvisionnement en matières premières ainsi que les exportations de ces colonies vers les pays métropolitains, le tout à un prix de revient pratiquement nul, ont permis aux colonialistes d'amasser d'immenses profits résultant de la vente de ces matières premières et de ces denrées alimentaires sur les marchés mondiaux. C'est pourquoi les colonialistes ont délibérément retardé le développement d'industries locales dans les colonies et, pour peu qu'ils aient créé des industries, il ne s'agissait que d'industries de transformation des matières premières et de petites industries.

89. Les colonialistes appelaient toujours l'attention sur les chemins de fer, les routes, les ports et les moyens de communication qu'ils ont construits dans les colonies. Toutefois, ce n'est pas dans l'intérêt des populations locales qu'ils les ont construits, mais bien dans leur propre intérêt, afin de faciliter et d'intensifier l'exploitation des peuples coloniaux et des richesses naturelles de leurs pays. Comment pourrait-il en être autrement? En effet cette situation découle logiquement de l'essence même et du caractère d'oppression et de piraterie que revêt le colonialisme. Or le colonialisme n'est pas encore mort en dépit du fait qu'il ait été enterré par le Premier Ministre du Royaume-Uni dans l'exposé que celui-ci a fait au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée.

90. Le président Sukarno a parfaitement décrit l'état actuel du colonialisme lorsqu'il a déclaré à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale:

"On dit parfois que l'impérialisme et le colonialisme sont morts. Non, l'impérialisme n'est pas encore mort. Il est en train de mourir, sans doute ... Cependant — et notez bien ce que je dis — l'impérialisme mourant est dangereux, aussi dangereux que le tigre blessé dans la jungle tropicale." [880ème séance, par. 63.]

91. L'Organisation des Nations Unies, qui a prévu dans sa charte le respect des principes de l'égalité de droits, du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, ainsi que le respect des droits de l'homme, ne peut continuer à rester indifférente lorsque les colonialistes piétinent impitoyablement ces droits et maintiennent les nations coloniales sous le joug en recourant aux méthodes les plus brutales. Nous ne pouvons passer sur l'oppression des peuples coloniaux et sur le pillage sans scrupule des richesses de leurs pays. Nous ne pouvons fermer les yeux sur les guerres coloniales et les effusions de sang en Algérie, au Kenya, en Rhodésie, en Oman, dans les colonies portugaises et ailleurs, lorsque nous savons pertinemment que les puissances coloniales ont recours à tous les moyens qu'autorise la force brutale pour empêcher les populations des pays coloniaux d'affirmer leur droit inaliénable à disposer d'elles-mêmes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit faire l'impossible pour remédier le plus tôt possible à cette situation honteuse. Il s'agit là d'un impératif catégorique de notre époque. En conséquence, l'Assemblée générale doit adopter la déclaration relative à la liquidation immédiate du colonialisme et à l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les territoires coloniaux et territoires sous tutelle.

92. En Tchécoslovaquie, l'opinion publique s'est félicitée du fait qu'à la deuxième Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, qui s'est tenue à Addis-Abéba en juin 1960, les nations africaines avaient elles-mêmes affirmé dans la résolution qu'elles ont adoptée, au sujet de l'élimination du régime colonial en Afrique, qu'elles étaient résolues à liquider le colonialisme sur ce continent. De plus en plus, les peuples des pays africains assument résolument la responsabilité de leurs propres affaires, c'est là un fait significatif et l'une des principales conditions préalables pour que l'on puisse au plus tôt mettre un terme au régime colonial et qu'il soit complètement et définitivement supprimé. Le fait que les jeunes Etats africains soient résolus à poursuivre la lutte pour la libération totale de l'Afrique, ce que nous ont appris des représentants africains aussi éminents que M. Nkrumah, président du Ghana, et M. Sekou Touré, président de la Guinée, ainsi que d'autres, dans les déclarations qu'ils ont faites au cours de la présente Assemblée générale, autorise la délégation de Tchécoslovaquie à penser que les populations des autres territoires d'Afrique prendront aussi fermement en main leur destinée.

93. Les événements récents ont aussi montré que la prolongation du régime colonial donne lieu à des crises internationales répétées qui menacent de mener l'humanité à la catastrophe que serait une guerre mondiale. En faisant disparaître immédiatement le colonialisme et tous ses vestiges, on supprimerait une des causes de tension permanente et de conflit dans le monde et on atténuerait sensiblement les dangers de guerre. N'est-il pas notoire que la désintégration du régime colonial s'est toujours accompagnée de provocations, d'interventions armées et trop souvent de guerres coloniales? Il suffit de rappeler les guerres coloniales d'Indonésie, du Viet-Nam, du Laos, du Cambodge, l'agression impérialiste contre l'Egypte, l'intervention armée des colonialistes du Congo et d'autres. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit appliquer tous ses efforts à détruire la cause commune de ces crises qui sévissent en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique latine, je veux dire le régime colonial.

94. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit s'efforcer d'obtenir que les nations coloniales puissent s'engager, en toute liberté et en toute indépendance, sur la voie du développement. Le raffermissement de la paix dans le monde, qui est la tâche fondamentale incombant à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, est donc très étroitement lié à la liquidation du colonialisme.

95. La délégation tchécoslovaque partage entièrement l'opinion émise par M. Nkrumah, président du Ghana, qui a déclaré au cours de la discussion générale à la présente Assemblée:

"Tant qu'un seul pouce de la terre d'Afrique restera sous la domination étrangère, le monde ne connaîtra pas de paix. Aussi l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit-elle ... [adjurer] toutes les nations qui ont des colonies en Afrique d'accorder l'indépendance totale aux territoires qui relèvent encore d'elles. A mon avis, avoir des colonies et être Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sont aujourd'hui incompatibles." [869ème séance, par. 5.]

96. Nul ne saurait mettre en question l'importance capitale qu'a pu avoir pour le maintien de la paix dans le monde l'apparition, après la seconde guerre mondiale, de nouveaux Etats indépendants. La grande majorité de ces pays nouveaux s'attachent résolument à suivre une politique de neutralité positive et de paix et refusent de prendre part aux groupements agressifs des impérialistes. En conséquence, nul ne saurait douter que la libération immédiate des autres populations coloniales ne contribue favorablement aux destinées et au développement futur de la société. Si les puissances coloniales cherchent sincèrement à raffermir la paix, comme elles ne cessent de le proclamer, et si elles reconnaissent loyalement leurs engagements envers l'Organisation des Nations Unies, elles doivent adopter les propositions contenues dans la déclaration présentée par le représentant de l'Union soviétique [A/4502 et Corr. 1], c'est-à-dire qu'elles doivent d'abord accorder immédiatement l'indépendance complète et la liberté à tous les pays et territoires coloniaux, sous tutelle, non autonomes et autres qui ne s'administrent pas eux-mêmes, renoncer ensuite à tous les bastions du colonialisme conservés en territoire étranger, sous forme de zones louées à bail ou de propriétés diverses, et qu'enfin tous les pays doivent respecter strictement la souveraineté et l'inviolabilité territoriale des pays qui ont récemment accédé ou qui accèderont à l'indépendance après l'adoption de cette déclaration.

97. En adoptant cette déclaration, on ouvrirait aux nations coloniales des perspectives réalistes sur la matière d'accéder à la liberté par des moyens pacifiques et la paix du monde s'en trouverait ainsi considérablement renforcée. Toutefois, il ne suffit pas, nous semble-t-il, d'éliminer simplement le colonialisme sous sa forme ancienne. Les populations des pays qui se sont libérées ou qui se libéreront du joug colonial doivent être extrêmement vigilantes et se tenir sur leurs gardes en face des diverses formes de néo-colonialisme que les puissances impérialistes essaient de leur imposer. Je pense en particulier aux tentatives faites pour entraîner les pays africano-asiatiques dans l'alliance agressive des impérialistes, et obliger ces pays à mettre leur territoire à la disposition des impérialistes en tant que bases militaires et à accepter diverses sortes d'aide ou d'accords économiques inéquitables.

98. A ce propos, nous ne saurions omettre de signaler les activités toujours croissantes des milieux dirigeants de la République fédérale d'Allemagne qui, en recourant à la pénétration économique dans les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, essaient sournoisement de regagner la position perdue de l'Allemagne impériale, pays qui fut l'une des puissances coloniales les plus brutales.

99. La liquidation immédiate du colonialisme aurait également une importance exceptionnelle pour le développement de la coopération économique internationale et pour le développement économique des pays actuellement sous régime colonial. Les colonialistes ont éprouvé pillé les richesses des pays coloniaux, ils se sont opposés à leur industrialisation et ont paralysé l'ensemble de leur économie en les obligeant, en matière de production agricole, à faire de la monoculture. En libérant les pays coloniaux du joug colonial, on crée les conditions préalables indispensables au développement normal de leur économie, on augmente le volume du commerce mondial et tous les peuples en bénéficient. De même, la liquidation immédiate du colonialisme aurait d'importantes répercussions, qu'il s'agisse de relever les niveaux de vie, d'améliorer l'instruction des populations intéressées ou de faire disparaître des fléaux tels que l'analphabétisme et la maladie.

100. La liquidation immédiate du honteux régime d'esclavage colonial servirait les intérêts de toutes les nations. Pour s'en convaincre il n'est que de se reporter à la période si riche d'expérience qui a suivi la seconde guerre mondiale, période pendant laquelle une trentaine de pays, représentant une population totale de 1 milliard 500 millions de personnes, se sont libérés du joug colonial. Forte de cette expérience, la délégation tchécoslovaque estime qu'il est du devoir de l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'en appeler à tous les peuples du monde pour qu'ils ne restent pas indifférents aux souffrances des nations coloniales. L'Organisation des Nations Unies doit enjoindre aux puissances qui possèdent des empires coloniaux d'entamer, sans délai et sur un pied d'égalité, des négociations avec les représentants des pays coloniaux en vue d'instaurer la liberté et l'indépendance dans tous les pays et territoires coloniaux, sous tutelle et non autonomes. Si les puissances coloniales essaient de retarder la libération des colonies et refusent de reconnaître aux populations qui les habitent leurs droits inaliénables à la liberté et à l'indépendance, les nations pacifiques devront alors accorder toute leur aide matérielle à ces populations dans leur lutte contre les oppresseurs.

101. La vive sympathie que ressent le peuple tchécoslovaque à l'égard de mouvements de nationalisme et de libération a des racines profondes. Elle a sa source dans l'expérience amère des douloureuses années d'occupation hitlérienne, alors que des envahisseurs étrangers opprimaient sans scrupule notre peuple et pillaient notre pays. Nous partons donc du principe que chaque nation a le droit absolu de disposer d'elle-même à son gré et de mener une existence indépendante. La République socialiste tchécoslovaque entretient avec tous les Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique qui se sont libérés du joug colonial des relations étroites, fondées sur le principe d'égalité et d'intérêt mutuel. Dans le domaine de la coopération économique en particulier, la Tchécoslovaquie contribue, dans la limite de ses possibilités et de ses capacités, à aider ces pays nouveaux à rattraper leur retard économique actuel et à raffermir leur indépendance politique et économique. S'inspirant des principes inébranlables qui sont à la base de la politique étrangère de son pays, la délégation de la République socialiste tchécoslovaque appuie sans réserve le projet relatif à la liquidation immédiate des régimes coloniaux et à l'octroi d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes aux nations coloniales. Le Président de la République socialiste tchécoslovaque, M. Novotný, a exprimé la volonté de toute la population tchécoslovaque lorsqu'il a déclaré au cours de la discussion générale, à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale:

"Nous sommes convaincus qu'il faut abolir à jamais tout le système colonialiste et donner à toutes les nations la possibilité de conquérir leur liberté. Voilà pourquoi nous appuyons sans réserve le point 87 de l'ordre du jour intitulé Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, proposé par la délégation de l'Union soviétique à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale." [871ème séance, par. 56.]

102. La délégation de la République socialiste tchécoslovaque appuie sans réserve le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux présenté par la délégation de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques [A/4502 et Corr.1]. Si l'Assemblée générale adopte cette déclaration, l'Organisation des Nations Unies aura sensiblement contribué à améliorer les relations internationales, à raffermir la paix mondiale et à instaurer une coopération internationale amicale.

103. Cet après-midi, nous avons été saisis du projet de résolution des 28 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1], qui a été présenté par le représentant du Cambodge. Je me réserve le droit de reprendre la parole sur ce texte à un stade ultérieur de nos délibérations.

104. Avant de conclure, je crois de mon devoir de répondre à la déclaration faite ce matin par le représentant du Royaume-Uni [925ème séance] qui a essayé de profiter du débat sur la liquidation immédiate du colonialisme pour attaquer calomnieusement les Etats socialistes. Ces attaques ont pour but de distraire l'attention de l'Assemblée et de l'opinion publique de la solution recherchée au problème urgent de liquidation immédiate du colonialisme et de libération des nations qui jusqu'à présent se trouvent sous le joug colonial. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a donc tenté de distraire l'attention de l'Assemblée de la question qui nous occupe en ce moment et de substituer au débat sérieux et réaliste sur la liquidation du colonialisme des attaques offensives contre les Etats socialistes, dans un esprit de guerre froide.

105. Ces attaques ne nous surprennent pas. Certains représentants — comme le représentant du Royaume-Uni ce matin — ont pris ce parti par haine des pays socialistes, pays dont les peuples ont autrefois décidé librement et irrévocablement d'établir le socialisme dans leur pays. Aucun pouvoir au monde ne saurait enrayer l'avance des pays socialistes, et les pays impérialistes devraient s'en convaincre.

106. Les centaines de millions de dollars officiellement affectés chaque année au financement des activités subversives contre les pays socialistes, l'envoi d'agents et de saboteurs, l'organisation de campagnes incendiaires, les tentatives d'ingérence et autres provocations se sont révélées peu efficaces. Chacun sait que la vraie liberté, l'indépendance et la souveraineté des Etats ne sauraient être évaluées ni d'après la sonorité des tournures de style et des déclarations entendues à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ni d'après la grossièreté et l'impertinence des attaques formulées contre les Etats socialistes, mais plutôt, par exemple, d'après des critères tels que l'assurance d'une égalité de droits pour tous, sans distinction de race, de sexe ou de confession, ou encore le développement économique, culturel et social et l'amélioration des niveaux de vie d'une population.

107. Au cours de nos débats sur cette question, notre tâche principale consiste à adopter une déclaration sans équivoque sur la liquidation immédiate du colonialisme, à renier le colonialisme comme faisant la honte et le déshonneur de l'humanité au XXème siècle. Nos débats doivent nous amener à adopter un texte faisant instamment appel aux puissances colonialistes pour qu'elles reconnaissent sans délai les droits fondamentaux des populations qui ont vécu jusqu'ici dans les conditions serviles et sans dignité du régime colonial. Ni les puissances coloniales impérialistes qui, sous divers prétextes, dirigent et exploitent les populations des colonies, ni les pays qui les soutiennent ne pourront empêcher par leurs attaques calomnieuses contre les pays socialistes que cette question urgente ne soit réglée. Ce que l'opinion publique démocratique mondiale attend de ces puissances, comme elle est en droit de le faire, c'est une déclaration sans équivoque, précisant qu'elles sont disposées à accorder immédiatement la liberté et l'indépendance aux populations opprimées des colonies, conformément aux nobles principes et aux fins de la Charte des Nations Unies, et non pas des attaques agressives contre les pays socialistes, dans un esprit de guerre froide.

M. Nesbitt (Canada), vice-président, prend la présidence.

108. M. PERERA (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation de Ceylan a le privilège d'être au nombre des auteurs du projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1] dont l'Assemblée a été saisie. Tout en étant donc l'un des auteurs de ce projet de résolution, la délégation de Ceylan se permet d'émettre l'opinion que la question dont nous traitons actuellement marque un tournant dans l'évolution de la société internationale et de la communauté des nations.

109. A la vérité, je ne saurais mieux commenter cette question que ne l'a fait M. Khrouchtchev, président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, dans le document A/4502, le 23 septembre 1960. J'aimerais rappeler quelques passages de ce document dans lequel le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique déclarait:

"Notre époque est celle de la rénovation rapide de la société, celle de l'établissement de modes de vie plus progressifs et plus justes, celle où la puissance de l'homme sur les forces de la nature prend un essor sans précédent. Le temps est venu de libérer entièrement et définitivement les peuples qui souffrent dans la servitude coloniale." [A/4502.]

110. A la vérité, on ne saurait trop souvent répéter la maxime selon laquelle "les peuples qui en oppriment d'autres ne peuvent être libres". Le président Khrouchtchev, dans ce même document, a cité cette maxime, ainsi que le Président de la Guinée, M. Sekou Touré, lorsqu'il a pris la parole devant cette assemblée à la quatorzième session [837ème séance]. C'est donc en s'inspirant de cette considération que la délégation de Ceylan entend faire son intervention.

111. L'émancipation des populations asservies a toujours été pour le peuple de Ceylan une cause particulièrement chère. Qu'il me soit permis de rappeler que Ceylan a joué un rôle appréciable dans certaines des grandes conférences internationales au cours desquelles la question de la fin du colonialisme a été examinée — et je me permets d'insister sur le fait que le Gouvernement de Ceylan préfère l'expression "fin du colonialisme" à celle d'"octroi de l'indépendance". Je veux parler, en particulier, de la Conférence des peuples asiatiques qui s'est tenue à New Delhi en 1947 et de la Conférence de Bandoung de 1955. Depuis cette dernière conférence, le Gouvernement de Ceylan a non seulement approuvé les déclarations des Etats indépendants d'Afrique aux Conférences d'Accra, de Conakry et d'Addis-Abéba, mais encore il s'est inspiré de ces principes pour orienter sa politique. En fait, l'un des principes essentiels de la politique du Gouvernement populaire qui a accédé au pouvoir en avril 1956 sous la direction du Premier Ministre, M. Bandaranaike, a été la fin du colonialisme. Le gouvernement actuel dirigé par Mme Bandaranaike a intensifié cette politique et je puis affirmer sans exagération que notre peuple considère la fin du colonialisme comme son premier article de foi et son ultime credo politique.

112. Je n'ai pas l'intention d'étudier les arcanes de la diplomatie des puissances colonialistes, soit dans le passé, soit dans le présent, mais je suis obligé de constater que le projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée est maintenant saisie tire sa raison d'être de l'existence du colonialisme dans ses divers aspects. Il est donc absolument indispensable que nous prenions immédiatement des mesures pour mettre fin au colonialisme. Qu'il me soit permis de rappeler aux représentants des pays autrefois asservis qu'on ne saurait être trop reconnaissant envers le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, des efforts inlassables et résolus qu'il a déployés pour faire inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée, mais aussi envers le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique pour l'activité incessante dont il a fait preuve depuis la révolution bolchevique de 1917 afin d'atteindre ces buts.

113. Nous n'acceptons pas la thèse selon laquelle l'indépendance est accordée aux nations asservies. Je rappellerai ici les termes employés par M. Krishna Menon lorsqu'il a pris la parole à maintes reprises devant cette assemblée au cours de la discussion générale. Il disait, en effet, qu'il serait plus correct de parler de "la fin du régime étranger ou de la domination étrangère". Dans certains cas assurément, on parle bien de "transfert de pouvoirs"; quoi qu'il en soit, nous estimons que les populations asservies ou soumises à une domination politique ou économique ont gagné leur indépendance soit par la lutte politique qu'elles ont menée, soit par le jeu combiné de leur lutte politique et des pressions qu'ont pu exercer, sur le plan international, des organismes internationaux tels que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ou peut-être encore grâce aux efforts résolus et à la ferme attitude adoptée par les puissances anticolonialistes pour aider ceux qui étaient autrefois dépendants à acquérir leur indépendance. Nous avons depuis longtemps appris à mépriser l'ignorance, ou, comme diraient certains, l'hypocrisie de ceux qui parlent d'accorder la liberté et, ici encore, je rappellerai qu'un poète a parlé du "don qui ne peut jamais être donné par toutes les puissances réunies de la terre et des cieux".

114. Nous avons devant nous certains documents et, au nom de la délégation de Ceylan, je voudrais essayer de les analyser objectivement, ainsi que le projet de résolution que viennent de présenter 28 puissances asiatiques et africaines.

115. Je dois avouer que j'ai été plutôt déconcerté ce matin par l'intervention du Ministre d'Etat du Royaume-Uni, M. Ormsby-Gore [925ème séance], lorsqu'il a cru voir dans le document A/4502 une tentative pour raviver la guerre froide. J'ai vainement cherché dans ce document un indice permettant de penser qu'on tentait de raviver cette guerre froide. C'est au contraire ce document que nous avons pris pour base de nos discussions et c'est pourquoi la délégation de Ceylan voudrait le soumettre à l'attention des représentants et peut-être en souligner certains passages. En effet, nous sommes réunis ici pour discuter de la fin du colonialisme et non de la poursuite ou de la cessation de la guerre froide. En fait, la délégation de Ceylan, ou, pour mieux dire, le Gouvernement de Ceylan, ne participe pas à cette guerre, si tant est qu'une telle guerre existe. Peut-être sommes-nous assez naïfs pour ne pas croire à l'existence d'une telle guerre. Mais ce qui nous préoccupe pour l'instant, c'est la fin du colonialisme. J'entrerai donc au cœur du sujet tel qu'il ressort du document A/4502, car c'est la raison pour laquelle nous avons nous-mêmes présenté un projet de résolution. Je cite une phrase de ce document: "La liquidation du colonialisme serait l'une des principales mesures à prendre pour amener une détente internationale." [A/4502]. C'est là un aspect de la question.

116. Un autre aspect peut-être plus important à nos yeux est le suivant, et je cite encore le même document:

"En même temps que tout l'ignoble système colonial, cette autre variante du colonialisme qu'est le régime de tutelle est aujourd'hui dépassée. Survivance directe du système des mandats de la Société des Nations, le régime de tutelle actuel devait, d'après la Charte des Nations Unies, favoriser l'évolution des territoires sous tutelle vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes et l'indépendance. Or 15 ans sont passés depuis l'adoption de la Charte et l'indépendance n'a été octroyée qu'à quatre territoires sous tutelle sur 11.

"...

"Le régime de tutelle ne s'est justifié nulle part; il faut donc l'enterrer en même temps que tout l'anachronique système colonial." [A/4502.]

117. Comme je viens de le dire, l'essence du document réside dans ces paragraphes. Il faut également mentionner certaines exigences proclamées à la fin du document et c'est peut-être à propos de ces exigences que les 28 Etats africains-asiatiques, dont nous sommes, qui ont présenté un projet de résolution, peuvent paraître en contradiction avec ce texte. Sur ce point, j'espère qu'à la fin de nos discussions nous serons parvenus à trouver une solution.

118. Si l'on examine les propositions contenues dans le document A/4502, ainsi que le projet de résolution que nous avons présenté [A/L.323 et Add.1], on s'aperçoit que les deux documents ont en quelque sorte une trame commune. Il se peut que dans certains cas nous soyons d'accord et que, dans d'autres, nous ne le soyons pas, mais il est une chose certaine, c'est que cette question a été adoptée par acclamation lorsqu'il s'est agi de savoir, lors de la répartition des points de l'ordre du jour, si ce serait l'Assemblée en séance plénière ou la Première Commission qui en serait saisie. Lorsque l'Assemblée générale a été saisie de la question [903ème séance] traitée dans le document A/4502, intitulé "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux", elle l'a adoptée sans discussion et, qui plus est, il n'a pas été question de guerre froide à ce sujet. C'est pourquoi il est déconcertant de constater que cette question ait pu être soulevée.

119. Par ailleurs la délégation de Ceylan souhaiterait que l'on considère cette question comme intéressant l'ensemble de la communauté mondiale. Il est certain qu'il existe encore des territoires sous tutelle, des territoires non autonomes et peut-être des colonies à divers stades de développement politique et économique, et c'est pourquoi j'ai déclaré qu'il ne m'appartenait pas pour l'instant de traiter de cette question sinon d'une façon très générale; je ne tiens pas à m'immiscer dans les secrets d'une étude comparée des mérites des diverses politiques coloniales. Qu'il me soit permis toutefois de rappeler ce que le Secrétaire général, alors M. Trygve Lie, déclarait presque dès la fondation de cette organisation. Le document que je vais citer^{2/}, en date du 26 mars 1947, est nécessaire à mon argumentation:

"... Le régime international de tutelle n'est pas une simple continuation du système des mandats de la Société des Nations. C'est au contraire un système nouveau de contrôle international. Son champ d'action est plus vaste, ses pouvoirs plus étendus et ses possibilités plus grandes que celles du régime du mandat."

120. Compte tenu de cette déclaration, nous devons examiner la question en comparant la teneur du document A/4592, présenté par l'Union soviétique. C'est pourquoi j'estime que, si nous examinons la fin du colonialisme, nous devons étudier également l'utilité pratique du régime de tutelle. Nous savons tous que, si le régime des mandats, qui avait été proposé à la fin de la première guerre mondiale, n'avait pas présenté d'avantages précis pour les populations placées sous lesdits mandats — et il ne faut pas oublier qu'il y avait différentes catégories de mandats, dites "A", "B" et "C" — il avait du moins influencé l'opinion publique, mais devons-nous nous contenter de ce résultat? La seconde guerre mondiale a peut-être créé et libéré des forces encore insoupçonnées après la première guerre mondiale. C'est ainsi que le régime de tutelle fonctionne maintenant depuis près de 15 ans.

121. Par ailleurs, dès la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, dans un memorandum présenté à l'Assemblée, le Secrétaire général de cette époque avait exprimé certains doutes quant au succès du régime de tutelle, ainsi que sur les fins auxquelles il répondait et sur la manière dont les autorités administrantes s'efforçaient, dans la pratique, de parvenir à ces fins. Je me réfère également au document en date du 12 janvier 1952 portant la cote A/C.4/SR.245 et à un résumé dudit document où sont exprimés divers points de vue; il y est dit clairement que, si le régime de tutelle ne fonctionnait pas convenablement, c'est qu'il y avait des raisons — je n'en citerai que quelques-unes — la première étant que certaines autorités administrantes ne remplissaient pas leurs obligations. Dans certains cas, elles avaient scutenu que ces obligations étaient absolument inacceptables. Qui plus est, des puissances non administrantes avaient signalé à maintes reprises que lesdites puissances administrantes non seulement ne s'acquittaient pas de leurs obligations, mais, dans certains cas, allaient même jusqu'à manquer à leurs engagements. En d'autres termes, le Conseil de tutelle prit des mesures pour appeler l'attention des autorités administrantes sur leurs négligences et leurs omissions et l'on s'efforça sincèrement de faire fonctionner convenablement ce système. Cependant, nous n'avons pas constaté que les autorités administrantes aient répondu à l'appel fait aux sentiments nobles qu'aurait dû leur inspirer la dignité de leur mission.

122. Il se peut que j'ai tendance à généraliser, mais, par ailleurs, les faits sont là. C'est pour cette raison que la question dont nous sommes actuellement saisis mérite que nous l'étudions de près, car nous ne devons pas nous contenter de faire observer qu'un système existe déjà, il nous appartient de trouver les moyens de mettre fin au colonialisme et à la domination et à l'autorité coloniales. A l'heure actuelle, j'estime — et je parle au nom de la délégation de Ceylan — qu'il n'est pas prouvé de façon positive que le régime de tutelle soit, comme on l'a si souvent répété, le moyen le plus sûr et le plus rapide pour faire parvenir les populations à s'administrer elles-mêmes et à obtenir leur indépendance. J'insiste sur ce point, car, si le régime de tutelle actuel offrait réellement une telle garantie, je ne serais pas ici en train de vous demander d'accorder votre appui au projet de résolution présenté par les pays africano-asiatiques.

123. A ce propos, je voudrais rappeler certains principes essentiels qui nous ont poussés à agir en ce sens. Le représentant de l'Iran a tenté, à sa manière, de définir le colonialisme. Il s'agit là d'une autre conception, politique peut-être autant que juridique, et qui peut se définir de bien des façons, mais fondamentalement nous sommes d'avis que colonialisme est synonyme d'exploitation économique, de domination politique, et d'arrogance raciale et je dirais même que, dans la mesure où il permet à la puissance ayant sous sa domination des populations asservies ou dépendantes de parvenir à ses fins, c'est un système où la prostitution morale des populations indigènes est provoquée par la frustration intellectuelle dont elles sont victimes.

124. J'ai essayé ici de vous donner une définition. Je ne prétends pas que cette définition soit valable indéfiniment, mais c'est ainsi que nous apparaît le problème en Asie et c'est un fait que le colonialisme existe sous ces divers aspects. Il porte différents noms et, en fait, j'irai même jusqu'à dire que les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte ont été rendus nécessaires à cause de l'existence du colonialisme. Or celui-ci existe toujours, quoique, peut-être, sous des formes différentes. Ses manifestations, ou peut-être, devrais-je dire, ses objectifs, sont multiples et c'est pourquoi nous, les représentants des pays africano-asiatiques présents à cette assemblée — qui comptons parmi nous certains Etats devenus tout récemment indépendants — nous n'avons pas oublié et nous estimons de notre devoir de contribuer à mettre fin au colonialisme.

125. Autrefois, le colonialisme se présentait sous divers masques; toute la doctrine de l'extra-territorialité, la doctrine des capitulations, tout cela n'était que des aspects divers du colonialisme, de même que la répartition du monde en fonction du colonialisme. Même les juristes internationaux parlaient de colonialisme et non d'une communauté mondiale ou internationale. Il s'agit peut-être là d'un sujet rebattu, mais j'espère qu'on me permettra de m'y référer. C'est en effet au XIX^{ème} siècle qu'un très éminent juriste international, M. Lorimer, professeur de droit international à Edimbourg avait divisé le monde en trois sortes d'humanité: l'humanité civilisée, représentée par l'Europe, l'humanité barbare, représentée par quelques puissances telles que la

^{2/} Procès-verbaux officiels du Conseil de tutelle, première année, première session, 1^{ère} séance (p. 4).

Turquie et l'Irak — parce que cela se passait après le traité de 1856 — et l'humanité sauvage qui comprenait le reste de l'Afrique et de l'Asie. Bien du chemin a été parcouru depuis cette époque, mais néanmoins, si je puis m'exprimer ainsi, la damna hereditas du régime colonial a donné naissance aux problèmes auxquels le monde a dû faire face en 1945 et c'est pourquoi il a fallu inclure dans la Charte les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII afin de mettre sur pied un système permettant de mettre fin au colonialisme. Nous ne discuterons pas aujourd'hui des mérites des Chapitres XI, XII et XIII, mais, les ayant trouvés insuffisants, nous cherchons maintenant à trouver un moyen de sortir de cette impasse.

126. Il n'entre pas dans mes intentions, pour le moment, de soulever la question des modifications que l'on pourrait apporter à la Charte — loin de moi ce dessein — mais ce que je veux souligner, c'est que le régime de tutelle s'est trouvé en défaut. Je veux bien admettre que, peut-être, certaines autorités administrantes respectent strictement les dispositions de l'Article 73, mais d'autres ne le font pas, nous le savons; il suffit de questionner n'importe quel membre de la Quatrième Commission pour s'en convaincre. Certains donc ne respectent pas ces dispositions; ensuite il y a ceux qui soutiennent que l'Article 84 de la Charte confère à l'autorité administrante un certain statut de neutralité vis-à-vis de l'Assemblée générale elle-même. Quoi qu'il en soit, le document A/4502 appelle aujourd'hui notre attention sur la grave lacune que renferme la Charte elle-même, et ainsi nous sortons du domaine de l'interprétation strictement juridique de la Charte pour en venir aux réalités concrètes du monde. C'est pourquoi les mouvements qui se sont manifestés en Asie et en Afrique, les conférences auxquelles j'ai fait allusion, marquent un tournant non seulement dans l'histoire de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, mais encore dans l'histoire du monde. La plupart d'entre nous appartiennent à des Etats qui ne sont pas réellement des puissances militaires; nous devons nous en remettre à l'opinion publique qu'il s'agit de mobiliser, et au bien-fondé de notre cause. On pourrait prétendre qu'en gardant le silence sur une question, en nous abstenant de faire les déclarations qu'il nous appartient de faire, nous contribuons au progrès de l'histoire. Mais, dans le cas présent, je dirai que, si l'Assemblée gardait le silence sur une telle question, il se pourrait que, dans les années à venir, elle en arrive à être considérée peut-être comme un outil inconscient de l'histoire, lorsque l'histoire aura pris l'avantage sur cette assemblée. Dès lors, pourquoi ne pas adopter au contraire l'autre point de vue, pourquoi ne pas se faire l'outil conscient de l'évolution historique et agir en vue de mettre fin au colonialisme?

127. Je voudrais aussi souligner le fait qu'en parlant des manifestations du colonialisme, nous entendons — et c'est ce qu'essaie de préciser le projet de résolution — les diverses méthodes, procédures et fictions juridiques auxquelles les puissances coloniales ont recours pour masquer la nudité de leur grossier colonialisme. C'est ainsi qu'il est question par exemple de transfert de pouvoirs; j'y ai déjà fait allusion précédemment. Or, pour que ce transfert de pouvoirs puisse s'effectuer, il faut parfois attendre que l'on ait découvert dans la colonie le parti politique correct ou le groupe d'hommes qualifiés auquel le pouvoir pourra être transféré. On nous dit parfois qu'il faut attendre que les populations aient reçu une éducation politique et sociale qui leur permette de devenir les égaux des peuples de l'autorité administrante et que c'est la raison pour laquelle le transfert de pouvoirs est retardé. Nous avons entendu aussi plus d'une fois ici cette fiction monstrueuse selon laquelle les territoires d'outre-mer sont présentés comme des provinces de la métropole, comme des régions de la mère patrie et qu'il ne s'agit donc pas de colonies ou de pays asservis. Cette question a déjà été longuement discutée en d'autres circonstances et, comme je ne traite ici que de principes généraux, je ne veux pas insister sur ce point, mais nous savons que c'est en vertu de telles fictions que se poursuivent certaines luttes des plus brutales concernant les peuples asservis, dans des pays où l'on a maintenu pendant plusieurs années des conditions d'inégalité grossière afin de justifier cette fiction juridique selon laquelle ces pays appartiennent à la métropole.

128. Dans le cas présent, je prétends donc que, sous le prétexte de ces fictions juridiques, nous avons méconnu les dispositions de la Charte. Somme toute, point n'est besoin d'être doué d'une grande intelligence ou d'une grande sagesse pour comprendre les dispositions des Articles 73, 76 et même du paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte ou de l'Article 55, il s'agit de questions et de propositions très simples qui ont été acceptées par la communauté mondiale; et cependant, en ce qui concerne la mise en œuvre des dispositions de ces articles, nous nous apercevons que les autorités intéressées ne se sont pas acquittées de leurs obligations et c'est pourquoi, je le répète, nous avons rédigé un projet de résolution et l'Union soviétique a présenté un projet de déclaration.

129. Je n'ai fait que traiter de façon très générale de la question essentielle des Chapitres XI, XII et XIII. Il y a maintenant un autre aspect du problème qui ne doit pas nous échapper, je veux parler des traités inéquitables qui sont toujours une forme ou une manifestation du colonialisme et que certains ont qualifiés de néo-colonialisme. Il est arrivé que l'autorité administrante ou la puissance dominatrice, tout en abdiquant sa souveraineté ou en transférant ses pouvoirs, ait maintenu son emprise économique. Nous pouvons appeler cela du néo-colonialisme, le terme importe peu.

130. Il y a longtemps, cela se passait après le Congrès de Berlin au XIXème siècle, des théoriciens du socialisme ont fait observer — et à propos de la question qui nous occupe, on ne saurait l'oublier, point n'est besoin pour autant de souscrire à la doctrine communiste ou socialiste en tant que telle — qu'un jour viendrait où le conflit entre les puissances coloniales atteindrait un tel paroxysme qu'elles s'associeraient peut-être pour conserver en commun une emprise coloniale sur certains pays et territoires.

131. Je tiens à m'en tenir strictement à mon sujet; c'est pourquoi je ne mentionnerai aucune puissance en particulier. Que l'on appelle cela du néo-colonialisme, ou, comme l'a fait un autre auteur, de l'ultra-impérialisme, le fait est là.

132. A ce propos, je tiens à déclarer — et ce non pas parce que je veux reprendre l'argumentation exposée ce matin par le représentant du Royaume-Uni pour la réfuter — je tiens donc à déclarer qu'il ne s'agit pas de répéter des "manuels marxistes périmés" ou de se laisser griser "par la force incantatoire de slogans léninistes". Il s'agit de respecter la tradition radicale — et j'emploie ce terme au sens large — qui dans un pays a toujours guidé ses destinées et finalement contribué à lui faire atteindre ses ultimes objectifs. Sans me lancer dans des études comparées, je peux simplement mentionner la tradition radicale britannique qui, à certaines époques de son histoire, a suscité une politique coloniale éclairée. Et cette tradition se maintient, et c'est à cause de cette tradition radicale qu'un homme comme Lénine lui-même, a dans son fameux livre, L'impérialisme, stade suprême du capitalisme, reconnu ce que l'on devait à J. Hobson, l'économiste anglais qui, à la fin du XIX^{ème} siècle, écrivait son livre, Imperialism, qui est devenu un classique. Il ne s'agit pas de la "force incantatoire de slogans léninistes", il s'agit de mener la lutte jusqu'à un certain point. Il ne s'agit pas d'un dogme comme la Charte, par exemple. D'ailleurs la Charte sera-t-elle indéfiniment valable? Les organismes et les rouages qui ont été créés en 1945, aux termes de la Charte, seront-ils indéfiniment adéquats?

133. Les institutions, comme les êtres humains, vieillissent. C'est donc à nous qui tenons à ces institutions de trouver les moyens de les améliorer. C'est en ce sens que je soutiens qu'il ne faut pas oublier — il ne s'agit pas, je le répète, de la "force incantatoire de slogans léninistes", mais bien de la tradition radicale énergique qui s'est manifestée, ou de la tradition libérale manifestée par ceux qui ont lutté pour la liberté — que, même dans le cas des pays de l'Amérique latine, s'il avait fallu attendre que tous soient si raffinés, ou si cultivés, ou développés sur le plan politique et social qu'ils puissent égaler les puissances coloniales, il faudrait peut-être attendre encore jusqu'au jour du jugement dernier. A la longue, nous finirons tous par passer de vie à trépas et c'est pourquoi il est nécessaire que, à un certain stade de l'évolution des affaires humaines, on fasse le point de la situation.

134. C'est en ce sens que je soutiens que, en décidant, par acclamation, d'inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée, nous avons assumé une responsabilité, celle de formuler soit sous forme de résolution, soit sous toute autre forme — sous forme de déclaration, si vous le préférez — une proclamation qui constituerait non seulement un motif d'espérer pour les populations encore sous le régime colonial, mais encore un instrument que les puissances coloniales devraient mettre en œuvre en tant que tel.

135. J'aimerais que le projet de résolution que nous avons déposé soit considéré comme la suite logique des diverses grandes déclarations qui sont devenues par la suite des principes de droit international. Il ne s'agit pas ici d'une question de concept juridique pur, ni de créer un principe de droit; au contraire il s'agit d'essayer de trouver dans l'évolution de la société humaine une place convenable pour ce cas particulier.

136. J'ajouterai donc cet argument à l'appui de ma thèse, bien que, sans doute, certains Etats n'aient pas participé à l'établissement des grands principes de droit qui aujourd'hui régissent nos pratiques et qui ont peut-être enrichi l'histoire — je veux parler, par exemple, de la Déclaration de Paris qui, en 1856, a marqué un tournant dans les lois de la guerre sur terre, de la Déclaration de Saint-Petersbourg qui, en 1868, apporta un nouveau progrès pour l'humanisation de la guerre, des Conventions de La Haye de 1899 et de 1907. On pourrait sans doute considérer notre projet de résolution sous ce même angle, car non seulement je tiens à défendre ce texte, mais encore je lui trouve certains mérites qui sont peut-être absents de la déclaration soviétique; quoi qu'il en soit, je crois et je soutiens que ces deux textes se complètent; il n'y a pas de divergences fondamentales dans nos objectifs essentiels et, qui plus est, nous pouvons constater que nous sommes en parfait accord sur le fond de la question, encore que nous nous exprimions peut-être différemment sur ce point.

137. Je ne voudrais pas me répéter; cependant, m'adressant à une assemblée internationale comme celle-ci, je tiens à souligner que, si les grandes déclarations d'autrefois, du XIX^{ème} siècle en particulier, qui ont peut-être trouvé leur apogée dans les plus importantes déclarations de notre temps — c'est-à-dire la Charte, les jugements et principes de Nuremberg — ont été adoptées par cette assemblée et sont passées dans le droit international, c'est pour parvenir à certaines fins que ladite assemblée a pris cette décision. Et c'est dans cet esprit que je demanderai aux représentants ici présents d'adopter la déclaration qui figure dans notre projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1].

138. Qu'il me soit encore permis d'ajouter qu'en tant qu'organisme international, nous n'avons peut-être pas, à proprement parler, un caractère législatif. Le projet de résolution dont cette assemblée est saisie sanctionne et reflète l'opinion publique mondiale et l'on pourrait même dire que le jugement moral des nations est peut-être aussi exprimé dans cette déclaration.

139. A ce propos, permettez-moi de rappeler — car, j'en suis certain, les orateurs qui parleront après moi, demain, entreront dans les détails du projet de résolution — quelle fut l'histoire d'un des aspects les plus importants du colonialisme d'autrefois. J'emploie à dessein le terme de colonialisme, parce qu'il s'agissait réellement d'une forme de colonialisme, ce qui peut nous échapper aujourd'hui. D'un point de vue historique, je rappelle qu'au Congrès de Vienne en 1815, c'est le représentant britannique Castlereagh lui-même qui a proposé d'inclure dans l'Acte final du Congrès de Vienne une clause concernant la suppression de la traite des esclaves, ce qui fut fait, mais l'esclavage ne prit pas fin pour autant.

140. C'est là le point qui m'intéresse dans la discussion sur le projet de résolution: ce que renfermait l'Acte final de 1815. De même, je l'ai déjà dit, le système des mandats que nous avions en 1919 a été une manifestation de la conscience européenne et, en 1945, le régime de tutelle a été prévu par la Charte, mais, si je dois parler de l'histoire ultérieure de la traite des esclaves — et la question est pertinente car la traite des esclaves n'a pas été abolie immédiatement après 1815, parce que certains pays n'avaient pas prévu cela dans leur législation nationale — nous constatons que ce n'est qu'en 1885, dans l'Acte de Berlin, que cette clause fut adoptée officiellement par toutes les nations signataires. A cette époque le nombre des nations s'était accru par rapport à l'époque du Congrès de Vienne.

141. Il y eut un nouveau pas de fait en 1890. En effet, l'Acte de Bruxelles traitait aussi de la suppression de la traite des esclaves. Malheureusement pour le monde, les deux derniers Actes ne s'appliquaient qu'au bassin du Congo où sévissait la traite des esclaves. Donc le monde a dû attendre plusieurs années pour voir la mise en œuvre de ces actes. Ce n'est qu'à une date aussi récente que 1919, après la première guerre mondiale, lors de la négociation des traités de paix, que, par le Traité de Saint-Germain de cette même année, le monde civilisé a reconnu que la traite des esclaves se pratiquait encore dans certaines régions et qu'il appartenait aux autorités intéressées d'y mettre un terme. C'est ainsi que furent adoptées les Conventions sur l'esclavage de 1926 et de 1956, les dispositions complémentaires étant laissées au soin de l'Organisation internationale du Travail, institution spécialisée reliée à l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

142. Vous constatez donc que ces négociations ont eu une longue histoire, et ce n'est là qu'un exemple entre autres. Il s'agit en effet d'une longue histoire et malheureusement, dans le cadre de la politique mondiale d'aujourd'hui, le monde — et en particulier les peuples asservis — ne consent pas à attendre si longtemps la mise en œuvre de ce genre de résolution ou de ce genre de déclaration. Il est donc essentiel qu'en cette assemblée où sont réunis et travaillent sur un pied d'égalité à la fois les autorités administrantes — c'est-à-dire les puissances qui sont chargées de la tutelle de certains territoires, avec les obligations que cela comporte à l'égard des populations assujetties — et aussi les Etats qui ne possèdent pas de colonies ou de territoires non autonomes, ou plus simplement les autorités administrantes et les puissances non administrantes, il est essentiel, dis-je, que des deux côtés on reconnaisse la validité des principes qui sont à la base de la déclaration contenue dans notre projet de résolution.

143. Voilà pourquoi je soutiens que la déclaration et le projet de résolution marquent une étape dans l'évolution de la conscience internationale de l'humanité. En fait, j'irai plus loin et je dirai que le succès de la résolution ne dépend pas de son adoption pure et simple, car nous savons que l'on ne saurait faire la guerre à propos d'une question telle que la fin du colonialisme. La lutte continue parce que la liberté est une valeur à laquelle sont attachés les peuples qui luttent pour elle. On nous dira sans doute qu'il existe peut-être en Afrique des populations qui n'aspirent pas encore à la liberté dans ce sens, qui sont satisfaites d'être sous le joug de leurs maîtres coloniaux. Point n'est besoin de trouver des raisonnements très brillants pour réfuter ces dires, mais ce sont ces arguments qui sont toujours invoqués. Quant à nous, qui avons peut-être eu ici l'occasion d'observer le fonctionnement réel du régime de tutelle, nous qui en avons vu les effets, nous comprenons que, sans une telle déclaration, il n'est pas possible de faire de nouveaux progrès, car d'année en année nous découvrons les défaillances des autorités administrantes, nous découvrons le jeu de la politique mondiale qui intervient dans cette question. Nous constatons aussi que parfois, lorsque nul argument ne peut justifier le refus de l'indépendance, on prétend que l'autorité administrante doit protéger les populations assujetties, les populations en dépendance, d'une doctrine pernicieuse comme le communisme. C'était, je crois, au XVIIIème siècle que Samuel Johnson, personnalité bien connue des milieux littéraires britanniques, déclarait que "le patriotisme était le dernier refuge des vauriens". Je n'irai pas jusqu'à dire que ceux qui soutiennent maintenant que nous devons tenir ces populations des territoires asservis à l'abri du communisme donneraient raison à Johnson. Je ne dirai pas cela ici; il n'en est pas moins vrai que très souvent cet argument a été avancé. C'est peut-être sur la base de ces considérations qu'après la première guerre mondiale certains Etats, comme chacun sait, ont été créés pour maintenir le bolchevisme hors d'Europe; cette manœuvre n'a pas réussi.

144. Ainsi nous qui, en Asie, avons peut-être connu des jours meilleurs et des jours pires, nous qui avons peut-être encore un long chemin à parcourir quant à l'évolution de notre société, nous pouvons, je le soutiens, avoir une vue plus exacte de l'évolution de la société humaine et c'est pour cette raison que la délégation de Ceylan, tout en donnant son plein appui à la résolution, tient également à faire savoir qu'elle est prête — et je crois pouvoir parler au nom de tous les auteurs du projet de résolution — à accepter toute proposition qui contribuerait à améliorer ce texte afin de mettre définitivement un terme au colonialisme, et, dans l'intérêt de tous, le plus tôt sera le mieux. Je soutiens que le jour où une telle déclaration sera adoptée marquera une date mémorable pour la conscience de l'humanité civilisée.

La séance est levée à 17 h 45.

ASSEMBLÉE
GÉNÉRALE

UN/SA COLLECTION

SÉANCE PLÉNIÈRE

Mardi 29 novembre 1960,
à 10 h 30

QUINZIÈME SESSION

Documents officiels

NEW YORK

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1063

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. AMADEO (Argentine) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Les questions coloniales ont occupé la plus grande partie des séances de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale et il est vraisemblable qu'elles occuperont encore une bonne partie du temps qui s'écoulera d'ici la fin de la session. Cette primauté que l'on donne aux questions coloniales dans les débats de l'ONU n'est pas due au hasard; elle n'est pas davantage le simple résultat de manœuvres arbitraires; c'est, en fait, le reflet de la réalité que nous vivons.

2. On pourrait dire de notre organisation qu'elle est, entre autres choses, une grande caisse de résonance où se répercutent avec force les questions importantes qui préoccupent le monde. Dès lors, on ne pouvait pas manquer de traiter devant cette assemblée le problème du colonialisme ou, si l'on préfère, de la fin du colonialisme, qui fait l'objet d'une de nos plus profondes préoccupations et se trouve à l'origine des plus âpres controverses en ce milieu du XX^{ème} siècle.

3. La question revêt une actualité et une intensité d'autant plus grandes qu'elle est étroitement liée à la tension internationale qui règne entre les grandes puissances, c'est-à-dire à ce que l'on est convenu d'appeler la guerre froide. Il existe en effet une corrélation étroite entre le processus de liquidation des systèmes coloniaux et l'équilibre des forces qui opposent les nations les plus puissantes du monde. C'est pourquoi le problème devient plus ardu et se transforme en une alternative entre la guerre et la paix.

4. Aujourd'hui, c'est sous une nouvelle forme que nous est posée la question du colonialisme; elle nous est présentée sous l'aspect d'une initiative tendant à accorder l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples encore soumis à la domination coloniale. Le problème, on le voit, n'est pas simple et il ne nous est pas possible de l'aborder sans procéder à une étude générale, fût-elle succincte, de la portée et de la signification du colonialisme. Je m'empresse de dire que je m'efforcerai de limiter mon exposé à ce qui est strictement indispensable pour définir notre position.

5. Une observation préliminaire s'impose. Nous voulons parler de cette répétition constante et monotone de phrases toutes faites et de slogans préfabriqués, quand on traite de problèmes coloniaux. Certes, le recours aux lieux communs et aux artifices de propagande est un mal du monde contemporain, car le slogan présente un avantage: il dispense de réfléchir. Comme beaucoup de nos contemporains semblent éprouver une véritable horreur pour cette activité laborieuse et difficile qu'est la pensée, le slogan leur apporte une aide précieuse qui les libère de cette obligation. Pourtant, le colonialisme est un de ces sujets riches en substance que l'on ne devrait aborder qu'avec l'intention bien arrêtée d'en saisir le sens profond. En présence de faits historiques d'une portée transcendante, il est en effet regrettable que nous, qui avons été désignés pour en être les témoins éphémères, nous nous employions, au lieu de les étudier avec l'intérêt passionné que suscite le spectacle de l'histoire en marche, nous nous employions, dis-je, à interposer entre ces faits et notre esprit le voile du sectarisme ou l'épais manteau de notre pauvreté intellectuelle.

6. Ce reproche ne s'adresse d'ailleurs pas spécialement à ceux qui viennent de sortir du système colonial, ni à ceux qui s'efforcent de l'éliminer. On peut accorder les circonstances atténuantes à celui qui, dans la lutte et dans la souffrance, fait preuve d'une certaine partialité, car on ne peut méconnaître les griefs légitimes que nourrissent certains pays colonisés à l'encontre de leurs anciens maîtres. Il serait aussi difficile, pour ces jeunes pays, de procéder à une froide analyse de l'expérience vécue que, pour un prisonnier, d'étudier avec objectivité les mérites de tel ou tel régime pénitentiaire.

7. En revanche, ceux dont le passé ne peut pas influencer le jugement ont le devoir de considérer les faits dans un esprit de justice et avec le désir de trouver la vérité. C'est la contribution essentielle que nous pouvons fournir pour que cette transition entre le système colonial et l'indépendance s'opère sans violences excessives et, surtout, qu'elle ne provoque pas d'autres explosions encore plus graves.

8. Il s'est créé une sorte de terrorisme psychologique qui interdit de renoncer aux mots d'ordre habituels en cette matière sans risquer d'être accusé de complicité dans "l'exploitation esclavagiste des puissances coloniales", suivant les termes de la phraséologie en vogue de nos jours.

9. Nous déclarons, de façon catégorique, que l'existence d'un tel climat ne nous impressionne pas: nous définirons notre position sans craindre la façon dont elle pourra être interprétée ou jugée. Mon pays est issu d'un processus d'émancipation qui, loin de les rompre, a renforcé les liens affectifs l'unissant à sa terre d'origine; sa situation est telle qu'il peut aisément exprimer ses vues sur cette question.

10. Nous n'avons pas de colonies, point n'est besoin de le dire. Si, par ailleurs, la domination étrangère qui s'exerce sur une partie insulaire de notre territoire national nous oblige à formuler avec fermeté nos revendications, nous n'en avons pas moins maintenu dans les autres domaines des relations cordiales avec cette même puissance. Nous n'avons donc ~~pas~~ d'idée préconçue et, si notre sympathie penche dans un certain sens, nul ne peut douter — nous en avons fourni ici même un témoignage concluant — que cette sympathie va aux peuples qui naissent à la vie indépendante.

11. Le processus de la colonisation est le résultat de la force d'expansion considérable qui s'est libérée en Europe à la fin du Moyen Age. Il est certain que cette "petite péninsule adossée à l'Asie", comme certains l'ont appelée, renfermait dans ses étroites frontières un ensemble de populations dotées des qualités d'intelligence, d'esprit d'invention et d'entreprise les plus extraordinaires que le monde ait jamais connues. Les descendants de "l'audacieuse race de Japhet", selon l'expression d'un poète latin, se sentirent rapidement trop à l'étroit dans le territoire qui leur avait été dévolu; ils se lancèrent donc, en direction des quatre points cardinaux, à la recherche d'horizons nouveaux, où pût totalement s'exprimer leur génie créateur. Et c'est ainsi que débuta la grande aventure de la colonisation, dont nous voyons à l'heure actuelle se dérouler les dernières étapes.

12. Nous n'allons pas, même dans ses grandes lignes, rappeler les différents stades de ce grand processus historique, aux facettes multiples, complexes, variées. En tout état de cause, il serait selon nous prématuré de porter sur le système colonial un jugement définitif. Nous ne pensons pas, par ailleurs, qu'il soit possible d'exprimer en une seule formule toute simple ce que Balzac aurait appelé "les splendeurs et les misères" du système colonial. Les cas diffèrent suivant les époques, suivant le pays colonisateur et le pays colonisé. Adopter une formule unique et porter un jugement lapidaire, ce serait, selon nous, dénaturer l'extrême complexité du phénomène colonial.

13. Que ce système ait donné lieu à des abus intolérables, il n'est guère nécessaire à mon sens de le rappeler, car nous ne cessons de l'entendre dire dans cette assemblée. Si l'on a peut-être exagéré en attribuant certains maux au système colonial, il n'en reste pas moins que beaucoup de ces maux ont vraiment existé. En effet, lorsque les Européens, par esprit de lucre, ont abandonné le vieil état chrétien qui avait guidé leurs premiers pas sur les terres inconnues, le sens profond de l'entreprise colonisatrice en a été lui-même transformé.

14. Ce serait donner un peu trop dans le mélodrame que d'évoquer ici l'image désormais classique de ces aventuriers rapaces que le cinéma et les romans ont popularisés. Tel est le visage haïssable et malheureusement trop vrai du système colonial; nous ne saurions condamner avec trop de sévérité cet aspect du colonialisme.

15. Nous avons entendu, par ailleurs, certains délégués des pays nouveaux dire à cette tribune qu'ils n'ont trouvé auprès des puissances coloniales qu'humiliations, tyrannie et rapines. Sans mettre en doute la justesse de leurs plaintes, nous ne manquons cependant pas d'observer que ces réflexions sont faites dans un anglais ou dans un français à la fois harmonieux et si châtié que nous le leur envions.

16. Or, quand un peuple a reçu d'un autre un trésor aussi précieux que la langue, il ne peut prétendre qu'il ne doive rien à cet autre peuple. Il lui doit, pour le moins, une forme de culture si importante qu'elle influe autant sur la pensée elle-même que sur son expression dans cette langue. Mais ce n'est pas là le seul résultat positif d'un système qui a existé jusqu'à notre époque. Il y en a également d'autres; ainsi, la lutte victorieuse contre les maladies, l'œuvre des missionnaires en matière d'enseignement, l'effort constructif des techniciens. Certes, dans cette amélioration du niveau de vie, les colonisateurs se sont réservé la part du lion. Il serait cependant faux de prétendre qu'à la fin de la domination coloniale, tous les peuples colonisés sans exception se trouvent plus pauvres — moralement ou matériellement — qu'avant l'arrivée des colonisateurs.

17. L'étude du bilan du colonialisme pourrait nous mener beaucoup plus loin que nous n'en avons l'intention. Ce qui importe, c'est de noter ceci: quel que soit le jugement que l'on porte maintenant, ou que les historiens futurs porteront plus tard sur ce système, le régime colonial ne s'adapte pas aux structures politiques du monde actuel. C'est un système qui a définitivement pris fin. A une époque où l'égalité — beaucoup plus encore que la liberté — représente, aux yeux des masses, le bien suprême, la survivance de formes de domination de certains peuples sur d'autres peuples est devenue quelque chose d'anachronique. Peu importe maintenant que l'on ait pu, dans le passé, expliquer ou justifier ces systèmes; ce qui compte, c'est que notre époque ne peut en admettre le maintien.

18. Nous pensons que la plupart des représentants ici présents sont d'accord sur ce point. Dans l'éloquent discours qu'il a prononcé hier [925ème séance], le représentant du Royaume-Uni a brossé un tableau impressionnant de la part que son pays a prise dans l'émancipation des peuples. Une telle ligne de conduite est devenue la tendance générale et nous ne pourrions pas passer sous silence le rôle éminent joué par la France, l'une des deux principales puissances coloniales, dans ce mouvement d'émancipation. Il ne s'agit pas, par conséquent, de savoir si le colonialisme doit ou non prendre fin, mais seulement, en en fixant les délais, d'arrêter les moyens, les procédés suivant lesquels s'effectuera la liquidation de ce régime.

19. Avant de nous prononcer sur la proposition concrète qui est à l'origine du présent débat, il nous paraît nécessaire d'examiner rapidement quelques-uns des principaux problèmes qui découlent de la liquidation du colonialisme. A notre avis, il ne suffit pas en effet de prononcer un fiat! et de déclarer que le "colonialisme a pris fin" avec la même toute-puissante autorité qu'a montrée le Créateur suprême en séparant la lumière des ténèbres, le premier jour de la création. Il s'agit avant tout, pour l'Organisation internationale à laquelle nous appartenons, de connaître et de tenter de résoudre les principaux problèmes que cette liquidation fait surgir.

20. Le problème le plus important qu'elle soulève est celui du déséquilibre qui existe entre la volonté d'indépendance des pays précédemment colonisés et les moyens économiques et techniques dont ils disposent pour assurer eux-mêmes leur développement.

A cet égard, nous entendons nous exprimer avec netteté. Nous ne pensons pas qu'un peuple qui ne possède pas de ressources économiques lui permettant de vivre en autarcie doit pour autant se voir refuser en principe le droit à l'indépendance. Il s'agit là d'un bien de l'esprit que l'on ne peut pas par conséquent ravalier au rang des valeurs économiques. Ce serait porter atteinte à la dignité de la nature humaine que de dire d'un peuple qu'il ne peut accéder à l'indépendance parce qu'il ne dispose pas des ressources matérielles répondant à ses besoins, ou encore des techniciens indispensables à la création d'industries, ou enfin des fonctionnaires capables d'organiser une administration efficace.

21. Ceci dit, il n'est pas exclu que des pays nouveaux, manquant de moyens économiques ou techniques, puissent se trouver aux prises avec des difficultés qui — dans le monde d'aujourd'hui — prennent automatiquement le caractère de graves problèmes internationaux. En effet, cette incapacité à répondre entièrement à ses propres besoins, ce déséquilibre entre le désir d'indépendance, à la fois sincère et légitime, et l'insuffisance des ressources font surgir le problème de l'ingérence étrangère. Or, avec l'ingérence étrangère se posent en même temps la question du retour, sous une forme camouflée, du colonialisme et celle de la lutte des grands blocs mondiaux pour l'hégémonie dans les pays émancipés.

22. On s'explique ainsi pourquoi on a si souvent parlé, ces derniers temps, de "néo-colonialisme". En soi, l'expression nous semble tendancieuse. Mais que l'expression ainsi employée soit discutable ne signifie pas pour autant que ce qu'elle prétend définir ne correspond pas à la réalité. Le problème existe, en effet, que pose l'accession à l'indépendance de certains pays — je dis bien de certains — qui manquent des moyens matériels leur permettant de faire face à toutes les obligations que comporte ce nouvel état.

23. Le problème n'est pas nouveau, et diverses solutions ont été trouvées. Dans certains cas, les pays nouvellement indépendants ont conservé des liens économiques étroits avec leurs anciennes métropoles, qui leur fournissent des biens d'équipement, leur envoient des techniciens et leur apportent leur aide financière. C'est précisément cette forme de collaboration que l'on stigmatise, en la qualifiant de néo-colonialisme. Pour notre part, nous ne saurions souscrire à cette critique, car cette collaboration et cette aide qu'apporte l'ancienne puissance dominatrice à son ex-colonie nouvellement émancipée non seulement ne nous semblent pas mauvaises en soi, mais nous paraissent au contraire découler de la nature même des choses. Qui donc connaît mieux le pays, qui possède une meilleure expérience des besoins de ce même pays, qui peut lui fournir les techniciens les plus qualifiés, sinon la nation qui a entretenu avec lui les rapports les plus étroits? On nous dit que ceci revient à prolonger — sous une nouvelle forme — l'existence du colonialisme. Mais ceux qui font de telles remarques disposent-ils de la recette magique qui permettrait à un pays, dont les structures sont en voie de création, de posséder — sans aucune aide de l'extérieur — les caractéristiques d'une nation arrivée à maturité?

24. Il y a évidemment une seconde solution, à savoir l'appui de quelques-unes des grandes puissances qui se disputent l'hégémonie du monde. Il est possible — et juridiquement cela ne leur serait pas interdit — que les pays neufs se transforment en "clients", dans l'acception romaine du terme, d'une de ces grandes puissances et reçoivent son aide pour, en échange, entrer définitivement dans son orbite, dans sa zone d'influence. Mais, dans ce cas, nous nous posons la question: où se trouve l'avantage? Quelle différence y a-t-il entre le maintien avec un pays de liens que la coexistence avait, malgré tout, rendus étroits et l'établissement de liens nouveaux avec un autre pays dont le désir d'expansion transformerait automatiquement cette nouvelle nation en un simple pion sur l'échiquier de la lutte pour l'hégémonie mondiale?

25. Il existe cependant une troisième solution, et c'est vers celle-là qu'il convient, à notre avis, d'orienter nos efforts: à savoir l'assistance collective aux pays nouveaux, par l'intermédiaire de l'Organisation internationale.

26. Si les anciennes puissances coloniales, si les grandes nations mondiales souhaitent réellement à ces nouveaux Etats une prospérité qui ne les réduise pas à l'état de vassaux et ne les rejette pas non plus dans le camp de la guerre froide, alors cette collaboration sous les auspices des organisations internationales doit représenter la solution idéale. Nous n'ignorons pas qu'un tel objectif ne peut être atteint aisément et nous avons pu constater, dans le cas du Congo, les difficultés que sa réalisation présente. Il faudrait au moins convenir que c'est dans le sens d'une coopération internationale et non dans celui d'aides individuelles obtenues par le jeu de surenchères qu'une solution doit être recherchée. En attendant, avant que ne se crée le climat propice, nous nous refusons à condamner la collaboration amicale, dans tous les domaines, entre les anciennes métropoles et des pays nouveaux; nous nous refusons d'autant plus à la condamner qu'on propose, pour la remplacer, l'embrigadement idéologique et politique de ces pays nouveaux par ceux qui se disputent l'hégémonie du monde.

27. En faisant cette réflexion à propos des principales puissances mondiales, nous devons à la vérité de dire que, si les Etats-Unis sont intervenus de façon énergique pour que l'aide internationale aux colonies émancipées soit assurée en premier lieu par le canal de l'ONU, l'Union soviétique, en revanche, n'a pas jusqu'à maintenant œuvré dans ce sens. Nous ne perdons cependant pas l'espoir de voir ce grand pays modifier son attitude et apporter aussi sa participation effective à l'action internationale pour mettre le développement technique de ces nouveaux Etats en harmonie avec leur indépendance politique, tout en les maintenant à l'écart des luttes d'influence qui sévissent dans le monde.

28. Nous ne voudrions pas conclure cet exposé sur l'aide qu'il convient d'accorder aux pays nouveaux sans apporter deux précisions essentielles.

29. En premier lieu, s'il nous est permis de croire qu'une forme d'assistance est meilleure qu'une autre, si nous pensons que l'assistance à l'échelle internationale est la plus profitable à l'intéressé et la voie la plus sûre pour préserver la paix, nous sommes en revanche convaincus qu'il appartient au pays bénéficiaire lui-même de juger en dernier appel de la valeur de ces critères. Restreindre la liberté de son choix reviendrait à remettre en cause l'indépendance qu'il a acquise et à porter atteinte à la souveraineté pleine et entière qu'implique cette indépendance.

30. En second lieu, si nous accueillons avec satisfaction l'idée d'une collaboration amicale entre les ex-colonies et leurs anciennes métropoles, nous n'entendons pas que cette collaboration se réalise autrement que dans l'égalité effective et le respect mutuel.

31. Ce serait, selon nous, une plaisanterie à laquelle aucun Etat sérieux ne pourrait se prêter que d'octroyer une indépendance purement nominale, alors que le pays nouveau continuerait de vivre dans un état de dépendance occulte. Nous n'avons cependant aucune raison de supposer que des plans machiavéliques de ce genre soient actuellement en voie d'exécution et croyons entièrement à la sincérité des puissances métropolitaines quand elles déclarent s'être engagées dans cette voie pour accélérer le processus d'émancipation de ces pays.

32. On nous a dit, on nous a proposé d'en finir immédiatement avec le régime colonial. A nous de dire à présent ce que nous pensons de cette proposition. Nous croyons avoir défini clairement, et sans laisser planer aucun doute, notre position en ce qui concerne la liquidation du colonialisme.

33. Il ne s'agit donc pas, en l'occurrence, d'opter pour ou contre le système colonial, mais bien d'une question de prudence, comme se serait exprimé Aristote. Voilà pourquoi tout projet qui pourrait être établi dans ce sens devrait avant tout tenir compte des données de la réalité.

34. Ceci dit, que nous enseigne la réalité? Elle nous apprend que le processus de "décolonisation" (si l'on veut bien me permettre ce néologisme) avance à grands pas et que, sans qu'il soit nécessaire de l'accélérer par des procédés artificiels, il sera à peu près terminé dans un très bref délai. Nous comptons pour cela sur les assurances que nous ont données les principales puissances coloniales et sur le fait qu'au cours de cette année 17 pays nouveaux qui étaient sous leur dépendance ont été admis au sein de l'ONU. Cela prouve, à notre avis, de façon patente, qu'il ne s'agit pas là de vaines promesses.

35. Bien entendu, mon gouvernement ne s'opposera pas — d'ailleurs, le pourrait-il? — à l'expression d'un vœu qui traduise notre commun désir d'assister au plus tôt à la disparition définitive du système colonial. Mais nous ne pensons pas que la fixation immédiate d'un délai limite puisse véritablement accélérer le processus. Les situations ne sont pas toutes identiques: chacune d'entre elles a son rythme particulier. Ce qui importe, c'est de favoriser, dans une atmosphère de concorde et de compréhension mutuelle, la suppression progressive et rapide des anciens liens coloniaux. Si l'on veut rompre ces liens dans la haine, on ne fera que retarder le mouvement de libération et les pays émancipés seront dans l'obligation de choisir entre le chaos et une nouvelle forme d'asservissement, plus grave encore que l'ancienne.

36. En déclarant terminée l'étape coloniale, nous ne saurions considérer que le processus d'émancipation a été entièrement mené à bonne fin s'il subsistait dans les rapports entre certains pays des modalités de domination qui n'entrent pas dans la définition traditionnelle du terme colonialisme, mais qui n'en revêtent pas moins des formes particulièrement

odieuses et oppressives. C'est pourquoi nous ne pouvons laisser passer cette occasion de déclarer avec force que, si le colonialisme doit disparaître, à plus forte raison doit-on mettre fin aux formes d'oppression politique et idéologique qui maintiennent sous leur coupe, en Europe et en Asie, des millions d'êtres humains. A eux aussi, nous devons manifester notre esprit de solidarité et de vigilance.

37. A ce stade du débat, un groupe important de pays africano-asiatiques a déposé un projet de résolution qui fait l'objet du document A/L.323 et Add.1. Après en avoir attentivement examiné les termes, ma délégation estime que, dans ses grandes lignes, ce texte corrobore le point de vue que nous venons d'exposer et, par conséquent, elle est en principe disposée à lui réserver un accueil favorable. Il est évident cependant qu'elle se réserve le droit de donner plus tard son opinion sur toute révision ou tout amendement qui pourrait être proposé.

38. Dans des heures comme celles que vivent les continents africain et asiatique, il est normal que règne une ambiance d'optimisme et d'euphorie. Ces heures nous rappellent les débuts de la Révolution française où, dans un moment de fervent enthousiasme, nobles et membres du clergé renoncèrent d'un commun accord à leurs privilèges séculaires. Il importe cependant de prévoir les embûches que réserve l'avenir, car la voie que doivent emprunter les pays nouveaux, nous ne le savons que trop en Amérique latine, est une voie difficile et sinueuse.

39. Nous sommes cependant convaincus que les difficultés qui jalonnent cette route seront vaincues d'autant plus aisément que les pays nouveaux sauront allier leurs propres aspirations et celles du continent où ils vivent à un esprit de générosité universelle. Pour cela, il faut oublier les rancœurs accumulées au cours du passé, il faut que l'acquisition de l'indépendance marque véritablement le début d'une ère nouvelle, tournée tout entière vers l'avenir.

40. L'Argentine salue avec optimisme et espoir ces nations et leur adresse un message de fraternelle solidarité.

41. M. QUAISON-SACKEY (Ghana) [traduit de l'anglais]: Voici que se lève le jour du salut pour des millions d'êtres humains, habitants de territoires colonisés et d'autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Pour la première fois, notre organisation mondiale va se prononcer sur le sort de ces populations. L'Assemblée générale aborde en fait aujourd'hui l'un des problèmes majeurs de la politique internationale contemporaine: celui de la suppression totale du colonialisme dans le monde. Des temps les plus reculés jusqu'à nos jours, le problème de l'impérialisme a troublé la conscience de l'humanité sans que celle-ci puisse y apporter de solution satisfaisante, ni qu'elle parvienne à justifier moralement la domination d'une nation ou d'une race sur une autre. Quels que soient ses efforts, l'esprit humain ne pourra jamais justifier l'impérialisme qui est indéfendable du point de vue moral; et il est contraire à l'idée même de justice qu'un groupe d'êtres humains revendique un droit naturel à imposer sa domination, et toutes les conséquences qui en découlent, à d'autres êtres humains.

42. Nous nous sommes réunis en cette occasion historique pour trouver une solution juste et durable à ce problème et pour abolir toutes les inégalités que crée l'impérialisme. Nous ne sommes pas ici pour nous livrer à des considérations philosophiques oiseuses, car il s'agit d'un problème d'une actualité brûlante et qui met en danger la paix et la stabilité de notre monde. Ma délégation estime que le problème de l'élimination totale du colonialisme est indissolublement lié à celui de l'établissement et du maintien de la paix et de l'amitié entre tous les peuples, quelles que soient leurs races et leurs civilisations. En fin de compte, la paix et la stabilité ne régneront dans le monde que lorsque tous les peuples seront libres et jouiront de l'égalité des droits ainsi que des libertés fondamentales, sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion. Telle est la noble tâche que nous avons décidé d'entreprendre au cours de cette session plénière historique de l'Assemblée générale. Ma délégation espère vivement qu'aucune des délégations présentes ne tentera de faire intervenir dans nos délibérations des préoccupations ou des facteurs étrangers à cet objectif.

43. La question sur laquelle nous nous penchons, à savoir les ardentes aspirations des millions d'êtres humains qui vivent sur des territoires n'ayant pas encore reçu leur indépendance, est beaucoup trop grave pour être abordée avec un esprit partisan et sans la pleine conscience de nos responsabilités. Il nous faut donc envisager d'une façon constructive les problèmes pratiques que pose la libération des populations qui, selon les termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Les puissances coloniales ont, me semble-t-il, accepté comme une mission sacrée les engagements solennels contenus dans la Charte selon lesquels elles travailleront sans relâche à la prospérité de ces peuples, encourageront l'établissement de gouvernements autonomes, prendront en due considération les aspirations politiques de ces peuples et les aideront dans le développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques.

44. A l'exception du Portugal et de l'Espagne, toutes les puissances coloniales ont coopéré avec l'ONU par leur adhésion totale à la doctrine de responsabilité internationale exprimée dans les Chapitres XI à XIII de la Charte consacrés aux populations des territoires sous tutelle et non autonomes. Le Ghana a toujours soutenu qu'aucune partie de l'Afrique ne peut être considérée comme un prolongement de l'Europe. L'orgueil continental ne suffit pas à nous faire admettre la validité des prétentions portugaises et espagnoles. Maintenant que le rapport du Comité spécial des Six [A/4526] a été approuvé par la Quatrième Commission, ma délégation se réjouit de la bonne volonté avec laquelle le Gouvernement espagnol a cédé du terrain, et nous espérons que l'Espagne et le Portugal cesseront de s'accrocher à la fiction juridique selon laquelle leurs possessions constituent des "provinces d'outre-mer". Nous souhaitons que ces deux Etats fournissent à l'ONU des renseignements complets sur ces territoires et prennent des mesures immédiates pour transférer aux peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, d'Ifni et du Sahara occidental tous les pouvoirs qui leur permettront de jouir de leur souveraineté et de leur indépendance et de sauvegarder leur intégrité territoriale. Le Ghana adresse un pressant appel au Portugal et à l'Espagne afin que ces nations suivent l'exemple de la France et du Royaume-Uni dont les yeux se sont dessillés, et qu'elles expriment clairement leur intention de permettre aussi à leurs territoires d'Afrique et d'ailleurs d'accéder à une pleine indépendance.

45. Ma délégation est heureuse de constater que nous avons atteint un moment de l'histoire où nous pouvons parler de la suppression totale du colonialisme. C'est vraiment là un aboutissement magnifique de l'évolution de la pensée et de l'éthique internationales à laquelle ont généreusement et courageusement contribué les hommes de bonne volonté du monde entier. L'anticolonialisme n'est l'apanage ni d'un groupe, ni d'une race, ni d'une philosophie, ni d'un gouvernement; son histoire est longue, et, pour simplifier, nous la ferons partir des premières révolutions coloniales de notre temps qui aient été couronnées de succès. Je veux parler des révolutions américaines qui ont renversé les dominations coloniales britannique et espagnole dans l'hémisphère occidental et instauré le droit des peuples de ce continent à vivre et à se développer en hommes libres et dotés d'institutions politiques de leur choix. On connaît dans le monde entier les noms de George Washington, Simón Bolívar et José Martí qui ont mené au succès les grandes révolutions contre la domination colonialiste du Royaume-Uni et de l'Espagne en Amérique, et dont les hauts faits ont inspiré les chefs de tous les mouvements de libération nationale à travers le monde.

