50. En avril dernier, le président Kennedy l'a réaffirmé lorsqu'il a dit au Congrès des Etats-Unis: "Notre nation est fidèle au principe de la libre détermination et elle continuera d'appuyer et de favoriser la réalisation d'une saine autonomie partout dans le monde." La même idée est exprimée dans notre propre déclaration d'indépendance, qui contient la notion révolutionnaire que les justes pouvoirs du gouvernement découlent du consentement des gouvernés. La liberté de choix a entraîné la naissance de huit nations nouvelles dans les 12 derniers mois. L'absence de cette liberté dans une grande partie du monde a eu pour résultat que les aspirations d'hommes et de femmes épris de liberté ont continué à être frustrées.

51. Je passe maintenant au rapport lui-même du Comité des Dix-Sept [A/5238]. Le volume de ce document montre que le Comité a travaillé avec diligence et assiduité sous la direction d'un bureau compétent et dévoué.

52. Je dois avouer que le Comité n'a pas abordé sa tâche selon la procédure que nous avions envisagée lorsque nous avons voté la résolution 1654 (XVI) ou lorsque nous avons accepté de faire partie du Comité. Dès le début des travaux du Comité, nous avons suggéré qu'après avoir rassemblé toute la documentation et tous les renseignements se rapportant à ses travaux, et en tirant profit en particulier de l'expérience des Etats Membres qui avaient eux-mêmes accédé à l'indépendance, le Comité devrait s'occuper surtout de trouver des solutions aux divers types de situations coloniales qui existent dans le monde et devrait élaborer des suggestions et des recommandations applicables à ces cas.

53. Dans sa majorité, le Comité a préféré examiner les divers cas un par un. Il a donc fait porter son attention presque exclusivement sur 12 territoires particuliers, tous sauf un situés en Afrique. On a rassemblé et présenté beaucoup de renseignements utiles au sujet de ces territoires. Dans certains cas, par exemple ceux du Kenya et de Zanzibar, les recommandations finales du Comité ont été réalistes et constructives. Dans d'autres cas, par exemple celui de Singapour, le Comité, après avoir entendu les pétitionnaires, a décidé avec sagesse de ne prendre aucune mesure. Dans la plupart des autres cas, toutefois, ma délégation n'a pas pu approuver entièrement la teneur des résolutions ou recommandations qui ont été adoptées. Dans certains cas, nous avons jugé que les efforts déployés par le Comité, même s'ils étaient bien intentionnés, manquaient d'esprit réaliste et n'avaient aucune chance d'être suivis d'effet.

54. Dès le début des travaux du Comité, nous avons proposé, et cette proposition avait recueilli l'accord général, que le Comité cherche à réaliser une entente unanime et qu'il évite autant que possible de procéder à des votes. Le but de cette méthode, à notre idée, était d'élargir au maximum les terrains d'entente entre les membres, afin d'assurer aux recommandations du Comité l'appui du plus grand nombre de délégations. En suivant cette méthode, le Comité a pu dans certains cas parvenir à des conclusions qu'on a correctement qualifiées de décisions du Comité, même si certains membres n'auraient pas été en mesure d'émettre un vote affirmatif si elles avaient été mises aux voix.

55. Malheureusement, dans la majorité des cas, cette méthode n'a pas été suivie. Les résolutions et recommandations du Comité ont été mises aux voix d'une manière qui soulignait et mettait en relief les divergences de vues entre les membres et affaiblissait ainsi l'autorité de ces recommandations dans l'opinion des Etats Membres auxquels elles étaient destinées.

56. C'est surtout la délégation de l'Union soviétique, à notre avis, qui est à blâmer de ce fâcheux résultat. Cette délégation s'est montrée constamment plus intéressée par le souci de mettre certains Etats Membres en mauvaise posture et de poursuivre ses propres objectifs politiques que d'aboutir à une unanimité d'opinion qui aurait pu avoir un effet plus salutaire pour la liberté et le bien des peuples des territoires intéressés.

57. Par cette attitude et par d'autres moyens, la délégation de l'Union soviétique a constamment mêlé la guerre froide aux travaux du Comité, d'une façon qui a entravé ses travaux et diminué leur utilité. En de nombreuses occasions, la délégation soviétique a lancé contre des Etats Membres des accusations violentes et excessives, dénuées de fondement et souvent sans rapport avec les travaux du Comité. Cette tactique a été appliquée aussi bien au cours des séances du Comité que pendant les conférences de presse tenues à l'occasion du voyage du Comité en Afrique. Pour ne citer qu'un seul exemple, la délégation soviétique a accusé, à un certain moment, les Etats-Unis d'avoir une base de lancement de fusées dans l'île de Zanzibar, alors que, comme les habitants du territoire le savent bien, l'installation américaine en question est une station de repérage des satellites, destinée exclusivement à coopérer au programme des Etats-Unis des vols spatiaux de cosmonautes, une station absolument ouverte, que le public est expressément et cordialement invité à visiter. Cette accusation contrastait d'une manière étrange avec les aimables félicitations adressées au président Kennedy par le président Khrouchtchev à l'occasion du succès des vols spatiaux de nos cosmonautes.

58. Parfois, aussi, le Comité a agi d'une façon que nous avons considérée comme très regrettable; dans certains cas, il n'a pas fait preuve, comme il aurait été souhaitable, du sens de ses responsabilités. Nous avons jugé comme faisant particulièrement preuve d'un manque de considération le prétendu "appel" lancé au sujet de Zanzibar, qui a été proposé et mis aux voix le même jour, le dernier jour du voyage du Comité en Afrique, sans tenir compte des demandes de plusieurs membres qui auraient voulu avoir au moins la possibilité de consulter leurs gouvernements sur ce sujet. Une autre fois, le Comité a entendu, sur la demande instante de la délégation soviétique, des pétitionnaires qui prétendaient représenter un certain grand parti d'un territoire africain mais qui ont été ensuite désavoués par les autorités responsables du parti, au nom duquel les pétitionnaires n'avaient pas été habilités à parler.

59. Nous avons exprimé des réserves, et nous les maintenons, sur la décision du Comité de se rendre en Afrique et d'y tenir des réunions dans certaines capitales. Nous avons vivement apprécié les invitations adressées par les trois gouvernements intéressés, ceux du Maroc, de l'Ethiopie et du Tanganyika, et l'hospitalité qu'ils ont offerte aux membres du Comité. Cependant, nous n'avons pas estimé que ce voyage du Comité ait constitué le meilleur emploi possible des sommes considérables qui ont été dépensées à cet effet.

60. Il semble qu'à cet égard les organes des Nations Unies ne bénéficient pas de cette sorte de jugement d'ensemble qui, dans une administration, peut être prononcé par un directeur du budget ou un ministre des finances qui décident au sujet d'un projet particulier: "Ce projet paraît très séduisant, mais, considérant les autres besoins de l'administration, nous ne pouvons pas nous permettre d'y donner suite." Ma délégation estime qu'il serait très désirable qu'une procédure de ce genre soit instituée et appliquée à l'avenir.

61. J'espère que les membres des délégations comprendront l'esprit dans lequel j'ai présenté ces observations sur les travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Si nous voulons que les Nations Unies acquièrent une efficacité croissante, nous n'avons rien à gagner à passer sous silence les insuffisances de ses organes constitutifs. Nous ne pourrions non plus remplir utilement les tâches qui nous sont confiées en cherchant à éluder des controverses ou en nous abstenant d'exprimer des critiques sincères. Malheureusement, il y a dans le monde trop d'organes dits délibérants où l'on n'entend jamais une désapprobation et où des applaudissements bruyants en faveur de la politique officielle imposée sont la seule manifestation admise de l'opinion des membres. Nous persistons à croire que le Comité spécial sur l'application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme peut jouer un rôle utile et constructif en accélérant le processus de décolonisation et en favorisant l'accession de nouvelles nations à l'indépendance dans les meilleures conditions possibles. Nous pensons que les insuffisances que nous avons constatées dans les travaux du Comité jusqu'à maintenant pourront être corrigées à l'avenir et nous espérons qu'ainsi nos critiques auront été constructives. Nous voulons espérer qu'on pourra trouver le moyen de réduire au minimum les égarements et divagations qui ont caractérisé dans le passé les tentatives faites par une certaine délégation pour faire entrer la guerre froide dans les travaux du Comité. En ce qui concerne la composition future du Comité, nous pensons que le nombre actuel des membres est à peu près le nombre maximum permettant un fonctionnement pratique. Il nous paraît naturel et souhaitable d'instituer un certain système de roulement des membres du Comité afin de combiner l'expérience et la nouveauté des conceptions. Nous sommes prêts à coopérer pleinement avec le Comité, que nous continuons à en être membre ou non.

62. Dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1], le Secrétaire général par intérim a attiré l'attention sur la multiplicité des comités qui ont été constitués pour s'occuper des questions coloniales. On pourrait fort bien réaliser d'intéressantes économies en procédant à une concentration plus poussée prenant pour cadre le Comité spécial. Du point de vue des économies budgétaires et d'une bonne organisation, nous sommes partisans d'une telle concentration. Il peut cependant y avoir des cas particuliers où l'existence de comités séparés pourrait être nécessaire et souhaitable.

63. En terminant, je dirai simplement que mon pays attend avec impatience le jour où tous les peuples du monde bénéficieront de la liberté de choix quant à leur destinée politique. Les Nations Unies ont joué un rôle important en aidant l'humanité à atteindre ce but, rôle plus important peut-être que celui qui avait été envisagé en 1945 à San Francisco, mais il est naturel qu'une organisation dynamique comme celle-ci croisse et se développe d'une façon que ses fondateurs n'avaient pas prévue. L'Organisation peut être comparée — elle agit de plus en plus en ce sens — à un puissant projecteur qui fait converger les rayons de l'opinion publique mondiale sur les régions du monde où l'on fait fi de la liberté. Ce projecteur a déjà baigné de lumière certaines régions où les problèmes qui se présentent sont difficiles et paraissent même insolubles. Il y a de nombreuses autres régions que le projecteur n'a pas encore éclairées. Dans les deux cas, une tâche considérable nous attend avant que l'homme acquière partout dans le monde la liberté et la dignité qui doivent lui appartenir de droit naturel et divin.

64. M. USHER (Côte-d'Ivoire): L'impérialisme colonial a atteint son apogée avant la première guerre mondiale. Après de vigoureuses luttes entre envahisseurs et indigènes et des guerres de frontière et de récupération, parfois meurtrières, entre envahisseurs, ceux-ci firent la paix par le Traité de Berlin de 1885 en se partageant l'Afrique. Mais si l'on se rappelle le rôle joué par les conseils de certains pays, qui ont pris la tête d'un mouvement de sédition dans les colonies pendant la guerre de 1914-1918, on ne peut se tromper en disant que les colonies n'étaient pas étrangères aux causes de la dernière guerre. Nous pouvons en tout cas affirmer avec certitude que, blessé dans son amour-propre, humilié de se voir ravir ses colonies à une époque où la grandeur nationale se mesurait à l'étendue coloniale, le Gouvernement de l'Allemagne nazie a entrepris d'affirmer sa grandeur et sa supériorité en colonisant, au nom de la même doctrine, l'Europe et les nations elles-mêmes colonialistes.

65. Grâce au ciel, ses desseins ne se réalisèrent pas parce que l'Amérique et les pays du tiers monde volèrent au secours de leurs amis et colonisateurs pour faire régner la justice et la dignité, et faire triompher la liberté à tout jamais. Rien d'étonnant alors à ce que l'opinion fût anticolonialiste après la seconde guerre mondiale. Les Américains, par idéalisme, ont enseigné cette doctrine:

"Aucune nation n'a le droit imprescriptible de gouverner des peuples sujets. Lorsqu'un pays prend en charge un peuple qu'il a assujéti, son seul mandat est de l'éduquer et de l'amener à un développement politique et moral lui permettant de s'affranchir. En outre, le maintien du colonialisme est contraire au vrai principe démocratique."

Et je suis certain que ce grand pays continue à l'heure actuelle à enseigner la même doctrine.

66. Le général de Gaulle, de son côté, en 1944, nous a appris que "la politique coloniale française consiste à mener chacun des peuples coloniaux à un développement qui lui permette de s'administrer et, plus tard, de se gouverner lui-même". Certes, la France a eu des difficultés dans ses rapports avec les colonies. Mais nous ne pensons pas qu'elles soient le fait du général de Gaulle. C'est pourquoi nous continuons à penser que le gouvernement qu'il dirige actuellement croit sincèrement à la doctrine qu'il a professée en 1944, et les preuves qu'il en a données confirment notre conviction.

67. Le Royaume-Uni, à cette époque déjà, décelait et annonçait "ce vent nouveau qui souffle sur l'Afrique". Staline était plus laconique; mais il affirmait que "les colonies étaient la cause de la seconde guerre mondiale".

68. C'est en ayant en mémoire cet acte de foi des grandes puissances et cette espérance des peuples encore subjugués que les créateurs de l'Organisation des Nations Unies se sont réunis à San Francisco. Ils ne nous ont pas déçus. Ils ont rédigé une Charte qui est un monument et qui proclame solennellement la liberté, le respect de l'homme, l'égalité de tous, la libre détermination des peuples, l'égalité et le respect mutuel des nations. Ils ont ainsi échafaudé un organe anticolonialiste — le plus parfait — et, ce faisant, ils ont édifié non seulement un atelier, mais mieux un temple de la paix, comme dirait le président Houphouët-Boigny.

69. Nous étions dans les meilleures traditions en adoptant, à la quasi-unanimité, la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)], qui constitue un hymne à la paix. Aussi ma délégation tient à féliciter le Comité des Dix-Sept pour l'œuvre importante qu'il a accomplie en nous présentant un rapport [A/5238] si complet. Nous connaissons les difficultés dans lesquelles ce comité a travaillé; nous sommes heureux que ce rapport nous ait permis, à sa simple lecture, de juger du progrès que nous avons accompli dans nos efforts pour le maintien de la paix. Ce comité doit survivre et doit poursuivre sa tâche avec une détermination farouche, car il est assuré d'être dans le sens de la vérité.

70. Les colonies qui font l'objet du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept peuvent être réparties en trois groupes: les colonies qui dépendent du Royaume-Uni: la Guyane britannique, le Kenya, Zanzibar, la Rhodésie du Nord, le Nyassaland, la Rhodésie du Sud, le Betchoualand, le Souaziland et le Bassoutoland; les colonies qui dépendent du Portugal: l'Angola, le Mozambique, la Guinée portugaise; et, enfin, les colonies qui dépendent de l'Afrique du Sud: le Sud-Ouest africain et — pourquoi ne pas le dire — l'Afrique du Sud.

71. Prenons d'abord le Kenya, le Zanzibar et la Guyane britannique. Dans ces pays, il faut constater, lorsqu'on parcourt le rapport, que l'on aperçoit à l'horizon une certaine lueur qui conduit vers ce qui est peut-être pour nous le souhait le plus vif: l'indépendance. Il nous semble également avoir noté que le Royaume-Uni a l'intention de conduire ces pays vers la souveraineté, et assez rapidement.

72. Mais l'inquiétude se fait plus grande lorsque nous abordons la situation de la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, et celle des protectorats. Si le représentant du Royaume-Uni a prononcé le mot "indépendance" à propos du Kenya et de Zanzibar, il ne l'a pas fait pour la Fédération et les protectorats; il nous a semblé avoir entendu simplement parler de leur "autonomie".

73. Il m'est apparu que les représentants de 7 940 000 Africains ont déclaré qu'ils n'approuvaient pas la Fédération, institution qui, en l'occurrence, n'a été créée que pour favoriser les intérêts de 305 500 Européens. Cette fédération constitue un carcan destiné à empêcher la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland, qui ne comprennent, l'une que 77 000 Européens, et l'autre que 9 500 Européens, d'accéder à l'indépendance. Il nous semble que, si la Fédération est maintenue, la population blanche y représentera une fraction, près d'un dixième, de la population africaine. Le terme "dixième" nous fait peur, dans certaines régions de l'Afrique où le chiffre 10 est considéré un peu comme est considéré le chiffre 13 en Europe. Il semble que ces craintes soient fondées. L'Algérie, en effet, a souffert parce qu'un dixième de sa population était constitué d'Européens blancs. La Rhodésie du Nord souffre et rencontre certaines difficultés; or, les calculs montrent également qu'un dixième de sa population est composé d'Européens. Alors nous craignons pour cette fédération qui se présentera encore avec cette fraction de sa population — un dixième — constituée d'Européens.