46. En fait, c'est un Anglais, John Hobson, qui, en 1902, en publiant un livre intitulé Imperialism, dans lequel il analysait systématiquement les relations entre les peuples dépendants et leurs colonisateurs, c'est-à-dire essentiellement les grandes nations industrielles européennes, a enrichi le sens du mot dont il avait fait le titre de son ouvrage. D'autres penseurs européens, tels que Lénine, à partir d'hypothèses socialistes, ont poussé plus loin l'analyse de Hobson et l'ont appliquée à la présente évolution du monde colonial. Ces pensées et ces écrits ont certainement influencé toute la génération des chefs qui, plus tard, ont pris la tête de la révolte anticolonialiste en Asie et en Afrique. C'est, toutefois, dans le monde colonial lui-même que les peuples, avides de se libérer de la domination étrangère, ont préparé leurs propres révolutions anticolonialistes et ont tiré parti de la riche expérience qu'ils ont acquise en faisant retentir le monde des manifestes et des résolutions qui sont devenus partie intégrante de l'histoire contemporaine.

47. En Afrique, où de nombreux territoires sont encore soumis à la domination étrangère, il n'a manqué ni de discours ni d'actions concrètes pour faire comprendre aux colonisateurs que l'Afrique entend se libérer totalement des chaînes de l'impérialisme et du colonialisme. "Cherchez d'abord le royaume politique", a tonné Kwame Nkrumah du Ghana, "et tout le reste vous sera donné par surcroît." Et, à tous ceux qui prétendent que l'Afrique doit se soumettre à la domination et à l'exploitation étrangères et recevoir la culture occidentale parce qu'elle est un continent noir, voici ce que répondent ces vers du poète ghanéen Dei-Anang extraits de son œuvre Africa Speaks:

*Dans les pages du passé,
Dans les jours sans foi d'antan,
Quand la vue était bornée et le savoir limité, Les hommes m'appelaient "Noire Afrique".*

Noire Afrique?

Moi qui ai dressé les royales pyramides

Et tenu le sort

Dés Césars conquérants

Dans mon étreinte tentatrice?

Noire Afrique?

Moi qui ai bercé le douteux enfant

De la civilisation

Sur les rives incertaines

Du Nil nourricier,

Et fait aux nations grouillantes

De l'Ouest

Un présent digne de la Grèce!

L'éclat aveuglant du fer et de l'acier

Condamne d'autres valeurs à l'obscurité.

Aussi, lorsque j'ai dédaigné mes arcs

Et mes flèches antiques

Et n'ai point fait grand cas du fer et de l'acier,

M'a-t-on appelée "Noire" de par le monde.

Mais plus précieux infiniment que le froid du fer [et de l'acier]

Est l'art paisible

De penser ensemble

Et de vivre ensemble.

Noire Afrique?

Sous les racines nouvelles

De mes palmiers royaux au doux murmure

Je cache un trésor inestimable.

Noire Afrique?

L'aube se lève:

Voyez! une lueur riche et chaude brille à l'Est

Et le jour paraîtra bientôt pour moi.

48. Toute l'Afrique se réveille, et ce que le premier ministre Macmillan a décrit, au cours de sa récente visite en Afrique, comme un "vent nouveau de changement" est en réalité un ouragan furieux qui balaie tout sur son passage. L'influence des penseurs politiques tels que Rousseau, Jefferson, Marx, Thomas Paine, Machiavel est indéniable; et, à travers tout le continent, les Africains réclament la liberté, l'égalité et la justice: en Algérie, ils luttent héroïquement pour leur indépendance contre les forces françaises; en Afrique centrale, ils refusent qu'on leur impose des institutions politiques qu'ils n'aiment pas; en Afrique du Sud, en Angola, au Mozambique ou en Afrique orientale, ils luttent contre la ségrégation raciale et refusent à une minorité d'Européens le droit de rançonner une majorité d'Africains.

49. Je me dois de mentionner le grand rassemblement des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique à Bandoung en 1955, où l'ensemble de nos dirigeants ont affirmé solennellement leur opposition irréductible à l'impérialisme et au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes. Dans le communiqué final de cette grande conférence, les peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique ont été d'accord:

"1) Pour déclarer que le colonialisme, dans toutes ses manifestations, est un mal auquel il doit être mis fin rapidement;

"2) Pour déclarer que la question des peuples soumis à l'assujettissement de l'étranger, à sa domination et à son exploitation constitue une négation des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et empêche de favoriser la paix et la coopération mondiales".

50. Ces sentiments ont par la suite trouvé un écho dans les résolutions adoptées aux conférences des Etats africains indépendants qui se sont tenues à Accra, à Monrovia, et plus récemment à Addis-Abéba. Rappelons que la première Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique qui s'est tenue à Accra, du 15 au 22 avril 1958, a marqué un tournant de l'histoire du continent africain. Pour la première fois, les dirigeants des Etats indépendants d'Afrique se sont réunis pour mettre en commun leurs vues concernant les problèmes auxquels l'Afrique doit faire face. En 1885, les puissances européennes se sont rencontrées à Berlin pour régler le sort de l'Afrique, c'est-à-dire se la partager et y créer des frontières artificielles, et c'est pour annuler cette décision que les dirigeants des Etats africains indépendants se sont rassemblés à Accra en avril 1958. Qu'il me soit permis de citer des extraits de la résolution prise à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba concernant la liquidation de la domination coloniale en Afrique, car c'est là un document d'une importance primordiale:

"Rappelant la déclaration de Bandoung ainsi que les résolutions d'Accra et de Monrovia qui proclament que le colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations constitue un mal auquel il doit être mis fin rapidement,

"Réaffirmant que la soumission des peuples à la subjugation et à l'exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme qui est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et à la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, et entrave l'établissement de la paix et de la coopération mondiales,

"Considérant que l'Afrique est le seul continent où une proportion importante des habitants vit encore sous la domination coloniale avec toutes les privations et les indignités qu'elle comporte,

"Considérant en outre que l'actuel réveil du peuple africain et les mouvements pour l'indépendance ne peuvent plus être contenus sous peine de compromettre gravement les relations entre les différentes nations,

"Convaincu que la restitution des droits naturels et de la dignité humaine aux Africains, dans les régions d'Afrique encore soumises à la domination étrangère, de même que la jouissance pacifique d'une liberté chèrement payée par les Etats africains indépendants ne peuvent s'accomplir que par la suppression totale de la domination coloniale sur tout notre continent,

"...

"Prie instamment les puissances coloniales de fixer des dates conformes à la volonté des peuples pour l'accession immédiate à l'indépendance de tous les pays non encore indépendants et de communiquer ces dates aux peuples intéressés;

"Décide que les Etats africains indépendants continueront d'exercer une action concertée pour arriver par tous les moyens pacifiques possibles à éliminer totalement la domination coloniale du continent africain."

51. Il faut dire que la création de l'ONU s'est produite à une période où l'Asie et l'Afrique subissaient une transformation politique profonde et révolutionnaire. Il y a 15 ans à San Francisco s'est éveillé le sentiment qu'il fallait faire quelque chose pour les vastes étendues de l'Asie et de l'Afrique qui subissaient encore le joug colonialiste. Ma délégation n'a pas encore réussi à comprendre ce qui a poussé les Nations Unies à cette époque à établir une distinction entre les anciennes colonies de l'Allemagne vaincue et les colonies des Alliés victorieux. Les principes de la mission sacrée et de la responsabilité internationale auraient dû s'appliquer aussi totalement et avec autant de force à tous les territoires non autonomes; au lieu de cela, on a inscrit dans la Charte une déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes et une autre relative au régime de tutelle. En conséquence, les territoires sous tutelle ont progressé, dans l'ensemble, plus rapidement dans la voie de l'indépendance que les territoires non autonomes. Un autre résultat déplorable est que le sort du Sud-Ouest africain demeure en suspens. Toutefois, après la seconde guerre mondiale, il est devenu évident que, sur de vastes régions de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, la suprématie militaire et économique de l'Europe occidentale ne pourrait être rétablie.

52. Ces pays d'Europe qui se sont mépris sur l'état d'esprit de notre époque et qui ont cru qu'ils pourraient revenir et rouvrir boutique comme si de rien n'était ont appris à leurs dépens que les temps ont réellement changé. De grandes nations, autrefois écrasées, sont revenues à la vie. L'Asie a proclamé triomphalement son émancipation de la domination et de la suprématie de la race blanche. Presque toutes ces nations ressuscitées ont adhéré à l'ONU et sont venues enrichir notre organisation de leur antique sagesse et de leurs cultures. Ce mouvement, né en Asie, est devenu maintenant une révolte générale contre le colonialisme partout où il existe, une révolte contre l'étouffement politique, l'exploitation économique et l'inégalité raciale. Ainsi que je l'ai déjà dit, il se produit un grand réveil dans cette Afrique où se rencontre aujourd'hui la plus importante concentration de peuples dépendants et non autonomes. Résumant les effets de ces révolutions en Asie et en Afrique, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, que j'ai l'honneur de présider, a noté ce qui suit en avril 1960:

"Le nombre des territoires non autonomes est passé de 74 à 55 et celui de leurs habitants d'environ 215 millions à environ 113 millions, chiffre qui comprend un accroissement naturel de population de quelque 22 millions d'habitants au cours de la période. En particulier, l'effectif des populations d'Asie et du Pacifique considérées comme habitant des territoires non autonomes était tombé de plus de 113 millions à moins de 14 millions. A la fin de la période, c'est le continent africain qui avait encore les derniers grands groupes de population — 96 millions d'habitants au total — dont le statut politique définitif restait à établir." [A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 10.]

53. Depuis cette date, la Nigéria et les anciens territoires français ont accédé à l'indépendance, mais le nombre des Africains encore soumis à la domination coloniale se chiffre par millions; et c'est du sort de ces millions d'êtres que nous sommes appelés à décider. Un des changements les plus importants et les plus bénéfiques survenus à ce jour dans la société internationale contemporaine est le passage des peuples coloniaux de l'état d'objets passifs à celui de forces dynamiques — forces dynamiques tendues vers la paix, l'équilibre et l'égalité raciale dans un monde déchiré par de cruels conflits idéologiques. Ces peuples ont entrepris de construire un monde d'où sera banni à tout jamais le fléau de la guerre. Et maintenant, ils ont pris la tête de ceux qui veulent concrétiser les idéaux de notre charte pour l'amélioration de toute l'humanité.

54. Tous les peuples soucieux de progrès doivent donc se consacrer à la suppression du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme, car il ne fait pas de doute que le maintien de ces méthodes iniques de domination et d'exploitation menace gravement la paix et la stabilité internationales. Les problèmes urgents qui se posent en Afrique à l'heure actuelle sont des problèmes coloniaux. Il faut de toute urgence accorder leur indépendance aux peuples de l'Angola, du Kénya, de l'Ouganda, de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Sud, du Nyassaland, du Ruanda-Urundi, du Sud-Ouest africain, aux 11.500.000 Africains de l'Afrique du Sud, à Malte, à l'Algérie, au Mozambique, pour ne citer que quelques-uns des territoires qui ne sont pas encore représentés au sein de notre organisation mondiale.

55. Mais le problème le plus dramatique est celui de l'Algérie. La lutte héroïque du peuple algérien pour sa libération entre dans sa septième année. Je voudrais citer, à propos de ce drame atroce, un éditorial du New York Times en date du mercredi 2 novembre 1960, paru sous le titre "Une nouvelle guerre de Sept Ans":

"La guerre d'Algérie, qui a débuté le 1er novembre 1954 par des coups de main rebelles, entre maintenant dans sa septième année au milieu de tensions internationales croissantes, tandis que la discorde augmente en France et que le bloc communiste accentue ses pressions dans le conflit, cherchant à faire de ce malheureux territoire un enjeu dans la guerre froide.

"Ce conflit, que la France considère comme une guerre civile dans laquelle elle n'admet aucune intervention extérieure, a déjà coûté 150.000 vies humaines — essentiellement parmi les rebelles — auxquelles s'ajoutent 14.000 civils — surtout des musulmans — tués par les terroristes. Il maintient le gros de l'armée française bloqué en Algérie, au détriment du front principal de l'Occident en Europe centrale. Il grève le budget de la France de 1 milliard de dollars par an et réveille la double hantise des "volontaires" communistes en Algérie et d'un nouveau coup militaire en France.

"Le drame particulier que suscite la poursuite de ce conflit, c'est que les deux camps sont d'accord sur la seule façon d'y mettre fin: l'autodétermination offerte par le président de Gaulle et acceptée par les rebelles. Mais l'accord cesse lorsqu'il s'agit de l'application pratique de cette solution..."

56. Je cite le New York Times parce que c'est un journal qu'on ne peut soupçonner d'antipathie à l'égard de la France. Mais le New York Times perçoit lui-même la tragique futilité de poursuivre une guerre qui, de l'avis de ma délégation, ne peut se terminer que par la victoire du peuple algérien et son accession à l'indépendance. Notre organisation mondiale doit déclarer illégale, sans aucune équivoque, toute intervention armée contre les peuples coloniaux qui demandent leur souveraineté et leur indépendance.

57. La solution du problème colonial est devenue l'un des problèmes les plus urgents de notre temps et c'est d'elle que dépendent la paix, la stabilité et le progrès harmonieux de notre monde. Il faut que les aspirations profondes des peuples encore soumis à la domination coloniale sur les territoires non autonomes soient pleinement satisfaites si nous voulons éviter les guerres et les conflits raciaux. Il ne faut plus que ces peuples voient retarder leur accession à la liberté et à l'indépendance sous prétexte que leur évolution économique, sociale ou culturelle est insuffisante. Leur besoin primordial est la liberté à partir de laquelle ils entreprendront les tâches difficiles qu'imposent la reconstruction et le développement sur le plan international.

58. Nous assistons dans les territoires non autonomes à ce qu'un grand homme américain a appelé la révolution des "espoirs en marche". Le premier objectif de cette révolution est d'assurer l'autonomie et l'indépendance aux peuples que le colonialisme opprime encore. Sans liberté ni indépendance, ces peuples ne pourront apporter de solution réaliste et rapide à leurs problèmes économiques et sociaux. Nous en avons fait l'expérience au Ghana où la liberté et l'indépendance de notre pays ont libéré notre énergie créatrice et suscité un enthousiasme et une bonne volonté immenses pour l'élaboration d'une vie matérielle et spirituelle meilleure. Nous avons eu la noble tâche, en tant que pays insuffisamment développé, de bander toutes nos énergies afin de vaincre la pauvreté et la sous-alimentation et de créer des services sociaux, médicaux et culturels convenables, faisant ainsi du Ghana un pays digne de ses héros. Et nous sommes certains que les autres pays renaissants suivent la même voie.

59. Il ne faut pas perdre de vue les facteurs économiques et sociaux sous-jacents à toutes les révolutions anticolonialistes de notre époque. Le colonialisme a créé un monde qui était et demeure encore partagé entre des peuples industriels avancés et des peuples coloniaux sous-développés. Cette différence de fonction correspondant en général à une différence de statut politique a constitué pendant longtemps le fondement de l'économie mondiale; l'inégalité politique allait de pair avec l'inégalité économique et l'inégalité raciale. Le partage du monde en peuples avancés et peuples prétendus sous-développés a conduit à une industrialisation intensive des régions métropolitaines à l'exclusion des territoires dits dépendants. Ces territoires coloniaux n'ont-ils donc pas des ressources fabuleuses susceptibles d'en faire des territoires économiquement avancés? C'est sir Winston Churchill qui a noté dans son livre My African Journey que l'imagination ne pouvait qu'être à la fois tourmentée et stimulée en voyant tant d'énergie gâchée, tant de positions clefs inoccupées, et que personne ne prenait en main les leviers qui contrôlent les forces naturelles de l'Afrique.

60. Mais la politique des puissances coloniales n'a jamais visé à amener les territoires qu'elles contrôlent à un haut degré de développement économique, car, pour elles, les colonies doivent rester un réservoir de matières premières et de minerais. C'est pourquoi je ne connais en Afrique aucune colonie qui, le jour de son accession à l'indépendance, puisse être décrite comme étant économiquement avancée. Et c'est ce triste héritage du colonialisme que la révolution anticoloniale veut détruire tout en travaillant à instaurer un système économique mondial qui permettra à tous les peuples de jouir d'un niveau de vie élevé tant sur le plan matériel que sur le plan culturel. Une des tâches urgentes de notre époque, et qui le deviendra plus encore après l'abolition du colonialisme, consiste à établir des relations économiques saines entre les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique et les grands pays industriels d'Europe et d'Amérique. Les investissements de capitaux, l'assistance technique, la planification des économies nationales, et celle du commerce international afin de protéger les économies de ces régions contre d'excessives variations des prix: voilà les éléments indispensables pour permettre aux Nations Unies d'aider la révolution anticolonialiste à s'accomplir avec succès dans la paix.

61. Ces immenses travaux de développement ne peuvent s'effectuer heureusement que dans un monde où règnent la liberté, l'indépendance et la dignité nationale et par l'intermédiaire de gouvernements librement choisis par ces peuples sans distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur. La domination étrangère, si bienveillante et paternaliste soit-elle, entrave le libre développement des peuples, sape leurs énergies créatrices et leur ôte toute dignité nationale et tout respect d'eux-mêmes. La domination étrangère ne peut jamais remplacer l'indépendance. Notre tâche est donc de libérer ces peuples et d'obtenir des puissances coloniales qu'elles prennent des mesures immédiates pour leur rendre l'indépendance et la souveraineté qu'ils tiennent de Dieu.

62. Ma délégation est convaincue que de plus grandes possibilités de coopération internationale fructueuse pour le développement économique et social s'offriront lorsque tous les pays qui n'ont pas encore leur autonomie deviendront libres et qu'ils enverront leurs représentants à l'ONU. Nous considérons l'indépendance de ces peuples comme une étape indispensable à la construction d'un monde où toutes les nations, quelles que soient leur idéologie, leur race, leur couleur, leur croyance, pourront contribuer à instaurer les conditions économiques et sociales seules capables de garantir à notre monde la paix et la stabilité.

63. J'admets que notre tâche ne fait que commencer. Nous devons tout d'abord libérer ces peuples afin qu'ils puissent se joindre aux Nations Unies. Il nous faudra ensuite mettre sur pied un mécanisme approprié de coopération internationale leur permettant d'atteindre un niveau de développement économique, social et culturel convenable. Je propose donc, comme suite logique à la déclaration que l'Assemblée générale s'appête à adopter, que nous étudions sérieusement l'élaboration d'un mécanisme international destiné à fournir une aide financière et technique à ces peuples durant les premières étapes de leur reconstruction et de leur développement.

64. J'espère que cette assemblée générale prendra, avant de s'ajourner, les premières mesures nécessaires à la création d'un fonds de développement des Nations Unies destiné à venir en aide à tous les pays en voie de développement. Si chacun des pays riches du monde versait 1 pour 100 de son revenu national à ce fonds, cela permettrait d'éviter une compétition entre l'Est et l'Ouest pour s'assurer des alliés.

65. Pour conclure, qu'il me soit permis de dire que le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1, qui a été soumis à cette assemblée, a été élaboré par 45 délégations asiatiques et africaines dont les pays ont tous subi l'oppression du colonialisme.

66. Cette déclaration s'explique d'elle-même. Toutefois, ma délégation tient à souligner, premièrement, que le Ghana s'oppose sans compromis possible au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et que le Ghana n'a d'excuse à présenter à personne pour cette attitude.

67. Deuxièmement, que nous préférons une indépendance dangereuse à une servitude paisible, et par conséquent nous avons la ferme conviction que l'insuffisance de préparation politique, économique, sociale ou culturelle ne saurait servir de prétexte pour différer l'octroi de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux.

68. Troisièmement, le Ghana estime que l'accession à l'indépendance ne doit être soumise à aucune condition. C'est pourquoi le Ghana s'élève contre la politique des puissances coloniales qui, avant l'octroi de l'indépendance, persuadent les dirigeants nationalistes de signer des traités leur permettant d'établir des bases militaires sur leurs territoires, et de leur accorder des avantages économiques. Nous mettons les dirigeants politiques en garde contre cette nouvelle forme de colonialisme encore plus pernicieuse sur le plan matériel et moral que la forme traditionnelle que nous connaissons tous.

69. Quatrièmement, le Ghana demande à toutes les puissances coloniales de renoncer à employer les armes et tous autres moyens de répression contre ceux qui luttent pour la liberté.

70. Cinquièmement, le Ghana a la ferme conviction que les puissances coloniales devraient prendre des mesures immédiates pour transférer tous les pouvoirs, y compris l'exercice de la souveraineté, à tous les peuples non autonomes, conformément à leurs aspirations légitimes à la liberté et à l'indépendance. Si ces mesures sont prises dès maintenant, le Ghana estime qu'en 1962 l'Afrique entière sera libre, y compris la Rhodésie du Sud, le Sud-Ouest africain, l'Angola et le Mozambique.

71. Enfin, le Ghana réaffirme sa foi en l'ONU et sa conviction que celle-ci doit se constituer la gardienne de l'intégrité territoriale, de l'unité et de l'indépendance des peuples.

72. Je voudrais exprimer l'espoir que forme ma délégation de voir adopté à l'unanimité par l'Assemblée générale le projet de déclaration présenté par les Etats africano-asiatiques. Ce document ne devrait soulever aucune animosité partisane. Il s'agit en fait des espoirs et des aspirations des millions d'êtres humains qui vivent sur les territoires non autonomes ou sous tutelle et qui se tournent vers l'ONU afin qu'elle les soutienne dans la marche longue et pénible vers l'indépendance et la liberté. En vérité, nous manquerions à tous nos devoirs si nous oublions ces peuples et laissons ce débat dégénérer en un nouvel et stérile épisode de la guerre froide. Ni l'histoire, ni les millions d'êtres silencieux qui peuplent les régions sous-développées et qui écoutent attentivement nos débats, ne nous pardonneront si nous laissons de vaines arguties idéologiques compromettre le résultat de nos efforts. Nous devons entrer courageusement en lice pour défendre le droit de ces peuples à la liberté et à l'indépendance. Que nous venions de territoires autrefois colonisés ou que nous appartenions aux nations qui en ce moment même dominent et administrent des peuples étrangers, nous devons tous voter pour la fin immédiate du colonialisme et la restitution des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales à tous les peuples sans distinction de race, de couleur ou de religion.

73. M. SHUKAIRY (Arabie Saoudite) [traduit de l'anglais]: Pour la première fois dans l'histoire de l'ONU, le problème du colonialisme se place au premier plan des débats de cette organisation qui lui a réservé le plus large accueil. Certes, au cours des années précédentes, les questions coloniales ont été examinées à des titres divers, soit par l'Assemblée générale, soit par ses commissions; mais jamais le colonialisme dans son ensemble n'avait été exposé au grand jour et n'avait fait l'objet d'une discussion approfondie destinée à mettre sur pied un programme d'action collective digne de la haute autorité de l'ONU.

74. Je désire que l'expression de cet espoir ferme et sincère serve de préface à mon intervention, car le problème du colonialisme occupe le premier rang dans l'histoire des relations humaines et domine de toute sa hauteur le champ des relations internationales. Il englobe la détention politique, l'oppression économique, l'asservissement social et la subjugation culturelle qui affectent non seulement les peuples coloniaux, mais l'humanité entière. Pour en mesurer les effets maléfiques, il suffit de savoir que le colonialisme menace aujourd'hui l'avenir de 100 millions d'êtres humains. Considéré rapidement, ce tableau peut paraître de peu d'importance, ne pas exciter notre imagination et ne nous inciter à aucune réflexion profonde. Mais, si nous nous y arrêtons plus longuement, il révèle à nos yeux ses ombres et ses lumières et nous en apprécions les dimensions. Nous sommes saisis alors par la tragique réalité de la vie de ces millions d'êtres: leur nourriture — mais ils sont affamés; leurs vêtements — mais ils sont nus; leur habitat — mais ils n'ont pas de toit; leur éducation — mais ils n'en reçoivent aucune; leur santé — mais ils sont faibles et malades; leur progrès économique et social — mais ils sont les déshérités de la terre.

75. Voilà qui doit fixer notre attention sur la gravité de ce problème, car le colonialisme ne peut être considéré d'un esprit et d'un cœur tranquilles. Nous devons apporter à sa discussion une intelligence en éveil, un cœur généreux et infatigable. Hormis le désarmement, aucun problème international n'est plus important que le colonialisme. En fait, le colonialisme, la guerre et le désarmement sont les trois mousquetaires sans scrupule qui conduisent l'humanité au cataclysme et à l'anéantissement. J'ai placé le colonialisme en premier, car la guerre est une institution du colonialisme et les armements en sont les instruments. Les armes ne sont pas les jouets et les passe-temps de l'homme; elles sont les sinistres faucheurs de l'humanité et le colonialisme en est la moisson. La guerre n'est pas non plus une fin en soi. Jamais dans l'histoire, les peuples n'ont fait la guerre pour elle-même: ils se sont battus pour exploiter les vaincus et usurper leurs biens. En d'autres termes, ils ont fait la guerre pour usurper la richesse d'un territoire et exploiter les biens de sa population, pour réaliser des profits élevés grâce à une main-d'œuvre à bon marché et des matières premières obtenues à vil prix. Ils se sont battus pour conquérir de nouveaux domaines d'exploitation et pour étendre ou défendre ceux qu'ils avaient déjà conquis. Même la première guerre mondiale de 1914, que l'on considérerait comme une guerre d'idées et d'idéaux, a été principalement motivée par le colonialisme. Selon M. Moon, un Américain dont le nom fait autorité en matière de relations internationales, "la catastrophe de 1914 n'a pas été déclenchée par les caprices personnels de Guillaume Hohenzollern... L'alignement même des puissances européennes a été déterminé par l'impérialisme et non par la race, la démocratie ou l'affinité de culture... L'impérialisme est le fondement et la raison d'être de la politique mondiale..."

76. Je n'ai nul besoin d'accumuler les preuves à l'appui de cette assertion. Il suffit de rappeler que le colonialisme s'est trouvé à l'arrière-plan de beaucoup de traités et d'alliances, de beaucoup d'ententes et de conférences. Il engendre le paradoxe qui transforme les amis en ennemis et fait des ennemis des amis. En un mot, le colonialisme est à lui seul le moteur principal de la mauvaise histoire. Et quelle pire histoire peut-il y avoir que celle qui contraint notre génération à entendre les deux tiers de l'humanité gémir sous le joug du colonialisme?

77. Il est de notoriété publique qu'au seuil de la seconde guerre mondiale 10 nations impérialistes réunissaient des colonies et des protectorats représentant sept fois la superficie de l'Europe. On estime que, sur les 2 milliards d'habitants de notre planète, 1 milliard et demi vivaient sous le régime colonialiste avec son cortège de maladies, d'ignorance et de pauvreté — les pires ennemis de l'humanité. On estime également que chaque habitant de la Grande-Bretagne, homme, femme ou enfant, avait 10 sujets coloniaux, noirs, bruns et jaunes, et qu'à chaque arpent de sol français correspondaient 20 arpents de territoire colonisé par la France. A cette époque, les colonies étaient beaucoup plus grandes que la prétendue mère patrie: c'est ainsi que les colonies italiennes représentaient six fois la grandeur de l'Italie, les colonies portugaises étaient 23 fois plus grandes que le Portugal et les colonies belges, 81 fois plus grandes que la Belgique. Contrairement à toutes les lois de la création, l'enfant était infiniment plus grand que ses parents, et même que tous les parents réunis.

78. Ce tableau a changé. Les dimensions du colonialisme ont diminué dans la mesure où les forces de la liberté augmentaient, et celle-ci a remporté de nombreuses victoires. La lutte des peuples pour la liberté, leurs aspirations à l'indépendance, leurs mouvements en faveur de l'amélioration économique et du progrès social, en un mot leur lutte pour accomplir leur condition humaine a renversé le cours erroné de l'histoire. Les empires sont tombés en poussière et le colonialisme a reculé de défaite en défaite devant les triomphes de la liberté.

79. Et maintenant nous avons devant nous le résultat, le glorieux résultat de ces efforts. De nombreuses nations ici présentes ont accédé à l'indépendance; je devrais même dire qu'elles l'ont conquise. Elles sont entrées à l'ONU: elles en ont, en vérité, forcé les portes, et maintenant elles occupent les sièges qui leur reviennent, supérieures en nombre à leurs anciens maîtres. Beaucoup de leurs représentants, parmi ceux-là mêmes qui sont montés à la tribune de cette assemblée, sortent des prisons, des camps de concentration et des cachots et peuvent maintenant parler d'égal à égal avec leurs geôliers.

80. L'autre jour, lorsque l'Assemblée générale a discuté la question du Congo, j'ai de mes yeux vu dans le passage au milieu de cette salle M. Ormsby-Gore, secrétaire d'Etat aux affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni, parler à genoux aux délégations du Ghana et de la Nigéria, les suppliant de ne pas maintenir leur proposition. Heureusement ou malheureusement, les photographes de l'ONU ont manqué cette occasion historique, cette pose historique.

81. C'est ainsi que le cours des événements a été renversé, passant du recul au progrès, de l'histoire monstrueuse à l'histoire glorieuse et d'un abîme de dégradation aux sommets de la dignité humaine.

82. Mais la bataille n'est pas encore gagnée; notre tâche n'est pas terminée et nous devons la parachever dès maintenant, au cours de la présente session de cette assemblée. A cette heure historique où nous discutons du colonialisme, n'oublions pas que de nombreux pays subissent encore l'emprise colonialiste. Quel que soit le nom qu'on leur donne — colonies, territoires sous tutelle, pays non autonomes — la vérité exige que l'on proclame avec une véhémence colère que 100 millions d'êtres humains gémissent encore sous le joug étranger. Et rappelons-nous que ces 100 millions d'âmes suivent nos délibérations avec un espoir grandissant; elles attendent que vos voix défendent leur liberté, que vos résolutions et vos votes viennent proclamer et soutenir leur indépendance. C'est leur droit et c'est notre devoir. Les peuples dominés ont le droit de rejeter cette domination, même par la force des armes, et les Nations Unies ont le devoir d'y mettre fin. En toute équité, je dois reconnaître que les Nations Unies ont trop tardé à s'acquitter de cette dette et qu'il est grand temps que nous remplissions nos obligations sans plus de délai ni d'hésitation.

83. En effet, par la Charte des Nations Unies, par la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et par d'innombrables résolutions de l'ONU, nous nous sommes engagés à respecter le principe du droit de tous les peuples, grands ou petits, à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Et pourtant le colonialisme règne encore dans bien des parties du monde.

84. Même dans nos écrits, dans les écrits de l'ONU, le monde est divisé en peuples dépendants et indépendants, consacrant ainsi la discrimination la plus abominable qui puisse être faite dans la race humaine. La dépendance, considérée comme le statut d'un peuple, doit disparaître à jamais; c'est alors que les nations deviendront vraiment unies. Nous n'avons aucun droit à nous parer du nom de "Nations Unies" tant que 100 millions d'êtres humains n'appartiennent pas encore à cette organisation en tant que peuples indépendants et souverains. Ils ne doivent plus être au sein de notre assemblée comme des sujets de discussions et de débats, mais comme des Etats souverains et des Membres pleinement indépendants.

85. Si le colonialisme constitue l'obstacle, alors qu'il soit détruit à jamais, c'est là notre tâche. Tous les peuples doivent devenir libres. Les hommes sont nés libres et l'on ne devrait jamais laisser un homme réduire son frère en esclavage. Non seulement c'est le bon droit et la justice, mais c'est la volonté même du Créateur qui a fait tous les hommes frères en Dieu leur Père.

86. Il ne s'agit pas là d'un sermon prêché à une congrégation religieuse, pas plus que notre organisation n'est une maison de prière. Nous rappelons simplement nos obligations et nous réaffirmons nos buts. C'est en fait un résumé de la Charte à laquelle nous avons tous solennellement souscrit. Et si le désarmement, comme l'a si bien dit le premier ministre Khrouchtchev, est le problème entre tous les problèmes, alors je déclare que le colonialisme est le mal entre tous les maux et que nous devons l'extirper jusqu'à la racine. Telle est la tâche en cours que nous devons parachever.

87. Mais cette voix ne s'élève pas seulement du milieu des nations nouvellement indépendantes. C'est la voix même de l'humanité depuis que l'homme a commencé à opprimer l'homme. Même lorsque le colonialisme était à son apogée, il s'est trouvé des voix héroïques pour le condamner. Au temps où l'empire britannique s'étendait du levant au couchant, il s'est trouvé de nombreux Anglais, et non des moindres, pour condamner l'impérialisme britannique. Jeremy Bentham, le père du radicalisme anglo-saxon, dans une lettre publiée en 1830 sous le titre "Emancipez vos colonies", a souligné que les colonies entraînent de considérables dépenses militaires et navales, le danger d'une guerre étrangère et la corruption politique de la métropole. Il n'aurait pas parlé différemment en 1960 devant cette assemblée.

88. C'est dans le même esprit que James Mill a dénoncé les méfaits du colonialisme dans l'article qu'il écrivait en 1818 pour le supplément de l'Encyclopaedia Britannica. Mais le coup le plus meurtrier a été frappé par Richard Cobden, "l'apôtre du libre-échange". Il appelait le gouvernement britannique de cette époque "une conspiration destinée à asservir et à mystifier le peuple".

89. Quelque poli et courtois que l'on désire rester, on ne peut ignorer que le colonialisme n'est, d'un bout à l'autre, qu'une vaste entreprise destinée à exploiter les peuples faibles et à s'approprier leur patrimoine. Je n'emploie pas le mot de "vol", car il est nécessairement sous-entendu lorsqu'on parle de colonialisme.

90. Bien entendu, le colonialisme n'est pas resté sans se défendre; mais il s'est fait à la fois juge et partie et a déclaré sa propre innocence. Cette tentative n'a fait qu'accentuer sa culpabilité, la plus odieuse qui soit.

91. Le colonialisme, prétendait-on, a une mission civilisatrice, une mission sacrée envers la race noire. Conformément à ce préambule dénué de fondement, l'homme blanc a un droit à exercer, un devoir à remplir et un fardeau à porter. Ce fardeau de l'homme blanc constitue toute la philosophie du colonialisme telle qu'elle a été exposée par ses auteurs. C'est Rudyard Kipling, le chantre de l'impérialisme, qui a écrit que ces peuples tristes, nouvellement asservis, moitié démons, moitié enfants, constituaient le fardeau que doit assumer l'homme blanc.

92. En vérité, je considère le colonialisme comme le mal en soi; il n'est pas le fardeau de l'homme blanc, mais son butin, et, s'il a pesé sur l'homme blanc, c'est de tout le poids des richesses prises au noir, au brun ou au jaune. Voilà le fardeau qui écrase l'homme blanc.

93. Il est pourtant légitime de demander à l'homme blanc, et je le fais maintenant: "Qui t'a confié le soin de porter cette charge? Qui t'a investi d'un droit à exercer? Et qui t'a imposé l'obligation dont tu prétends t'acquitter?" Du milieu de ces millions d'hommes blancs, qu'il s'en lève un seul pour fournir une réponse — une réponse valable.

94. Il est indéniable que les architectes du colonialisme ont tenté de répondre à ces questions. Dans ce domaine, les Français se sont montrés les avocats les plus habiles de cette cause perdue. En 1886, Alfred Rambaud, professeur à la Sorbonne, a consacré tout un livre à la justification du colonialisme, sous ce titre glorieux: la France coloniale. Ce seul titre suffit à ternir la cause du colonialisme. En 1870, un économiste français, Leroy-Beaulieu, écrit que chaque jour qui passait contribuait à le convaincre de plus en plus de l'importance de la colonisation en général, et plus particulièrement pour la France. C'est donc avant tout la France qui est en jeu. Récemment, en 1924, Victor Beauregard, dans son livre l'Empire colonial de la France, déclarait que l'étude de l'histoire permet d'affirmer avec une certitude absolue que la France, plus que toute autre nation, a le génie de la colonisation. Génie trompeur et trompeuse certitude, car, peu après cette allusion au génie de la France, l'auteur poursuivait: "L'avenir de la France est dans ses colonies." C'était donc la France, et non les colonies, qui était en jeu.

95. En vérité, le colonialisme n'a rien d'une mission sacrée, bien au contraire. Ce qu'il y a derrière le colonialisme, c'est l'accaparement des marchés, les consommateurs lésés et les matières premières usurpées. Derrière le colonialisme, on trouve la domination du capital, la dépossession foncière et le travail forcé — tout ceci dans l'intérêt des colonisateurs et au nom de la civilisation.

96. Dès le commencement, le colonialisme n'a été qu'une campagne entreprise pour s'emparer des marchés, du commerce et de l'industrie dans un but bien précis d'exploitation. Rappelez-vous donc les noms de ces grandes entreprises: Compagnie des Indes orientales, Compagnie des Indes occidentales, Compagnie du Levant et Compagnie africaine. Et rappelez-vous aussi que toutes possédaient leurs armées de mercenaires qui plus tard ont construit ces vastes empires. Nombreux sont les bâtisseurs d'empires qui ont reconnu d'eux-mêmes que l'argument du "fardeau de l'homme blanc" était de peu de poids. Le colonialisme est destiné avant toute chose à servir les intérêts de la prétendue mère patrie. Et quelle preuve d'amour est-ce là que d'affamer l'enfant pour nourrir la mère? L'octroi de l'indépendance aux territoires coloniaux est une mesure de libération économique, car la destination première du colonialisme était la domination économique. Le bilan du colonialisme est plus qu'éloquent, et par-dessus tout celui du colonialisme français.

97. En 1884, le Président du Conseil, Jules Ferry, s'exprimait à peu près dans ces termes: "Les races supérieures..." et ici la France parle en termes de supériorité raciale "...ont des droits sur les races inférieures... si la France renonçait à l'impérialisme, elle tomberait du premier rang qu'elle occupe au troisième ou quatrième rang." Ainsi donc, pour la France, le colonialisme n'est pas destiné à encourager l'ascension des territoires colonisés, mais à l'empêcher, elle, de descendre au quatrième rang.

98. En 1890, à nouveau, le Président du Conseil français révélait que "la politique coloniale est fille de la politique industrielle". Si les mots du Président du Conseil français ont un sens, ils peuvent seulement signifier que pour la France une colonie n'est qu'un marché sur lequel on vend au plus haut prix des articles fabriqués, à partir de matières premières achetées au plus bas prix possible, par une main-d'œuvre payée le moins cher possible. Rien ne trahit mieux les mobiles du colonialisme français que cette déclaration du Président du Conseil lui-même.

99. Dans le même esprit, en 1881, Gambetta justifiait comme suit devant la Chambre des députés la conquête de la Tunisie qui est maintenant un Etat souverain et indépendant représenté à l'ONU: "La Tunisie est indispensable à notre prospérité matérielle." C'était donc la prospérité de la France et non celle de la Tunisie qui était en jeu.

100. Plus tard, en 1895, M. Chautemps, ministre des colonies, se décrivait lui-même comme "en réalité un second ministre du commerce", ce qui est intéressant et peu commun pour un ministre des colonies. Voilà ce colonialisme dont nous parlons comme d'une mission sacrée, tandis que le ministre des colonies se donne le titre de "second ministre du commerce", et mériterait en fait celui de "premier ministre du commerce".

101. En 1882, l'économiste français Leroy-Beaulieu a montré le colonialisme dans toute son abomination. En termes clairs, il déclarait que "la colonisation est pour la France une question de vie ou de mort", mais peu importe la vie ou la mort des peuples coloniaux. Ce qui compte, c'est la vie ou la mort de la France. Les peuples coloniaux doivent vivre et mourir comme ils peuvent; ils sont abandonnés à leur destin.

102. Le colonialisme n'est pas seulement dénoncé par ses ennemis, mais il est battu en brèche par ses auteurs mêmes, ses philosophes, ses artisans, ses théoriciens et ses idéologues. Les architectes du colonialisme, les bâtisseurs d'empires, idéalistes ou non, ont tous disparu, en ne laissant derrière eux qu'une longue histoire de brutalités qui anéantissent les fallacieux prétextes humanitaires qui ont été invoqués pour justifier le colonialisme. C'est au milieu du XIX^{ème} siècle, quand le colonialisme était à son apogée, qu'il est apparu le plus clairement comme une institution abominable destinée à organiser l'exploitation et l'usurpation à l'échelle internationale. Je dis à l'échelle internationale, car les paroles de Cecil Rhodes, le plus illustre des impérialistes britanniques, résonnent encore à nos oreilles. Parlant du monde du XIX^{ème} siècle, Cecil Rhodes disait que "le monde est presque entièrement morcelé et ce qu'il en reste est en voie d'être divisé, conquis et colonisé ... et, s'il y a un Dieu" — tel est son défi, le défi des impérialistes britanniques — "s'il y a un Dieu, il aimerait voir peindre le plus possible de la carte de l'Afrique du rouge britannique ...". Trouvant le monde trop petit pour satisfaire la gloutonnerie du colonialisme britannique, Cecil Rhodes disait encore: "J'annexerais les planètes si je le pouvais. J'y pense souvent et cela m'attriste de les voir si brillantes et si lointaines."

103. Ces mots qui décrivent le partage, la conquête et le morcellement du monde, ainsi que le désir d'étendre le plus possible sur la carte d'Afrique la tache rouge des possessions britanniques, expriment de façon éclatante la conception classique du colo-

nialisme. Mais cet appétit, cet appétit glouton que notre planète ne suffit pas à assouvir, nous montre bien que le colonialisme britannique du XIX^{ème} siècle visait l'univers entier. Aujourd'hui, le Royaume-Uni préconise l'utilisation pacifique de l'espace cosmique, il n'élabore aucun plan de colonisation de l'espace, simplement peut-être parce qu'il se place loin à l'arrière dans la course aux planètes.

104. L'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux comporte un autre aspect humain: en plus de la libération économique, l'indépendance apporte la libération spirituelle. Elle redonne à l'homme sa dignité et sa personnalité. Le colonialisme est fondé sur la supériorité raciale; la suprématie des blancs est la source d'où découle toute la philosophie du colonialisme. Le colonialisme a deux évangiles: l'un que l'on prêche et qui est centré sur le fardeau de l'homme blanc, l'autre que l'on applique et qui n'exprime que l'avidité illimitée des blancs. Mais le premier de ces évangiles est destiné à propager la plus honteuse des idéologies: la suprématie de la race blanche.

105. Parlant du colonialisme britannique, Cecil Rhodes déclarait que nous — la race blanche — "sommes la première race du monde et que plus nous occuperons de place dans ce monde, mieux cela sera pour l'humanité". Ce qui témoigne à la fois d'un paradoxe et d'un complexe. Il est paradoxal qu'une race supérieure s'abaisse à voler une race inférieure; quant au complexe, il crève les yeux: c'est le complexe de supériorité.

106. Mais la triste réalité prouve que c'est l'avidité de l'homme et non son haut degré d'évolution qui constitue le moteur du colonialisme. Le véritable évangile du colonialisme n'est pas "vivre et laisser vivre", mais "vivre et empêcher les autres de vivre".

107. Et il ne s'agit pas là d'histoire ancienne, mais d'histoire contemporaine. Pour inventorier le monde actuel, on a employé ici même, à l'ONU, l'expression "ceux qui possèdent et ceux qui ne possèdent rien". Cette terminologie se trouve en bonne place dans nos documents. Le fait que, sur 2 milliards d'êtres humains, 1 milliard et demi soient incroyablement pauvres explique pourquoi "ceux qui possèdent" constituent la minorité contre la majorité de "ceux qui ne possèdent rien". La minorité est plus riche et vit mieux; la majorité est pauvre et vit misérablement. Et pourtant ce sont "ceux qui ne possèdent rien" qui sont les mieux pourvus en terres, en ressources minières et en matières premières. Alors pourquoi cette pauvreté inouïe? A cause du colonialisme. Le colonialisme du XIX^{ème} siècle a engendré la misère du XX^{ème} siècle; il est la raison pour laquelle le monde est partagé entre "ceux qui possèdent" et "ceux qui ne possèdent rien".

108. Dans les estimations et les statistiques de l'ONU, nous trouvons souvent des chiffres renversants concernant l'économie nationale des différents Etats Membres. On mentionne souvent avec fierté que certains Etats ont atteint un niveau de vie élevé tandis que celui d'autres Etats demeure bas. Le Royaume-Uni, la France et la Belgique, par exemple, ont un niveau de vie élevé, tandis que les pays d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine ont un niveau de vie fort bas. Ceci n'est pas un honneur pour les riches, ni un sujet de honte pour les pauvres. Ce n'est pas un génie particulier qui a enrichi les pays occidentaux, ni une déficience naturelle qui a maintenu les autres dans la pauvreté. Seul le colonialisme explique cette disparité. Au cours de siècles de colonisation, les peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine ont été dépouillés de leur or, de leurs diamants, de leur coton, de leur soie, de leur ivoire, de leurs épices, de leurs essences, de leur caoutchouc, de leur pétrole; leur faune a été décimée, leurs musées vidés de leurs trésors fabuleux; jusqu'aux dépouilles de leurs rois et de leurs reines leur ont été volées.

109. Voilà toute l'histoire de "ceux qui possèdent" et de "ceux qui ne possèdent rien", telle que l'a écrite le colonialisme. L'état de pauvreté et de sous-développement d'un grand nombre de parties du monde est l'héritage direct du colonialisme. Les peuples dominés — ceux qui ont accédé à l'indépendance et ceux qui attendent encore — ont une dette colossale à recouvrer, et ce qui leur est accordé actuellement, sous forme d'assistance économique, de dons, d'assistance technique ou autre, ne représente qu'une petite partie du total énorme de cette dette. Et ce n'est pas une dette morale, mais une dette dûment reconnue et avouée, absolument conforme à la définition du Droit. Permettez-moi de vous en donner un exemple. Parlant de la politique coloniale britannique, Joseph Chamberlain a dit: "l'empire, c'est le commerce", résumant en deux mots ce que deux volumes ne suffiraient pas à expliquer.

110. Cet empire du commerce a été également décrit par un impérialiste britannique célèbre, Henry Stanley, qui, dans un discours prononcé en 1884 devant la Chambre de commerce de Manchester, a dit ceci:

"Il y a 40 millions de personnes derrière les portes du Congo, et les filatures de coton de Manchester attendent le moment de les vêtir. Les fonderies de Birmingham débordent de métal incandescent dont elles feront des outils à leur usage et des colifichets pour orner leur peau sombre."

Voilà qui est clair et se passe de commentaire. Nous voyons ainsi comment le colonialisme a élevé le niveau de vie de Manchester et Birmingham tout en abandonnant l'Afrique à sa misère.

111. La disparité actuelle entre "ceux qui possèdent" et "ceux qui ne possèdent rien" pourrait être supprimée et, plus précisément, sa suppression pourrait être accélérée si l'on octroyait leur indépendance à tous les pays non autonomes. Si la liberté et la paix vont de pair, n'en va-t-il pas de même de la prospérité économique? La liberté économique des pays dépendants exige que l'on s'engage maintenant dans une aventure chevaleresque, ne serait-ce que comme expression du repentir des puissances coloniales responsables de leur esclavage, et dont les entreprises furent dénuées de tout esprit de chevalerie. Il fut un temps où ce colonialisme commercial se pratiquait si ouvertement qu'il n'était pas besoin d'en faire la preuve. Un impérialiste de génie comme Disraëli déclarait dans son fameux discours du Crystal Palace que l'impérialisme constituait l'objectif principal de sa politique. Il a contribué pour une grande part à faire du colonialisme ce qu'il est aujourd'hui. Il avait de nombreux liens avec les Rothschild et beaucoup d'autres financiers et, quand on mit en vente les actions de l'entreprise du canal de Suez, Disraëli, sans attendre que le Parlement lui accorde les fonds, accepta l'offre qui lui était faite, ajoutant ainsi un nouveau chapitre à l'histoire de l'impérialisme au Moyen-Orient. Mais, pour faire face à cette offre, Disraëli dut emprunter 4 millions de livres sterling aux Rothschild; et, si nous en croyons le professeur Moon dont l'opinion fait autorité en matière de relations internationales, cette transaction a rapporté 100.000 livres sterling aux Rothschild.

112. Ce n'est là qu'un exemple destiné à montrer comment ces peuples ont été dépouillés, quels profits fabuleux ont été réalisés à leurs dépens, et comment le colonialisme a pu conduire à cette disparité économique dont souffrent actuellement tant de nations.

113. Je profite de l'occasion pour souligner que c'est ce même Rothschild qui, le 2 novembre 1917, reçut une lettre du Secrétaire d'Etat britannique aux affaires étrangères, lui promettant la création d'un Foyer national juif en Palestine. Ce même M. Rothschild qui avait gagné 100.000 livres en une seule transaction!

114. J'attire l'attention de l'Assemblée sur cette affaire car, lorsque nous examinons le problème du colonialisme, nous ne devons pas oublier que la création d'un Foyer national juif en Palestine a fait partie, dès le début, d'une politique impérialiste qui s'est également manifestée en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique latine. En créant un Foyer juif en Palestine, la politique britannique, approuvée et financée par les Etats-Unis, a promu l'une des formes les plus odieuses de l'impérialisme. Le colonialisme s'est retiré de la plus grande partie du monde, laissant la terre à ses habitants et les habitants à leur terre. Mais en Palestine il a provoqué l'infiltration de 1 million de Juifs et l'expulsion de 1 million d'Arabes qui vivent maintenant dans des camps de réfugiés, victimes d'une des formes les plus honteuses de l'impérialisme et du colonialisme. Le jour viendra pourtant bientôt où ces réfugiés regagneront leur sol natal débarrassé de l'occupation sioniste; ils entreront alors à l'ONU en tant qu'Etat libre et indépendant de Palestine, Etat qui rassemblera tous ses citoyens légitimes, qu'ils soient musulmans, chrétiens ou juifs.

115. Dans les autres régions, il ne manque pas de raisons d'espérer. Après avoir atteint son apogée au XIXème siècle, le colonialisme a commencé son déclin. Au cours des 15 dernières années, environ 1 milliard et demi d'êtres humains ont brisé leurs chaînes. Cette immense bataille a rendu la liberté à plus de la moitié du genre humain. Les chiffres sont encore plus éloquentes que les mots: pensez à ces chiffres et à leur signification! Au moment de sa création, l'ONU ne représentait que la moitié du monde dont l'autre moitié subissait encore le joug colonialiste. Il ne reste plus aujourd'hui que 100 millions d'êtres humains encore en esclavage. Le taux de l'émancipation au cours de ces 15 dernières années a été de 100 millions de personnes par an. Il est donc impératif que l'ONU proclame maintenant, devant la présente assemblée, la libération de nos 100 millions d'amis, de nos 100 millions de frères captifs. Car ils sont nos frères et nous n'admettons aucune discrimination ni de race, ni de couleur, ni de religion. Que ceux qui se disent les ennemis de toute discrimination le prouvent en appuyant le projet de résolution soumis à l'Assemblée par les peuples africains-asiatiques [A/L.323 et Add.1]. Nos frères sont dispersés de par le monde, mais ils sont réunis dans leur combat pour la liberté.

116. Les peuples de la Palestine, du Kénya, de l'Oman, d'Aden, des extrémités de la péninsule Arabique, du Nyassaland, de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Rhodésie, du Ruanda-Urundi, du Sud-Ouest africain, du Tanganyika, de l'Ouganda, de l'Irian occidental, de Malte et des autres parties du monde doivent être libérés. L'Algérie constitue un problème particulièrement brûlant au moment où la guerre d'Algérie entre dans sa septième année. Le peuple algérien a les mêmes droits que nous à la liberté, à la dignité et à l'indépendance. Tous les humains sont nés libres, et, comme le disait notre grand Calife: "De quel droit faites-vous des esclaves d'hommes que leurs mères ont engendrés libres?"

117. Les peuples coloniaux ont un droit imprescriptible à la liberté et nous nous devons de le reconnaître et de le déclarer. J'insiste sur le mot reconnaître, car l'expression "octroi de l'indépendance" employée dans le mémorandum de l'Union soviétique [A/4501] ne me paraît pas heureuse. La liberté pour ces 100 millions d'hommes est un droit, non une grâce que nous pouvons leur accorder.

118. Quoi qu'il en soit, on a souvent dit que ces pays étaient sous tutelle et que leur progrès économique et social nécessite le maintien de cette tutelle pour quelque temps encore. Voilà un argument périmé indigne de l'esprit de cette époque, et si faible qu'il ne vaut pas qu'on s'y arrête.

119. Ces peuples sont en tutelle depuis des décennies; combien de temps faut-il encore poursuivre cette épreuve d'une cruelle amertume, cette douloureuse expérience faite sur les humains et non sur les animaux ou la matière insensible? Puisque le régime de tutelle n'a pas réussi jusqu'à présent à élever ces peuples de la servitude à l'indépendance, n'est-ce pas la preuve de son échec et l'ONU ne doit-elle pas mettre fin à ce régime? Parlons aussi de la situation au Congo. Quelques voix — vestiges de l'impérialisme — s'élèvent pour souligner que la situation au Congo illustre clairement le danger qu'il y a à concéder trop tôt leur indépendance à ces peuples. C'est la dernière mode en matière de logique, due aux promoteurs habituels de la mode politique, et je la trouve détestable. C'est une logique sans réelle logique, et un argument qui s'effondre de lui-même lorsqu'on sait qu'il a été lancé par les ennemis de la liberté.

120. La situation au Congo constitue au contraire un argument en faveur de la liberté et non contre elle. La crise congolaise n'est pas le résultat d'une indépendance octroyée trop vite et trop tôt; c'est le résultat d'une attaque foudroyante contre la naissance de l'indépendance. Si l'on avait laissé le Congo livré à lui-même, la crise aurait été totalement évitée, les forces des Nations Unies n'auraient pas eu à se rassembler, le Congo ne serait pas devenu un point de l'ordre du jour de l'ONU et les impérialistes n'auraient pas trouvé ce mauvais argument en faveur de leur cause.

121. Tous ces arguments sont creux et tombent les uns après les autres. Il faut libérer les peuples coloniaux et qu'ils aillent leur chemin. Ils prendront soin d'eux-mêmes et leur sort sera placé en bonnes mains — leurs propres mains. Ils assureront leur progrès économique, social et culturel. Rien n'est plus utile, plus fécond et plus respectable que de ne dépendre que de soi. Ce sont leurs propres mains, leurs esprits, leurs âmes et leurs cœurs qui œuvreront à cette reconstruction. Le résultat en sera non plus le croupissement du régime de tutelle, mais l'évolution révolutionnaire de l'indépendance.

122. Prenons comme exemple le Ghana. Le potentiel hydraulique de ce pays est resté inemployé pendant toutes les années du régime colonial. Depuis l'indépendance, le projet de la Volta, qui va faire du Ghana un pays industriel, est en voie d'exécution. De même la Guinée et ses projets grandioses. Sous la domination coloniale, tout cela dormait, perdu dans les archives.

123. Prenons la République arabe unie — le projet du barrage d'Assouan était abandonné sous la poussière des archives depuis des dizaines d'années. Depuis l'indépendance et sous l'impulsion du président Nasser, ce projet est devenu l'un des rouages les plus puissants du mécanisme de développement.

124. Prenons la Chine, pendant si longtemps démembrée, opprimée et humiliée: la voilà devenue depuis son indépendance un géant de la production, et même un géant impatient. Impatient de rattraper son retard — et je ne fais pas intervenir ici les prolongements politiques de la situation en Chine.

125. Prenons enfin l'Inde et le Pakistan qui, avant l'indépendance, étaient en complète stagnation. Depuis leur libération, ces deux pays fourmillent de projets.

126. Je ne donnerai pas d'autres exemples, car le milliard et demi d'êtres humains libérés au cours des 15 dernières années constitue la plus magistrale illustration de la plus grandiose expérience humaine.

127. Il est un dernier point que nous devons considérer: la fin du colonialisme devrait entraîner la suppression du Conseil de tutelle. En fait, la tutelle des Nations Unies est une institution analogue au système des mandats de la Société des Nations. Il est navrant de constater que le Conseil de tutelle demeure encore l'un des principaux organes des Nations Unies alors qu'il illustre la domination exercée sur les peuples et qu'il perpétue le statut de dépendance de ces peuples.

128. Tout aussi navrant est le terme de "capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes" que la Charte a assigné comme objectif aux territoires sous tutelle. Lorsque la question du régime de tutelle a été discutée à San Francisco en 1945, le Ministre des affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique, M. Molotov, a recommandé que le but final de la tutelle soit l'indépendance. A ce moment-là, seule la délégation des Philippines a appuyé M. Molotov et j'exprime aux Philippines mon admiration pour leur attitude. Malheureusement, l'opposition conduite par M. Stettinius, représentant les Etats-Unis, a insisté pour que l'on adopte l'expression de "capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes". Nous espérons que, lors de la présente session, nos collègues des Etats-Unis seront disposés à appuyer l'idée de la suppression du Conseil de tutelle et de son vocabulaire périmé. Demandons l'indépendance pure et simple en termes francs et directs. Le terme d'indépendance ne cache rien dont il faille avoir honte.

129. Mais tout ceci est du passé. Il nous appartient maintenant d'écrire une nouvelle page d'histoire qui soit digne de notre temps. Proclamons l'indépendance de tous les peuples où qu'ils soient et quelles que soient leur race et leur couleur. Liquidons le colonialisme quelles que soient ses formes et sa provenance. Repoussons toutes les formes de l'impérialisme et libérons tous les peuples où qu'ils soient.

130. Les 98 Nations représentées au sein de cette organisation — et je ne me trompe pas sur ce chiffre — ont chacune leur journée nationale de l'indépendance. Faisons d'aujourd'hui la journée mondiale de l'indépendance, au cours de laquelle nous commémorerons avec joie et fierté une glorieuse conquête: la liberté pour tous, la souveraineté pour tous, l'indépendance pour tous, et, surtout, les Nations Unies pour tous.

La séance est levée à 13 h 15.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE

QUINZIÈME SESSION

Documents officiels

928^e
SÉANCE PLÉNIÈRE

Mercredi 30 novembre 1960,
à 10 h 30

NEW YORK

SOMMAIRE

	Page
Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:
Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)	1079

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Avant d'appeler à la tribune le premier orateur de cette séance, je donne la parole au représentant du Portugal qui a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

2. M. GARIN (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: C'est contre mon gré que je dois demander à exercer mon droit de réponse, mais quelques-uns des orateurs que nous avons entendus à cette tribune ont une fois encore tenté de s'immiscer dans les affaires intérieures de mon pays malgré les dispositions très précises de la Charte des Nations Unies en cette matière.

3. Le représentant du Ghana a gratuitement qualifié de fiction juridique la structure constitutionnelle de mon pays. Je suis persuadé que nous sommes tous d'accord pour considérer comme très grave une déclaration selon laquelle la structure constitutionnelle d'un pays est qualifiée de fiction; or c'est précisément ce que le représentant du Ghana vient de faire à l'égard de mon pays.

4. J'ai maintes fois expliqué à cette tribune que la nation portugaise, à la suite d'un processus historique vieux de plusieurs siècles, est un Etat unitaire dont toutes les composantes jouissent d'un statut identique aux yeux de la loi. Le représentant du Ghana a parfaitement le droit de ne pas aimer notre constitution. Mais autre chose est de ne pas aimer la constitution d'une nation, autre chose de l'attaquer devant cette assemblée. Il y a là non seulement violation des principes de la Charte, mais une tentative pour créer un dangereux précédent qui permettrait que la structure et les affaires intérieures des Etats Membres — y compris le Ghana — fassent l'objet de libres discussions à cette tribune.

5. Je n'ai jamais pris la parole ici pour discuter la structure politique interne du Ghana ni d'aucun autre pays et n'ai nulle intention de le faire; ma délégation ne peut donc accepter sans protestation qu'une exception soit faite à l'égard du Portugal. Le représentant du Ghana a poussé son immixtion dans les affaires intérieures de mon pays jusqu'à demander que des mesures immédiates soient prises pour octroyer tous les pouvoirs de la souveraineté aux provinces portugaises d'outre-mer de l'Angola et du Mozambique.

6. Je ne peux qu'estimer qu'il est regrettable au plus haut point qu'un représentant d'un Etat Membre se permette de demander, du haut de cette tribune, le démembrement d'un autre Etat. Je préfère toutefois penser que le représentant du Ghana n'avait pas bien pesé ses mots lorsqu'il a exprimé l'espoir de voir démembrer la nation portugaise et que la souveraineté sur ses composantes lui soit retirée.

7. Mais, encore une fois, il s'agit là d'une question grave; il est déplacé de s'exprimer avec légèreté devant cette assemblée où se joue l'existence des pays et des peuples. Je m'élève donc énergiquement contre des libertés de langage qui trahissent la lettre et l'esprit de la Charte et ne peuvent qu'envenimer le présent débat.

8. Je ne crois pas utile d'ajouter que cette réponse s'adresse également à une autre délégation qui a souscrit hier à ces invraisemblables propositions. J'espère qu'il sera encore possible d'éviter que la sérénité de ces débats ne soit troublée.

9. M. ALEMAYEHOU (Ethiopie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Lorsque l'Organisation des Nations Unies a été créée à San Francisco en 1945, un milliard d'êtres humains environ vivaient sous le régime colonial. Une ou deux années plus tard, alors que l'Inde et le Pakistan accédaient à l'indépendance, bientôt suivis par la Birmanie, Ceylan, l'Indonésie et d'autres pays d'Asie, le colonialisme restait intact en Afrique et en Océanie.

10. En 1955, lors de la Conférence africano-asiatique de Bandoung, les Etats réunis à cette conférence historique ont fait le bilan de la situation coloniale. Ils ont posé un certain nombre de principes fondamentaux qui sont devenus les pierres angulaires de la politique des pays indépendants d'Afrique et d'Asie à l'égard des pays et des peuples coloniaux. Les pays dépendants d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Océanie se sont eux-mêmes inspirés de ces principes pour lutter pour la liberté. Entre-temps, la lutte des Etats africano-asiatiques pour la liberté et l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux se poursuit au sein de la Quatrième Commission de l'Assemblée générale. Cette lutte tend à rendre plus libérale la déclaration de caractère assez conservateur contenue au Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies; les pays africano-asiatiques, aidés par les pays d'Amérique latine et d'autres encore, ont réussi à faire de ce document, en dépit de son caractère conservateur, un instrument vivant destiné à faire avancer les peuples coloniaux dans la voie de la liberté et de l'indépendance.

11. L'ONU ne peut revendiquer le mérite d'avoir donné l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux, mais son influence ne peut être niée, pas plus que l'effet des forces libérales sur ces peuples.

12. A un stade ultérieur de la lutte pour l'émancipation, la libération du Soudan, du Maroc et de la Tunisie marque un nouveau progrès vers la suppression du colonialisme sur le continent africain.

Le point culminant de cette évolution a été atteint lors de l'accession à l'indépendance du Ghana sur la côte occidentale de l'Afrique, suivi de près par la Guinée, puis, cette année, par de nombreux Etats africains et par Chypre qui, tous, sont venus occuper la place qui leur est due dans la communauté des nations.

13. N'oublions pas que les Etats africains aussi, suivant l'exemple de Bandoung, ont énoncé un certain nombre de principes concrets plus particulièrement destinés à leur propre continent, au cours de la Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, tenue à Accra (Ghana), du 15 au 22 avril 1958. A cette conférence historique, ils ont adopté 13 résolutions portant toutes sur le colonialisme et la consolidation de l'indépendance des Etats africains. Si l'on examine ces résolutions, on constate que les huit Etats africains ne se sont pas contentés d'énoncer des principes généraux, mais ont demandé de façon claire et précise la suppression du colonialisme, de l'"apartheid" et de la discrimination raciale. Ils ont demandé l'application du suffrage universel afin que les institutions gouvernementales de tous les territoires coloniaux d'Afrique soient établies conformément à la volonté du peuple, et non plus dictées par de prétendues mères patries à l'autre bout du monde.

14. Au cours de cette même conférence, les pays africains, conscients de la situation particulière de l'Algérie, ont fait appel à la France pour que:

a) Elle reconnaisse le droit du peuple algérien à l'indépendance et à la libre détermination;

b) Elle mette fin aux hostilités et retire ses troupes d'Algérie;

c) Elle entame immédiatement des négociations de paix avec le Front de libération nationale afin d'aboutir à un règlement équitable du conflit ^{1/}.

Nous voyons tout de suite que le premier objectif a été atteint, mais que les deux autres sont désormais périmés, en raison des circonstances, ou bien qu'ils ont été reconnus comme indispensables par ceux-là mêmes qui, au moment de la Conférence d'Accra, ont été amenés à blâmer l'attitude des pays africains. Il n'en demeure pas moins que presque toutes les parties intéressées reconnaissent aujourd'hui le droit des peuples d'Afrique à demander l'indépendance et la libre détermination pour l'Algérie, et qu'il ne reste plus qu'à trouver les modalités d'application de ces principes qui assureront au peuple algérien le libre choix de son avenir.

15. L'année suivante, les Etats africains indépendants se sont réunis de nouveau, en conférence extraordinaire, à Monrovia^{2/}, pour examiner avant toute chose le problème algérien, mais aussi d'autres questions non moins urgentes, telles que les essais nucléaires au Sahara, et l'intensification des massacres en masse et des mesures de répression dont sont victimes les populations africaines du fait de la discrimination raciale. Cette conférence a adopté des résolutions qui mettent en application un certain nombre de principes concernant chacun de ces problèmes. Et ces principes ont été acceptés par la quasi-unanimité des Membres de l'ONU. Il ne reste donc plus qu'à les concrétiser sur place dans des conditions qui réunissent l'approbation de toutes les parties intéressées. Ainsi, lorsque cette question entrera dans l'histoire, le processus aura laissé intacte l'amitié entre les peuples.

16. Les Etats indépendants d'Afrique — maintenant au nombre de 16 — se sont réunis cette année à Addis-Abéba^{3/}. Ils ont discuté et adopté un certain nombre de résolutions portant sur: a) un règlement pacifique par la négociation du conflit algérien; b) la question du Sud-Ouest africain; c) la cessation des essais nucléaires et thermonucléaires au Sahara; d) la suppression de la domination coloniale en Afrique; e) le problème de la création d'une Fédération centre-africaine; f) la politique d'"apartheid" et de discrimination raciale en Afrique; et d'autres encore. L'une de ces résolutions demande la suppression du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes, proclame l'égalité de toutes les races dans les questions civiles et religieuses, et réclame l'application du principe selon lequel chacun disposerait d'une voix, afin que, dans toutes les colonies, le pouvoir soit transféré aux représentants du peuple.

17. En conséquence, le présent projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2], à l'élaboration duquel ma délégation s'honore d'avoir participé, constitue la confirmation des idéaux et des principes que les pays africano-asiatiques ont proclamés et soutenus sans relâche depuis 1955, à Bandoung, à Accra, à Monrovia et à Addis-Abéba. Un examen de ce projet de résolution permet de voir immédiatement que tous les alinéas du préambule expriment des principes qui, à un moment ou à un autre, d'une façon ou d'une autre, ont été énoncés au cours de ces conférences historiques. Nous estimons donc que, si l'ONU adopte ces principes, chacun des Etats Membres sera responsable de leur application.

18. Le moment me paraît venu de rendre hommage à l'Union soviétique et de la féliciter d'avoir pris l'initiative de proposer à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale [A/4501] le point que nous examinons, à savoir une Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/4502 et Corr.1]. Cette déclaration sur l'abolition du colonialisme, si elle était adoptée par l'Assemblée générale — et j'espère qu'elle le sera à l'unanimité — constituera un grand moment de l'histoire et un tournant décisif de l'histoire des relations entre les peuples. Ce sera la réalisation des nobles principes de la Charte des Nations Unies. Cette résolution, si elle est adoptée et mise en application, ouvrira une ère nouvelle aux peuples de la terre qui pourront travailler ensemble comme les membres d'une même grande famille à la réalisation de fins communes: la paix et le bonheur universels. Il ne peut y avoir de paix durable dans une aussi grande famille si tous ses membres ne jouissent pas du même bonheur. Tant qu'il n'y a pas le même bonheur, la même satisfaction pour tous, il ne peut y avoir qu'une trêve armée, non la paix.

19. Ainsi donc, afin que s'établisse une paix durable entre les peuples et que s'instaure une coopération amicale entre les nations, le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes doit disparaître, et les puissances colo-

^{1/} Conférence of Independent African States, Declaration and Resolutions, 22 avril 1958, Accra (Ghana), Government Printer, 1958, résolution III.

^{2/} Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, tenue à Monrovia (Libéria), du 4 au 8 août 1959.

^{3/} Deuxième Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, tenue à Addis-Abéba (Ethiopie), du 14 au 24 juin 1960.

niales doivent reconnaître aux peuples placés sous leur domination le même droit de choisir librement leur destin que celui qu'elles reconnaissent à leurs propres populations.

20. C'est donc pour que règne une paix durable au lieu de conflits perpétuels, une coopération fraternelle pour le bien commun au lieu de l'inimitié entre les nations, que nous demandons à tous les Etats représentés ici de donner leur plein appui à la déclaration actuellement en discussion afin qu'elle soit adoptée par acclamation.

21. Les peuples soumis au régime colonial, ainsi que les champions de leur cause en Afrique, en Asie et ailleurs, ont encouru les critiques d'observateurs neutres — et, j'en suis sûr, honnêtes — pour leur impatience et leur hâte à exiger l'abolition immédiate et inconditionnelle du colonialisme. Si l'on en croit ces observateurs, l'abolition prématurée du colonialisme a conduit à des conflits entre les dirigeants politiques indigènes, et ils citent le cas du Congo à l'appui de leurs dires. Ces observateurs prétendent également que, quels que soient les sentiments des peuples colonisés à l'égard de leurs colonisateurs, ceux-ci ont indéniablement contribué au développement économique, social, culturel et politique des peuples placés sous leur domination et qu'ils ont eux-mêmes dans ces territoires des intérêts économiques ou autres qu'il est impossible de négliger. Selon ces observateurs, pour toutes les raisons exposées précédemment, et pour faciliter le transfert du pouvoir aux dirigeants politiques indigènes, il faudrait donc plus de temps que n'en demandent les peuples coloniaux; il faudrait également que ceux-ci fassent preuve de plus de patience.

22. Mais nous avons dit à ces observateurs, et nous le leur répétons, que l'abolition du colonialisme s'est trop fait attendre et ne viendra jamais trop tôt. Nous comprenons combien ces observations et ces critiques loyales peuvent paraître justes et raisonnables. Nous savons ce que des observateurs neutres, qui vivent dans la liberté, peuvent éprouver à l'égard du colonialisme en général, car nous avons nous-mêmes connu l'oppression, puis la liberté. Mais ils ne peuvent pas comprendre nos sentiments à l'égard du colonialisme, car ils ont toujours vécu dans la liberté. Il est facile pour les observateurs neutres de formuler des critiques, car ils n'ont jamais subi la plus abjecte et la plus dégradante des humiliations, ils n'ont jamais été des étrangers dans leur propre pays, ils n'ont jamais combattu et donné leur vie pour des causes qui n'étaient pas les leurs et ne faisaient qu'apporter une gloire nouvelle à leurs déjà glorieux oppresseurs, et ils n'ont jamais peiné pour accroître encore la richesse déjà fabuleuse de leurs maîtres et pour augmenter la force des mains qui les broient. Il faut avoir vécu sous l'emprise colonialiste et être passé soi-même par ces épreuves pour comprendre la pleine signification du colonialisme.

23. On ne peut nier que les puissances coloniales aient contribué plus ou moins au développement économique, social et culturel de leurs colonies; mais ce que nos critiques ont complètement passé sous silence, c'est que la contribution économique, militaire ou autre apportée par les colonies à la métropole a toujours été infiniment plus considérable que celle qu'a apportée la métropole aux colonies.

24. Quant aux difficultés économiques et politiques et aux conflits qui ont suivi l'abolition du régime colonial dans certains pays, qu'il nous soit permis de dire à ces critiques que ces difficultés ont toujours été provoquées par des manœuvres étrangères destinées à discréditer et à entraver la marche irrévversible des peuples opprimés du monde entier, et en particulier de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, vers l'émancipation, et à rétablir, sous une forme ou sous une autre, l'ancien système d'exploitation. Et, même s'il est exact que des difficultés et des conflits entre les dirigeants politiques surviennent dans certains pays après la suppression du colonialisme, ce n'est pas une raison pour refuser l'indépendance à ceux qui la demandent. Que les chefs politiques se disputent le pouvoir n'a rien d'extraordinaire, cela se produit partout dans le monde, seuls les procédés changent. Les uns emploient l'argent, les autres leurs poings, d'autres encore des canons, des tanks et des avions. Personne ne devrait donc s'étonner que cela se produise aussi dans les territoires coloniaux, et il n'y a là purement et simplement qu'un prétexte pour maintenir la domination coloniale dans ces territoires.

25. Les peuples libérés, laissés à eux-mêmes sans intervention des intrigants étrangers, régleront rapidement leurs différends, comme l'ont fait tous les autres peuples dans des circonstances analogues. Qu'on les laisse donc tranquilles, se battre s'ils en ont envie et régler eux-mêmes leurs affaires.

26. A première vue, je ne vois pas pourquoi des colonies qui ont contribué pour une part énorme à la prospérité économique des régions métropolitaines ne seraient pas capables de se constituer en Etats économiquement viables. Et je ne vois pas non plus de raison pour que les peuples des colonies, après avoir combattu longuement et durement pour leur libération, ne parviennent pas à jouir pacifiquement d'une liberté chèrement acquise, à condition qu'ils ne soient pas victimes de manœuvres subversives fomentées par l'étranger.

27. Mais si, malgré tout, la question se pose pour eux de choisir entre la liberté avec son cortège de difficultés économiques et de conflits internes et le maintien de la domination coloniale avec ses corollaires inévitables, la subjugation, l'exploitation, la dégradation et l'humiliation, je peux répondre immédiatement et sans équivoque que tous les peuples colonisés préfèrent la pauvreté et les luttes ultérieures dans la liberté à la prospérité et la paix dans l'esclavage.

28. Il fut un temps où l'esprit d'entreprise, l'héroïsme, la puissance, la grandeur et la prospérité d'un pays se mesuraient à l'étendue et au nombre de ses colonies. Il fut un temps où posséder des colonies apportait fierté et gloire à ceux qui les possédaient. Mais tout ceci appartient au passé; aujourd'hui, les nations ne se glorifient plus de posséder des colonies, mais au contraire de les émaniciper; et celles qui conservent l'espoir de garder leurs colonies tentent de les dissimuler sous des appellations nouvelles. On parle de "territoires d'outre-mer", de "provinces d'outre-mer". Les termes de "puissance coloniale" et de "colonies", dont les pays colonisateurs tirèrent tant de gloire et d'orgueil, leur font honte maintenant; et je crois pouvoir affirmer que le temps n'est pas éloigné où la possession de colonies deviendra non seulement une honte, mais un crime, ainsi que cela s'est produit pour l'esclavage.