74. Quant à la Rhodésie du Sud, elle couve une situation explosive. La nouvelle Constitution, imposée malgré les appels des Nations Unies, risque de mettre en danger la sécurité de l'Afrique. A la Quatrième Commission [1366ème séance], nous avons entendu les explications fournies par le Premier Ministre de la Rhodésie du Sud, explications en apparence libérales, mais qui révèlent, en vérité, les réalités les plus antidémocratiques. C'est ainsi qu'il nous a appris que cette constitution a visé à abolir tout ce que les lois antérieures pouvaient contenir de discriminatoire; mais, ce faisant, il nous a expliqué que quelques-unes des lois antérieures avaient réservé certaines terres aux Africains; il s'agissait de terres inaliénables. Ces lois également ont été considérées comme des lois typiques de la discrimination. La Constitution nouvelle a aboli ces lois qui réservaient des terres aux Africains. Dorénavant, tout le monde peut, dans des conditions d'égalité de moyens économiques, concourir pour l'achat de ces terres. Lorsqu'on sait que les Africains sont de loin les plus faibles économiquement, cette disposition d'apparence démocratique constitue en vérité une mesure d'expropriation organisée.

M. Rakotomalala (Madagascar), vice-président, prend la présidence.

75. Le Premier Ministre de la Rhodésie du Sud nous a également exposé que, pour reviser cette constitution, il fallait obligatoirement obtenir l'accord des différents groupements raciaux. Or, dans cette constitution défavorable à la majorité africaine et où toute révision ne devrait être qu'une mesure de progrès en faveur des Africains, une telle disposition — et cela se voit clairement — apparaît comme un droit de veto concédé à la minorité blanche — qui a ainsi sa garantie — chaque fois que l'on tentera de reviser la Constitution dans un sens favorable aux Africains. Reste maintenant le problème clef: les lois qui transfèrent les pouvoirs, autrefois réservés à la Couronne britannique, à un Conseil constitutionnel, alors qu'il est précisé que ce dernier ne peut donner que des avis consultatifs. Lorsque, au sujet d'une loi proposée, le Conseil émet un avis défavorable, cette loi peut être votée à la majorité des deux tiers de l'Assemblée législative, ou à la majorité simple après une période de six mois à compter de la date de l'avis défavorable du Conseil constitutionnel. Si l'on rapproche cela du fait que les Européens occuperont 50 sièges à l'Assemblée législative alors que les Africains n'en disposeront que de 15 au plus, on constate que les Européens auront la majorité des deux tiers. On comprendra que ladite disposition constitue un grossier camouflage qui achève d'enlever tout espoir et toute protection à la majorité africaine. Tel est le sort dramatique réservé à 3 millions d'Africains, parce qu'ils ont accordé l'hospitalité à 225 000 Européens constituant le dixième de leur population totale.

76. Quant aux protectorats du Betchouanaland, du Bassoutoland et du Souaziland, nous ne savons pas quel sort leur est réservé. Nous savons tout juste qu'après un siècle de colonisation ils ne constituent qu'une réserve de main-d'œuvre au profit de l'Afrique du Sud, et qu'il y a même un projet qui vise à les précipiter dans l'enfer de l'Afrique du Sud, sous les regards complaisants de leur haut commissaire qui, lui, serait, dit-on, depuis des temps immémoriaux, installé dans le paradis des blancs.

77. Le Royaume-Uni ne doit pas transférer ses protectorats à l'Afrique du Sud, et cela dans l'intérêt même des blancs de l'Afrique du Sud. Ces derniers nous ont déclaré ici, par l'intermédiaire de leur ministre des affaires extérieures, qu'ils voulaient survivre tout en étant en minorité au milieu d'une majorité d'Africains qui les écrasent. Je crois que le Royaume-Uni évitera de rendre cette majorité plus écrasante encore en transférant le Bassoutoland, le Souaziland et le Betchouanaland à l'Afrique du Sud. Une seule voie est par conséquent acceptable pour ces protectorats, et c'est leur préparation à l'indépendance, et à l'indépendance immédiate.

78. Malgré les doutes et les craintes que ma délégation a émis, elle se doit, pour rester dans l'objectivité, de reconnaître l'effort fait par le Royaume-Uni, qui a participé effectivement aux travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Nous avons lu ses interventions et nous avons senti qu'il y avait là réellement une bonne foi, un effort pour participer effectivement à ces travaux.

79. Ma délégation reconnaît que le Royaume-Uni a été le premier à déclencher le mécanisme de la décolonisation, en Asie en accordant l'indépendance à l'Inde, en Afrique en accordant l'indépendance au Ghana. Mais force est bien de constater qu'il reste encore le principal pays colonisateur et qu'il se heurte à un difficile processus de décolonisation.

80. Mais nous sommes certains que l'application intégrale et loyale des principes qui nous sont communs est la seule solution susceptible de résoudre ces difficultés: application du principe de l'égalité de tous et de la libre détermination (dite autodétermination), c'est-à-dire la désintégration de la Fédération, si tel est le vœu de la majorité; consultation au suffrage universel, égalitaire et direct, dans les Rhodésies et au Nyassaland; installation de gouvernements élus par le peuple, sans aucune distinction de race, de couleur, de religion, et en repoussant avec dédain tout suffrage censitaire, qui fait de la pauvreté un vice et qui est par conséquent une aberration. Comme l'a dit le leader Kenneth Kaunda: "A chaque adulte, une voix, à chaque voix, la même valeur." Les astuces constitutionnelles visant à assurer les privilèges des minorités sont des dangers latents.

81. Mais, si, à la lecture du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept, nous apercevons quelque lueur d'espoir pour les pays encore sous domination britannique, nous pouvons à peine cacher notre crainte, dominer nos sentiments de révolte, en abordant l'examen des colonies portugaises et sud-africaines: l'Angola, le Mozambique, la Guinée portugaise, le Sud-Ouest africain et l'Afrique du Sud. Le dialogue avec ces deux pays paraît difficile parce qu'il nous semble qu'ils ne vivent pas dans le même siècle que nous.

82. Le Portugal continue à voir dans les conquêtes coloniales la marque de la grandeur des nations. Comme jadis Rome, il rêve de provinces, tente des assimilations qui peuvent être une réalité, mais une réalité inaccessible. La Rome de César n'est pas la Rome de Segni, et Virgile a pu, à juste titre, dire: "Souviens-toi, Romain, que tu as gouverné des peuples." Puisse cela n'être qu'un souvenir pour le Portugal. Puisse-t-il comprendre, avec Montherlant, que "les colonies sont faites pour être perdues" et qu'elles naissent avec la croix de mort au front".

83. Partout la conscience nationale s'éveille et partout on réclame l'indépendance. En 1940, seuls la Thaïlande et le Japon, le Libéria et l'Éthiopie bénéficiaient de la souveraineté intégrale. En 1962, la carte du monde permet de juger de la vigueur du mouvement nationaliste, de l'ampleur du succès remporté. L'ancienne forme de domination est condamnée; là où elle ne se transforme pas de bon gré, elle sera contrainte de disparaître, et le Portugal s'en apercevra.

84. Quant à l'Afrique du Sud, elle songe au bon temps de la conquête des Incas, et des hidalgos qui ont tout exterminé sur leur passage à l'époque de la règle:

"La force prime le droit; ôte-toi de là que je m'y mette."

85. Ceux-là mêmes qui ne sont pas les victimes immédiates de ces régimes anachroniques sont par instants portés à croire qu'il n'y a pas d'autre issue possible, pour les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, du Sud-Ouest africain et de l'Afrique du Sud, que la guerre ou la subversion, et que ce n'est qu'ainsi qu'ils pourront se libérer.

86. Et l'on frissonne à l'idée que certaines autorités de l'Afrique du Sud et du Portugal ont entretenu des relations avec Hitler; ce sont ceux-là mêmes qui sont les pères des lois de l'apartheid. Hitler a disparu, mais sa doctrine de gouvernement dictatorial est appliquée dans certains pays, tandis que d'autres appliquent sa doctrine raciale de génocide et d'extermination massive. C'est pourquoi nous sonnons l'alerte. Ne vous désintéressez pas de ces régions. Agissez avant qu'il ne soit trop tard.

87. L'Afrique veut la paix. Elle a besoin de la paix, la paix intérieure, la paix avec ses voisins, la paix dans le monde, comme l'ont solennellement proclamé les présidents Houphouët-Boigny et Sekou Touré au cours de la visite officielle que le président de mon pays vient d'effectuer en Guinée.

88. L'Afrique croit que les blancs ont leur place en Afrique, non plus en maîtres, mais en tant que citoyens et sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres citoyens. Aussi, retranchée dans ce dernier carré, se refuse-t-elle à désespérer de l'efficacité de la méthode de persuasion. Elle doit persuader tous ses amis. Ces amis, que l'on ne me permette de les citer, car c'est précisément parce qu'ils sont des amis que je voudrais les nommer, en disant à quel point ils sont dignes de confiance, à quel point ils peuvent être utiles à l'Afrique. Ce sont la France, le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis, la Belgique, les Pays-Bas, l'Italie, le Luxembourg, l'Autriche, la Nouvelle-Zélande, la République fédérale d'Allemagne et les membres du groupe de l'Occident, ainsi que le Vatican et le Conseil oecuménique des églises. Eux seuls peuvent influencer le Portugal, l'Espagne et l'Afrique du Sud et les amener à changer de politique.

89. Le Premier Ministre de l'Afrique du Sud, dans la déclaration qu'il a faite après l'adoption des sanctions par l'Assemblée générale [voir résolution 1761 (XVII)], a affirmé qu'en ce qui concernait son pays les importations en provenance des 15 Etats qui avaient voté contre les sanctions constituaient 68 p. 100 du total des importations, et que les exportations vers ces Etats représentaient 65 p. 100 du total des exportations. Cette déclaration est symptomatique.

90. L'Occident pourrait apprendre à ces pays que la grandeur nationale est définie par d'autres critères que l'étendue des empires coloniaux et que, d'expérience, les meilleurs liens avec les anciennes possessions coloniales sont ceux qui sont tissés sous les auspices de l'amitié, de l'égalité et des intérêts réciproques.

91. En effet, dans la lutte que se livrent l'Est et l'Ouest, l'Afrique veut demeurer à l'écart, mais elle ne peut pas s'empêcher d'être l'objet d'une compétition permanente dont l'enjeu est le choix diplomatique et moral, choix qu'elle s'efforce d'éclairer parce qu'elle a conscience que sa neutralité serait un facteur de paix. Aussi ma délégation se plaît à rappeler cette pensée, tout italienne, de Giuseppe Mazzini:

"Mieux vaut une heure de communion dans une grande pensée avec un peuple qui ressuscite, que toute une existence dans la solitude d'un trône menacé par les uns et méprisé par les autres."

92. Quant au Vatican, étant entendu que le Portugal prétend être soutenu dans sa politique coloniale par la hiérarchie catholique et que l'Afrique du Sud, dans l'article premier du South Africa Act de 1909, prétend être un pays chrétien dont la civilisation est fondée sur la Bible et sur les doctrines fondamentales du christianisme, le Vatican, dis-je, devrait profiter du Concile du Vatican II pour leur réaffirmer que Jésus est Dieu et qu'il a dit que tous les hommes étaient frères de Jésus-Christ et leur rappeler, dans le "schéma" sur la source de la révélation qui est actuellement en discussion au Concile, que l'Evangile rapporte que le Christ, interrogé sur la question de savoir quel est le premier et le plus grand des commandements qu'il faut observer pour gagner le Ciel, a dit: "Aime ton prochain comme toi-même." Et cet amour, charité par excellence, est incompatible avec la discrimination raciale. Ainsi, la hiérarchie du Portugal pourrait réapprendre la doctrine de saint Paul sur les églises de missions, et surtout l'enseignement de l'encyclique Fidei Donum du 21 avril 1957.

93. Pour conclure, ma délégation estime, à la lumière du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept, qu'il faut tenir compte, en ce qui concerne le maintien de la Fédération, de l'opinion des partis influents de la Rhodésie du Sud, de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Nyassaland. Elle est d'avis qu'il faut accorder immédiatement l'indépendance à la Rhodésie du Nord, au Nyassaland, au Kenya, à Zanzibar et à la Guyane britannique.

94. La Rhodésie du Sud, les protectorats du Patchouanaland, du Souaziland et du Bassoutoland, le Mozambique, l'Angola et l'Afrique du Sud doivent être érigés immédiatement en Etats autonomes, avec un gouvernement responsable, élu au suffrage universel, égalitaire. Dans les pays à forte minorité blanche, on pourrait envisager une assemblée économique et sociale où les différents groupements économiques et les groupes de pression économique seraient représentés. Parce que c'est une nécessité, c'est une obligation; la paix le commande.

95. Nous avons vécu la répression à Madagascar, la répression en Côte-d'Ivoire, la guerre d'Indochine, la lutte meurtrière du Maroc, le ratisage de Tunisie, la guerre d'Indonésie, la guerre de Malaisie, la guerre du Kenya, la guerre d'Algérie, la guerre d'Angola. Que de morts inutiles! Que de vies innocentes sacrifiées! Et, malgré cela, faut-il s'attendre encore à une guerre de Rhodésie, à des guérillas en Afrique du Sud et dans le Sud-Ouest africain?

96. C'est assez. Arrêtons les guerres. Et nous le pouvons si chacun de nous, chacun des chefs d'Etat, accepte la dédicace de Thomas Jefferson:

"Je ne suis pas un avocat des modifications fréquentes dans les lois et les constitutions. Mais les lois et les institutions doivent aller de pair avec le progrès de la conscience humaine. A mesure qu'elle se développe et s'éclaire, que de nouvelles découvertes sont faites, de nouvelles vérités révélées, les coutumes et les opinions changent. Avec l'évolution des circonstances, les institutions doivent progres-ser également afin de s'adapter à l'époque. Nous pourrions tout aussi bien exiger d'un homme qu'il portât encore le veston qui lui servait étant enfant, que d'une société civilisée de rester soumise à jamais au régime de ses ancêtres barbares^{2/}."

97. Le PRESIDENT: Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse; je lui donne maintenant la parole.

M. Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

98. Sir Patrik DEAN (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dans son discours de ce matin [1170^{ème} séance], le représentant de l'Irak a lancé un certain nombre d'accusations contre mon pays. Je répondrai peut-être à certaines d'entre elles plus tard dans ce débat. Il en est une cependant à laquelle je répondrai dès à présent: c'est l'allégation suivant laquelle le Koweït serait une colonie britannique. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères d'Irak, M. Jawad, avait déjà fait la même insinuation dans le discours qu'il a prononcé dans la discussion générale [1152^{ème} séance] et, à cette occasion, ma délégation avait estimé devoir répondre. Je regrette que le représentant de l'Irak persiste dans cette allégation qui est en réalité dénuée de tout fondement.

99. Le Gouvernement du Koweït fera, j'en suis sûr, les observations qu'il jugera appropriées sur cette allégation fantaisiste. Je n'ai nul besoin d'affirmer que le Koweït est un pays entièrement souverain et indépendant; le fait est évident en soi. Ma délégation a déjà rappelé aux membres de l'Assemblée que le Gouvernement du Koweït a été reconnu par plus de 75 pays, dont presque tous les Etats arabes, et qu'il est membre de la Ligue arabe.

100. M. PUDLAK (Tchécoslovaquie) [traduit du russe]: Le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, a proposé le 23 septembre 1960 [869^{ème} séance, par. 185], à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, d'étudier la question de la liquidation complète du colonialisme. A la suite de cette généreuse initiative, l'Assemblée générale a adopté le 14 décembre 1960 [947^{ème} séance], en dépit du mécontentement évident des puissances coloniales, l'historique Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. De ce fait se sont ouvertes de nouvelles perspectives aux mouvements de libération nationale dans les pays d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine. Et cela se comprend. En effet, en adoptant cette déclaration, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a pris parti pleinement et sans réserve pour les peuples coloniaux opprimés; elle a reconnu leurs aspirations à la liberté et proclamé comme irréversible et inéluctable ce processus de libération que les colonisateurs ont qualifié, pendant de nombreuses années d'"activités subversives", en traitant comme des criminels de courageux patriotes et combattants pour la liberté. Les Nations Unies ont solennellement proclamé la nécessité d'une liquidation rapide et totale du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations et ont sévèrement condamné les actes de répression des colonisateurs, ainsi que leurs diverses manœuvres en vue de maintenir sous leur domination les peuples coloniaux. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux a créé des conditions favorables à une liquidation pacifique du système colonial périmé, cela sans effusion de sang, sous réserve que les puissances coloniales se conforment, sans attermolement ni faux-fuyants, à l'appel des Nations Unies et accordent sans délai l'indépendance à tous les peuples qui souffrent encore sous le joug colonial. Il n'en a pas été ainsi et l'an dernier l'Assemblée générale, à sa seizième session, a été amenée à constater avec regret que les puissances coloniales ne mettaient pas en œuvre les dispositions de la Déclaration. Bien plus, en contradiction directe avec les termes de cette déclaration, elles continuaient à exercer des mesures brutales de répression contre les peuples coloniaux aspirant à l'indépendance. Aussi l'Assemblée générale a-t-elle créé le Comité des Dix-Sept [résolution 1654 (XVI)] qui a été chargé de veiller scrupuleusement à l'application des dispositions de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme.

101. Le rapport présenté par le Comité des Dix-Sept [A/5238] à la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies et actuellement à l'examen est un document tout à fait important, significatif et instructif. Il donne dans l'ensemble un tableau objectif aussi bien des activités du Comité des Dix-Sept que de la situation en ce qui concerne l'application ou plutôt la non-application de la Déclaration de 1960.

102. La délégation tchécoslovaque apprécie les activités du Comité des Dix-Sept; elle approuve en principe ses conclusions, ses recommandations et ses propositions. Nous estimons aussi que le Comité a eu raison d'aborder en premier lieu le problème de la liquidation du colonialisme en Afrique, tout en ne perdant pas de vue d'autres problèmes urgents tels que l'octroi de l'indépendance à la Guyane britannique.

103. Cependant, tout en jugeant d'une façon favorable le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept, nous sommes loin de pouvoir nous déclarer satisfaits de la situation regrettable pour ce qui est de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. En fait, le rapport du Comité fait clairement apparaître que les colonisateurs utilisent différents prétextes pour saboter l'application de la Déclaration de 1960, qu'ils refusent d'accorder l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux et qu'ils intensifient la terreur contre les peuples qui luttent pour la liberté et pour l'observation des droits élémentaires de l'homme. Dans tous ou presque tous les cas qu'il a examinés, le Comité a été amené à constater qu'en pratique, durant la période comprise entre la seizième et la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale, non seulement il n'avait pas été tenu compte de la Déclaration de 1960, mais qu'elle avait même été grossièrement violée. Les peuples mènent une lutte de grande envergure en Rhodésie du Sud et en Rhodésie du Nord, au Nyassaland, au Bassoutoland, au Betchouanaland, au Swaziland, à Zanzibar, en Guyane britannique, au Mozambique, au Sud-Ouest africain, au Kenya, en Angola, à Aden et à Singapour. Partout, nous voyons des peuples qui luttent pour leur indépendance, pour acquérir le droit à une vie humaine, heureuse et digne, tandis que les colonisateurs, grâce à diverses manœuvres frauduleuses et à l'emploi brutal de la violence, contrairement à la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme, s'efforcent de maintenir leur domination sur la population autochtone et de renforcer leur prédominance économique et stratégique.

104. Je voudrais me référer à certains arguments dont les colonisateurs se servent le plus fréquemment et aux méthodes et aux "trucs" les plus typiques qu'ils utilisent pour essayer de retarder l'octroi de l'indépendance aux colonies.

105. Les colonisateurs aiment à parler de leur "mission civilisatrice" dans les colonies. Mais les exécutions en masse et les effusions de sang ont fait justice de cette légende qui n'est plus bonne à figurer même dans les manuels pour écoles primaires. Les colonisateurs se contredisent d'ailleurs eux-mêmes en affirmant en même temps que les nations colonisées "ne sont pas mûres pour l'indépendance". En quoi consiste, dans ce cas, cette "mission civilisatrice" si, au long de décennies et parfois de siècles d'action "éducative", ils ne sont pas parvenus à élever les peuples colonisés jusqu'à un niveau de civilisation qui leur permette de se gouverner eux-mêmes?

106. Ces arguments des colonisateurs ne font que confirmer leur incapacité et, qui pis est, leur mauvaise volonté absolue à favoriser l'essor économique, culturel et politique de la population autochtone, puisque leur but est de prolonger leur domination sur le pays. La situation dans les colonies portugaises revêt certains aspects tragi-comiques. Alors qu'en pratique toute la population autochtone, à d'infimes exceptions près, est considérée comme "non civilisée", tous les Portugais vivant aux colonies sont censés être "civilisés", tandis qu'il est notoire qu'une notable proportion en est analphabète, mis à part le niveau moral des colonisateurs portugais qui sont bien connus pour traiter les indigènes avec une sauvage brutalité.

107. Certaines puissances coloniales tranchent le problème colonial d'une façon très simple: elles "suppriment" leurs colonies en les déclarant partie intégrante de la métropole ou en les qualifiant de "provinces d'outre-mer", de "départements africains", etc. Ce procédé naïf rappelle l'anecdote du moine roublard qui avait envie de manger du poulet un jour maigre sans commettre de péché. Il baptisa le poulet du nom de "poisson" et il le dégusta sans l'ombre d'un remords. Toutefois, les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de Porto Rico et d'autres colonies, déclarés partie intégrante du territoire de la métropole, ne se laisseront pas dévorer comme un poulet sans défense, car ils sauront faire justice de ces constructions pseudo-légales des colonisateurs, de même que le peuple algérien a su faire justice de la fiction absurde des "départements d'Afrique du Nord".

108. Une autre manœuvre, non moins trompeuse, de la part des colonisateurs consiste à accorder aux colonies "l'indépendance" en créant un gouvernement autonome composé exclusivement d'un nombre restreint de colons européens, ultra-réactionnaires, il va de soi, et d'orientation chauvine, mettant ainsi la population autochtone à la merci d'un tel gouvernement raciste. Un exemple typique de ce procédé est donné par la Rhodésie du Sud, où ce processus d'une autonomie trompeuse se poursuit, en contradiction avec les appels et résolutions réitérés des Nations Unies. Cette question a même fait l'objet d'une discussion à la présente session. Nous craignons toutefois que les résolutions adoptées ici à ce sujet ne subissent le même sort que de nombreuses autres résolutions contenant des appels des Nations Unies aux puissances coloniales.

109. Un phénomène que nous considérons particulièrement dangereux et menaçant pour la paix du monde est la militarisation systématique instaurée par les puissances coloniales dans les territoires non autonomes. Bien des données concrètes nous ont été fournies à ce sujet de vive voix par les pétitionnaires, et au cours de la présente discussion. Les colonisateurs ne se contentent pas de refuser l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples colonisés, mais ils renforcent systématiquement leurs positions militaires sur les territoires de ces peuples en y installant des polygones et des dépôts d'armements agressifs de destruction massive. Cela vaut pour les fies du Pacifique que les Etats-Unis contaminent progressivement par le rayonnement funeste né des essais nucléaires; il en est de même pour le Kenya, Aden, le Sud-Ouest africain et d'autres territoires.

110. Dans la plus grande partie des territoires non autonomes, l'agriculture est jusqu'ici la source principale de l'alimentation de la population autochtone. Cependant, les colonisateurs s'approprient systématiquement les meilleures terres arables pour les donner aux colons de race blanche et aux immigrants nouvellement recrutés, tandis que les membres des tribus locales sont transférés de force dans des régions infertiles. En Angola, par exemple, les colons européens possèdent approximativement la moitié des terres arables et de la meilleure qualité, tandis que la population autochtone, qui est 40 fois plus nombreuse, dispose d'un peu plus de la moitié de terres arables, moins fertiles du reste. Au Sud-Ouest africain, les colons de race blanche se sont approprié 86 p. 100 des terres arables, et l'exode de la population autochtone se poursuit, tandis qu'en Allemagne fédérale on recrute de nouveaux émigrants de race blanche, de sorte que les colonisateurs allemands retournent en Afrique d'où ils avaient été chassés après la première guerre mondiale.

111. Les colonisateurs refusent à la population autochtone le bénéfice des droits élémentaires de l'homme et des droits politiques. Les travailleurs des colonies sont l'objet d'une exploitation brutale, alors que les monopoles étrangers retirent de l'exploitation de ces pays des bénéfices énormes.

112. Afin de retarder le jour de la libération, les colonisateurs instaurent dans leurs colonies des constitutions et des systèmes électoraux qui assurent à une poignée de colons de race blanche tous les avantages et privilèges possibles alors que la population autochtone est soit totalement privée des droits électoraux, soit réduite à un droit limité, comme c'est le cas, par exemple, en Rhodésie du Sud, où, selon la nouvelle Constitution, sur un total de 65 membres de l'Assemblée législative, 50 représentent environ 200 000 colons européens et 15 seulement assurent la représentation d'environ 3 millions d'indigènes. Et l'on vient, du haut même de cette tribune, qualifier cela de progrès immense.

113. La méthode traditionnelle de tous les usurpateurs et dont se servent souvent les puissances coloniales consiste à appliquer le principe "diviser pour régner". L'instigation et l'exploitation des antagonismes nationaux, tribaux, religieux et autres constituent une arme puissante dans l'arsenal des colonisateurs. Mais leurs manœuvres ne se bornent pas à cela; dans certains cas, ils utilisent une procédure absolument inverse, en pratiquant une politique d'intégration des colonies dans des unités territoriales plus importantes sous forme de fédérations, afin d'arriver à une proportion des forces qui leur permette de maintenir en esclavage la population au-tochtone. Un exemple saisissant de cette politique nous est fourni par la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, qui ne représente rien d'autre qu'une fédération des colons de race blanche dirigée contre la population africaine autochtone, qui, par conséquent, refuse absolument d'y coopérer.

114. Lorsque les colonisateurs, sous la pression du mouvement de libération nationale, sont contraints de se retirer, ils s'efforcent d'effectuer une "décolonisation" qui ne modifie pratiquement en rien leur position dominante. A cet effet, ils cherchent à limiter l'indépendance des nouveaux Etats surgis des ruines des empires coloniaux désagrégés en leur imposant des accords sans aucune égalité de droits, qui leur assurent toutes sortes de privilèges, des bases militaires, etc.

115. Le concept de l'Eurafrrique, base du marché de l'Europe occidentale, est une manifestation typique du néo-colonialisme ou plutôt du colonialisme collectif. Il s'agit au fond du plan conçu par les monopoles d'Allemagne occidentale et les monopoles français pour étendre leur pouvoir sur le continent africain en intégrant les Etats africains à la Communauté économique européenne, en les maintenant naturellement en état de dépendance, en qualité d'annexe agraire des pays industrialisés d'Europe occidentale auxquels ces Etats fournissent des matières premières. Les peuples africains ont acquis suffisamment l'expérience des colonisateurs allemands et français comme aussi d'autres colonisateurs européens pour se rendre compte du danger qu'ils courent de la part de ces colonisateurs qui se dissimulent derrière la façade collective de la Communauté économique européenne.

116. Le 5 juin 1962, à Accra, à la Conférence qui réunissait les combattants pour la libération du continent africain, le Président du Ghana, M. Kwame Nkrumah, a formulé d'une manière très claire le danger que courent ces pays:

"L'impérialisme ne change pas de nature, mais seulement de forme. A des fins d'exploitation et pour maintenir sa stratégie de la guerre froide, l'impérialisme a constamment besoin d'annexes coloniales, au propre ou au figuré."

117. Le président Nkrumah a dit ensuite qu'il qui-conque a étudié plus en détail la structure du Marché commun peut facilement comprendre que:

"... l'objectif du Marché commun, en s'associant les pays africains, est de satisfaire la soif de gain du bloc impérialiste et de nous empêcher d'appliquer une politique indépendante et neutre. Il est clair également que les impérialistes et les colonisateurs ont décidé de maintenir les Etats africains dans la position de fournisseurs de matières premières à bon marché.

"Si nous ne réagissons pas contre ce danger et si nous lions notre sort à celui du Marché commun, nous condamnerons ainsi l'économie africaine à un perpétuel assujettissement à l'économie de l'Europe occidentale. Le développement économique et l'indépendance nationale ne sont pas concevables sans une possibilité illimitée de conserver pour soi une puissante capacité industrielle. Les activités du Marché commun peuvent donc avoir des conséquences politiques et économiques néfastes pour les Etats africains indépendants. Cette organisation représente une tentative de substituer à l'ancien système d'exploitation coloniale un nouveau système de colonialisme collectif qui serait beaucoup plus puissant et plus dangereux que l'ancien mal et nous cherchons à l'extirper de notre continent."

118. L'aide économique que les puissances occidentales offrent aux nouveaux Etats représente elle aussi un instrument de pénétration politique et militaire, étant donné qu'elle implique souvent des conditions d'inégalité, limitant l'indépendance de ces Etats.

119. Des agents de toute sorte sillonnent les territoires d'Afrique et d'Asie en proposant aux nouveaux Etats une aide économique apparemment avantageuse en échange de garanties pour la liberté de l'entreprise privée, de l'investissement de capitaux étrangers et surtout de l'exportation des bénéfices réalisés, sans parler des garanties directes, politiques et militaires. De cette façon, les impérialistes imposent aux Etats nouvellement constitués des accords qui les privent en fait de la liberté si péniblement acquise.

120. Il est indiscutable que tous les genres d'accords inégaux qui contiennent de telles obligations néo-colonialistes sont contraires au droit international, à la Charte des Nations Unies et à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, qui proclame clairement la nécessité absolue de liquider le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Les impérialistes n'ont pas le droit d'exiger l'exécution de telles obligations et les pays qui se sont vu imposer des accords aussi inéquitables sont pleinement en droit de s'en dégager.

121. Malgré différentes nuances dans l'argumentation, malgré des méthodes différentes et les divergences résultant de la lutte concurrentielle pour les marchés, les sources de matières premières et les sphères d'influence, nous pouvons constater une solidarité de principe entre les puissances occidentales chaque fois que le colonialisme se heurte à l'anti-colonialisme et aux mouvements de libération nationale. Dans la lutte contre les mouvements de libération nationale, certaines puissances coloniales peuvent, dans tel ou tel cas, faire preuve de plus ou moins de souplesse. Parfois même elles font risette à un tel mouvement, à condition évidemment qu'il soit dirigé contre une autre puissance coloniale et qu'on puisse espérer s'approprier les marchés du concurrent moins chanceux. Une certaine concurrence entre les puissances coloniales s'était manifestée dès les débuts du colonialisme et l'on assistait constamment à des tentatives de répartition nouvelle du butin colonial. Cependant, quand, par suite de la première et surtout de la seconde guerre mondiale, les positions des impérialistes se sont affaiblies considérablement, la lutte des peuples coloniaux pour la liberté et l'indépendance a acquis une telle intensité que la question de la liquidation totale du colonialisme est devenue d'actualité. Nous avons assisté alors, de la part des impérialistes, à des efforts désespérés pour s'opposer non seulement individuellement, mais collectivement, à la pression des mouvements de libération nationale, en se servant du potentiel militaire des pactes agressifs, en particulier de l'OTAN. Cela s'est manifesté de façon particulièrement caractéristique dans le cas de l'Algérie.