29. Tout ce mal que se donnent les puissances coloniales pour cacher leur colonies sous des noms différents et pour trouver des prétextes afin de retarder le jour de l'émancipation des peuples dépendants, voilà qui prouve bien que le colonialisme doit disparaître, et ces nations le savent bien.

30. En fait, le représentant du Royaume-Uni, dont la clairvoyance politique dans ce domaine est unanimement reconnue, a dit l'autre jour du haut de cette tribune [925^{ème} séance] que les divergences d'opinions entre son gouvernement et les promoteurs d'une libération immédiate de toutes les colonies portent sur les méthodes permettant d'atteindre cet objectif, non sur l'objectif lui-même.

31. Et s'il n'y a pas de divergence d'opinions quant au but visé — la libération finale de tous les peuples encore soumis à la domination coloniale au nom de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes — il ne peut et ne doit y avoir aucune divergence de vues quant aux méthodes employées pour parvenir à cette fin. C'est en tout cas ce que pense ma délégation.

32. Nous reconnaissons que l'objectif à atteindre est l'émancipation des peuples coloniaux. Y a-t-il donc une meilleure méthode que celle qui consiste à demander à ces peuples d'exprimer librement la façon dont ils envisagent leur avenir? Nous n'en voyons pas, quant à nous, de meilleure.

33. Une déclaration qui abolirait le colonialisme et donnerait aux peuples coloniaux la liberté de décider de leur sort n'empêcherait aucun d'entre eux de nouer des liens librement consentis avec leur ancienne métropole, s'ils estiment qu'une telle association leur est favorable.

34. Pour ce qui est de considérer certains territoires d'Afrique et d'Asie comme des provinces d'outre-mer des pays métropolitains d'Europe, je dis franchement à nos amis et collègues qui représentent ici ces pays que leurs arguments ne peuvent en aucun cas nous convaincre. Comment ces territoires lointains peuvent-ils faire partie de la mère patrie? Il n'y a entre eux aucune identité géographique, économique, historique, raciale, ethnique ou culturelle; et il n'y a pas non plus entre ces "provinces" et la métropole d'accord librement et volontairement consenti. Il n'y a qu'une loi promulguée unilatéralement par les pays métropolitains. Quant aux conséquences d'une telle loi promulguée unilatéralement sans l'accord de l'une des deux parties, elles sont faciles à imaginer. Prenons un pays A, quelque part en Afrique, qui promulgue une loi par laquelle un pays B, en Europe ou en Amérique, devient une province du pays A. Quel effet aurait une telle loi? Aucun, ni en droit, ni en fait, car le pays A ne dispose pas de la puissance militaire nécessaire pour faire appliquer cette loi et que le pays B n'a pas accepté de devenir une province de A.

35. Dans le cas des pays coloniaux d'Afrique et d'Asie et des pays métropolitains d'Europe, les prétentions de ces derniers à considérer les premiers comme des provinces ne peut avoir d'effet légal puisque le consentement d'une des deux parties fait défaut, mais elles ont eu, en fait, un effet simplement parce que les pays métropolitains avaient une supériorité militaire sur les pays qu'ils annexaient. Tout est donc une question de force, de domination par la force; c'est encore une fois du colonialisme.

36. Voilà pourquoi je disais, il y a un moment, que les arguments de certains représentants des pays métropolitains n'étaient pas convaincants. Aussi demandons-nous à ces représentants et à tous les autres membres de l'Assemblée de donner leur plein appui au projet de résolution contenant la déclaration dont je viens de parler [A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2] et qui, nous en sommes convaincus, sert les intérêts de tous, y compris ceux des puissances coloniales.

37. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) [traduit de l'anglais]: Jamais aucune des précédentes sessions de l'Assemblée générale n'a vu présenter avec autant de force et de conviction le problème des peuples coloniaux et de l'abolition définitive du colonialisme que nous examinons à la présente session. L'admission au sein de l'ONU de 17 nouveaux Etats, qui tous ont connu au cours de leur histoire l'oppression et l'exploitation colonialiste, témoigne abondamment de la portée internationale de ce problème. Il est devenu l'un des problèmes clefs de notre discussion générale et n'a cessé de revenir dans tous les débats auxquels ont donné lieu les différents points de l'ordre du jour des principales commissions de cette session. Et maintenant, grâce à l'initiative de l'Union soviétique, ce même problème est discuté sous tous ses aspects devant cette assemblée générale, afin que nous parvenions à la seule décision équitable.

38. Il est maintenant mûr pour une solution définitive. Le nouvel équilibre des forces dans le monde a créé une situation dans laquelle les lois de l'impérialisme ont cessé de jouer un rôle décisif. Le succès des mouvements de libération nationale en Asie et en Afrique a fortifié le front anticolonialiste et leur exemple éveille les aspirations des peuples encore dépendants.

39. Les progrès sans précédent de la science et de la technologie, le triomphe de l'esprit humain sur les forces de la nature, ainsi que les vastes possibilités offertes au développement pacifique de l'humanité ne nous permettent plus de tolérer que ces peuples soient opprimés et maintenus dans la misère et l'ignorance, alors qu'ils ont, tout comme nous, droit à l'indépendance et à un avenir meilleur.

40. En fait, partout où le colonialisme exerçait son emprise, nous avons assisté à l'extermination des peuples opprimés, à la destruction de leur culture, tandis que leur étaient imposés des institutions et des modes de vie étrangers. Nous avons assisté à l'exploitation impitoyable de la main-d'œuvre et des ressources naturelles, nous avons vu ces peuples soumis à la discrimination raciale et privés des fruits de la civilisation. Ces traits caractéristiques ne se retrouvent pas dans certaines des formes les plus récentes de l'administration coloniale, élaborées ces dernières années sous la pression sans cesse croissante des forces progressistes dans le monde entier. Ces formes nouvelles, obtenues grâce à la résistance opiniâtre des peuples coloniaux, et grâce aux discussions et aux résolutions anticolonialistes de l'ONU, n'ont pourtant pas transformé l'essence même du colonialisme.

41. La puissance politique et économique et le niveau de vie élevé des métropoles se sont édifiés par la sueur, le sang et les larmes des peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine. Quels profits les peuples indigènes ont-ils retirés de la découverte de l'or et des diamants en Afrique, de la création des plantations de caoutchouc et de l'exploitation des ressources minières en Asie, de la culture de la canne à sucre et des fruits tropicaux en Amérique latine, ou de la découverte de l'uranium au Congo? Le sort de ces peuples s'est joué sur les bourses des valeurs et des marchandises de Londres, Paris, Bruxelles et New York, et leur existence a été organisée par les ministères des colonies des métropoles.

42. Dans quelle mesure les grands progrès de la science et de la civilisation ont-ils été mis à la portée des peuples coloniaux? Ce que l'administration coloniale a fait pour les peuples dépendants — en admettant qu'elle ait fait quelque chose — n'a pas été fait pour accomplir une mission de civilisation, contrairement à ce que M. Ormsby-Gore a eu la malencontreuse idée de vouloir nous faire croire, d'accord en cela avec tous les défenseurs du colonialisme. Ce qui a été fait l'a été par égoïsme intéressé ou sous la pression d'événements politiques.

43. Je me permets d'ajouter que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a cherché à détourner notre attention du problème colonial par des insinuations sur la situation en Europe orientale. L'action de son pays dans cette partie du monde supporterait pourtant assez mal un examen objectif; il n'y a rien là dont il puisse être fier. Mais je préfère ne pas en dire plus et m'en tenir au sujet de notre discussion.

44. Je le répète donc: ce que l'on a fait dans les colonies n'a jamais servi que des intérêts égoïstes. On a construit des routes, des chemins de fer et des réseaux de communication parce que les colonisateurs en avaient besoin. La formation professionnelle a été réduite au minimum nécessaire à l'exploitation du territoire et les droits politiques distribués parcimonieusement lorsque la pression des masses s'est accentuée et que l'équilibre des forces dans le monde a changé.

45. Qu'en est-il résulté? Le revenu national par habitant de la France et de la Belgique s'élève à 900 dollars environ, mais il ne dépasse pas 50 à 70 dollars dans certains territoires africains qui étaient naguère les colonies de ces Etats. Au Royaume-Uni, le revenu national par habitant est d'environ 1.100 dollars, tandis qu'au Kenya, si riche de ressources naturelles, il ne dépasse pas 100 dollars, et ce chiffre comprend les revenus élevés des colons blancs. Nous savons de source officielle de l'ONU, et d'après les faits mentionnés dans le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, que le revenu par habitant de la population africaine du Kenya est 33 fois moindre que celui de la population non africaine. En Rhodésie et au Nyassaland il est 43 fois moindre.

46. En Rhodésie du Sud, 200.000 colons européens ont pris 51 pour 100 des meilleures terres, tandis que 3 millions d'Africains ont été confinés sur les terres pauvres et n'occupent que 42 pour 100 de la superficie totale. Le reste du territoire est entre les mains de l'administration coloniale et géré au mieux des intérêts des colons blancs. Le travail forcé sévit dans les colonies portugaises d'Afrique. La population dans sa presque totalité est soumise au statut humiliant créé par l'administration coloniale, et qualifiée de "non civilisée". Faut-il continuer à vous rappeler des faits que nous connaissons depuis plusieurs années par les documents et les travaux de la Quatrième Commission?

47. L'analphabétisme est largement répandu dans les territoires coloniaux; il touche parfois jusqu'à

90 pour 100 de la population adulte. Comment en serait-il autrement lorsque, pendant de longues années, les puissances métropolitaines ont appliqué le principe que la limitation de l'instruction empêche l'éveil de la conscience nationale et des aspirations à l'émancipation politique. Dans de nombreux pays, l'administration a entravé volontairement et avec préméditation l'éducation de l'élite indigène et la formation de cadres d'ouvriers indigènes qualifiés. C'est un fait particulièrement flagrant au Congo, et les difficultés politiques et administratives que traverse la nouvelle République résultent directement de cette politique.

48. Mais aujourd'hui, cependant, cet état de choses doit cesser. Les justes aspirations nationales des peuples coloniaux ne doivent pas être leurrées par l'octroi de quelques bribes de droits politiques. De plus, quelle valeur peut avoir une constitution comme celle de Malte ou de la Guyane anglaise que l'administration coloniale peut suspendre quand bon lui semble, contre la volonté du peuple et au moment où celui-ci désire user des droits qui lui ont été concédés? Ce n'est pas par pure coïncidence que, au moment où les constitutions de Malte et de la Guyane anglaise ont été suspendues, la législation de la Rhodésie du Sud, sur laquelle s'appuie tout l'édifice de l'administration coloniale de ce territoire et qui est conforme à la politique de discrimination raciale en vigueur dans l'Union sud-africaine, ait été maintenue. Sur les 3 millions d'Africains de la Rhodésie du Sud, 2.000 seulement possèdent le droit de vote.

49. Les administrateurs coloniaux peuvent nourrir l'espoir de gagner du temps en appliquant une politique de répression, mais il est bien évident qu'ils ne peuvent empêcher l'ultime défaite du colonialisme. La Commission consultative du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni elle-même a dû le reconnaître au cours d'une enquête poursuivie récemment sur la situation en Rhodésie et au Nyassaland. Nous lisons ce qui suit dans le rapport de lord Monckton: "Dire que les événements vont vite en Afrique est un truisme. Ils avancent comme une avalanche et il n'apparaît que trop probable que ceux qui se contentent de s'accrocher à leurs anciennes positions seront balayés." Et ils ne seront pas seulement balayés en Afrique. Le colonialisme ne peut être ni réformé, ni amélioré; on ne peut en effet réformer un système dont l'essence même est la domination par la force et la subordination des intérêts des peuples colonisés aux nécessités économiques et politiques des puissances colonisatrices. On ne peut améliorer un système édifié sur le principe de l'infériorité raciale et culturelle de certaines nations par rapport à d'autres, ce qui constitue un défi aux principes fondamentaux de l'humanisme. On ne peut refuser aux autres ce que l'on exige pour soi-même. L'abolition du colonialisme est conforme au droit objectif qui régit l'évolution de la société; la justice et l'équité l'exigent.

50. Les peuples coloniaux ont droit à une existence indépendante. Ils réclament aujourd'hui le droit de décider de leur avenir et il faut leur donner satisfaction sans plus tarder, comme l'a si justement montré la déclaration soviétique. Ceci concerne tous les territoires coloniaux quel que soit leur statut formel et juridique; cela concerne les territoires non autonomes et les territoires sous tutelle tels qu'ils sont désignés par la Charte des Nations Unies. Cela concerne aussi les protectorats et les régions cédées à bail à des pays étrangers. La majorité des territoires coloniaux se trouve toujours en Afrique, mais n'oublions pas que non seulement l'Asie, mais aussi l'Amérique latine et la région du Pacifique ne sont pas libérées du colonialisme. L'avenir de 100 millions d'êtres humains est en jeu et il ne peut y avoir aucun compromis.

51. L'expérience historique montre que le colonialisme ne disparaît pas de son plein gré. Il y a même des moments où sa résistance opiniâtre engendre des conflits aigus qui augmentent en les prolongeant les souffrances des peuples dépendants. L'histoire de l'accession à l'indépendance de nombreuses anciennes colonies telles que l'Inde, l'Indonésie, le Maroc, Chypre et bien d'autres, qui font partie aujourd'hui de notre organisation, illustre de façon frappante le bien-fondé de cette affirmation. Par la faute de cette même politique coloniale, le Viet-Nam reste divisé et n'est pas encore entré à l'ONU. Depuis sept ans le peuple algérien mène une lutte héroïque pour accéder à la liberté et à l'indépendance; et au Congo nous assistons à des tentatives de restauration de la domination coloniale sous des formes différentes, évidemment, sous une nouvelle apparence, bien que l'indépendance ait été octroyée à ce territoire.

52. C'est pourquoi les dirigeants des anciennes colonies déjà libérées ou de celles qui demandent leur indépendance ont été ou sont encore des prisonniers politiques que l'administration coloniale a privés de leur liberté afin de les empêcher d'exercer leur influence sur leurs peuples. Je citerai les noms du pandit Nehru, du Dr Banda, de Jomo Kenyatta, du Dr. Jagan — pour n'en citer que quelques-uns. Beaucoup, tel Um Nyobé, du Cameroun, ont péri dans la lutte pour la liberté. Comme l'a dit si justement le représentant du Mali dans son discours du 28 septembre 1960: "L'émancipation d'une colonie a toujours résulté d'une pression..." [876ème séance, par. 188.]

53. Il faut donc que la décision de l'ONU concernant l'abolition du colonialisme soit énergique, sans équivoque, et appuyée de toute l'autorité de notre organisation; et qu'aucun des arguments présentés par les défenseurs du colonialisme ne puisse nous écarter de cette voie. Il ne faut notamment pas que nous nous laissions abuser par l'opinion selon laquelle les peuples coloniaux auraient besoin d'être préparés à recevoir leur liberté et que l'indépendance politique ne pourrait leur être accordée qu'après une longue évolution économique et sociale, sous une surveillance étrangère.

54. Il serait difficile de prétendre que la rapacité des colonisateurs, l'exploitation de la main-d'œuvre locale qu'ils ont maintenue dans un état d'arriération et d'ignorance, l'étouffement de toute étincelle de vie politique n'ont pas entraîné un sous-développement des pays dépendants qui se trouvent de ce fait en retard sur le plan économique et technique et dépourvus de main-d'œuvre qualifiée. Mais tout cela, précisément, milite en faveur de l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme.

55. Les colonisateurs ne peuvent pas être de très bons guides pour les peuples en marche vers l'indépendance, car ils ont tout intérêt à préserver le plus longtemps possible le statut de dépendance. Je dirai, paraphrasant les mots de George Washington: "C'est folie de la part d'un territoire colonial que d'attendre un geste désintéressé de ses colonisateurs." D'autre part, l'expérience prouve que tous les Etats qui ont acquis nouvellement l'indépendance grâce aux efforts créateurs de leurs peuples, ont commencé à se développer dans tous les domaines beaucoup plus vite que lorsqu'ils subissaient le régime colonial.

56. L'absurdité de la théorie réactionnaire qui consiste à mettre d'un côté les nations qui peuvent se gouverner elles-mêmes et de l'autre celles qui ne le peuvent pas n'a plus à être démontrée. La déclaration historique de l'Union soviétique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux a pleinement raison de dire:

"La vie montre que la libération est immédiatement suivie de la renaissance, de l'essor et de l'épanouissement de cultures nationales originales, de l'extension de l'instruction publique, d'une meilleure protection de la santé, de la formation de cadres nationaux qualifiés ..." [A/4502.]

57. L'abolition de l'exploitation coloniale permet une meilleure utilisation des ressources nationales des territoires jusqu'alors dépendants, elle accroît leurs besoins en denrées étrangères, augmente leurs exportations, étend leur capacité industrielle et favorise ainsi le développement économique mondial.

58. Si les représentants de la Guinée m'autorisent, je voudrais citer l'exemple de leur pays. Deux ans après son accession à l'indépendance, la Guinée, en dépit des prédictions pessimistes et des manœuvres des anciens colonisateurs, se développe favorablement. Son plan économique de trois ans prévoit des investissements annuels 25 fois plus importants que les investissements annuels moyens des 10 dernières années de régime colonial. Le nombre des étudiants et des écoliers a doublé et le nombre des bourses distribuées a triplé.

59. Je demande également l'autorisation au représentant du Ghana de dire que son gouvernement vient de présenter un second plan quinquennal de développement national qui prévoit un développement considérable de l'industrie et une diversification de l'économie. Selon les données officielles du Fonds monétaire international, l'accroissement du revenu national brut au Ghana entre 1954 et 1957, alors que le pays était une colonie britannique, a été de 2.500.000 livres. Le chiffre correspondant pour l'année qui a suivi l'accession à l'indépendance est déjà de 14.400.000 livres.

60. La Nigéria prépare le développement de son énorme potentiel hydro-électrique et la pleine utilisation de ses richesses nationales en minerai de fer et en pétrole. L'indépendance a déclenché dans l'Ouest africain une poussée irrésistible vers le progrès et il en sera de même pour l'Est africain et tous les pays délivrés de la servitude coloniale.

61. Le Président de la Guinée, M. Sekou Touré, a eu parfaitement raison de déclarer du haut de cette tribune le 10 octobre 1960:

"...l'indépendance nationale suppose non seulement la libération politique, mais aussi et surtout une totale libération économique. Aucun progrès social n'est possible sans ces deux impératifs." [896ème séance, par. 16.]

62. Il faut aider les pays libérés du joug du colonialisme à s'associer dans des conditions d'égalité totale et sans discrimination aux échanges internationaux de biens et de services. Il faut que ces pays aient la liberté absolue de disposer de leurs ressources naturelles et d'établir leurs relations économiques avec les autres pays sur la base d'avantages réciproques. Nous devons les aider à diversifier leur structure économique. Nous devons les empêcher de retomber dans une nouvelle forme de servitude. N'oublions pas comment et pourquoi, il y a trois ans, les puissances coloniales s'opposaient à la création d'une commission économique pour l'Afrique qui pourrait jouer un rôle considérable dans la protection des intérêts économiques de ce continent.

63. A l'heure actuelle, nous voyons à nouveau, et plus clairement encore, les efforts de certains milieux, particulièrement aux Etats-Unis, pour renforcer leur influence en Afrique dans les pays nouvellement libérés. C'est ainsi que cette indépendance, si chèrement acquise, pourrait être rapidement reperdue au profit d'une nouvelle forme de dépendance: le néo-colonialisme. La délégation polonaise reviendra sur cette question lors de la discussion d'autres points de l'ordre du jour de cette session.

64. Seule l'abolition totale et immédiate du colonialisme pourra donner leur plein effet aux objectifs de la Charte des Nations Unies, car celle-ci pose comme l'un des buts fondamentaux de notre organisation le "respect du principe de l'égalité des droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes". L'Article 73 de la Charte reconnaît en même temps le fait indiscutable qu'il y avait en 1945 des populations "qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". Les mots "pas encore" indiquent bien le caractère provisoire de cette situation. Il en est de même pour l'Article 76 qui fixe les objectifs du régime de tutelle.

65. Quelle que soit l'interprétation que l'on donne aux Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte, il est clair que les institutions et les procédures qu'ils mettent en place ne sont que transitoires. La question n'est pas de savoir si l'indépendance sera accordée aux peuples habitant les territoires cités dans ces chapitres, mais "quand" elle leur sera accordée.

66. Les principes et les buts des Nations Unies ont un caractère fondamental sur lequel repose toute notre organisation et son existence même dépend de leur mise en œuvre. D'autres dispositions de la Charte demandent à être interprétées avant leur exécution; le cas échéant, certains processus doivent s'accomplir, puis il faut y mettre fin. Il en est ainsi des dispositions des Chapitres XI et XII, destinées à n'être appliquées que pour un temps limité. Les maintenir ou même les prolonger artificiellement constituerait une contradiction avec le paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte et équivaldrait à refuser à certaines nations du globe la participation aux objectifs des Nations Unies. Jamais ce sens n'a pu être donné à la Charte dans son ensemble, ni dans aucune de ses dispositions.

67. Par conséquent, les dispositions des Chapitres XI et XII ne peuvent être maintenues indéfiniment, ni même très longtemps. La Charte a laissé aux événements, à la vie même, le soin de décider quand les territoires non autonomes ou sous tutelle pourraient accéder à la libre disposition d'eux-mêmes et à l'indépendance. Et la vie a répondu au cours des années qui ont suivi 1945, l'année 1960 apparaissant comme celle de la réponse définitive. C'est pourquoi il est absolument conforme à la Charte, dans son esprit et dans sa lettre, que les territoires non autonomes et les territoires sous tutelle disparaissent et que tous les peuples accèdent à l'indépendance.

68. Je voudrais rappeler ici les paroles du président de l'Indonésie, M. Sukarno, qui a dit le 30 septembre 1960:

"L'équilibre du monde s'est modifié depuis ce jour de juin il y a 15 ans où la Charte a été signée dans la ville américaine de San Francisco, à un moment où l'humanité commençait à sortir des horreurs de la guerre. Le sort de l'humanité ne peut plus être décidé par quelques nations grandes et puissantes." [880ème séance, par. 54.]

Le président Sukarno a dit encore:

"L'Organisation des Nations Unies n'est plus ce qu'elle était lorsque la Charte a été signée il y a 15 ans. Le monde a changé. Ceux qui, dans leur sagesse, ont œuvré pour nous donner la Charte de notre organisation n'auraient pu prévoir à l'époque ce que celle-ci est devenue aujourd'hui. Bien peu parmi eux, dans leur sagesse et leur clairvoyance, se sont rendu compte que la fin de l'impérialisme était proche..." [Ibid., par. 183.]

69. La Charte des Nations Unies exprimait des idéaux pour lesquels les peuples se sont battus contre le fascisme et le nazisme pendant la seconde guerre mondiale. Les fils de l'Asie et de l'Afrique versaient aussi leur sang; la lutte était commune, communs aussi devaient être les fruits de la victoire. La Charte a renforcé la conviction des peuples que l'idéal de liberté pour lequel ils ont versé leur sang sur les champs de bataille de la seconde guerre mondiale, unis dans la même lutte contre le fascisme et le nazisme, est incompatible avec le colonialisme, avec la subjugation des nations et la discrimination raciale. En fait, dans beaucoup de territoires coloniaux, le retour des combattants de la seconde guerre mondiale a marqué le début de la lutte pour l'indépendance. Je ne citerai que deux de ces pays, le Ghana et la Nigéria.

70. Toutes les tentatives destinées à maintenir le système colonial ou à défendre la position privilégiée des puissances coloniales sont contraires à l'esprit de la Charte. Elles ne peuvent que rendre plus difficile le développement de la coopération internationale et constituent un obstacle au progrès social, culturel et économique de tous les pays. Combien de conflits dangereux pour le maintien de la paix sont nés de l'opposition insensée des puissances coloniales au cours irréversible de l'histoire!

71. La guerre d'Algérie est devenue un problème international et quels dangers la situation au Congo ne recèle-t-elle pas? Si les gouvernements de l'Union sud-africaine et du Portugal poursuivent leur politique actuelle, de nouvelles perturbations dans les relations internationales sont à craindre. La politique des puissances occidentales et de l'OTAN qui établissent des bases militaires et des zones d'expérimentation pour leurs armes nucléaires malgré l'opposition catégorique des pays de ces régions qui ont été libérés de l'oppression coloniale est également devenue un problème international. De même qu'en cherchant à imposer à ces pays de nouvelles formes de dépendance, le néo-colonialisme fait grand tort à la cause de la paix mondiale.

72. Tandis que l'abolition du colonialisme libère toutes les forces vives des nouvelles nations. Les pays libérés du joug colonialiste ont déjà apporté une précieuse contribution à l'édification et à la consolidation de la coexistence pacifique des nations.

73. La Conférence de Bandoung, dans laquelle la République populaire de Chine a tenu une place si importante, a été la manifestation éclatante du rôle que ces nouvelles forces ont à jouer dans la construction d'un monde pacifique. Après Bandoung, il y a eu Tunis, Tanger, Conakry, Addis-Abéba et Accra; le représentant de l'Ethiopie qui m'a précédé à cette tribune a déjà parlé de ces réunions historiques. Toutes ont été animées par le souci non seulement du bien commun de tous les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, mais aussi de l'évolution pacifique des relations internationales à travers le monde. L'abolition du colonialisme peut engendrer une meilleure compréhension entre les peuples coloniaux et les territoires métropolitains, ce qui est souhaitable pour les deux parties, et aussi pour la communauté mondiale des nations.

74. Si l'ONU veut pleinement remplir son rôle, il faut qu'elle réagisse rapidement aux changements qui surviennent en ce moment dans les relations internationales. Si elle veut avoir une influence sur le cours des événements actuels et refléter les vœux et les aspirations des peuples, l'ONU doit décider sans plus tarder l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme.

75. L'ONU, dans sa décision, doit insister auprès des puissances coloniales pour que celles-ci entament des négociations avec les représentants des peuples dépendants afin de conclure les accords qui en feront des peuples libres et indépendants; et il faut que ces puissances prennent toutes les mesures nécessaires au transfert de leurs pouvoirs aux peuples des territoires coloniaux sans condition ni réserve. C'est la tâche de l'ONU d'assurer l'exécution de ces dispositions. Elle se trouve devant une décision historique. Sous ce rapport, la responsabilité des délégations assemblées ici est non moins historique. Il faut maintenant que nous assumions cette responsabilité.

76. M. DJERDJA (Yougoslavie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je tiens à préciser, en montant à cette tribune, qu'il n'est pas dans mes intentions d'étudier quand et pourquoi le phénomène colonialiste a fait son apparition. Mon propos n'est pas non plus d'examiner comment, quand et pourquoi certains peuples de notre globe ont imposé leur domination à d'autres et les ont contraints à mener une vie privée de liberté, souvent proche de l'esclavage d'antan. Une littérature abondante a été consacrée à cette question et toute lumière a été faite sur cet aspect du colonialisme au cours des 14 précédentes sessions de cette assemblée. J'ajouterai seulement qu'il se trouve aujourd'hui de moins en moins de gens pour oser défendre ouvertement le colonialisme et pour oser affirmer que les relations coloniales peuvent se justifier dans le monde d'aujourd'hui. L'histoire du colonialisme et sa substance même ont été si bien mises en lumière et ont reçu une condamnation si unanime que, quoi que nous en pensions et quoi que nous essayions de faire dans la pratique, personne ne trouve plus le courage nécessaire pour s'identifier au colonialisme et prendre ouvertement son parti. Ce fait parle de lui-même.

77. Le présent débat a été provoqué par la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux présentée au cours de cette session par la délégation de l'URSS [A/4502 et Corr.1] Nous estimons donc que c'est le problème précis et complexe de l'ensemble des relations coloniales telles qu'elles existent actuellement qui devrait faire l'objet de notre discussion. Et, plus précisément encore, le problème des mesures concrètes que notre organisation et nous-mêmes devrions élaborer pour mettre fin à ces relations et faire disparaître de la société contemporaine les vestiges d'un système périmé.

78. Il ressort de tout ceci que le problème qui nous occupe se présente à nous dans une perspective assez nouvelle. En fait, jusqu'à présent nous avons abordé le colonialisme sous l'angle de ses aspects individuels en discutant les situations et les conflits des différentes colonies. Différentes circonstances, parmi lesquelles il faut compter l'évolution du colonialisme lui-même au cours de la dernière décennie, nous ont amenés à discuter aujourd'hui du colonialisme dans son ensemble et à chercher les moyens les plus directs de l'abolir complètement. Au cours des 15 dernières années, plusieurs dizaines de colonies sont venues occuper la place qui leur est due dans le monde et elles vivent et agissent maintenant parmi nous en tant qu'Etats libres et indépendants. Elles constituent la preuve vivante de la désuétude d'un système fondé sur le droit du plus fort. Dans notre société actuelle, les vestiges de ce système apparaissent comme des excroissances cancéreuses, suspectes et malsaines sur un corps sain. Quand même il n'y aurait pas d'autre raison de rechercher des moyens radicaux d'en finir avec les relations coloniales, le seul fait qu'elles puissent être comparées à des tumeurs dont la croissance menace d'empoisonner et de détruire un corps humain devrait suffire. La guerre de cinq ans menée contre le peuple algérien, la longue tragédie du Congo, pour ne citer qu'elles, confirment de façon sanglante que le colonialisme est une plaie suppurante qui menace la vie de notre communauté sociale et internationale.

79. Il paraît vraiment absurde qu'en 1960, au moment où nous partons à la conquête de l'univers et où l'humanité aborde une ère de progrès qu'on n'aurait pu imaginer il y a seulement quelques années, nous ayons à entamer de longs débats pour renoncer à garder un pied dans le XVII^e ou le XVIII^e siècle et nous débarrasser une fois pour toutes des préjugés et de l'héritage négatif du passé qui menacent de nous faire dangereusement rétrograder et de nous égarer plus dangereusement encore.

80. Aveuglés par ce héritage négatif et des avantages matériels plus suspects encore, les protagonistes du régime colonial ne parviennent pas à comprendre que leur situation et celle qu'a engendrée leur politique à courte vue ne sont plus défendables. Ils essaient obstinément de préserver les vestiges du passé. Pour sauver des privilèges égoïstes, ils se dressent contre les événements sans hésiter à employer la force pour en interrompre ou en dévier le cours, et provoquant inévitablement des crises et des conflits qui ne cessent de menacer la paix du monde. L'évolution anticoloniale, qui a changé l'aspect de continents entiers depuis la seconde guerre mondiale et de ce fait même l'aspect du reste du monde, est passée inaperçue aux yeux des défenseurs du colonialisme. Il semble qu'ils aient conclu de cette évolution et des autres améliorations analogues qui se sont produites au cours des 20 dernières années qu'ils devaient persévérer dans leur résistance et poursuivre leurs efforts pour interrompre ce processus de transformation par n'importe quel moyen.

81. Citons une fois de plus, comme illustration et comme preuve de nos assertions, l'exemple de l'Algérie et celui du Congo — non pas qu'ils soient les seuls, mais parce que leur drame sanglant, provoqué par la politique colonialiste, se déroule devant nos yeux. Nous nous devons de souligner une tendance qui s'est manifestée simultanément dans plusieurs capitales coloniales ces derniers temps, surtout sur le continent africain, tendance qui voudrait mettre au service de la politique colonialiste le mécanisme politique et militaire d'une coalition. Les périls actuels s'en trouveraient accrus dans des proportions alarmantes, ainsi que nos inquiétudes quant à la paix en Afrique et à l'avenir de ce continent qui risquerait de se trouver dangereusement entraîné dans la guerre froide.

82. Etant donné ces circonstances, nous avons d'abord discuté les problèmes coloniaux à la Quatrième Commission, et aussi ailleurs chaque fois qu'ils surgissaient. Il est donc normal que nous abordions ces problèmes en séance plénière avec la conviction qu'il est grand temps de prendre des dispositions pour abolir définitivement ce qui reste des relations coloniales. Il y a déjà longtemps que ces relations sont mûres pour la liquidation et tant qu'elles continuent d'exister leur influence pernicieuse menace le progrès et la paix du monde.

83. Au temps de la création de l'ONU, alors que la Charte était en voie d'élaboration, tout le monde avait paru tacitement ou explicitement s'accorder à considérer que les jours du colonialisme étaient comptés et que son abolition constituait l'une des principales tâches de l'ONU en même temps que le devoir essentiel des puissances coloniales à l'égard des peuples qu'elles ont soumis. Puisque tel semble être le cas, le texte de la Charte relatif au problème colonial n'est peut-être pas toujours précis, mais il est cependant assez clair et sans équivoque pour que nous puissions en saisir l'essence et sentir l'esprit qui l'anime.

84. C'est conformément à cet accord tacite ou explicite que d'importantes dispositions, contenues principalement dans les Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte, ont été consacrées aux colonies, parmi lesquelles nous plaçons aussi bien les territoires non autonomes que les territoires sous tutelle. Ces dispositions ont été élaborées et placées dans la Charte en collaboration avec les puissances coloniales, et il est bon de s'en souvenir lorsqu'on cherche à les interpréter et à définir les droits et les obligations de l'une ou l'autre partie. Il se peut que cette coopération des puissances coloniales ait été en partie due à l'enthousiasme général provoqué dans le monde par la victoire de la liberté sur le fascisme. S'il en est ainsi, la valeur des dispositions de la Charte à l'égard des colonies ne se trouve nullement diminuée, mais au contraire rehaussée, car alors un principe moral vient s'ajouter aux obligations juridiques formelles.

85. Pour nous, les Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte signifient en substance que les puissances coloniales ont le devoir de favoriser le progrès des pays qu'elles administrent, et d'amener ces peuples à l'indépendance par une gestion appropriée et sous le contrôle de l'ONU. Aucune limite de temps n'a été fixée, et les autres éléments individuels ont été mal définis, mais le sens et l'objectif final restent évidents. Sinon, pourquoi les chapitres de la Charte relatifs aux colonies auraient-ils été introduits dans un document que le monde entier considère, depuis qu'il existe, comme une charte de paix et de liberté universelles? Il est inimaginable que certains d'entre nous puissent prétendre que ces chapitres aient été rédigés et soient devenus l'un des éléments majeurs de la Charte de notre organisation, à seule fin de maintenir et de légaliser, d'une part, les droits et les privilèges des peuples les plus forts et les plus avancés, et, d'autre part, l'esclavage et la misère des nations plus faibles et moins développées.

86. Que dit le Chapitre XI de la Charte relatif aux territoires non autonomes sur les devoirs des puissances coloniales, et de l'administration coloniale à l'égard de ces territoires? En préambule, le Chapitre XI stipule que les puissances coloniales ont assumé comme une "mission sacrée" les obligations contenues dans les alinéas a et b de l'Article 73 qui sont ainsi libellés:

"a) D'assurer, en respectant la culture des populations en question, leur progrès politique, économique et social, ainsi que le développement de leur instruction, de les traiter avec équité et de les protéger contre les abus;

"b) De développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes, de tenir compte des aspirations politiques des populations et de les aider dans le développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques, dans la mesure appropriée aux conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations et à leurs degrés variables de développement."

87. Comme nous l'avons déjà dit, ce texte n'est peut-être pas suffisamment précis, et, si ces chapitres avaient été rédigés aujourd'hui, l'énoncé et la forme en auraient probablement été meilleurs. Mais il ne nous semble pas qu'il faille faire un grand effort pour saisir le sens profond de ces textes qui déclarent que tous les peuples coloniaux, sans distinction, ont été momentanément et illégalement privés de leurs droits fondamentaux et qu'ils ont droit au progrès et à l'indépendance nationale à laquelle l'administration coloniale doit les amener sous le contrôle de l'ONU.

88. Voyons maintenant ce que dit le Chapitre XII, Article 76, alinéa b, à propos des territoires sous tutelle:

"b) Favoriser le progrès politique, économique et social des populations des territoires sous tutelle ainsi que le développement de leur instruction; favoriser également leur évolution progressive vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes ou l'indépendance, compte tenu des conditions particulières à chaque territoire et à ses populations, des aspirations librement exprimées des populations intéressées et des dispositions qui pourront être prévues dans chaque accord de tutelle."

Tant par la forme que par l'expression, cette disposition nous paraît plus claire que les autres, mais les différences de mots ne peuvent dissimuler l'identité essentielle des buts, des missions et des obligations qu'ils recouvrent. Dans les deux cas, les puissances coloniales ont pour tâche de favoriser le progrès des colonies, de respecter leurs individualités, de protéger leurs populations contre l'arbitraire et l'injustice, enfin d'élaborer de libres institutions démocratiques fondées sur les aspirations de ces peuples à l'autonomie, à la liberté et à l'indépendance.

89. S'il s'agissait d'un document bureaucratique, on pourrait peut-être tirer certaines conclusions inspirées par le manque de précision et certains mots pris isolément. Mais, comme nous nous trouvons devant un document historique de la plus haute importance et d'une portée morale, politique et juridique considérable, nous devons l'envisager à la lumière des relations historiques et de leur évolution, et en pénétrer l'essence même et la signification profonde. En l'abordant de cette façon, nous ne pouvons en tirer d'autres conclusions que celles que nous n'avons cessé d'énoncer et de défendre — et cela bien avant la présente session de l'Assemblée générale — et que nous demandons à l'ONU d'adopter et de rendre effectives. L'interprétation et les conclusions différentes que les puissances coloniales ont tendance à adopter feraient de la Charte un document destiné à sanctionner et à perpétuer la subjugation de certains peuples par d'autres, ce qui constitue à nos yeux non seulement une absurdité juridique, mais encore une thèse moralement et politiquement insoutenable.

90. Quinze ans après la rédaction de la Charte de notre organisation, notre façon de comprendre et d'interpréter les Chapitres XI et XII relatifs aux colonies s'est trouvée confirmée, de façon indirecte, il est vrai, mais sérieuse, dans un important document de l'ONU auquel nous attachons d'autant plus de valeur qu'il a été élaboré en collaboration avec les représentants des puissances coloniales. Je veux parler du rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, rapport présenté cette année sous la cote A/4526 et qui a été discuté et accepté par la Quatrième Commission. Le Comité spécial des Six a été constitué à la suite de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale en date du 12 décembre 1959, avec pour mission de formuler ce que l'on a appelé les principes relatifs à certains aspects du colonialisme. Le Comité a mis au point un rapport dont le paragraphe 18 est rédigé comme suit:

"La Charte est un document vivant et l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits. Avec l'Article 73 de la Charte, les Membres des Nations Unies ont affirmé la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes et reconnu que le développement progressif de leur capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes doit tenir compte des conditions particulières de chaque territoire et des aspirations de ses populations. Ce développement doit s'harmoniser avec le mouvement vers la liberté et l'égalité qui se manifeste partout dans le monde." [A/4526, par. 18.]

91. Comment pouvons-nous interpréter ce texte autrement que comme la reconnaissance par les puissances coloniales, conformément à une interprétation exacte de la Charte, de l'obligation où elles se trouvent d'aider les colonies à réaliser leurs vœux et leurs aspirations et à obtenir leur droit fondamental à la liberté dont elles ont été privées pour la seule raison qu'elles étaient trop faibles pour s'opposer à l'oppression.

92. Si tel est le cas, et si les paroles et les écrits ont le moindre sens, nous pouvons affirmer qu'il ne peut plus guère y avoir de divergences de vue sur ce que la Charte déclare concernant le sort des colonies et l'avenir de leurs habitants, pas plus que sur les devoirs des puissances coloniales résultant des dispositions de la Charte.

93. Toutefois, une question se pose: pourquoi au cours des précédentes sessions, avons-nous été sans cesse appelés à résoudre des litiges, à mettre fin à des crises et à éteindre les incendies qui s'allumaient tantôt dans une colonie, tantôt dans une autre, comme cela se passe encore maintenant dans plus d'une région du globe? Pourquoi faut-il qu'à la session actuelle encore nous réaffirmions les objectifs de la Charte et les devoirs des puissances coloniales et que nous tentions d'abolir définitivement dans le domaine colonial des relations dont le maintien provoque tant d'incertitude et de malaise à travers le monde?

94. Nous pensons que la réponse à toutes ces questions se trouve dans les méthodes employées par les puissances coloniales pour l'administration et l'exploitation de leurs colonies.

95. Dans la pratique, la règle presque générale veut qu'il ne soit tenu compte ni des dispositions de la Charte, ni des obligations qui en découlent. Dans la plupart des colonies, les puissances coloniales et les colons se conduisent en propriétaires. Le sort de ces territoires repose entre leurs mains et ils ne veulent rendre de comptes à personne, pas plus à la communauté internationale qu'aux populations de ces pays. Même les puissances coloniales qui ont accepté de communiquer certains renseignements à l'ONU ne donnent aucune information politique et se refusent à tout contrôle et à toute initiative que l'ONU pourrait juger nécessaires.

96. Le Portugal et l'Espagne, par exemple, n'ont encore laissé aucun contact s'établir entre l'ONU et les territoires qu'ils administrent et n'ont donné à notre organisation aucune possibilité de savoir ce qui s'y passe. Pour ajouter à l'ironie du procédé, ils justifient leur attitude par des subterfuges juridiques en prétendant que ces territoires sont des provinces de la métropole et que toute action de l'ONU constituerait une intervention dans les affaires intérieures de ces deux Etats Membres.

97. Toutefois, on en sait suffisamment sur la situation qui règne dans les colonies, et, si l'on en juge par les événements en cours en Angola, au Mozambique, en Guinée portugaise et ailleurs, et dont les échos nous sont parvenus malgré les tentatives faites pour les tenir secrets, cette situation est inquiétante. La population est officiellement divisée en plusieurs classes, celle à laquelle appartient la population indigène étant évidemment la plus basse. Les indigènes, dont le nombre s'élève à 10 millions pour l'Angola et le Mozambique réunis, appartiennent à la catégorie des personnes "non civilisées" qui sont placées hors des lois du pays parce qu'elles sont jugées indignes d'en bénéficier. Seuls les colons et quelques personnes de race mélangée peuvent acquérir ces privilèges qui en font les égaux des Portugais devant la loi. C'est ainsi que, dans des territoires comptant plus de 10 millions d'habitants, seules 200.000 à 300.000 personnes jouissent des droits fondamentaux que leur concèdent les lois du pays, et, qui plus est, la majorité d'entre elles se compose de colons étrangers.

98. La Belgique n'a pas fait mieux dans ses propres colonies et elle continue. L'écrivain John Gunther, dans son livre célèbre Inside Africa, a donné, il y a quelque temps, une description effarante de ce qui se passe dans l'ancien Congo belge et ces faits ont été confirmés par d'autres sources. D'autre part, les renseignements qui ont été rendus publics en juin de cette année concernant la politique suivie depuis 85 ans dans le domaine de l'éducation et de la formation du personnel indigène pour un pays des dizaines de fois plus grand que la Belgique montrent que les résultats obtenus ont été inférieurs de beaucoup à ceux enregistrés dans le même domaine, pendant un laps de temps beaucoup plus court, par une seule petite commune belge. Le rôle joué par cette politique dans les tragiques événements du Congo n'apparaît que trop clairement. Aussi n'est-ce pas sans inquiétude que nous envisageons l'avenir du Ruanda-Urundi si l'ONU ne prend pas à temps les mesures nécessaires, car la Belgique y applique les mêmes méthodes.

99. Au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée il y a quelques semaines seulement, nous avons entendu la pétition présentée par le Sud-Ouestafricain que le Gouvernement de l'Union sud-africaine, au mépris de ses obligations et de la Charte, est en train d'essayer d'annexer. Cette pétition a révélé devant la Quatrième Commission que, dans ce pays qui est depuis 40 ans sous la domination de l'Union sud-africaine, les indigènes ayant reçu une instruction supérieure sont moins nombreux que les doigts de la main. Et le révérend Markus Kooper, appartenant au même pays, a déclaré à cette occasion que "dans les hôpitaux de Gobabis et de Kootsmanshoop, dont la création devait répondre aux critiques de l'ONU, les Africains sont parfois plus mal traités que des chiens"⁴.

100. Tout le monde connaît le drame qu'a vécu le Kenya au cours de ces dernières années et la lutte menée par ce peuple a déjà sa place dans l'histoire moderne. La paix et le calme qui règnent sur ce pays ressemblent étrangement, pour nous les observateurs éloignés, au silence des tombes que de longues persécutions ont éparpillées sur cette terre.

101. Nous pourrions poursuivre indéfiniment cette énumération, car toutes les colonies ont connu ou connaissent encore les épreuves qu'ont traversées l'Indochine et le Kenya et que traversent maintenant l'Algérie, l'Oman et bien d'autres.

102. La Quatrième Commission a cette année à son ordre du jour un document d'une importance exceptionnelle: le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes [A/4371] sur les progrès réalisés dans ces territoires au cours des 10 dernières années. Je n'en extrairai que quelques données économiques et quelques renseignements sur les problèmes raciaux.

103. Le paragraphe 95 du rapport, dans la section portant sur les conditions économiques, dit en substance ceci:

"Plus que tout autre secteur de l'activité économique des territoires, l'extraction minière était financée au moyen de capitaux provenant de l'extérieur et gérés par des groupes financiers non autochtones. L'effet direct des industries extractives sur l'amélioration du niveau de vie des populations n'a pas été appréciable, car le nombre des salariés employés par ces industries était généralement assez faible. Le plus souvent, la population autochtone ne tirait d'avantages directs de l'activité de ce secteur que par les emplois d'ouvriers non qualifiés qu'il lui offrait..." [A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 95.]

Ce qui signifie simplement que les colonialistes et les étrangers se sont approprié les principales richesses des territoires non autonomes.

104. Les données suivantes ont été ajoutées, entre autres, au paragraphe 53 du même rapport:

"Au Congo belge, par exemple, alors que le revenu individuel des Africains était en 1957 de 42,20 dollars, celui de non-Africains s'élevait à 2.973 dollars; dans la Fédération de Rhodésie et Nyassaland, les chiffres correspondants étaient de 39,20 et 1.711 dollars et, au Kenya, de 33,55 et 1.100 dollars." [A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 53.]

Tout commentaire nous paraît superflu, les faits parlent d'eux-mêmes.

105. Dans la plupart des colonies, ou, plus exactement, dans toutes les colonies africaines, les rapports entre les races sont troublés et tendus à l'extrême parce que, dans tous ces pays, la discrimination raciale réelle et juridiquement reconnue s'exerce au détriment des populations autochtones. Le monde entier sait cela, et je me contenterai de citer ce qu'en dit le rapport que j'ai déjà mentionné, à la section C, VI, paragraphe 177:

"La discrimination pour des raisons de race ou de couleur existait encore dans certains territoires non autonomes. Elle se manifestait sous sa forme la plus prononcée dans les territoires africains où se trouvent des groupes d'immigrants constitués en collectivités. Dans tous ces territoires les autochtones représentent la grande majorité de la population tandis que les Européens ne sont souvent qu'une très petite minorité jouissant néanmoins de privilèges économiques, sociaux et politiques spéciaux qui sont refusés aux autochtones. Non seulement le traitement dont font l'objet les autochtones est plus ou moins discriminatoire pour ce qui est des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, mais encore leur rôle dans le domaine de l'économie et de l'instruction est très limité, ainsi que dans celui de l'exercice des droits politiques." [A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 177.]

106. Je ne prendrai que l'exemple de la Rhodésie du Sud comme illustration concrète du rapport que je viens de citer. Les colons blancs ont partagé le territoire en zone noire et zone blanche, en se réservant comme toujours les meilleures terres. Ce qui signifie pratiquement que 3 millions d'Africains ont reçu 39 millions d'acres, tandis que moins de 250.000 blancs se sont attribué 48 millions d'acres de la meilleure terre du pays. En Rhodésie du Sud aucun Africain ne peut posséder de terre dans la zone blanche, il ne peut pas louer de bureau dans une zone urbaine ni se livrer au commerce dans une ville. Les affaires des Africains doivent se traiter dans les agglomérations réservées aux Africains.

107. Lorsque nous récapitulons ces faits que nous pourrions énumérer à l'infini, nous parvenons toujours à la même conclusion qu'une politique contraire à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Charte a été et est encore menée dans les colonies. Au lieu du progrès qui constitue l'un des objectifs majeurs de la Charte, on n'a constaté dans la plupart des colonies qu'une évolution minime quand ce n'était pas un recul, accompagnée d'une exploitation éhontée. Ceci n'est, en fait, qu'une des conséquences du colonialisme; sinon, nous ne serions pas chaque année à cette assemblée mis en présence des problèmes de plus en plus nombreux qu'il engendre dans les différentes parties du monde. Le colonialisme fait régner l'arbitraire et la brutalité au lieu de protéger les peuples contre les abus et l'illégalité. Et surtout il fait régner la discrimination raciale qui conduit à cette monstrueuse absurdité par laquelle, au XX^{ème} siècle et dans leur propre pays, des peuples doivent combattre pour se faire une place au moins égale à celle des dominateurs étrangers et des colons.

⁴/ Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Quatrième Commission, 1050ème séance.

108. Si nous considérons le problème colonial sous cet angle, nous arrivons à la conclusion que la politique coloniale, en foulant aux pieds les dispositions de la Charte, viole également les critères fondamentaux du monde civilisé. Même en admettant qu'il puisse y avoir plusieurs significations aux dispositions de la Charte relatives aux colonies, et qu'on puisse les interpréter différemment, nous aurions cependant le droit de prétendre que la politique menée dans les colonies et les actions qui y sont poursuivies sont sans aucun rapport avec ces dispositions.

109. Il faut que je cite, à ce propos, l'exemple de Malte, car il reproduit fidèlement le tableau que je viens de tracer. Ce territoire a joui d'une certaine autonomie entre 1947 et 1958, date à laquelle sa constitution a été abrogée. D'après cette constitution, les affaires étrangères et la défense étaient entre les mains du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Dans la nouvelle constitution que l'on prépare en ce moment, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni s'adjuge en plus les affaires intérieures et la police qui relevaient jusqu'à présent du Gouvernement maltais. Ce qui revient à dire qu'au lieu d'une évolution vers l'autonomie, la nouvelle constitution marquera un pas en arrière par rapport à l'ancienne. De plus, elle est rédigée de telle façon que la puissance coloniale puisse l'abroger quand bon lui semble, ce qui prouve qu'il ne saurait être question d'autonomie véritable.

110. Demander qu'il soit mis fin à l'existence du colonialisme et que l'ONU prenne des mesures énergiques à cet effet constitue la seule politique réaliste que cette organisation puisse adopter et le devoir primordial de toute la communauté internationale. Accepter que la situation actuelle se prolonge équivaldrait à faire courir les risques les plus graves aux intérêts de cette communauté en les abandonnant aux caprices d'une politique égoïste et à courte vue.

111. Le colonialisme est incompatible avec la marche de la société moderne vers le progrès et avec les intérêts de la communauté internationale actuelle. C'est pourquoi il n'a pu échapper à son destin et se désagréger rapidement depuis la seconde guerre mondiale. Il a presque disparu de l'Asie et du Moyen-Orient et ne cesse de reculer en Afrique. Les nombreuses colonies d'antan sont remplacées aujourd'hui par des Etats indépendants qui occupent des positions clefs dans l'évolution du monde vers la paix, l'indépendance et le progrès.

112. Néanmoins, bien qu'il n'apparaisse plus aujourd'hui que sous forme de vestiges, le colonialisme pose encore de nombreux et graves problèmes. Il est normal qu'à ce stade final du colonialisme les peuples dépendants réclament de plus en plus énergiquement la reconnaissance de leurs droits et la satisfaction de leurs aspirations. Mais la politique coloniale déclenche des crises, des conflits et même des guerres en essayant d'étouffer par la force et la répression ces justes exigences. Et c'est justement parce que les problèmes coloniaux sont souvent utilisés pour les besoins stratégiques de la guerre froide qu'il faut de toute urgence y apporter une solution qui s'intègre dans l'ensemble de nos efforts pour relâcher les tensions et maintenir la paix entre les peuples.

113. Il semble, en fait, que libérer les territoires coloniaux soit une des conditions sine qua non attachées à la réussite de cette entreprise. La paix est menacée de bien des manières, mais il nous semble que la principale source de danger réside dans la politique coloniale en raison des conflits qu'elle déchaine, tantôt sur un point du globe, tantôt sur un autre, et qui ne peuvent s'apaiser que par l'abolition du colonialisme et la satisfaction des justes aspirations des peuples dépendants.

114. Nous avons toujours considéré le colonialisme comme indéfendable et n'avons cessé de demander sa suppression pour des motifs juridiques, historiques, politiques et moraux. Mais, aujourd'hui, il se dresse comme une menace directe contre les intérêts les plus élevés de l'humanité et c'est au nom de ces intérêts que le monde doit faire disparaître sans hésiter une telle anomalie. La délégation yougoslave a toujours considéré qu'en formulant ce vœu elle servait l'intérêt général en même temps que les intérêts de son pays, et qu'elle sert même les intérêts bien compris des puissances coloniales auxquelles la poursuite opiniâtre d'une politique colonialiste fait courir les plus graves dangers.

115. Quel objectif les puissances coloniales cherchent-elles à atteindre en s'accrochant à une politique périmée et indéfendable? L'entretien de forces armées ruineuses et d'un énorme appareil d'oppression les épuise matériellement et moralement tout en ne servant à rien: c'est pour elles une charge écrasante et leur défaite n'en reste pas moins inévitable.

116. Notre organisation a largement contribué à accélérer le processus d'abolition du colonialisme et elle s'est efforcée, dans les limites de ses possibilités, d'aider les peuples colonisés à réaliser leurs légitimes aspirations. Grâce aux efforts de l'ONU, ce processus s'est généralement accompli assez vite et sans trop de difficultés, et beaucoup de problèmes complexes ont trouvé une solution plus facile et plus rapide grâce à son intervention. C'est pourquoi nous croyons que notre organisation a le pouvoir d'abolir le colonialisme et qu'elle en a le devoir envers l'histoire: son rôle à cet égard est essentiel et vital.

117. Au cours de la présente intervention, comme en d'autres occasions où des problèmes du même ordre avaient été abordés, nous avons adopté une position dont dépendent pour beaucoup le progrès du monde et la paix internationale. En tant que gardienne de la paix et instrument de coopération pacifique entre les nations, l'ONU nous paraît avoir la responsabilité particulière d'assurer l'avenir de la paix et du monde en général en prenant les décisions qui s'imposent. Le principe de l'abolition du colonialisme et sa mise en œuvre s'accordent avec les responsabilités de l'ONU et celles de la communauté internationale, ainsi qu'avec les droits des peuples coloniaux. Par conséquent, nous estimons qu'il est indispensable aujourd'hui d'appliquer ce principe.

118. Conformément à ces considérations, ma délégation acceptera et appuiera toutes les résolutions et les décisions pouvant conduire à l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme, à la reconnaissance inconditionnelle du droit des peuples coloniaux à l'indépendance, elle appuiera toute décision visant à faire disparaître rapidement des territoires d'Asie, d'Amérique latine et surtout d'Afrique les derniers vestiges d'un système qui est une plaie ouverte au flanc de la communauté internationale contemporaine et compromet gravement la paix du monde.

119. Pour conclure, je désire réserver à ma délégation le droit de prendre à nouveau la parole, le moment venu, dans la discussion de projets de résolution ou de déclarations.

La séance est levée à 12 h 45.

OCT 23 1961

ASSEMBLÉE
GÉNÉRALE

UN/SA COLLE

SÉANCE PLÉNIÈRE

Mercredi 30 novembre 1960,
à 15 heures

QUINZIÈME SESSION

Documents officiels

NEW YORK

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1093

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. FEKINI (Libye): Les débats actuels de l'Assemblée générale, tendant à l'adoption d'une Déclaration des Nations Unies concernant l'indépendance des pays et des peuples encore soumis à la domination étrangère et proclamant l'abolition immédiate et définitive du colonialisme, constitue une étape significative dans l'histoire de l'humanité. En prenant l'initiative d'une telle déclaration, l'Organisation des Nations Unies adopte, en fait, une importante mesure en vue de s'acquitter de l'un des engagements solennels auxquels ont souscrit les Etats Membres en assignant à l'Organisation internationale des buts précis, parmi lesquels celui de "développer entre les nations des relations amicales fondées sur le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes, et prendre toutes autres mesures propres à consolider la paix du monde".

2. Or il est à présent universellement reconnu que les pratiques du colonialisme, qui consistent purement et simplement en la domination de certains pays par d'autres pays et en l'assujettissement de certains peuples par d'autres peuples, constituent une violation flagrante du principe consacré par la Charte de "l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes"; de même que les pratiques du colonialisme, en maintenant un certain nombre de pays et leurs habitants sous la domination et l'exploitation d'autres pays, se trouvent être à l'origine des causes les plus évidentes des malaises, des manifestations de violence et des désordres qui agitent plusieurs parties du monde, faisant ainsi peser de graves menaces sur la paix et la sécurité internationales.

3. Le fait colonial, dans son acception historique, a trouvé son plein essor dans les ambitions d'expansion des puissances de l'Europe occidentale au cours — et particulièrement à la fin — du XIX^e siècle, ambitions d'expansion qui se sont réalisées aux dépens d'un grand nombre de pays d'Asie et d'Afrique. Née de préoccupations mercantiles au cours des siècles précédents, l'expansion coloniale a été essentiellement inspirée par des considérations de caractère économique et stratégique au cours des étapes historiques qui ont été caractérisées par l'industrialisation de l'Europe et qui ont été dominées par le besoin d'assurer l'acheminement des matières premières des colonies vers les métropoles, l'occupation des points stratégiques pour la surveillance des routes maritimes et terrestres et l'écoulement des produits manufacturés dans les marchés coloniaux.

4. Plus récemment, la colonisation a servi aussi de prétexte à la mainmise sur un certain nombre de pays, en Asie, en Afrique ou en Océanie, pour l'établissement de colonies de peuplement destinées à résoudre les problèmes de surpeuplement de certains pays européens.

5. L'épopée coloniale, comme se plaisent à l'appeler certains historiens de l'Europe occidentale, a eu, à côté de l'histoire chargée de ses expéditions militaires et de ses guerres d'occupation, ses missionnaires, ses philosophes et ses théoriciens, voire ses poètes et ses chansons épiques, ainsi que les fausses théories des races supérieures engagées dans de prétendues missions civilisatrices auprès de peuplades considérées comme arriérées ou inférieures.

6. Mais, malgré la variété des enseignes auxquelles ont recouru les puissances coloniales pour faire admettre à leurs opinions politiques mal averties ou à leurs parlements réticents les vastes dépenses nécessaires à leurs conquêtes, l'histoire de l'expansion coloniale a clairement révélé la réalité des mobiles matérialistes, dominés par l'amour du gain, souvent cyniques et égoïstes, qui ont inspiré ses auteurs.

7. Quoi qu'il en fût, le colonialisme a, le plus souvent, eu recours à la force des armes pour imposer la domination de pays sur d'autres pays et de peuples sur d'autres peuples. Cette domination, imposée par la force, a toujours souligné, aux yeux des peuples colonisés, le caractère illégal et immoral de la mainmise des puissances étrangères sur leurs richesses naturelles et de la subjugation à laquelle ils ont été assujettis. Les peuples colonisés ont opposé à la domination étrangère une résistance matérielle qui, parfois, s'est prolongée pendant des dizaines et des dizaines d'années, et leur soumission, loin d'être résignée, n'a souvent été que momentanée et cette résistance a saisi toutes les occasions pour se manifester dans les formes les plus variées.

8. Face à l'exploitation, aux injustices et aux provocations, les peuples colonisés ont opposé l'insoumission, les manifestations et parfois même les soulèvements, les rébellions et les révoltes. Le refus d'accepter la domination étrangère et la conscience qu'ont les peuples colonisés de leur droit à réaliser leurs aspirations nationales ont amené la naissance de mouvements nationalistes qui ont su donner à la révolte des sentiments populaires leurs moyens d'expression, la discipline de leur organisation et leurs moyens dynamiques d'action. Comme les hommes ont été épris de leurs droits individuels et de leurs libertés essentielles face à l'arbitraire de leurs princes ou de leurs Etats, les peuples colonisés ont été inspirés par le désir de jouir de leur dignité et le besoin de recouvrer leur liberté dans le cadre d'un contexte national formé au fur et à mesure des souffrances et des sacrifices et guidé par l'idéal de l'indépendance nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale. L'histoire contemporaine de l'Asie et de l'Afrique est dominée par cette lutte des peuples assujettis par les puissances coloniales et opprimés par la mainmise des forces de l'exploitation sur leurs richesses naturelles. Les idéaux et les réactions étant les mêmes malgré la diversité ethnique et l'éloignement géographique, les peuples colonisés et dominés par l'étranger ont trouvé, dans leurs élans successifs, des encouragements dans les succès de ceux qui les ont précédés dans la lutte. Il s'est établi ainsi, de par le monde, un vaste mouvement de solidarité, d'abord spontané, ensuite raisonné et enfin convenu et organisé, entre tous les peuples soumis à la domination étrangère, mouvement qui devait, à la suite de la seconde guerre mondiale, constituer l'un des éléments les plus importants de l'histoire de la deuxième moitié du XX^{ème} siècle. Ce vaste mouvement de libération, tendant à réaliser les aspirations de tous les peuples soumis à la domination étrangère, à assurer le triomphe de la dignité des peuples opprimés et à accélérer leur libération du joug colonialiste, a trouvé ses moyens d'expression et le fondement de ses principes dans la constitution de la Ligue des Etats arabes à l'issue de la seconde guerre mondiale, dans la réunion de la Conférence des Etats africano-asiatiques, tenue à Bandoung en 1955 qui a élaboré, en quelque sorte, la charte de l'anticolonialisme et dans les conférences panafricaines qui se sont succédé depuis la réunion d'Accra de 1958, jusqu'à la plus récente conférence tenue par les Etats indépendants d'Afrique à Addis-Abéba au cours du mois de juin 1960.

9. Dans cette évolution historique du mouvement tendant à l'abolition du colonialisme et de l'exploitation des peuples par d'autres peuples, il est certain que les principes de la Charte de l'Atlantique et les buts, idéaux et principes de la Charte des Nations Unies ont joué un rôle déterminant auquel s'est joint l'apport efficace de tout un mouvement d'opinion favorable à la libération des peuples colonisés, mouvement qui n'a pas manqué de se manifester et de s'imposer grâce à son humanisme, à sa clairvoyance et à son élévation de pensée et de sentiment, même dans les pays qui sont malheureusement encore dominés par les forces de la réaction colonialiste. L'aptitude qu'ont montrée les pays jadis soumis à la domination étrangère à gérer leurs propres affaires et le sens des responsabilités dont ils ont fait preuve en s'acquittant de leurs obligations comme membres souverains de la famille des nations ont démontré, de la façon la plus claire, l'inanité des arguments, entre autres celui du manque de préparation, dont les puissances colonisatrices tendent à se prévaloir pour maintenir leur hégémonie et leur domination. Le sens exemplaire du sacrifice, qu'ont illustré, par leur lutte armée contre les forces de l'oppression coloniale, les peuples qui se sont résolus aux moyens ultimes pour faire prévaloir leurs aspirations nationales, a fait réfléchir les puissances coloniales qui n'ont vu d'autre solution, pour sauver leurs intérêts, que l'accélération du processus d'émancipation des peuples soumis à leur domination et qui risquaient de recourir aux mêmes méthodes pour atteindre leurs objectifs.

10. C'est ainsi qu'une procédure d'autoliquidation du colonialisme — de décolonisation comme on l'appelle aujourd'hui — a permis aux Nations Unies d'accueillir dans leur sein, au cours de ces dernières années et plus particulièrement récemment encore, un grand nombre de nations africaines enfin libérées de la domination coloniale étrangère.

11. Mais, hélas! il reste encore beaucoup à faire. Dans plusieurs points du monde en général, et en particulier en Afrique et dans le Moyen-Orient, des dizaines de millions d'êtres opprimés, mais épris de liberté et de dignité et pleinement conscients de leurs droits naturels et légitimes à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance, luttent courageusement contre les forces aveugles de l'exploitation et de l'oppression coloniales. C'est ainsi qu'en Algérie, en Palestine, dans le sud de la péninsule Arabique et dans diverses parties du continent africain, les peuples autochtones se révoltent contre l'occupation étrangère de leur territoire national et luttent contre les abus, les injustices, les privations, l'oppression et l'arbitraire. Dans toutes ces parties du monde, les peuples intéressés paient de leur sang, de leur douleur et de leurs larmes un lourd tribut en vue du triomphe de la cause de leur liberté, de leur dignité et de la sauvegarde de l'intégrité de leur patrimoine national et, si ces peuples consentent volontiers des sacrifices considérables, c'est précisément parce qu'ils ne désespèrent pas de la victoire de leur juste lutte dans un monde où les forces de l'équité, de la justice et de la morale trouvent leur expression la plus éloquente dans les principes, les buts et les idéaux de la Charte des Nations Unies.

12. Il est fort significatif, en effet, que les auteurs de la Charte aient voulu établir les fondements de l'ordre nouveau, l'ordre des Nations Unies, sur la résolution solennelle des peuples des Nations Unies à proclamer à nouveau leur foi "dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites" et "à favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande".

13. C'est précisément ce souci primordial de la dignité et de la valeur de la personne humaine qui a été à l'origine de la proclamation solennelle de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme qui constitue certainement une marque historique dans la lutte pour le triomphe des droits individuels et des libertés essentielles.

14. Mais non moins important est le souci des Nations Unies de réaliser cette liberté dans le cadre de l'égalité des nations, grandes et petites. Les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte sont consacrés aux obligations envers les territoires non encore autonomes et les territoires placés sous un régime international de tutelle. Durant les 15 dernières années, les Nations Unies ont consacré leurs efforts les plus diligents à faire prévaloir les dispositions de la Charte relatives à ces deux catégories de territoires et qui consistent essentiellement à assurer le progrès politique, économique et social des populations et à développer leur capacité à s'administrer elles-mêmes, à tenir compte de leurs aspirations politiques, à les aider dans le développement progressif de leurs institutions politiques et à favoriser leur évolution progressive vers la capacité à s'administrer elles-mêmes ou vers l'indépendance.

15. Au cours de ces 15 dernières années, les peuples dépendants, c'est-à-dire les peuples soumis à la domination étrangère, ont saisi toutes les occasions pour exprimer leur désir le plus ardent et le plus sincère de jouir de leur liberté, de leur dignité et de la maîtrise de leurs destinées. Ceux d'entre eux qui ont vu se réaliser leurs aspirations nationales se sont fait un devoir de faire entendre sur la scène internationale la voix des peuples encore opprimés et se sont faits les interprètes de leurs aspirations légitimes à la dignité humaine et à l'indépendance nationale.

16. Certains des peuples dépendants se sont résolus, comme nous l'avons précédemment indiqué, devant les injustices, les incompréhensions et les provocations, à utiliser les moyens ultimes pour faire prévaloir leurs droits. Il en est résulté des situations tragiques et des guerres meurtrières qui menacent sérieusement la paix et la sécurité internationales. La guerre, longue et douloureuse, qui se déroule depuis plus de six ans en Algérie entre les forces du nationalisme et les armées de l'oppression colonialiste, offre à cet égard un exemple combien douloureux et combien alarmant!

17. La raison principale de ces manifestations de violence, de ces heurts et de ces remous, de l'instabilité et du malaise qui, à l'heure présente et au cours des années qui ont suivi la seconde guerre mondiale, ne cessent de faire leur apparition sur la scène des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique soumis à la domination étrangère, la raison principale, dis-je, a été précisément l'échec des puissances coloniales dans leur prétendue mission civilisatrice et dans la vocation humaine dont elles se sont prévaluées pour soumettre à leur joug les populations locales. Le déni de la dignité humaine, l'ignorance des revendications des masses autochtones et la négation des libertés fondamentales ont été malheureusement rendus encore plus intolérables par les pratiques de la discrimination et de la ségrégation raciales dont ont souffert la plupart des peuples qui ont eu le mauvais sort de tomber sous la coupe de la domination coloniale étrangère.

18. L'instruction des masses autochtones, l'amélioration de leur situation sanitaire, l'élévation de leur niveau de vie et leur préparation à la tâche d'assumer la responsabilité de diriger leurs propres affaires n'ont pas reçu, de la part des autorités administrantes, toute l'attention souhaitée et désirable.

19. Ceux des peuples qui ont pu réaliser leurs aspirations nationales ont immédiatement compris l'énorme responsabilité face à laquelle se sont aussitôt trouvés leurs dirigeants, car presque tout était à faire. Certes, des travaux de grande envergure ont été réalisés dans les pays dominés par les puissances étrangères; des ponts, des ports, des routes ont été construits et d'autres réalisations semblables ont été accomplies; mais il est évident que ces réalisations étaient destinées à la bonne conduite des entreprises coloniales, afin d'assurer une meilleure rentabilité économique, au bénéfice quasi unique de leurs propres auteurs. Mais il est encourageant, pour toutes les parties en cause, de constater que le passé colonial, quelque chargé qu'il soit, n'a donné lieu presque nulle part à des amertumes et à des soubresauts qui auraient été compréhensibles, et n'a pas suscité chez les populations libérées des mouvements de rancœur, de vengeance ou de xénophobie. Au contraire, dans la plupart des pays jadis soumis à la domination européenne, dont le nôtre, les communautés étrangères continuent de vivre dans l'hospitalité, la tranquillité et un bien-être et une prospérité économiques de plus en plus grands. Le souci qu'affectent certaines puissances coloniales de maintenir leur hégémonie en vue d'assurer la sécurité et la tranquillité des minorités européennes n'a pas de raison valable et ne sert, en vérité, qu'à fournir un prétexte pour faire durer les privilèges colonialistes; il ne sert qu'à nourrir les désirs de domination et à perpétuer les appétits de grandeur et de profit.

20. Quelle que soit l'habileté du colonialisme à maintenir sa présence par une domination indirecte, économique, technique ou sous quelque autre forme que ce soit, cette habileté ne servira à rien devant l'éveil des peuples et leur prise de conscience dans tous les domaines.

21. Les Nations Unies, en continuant de s'acquitter de leurs obligations solennelles, en s'efforçant de créer les conditions d'une paix durable et d'un bien-être universel dans le respect du principe des droits égaux des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes, se doivent de se prononcer pour la fin de l'exploitation des peuples par les peuples en proclamant solennellement la nécessité urgente de mettre une fin rapide et inconditionnelle au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

22. Au moment où l'on reconnaît le désir profond qui anime tous les peuples dépendants de réaliser leurs aspirations à la liberté et à l'indépendance, les Nations Unies ont le devoir de dénoncer le caractère immoral, illicite et contraire aux principes de la Charte de toute soumission des peuples à la sujétion, à la domination et à l'exploitation étrangère. Tous les peuples ont en effet le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes, de déterminer librement leur statut politique et d'assurer leur développement économique, social et culturel.

23. Convaincues que le maintien du colonialisme s'oppose à leur idéal de paix universelle, les Nations Unies ont le devoir de déclarer que toute action armée ou toute mesure de répression dirigée contre les peuples dépendants doit cesser afin que ces peuples puissent exercer dans la paix et la liberté leur droit à l'indépendance complète et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national.

24. Conformément aux impératifs de la morale internationale, telle qu'elle trouve son expression dans la grande majorité de la communauté internationale, il est particulièrement urgent que les Nations Unies se prononcent solennellement pour que des mesures immédiates soient prises, dans tous les pays dépendants, sous quelque forme de sujétion qu'ils se trouvent et quelles que soient les fictions auxquelles on a recouru pour les y maintenir, afin que tous les pouvoirs soient transférés aux peuples de ces pays, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, de préférence avec les garanties internationales requises.

25. Compte tenu de toutes ces considérations, un certain nombre de délégations, dont la nôtre, ont présenté à l'attention de l'Assemblée générale un projet de déclaration [A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2], destiné à exprimer la volonté de tous les peuples de la terre de voir mettre définitivement fin au colonialisme et de consacrer le droit des peuples encore dépendants à jouir de leur liberté, de leur indépendance nationale et de leur intégrité territoriale, dans les délais les plus brefs.

26. Ce projet, conçu dans les termes les plus nobles et les plus modérés, est un effort aussi sincère que réaliste pour faire définitivement triompher les principes des Nations Unies et leur idéal d'égalité entre les peuples et de dignité des êtres humains. Ce projet est un témoignage de bonne foi et de bonne volonté fort éloigné de toute manifestation d'aigreur ou de démagogie. En l'adoptant, l'Assemblée générale, nous en sommes convaincus, prendra une position à la mesure des temps et à la hauteur de la noblesse de sa mission dans le monde.

27. La portée morale d'une telle déclaration, en fortifiant les espoirs des peuples opprimés et qui luttent courageusement pour le triomphe de leurs aspirations légitimes, permettra à l'ONU de réaliser les conditions d'un monde dominé par la liberté, le droit et la consécration des valeurs humaines.

28. Je voudrais dire à l'Union soviétique, au nom de la délégation libyenne, combien nous lui savons gré d'avoir pris l'initiative de demander l'inclusion de cette importante question à l'ordre du jour de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale [A/4501] et d'avoir insisté sur l'opportunité d'en discuter solennellement, directement en séance plénière. Je m'empresse de rassurer la délégation soviétique en lui déclarant que nous avons étudié le projet de déclaration [A/4502 et Corr.1] qu'elle a soumis, avec la plus grande attention. Je voudrais souligner que nous avons constaté une unité de vues et d'objectifs parfaite entre leur projet de résolution et le nôtre. C'est uniquement pour assurer à cette question un examen objectif et dénué de toute considération étrangère à son but véritable que nous avons pris l'initiative de nous associer à un certain nombre de délégations d'Asie et d'Afrique pour présenter le projet de déclaration contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2 en le recommandant à l'attention de l'Assemblée générale dans l'espoir de le voir examiné dans son vrai contexte et approuvé pour ses propres mérites.

29. J'aimerais également faire une anticipation en exprimant notre appréciation aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique pour avoir annoncé de leur côté un programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance et le développement de l'Afrique. Nous examinerons cette proposition avec le même intérêt lorsque viendra le temps de l'étudier en Première Commission. Qu'il me soit permis de remarquer que l'intérêt que portent les deux plus grandes puissances du monde actuel à l'indépendance des peuples est très significatif à bien des égards.

30. Je conclus en exprimant l'espoir le plus sincère de notre délégation de voir s'ouvrir une ère nouvelle dans l'histoire de l'humanité où les peuples, finalement affranchis de la domination des puissances, mettront leur énergie au service de la paix immortelle, de la coopération fructueuse dans un monde meilleur où régnera l'ordre humain des Nations Unies.

M. Nesbitt (Canada), vice-président, prend la présidence.

31. M. TARABANOV (Bulgarie): A l'heure actuelle, après l'introduction du projet de déclaration sur l'abolition du système colonial et l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux, tous, même les défenseurs les plus farouches du régime colonial, s'accordent à reconnaître que le colonialisme a vécu. Parfois, cependant, ces derniers ont recours à des formules vraiment pittoresques pour exprimer une opinion qui ne suit pas le courant général des idées qui prédominent maintenant dans la conscience de l'humanité tout entière sur l'abolition du colonialisme. Ils s'évertuent, en effet, à trouver des expressions comme celle qui qualifie le colonialisme de "notion démodée des rapports politiques", pour se soustraire bien sûr à la nécessité de prendre une position claire et nette sur une question aussi vitale que celle de l'abolition du colonialisme à notre époque ou bien pour préparer le terrain et des positions spéciales qui leur permettraient d'entreprendre une défense en règle du système colonial sous des formes nouvelles.

32. Or, la déclaration sur l'abolition du colonialisme, proposée par l'Union soviétique, est un document d'une portée telle et marque un tel tournant dans l'histoire de cette question qu'il est difficile même pour ceux qu'intéresse l'exploitation coloniale, ainsi qu'à leurs amis et alliés, de défendre la continuation du régime colonial. Le colonialisme a causé trop de souffrances inouïes et incalculables à l'humanité tout entière et tout spécialement aux peuples coloniaux pour que l'on puisse maintenant, ouvertement et facilement, prendre sa défense. Pendant des siècles, en effet, les peuples coloniaux ont été soumis à un régime horrible d'exploitation et de privation des droits humains les plus élémentaires. Nous ne voudrions pas insister sur certains faits de l'histoire du colonialisme qui, pour le moment, n'auront pas une influence directe sur le développement de la question et sur les décisions à prendre en ce qui concerne l'abolition du système colonial, tels que l'extermination de peuples entiers pour faire place aux colons blancs. Ce sont des faits historiques qui peuvent cependant donner une idée de la férocité avec laquelle la colonisation a été réalisée.

33. Mais ce qui est plus important, c'est de constater qu'à l'heure actuelle, 15 ans après la création de notre organisation et l'institution du régime défini dans les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte des Nations Unies, en ce qui concerne les colonies, la situation des peuples qui souffrent encore sous le joug colonial ne s'est guère améliorée par rapport à celle qui prédominait dans le passé.

34. En effet, par suite du fait que l'économie des pays coloniaux est la plus arriérée du monde, que l'agriculture se trouve encore dans ces pays à une étape comparable à celle du Moyen Age en Europe, que les terres fertiles ont été aménagées par les colons blancs, tandis que la population indigène est empilée dans des terres pauvres et arides, que l'industrie est très arriérée et que les entreprises industrielles se trouvent dans leur quasi-totalité entre les mains des colonisateurs qui exploitent aussi toutes les richesses naturelles des colonies, les peuples coloniaux continuent à vivre dans une misère effroyable et la mortalité dans les colonies reste si élevée que même les chiffres ne suffisent plus à exprimer l'état de détresse dans lequel sont plongées ces populations. Bref, la sueur et le sang des peuples coloniaux se trouvant encore sous le joug colonialiste, l'exploitation impitoyable de la main-d'œuvre et des richesses naturelles des colonies continuent encore à apporter des profits fabuleux à ceux qui, par l'entremise de leurs représentants, cherchent à nous convaincre de leur mission sacrée et civilisatrice et de leurs efforts sincères pour conduire les peuples coloniaux à l'indépendance.

35. Les résultats de cette mission civilisatrice ne sont que trop évidents et trop bien connus. Nous ne voudrions pas nous arrêter sur le niveau de vie de la population des colonies. Des chiffres ont été présentés ici par d'autres délégations, et cela en abondance. Il suffit peut-être de signaler que, dans la plupart des colonies, le revenu par tête d'habitant indigène est souvent de quelques dizaines de fois inférieur au revenu par tête d'habitant des colons blancs.

36. La liste des prétendues beautés du système colonial ne finit certainement pas là. Il y a plus. La population indigène est soumise à un régime monstrueux et à une discrimination raciale même dans son pays natal, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, en Angola, au Mozambique, en Rhodésie du Sud et ailleurs. En effet, la population indigène n'est pas traitée comme si elle était composée d'êtres humains. Elle est traitée comme si elle était du bétail. Les colonisateurs ignorent non seulement les intérêts, mais encore la vie même, l'existence de cette population.

37. Il est compréhensible, dans ces conditions, que des appels aient été lancés ici par certains représentants tendant à ce qu'on ne ressuscite pas, dans la discussion actuelle, l'histoire horrible du colonialisme, qu'on ne ressuscite surtout pas certains cas spéciaux du colonialisme, particulièrement abjects. Certains orateurs sont même allés jusqu'à prétendre que ce serait introduire le langage de la guerre froide que de s'arrêter sur des cas portant sur les aspects les plus laids du colonialisme.

38. Certes, nous, les représentants des pays socialistes, nous voudrions arriver à une solution du problème de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux et ne pas nous occuper de toute l'histoire des crimes du colonialisme et de certains cas particuliers. C'est d'ailleurs la même position, la même attitude que nous avons eues et que nous avons sur toutes les questions, pour autant que l'on ne recourt pas à des méthodes spéciales, afin de différer et même d'empêcher les solutions qui s'imposent et cela nous l'avons démontré à plusieurs reprises. Certes, nous ne voudrions pas introduire de l'acrimonie dans les débats sur les questions en discussion, en Assemblée générale ou dans les commissions. Cependant, nous ne pouvons pas nous résigner à de simples déclarations, à des vœux pieux pour une solution juste et adéquate des questions qui sont posées devant l'Assemblée générale, si et lorsque des tentatives sont faites par les représentants de certains pays dans le dessein de détourner l'attention pour éviter de prendre les décisions qui s'imposent. Il faut constater avec regret que, dans la discussion actuelle, des tentatives ont été faites par les représentants de certaines puissances coloniales, non seulement dans le dessein de présenter le colonialisme le plus abject sous un jour favorable, mais aussi pour le représenter comme un bienfait pour les peuples coloniaux soumis pendant des dizaines d'années et même pendant des siècles au joug colonial. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, par exemple, a essayé de faire sortir la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux du cadre d'une question coloniale et de la transporter sur un terrain qui lui aurait donné, pensait-il, la possibilité de chercher à frustrer les peuples coloniaux, luttant pour leur libération, et qui attendent avec impatience une décision de notre assemblée, d'une solution favorable de cette question. Il a fait des efforts pour transplanter la discussion sur un autre terrain, sur le terrain de la guerre froide sur lequel, si nous le suivions, nous aurions des arguments vraiment efficaces et beaucoup plus nombreux encore et non des arguments comme les siens qui ont fait long feu.

39. Certains représentants des puissances coloniales sont venus ici, aussi bien au cours du débat actuel que dans d'autres discussions qui ont eu lieu aux Nations Unies, défendre d'une manière dissimulée le système colonial. Le colonialisme, sous sa forme classique, nous ont-ils dit, est mort ou du moins il est moribond. Les puissances coloniales elles-mêmes ont octroyé l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux. Pourquoi, alors, faut-il discuter, nous demande-t-on, en si grand détail, la question du colonialisme? Pourquoi envisager des mesures aussi urgentes contre un système qui s'en va de lui-même et de son propre gré?

40. Il serait difficile de trouver une affirmation aussi éloignée de la vérité que celle-là. A l'heure actuelle, plus de 100 millions d'hommes se trouvent encore sous le joug colonial. Pas un jour ne se passe sans que la presse et la radio ne nous informent des répressions les plus cruelles contre les peuples coloniaux. Non seulement le colonialisme et les colonialistes ne veulent pas lâcher leur proie, mais, sentant que la fin de leur règne approche de plus en plus, ils deviennent parfois beaucoup plus agressifs et beaucoup plus féroces. Là où les puissances coloniales ne sont plus en état de résister à la pression des masses populaires, elles font des concessions politiques, s'efforçant toutefois de préserver leurs positions économiques, stratégiques ou autres. Si ces dernières sont en danger, ils ont recours à tout moyen à leur disposition, y compris la force armée, pour essayer de les préserver. Là où ils ne sont pas en état de le faire tout seuls, ils reçoivent l'aide d'autres puissances coloniales et impérialistes, leurs alliés.

41. Cette politique agressive du colonialisme crée des dangers énormes pour l'humanité tout entière, car le colonialisme et ses méthodes pour imposer la politique coloniale ont toujours été liés et ont toujours mené à la guerre. Dans la situation actuelle, où il existe des armes de destruction massive, telles que les armes nucléaires, l'humanité ne peut plus se permettre de garder, pour une période indéfinie, des foyers aussi chargés de conflits et de possibilités de guerre.

42. Dans la défense en règle, entreprise par le représentant du Royaume-Uni, de la politique coloniale, et dans la recherche de justifications contre la nécessité d'accorder immédiatement l'indépendance aux colonies, il a apporté des arguments qui, à l'heure actuelle, sont empreints d'une logique étrange et tout à fait déplacée. Il a essayé, en effet, de nous démontrer que certains petits peuples et petits territoires ne devraient pas bénéficier d'une indépendance immédiate. Cependant, il serait vain de fouiller la Charte des Nations Unies pour trouver un texte qui établirait une discrimination entre les petits peuples et les grands peuples. Qui plus est, nous avons déjà parmi nous plusieurs pays dont les populations, comme vous le savez, ne dépassent pas 1 million d'habitants. Nous pensons qu'on ne saurait nier la liberté à ces peuples coloniaux qui souffrent toujours sous le joug colonial à cause des raisons artificielles qui ont été avancées par le représentant de la Grande-Bretagne. Il a été également affirmé que ces petites colonies avaient et auraient besoin d'une assistance financière et d'une protection spéciale pour survivre. Permettez-nous de douter de soucis aussi soi-disant généreux de la part de colonialistes à l'égard de ceux qu'ils ont jusqu'à maintenant opprimés.

43. En ce qui concerne l'assistance financière, le bilan a toujours été en faveur de la puissance colonialiste, comme on le sait. Quant à la protection dont ces petits pays auraient besoin, pourquoi ne pas leur donner la liberté de choisir, de dire leur opinion?

44. Il a été fait mention d'une autre catégorie de pays où vivent côte à côte plusieurs races et tribus et dans lesquels "des groupes ... parfois africains, parfois européens, parfois asiatiques ... craignent d'être lésés le jour où sera proclamée l'indépendance", nous a-t-on affirmé.

45. De quels groupes s'agit-il? S'il est question des colons blancs qui ont profité de la colonisation et de l'exploitation des populations indigènes, il sera certainement difficile de convaincre les peuples coloniaux et l'opinion publique mondiale qu'il faut continuer le régime colonial dans ces pays pour préserver les privilèges monstrueux de ces minorités.

46. En ce qui concerne les autres communautés, il est notoire que la politique colonialiste a toujours cherché à créer des conflits entre elles, afin de pouvoir les subjuguer et les tenir en esclavage plus facilement. Tous ces problèmes artificiels disparaîtront d'eux-mêmes dès qu'un régime de démocratie et d'indépendance sera instauré dans les pays dont il est question, si les colonisateurs ne cherchent pas à intervenir de nouveau dans les affaires intérieures des pays qui seront libérés.

47. Tous ces arguments et ceux qui ont été avancés sur les bienfaits de la politique colonialiste sont présentés ici, comme nous l'avons déjà souligné, dans le but de chercher à détourner l'attention de la question principale qui est maintenant en discussion ici — l'octroi de l'indépendance immédiate aux peuples coloniaux — afin de chercher à différer une décision et de poursuivre la domination coloniale jusqu'au moment où il sera possible aux puissances coloniales de trouver d'autres formes et d'autres moyens pour régner sur leurs anciennes colonies. C'est cela qui nous oblige à revenir sur certains arguments et sur certaines affirmations qui ont été à plusieurs reprises employés ici par les représentants des puissances coloniales.

48. Nous avons entendu en effet à plusieurs reprises souligner ici que, depuis 1939, 500 millions d'hommes et de femmes qui se trouvaient anciennement sous la domination britannique avaient accédé à la liberté et à l'indépendance et que leurs représentants siégeaient

ici. Cela, c'est un fait incontestable. Mais ce qui est étrange, dans ce cas, c'est que le représentant du Royaume-Uni ne se soit pas gêné pour revendiquer, pour son gouvernement et pour les colonialistes anglais en général, l'honneur d'avoir promu ce développement historique. On a voulu nous convaincre que la politique coloniale britannique était une politique éclairée et que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni aurait grandement contribué à la libération des anciennes colonies.

49. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni compte probablement sur une courte mémoire des peuples coloniaux, ou espère que la joie de l'indépendance leur a fait oublier l'affreuse réalité du passé, l'horreur du joug colonial et les luttes longues et héroïques qu'ils ont menées pour parvenir à la libération et à l'indépendance. Le fait qu'il n'en est pas ainsi et qu'il n'en sera pas ainsi aussi longtemps qu'existera la domination coloniale sur notre planète a été largement démontré dans les discussions qui ont eu lieu ici depuis le commencement du débat sur la liquidation du colonialisme. Si je touche à ce sujet, ce n'est pas pour démontrer une chose qui est évidente, mais pour rafraîchir un peu la mémoire de certains délégués et leur faire comprendre que des affirmations à la légère n'ont pas cours devant l'opinion publique mondiale.

50. Les représentants du Royaume-Uni ont plusieurs fois répété que c'était grâce à la politique promue par les colonialistes anglais que des centaines de millions d'êtres humains avaient obtenu la liberté et l'indépendance. La réalité, cependant, est tout autre. Si nous voulons en effet connaître quelle a été la politique du Royaume-Uni durant toute la période pendant laquelle un grand nombre de colonies britanniques ont accédé à l'indépendance, il faut nous fier, non pas aux déclarations des hommes politiques du Royaume-Uni, faites après que ce développement historique eut été consommé — telles que les déclarations du Premier Ministre actuel du Royaume-Uni ou du représentant de ce pays à l'ONU, M. Ormsby-Gore, que je ne veux pas citer ici, car elles sont bien connues — mais aux déclarations et aux actions des hommes politiques et des dirigeants britanniques au moment même où ces décisions ont été prises et où ces événements se sont déroulés.

51. C'est pourquoi nous voudrions nous référer aux déclarations des hommes politiques les plus éminents du Royaume-Uni au moment même où l'une des plus grandes colonies britanniques, l'Inde, devait accéder à l'indépendance.

52. Ouvrant le débat le 5 mars 1947 sur la décision du gouvernement travailliste de transférer le pouvoir en Inde dans 14 mois, sir Stafford Cripps déclarait entre autres que le gouvernement était en face de deux possibilités:

"... En premier lieu, il pouvait essayer de renforcer le contrôle britannique en Inde en augmentant le personnel des services du secrétariat d'Etat et en renforçant considérablement les troupes britanniques, afin d'être en état de maintenir notre responsabilité administrative" ... (Remarquez que c'est du même terme inoffensif que se sert aujourd'hui M. Ormsby-Gore pour décrire le joug colonial britannique.) "aussi longtemps que nécessaire, en attendant un accord entre les communautés hindoues. Une telle politique aurait eu pour résultat une décision bien déterminée de rester en Inde pendant au moins 15 ou 20 ans ... La seconde solution était d'admettre que la première solution n'était pas possible ... Une chose était évidemment impossible, c'était de décider d'y maintenir notre responsabilité pour une période indéfinie, lorsque nous n'avions pas la force pour le faire."

53. Donc, d'après les déclarations de sir Stafford Cripps, le Royaume-Uni s'est vu obligé de reconnaître l'indépendance à l'Inde parce qu'il ne possédait pas la force nécessaire pour pouvoir s'y maintenir.

54. Prenant la parole au nom de l'opposition, sir Winston Churchill a déclaré:

"Nous nous dissocions de la politique indienne du gouvernement et rejetons toute responsabilité pour les conséquences qui vont assombrir et couvrir de sang les prochaines années."

55. Voilà ce que disait sir Winston Churchill en 1947, tandis que M. Ormsby-Gore cherche à nous représenter la politique britannique de cette époque comme une politique visant à amener la libération des peuples coloniaux.

56. Plus loin, sir Winston Churchill soulignait que, si le Royaume-Uni ne possédait pas "la force militaire et la volonté nécessaires pour régler ses affaires en Inde d'une manière judicieuse ..." — et cette manière judicieuse, d'après lui, consistait en la continuation du joug colonial en Inde et en l'instauration d'un gouvernement qui devait suivre les injonctions de la politique britannique — il ne devrait pas au moins finir "par un sabotage prématuré et précipité", en augmentant ainsi "les maux" et les malheurs, comme M. Churchill appelle l'accession à l'indépendance de l'Inde et des autres colonies britanniques qui se libérèrent par la suite, amenant ainsi l'écroulement de l'Empire britannique.

57. Le fait est, par conséquent, que l'Inde a obtenu son indépendance, non pas parce que les colonisateurs la lui ont accordée de bon gré, mais parce que les colonisateurs ne possédaient pas la force militaire nécessaire pour maintenir, dans ce pays, leur joug colonial.

58. Mais l'Inde était un grand pays. Dans d'autres colonies, il a été possible aux colonialistes anglais de disposer de forces suffisantes pour différer l'indépendance de ces pays pendant des années et des années et pour y maintenir l'ordre colonial par des répressions et des massacres. L'exemple du Kenya, pour n'en citer qu'un, est encore frais dans la mémoire de tous.

59. S'efforçant de trouver une argumentation pour différer la libération de certains pays et leur accession à l'indépendance immédiate, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a essayé de nous convaincre que cela a été fait uniquement par souci de donner "aux populations de ces pays l'indépendance dans la forme qui leur convient le mieux, et non point selon certains dogmes idéologiques qui leur seraient imposés de l'extérieur" [925ème séance, par. 50].

60. Il est vraiment très surprenant d'entendre une telle considération dans la bouche du représentant du Royaume-Uni, tout au moins si on a eu la possibilité de suivre le développement des luttes des peuples coloniaux pour leur indépendance.

61. En effet, on se souvient qu'il y a à peine sept ans aujourd'hui, le parti populaire progressiste de la Guyane britannique avait remporté une victoire éclatante aux élections et avait, par cela même, choisi la forme de gouvernement "qui lui convenait le mieux". Malheureusement, cette forme de gouvernement ne convenait pas aux colonialistes britanniques. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni envoya ses croiseurs, suspendit la Constitution et annula les élections. Parlant à la Chambre des communes, le 22 octobre 1953, le Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies de l'époque, M. Oliver Lyttelton, tint le propos suivant: "Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté n'est pas prêt à tolérer l'établissement d'Etats communistes dans le Commonwealth britannique." Comme vous le voyez, il y a là un langage bien différent de celui de M. Ormsby-Gore. M. Lyttelton provoquait le commentaire suivant de la part de M. Bevan, orateur travailliste, qui, se prononçant sur cette question, a défini la position du Gouvernement britannique sur le droit des peuples d'avoir le gouvernement qui leur plaît, comme suit: "Vous êtes libres d'avoir n'importe quel gouvernement qui vous plaise, pourvu que ce soit le type de gouvernement qui nous plaise à nous autres." Certainement, il s'agissait d'un gouvernement qui plaisait au Gouvernement britannique.

62. L'exemple de la Guyane britannique est intéressant et instructif sur la manière dont les colonialistes conçoivent qu'ils peuvent arranger leurs affaires dans leurs anciennes colonies. Pour eux, l'établissement d'un régime indépendant et populaire serait un "mauvais" exemple, qui aurait pu avoir un effet et une influence fâcheux sur les populations des territoires adjacents.

63. Le New York Herald Tribune a été particulièrement franc sous ce rapport, lorsque, le 9 octobre 1953, il mentionnait que l'affaire de la Guyane britannique était d'une importance vitale pour les Etats-Unis, non pas en raison des événements internes dans cette colonie, mais en raison de sa situation stratégique, étant donné que le Venezuela (qui se trouve tout près) est le synonyme de deux produits très importants pour l'économie des Etats-Unis: le pétrole et le minerai de fer.

64. Voilà donc pourquoi il a été mis fin, au moyen d'un grand déploiement de forces, au régime populaire à la tête duquel se trouvait M. Jagan, en Guyane.

65. Toute l'histoire des méfaits du colonialisme est là pour nous convaincre qu'il est impossible de croire à la bonne foi et à la bonne volonté des colonialistes. C'est une raison de plus qui fait que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/4502 et Corr.1], proposée par l'Union soviétique, revêt à l'heure actuelle une importance capitale.

66. Les efforts pour différer l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux sont accomplis par les colonialistes afin de chercher des moyens nouveaux et des formes nouvelles pour préserver leur domination économique et politique sur ces pays. Mais les préoccupations des milieux colonialistes dirigées contre les peuples opprimés de leurs colonies doivent nous inciter encore davantage à prendre une décision qui permettra à ces peuples d'accéder à l'indépendance immédiatement, de décider eux-mêmes de l'organisation qu'ils entendent adopter en ce qui concerne leur système de gouvernement. Le moment est venu de dire aux peuples coloniaux que, fidèles aux principes de la Charte, les Nations Unies leur accordent tout leur appui dans leur juste lutte contre le système le plus monstrueux que l'humanité ait connu: le joug colonial.

M. Boland (Irlande) reprend la présidence.

67. M. ALVAREZ RESTREPO (Colombie) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Il y a quelques semaines, le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique a, de cette même tribune, qualifié la Colombie de pays colonialiste, simplement parce que ma délégation estimait que le point que nous traitons en ce moment eût été mieux examiné dans une atmosphère de plus grande tranquillité et de plus grand calme, devant la Première Commission, qu'en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale. Cette salle, en effet, de par ses dimensions mêmes, nous incite à discuter avec vivacité et à nous exprimer avec véhémence dans un débat qui devrait se limiter à une étude sereine des faits. Toutes les paroles qui y ont été prononcées sont plutôt des paroles de propagande, destinées au monde extérieur, alors qu'il s'agit au contraire de faire appel à l'entendement des représentants des différentes nations et d'éclairer leur jugement.

68. Il nous serait impossible d'intervenir dans ce débat sans déclarer au préalable que notre pays est attaché avec ferveur à l'idée de la libre détermination, qu'à aucun moment de son histoire il ne s'est allié à des mouvements tendant à supprimer ou à limiter cette liberté dans d'autres pays. Bien au contraire: lorsque la Colombie, il y a 150 ans, a commencé sa vie de nation autonome, à une époque où elle n'avait pas encore assuré définitivement sa propre indépendance, elle n'a pas hésité à envoyer ses armées dans les pays voisins — au Venezuela, en Equateur, en Bolivie, au Pérou — pour les aider dans les combats qu'ils soutenaient alors pour leur émancipation et leur libération du pouvoir métropolitain.

69. Ce fut là une magnifique épopée au cours de laquelle les forces armées de cinq pays participèrent à la lutte qui avait trouvé en Simon Bolívar leur inspirateur et leur chef, le grand capitaine dont les entreprises légendaires remplissent l'histoire de l'Amérique. Le sang des Colombiens a coulé sur le continent sud-américain, de Caracas à La Paz, dans un effort gigantesque qui dépassait les possibilités de la Colombie d'alors. Nous n'étions animés que d'un seul désir, celui de coopérer avec les anciennes colonies espagnoles pour qu'elles puissent obtenir leur autonomie complète en tant que nations indépendantes. Nous avons donc des références exceptionnelles en tant que pays anticolonialiste et cela nous donne le droit d'intervenir dans ce débat, en toute connaissance de cause. Nous signalons en passant que, s'il est vrai que nos armées ont contribué à la libération de cinq autres nations, il n'en est pas moins exact que, une fois la victoire acquise, ces mêmes armées furent dissoutes et ces rudes compagnons regagnèrent calmement leurs foyers, ou bien encore se fixèrent dans le pays qu'ils avaient contribué à libérer, y construisirent leur maison, y vécurent en paix comme de simples citoyens, se consacrant au travail et à la mise en valeur des terres désormais libérées.

70. Quelle différence d'attitude, si on la compare à celle d'autres qui, au milieu du XX^{ème} siècle, envoient leurs armées non pas pour aider d'autres nations à se libérer, mais pour collaborer avec d'autres gouvernements qui étouffent dans le sang la volonté souveraine des populations.

71. Cette question du colonialisme est aussi vieille que le monde. Rome, la Grèce, Carthage étaient en leur temps des colonies, comme le furent jadis la France, le Royaume-Uni, l'Espagne, l'Allemagne. L'histoire universelle est le récit des peuples qui, au cours des âges, subirent des transformations pour atteindre un jour la plénitude de leur personnalité politique.

72. Avec l'écoulement du temps, de nouvelles formes de vie viennent se substituer à d'autres qui s'expliquaient alors et avaient leur raison d'être. Les institutions juridiques elles-mêmes ne cessent de se modifier au fil des ans. Le dogme de la souveraineté nationale, si cher aux auteurs du droit international du XIX^{ème} siècle, a fait place à une nouvelle forme d'association superétatique, supranationale, qui est le fondement de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

73. Nous fûmes une colonie, nous aussi, et, au début de notre indépendance, nos populations manifestèrent ouvertement leur esprit de révolte et usèrent de ce même ton amer de doléance que nous font entendre, à l'heure actuelle et avec juste raison, les Etats qui viennent de conquérir à leur tour leur indépendance et qui, de ce fait, ont pu devenir Membres de notre organisation après avoir vécu, pendant des générations, sous la férule d'une puissance étrangère. Nous avons été une colonie, mais cela ne nous a pas empêchés, une fois indépendants, de conserver pour l'Espagne toute notre profonde sympathie. Ce pays a gouverné le nôtre pendant la période de notre formation; nous avons reçu de lui une langue, une religion, une structure juridique et un vaste héritage culturel, quatre éléments qui ont été les piliers sur lesquels nous avons construit notre société actuelle.

74. Ce n'est pas l'ensemble de l'œuvre du colonialisme qui est pernicieux et nocif, comme se sont efforcés de le faire croire certains représentants mus par un souci politique plutôt que par le désir de comprendre les leçons de l'histoire. Dans le processus de formation des nouvelles nationalités, il y a, de la part de ceux qui ont gouverné et dominé ces pays au cours des ans, un apport culturel qui demeure infiniment précieux pour leur vie future; nous avons pu, à ce propos, entendre les déclarations sages et raisonnables prononcées à cette même tribune par les Ministres des affaires étrangères du Cameroun et de la Nigéria, dont nous avons pu admirer la remarquable formation culturelle.

75. Parlant du colonialisme, il serait peut-être opportun, à ce stade de mon discours, d'apporter quelque clarté sur ce que certains orateurs, traitant du problème colonial, ont tenté d'insinuer en des termes vagues, mais qui n'en sont pas moins fallacieux, à savoir, que l'Amérique latine ferait partie des zones contrôlées par le système colonialiste.

76. Certes, sur notre continent, quelques secteurs se trouvent encore placés sous la domination de pays européens et nous souhaitons tous que ces territoires jouissent bientôt d'une indépendance complète; mais il n'en est pas moins vrai que les pays d'Amérique latine représentés ici ne sont les colonies de personne. Chacun de ces pays possède ses limites géographiques et politiques bien définies. En Amérique latine des pays souverains se sont constitués, ayant chacun sa propre originalité, ayant chacun une culture, une histoire et des traits qui nous interdisent de les confondre. Si quelque chose pouvait nous distinguer, en tant que membres d'une seule et même famille, ce serait le soin jaloux avec lequel nous agissons habituellement pour éviter tout ce qui pourrait nuire à notre autonomie, à notre souveraineté. Qu'il s'agisse du plus petit ou du plus grand des pays d'Amérique latine, du Brésil ou du Costa Rica, chacun des 20 Etats possède sa propre personnalité, ses caractéristiques particulières, une fierté impérissable de son autonomie, même dans les circonstances les plus difficiles de sa vie de nation. En cela, nous sommes un peu les héritiers de la péninsule Ibérique, de l'Espagne et du Portugal, pays où le culte de sa propre personnalité se confond avec les notions d'honneur et de respect qui possèdent une telle valeur dans notre langue. Nous ne sommes les sujets de personne. Politiquement, nous évoluons dans le camp de la démocratie occidentale, cette démocratie qui a réuni les nations libres du monde pour former une seule et même phalange et lutter contre les régimes totalitaires. Nous choisissons nos représentants et nos gouvernants au moyen de consultations populaires, dans lesquelles chaque citoyen a l'occasion d'exprimer l'opinion que lui dicte sa conscience. Nous sommes maîtres de notre destin et nous adaptons ce destin aux nécessités nationales. Que certaines délégations, ici à l'ONU, cessent leurs tentatives d'insinuer que nous serions des colonies, alors que les nations de l'Amérique latine sont des nations autonomes et souveraines qui, il y a déjà longtemps, ont acquis leur indépendance grâce au sacrifice de leurs héros.

77. On semble confondre, de façon à la fois malveillante et délibérée, les expressions "sous-développement" et "colonialisme"; en fait, ces deux notions n'ont rien de commun. Il est vrai, pour ce qui nous concerne, que nous sommes des pays insuffisamment développés, c'est-à-dire des pays possédant un taux de natalité élevé, mais où le revenu par tête d'habitant est faible et le pourcentage d'analphabètes élevé. Nous connaissons, c'est également vrai, des difficultés très sérieuses en matière sanitaire et au point de vue de l'enseignement. Notre commerce extérieur est, presque partout, tributaire de l'exportation de matières premières. Ce sont là, d'après les spécialistes, les caractéristiques mêmes de pays insuffisamment développés. Mais le retard économique ne saurait être confondu avec la perte de la dignité nationale ou de l'autonomie en matière politique et sociale. Pour reprendre une image bien connue, nous pourrions dire, comme le faisaient en Espagne les grands nobles qui avaient perdu leur fortune: "Nous sommes des gentilshommes pauvres, mais nous sommes des gentilshommes."

78. Ce débat sur le colonialisme, comme l'ont dit certains de ses promoteurs, a pour but d'assurer à tous les peuples une existence indépendante et de faire disparaître un phénomène honteux de notre époque contemporaine. En ce qui nous concerne, cette déclaration, dans son sens littéral, ne présente pas de difficultés. Nos traditions juridiques nous incitent au contraire à être les alliés naturels de tous ceux qui parlent de liberté, mais de liberté pleine et entière partout, sous toutes les latitudes et sous tous les régimes. Nous ne croyons pas que le colonialisme seul puisse être critiqué en tant que système de contrainte, de domination, de contrôle et de servitude. La grande question qu'il nous reste à débattre ici est celle de la liberté dans toutes ses manifestations: la liberté de penser, la liberté de prier, d'enseigner, d'écrire, de parler, de diffuser, de critiquer, de protester chaque fois que cela est nécessaire pour sauvegarder la dignité de l'homme.

79. Le président Sekou Touré, au nom de la République de Guinée, déclarait lors de son intervention du 13 octobre 1960:

"Nous savons qu'il y a des problèmes à propos desquels chacun peut se permettre, avec son tempérament particulier, d'élever le ton comme il le veut; mais il y a aussi d'autres problèmes qui ne peuvent être considérés comme des problèmes personnels, encore moins comme des problèmes liés à l'existence de tel système ou de tel bloc, mais exclusivement comme constituant la base d'une vie de dignité pour tout être humain, quel que puisse être par ailleurs le régime politique et économique qu'il puisse choisir ou quelles que soient sa religion, sa couleur ou sa nationalité." [903ème séance, par. 4.]

Et le président Sekou Touré ajoutait:

"Nous pouvons affirmer sans nous tromper que le problème de la liberté est le premier problème du monde et qu'on ne peut trouver aucun peuple, aucun individu conscient qui puisse considérer que la liberté est divisible ou qui puisse imaginer qu'elle est l'attribut d'un peuple, d'une race ou d'une religion." [903ème séance, par. 5.]

80. En écoutant les divers orateurs qui se sont succédé à la tribune pour nous présenter le colonialisme comme un système qui enlève la liberté à des milliers, des millions d'humains, il nous semblait entendre que c'est là le problème, et le seul, qui se pose pour la liberté dans le monde. Tous les verbes qui expriment l'asservissement d'un peuple à un autre ont été utilisés pour nous décrire les horreurs réelles du colonialisme: il subjugué, il enchaîne, il opprime, il contrôle, il humilie, il foule aux pieds la dignité de bien des nations qui devraient être libres. Dans un impressionnant défilé, on nous dresse le tableau de l'esclavage et de la servitude, mais on n'a voulu montré sur ce tableau qu'un aspect de la situation, comme si le problème de la liberté humaine n'était lié qu'au seul colonialisme.

81. Ce qui est vrai, c'est que ce colonialisme politique, pour le plus grand bien de l'humanité, se dirige à grands pas vers sa fin, une fin définitive, et ce grâce à la politique intelligente et prévoyante des anciennes puissances coloniales, ou encore par la force même des choses. Ce qui est vrai, c'est qu'une autre forme de colonialisme a surgi qui cherche à remplacer la première. Mais il ne s'agit plus ici du colonialisme qui exerce un contrôle sur le sol, les récoltes, les rivières et les montagnes, la vie sociale et le régime politique, l'hygiène et l'enseignement, c'est-à-dire sur toutes les activités extérieures des individus, mais bien d'un colonialisme qui surveille les consciences, abolit toutes les libertés et brise brutalement la vie spirituelle de l'homme.

82. Il reste, c'est certain, de lamentables vestiges du colonialisme et des millions d'hommes attendent encore d'en être libérés. Il existe encore de par le monde des restes de ce système qui contrôlait tant de peuples, tant de régions du monde, récemment encore; nous avons entendu ici le représentant du Royaume-Uni [925ème séance] nous expliquer de façon précise comment son pays se préparait à accorder l'autonomie complète aux territoires qui ne sont pas encore indépendants.

83. Mais ce que nous n'avons pas entendu, c'est la voix de ceux qui tiennent sous leur joug, non plus des pays en voie de développement, mais des nations qui sont les héritières d'une vieille culture et les dépositaires des plus nobles traditions, et qui sont obligées de vivre sous un régime de terreur et réduites au silence. Aussi pourrait-on dire que d'un côté le colonialisme qui contrôlait les biens matériels et les richesses est en train de disparaître progressivement de vastes régions du globe, alors qu'ailleurs, dans d'autres régions de ce même monde, se dresse, dur et implacable, ce que l'on pourrait appeler le colonialisme des âmes, un colonialisme qui non seulement contrôle dans ses mains de fer l'activité économique des pays qu'il domine, mais qui pousse encore beaucoup plus loin son action, en s'opposant à la libre expression des idées et en brisant d'un seul coup le code des libertés proclamées dans la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme que les Nations Unies ont approuvée.

84. C'est pourquoi le président Sekou Touré avait raison de dire que le problème de la liberté était le problème capital qui se posait au monde. C'est ce problème essentiel pour le monde que nous tentons de résoudre en approuvant le projet de résolution qui nous est présenté ici [A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2]. Mais ce problème ne saurait être divisé arbitrairement sans porter atteinte à la vérité historique. Comme nous l'a dit en effet le président Sekou Touré: "Le problème de la liberté ne peut être considéré que comme le fondement d'une vie de dignité pour tous les hommes."

85. Telle est la position de ma délégation, la position d'un pays qui, tout au long de son histoire, a connu cette richesse incomparable qu'est la liberté. Mon pays sera toujours aux côtés de ceux qui s'efforceront de préserver et de défendre ce don inestimable pour l'homme et pour l'humanité.

86. Plusieurs orateurs ont, le plus souvent, tenté de faire la lumière, toute la lumière; de pointer un doigt accusateur dans une seule direction, c'est-à-dire contre le colonialisme. Ils analysent ce phénomène comme un mal monstrueux, ce qu'il a réellement été, puisqu'il a signifié la perte du libre choix pour des pays qui avaient le droit de vivre sous un régime qui leur fût propre, qui avaient le droit de vivre des produits de leurs propres richesses. Nous pensons cependant que c'est là adopter une attitude unilatérale et faire preuve de parti pris. Le problème de la liberté est un et indivisible et il est arbitraire de se plaindre d'une oppression qui n'existerait que sous un seul régime et uniquement dans certains endroits du globe, alors que la liberté de l'homme a complètement disparu dans d'autres parties du monde. Un orateur nous a même dit hier: "Nous ne voulons pas que l'on parle de tout ce qui est étranger au débat", comme si l'on voulait ainsi nous inviter à nous taire en présence de faits qui ont une importance pour le moins égale à celle du colonialisme, puisqu'ils traitent de phénomènes identiques du point de vue social et du point de vue humain. Ce qui est dit dans le premier considérant du projet de résolution des puissances africano-asiatiques, à savoir: "proclamer à nouveau leur foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites," et "favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande", c'est exactement ce à quoi sont résolus tous les pays rassemblés à l'ONU.

87. Ce sont là les principes tutélaires de notre organisation; ce sont eux qui donnent à l'Organisation toute sa valeur aux yeux des nouveaux pays libres; ils sont le fruit de l'expérience que l'humanité a accumulée au cours des siècles. Nous sommes prêts à appuyer le projet de résolution que nous présentent 30 puissances, avec de courtes modifications qui nous paraissent essentielles, car nous sommes convaincus que tout pas accompli vers l'octroi de la liberté à de nouveaux pays est un pas que l'on fait pour le bien-être de l'humanité tout entière. C'est par conséquent avec joie que nous assistons à l'indépendance que viennent de connaître de nombreux pays, qui pourront ainsi consacrer toutes leurs ressources, toutes leurs richesses intellectuelles et morales à l'amélioration des niveaux de vie de leurs populations et à l'accroissement de leurs propres richesses. Ces pays voient heureusement s'ouvrir largement devant eux le chemin de la coopération internationale et de l'assistance si précieuse des Nations Unies.

88. Lorsque, grâce à leurs efforts, les pays de l'Amérique latine se sont libérés, ils se sont trouvés devant des problèmes très graves. Ils ont dû lutter seuls, isolés, sans aucune ressource économique, sans préparation technique, sans personne pour leur offrir une aide généreuse dans les premiers jours de leur autonomie. Nous pourrions dire que, libres, ils sont entrés dans la vie internationale comme des enfants qui titubent à leurs premiers pas. C'est ainsi que nous avons tous poursuivi notre chemin pendant un siècle, sans savoir exactement si nous avions pris la bonne direction pour atteindre des objectifs plus élevés sur le plan économique. Nous faisons l'expérience de régimes politiques qui ne parvenaient pas à s'implanter: en effet, les hommes rudes qui avaient lutté pendant 20 ans se soumettaient difficilement aux rigueurs de la loi. Cette tentative d'organisation s'est poursuivie pendant de longues années de troubles et d'hésitations, et a exigé la dépense d'immenses sommes d'énergie.

89. Les pays qui, aujourd'hui, arrivent à leur majorité ont la chance, eux, de trouver dans le monde une atmosphère de coopération illimitée, qu'animent et dirigent les Nations Unies. Le problème du sous-développement et les formules proposées pour le combattre constituent l'essentiel des travaux des économistes contemporains.

90. Des centaines d'ouvrages ont été écrits depuis 10 ans, et consacrés à l'étude approfondie des questions ayant trait à l'organisation économique des États, à l'utilisation de leurs richesses naturelles, à leur organisation intérieure, à leur commerce extérieur, à l'hygiène et à l'enseignement.

91. Nous, pays de l'Amérique latine, avons dû souffrir pendant un siècle d'une succession d'hésitations et de doutes, d'expériences ratées, d'erreurs très graves. Nous seuls pouvons donc savoir combien, pour ces pays qui ont atteint maintenant leur majorité, leur tâche est facilitée pour entreprendre leur marche vers le progrès. Leur liberté, bien dirigée, peut nous servir à tous. Leurs progrès matériels seront des éléments essentiels à l'équilibre du monde. Leurs activités intellectuelles peuvent contribuer largement à l'analyse des problèmes futurs. Que le sort fasse que chacun de ces pays sache défendre son autonomie et conserver avec fierté sa propre personnalité, sans tomber dans le piège que lui tendent ceux qui, tout en faisant miroiter une amitié idyllique, préparent en fait les chaînes qui, plus tard, leur interdiront de disposer librement d'eux-mêmes.

92. Nous voterons pour le projet de résolution sur le colonialisme en adoptant non pas un esprit de reproche — ce que font certains ici — mais, bien au contraire, dans la noble intention de faire un pas de plus sur le chemin menant à la liberté de l'homme. En effet, ce sera véritablement un beau jour que celui où les hommes de tous les pays de la terre, sous toutes les latitudes, les hommes de l'Est, de l'Ouest, du Nord, du Sud et du Centre pourront vivre réellement et effectivement sous la protection des libertés essentielles qui ont été inscrites dans la Charte des Nations Unies.

93. M. SLIM (Tunisie): Certains historiens ont pris l'habitude de donner un qualificatif aux siècles et époques de la vie de l'humanité. C'est ainsi que le XVème siècle a été celui des grandes découvertes, le XVIIIème et le XIXème, ainsi que le début du XXème, ceux de la grande aventure coloniale, qui a abouti à l'asservissement de la majeure partie des peuples d'Afrique et d'Asie. L'année 1960 a été qualifiée d'année de l'Afrique. Elle l'est effectivement puisque nous avons eu la grande satisfaction de recevoir dans cette enceinte 16 nouveaux Etats africains.

94. Puisque c'est une tradition que de marquer les époques par les grands événements, ce sera la gloire de la seconde moitié du XXème siècle que d'être appelée l'époque de la libération des peuples. Car, qu'on le veuille ou non, par la force ou par la persuasion, avec le consentement des pays colonisateurs ou contre leur gré, il n'y aura plus, sous peu, de peuples asservis. L'ère de la domination coloniale, de l'asservissement de l'homme par l'homme, du code de l'indigénat et autres lois sur le travail forcé dans les colonies, est bien révolue. Partout dans le monde, le colonialisme, malgré ses puissants moyens, recule devant la marche irrésistible des hommes vers la liberté et l'indépendance. Ce n'est, certes, ni l'entêtement de la France à continuer, depuis six ans, une guerre stupide et sans espoir en Algérie, ni celui du Portugal dans sa négation de l'évidence et son attachement à des fictions absurdes, ni, à plus forte raison, celui de l'Afrique du Sud à se confiner, malgré la réprobation universelle, dans un racisme inhumain érigé en dogme de politique étatique, qui arrêteront le cours irréversible de l'histoire.

95. Les convulsions que de tels entêtements provoquent inévitablement retarderont peut-être, ici ou là, l'accession des peuples à leur liberté, mais au prix de quels sacrifices inutiles et de quels dommages pour l'amitié, l'entente et la coopération nécessaire entre les peuples!

96. L'indépendance des pays colonisés se fera avec l'accord des pays colonisateurs ou contre leur gré, mais elle se fera quand même, car aucune force au monde n'est en mesure d'arrêter la marche irrésistible de l'histoire.

97. Depuis sa création, l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'est préoccupée de la situation des territoires et des peuples dépendants, ainsi que de ceux qui étaient placés sous la tutelle internationale. Par les importants débats qu'elle a eus à leur sujet, notamment au cours des travaux de la Quatrième Commission et de ceux du Conseil de tutelle, par les nombreuses recommandations qu'elle a prises, notre organisation a, certes, contribué considérablement à la libération par des voies pacifiques de peuples colonisés.

98. Néanmoins, une telle contribution n'était pas suffisante. D'un côté, l'impatience des peuples colonisés se fait de plus en plus pressante; de l'autre, la réticence des pays colonisateurs, la mauvaise volonté dont ils font preuve créent des difficultés qui ralentissent la reprise par les peuples qu'ils dominent de leur souveraineté et de leur indépendance.

99. Ce déphasage entre les deux mouvements a engendré, à maintes reprises, des heurts, des conflits sanglants mettant en danger l'amitié entre les peuples autant que la paix et la sécurité internationales. Il est donc éminemment important que notre organisation essaie d'établir des principes de base qui, en clarifiant dans ce domaine ceux de la Charte ou de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, définissent la voie à prendre et la dégagent de tout obstacle.

100. Pour le renforcement de l'autorité et de l'efficacité de notre institution, autant que dans l'intérêt de l'amitié, de la concorde et de la paix, l'indépendance des peuples dominés gagne à se faire dans le cadre des Nations Unies et avec leur assistance.

101. Il appartenait donc à cette quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale d'ouvrir un large débat à ce sujet et de le voir clore par une résolution qui marquera une date dans l'histoire de l'ONU.

102. De l'avis de la délégation tunisienne, ce que nous avons à préparer en conclusion de nos présents débats, ce n'est pas seulement une proclamation fixant les principes du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, principes qui sont déjà inscrits dans la Charte. Il s'agit surtout de réaffirmer ces principes et de les renforcer à la lumière des difficultés soulevées par les pays colonisateurs pour retarder la libération des peuples dont ils ont la charge.

103. Il revient, certes, à notre session de donner une impulsion vigoureuse et une direction générale et nette aux moyens qu'il importe de mettre en œuvre pour que les peuples qui sont encore sous la domination coloniale puissent atteindre leur but qui est aussi celui de notre institution, c'est-à-dire l'indépendance pour tous.

104. Il s'agit pour nous, essentiellement, d'éviter ce qui s'est passé hier au Viet-Nam, ce qui se passe aujourd'hui en Algérie et, enfin, ce qui est arrivé dernièrement au Congo.

105. Je m'explique. Devant la poussée irrésistible de ces pays pour leur indépendance, les réactions de deux puissances que l'on peut citer comme exemple du colonialisme le plus récalcitrant — la France et la Belgique — ont été, soit l'entêtement à maintenir la domination par les armes, soit l'acceptation de l'indépendance, mais suivie bientôt de manœuvres absurdes pour diviser la nation libérée et tenter par le biais un retour vers la domination.

106. Ainsi, au Viet-Nam, après sept années d'une guerre atroce, qui a fait des dizaines de milliers de victimes, la France a dû se rendre à l'évidence et quitter le pays, laissant derrière elle non seulement des ruines, mais aussi un peuple divisé en deux Etats, un aliment de plus à la guerre froide.

107. Malheureusement, la leçon du Viet-Nam n'a pas servi aux colonialistes français. Ces derniers, qui n'ont rien appris ni rien oublié, commettent encore en Algérie, depuis six ans, les mêmes erreurs qui ont été si néfastes au Viet-Nam, tant pour la France que pour son ancienne colonie et l'humanité entière.

108. Au Congo, la Belgique a montré au monde qu'elle faisait preuve de libéralisme en acceptant de proclamer l'indépendance de ce pays. Mais, en provoquant la sécession au Katanga et au Kasai et en se livrant à des manœuvres tendant à maintenir sa domination sous une autre forme, elle a plongé le Congo dans le drame que nous connaissons et qui constitue aujourd'hui l'une de nos plus sérieuses préoccupations.

109. Dans les deux cas, le résultat a été un triste et lourd bilan de ruines, de malheurs ou de deuils. Dans les deux cas, il ne pouvait y avoir aucun espoir pour les colonialistes de garder leurs privilèges. Au contraire, le fossé devait, par la force des choses, s'élargir malheureusement chaque jour davantage, et les chances pour une compréhension, un rapprochement et une coopération s'amenuiser de jour en jour.

110. Le résultat aurait-il été le même si les pays colonisateurs avaient accepté l'inévitable par une adhésion spontanée — et, sinon spontanée, du moins raisonnée — aux mouvements de la libération? Sérieusement, je ne le pense pas. Le Viet-Nam, qui, en 1947, avait adhéré à l'Union française, serait peut-être aujourd'hui un Etat unifié, indépendant et souverain, lié à la France par des liens d'amitié et de fructueuse coopération. L'Algérie aussi le serait, si on l'avait voulu et si on avait voulu éviter la continuation de la guerre.

111. Quant au Congo, il n'aurait pas été le théâtre de ce malheureux exode des Belges ni de la terrible crise qu'il traverse aujourd'hui.

112. Nous estimons qu'il est temps maintenant que les Nations Unies prennent leurs responsabilités et qu'elles mettent résolument fin à la tragédie des peuples colonisés. Le pays que j'ai l'honneur de représenter a été l'un des premiers, parmi ceux qu'un destin injuste a placés sous la domination d'un autre, à engager la lutte pour l'honneur, la dignité et la liberté. Pendant trois quarts de siècle — et, notamment, au cours des 30 dernières années — il a mené une lutte implacable contre l'occupant. La Tunisie l'a fait à une époque où l'on pouvait qualifier sa lutte de combat du pot de terre contre le pot de fer, c'est-à-dire au temps où la conscience mondiale n'était pas aussi sensible qu'en ce moment à l'héroïque combat des peuples pour la dignité, la liberté et l'indépendance. Usant de la persuasion, de la force ou de l'appel aux valeurs humaines et à la solidarité des hommes, mon pays a persévéré dans la voie de l'honneur jusqu'à la victoire. Sous la conduite du président Bourguiba, il a toujours préconisé la négociation pour la solution des problèmes de colonisation, sans toutefois refuser l'épreuve de force quand il s'y est trouvé malheureusement acculé par la mauvaise volonté des colonisateurs.

113. Et le jour où, après s'être engagé par désespoir de cause dans une lutte armée longue et douloureuse, qui a nécessité de la patience, de la persévérance, de lourds sacrifices et, certainement, du courage, il a accédé à l'indépendance, il s'est fixé comme idéal et comme devoir sacré de mettre tous ses moyens au service des peuples en lutte pour leur liberté. C'est ainsi que le 1er juin 1955, alors que la Tunisie avait à peine accédé à l'autonomie interne, alors que tout pouvait être remis en cause, puisque la France détenait encore en Tunisie des positions militaires et des moyens puissants d'action, mon pays n'a pas hésité, à cette heure-là, à se ranger aux côtés de l'Algérie en lutte pour la liberté. J'aurais à m'étendre amplement sur ce problème lorsque la question d'Algérie viendra bientôt en discussion devant la Première Commission. Je me contente seulement ici de simples allusions nécessaires, à mon avis, au débat actuel.

114. Au moment où il quittait le sol français pour son retour triomphal dans sa patrie, le 1er juin 1956, le président Bourguiba disait qu'il souhaitait de tout cœur voir l'expérience tunisienne s'élargir pour que cesse la guerre en Algérie, comme elle avait cessé en Tunisie, par un règlement qui laisse à la coopération des chances de se maintenir et de meilleures bases de continuité.

115. Quelques mois après, la Tunisie a accédé, en effet, à son indépendance, et, depuis, elle a consacré tous ses efforts, toutes ses possibilités à hâter la fin de la guerre. Au cours des six dernières années, le président Bourguiba n'a ménagé aucun effort pour tenter de concilier les deux parties et de les amener à la négociation. Malheureusement, nos efforts n'ont pas rencontré le succès qu'ils méritent.

116. Cependant, malgré le grand souci que lui donne la poursuite de la guerre d'Algérie qui, parfois, déborde sur ses frontières, la Tunisie ne s'est jamais désintéressée du sort des autres pays colonisés, notamment de ceux de notre propre continent, l'Afrique.

117. Dans toutes les conférences africaines, celles d'Accra, de Monrovia, d'Addis-Abéba et, dernièrement, de Léopoldville, la Tunisie a uni sa voix à celle des autres pays indépendants d'Afrique pour proclamer la déchéance du colonialisme et essayer de trouver les moyens les mieux appropriés pour alléger le fardeau de la croix que portent nos frères moins favorisés que nous.

118. Le 2 mars 1959, lors du congrès du Néo-Destour qui s'était tenu à Sousse, le président Bourguiba — il y a plus d'un an et demi — a lancé un appel vibrant aux pays colonisateurs, leur demandant de faire preuve de réalisme. Je me permets de citer un bref extrait de cet exposé. Le président Bourguiba disait:

"L'instabilité qui règne dans le monde est née de l'antagonisme entre deux blocs, l'occidental et l'oriental, et du désir de chacun d'eux d'attirer à soi le plus grand nombre des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique.

"D'autre part, disait-il, nous constatons que la roue de l'histoire tourne inexorablement dans le sens de la libération des peuples et non de la colonisation. Chaque jour augmente le nombre des peuples émancipés. L'avenir est sans nul doute à la liberté des peuples. Le colonialisme est bien condamné: la France peut s'obstiner encore un ou deux ans, elle n'empêchera pas l'indépendance de l'Algérie.

"De même, la Grande-Bretagne ne saurait empêcher celle du Kenya, du Nyassaland, de la Rhodésie et de la Somalie.

"C'est un calcul stérile que de vouloir retarder coûte que coûte ces échéances.

"La mauvaise grâce et les atermoiements ne sauraient arrêter la roue de l'histoire qui écrase ceux qui se mettent en travers de son chemin.

"Pourquoi les puissances occidentales, disait-il encore, n'envisagent-elles pas un retour à la sagesse?

"Au lieu de laisser se poursuivre cette grande bataille où la liberté se dresse contre la tyrannie d'une façon désordonnée, improvisée, au lieu de laisser aller les choses au hasard des circonstances et de s'en remettre à la seule inspiration des événements, que le bon sens reprenne le dessus, que l'on se rende à certaines vérités! Je crois qu'il est encore temps, poursuivait-il, pour les nations qui accordent un prix à la liberté et à la dignité, de redresser le courant.

"Ces nations peuvent se réunir autour d'une table, examiner et résoudre à tête reposée le problème de la décolonisation et tous les problèmes qui en découlent.

"Il s'agira de faire sortir l'humanité de l'ère coloniale pour l'engager dans celle de la coopération. C'est à froid que l'opération doit se réaliser. On pourra, continuait-il, fixer des étapes raisonnables, sauvegarder les chances d'une coopération fructueuse, d'une amitié durable. On doit pouvoir le faire. Il ne faut pas que des pays colonisés arrachent leur indépendance dans l'effusion de sang, au risque de sombrer peut-être dans l'anarchie que pourra exploiter le camp adverse pour déchaîner les rancunes, propager son idéologie et préparer sa domination."

Le président Bourguiba continuait, le 2 mars 1959:

"J'imagine aisément une grande conférence qui réunirait tous les pays qui ont encore des colonies ou des pays semi-coloniaux.

"Réunis d'abord entre eux, ces pays pourraient parvenir à un accord. Ils inviteraient ensuite les représentants des peuples intéressés autour d'une table ronde; ou bien encore ils constitueraient des comités chargés d'étudier séparément le cas de chaque pays et d'examiner ses possibilités et ses conditions particulières.

"On pourra s'inspirer utilement, disait-il, de l'expérience de la Grande-Bretagne occupée actuellement à préparer l'indépendance de la Nigéria prévue pour octobre 1960." (Je rappelle que ce discours date du 2 mars 1959.) "D'ici là, continuait le président Bourguiba, la constitution de ce pays sera mise sur pied. Les cadres politiques et techniques se seront révélés, les institutions de l'Etat seront prêtes à fonctionner.

"Ce que la Grande-Bretagne a fait pour le Ghana, la Nigéria, elle s'apprête à le faire pour la Somalie, et peut-être demain pour la Rhodésie, le Kenya, le Tanganyika.

"Agir de la sorte, c'est aller dans le sens de l'évolution naturelle; pourquoi d'autres pays — la France par exemple — n'opteraient-ils pas pour cette politique?

"Ils pourront établir le contact avec les mouvements nationalistes, organiser avec eux des élections libres qui révéleront les éléments les plus valables et les plus lucides avec lesquels se fera le dialogue.

"L'évolution des peuples colonisés échappera de la sorte aux aléas du terrorisme, de la violence et de l'anarchie.

"La négociation entre colonisateurs et colonisés, en même temps qu'elle définira les étapes et les méthodes de l'émancipation, devra s'étendre à l'examen d'un plan d'assistance et de relèvement économique. Il faut arracher les peuples au sous-développement qui est une forme de la servitude.

"Ce faisant, les pays occidentaux ne feraient qu'appliquer les principes dont ils se réclament, à savoir: aider les peuples à se libérer politiquement et économiquement. Acquis dans les conditions que je propose, une telle libération interviendrait dans le cadre d'un plan raisonnable qui restitue le pouvoir aux nationaux, prévoit l'organisation des élections et la mise en place des cadres nécessaires.

"On s'inquiétera ensuite de mettre au point des formules d'aide et des modalités d'investissement pour accélérer les programmes d'industrialisation.

"On aura ainsi ouvert aux peuples libérés la voie du progrès économique et technique."

119. Cet appel, lancé par le président Bourguiba, il y a plus d'un an et demi, prend une valeur de prophétie si l'on considère les troubles sérieux contre lesquels il mettait en garde et qui ont eu lieu depuis, tant au Congo qu'en Afrique du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et autres points importants du continent africain.

120. Cet appel à la raison et au réalisme n'a malheureusement pas été entendu. Il y a eu, certes, des pays qui ont été libérés depuis: la Nigéria, les Etats africains qui étaient sous la domination française, le Congo. Mais il n'y a pas eu, comme l'avait demandé le président Bourguiba, une solution du problème colonial dans son ensemble, solution qui aurait contribué, dans une large mesure, à favoriser un climat de détente sur le plan international.

121. Certes, 16 nouveaux Etats africains ont recouvré leur indépendance et ont été admis, cette année, dans l'enceinte de notre organisation. Mais l'Algérie connaît toujours la guerre; l'Angola et le Mozambique sont encore en dehors de tout programme de décolonisation. Cet état de choses ne doit plus être toléré. L'expérience de ces dernières années a prouvé combien il était dangereux, aussi bien pour le colonisateur et le colonisé que pour l'humanité entière, de laisser le colonialisme continuer son action néfaste. Nous savons que le colonialisme et, d'une façon générale, toute domination d'un peuple par un autre ont nettement conscience qu'ils vivent leurs derniers moments. Mais nous savons également que, traqué dans ses derniers retranchements, le colonialisme peut encore avoir des sursauts d'agonie bien dangereux pour la paix et la sécurité internationales. Ce fut le cas en Indonésie — pourquoi ne pas le rappeler? — quand la Hollande, après avoir reconnu l'indépendance de ce pays, a tenté de le reconquérir à nouveau.

122. C'est aujourd'hui le cas de l'Algérie et du Congo, je ne crains pas de me répéter à ce sujet car on ne dira jamais assez combien est grave la responsabilité de la France et de la Belgique à ce sujet. Je cite ces deux cas à dessein, car ils constituent, pour les colonialistes, des arguments par lesquels ils tentent de justifier leur politique de domination.

123. En effet, c'est en vertu d'une législation française, issue de consultations électorales truquées, que l'Algérie est considérée comme territoire français. Et c'est au nom de la sauvegarde du patrimoine national que l'on fait actuellement la guerre au peuple algérien.

124. Pour le Portugal également, l'Angola et le Mozambique font partie intégrante du territoire métropolitain.

125. Cette conception ne peut être justifiée ni par l'histoire, ni par la géographie. Elle ne peut pas non plus reposer sur des fondements juridiques solides. Aussi était-il d'une importance capitale de mettre en évidence cette vérité, afin que des pays colonisateurs ne trouvent pas le moyen de se soustraire à leurs obligations en s'abritant derrière la théorie du territoire national.

126. J'en viens maintenant à l'exemple du Congo. Les désordres que ce pays a connus au lendemain de son indépendance sont présentés par les tenants du colonialisme comme un avertissement solennel du danger que pourrait présenter une "indépendance hâtive", disent-ils. Pour eux, la leçon à tirer de la situation au Congo est la suivante: une colonie qui est libérée avant d'atteindre un certain niveau de développement économique, une certaine maturité politique et avant de disposer de cadres, en un mot d'être préparée à ses nouvelles responsabilités, une telle colonie risque de tomber dans l'anarchie. Ceci peut être vrai surtout si l'ex-puissance dominante met tout en œuvre pour semer l'anarchie, comme ce fut le cas pour le Congo. Mais il y a une autre vérité qui trouve sa justification aussi au Congo, dans l'Angola aussi bien que dans le Mozambique: les puissances coloniales ne sont malheureusement pas capables de préparer ces pays à l'indépendance, pour la bonne raison qu'elles ne veulent pas de cette indépendance. Aussi, la seule leçon saine et impartiale que nous tirons de la situation est la suivante: il faut que les puissances colonisatrices s'engagent résolument à s'abstenir de toute action de nature à provoquer des désordres dans les pays libérés, à éviter toute tentative de créer des difficultés aux nouveaux gouvernements, à respecter honnêtement l'indépendance, la souveraineté, aussi bien que l'intégrité territoriale des nouveaux Etats. En d'autres termes, il faut éviter le retour de ce que la France a tenté de faire en Guinée et de ce que la Belgique a réussi malheureusement à réaliser au Congo. Dans ces deux cas, les puissances colonisatrices ont essayé de saboter une indépendance qui leur a été imposée par l'évolution historique naturelle.

127. Mais un engagement des puissances coloniales, aussi solennel soit-il, ne constitue pas à nos yeux une garantie suffisante. Il faut que les Nations Unies soient à même de le faire respecter, le cas échéant.

128. Il y a aussi une autre sorte d'abus à laquelle les puissances coloniales s'adonnent régulièrement. Elle consiste à exiger du pays colonisé, sous la pression, et avant de lui accorder son indépendance, des avantages de caractère économique ou autres.

129. Une expérience indiscutable, vécue par la Tunisie et qui se prolonge encore, nous a montré qu'avant d'admettre l'indépendance des peuples colonisés par elles certaines puissances essayent de s'assurer le plus grand nombre possible d'avantages culturels, économiques ou même stratégiques, présentés à leurs partenaires, sous l'angle du principe de l'interdépendance des peuples, comme étant dans l'intérêt réciproque des deux parties.

130. A la veille de son indépendance, le peuple colonisé se trouve ainsi placé devant un dilemme bien difficile à trancher: ou bien refuser les concessions demandées, au risque de voir échapper l'occasion de recouvrer pacifiquement sa souveraineté; ou bien les accepter au risque de se trouver, après l'indépendance, lié dans sa liberté d'action et de détermination de ses intérêts propres, qui ne sont pas forcément et à priori les mêmes que ceux de son ancien colonisateur.

131. Devant un tel drame de conscience, bien pénible, le peuple colonisé opte en général pour le second terme de l'alternative, mais avec la ferme volonté de récupérer, une fois sa souveraineté reconnue et reprise bien en main, les concessions qui lui ont été arrachées sous la pression. Mais c'est alors qu'apparaissent de nouvelles difficultés et des crises quelquefois sérieuses dans les relations du nouvel Etat indépendant avec son ancien colonisateur. Ce dernier oppose le respect des engagements pris et marchande souvent ce qu'il estime être des concessions à faire par lui sur les concessions qu'il avait arrachées avant l'indépendance. D'où des tiraillements et des heurts qui obscurcissent des relations qui, sans cela, devraient devenir de plus en plus amicales et confiantes.

132. Je me suis contenté d'énoncer les conclusions pertinentes et indiscutables de l'expérience. Je pourrais citer des faits précis et faire état de documents irréfutables pour démontrer les conséquences désastreuses d'accords établis entre le pays colonisateur et le peuple colonisé, préalablement à l'indépendance de ce dernier.

133. De tels accords doivent être considérés comme originellement viciés. Les pays colonisateurs devraient s'abstenir d'en exiger l'établissement. Ils devraient, tout au moins, accepter de bonne grâce leur révision, après la reprise, par l'ancien pays colonisé, de ses nouvelles responsabilités de nation indépendante et souveraine. C'est là un principe essentiel qui permet à l'indépendance des peuples dominés d'être une indépendance réelle, saine et dégagée au départ de toute espèce d'hypothèque.

134. Il y a enfin un troisième point, qui a, aux yeux de ma délégation, une importance capitale. Il s'agit d'assurer à l'indépendance politique les meilleures chances d'efficacité dans l'intérêt du peuple libéré; je veux parler de l'aide aux pays nouvellement libérés. Economique ou technique, cette aide leur sera nécessaire. Aucun de ces Etats ne sera en mesure de s'en passer, s'il veut réaliser le développement économique et social de son territoire. Ce besoin urgent des nouveaux Etats constitue en général un terrain favorable pour la course entre les différentes tendances mondiales et notamment entre les deux blocs, pour imposer leur influence sur les pays. Techniciens, matériel, et même fonds importants sont avancés de part et d'autre par des mains qui se disent désintéressées à des Etats qui ne savent plus s'il est plus avantageux de puiser à droite ou à gauche. Quelle que soit la direction qu'ils choisissent, le résultat est le même: ils sont plus ou moins alignés, souvent à leur corps défendant, sur l'un ou l'autre des deux blocs. D'objet d'une compétition qu'ils étaient, il deviennent ainsi, malgré eux, partisans dans une lutte où ils n'ont rien à gagner.

135. C'est pour cela que nous faisons appel aux grandes puissances de l'Est et de l'Ouest pour que, dans l'intérêt des jeunes Etats, dans celui de l'humanité aussi bien que de la paix, elles cessent d'en faire un objet de compétition. Nous leur demandons sérieusement et honnêtement de comprendre qu'en cherchant à entraîner les peuples dans leur sillage elles risquent de compromettre l'évolution normale et naturelle de ces jeunes nations.

136. Ayant leur propre idéologie, leurs propres problèmes, ces Etats ont un besoin urgent d'œuvrer, dans la paix et la liberté, pour la prospérité de leurs territoires, le relèvement du niveau de vie de leurs populations. Ils ne peuvent parvenir à ce but sans l'aide des peuples plus évolués qu'eux. Pour améliorer la situation de leurs peuples, les engager sur le terrain du progrès économique et social, de l'utilisation des sciences et des techniques modernes, ils sont obligés de s'adresser aux puissances qui ont atteint un degré d'industrialisation très poussé et qui ont réalisé des progrès techniques parfois révolutionnaires.

137. Pour que les peuples colonisés qui, actuellement, constituent l'un des éléments de la guerre froide, je dirais même l'une des causes d'une véritable guerre, cessent, une fois leur indépendance acquise, d'être un objet de discorde, il faut que l'aide économique et technique qui leur est nécessaire et que les deux blocs sont en mesure d'accorder ne constitue pas un moyen de les engager avec l'un ou avec l'autre des deux blocs. Aussi ma délégation estime-t-elle que cette aide gagnerait énormément à être dispensée par l'intermédiaire des Nations Unies. C'est de cette façon qu'elle peut perdre sa couleur, devenir réellement inconditionnelle, et constituer une manifestation désintéressée de coopération et de solidarité internationales.

138. Ma délégation a beaucoup apprécié l'initiative qu'a prise l'Union soviétique de faire figurer ce problème à l'ordre du jour de la présente session [A/4501]. Nous avons également été très sensibles à la chaleur apportée par la délégation soviétique pour que cette importante question soit discutée en Assemblée générale.

139. Cependant, si la décolonisation est un problème qui intéresse le monde entier, il n'en est pas moins vrai qu'il est de notre devoir sacré, nous, pays anciennement colonisés et qui avons eu à souffrir directement des méfaits du colonialisme, il est — dis-je — de notre devoir, nous pays non engagés, d'être à l'avant-garde de ce combat. Loin de nous l'ambition de prétendre détenir le monopole de la lutte pour la liberté des peuples ou la volonté de refuser le concours des grandes puissances. Au contraire, nous avons besoin de l'aide de tous, et nous ne jetons d'exclusive sur personne. Seulement, nous ne voulons en aucune façon imprimer à ce débat, je dirais même à toute cette action de décolonisation, un caractère de lutte idéologique dans le cadre de celle qui oppose à l'heure actuelle l'Est à l'Ouest. Nous ne voulons pas que cette action soit l'objet de la stérile surenchère entre les deux blocs, ni qu'elle soit un moyen d'activer la guerre froide.

140. En termes clairs, nous voudrions qu'on parle moins de l'OTAN, de bases occidentales, des pays de l'Europe centrale et de leurs régimes intérieurs. Ni la première, ni la deuxième de ces questions ne figurent à l'ordre du jour de ce débat, ni n'intéressent, à notre avis, d'aucune façon, la question en elle-même. Au contraire, en donnant à ce débat un caractère idéologique partisan Est-Ouest, on risquerait de s'écarter du sujet, d'introduire la passion, et d'en faire un sujet de propagande.

141. Le problème qui nous intéresse est trop grave pour ne pas exiger de nous tous des efforts en vue d'élever ce débat au-dessus de toute idéologie partisane et de lui donner un caractère d'objectivité et de désintéressement. Je dis bien de tous, car je ne vois pas, dans cette assemblée, qui pourrait honnêtement s'opposer aux principes qui sont les fondements mêmes de notre charte. Il y a encore certes des colonialistes impénitents, mais leur nombre devient de plus en plus restreint, heureusement pour l'humanité.

142. Mais, à part ceux-là, qui, dans cette enceinte, n'est pas conscient du processus irréversible qui a mené et mènera tous les peuples vers leur indépendance? Qui, parmi nous, croira un instant et de bonne foi qu'il pourrait exister une force capable d'arrêter la marche irrésistible de l'homme vers sa liberté? Qui, parmi nous, doutera de l'impossibilité de détourner le cours naturel de l'histoire?

143. Il ne doit pas exister des hommes dignes de ce nom qui refusent à d'autres hommes, sous prétexte de la couleur de leur peau, de leur confession, ou simplement parce que leurs pays ne sont pas suffisamment développés, le droit à la dignité et à la liberté. L'esclavage a été aboli certes, mais le colonialisme n'est-il pas l'une des formes les plus pernicieuses de l'asservissement de l'homme par l'homme?

144. En notre siècle de progrès technique, d'épanouissement de la science, où l'homme a réussi à dompter les forces de la nature, améliorant sans cesse ses conditions de vie, il ne doit plus y avoir de place pour la servitude. Car, si, du temps de l'esclavage, l'homme était vendu et acheté selon une pratique qui ne trouvait pas de justification dans les valeurs humaines, le colonialisme, lui, prétend se réclamer de la civilisation, des principes humanitaires, et même — ironie du sort — de la démocratie. Ne voit-on pas encore de nos jours des Etats procéder à une exploitation systématique de peuples entiers, tout en proclamant, chiffres à l'appui, qu'ils ont prodigué l'enseignement, propagé l'hygiène, amélioré les conditions de vie? Ne voit-on pas des Etats maintenir sous leur domination des peuples faibles, sous prétexte qu'ils leur ont accordé les mêmes droits que leurs nationaux? Pourtant, les résultats sont loin d'être à la mesure de l'exploitation économique et des ressources humaines que les pays colonisateurs ont réalisées, au détriment de ces peuples colonisés.

145. J'ai cité dans mon intervention des exemples et des cas précis de pays colonisés et de puissances coloniales. Si j'ai suivi cette voie, c'est pour donner à ce débat un caractère positif. Aux yeux de ma délégation, l'ère de la profession de foi, de l'affirmation des principes est dépassée. Déjà, après la première guerre mondiale, on avait énoncé de tels principes et fait naître de grandes espérances chez les peuples asservis. Ces principes sont pourtant demeurés lettre morte. A San Francisco également, on a affirmé solennellement que les Nations Unies sont résolues "à proclamer à nouveau leur foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine ...".

146. Le moment n'est plus aujourd'hui à affirmer ces principes, car ils ne sont plus discutés par personne. Notre rôle, c'est de ne pas décevoir l'humanité qui a cru en la Charte de San Francisco, et de ne pas la décevoir comme elle a été déçue après la première guerre mondiale.

147. Ce qu'exige de nous la situation actuelle, ce ne sont plus des paroles, mais une déclaration solennelle engageant tous les Membres de notre organisation à mettre à exécution ces mêmes principes et à respecter leurs engagements. Notre devoir est de réaliser ce qui est l'un des buts de notre institution, rendre à tous les hommes la liberté et la dignité.

148. C'est cette conscience d'un devoir sacré que nous assumons tous à l'égard de l'humanité entière qui a poussé ma délégation, conjointement avec d'autres de l'Afrique et de l'Asie, à soumettre un projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2]. Ce projet précise les principes qui doivent servir de base à une action de décolonisation générale et rapide, dans la paix, l'amitié et la compréhension.

149. Nous aurions voulu, certes, que ce projet définisse encore mieux les moyens de négociation qui, seuls et à l'exclusion de toute coercition ou répression armée, doivent être utilisés par les pays colonisateurs. Nous aurions aimé que ce projet fixe une date limite aussi rapprochée que possible pour l'indépendance complète de tous les peuples qui, à quelque titre que ce soit, subissent encore la domination d'un autre. Nous nous sommes contentés de la proclamation des principes indiscutables qui ne nous paraissent pas pouvoir donner lieu à une controverse.

150. Ce projet peut engager notre organisation dans la voie du réalisme. Ce serait là l'une des plus belles tâches qui pourraient s'offrir à elle. Si nous parvenons à la mener à bien, nous aurions droit à la gratitude des générations futures, nous aurions contribué, dans une large mesure, à atteindre ce but qui est fixé par les premiers mots de notre charte:

"Nous, peuples des Nations Unies résolus à préserver les générations futures du fléau de la guerre qui deux fois en l'espace d'une vie humaine a infligé à l'humanité d'indicibles souffrances."

151. Non seulement nous aurions réduit les risques de la guerre, mais nous aurions donné au monde, en plus de la paix, la stabilité et la prospérité. Nous aurions enfin rendu à des centaines de millions d'hommes la notion de la dignité, de l'honneur, de la liberté, et partant celle du bonheur. Nous aurions enfin lavé le front de l'humanité de cette tâche sombre qu'est le colonialisme.

M. Tarabanov (Bulgarie), vice-président, prend la présidence.

152. M. ASHA (République arabe unie) [traduit de l'anglais]: En raison de l'importance du problème dont elle est saisie, l'Assemblée générale a sagement décidé d'en discuter en séance plénière plutôt qu'en commission. Pour ma délégation, la liquidation du colonialisme et l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les pays et les peuples coloniaux constituent, après le désarmement, le problème le plus important qui se pose à l'Organisation. Il soulève en effet quelques-unes des questions essentielles qui sont en jeu dans le monde actuel et reflète toutes les scissions, tous les conflits et toutes les tensions que connaît notre époque.

153. Je voudrais donc, au nom de ma délégation, exprimer nos remerciements à M. Khrouchtchev pour l'initiative qu'il a prise de proposer l'inscription de ce point intitulé "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". La déclaration que l'Assemblée générale adoptera décidera non seulement du sort du colonialisme, mais également de notre propre sort et de l'avenir de notre organisation. L'Assemblée a approuvé par acclamation l'inscription de ce point à l'ordre du jour [903ème séance] et cela ne manque pas d'être significatif. Approuvons, par conséquent, une déclaration qui abolira le colonialisme et, par la même occasion, libérera l'humanité des fléaux qu'il a engendrés.

154. Ma délégation a l'honneur de figurer parmi les auteurs du projet de résolution contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2. Aussi, je voudrais exposer les vues de ma délégation sur ce sujet.

155. Ma délégation aborde ce problème avec la conviction qu'il s'agit là d'un problème particulièrement urgent, car, comme nous avons eu l'occasion de le souligner devant l'Assemblée générale et au sein de ses principales commissions, le rythme toujours plus rapide des mouvements de libération qui ont balayé les deux grands continents d'Asie et d'Afrique, atteint désormais son point culminant grâce à l'octroi de l'indépendance à plus des deux tiers de l'humanité. Les événements de ces 15 dernières années, et en particulier de l'année 1960, sont des événements historiques sans pareils dans l'histoire de l'humanité. Ces événements ont abouti à la libération de nombreuses nations qui, après avoir souffert, à plusieurs reprises, de l'oppression du système colonial, ont enfin retrouvé, avec leur dignité, la jouissance des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, de ces mêmes droits que la Charte a proclamés il y a plus de 15 ans.