122. Si les Etats-Unis et l'OTAN n'avaient pas fourni à la France une aide de toutes sortes dans la guerre contre le peuple algérien, la lutte pour la libération de l'Algérie n'aurait pas duré sept ans et n'aurait pas exigé autant de victimes. De même pour l'Angola, où le soutien offert par les Etats-Unis et par d'autres alliés atlantiques permet au régime de Salazar d'intensifier la terreur et la répression dirigées contre la population autochtone. On peut en dire autant du Sud-Ouest africain, où les armes dites "atlantiques", autrement dit celles de l'Allemagne occidentale, de la France et de la Grande-Bretagne, ainsi que leurs avions et leurs fusées, permettent de maintenir en esclavage le peuple d'une ancienne colonie allemande, bien que 44 ans se soient écoulés depuis la première guerre mondiale et 17 depuis la seconde. Il en est de même encore pour le Katanga, attendu que l'uranium et les biens de l'Union minière présentent pour les impérialistes un intérêt beaucoup plus considérable que l'unification, la consolidation et l'indépendance du Congo.

123. On pourrait citer encore maints exemples dans différentes parties du monde. Je voudrais vous rappeler au moins le cas d'une région du continent américain, le cas de la Guyane britannique, dont le peuple courageux est victime des manœuvres hypocrites des colonisateurs britanniques qui ne tiennent pas compte de ses aspirations à la liberté et continuent à lui refuser l'indépendance tant de fois promise. Il est du reste intéressant de constater que les Etats-Unis, qui se posent en défenseurs de la liberté et de la démocratie sur le continent américain et même en champions de la lutte contre le colonialisme, admettent sans protester l'existence sur leur continent des colonies britanniques et autres. Les Etats-Unis acceptent plus volontiers l'existence d'une Guyane aux mains des colonisateurs britanniques que celle d'une Guyane indépendante dotée d'un gouvernement conforme à la volonté du peuple.

124. Nous pensons que même ceux qui sont enclins à croire à la légende de l'anticolonialisme américain devraient se demander pourquoi le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, qui sait s'assurer la soumission inconditionnelle de ses alliés atlantiques dans la poursuite d'objectifs bien moins nobles que la liquidation du colonialisme, ne peut pas les contraindre à mettre en œuvre la Déclaration des Nations Unies sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

125. La réponse est simple. Les Etats-Unis d'Amérique sont étroitement liés aux colonisateurs européens, ou, si vous préférez, les colonisateurs atlantiques, parce qu'ils sont eux-mêmes une puissance coloniale et qu'en fait ils représentent le rempart le plus solide et la cheville ouvrière de l'impérialisme et du colonialisme mondiaux. Tenant compte de l'opinion publique mondiale et de considérations de tactique à l'égard des nouveaux Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique dont l'influence à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne cesse de croître, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis est à la recherche d'un compromis quelconque entre le colonialisme et le mouvement de libération nationale. Cependant, en règle générale, ce compromis se réduit à fournir à leurs alliés atlantiques, britanniques, français, portugais et autres colonisateurs, des armes de destruction qui peuvent être utilisées pour les guerres coloniales d'extermination contre les populations autochtones, tandis que les Etats-Unis offrent aux Africains le prétendu "Peace Corps" [Les volontaires de la paix] qui s'occupe de faire de la propagande en faveur du mode de vie américain et de l'anticolonialisme américain.

126. Les arguments utilisés par les colonisateurs sont trop piteux, leurs manœuvres trop transparentes et leurs méthodes trop disoréditées pour qu'il soit nécessaire ici de les analyser et de les réfuter.

127. De toute façon, l'ère des polémiques et des discussions est révolue. A la suite de l'adoption en 1960 de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, que l'on a qualifiée ici à juste titre de Grande Charte des peuples asservis et qui de fait a mis le colonialisme hors la loi, la liquidation immédiate du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations se trouve être à l'ordre du jour. Les intérêts des peuples qui subissent encore la servitude coloniale, ainsi que l'intérêt de la paix dans le monde entier, de la coexistence pacifique et de la collaboration pacifique des peuples, exigent que la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme soit immédiatement mise en œuvre.

128. A ce propos, je voudrais m'arrêter très brièvement sur les tentatives réitérées des colonisateurs de détourner l'attention des Membres de l'Organisation de l'essence même des questions que nous discutons, en attaquant de façon provocante les pays socialistes et en accusant les délégations de ces pays d'utiliser l'examen des problèmes coloniaux pour attiser la "guerre froide", pour lancer des attaques contre les puissances coloniales, etc.

129. Bien que les représentants des puissances occidentales fassent intervenir la "guerre froide" dans la discussion des questions coloniales — l'intervention du représentant des Etats-Unis l'a confirmé aujourd'hui —, la délégation tchécoslovaque et les autres délégations des pays socialistes défendent le point de vue anti-impérialiste et anticolonialiste. Quelles que soient les manœuvres des impérialistes, elles ne sauraient contraindre la délégation tchécoslovaque, fraternellement solidaire des peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine, à ne pas dévoiler les crimes des colonisateurs et à ne pas insister sur la liquidation immédiate de cette honte du XXème siècle. Si cela ne plaît pas aux impérialistes, nous pouvons leur dire comment se libérer rapidement et facilement de la discussion de ces problèmes qui ne sont pas de leur goût.

130. Occroyez donc immédiatement, sans atermoiements ni faux-fuyants, l'indépendance aux peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine que vous maintenez jusqu'à présent sous le joug colonial, en contradiction avec la Déclaration de 1960. La discussion des problèmes coloniaux à la tribune des Nations Unies deviendra ainsi automatiquement et immédiatement sans objet. Enfin, il serait temps que l'Organisation, à laquelle se sont joints de nouveaux pays libérés du joug du colonialisme, se consacre entièrement à la solution de problèmes tels que le désarmement général et complet, y compris le problème de l'utilisation des ressources libérées par suite de l'arrêt de la course fébrile aux armements à des fins pacifiques, telles que le développement économique et culturel des peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine, affranchis de l'exploitation coloniale.

131. Il arrive parfois que, par nécessité, les impérialistes se posent en gens vertueux. Quand on les chasse des colonies, ils font comme si l'indépendance acquise par les nouveaux Etats ne résultait pas de la lutte qu'ils ont menée pour la conquérir, mais qu'elle n'est qu'un don généreux de la part des colonisateurs. En ce moment, un moyen commode leur est offert de poser, de force, en gens vertueux, c'est de se soumettre au processus inéluctable de l'histoire et d'accepter de mettre en œuvre la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme. S'ils ne le font pas et s'ils ne quittent pas les colonies de plein gré et en temps voulu, qu'ils le sachent bien, ils en seront chassés, comme ils ont été chassés d'Algérie. Aujourd'hui, ils peuvent encore partir avec leurs valises; demain, ils devront fuir sans elles si, du reste, ils réussissent à fuir, car la patience des peuples a des limites et le déclin du colonialisme est inévitable.

132. En ce qui concerne la République socialiste tchécoslovaque, les peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine savent bien que toute notre sympathie leur est acquise, que nous sommes en faveur des mouvements de libération nationale et des hommes courageux qui combattent contre le colonialisme et l'impérialisme.

133. Le peuple et le gouvernement tchécoslovaques entendent approfondir constamment leur amitié avec les pays d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine. Nous continuerons à accorder à ces pays, dans la mesure de nos moyens, une aide et un appui désintéressés. Ainsi que l'a dit au mois de juin 1962 le Président de la République socialiste tchécoslovaque, M. Antonín Novotný:

"La République socialiste tchécoslovaque est entièrement et en toutes circonstances aux côtés des peuples qui luttent pour se libérer de l'esclavage colonial et de ceux qui, déjà libérés, commencent à édifier leur vie propre. Nous saluons tous ces peuples qui vivent libres aujourd'hui et décident de leurs propres affaires. Nous leur souhaitons d'aller de l'avant vers leur avenir aux côtés de tous les peuples qui marchent vers le progrès et vers la paix."

134. La délégation tchécoslovaque estime que, cette année, l'Assemblée générale doit prendre des mesures énergiques afin d'assurer le plus rapidement possible la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

135. L'Assemblée doit adopter une résolution qui prive les colonisateurs de la possibilité d'avoir recours à de nouveaux attermoiements et de continuer à retarder la décolonisation. C'est dans cet ordre d'idées que nous appuyons pleinement la proposition faite le 9 octobre de cette année, au cours de la discussion générale [1148^{ème} séance], par M. Sekou Touré, président de la République de Guinée, et reprise récemment par la délégation de la Guinée [1169^{ème} séance]. Dans cette proposition, il est suggéré que l'Assemblée générale fixe une date limite définitive pour la liquidation du colonialisme. Il y est suggéré également qu'à la date du 24 octobre 1963, qui marquera le dix-huitième anniversaire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, soit proclamée la liquidation totale et définitive du colonialisme et qu'il soit ainsi mis fin à jamais à ce triste et honteux chapitre de l'histoire de l'humanité, ce qui permettra d'aborder un nouveau chapitre, celui de la collaboration pacifique de tous les pays et de tous les peuples libérés de l'exploitation coloniale.

136. La liquidation du colonialisme aurait pour effet d'éliminer de multiples foyers de tension militaire, de faciliter et d'accélérer grandement les pourparlers sur la réalisation d'un désarmement général et complet et de conjurer le danger d'une guerre nucléaire, en ouvrant devant les peuples les perspectives d'une évolution économique et culturelle sans précédent.

137. C'est pourquoi la délégation de la République socialiste tchécoslovaque entend appuyer toutes les propositions visant à atteindre ces nobles objectifs, qui seront présentées à l'Assemblée générale vers la fin de la discussion générale et lors de l'examen des questions concrètes par les commissions compétentes.

138. M. GREN (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: L'Assemblée générale, à sa dix-septième session, a abordé l'examen de la question qui est l'une des plus importantes de son ordre du jour: "La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux".

139. Pour cette question, nous sommes saisis du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238], créé en vertu d'une décision prise par l'Assemblée générale à sa seizième session [résolution 1654 (XVI)]. La seizième session a confié au Comité la tâche importante de contribuer à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration en invitant le Comité à examiner la question et à présenter ses considérations et ses recommandations à l'Assemblée générale au cours de sa dix-septième session.

140. Le Comité spécial, au cours de ses travaux qui se sont poursuivis du 20 février au 19 septembre 1962, a examiné à la lumière des exigences formulées dans la Déclaration la situation dans 12 colonies: Rhodésie du Sud, Rhodésie du Nord, Nyassaland, Souaziland, Bassoutoland, Betchouanaland, Zanzibar, Mozambique, Sud-Ouest africain, Kenya, Angola et Guyane britannique. Au sujet de tous ces territoires, le Comité a présenté des recommandations qui doivent être examinées au cours de la présente session.

141. De l'avis de la délégation de l'Union soviétique, le Comité a eu raison d'accorder la priorité à l'examen de la situation dans les colonies du continent africain, attendu qu'en Afrique le colonialisme maintient encore quelques-unes de ses positions et que ses récidives mettent sérieusement en danger la paix et la sécurité des peuples.

142. Il faut reconnaître que le Comité spécial a accompli un travail considérable et que sa création à la seizième session de l'Assemblée générale était opportune et bien indiquée.

143. Les recommandations élaborées par le Comité tiennent compte des particularités concrètes de chaque territoire et suggèrent les mesures à prendre afin de faire octroyer l'indépendance aux territoires en question.

144. Après avoir entendu de nombreux pétitionnaires et avoir tenu des séances en Afrique, le Comité spécial a attiré l'attention de l'opinion publique mondiale sur la situation de fait dans ces territoires et il a ainsi contribué à consolider les forces qui militent en faveur d'une mise en œuvre sans délai de la Déclaration des Nations Unies sur la liquidation du système colonial.

145. La délégation de l'Union soviétique estime que, dans l'examen de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration, nous devons à cette session concentrer notre attention sur la recherche des moyens les plus rapides et les plus efficaces de liquider le système colonial, ainsi que l'exige la Déclaration, et aussi sur la mise en évidence des causes qui empêchent cette liquidation. Dans ce sens, le rapport du Comité et ses recommandations facilitent notre tâche à maints points de vue.

146. Au cours de la discussion générale à la présente session, presque toutes les délégations ont fait état de la Déclaration, mais avec deux attitudes différentes. L'immense majorité des orateurs, constatant avec inquiétude que la Déclaration n'avait jusqu'à présent pas été mise pleinement en œuvre, ont formulé à l'adresse des Nations Unies une demande juste et légitime visant à faire prendre de nouvelles mesures radicales pour faire respecter la décision prise à la quinzième session au sujet de la liquidation du système colonial.

147. A ces exigences s'oppose un autre point de vue, défendu en premier lieu et surtout par les représentants des puissances coloniales qui, sous une forme ou sous une autre, ouvertement ou de façon déguisée, ont pris la défense de leur propre politique, visant à maintenir le système colonial.

148. Tels ont été à ce sujet les deux courants d'opinion qui se sont déjà fait jour au cours de la discussion générale. Mais il ne fait aucun doute que le premier courant d'opinion l'emportera sur le second.

149. En défendant leur droit légitime à une existence indépendante, dès la première année qui a suivi l'adoption de la Déclaration, les peuples du Tanganyika, du Sierra Leone, du Samoa-Occidental et du Cameroun britannique ont échappé à l'esclavage colonial.

150. La deuxième année d'application de cette charte de libération des peuples coloniaux a été marquée par la victoire historique de l'Algérie. Le peuple héroïque d'Algérie a apporté une contribution inestimable au mouvement de libération nationale. La victoire remportée par les valeureux fils et filles de l'Algérie inspire tous les peuples qui subissent encore le joug colonial pour une lutte sans merci contre les dominateurs étrangers.

151. Le Rwanda et le Burundi, derniers débris de l'empire colonial belge, ont acquis l'indépendance, ainsi que les peuples de la Jamaïque et de la Trinité et Tobago. Nous avons accueilli récemment un autre nouveau Membre de l'Organisation, l'Ouganda, autre Etat africain.

152. Nous voyons dans cette salle des représentants de nouveaux Etats, qui siègent ici sur un pied d'égalité, en qualité de Membres de l'Organisation, et participent aux discussions et à la solution de problèmes internationaux d'actualité.

153. La délégation soviétique, au nom des peuples et du gouvernement de l'Union soviétique, est heureuse de féliciter les nouveaux jeunes Etats indépendants et de leur souhaiter la bienvenue, et c'est de tout cœur qu'elle leur souhaite le succès dans leur essor national.

154. On ne peut non plus manquer de reconnaître la contribution efficace apportée par la Déclaration à l'accélération du processus de libération, par des peuples indépendants, de leurs frères et sœurs de race qui subissent encore le joug colonial dans les territoires annexés par les colonisateurs.

155. Un grand succès dans cette juste cause a été réalisé par le peuple de l'Inde qui, à la suite d'une action résolue, a libéré des colonisateurs portugais les territoires de son patrimoine national de Goa, Daman et Diou.

156. L'héroïque peuple indonésien a obtenu une victoire importante, après une lutte opiniâtre, pour la juste cause de la libération de l'Irian occidental de la domination coloniale.

157. Tous ces faits nous démontrent une fois encore que le régime colonial est condamné et que sa disparition finale est décidée. En prenant la parole à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale pour demander l'adoption de la Déclaration, le chef du Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, faisait remarquer:

"En fait, tout ce qu'il s'agit de savoir maintenant, c'est si l'enterrement du régime colonial se fera dans le calme ou s'il s'accompagnera des dangereuses aventures que pourront entreprendre les tenants du colonialisme acculés aux mesures extrêmes." [869ème séance, par. 177.]

158. Il ajoutait encore qu'il était impossible de prolonger l'existence du régime colonial condamné, soit par des complots, soit même par la force des armes.

159. Le chef du Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique a adressé alors un appel aux pays occidentaux en les invitant à coordonner les mesures tendant à la liquidation du régime colonial de gouvernement, à accélérer de cette façon ce processus historique régulier et à faire tout pour permettre aux peuples des pays coloniaux d'accéder à un statut d'égalité et de décider eux-mêmes de leur sort.

160. Une analyse des événements des deux dernières années nous oblige à constater que les pays occidentaux n'ont pas répondu à de tels appels.

161. Les résultats acquis au cours des deux dernières années en matière de libération des peuples coloniaux ne témoignent nullement que les puissances coloniales aient appliqué de bonne foi la Déclaration.

162. Les faits démontrent de façon irréfutable que les puissances coloniales poursuivent leurs efforts pour faire échouer la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration et que les peuples coloniaux conquièrent de haute et pénible lutte la liberté et l'indépendance. Jusqu'à présent, 50 millions environ d'êtres humains végètent encore sous le joug colonial.

163. A sa session précédente, l'Assemblée générale, dans sa résolution 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, a attiré l'attention des puissances coloniales sur le retard inadmissible apporté à l'application de la Déclaration, qui crée dans de nombreuses régions du monde une situation de plus en plus dangereuse qui peut constituer une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales. A la présente session, force nous est de nous occuper de nouveau de cette question.

164. La situation qui prévaut dans les colonies portugaises est universellement connue. Les crimes que continuent à perpétrer les colonisateurs portugais ne le cèdent en rien aux forfaits des nazis.

165. Les Nations Unies ne peuvent pas et ne doivent plus se contenter de chercher en vain à persuader le Portugal, qui bafoue ouvertement les principes fondamentaux et les plus importantes décisions des Nations Unies et se met ainsi de lui-même hors de l'Organisation.

166. La délégation soviétique estime que le moment est depuis longtemps venu de prendre les mesures les plus sévères contre un autre gouvernement qui enfreint de façon préméditée les décisions de l'Assemblée générale: le Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine.

167. Faisant complètement fi des exigences de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, le Gouvernement sud-africain cherche à perpétuer par la terreur et la violence le régime colonial dans le Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain qu'il a annexé. L'Assemblée devrait se rendre compte qu'il s'agit de l'existence même de la population autochtone du Sud-Ouest africain et que seules des mesures radicales et rapides peuvent en prévenir l'anéantissement définitif.

168. L'attitude du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni envers la Déclaration mérite une sévère réprobation. La Grande-Bretagne en effet demeure la plus grande puissance coloniale, avec 36 possessions coloniales, dont la population se chiffre à 28 millions d'âmes environ.

169. La Grande-Bretagne, qui, à la différence d'autres puissances coloniales, a compris que la fin du colonialisme est inévitable, recourt maintenant à toutes sortes de manœuvres qui lui permettraient de conserver sa position dans ses possessions.

170. Ces manœuvres ressortent clairement de la documentation du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept. En patronnant le régime antidémocratique des racistes de la Rhodésie du Sud qui exercent leur domination sur toute la population autochtone, le Royaume-Uni mène en même temps en Guyane britannique une politique d'ébranlement du gouvernement élu par la majorité de la population, afin de le remplacer par ses créatures.

171. Le Royaume-Uni cherche aussi à éluder les exigences sans équivoque de la Déclaration sur l'octroi aux peuples du droit à déterminer eux-mêmes leur statut politique en s'efforçant d'inclure de force, avant l'octroi de l'indépendance, certaines possessions coloniales dans des unions telles que la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, la Fédération des Indes occidentales, la Fédération de Malaisie et la Fédération des principautés de l'Arabie du Sud. Qu'on ne s'y méprenne point: nous ne nous opposons pas aux fédérations en général. Cependant, les fédérations ou autres unions ne peuvent être constituées que par des peuples libres, après leur libération du joug colonial, sur la base de la volonté et du désir du peuple librement exprimés. Seule une telle solution du problème des fédérations correspond à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

173. Il ne faut pas oublier non plus que la France garde sous sa domination 10 possessions coloniales, peuplées d'environ 1 300 000 habitants.

174. La Déclaration des Nations Unies est totalement méconnue par le gouvernement franquiste d'Espagne. Depuis que la Déclaration a été proclamée, parmi les cinq possessions coloniales espagnoles, peuplées de 1 250 000 habitants au total, aucune n'a obtenu l'indépendance. Le Gouvernement espagnol étend à ses colonies le régime fasciste et réprime brutalement le mouvement pour la réunion à la mère patrie de la population autochtone des territoires annexés au détriment du Maroc.

175. En examinant le problème de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration, on ne saurait manquer d'évoquer la position des Etats-Unis, en tant que puissance dirigeante parmi les pays occidentaux. Il faut bien dire nettement qu'il dépend de la position des Etats-Unis que la Déclaration soit mise en œuvre rapidement et sans qu'il en résulte des heurts qui ont des répercussions sur le destin de nombreuses nations, et aussi sur la cause de la paix dans certaines régions et même dans le monde entier. Nous devons malheureusement constater que les Etats-Unis donnent leur appui sous des formes diverses aux principales puissances coloniales comme le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud, le Royaume-Uni, l'Espagne, etc. Les Etats-Unis ont refusé, par exemple, que des mesures radicales soient prises contre les racistes sud-africains, comme l'a bien fait ressortir, à la Commission politique spéciale, le débat sur la politique de l'apartheid, appliquée par le Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine. Les Etats-Unis ont voté contre la résolution qui reflétait, on le sait, le point de vue de tous ceux qui luttent pour une juste solution du problème.

176. Les Etats-Unis ont adopté la même position, qui se résume en un appui offert aux puissances coloniales dans leur lutte contre les peuples asservis, au cours des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. La délégation des Etats-Unis a voté contre les résolutions du Comité des Dix-Sept relatives à la Rhodésie du Nord, au Betchoualand, au Basoutoland, au Scuziland, au Mozambique et à l'Angola, résolutions qui avaient pour but d'aider à appliquer à ces territoires la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance. La délégation des Etats-Unis a protesté également contre l'audition par le Comité de pétitionnaires et s'est opposée au voyage du Comité en Afrique.

177. Il convient de constater également que les Etats-Unis ne se conforment pas aux dispositions de la Déclaration à l'égard de leurs possessions coloniales, comme les Iles du Pacifique, Porto Rico et les Samoa américaines, et qu'ils cherchent plutôt à y renforcer leur domination.

178. Voici, par exemple, ce que dit à ce sujet le général de brigade en retraite des Etats-Unis Hugh B. Hester, dans un article intitulé "Les multiples formes du colonialisme", paru dans le New World Review de mars 1962. Parlant des territoires du Pacifique administrés par les Etats-Unis, il écrit:

"Saipan, les Iles Marshall, Mariannes et Carolines sont formellement sous la tutelle du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis... En pratique, les choses se passent comme si ces Iles étaient la propriété des Etats-Unis et se trouvaient sous le contrôle de leur gouvernement, sans aucune surveillance extérieure, exactement comme dans le cas des colonies d'autres puissances coloniales. Le cas des Iles Ryû-Kyû, qui comprennent l'Ile d'Okinawa, est encore plus inquiétant... Ces Iles sont elles aussi actuellement contrôlées, possédées et administrées en tant que colonies des Etats-Unis."

179. De fait, l'île d'Okinawa, administrée comme colonie par les Etats-Unis, a été transformée en base militaire; en de nombreux endroits y ont été installées des fusées munies d'ogives nucléaires. Il est caractéristique qu'au moment où les îles Saipan et Tinian ont été reprises en 1947 au Japon et placées sous mandat des Etats-Unis la délégation des Etats-Unis a déclaré à la commission compétente des Nations Unies que le Japon s'était vu retirer le mandat sur ces îles pour la seule raison qu'il y avait installé des bases militaires et constituait ainsi un danger pour les autres pays. Ayant oublié ces déclarations de l'époque, les Etats-Unis font maintenant ce qu'ils reprochaient autrefois au Japon.

180. Le statut colonial de Porto Rico est toujours maintenu. Le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis a décidé de faire procéder sur l'île à ce qu'il appelle un "plébiscite" pour savoir si les Porto-Ricains désirent obtenir l'indépendance. On peut se demander de quel genre de plébiscite, de quelle libre expression de sa volonté il pourra s'agir pour la population de Porto Rico, alors que l'île sert de base militaire aux Etats-Unis et que le plébiscite sera organisé par l'administration coloniale américaine, sous la menace des baïonnettes des "marines" américains.

181. Ainsi que l'a déclaré le secrétaire exécutif du parti porto-ricain "Action porto-ricaine unifiée", Juan Carretjer, un tel plébiscite "ne constitue pas un moyen juridique de libération de la colonie, mais un instrument d'annexion". Prenons maintenant pour exemple l'attitude des Etats-Unis à l'égard des Samoa américaines. Lorsque les îles du Samoa-Occidental ont reçu l'indépendance l'an dernier, on aurait pu penser que les Etats-Unis saisiraient cette occasion pour accorder l'indépendance aux Samoa américaines. Il n'en fut rien. L'Assemblée doit se souvenir des expédients auxquels ont eu recours les représentants des Etats-Unis pour éluder une telle décision.

182. Dans l'article cité plus haut du général américain Hester, l'auteur, en évoquant d'autres formes du colonialisme, fait remarquer que le contrôle économique s'avère souvent comme étant plus efficace et plus avantageux que l'occupation effective. Voici ce qu'il écrit: "C'est dans la pratique de ce genre de colonialisme que "l'élite au pouvoir" aux Etats-Unis a fait preuve de sa plus grande maîtrise. En ce sens, les Etats-Unis sont actuellement la plus grande puissance coloniale ..."

183. La raison principale qui incite les puissances coloniales à s'opposer à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, c'est le souci de permettre aux multiples monopoles installés dans les pays sous domination coloniale de conserver leurs positions économiques. L'exploitation par rapine des ressources naturelles et de la population autochtone des pays colonisés enrichit de nombreux monopoles américains, anglais, français, ouest-allemands et autres. Les intérêts économiques de ces monopoles sont défendus avant tout par les dirigeants politiques des puissances coloniales.

184. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a disposé de nombreux documents contenant des preuves incontestables du fait que la politique des puissances occidentales à l'égard des territoires coloniaux de l'Afrique centrale et australe est déterminée par les intérêts d'une centaine des plus importantes compagnies qui, à la façon de la pieuvre, sucent les richesses naturelles de ces pays et pompent ainsi vers leurs coffres-forts des centaines de millions de dollars.

185. Cette région du continent africain, la plus développée au point de vue industriel, est rattachée à la sphère d'activité des monopoles internationaux qui constituent ce qu'on appelle "l'empire sud-africain". Dans cette région d'Afrique, le rôle prédominant appartient à des compagnies: la Rhodesia Selection Trust, l'Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa que dirige Oppenheimer, le roi sans couronne de l'Afrique du Sud, la British South Africa Company qui possède des droits pour l'exploitation des ressources minières au Nyassaland couvrant une superficie de 42 000 kilomètres carrés et des plantations en Rhodesie du Sud d'une superficie de 53 600 hectares, la Mozambique Gulf Oil Company qui appartient au groupe Mellon et d'autres compagnies encore.

186. Ainsi, par exemple, en Angola, la compagnie anglo-portugaise Angola Diamond Company a une concession sur les neuf dixièmes du territoire. Le chemin de fer de Benguela, en Angola, qui relie le Katanga aux ports de l'Atlantique, est pour 90 p. 100 la propriété de la compagnie Tanganyika Concessions, dont les Rockefeller disposent d'un paquet d'actions qui leur en assure le contrôle. A ces compagnies puissantes s'est joint récemment le consortium Krupp d'Allemagne occidentale qui a obtenu du Gouvernement portugais un contrat pour l'extraction du minerai de fer en Angola.

187. La Standard Oil Company des Rockefeller domine l'industrie en Guinée portugaise. Au Mozambique, la Mozambique Gulf Oil Company du groupe Mellon, déjà mentionnée, a obtenu une concession pour la prospection du charbon et du pétrole sur un territoire de 120 000 kilomètres carrés, ce qui représente 15 p. 100 de tout le territoire de la colonie. Là encore, sur les 14 sociétés pour la culture du sisal, trois sont britanniques et cinq ouest-allemandes. La Compagnie sucrière du Mozambique est aussi propriété anglaise. Quant à la société belge par actions Société minière et géologique du Zambezi, elle possède 60 p. 100 des actions de l'industrie charbonnière du Mozambique.

188. Au Sud-Ouest africain, l'exploitation des mines et l'exportation des minerais sont entre les mains de compagnies britanniques, telles que la Consolidated Mines of South West Africa et d'autres sociétés. Six des principales mines de cuivre de la Rhodesie du Nord appartiennent à deux compagnies, où dominent les capitaux américains.

189. Le Premier Ministre de la Guyane britannique, M. Jagan, a cité au Comité des Dix-Sept des faits stupéfiants qui témoignent des moyens utilisés par la Puissance administrante pour protéger les intérêts des capitaux étrangers. Il apparaît que les bénéfices des compagnies étrangères qui disposent des secteurs principaux de l'économie du pays ne sont pas contrôlés par le Gouvernement de la Guyane britannique, mais par la commission fiscale de la Puissance administrante, de sorte que le Gouvernement de la Guyane britannique, qui est responsable de l'essor économique du pays, ne dispose d'aucun droit de regard sur les bénéfices réalisés par les compagnies étrangères et sur les capitaux qu'elles exportent à l'étranger. De nombreuses compagnies, avec l'assentiment de la Puissance administrante, sont en général exemptées de tous impôts. Parmi ces compagnies se trouvent de nombreuses compagnies américaines et anglaises de production de l'aluminium, d'extraction de la bauxite, de l'industrie sucrière, etc. Cette liste des monopoles étrangers qui pillent les peuples sous domination coloniale est loin d'être complète.

190. Les faits démontrent que les mouvements de libération nationale des peuples des pays coloniaux se heurtent à l'opposition d'un rassemblement international puissant des gros monopoles liés d'une façon organique aux appareils administratifs des puissances coloniales et qui exercent une influence décisive sur leur politique. Il est intéressant à cet égard de citer les révélations significatives de Jord Robins, un des dirigeants de la British South Africa, à la 64^{ème} assemblée annuelle de cette compagnie:

"Je suis heureux de vous faire savoir que je suis en possession d'une assurance écrite formelle du Secrétaire d'Etat pour les affaires coloniales, d'après laquelle, dans la nouvelle constitution prévue pour la Rhodésie du Nord, le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté conserve des pouvoirs suffisants pour empêcher toute violation de l'accord de 1950 de la part du Gouvernement de la Rhodésie du Nord."

191. Cette déclaration met en lumière l'essence véritable de la politique des puissances coloniales à l'égard des colonies. Au nom des intérêts avides des monopoles, on refuse aux peuples coloniaux le droit légalement admis à l'indépendance, on cherche à perpétuer le retard économique et culturel des peuples dépendants et l'on réprime brutalement toute action en vue de l'indépendance.

192. Le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238] note avec inquiétude que les puissances coloniales procèdent à des préparatifs militaires intensifs destinés à réprimer par la force des armes les mouvements de libération nationale des peuples coloniaux. Tel est le cas en premier lieu pour l'Angola, la Rhodésie du Sud, le Sud-Ouest africain et le Mozambique. C'est ainsi que le Portugal a renforcé l'an dernier ses garnisons au Mozambique par de nouvelles unités comprenant au total 50 000 hommes. Les nouvelles unités comprennent en grande partie des parachutistes et des détachements de débarquement et de diversion. Dans la région du Mozambique qui avoisine le Tanganyika et le Nyassaland, on vient de construire 15 nouveaux aérodromes militaires. De plus, on a organisé un "corps de volontaires de défense civile, composé de colons de race blanche". Dans toutes les plantations importantes du nord du pays, des stocks d'armes et d'équipement militaire ont été constitués. Tenant compte de ces faits inquiétants, le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept note dans sa résolution [ibid., par. 109] que la politique du Portugal à l'égard du Mozambique "constitue un défi à l'Organisation des Nations Unies et à l'opinion publique mondiale et une menace grave à la paix et à la sécurité en Afrique". Le Comité réprime vivement les mesures de répression dirigées contre le peuple du Mozambique et demande qu'il y soit mis un terme sur-le-champ.

193. Cela étant, l'Assemblée générale devrait attacher une attention spéciale au danger créé par les livraisons aux puissances coloniales d'armes provenant des pays occidentaux pour réprimer les mouvements de libération nationale des peuples coloniaux. La partie du rapport du Comité spécial consacrée aux territoires sous administration du Portugal spécifie que la plus grande partie de l'équipement militaire et autres fournitures dont dispose le Portugal provient des pays membres de l'OTAN. Le Comité arrive à la conclusion que, tant que les armes se trouveront aux mains des Portugais, elles seront utilisées contre les mouvements de libération nationale en Afrique, en dépit des assurances de toutes sortes que le Portugal pourrait donner. Il est évident, d'après le Comité, qu'une aide militaire de ce genre fournie au Portugal constitue une aide à la répression de mouvements de libération dans les territoires sous administration du Portugal.