156. Mais l'atmosphère de ces 15 dernières années a été, de loin, plus dynamique que celle qui régnait à San Francisco en 1945, et encore bien plus que celle qui existait avant la seconde guerre mondiale; ce fut, en effet, une atmosphère féconde en idées, en idées révolutionnaires qui reflétaient le mécontentement des peuples à l'égard de la domination coloniale, de l'exploitation économique et de l'autorité traditionnelle; on voyait s'exprimer des idées sur la valeur réelle des droits de l'homme, sur la dignité et l'importance de la personne humaine, sur l'égalité des droits des hommes et des femmes et des nations grandes et petites; des idées sur la liberté politique, économique, sociale et culturelle; des idées sur des progrès toujours plus grands et sur l'amélioration des niveaux de vie dans le cadre d'une plus grande liberté.

157. Nous ne pouvons nous permettre de prétendre que ces idées pourraient sans danger être mises en réserve, cependant que le progrès dans le domaine économique, social et celui de l'enseignement continueraient d'avancer à un rythme aussi lent que par le passé. Nous ne pouvons nous permettre de prétendre que les pays colonisés, même dans les régions les moins développées, se contenteront — ou même qu'on leur imposera — pour arriver à l'indépendance, de suivre le même processus, lent, hésitant et plein de tâtonnements, que nos propres civilisations ont suivi au cours des siècles.

158. Dans une telle atmosphère, les peuples coloniaux ont manifesté leur désir d'obtenir la reconnaissance de leurs droits inaliénables à la liberté et à l'indépendance et les empires coloniaux ont commencé à s'effondrer les uns à la suite des autres. Pourtant, ces empires n'ont pas encore complètement disparu, comme nous l'espérons. Le moment est venu où le colonialisme doit recevoir le coup de grâce, afin qu'une fois pour toutes soient libérés les 100 millions ou plus d'êtres humains qui souffrent encore de l'oppression et de l'exploitation sous toutes ses formes.

159. Il est grand temps que les puissances coloniales oublient les splendeurs de leurs anciens empires coloniaux et admettent la pression des événements historiques dans les régions qu'ils dominent. Les peuples du monde épris de paix se doivent d'exercer toutes les pressions possibles pour enfoncer les derniers clous dans le cercueil du colonialisme, afin que puissent s'établir entre les peuples des relations pacifiques, stables et amicales, fondées sur le respect de l'égalité des droits.

160. Les puissances coloniales sont étrangement incapables de comprendre le désir fondamental de liberté et d'indépendance; telle est bien l'une des plus grandes ironies de notre époque. Nombre de ces nations furent cependant, à un moment ou à un autre de leur histoire, les victimes d'agressions suivies de longues occupations par des troupes étrangères. Ont-elles oublié les humiliations et les souffrances de ces années-là? Ont-elles oublié qu'un grand Américain a dit:

"... que tous les hommes sont égaux, qu'ils ont été dotés, par le Créateur, de certains droits inaliénables à la vie, à la liberté et à la poursuite du bonheur?"

Ces puissances coloniales ne parlent de liberté que pour remplir des prisons. Elles déclarent solennellement leur attachement aux principes de fraternité et d'égalité à seule fin de jeter des êtres innocents dans de nouveaux camps de concentration. Elles ne parlent de démocratie et de liberté de parole que pour donner des ordres à des pelotons d'exécution. Je demande alors aux puissances coloniales qui existent encore et à celles qui l'ont été dans le passé: combien de vies humaines ont été perdues pour avoir supprimé les nationalistes qui, dans vos colonies, dans vos territoires sous tutelle, dans vos territoires non autonomes, recherchaient la liberté? Quelles ont été vos propres pertes et quel est le bilan définitif? Quel a été le prix de la domination coloniale?

161. Le colonialisme aurait dû être liquidé il y a bien longtemps, mais hélas il est encore vivant. Le concept du droit des peuples et des nations à l'indépendance — c'est-à-dire du droit à l'autodéter-mination — est le plus ancien aspect de la liberté humaine qui ait été reconnu par la communauté internationale. La première guerre mondiale, qui, dans une large mesure, doit son origine aux forces explosives du nationalisme, a cristallisé le concept de l'autodétermination. Le président Woodrow Wilson devint le champion de cet idéal avant même que les États-Unis n'entrent dans la première guerre mondiale. Il énonça le principe selon lequel:

"... les gouvernements tirent tous leurs justes pouvoirs du consentement des gouvernés et il n'existe nulle part un droit qui permette de faire passer les peuples d'une souveraineté à une autre, comme s'il s'agissait d'une propriété".

162. L'acceptation très large de ce principe a grandement contribué à créer dans le monde un mouvement favorable à la liquidation du colonialisme. Mais, ni le système du mandat, institué par la Société des Nations, ni le système de tutelle, œuvre des Nations Unies, n'ont été suffisamment efficace pour éliminer le régime colonial. Il avait pourtant été nettement décidé que les peuples et les territoires ne devraient pas être utilisés comme des pions, ou détenus par des nations victorieuses en tant que "butin de guerre".

163. Au cours de ces 15 dernières années, les problèmes coloniaux sont devenus les questions essentielles de notre ordre du jour au cours des sessions annuelles de l'Assemblée. On peut même dire qu'ils ont toujours dominé nos débats.

164. Les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte montrent à quel point les fondateurs de l'ONU s'intéressaient, dès 1945, à San Francisco, au problème du colonialisme. Ils y ont consacré trois des 19 chapitres de la Charte parce qu'ils constataient très justement combien ce problème était lié à celui de la sécurité; ils reconnaissaient que tout progrès réalisé dans ce domaine constituait un élément essentiel pour l'établissement d'une paix durable. Ils étaient également conscients du fait que pendant les deux grandes guerres mondiales la plupart des peuples coloniaux avaient lutté aux côtés des pays qui les administraient et consenti de grands sacrifices, qui contribuèrent grandement à la victoire. Les peuples coloniaux ne disposaient cependant d'aucune voix dans les conseils internationaux et n'avaient guère à intervenir dans le règlement de leurs propres affaires.

165. Certes, plus de 800 millions d'hommes ont recouvré leur indépendance, mais il en reste encore plus de 100 millions qui luttent toujours pour recouvrer leur liberté. Dès 1947, feu John Foster Dulles, avec lequel nous n'étions pas d'accord sur plus d'un point, fit preuve d'assez d'audace et de courage pour demander à la Quatrième Commission la liquidation du système colonial. Parlant au nom des États-Unis, il a déclaré en ce qui concerne le colonialisme:

"Le système colonial devrait disparaître. C'est un système anachronique, et, s'il fut justifié à un moment quelconque dans le passé, il ne l'est certainement pas pour l'avenir. Il a porté des fruits empoisonnés, notamment en ce qu'il a fait que des hommes d'une race ont gouverné ceux d'une autre race, ce qui a été nuisible aux deux races. Je ne puis m'exprimer avec suffisamment d'énergie à propos de ma conviction profonde de la nécessité de liquider ce système le plus promptement possible et d'une façon ordonnée^{1/}."

166. Treize ans se sont écoulés depuis cette déclaration. Cependant, ce fléau, le plus sinistre de tous, refuse de mourir de sa belle mort et c'est à nous, en conséquence, de procéder à sa suppression. Mais, pour ce faire, toutes les puissances coloniales doivent accepter la volonté de l'opinion publique mondiale et nous fournir les moyens nécessaires. Les puissances occidentales ont toutes prétendu qu'en restant sur le territoire des autres peuples ils envisageaient d'y introduire leur culture et leur langue, et, d'une façon générale, de mener à bien une "mission civilisatrice". Puis-je me permettre de leur dire qu'elles se trompent? Tout d'abord, les anciens peuples colonisés et ceux qui sont encore privés de l'indépendance ont leur propre culture, leur propre civilisation, leurs traditions, leur langue et leurs coutumes. Ils ne sont pas seulement fiers de leur héritage, ils veulent encore le préserver. Ils sont décidés à le sauvegarder et à le faire fructifier comme ils l'entendent! D'autre part, cette œuvre peut tout aussi bien être menée à bien, et peut-être mieux encore, si les colonialistes quittent ces territoires et les quittent immédiatement.

167. Ceux qui gouvernaient les colonies ont souvent déclaré publiquement que les peuples coloniaux les aimaient. Si tel était le cas, si les peuples soumis aimaient les colonisateurs et voulaient bénéficier de leur culture et de leur civilisation, très certainement — au moment de l'octroi de l'indépendance — rien n'empêcherait les anciens gouvernements de poursuivre ce qu'ils appellent leur œuvre civilisatrice. Leurs écoles resteraient ouvertes si elles fonctionnent dans le cadre des lois du pays; les colons et les commerçants pourraient poursuivre leurs activités, non plus comme exploiters, mais sur un pied d'égalité avec les autochtones, et, au lieu de rapports de gouvernant à gouverné, de nouveaux liens d'association s'établiraient dans l'égalité. Ceci serait vrai, en particulier, si, comme nous l'espérons, tous les territoires qui n'ont pu encore parvenir à l'indépendance finissent par l'obtenir et si les peuples peuvent choisir librement les pays dont ils voudraient recevoir l'aide pour construire leur société. Une expérience récente nous a montré que la présence d'une puissance européenne en tant que maître d'un pays africain ou asiatique constituait en vérité un obstacle au développement de la culture et de la civilisation de cette puissance européenne, car, au lieu d'éprouver à son égard des sentiments d'affection, les peuples assujettis adoptent une attitude de résistance, qui — par un phénomène naturel — dépasse le cadre purement politique pour s'étendre à celui de la culture et de l'esprit. Tout cela prouve que l'absence d'influence politique ou administrative, loin de porter atteinte ou de détruire l'influence culturelle et civilisatrice, peut au contraire la renforcer et en encourager l'expansion.

168. Les puissances coloniales se plaignent, et, à certains moments, se vantent, des lourdes obligations et responsabilités que représente la prétendue mise en valeur des richesses coloniales, ainsi que le prétendu bien-être qu'elles apportent aux populations. Nous avons souvent entendu dire que de telles responsabilités financières vidaient les caisses de la métropole. Mais, si tel est le cas, pourquoi les acceptent-elles? Ne serait-il pas de l'intérêt des puissances coloniales de proclamer l'indépendance de leurs possessions respectives afin de se débarrasser de ces perpétuels soucis?

169. Il existe une autre raison pour laquelle il est de l'intérêt des puissances colonisatrices en particulier, et de l'Europe en général, de liquider le colonialisme: une atmosphère de confiance s'établirait alors entre ces pays; on en a eu l'expérience, après la première guerre mondiale, dans certains pays situés au nord de ma patrie.

170. Le règlement adopté par la Société des Nations à propos de territoires de l'Empire ottoman impliquait le partage des pays arabes du nord de la péninsule Arabique entre le Royaume-Uni et la France. Dans l'entre-deux-guerres, et jusqu'à la fin du mandat français sur la Syrie et le Liban, rien n'a autant contribué à la méfiance et à la rivalité entre la France et le Royaume-Uni que le fait qu'un pays administrait la Palestine et l'autre la Syrie et le Liban. Le Gouvernement français croyait que les Britanniques provoquaient la révolte contre son autorité dans les Etats du Levant, et le Gouvernement britannique pensait que les Français n'hésitaient pas à contribuer discrètement aux difficultés qu'il rencontrait en Palestine. Je ne veux certes pas me faire juge de la véracité de ces accusations réciproques. Personne toutefois ne peut douter de la réalité de ces accusations et de cette méfiance. La leçon que nous pouvons en tirer est la suivante: rien ne contribue autant à la rupture des relations entre les Etats européens que la possession de territoires contigus en dehors des régions métropolitaines. L'histoire récente nous enseigne que nombre de guerres qui ont opposé des puissances coloniales ont été gagnées par des armées qui venaient des colonies et des territoires dépendants. N'est-il pas vrai de dire que la suppression du colonialisme aura, entre autres avantages, celui d'interdire aux puissances coloniales d'utiliser de telles armées et qu'ainsi les risques de guerre diminueront et les chances de la paix s'accroîtront?

171. Jusqu'ici, je n'ai parlé que des seuls intérêts des puissances coloniales. Lorsque nous étudions ce problème sous l'aspect qui doit nous venir aussitôt à l'esprit — je veux parler de la libération de ces territoires conformément aux désirs et aux intérêts des populations — tout doute qui aurait pu subsister quant à la nécessité de l'indépendance immédiate disparaît complètement. L'indépendance immédiate, sans condition ni réserve, et conformément à la volonté et aux désirs librement exprimés, doit être proclamée sans délai et ce sans qu'il y ait lieu de distinguer entre les races, les croyances ou la couleur de la peau: telle est la décision irrévocable que nous devons prendre avec hardiesse, courage et décision. Si nous croyons sincèrement que les aspirations des habitants de ces pays qui luttent pour la liberté sont d'une importance capitale — et personne ne peut le nier — alors l'adoption d'une déclaration à cet effet devient pour nous une obligation.

172. Nous connaissons, par exemple, déjà l'argument qui consiste à dire que tel ou tel territoire n'est pas prêt pour l'indépendance. Quand l'Empire ottoman fut vaincu, lors de la première guerre mondiale, des territoires furent détachés de cet empire et soumis à des régimes différents; les moins prospères furent laissés indépendants, tandis que les plus évolués furent placés sous le système du mandat. L'état réel des territoires en question ne constitua pas ici le critère principal; le facteur décisif fut, en fait, les rivalités qui existaient entre les grandes puissances et leur incapacité à se mettre d'accord.

^{1/} Cette déclaration a été faite à la 43ème séance de la Quatrième Commission dont les comptes rendus ne paraissent que sous forme analytique.

173. Si une puissance coloniale quelconque se permettait un jour de prétendre — et j'espère qu'aucune ne le fera — que certains territoires coloniaux ne sont pas prêts à assumer l'indépendance, nous devons dans ce cas écouter de telles affirmations avec la plus grande suspicion. Aucun argument valable ne peut être invoqué pour étayer pareille assertion et, si un prétexte de ce genre était avancé, nous sommes persuadés qu'aucun représentant ici n'y prêterait foi. On nous a dit autrefois que certains territoires coloniaux étaient trop pauvres pour assumer les grandes responsabilités que comporte l'acquisition de l'indépendance. Si l'existence d'un budget non équilibré devait constituer un argument pour refuser à un pays son indépendance, je crains bien que de nombreux sièges ne restent vides dans cette grande salle. Parmi les gouvernements représentés ici, nombreux sont ceux qui n'arrivent pas à équilibrer leur budget chaque année, qui reçoivent une assistance de l'extérieur, qui font des emprunts, ou qui tout simplement continuent à vivre avec un déficit perpétuel. Personne, à moins d'être malveillant, n'irait jusqu'à présumer que de tels pays ne méritent pas d'être indépendants. Par conséquent, il y a là un argument qui s'écroule; d'autant plus que, si les puissances coloniales partaient, ces nouveaux pays parviendraient — j'en suis convaincu — à se suffire à eux-mêmes; ils seraient à même, grâce à la collaboration des Etats amis et à la famille des Nations Unies, de recouvrer leur prospérité ancienne dès que les puissances coloniales cesseront d'exploiter leurs richesses et leurs ressources naturelles. Une assistance financière et technique peut très bien leur être accordée sans leur refuser l'indépendance.

174. D'autre part, certaines puissances coloniales s'accrochent encore à des prétentions désuètes et déclarent injustement qu'il s'agit dans certains cas de territoires faisant partie intégrante de la métropole.

175. Ceux qui connaissent les éléments sociaux et humains qui dépeignent et caractérisent ces territoires ne pourront certes pas nier que ces régions ont beaucoup plus de points communs avec les populations des Etats frères en Afrique qu'avec les prétendus territoires métropolitains. Les liens qui unissent ces populations et les peuples indépendants d'Afrique et d'Asie se sont forgés tout au long des siècles sous la forme d'une association libre et autour d'un héritage commun, tandis que le lien qui unit le peuple colonial à la puissance colonialiste est essentiellement fondé sur la force. Le cadre juridique qui lie ces territoires aux puissances colonialistes est l'une de ces anomalies de l'histoire qui ne tiennent et ne subsistent que par le déséquilibre des forces dans le monde.

176. Il y a ici un problème fondamental et c'est dans ce fait que réside la principale cause de la situation actuelle. En effet, que nous abordions le problème en nous plaçant au point de vue de la géographie, de l'histoire ou de la culture, il est impossible d'attribuer à ces territoires un caractère européen; et je soutiens qu'aucun texte juridique, même valable quant à la forme, ne peut ni méconnaître ni remplacer ces données fondamentales sur la formation d'une société humaine; aucune loi n'est immuable; pour qu'une loi continue à vivre, elle doit toujours obéir au dynamisme des sociétés dont elle prétend réglementer l'évolution. Au cours des siècles de domination, les puissances colonisatrices n'ont pas réussi à faire naître dans la conscience des peuples opprimés un quelconque élément durable; les relations entre les nations continuent malheureusement de refléter le très large fossé humain qui les sépare et que, seule, la force arrive à franchir. Comment pourrions-nous autrement expliquer l'éveil violent du nationalisme dans ces territoires qui ne sont pas indépendants? Comment expliquer le désir si longtemps nourri de se libérer du joug colonial? Comment expliquer les troubles révolutionnaires et les représailles dans ces pays? Ce sont là des faits auxquels nous avons à faire face et à faire face maintenant. Aucune subtilité juridique ne peut suffire à expliquer cette situation; incontestablement, cet état de choses exige qu'en notre qualité d'Organisation internationale nous nous en préoccupions. Les puissances coloniales ne sont pas en droit de revendiquer une compétence nationale exclusive dans ce domaine. Cet aspect du problème a été traité au cours de ce débat et de débats précédents; il est inutile que je fasse perdre le temps de cette assemblée en rentrant davantage dans les détails.

177. Quelques-uns de mes collègues ont déjà percé à jour le mythe qui veut que certains de ces territoires fassent partie intégrante du pays métropolitain; il est donc inutile que les puissances métropolitaines et ceux qui soutiennent leurs thèses viennent prétendre que les questions concernant les prétendus territoires d'outre-mer relèvent essentiellement de la juridiction nationale des pays métropolitains; ces territoires ne subissent rien d'autre qu'un statut colonial et doivent être libérés sans délai.

178. Je voudrais encore mettre l'accent sur un autre point, à savoir la préservation de l'unité et de l'intégrité territoriale des pays coloniaux. Je mentionne la nécessité de l'unité et de l'intégrité territoriale, à cause de certaines expériences malheureuses de récente date et d'événements encore plus récents. Ma délégation attache une importance extrême à ces deux considérations. Nous estimons que la question de l'unité et de l'intégrité territoriale ne peut pas être dissociée de celle de l'indépendance.

179. A un certain moment, une puissance coloniale a divisé un petit territoire en cinq Etats indépendants. En Afrique du Nord, le Maroc s'est vu amputé d'une partie intégrante de son territoire, la Mauritanie. Le colonialisme menace également l'unité et l'intégrité territoriale de la République du Congo (Léopoldville). Dans cette énumération, je ne voudrais pas oublier Malte où malheureusement les aspirations de la population ne sont pas respectées comme elles devraient l'être par les autorités britanniques.

180. En Palestine, le régime du mandat eut pour résultat final de créer une division radicale et désastreuse de ce pays. Les colonialistes conspirèrent contre toute une nation; une nation fut déracinée tout entière de sa patrie et donnée à d'autres. A cet égard, qu'il me soit permis de citer les paroles du président Nasser dans son exposé du 27 septembre 1960:

"L'impérialisme suit sa propre logique. La logique de l'impérialisme, révélée dans le crime commis contre le peuple de Palestine, a consisté à briser l'unité géographique du monde arabe, d'une part, et, d'autre part, à établir, au cœur même du monde arabe une base d'où l'impérialisme pourrait menacer les peuples arabes. Je ne crois pas qu'il en existe de preuve plus évidente que la conspiration qui a abouti à l'agression tripartite dirigée contre nous en 1956." [873ème séance, par. 131.]

Cette forme nouvelle de colonialisme, qui s'appelle le sionisme, doit également complètement disparaître.

181. Une autre tentative visant à détruire l'unité territoriale se déroule en ce moment en Algérie. Une guerre coloniale y est menée depuis plus de six ans. La puissance coloniale, la France, dans ce cas, a recours, avec l'assistance militaire de ses alliés, aux armes les plus inhumaines pour combattre le brave peuple algérien, et pour prolonger l'asservissement de 10 millions d'Arabes. Ces frères et sœurs d'Algérie, qui ont souffert plus qu'aucun autre peuple pour la cause de la liberté, continuent de lutter avec abnégation dans ce dessein. Comme le disait notre président:

"Il est vraiment déplorable que le Gouvernement français persiste à établir des camps de concentration et à recourir à toutes sortes de moyens de torture contre les hommes et femmes libres du peuple algérien, et qu'il commette des actes qui révoltent la conscience humaine dans le monde entier, et même en France." [Ibid., par. 144.]

182. Le vaillant peuple algérien a perdu des centaines de milliers de martyrs, ses villes et ses villages ont été détruits, plus de 2 millions de civils innocents vivent dans des camps de concentration, des centaines d'entre eux meurent tous les jours afin que la liberté lui soit rendue. Jusqu'ici, la France a refusé de mettre fin à cette guerre sanglante et menace maintenant l'intégrité territoriale et l'unité de l'Algérie. Allons-nous tolérer plus longtemps cette honteuse agression coloniale? La conscience humaine peut-elle longtemps encore souffrir que la personne humaine soit à ce point bafouée? Il est temps de proclamer solennellement la fin du colonialisme dans cette chère Algérie et la France devrait être la première à y apposer sa signature.

183. A cet égard, je citerai à nouveau les termes qu'employait le président Nasser, le 27 septembre 1960, lors de son intervention dans le débat général:

"Aujourd'hui, les Nations Unies doivent remplir leur devoir. Je ne pense pas que notre exigence soit outrée lorsque nous insistons pour que le peuple algérien reçoive le droit à l'autodétermination, sur la base d'un plébiscite tenu sous la surveillance et la protection des Nations Unies." [873ème séance, par. 147.]

184. Le colonialisme ne s'arrête pas en Palestine ni en Algérie. Il règne en Oman, en Arabie du Sud et dans les prétendus protectorats de nombreuses régions d'Afrique. Il existe également au Nyassaland, en Angola, au Mozambique, en Rhodésie, au Ruanda-Urundi, au Sud-Ouest africain, au Tanganyika, en Ouganda, en Irian occidentale, en Guinée portugaise et ailleurs. Il tente de revenir dans les lieux d'où il a été chassé. Il doit périr et nous devons veiller à ce que cette mort soit certaine et définitive.

185. Les forces puissantes d'Asie et d'Afrique se sont dressées. Les deux continents géants sont réveillés. La misère que leur a valu la domination coloniale n'a pas disparu de leur mémoire. Leurs sympathies profondes vont à leurs frères et sœurs qui vivent encore dans l'esclavage et dans la servitude. Ils sont impatients de voir disparaître les vestiges du colonialisme et ils veulent lui porter le coup mortel. Leurs voix s'élèvent du côté de la vérité; la vérité, c'est la liberté, et la liberté, c'est la voie qui conduit à la paix.

186. La lutte contre le colonialisme a atteint son point culminant à la Conférence africano-asiatique de Bandoung, tenue en avril 1955. Entre autres décisions historiques, la Conférence a déclaré que le colonialisme, sous toutes ses manifestations, est un fléau auquel il faut mettre fin rapidement. Elle affirmait "que la question des peuples soumis à l'assujettissement de l'étranger, à sa domination et à son exploitation constitue une négation des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et empêche de favoriser la paix et la coopération mondiales". La Conférence a affirmé "son appui à la cause de la liberté et de l'indépendance de ces peuples" et adressé un appel "à toutes les puissances intéressées pour qu'elles accordent la liberté et l'indépendance à ces peuples".

187. Les Etats indépendants d'Afrique, réunis à Accra en 1958, ont appuyé également la déclaration adoptée à Bandoung. Les Etats africains étaient convaincus qu'"une date précise devrait être fixée pour l'accession à l'indépendance de chacun des territoires coloniaux, conformément à la volonté de la population de ces territoires et aux dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies".

188. Réunie à Addis-Abéba en juin 1960, la deuxième Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique a réaffirmé la déclaration de Bandoung ainsi que les résolutions d'Accra et de Monrovia, et déclaré:

"...

"Considérant en outre que l'éveil actuel des peuples de l'Afrique et des mouvements d'indépendance ne sauraient plus longtemps être contenus sans risquer de compromettre gravement les relations entre les différentes nations,

"...

"Persuadée que le rétablissement des droits naturels et de la dignité humaine en faveur des Africains, dans ces parties de l'Afrique actuellement soumises à la subjugation étrangère, ainsi que la jouissance pacifique de la liberté chèrement acquise par les populations des Etats indépendants d'Afrique ne sauraient être obtenus que grâce à l'élimination complète de la domination coloniale de notre continent,

"Demande instamment aux puissances coloniales qu'elles fixent les dates conformes à la volonté des populations pour l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à tous les pays qui ne sont pas indépendants..."

189. En conclusion, une liquidation complète, inconditionnelle et immédiate du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations doit être notre décision irrévocable. Sa nature injuste, ses horreurs, ses crimes ne seront jamais suffisamment dénoncés. Le colonialisme n'a jamais donné la liberté à ses victimes comme un cadeau. L'histoire est remplie des luttes héroïques de ceux qui ont conquis la liberté en l'arrachant à leurs oppresseurs.

190. L'ère du colonialisme est terminée. Cette année, qualifiée à bon droit d'année africaine, 16 Etats frères sont entrés dans la grande famille des Nations Unies. Ce phénomène historique de décolonisation et d'accession à une vie nationale réelle est irrésistible.

191. En conséquence, nous devons apporter notre appui le plus total à la cause de la liberté et de l'indépendance pour tous les peuples colonisés. Que les parties intéressées commencent immédiatement les négociations en vue du transfert de la souveraineté totale et de l'autorité aux peuples qui y ont droit, et accueillons ces derniers au sein de cette organisation mondiale comme nous en avons accueilli d'autres au cours des 15 dernières années.

192. C'est en vue d'atteindre cet objectif que le projet de résolution dont mon pays s'honore d'être l'un des auteurs [A/L.323 et Add.1 et 2] a été soumis à l'Assemblée. Il n'existe aucune différence essentielle entre ce projet de résolution tel qu'il est rédigé et la déclaration présentée par l'Union soviétique [A/4502]. Les deux documents ont le même objectif, à savoir l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme.

193. Je réserve le droit de ma délégation d'intervenir à nouveau plus tard dans le débat sur le projet de résolution et j'espère que le Président voudra bien m'accorder la parole le moment venu.

La séance est levée à 18 h 30.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE

OCT 19 1961

GÉNÉRALE

QUINZIÈME SESSION

Documents officiels

UN/SA COLLECTION

SÉANCE PLÉNIÈRE

Jeudi 1er décembre 1960,
à 10 h 30

NEW YORK

SOMMAIRE

	Page.
Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:
Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)	1115

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. U THANT (Birmanie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Qu'il me soit permis, tout d'abord, de présenter à la délégation de l'Union soviétique les remerciements sincères de ma délégation pour avoir formulé une demande [A/4501] en vue de l'inscription à notre ordre du jour de la question que nous étudions maintenant.

2. Depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, le problème du colonialisme n'a cessé d'intéresser les maîtres à penser du monde entier et l'on peut dire que l'éveil de la conscience nationale chez les peuples subissant le joug colonial constitue l'un des faits les plus remarquables de la période d'après guerre. Immédiatement après le dernier conflit mondial, une modification profonde s'est produite, qui a affecté la carte politique du monde entier. Cette modification a principalement affecté les continents de l'Asie et de l'Afrique.

3. On se rappellera que les longues années de guerre ont été marquées par une brusque détérioration des relations entre ceux qui dominaient et ceux qui étaient dominés. La tension et les difficultés résultant des conséquences d'une guerre sans merci, l'agitation et le trouble marquèrent l'apogée d'une lutte longue et difficile que les peuples soumis à une domination étrangère avaient engagée pour obtenir leur liberté. Ces peuples, qui, jusque-là, n'étaient pas suffisamment mûrs pour être parfaitement conscients de ce qu'était l'indépendance qu'ils réclamaient, exigèrent alors les mêmes droits à la souveraineté nationale que ceux dont jouissaient depuis longtemps des Etats plus avancés.

4. Certes, il faut reconnaître que les nations européennes ont tiré un bénéfice immense de la découverte de vastes régions dotées de ressources naturelles importantes, où les investissements de capitaux étaient d'un bon rapport et où la main-d'œuvre était à bas prix. L'influence de la civilisation occidentale sur les populations arriérées, dont la plupart avaient connu pendant des siècles une civilisation qui leur était propre, s'est exercée selon une conception impérialiste. En général, les missionnaires et les explorateurs ont été les pionniers, mais les commerçants et les fonctionnaires coloniaux ont suivi dans leur sillage. Mais il faut également reconnaître que, sans cette influence, les conditions de vie d'un grand nombre de races autochtones seraient sans doute restées relativement primitives. L'esprit d'entreprise commerciale des nations européennes a provoqué le stimulant nécessaire.

5. Chaque fois qu'on examine le problème du colonialisme, on est enclin à se demander si la méthode impérialiste était moralement justifiable, si l'influence de la civilisation occidentale a valu plus de bienfaits que de maux aux peuples asservis. A n'en pas douter, les pays coloniaux peuvent s'enorgueillir d'avoir réfréné ou éliminé quelques-uns des excès les plus néfastes de la vie primitive, à savoir torture des prisonniers, tyrannie de roitelets, etc.; les pays coloniaux ont construit des hôpitaux, amélioré l'état sanitaire, essayé de combattre aussi bien l'ignorance que la maladie.

6. Mais, en face de telles réformes et d'autres encore, tout aussi substantielles, il faut relever certains traits et tendances qui ont contrebalancé cette influence de progrès. On a tout d'abord constaté que les puissances colonisatrices, quand elles mettaient en valeur les ressources naturelles d'un territoire, ont essentiellement agi dans leur propre intérêt commercial. La majeure partie des richesses du sol était accaparée par les capitalistes coloniaux. La République du Congo (Léopoldville) en a fourni un exemple classique. Le niveau de vie indigène avait été élevé, mais les colonisateurs avaient un intérêt évident à maintenir les bénéfices à un niveau élevé et les salaires, en revanche, à un niveau très bas.

7. Au surplus, l'influence de la civilisation européenne a été limitée par le fait que la communauté européenne maintenait soigneusement une ségrégation qui l'isolait de la société indigène. Des clubs, des voitures de chemin de fer étaient réservés strictement aux Européens. Cette discrimination raciale organisée ne pouvait que susciter de l'amertume parmi les autochtones, surtout parmi les éléments instruits de la population. Par-dessus tout, l'éveil d'une conscience nationale au sein des populations indigènes s'est traduit par un désir irrésistible d'indépendance politique et a pris la forme d'une hostilité croissante vis-à-vis des colons blancs en qui elles voyaient des étrangers, des usurpateurs d'un pouvoir sur lequel ils n'avaient aucun droit moral, même s'ils ont apporté des améliorations sensibles sur le plan économique et social.

8. Une grande puissance coloniale européenne, à la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, a vu la nécessité impérieuse de modifier cet état de choses: le Royaume-Uni, qui a su fixer une date précise pour mettre fin à sa domination en Inde, au Pakistan et en Birmanie. Un élément catalytique a été aussitôt introduit dans les relations entre Anglais et Asiatiques: la libération devint un objectif, un défi, une aspiration. L'hostilité et le ressentiment disparurent. Quoi qu'il en soit, pour ce qui est de mon pays, une amitié chaleureuse avec le Royaume-Uni a remplacé l'amertume accumulée pen-dant un siècle. J'aimerais pouvoir en dire autant des autres puissances coloniales. Mais ce qui se produit actuellement dans le vaste continent africain montre clairement que des éloges similaires ne peuvent être décernés à ces autres maîtres. C'est pourquoi, de l'avis de ma délégation, l'inscription de ce point à l'ordre du jour, sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique, est particulièrement opportune.

9. J'ai eu l'occasion de dire, à une session précédente de l'Assemblée générale, que, si l'on retarde trop longtemps le processus d'accession à l'indépendance, un sentiment de frustration et de désespoir s'empare des esprits et engendre malheureusement la rancœur et la haine. Si un pays doit lutter trop longtemps pour son indépendance, des forces extrêmes apparaissent à la surface et prédominent, qui ne sont certainement pas de nature à favoriser la cause de la démocratie — but que la plupart d'entre nous recherchent — ni celle de l'amitié entre les nations.

10. Conscients du désir passionné de liberté et de la détermination que manifestent tous les peuples dépendants de mettre fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes, convaincus, d'autre part, que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la liberté totale, les Premiers Ministres de cinq pays asiatiques — la Birmanie, Ceylan, l'Inde, l'Indonésie et le Pakistan — ont parrainé en commun, à la conférence de Bogor, la convocation d'une conférence africano-asiatique à laquelle ils ont convié 25 pays de ces deux continents. A l'exception de la Fédération de l'Afrique centrale, les 24 autres pays ont accepté cette invitation et la conférence s'est réunie à Bandoung, en Indonésie, du 18 au 24 avril 1955. Cette conférence historique a, avec l'accord unanime des pays participants, publié dans son communiqué final une Déclaration sur les mesures en faveur de la paix et de la coopération mondiales, et a défini les objectifs que les pays participants devaient s'efforcer de réaliser conjointement.

11. Il n'est pas nécessaire que je m'étende sur la signification historique de cette déclaration de Bandoung, ni sur ses répercussions sur le plan mondial. Je me bornerai à dire que l'opposition à toutes les formes de colonialisme et les efforts tendant à acquiescer et à sauvegarder l'indépendance nationale ont constitué les thèmes principaux des débats. Les 29 pays d'Asie et d'Afrique ont été unanimes à déclarer que le colonialisme sous tous ses aspects était un fléau auquel il fallait rapidement mettre un terme.

12. Depuis lors, de nombreux territoires dépendants ont reconquis l'indépendance qui leur revenait de droit; mais bien d'autres pays se trouvent encore sous la domination étrangère. Pour le salut de la paix et de la stabilité, il convient de prendre immédiatement des mesures pour que s'effectue le transfert des pouvoirs entre les mains des peuples vivant encore sous le joug colonial, conformément à leur volonté et à leur désir librement exprimés, et sans que cette opération soit assortie de conditions ou de réserves. En particulier, il faut absolument que cessent toutes les activités militaires ou mesures de représailles, de quelque nature qu'elles soient, prises à l'encontre des peuples dépendants.

13. Certes, nous ne voulons pas dire que les puissances coloniales doivent supprimer les forces de police normales destinées à accomplir leurs missions normales et légitimes qui consistent à lutter contre les criminels. Il faut distinguer très nettement entre les délits ordinaires et les actes de nature politique.

L'une des grandes erreurs des puissances coloniales a été — et continue d'être — leur inaptitude à établir la distinction entre les chefs nationalistes et les criminels. Il est, en effet, bien connu que la plupart des chefs des nouvelles nations ont passé une grande partie de leur vie dans les prisons des colonisateurs.

14. C'est pour toutes ces raisons que ma délégation et celles de 39 autres pays d'Asie et d'Afrique ont patronné le projet de résolution qui est contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 4. Je voudrais inviter l'Assemblée tout entière à approuver ce projet de résolution.

15. Avant de terminer, permettez-moi d'examiner brièvement l'un des phénomènes auxquels on assiste très souvent après qu'un pays a acquis son indépendance, phénomène qui ne manque pas d'étonner les observateurs: je veux parler de l'absence des attributs traditionnels de la démocratie dans la structure de plusieurs pays nouvellement indépendants. Il faut comprendre que la quasi-totalité des mouvements nationalistes sont dirigés par une classe de personnes qui, dans un certain sens, sont privilégiées, c'est-à-dire qu'elles ont pu recevoir une instruction avancée, ce dont peu d'élus peuvent, jusqu'à présent, bénéficier en Afrique. Ce petit nombre d'élus se trouve ainsi placé dans une situation avantageuse par rapport au reste de la population. Par suite de toute une série de circonstances, cette classe qui a reçu une instruction avancée lutte en avant-garde pour l'indépendance et c'est en faveur de cette classe que, dans la majeure partie des cas, s'effectue le transfert des pouvoirs. Ce serait une erreur de supposer que les institutions politiques et les formes démocratiques telles qu'elles existent dans la plupart des pays nouvellement indépendants doivent être obligatoirement du même type que les institutions britanniques ou américaines et qu'il faille nécessairement que deux partis principaux seulement puissent lutter l'un contre l'autre pour obtenir le suffrage des électeurs. Le concept selon lequel la démocratie exigerait la présence d'une opposition organisée face au gouvernement au pouvoir ne peut être partout valable. La démocratie exige qu'une telle opposition puisse s'exercer librement, mais cela ne signifie pas nécessairement que cette opposition doive exister. Dans un grand nombre de pays nouvellement indépendants — et je pense plus particulièrement à l'Afrique — il est fort peu probable qu'il existe, pendant un certain nombre d'années encore, un système fondé sur deux partis rivaux. En fait, les mouvements nationalistes vont s'affirmer dans toute leur puissance. Ils vont contrôler le gouvernement et organiser la mise en valeur du pays sur le plan économique et social, sans qu'ils aient pour autant à combattre une opposition venue de l'intérieur du pays. Toute menace extérieure ne ferait que raffermir leur position. Beaucoup de temps passera avant que n'apparaissent dans ces nouveaux pays les conditions pouvant permettre l'organisation d'une véritable opposition. Il est bon de se rappeler que le système démocratique, pour excellent qu'il soit, représente une forme de pouvoir dont le fonctionnement s'avère particulièrement délicat.

16. M. MILLA BERMUDEZ (Honduras) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation du Honduras, qui a voté en faveur de l'inscription de la question du colonialisme à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale [903ème séance], me délègue maintenant à cette tribune pour honorer un vote qui répond aux aspirations de ces hommes, de ces groupes humains, de ces populations qui ne peuvent exercer leurs droits souverains parce qu'ils se trouvent sous l'emprise d'un régime politique et social qui agonise et qu'on appelle le colonialisme.

17. Après avoir étudié les faits en toute objectivité, nous devons dire tout d'abord que le pays qui était le moins autorisé moralement à proposer une telle question est bien l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques. Par ailleurs, nous devons rendre hommage à ces nations — qui, de leur plein gré ou sous la pression des événements — ont su montrer leur magnanimité en octroyant l'indépendance aux pays qu'ils dominaient. Nous devons rendre hommage, en particulier, à la France et au Royaume-Uni qui, depuis la seconde guerre mondiale, ont libéré les populations de plus de 30 pays — et appuyé leur demande d'admission à l'ONU — représentant une population totale de plus de 750 millions d'habitants et une superficie de plus de 10 millions de kilomètres carrés.

18. Animés par notre attachement à la cause de l'Amérique latine et par notre prise de position en faveur de situations dont on veut malheureusement remettre à plus tard le règlement, ou que l'on veut ignorer, nous entendons déclarer une fois pour toutes que, si le colonialisme agonise, cette agonie dure depuis déjà longtemps; que, par ailleurs, le colonialisme n'est pas un phénomène exclusivement africain-asiatique, puisqu'il y a encore des colonies en Amérique. Lutter contre le colonialisme, c'est défendre une cause, c'est surtout être fidèle au principe même de la liberté pour laquelle les pays de notre hémisphère ont commencé le combat il y a plus de 150 ans.

19. Délaissant les procédés dilatoires basés sur l'interprétation de traités ou d'articles et sur des subtilités qu'affectionnent tant d'adeptes du droit international et de la diplomatie, nous proclamons que, sur cette question, notre position est la suivante: nous exigeons qu'un délai soit fixé pour la suppression de toutes les colonies sur tout le globe, en particulier dans notre hémisphère occidental.

20. Ceci dit, la délégation de l'Union soviétique a proposé à l'Assemblée générale un projet de "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" [A/4501]. Nous allons procéder maintenant à l'analyse de ce qui a été déclaré au cours de la discussion générale à propos du colonialisme. Nous tenons à préciser qu'en citant des passages de certains discours, nous n'entendons pas verser dans la polémique, ni, encore moins, donner l'impression de vouloir critiquer injustement qui que ce soit. Nous voulons uniquement faire remarquer que, sur notre continent, l'on ne peut trouver des attitudes qui puissent être qualifiées d'anticolonialistes.

21. Au début de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, le 22 septembre 1960, le maréchal Tito a déclaré:

"Ces manifestations de la guerre froide menacent à leur tour de s'étendre à des régions qui avaient été ou sont encore sous la domination coloniale..." [868ème séance, par. 113.]

22. Le jour suivant, le Président du Ghana disait:

"La marée montante du nationalisme africain balaie tout devant elle et met les puissances coloniales en demeure de fournir juste réparation des injustices et des crimes commis pendant des années sur le continent africain..." [869ème séance, par. 1.]

"Pendant des années et des années, l'Afrique a été le paillason du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme, la terre d'élection de l'exploitation et de la dégradation... Mais ces temps sont révolus, révolus à jamais..." [Ibid., par. 3.]

23. Le même jour, le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, a dit:

"Il faut en finir avec le colonialisme, qui apporte misère et souffrance aux peuples des pays asservis." [869ème séance, par. 173.]

Lorsque M. Khrouchtchev parlait ainsi, nous pensions aux peuples letton, lituanien, slovène, tchécoslovaque, bulgare, ukrainien, hongrois, etc., que le colonialisme soviéto-communiste a privés de leur liberté.

24. De son côté, le président Nasser, de la République arabe unie, a dit:

"Il y a quatre ans, le continent africain assistait à la fin d'une ère de colonialisme..." [873ème séance, par. 120.]

Le président Nasser s'est trompé: l'ère du colonialisme ne prendra fin que lorsque toute l'Amérique sera libre.

25. Le représentant du Sénégal, dont le pays vient d'être admis comme Etat Membre de l'ONU, a déclaré:

"A partir du moment où l'on admet que la décolonisation est le grand phénomène de notre siècle, que c'est un fait nécessaire et inéluctable, nous ne voyons pas pourquoi les parties en présence ne chercheraient pas les meilleures conditions possibles pour la réaliser." [876ème séance, par. 171.]

26. Son collègue du Mali a dit dans sa première intervention:

"S'il est vrai que la Guinée a ouvert, en septembre 1958, une brèche dans l'édifice colonial français, il n'est pas moins vrai que c'est le Mali qui s'est acharné durement et patiemment sur les fondations mêmes de cet édifice historiquement condamné à l'effondrement." [876ème séance, par. 187.]

27. Je demande alors: "Sera-ce l'année 1961 ou l'année 1962 qui verra la fin du colonialisme en Amérique?"

28. Le 29 septembre 1960, le représentant du Libéria a dit:

"Le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes meurt lentement et difficilement... L'Afrique est le dernier bastion de ce colonialisme." [878ème séance, par. 255.]

Mais je demande au représentant du Libéria: "Est-il vrai que cette mort ait lieu dans la souffrance? Est-ce que l'Afrique est vraiment le dernier bastion du colonialisme?"

29. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la Colombie, M. Turbay Ayala, après avoir fait allusion à la Conférence de San José de Costa Rica pour repousser toute idée d'intervention étrangère, a déclaré:

"L'Amérique latine n'a nul sujet de craindre les idées avancées ou la justice sociale... L'heure est venue de la grande évolution sociale..." [880ème séance, par. 242.]

M. Turbay Ayala a raison, mais il passe sous silence d'autres termes caractéristiques de cette époque et de ces pensées qui pourraient se traduire ainsi: l'heure de l'émancipation des territoires coloniaux est arrivée.

30. Permettez-moi de montrer ici comment se présentent les faits. L'Amérique a défendu le droit des autres peuples à la liberté; le problème algérien la préoccupe, comme ce fut le cas à l'époque pour la Tunisie et pour le Maroc et pour d'autres pays arabes en Afrique. L'Amérique vient également en aide à l'Afrique noire, comme elle le fit pour l'Asie; certes, si tous les pays américains ne soutiennent pas les mouvements d'indépendance et de libération, beaucoup cependant le font et votent en leur faveur ou — tout au moins — les approuvent.

31. Je dis que maintenant l'heure est arrivée où il faut libérer les colonies qui subsistent encore sur notre continent. Je demande alors: "Allons-nous recevoir l'appui des pays africano-asiatiques?"

32. Tandis que le représentant du Mali — devant une commission de l'Assemblée — parle des prisons en Angola et s'attaque énergiquement à l'attitude récalcitrante du Portugal colonialiste, son collègue du Libéria déclare que de "la montée du nationalisme africain et le fait que les pays opprimés veulent être autonomes et diriger leurs propres affaires ne peuvent plus être considérés comme matière à finesse juridiques et à subtilités constitutionnelles"^{1/}. Ces deux délégations voient donc le problème sous l'angle purement africain et ne mentionnent ni n'établissent de rapport avec le problème qui existe en Amérique.

33. Les Pays-Bas — pour citer un exemple — ne parlent guère de l'indépendance des Antilles néerlandaises, ni de celle d'Aruba, de Curaçao, du Surinam ou Guyane néerlandaise. La population totale de ces territoires dépasse 300.000 habitants avec une superficie supérieure à 140.000 kilomètres carrés, soit 17 fois l'étendue de l'Equateur. Tous ces territoires sont géographiquement séparés de leurs métropoles; sur le plan ethnique comme sur le plan culturel, ils sont différents des pays qui les gouvernent ou les exploitent.

34. La France conserve les îles de la Martinique et de la Guadeloupe, ainsi que la Guyane française, dont la population totale dépasse 500.000 habitants et dont la superficie est supérieure à 94.000 kilomètres carrés, c'est-à-dire deux fois l'étendue du Chili.

35. Le Royaume-Uni est en train de nous retenir des territoires qui arriveront difficilement à devenir américains si l'on utilise le processus de formation qui a été employé pour créer une fédération d'îles, où la Trinité, Tobago et la Jamaïque jouent un rôle prépondérant. Néanmoins, il est indiscutable que la fédération s'achemine vers l'autonomie, vers la liberté. Il reste donc à sauver Belize, la Guyane britannique et les îles Malouines.

36. Notre position consiste par conséquent à s'efforcer d'étendre le problème colonial à notre continent, à lui donner un caractère d'urgence, à lui imprimer cette vigueur du nationalisme pur qui a été à l'origine de notre indépendance, à faire en sorte que le mouvement qui atteint les côtes d'Afrique se prolonge jusqu'aux Antilles, les Caraïbes et l'Atlantique sud, puisque, en fin de compte, c'est le même océan, sous des noms différents, qui nous unit et nous sépare.

37. Au cours du débat général, on nous a fait remarquer que nous avions oublié — impardonnable oubli de notre part, je le répète — les territoires coloniaux subsistant en Amérique, qui couvrent une superficie de 2.700.000 kilomètres carrés environ et comptent plus de 3 millions d'habitants. Il semble qu'un accord tacite soit intervenu pour ne même pas mentionner les colonies sur le territoire américain. Il semble que ces pays soient condamnés à demeurer pour toujours des colonies.

38. Ma délégation considère comme inacceptable le projet de déclaration présenté par l'Union soviétique [A/4502 et Corr.1] et votera contre lui. Pour ce qui est du projet de résolution africano-asiatique [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 4], nous nous réservons le droit de nous en occuper plus tard.

39. La délégation du Honduras croit que la meilleure façon d'arriver à une solution définitive sur ce point serait de créer une commission chargée de transmettre des rapports circonstanciés et de faire des recommandations pratiques quant à la façon de résoudre ce problème. C'est pourquoi je sou mets à l'examen de l'Assemblée le projet de résolution suivant^{2/}:

"L'Assemblée générale,

"Considérant que l'humanité ne peut rester indifférente devant le fait que certains peuples ne jouissent pas encore de l'autodétermination et de l'autonomie,

"Considérant qu'il faut accélérer le processus d'émancipation pour que ces peuples puissent progresser dans le plus bref délai vers la création de cadres politiques et sociaux qui leur permettent d'assumer les attributs du contrôle gouvernemental et d'exercer des droits et contracter des obligations comme sujets de droit public,

"1. Proclame l'élimination du colonialisme dans le monde;

"2. Décide de nommer une commission composée de cinq membres (un Africain, un Latino-Américain, un Asiatique et deux membres appartenant à des puissances administrantes), qui se rendra dans les possessions coloniales qui ne jouissent pas encore de l'indépendance et fera des recommandations à l'Assemblée générale à sa seizième session, sur la manière la plus appropriée, rapide et efficace d'assurer la disparition absolue du colonialisme dans le monde entier et l'accession de tous les peuples qui se trouvent encore dans la situation de colonies à la qualité d'Etats indépendants et souverains."

40. M. RIFA'I (Jordanie) [traduit de l'anglais]: En cette occasion mémorable et alors que l'Assemblée générale examine la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les peuples du monde, le cri de liberté jaillit de la conscience universelle et nous invite instamment, tous sans distinction, à soutenir le droit à la liberté et à l'indépendance de ceux qui sont opprimés et privés de tout. Cette voix de la liberté sort des tombes des martyrs qui ont sacrifié leur vie pour sauver leur terre natale. Elle s'élève des champs de bataille où les soldats défendent l'honneur de leur nation. Elle vient de l'exil auquel les patriotes ont été condamnés. Elle s'élève des misérables tentes sous lesquelles vivent les réfugiés chassés de leur patrie.

^{1/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Quatrième Commission, 1034ème séance, par. 5.

^{2/} Distribué ultérieurement sous la cote A/L.324.

Elle vient des prisons où languissent les héros. Cette voix de la liberté résonne enfin en chaque homme, en chaque femme opprimés qui se voient refuser le droit à une vie convenable. La liberté et l'indépendance sont en effet les facteurs essentiels du progrès de l'homme et d'une vie heureuse et pacifique dans laquelle tous les peuples peuvent jouir d'une fraternité et d'une égalité totale.

41. Dans son vaste désert où nulle muraille ne limite ses mouvements et où l'horizon n'oppose aucune frontière à son imagination, le Bédouin a frappé loin et fort dans sa recherche de la vérité. Il a exploré la mer et découvert la terre. Il a observé les étoiles et étudié la nature. Puis il a trouvé son chemin, celui qui mène à l'éternité. La liberté lui a ouvert les portes de sa prison et a fait de lui un homme d'énergie et un homme d'action.

42. C'est tout au début de l'histoire des Arabes, il y a de cela 1.400 ans, que leur second calife a énoncé sa règle impérissable: "Comment des peuples peuvent-ils être réduits en esclavage alors qu'ils sont nés libres?" Cet esprit de libération enflamma brusquement tout le monde arabe au cours de ces dernières années. Des révolutions nationales ont éclaté de toutes parts, dans tous les territoires; des foules de martyrs sont tombés au champ d'honneur: grands leur vie durant, ils restent glorieux après la mort.

43. Les Arabes, comme de nombreuses autres nations, ont généreusement payé le prix de leur indépendance. Leurs plaines et leurs collines témoignent amplement de leur lutte désespérée pour l'indépendance et la liberté; en chaque endroit, on découvre, là le mausolée d'un martyr, ici la statue d'un héros. L'indépendance est pour nous le fruit, le salaire d'années d'efforts et de luttes. Nous avons été la chercher dans la tanière des lions, nous nous sommes avancés vers elle à l'ombre de nos seules lances. C'est pour nous, par conséquent, notre dieu le plus cher.

44. Aucune nation ne peut accomplir sa mission dans la vie, tant vis-à-vis d'elle-même qu'envers l'humanité, si elle n'est pas placée sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres nations, si elle ne peut pas bénéficier des mêmes possibilités d'épanouissement. Comment une nation pourrait-elle satisfaire ses aspirations et ses légitimes ambitions si on limite ses prérogatives, si l'on sape ses énergies? Sans indépendance, en effet, on ne peut pas parler de vie productive et prospère.

45. Au cours de ces dernières années, et plus particulièrement cette année-ci, un certain nombre d'Etats africains ont reconquis leur liberté et leur souveraineté totales. Ils sont maintenant parmi nous, ils assument leurs responsabilités internationales d'une façon impressionnante et remarquable; ils se trouvent à l'avant-garde pour défendre la cause de la liberté et de la paix. Beaucoup d'entre eux obtiennent d'excellents résultats sur le plan des réformes sociales et des progrès économiques. Ce sont là des faits qui devraient prouver aux Nations Unies que les pays de l'Afrique non encore indépendants doivent se joindre sans plus tarder au cortège que forment les pays africains frères devenus des Etats souverains. En Afrique, le long des rives sud de la péninsule Arabique et ailleurs en Asie, il y a encore un nombre considérable de colonies, de territoires sous tutelle, de protectorats et de prétendues provinces d'outre-mer. Tous ces pays ont les yeux tournés vers l'ONU et attendent qu'elle prononce leur verdict.

46. Aujourd'hui, nous examinons l'adoption d'une déclaration solennelle visant à abolir le colonialisme et à accorder l'indépendance à tous les peuples colonisés du monde, sans exception. La continuation du colonialisme ne se justifie aucunement. Il s'agit là d'une notion périmée; elle était l'expression d'une mentalité réactionnaire à une époque où les colonisateurs s'arrogeaient le statut de maîtres et où les colonisés restaient dans l'ignorance des événements et des valeurs de la vie. On n'ignore plus ces valeurs désormais. La dignité et la fierté des nations et des individus leur font repousser l'idée d'un maître et d'un esclave. Les peuples comprennent maintenant que, si le colonialisme a contribué dans certaines zones, après des générations de captivité, au progrès et à l'avantage de certains territoires ou nations, il a surtout amené la misère et des souffrances dans bien d'autres pays.

47. La tragédie de Palestine n'est-elle pas l'exemple le plus affreux du colonialisme? N'était-ce pas en violation flagrante des règles de la justice, du droit et de l'honnêteté qu'après 30 ans de domination étrangère, les Arabes de Palestine aient été abandonnés à un sort fatal et qu'on ait usurpé leur territoire? Le colonialisme en Palestine a non seulement chassé les habitants légitimes et rompu l'intégrité territoriale du pays, mais y a encore installé un Etat étranger qui, chaque fois qu'une agression est prévue, se fait le complice d'une agression impérialiste. C'est par la faute de ce même Etat que le colonialisme est réintroduit en Afrique, chaque fois que ce régime veut repaître sous une forme camouflée.

48. Le colonialisme aurait pu mettre un terme à son histoire et quitter de nombreux pays dans l'enthousiasme plutôt qu'au bruit des coups de feu. En Algérie, les vies de dizaines de milliers d'habitants auraient été épargnées, si la France avait su entendre la voix de la raison et de la sagesse. En vérité, l'appel à la fin du colonialisme et la Déclaration d'indépendance de toutes les nations n'est pas un cri de vengeance, mais plutôt un appel à l'harmonie et à l'amitié entre les nations éprises de paix. Des relations amicales entre nations ne peuvent être établies que sur une bonne volonté et une confiance mutuelle qui excluent la méfiance et la suspicion. Combien heureuse serait l'existence, si les nations vivaient comme des sœurs et les forts soutenaient les faibles, si les riches aidaient les pauvres, si les pays développés prêtaient leur assistance à ceux qui ne le sont pas, et si cette aide, dont ces derniers ont besoin, était accordée sans aucune condition, sans aucune restriction!

49. Le joug écrasant du colonialisme a fait naître une nouvelle forme de nationalisme, qui veut rompre toutes relations avec les anciennes puissances colonisatrices et refuse toute aide qui pourrait être interprétée comme le retour à l'état de choses passé. C'est bien là une réaction naturelle, quand on sait comment a été menée la politique coloniale dans ces territoires. Si donc nous voulons développer parmi les nations, les nouvelles et les anciennes, les grandes et les petites, un esprit de coopération et de confiance, nous devons commencer par convaincre les grandes puissances qu'il leur faut renoncer à leurs idées de domination, de supériorité et d'exploitation.

50. Pour quelques petits Etats qui sont défavorisés et sous-développés ou qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance, il se peut que le maintien et la sauvegarde de cette indépendance s'avèrent être une tâche aussi difficile que son acquisition. Soucieux de s'acquitter de leurs responsabilités et de faire face aux besoins de leurs ressortissants, ces pays ressentent la nécessité de demander une aide extérieure. Ils pourraient la recevoir soit de vieux amis, soit de nouvelles connaissances, mais, dans les deux cas, il leur faut se livrer à des calculs précis pour éviter de retomber dans l'ancienne orbite colonialiste ou, au contraire, de se trouver entraînés dans le tourbillon de la guerre froide. Face à des situations de cette nature, l'ONU ferait œuvre utile en accordant son aide à ces pays pendant une période de transition qui se prolongerait jusqu'à ce qu'ils soient en mesure d'assurer eux-mêmes leur avenir. Notons que, si c'est la pauvreté qui mène parfois un pays à la condition de colonie, on a cependant constaté que, dans tous les cas, les pays qui tombent sous la coupe des colons, même s'ils étaient riches auparavant, se retrouvent pauvres.

51. Il ne suffit pas, dans le monde actuel, de se débarrasser du système colonialiste dans ses formes militaires ou administratives. Certes, l'organisation du contrôle international et la mise en application des théories démocratiques ont offert des garanties appropriées par rapport aux anciennes méthodes impérialistes d'agression et d'occupation militaire. Mais le colonialisme a su prendre un nouveau visage pour affaiblir certaines nations ou les asservir d'une autre façon. Je veux parler du colonialisme économique par lequel on utilise et on exploite les ressources naturelles d'un Etat d'une façon telle que l'écoulement de ses produits et de ses marchandises est totalement tributaire des mesures économiques qui seront prises par l'étranger. Avec l'abolition du système colonialiste c'est, par conséquent, la mentalité colonialiste qui doit aussi disparaître; autrement, sous des formes et par des moyens divers, il continuera de représenter, pour le monde, de graves dangers.

52. La délégation de la Jordanie, en s'associant à un grand nombre d'autres délégations désireuses de soutenir un projet de résolution qui déclarerait la fin du système colonialiste et octroierait l'indépendance à tous les peuples dépendants du monde, est persuadée que l'adoption de ce texte constituerait la pierre angulaire sur laquelle se bâtirait la paix universelle.

53. L'indépendance et la liberté pour tous supprimeront les sources de friction internationale et mettront un frein aux rivalités et à la concurrence des grandes puissances entre elles, dont souffrent les petites nations. L'indépendance est un élément constructif. Grâce à elle, des dizaines de millions d'êtres humains, qui vivent encore dans le marasme, pourront produire et agir, conformément à leurs possibilités.

54. Pour mon pays, le Royaume Hachémite de Jordanie, l'indépendance est le moyen le plus sûr d'atteindre les buts les plus nobles. Elle lui permet, en effet, d'espérer parvenir aux objectifs ci-après: premièrement, utiliser son potentiel et développer ses ressources naturelles pour le bien-être de ses habitants et l'amélioration du niveau de vie; deuxièmement, progresser dans les domaines suivants: technique, enseignement, agriculture, commerce, industrie, santé publique, bâtiment, communications et dans d'autres domaines encore; troisièmement, développer chez l'individu un sentiment d'indépendance et de respect de soi-même qui lui permettra de devenir un citoyen actif, libre et responsable; quatrièmement, construire une société organisée et éclairée, guidée par la raison; cinquièmement, développer notre force nationale et politique en raffermissant l'unité arabe et la solidarité naionale; sixièmement, enfin, défendre la paix dans notre région et la bâtir sur les principes de droit et de justice, et, dans ce but, ne pas ménager ses efforts pour décourager l'agression contre notre pays, que celle-ci revête la forme d'une invasion armée, d'une occupation militaire ou même d'une simple domination étrangère.

55. Il est en vérité agréable de voir que cette tribune de l'Assemblée générale de l'ONU à sa quinzième session soit la plate-forme d'où seront déclarées l'indépendance et la liberté de tous les peuples du monde. Puissions-nous espérer que le vote qui va intervenir constituera une nouvelle étape importante vers la fraternité internationale!

56. M. HASAN (Pakistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le présent débat revêt une importance spéciale pour notre organisation. Il intervient en effet au cours d'une session qui a vu l'admission à l'ONU de 16 nouveaux Etats africains qui, hier encore, étaient des colonies.

57. Nous nous joignons à eux aujourd'hui pour proclamer la fin du colonialisme. Conquérir et être conquis, tel a été le sort de tous les pays et de presque tous les peuples du monde au cours de l'histoire. Le progrès humain a atteint un stade où l'on considère comme fondamentalement injuste un système qui, pour une grande partie de l'humanité, est à l'origine de tant de souffrances. Le souvenir en est encore amer.

58. En écoutant les discours passionnés qui devaient ouvrir les portes de la liberté aux peuples qui vivent encore sous la contrainte, je suis parfois resté insensible. J'ai, en effet, vécu plus longtemps peut-être que certains de ces défenseurs des droits de l'homme qui ont pris la parole ces jours derniers, et je me prenais à penser à ce que l'histoire nous enseigne, à savoir que la liberté n'a jamais été acquise avec des mots. Vous voudrez bien me permettre d'évoquer ici un souvenir personnel; j'ai vu tomber autour de moi des milliers de mes compatriotes, massacrés en quelques heures parce qu'ils manifestaient contre une loi injuste que des maîtres étrangers avaient prescrite. Je fais allusion aux événements historiques de 1919, connus sous le nom de massacre de Jallianwala Bagh à Amritsar, ma ville natale. J'ai vu ce massacre alors que j'étais un tout jeune garçon, mais ce souvenir est marqué pour toujours dans ma mémoire. Pourtant, la lutte a continué et, après un holocauste pire encore, la liberté a été conquise.

59. Le Pakistan a été le premier des peuples assujettis d'Asie et d'Afrique à conquérir sa liberté. Le processus d'émancipation continue et nous souhaitons ardemment et de toutes nos forces qu'il se poursuive jusqu'à la libération du dernier esclave. Cette liberté, tout en effaçant l'amertume, a exalté ces sacrifices qui désormais illuminent notre histoire.

60. Les sacrifices que nous avons consentis nous ont appris à honorer et à estimer notre propre liberté et celle des autres; notre passé à l'ONU, où nous siégeons depuis 13 ans, montre que nous avons été constamment aux côtés du faible et de l'opprimé et que nous avons toujours pris position et combattu en faveur de la liberté de toutes les nations. On peut vérifier nos votes; nous en sommes fiers. Notre ligne de conduite a toujours été la même: servir la juste cause de la liberté.

61. Pour nous, la liberté nous est apparue comme le couronnement d'une longue lutte implacable. Aussi respectons-nous notre indépendance aussi profondé-ment que les souffrances qui l'ont précédée. La préserver, préserver chaque pouce de la terre bien-aimée qui est devenue notre patrie, c'est pour nous un devoir sacré; cet attachement nous apprend à respecter les sentiments de liberté et d'amour que les autres peuples du monde éprouvent pour leur propre patrie.

62. Ce débat sur le colonialisme, dont le mérite revient à une initiative de l'Union soviétique, est important en ce sens qu'il constitue la condamnation officielle du colonialisme, qu'il soit politique ou économique, paternaliste ou tyrannique; l'histoire l'enregistre avec tristesse, mais ne peut justifier un système qui n'est pas défendable. Les empires coloniaux ont été fondés par la force; au fur et à mesure que des régions nouvelles et de plus en plus vastes étaient ainsi asservies, il a cru pouvoir justifier son existence en disant combien il se préoccupait du bien-être des peuples assujettis. On se refusait à abolir ce système sous prétexte que les populations asservies n'étaient pas prêtes pour l'autonomie; dans leur propre intérêt, il leur fallait vivre sous la tutelle de peuples supérieurs. Le temps est désormais venu où l'on peut dire nettement la vérité: aucune nation n'a le droit d'en gouverner une autre, quel que soit le genre de vie que mène celle-ci. On reconnaît pleinement le droit qu'ont les peuples assujettis de décider de leur propre destin sans la protection ou l'intervention de quiconque. On ne saurait fonder sur d'autres bases les relations entre les peuples. L'expérience de ces 15 dernières années a clairement montré que les Etats avaient fait, dans tous les domaines, des progrès plus rapides à partir du moment où ils sont devenus indépendants. Leur prospérité s'est accrue, comme celle de leurs anciens maîtres.

63. L'ONU a accéléré le processus de l'accession à l'indépendance dans les territoires coloniaux. Le principe de l'égalité des droits et de l'autodétermination pour tous les peuples a été inclus dans la Charte en vue de la libération finale des territoires non autonomes. En vertu des dispositions contenues dans les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte, l'ONU est finalement responsable de l'accession à l'autonomie de tous les peuples coloniaux. Chaque année, l'Organisation s'est penchée sur le problème des colonies, des territoires sous tutelle et sous mandat, de telle sorte qu'au cours de nos délibérations, les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique purent réclamer énergiquement l'indépendance de leurs territoires. Mais, bien que la liberté ait été accordée à plus de 40 pays au cours des 15 dernières années, le colonialisme n'a pas encore complètement disparu. On en trouve encore çà et là des vestiges, et, dans un certain cas, ces vestiges sont à l'origine de tragiques conflits. En tant que Membres de l'ONU, nous devons déployer tous nos efforts pour que le colonialisme capitule totalement et inconditionnellement. En agissant ainsi, nous ne ferons que mener à bien la tâche à laquelle nous sommes tenus, aux termes mêmes de la Charte.

64. L'ONU est fondée sur le principe de l'universalité, d'où elle tire sa plus grande force. Il est donc urgent de créer au plus tôt des conditions telles que tous les Etats épris de paix puissent participer à ses délibérations sur un pied d'égalité. L'admission, cette année, de 17 Etats a donné à l'Organisation une vitalité nouvelle, mais nous ne devons relâcher nos efforts que lorsque le colonialisme aura disparu des régions où il sévit encore.

65. Nous regrettons de devoir encore proclamer que tous les habitants de la planète possèdent un droit inaliénable à la liberté et à l'égalité; nous pensons cependant qu'une proclamation ferme et solennelle de tous les Membres de l'ONU accélérera l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires qui sont toujours soumis à un régime colonial. Ce sera une sorte de commandement moral qu'édicterait cette assemblée et nous sommes convaincus de l'appui sans réserve que tous les Etats Membres sauront lui apporter. Nous sommes pleinement conscients de l'importance qu'il y a à rédiger cette proclamation, de telle façon que son interprétation ne puisse laisser planer aucun doute quant à sa véritable signification.

66. La fin du colonialisme doit être notre but, cela est incontestable; mais à quoi servirait-il donc de récriminer en pure perte? Ce qui importe au plus haut point, c'est de se préoccuper de l'avenir des pays nouvellement indépendants; cet avenir doit être façonné conformément à leurs désirs. Si l'accession à l'indépendance doit se réaliser dans la paix, il n'y a pas lieu d'envenimer les choses en introduisant dans ce débat des controverses et des discussions inopportunes.

67. Nous avons lu avec beaucoup d'intérêt le projet de déclaration: il est fort bien rédigé. On peut être en désaccord sur certains termes, sur certaines formules ou sur certaines idées émises dans ce projet, mais on doit admirer la valeur littéraire de sa composition. Je suis certain que l'humanité sera reconnaissante à M. Khrouchtchev et à sa délégation pour la sollicitude dont ils font preuve à l'égard de l'émancipation de tous les hommes.

68. On nous a rappelé toutes les formes d'exploitation dont nous avons été les victimes, toutes les peines que nous avons supportées, toutes les afflictions dont chaque génération a hérité. C'est en quelque sorte comme si on rappelait à un homme qui a recouvré la santé après une longue maladie les dangers et les inquiétudes qui l'ont accompagnée. Un ami véritable doit au contraire l'aider à oublier ses tribulations et à remercier Dieu de lui avoir rendu la santé et l'espoir d'une longue vie.

69. Le projet de déclaration a pour but de maintenir présent à tous les esprits le souvenir des jours malheureux de la servitude; on a presque essayé de créer une sorte d'union des esclaves émancipés. Il appartient à cette assemblée et à l'ONU de décider si des pays nouvellement libérés ont vraiment intérêt à être de plus en plus conscients des abîmes que la race ou la couleur peuvent creuser entre individus, ou si, au contraire, il convient de s'attacher à mieux harmoniser leur rapports avec les pays plus développés dont ils ont tant besoin pour progresser sur le plan économique et social. A notre avis, nous sommes tous égaux, les grandes nations comme les petites, les hommes blancs comme les hommes de couleur. Notre valeur repose sur notre fierté, sur notre dignité, sur la conviction que nous avons de ne plus jamais connaître la servitude. L'insuffisance de richesses ne diminue pas la fierté et l'amour que l'on doit éprouver pour son pays. Dans un certain sens, si l'on veut agir de façon constructive, il faut créer entre tous les peuples la communauté d'intérêts la plus large. C'est essentiel si l'on veut ménager une transition sans heurt aux nouveaux pays qui quittent la dépendance pour entrer dans l'indépendance; il faut, pour cela, rester insensibles face à l'agitation et aux troubles qui ont malheureusement gâché de nombreux transferts de pouvoir au cours de ces dernières années.

70. La délégation du Pakistan a le privilège d'être l'un des auteurs, avec 39 autres pays africano-asiatiques, du projet de résolution qui a été distribué en tant que document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 4. A la suite des éloquentes déclarations faites ici par d'autres représentants coauteurs du texte, et sur la base des observations que je viens de faire moi-même, ma délégation ose espérer que les termes de ce projet de résolution seront largement acceptés par cette assemblée. Bien que nous pensions que ces termes aient la valeur d'un axiome, il n'est peut-être pas superflu d'attirer l'attention des membres de l'Assemblée qui n'ont pas parrainé le projet de résolution sur trois de ses dispositions.

71. Ces trois dispositions figurent aux paragraphes 4, 5 et 6 du projet de déclaration. Alors que les autres paragraphes énoncent les principes, ces trois paragraphes expriment certains impératifs qui doivent inspirer la politique mondiale actuelle.

72. Le paragraphe 4 demande qu'il soit mis immédiatement fin à toute action armée et à toute mesure de répression dirigées contre les peuples dépendants. Le paragraphe 5 exige que des mesures immédiates soient prises pour le transfert de tous les pouvoirs aux peuples des territoires non autonomes ou des territoires sous tutelle.

73. De peur que nos collègues ne puissent être enclins à penser qu'en n'assortissant ces impératifs d'aucun éclaircissement, nous aurions ainsi négligé les exigences qu'imposent la stabilité et la sécurité internationales, nous signalons les dispositions du paragraphe 6, qui prévoit une garantie contre toute tentative visant à porter atteinte à l'unité nationale et à l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays.

74. En introduisant cette sorte de contrepoids dans la structure de l'ensemble de notre projet de résolution, nous avons, je pense, montré clairement que nous n'avions pas l'intention de tolérer l'abus ou la déformation des termes de notre projet de résolution pour permettre par la suite à certain pays d'agrandir son territoire au détriment d'un autre. En recommandant ce projet de résolution aux membres qui n'en sont pas les auteurs, nous sommes, par conséquent, en mesure de leur donner l'assurance — du fond du cœur et sans la moindre équivoque — que cette déclaration ne sera pas utilisée à des fins d'expansion ou d'intervention dans les affaires intérieures des autres pays et qu'elle ne servira pas non plus à engendrer de nouveaux conflits encore insoupçonnés.

75. Notre but est de mettre fin aux crises et aux conflits. Notre objectif n'est pas d'encourager de nouvelles situations qui pourraient mettre en danger la paix du monde.

76. Enfin, je propose, au moment où nous siégeons ici pour tenter de mettre fin au colonialisme, de demeurer tous vigilants face à toutes les formes nouvelles de ce malaise. L'une de ces formes, que nous ne connaissons tous que trop bien, aura bientôt disparu. D'autres formes pourraient se manifester en d'autres occasions. Les plus sinistres seraient celles qui, laissant de côté l'emploi de la force, croîtraient insidieusement, tenteraient de réduire à l'esclavage les cœurs et les esprits, les écarteraient de leur foi et de leurs traditions par des promesses qui ne sont jamais tenues.

77. M. BELAUNDE (Pérou) [traduit de l'espagnol]: En ces heures d'incertitude et d'angoisse que connaît l'humanité, c'est un vrai rayon de lumière que cette évolution irréversible en faveur de l'indépendance et de la liberté de tous les peuples. Cet éveil de la conscience patriotique chez des peuples soumis au régime colonial est bien là une compensation aux sacrifices et aux deuils nés au cours des dernières guerres mondiales. Il est tout autant réjouissant de voir que de grandes puissances, qui exerçaient leur influence sur de vastes territoires de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, ont su en prendre conscience.

78. Il ne nous appartient pas, à l'heure présente, de porter un jugement sur le phénomène qui a abouti à la constitution des empires, ni sur ses effets à l'égard de ce que les sociologues appellent la "transculture". Notre point de vue s'inspire du critère suprême de la dignité de la personne humaine, individuelle et collective, et, partant, du droit qu'ont tous les hommes de jouir de la liberté sous toutes ses formes, et notamment du droit de se grouper ou de s'associer en vue de former des entités collectives ou des nations. Il faut à ces collectivités, pour atteindre pleinement leur but, les organes juridiques dont disposent les Etats souverains.

79. Très justement, on a rappelé ici l'œuvre remarquable qu'a réalisée le Royaume-Uni en déclarant l'indépendance de tant de pays et, après que celle-ci a été affirmée, en établissant avec eux les liens d'amitié et de coopération, qui contribuent au renforcement de la paix du monde.

80. Il y a 10 ans, nous avons accueilli avec allégresse à l'ONU la grande République d'Indonésie, après qu'elle eut conclu des accords avec les Pays-Bas. Il est également juste de rappeler ici la politique récemment adoptée par la France, qui nous permet de compter désormais sur la présence des pays de la Communauté française; celle de Chypre, également, remarquablement située au carrefour de tant de civilisations, dont l'indépendance — acquise grâce à l'accord que l'ONU a suggéré — est le meilleur symbole de l'efficacité d'une coopération à l'échelon international. La Belgique, enfin, a décidé de donner au Congo (Léopoldville) son indépendance; ce pays, incorporé dans notre organisation, attend l'assistance qui lui permettra de consolider ses institutions.

81. Aux anciens liens de l'imperium doit aujourd'hui faire place une large et libre collaboration qui — comme le voulait le président Wilson — base l'amitié sur l'honneur et sur l'égalité.

82. Le mouvement libérateur dont nous sommes aujourd'hui les témoins n'est que l'épanouissement de la révolution qui s'est opérée sur nos continents à la fin du XVIII^{ème} siècle et au début du XIX^{ème} siècle. La liberté des peuples américains contenait le ferment et a servi d'exemple aux mouvements analogues qui ont eu pour théâtre les territoires d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Océanie, où de vieilles civilisations avaient précédé et influencé la culture occidentale. Nos libérateurs avaient exprimé de manière inégalable cet idéal qui souhaitait voir notre révolution s'étendre dans le monde pour former, grâce au concours de tous les peuples libres, une "fédération régie par un code de lois de valeur universelle basé sur le principe de l'égalité absolue, sans différence de race ou de couleur". Je tire cet extrait d'un document admirable, une lettre personnelle de Bolívar, en date du 20 février 1826 et découverte par le grand historien du Libérateur, don Vicente Lecuna.

83. En ce qui nous concerne, nous Ibéro-Américains, les principes que l'on vient d'énoncer, visant la libre détermination, correspondaient aux plus nobles traditions de l'esprit juridique de l'Espagne. Les pays d'Europe, et, en particulier, l'Espagne et le Portugal, ont adhéré à une philosophie selon laquelle l'Etat se fondait non sur le pouvoir, comme ce fut malheureusement le cas au cours du XIXème siècle, mais bien sur la justice. Les "behetrías" et les "cabildos" en Espagne, ainsi que les "cabildos" hispano-américains ou ibéro-américains, se considéraient comme les mandataires d'une souveraineté qui, étant donné la carence du monarque, leur revenait entièrement. La découverte de l'Amérique offre l'occasion à Francisco de Vitoria de proclamer — face à la terrible réalité que représentait l'empire de Charles Quint — l'obligation de respecter non seulement la propriété et la liberté individuelle, mais encore le gouvernement des populations aborigènes. Francisco Suárez, doctor admirabilis écouté et respecté de l'Europe entière, fonde la souveraineté sur le consentement des peuples gouvernés. Sa doctrine correspond par conséquent à celle qu'enseignent les sciences politiques d'aujourd'hui et dépasse tout ce que d'autres ont pu tenter à l'époque où parurent les œuvres de Suárez. Pendant la révolution américaine, notre enthousiasme à vouloir affirmer notre nationalisme fut enrichi par l'apport des valeurs spirituelles héritées de l'Espagne et du Portugal, apport qui donna à la révolution à la fois un sens moral élevé et une autorité indiscutable, sur le plan juridique.

84. Le projet de résolution présenté par les puissances africano-asiatiques [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 4] dont nous discutons en ce moment constitue le sommet de cette évolution historique. Le Pacte de la Société des Nations la laissait quelque peu présager, mais ce n'est que dans la Charte de San Francisco que ces principes ont été solennellement affirmés. Ce que l'on est convenu d'appeler l'esprit de San Francisco comportait deux éléments: paix dans la justice et proclamation de la liberté de tous les hommes et de tous les peuples. On a considéré, non pas comme un privilège, mais comme une responsabilité et une mission sacrée — celle de préparer de façon spéciale et inéluctable à l'indépendance — l'autorité qu'exerçaient certains pays sur des territoires qui, ni géographiquement, ni moralement, ne faisaient partie intégrante de la métropole. Les auteurs du projet de résolution ont bien fait de transcrire textuellement dans le préambule quelques passages de la Charte qui nous régit; ils ont encore mieux agi en se référant aux liens étroits qui unissent les libertés individuelles à la réalité de la souveraineté nationale. Les auteurs du projet ont fait nettement ressortir que la soumission et la domination d'un peuple par un autre, quelle qu'en soit la forme, quel qu'en soit le prétexte ou le motif, représentent aujourd'hui un péril pour la paix de l'humanité.

85. On pourrait dire que, d'une façon générale, le projet de résolution cadre avec l'esprit et la lettre de la Charte des Nations Unies. Il implique simplement, pour la réalisation de ses desseins, la nécessité d'évoluer à un rythme plus rapide que celui que nous envisagions il y a 15 ans à San Francisco, à l'époque des grandes espérances. Ce désir d'un rythme accéléré s'explique, car le rythme du progrès humain, lui aussi, s'est depuis lors accéléré et parce que, par un tragique contraste, nous avons vu aussi s'accroître les causes de conflits, de frictions et de différends qui nous font craindre une guerre de destruction universelle.

86. La proclamation de la liberté de tous les peuples ne peut et ne doit pas prendre un caractère individualiste incohérent, isolationniste, mais bien au contraire avoir un sens profond: celui de la solidarité, de la cohésion et de la coopération. La liberté ne saurait être sauvegardée que dans la compréhension et l'amour; elle ne peut se limiter à la conception étroite et rigide d'un particularisme chauvin. On ne saurait non plus interpréter les liens régionaux qui dérivent de la géographie, de l'histoire et des racines profondes de la culture de façon à les opposer au mouvement actuel qui va dans le sens de l'œcuménisme. Les peuples libres, non seulement par leur action naturelle, mais pour garantir leur propre existence, doivent nécessairement agir dans des sphères de solidarité toujours plus larges. La liberté suppose le choix spontané de moyens de vie et de culture; mais, par ailleurs, l'association qu'une longue vie vécue côte à côte a souvent favorisée ne doit pas garder inutilement les traces des rancœurs et des ressentiments du passé. Spinoza disait que celui-là seul lutte librement qui lutte avec amour. La conquête qui aboutit à l'indépendance nationale n'est pas née de la haine, mais d'un idéal de création et de coopération. Les peuples qui ont acquis leur liberté ont besoin, à l'instar des individus, d'une atmosphère de respect, d'amitié et d'assistance désintéressée. Nous avons la conviction que l'avènement de la liberté, en Asie et en Afrique, revêtira les aspects nobles et généreux qu'a présentés la conquête de la liberté en Amérique. Cette liberté, nous l'avons conquise contre la volonté de tous, selon les termes mêmes de Bolívar, et cependant nous avons su oublier les obstacles et les combats; nous avons voulu que notre patrie fût un foyer susceptible d'accueillir tous les peuples de la terre. Nous avons constamment recherché l'amitié et la coopération de ceux qui furent nos ennemis de longue date, mais nos nobles adversaires, ou avec ceux qui avaient été parfois de timides alliés, ou encore les spectateurs indifférents de nos combats. Cette attitude a permis d'établir des relations étroites entre l'Amérique et le reste du monde. Nous avons ainsi souligné, avec fierté, le sens universel de notre révolution et sommes persuadés qu'un même sentiment anime les pays africains et asiatiques.

87. Il y a une raison de plus pour qu'il en soit ainsi. A l'époque de notre indépendance, il n'existait aucune institution d'ordre politique pouvant prétendre représenter l'humanité. Nous avons élevé, lentement, obstinément, à Panama d'abord, au Congrès de Lima ensuite, dans les conférences panaméricaines enfin, l'édifice de notre organisation, qui se trouve être l'organisation régionale la plus ancienne et la plus complète. Mais les nations d'Afrique et d'Asie sont nées à la vie indépendante à l'ombre maternelle et protectrice de l'ONU. Celle-ci, défenseur vigilant des principes de la Charte, a veillé à ce que toutes les dispositions concernant l'autonomie soient respectées. Leur indépendance une fois conquise, ces nouvelles nations ont été accueillies chaleureusement par l'Organisation. Délaissant pour un moment les débats politiques, les problèmes du réarmement, et faisant taire les plus tragiques pressentiments, l'ONU s'est surpassée dans le domaine économique et en matière d'assistance technique pour préparer les peuples à l'indépendance et, celle-ci une fois acquise, à la leur préserver. L'idéal de paix de notre organisation consistait aussi à pouvoir améliorer les niveaux de vie des peuples, en affectant à ce programme les sommes que l'on économiserait en limitant les armements.

88. Je suis convaincu que les peuples qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance considèrent l'ONU comme l'institution qui doit sauvegarder leur liberté et garantir leur progrès.

89. La grande espérance pour la paix du monde — je le dis avec une profonde conviction — c'est de voir les pays Membres de l'ONU et les nouveaux Etats qui se joindront à nous demain, tous animés d'un même esprit, rester rigoureusement fidèles aux principes de notre charte. Souhaitons que, tous ensemble, sans d'autres liens, sans d'autres alliances, sans d'autres engagements que la forme de coopération qui découle juridiquement de la Charte, nous sachions, avec une dignité et avec un courage inébranlable, nous défendre contre toute influence étrangère, contre toute manœuvre ou jeu politique qui, en nous enlevant notre personnalité, ne ferait de nous que les simples instruments de la guerre froide! Nous sommes certains que, tous ensemble, avec enthousiasme, grâce à une miraculeuse union des âmes, nous saurons faire respecter les principes de la Charte, veiller à ce qu'ils soient strictement observés. L'avenir de l'ONU, je vous le dis, peuples amis — et je m'adresse également à ceux qui viendront demain — dépend strictement de l'union étroite de tous, grands et petits pays, pour créer l'atmosphère qui rende impérative et inévitable la coopération de tous, des faibles et des forts, des grands et des petits, dans le maintien d'un idéal de justice et de paix.

La séance est levée à 12 h 30.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE

OCT 24 1961

SÉANCE PLÉNIÈRE

Jeudi 1er décembre 1960,
à 20 h 30

QUINZIÈME SESSION

UN/SA COLLEC

Documents officiels

NEW YORK

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1125

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

En l'absence du Président, M. Hasan (Pakistan), vice-président, prend la présidence.

1. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant des Pays-Bas qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

2. M. EINAAR (Pays-Bas) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ce matin [930^{ème} séance] le représentant du Honduras a mentionné un certain nombre de territoires qui se trouvent dans la région de l'Amérique latine et qui sont encore des possessions coloniales d'autres pays.
Au nombre de ces territoires qui conservent un statut colonial il a cité "Aruba, Curaçao et le Surinam".

3. J'ai demandé la parole uniquement pour pouvoir faire observer au représentant du Honduras qu'il n'a pu mentionner ces territoires que par suite d'un lapsus qui n'était certainement pas intentionnel.

4. En vertu de la charte du Royaume des Pays-Bas promulguée en 1954, les trois parties du royaume, c'est-à-dire les Pays-Bas, le Surinam et les Antilles néerlandaises, ont instauré un nouveau statut constitu-tionnel du Royaume des Pays-Bas, aux termes duquel les trois pays constitueront dorénavant une libre association de partenaires placés sur un pied de parfaite égalité, géreront leurs intérêts particuliers indépen-damment et leurs intérêts communs sur la base de l'égalité et se prêteront mutuellement assistance.

5. Depuis le 29 décembre 1954 — date à laquelle est entrée en vigueur cette charte rédigée et approuvée conjointement — toute forme de colonialisme n'est plus au Surinam et aux Antilles néerlandaises qu'un souvenir du passé.

6. L'Assemblée générale a reconnu cette situation en adoptant la résolution 945 (X), du 15 décembre 1955, aux termes de laquelle elle approuvait la cessation de la transmission, par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, des renseignements visés à l'Article 73, e, de la Charte des Nations Unies, au sujet des Antilles néerlandaises et du Surinam.

7. Je suis persuadé que le représentant du Honduras acceptera cette mise au point et qu'il comprendra que nous soyons fiers, au Surinam et aux Antilles, d'être complètement autonomes et que nous ne puissions pas accepter d'être considérés comme des colonies.

8. M. AW (Mali): La délégation de la République du Mali, en intervenant dans le débat qui s'ouvre sur la fin du colonialisme, pour la première fois dans les annales de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à l'As-semblée générale, n'entend pas seulement participer à un procès tendant à la condamnation du système connu sous le nom de colonialisme. Ma délégation, comme les autres auteurs du projet de résolution
A/L.323 et Add.1 à 4 qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune, espère plus et demande plus, car elle estime que le procès du colonialisme n'est plus à faire. Nous espérons qu'en adoptant à l'unanimité le projet de résolution que nous lui soumettons, l'Assemblée générale exprimera, avant le monde entier, sa volonté d'enterrer définitivement le colonialisme aux abois, sur lequel des pharisiens mal inspirés voudraient nous apitoyer en répétant, d'ailleurs, je dois le dire, sans conviction, que la colonisation n'a pas fait que du mal aux populations qui en ont été l'objet, car il y a eu des écoles construites, des hôpitaux bâtis, des routes tracées, etc.

9. Avant de répondre à ce genre d'hypocrisies, qu'il nous soit permis de rendre ici un hommage au Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, qui a bien voulu demander au Président de l'Assemblée générale de soumettre à celle-ci l'examen de la question dont nous discutons et qui est intitulée:
"Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" [A/4501]. Cette proposition, qui a soulevé un enthousiasme mérité, fait aujourd'hui l'objet de nos délibérations, et ma délégation est persuadée que l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne manquera pas de saisir cette occasion qui lui est offerte d'accomplir sa mission de justice, de liberté et de paix dans un domaine particulièrement sensible, car il s'agit ici du sort de dizaines de millions d'êtres humains exploités au nom d'un humanisme dépassé dont nul n'aimerait être le complice devant l'histoire.

10. Que des pays à vocation colonialiste acceptent ou refusent de collaborer loyalement à la grande et noble œuvre que nous sommes en voie d'accomplir, cela, ils en sont seuls juges; mais, de grâce, que les représentants de ces pays n'essaient pas de jouer ici les loups revêtant la peau de l'agneau, en nous disant leur innocence de tous les péchés dont on les accable, en essayant de transporter nos justes récriminations sur le terrain mouvant de la guerre froide. Qu'on ne vienne pas nous dire qu'en fusillant des masses pacifiques et sans défense on contribue à leur bien-être, qu'en torturant des patriotes on éduque les peuples, qu'en soumettant des enfants, des femmes et des vieillards au travail forcé on assure l'élévation du niveau de vie. Que ceux qui cherchent à soulager leur conscience en cachant leurs crimes ne nous disent plus: "Avant notre arrivée dans ces territoires, il n'y avait rien." Quelle erreur! Il n'y avait rien, mais, avant l'arrivée des colonialistes, il y avait l'indépendance; l'indépendance, c'est-à-dire la liberté. Et qu'y a-t-il de plus précieux au monde pour un peuple que la liberté?

11. Quand le général de Gaulle a lancé par dépit à la figure des Guinéens, au mois d'août 1958: "Vous voulez l'indépendance? Eh bien, prenez-la avec les inconvénients que cela comporte", on se souvient de la réplique du président Sekou Touré: "Nous prenons l'indépendance avec ses avantages!"

12. Qui ignore désormais que le mythe du bon chrétien s'expatriant pour apporter la civilisation aux bouddhistes d'Asie ou aux païens d'Afrique et d'Océanie est devenu ridicule? Qui oserait nier que les lois générales de l'évolution humaine auraient conduit, grâce aux échanges libres et amicaux, les peuples colonisés au diapason des nations prospères et heureuses, si les colonialistes ne s'étaient pas appropriés leurs richesses, leur interdisant ainsi toute possibilité d'évolution harmonieuse? Aucune évocation d'écoles construites ou d'hôpitaux bâtis ne saurait dissimuler cette terrible réalité du crime de lèse-humanité perpétré par les porteurs de la sacro-sainte civilisation.

13. Car enfin il ne s'agit pas de déclarer que la colonisation a amené dans les pays exploités l'alphabétisation relative des enfants, ou bien des chemins de fer, ou bien des routes, mais de savoir si un fermier qui appelle le vétérinaire pour soigner sa vache malade le fait pour des raisons humanitaires ou simplement pour préserver une source de revenus.

14. La colonisation a été imposée par la perfidie ou par la force à des populations qui avaient leur civilisation et ne demandaient rien à personne. Ecoutez plutôt le Moro Naba de Ouagadougou, en Haute-Volta, qui faisait dire, en 1895, au capitaine Destenaves dépêché auprès de lui par le Gouvernement français pour conclure un traité — je citerai les propres termes de cet empereur africain:

"Depuis longtemps, j'ai fait consulter les grigris, qui ont répondu que si je voyais un blanc j'étais un homme mort. Je sais que les blancs veulent me faire mourir pour me prendre mon pays, et d'ailleurs tu prétends qu'ils vont m'aider à organiser mon pays. Mais je trouve mon pays très bien tel qu'il est. Je n'ai nullement besoin d'eux; je sais ce qu'il me faut et ce que je veux; j'ai mes marchands; aussi estime-toi heureux que je ne te fasse pas couper la tête. Va-t'en donc, et surtout ne reviens plus."

15. Voilà qui est précis. Mais alors pourquoi la colonisation? Nul ne saurait le dire avec une voix aussi autorisée que Georges Hardy, qui écrit, dans une Histoire sociale de la colonisation française:

"Pour les hommes d'Etat des XVII^{ème} et XVIII^{ème} siècles, en France comme ailleurs, la colonisation n'est qu'une "affaire", une entreprise toute mercantile, un élément du grand commerce maritime^{1/}."

Et Georges Hardy poursuit:

"Rien ne révèle mieux les tendances profondes de cette colonisation que le régime économique qui fut imposé aux colonies et qui porte le nom de système colonial ou, plus nettement encore, d'Exclusif."

"Chaque compagnie, en compensation de ses charges, bénéficiait de certains privilèges: droits régaliers sur les territoires occupés, exemptions, subventions, etc. Mais son principal avantage, c'était le monopole du trafic dans les régions qui formaient son domaine: les habitants étaient tenus de lui réserver la vente de leurs produits et l'achat des objets dont ils avaient besoin; tout autre commerce était exclu de cette chasse gardée."

"C'était bien entendu les étrangers que visait un tel système, mais il était en même temps destiné à prévenir la concurrence possible des colonies à la métropole. Dessiné dès la fondation des premières colonies, il prend avec Colbert, particulièrement inquiet de la pénurie monétaire, tournure de doctrine et, malgré quelques atténuations, se prolonge jusqu'à la Révolution. Les différentes réglementations qu'il inspire se résument en ces quelques formules: ... les produits coloniaux sont faits pour alimenter la consommation française; les produits français ont, seuls, accès sur le marché colonial. Des industries ne peuvent se créer dans les colonies qu'à la condition de ne point faire double emploi avec les industries françaises; les transports maritimes entre la France et ses colonies ne sont autorisés que sous pavillon français^{2/}."

16. Voilà, décrit par M. Georges Hardy que nul ne songerait à soupçonner d'idées subversives ou communistes, le système économique, abusivement appelé "pacte colonial", qui est le fondement et l'essence de la colonisation.

17. Mais la réalité est parfois hideuse, et les colonisateurs ont eu des spécialistes en matière de faux et de cynisme pour écrire à l'eau de rose les récits des grandes épopées coloniales qu'on nous présente volontiers comme un entreprise philanthropique, une œuvre désintéressée de pacification et de civilisation.

18. Aimé Césaire, dans son fameux Discours sur le colonialisme, avec le style de feu qui lui est propre, écrit:

"Colonisation et civilisation?"

"La malédiction la plus commune en cette matière est d'être la dupe de bonne foi d'une hypocrisie collective, habile à mal poser les problèmes pour mieux légitimer les odieuses solutions qu'on leur apporte."

"Cela revient à dire que l'essentiel est ici de voir clair, de penser clair, entendre dangereusement, de répondre clair à l'innocente question initiale: qu'est-ce en son principe que la colonisation? De convenir de ce qu'elle n'est point; ni évangélisation, ni entreprise philanthropique, ni volonté de reculer les frontières de l'ignorance, de la maladie, de la tyrannie, ni élargissement de Dieu, ni extension du droit; d'admettre une fois pour toutes, sans volonté de broncher aux conséquences, que le geste décisif est ici de l'aventurier et du pirate, de l'épicier en grand et de l'armateur, du chercheur d'or et du marchand, de l'appétit et de la force, avec, derrière, l'ombre portée, maléfique, d'une forme de civilisation qui, à un moment de son histoire, se constate obligée, de façon interne, d'étendre à l'échelle mondiale la concurrence de ses économies antagonistes."

^{1/} Georges Hardy, Histoire sociale de la colonisation française (Paris, éd. Larose, 1953), p. 13.

^{2/} Ibid., p. 14 et 15.

"Poursuivant mon analyse" — c'est toujours Aimé Césaire qui parle — "je trouve que l'hypocrisie est de date récente; car ni Cortez découvrant Mexico du haut du grand Téocalli, ni Pizarre devant Cuzco (encore moins Marco Polo devant Cambaluc), ne protestent d'être les fourriers d'un ordre supérieur; qu'ils tuent; qu'ils pillent; qu'ils ont des casques, des lances, des cupidités; que les baveurs sont venus plus tard; que le grand responsable dans ce domaine est le pédantisme chrétien, pour avoir posé les équations malhonnêtes: christianisme égale civilisation, paganisme égale sauvagerie, d'où ne pouvaient que s'ensuivre d'abominables conséquences colonialistes et racistes, dont les victimes devaient être les Indiens, les jaunes, les nègres^{3/}."

19. Permettez-moi cette remarquable citation dont l'intérêt, j'en suis sûr, n'échappe à personne. Aimé Césaire conclut en ces termes:

"Cela réglé, j'admets que mettre des civilisations différentes en contact les unes avec les autres est bien; que marier des mondes différents est excellent; qu'une civilisation, quel que soit son génie intime, à se replier sur elle-même, ne peut que s'étioiler; que l'échange est ici l'oxygène, et que la grande chance de l'Europe est d'avoir été un carrefour, et que d'avoir été le lieu géométrique de toutes les idées, le réceptacle de toutes les philosophies, le lieu d'accueil de tous les sentiments en a fait le meilleur redistributeur d'énergie.

"Mais alors je pose la question suivante: la colonisation a-t-elle vraiment mis en contact ou, si l'on préfère, de toutes les manières d'établir le contact, était-elle la meilleure?

"Je réponds non. Et je dis que, de la colonisation à la civilisation, la distance est infinie; que de toutes les expéditions coloniales accumulées, de tous les statuts coloniaux élaborés, de toutes les circulaires ministérielles expédiées, on ne saurait réussir à trouver une seule valeur humaine^{4/}."

20. L'exposé d'Aimé Césaire, clair et net, nous paraît une thèse très solide et nous amène naturellement à poser une autre question. La décolonisation est-elle, historiquement, possible? Il est certain que ce néologisme recouvre aussi une dangereuse mystification. Et la vertigineuse série d'indépendances qui illustrera l'année 1960 dans l'histoire de l'humanité nous prouve, s'il en était besoin, qu'il est impossible de parler d'évolution progressive quand nous voyons les événements se dérouler à une telle allure, car, en fait, il n'y a pas de peuples mineurs inaptes à se gouverner librement. Bien sûr, il y a de mauvais gouvernements, mais il faut reconnaître qu'on en trouve partout, à tous les échelons de grandeur.

21. De Bandoung à aujourd'hui, on a l'impression que plusieurs siècles se sont écoulés, tant sont profonds les bouleversements qui font craquer de toutes parts l'édifice du colonialisme jusqu'à ses fondements.

22. Quinze années se sont écoulées depuis San Francisco. Ceux qui appelaient, il y a cinq ans à peine, des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique leurs possessions ne rient plus aujourd'hui qu'un peuple ne peut être une possession. La similitude entre le colonisé et l'esclave est devenue évidente. C'est, si je ne m'abuse, le président Franklin Roosevelt qui disait que les générations futures se demanderont un jour comment on a pu abolir l'esclavage et admettre, si longtemps après, le régime colonial dans les rapports d'Etat à Etat.

23. Qu'est-ce que c'était qu'un esclave? Un homme que l'on achetait au marché, ou un prisonnier que l'on ramenait d'une bataille gagnée. Un homme dont on dispose comme de son propre patrimoine.

24. Et le colonisé? Il y a lieu de remarquer tout d'abord qu'il ne s'en trouve pas, à l'échelle des individus; on ne trouve pas un homme ou un petit groupe d'hommes qu'on se propose de coloniser. On décide d'investir tout un pays et c'est tout un peuple qu'on assujettit. Comme l'esclave, le colonisé obéit aux volontés de son maître, le colonisateur, qui dispose de lui comme de son patrimoine propre.

25. Il n'y a plus de doute sur le caractère immoral de la domination coloniale dont il faut convenir qu'elle ne diffère en rien de l'esclavage. Par conséquent, nous sommes aujourd'hui unanimes ici à condamner le colonialisme, mais il ne semble pas que la même unanimité se retrouve lorsqu'il s'agit de passer aux actes. Qui est-ce qui rompt cette unanimité sur la liquidation immédiate du colonialisme? Bien sûr, ce sont les pays encore possesseurs de colonies. Ils sont tentés de soutenir la thèse de la promotion harmonieuse, par étapes, des pays coloniaux et, ce disant, ils se fondent sur leur expérience de métropoles prédestinées, particulièrement avisées du problème de l'évolution des colonies.

26. Ils sont tentés de nous dire: croyez-en notre expérience, c'est rendre un mauvais service à ces pays que de précipiter les choses; de là à ajouter: voyez l'exemple du Congo ex-belge, il n'y a qu'un pas que d'aucuns ont vite franchi. C'est aux tenants de ce genre de raisonnement que je voudrais dire qu'ils sont dépassés par les événements.

27. Les Nations Unies ne sont plus une assemblée où il y a, d'un côté, ceux qui peuvent faire état de leur longue expérience de colonisateurs avertis, et, de l'autre, des puissances qui n'ont pas de colonies et dont les intentions les plus louables à l'égard des peuples opprimés sont vite dénoncées comme des manœuvres démagogiques. Il y a aujourd'hui, aux Nations Unies, d'autres voix qui peuvent apporter les témoignages les plus irréfutables et les plus édifiants sur le colonialisme. Il y a aujourd'hui, aux Nations Unies, des représentants de peuples qui ont souffert du colonialisme dans leur chair et dans leur dignité. Chaque génération, a-t-on coutume de dire, a le sentiment d'être à un tournant de l'histoire. Les générations actuelles des pays dépendants et coloniaux vivent incontestablement un tournant de leur histoire, un tournant de l'histoire tout court. Les délégations qui parlent dans cette assemblée de leur expérience coloniale, ou vantent les bienfaits de la colonisation, ne peuvent malheureusement parler que de l'empire à papa; elles en parlent comme d'un héritage.

28. Si leurs pays ont été colonisés au cours de l'histoire, elles ne le savent que par les manuels d'histoire. Et c'est là la différence fondamentale entre ces délégations et nous, nous qui avons vécu le régime colonial. Nous ne l'avons pas entendu conter, nous ne l'avons pas appris à l'école, nous en avons constitué le champ d'application concret pendant des décennies. Nous sommes une génération qui, lorsqu'elle a atteint sa majorité, n'avait pas le droit de vote dans son propre pays.

^{3/} Aimé Césaire, Discours sur le colonialisme, Paris, Présence africaine, 1955, p. 8 à 10.

^{4/} Ibid., p. 10 et 11.

29. Qu'il nous soit permis de rappeler à certaines délégations que nous sommes désormais là, nous, peuples hier colonisés et dépendants, aujourd'hui peuples à part entière, nous sommes là prêts à apporter 1.000 témoignages qui interdisent la perpétuation du colonialisme sous quelque prétexte que ce soit.

30. Quand nous entendons des arguments aussi terre à terre que ceux qui consistent à ramener le bilan positif du colonialisme à la présence de quelques bons orateurs issus de pays récemment affranchis, nous ne sommes pas en peine; bien au contraire, nous y trouvons la preuve que les apologistes du colonialisme sont à bout d'arguments. Nous allons peut-être décevoir quelques-unes des délégations en concluant que la plupart des élites des pays nouvellement indépendants n'ont pas été formées dans des conditions normales par le colonisateur; la plupart de ces élites ont été soumises à des cycles d'étude particuliers qui ne devaient déboucher sur aucun horizon, qui enseignaient le culte et la supériorité de la métropole, tout en mettant l'accent sur notre incapacité congénitale. Bon nombre des élites aujourd'hui ont atteint l'adolescence à l'école sans avoir eu l'occasion d'apprendre qu'il existait de par le monde d'autres pays que leur métropole qui était toujours qualifiée de salvatrice et de magnanime.

31. Si ces élites se montrent aujourd'hui à la hauteur de leurs responsabilités, il ne faut pas y chercher un témoignage de la volonté du colonisateur de conduire les peuples dépendants vers leur majorité conformément à l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies. Il faut au contraire voir à travers ces succès, malheureusement fort peu nombreux à notre gré, la preuve qu'aucun système d'éducation, si draconien soit-il, ne peut annihiler les qualités d'un peuple décidé à se libérer.

32. L'expérience africaine que nous vivons montre en tout cas combien la roue de l'histoire peut tourner vite, au point de donner le vertige à des puissances coloniales ébahies, n'arrivant pas à comprendre qu'elles doivent irrémédiablement accepter de perdre leurs paradis qui constituent autant d'enfers pour des millions d'êtres humains trop longtemps ravalés au rang de bêtes de somme, et cela au nom d'une supériorité raciale imaginaire. Nous plaignons avec M. Jean Bruhat les rédacteurs de manuels de géographie à l'usage de la jeunesse:

"Ils s'essoufflent à faire et à refaire les cartes de l'Afrique de 1956: six Etats indépendants contre 26 en 1960. A peine "mises en place" (selon la formule consacrée), les institutions doivent être transformées."

33. Et les colonialistes, chaque fois, jettent du lest avec l'espoir de conserver le principal, car n'oublions pas que, fondamentalement, ils ne renoncent jamais de gaieté de cœur à l'exploitation des pays qu'ils dominent.

34. Nous savons que deux puissances ont crupouvoir se mettre à l'abri de l'irrésistible vent d'indépendance qui souffle sur le continent africain en inventant l'artifice juridique des provinces d'outre-mer pour tenter de couvrir d'un voile pudique le colonialisme forcé qu'elles pratiquent dans leurs colonies. Nous enregistrons avec beaucoup de satisfaction la décision de la Quatrième Commission de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies^{5/} qui vient de démolir ce dernier rempart en votant à une majorité qui lui fait honneur un projet de résolution qui déclare que les prétendues provinces d'outre-mer sont bel et bien des colonies et doivent désormais être considérées comme telles.

35. Le processus de la libération est déclenché et il est irréversible. Comme l'a dit Abraham Lincoln, "on peut tromper tout le peuple une partie du temps ou une partie du peuple tout le temps, mais on ne peut pas tromper tout le peuple tout le temps"

36. Nous voudrions dire aux colonialistes de la quatorzième heure que le point critique de la libération des peuples sous domination a été franchi en 1960. La prise de conscience est désormais universelle et toutes les tentatives d'assimilation des originaires des colonies aux ressortissants des métropoles seront vaines. Car il est à signaler que la métropole n'est jamais sincère dans ce désir d'assimilation; l'assimilation lui pose toujours des problèmes insolubles; elle est en opposition directe avec les intérêts de la métropole, intérêts qui sont essentiellement fondés sur la frustration de celui qu'on prétend rétablir dans ses droits.

37. Ni le baume du faux-semblant de l'assimilationnisme, comme en Angola, ni la subversion organisée comme au Congo, ni la guerre à visage découvert, comme en Algérie, ne sauraient sauver le colonialisme dont la condamnation est sans appel. Nous répétons que le processus est historique et irréversible, et nous affirmons qu'il est indépendant de la volonté du colonisateur. Souvenons-nous-en.

38. Sir Winston Churchill déclarait au Guild Hall de Londres le 10 novembre 1942 au sujet des colonies:

"Ce que nous avons, nous le gardons. Je ne suis pas devenu le premier ministre du Roi afin de présider à la liquidation de l'Empire britannique."

39. Il faut se souvenir aussi de la fameuse conférence de Brazzaville dont le gaullisme voudrait faire une œuvre libérale de décolonisation, de cette conférence qui commençait ses recommandations en ces termes:

"Les fins de l'œuvre de civilisation accomplies par la France dans les colonies écartent toute idée d'autonomie, toute possibilité d'évolution hors du bloc français de l'Empire; la constitution éventuelle, même lointaine" — entendez bien: même lointaine — "de self-government dans les colonies est à écarter."

40. Il ne faut pas oublier non plus que le Premier Ministre français déclarait le 9 juin 1960 devant l'Assemblée nationale française:

"Nous voulons sauvegarder, en ce qui concerne notre pays, ses intérêts politiques, ses intérêts stratégiques, aussi son influence intellectuelle et ses possibilités économiques."

41. On ne saurait être plus précis. Les exploiters des pays coloniaux n'entendent donner d'une main aux peuples colonisés que ce qu'ils peuvent leur retirer de l'autre, car l'Afrique par exemple produit 98,4 pour 100 des diamants du globe, 66,4 pour 100 du cobalt, 45 pour 100 de l'or, 35 pour 100 des phosphates, 29 pour 100 du manganèse, près de 25 pour 100 du cuiivre, sans parler des réserves naturelles de plomb, de zinc, de bauxite, de fer et des minerais radioactifs. Par ailleurs, le continent africain est le premier producteur mondial de cacao, d'arachide et d'huile de palme.

^{5/} Voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Quatrième Commission, 1048^e séance.

42. Faut-il cependant déduire de ce qui précède que toute indépendance octroyée est nécessairement une fausse indépendance qu'il faut mépriser? Nous ne le pensons pas, parce que nous sommes convaincus que, chaque fois qu'un peuple colonisé accède à une parcelle de liberté, il le doit avant tout à une certaine prise de conscience de ses masses. Nous ne le pensons pas non plus parce que nous savons que, chaque fois qu'un peuple colonisé parvient à une forme d'auto-détermination, cette victoire lui ouvre fatalement la voie d'une victoire plus grande sur les forces étrangères de domination.

43. Le général de Gaulle l'a très bien compris qui s'accroche désespérément à l'"Algérie algérienne", tout en refusant de donner la parole au peuple algérien sous le contrôle des Nations Unies. Gageons que la France, dans son obstination à vouloir étouffer la volonté du peuple fier et courageux d'Algérie, se réveillera bientôt aux réalités éclatantes d'une Algérie radieuse qui aura brisé ses chaînes en déposant les armes aux pieds des Nations Unies pour entendre la voix de son peuple qui aura retrouvé la confiance.

44. En attendant, faisons en sorte que ceux qui ne se battent pas encore pour arracher leur liberté puissent être reconnaissants à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de leur avoir épargné une guerre inutile et injuste. N'est-ce pas là le rôle primordial d'une organisation universaliste, créée à l'issue de la victoire des peuples épris de paix et de liberté sur les forces du nazisme et du fascisme?

45. Ma délégation espère que l'Assemblée votera à l'unanimité tous les projets de résolution qui peuvent être présentés, tendant à concrétiser la liquidation complète du colonialisme. L'Assemblée doit le faire parce que non seulement une telle attitude est conforme à l'esprit de la Charte, mais surtout parce qu'elle apporte la contribution la plus efficace au maintien de la paix dans le monde. Tant que les Nations Unies reconnaîtront à certains peuples le droit de disposer d'autres peuples, les conflits demeureront en perspective, des conflits qui peuvent partir d'un coin d'Afrique, d'Asie ou d'Amérique à tout moment, pour devenir la source d'une conflagration à grande échelle, eu égard à la situation politique mondiale d'aujourd'hui.

46. L'Assemblée ne devrait pas différer sa décision sous prétexte qu'un Etat devrait d'abord atteindre un certain degré d'évolution pour disposer de lui-même. S'il est facile de parler du principe d'un niveau minimum d'évolution, nous ne voyons pas comment pourrait être défini ce niveau et sur quels critères seraient fixés des délais éventuels. Nous voyons ce que la Belgique a fait au Congo en 80 ans; nous voyons ce qui a été fait en d'autres endroits du monde en plusieurs siècles. Et, quand on nous parle de niveau, cela nous fait penser que le régime nazi d'Hitler avait estimé que les pays d'Europe ne méritaient pas qu'on les laissât se gouverner eux-mêmes. Bien sûr, tout est relatif.

47. Le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes postule avant tout le respect de la dignité humaine qu'il faut placer au-dessus de toutes les autres considérations. C'est au nom de ce principe sacré que ma délégation est coauteur du projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 4 et qu'elle est prête à appuyer toutes autres initiatives tendant à accélérer le mouvement de libération de tous les peuples sous domination, dans le sens de l'octroi inconditionnel de l'indépendance à tous les pays colonisés et dépendants.

48. M. DOSUMU-JOHNSON (Libéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dès le début de ma déclaration je tiens à exprimer la grande satisfaction que ma délégation éprouve devant la tendance que révèle l'attitude du monde entier à l'égard du concept politique avili entre tous, connu sous le nom de colonialisme, et aussi devant le fait que nous ayons décidé d'en discuter maintenant la suppression complète. En se montrant consciente de cette nécessité, l'ONU se donne la possibilité d'éliminer l'un des plus grands risques et l'un des plus grands dangers qui menacent la paix du monde et, par conséquent, d'abattre tous les obstacles qui se dressent entre les nations. Le fait de posséder des colonies et des matières premières ou d'en être privé a été l'une des principales causes de conflits internationaux entre les puissances occidentales et a incontestablement provoqué les deux guerres mondiales. La théorie des "possédants" et des "non-possédants" est le fruit de méditations sur le colonialisme et a toujours engendré la jalousie et la haine entre les Etats développés au point de vue industriel. La suppression du colonialisme contribuera donc à la paix et à la prospérité de l'humanité.

49. Mes contemporains membres des mouvements nationalistes africains reconnaîtront avec moi — quelles que puissent être par ailleurs nos divergences quant à l'interprétation des tendances actuelles — que la seconde guerre mondiale a marqué un tournant critique dans l'histoire du colonialisme moderne. Elle a mis fin à une attitude de complaisance à l'égard des aspirations politiques, économiques et culturelles du colonialisme. Elle a marqué le début de la liquidation active des empires coloniaux et les chefs nationalistes ont commencé depuis à être reconnus non plus comme des illuminés ou des radicaux ambitieux, mais comme des hommes sincèrement dévoués à la cause de leurs peuples et méritant le respect et la déférence du monde.

50. Il ne faudrait pas pourtant en tirer la conclusion fallacieuse que les modifications profondes qui se produisent actuellement en faveur des peuples asservis sont le résultat évident de nos efforts individuels ou même collectifs. Lorsque je regarde le chemin que nous avons parcouru depuis 1919, époque à laquelle nous avons organisé le Congrès national de l'Afrique occidentale britannique — dont le secrétariat se trouvait dans ce qui était alors la Côte-de-l'Or —, et le Congrès des peuples africains du monde — aux Etats-Unis où nous nous trouvons en ce moment — et lorsque je considère la rapidité des événements dans le monde colonial actuel, je suis enclin à penser, dans mon esprit assez candide, que cette évolution est due à quelque force surnaturelle que nous appelons Dieu et que certains appellent Allah. Il se peut que certains ne partagent pas ma façon de voir, mais c'est là ma conviction. Les agitateurs que nous étions n'étaient qu'un instrument dans la main de Dieu; et aucun artifice oratoire, si ingénieux soit-il, et si exaltés qu'en soient les auteurs, ne saura ébranler ma confiance absolue en Dieu, arbitre des destinées de l'homme. Si l'on n'y voit la main de Dieu, comment peut-on expliquer que les grandes puissances coloniales abandonnent sans combattre ces greniers qu'étaient leurs territoires coloniaux? Je mets ma foi en Dieu — non que j'en fasse une conviction doctrinale intangible, mais plutôt une tendance à l'action, le cadre d'une foi formulée et une inspiration à agir. Ne craignez point, gardez courage; les grandes souffrances sont gravées dans le marbre et n'y sont pas gravées en vain.

51. Cela n'implique pas cependant un abandon paisible ou l'attente passive d'une transition inéluctable. Cela ne veut pas dire que nous devons relâcher nos efforts. Cela signifie que nous ne devons pas oublier le proverbe: "Aide-toi, le ciel t'aidera" et que Dieu, qui a permis l'indépendance du Ghana, de la Nigéria, du Congo (Léopoldville) — et qui va permettre bientôt l'indépendance du Sierra Leone et de toutes les anciennes colonies françaises actuellement membres de la Communauté française — permettra bientôt aussi, peut-être dans quelques années, que toute l'Afrique soit libre afin que même l'Afrique du Sud et l'Algérie, j'ose le dire, soient gouvernées par des Africains.

52. Mes amis me disent qu'avec l'âge je deviens conservateur. Rien n'est moins vrai. La simple vérité est que mes propos sont maintenant subordonnés aux circonstances et conditions du moment. Tandis que dans le passé je faisais de l'agitation avec combativité, avec mordant et avec émotion, je m'efforce maintenant de délibérer avec logique, avec patience et avec lucidité pour parvenir au même résultat. La vie est un équilibre dynamique.

53. Le principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes fait partie intégrante de la Charte de l'Atlantique. Au moment de la création de l'ONU ce principe a été incorporé dans la Charte, dont il constitue l'Article 73 que je vais citer intégralement.

[L'orateur donne lecture de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies.]

54. Cet article de la Charte constitue la base de la déclaration que les membres africano-asiatiques de l'Assemblée ont soumis à celle-ci pour qu'elle l'approuve sans réserve.

55. Le colonialisme a fait l'objet de descriptions nombreuses, d'analyses et de dogmes multiples. On trouve son origine dans cette attitude politique pathologique qui faisait dépendre la grandeur d'un pays et son prestige de la possession de territoires outremer. L'objet de notre déclaration est d'affirmer que la domination d'une nation par une autre équivaut à une parodie de justice, qu'elle est toujours une cause de conflit et qu'en notre époque de communications rapides et de nationalismes exacerbés, elle peut plus facilement que dans le passé provoquer une crise internationale. Toute tentative visant à excuser, à soutenir ou à appuyer le colonialisme est, à tout le moins, immorale.

56. Le colonialisme est essentiellement la domination d'une ou de plusieurs nations par une autre. Il peut revêtir diverses formes, telles que la conquête, l'achat pur et simple, l'extra-territorialité ou le condominium économique. Toutefois, quelle que soit la forme qu'il revête, il se manifeste toujours par l'arrivée, en provenance d'un pays étranger, d'un groupe de personnes qui imposent leur volonté et leur bon plaisir aux premiers occupants, sans aucun égard pour leurs intérêts élémentaires, les premiers occupants étant invariablement réduits au rôle de bûcherons ou de porteurs d'eau et condamnés à jamais à fournir aux colonisateurs les éléments indispensables à une vie raffinée et cultivée, tandis que leur pauvreté et leur ignorance les empêche de prendre la moindre part à cette vie.

57. Les empires coloniaux ont été édifiés avec la sueur et la misère des autochtones. Les grands explorateurs du XV^{ème} et du XVI^{ème} siècle, avides d'aventure et de science, assoiffés de gloire pour leurs rois et de richesses pour eux-mêmes, toujours sous prétexte d'accomplir leur mission civilisatrice, ont ravagé et pillé les territoires coloniaux et exploité leurs populations qu'ils ont souvent laissées sans patrie et dans la débauche. Les colonisateurs, imbus de leur complexe de supériorité, n'ont plus laissé aux autochtones aucun droit qu'ils dussent respecter. Les atrocités et les spoliations qui ont marqué le colonialisme sont trop sordides pour être énumérées ici. Qu'il suffise de dire que ce fut une période sombre pour l'Asie et pour l'Afrique.

58. Avec l'apparition et l'expansion du capitalisme moderne, accompagnées du développement du commerce et des échanges, la pénétration dans les régions reculées s'est faite sous la protection des gouvernements. En Chine, les mandarins ont dû, bon gré mal gré, s'incliner sous la menace de navires de guerre étrangers. Les armées de l'Europe de l'Est se sont portées contre l'émir de Boukhara.

59. Invoquant de prétendus besoins nationaux et leurs intérêts stratégiques, les Britanniques et les Français sont intervenus en Amérique du Nord et en Inde; les Russes et les Japonais en Mandchourie et en Corée; la Grande-Bretagne, la France, l'Espagne, le Portugal, les Pays-Bas, la Belgique, l'Italie et l'Allemagne sont tous intervenus en Asie et en Afrique, s'appropriant chacun, au titre de leur butin colonial, des territoires qui auraient couvert plusieurs fois leur propre superficie. L'état d'esprit colonialiste est demeuré un instrument de politique nationale si puissant que le Troisième Reich envisageait de faire de la Pologne et de la Russie de vastes colonies qu'il aurait peuplées d'agriculteurs étrangers qui auraient été servis par une main-d'œuvre esclave, faite de la population ayant échappé aux exterminations.

60. Ce sont là autant de raisons puissantes qui devraient inciter l'Assemblée à prendre des mesures positives pour faire disparaître toute trace de colonialisme de la face du monde. Ma délégation s'est fixée pour but d'atteindre ce résultat.

61. Je me plais à noter ici, avec satisfaction, que le Gouvernement espagnol a accepté de reconsidérer sa position et de soumettre périodiquement à l'Organisation des Nations Unies des rapports sur ses colonies.

62. Bien que le colonialisme ait été un des principaux sujets de toutes les conférences africaines et asiatiques de ces dernières années — à Bandoung, Accra, Monrovia, Addis-Abéba et ailleurs — nous n'avons jamais demandé, au sein de l'ONU, qu'il soit mis fin à cette situation. Il convient donc que nous soyons reconnaissants à l'Union soviétique d'avoir demandé l'inscription de cette question à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée.

63. Si de nos jours les Britanniques et les Français étaient les seules puissances coloniales du monde, notre argumentation aurait été considérablement affaiblie par les tendances récentes de leurs politiques coloniales. Bien que nous ne partagions pas entièrement leurs vues en ce qui concerne l'Algérie, le Kenya et la Fédération de Rhodésie, nous trouvons une raison d'être encouragés dans le désir de coopération dont ils témoignent en libérant leurs colonies. Ils se sont peut-être rendu compte qu'ils avaient plus à gagner en accordant la liberté à leurs colonies et en conservant leur amitié qu'en les contraignant à la guerre; ils ne peuvent que gagner en agissant ainsi au plus tôt en faveur des colonies qu'ils conservent encore.

64. Il reste cependant des irréductibles, comme l'Espagne et le Portugal, qui cherchent à faire de l'Afrique une partie de l'Europe. Les colonies du Portugal et de l'Espagne, bien que ces pays aient été des puissances coloniales depuis plus longtemps que tout autre pays d'Europe, offrent l'exemple le plus déplorable et le plus inhumain que l'on puisse trouver dans l'histoire coloniale des temps modernes.

65. Les Africains du Mozambique (5.780.000 personnes) et de l'Angola (4.145.000 personnes) vivent sous un régime de dictature qui est le plus cruel de son espèce. Je ne parle pas par oui-dire; j'y suis allé. Tous les beaux propos que nous entendons sur l'égalité des droits, sur l'absence de toute discrimination pour des raisons de race, ou sur le fait que les colonies font partie intégrante du Portugal, sont des propos mensongers et une insulte à la conscience de l'humanité parce qu'il s'agit là de privilèges réservés aux personnes civilisées et parce que, dans le système portugais, peu d'Africains ont qualité de civilisés. Les Africains de ces territoires vivent dans une pauvreté abjecte. Ils sont victimes de la pratique du travail forcé, car on les remet toujours à des employeurs lorsqu'ils ne peuvent pas payer l'impôt personnel. On ne leur permet même pas d'être chauffeurs de taxi, ce métier étant réservé aux Portugais. Ni au Mozambique, ni en Angola, les étrangers ne peuvent adresser la parole aux Africains si ce n'est en portugais. La politique officielle le veut ainsi. La situation à Bissau et à São Tomé est plus tragique encore. Il faut qu'au cours de la présente session l'Assemblée prenne des mesures positives pour améliorer le sort des Africains dans la colonie espagnole de Fernando Poo, dans les colonies portugaises et dans l'ancienne colonie britannique d'Afrique du Sud. L'Afrique du Sud était une colonie britannique et, au moment du transfert des pouvoirs, la Grande-Bretagne aurait dû protéger la population africaine. Elle partage donc la responsabilité du sort des Africains en Union sud-africaine.

66. L'Ouganda, le Kenya, la Fédération centrale de Rhodésie, le Sud-Ouest africain, le Betchoualand, le Bassoutoland et quelques autres territoires qui restent sur la liste des territoires coloniaux réclament leur indépendance à cor et à cri. Les habitants de ces territoires sont victimes de pratiques discriminatoires en raison de leur couleur, ainsi que d'autres traitements inhumains. Bien qu'on décèle certains indices encourageants, ces indices sont encore trop peu nombreux. Pour se hausser du niveau dégradant d'un Lazare se nourrissant des miettes que lui laissent des percepteurs étrangers à un niveau d'égalité avec les autres hommes et de dignité humaine qui leur revient de droit, les Africains ne peuvent choisir que l'indépendance politique complète.

67. Il est inutile de recourir aux statistiques pour prouver que le colonialisme est immoral. C'est un système qui prive de toute virilité ceux qui en souffrent. Il prive les peuples de leur ressources et ne leur donne rien en échange.

68. Examinons à la lumière de la déclaration, dont ma délégation est heureuse d'être l'un des auteurs, ce système néfaste et étudions ses incidences politiques, économiques et culturelles tout en montrant, chaque fois que cela est possible, la fausseté des prétextes invoqués pour retarder l'octroi de l'indépendance.

69. Contrairement à la conviction exprimée souvent par des personnes qui n'ont reçu que l'éducation nécessaire pour s'élever au-dessus de la condition de rustre, les Africains, avant l'apparition des commerçants européens en Afrique, connaissaient un régime de vie familiale bien conçu et extrêmement développé, ils avaient un système de développement communautaire, un enseignement qui s'adressait aux filles et aux garçons, des activités artistiques et une organisation sanitaire.

70. Dès avant l'invasion européenne, c'est la famille qui était l'élément central de la vie sociale. Le mariage retenait l'attention du groupe tout entier. Tous les observateurs impartiaux, qu'ils soient missionnaires, anthropologues ou sociologues, témoigneront de la valeur culturelle primitive de la collectivité et du régime de gouvernement par les chefs. Etant donné que les Africains croient à la continuité de la famille et de la collectivité, ils mettent tout en œuvre pour inspirer à leurs enfants le respect de tout ce que représentent la famille et la collectivité. L'enseignement faisait appel à l'observation directe, à la participation et aux méthodes classiques. En dépit des multiples aspects qu'elle offrait, cette culture a été tournée en dérision et on n'a tenu aucun compte de l'ordre social existant, ou on l'a ridiculisé.

71. Dire que les Africains n'avaient aucun gouvernement et qu'il a fallu attendre l'arrivée des Européens pour qu'un régime politique soit introduit en Afrique, c'est énoncer une affirmation gratuite. Lorsque Dieu a partagé le monde, il en a donné une partie à Sem, une partie à Cham et une partie à Japhet. Cham a pris l'Afrique. Le gouvernement est apparu en Afrique avec Kousch, Pouth et Misraïm, fils de Cham, et a donné naissance par la suite aux empires de Sokoto, de Gando, de Kano et de Sonrhaf, ainsi qu'aux diverses dynasties égyptiennes. Lorsque la colonisation de l'Afrique a commencé au XVème siècle, à l'époque des intrépides navigateurs du prince Henri, les Africains établis sur les côtes de l'Atlantique étaient depuis 600 ans avant Jésus-Christ en rapports commerciaux constants avec les négociants de la Méditerranée et ils recueillaient les bénéfices d'une évolution culturelle dont les origines se situaient sur les rives du Nil, du Tigre et de l'Euphrate. Affirmer que ces navigateurs sont venus assurer notre protection, c'est vouloir berner le monde, car, lorsque des ennemis se présentaient effectivement, nous étions en général abandonnés à notre sort.

72. Dans bien des propos entendus de nos jours au sujet des maladies, curables ou incurables, on omet de mentionner que ces maladies n'ont commencé à affliger les Africains qu'au moment de l'invasion des forces étrangères qui ont ravagé et pillé les maisons des Africains tandis que ceux-ci étaient parfois vendus comme esclaves. Etre contraints à faire certaines choses contre leur volonté et à travailler pour des maîtres au lieu de travailler pour eux-mêmes était plus que les Africains ne pouvaient supporter. L'attente de la mort, l'indolence et l'instabilité sont devenus un mode de vie. Les notions de liberté et de démocratie, bases de la liberté en Angleterre et devise de l'Europe, n'ont jamais été exportées vers les territoires coloniaux. Une curieuse forme de liberté a été instaurée dans les relations avec les Asiatiques et les Africains.

73. Le colonialisme, sous quelque forme qu'il se présente, est mauvais. Il a apporté en Asie et en Afrique d'innombrables maux et a été parfois encouragé par les puissances colonisatrices. Attirés par les richesses qu'ils pouvaient trouver pour remplir les coffres des princes-marchands d'Europe, des pirates et des aventuriers comme Drake, Frobisher et Hawkins ont incendié des villes et des villages d'Afrique et ont vendu leurs habitants comme esclaves. En bien des endroits, les Africains n'étaient que des bêtes de somme. C'est là ce qui a résulté pour l'Afrique de ce "fardeau de l'homme blanc" dont parle Kipling. Nous devrions remercier Dieu qu'il y ait des moustiques en Afrique occidentale.

74. En l'espace de 40 ans, les quelque 30 millions de kilomètres carrés que représente la superficie de l'Afrique, à l'exception du territoire couvert par les Etats souverains du Libéria et de l'Ethiopie, ont été répartis entre les grandes puissances et les conséquences de ce partage n'ont pas été heureuses pour les habitants. En dépit des principes humanitaires élevés proclamés aux tribunes européennes, les actes des premiers colonisateurs ne furent ni très nobles ni très humains. Si l'on lit leurs traités paraphés de simples croix en signe d'acceptation par des chefs locaux analphabètes, on ne peut qu'être convaincu que l'art de la duperie était pratiqué à des degrés divers pour inciter les Africains à signer des papiers qu'ils ne comprenaient pas. Si je ne comprends pas moi-même ces traités aujourd'hui, vous imaginerez sans peine que ces chefs les aient compris infiniment moins à l'époque.

75. Dans certains cas, les affaires politiques étaient livrées à des sociétés ou à des personnes privées, disposées à toutes les complaisances sur la question du traitement fait aux Africains, traitement qui ne correspondait guère aux protestations de ces sociétés ou personnes touchant leurs préoccupations quant à la vie et la liberté de ces Africains. Certaines des méthodes appliquées pour recruter la main-d'œuvre et pour la conserver ne différaient absolument pas des méthodes suivies par les meneurs d'esclaves, et toute résistance de la part des victimes de ces enrôlements forcés donnait lieu à des contre-mesures les plus brutales.

76. Si, en présence des changements multiples et soudains dont l'Afrique nous offre en ce moment le spectacle, nous tenons à faire adopter une déclaration sur le colonialisme, c'est parce que l'esprit de suite n'est pas la caractéristique des milieux colonialistes. La politique coloniale est en effet le résultat d'apports divers qui varient avec les modifications du climat intellectuel dans la métropole.

77. L'argument selon lequel les colonies ne sont pas encore prêtes pour l'indépendance est indéfendable. On a dit cela de toutes les colonies qui ont accédé à l'indépendance. Aucune tutelle politique, si longue qu'en soit la durée, ne peut donner à un peuple la vigueur réelle que lui apportera l'indépendance. Allez en Afrique et voyez ce que les Africains ont fait pour eux-mêmes depuis l'indépendance. Les Africains administraient leurs propres affaires avant l'époque coloniale; je ne doute pas le moins du monde qu'ils puissent les administrer aujourd'hui, l'ONU leur servant de guide.

78. Je manquerais aux principes de la justice la plus élémentaire si je ne reconnaissais pas tout ce que je dois aux missions occidentales qui m'ont montré, comme à beaucoup d'autres, la voie des pratiques politiques modernes; je veux parler de ce que je dois à l'Occident en matière de science, médecine, travaux publics, protection sociale, administration et autres techniques modernes. Néanmoins ces techniques ne sauraient remplacer l'indépendance de mes frères qui sont systématiquement privés de leurs droits à la liberté d'expression et à la liberté de déplacement dans la dignité qui est le propre de l'homme.

79. Tout ce que les Africains — de l'Est, de l'Ouest, du Nord ou du Sud — demandent aux puissances coloniales et aux puissances administrantes ainsi qu'aux grandes nations démocratiques, c'est qu'elles accordent l'indépendance aux colonies afin que celles-ci puissent améliorer leurs conditions de logement et d'alimentation et, de façon générale, atteindre un niveau de vie plus élevé; créer une économie nationale plus vigoureuse et une société stable, avec tout ce qu'une telle société implique d'écoles, de collèges, de centres de protection sociale, d'hôpitaux, de police et d'armée disciplinées, ainsi que de liberté civile et politique.

80. Les peuples des territoires qui se trouvent sous la domination coloniale désirent une vie meilleure. Il n'est pas nécessaire que leurs enfants soient condamnés à venir au monde malades ou qu'ils soient eux-mêmes soumis, leur vie durant, aux effets débilissants et paralysants du colonialisme.

81. Il serait particulièrement malvenu de la part d'un Membre de l'ONU, quel qu'il soit, de revendiquer une partie de l'Afrique, quelle qu'elle soit, comme faisant partie du territoire métropolitain, de même qu'il était malvenu d'affirmer, comme l'a fait récemment un chef d'Etat européen, qu'en discutant de l'Afrique l'ONU s'ingérerait dans les affaires intérieures de son pays. C'est là un subterfuge démodé. Toute pratique inhumaine infligée à un peuple asservi, toute question coloniale, où qu'elle se pose dans le monde, relèvent de la compétence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et il en est ainsi convenu.

82. Il faut que l'année 1960 soit sans réserve, comme elle prétend l'être, l'"Année de l'Afrique" et il faut, pour cela, que cette déclaration soit adoptée et devienne pour les territoires encore soumis au régime colonial la charte qui les mettra à l'abri de l'exploitation et de la servitude et les fera bénéficier des droits fondamentaux de l'homme que l'Organisation des Nations Unies garantit à tous les peuples.

83. Qu'il soit prêt ou non, l'expérience nous l'a appris, un pays se développera plus vite sous un gouvernement de son choix.

84. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Avant de donner la parole à l'orateur suivant, je tiens à attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le document A/L.323/Add.5 dans lequel il est porté à notre connaissance que le Gabon et les Philippines ont été ajoutés à la liste des auteurs du projet de résolution.

85. M. TOURA GABA (Tchad): La délégation du Tchad a écouté avec un intérêt bien compréhensible les orateurs qui l'ont précédée à cette tribune. En effet, de tous les débats auxquels elle a eu l'honneur de participer, ma délégation considère celui qui nous occupe aujourd'hui comme étant de loin le plus important parce qu'il conditionne à la fois le présent et l'avenir. Le colonialisme n'est pas étranger aux maux dont souffre notre infortunée planète.

86. A ce propos, ma délégation veut s'adresser particulièrement à celles dont les nations assument encore des responsabilités d'ordre politique et économique outre-mer.

87. Pour les raisons que l'on connaît, ce débat les intéresse au même titre, sinon plus que nous-mêmes, représentants des jeunes nations coauteurs du projet de déclaration sur la fin du colonialisme qui sera proposé, vers la fin de nos débats, à l'agrément de l'Assemblée.

88. Se réclamant de la civilisation chrétienne faite — on nous l'a appris — de charité, de justice, de l'amour du prochain, que sais-je encore? les représentants des nations incriminées ne manqueront pas d'être en proie à des contradictions et, comme tant d'autres de leurs coreligionnaires, en butte à un redoutable cas de conscience. Ils savent pertinemment les conséquences heureuses ou désastreuses, selon le cas, du vote qu'ils vont émettre à la fin de ce débat. Jamais vote n'a revêtu une telle importance pour toute une planète et la race blanche en particulier, immobilisée par son congénital instinct de conservation. Jamais, par la faute d'une poignée d'attardés qui s'obstinent à se cramponner aux derniers vestiges d'un passé révolu, la chrétienté, dont cette race est si fière, apparemment, n'a été aussi en danger dans les pays dépendants. Jamais, dans ces colonies, les autres religions n'ont connu autant de popularité.

89. Ma délégation veut espérer que les nations colonialistes feront, cette année, un geste de grandeur. Elles ne sauraient être inférieures à celles qui, volontairement, ont reconnu la nécessité de la décolonisation.

90. On ne craint pas de proclamer à tous vents qu'on est libre, qu'on est démocrate. Mais un démocrate libre peut-il opprimer d'autres hommes? On ne saurait dénier à d'autres peuples ce qu'on demande pour soi-même.

91. Les drapeaux et les hymnes des pays colonialistes eux-mêmes ne sont-ils pas la manifestation de leur grand amour de l'indépendance? Le besoin d'être libre et indépendant est inhérent à l'être humain. Il serait donc criminel, vain et contraire à la volonté de Dieu de refuser, sous quelque prétexte que ce soit, l'indépendance pleine et entière à une personne et encore plus à un peuple qui la réclament.

92. Ma délégation veut encore espérer que les nations colonialistes, qui, pour les raisons que l'on sait, ont répandu les idées progressistes de par le monde, ne sauront se déjuger; elles ne manqueront pas d'être logiques avec elles-mêmes. Ma délégation leur lance donc un appel pressant pour qu'elles veuillent bien joindre leurs efforts aux nôtres en vue de construire un monde nouveau d'où l'esclavage sera banni et où régnent enfin la justice, l'égalité, la fraternité et la concorde.

93. Pour galvaniser son peuple dans sa lutte pour l'indépendance nationale, une des vieilles républiques qui siègent parmi nous a revigoré la religion de ses ancêtres. Tout en l'assortissant du rite chrétien, elle a peint Jésus-Christ et ses fidèles apôtres à son image, sauf naturellement Judas. Ses ressortissants se plaisent à raconter que, sans cette métamorphose, elle n'aurait jamais réussi à bouter l'envahisseur hors de son pays. Si nos colonialistes continuent de raisonner comme leurs ancêtres et, comme eux, se laissent dépasser par les événements, craignons que ce phénomène ne se renouvelle à une grande échelle dévastatrice. Il emporterait tout; rien de ce qui rappelle le colonialisme ne subsisterait.

94. Ensemble, faisons en sorte que cette calamité, que l'on désigne sous le vocable poétique de retour aux sources, n'ait pas lieu, pour le bien de l'humanité.

95. Cette sombre perspective, Monsieur le Président, donne une importance singulière à ce débat que vous dirigez, comme d'habitude, avec beaucoup de compétence et de distinction. Serait-ce trop vous demander que de vous prier de bien vouloir user de votre influence pour que ceux qu'écoutent les puissances colonialistes fassent un effort supplémentaire dans le sens de la décolonisation souhaitée ardemment par tous les peuples du monde? Notre assemblée, reflet de ces peuples assoiffés de justice et convaincus de la nécessité de la coexistence pacifique, ne saurait manquer de vous en savoir gré.

96. Le continent africain épouse à la fois la forme d'un point d'interrogation et celle d'un pistolet tourné, comme par hasard, vers l'Union sud-africaine. Il incombe aux puissances colonialistes de faire en sorte que ce continent ne soit pas transformé en un véritable pistolet, mais demeure un pacifique point d'interrogation. Pour atteindre ce but, les puissances en cause doivent désormais savoir répondre en leur temps aux questions qui leur sont posées. Il y va de l'intérêt de la paix et de l'amitié des peuples.

97. L'Afrique n'est ni rancunière, ni revancharde, ni raciste, ni xénophobe. Toutes les races y cohabitent, toutes les opinions s'y expriment librement, sauf, bien entendu, dans les territoires qui sont encore sous le joug du colonialisme. Elle sait aussi oublier. Vous en avez pour preuves ces jeunes nations où autochtones et colonisateurs cohabitent et collaborent dans l'amitié et la dignité.

98. Le projet de résolution contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5 qui vous est soumis émane de la plupart, sinon de la totalité, des nations anciennement colonisées. Il est l'expression de ceux qui, mieux que tous autres, ont l'expérience du régime colonial et peuvent en apprécier à leur juste valeur les avantages et les inconvénients. La domination d'un peuple par un autre, contraire aux droits fondamentaux de l'homme et à la Charte des Nations Unies, est connue de tous les peuples. Le colonialisme est désormais condamné, son maintien serait une menace flagrante à la sécurité internationale et à la paix mondiale.

99. Tous les peuples ont droit à la libre détermination; aucun prétexte d'ordre politique, économique ou social ne saurait les en priver; nous adressons un appel pressant à toutes les grandes nations pour qu'elles mettent fin à toute action armée ou à toute autre mesure de répression contre les peuples encore dépendants qui réclament pacifiquement leur indépendance. Tel est l'esprit de notre résolution.

100. Notre continent connaît ses origines, ses possibilités: il sait ce qu'il vaut pour le présent et pour l'avenir. Aussi, avec sa sœur l'Asie, quand il leur arrive de parler des autres continents, ont-ils parfois le sourire tendre d'une mère clémentine.

101. L'Afrique ne saurait, par conséquent, ignorer les autres continents et se passer d'eux. Plus qu'eux peut-être, elle a besoin de l'aide extérieure pour mettre en valeur ses fabuleuses richesses latentes. Elle ne peut, dans ce monde interdépendant, se singulariser en se repliant sur elle-même. Comme jadis, elle veut être exportatrice et réceptrice de tout ce qui enrichit et honore notre patrimoine commun: la civilisation.

102. Le moment est venu où elle doit, dans son ensemble, occuper la place de choix qui lui revient dans le concert des nations souveraines. Ses intentions sont pures. On peut, comme par le passé, lui faire confiance.

103. Je conclurai en renouvelant mon appel aux puissances colonialistes pour qu'elles se joignent à nous, sans arrière-pensée, afin que la portée du vote historique que nous allons émettre ne soit pas diminuée par une note discordante.

La séance est levée à 22 h 20.

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1135

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. SHANAHAN (Nouvelle-Zélande) [traduit de l'anglais]: Depuis sa création, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a consacré une part importante de son activité à améliorer la situation des populations qui, dans le gouvernement de la société à laquelle ils appartenaient, ne pouvaient jouer pleinement leur rôle en tant que membres ayant atteint leur pleine maturité. Cette activité n'a pas exclusivement consisté à appliquer les dispositions de la Charte relatives aux territoires sous tutelle et aux territoires non autonomes; elle s'est également traduite par les mesures que l'ONU a prises pour atteindre les objectifs qu'elle s'était fixés, c'est-à-dire le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés pour tous, sans distinction d'aucune sorte.

2. Les concepts de liberté et d'indépendance sont profondément enracinés dans la Charte, et, au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, nous avons été les témoins de leur plein épanouissement. Au moment où 17 pays qui ont récemment acquis leur indépendance viennent d'être admis au sein de l'Organisation, il est naturel que nous portions nos regards vers le chemin qui reste à parcourir pour que la tâche soit vraiment achevée. C'est pour cette raison que l'idée d'un projet de déclaration a trouvé au sein de cette assemblée un accueil aussi favorable.

3. Par son essence même, ce projet implique une foi dans la valeur et la dignité individuelles de tous les êtres humains, foi qui exclut toute distinction inspirée de considérations de race, de couleur, ou de nationalité et qui ne peut trouver sa pleine justification tant qu'un peuple exercera sur un autre son hégémonie, quelle qu'en soit la forme. Ma délégation peut souscrire sans réserve ni restriction et en toute sincérité à toute déclaration réaffirmant cette foi. Le peuple de la Nouvelle-Zélande désire aussi instamment que le peuple de tout autre pays l'instauration d'un monde fait de nations indépendantes, unissant leurs efforts dans l'intérêt commun d'une humanité libérée du fléau de la discrimination raciale et de toute autre forme de domination et d'oppression.

4. Qu'il me soit permis de préciser immédiatement que pour ma délégation le terme de "colonialisme" n'évoque pas nécessairement ces fléaux. Nous ne servirions pas les idéaux de l'Organisation en décrivant d'une formule toute faite toutes les imperfections de l'ordre social des différents pays. Lorsque l'on reconnaît ouvertement l'existence du colonialisme en tant que phase transitoire dans le développement d'un territoire particulier, on ne doit pas donner à ce terme un sens péjoratif. Ceci s'applique en particulier aux territoires sous tutelle et aux territoires non autonomes dont les populations, ainsi qu'il est admis, relèvent des chapitres pertinents de la Charte des Nations Unies.

5. Il n'est pas sans intérêt de rappeler que les Etats qui ont assumé les plus lourdes responsabilités en matière d'administration de territoires sous tutelle et de territoires non autonomes étaient parmi les Membres fondateurs de cette organisation et qu'ils ont librement et spontanément assumé les obligations découlant de la Charte. La présence parmi nous de représentants d'un grand nombre d'Etats nouveaux que le Royaume-Uni, la France et d'autres pays ont conduits à l'indépendance prouve assez la valeur de l'œuvre que ces pays ont accomplie. Dans ce processus, l'influence et l'autorité morale de l'ONU ont joué un rôle exceptionnel que seule l'Organisation pouvait assumer, mais c'est seulement parce que les puissances administrantes s'étaient jointes à d'autres Etats indépendants pour élaborer et accepter les dispositions de la Charte elle-même que ce processus a été possible.

6. Toute déclaration que l'Assemblée adopterait doit s'inspirer de ces considérations fondamentales. En donnant un caractère officiel à l'expression de nos aspirations en faveur de tous les peuples qui ne jouissent pas d'une pleine liberté, nous ne devons pas — comme le voudraient l'Union soviétique et ceux qui l'appuient — méconnaître ou minimiser les efforts sincères et les progrès appréciables qui ont été faits. Notre sollicitude doit s'étendre aussi à tous les peuples dont l'état réel d'indépendance ou de subordination n'est pas ouvertement reconnu.

7. En particulier, l'Assemblée ne doit pas porter son attention uniquement sur le cas des territoires sous tutelle et des territoires non autonomes qui relèvent déjà de certains organes appropriés de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il faut que nous tenions compte aussi d'autres formes de colonialisme qui sont véritablement tragiques parce que nul n'a pris l'engagement d'y mettre fin, parce que nul ne cherche à réparer les préjudices effectivement portés, à notre époque même, au mépris des obligations de la Charte et en pleine connaissance des souffrances et des humiliations que ces formes de colonialisme ont provoquées.

8. Ma délégation s'est félicitée de l'initiative prise par les Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique qui ont présenté un projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5]. Cette proposition doit être considérée comme la continuation de l'œuvre que l'on a entreprise en rédigeant la Charte, celle-ci traçant la voie qui doit conduire tous les peuples à l'indépendance. Nous sommes tout à fait d'avis qu'il serait absolument contraire à la lettre et à l'esprit de la Charte de dresser des obstacles sur cette voie.

9. La Charte elle-même reconnaît cependant que tout peuple et tout territoire qui s'engage dans cette voie doit se fixer un rythme de progrès conforme à ses aptitudes. C'est pourquoi les dispositions détaillées relatives aux territoires sous tutelle et aux territoires non autonomes laissent une certaine latitude permettant de choisir la méthode la mieux adaptée à la situation de chaque territoire. Cette latitude était nécessaire uniquement parce que l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance ou de l'autonomie aurait, dans la plupart des cas, été préjudiciable aux intérêts véritables du territoire en question. Un grand nombre des auteurs du projet de déclaration connaissent par expérience directe les dispositions des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte et savent comment elles ont été appliquées dans la pratique. A notre connaissance, personne n'a laissé entendre que ces dispositions, lorsqu'elles sont pleinement reconnues et mises en œuvre par la puissance administrante intéressée, portent préjudice de quelque manière que ce soit à un territoire sous tutelle ou à un territoire non autonome, ou retardent indûment son accession à l'indépendance.

10. La Nouvelle-Zélande est, elle aussi, en mesure de juger par elle-même de l'efficacité du régime de tutelle. Il ne fait pas de doute que l'application de ce régime au Samoa-Occidental, par exemple, a sensiblement rapproché le jour, maintenant venu, où le peuple de ce territoire s'est senti capable d'accéder à l'indépendance et prêt à en assumer les responsabilités. Cela ne veut pas dire qu'en l'absence d'un accord de tutelle, la Nouvelle-Zélande aurait souhaité refuser d'accéder aux revendications d'indépendance ou aurait été en mesure de le faire, cela veut dire simplement que les normes fixées par l'Assemblée générale et le Conseil de tutelle et l'évaluation soigneuse des progrès accomplis ont encouragé le développement des institutions politiques, la mise en valeur des ressources économiques et techniques et la formation d'un corps de fonctionnaires, d'éducateurs et d'experts. L'existence de ces institutions fondamentales est la condition préalable d'une indépendance réelle et stable. Lorsque le Premier Ministre du Samoa-Occidental viendra ici la semaine prochaine demander à l'Assemblée d'entamer la procédure qui mettra fin à l'Accord de tutelle, je ne pense pas que nous l'entendions dire — comme on l'a déclaré à cette tribune au cours de cette session — que le régime de tutelle ne s'est justifié nulle part et qu'il doit disparaître.

11. Je répète que c'est sur la Charte que nous bâtissons et que les dispositions détaillées qu'elle contient ont déjà fait la preuve qu'elles pouvaient permettre à un grand nombre de territoires sous tutelle et de territoires non autonomes d'accéder à l'indépendance et ce bien plus rapidement que beaucoup ne l'auraient cru possible. Telle est la réalité que nous devons garder présente à l'esprit pour juger équitablement de la valeur et des fins d'une nouvelle déclaration. Un document de cette nature doit rester dans le domaine des généralités. Il ne saurait fournir une règle empirique apportant une solution automatique aux problèmes coloniaux qui restent à régler, car, pour chaque cas, il faut tenir compte des circonstances qui lui sont propres, ainsi que le reconnaît la Charte. Le critère est toujours qu'il faut déterminer ce qui convient le mieux aux intérêts des peuples, de tous les peuples, dont le destin est en jeu.

12. C'est en tenant compte de ce qui précède que ma délégation juge le projet de déclaration qui nous est soumis par les Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique. Ce que l'on s'est proposé en rédigeant ce texte, ce n'est pas d'élaborer un traité dont chaque disposition devrait être pesée minutieusement par tous les pays qui envisageraient d'y adhérer — à vrai dire, il nous semblerait presque impossible qu'un instrument semblable puisse marquer un progrès sur les dispositions de la Charte qui ont déjà fait leurs preuves — c'est de mettre au point une déclaration dont l'objet est plutôt de formuler et de traduire fidèlement des idéaux et des principes d'application universelle.

13. Une déclaration comme celle que nous proposons maintenant les 42 pays qui en sont conjointement les auteurs [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] serait dans la meilleure tradition de l'ONU si elle fixait une norme optimum de réalisation dans l'œuvre qui a pour objet de mettre fin le plus rapidement possible à toutes les formes de colonialisme. La Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme offre l'exemple par excellence d'un énoncé de principes si communément reconnus et rencontrant un appui si général qu'il symbolise toute l'autorité morale de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Pour inspirer le même respect universel, une déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux doit atteindre les mêmes normes de validité objective et s'inspirer du même souci d'aborder le problème de façon positive. Pour prendre sa place parmi les grands documents de l'ONU, cette déclaration doit aussi être d'une équité scrupuleuse et ne pas attribuer aux puissances administrantes des motifs et des intentions qui sont l'antithèse de leur politique établie et qui sont démentis par les résultats qu'elles ont déjà obtenus.

14. Nous ne doutons pas que les intentions des auteurs du projet dont nous sommes saisis soient conformes à ces fins. Il est certes louable d'essayer d'obtenir que tous les Etats acceptent sans réserve les obligations que leur impose la Charte et s'en acquittent, et de s'efforcer d'accélérer, dans la mesure compatible avec les exigences du bon sens et les possibilités d'ordre pratique, le processus aboutissant à l'indépendance de tous les peuples sous la forme qu'ils auront choisie eux-mêmes comme étant celle qui répond le mieux à leurs besoins.