194. L'Organisation des Nations Unies peut-elle continuer à prendre son parti de ce que l'OTAN joue un rôle aussi néfaste en ce qui concerne la répression des mouvements de libération nationale en Afrique, la lutte des peuples coloniaux pour leur indépendance et les aspirations des jeunes Etats africains qui veulent affermir leur indépendance et assurer la paix?

195. Si l'on parle sérieusement de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, il est indispensable d'arrêter immédiatement l'aide militaire de l'OTAN aux colonisateurs en Afrique et de mettre l'embargo sur la vente et la fourniture d'armes dans les colonies africaines et autres. C'est là une des conclusions auxquelles est arrivé le Comité spécial au sujet des territoires sous administration du Portugal. Des recommandations analogues sont contenues dans plusieurs résolutions soumises par le Comité spécial. La délégation soviétique considère que ces recommandations devraient être énergiquement appuyées par l'Assemblée générale.

196. Il est indispensable également de tenir compte des exigences présentées de plus en plus énergiquement par les pays africains au sujet des bases militaires et des troupes étrangères stationnées en territoire africain. Cette question est en relation directe avec la liquidation définitive du système colonial. Les peuples coloniaux considèrent la liquidation des bases militaires et le retrait des troupes étrangères stationnées sur leur territoire comme une des principales conditions pour leur conquête d'une véritable indépendance.

197. L'OTAN dispose en Afrique de 17 bases de l'armée aérienne et de 7 bases de l'armée navale. Le nombre des formations militaires stationnées sur ces bases et leur puissance de feu dépasse tout ce que possédaient en Afrique les puissances coloniales au temps de leur domination sans réserve de ce continent. Ces bases sont là pour s'opposer à l'indépendance des Etats africains et des peuples coloniaux.

198. Les représentants de la population autochtone du Kenya qui ont pris la parole devant le Comité des Dix-Sept ont déclaré carrément que les bases militaires britanniques situées sur le territoire du Kenya constituent une menace sérieuse pour le pays, qu'elles sont un obstacle non seulement à la conquête de l'indépendance du Kenya, mais aussi à la collaboration avec d'autres Etats africains. Ils ont exprimé leur grande inquiétude du fait que le Royaume-Uni dispose d'armes nucléaires sur ces bases et ils ont demandé au Comité d'insister auprès du Royaume-Uni pour la liquidation des bases militaires au Kenya. Au cours des événements survenus au Kenya de 1952 à 1960, les troupes terrestres et aériennes de ces bases ont été lancées contre les Africains. Ces forces armées sont toujours prêtes à être utilisées contre la libération du peuple du Kenya.

199. Toutefois, les pays de l'OTAN continuent de faire fi des exigences légitimes des peuples d'Afrique et d'encercler l'Afrique de bases militaires. L'Allemagne occidentale se mêle aussi à cette affaire. Selon les journaux anglais, le Gouvernement portugais a conclu avec la République fédérale d'Allemagne, dans le cadre de l'OTAN, un accord aux termes duquel la République fédérale d'Allemagne disposera de bases aériennes sur le territoire du Portugal.

200. Un rôle particulièrement actif à cet égard est joué par les Etats-Unis qui ont créé et s'efforcent d'étendre le réseau de leurs bases militaires dans diverses régions d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine. Alors qu'en 1943 les forces armées des Etats-Unis étaient stationnées sur les territoires de 39 Etats, le nombre de ces Etats est passé à 49 en 1953 et à 79 en 1960.

202. La politique des puissances occidentales à l'égard des colonies apparaît particulièrement piteuse au Congo. Les puissances coloniales, après avoir déclenché une agression contre la République du Congo, ne cessent de s'ingérer dans les affaires intérieures du pays, dans l'intérêt des gros monopoles anglais, belges, américains et français qui s'y sont implantés. Les puissances occidentales font tout leur possible pour que ne cesse pas le battage autour du Congo, car cela leur permet de mener des intrigues et de se partager les richesses du Congo. Le rapport^{4/} que vient de publier récemment le chef de l'Opération des Nations Unies au Congo fournit un riche matériel de faits sur la façon dont les puissances occidentales continuent à faire les maîtres au Congo. Le rapport démontre que le chiffre des mercenaires dans l'armée de Tshombé ne cesse d'augmenter et que tous proviennent de Belgique et d'autres pays occidentaux. En fait, Tshombé reçoit sans cesse, de façon directe ou camouflée, de la Belgique, du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis, de la France et de la République fédérale d'Allemagne des avions, des armes et de l'équipement. Les ambassadeurs et d'autres représentants des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni et de la Belgique continuent à mener dans les coulisses des pourparlers avec Tshombé, ce qui, en définitive, renforce son régime séparatiste et perpétue la division du Congo.

203. Il est évident aussi que les puissances occidentales utilisent à ces fins l'appareil de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de sorte que les représentants de l'administration et le Haut Commandement des forces armées des Nations Unies patronnent de fait le régime Tshombé en lui donnant la possibilité de renforcer sa position. L'activité séparatiste de Tshombé représente un sérieux danger non seulement pour l'intégrité territoriale et pour l'indépendance de la République du Congo, mais également pour les pays limitrophes, en premier lieu l'Angola, la Rhodésie du Nord, la Rhodésie du Sud et le Nyassaland, qui mènent en ce moment une pénible lutte pour se libérer du joug colonial.

204. Les Etats-Unis qui ont voté en novembre 1961 en faveur de la décision du Conseil de sécurité de liquider le mouvement séparatiste du Katanga, dans l'intérêt de leur entente avec leurs alliés, avant tout le Royaume-Uni, la Belgique et la France, se sont ensuite opposés en fait à l'application de cette décision et ils s'efforcent en ce moment de s'entendre avec les séparatistes, à l'insu du peuple congolais et au détriment de ses intérêts vitaux et au préjudice de l'unité et de l'indépendance de la République du Congo.

205. De l'avis de la délégation soviétique, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit prendre des mesures énergiques pour mettre fin à l'ingérence des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la Belgique et de la France dans les affaires intérieures de la République du Congo et pour faire appliquer les résolutions du Conseil de sécurité sur l'expulsion des mercenaires étrangers du Katanga et la subordination du Katanga au gouvernement central du Congo.

206. Ainsi qu'en témoignent les faits, les Etats-Unis, le Royaume-Uni, le Portugal, la République sud-africaine, la France et d'autres puissances coloniales sabotent la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration. On en trouve une confirmation dans le rapport que nous a présenté le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

207. En dépit des difficultés et obstacles qu'ont dressés devant lui les puissances coloniales, le Comité spécial, à en juger par son rapport, a effectué un travail considérable et utile.

208. Pour ce qui concerne les recommandations concrètes présentées par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, la délégation soviétique estime que les recommandations au sujet de l'Angola et du Sud-Ouest africain devraient être étudiées au moment où l'Assemblée générale examinera les points pertinents de son ordre du jour. La question de la Rhodésie du Sud a déjà été examinée, comme on le sait, à la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée. Les recommandations du Comité au sujet des autres territoires devraient être approuvées au stade actuel, afin qu'elles aient force de décisions de l'Assemblée générale.

209. La délégation soviétique considère que la tâche primordiale de la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale pour résoudre cette question est d'adopter des décisions qui forceraient les colonisateurs à subordonner leur cupidité mesquine et leurs intérêts égoïstes aux intérêts de toute l'humanité, autrement dit à appliquer la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, sans autres réserves ni délais. Le Comité des Dix-Sept devrait s'inspirer dans ses travaux futurs de ces décisions de l'Assemblée.

210. Avant tout, l'Assemblée générale doit appuyer résolument la proposition de la délégation de la République de Guinée au sujet d'une date limite pour la liquidation complète et définitive du système colonial.

211. Afin que la Déclaration puisse être mise en œuvre, il est indispensable de contraindre les puissances coloniales à mettre fin immédiatement à toutes les opérations militaires et à toutes les répressions contre les peuples des colonies et des territoires non autonomes, à retirer de ces territoires leurs forces armées et leur personnel militaire et à liquider toutes les bases militaires sur ces territoires.

212. Il faut prendre des mesures décisives pour permettre aux peuples des colonies et des territoires non autonomes d'exercer leur droit imprescriptible à la démocratie et à la liberté, y compris la liberté de parole, de presse et de réunion et leur droit de former des partis politiques et des organisations sociales. Toutes les lois et tous les règlements qui limitent ou interdisent l'activité des partis politiques et des organisations sociales devraient être immédiatement abrogés. Une amnistie sans réserve devrait être proclamée à l'égard de tous les détenus politiques dans les colonies et les territoires non autonomes. Devraient être abrogés également toutes les lois et tous les règlements autorisant une discrimination raciale.

213. Pour autant que l'administration coloniale continue à saboter le transfert des pouvoirs à la population autochtone, il faut assurer que dans les colonies et les territoires non autonomes aient lieu les élections des nouveaux organes du pouvoir sur la base du suffrage universel et secret. C'est ainsi seulement que pourront être créées des institutions véritablement nationales et démocratiques auxquelles tous les pouvoirs devront être transférés.

214. Nous estimons que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit exiger l'abrogation immédiate de tous les accords imposés auparavant par les puissances coloniales, accords qui limitent ou violent la souveraineté, l'indépendance et l'intégrité territoriale des territoires sous tutelle et des autres territoires non autonomes. Il est indispensable enfin d'exiger l'abrogation immédiate de tous les actes officiels concernant l'union des territoires non autonomes, en totalité ou en partie, à la métropole. Il faut aussi déclarer fermement aux puissances coloniales que l'incorporation de telle ou telle autre colonie ou d'une partie de la colonie à une quelconque fédération ne peut être décidée que par le peuple de cette colonie, exprimant librement sa volonté, une fois acquise l'indépendance.

215. La continuation des agissements des colonisateurs qui tendent à saper l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale des colonies ou des pays libérés du joug colonial doit être résolument condamnée.

217. Les peuples attendent de la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale qu'elle adopte les mesures les plus rigoureuses contre les colonisateurs portugais, ainsi que contre les occupants et les racistes de l'Afrique du Sud, qui, depuis de nombreuses années, violent sans vergogne et criminellement la Charte des Nations Unies et les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale.

218. La délégation soviétique estime que l'Assemblée générale a des raisons plus que suffisantes pour exiger l'application sans délai des sanctions politiques, économiques et autres, prévues par les Articles 41 et 42 de la Charte des Nations Unies, à l'égard du Portugal et de la République sud-africaine.

219. Il va de soi que les Etats-Unis d'Amérique et les autres alliés du Portugal à l'OTAN sont tenus de cesser d'accorder au gouvernement de Salazar toute l'aide qu'il utilise pour l'extermination massive des peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée portugaise.

220. La délégation soviétique est convaincue que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit également exiger de tous ses membres qui accordent une aide aux puissances coloniales de cesser immédiatement de la fournir si elle est susceptible d'être utilisée contre les peuples qui luttent pour se libérer de la dépendance coloniale.

221. Toutes les propositions présentées par la délégation soviétique sont pleinement conformes à l'esprit de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et ont pour but d'accélérer sa mise en œuvre. La délégation soviétique espère que l'Assemblée générale étudiera soigneusement nos propositions et adoptera des résolutions pouvant contribuer réellement à supprimer complètement et définitivement le colonialisme sur la terre.

222. Pour terminer, je parlerai de l'intervention du représentant des Etats-Unis qui a tenté peu plausiblement de détourner l'Assemblée générale d'examiner une question aussi importante que celle de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

223. Il a une fois de plus répété la calomnie bien connue à laquelle les Etats-Unis ont recours quand ils veulent camoufler leur politique impérialiste et distraire l'attention de l'Assemblée de la solution des questions importantes qui nous sont soumises.

224. Il n'est pas du goût de la délégation des Etats-Unis que 15 républiques socialistes soviétiques soient unies en une seule grande union, l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques. Les relations d'amitié, de collaboration et d'aide mutuelle qui unissent nos républiques ne leur plaisent pas. Ils ne voient pas d'un bon œil nos succès, qui sont maintenant de notoriété universelle, en matière de science, de technique, de culture, d'industrie et dans d'autres domaines des activités humaines.

225. Mais, comme on dit, nous ne pouvons rien pour aider les Etats-Unis. Nous pourrions dire, à notre tour, que le régime capitaliste en vigueur aux Etats-Unis n'est pas de notre goût. Néanmoins, nous ne proposons pas à l'Assemblée générale d'étudier cette question, ni d'émettre un jugement à ce sujet, car ce sont là affaires intérieures des Etats-Unis.

226. Les délégations comprennent naturellement que l'intervention calomnieuse du représentant des Etats-Unis n'est qu'une tentative pour attiser dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies l'esprit de guerre froide et pour détourner l'Assemblée de l'étude du problème de la liquidation du système colonial.

227. Si les Etats-Unis tiennent réellement à renforcer l'esprit de collaboration constructive à l'Organisation, ils doivent porter leur attention non pas sur les élucubrations et les calomnies dirigées contre l'Union soviétique, mais sur les moyens de répondre par des actes appropriés au désir fervent de tous les peuples du monde de voir liquider le honteux système colonial.

228. C'est précisément la liquidation du système colonial, cette lourde séquelle de l'époque impérialiste, source de guerres et de tension internationale, qui apportera la liberté aux peuples coloniaux, consolidera la paix universelle et la sécurité internationale.

229. C'est vers ce but que doivent tendre les efforts de tous les pays qui ont à cœur la paix et la collaboration internationale.

230.  PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Japon qui a demandé à faire usage de son droit de réponse.

231. M. MATSUI (Japon) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dans sa déclaration, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a jugé bon de parler assez longuement des îles Ryūkyū, qui font partie intégrante du Japon. Je réserve le droit de ma délégation de répondre sur ce point au représentant de l'Union soviétique après avoir dûment examiné sa déclaration. Pour le moment, il suffira de faire observer que cette question est entièrement en dehors de la question en discussion.

232. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): J'ai une liste de plus de 60 orateurs inscrits dans la discussion générale de cette question, y compris ceux qui ont pris la parole aujourd'hui. Pour que nous puissions les entendre tous, je devrai naturellement surveiller la progression de la discussion et, si cela devient nécessaire, nous pourrions être obligés de tenir la semaine prochaine des séances du soir.

La séance est levée à 18 h 5.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite)

En l'absence du Président, M. Zea (Colombie), vice-président, prend la présidence.

1. M. NICOLAESCU (Roumanie): C'est la troisième fois que le problème de l'abolition du colonialisme, en tant que système, est l'objet de l'attention de l'Assemblée générale.

2. Les Nations Unies ont saisi l'importance considérable du processus historique de la libération des peuples et se sont rangées nettement du côté de cette immense force de l'époque contemporaine, en proclamant solennellement la nécessité de la liquidation immédiate et sans condition du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et manifestations. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, adoptée il y a deux ans par l'Assemblée générale [résolution 1514 (XV)], sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique, a stimulé la lutte des peuples coloniaux, en leur offrant de nobles idéaux, de grands espoirs et une arme puissante pour l'accélération du processus de libération.

3. Maintenant, il s'agit de présenter devant l'humanité le bilan de la mise en application de ce document d'importance historique et de déterminer l'efficacité de l'action des Nations Unies dans le domaine si important de la libération des peuples. De l'avis de ma délégation, cette efficacité doit être appréciée en premier lieu selon la manière dont l'Organisation des Nations Unies réussit à assurer les conditions voulues pour accélérer la libération des peuples coloniaux et liquider les derniers vestiges du colonialisme.

4. L'ampleur du mouvement révolutionnaire, la présence parmi nous, en tant qu'États indépendants, de l'héroïque Algérie, du Burundi, du Rwanda, de la Jamaïque, de la Trinité et Tobago et de l'Ouganda, dont nous avons chaleureusement salué l'accession à l'indépendance, ainsi que la réintégration d'autres territoires dans les États dont ils ont fait partie nous édifient sur l'influence positive de la Déclaration.