15. Pourtant, en cette session de l'Assemblée générale qui s'est si profondément préoccupée des tragiques événements du Congo, nous devons nous rendre compte des difficultés et des éléments complexes qui entrent en jeu lorsque l'on prépare un territoire à l'indépendance. La Charte impose à la puissance administrante l'obligation de préparer à l'indépendance les peuples qui ne s'administrent pas eux-mêmes. Il faut donc éviter tout énoncé de principe qui risquerait d'affaiblir le caractère inéluctable de cette obligation ou de jeter un doute sur la nécessité de s'en acquitter.

16. Il se peut que, dans certains cas, le travail de préparation à l'indépendance eût dû être entrepris plus tôt ou mené plus rapidement, bien que, sous l'influence de la Charte, nos conceptions aient évolué au cours de ces dernières années marquées par de si grands changements. Il convient de veiller à ce que toutes les puissances administrantes soient conscientes de leurs responsabilités et prennent les mesures que celles-ci exigent. Toutefois, il ne serait de l'intérêt de personne, et en particulier des peuples des territoires intéressés, d'abandonner purement et simplement l'œuvre qui reste à accomplir.

17. Nous avons tous été vivement frappés lorsque le chef d'une des grandes nations d'Afrique admises cette année à l'Organisation a rendu hommage à l'œuvre que l'ancienne puissance administrante avait accomplie en vue de préparer son pays à l'indépendance. Soyons assez francs pour reconnaître spontanément la nécessité de cette préparation et pour admettre que le plus souvent celle-ci se fait à un rythme toujours plus rapide, dans un esprit de parfaite intégrité et d'inégalable dévouement.

18. Pour toutes ces raisons, ma délégation espère que les auteurs du projet de déclaration seront disposés à envisager un remaniement de certains passages de leur texte. Dans certains cas, ce qui est implicite pourrait être explicité. Il est évident qu'un grand nombre des auteurs dudit projet avaient plus particulièrement à l'esprit les grands territoires d'Afrique qui ne sont pas encore indépendants. Toutefois il faut s'assurer que les droits des peuples soumis à d'autres formes de colonialisme se trouvent également sauvegardés et qu'on ne néglige pas les besoins d'un autre ordre de territoires plus petits, situés en d'autres régions que l'Afrique.

19. En ce qui concerne le paragraphe 5 du dispositif, rien ne saurait s'opposer à ce que l'on reconnaisse expressément le principe généralement admis selon lequel les populations de ces territoires plus petits peuvent fort bien, le moment venu, choisir une forme d'indépendance n'impliquant pas une existence distincte en tant qu'Etat souverain. Nous pensons aussi qu'il serait possible d'expliquer plus clairement dans ce paragraphe que les puissances administrantes ont le devoir d'entamer immédiatement la procédure permettant aux territoires dont elles ont la charge d'accéder à l'indépendance dans l'ordre et dans les plus brefs délais possible.

20. Nous estimons en outre que le septième considérant ne tient pas suffisamment compte des multiples manières dont les pays plus développés partagent leurs ressources avec les pays moins développés, que ceux-ci aient ou non accédé à l'indépendance. Etant donné ce que j'ai déjà dit, il est évident que, selon nous, la forme du neuvième considérant serait plus heureuse si celui-ci ne donnait à entendre que le colonialisme s'accompagne de pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination.

21. L'ensemble du projet devrait, nous semble-t-il, mettre en lumière le fait que la plupart des puissances administrantes se sont déjà engagées sans réserve dans une politique permettant aux populations des territoires dont elles sont responsables de déterminer librement leur avenir. Dans ces conditions, il est faux de sous-entendre au paragraphe 4 du dispositif que toute action armée a nécessairement pour objet d'empêcher les peuples dépendants d'exercer effectivement cette liberté de choix. Il serait assurément souhaitable d'indiquer clairement qu'on ne saurait exclure les recours à la force qui sont légitimes dans tout Etat. Rappelons par exemple, comme l'a mentionné hier le représentant de la Birmanie [943ème séance], que, pour prévenir le crime, la police peut être contrainte de recourir à la force.

22. Enfin, le texte devrait affirmer sans ambiguïté que nous nous préoccupons non seulement du sort des populations des territoires sous tutelle et des terri-toires non autonomes, mais aussi du sort de tous les peuples qui, à l'heure actuelle, ne jouissent pas d'une indépendance effective ou de toutes leurs libertés.

23. Si j'ai indiqué que ces précisions étaient souhaitables, c'est parce que la délégation de la Nouvelle-Zélande désire ardemment accorder tout son appui à une déclaration qui témoignerait non seulement de l'attitude intransigeante de l'ONU à l'encontre du maintien du colonialisme sous quelque forme que ce soit, mais aussi de son aptitude à reconnaître ce qui est bien comme elle condamne ce qui est mal, et à attaquer de front les problèmes d'ordre pratique qui se posent indéniablement et qu'il convient de résoudre pour que tous les territoires et tous les peuples puissent être vraiment libres et indépendants.

24. M. MENEMENCIOLU (Turquie) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation de la Turquie estime que le débat relatif à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux est l'une des tâches les plus importantes auxquelles l'Assemblée se soit attaquée depuis ces dernières années. Nous estimons, en effet, comme de nombreux orateurs qui nous ont précédés, que le présent débat peut permettre d'éclaircir un certain nombre de problèmes importants et faciliter l'énoncé de certains principes fondamentaux d'une importance capitale pour les nations du monde entier.

25. Le sujet qui nous occupe met en jeu des aspirations aussi élevées que la liberté, le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, l'indépendance et l'intégrité territoriale. Ce sont là des idéaux qui sont chers au peuple de mon pays. Au cours de son histoire ancienne ou contemporaine, le peuple turc a même largement donné la preuve de l'importance qu'il attache à ces principes élevés. Quelquefois, dans des conditions défavorables, notre peuple s'est trouvé dans la nécessité de défendre ces principes seul et au prix de lourds sacrifices. En conséquence, comme de nombreuses autres délégations, nous avons conscience de la nécessité d'apporter à ces débats, dans un esprit objectif et constructif, toute l'attention qu'ils méritent. De toute évidence, ma délégation ne saurait participer à quelque tentative que ce soit, visant à faire dévier cette importante discussion vers des fins étrangères aux principes élevés mis en cause.

26. En abordant ce sujet, au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, un caractère particulier de l'assistance qui nous entoure s'impose à nos esprits: le fait que tant d'Etats ayant nouvellement accédé à l'indépendance siègent avec nous dans cette salle, sur une base d'égalité et qu'ils apportent une contribution précieuse à ces débats portant sur une question d'aussi grande importance. Il y a quelque temps, il aurait été difficile ne fût-ce que d'imaginer un progrès aussi rapide dans la voie de la liberté et de l'indépendance. Cette réalité est en soi une des preuves les plus caractéristiques du fait que le mouvement vers la liberté est irréversible et qu'il restera la tendance caractéristique de ce siècle.

27. En outre, les processus évolutifs qui ont abouti à un mouvement d'émancipation se manifestant dans de vastes régions du monde bénéficient de l'appui général de la majorité des peuples de tous les continents et c'est là une autre tendance dont il convient de se féliciter. Nous constatons donc aujourd'hui que l'accession à la liberté et à l'indépendance par des processus évolutifs et sans d'odieuses effusions de sang devient progressivement la règle générale au lieu de rester l'exception. Toutefois, nous savons tous que bon nombre de situations tragiques se sont présentées au cours de ces dernières années et que certaines subsistent encore.

28. Mon pays même a, dans le passé, fait l'expérience amère de la guerre, des effusions de sang et de la dévastation. Nous savons donc ce qu'éprouve une jeune nation lorsqu'elle perd l'élite de sa jeunesse et voit ses ressources dévastées. Nous savons aussi que la liberté et l'indépendance sont des trésors à défendre plus que tout autre. Cependant, nous avons constaté au cours des dernières décennies que ces idéaux élevés ont été atteints et continuent de l'être dans certaines parties du monde à la suite de processus évolutifs. Nous estimons que, chaque fois qu'une transition pacifique peut ainsi se faire, il y a lieu de s'en réjouir tout particulièrement.

29. Ce double aspect du problème qui nous occupe aujourd'hui, et que je viens de souligner, prouve clairement que l'accord s'est fait dans de vastes régions du monde sur les fins et les idéaux suprêmes auxquels il faut aspirer lorsque l'on traite de cette question. C'est donc une occasion de profonde satisfaction pour ma délégation d'être l'un des auteurs du projet de déclaration en faveur des idéaux de liberté et d'indépendance, et, en toute conscience, nous pensons qu'une déclaration de ce genre ne saurait être interprétée aujourd'hui comme étant dirigée contre qui que ce soit, contre un pays quel qu'il soit, ou contre un groupe de pays quel qu'il soit. L'objet de cette déclaration est d'exprimer avec vigueur et d'inscrire dans l'histoire un ensemble d'idées fondamentales profondément enracinées chez tous les peuples du monde. Nous avons la certitude que ces idéaux continueront d'exercer une grande influence chaque fois que la cause de la liberté et de l'indépendance se trouvera compromise dans l'avenir.

30. Le projet de déclaration présenté conjointement par plus de 40 pays [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] vise à faire accéder à la liberté et à l'indépendance les territoires qui n'en jouissent pas encore. Tout en formulant les conditions dans lesquelles ces territoires pourront jouir des fruits de leur émancipation, nous devons inévitablement et en toute logique nous efforcer de leur assurer les conditions préalables indispensables à cette liberté et à cette indépendance chères à nos propres peuples.

31. C'est pourquoi le texte dont nous sommes saisis fait allusion à de hautes aspirations telles que la liberté, l'autodétermination, l'indépendance, l'intégrité territoriale et l'égalité raciale. Ce sont là des idéaux élevés qui devraient être chers à toutes les nations anciennes ou récentes.

32. En faisant figurer ces principes dans le projet de déclaration on rappellera à tous les pays qui ont récemment obtenu leur liberté et leur indépendance ainsi qu'à ceux qui les obtiendront bientôt qu'ils doivent constamment veiller à préserver cette liberté et cette indépendance, quels que soient les dangers qu'ils puissent rencontrer à l'avenir.

33. L'accession à l'indépendance n'est certainement pas un aboutissement, mais bien un commencement. C'est ce qu'a proclamé avec insistance le fondateur de la Turquie moderne, Kemal Ataturk. L'héritage qu'il a légué aux jeunes générations de notre pays et qui a eu, dans bien des régions du monde, une influence profonde tend vers un double objectif. Il s'agit tout d'abord de sauvegarder à tout prix la liberté, l'indépendance et l'intégrité territoriale du pays, acquises au prix de si lourds sacrifices, et ensuite de concentrer tous les efforts en vue d'accélérer le développement dans les domaines économique, social, culturel et politique, non seulement pour faire prévaloir dans notre pays les conceptions les plus avancées de la civilisation moderne, mais aussi parce qu'en fin de compte un tel développement peut seul réellement garantir que les fruits de la liberté et de l'indépendance, si chers à mes compatriotes, resteront intacts.

34. Cet héritage de notre grand fondateur, Kemal Ataturk, ainsi que sa devise "Paix à la patrie et paix au monde" sont toujours les bases solides sur lesquelles reposent nos conceptions politiques en Turquie.

35. La République turque, qui a été instituée il y a une quarantaine d'années et qui depuis lors a constamment orienté sa politique dans le même sens, est particulièrement heureuse de collaborer avec tant de nouveaux Membres de l'ONU pour assurer à ces idéaux des assises solides dans de vastes régions du monde. Le fait qu'un si grand nombre d'autres pays accéderont bientôt à l'indépendance et qu'ils se joindront à nous ici pour apporter leur utile contribution à la cause de la paix et de la fraternité universelle, au sein de notre organisation, est pour nous une autre source de satisfaction.

36. Notre délégation étant parmi celles qui ont présenté le projet de déclaration, nous ne prétendons pas que ce texte offre en soi la formule d'une conception nouvelle des relations humaines. Nous avons essayé de réunir et de cristalliser les idéaux fondamentaux de notre époque dans leurs rapports avec le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Ce faisant, nous avons rédigé un texte qui, dans son essence, met en relief une tendance de base dont les premières manifestations en France, aux Etats-Unis et en Angleterre, sous l'inspiration de certains philosophes politiques, se sont fait sentir il y a déjà près de deux siècles; et dont l'évolution par la suite a été telle qu'il s'agit maintenant d'une tendance universelle tout à fait caractéristique de la période actuelle.

37. Les auteurs de ce projet de déclaration ont eu à l'esprit un but constructif et pratique. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, nous ne considérons pas que ce texte soit dirigé contre qui que ce soit, il n'entre pas non plus dans nos intentions d'entraver les efforts actuellement déployés dans de nombreux territoires pour obtenir que la transition vers l'indépendance se fasse dans la paix et dans l'ordre et avec la coopération de tous les intéressés.

38. Ma délégation n'ignore pas que, dans certains cas, pour pouvoir harmoniser les intérêts des peuples qui doivent être les maîtres légitimes des Etats nouvellement constitués, il a fallu procéder à des consultations préliminaires afin de parvenir à une formule constitutionnelle acceptable de part et d'autre et offrant au pays une base sur laquelle il puisse organiser son existence dans la paix et la stabilité. Tel a été le cas pour certains Etats fédératifs et pour d'autres qui avaient connu précédemment des problèmes analogues. La présence parmi nous aujourd'hui de certains pays devenus Membres de l'ONU prouve qu'il est possible de trouver d'heureuses solutions à ces problèmes grâce aux efforts constructifs de tous les intéressés. Ces heureux résultats obtenus sur le plan constitutionnel et sur le plan pratique par bon nombre de nations et de peuples représentés ici, ainsi que les efforts résolus qu'ils ont faits pour y parvenir, peuvent sans aucun doute servir d'exemples chaque fois que des problèmes semblables viennent à se poser. Une atmosphère d'union et d'harmonie a toujours été de la plus haute importance pour les Etats nouvellement constitués, car elle leur permet de concentrer tous leurs efforts sur le progrès économique, social, culturel et politique qui seul peut leur garantir les moyens de subsister en tant que nations vraiment libres et indépendantes.

39. Le projet de déclaration dont nous sommes saisis proclame la fin d'une époque et le début d'une ère nouvelle. Nul ne peut contester le bien-fondé de cette affirmation. Ce qui importe aujourd'hui, c'est que nous unissions tous nos efforts pour que cette époque prenne fin au plus tôt et sans restriction. Il n'est pas de meilleur moyen de servir la cause de la paix et de la compréhension internationales — et c'est là l'essence même de notre charte — que d'accélérer tous les efforts déployés pour assurer à tous les peuples dépendants la paix et l'indépendance auxquelles ils aspirent si ardemment.

40. Le projet de déclaration énonce en même temps certaines conditions préalables qui sont indispensables pour qu'un peuple puisse jouir pleinement et définitivement de la liberté et de l'indépendance. C'est pourquoi les principes contenus dans le projet de déclaration s'imposent également en tant qu'éléments qui serviront la cause de la paix, objectif commun de tous les peuples.

41. En conclusion, je tiens à réaffirmer que ma délégation considère ce débat comme étant de la plus haute importance. Il ne nous échappe pas que cette question met en jeu des problèmes capitaux à notre époque. En essayant d'apporter notre contribution tant à la discussion qu'à l'élaboration du projet de déclaration, nous avons eu pleinement conscience de la lourde responsabilité qui nous incombe, ainsi qu'à toutes les autres délégations participant aux travaux de cette assemblée. Par cette modeste contribution, nous avons servi les idéaux auxquels nous croyons fermement, tout en essayant d'atteindre ces objectifs dans l'harmonie plutôt que dans la discorde. Nous espérons que de ces débats naîtra cette harmonie et que les principes contenus dans le projet de déclaration seront proclamés dans le monde entier sous une forme qui ne laissera aucun doute quant à l'ampleur de leur portée.

42. M. MEZINCESCU (Roumanie): La délégation roumaine attribue une importance toute particulière au présent débat sur la liquidation du régime colonial, question inscrite à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale à la demande du Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique [A/4501].

43. La réalisation des buts fondamentaux des Nations Unies n'est pas concevable sans la liquidation du régime colonial. Les guerres coloniales et les opérations militaires de répression contre les mouvements patriotiques de libération nationale, qui n'ont pratiquement pas connu de répit depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, constituent une négation des principes de la Charte et une menace permanente à la paix et à la sécurité internationales.

44. De quelles relations amicales entre les nations, "fondées sur le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes" — pour reprendre les termes du paragraphe 2 de l'Article premier de la Charte — peut-on parler dans des conditions où le régime colonial prive encore de liberté et d'indépendance nationale plus de 100 millions d'hommes?

45. Comme le disait le chef de la délégation roumaine, M. Gheorghe Gheorghiu-Dej, lors de la discussion générale:

"... la fidélité aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies est devenue incompatible avec l'oppression coloniale dont se rendent coupables des Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. En conséquence, il est grand temps que l'Organisation des Nations Unies demande à tous les gouvernements de respecter strictement les dispositions de la Charte concernant l'égalité et le respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les Etats sans exception, en repoussant toute forme de colonialisme, tout droit ou privilège exclusif dont bénéficient certains Etats au détriment d'autres Etats." [873ème séance, par. 44.]

46. Seule l'abolition définitive du régime colonial et de tous ses vestiges peut donner satisfaction aux aspirations légitimes à la liberté et à l'indépendance nationale des peuples colonisés, peut donner satisfaction à l'opinion publique progressiste du monde entier qui demande que cette honte de l'humanité soit écartée une fois pour toutes de notre planète.

47. La position à l'égard de l'abolition du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes et de l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance aux peuples colonisés est une pierre de touche de la fidélité des Etats aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies.

48. Tous ceux qui adhèrent sincèrement aux principes de la liberté et du droit des peuples à disposer à leur propre avantage des richesses de leur pays ne peuvent que souscrire à l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance complète à tous les pays colonisés, à tous les territoires sous tutelle et autres territoires dépourvus d'auto-administration, aussi bien qu'à l'abolition des possessions et des régions cédées à bail sur le territoire d'autres Etats.

49. Répondre par un "oui" catégorique à la proposition concrète et pratique d'abolir immédiatement le régime colonial place les Etats du côté des forces de progrès et de paix. Répondre par la négative ou blâmer les place du côté des forces de réaction et d'agression.

50. Ce n'est pas de "terrorisme psychologique" qu'il s'agit. Ce sont les lois du développement historique de la société humaine qui créent des situations où l'équivoque n'est plus possible, si subtils que soient les maîtres de cette école de pensée.

51. La force du mouvement de libération et d'indépendance nationale, ainsi que l'irrésistible courant d'opinion en faveur de l'abolition du régime colonial placent les puissances coloniales et leurs représentants à ce débat dans une position peu enviable. Dans nulle autre question, la diplomatie occidentale n'est obligée d'essayer de mieux voiler l'écart entre ce qu'elle prêche et ce qu'elle pratique.

52. Repousser directement et catégoriquement, au nom de la "liberté occidentale" et du "monde libre", la liberté et l'indépendance de plus de 100 millions d'hommes qui subissent encore l'esclavage colonial est, il faut le reconnaître, une tâche des plus difficiles; pas plus facile d'ailleurs, pour les maîtres coloniaux, que la réponse catégoriquement affirmative à cette question: le tigre ne devient pas végétarien pour autant que la proie se fait rare et difficile.

53. C'est pourquoi nous avons assisté, depuis le début de cette discussion, aux efforts déployés par certaines délégations pour éviter de répondre par un oui ou un non catégorique à ces questions, de même qu'aux efforts déployés par d'autres délégations pour faire l'éloge de la "mission civilisatrice", de la "générosité" et de la "magnanimité" des oppresseurs coloniaux.

54. Les représentants les plus autorisés des peuples qui ont recouvré leur indépendance à la suite de l'écroulement des anciens empires coloniaux ont donné déjà des répliques caustiques, empreintes de dignité, aux apologistes de l'esclavage et de l'exploitation coloniale. Ce n'est pas l'expression d'une reconnaissance envers les anciens maîtres coloniaux qu'ils ont proclamée à cette tribune, mais bien le mépris, la condamnation de l'oppression et de l'exploitation coloniales.

55. Je n'aurai que quelques considérations à ajouter à ce qui a été déjà dit. Il ne faut pas se méprendre sur les mobiles du colonialisme, ni sur les raisons de son écroulement, non plus que sur les conditions nécessaires pour qu'il ne renaisse pas sous une forme nouvelle.

56. Pour ce qui est de la "générosité" et de la "mission civilisatrice" du colonialisme, je pense que l'Afrique — et, à cette session de l'ONU, n'est-ce pas l'année africaine? — est le continent qui permet, mieux que toute autre partie du monde, d'apprécier à leur juste valeur la "générosité" et la "mission civilisatrice" des colonisateurs. Sous quelque rapport que ce soit, quel que soit l'indice de comparaison, l'Afrique se situe à la dernière place dans le monde pour ce qui est du revenu national par tête d'habitant, du niveau de développement industriel, de l'éducation, de la santé publique ou de l'assistance médicale. Cet état arriéré tient-il au manque de ressources naturelles, aux conditions particulières du climat, à l'inaptitude de ces peuples à mettre en valeur les richesses naturelles de leurs pays? Certes non. L'Afrique possède la plupart des réserves d'or, de diamant, d'uranium, de chrome, de stibine et de phosphorite du monde capitaliste, 60 pour 100 du manganèse, 48 pour 100 du cuivre, 47 pour 100 de la bauxite, 40 pour 100 des ressources hydro-électriques, et j'en passe. Les récentes découvertes de pétrole et de gaz naturel au Sahara ouvrent de nouvelles perspectives de développement pour l'Afrique et prouvent que ses ressources naturelles sont loin d'être connues à fond. A tout cela s'ajoutent les cultures agricoles très riches et variées de l'Afrique qui, si elles ne fournissent pas au monde le pain quotidien, y adjoignent sans doute une certaine douceur de vivre, par des fruits, des plats et des liqueurs des plus exquis. Ce ne sont pas les conditions naturelles ou l'inaptitude de la population qui ont empêché la mise en valeur des richesses du sol et du sous-sol africains pour le bien-être des peuples d'Afrique. C'est l'accaparement de ces richesses et l'exploitation des peuples africains par les monopoles étrangers qui sont cause de la pauvreté et des souffrances des peuples d'Afrique.

57. C'est avec la main-d'œuvre africaine, la meilleur marché du monde, et dans les conditions propres à l'Afrique que les monopoles occidentaux réalisent des bénéfices records, amortissant les investissements de capitaux en trois ou quatre ans seulement, voire plus vite. Les bénéfices actuels du groupe Rhodesian Selection Trust, contrôlé par la compagnie new-yorkaise American Metal, représentent le double des salaires des 39.000 mineurs qu'emploie ce groupe. C'est bien le groupe Anglo-American, présidé par Harry Oppenheimer, dont l'empire s'étend du lac Victoria au Cap, qui a réalisé, l'an dernier, des bénéfices représentant à eux seuls trois fois et demie le montant total du fonds jugé nécessaire par le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis pour le programme de développement économique de l'Afrique. Cela indique très clairement où il convient de chercher les moyens matériels de guérir l'Afrique des séquelles du colonialisme.

58. Pour ajouter un exemple de plus à ceux qui ont déjà été apportés par d'autres orateurs, je vais citer ces lignes publiées par la revue Fortune, dans son numéro de mai 1960. Parlant de la mine d'or Western Deep Levels, au Transvaal, l'auteur d'une apologie du milliardaire Harry Oppenheimer et du groupe Anglo-American écrivait:

"Pendant sept heures et demie chaque jour, depuis que le forage a commencé en 1945, les mineurs indigènes ont creusé les puits de la nouvelle mine dans cet enfer humide, au milieu du bruit assourdissant des forêts pneumatiques ..."

59. Vers 1964, ils arriveront aux couches profondes situées à 10.000 pieds de profondeur; alors, la Western Deep Levels du Transvaal sera la plus riche mine d'or du monde. On estime qu'elle produira pendant sa durée d'exploitation plus de 2.200 millions de dollars d'or aux prix actuels. Lorsque la mine entrera finalement en production, le groupe Anglo-American aura dépensé plus de 84 millions de dollars — remarquez l'écart! — aussi bien pour les travaux souterrains que pour les travaux de surface, c'est-à-dire pour les usines qui doivent transformer les minerais en lingots, pour la construction de casernes pour les ouvriers indigènes — notez bien ceci! — et d'habitations modernes pour les fonctionnaires blancs. Comme c'est gentil, magnanime et généreux! Il n'y a pas d'usuriers, si coriaces soient-ils, qui ne se laisseraient emporter par une "générosité" si rémunératrice.

60. Ainsi que d'autres orateurs qui ont pris la parole avant moi l'ont montré, il ne s'agit en réalité ni de générosité, ni de mission civilisatrice, mais tout simplement de pillage et d'exploitation poussée à l'extrême.

61. Si les puissances colonisatrices sont obligées aujourd'hui de chercher des méthodes et tactiques nouvelles pour assurer la continuité du flux des bénéfices en provenance des pays colonisés, cela est dû à la pression du puissant courant de libération et d'indépendance nationale des peuples colonisés. Les colonialistes sont obligés, par la force des choses, de reconnaître que là où ils s'accrochent obstinément à des formes extrêmes de l'oppression coloniale — comme c'est le cas en Algérie, au Kenya, en Rhodésie — ils risquent de tout perdre.

62. C'est ce qu'ont franchement reconnu les idéologues américains du néo-colonialisme Strauss-Hupé et Hazard qui ont écrit dans leur livre The Idea of Colonialism: "... Pour l'Occident, la juste ligne de conduite consiste non pas à céder ses positions et à faire ses bagages, mais à trouver des formes acceptables pour y demeurer^{1/}" — sous-entendu: dans les colonies.

63. Lorsque les puissances colonialistes invoquent le fait que tel ou tel territoire n'est pas encore préparé pour l'auto-administration, on peut affirmer, sans crainte d'être contredit, que c'est justement à la question de la "succession" qu'elles n'ont pas trouvé de solution. Ce prétexte pour retarder l'accès à la liberté et à l'indépendance des peuples colonisés a été invoqué maintes fois au cours du débat actuel. Mais ceux qui, en l'invoquant, voudraient pousser la solution du problème colonial dans un cercle vicieux ont évité d'indiquer qui a empêché et empêche encore les peuples colonisés de se préparer pour l'auto-administration.

64. Reconnaître qu'après des dizaines d'années — et parfois des siècles — de "mission civilisatrice" de la part des pays colonialistes, les peuples respectifs ne sont pas encore préparés à s'administrer eux-mêmes, c'est reconnaître non seulement la faillite de la "mission civilisatrice" coloniale, mais aussi la fausseté de toute prétention s'y rattachant.

65. C'est à juste titre que le dirigeant de la lutte de libération nationale du Nyassaland, le Dr Banda, remarquait que le fait de conditionner l'octroi de l'indépendance au degré de préparation des cadres indigènes équivaut "à demander aux joueurs de tennis de participer d'abord au tournoi de Wimbledon et d'apprendre ensuite à tenir la raquette en main".

66. C'est la lutte contre l'oppression et l'exploitation coloniale qui a été et qui est encore la dure école de préparation des cadres capables d'assurer l'auto-administration des peuples colonisés. Cette lutte se déroule partout où il subsiste encore des colonies. C'est de cette école que sont sortis des hommes politiques remarquables, qui non seulement se sont avérés des dirigeants avisés de leurs peuples, mais qui ont en outre acquis une haute autorité internationale, comme Nehru, Sukarno, Nkrumah, Sekou Touré, Ferhat Abbas et tant d'autres. C'est dans les prisons, dans les camps de concentration ou en exil qu'il faut rechercher les cadres capables d'assurer l'auto-administration des peuples colonisés. C'est dans les prisons colonialistes que se trouvent des dirigeants du mouvement de libération nationale de grande envergure, tels que Kenyatta au Kenya, Rukeba au Ruanda, Mohammed Ben Bella et d'autres dirigeants de la lutte de libération nationale du peuple algérien, et, selon les dernières nouvelles, Lumumba au Congo.

67. Sans méconnaître les difficultés passées ou présentes, il faut dire que c'est l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance aux peuples colonisés qui est la voie la plus sûre et la plus rapide pour la maturation et pour la formation de cadres dans tous les domaines. L'exemple des Etats qui sont devenus réellement indépendants est des plus édifiants à cet égard.

68. Ma délégation voudrait attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur l'importance de l'abolition de toutes les formes de domination coloniale, y compris la restitution à leurs maîtres légitimes des possessions et des régions à bail que les puissances coloniales détiennent sur le territoire d'autres Etats. A ce sujet, il faut observer, en premier lieu, que ce genre de possessions et de régions à bail sont utilisées, pour la plupart, à des fins militaires et représentent une forme particulièrement dangereuse du régime colonialiste qu'il est absolument nécessaire d'extirper.

69. L'existence des possessions et des régions à bail empêche non seulement les Etats d'exercer leur souveraineté sur l'ensemble du territoire national, mais s'associe toujours, en outre, avec l'intervention brutale dans les affaires intérieures des Etats sur le territoire desquels se trouvent ces possessions et régions à bail, de la part des puissances colonialistes qui en sont les bénéficiaires.

70. Etant donné, d'autre part, que ces possessions et régions à bail, qui se trouvent disséminées un peu partout en Asie, en Afrique, en Amérique latine et même en Europe, sont utilisées presque exclusivement pour héberger des bases militaires, navales et aériennes ou des rampes de lancement de fusées, on se rend bien compte du danger que représente pour la paix et la sécurité internationales cette forme de domination coloniale.

71. Les dirigeants les plus autorisés des peuples de l'Asie et de l'Afrique ont attiré l'attention sur le danger que représentent le maintien et l'organisation de nouvelles bases militaires étrangères en Afrique et en Asie. C'est à juste titre qu'ils tiraient la conclusion, au cours de la discussion générale, que, "tant qu'un seul mètre carré de terre africaine et asiatique se trouvera encore sous la domination étrangère, le monde ne connaîtra pas de paix". Cela est d'autant plus compréhensible que ce sont les alliances militaires des pays colonialistes qui disposent du réseau de bases militaires encerclant le globe, ce qui explique l'inquiétude de tant de peuples qui subissent encore l'esclavage colonial, de même que des peuples qui ont récemment recouvré leur indépendance. Ces peuples se rendent très bien compte que les bases militaires appartenant aux Etats-Unis et à leurs alliés sont non seulement dirigées contre les pays socialistes, mais sont aussi destinées à maintenir ou à imposer, sous une forme ou une autre, la domination coloniale.

72. Très souvent, les pays colonialistes plus petits, membres de l'OTAN, font des bases militaires américaines installées sur quelques territoires de leur empire colonial l'objet de transactions honteuses visant à obtenir l'aide et l'assistance des Etats-Unis et des autres puissances colonialistes de l'OTAN pour étouffer la lutte de libération des peuples opprimés. Tout le monde se rappelle, bien sûr, que les colonialistes belges ont conditionné leur participation future à l'OTAN par l'appui des Etats-Unis — et aussi des Nations Unies — ainsi que d'autres puissances coloniales pour la défense des intérêts coloniaux belges au Congo. Cet appui a été accordé à la satisfaction des milieux colonialistes belges.

73. C'est le New York Times du 25 octobre 1960 qui signalait, d'autre part, à ses lecteurs américains qu'un ancien ministre du Portugal, dans un article paru à Lisbonne, "a rappelé aux leaders américains que le Portugal avait mis à la disposition des Etats-Unis des bases dans les Açores et que les Etats-Unis devraient manifester leur compréhension et leur solidarité au sujet des territoires portugais d'Afrique".

^{1/} Robert Strauss-Hupé et Harry W. Hazard, The Idea of Colonialism, New York, Frederick A. Praeger, Inc., 1958, p. 42 et 43.

74. Une fois la libération et l'indépendance politique acquises, les anciens peuples colonisés ont à faire face au problème de la lutte pour l'indépendance économique et la libre possession et mise en valeur de leurs richesses au bénéfice de leurs peuples.

75. La lutte pour l'indépendance économique, qui doit donner son vrai contenu à l'indépendance politique et la consolider, est un processus aussi légitime et inexorable que le mouvement de libération et d'indépendance nationale des peuples colonisés.

76. Si l'on tient compte du fait que presque toutes les fortunes du monde occidental sont, en bonne partie, le produit de l'exploitation des peuples colonisés, on comprend aussi bien l'irritation de certains représentants qui ont pris la parole au cours de ce débat que la tentative de dévier l'attention de l'Assemblée du problème qu'elle discute et des racines du mal qu'il faut extirper, tentative à laquelle se sont livrés les représentants des puissances coloniales, directement ou par personnes interposées. Ma délégation pense que les insinuations de certains représentants ne méritent d'autre réponse que l'expression de notre profond mépris.

77. L'Organisation des Nations Unies est appelée maintenant à se prononcer en faveur de la liquidation totale et définitive du régime colonial. Mais les peuples qui ont recouvré ou recouvreront — espérons-le — dans un proche avenir leur indépendance politique ont et auront encore à mener une lutte acharnée pour se débarrasser de l'infiltration des monopoles étrangers dans leur économie, ce qui représente non seulement un vestige de la domination coloniale, mais aussi un obstacle puissant à la liquidation du retard dans le développement économique et culturel que ces peuples ont hérité de l'esclavage colonial.

78. Les puissances colonialistes qui ont réussi, il y a 15 ans, à empêcher que les mots "colonie", "colonial", "colonialisme" ne figurent au Chapitre XI de la Charte n'ont pas eu la force d'empêcher que le destin historique du colonialisme ne s'accomplisse déjà pour la plupart. Elles ne sont plus à même d'empêcher que les derniers vestiges du colonialisme ne soient liquidés.

79. La suppression du colonialisme, sur laquelle doivent se prononcer les Nations Unies, représente l'échéance d'un processus historique révolu. Cette échéance ne peut plus être différée, quelle que soit la décision que prendra l'Assemblée générale. Cependant, elle pourrait être rapprochée et la liquidation du colonialisme menée jusqu'au bout si l'Assemblée générale condamne, sans équivoque et sans omissions, toutes les formes et toutes les manifestations de la domination coloniale.

80. M. TOURE Ismaël (Guinée): Jusqu'en 1950, la grande majorité des peuples du continent de prédilection du colonialisme, l'Afrique, vivaient sous la domination étrangère. Seuls trois Etats: la province égyptienne de la République arabe unie, le Libéria et l'Ethiopie jouissaient de leur indépendance nationale. Autrement dit, il y a 10 ans, la population libre du continent africain ne s'élevait qu'à 45 millions d'habitants répartis sur une superficie de 2.300.000 kilomètres carrés. Le mouvement de libération qui a pris naissance après la dernière guerre mondiale a eu pour résultat, au cours des huit années allant de 1950 à 1958, la libération d'une population de 37 millions d'habitants répartis sur 5.250.000 kilomètres carrés. Pour les statisticiens, cela représentait déjà un progrès important. En effet, cette première poussée de libération traduisait une augmentation de plus de 100 pour 100 en étendue géographique de territoires libérés et de plus de 80 pour 100 en ce qui concerne la population libérée. On sait que ce progrès a connu un bond gigantesque au cours de l'année 1960. En reprenant les chiffres, nous constatons, au total, 82 millions d'habitants pour 7.500.000 kilomètres carrés ayant passé du régime colonial à la souveraineté à la date du 31 décembre 1958. Or, dans la seule année 1960, 17 Etats d'Afrique ont recouvré ou vont recouvrer leur indépendance, totalisant plus de 85 millions d'habitants pour 12 millions de kilomètres carrés. Ces résultats montrent ainsi un accroissement supérieur à 100 pour 100 pour le nombre d'habitants et une augmentation de 150 pour 100 pour la superficie en une seule année.

81. L'année 1960, comme on le voit, mérite bien son nom d' "Année de l'Afrique". Le mouvement de libération enregistré a connu une progression géométrique. La logique même de cette progression nous amène à considérer l'année 1961 comme l'année finale de la période coloniale pour l'Afrique. En effet, sur ce continent, il n'y a plus à libérer que le dernier tiers, mais ce tiers représente tout de même plus de 60 millions d'habitants et 9.500.000 kilomètres carrés qui sont encore sous domination étrangère. Avec l'accession de ces 60 millions d'hommes et de femmes à l'indépendance nationale, on pourra considérer le phénomène colonial, sous son aspect politique, comme effectivement mort.

82. La fin du système colonial ne signifie pas la fin des conséquences de ce régime. La caractéristique essentielle du colonialisme que constitue le sous-développement ne saurait être éliminée instantanément. Cela prend du temps et beaucoup d'efforts. Et c'est justement pour activer la lutte contre les séquelles de la domination étrangère qu'il importe de mettre fin immédiatement à tout système de colonisation. Pendant de longues années encore, le continent africain, après s'être totalement libéré de la servitude, devra se consacrer au développement de ses structures économiques, sociales et culturelles. Après l'Asie, l'Afrique a aujourd'hui conscience de la nécessité absolue d'en finir avec le système colonial qui s'est soldé par une faillite totale dans tous les domaines. Personne, il est vrai, ne défend le régime colonial, mais certains veulent retarder sa fin sous prétexte de préparation des peuples coloniaux à l'indépendance. C'est là un argument peu sérieux, et qui ne tient compte ni du passé des peuples soumis au colonialisme, ni des problèmes réels qu'ils ont à résoudre pour construire leur avenir. On peut toujours répondre à ceux qui soutiennent la nécessité d'une soi-disant préparation à l'indépendance que cela même constituerait une raison supplémentaire condamnant définitivement la colonisation. En réalité, le colonialisme n'a jamais eu pour but une quelconque mission de civilisation ou une quelconque entreprise d'éducation des peuples à l'exercice de leur souveraineté. Ainsi donc, si, vers son déclin, le colonialisme essaie hâtivement d'apprendre aux peuples coloniaux à se gouverner eux-mêmes, il reconnaît ainsi son propre échec, car il ne faut pas oublier que la colonisation a toujours trouvé les peuples parfaitement capables de se gouverner eux-mêmes sur la base de leurs institutions nationales, parfois hautement développées. Ces peuples qui n'ont jamais fait appel aux colonisateurs avaient atteint parfois un degré de civilisation infiniment plus élevé que celui du conquérant. Il est vrai que le colonialisme n'a jamais eu d'autre fondement que l'intérêt du colonisateur. Au XVème siècle, ce phénomène a eu pour point de départ la recherche des produits tels que les épices, les drogues aromatiques, les parfums, les sucres, le camphre, l'opium, la gomme, etc., que réclamait l'Europe et qu'il fallait à tout prix chercher sur les autres continents.

83. Peu à peu, la recherche de l'or s'est ajoutée à la spéculation sur les épices exotiques. Au XVIIème siècle apparaissent en Europe les marchands-banquiers, alliés des souverains contre la toute-puissante féodalité. C'est à partir de ce moment que s'ouvrira la période des entreprises coloniales. Il n'y a là aucune mission de civilisation, aucun génie ni aucun humanisme. Ainsi, il serait tout à fait ironique de décrire la période révolue selon le point de vue des soi-disant fondateurs d'empires et de masquer ainsi les exploiters de peuples, sinon de continents. C'est le célèbre Christophe Colomb qui écrivait le 14 octobre 1492:

"Il doit pousser ici bien des choses que je ne connais pas, mais je ne peux me laisser détourner de mon but: trouver de l'or par l'exploration des fles. Si j'en ai le temps, je fouillerai l'île entière jusqu'à ce que j'aie trouvé le roi et que je me sois rendu compte de l'extension de ses richesses en or."

Croyant avoir trouvé le Japon, il précise:

"Lorsque j'aurai vu les réserves d'or et d'épices qui s'y trouvent, je réfléchirai à ce qu'il convient de faire."

84. La recherche de l'or, très vite, a pris le pas sur celle des épices et autres curiosités exotiques. La colonisation a abouti à la création de grandes compagnies coloniales déchaînées dans une véritable course au trésor. Dans la revue Europe, de janvier 1956, Pierre Vilar, sous le titre "Le temps de Quichotte", écrit:

"Occuper des terres, asservir des hommes, rafler des trésors, cela ne prépare pas à investir, au sens capitaliste du mot. Une bourgeoisie naissante pourrait le faire. Et, de 1480 à 1550 environ, la bourgeoisie espagnole n'y a pas manqué. Seulement, par sa position sur le circuit de l'argent, elle a d'abord tâté du capitalisme des ports et des foires. On dépense, on importe, on prête à intérêt. On produit peu. Prix et salaires bondissent. Le parasitisme se développe et l'entreprise se meurt. C'est la misère pour le lendemain."

85. Cette menace a conduit au partage du monde entre les années 1870 et 1890 en vue d'une exploitation plus totale et plus rationnelle des peuples asservis et de leurs richesses. Chaque puissance coloniale a établi son empire et a créé sa zone d'influence. Nous n'insisterons pas sur les méthodes de colonisation bien connues, qu'elles soient pacifiques ou brutales, allant de la ruse à la répression la plus sanglante.

"L'objet de ces colonies, écrit Montesquieu dans l'Esprit des lois, est de faire le commerce à de meilleures conditions qu'on ne le fait avec les peuples voisins avec lesquels tous les avantages sont réci-proques. On a établi que la métropole seule pouvait négocier dans la colonie; et cela avec grande raison parce que le but de l'établissement a été l'extension du commerce, non la fondation d'une ville ou d'un nouvel empire."

86. L'on sait que la grande Chine, foyer d'une civilisation plusieurs fois millénaire, n'a pas été épargnée par cette ruée vers les territoires vierges. Dans cette fièvre, le mot "fortune" l'a emporté sur le mot "civilisation" qui n'était qu'un prétexte et les grandes puissances, sans doute se sentant en mauvaise conscience, s'attribuaient ce qu'elles appellent des missions civilisatrices.

87. Le père de l'Empire français, Jules Ferry, devait déclarer le 30 novembre 1883 devant la Chambre des députés:

"De tous côtés, ainsi, on voit converger l'attraction des intérêts ou des convoitises vers ce qui est le rêve de tous et le désir de chacun, le colossal trésor du Pacifique, la Chine; la vieille et prodigieuse Chine, la Chine de tous les calculs et de tous les espoirs, avec son immense marché de 400 à 500 millions de consommateurs, son sous-sol gorgé de gisements de houille de plus de 700.000 kilomètres carrés de superficie, ses gîtes de minerais inépuisables, ses provinces géantes qui attendent leur outillage industriel, leurs chemins de fer, leurs fournitures métalliques. Et c'est à qui, parmi les concurrents européens, arrivera le premier dans la course vers cet Eldorado pour s'y tailler sa part, sa zone d'influence, son domaine privilégié ..."

L'auteur poursuit:

"... c'est l'Allemagne qui donne le branle. Elle s'est avisée un peu tardivement de devenir aussi une nation coloniale. Mais son avidité s'efforce de rattraper le temps perdu. En Chine, elle convoite un des plus beaux morceaux, le Chan-toung, peuplé de 30 millions d'habitants et saturé de richesses naturelles. Arguant de l'assassinat opportun de deux missionnaires allemands, elle envoie une escadre, s'empare du Chan-toung, donne le signal de la curée. La Russie accourt et se fait octroyer, avec le prolongement du transsibérien, le Liao-toung, qu'elle avait contraint le Japon à rétrocéder. L'Angleterre, pour sa part, réclame Wei-hai-wei, et la France, pour équilibrer ses sécurités, occupe, au voisinage de l'Indochine, Kouang-tchéou-wan."

88. Certains croient facilement que l'histoire des peuples qui ont été victimes du colonialisme a commencé avec la pénétration coloniale. C'est une erreur grave résultant, le plus souvent, des tentatives de l'enseignement colonial ayant pour but de masquer complètement le passé et l'histoire des peuples et de faire naître chez eux le complexe de dépendance. C'est ainsi que l'histoire officielle de l'Afrique transforme les conquérants étrangers en soi-disant apôtres de la civilisation.

89. Par contre, les plus grands héros africains qui se sont opposés à la domination étrangère et qui ont porté au plus haut point les sentiments de dignité et de liberté de nos peuples ont été dépeints dans les manuels coloniaux sous les traits dégradants de bandits vulgaires ou de roitelets ambitieux et sanguinaires.

90. En Afrique, cette déformation systématique a été favorisée par le manque de renseignements écrits sur l'histoire de ce continent. La mauvaise foi a été si évidente qu'on a essayé de convaincre certains Africains que leurs ancêtres étaient des Gaulois aux yeux bleus et aux cheveux blonds. C'était la meilleure façon de donner un semblant de raison à la prétendue mission civilisatrice des puissances coloniales. Il fallait par tous les moyens montrer que l'Afrique, au moment de la conquête coloniale, était peuplée de tribus barbares incapables de s'administrer elles-mêmes. Or, dans l'histoire africaine authentique, plusieurs grands empires parfaitement structurés ont atteint, tel que l'Empire du Mali au XIV^{ème} siècle, un degré d'épanouissement que pouvait leur envier l'Europe à la même époque. Lorsque le géographe Ibn Batouta, chargé de mission par le sultan de Fès, en 1352, visita l'Empire du Mali, il eut l'impression d'un pays riche et heureux. En effet, l'Empire du Mali, sous le règne de Mansa Souleymane, s'étendait sur toute la partie du continent africain correspondant sensiblement à l'actuelle Afrique occidentale. Le règne de Mansa Souleymane n'a d'ailleurs pas été le plus prestigieux dans l'Empire du Mali. Cependant, d'après le compte rendu d'Ibn Batouta, Mansa Souleymane, qui régna sur le Mali de 1336 à 1359, s'est révélé comme un souverain très favorable à l'éducation et à la culture. Mansa Souleymane s'entourait de juristes et entretenait des relations diplomatiques très suivies avec les souverains du Nord. Comme son frère Mansa Moussa, surnommé le roi du pèlerinage, il effectua le voyage à La Mecque en 1351. A son retour, il construisit la fameuse case Camanbolon où il déposa les livres saints qu'il avait rapportés. De toute évidence, tout ce que nous savons de l'Empire du Mali nous montre une organisation étatique à la fois démocratique et solide et une civilisation qui n'a rien de commun avec l'image classique des manuels sur l'Afrique montrant une bande de nègres plus ou moins hideux dansant une sarabande gratuite autour d'un feu de bois.

91. Un autre écrivain arabe, dans la Description géographique de l'Espagne et de l'Afrique, affirme qu'au XI^{ème} siècle florissait déjà au Soudan une civilisation harmonieuse. Au moment où l'Empire de Ghana était à son apogée sévissait en Europe l'alchimie, science faite d'autant de naïveté que de superstitions.

92. Au XIV^{ème} siècle, l'Empire du Mali a atteint son apogée sous le fameux Kankan Moussa, qui régna de 1307 à 1332. Les auteurs arabes ne tarissent point d'éloges sur Kankan Moussa, empereur dévot qui institua l'école coranique obligatoire pour les enfants de la capitale. Son pèlerinage à La Mecque en 1324 a revêtu une importance et un faste inégalés. D'après Ibn Khaldoun, le cortège du souverain El Hadj Mansa Moussa a atteint 80.000 hommes. La tradition, dans les poésies chantées, a conservé la liste des principaux personnages de la suite du souverain. Voici quelques noms: Tounkou Magnouma, Tounkou Manian, les marabouts Kan Touré et Kan Cissé, Sirimanban, Dalamina Mamadou Kouyaté. Le Tarikh el-Fettach décrit la scène du bain de la femme de Mansa Moussa en plein désert. Ce pèlerinage présentait un autre aspect non moins important, car on peut situer aux environs de 1325 la naissance du style, dit soudanais, en architecture. Ce style, que l'on retrouve encore en Afrique, particulièrement dans l'actuelle République du Mali, est dû à un originaire de Grenade ramené par Kankan Moussa du nom d'Ibrahim es-Saheli.

93. Ibn Khaldoun relate:

"Le sultan mérinide Abou Hassein entretenait des relations amicales avec le sultan du Mali et les deux monarques s'envoyaient des présents par l'entremise de leurs grands officiers. Le sultan maghrébin fit même apprêter un choix des plus beaux produits de son royaume et confia à Ali Ibn Ghanem, émir des Makils, le soin de porter ce cadeau vraiment royal au sultan des noirs."

94. Enfin, pour donner une idée de la force de l'armée de Kankan Moussa, signalons, d'après Al Omari, que Mansa Moussa disposait de 100.000 fantassins et de 10.000 cavaliers. Sous l'influence de l'Islam, le Mali a vu s'épanouir de grands centres culturels tels que: Tombouctou, Djenné, Gao, Oualata et Niani. Plusieurs imams du Mali ont effectué leurs études dans les villes d'Afrique du Nord. Parmi les plus éminents on cite: le juriste de Tombouctou, Kateb Moussa, qui fit ses études à Fès. Des Maghrébins ne dédaignèrent point de venir s'instruire dans les universités sur les rives du Niger. A ce sujet, voici une anecdote du Tarikh es-Soudan:

"Abderhaman et-Temini, venu du Hedjaz avec Mansa Moussa, se rendit compte, à Tombouctou, qu'il avait affaire à d'éminents juristes; il retourna à Fès pour compléter sa culture et revint ensuite pour tenir tête aux savants de Tombouctou."

95. C'est également sous le règne de Kankan Moussa que les échanges commerciaux entre le Soudan et les pays méditerranéens semblent avoir atteint leur apogée. La paix qui régnait alors a favorisé ce commerce: l'or et le sel étaient les principaux éléments des échanges. Des recherches plus poussées ont permis de déterminer les institutions de ce grand empire africain du XIV^{ème} siècle. Une étiquette très minutieuse réglait la vie de la cour du Mali. Le monarque vivait retiré dans ses palais. Selon Ibn Batouta, le monarque tenait deux sortes d'audience, l'une sous la fameuse coupole construite par l'architecte Es-Saheli et l'autre à ciel ouvert sur une estrade, appelée "bembé", réservée à l'empereur. Au cours de la séance, sous la coupole, l'empereur reçoit les plaintes et les doléances, écoute les rapports des gouverneurs de province, ou "Farma", ainsi que des chefs militaires, ou "Fari". Pendant toute l'audience, le Lieutenant, ou "Kanfari", se tient près du souverain. Par contre, pendant les séances sur l'estrade, l'empereur est assis. Ibn Batouta note que l'estrade est recouverte de tissu de soie et garnie de coussins; au-dessus, s'ouvre un parasol qui ressemble à un dôme de soie, au sommet duquel se trouve un oiseau d'or grand comme un épervier. C'est sur cette estrade que l'empereur reçoit les ambassadeurs ou bien quelquefois assiste aux grands défilés folkloriques.

96. Le ministère se composait principalement de grands dignitaires, de juristes et autres fonctionnaires. Les principales charges, au nombre de cinq, étaient confiées le plus souvent aux proches parents de l'empereur. Le "Babili Farma" est ministre de l'agriculture, l' "Ouanei Farma" est ministre de la propriété; le "Sao Farma" contrôle les forêts; le "Khalissi Farma" assume les fonctions de ministre des finances. Enfin, le "Hari Farma" est ministre des eaux, responsable des pêcheries et de la navigation sur le Niger.

97. Ces quelques indications donnent une idée du prestigieux empire du Mali qui ne fut d'abord qu'un modeste royaume, vassal du Ghana puis du Sosso, qui a commencé sa grandeur avec Sounjata Keita en 1230 et qui, finalement, s'étendait jusqu'à l'est du Niger. Il est clair que, déjà au Moyen Âge, l'Afrique noire avait atteint, plusieurs siècles avant la pénétration coloniale, un haut degré d'évolution et de culture.

98. Du XIV^{ème} siècle au XVI^{ème} siècle, après la décadence de l'Empire du Mali, l'Empire sonrhail de Gao devait connaître un éclat tout particulier. Grâce à Askia Mohamed qui régna de 1492 à 1527, l'Empire de Gao a atteint son apogée. Askia Mohamed est le créateur du système des municipalités; il effectua lui aussi un pèlerinage à La Mecque. Dans ce voyage important, 500 cavaliers et 1.000 fantassins lui servaient d'escorte; il emportait 300.000 pièces d'or, provenant du trésor de son prédécesseur, l'empereur Sonni Ali Ber. Il institua l'armée d'élite limitée à un petit nombre de soldats de métier bien équipés et bien entraînés. Grand capitaine lui-même, Askia Mohamed est considéré par l'histoire soudanaise comme un administrateur avisé et un grand organisateur et, à ce titre, il mérite d'occuper une place particulière parmi les souverains africains.

99. Les civilisations, qui se sont créées et développées principalement sur les rives du Nil, du Niger ou du Congo ont été brutalement placées devant le phénomène colonial qui ne doit son triomphe qu'à la force et à la perfidie. Plus près de nous, d'authentiques héros, tels que El Hadj Omar, Samory, Béhanzin et tant d'autres, n'ont jamais voulu admettre la sujétion et ont lutté jusqu'au bout contre toute forme de domination étrangère. Au capitaine Destenaves, envoyé auprès de lui pour conclure un traité, le Moro Naba de Ouagadougou a fait, en 1895, une déclaration célèbre que je cite:

"Je trouve mon pays très bien comme il est. Je n'ai nullement besoin d'eux" — il s'agit naturellement des conquérants. "Je sais ce qu'il me faut et ce que je veux. J'ai mes marchands; aussi estime-toi heureux que je ne te fasse pas couper la tête. Va-t'en et, surtout, ne reviens plus."

100. Aujourd'hui encore, toute l'Afrique réclame unanimement la fin immédiate du système colonial. Ma délégation partage la responsabilité du dépôt du projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5, patronné par 42 Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie; elle tient cependant à féliciter la délégation de l'Union soviétique à laquelle revient le mérite de l'heureuse initiative de ce débat en séance plénière. Si la déclaration que cette délégation propose [A/4502 et Corr.1] est mise aux voix, ma délégation lui apportera tout son appui.

101. Par contre, ma délégation ne sera pas en mesure de soutenir le projet de résolution, soumis à notre assemblée par le Honduras [A/L.324], pour la raison très simple que cette initiative n'apporte aucune réponse valable à la question fondamentale de la libération immédiate des peuples coloniaux.

102. Le droit et la morale, ainsi que le développement des relations humaines et fraternelles entre les peuples d'Afrique et les autres peuples exigent qu'il soit donné une réponse apportant effectivement, aux peuples coloniaux, la justice, la dignité et l'égalité auxquelles ils ont droit et qu'elle l'apporte sans faux-fuyant ni hésitation. Ce n'est pas l'isolement que nous demandons puisque, après tout, l'Afrique n'a jamais été isolée que pendant la phase de la colonisation.

Nous étions isolés d'un territoire à l'autre et, dans le même territoire, les catégories sociales étaient isolées et dressées les unes contre les autres.

103. Les empires des différents colonisateurs, même voisins ou interpénétrés, étaient isolés les uns des autres. D'une manière plus concrète, Conakry était plus près de Paris que de Freetown, de Monrovia ou de Tunis. Pour aller à Accra, en partant de Dakar, il fallait d'abord se rendre à Paris. Pour se rendre à Brazzaville, le plus court chemin, quel que soit le point de départ en Afrique occidentale, passe encore par Londres ou Paris. C'est un isolement absurde que ne supportent plus les peuples d'Afrique. Nous voulons que des rapports sains et utiles s'établissent entre les différents Etats d'Afrique et leurs populations, entre le continent africain et tous les autres continents. Pour cela, il faut briser le vieux carcan du colonialisme. C'est la seule manière d'engager positivement l'avenir en mettant fin à cette absurdité que condamne l'histoire.

104. L'Afrique tend une main fraternelle, mais exige que les dernières chaînes de la domination soient coupées. Il n'est nullement question de haine, malgré tout le mal que nous avons souffert hier. Il n'est question que de tourner une page révolue et de faire face à l'avenir. En réclamant la fin du système colonial, nous sommes certains de donner la liberté non seulement au peuple africain et aux peuples coloniaux, mais aux peuples des métropoles au nom desquels s'exercent la domination et l'exploitation des colonies. L'injustice, la brutalité, le pillage dans les colonies ont toujours porté gravement atteinte à la liberté et, plus sûrement, à la moralité dans les métropoles elles-mêmes.

105. Le 28 septembre 1958, mon pays a connu un passage inattendu et pourrait-on dire instantané du stade de colonie au stade de pays souverain, sans aucune préparation. L'indépendance n'a été, en Guinée, un mot d'ordre de lutte politique que quelques semaines seulement avant l'historique référendum du général de Gaulle. Naturellement, les responsables de la jeune République de Guinée ont eu à faire face à d'importants problèmes. Il convient de souligner aussi le caractère absolument pacifique de notre accession à l'indépendance sans une goutte de sang, sans un coup de fusil et dans l'unité nationale la plus totale, malgré les provocations du colonisateur.

106. Ceux qui parlaient alors de perturbations et de troubles ont assisté, dans le plus grand calme, à la prise en main par les autorités guinéennes de l'ensemble des services dont le fonctionnement était, jusqu'alors, assuré par les cadres français: administration générale, personnel de commandement des régions, magistrature, cadres de l'armée, ingénieurs et techniciens, etc. Aucun de ces services n'a connu d'interruption, malgré la précipitation calculée avec laquelle le Gouvernement français a retiré ses cadres.

107. En proclamant donc l'indépendance de tous les territoires encore sous domination étrangère, nous sommes persuadés que ces derniers trouveront les cadres nationaux qui ont suffisamment le sentiment de leur utilité et de leurs responsabilités pour affronter les tâches immenses qui sont les nôtres en Afrique, pays sous-développés. Nous n'excluons pas l'assistance technique, à condition qu'elle s'inspire d'un esprit entièrement nouveau et différent de la mentalité coloniale.

108. Nous savons que l'accession à l'indépendance ne résoudra pas le problème du sous-développement, mais rien ne permet de maintenir un système devenu anachronique. L'indépendance est nécessaire et indispensable, mais ne constitue nullement une fin en soi. Une indépendance politique, tant qu'elle n'est pas complétée et garantie par l'indépendance économique, ne saurait être le but recherché.

109. Par contre, il serait tout à fait vain de vouloir assurer un développement économique quelconque dans le contexte de non-indépendance. Ni les conditions psychologiques, ni les moyens matériels ne permettent de promouvoir une politique économique valable avant l'exercice de la souveraineté pleine et entière par les anciens territoires coloniaux.

110. Les peuples colonisés sont non seulement incapables de se développer tant qu'ils demeurent sous la domination étrangère, mais ils ne sauraient participer efficacement à la lutte que mènent tous les peuples pour le maintien et le renforcement de la paix. Un peuple privé de liberté, qui ne s'exprime pas directement à travers ses institutions propres et libres, n'a pas les moyens d'apporter sa contribution à la lutte pour l'établissement d'un monde d'égalité et de paix.

111. Ainsi donc, la proclamation générale et immédiate de l'indépendance des peuples encore dépendants renforcera le camp des peuples et des nations épris de paix.

112. Pour l'Afrique, l'indépendance, tout en étant le problème le plus urgent à résoudre, cède déjà le pas à un autre problème beaucoup plus délicat: celui de la lutte contre le néo-colonialisme. Comment les Etats africains arriveront-ils à consolider leur indépendance, tout en renforçant leur unité?

113. Cette question devient aujourd'hui plus importante que l'indépendance politique elle-même. Il se peut que le colonialisme reconnaisse l'impossibilité de se maintenir sans changement de forme, tout en restant décidé à sauvegarder ses intérêts économiques et ses privilèges. L'attitude concrète des nouvelles nations, soucieuses du maintien de la cohésion nationale et sans grands moyens devant les multiples problèmes que pose l'évolution accélérée des populations dont elles sont responsables, déterminera soit une nouvelle forme de sujétion, soit un avenir à la fois prospère et stable.

114. Le danger de l'indépendance contrôlée est déjà une réalité, mais ce n'est pas en retardant la libération des territoires encore colonisés que l'on évitera ce nouveau fléau. Il est évident que l'unité d'action seule permettra aux nouveaux Etats d'éviter la tentation de monnayer une partie de leur souveraineté contre une aide matérielle de circonstance. Il est difficile d'imaginer qu'un Etat grand ou petit, appartenant à la catégorie des pays sous-développés, puisse progresser et résoudre ses problèmes aux dépens des autres. Pour l'Afrique, qui a connu la traite des esclaves et la colonisation, l'indépendance fictive constituerait une véritable catastrophe, voire une malédiction historique.

115. En fin de compte, les maîtres d'hier seraient les seuls bénéficiaires de la division et des querelles de leurs anciennes colonies. Certes, l'aide et la coopération sont indispensables pour le progrès des pays sous-développés, mais le fossé qui les sépare des pays techniquement avancés ne pourra être comblé que dans la mesure où une coopération loyale s'établira, dans le cadre de l'indépendance nationale de tous, pour la transformation des structures économiques des pays arriérés et pour leur industrialisation.

116. La qualité de la contribution des nouveaux Etats, qui intéresse directement la question de la paix mondiale, dépendra du degré de liberté de leurs peuples et non de leurs gouvernements et de la possibilité qui sera donnée à ces peuples de mettre leurs énergies au service de l'intérêt général.

117. Il n'est plus possible d'envisager le sort d'une ancienne colonie en l'isolant du sort de ses voisins. Il serait également vain de chercher un équilibre mondial limité aux seules nations avancées et industrialisées. Désormais, l'humanité est condamnée à choisir sans partage la sauvegarde d'une paix indivisible et d'un bonheur universel. A ce titre, on peut affirmer que la question de la libération des peuples coloniaux rejoint directement la question cruciale du désarmement général et complet.

118. Enfin, permettez-moi de conclure cet exposé du point de vue de la délégation de la République de Guinée par les phrases suivantes du message du président Sekou Touré, en date du 30 novembre 1960:

"Le choix qui se pose aujourd'hui à la conscience universelle de votre assemblée, c'est le choix de la construction positive du monde contre la division du monde, c'est le choix de la solidarité unanime contre la domination et l'exploitation, c'est le choix de la libération de l'homme contre l'esclavage social ..."

119. Confiants dans l'issue de ces débats, nous pensons, comme le président Sekou Touré, qu'il revient à cette session de marquer historiquement le seuil d'une phase nouvelle et décisive de l'évolution universelle et de poser la première pierre pour l'édification d'un monde fondé sur la coopération loyale, la solidarité humaine, la justice et la paix du monde.

La séance est levée à 12 h 55.

ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE

20 1961

QUINZIÈME SESSION

UN/SA COLLECTION

Documents officiels

SOMMAIRE

Page

Point 87 de l'ordre du jour:

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1147

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. BUDO (Albanie): A l'initiative du Gouvernement de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, les Nations Unies se trouvent saisies d'un problème grave, d'une immense portée internationale: le problème de la liquidation totale et définitive de cette survivance honteuse de notre siècle qu'on dénomme le colonialisme. A une époque où la société humaine a fait des pas énormes dans la voie du progrès et du bien-être et où le génie de l'homme ne connaît pas de bornes dans l'utilisation des forces de la nature pour assurer à toute l'humanité une vie heureuse dans la prospérité et la dignité, l'existence sur notre planète de millions d'êtres humains souffrant encore sous le joug colonial, sous quelque forme que ce soit, non seulement est un anachronisme intolérable et indigne de notre société, mais constitue en même temps le plus grand crime contre l'humanité et la civilisation humaine, et affecte directement la question de la paix dans le monde. Il n'est que grand temps d'y mettre fin entièrement et une fois pour toutes.

2. L'accession à l'indépendance nationale et à la liberté des peuples encore asservis est inéluctable; c'est la marche naturelle de l'histoire humaine et il n'y a pas de force au monde capable d'arrêter cette montée grandiose du mouvement de libération nationale qui s'est développé, durant la dernière période, à un rythme accéléré sans précédent.

3. Mais l'on s'adresse maintenant aux Nations Unies pour demander, conformément aux buts et aux principes fondamentaux de la Charte, qu'elles apportent leur contribution importante en vue de la suppression sans délai de l'asservissement colonial insupportable aux peuples et cela avant que ces peuples, ne comptant que sur eux-mêmes, se libèrent de leurs propres forces. De la réponse que sauront donner les Nations Unies à cet impératif catégorique de notre siècle — qui n'est pas seulement l'exigence urgente des peuples asservis, mais correspond au vœu ardent de l'humanité entière — dépendra dans une large mesure l'avenir même de notre organisation.

4. N'est-ce pas, en effet, l'être humain qui est le but final de notre organisation? N'est-ce pas pour assurer aux peuples et aux nations, grandes et petites, la pleine jouissance de leurs droits fondamentaux, la libre disposition, l'égalité de droits, la liberté, l'indépendance et le bien-être qu'a été créée l'Organisation des Nations Unies?

5. Le problème de la servitude coloniale des peuples n'est pas nouveau. Il existe depuis des siècles et remonte même aux premières guerres agressives menées par les plus forts pour asservir les plus faibles et les dépouiller de leurs richesses. C'est l'histoire même de toutes les guerres menées par les impérialistes pour subjuguier par la force, par le fer et par le feu les peuples des divers continents en vue de s'assurer le profit de leur exploitation et de celle de leurs richesses. Les guerres qui se sont déroulées tout au long du siècle dernier ont, en dernière analyse, les mêmes causes. Elles s'expliquent par l'avidité des puissances impérialistes à accaparer les marchés mondiaux, les sources de matières premières et les sphères d'investissement, et, à cet effet, à s'assurer des colonies et des zones d'influence et à procéder au partage et à la redistribution des richesses du monde. Les deux guerres mondiales de notre siècle ont eu pour origine la cupidité de ces mêmes puissances en vue d'un nouveau partage du monde et de ses richesses, en vue de l'hégémonie mondiale impérialiste, en vue de l'exploitation égoïste exclusive des richesses du globe terrestre. Les mêmes causes sont à l'origine des guerres et des conflits armés de la période actuelle, depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale. La cause de ces guerres a été l'acharnement des impérialistes à empêcher la libération nationale des peuples ou le développement national des jeunes Etats dans la liberté et l'indépendance. Tel est le cas des guerres d'Indochine et d'Indonésie et de l'agression armée contre l'Egypte, ou encore de l'agression et des menaces de recours à la force armée des puissances impérialistes — et en premier lieu des Etats-Unis d'Amérique — dans les pays du Proche-Orient et du Moyen-Orient. Les guerres coloniales-impérialistes continuent encore à l'heure actuelle, causant partout des pertes innombrables en vies humaines et en biens matériels, comme c'est par exemple le cas en Algérie où le vaillant peuple algérien, par sa lutte héroïque de libération nationale, s'est attiré l'admiration et la sympathie de tous les peuples en faisant face depuis six ans déjà à la répression armée la plus atroce. C'est le cas aussi au Congo, où nous nous trouvons devant l'intervention armée des puissances occidentales membres de l'OTAN, et en particulier des Etats-Unis et de la Belgique. C'est le cas encore en Oman, où le vaillant peuple de ce pays, malgré la supériorité militaire de l'ennemi, lutte avec abnégation et sans relâche pour se libérer du joug impérialiste britannique. C'est le cas enfin à Cuba, où les impérialistes américains ne reculent devant aucun moyen — y compris les bombardements, les assassinats, les activités subversives et les démonstrations de force de la flotte de guerre américaine — en vue de saper le régime populaire et d'assurer, une fois encore, les intérêts des monopoles américains dans ce pays. A cet égard, il convient de rappeler que la flotte de guerre américaine, qui, selon les besoins des plans agressifs du Pentagone, surgit une fois devant les ports méditerranéens du Proche-Orient, une autre fois dans les détroits de Taiwan ou encore dans la mer des Caraïbes, est devenue le symbole de la menace de force, de la provocation et de l'aggravation de la tension internationale.

6. Le problème de la libération des peuples asservis par le colonialisme touche ainsi à l'essence même de la question de la paix et de la guerre, à laquelle il est étroitement lié. La liquidation de cette pourriture honteuse de notre société qu'est le système colonial, dans toutes ses manifestations, et la suppression de l'exploitation des peuples par les monopoles étrangers représenteraient non seulement la reconnaissance la plus élémentaire des droits inaliénables des peuples coloniaux à la liquidation de leurs souffrances séculaires, mais créeraient en outre les conditions nécessaires pour le plein développement social, économique et culturel de ces peuples. Cela contribuerait sans nul doute au relâchement de la tension internationale et à la création de conditions favorables à la solution d'autres problèmes internationaux, et en premier lieu de celui du désarmement général et complet, dont le caractère urgent est hors de contestation.

7. Si nous tenons à faire ici allusion au désarmement, c'est parce que nous estimons indispensable d'avoir toujours présent à l'esprit le fait que, tant que les puissances impérialistes auront entre leurs mains les moyens d'opprimer les autres peuples, elles ne voudront pas renoncer à y recourir chaque fois qu'elles seront touchées dans leurs intérêts égoïstes, et, par tant, l'on ne pourra assurer l'établissement d'une paix durable dans le monde. Sans doute la suppression du système colonial constituera un apport très important dans la voie des efforts soutenus des peuples épris de paix et des pays pacifiques en vue d'instaurer entre les nations, grandes et petites, des relations de bon voisinage et de coopération sur la base de l'égalité souveraine des Etats, du respect du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des autres, et dans l'intérêt mutuel des Etats de même que de la communauté internationale tout entière. C'est ce qui correspondrait aux buts et principes inscrits dans la Charte de notre organisation.

8. Les peuples colonisés ont de tout temps lutté pour leur libération nationale. Après la grande révolution d'Octobre de 1917, en Russie, une ère nouvelle commença dans l'histoire de l'humanité. Les principes humanitaires élevés de la révolution d'Octobre se répandirent dans le monde entier et trouvèrent un accueil particulièrement chaleureux chez les peuples souffrant sous la domination colonialo-impérialiste. Après la seconde guerre mondiale, un certain nombre de pays ont brisé les chaînes de l'oppression coloniale et nationale. La grande victoire remportée sur le fascisme dans la seconde guerre mondiale eut pour conséquence la rupture de la chaîne impérialiste en Europe centrale et orientale, où de nouveaux pays socialistes prirent naissance. La victoire historique de la révolution du grand peuple chinois donna naissance à la République populaire de Chine qui compte quelque 700 millions d'habitants. Ces pays constituent maintenant le système socialiste mondial, qui exerce son influence salutaire dans la marche des événements mondiaux et représente un facteur primordial pour la paix et la sécurité internationales.

9. Pendant la même période, grâce à la lutte des peuples opprimés, de nombreux pays d'Asie et d'Afrique ont rejeté le joug colonial et ont accédé à l'indépendance. Pendant la dernière phase, le mouvement de libération s'est développé à un rythme accéléré et cette année a vu naître en Afrique 16 nouveaux Etats indépendants, de sorte que c'est à juste titre que l'on a appelé 1960 "l'Année de l'Afrique". Les nouveaux pays, qui sont maintenant Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, prennent une part active à la vie internationale. Ils ont ainsi largement agrandi la zone de paix. Ainsi le système colonial se désagrège et s'écroule dans ses fondements; une ère nouvelle s'ouvre devant l'humanité; l'Afrique et l'Asie ont complètement changé de face et le mouvement de libération nationale et de consolidation de l'indépendance se développe en Amérique latine. La lutte des peuples qui subissent encore le joug colonial se développe chaque jour davantage en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique latine. Ces peuples aussi parviendront, sans aucun doute, à l'indépendance. Mais, en attendant, ces peuples, comprenant environ 100 millions d'hommes, continuent à souffrir sous la domination colonialo-impérialiste. Les Nations Unies se doivent donc de prendre des mesures efficaces pour mettre fin entièrement et une fois pour toutes, conformément aux principes de la Charte, à cette plaie honteuse pour notre civilisation.

10. La libération des pays colonisés n'a jamais été l'œuvre des puissances coloniales, comme s'efforcent de nous le faire croire leurs meilleurs avocats. Cette libération a été le fruit de la lutte soutenue des peuples asservis et de l'appui que ceux-ci ont toujours trouvé chez les autres peuples et les Etats pacifiques. Les impérialistes ne renoncent jamais de leur propre gré aux bénéfices fabuleux de l'exploitation la plus féroce des autres peuples. Le monde est bien renseigné là-dessus. Point n'est besoin, pour se convaincre à cet égard, d'aller chercher bien loin. Il suffit de rappeler ici les récents événements du Congo qui montrent comment les impérialistes, à l'heure même où un pays a accédé à l'indépendance, conspirent pour reprendre ce qu'ils ont été obligés de céder.

11. Les peuples colonisés ont languì, pendant des siècles, sous l'exploitation la plus atroce des impérialistes. Des millions d'hommes en ont souffert; des millions sont tombés victimes de la répression ou dans la lutte qu'ils ont menée pour accéder à une vie libre et indépendante. Le moment est bien venu de mettre fin à ce régime d'obscurantisme, de terreur et d'exploitation.

12. Un coup d'œil rapide sur la situation régnant actuellement dans les pays soumis encore au régime colonial ne peut que nous convaincre de la tâche urgente qui incombe aux Nations Unies de mettre tout en œuvre en vue de liquider sans délai ce phénomène honteux de la société humaine sous toutes les formes où il se présente.

13. Un examen de la politique coloniale britannique en Afrique, au cours de ces dernières années, nous donne une idée de l'état d'esclavage où se trouvent les peuples soumis et montre que les impérialistes anglais n'ont pas hésité à recourir aux méthodes les plus cruelles toutes les fois que les intérêts de la puissante oligarchie financière étaient mis en danger par le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples dominés.

14. Prenons, par exemple, le cas de la Fédération de l'Afrique centrale. En Rhodésie du Nord, les colons blancs, qui ne sont que 70.000, détiennent plus de la moitié des meilleures terres, laissant à plus de 2.500.000 Africains l'autre moitié composée de terres peu fertiles. Une discrimination scandaleuse entre colons blancs et autochtones est aussi appliquée en ce qui concerne le revenu annuel. Les travailleurs africains sont employés aux travaux les plus durs et, parfois, ils reçoivent des salaires de 20 à 30 fois plus bas que ceux des blancs, comme c'est le cas des 40.000 mineurs de la Rhodésie du Sud. Les colonialistes tirent des profits fabuleux de l'exploitation systématique des grandes richesses de ces territoires et de la main-d'œuvre à très bon marché. La Rhodésie du Nord, voisine du Katanga, est très riche en cuivre et, en 1959, l'extraction du cuivre de ce territoire représentait 15 pour 100 de la production mondiale. Mais qui jouit de ces richesses? Ce sont seulement les colonialistes britanniques et leurs partenaires, tandis que les autochtones, malgré un travail exténuant, mènent une vie de misère. Pour satisfaire les besoins en main-d'œuvre africaine à bon marché, les lois les plus abominables ont été édictées; elles permettent aux colonialistes d'appliquer, sous une forme ou sous une autre, le régime de discrimination raciale, le travail forcé, l'agglomération des Africains dans des réserves où sévit un régime de misère et de terreur inouï et où les hommes meurent par centaines. Et les représentants des puissances coloniales viennent ici nous parler des bienfaits du système colonial! Les droits les plus élémentaires sont foulés aux pieds. Pour n'en citer qu'un exemple, il suffit de mentionner qu'en Rhodésie du Sud où, en 1938, 40 Africains étaient inscrits comme électeurs, 20 ans plus tard, en 1958, ce chiffre ne dépassait pas 550. Ces chiffres montrent comment les colonialistes se soucient de l'émancipation et de la civilisation des autochtones!

15. L'histoire de la domination en Afrique centrale, comme, d'ailleurs, dans toutes les colonies, n'est qu'une longue suite de ruses, d'hypocrisies, d'intrigues, de répressions et de terreurs exercées par les divers colonialistes.

16. Au Kenya, dans cette colonie sous domination britannique où le sang n'a cessé de couler, la lutte de libération nationale se développe à nouveau après l'écrasement féroce du mouvement national par les colonialistes anglais, quelques années auparavant. D'après la presse britannique elle-même, plus de 4.000 hommes de troupe ont été nouvellement envoyés au Kenya afin de réprimer tout sentiment de liberté et tout mouvement national. Au cours de ces derniers mois, 2.000 personnes ont été emprisonnées; 800 personnes sont dans les prisons depuis 15 ans et le chef du mouvement nationaliste, Jomo Kenyatta, après sept années d'emprisonnement, fut de nouveau poursuivi et déporté.

17. Le Portugal, l'une des plus anciennes puissances coloniales, ne reconnaît pas avoir des colonies, mais des provinces d'outre-mer. Ainsi l'Angola, le Mozambique et d'autres colonies portugaises en Afrique et en Asie, qui se trouvent à des milliers de kilomètres du Portugal, ne seraient, d'après les colonialistes portugais, que des prolongements géographiques du territoire métropolitain. C'est un fait incontestable que, dans les colonies portugaises, les colonialistes emploient les méthodes les plus cruelles pour étouffer le sentiment national de la population autochtone qui, malgré la subjugation coloniale la plus brutale, pendant des siècles, ne cesse de résister à l'assimilation et à l'extermination.

18. Pour avoir une idée de la situation en Angola, on peut se reporter à la brochure publiée par le Comité américain sur l'Afrique intitulée: Angola: Repression and Revolt in Portuguese Africa. Citons, entre autres, ce passage:

"Tandis que, dans les décennies passées, il y avait moins d'indices de discrimination raciale en Angola par comparaison avec d'autres territoires voisins, ces dernières années on remarque une recrudescence de la discrimination raciale... Sur des écriteaux, aux portes des restaurants, on lit: "Droit d'entrée réservé". On a construit des villes... pour les blancs seulement. Dans les services publics, il est très difficile de trouver un Africain à un poste supérieur à celui d'interprète... Si la division de couleur est aussi évidente dans les grandes villes de la côte, c'est pis encore à l'intérieur du territoire."

19. Une preuve évidente du mécontentement populaire envers les autorités coloniales est fournie par les préparatifs militaires que les Portugais entreprennent en Angola pour étouffer la résistance. Dernièrement, 2.000 soldats portugais ont été envoyés pour renforcer les 20.000 qui s'y trouvaient déjà. Ces troupes sont équipées de chars d'assaut du type Panhard, de canons de campagne et de moyens de transport blindés. On construit avec empressement des casernes et des aérodromes pour des avions militaires, et des navires de guerre patrouillent les côtes et les fleuves du pays. Ainsi l'Angola se transforme en une base de l'OTAN qui doit servir les plans agressifs des puissances impérialistes visant à diviser l'Afrique et à écraser tout mouvement de libération nationale. De toute évidence, les milieux militaires du Portugal ont réussi à convaincre le président Eisenhower, lors de sa visite à Lisbonne au mois de mai 1960, de la nécessité de l'utilisation des armements fournis au Portugal par les Etats-Unis pour écraser les mouvements de libération nationale des peuples d'Afrique. D'ailleurs, ici, il n'y a rien de nouveau, puisque les armes américaines sont déjà utilisées depuis des années, sous le couvert des traités agressifs de l'OTAN et autres, pour écraser les mouvements de libération nationale dans divers pays d'Afrique, comme c'est le cas de l'Algérie et du Congo, ainsi que d'autres régions du monde.

20. On voit donc comment les puissances impérialistes et colonialistes défendent leur cause commune qui est celle de tenir les peuples coloniaux sous leur domination et d'exploiter sans merci leurs richesses et le travail forcé des populations autochtones. Les puissances impérialistes, en commençant par l'Angleterre qui s'efforce de paraître plus libérale, jusqu'à la plus réfractaire, à savoir l'Union sud-africaine qui foule aux pieds toutes les résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, suivent les mêmes buts: elles ne veulent en aucune façon renoncer à leurs privilèges honteux et elles combinent toutes sortes de manœuvres, d'intrigues, et même de crimes pour prolonger la vie du système colonial moribond. Cela a été constaté aussi au sein de notre organisation, en particulier dans le cas du problème congolais où les puissances colonialistes ont fait cause commune pour défendre la domination coloniale. Le fait que nous assistons actuellement à un rapprochement des puissances coloniales, au moment même où le colonialisme est en agonie, ne montre que leur faiblesse.

21. Voyons encore le cas du Sud-Ouest africain. Depuis 15 ans déjà, l'Assemblée s'occupe de cette question. Des dizaines de résolutions ont été adoptées, des commissions et des comités ont été créés, de nombreux pétitionnaires ont été entendus à la Quatrième Commission, qui ont fait rapport sur la situation intolérable où se traîne la population autochtone de ce pays. On sait bien que, dans ce malheureux pays, c'est l'"apartheid" et la discrimination raciale la plus monstrueuse qui font la loi. Les hommes sont traités comme des bêtes de somme, le travail forcé est chose commune. Le Gouvernement de l'Union sud-africaine a complètement méconnu les résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale et la situation a empiré dans le Sud-Ouest africain d'année en année. Il convient de souligner que le Gouvernement de l'Union sud-africaine a été encouragé dans cette attitude par les autres puissances coloniales.

22. Par un pillage systématique et ininterrompu des territoires coloniaux en Afrique, en Asie et ailleurs, les monopoles des diverses métropoles ont accumulé des richesses fabuleuses, laissant les peuples soumis dans un état arriéré de misère et de sous-développement, qui fait un contraste saisissant avec les richesses et le développement des pays métropolitains.

23. On comprend bien que les impérialistes ne veulent pas lâcher leur emprise sur leurs possessions coloniales, usant à cet effet de tous les moyens possibles. Pour empêcher la libération des territoires sous leur domination, les puissances coloniales ont eu recours à tous les moyens possibles. A côté des guerres meurtrières dans lesquelles ils n'ont pas hésité à employer les armes les plus barbares, y compris les bombes au napalm, et où ont péri des millions de personnes, les impérialistes ont eu recours aux obstacles et aux manœuvres les plus variés. L'un des arguments que n'ont cessé de répéter les colonialistes, toutes les fois qu'il s'est agi de la question de la libération des colonies, est la prétention selon laquelle les peuples colonisés ou dépendants ne posséderaient pas encore la maturité nécessaire pour accéder à l'indépendance et s'administrer eux-mêmes, ce qui a comme origine la conception raciste des impérialistes selon laquelle les peuples n'appartenant pas à la race blanche sont inférieurs.

24. Les impérialistes et leurs avocats, pour justifier la politique de domination coloniale et la prolongation de cette domination, ne cessent de nous parler de leur fameuse "mission civilisatrice"; ils ont même le courage de prétendre de façon cynique que les neuf dixièmes des Africains sont illettrés et que l'absence de culture chez ces peuples montre que ceux-ci ne sont pas préparés à accéder à l'indépendance et à prendre en main la conduite de leur destinée — comme si les responsables de cette situation n'étaient pas les impérialistes eux-mêmes. Mais le monde est bien conscient que, tant que durera le régime colonial dans un pays, les portes de l'enseignement et de la culture seront fermées aux peuples soumis, et que, sans la liberté et l'indépendance, ceux-ci n'auront pas la possibilité de s'engager dans la voie du développement national, du progrès et de la prospérité. Les théories réactionnaires prétendant que les Africains n'ont pas de tradition culturelle sont démenties par l'histoire. L'histoire nous apprend en effet qu'il fut un temps où l'Afrique était plus avancée que l'Asie et l'Europe.

L'Afrique a eu sa propre culture. C'est ce dont témoignent l'histoire ancienne de l'Egypte et celle des Etats Napata, Meroë et Aksum, dont les Ethiopiens sont les descendants. Une explication remarquable de toutes ces prétentions éhontées des représentants de l'impérialisme a été donnée par le poète malgache Rabemananjara qui dit entre autres: "Le nègre est devenu sauvage le jour où le blanc a découvert combien de bénéfice l'on peut retirer de cela."

25. Les nombreux pays de l'Afrique, de l'Asie et d'autres parties du monde qui ont acquis l'indépendance et prennent une part active dans la vie internationale montrent comment les peuples devenus libres et indépendants savent diriger et gouverner leur pays et devenir en même temps un facteur très important de paix et de stabilité dans le monde. Des pays comme l'Inde, la République arabe unie, la Guinée et d'autres pays prennent une part active et positive dans la solution des problèmes internationaux. Nous ne saurions assez exprimer la joie que nous ressentons lorsque nous voyons ici, aux Nations Unies, les jeunes Etats d'Afrique être à l'avant-garde dans la lutte pour la libération des droits légitimes des peuples asservis, pour l'abolition totale et définitive de leur asservissement.

26. Hantés par le fait qu'ils sont en train de tout perdre de leur système colonial, les colonialistes font aussi appel à la mystification et, en se donnant l'étiquette de bienfaiteurs et d'altruistes, ils essaient de donner l'impression qu'actuellement le colonialisme n'est plus le colonialisme, qu'il n'existe plus comme tel. En même temps, ils s'efforcent, comme on l'a bien fait remarquer, de jeter un voile mortuaire sur le système discrédité du colonialisme, ils se servent de nouvelles méthodes et de nouvelles formes pour s'assurer l'emprise économique sur les anciennes colonies ou sur les pays faiblement développés. Les impérialistes américains et ouest-allemands sont particulièrement actifs à cet égard et même au détriment des puissances coloniales classiques qui paraissent s'adapter difficilement aux nouvelles conditions créées.

27. Sous le couvert de l'aide économique aux pays sous-développés et de l'association entre les pays industriels et les pays sous-développés les maîtres des monopoles veulent assurer l'hégémonie économique dans ces pays. L'un de leurs objectifs est de retarder l'édification d'une industrie nationale dans les pays sous-développés pour pouvoir ainsi écouler leurs produits industriels dans les marchés de ces pays et y acheter les matières premières à des prix imposés.

28. En vue de s'assurer l'emprise économique dans les pays récemment devenus indépendants ou dans d'autres pays sous-développés, on s'efforce d'encadrer ces pays dans des organismes comme le Marché commun, l'OECE, visant à coordonner la politique économique de certaines puissances occidentales envers les pays sous-développés qui, selon leurs plans, doivent être transformés en pays économiquement et politiquement dépendants. C'est là le nouveau phénomène du colonialisme collectif, qui se manifeste dans la lutte commune des puissances colonialo-impérialistes de l'OTAN contre le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine. Les traités militaires de l'OTAN et de l'OTASE contribuent à la réalisation des objectifs colonialistes des puissances impérialistes et servent à ces puissances pour prendre pied dans les autres pays, en particulier en construisant des bases militaires dans des buts aventureux de conquête et d'hégémonie mondiale, mettant ainsi en danger la paix et la sécurité des peuples, en premier lieu de ceux dans les pays desquels ces bases se trouvent installées.

29. Il convient de souligner que les impérialistes européens dans leurs efforts en vue de sauvegarder leurs possessions coloniales jouissent de l'appui et de l'aide des Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Les milieux dirigeants des Etats-Unis s'emploient de leur mieux pour jouer double jeu. En même temps qu'ils tâchent de se présenter en amis de l'Afrique, ils organisent l'agression collective au Congo et fournissent en crédits et en équipement militaire le Gouvernement français pour continuer la guerre d'Algérie. Par ailleurs, les monopoles américains caressent l'espoir d'accaparer l'héritage africain que les colonialistes de l'Europe occidentale se voient obligés de relâcher, comme il en est d'ailleurs de même en ce qui concerne les autres colonies possédées précédemment par les Européens. Parallèlement à l'installation de bases militaires, aériennes et navales, le Gouvernement américain établit dans les pays d'Afrique, au moyen de prétendus conseillers et missionnaires, un large réseau d'espionnage servant, entre autres, à mettre en œuvre le travail de sabotage.

30. Mais l'Afrique a complètement changé. Elle n'est plus aujourd'hui ce qu'elle a été avant la seconde guerre mondiale. Les peuples d'Afrique ont bien conscience de leurs droits et de leurs intérêts et savent à quoi s'en tenir, ils savent distinguer leurs amis de leurs ennemis, quel que soit le masque dont se servent les Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

31. Les peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine se rendent bien compte des méthodes par lesquelles les impérialistes entendent réaliser leur politique coloniale et du danger réel que représente une telle politique. C'est pour cette raison qu'ils intensifient résolument leur lutte contre le joug colonial-impérialiste indépendamment de la forme sous laquelle il se présente.

32. Le peuple albanais sait par sa propre expérience séculaire ce que c'est que la domination étrangère. Il s'est toujours senti solidaire et a toujours appuyé la lutte des peuples pour leur indépendance.

33. C'est dans l'esprit des sentiments de sympathie profonde que nourrit le peuple albanais à l'égard des peuples soumis au joug colonial, de son appui chaleureux à la lutte héroïque que mènent ces peuples pour leur libération nationale, que la délégation de la République populaire d'Albanie appuie fermement la déclaration de l'Union soviétique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/4502 et Corr.1].

34. L'élimination du colonialisme de la société humaine, sous toutes ses formes, non seulement constitue la reconnaissance du droit inaliénable des peuples de vivre dans la liberté et l'égalité souveraines, mais la condition sine qua non pour permettre à ces peuples de s'engager dans la voie du développement politique, économique, culturel et social.

35. L'accession de tous les peuples coloniaux à la vie libre et indépendante est un processus historique inévitable et irréversible. Le monde se transforme devant nos yeux avec une rapidité incroyable. Le colonialisme, ce système honteux, touche à sa fin et il n'a de place que dans la poubelle des pourritures de l'histoire. Naturellement, le facteur déterminant de cette transformation, c'est la lutte même des peuples coloniaux et dépendants, qui jouissent de la sympathie et du soutien de toute l'humanité progressiste.

36. Mais il est du plus haut devoir des Nations Unies, conformément à la Charte, de mettre tout en œuvre pour contribuer à ce que cette libération inévitable se réalise au plus tôt et sans délai. L'Assemblée générale doit exiger l'accession immédiate et définitive à l'indépendance et à la liberté totales de tous les pays sous domination coloniale, de tous les territoires sous tutelle et de tous les territoires qui ne se gouvernent pas encore eux-mêmes.

37. Les Nations Unies se doivent d'exiger, et même de faire en sorte, que les puissances impérialistes s'abstiennent de toute forme d'ingérence et respectent strictement la souveraineté et l'indépendance des Etats devenus récemment indépendants, ou de ceux qui le deviendront après l'adoption par cette assemblée générale de la Déclaration qui fait l'objet de notre débat.

38. Les Nations Unies ne peuvent se permettre de rester indifférentes devant le spectacle des misères et des souffrances que supportent actuellement les peuples coloniaux et dépendants.

39. Nul ne saurait douter que l'élimination radicale et définitive du colonialisme aurait en même temps une importance considérable pour la coopération économique internationale sur la base de l'égalité et des avantages mutuels. Cela contribuerait à la création de conditions nécessaires à l'établissement de relations internationales normales de compréhension et de bon voisinage; ce serait là une contribution directe effective à la détente et à la consolidation de la paix et de la sécurité internationales.

40. Ainsi donc l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la déclaration soumise par l'Union soviétique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux constituerait un apport considérable aux efforts des pays pacifiques en vue de l'amélioration des relations internationales et de la consolidation de la paix générale.

41. M. DIOP (Sénégal): Nous assistons avec ce débat aux assauts ultimes de la conscience universelle contre les combats d'arrière-garde et les derniers soubresauts des pays qui veulent maintenir, contre vent et marée, leurs possessions coloniales.

42. L'histoire coloniale est une vieille histoire, vieille comme le monde. C'est l'éternelle histoire de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme par les voies et moyens de la force brutale. Homo homini lupus disaient déjà les Anciens.

43. Cette exploitation de l'homme par l'homme a été entreprise dans nos pays africains par les Européens, d'abord par l'institution de la traite des nègres, il y a de cela quelques siècles. On a arraché de leurs pays des millions et des millions d'hommes. On les a transplantés en Amérique et ailleurs, avec un cortège de misères et de souffrances effroyables. Sur 10 millions d'hommes transplantés, il en survivait à peine 1 million.

44. Mais, de même que l'injustice humaine est constante, de même le progrès de la conscience humaine est constant. Quelques siècles plus tard, des voix se sont élevées, des voix qui étaient de hauts sommets de la conscience humaine. Pour ne citer que quelques exemples, ce fut d'abord la voix des grands penseurs de la Révolution française de 1789; et, ici même, aux Etats-Unis, ce fut la voix d'un homme comme Abraham Lincoln au moment de la guerre de Sécession. Ces voix retentirent pour condamner l'esclavage, demander son abolition; mais il fallut plus d'un siècle, vers 1848, pour que la chose commençât à être effective. Même après cette période, après que la plupart des nations européennes eurent souscrit au principe de l'abolition de l'esclavage, il y avait encore des réfractaires, des attardés, des sclérosés, qui continuaient en pirates à perpétuer l'institution. Il a fallu que les nations européennes les plus sincères entreprissent la police des mers pour imposer par la force l'abolition de l'esclavage aux autres Etats européens et parfois même à leurs propres ressortissants.

45. Enfin, l'esclavage fut définitivement aboli. Mais, à peine l'esclavage aboli, l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme renaquit de ses cendres sous la forme du colonialisme. On ne transplantait plus; on allait sur place dominer et exploiter à domicile.

46. Ce colonialisme, qui a fleuri lui aussi pendant plus de deux siècles et demi, a été, d'année en année, battu en brèche par le progrès constant de la conscience humaine et aussi par l'éveil progressif des peuples colonisés qui, peu à peu, prenaient conscience de leur dignité et de leur sentiment national. Ces peuples colonisés ont, peu à peu, fui leur aliénation intellectuelle, culturelle et artistique sous une livrée coloniale quelconque et sont remontés aux sources de leur génie propre, original et originel, pour y puiser les forces qui leur permettraient de retrouver leur authenticité en même temps que leur souveraineté et leur indépendance. C'est ce mouvement d'humanisme et de renaissance que d'aucuns ont appelé la négritude.

47. Il est d'ailleurs peut-être bon de dire ici que ce mouvement de renaissance, d'humanisme et de libération sur tous les plans n'a jamais comporté un aspect raciste, n'a jamais postulé le rejet de toute autre culture, de toute autre civilisation, des bienfaits de toute autre culture ou de toute autre civilisation, qu'elle soit gréco-latine, américaine ou chinoise.

48. Enfin, d'année en année, le progrès humain a battu en brèche cette deuxième phase de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, ce néo-esclavagisme qu'est le colonialisme; et notamment, depuis la fin de la dernière guerre mondiale, des progrès considérables ont été réalisés. En Afrique, tout particulièrement, nous avons assisté, en moins de 15 ans, à la libération et à l'indépendance nationale des trois quarts des peuples dépendants qui étaient colonisés.

49. Cependant — je l'ai souligné tout à l'heure — malgré l'abolition de l'esclavage par des déclarations de principes et par des lois votées par les pays européens, il y a eu des réfractaires et des sclérosés qui avaient continué à faire prospérer l'institution. Ce qui s'est passé pour l'esclavage se passe aujourd'hui pour le colonialisme.

50. Pour le colonialisme aussi, il y a des attardés, des cristallisés, des sclérosés qui veulent se maintenir contre vent et marée, et aussi contre le cours de l'histoire. Ils seront balayés, assurément, par le torrent irréversible du cours de l'histoire; ils seront balayés comme des fétus de paille.

51. Mais cette position d'expectative fataliste ne suffit pas pour les Nations Unies. Ici, à cet autre haut sommet de la conscience universelle, il nous faut prendre une position active; il nous faut monter une nouvelle croisade et, cette fois, non point pour faire la police des mers, mais pour faire la police des continents, et pour agir en sorte que, partout, cessent le colonialisme et l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme.

52. C'est pour cela que la délégation du Sénégal a apposé sa signature sur un projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] demandant que, partout, en Afrique et ailleurs, le colonialisme cesse et que, partout, en Afrique et ailleurs, les nations dépendantes deviennent enfin des nations libres, souveraines et indépendantes.

M. Zorine (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques), vice-président, prend la présidence.

53. M. PLIMSOLL (Australie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Les très nombreux discours que nous avons entendus jusqu'à présent, et le nombre encore plus grand de ceux que nous allons entendre, prouvent combien la communauté internationale que forme cette organisation, et plus spécialement les peuples que nous représentons, ont à cœur de remplir les obligations énoncées dans la Charte à l'égard des territoires sous tutelle et des pays non autonomes. Le Pacte de la Société des Nations avait formulé officiellement, dans un document international, un principe nouveau: désormais, les puissances étaient comptables, vis-à-vis de la communauté des nations, de l'administration des populations indigènes placées sous leur autorité. Cette doctrine et ce mouvement furent encore stimulés quand fut rédigée, à San Francisco, la Charte des Nations Unies. Il y a, dans la Charte, des chapitres très importants, matériaux de ce vaste ensemble qui est devenu par la suite l'Organisation des Nations Unies. L'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande ont joué un grand rôle dans l'élaboration de ces chapitres et dans l'application de leur substance. Ces deux pays étaient à l'avant-garde des nations qui voulaient qu'une responsabilité plus large et plus complète que celle qui avait existé avant la guerre soit nettement reconnue et acceptée.

54. Lorsque la Charte fut entrée en vigueur, l'Australie fit passer les mandats qu'elle détenait de la Société des Nations sous le régime de la tutelle internationale. En outre, bien que la Charte ne stipulât pas l'obligation de fournir des renseignements d'ordre politique sur les territoires non autonomes, le Gouvernement australien a spontanément soumis à l'ONU, dès le début, des informations de ce caractère. Nous avons constamment collaboré avec l'ONU, fourni au Conseil de tutelle et à la Quatrième Commission tous éclaircissements sur la politique que nous avons suivie dans ces territoires; au cours des 15 dernières années, nous nous sommes efforcés de remplir fidèlement les obligations que nous impose la Charte. Aussi est-ce de nouveau sans la moindre appréhension que nous nous présentons devant cette organisation. A chaque fois, nous venons ici pour rendre compte de ce que nous avons entrepris volontairement, je dirais même avec joie.

55. Comme toutes les institutions, le colonialisme, qui est une institution humaine, peut revêtir différentes formes suivant la partie du monde où l'on se trouve, suivant les êtres humains qui y vivent; il peut être, et il est parfois odieux. Mais je prétends que dans ses meilleures formes il a été et continue d'être une phase de transition nécessaire; les torts que l'on peut lui imputer — et certains d'entre eux ont été dénoncés ici — ne sont bien souvent que des exemples de l'absence de fraternité humaine, dont nous avons tant d'autres preuves dans de si nombreuses institutions humaines, internationales et autres.

56. J'ai eu le sentiment, en entendant traiter certains des problèmes qui ont été évoqués ici et à la Quatrième Commission, qu'il s'agissait là de problèmes communs, auxquels nous avons tous à faire face dans nos pays, et qui sont inséparables de notre effort commun pour améliorer le sort de l'humanité en relevant les niveaux de vie dans le monde, pour promouvoir les droits de l'homme et assurer partout leur respect. Ce sont, pour la plupart, des problèmes de fraternité humaine.

57. Il y a, me semble-t-il, une remarque essentielle à faire ici: c'est que nous ne pouvons placer toutes les colonies exactement sur le même plan. Elles diffèrent non seulement par leurs caractéristiques physiques, par leurs populations, par les particularités de la nation administrante, mais encore par leur passé, et à bien d'autres égards aussi. Certains des pays qui sont devenus des colonies étaient les héritiers d'une vieille civilisation, d'une antique culture; parfois même ils faisaient partie de vastes ensembles politiques. Certains de ces pays ne formaient pas réellement des nations; ils se rattachaient néanmoins à d'importants groupes sociaux, parfois à des organisations tribales composées de milliers, voire de dizaines de milliers d'individus. Dans d'autres cas encore, les colonies étaient composées de groupes peu nombreux, désorganisés, parfois disséminés, isolés, sans aucun lien entre eux. C'est pourquoi, à mon sens, nous ne pouvons aborder la question du colonialisme avec fruit que si nous admettons qu'il y a colonies et colonies, de même qu'il y a différentes sortes de puissances administrantes, de problèmes à résoudre et de méthodes employées à cet effet.

58. Il n'est pas vrai non plus que le colonialisme ait toujours consisté à retirer l'indépendance à des peuples qui, sans cela, jouiraient aujourd'hui d'un niveau de vie comparable à celui que connaît l'Europe occidentale. Cela peut être vrai de certaines régions du monde; mais, de toute évidence, tel n'est pas le cas pour d'autres. Dans certains endroits, avant l'arrivée des puissances administrantes, il n'existait pas d'entités nationales, les tribus étaient en guerre les unes contre les autres, les droits de l'homme étaient méconnus, l'esclavage régnait, parce que l'esclavage n'est pas une pratique que les Européens soient les seuls à avoir exercée sur d'autres peuples. C'est une institution vieille comme le monde; il nous faut le combattre partout où il existe, quel que soit le peuple qui le pratique.

59. Au cours du présent débat, nous avons entendu à maintes reprises de belles phrases sur le fouet du maître, sur les crimes dont les colonisateurs se seraient rendus coupables. En entendant ces propos, j'ai pensé que, si tout cela a pu être vrai à certains moments de l'histoire et dans certaines parties du monde, il n'en est certainement pas ainsi des territoires administrés par l'Australie; or, c'est au nom de l'Australie, et de l'Australie seule, que je parle. Il pourrait être utile, et même avantageux pour nos débats, que je donne ici quelques détails sur la situation en Nouvelle-Guinée orientale, pays dont l'Australie a la charge.

60. La Nouvelle-Guinée orientale est longtemps restée isolée du reste du monde. Pendant des siècles, et sans doute des millénaires, sa population n'a eu aucune relation avec l'extérieur. Ce pays se trouvait, par conséquent, dans une situation différente de celle, disons, des populations africaines qui, à plusieurs époques de leur histoire et pendant longtemps, ont maintenu des contacts fructueux avec les civilisations que connaissaient d'autres régions de l'Afrique, de l'Asie et d'autres parties du monde. La Nouvelle-Guinée se composait de multiples collectivités, totalement isolées tant au point de vue culturel qu'à tout autre point de vue. Bien que l'on ait enregistré un accroissement constant de la population depuis plusieurs années, celle-ci n'atteint pas encore le chiffre de 2 millions. Les habitants parlent entre eux 510 langues, et des milliers de dialectes: ceux qui parlent l'une de ces 510 langues ne comprennent aucun de ceux qui en parlent une autre; il existe donc d'importants groupes de population qui sont incapables de communiquer les uns avec les autres pour tous les besoins de la vie courante, des populations ignorant tout de ce que peut être une nation, de ce que peuvent être les dimensions de l'île où ils habitent, ne soupçonnant même pas qu'il pût exister une communauté d'intérêts, un lien quelconque, entre eux et les autres peuples de l'île. Ils ont mené une vie primitive et — dans l'ensemble — leur existence s'est résumée à trouver de la nourriture et à la consommer aussitôt. C'est à peine si l'idée leur était connue de faire des provisions alimentaires. La sorcellerie et la magie noire régnaient partout; dans bien des cas, ils pratiquaient le cannibalisme.

61. Nous ne nous trouvons pas ici en présence d'une population qui, jusqu'à une époque récente, formait une véritable nation dotée d'un système politique et social très évolué. Certes, je ne suis pas de ceux qui confondent civilisation et mode de vie occidental: je sais cependant qu'à l'intérieur de nombreux Etats Membres de cette organisation, de petits groupes humains vivent une existence réellement primitive, que leurs traditions sont restreintes et qu'ils ne disposent jusqu'ici que de possibilités de progrès limitées. Je demande alors aux représentants de ces pays d'imaginer ce que peut être une île où chaque habitant ne dépasserait pas ce niveau de civilisation. On voit combien la tâche est immense. Il s'agit de transporter — en un laps de temps très court — des hommes vivant à l'âge de la pierre jusqu'à l'époque actuelle, avec sa civilisation complexe: c'est là un problème qui ne se pose à aucun des pays représentés ici, qui ne s'est posé à aucun d'eux dans un passé récent. C'est presque une situation unique par le nombre d'individus vivant dans des conditions telles qu'ils ont un long chemin à parcourir avant de pouvoir se joindre à nous. Cette opinion ne se fonde pas sur un sentiment de supériorité raciale; la population de la Nouvelle-Guinée pourra un jour se joindre au concert des autres nations. La condition relativement arriérée dans laquelle elle se trouve résulte de son isolement prolongé du reste de l'humanité, et d'un ensemble de causes historiques.

62. L'Australie a eu la tâche immense — et acceptée de grand cœur — d'intégrer ces peuples au vingtième siècle, de les transformer en des voisins pacifiques de l'Australie et des autres pays de la région du Pacifique occidental, d'en faire nos futurs partenaires dans un monde en paix.

63. Nous n'avons pas été attirés par l'appât du gain, car — pour ce qui est de l'Australie — la tâche qui consiste à administrer la Nouvelle-Guinée et à faire progresser les populations autochtones a constitué un lourd fardeau économique et financier, qui pèsera longtemps encore. C'est pourquoi on peut dire que la conception classique de l'exploitation économique des colonies n'est pas applicable à la Nouvelle-Guinée.

64. La Nouvelle-Guinée est proche de nous et sa population est notre voisine. Nous vivons avec elle, côte à côte. Nous entendons être ses amis. Nous voulons trouver en elle des partenaires dans notre effort pour vivre en paix. Nous comptons faire de ce peuple une nation. Pour cela, nous avons accepté les obligations énoncées par la Charte et nous sommes même allés bien au-delà.

65. Permettez-moi maintenant de dire quelques mots des problèmes qui se sont posés à l'Australie dans ce pays. Peut-être répondrai-je ainsi à la question qui vous vient probablement à l'esprit, à savoir pourquoi avons-nous besoin de tant de temps pour atteindre notre objectif?

66. L'Australie est, depuis 40 ans, chargée de l'administration du Territoire sous tutelle de la Nouvelle-Guinée. Quarante ans, c'est, en quelque sorte, la durée de vie d'un être humain. Auparavant, la Nouvelle-Guinée était une colonie allemande. Au sud du Territoire sous tutelle, il existe un territoire non autonome où l'Australie s'est installée depuis plus longtemps. Je parlerai cependant des deux parties de l'île à la fois, car notre politique est la même dans les deux cas: nous voulons amener les peuples de ces deux territoires jusqu'à l'autonomie.

67. La Nouvelle-Guinée est située sous les tropiques. Le terrain y est accidenté; on se trouve en présence d'une jungle souvent impénétrable. On pourrait valablement comparer cette région à celle de l'Amazonie, zone très vaste et très difficile d'accès; c'est bien là une des raisons pour lesquelles il nous a fallu si longtemps pour ouvrir le pays; aujourd'hui encore, il existe des zones qui ne sont pas administrées. La tâche a été longue et ardue. Nous devons nous rappeler que tous les moyens dont nous disposons aujourd'hui n'existaient pas il y a 40 ans, ni même il y a 20 ans. Je pense en particulier à l'avion et au bulldozer. Un homme à pied met souvent des jours et des jours pour y parcourir seulement quelques kilomètres. Grâce à l'avion, nous avons été en mesure de surmonter le problème que posaient les distances et une jungle impénétrable, et l'Australie a joué un grand rôle dans le monde en assurant ce travail de pionnier qui consiste à relier des régions entre elles, en faisant appel à l'aviation. Entre 1925 et 1940, nous avons créé de toutes pièces une ville, Bulolo, dans les montagnes de Nouvelle-Guinée, desservie exclusivement par la voie aérienne. Pour l'époque, c'était un véritable exploit, dont un certain nombre d'autres pays ont su tirer des enseignements. Cet exploit a été rendu possible seulement parce que nous avons su utiliser l'avion pour le transport de marchandises lourdes, de machines, etc. Aujourd'hui encore, il y a en Nouvelle-Guinée des postes, des comptoirs où tout ou presque tout doit parvenir par la voie aérienne; c'est là une opération très coûteuse et parfois délicate. En effet, outre cette jungle, on y rencontre de hautes montagnes et de nombreuses vallées très encaissées. Bien des gens qui se sont rendus en Nouvelle-Guinée, y compris certains de nos collègues de l'ONU, des membres de missions de visite, ont éprouvé quelques craintes devant les conditions dans lesquelles il leur a fallu se rendre, par la voie des airs, d'une localité à une autre à travers des brouillards parfois épais, conditions qui sont tout à fait normales pour ceux qui doivent vivre et travailler en Nouvelle-Guinée.

68. Et puis, alors que nous étions en plein travail, nous nous sommes trouvés en guerre, une guerre qui a dévasté l'île. La Nouvelle-Guinée fut en effet pendant cinq ans le théâtre de violents combats; un grand nombre de bâtiments, des routes, des quais, des bassins portuaires furent détruits par des bombardements. Pendant ce temps, la jungle avait tout envahi.

69. Je me souviens notamment d'un déplacement qui m'avait conduit à Finschhafen, sur la côte septentrionale de la Nouvelle-Guinée, où se trouvait un grand bâtiment ayant à peu près la même superficie que la salle à manger des délégués, et dont le sol de béton avait une vingtaine de centimètres d'épaisseur. Pourtant, en six mois, cette énorme dalle avait été complètement détruite par la jungle: les arbres s'étaient forcé un passage à travers le béton et l'avaient brisé en deux. Ainsi, lorsque les combats qui durèrent cinq ans prirent fin, il ne restait pas grand-chose en Nouvelle-Guinée et, du point de vue matériel, il nous fallut repartir littéralement de zéro. Il va sans dire qu'en dehors même de toute idée de conflit, l'exubérance de cette végétation tropicale nous impose chaque année des charges considérables, notamment pour assurer l'entretien des routes et des bâtiments.

70. Il nous a fallu ensuite venir à bout de la maladie. Le paludisme sévissait sur toute la côte de la Nouvelle-Guinée; dans cette zone, l'état sanitaire de la population indigène et des Australiens venus s'y installer était très mauvais. Nous avons peu à peu surmonté ces obstacles, mais il nous a fallu beaucoup de temps, car nos connaissances dans ce domaine, ainsi que les remèdes dont nous disposons aujourd'hui, étaient à peu près inconnus il y a encore peu de temps. Ici encore, des hommes comme sir Hamilton Fairley ont fait un travail de pionnier. Notre œuvre en Nouvelle-Guinée, dans la lutte contre le paludisme, a servi d'enseignement: nos méthodes ont été en effet utilisées dans certaines parties de l'Asie du Sud-Est, notamment en Birmanie, ainsi que sur le continent africain. Aujourd'hui, les pays en voie de développement peuvent utiliser des produits nouveaux, tels que l'atabrine et la paludrine. Nous en savons désormais davantage sur l'importance que revêt l'assèchement des terrains et sur la façon de réaliser une telle opération chaque fois que cela est possible. Nous avons appris aussi à utiliser les poissons pour détruire les larves de moustiques et faire ainsi échec à leur développement. Toutes ces méthodes ont été progressivement mises au point au cours des années: elles sont aujourd'hui appliquées dans le monde entier. Mais, jusqu'à ce qu'elles soient connues, on se heurta à de sérieux obstacles pour mettre en valeur de nombreuses parties du monde, et ce fut certainement le cas de la Nouvelle-Guinée.

71. Des recherches scientifiques ont donc été nécessaires et, en Australie même, l'histoire de notre économie n'est souvent autre chose que le récit de nos efforts pour acclimater des animaux ou des végétaux importés d'Europe. Les moutons eux-mêmes, qui sont aujourd'hui l'essentiel de nos exportations, nous ont posé de graves problèmes d'adaptation. Il en fut de même pour le blé.

72. Des difficultés analogues se sont présentées en Nouvelle-Guinée. Je me suis rendu il y a quelques années sur les hauts plateaux de l'île où l'administration australienne s'est livrée à des expériences d'acclimatation sur des bovidés, des ovidés, des porcins: ces animaux n'existaient pas dans ces parties de la Nouvelle-Guinée il y a seulement cinq ans. Le bétail ne s'y est pas encore acclimaté et son élevage n'est pas encore rentable. Nous espérons cependant que l'application progressive des résultats de la recherche et de l'expérimentation permettra de rendre productives des zones actuellement stériles. Mais c'est un effort de longue, de très longue haleine. Même la multiplication du bétail se fait lentement. Il nous faut du temps pour tout mener à bien.

73. Je donne toutes ces précisions parce que je sais — et je l'ai entendu dire ici — que les progrès de certains territoires non autonomes ou sous tutelle ont paru très lents. Mais bien souvent — et c'est certainement le cas pour la Nouvelle-Guinée — l'une des raisons principales réside dans la difficulté qu'offre le relief. Il y a là des obstacles matériels que n'importe quel gouvernement n'aurait pu surmonter que lentement et avec peine.

74. Indépendamment des efforts matériels que nous avons déployés et que j'ai rappelés — hôpitaux, ponts, routes, etc. — nous nous sommes employés à nous acquitter avec diligence de nos obligations qui consistent à préparer la population à se gouverner elle-même. Mais nous avons dû procéder graduellement, car nous sommes partis de rien. Nous avons donc constitué au sein de la population autochtone une sorte de noyau qui aura lui-même pour mission d'en former d'autres: c'est ce qu'on appelle un travail en cascade. Nous formons des moniteurs qui ensuite en forment d'autres. Au lieu de réaliser la mise en valeur politique et économique de ce pays suivant un processus rigide et uniforme, nous veillons au contraire à assurer une cadence toujours plus rapide.

75. Dans le domaine politique, les autochtones sont de plus en plus nombreux à entrer dans la fonction publique et à participer au gouvernement central. Cette année, des réformes ont été apportées au conseil législatif, si bien que le nombre des membres autochtones est maintenant plus élevé. Les gouvernements régionaux et locaux ont pris régulièrement plus d'importance. Cette progression n'a pas été uniforme dans l'ensemble du pays. En effet, nous ne voulons pas retarder le développement d'une province parce qu'une autre n'est pas encore mûre pour une certaine forme d'autonomie; dans les villes et dans les villages, cependant, et peu à peu dans des circonscriptions plus étendues, les habitants autochtones jouent un rôle de plus en plus grand dans la gestion de leurs affaires.

76. L'enseignement se développe rapidement. La scolarisation touche maintenant 200.000 personnes en Nouvelle-Guinée. Or, la population totale, enfants et adultes compris, est — je le rappelle — inférieure à 2 millions. La formation technique s'élargit régulièrement, elle aussi, et non seulement dans les diverses activités industrielles, mais aussi dans l'agriculture. J'ai visité moi-même une grande fabrique de contreplaqué, à Bulolo, en 1956 et à nouveau en 1957. J'ai pu ainsi constater que le nombre des autochtones employés aux divers travaux de l'usine augmentait régulièrement. Il s'agissait de travaux très délicats exécutés à l'aide de machines automatiques et faisant appel à des techniques variées, appliquées partout dans le monde.

77. Les services sanitaires ont été développés. Je ne parle pas seulement des hôpitaux et autres établissements qui emploient du personnel européen; nous formons aussi des autochtones qui seront appelés à diriger eux-mêmes ces services sanitaires. Nous les préparons à nous relayer.

78. L'ordre règne maintenant dans la quasi-totalité du territoire. Il existe encore certaines zones, comme je l'ai dit, qui ne sont pas administrées; mais elles sont l'exception. Partout ailleurs, l'ordre règne et la population tout entière peut faire appel aux tribunaux pour se protéger contre l'arbitraire des individus ou du gouvernement. Le principe de la légalité s'applique à tout le territoire et à tous ses habitants.

79. Graduellement, nous réformons ou modifions les tabous imposés par les coutumes tribales et des pratiques religieuses. Le problème est complexe et de nombreux représentants siégeant ici en ont fait eux-mêmes l'expérience, et ont une opinion personnelle sur la question de savoir dans quelle mesure l'Administration est en droit d'intervenir dans des coutumes héritées du passé. Nous nous sommes efforcés, autant que possible, de nous adapter et d'adapter nos lois aux vœux et aux désirs librement exprimés des autochtones. Mais, comme vous le savez, les coutumes locales font parfois obstacle à l'utilisation la plus économique du sol, pour ne prendre qu'un seul exemple. En ce qui concerne la propriété foncière, le Gouvernement australien n'en a pas moins appliqué une politique selon laquelle l'Administration peut acheter des terres aux indigènes, et encore moyennant des garanties. C'est ainsi que 97 pour 100 des terres sont entre les mains des autochtones, et que moins de 1 pour 100 seulement est utilisé ou occupé par des populations d'autres groupes. Nous avons estimé que notre mission nous faisait un devoir de veiller à ce que la terre de la Nouvelle-Guinée continue d'appartenir à ses habitants.

80. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, l'Australie a accepté les obligations qui sont énoncées dans la Charte. Ces obligations, nous les avons contractées envers l'ONU et la communauté des nations, et aussi envers les populations autochtones elles-mêmes. La Charte est précise sur ce point. Il y a là une obligation qui découle d'un traité.

81. Nous sommes saisis d'un projet de déclaration [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] présenté par de nombreux Etats du groupe africain-asiatique. Cette déclaration est différente de la Charte. La Charte est un traité; elle est rédigée avec rigueur. Quant à la déclaration, elle diffère aussi de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, qui avait été élaborée soigneusement en commission et en comité et qui, même alors, n'avait ni force obligatoire, ni force exécutoire. Or, dans une déclaration générale, il est difficile d'être précis; le texte en est conçu pour s'appliquer à diverses catégories de territoires, à des structures administratives très diverses. Le document qui nous est soumis ne peut aller plus loin que la Charte, ni outrepasser les pouvoirs de l'Assemblée; il exprime plutôt en termes généraux des aspirations admises par tous.

82. Certains auraient voulu lui en faire dire davantage, et d'autres moins. Certains auraient souhaité un texte plus précis, d'autres auraient préféré des for-mules différentes. Il n'est sans doute personne ici qui n'eût aimé voir modifier le projet de déclaration qui nous est soumis, ou qui n'eût préféré une autre rédaction. C'est ainsi qu'à mon avis il n'est pas vrai de dire, dans le préambule, que, dans tous les cas, "le maintien du colonialisme entrave le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples dépendants". Ce que j'ai dit de la Nouvelle-Guinée aura démontré, je l'espère, que, là au moins, le colonialisme aide les populations autochtones à réaliser des progrès et que, sans l'Autorité administrante australienne, la population n'aurait aucun espoir de progresser rapidement et d'accéder un jour à l'autonomie.

83. Quant au paragraphe 3 du dispositif, relatif aux prétextes qui seraient fournis pour retarder l'indépendance, il risque d'être mal interprété. Il existe, en effet, des régions où le retrait immédiat de l'autorité administrante engendrerait le chaos. J'estime cependant que les situations énoncées dans ce paragraphe ne peuvent servir de mauvais prétextes ou de raisons mal fondées, pour empêcher un pays d'acquiescer son indépendance. Sur ce point, nous sommes, je le crois, tous d'accord.

84. Les représentants de la Birmanie et de la Nouvelle-Zélande ont déjà parlé du paragraphe 4 du dispositif, qui concerne l'action armée, et ils ont indiqué que, selon leur propre interprétation, ce paragraphe n'a pas pour but d'empêcher le recours à la police pour le maintien normal de l'ordre public.

85. Le projet contient également un paragraphe aux termes duquel des mesures immédiates devraient être prises pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés. En ce qui concerne la Nouvelle-Guinée, l'Australie prend et n'a cessé de prendre des dispositions visant à transférer ces pouvoirs aux habitants autochtones aussi rapidement que possible. J'estime par conséquent que, pour notre part, nous mettons en application ce paragraphe de la déclaration.

86. Le présent débat a été utile en ce qu'il a mis en lumière les tendances et les sentiments qui règnent non seulement parmi nous, mais encore parmi ceux que nous représentons ici. Les discours les plus efficaces, si je puis ainsi porter un jugement, ont été ceux dont les auteurs ont fait preuve de modération et ont réparti équitablement le bien et le mal. Aucun d'entre nous ne voudrait dire qu'il n'y a ni rien de bon, ni rien de mauvais dans le colonialisme. Nous sommes cependant tous d'accord pour reconnaître qu'il importe d'y mettre fin le plus rapidement possible en accordant l'autonomie à tous les peuples du globe.

87. Je me suis efforcé aujourd'hui de préciser l'attitude de l'Australie en tant que puissance administrante. J'ai essayé de renseigner exactement l'Assemblée générale, et de lui montrer nos difficultés et la façon dont nous entendons les résoudre, et par ailleurs d'expliquer nos objectifs et la politique que nous envisageons de suivre pour les atteindre. Devant cette même assemblée, le Premier Ministre australien déclarait le 5 octobre 1960: "... nous considérons de notre devoir de permettre dès que possible à la population du Papua et de la Nouvelle-Guinée d'exprimer sa libre et entière détermination". [888ème séance, par. 46.]

88. M. MIYAZAKI (Japon) [traduit de l'anglais]: La question de l'abolition du colonialisme n'est pas nouvelle. Nous avons vu exprimée dans le Pacte de la Société des Nations la notion de mandat, qui préfigurait cette idée de la responsabilité des puissances administrantes à l'égard de la communauté des nations. Dans la Charte des Nations Unies, cette idée est exprimée de façon encore plus claire et plus précise. Les dispositions concernant les territoires non autonomes et les territoires sous tutelle, que l'on trouve aux Chapitres XI, XII et XIII, envisagent l'autonomie ou l'indépendance future de ces territoires.

89. En fait, depuis la création de l'ONU, plus de 30 anciens territoires non autonomes et territoires sous tutelle ont accédé à l'indépendance conformément à la lettre et à l'esprit de la Charte. C'est là, pour l'ONU, un magnifique bilan, et l'admission parmi nous, à la présente session, de 17 nations nouvellement indépendantes accuse encore ce mouvement vers l'indépendance, en rend le besoin plus urgent.

90. Ma délégation partage l'opinion selon laquelle la question du colonialisme pose l'un des problèmes les plus importants de l'heure. Il faut, sans attendre, placer l'ensemble de cette question dans une perspective raisonnable. L'agitation qui règne dans plus d'une partie des territoires encore dépendants d'Afrique, ainsi que la situation au Congo, exigent de nous une attention de tous les instants.

91. Nous sommes saisis de trois projets de déclaration sur la fin du colonialisme. Tous sont rédigés de façon à pouvoir s'appliquer dans le monde entier. Ma délégation attache une grande importance à la portée que l'on entend donner à ces textes. Elle est convaincue qu'une déclaration de cette nature devrait être d'application universelle, c'est-à-dire qu'elle devrait pouvoir s'appliquer à toutes les parties du monde sans exception.

92. Ma délégation voudrait toutefois souligner que, si une telle déclaration doit être universelle quant à sa portée, son application pratique doit être souple. Il ne peut y avoir d'universalité dans l'application là où il n'y a aucune souplesse. En particulier, quand il s'agit de déterminer la date de l'indépendance, il n'est ni pratique, ni même possible, d'adopter une solution qui soit valable pour toutes les situations.

93. Nous devons comprendre, en effet, que de grandes différences séparent la situation qui existe en Afrique et celle qui existe dans l'océan Pacifique. En Afrique, les territoires qui attendent leur indépendance sont invariablement des régions d'une vaste superficie, à la population nombreuse. Dans le cas du Pacifique, on se trouve en présence de milliers de petites îles faiblement peuplées pour la plupart. Certaines d'entre elles sont trop petites pour constituer une entité géographique ou politique, alors que, très souvent, la cohésion entre les îles et la tendance à l'unité nationale restent encore à réaliser. Le caractère particulier de cette région du Pacifique a déjà été exposé avec vigueur et éloquence, devant la Quatrième Commission, par le représentant des Philippines. Ma délégation, qui représente également une nation insulaire de cette partie du monde, partage pleinement son opinion et le félicite d'avoir dit sans détour ce qui préoccupe à juste titre son gouvernement.

94. Il serait donc déraisonnable, peut-être, de s'attendre que cette déclaration puisse être mise en œuvre de manière à la fois automatique et uniforme dans tous les territoires du monde. Il ne faut jamais permettre au chaos et au vide de s'installer, ce qui pourrait ouvrir les portes à toutes les éventualités dans une partie du monde qui, jusqu'à présent, a pu être préservée de l'agitation et qui est demeurée fidèle à son nom. Cette prudence qui inspire ma délégation ne signifie nullement que le sort de ces populations des fles du Pacifique la laisse indifférente. Au contraire, nous espérons qu'elles auront, par la suite, la possibilité d'opter librement pour le statut qui aura leurs préférences de façon à pouvoir donner libre cours à leur génie propre et récolter entièrement les fruits de leurs efforts.

95. Ma délégation voudrait saisir cette occasion pour s'arrêter sur certaines considérations d'un intérêt particulier pour les nations qui ont récemment fait leur entrée sur la scène internationale.

96. Depuis le XVIème siècle, le flot du colonialisme a battu les rivages de mon pays, et celui-ci n'a dû qu'à sa farouche résolution de maintenir son indépendance, dans des circonstances difficiles. Mettant fin à un insolement qui a duré trois siècles, mon pays s'est heurté aux dures réalités de la vie internationale. A cette époque, il n'y avait ni Société des Nations ni Organisation des Nations Unies sur qui s'appuyer, et c'est par conséquent toute seule que, ma patrie a dû entrer en contact avec le reste du monde et lui tenir tête.

97. La modernisation de la structure politique et des établissements d'enseignement, la création d'industries utilisant les machines et l'électricité, tout cela a dû se faire avec nos seuls moyens. La route sur laquelle mon pays a péniblement cheminé était dure, mais notre volonté et notre résolution nous ont permis d'occuper, dans le concert des nations, une position qui est demeurée à peu près insensible aux influences extérieures.

98. Le souvenir de notre histoire nous inspire une sympathie profonde pour les pays colonisés. Non seulement nous comprenons leur désir d'indépendance, mais aussi nous leur souhaitons de réussir dans la tâche qui les attend une fois l'indépendance acquise; c'est là une voie qu'ils graviront avec beaucoup de peine et qui les obligera à faire appel à toutes les ressources de leur volonté. Aujourd'hui, avec l'appui de l'ONU, tous les Etats Membres sont disposés à leur venir en aide dans toute la mesure du nécessaire et du raisonnable; les choses sont ainsi considérablement facilitées. Sur ce point la communauté des nations a accompli un réel progrès. Néanmoins, malgré cette aide et cette assistance qui leur sont offertes, c'est tout d'abord sur elle-même que chaque nation nouvelle doit compter pour poursuivre ses progrès à un rythme régulier.

99. Comme je le disais il y a un instant, on constate aujourd'hui, parmi les peuples non indépendants, un sentiment d'impatience que nous comprenons fort bien. Il va sans dire que nous ne devons pas flâner en cours de route et retarder le moment où tous les peuples obtiendront l'indépendance ou l'autonomie. Mais on observe d'autre part que la haine et la méfiance persistent à l'égard des puissances colonisatrices, dans certains pays qui ont subi l'humiliation et la sujétion du régime colonial. Nous le percevons d'après le ton et le vocabulaire employés dans certains discours prononcés à cette assemblée. C'est là un sentiment compréhensible, que nous apprécions fort bien pour notre part.

100. Mais les souvenirs du passé, s'ils doivent nous faire ressasser notre rancœur, ne faciliteront guère notre progression vers la liberté et l'indépendance: il est préférable d'avoir le regard tourné vers l'avenir. Nous nous sommes accordés pour dire que le colonialisme est un phénomène désuet. La ruée vers les colonies, qui fut la règle des siècles passés, n'existe plus et ne doit plus exister. Les temps et les conceptions ont changé, et désormais, grâce à l'ONU et à la Charte, les règles du jeu dans la communauté des nations se sont définitivement modifiées. Exhortons les puissances administrantes à le reconnaître. Si des accusations doivent être formulées, elles doivent s'adresser uniquement à ceux qui se refusent à admettre que les temps ont changé; il convient, en revanche, d'en exempter les nations qui, promptes à le reconnaître, agissent en conséquence.

101. Une réaction en chaîne d'accusations, d'impatience, de haine et de violence est déplorable, c'est le moins qu'on puisse dire. La transition d'un statut de dépendance à celui de l'indépendance ne peut que gagner à être harmonieuse et pacifique, nul ne peut en disconvenir. Ma délégation prie donc instamment les puissances administrantes de respecter entièrement les aspirations des peuples dépendants. On ne saurait en effet retarder indûment le processus qui conduit à l'indépendance ou à l'autonomie. Ma délégation invite d'autre part les peuples dépendants à faire montre de patience et à choisir la voie d'une transition pacifique, fondée sur la bonne volonté et la coopération.

102. En conclusion, ma délégation exprime l'espoir sincère que l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale d'une déclaration sur la fin du colonialisme fera cesser la haine et les rivalités et ouvrira dans l'histoire du monde une nouvelle ère d'harmonie et de coopération universelle.

103. M. COMAY (Israël) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ce qu'il y a de plus remarquable dans ce débat historique, c'est qu'il n'aurait pu avoir lieu il y a une génération. Cinq siècles se sont écoulés depuis que les nations vigoureuses et intelligentes vivant sur les côtes de l'Europe occidentale se sont lancées à la découverte et à la conquête de continents nouveaux. Elles devinrent maîtresses du monde alors connu, depuis les vastes plaines, quasi désertes, de l'Amérique du Nord jusqu'aux centres des civilisations anciennes de l'Asie. Il y a 180 ans, la marée commença à refluer quand, à Concord, fut tiré un coup de feu dont l'écho rétentit dans le monde entier. A la révolution américaine devait succéder la libération de l'Amérique latine; l'Empire britannique, de son côté, évolua vers le statut de dominion.

104. Cette époque fut marquée par l'émancipation, volontaire ou non, de communautés de souche européenne qui ne voulaient plus vivre sous l'autorité des pays lointains dont elles étaient venues. Beaucoup plus récemment, ce processus d'émancipation s'est étendu aux peuples autochtones de race non blanche de l'Asie et de l'Afrique. Ce n'est que depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale et la signature de la Charte de San Francisco, il y a 15 ans, que l'indépendance nationale a pris, sur ces deux continents, la forme d'un raz de marée irrésistible, qui a radicalement transformé la configuration politique du globe, à telle enseigne que les atlas scolaires de notre enfance, où les différents empires étaient marqués chacun d'une couleur particulière, sont désormais devenus des pièces de musée.

105. Dans les quelques années qui suivirent la fin de la guerre, l'Afrique marquait le pas par rapport à l'Asie; le continent africain reste, actuellement, la seule région importante du monde où l'on assiste encore au phénomène de la "décolonisation". C'est pourquoi nous avons tous ressenti une joie sincère à la vue des changements spectaculaires qui se sont produits depuis un an ou deux et qui se sont traduits par l'admission à l'ONU, à cette session de l'Assemblée, d'un si grand nombre de nouveaux Etats africains. Trop longtemps, l'Afrique a été le continent oublié, qui végétait pauvre et arriéré, alors que d'autres s'enrichissaient à ses dépens en accaparant toutes ses ressources, et que le monde extérieur ne prenait que trop souvent l'aspect effrayant du trafiquant d'esclaves qui s'enfonçait dans l'intérieur du pays pour y pratiquer un commerce encore florissant aujourd'hui dans certains parties du Moyen-Orient.

106. Ce n'est que de nos jours que les idéaux philosophiques de liberté et d'égalité ont été enfin mis en pratique dans les rapports internationaux. Mais les hommes ne seront véritablement des frères, dans la pleine acception du terme, que lorsque la place de chacun dans la société, la condition de chaque peuple dans la communauté internationale ne dépendront plus de la couleur de la peau ou des traits du visage.

107. Ma délégation partage les vues du représentant de l'Argentine, qui a notamment déclaré, dans son éloquent discours:

"L'étude du bilan du colonialisme pourrait nous mener beaucoup plus loin que nous n'en avons l'intention. Ce qui importe, c'est de noter ceci: quel que soit le jugement que l'on porte maintenant, ou que les historiens futurs porteront plus tard sur ce système, le régime colonial ne s'adapte pas aux structures politiques du monde actuel. C'est un système qui a définitivement pris fin." [927ème séance, par. 17.]

Quel que soit le bilan actuel, il ne fait aucun doute que, dans ses débuts, le colonialisme s'est traduit par l'oppression et l'exploitation. Mais, d'autre part, il ne fait aucun doute que la politique contemporaine et la position des deux principales puissances coloniales, à savoir le Royaume-Uni et la France, sont fondés sur le louable désir d'accorder l'autonomie à leurs colonies. A titre de preuve ces deux pays peuvent à bon droit montrer les nombreuses places qu'occupent maintenant à l'ONU leurs anciens sujets, en qualité d'Etats souverains et égaux. C'est là un fait que l'on se doit de reconnaître, quelles que soient les rancunes qu'ont fait naître les premières formes du colonialisme.

108. Si de nouveaux Etats désirent librement, dans des conditions d'égalité et de respect mutuel, maintenir des liens d'association avec l'ancienne puissance métropolitaine, parce qu'ils considèrent que ces liens leur sont avantageux, il n'y a aucune raison de vouloir qualifier de "néo-colonialisme" ce genre de relations. C'est aux nouveaux Etats eux-mêmes, exerçant en cela leurs prérogatives souveraines, qu'il appartient d'en décider. Il n'y a aucun mérite particulier à obtenir l'indépendance — et c'est là un point important à signaler — dans la lutte et dans le chaos, si le transfert de pouvoirs peut s'opérer d'une manière ordonnée et par les deux parties, comme ce fut souvent le cas et comme ce sera le cas, nous l'espérons, pour tous les territoires encore non autonomes.

109. Le principe de l'indépendance nationale énoncé dans le projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5 touche directement les sentiments les plus profonds du peuple d'Israël et font appel à ses plus vénérables souvenirs. Il y a des milliers d'années, nous luttons pour notre indépendance contre les grands empires coloniaux de l'ancien monde. A de nombreuses reprises, leurs armées en marche ont foulé aux pieds notre liberté. A de nombreuses reprises aussi, Israël brandit l'étendard de la révolte, car, en fin de compte, un peuple ne peut jamais être soumis tant que l'amour de la liberté reste vivant dans son cœur.

110. Le calendrier hébreu perpétue le souvenir de ces luttes. Chaque année, à l'occasion de la Pâque, les Juifs évoquent l'époque où, il y a plus de 3.000 ans, Moïse conduisait les enfants d'Israël hors des frontières de l'Egypte où ils étaient retenus en servitude, pour leur permettre de vivre l'existence d'hommes libres en terre promise. Chaque année, le neuvième jour du mois d'av, les Juifs respectueux de la Loi jeûnent et portent le deuil en commémoration de la perte de leur indépendance nationale dont Nabuchodonosor, roi de Babylone, fut l'auteur en 586 av. J.-C., puis les légions romaines de Titus, en l'an 70 de notre ère. Channukah, la fête des lumières, rappelle la révolte de Judas Macchabée et de ses frères contre la domination et contre les persécutions religieuses et culturelles de l'empire syro-hellène. A l'occasion de Lag B'Omer, le dix-huitième jour du mois d'iyar, nous évoquons la révolte juive héroïque et réprimée dans le sang que menèrent Bar-Kochba et le rabbin Akiva contre la puissance impériale de Rome, au cours du deuxième siècle de notre ère.

111. Tels ont été les événements qui constituent l'arrière-plan historique de la nouvelle indépendance acquise par Israël en 1948, après une lutte amère et douloureuse contre ce qui était devenu, en fait, un régime colonial. Cette lutte entraîna des déportations, des pertes de vies humaines et la détention de nos chefs ainsi que de milliers de nos compatriotes. Je ne désire cependant pas m'étendre sur ce point, car, même pendant le conflit, nous avons toujours gardé notre foi en l'honnêteté foncière du peuple britannique et nous avons toujours apprécié à leur juste valeur les contributions qu'il a apportées à la civilisation, et nous sommes heureux d'entretenir aujourd'hui des relations excellentes et amicales avec le Royaume-Uni. En évoquant ici notre passé ancien et notre passé récent, je n'avais pour but que d'expliquer pourquoi nous rejetons énergiquement le concept de races supérieures ou inférieures, et la croyance selon laquelle un pays, une nation ou un peuple aurait le droit d'en gouverner un autre.

112. Qui peut avoir plus de raisons que nous de "proclamer à nouveau sa foi ... dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine" et de haïr et repousser "toutes les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination"? Tout au long des siècles, notre peuple en a été la victime classique; il a survécu à bien des événements sombres et sanglants, qui ont trouvé leur apogée quand les nazis ont entrepris d'apporter au problème juif une solution qu'ils appelaient définitive: le génocide, c'est-à-dire l'extermination d'un peuple tout entier.

113. Nous ne pouvons oublier les souffrances passées et nous ne saurions conseiller à d'autres de le faire. Ce que nous nous sommes imposé de faire, et ce que nous suggérons aux autres pays nouvellement indépendants, c'est de ne pas s'appesantir sur le passé et d'employer au contraire toutes énergies à construire l'avenir.

114. Nous tous qui avons récemment acquis notre indépendance avons découvert à notre tour que la proclamation de cette indépendance n'est pas une fin en soi, mais seulement un début. Au lendemain des festivités, les dirigeants de nos pays ont dû faire face à l'intérieur à des situations difficiles et à des dangers menaçants à l'extérieur; chacun de nous, dans l'accomplissement de cette tâche, a connu des échecs et des déceptions. Ceci n'est pas seulement vrai des pays devenus depuis peu indépendants. Nous avons en effet entendu, au cours de ces débats, les déclarations aussi mesurées que réfléchies de représentants des pays de l'Amérique latine qui se sont libérés de la tutelle coloniale il y a plus d'un siècle et qui, aujourd'hui encore, continuent de lutter pour donner plus de bien-être à leurs ressortissants.

115. Prenant la parole le 10 octobre 1960, lors de la discussion générale, le Ministre des affaires étrangères d'Israël a dit ce qui suit:

"Nous, les pays neufs, nous sommes devenus indépendants à une époque où l'homme accomplit ses plus grands exploits. Certaines parties du monde ont atteint des niveaux de vie et de développement extraordinaires. Il ne faut pas que l'on nous dise d'avancer lentement, il ne faut pas que l'on nous dise que le progrès des pays développés a pris des générations et des siècles. Nous ne pouvons pas attendre. Nous devons nous développer rapidement ...

"... Nous ne serons jamais véritablement libérés aussi longtemps que nos enfants devront être nourris par autrui. Notre liberté ne sera complète que quand nous aurons appris à tirer de notre sol la nourriture dont nous avons besoin. Le cri qui monte aujourd'hui des continents d'Afrique et d'Asie est celui-ci: partagez avec nous non seulement votre nourriture, mais aussi vos connaissances sur les moyens de la produire. L'inégalité aujourd'hui, ce n'est pas seulement le fossé qui sépare le monde sur le plan matériel, mais, ce qui est plus effrayant, le fossé entre ceux qui cherchent littéralement à atteindre la lune et ceux qui ne savent pas comment atteindre leur propre sol pour en tirer ce dont ils ont quotidiennement besoin.

"Satisfaire la faim de l'esprit n'est pas moins urgent que satisfaire la faim du corps. Il s'agit de savoir comment le monde peut s'organiser afin de rattraper le retard de générations et partager ces connaissances avec ceux qui en ont besoin." [897ème séance, par. 128, 129 et 130.]

116. Ainsi qu'en témoignent les points de vue exprimés ici par les délégations des nations nouvelles, leurs hommes d'Etat sont pleinement conscients du fossé qui existe entre la souveraineté politique de leurs pays et les conditions réelles de vie de leurs peuples. Je voudrais mentionner, notamment, l'importance, soulignée par le représentant du Ghana, des facteurs économiques et sociaux dans les grandes révolutions anticolonialistes de notre époque, de l'énergie créatrice libérée par l'indépendance et du besoin de relations économiques saines entre les pays insuffisamment développés d'Asie et d'Afrique et les grands pays industriels d'Europe et d'Amérique. Ma délégation partage entièrement ce point de vue.

117. L'indépendance nationale est essentielle, mais elle n'est pas suffisante. Aucune nation ne peut s'isoler du reste du monde. Nous habitons tous le même monde, un monde dans lequel les peuples doivent apprendre à coexister s'ils ne veulent pas périr ensemble. Dans son introduction à l'Israel Government Year Book, publié il y a quelques semaines, le Premier Ministre de notre pays, M. David Ben Gourion, écrit:

"Des nations de toute importance, longtemps soumises à une domination étrangère, certaines dotées de cultures anciennes, d'autres incultes depuis des siècles, secouent leur joug et saisissent leur indépendance. Le jour ne peut être éloigné où tous les peuples, quelles que soient leur couleur, leur race ou leur culture, seront membres de la famille humaine, égaux en droits, souverains et libres.

"Cependant, toutes les nations, quelles que soient leur force ou leurs dimensions, dépendent de plus en plus les unes des autres. Il n'est guère d'Etat, si grand, si riche et si puissant soit-il, qui puisse se passer de la coopération et de l'appui des autres."

Au-delà de l'indépendance de chaque peuple, il y a l'interdépendance de tous les peuples.

118. Nous avons étudié avec soin le texte du projet de résolution contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5. Nous voterons en sa faveur et nous en appuierons les aspirations. Pour nous, celles-ci sont déjà annoncées dans les visions sublimes et universelles d'Isaïe, de Jérémie et des autres anciens prophètes hébreux qui ont prêché l'égalité de tous les hommes et de toutes les nations, et dans les paroles du prophète Amos:

"N'êtes-vous pas pour moi comme les enfants des Ethiopiens, ô enfants d'Israël? dit l'Eternel."

119. M. HERRARTE (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation du Guatemala, suivant en cela une ligne de conduite dont elle ne s'est jamais départie aussi bien ici qu'en dehors de notre organisation, désire une nouvelle fois marquer sa position en faveur de la liberté des peuples et de la suppression de ce phénomène historique connu sous le nom de colonialisme qui, depuis quelque temps déjà, est nettement en décadence.

120. Nous ne sommes pas venus ici pour porter des accusations, de quelque nature que ce soit. En tant que nation qui a accédé à l'indépendance après avoir vécu longtemps sous le régime colonial, le Guatemala a appris à aimer la liberté. Nous tenons jalousement à notre indépendance et sommes fermement convaincus que tous les peuples peuvent fixer eux-mêmes leur destin et se gouverner eux-mêmes. C'est bien là le meilleur moyen de développer leur patrimoine culturel, d'assurer le bien-être de leurs habitants et de parvenir à exploiter leurs ressources naturelles à leur propre bénéfice.

121. Nous commettrions une injustice en désignant comme puissances colonialistes les seules puissances occidentales qui possèdent ou ont récemment possédé des colonies. A notre avis, le colonialisme est né le jour où l'homme a commencé d'exploiter l'homme, le jour où les premières tribus ont soumis les tribus voisines, le jour où se sont formés les premiers grands empires de l'antiquité qui asservirent des populations plus ou moins éloignées, encore que toujours à leur portée, étant donné les moyens de communication dont on disposait à l'époque. Le colonialisme inspirait les desseins d'Alexandre le Grand et de ses armées de conquête qui parcoururent tout le Moyen-Orient; il existait à Rome, qui vainquit tant de peuples différents habitant tout au long des côtes du mare nostrum, et fit de leurs pays autant de provinces de son vaste empire. De grands pays comme la Chine ou la Sainte Russie se sont eux aussi édifiés au moyen d'entreprises colonialistes, la Russie notamment, qui conquiert jusqu'à la Sibérie et l'extrémité orientale du continent asiatique, exerça sa domination sur les peuples voisins, et étendit ses frontières à mesure qu'elle affermissait ses conquêtes, tant il est vrai que le colonialisme et l'impérialisme sont deux termes qui tendent souvent à se confondre et à avoir la même signification.

122. C'est le progrès de la navigation et les conquêtes de la technique qui poussèrent vers de lointains continents les peuples qui détenaient ces connaissances. La découverte de l'Amérique ouvrit de nouveaux horizons au colonialisme. A mesure que les communications interocéaniques devenaient possibles, les Européens, maîtres des techniques, se répandirent en Amérique, puis en Asie, et enfin en Afrique et en d'autres régions.

123. Ce n'est pas ici qu'il faut décrire le lent processus qui a abouti au colonialisme moderne. Cependant, au fur et à mesure que les connaissances techniques se répandaient dans le monde et que de nouveaux peuples entraient dans l'histoire, le mouvement commença à suivre — paradoxalement — une courbe descendante, si bien que depuis quelques années nous assistons à sa liquidation presque totale.

124. Maintenant, plus de 100 ans après nous être rendus indépendants de la mère patrie, nous en sommes arrivés à comprendre que tout n'était pas mauvais dans la colonie, que nous avons reçu de l'Espagne d'immenses richesses spirituelles qui constituent notre héritage culturel et raffermissent nos âmes en face des vicissitudes de la vie. Aujourd'hui, de nouveaux pays s'éveillent à l'indépendance et devront se convaincre que l'hostilité et la rancœur doivent faire place à la compréhension et à une saine coopération qui n'implique en aucune façon ni l'asservissement ni une forme quelconque d'exploitation déguisée. Le chemin à suivre est rude et plein de difficultés.

125. La liquidation du colonialisme, qui s'était timidement amorcée après la première guerre mondiale lorsque la Société des Nations institua le système des mandats pour l'administration des colonies des puissances vaincues, s'accéléra sensiblement quand fut promulguée la Charte des Nations Unies, qui prévoyait d'une part le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et d'autre part fixait le régime de tutelle applicable aux anciens territoires sous mandat, aux territoires pris aux Etats ex-ennemis de la seconde guerre mondiale et aux territoires volontairement placés sous régime de tutelle par les Etats responsables de leur administration. Les dispositions régissant ce système de tutelle énoncent clairement la nécessité de favoriser le progrès politique, économique et culturel des populations qui y sont soumises, afin que progressivement elles puissent arriver à se gouverner elles-mêmes, compte tenu des conditions particulières à chaque territoire et des aspirations librement exprimées par les populations intéressées. La Charte contient également un chapitre spécial relatif aux territoires non autonomes. Certes, les dispositions de la Charte applicables à ces territoires étaient plus restreintes; on ne pouvait s'attendre qu'il en fût autrement, étant donné les importants intérêts politiques et économiques que possédaient les puissances colonisatrices. Cependant, c'était déjà le commencement de la fin. En acceptant la mission sacrée d'administrer ces territoires, ces puissances s'engagèrent à transmettre des renseignements à leur sujet; elles déclarèrent formellement que les intérêts des habitants autochtones l'emportaient sur tous les autres, et qu'enfin il leur appartenait d'aider les populations de ces territoires à se gouverner elles-mêmes et d'encourager leurs aspirations politiques.

126. Ces dispositions pleines de sagesse ont indiscutablement conduit à des résultats encourageants. Certes, on aurait pu, en cette occasion, régler d'un trait de plume le sort de tous les territoires non autonomes, mais les conditions politiques ne s'y prêtaient pas vraiment, outre que ce n'est pas d'un seul coup que l'on arrive à prendre des décisions de cette importance; les pays colonisateurs marquent en effet une grande répugnance à renoncer à leurs privilèges. Voilà pourquoi les luttes pour l'indépendance ont toujours un caractère dramatique, le dénouement n'intervenant le plus souvent qu'après des combats cruels.

127. Il nous faut donc nous réjouir que le processus de liquidation se soit déroulé dans l'ensemble de façon pacifique au cours de ces dernières années, et ceci grâce à l'esprit qui régnait à la Conférence de San Francisco, et qu'il touche maintenant à son terme.

128. Mon pays a tiré une grande satisfaction et un légitime orgueil d'avoir été membre du Conseil de tutelle et du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Il croit avoir accompli, en cette occasion, un grand devoir d'humanité par le labeur et la vigilance dont il a fait preuve en faveur du développement des peuples soumis à ces régimes et en faveur de leur indépendance. Nous avons poursuivi cette œuvre au sein de la présente assemblée.

129. C'est ainsi que ma délégation a vu avec la plus profonde satisfaction admettre au sein de l'Organisation de nombreux nouveaux Etats qui étaient d'anciennes colonies ou d'anciens territoires sous tutelle. Le signe le plus sûr de ce processus de décolonisation est l'augmentation du nombre des Etats Membres: de 51 qu'ils étaient il y a 15 ans, au début de l'existence de l'ONU, ils sont aujourd'hui une centaine; autrement dit ils sont deux fois plus nombreux. Si nous prenions une carte du monde datant de la fin de la dernière guerre, où les anciennes possessions coloniales étaient teintées de diverses couleurs, et si nous la comparions à une carte qui tiendrait compte des derniers changements, nous verrions combien les perspectives sont encourageantes et combien nous sommes déjà en droit de parler de vestiges du colonialisme.

130. C'est pourquoi ma délégation estime que la liquidation du colonialisme, qui peut être très prochainement un fait accompli, ne devrait pas être utilisée comme un moyen démagogique au service de la guerre froide. Le problème doit au contraire être traité avec le sérieux et le bon sens qu'exige l'époque actuelle. Il faut avant tout éviter que les pays qui sont à la veille d'accéder à l'indépendance ne deviennent l'enjeu même de cette guerre froide, et ne soient transformés en pions sur l'échiquier de ce jeu dangereux, n'ayant d'indépendance que par l'étiquette, mais demeurant assujettis à une domination qui serait pire que celle de l'ancien régime colonial.

131. Nous ne devons pas passer sous silence l'effort louable des pays devenus récemment indépendants en faveur de l'abolition totale du colonialisme. C'est cette même semence qui germa en Amérique au moment où commença la lutte pour l'indépendance, et qui par la suite se propagea sur tout le continent. C'est ce même effort que déployèrent les peuples latino-américains dans les premières années de l'ONU en faveur de l'indépendance des peuples asiatiques et africains, et qu'ils reprennent maintenant pour en finir une fois pour toutes avec le colonialisme.

132. L'esprit qui régnait à notre fameux congrès américain de 1826, réuni sur l'initiative du libérateur Simón Bolívar, est aussi celui qui s'est manifesté au cours des réunions de Bandoung, d'Accra et d'Addis-Abéba, réunions qui sont si chères au cœur des pays asiatiques et africains.