5. Mais, en étudiant la carte politique du monde, on constate qu'aujourd'hui, deux ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration, il n'y a que neuf noms qui ont disparu de la liste des territoires coloniaux. En conservant le rythme actuel de l'augmentation annuelle du nombre des territoires accédant à l'indépendance, la libération de quelque 80 territoires coloniaux qui existent encore à présent en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique latine ne serait accomplie que dans un délai très long, et cela malgré le fait que la Déclaration exigeait expressément, dès 1960, le transfert immédiat de tous les pouvoirs aux peuples coloniaux.

6. Aujourd'hui, deux ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration, il est plus clair que jamais que les puissances coloniales appelées à mettre en œuvre cette déclaration sont devancées par le temps, mènent une politique contraire aux leçons de l'histoire, ignorent la volonté des Nations Unies et mettent en danger l'autorité même et l'efficacité de l'Organisation.

7. Le Comité des Dix-Sept, dont la laborieuse activité nous est démontrée par le rapport en discussion [A/5238], nous fournit une information très vaste et des conclusions qui nous permettent l'examen approfondi de l'application de la Déclaration et spécialement des difficultés que les peuples des colonies ont à surmonter.

8. L'opposition des puissances coloniales à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration et à l'essor du mouvement de libération revêt les formes les plus diverses, allant des actions militaires répressives contre les peuples qui luttent pour leur indépendance, comme ceux de l'Angola, du Mozambique et d'autres colonies portugaises, provoquant ainsi l'indignation légitime de l'humanité tout entière, jusqu'à des manœuvres politiques visant à affaiblir le front de lutte anti-coloniale. On invoque le manque de préparation de ces peuples à se gouverner eux-mêmes, on dresse des programmes de réformes mineures qui, en réalité, renforcent la domination coloniale, on entame des négociations de longue durée, destinées à nourrir l'illusion de changements proches, on crée et cultive des divergences entre les partis politiques locaux ou entre divers groupements de la population.

9. La précipitation de ces actions ainsi que la gamme étendue des méthodes employées reflètent l'insistance avec laquelle les puissances coloniales s'efforcent de maintenir les positions et les privilèges que les rapports coloniaux leur ont donnés. Elles refusent de renoncer aux richesses fabuleuses des colonies, aux immenses profits offerts par l'exploitation coloniale, et à la main-d'œuvre bon marché que les colonies mettent à leur disposition.

10. Il y a des centaines d'années, les peuples coloniaux ont dû payer avec de grands sacrifices l'arrivée sur leurs terres des premiers prétendus "civilisateurs" européens, qui, par la force et par le chantage, s'emparèrent de vastes territoires; aujourd'hui, les peuples coloniaux doivent payer, toujours par des sacrifices, le départ des colonialistes des territoires qu'ils ont pillés.

11. Ce sont les immenses ressources naturelles, d'une rare richesse et variété, de l'Afrique centrale et de l'Afrique méridionale, la bauxite du Surinam et les phosphates de Nauru qui expliquent la résistance obstinée opposée par les puissances impérialistes à la libération des colonies.

12. Un membre du Parlement britannique, M. Jack Jones, a déclaré:

"Il y a en Afrique centrale un immense potentiel économique que nous ne pouvons nous permettre de perdre. On a beaucoup parlé de la "ceinture du cuivre", mais je voudrais informer mes honorables collègues que, sans cette richesse, ce pays" — c'est-à-dire le Royaume-Uni — "aussi bien que l'Amérique seront dans 10 années beaucoup moins puissants qu'ils ne le sont aujourd'hui."

13. Un savant américain bien connu, M. William E. B. Du Bois, a dit:

"On peut affirmer sans aucune peur d'exagérer que la traite des esclaves a coûté à l'Afrique noire 100 millions d'âmes. Et pourtant, on se demande quelles pourraient être les causes qui ont déterminé, depuis 1600, la stagnation de la culture dans cette région!"

14. Lorsque la traite des esclaves a cessé, les profits des colonialistes ont été conditionnés par l'asservissement économique et par l'exploitation brutale de la main-d'œuvre bon marché assurée par l'apartheid, par des lois racistes érigées au rang d'institution, par des lois discriminatoires, par le refus d'accorder aux autochtones les droits politiques élémentaires, par l'usurpation de leurs terres, par l'obscurantisme, etc.

15. Ce ne sont que des formes nouvelles d'exploitation; l'essence restant la même, celle de l'esclavage. D'ailleurs, les résultats en sont, eux aussi, analogues. La traite des esclaves a coûté à l'Afrique 100 millions d'êtres humains. Mais combien de millions ont coûté au même continent les guerres coloniales, telles que la guerre d'Algérie; les massacres, comme ceux de l'Angola; la terreur, comme celle qui règne en Afrique du Sud, en Rhodésie du Sud ou, il y a quelques années, au Kenya? Dans la riche zone des Rhodésies, la durée moyenne de la vie ne dépasse pas 30 ans et, sur l'île de la Réunion, elle atteint à peine 26 ans. Que signifient des faits pareils, sinon la destruction progressive d'immenses ressources humaines?

16. Certains des représentants qui m'ont précédé ont, à juste titre, insisté sur le caractère collectif du colonialisme contemporain. Il est évident, pour nous, que ce ne sont pas seulement les peuples coloniaux qui doivent faire face aujourd'hui à cet aspect du colonialisme. Nous aussi nous ressentons cette tendance à l'intérieur de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

17. Autrefois, il y a des siècles, les puissances coloniales divisaient le monde en sphères d'influence par des accords impérialistes. Plus de la moitié des membres de ce forum connaissent ce fait par leur propre expérience. De nos jours, la variante moderne de l'activité concertée des puissances coloniales consiste dans l'union de leurs intérêts économiques, financiers et militaires, qui s'étendent comme un réseau dans le monde entier.

18. Si l'on soumet à un examen l'activité des monopoles étrangers en Afrique centrale et en Afrique méridionale, on saisira justement la présence et l'interpénétration des intérêts des neuf compagnies principales agissant dans toute cette région. La tragédie du peuple congolais, la sécession du Katanga et le rôle joué par l'Union minière du Haut-Katanga en cette affaire jettent une lumière supplémentaire sur la question. Par le passé, le Katanga appartenait à la Belgique, mais les profiteurs de l'exploitation de ses richesses, les industriels britanniques, américains, français et de l'Allemagne de l'Ouest ont été toujours aux côtés des industriels belges, et c'est en commun qu'ils agissent également aujourd'hui.

19. Tout récemment, les pétitionnaires montraient devant le Comité des Dix-Sept que, par un accord avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, toute l'exploitation de diamants de l'Angola a été concédée à la compagnie Companhia de Diamantes de Angola. Mais au conseil d'administration de cette compagnie siègent le fameux industriel Oppenheimer, ainsi que des directeurs des compagnies de Beers et de la Société générale de Belgique.

20. Tout ce réseau d'intérêts financiers a un caractère supranational. Le professeur W. Wolfe, de l'Université de Washington, s'y référant, le nomme "un genre spécial de système autonome, en réalité supranational, ayant un genre spécial d'influence, sinon même le contrôle entier, sur les ressources que nous sommes habitués à considérer comme ressources nationales des Etats".

21. De ce système supranational complexe se détache la présence des capitaux monopolistes britanniques, ouest-allemands, français, belges, et surtout américains. En tant que force financière principale du monde occidental, les monopoles des Etats-Unis occupent une place prédominante dans la direction des compagnies des colonies et dans la politique que mènent ces compagnies. Et, comme la politique des Etats-Unis a été et sera toujours entreprise par la coopération entre le "business" et le gouvernement, la présence d'armements de fabrication américaine en Angola et en Afrique du Sud est entièrement explicable, tout comme l'est l'appui que les représentants des Etats-Unis accordent aux puissances coloniales à l'Assemblée générale, à ses commissions et à ses comités.

22. On peut affirmer avec certitude que la nouvelle variante des anciens empires coloniaux, où le soleil ne se couchait jamais, c'est aujourd'hui l'empire formé par le réseau des intérêts financiers et économiques internationaux, où la part du lion revient aux monopoles américains.

23. Plus de la moitié de l'humanité a éprouvé d'une manière douloureuse le régime de l'oppression et de l'exploitation coloniales, et la délégation roumaine partage l'inquiétude profonde que de nombreuses délégations d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine ont exprimée, du haut de cette tribune, à l'égard des conséquences tragiques que peut avoir le maintien de ce régime.

24. L'humanité doit aujourd'hui faire face à des problèmes particulièrement graves par suite de l'existence, tout au long des années, de l'inhumain régime colonial sur une partie considérable du monde. D'immenses régions du globe présentent de nos jours des preuves irréfutables de l'effet rétrograde du colonialisme sur le développement des forces sociales de production, car le colonialisme a privé les peuples de vastes possibilités de développement et de prospérité. La suppression de l'abîme entre le niveau de développement des pays qui ont connu ou qui connaissent l'oppression coloniale et celui d'une poignée de puissances enrichies à la suite de l'exploitation de ces pays est devenue une préoccupation majeure de l'humanité et, implicitement, de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il est clair que les conséquences néfastes du colonialisme créent des problèmes particulièrement difficiles pour toute l'humanité. Ceux qui, d'une manière ou d'une autre, se prononcent pour la continuation des rapports coloniaux ou cherchent à les perpétuer contribuent au maintien de la source qui crée et alimente ces graves problèmes.

25. L'abolition totale du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes ou manifestations constitue une question urgente dont la solution ne saurait comporter aucun ajournement. En dépit de l'obstruction des colonialistes, les peuples se libéreront. Cependant, les difficultés qu'ils auront à surmonter seront d'autant plus grandes et leur indépendance d'autant plus amoindrie que l'on permettra à la dernière phase du colonialisme — la phase de l'agonie — de continuer.

26. Les colonies sont transformées de plus en plus en dépendances économiques des puissances coloniales. Le colonialisme pille non le présent, mais également l'avenir des peuples des colonies. C'est pourquoi maintenir une telle situation, ce serait condamner les futurs Etats indépendants à des difficultés toujours plus grandes et aggraver proportionnellement le déséquilibre économique du monde.

27. De plus, les puissances coloniales cherchent à présent à trouver de nouvelles formes de colonialisme en vue de pouvoir, dorénavant, maintenir aussi leurs privilèges. On a recours, à cet effet, aux méthodes les plus diverses, depuis l'encouragement de la création des Etats racistes du type de la Rhodésie du Sud jusqu'à l'imposition de bases militaires dont l'existence limitera substantiellement la souveraineté des futurs Etats indépendants. Du haut de cette tribune, de nombreux représentants ont manifesté leur inquiétude devant le fait que les Etats-Unis et les autres membres de l'OTAN ont établi dans le monde colonial de nombreuses bases militaires, mettant ainsi en danger la liberté des peuples et la paix du monde.

28. On appuie des mouvements non populaires, tout en refusant de reconnaître des régimes établis d'une manière démocratique, mais dont l'orientation n'est pas du goût des colonialistes, comme c'est le cas en Guyane britannique; on conclut des arrangements entre puissances coloniales au détriment des futurs Etats. A cet égard, on connaît les accords anglo-américains concernant le louage, pour des dizaines d'années, de bases navales sur le territoire des colonies anglaises de la mer des Caraïbes qui, prétend-on, devraient être reconnus par les gouvernements de ces colonies au moment de leur libération.

29. N'est-il pas clair que de telles actions colonialistes tentent de limiter l'indépendance des futurs Etats, de leur imposer dès maintenant une orientation politique favorable aux puissances coloniales? Plus les colonialistes auront la possibilité de rendre définitifs ces arrangements, plus les conséquences qui en découleront pour les peuples des colonies seront tragiques.

30. Mais, qui plus est, maintenir le régime colonial dans certains territoires, c'est attenter aux efforts d'unité et de solidarité des peuples qui ont connu ou connaissent encore l'exploitation coloniale; c'est porter un grave préjudice aux efforts entrepris par les Etats libérés en vue d'accélérer, en s'aidant mutuellement, leur développement économique et spirituel.

31. On lit, dans la Déclaration du Caire, des pays en voie de développement 2/:

"La Conférence ... demande instamment la décolonisation complète comme étant nécessaire pour le développement économique des peuples dépendants et [pour] l'exercice de leurs droits souverains sur leurs ressources nationales." [A/5162, point 8.]

32. La Commission économique pour l'Afrique discute des questions essentielles pour le progrès de l'Afrique telles que la coordination des efforts économiques sur le plan régional, la création d'un marché commun africain, l'extension du système de transport continental.

33. Comment peut-on ignorer les obstacles qui entravent la réalisation de tels objectifs, obstacles dus à la persistance, aujourd'hui encore, du colonialisme dans une partie importante de l'Afrique? A présent, seulement 10 p. 100 environ des échanges de marchandises entre pays africains s'opèrent sur le continent, et il n'y a pas longtemps encore, on était obligé, pour aller par exemple d'Accra à Casablanca, de passer par Paris ou Londres, ce qui doublait la distance.

34. Comment peut-on ignorer les conséquences néfastes de la tactique Divide et impera employée par les colonialistes afin d'ouvrir largement la porte à de futurs conflits sanglants entre pays et peuples? La résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale attire notre attention sur le fait que:

"tout nouveau retard dans l'application de la Déclaration est une source continue de conflits et de discordes sur le plan international, entrave sérieusement la coopération internationale et crée, dans de nombreuses régions du monde, une situation de plus en plus dangereuse qui peut constituer une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales".

35. Dans son rapport, le Comité des Dix-Sept relève que la situation en Angola, au Katanga, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, en Rhodésie du Sud et au Mozambique constitue un véritable danger pour la paix du monde.

36. De nombreux représentants ont souligné que l'existence, au centre de l'Afrique, du régime raciste sud-africain, véritable bastion du colonialisme contre la libération des peuples, constitue une menace permanente pour l'Afrique, et peut-être pour le monde entier. La cause de l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme est donc la cause de l'humanité, la cause de la paix et de la coopération internationale.

2/ Déclaration de la Conférence sur les problèmes de développement économique, réunie au Caire du 5 au 12 juin 1962.

37. En formulant les considérations que je viens d'exposer la délégation roumaine a été beaucoup aidée par l'ample activité du Comité spécial de 17 membres chargé de mettre en œuvre la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. De l'avis de ma délégation, le Comité a déployé une activité utile en vue de promouvoir la libération des peuples coloniaux et a offert une large tribune aux éminents représentants de ces peuples pour qu'ils fassent entendre les appels lancés à l'humanité par les peuples opprimés.

38. Les recommandations et les conclusions du Comité sont conformes aux principes de la Déclaration et sont acceptables pour ma délégation. La position invariablement négative des quatre puissances coloniales au sein du Comité à l'égard des recommandations faites ne diminue pas la valeur de celles-ci, mais elle met en lumière l'esprit dans lequel ces puissances font montre de coopération en ce qui concerne la libération des peuples coloniaux, coopération qu'en paroles, du haut de la tribune de l'ONU, elles offrent généreusement. L'histoire nous montre que, lors de leur libération, les peuples coloniaux n'ont jamais pu compter sur la générosité des colonialistes, mais seulement sur leurs propres efforts et sur l'appui de ceux qui, comme eux, avaient connu la domination étrangère.

39. Nous soulignons aussi le mérite du Comité de mettre en discussion, tout d'abord, les territoires qui présentent des problèmes urgents et, en priorité, les problèmes de l'Afrique. Il n'y a pas de doute que la résolution que l'Assemblée générale adoptera à la fin de ces débats inspirera une nouvelle force à ce comité et à ceux qui ont soutenu les idéaux qui sont à l'origine de sa création.

40. Le peuple roumain nourrit des sentiments de chaleureuse sympathie envers les peuples coloniaux et se solidarise avec eux dans la lutte pour la conquête de l'indépendance nationale. La République populaire roumaine, comme Etat socialiste, soutient, dans l'arène internationale, la cause des peuples coloniaux et dépendants qui luttent pour leur libération. A l'Assemblée générale et dans d'autres organismes de l'ONU, la délégation roumaine s'est invariablement prononcée en faveur de l'autodétermination et de l'indépendance nationale de ces peuples.

41. M. Gheorghiu-Dej, président du Conseil d'Etat de la République populaire roumaine, a déclaré, lors de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale:

"Nous estimons que la fidélité aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies est devenue incompatible avec l'oppression coloniale dont se rendent coupables des Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. En conséquence, il est grand temps que l'Organisation des Nations Unies demande à tous les gouvernements de respecter strictement les dispositions de la Charte concernant l'égalité et le respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les Etats sans exception, en repoussant toute forme de colonialisme, tout droit ou privilège exclusif dont bénéficiaient certains Etats au détriment d'autres Etats." [873ème séance, par. 44.]

42. Animée par de tels sentiments, la délégation roumaine estime, par conséquent, que cette année l'Assemblée générale doit faire un pas décisif vers la liquidation du système colonial, en adoptant des mesures résolues qui puissent obliger les puissances coloniales à mettre immédiatement en pratique les dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et effacer les taches noires du colonialisme de la carte du monde et de l'histoire de l'humanité.

43. M. HSUEH (Chine) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept mérite nos remerciements et notre gratitude pour la façon rapide et énergique dont il s'est acquitté de la tâche que l'Assemblée lui avait confiée.

44. En sept mois seulement, le Comité spécial a tenu 117 séances et a examiné la situation de 12 territoires. Il a recommandé à l'examen de l'Assemblée six projets de résolution concernant huit territoires. Il a également, sous sa propre responsabilité, fait sur deux autres territoires des recommandations adressées directement aux puissances administrantes. Nous avons reçu le rapport du Comité spécial qui compte 584 pages [A/5238]. Ce document, un des plus volumineux que les Nations Unies aient jamais publié, montre bien tout le travail accompli par le Comité spécial.

45. Ce rapport est instructif et très édifiant. Il représente un nouvel effort vers la concrétisation des nobles principes inscrits dans la Charte, à savoir: "proclamer à nouveau notre foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites". Toutes les délégations ici présentes n'approuveront peut-être pas en totalité les conclusions et recommandations qui figurent dans le rapport, mais je suis certain qu'elles reconnaîtront que le Comité spécial a travaillé consciencieusement et a contribué à l'application des buts et principes de la Charte.

46. Le rapport du Comité spécial montre que des conditions déplorables résultant du colonialisme continuent d'exister dans plusieurs territoires étudiés. Dix-sept ans après la signature de la Charte, la répression des droits de l'homme, l'inégalité et la discrimination raciale sont encore pratiquées dans ces territoires. Ces pratiques intolérables ont été mises en lumière une fois de plus grâce aux travaux du Comité spécial. Il est vraiment urgent que l'Assemblée générale redouble d'efforts pour mener à bien la décolonisation et pour mettre fin à ces pratiques. Le meilleur moyen d'y arriver est de prendre toutes mesures pour faire en sorte que les populations de ces territoires reçoivent aussitôt que possible le droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance.

47. Ma délégation approuve entièrement cette façon d'agir. Quelles que soient les questions coloniales, la politique fondamentale de mon gouvernement s'est toujours fondée sur les trois "principes du peuple" préconisés par le père de la République de Chine, M. Sun Yat-sen, c'est-à-dire l'indépendance nationale, la démocratie et le développement économique. En Chine, nous souhaitons que tous les peuples mènent la vie de leur choix, dans la paix et la prospérité et sur un pied d'égalité, quelles que soient leur couleur, leur race et leur croyance.

48. Aussi, ma délégation approuve-t-elle, d'une façon générale, la plupart des recommandations et conclusions du Comité spécial. En lisant ce long rapport, nous ne pouvons manquer de constater que les conditions qui règnent dans les territoires étudiés ne sont pas partout les mêmes. Elles présentent tout au moins des différences de degré. A vrai dire, tant que les peuples de ces territoires n'exerceront pas leur droit à l'autodétermination, ils demeureront dépendants et colonisés. Mais il faut ajouter que le progrès vers l'autodétermination et l'indépendance est plus rapide dans certains territoires que dans d'autres. Même sous une seule puissance administrante, les conditions particulières d'un territoire diffèrent de celles d'un autre.

49. Aussi ma délégation estime-t-elle que l'Assemblée générale devrait, en examinant le rapport du Comité spécial, faire une distinction entre les territoires où des signes prometteurs sont visibles et ceux où l'avenir demeure sombre. Pour les territoires où l'on fait de rapides progrès vers l'autodétermination et l'indépendance, l'Assemblée générale devrait encourager les puissances administrantes intéressées à accélérer le processus de décolonisation jusqu'à son aboutissement. Pour ceux où la domination coloniale semble encore tenace, l'Assemblée générale devrait adopter des mesures plus énergiques pour mieux exercer une pression. Ma délégation ne croit pas que l'Assemblée générale puisse aider les peuples coloniaux en distribuant les mêmes blâmes à toutes les puissances administrantes.

50. Cela m'amène à la question de la fixation d'une date pour l'indépendance de tous les territoires coloniaux. Il ressort de l'étude du rapport du Comité spécial que l'adoption d'une date unique pour l'indépendance de tous les territoires n'aurait aucune signification. Au chapitre concernant la déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes, l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies tient compte des "conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations" et de "leurs degrés variables de développement".

51. Ma délégation estime qu'il est peut-être souhaitable de fixer des dates raisonnables afin d'accélérer le progrès de la décolonisation et d'encourager les puissances administrantes à préparer les dernières étapes menant les populations des territoires dépendants à l'exercice de leur droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance.

52. Sur ce point, j'ai été frappé par ce que le représentant du Tanganyika a déclaré au Comité spécial. D'après le paragraphe 48 du chapitre premier du rapport, le représentant du Tanganyika a dit que:

"Sa délégation ne jugeait pas indiqué d'insister pour que l'indépendance fût accordée immédiatement à tous les territoires, sans qu'on se préoccupe de savoir si cela ne risquerait pas d'entraîner le chaos. Elle n'approuvait pas non plus l'attitude du Royaume-Uni quand il déclarait vouloir prendre tout son temps pour l'octroi de l'indépendance."

Je crois que le représentant du Tanganyika a adopté une attitude sage, utile et constructive. Nous nous souvenons tous que l'Union soviétique a réclamé à l'Assemblée l'an dernier et a réclamé à nouveau au Comité spécial cette année que tous les territoires deviennent indépendants avant la fin de 1962. En agissant ainsi, l'Union soviétique se préoccupait peu de savoir si cette mesure risquait de mener au chaos ou de nuire au prestige des Nations Unies. L'Union soviétique ne fait que révéler son hypocrisie par cette attitude. Ses mobiles sont évidents: elle veut se poser aux yeux des peuples d'Afrique en champion unique de la décolonisation. Il lui importerait peu qu'on ne puisse pas mettre en œuvre une résolution de l'Assemblée générale fixant au 31 décembre 1962 la date de l'indépendance de tous les territoires. Si une telle résolution devait amener le chaos dans certains territoires, elle servirait les fins de l'Union soviétique, qui sont de répandre le fléau du communisme.

53. Dans notre zèle à mettre fin au colonialisme, nous devons regarder au-delà de l'horizon de l'indépendance. Sans aucun doute, notre objectif immédiat est l'indépendance pour tous les peuples qui la désirent. Toutefois, nous ne devons pas oublier d'autres problèmes qui peuvent venir compliquer celui de l'indépendance. Nous devons toujours penser à l'importance suprême du bien futur des peuples qui ne sont pas encore indépendants, non seulement dans le domaine politique, mais aussi dans les domaines économique, social et autres. Le représentant du Venezuela, en expliquant la raison pour laquelle il s'opposait à une date unique pour l'indépendance de tous les territoires, a déclaré d'après le paragraphe 98 du chapitre premier du rapport du Comité spécial:

"La date de l'indépendance devrait être fixée, pour chaque territoire, en tenant compte des circonstances particulières qui lui permettraient d'accéder à l'indépendance dans des conditions telles que sa stabilité et sa viabilité d'Etat indépendant seraient assurées."

54. Je voudrais citer également sur ce point ce qu'a dit le représentant de Madagascar, au nom de l'Union africaine et malgache, d'après le paragraphe 93 du chapitre premier du rapport:

"... le problème de la décolonisation devait être résolu par la négociation, la conciliation, l'arbitrage et tous autres moyens pacifiques prévus par la Charte".

Ma délégation croit que ces déclarations faites par des représentants d'Etats qui ont subi le colonialisme sont très sages et que l'Assemblée générale devrait en tenir dûment compte.

55. On a beaucoup parlé, dans ce débat, de la discrimination raciale et de l'oppression des noirs par les blancs. Je veux ajouter la voix de ma délégation à celle des représentants qui ont exprimé leur ressentiment à l'égard de pratiques aussi intolérables. L'Assemblée générale doit faire tout son possible pour aider à y mettre fin. Il est deux initiatives que l'Assemblée générale pourrait prendre. Dans les territoires où des mesures discriminatoires fondées sur la race et la couleur demeurent officielles, l'Assemblée devrait en tenir pour responsables les puissances administrantes et les inviter à y mettre immédiatement fin. Dans les territoires où les préjugés raciaux sont surtout dus à une attitude sociale découlant de la tradition, l'Assemblée devrait encourager les puissances administrantes à promouvoir l'harmonie et la compréhension entre les races.

56. Sur ce deuxième point, n'oublions pas que la plupart des blancs qui vivent aujourd'hui en Afrique descendent des colons blancs qui se sont établis en Afrique il y a des siècles. Les hommes sont souvent le jouet des circonstances et des traditions. Mais l'évolution des temps modernes oblige de nombreux blancs, en Afrique, à rompre avec le passé. Par exemple, on fait remarquer, au paragraphe 142 du chapitre II du rapport du Comité spécial, qu'en Rhodésie du Sud "deux électeurs blancs sur trois avaient voté pour l'élargissement du droit de vote". On ne peut donc, en toute équité, accuser tous les blancs d'Afrique de pratiquer la discrimination et d'avoir des préjugés.

57. En outre, la plupart des blancs d'Afrique sont nés en Afrique, ont été élevés en Afrique, y sont profondément enracinés. S'ils n'ont pas de préjugés contre leurs compatriotes noirs, ils ne doivent pas être à leur tour victimes de préjugés. Ils peuvent jouer un rôle utile dans la société où ils sont destinés à vivre. Il faut leur donner la possibilité de contribuer à son développement. Notre ressentiment contre la discrimination raciale ne doit pas nous entraîner dans l'excès contraire. Il ne faut pas penser que tous les blancs sont méchants et qu'ils doivent tous être chassés d'Afrique.

58. Sur ce point, ma délégation a été frappée par la déclaration que M. Kenneth Kaunda, président du United National Independence Party de la Rhodésie du Nord, a faite devant le Comité spécial. Elle est résumée au paragraphe 61 du chapitre III du rapport:

"Le parti de M. Kaunda était prêt à envisager d'incorporer une déclaration des droits à la déclaration d'indépendance de la Rhodésie du Nord, pour convaincre tous les groupes minoritaires du pays, qu'ils fussent noirs, métis ou blancs, que leur avenir était assuré. Ils n'auraient pas à craindre d'être expulsés une fois que leurs capitaux et leurs connaissances ne seraient plus nécessaires au pays."

Cette déclaration prouve, à mon avis, la largeur de vues d'un dirigeant africain.

59. En ce qui concerne la situation raciale en Afrique, l'Assemblée générale devrait faire tout son possible pour supprimer toutes formes de discrimination raciale et assurer l'édification d'une société multiraciale harmonieuse et pacifique. Je crois que c'est à cela que pensait le représentant de Madagascar dans la déclaration qu'il a faite au Comité spécial à propos de la Rhodésie du Nord et que nous trouvons résumée au paragraphe 177 du chapitre III du rapport:

"L'essentiel était d'élaborer une constitution équitable et de jeter les bases d'un bon accord entre les diverses fractions de la population. L'exemple de Madagascar prouvait que cela était parfaitement réalisable."

Ma délégation partage sans réserve les vues exprimées dans cette déclaration par le représentant de Madagascar.

60. La décision prise par le Comité spécial d'examiner en priorité les territoires d'Afrique est une décision dont nul, je crois, ne peut contester la sagesse. Outre les raisons qu'en donne le Comité au paragraphe 149 du chapitre premier de son rapport, j'ajouterai que c'est en Afrique que les peuples ont vécu le plus longtemps sous le colonialisme. Il est donc urgent et nécessaire que les Nations Unies s'efforcent en premier lieu de mettre fin à la domination coloniale sur ce continent.

61. On lit au paragraphe 151 du chapitre premier du rapport:

"Le Comité spécial reconnaît qu'il n'a, en aucune façon, terminé la tâche que lui a confiée l'Assemblée générale et qu'il reste encore bien des territoires dans lesquels la situation doit être étudiée en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration."

Ma délégation partage entièrement cette opinion. On se rappellera peut-être que le Comité spécial a été créé, selon les termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale, en vue "... d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-septième session". Dans la Déclaration, l'Assemblée générale "proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations".

62. Ce dont le Comité spécial s'est occupé jusqu'à présent, c'est d'une seule forme de colonialisme qui peut être considérée comme la plus ancienne et la plus répandue. Elle a été pratiquée par les puissances occidentales européennes pendant des siècles, surtout en Afrique mais aussi dans d'autres parties du monde. Depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, de nombreuses nouvelles nations indépendantes d'Afrique et d'Asie ont échappé à cette forme de colonialisme et sont devenues Membres de l'Organisation. Le nombre des Membres, qui a plus que doublé depuis 1945, prouve la célérité de la liquidation du colonialisme d'Europe occidentale. Le rapport du Comité spécial fournit aussi d'autres preuves qui montrent que la fin de ce type de colonialisme approche rapidement. Je ne crois pas que les Nations Unies rencontreront de grandes difficultés dans les efforts qu'elles déploient en ce sens, sauf peut-être dans quelques cas très rares.

63. Toutefois, l'Assemblée générale, pour être fidèle à la proclamation solennelle contenue dans sa déclaration que je viens de citer, ne peut se contenter de la suppression de ce seul type de colonialisme. Dans le débat sur le colonialisme à la dernière session de l'Assemblée générale, ma délégation a attiré l'attention sur l'apparition, depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, d'un nouveau type de colonialisme: le colonialisme soviétique ou russe. La seconde guerre mondiale a permis à l'Union soviétique d'ajouter 680 000 kilomètres carrés à son territoire et plus de 22 millions d'habitants à sa population. Depuis la fin de la guerre, l'empire soviétique s'est encore beaucoup étendu. L'Assemblée générale a sans doute raison de liquider d'abord le colonialisme d'Europe occidentale partout où il subsiste encore, mais elle ne s'acquitterait pas entièrement des obligations que la Charte lui impose si elle fermait les yeux devant la vie tout aussi terrible et intolérable que mènent des millions de personnes sous le colonialisme russe.

64. Le colonialisme russe est d'une forme plus subtile. D'aucuns diront qu'un examen de cette question implique la guerre froide. En fait, la guerre froide est un rideau de fumée que l'Union soviétique n'hésite jamais à utiliser et derrière lequel elle cache son colonialisme, avec tous les crimes hideux qu'il comporte. Le colonialisme russe utilise en outre avec un rare succès des fantoches et des Quislings locaux, appartenant à la même race que les peuples qu'il veut maintenir en captivité. Ainsi, la discrimination raciale qui accompagne généralement le colonialisme d'Europe occidentale n'est pas un aspect important du colonialisme russe.

65. Quoi qu'il en soit, le colonialisme russe est réel. Permettez-moi d'en examiner certains aspects. Le paragraphe 1 de la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale parle de "la sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères". Prenons par exemple les cas de l'Estonie, la Lettonie et la Lituanie. Ces pays ont été autrefois des pays indépendants. Que sont-ils aujourd'hui? N'ont-ils pas été occupés par les impérialistes russes et intégrés de force dans leur empire colonial? Les peuples de ces pays ne sont-ils pas assujettis aujourd'hui à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères? Les droits fondamentaux ne leur sont-ils pas refusés simplement parce qu'ils sont européens et ne sont pas des peuples de couleur? Ces droits doivent-ils leur être refusés parce que, parler de leur sort actuel donne lieu à des accusations de recours à la guerre froide?

66. On lit au paragraphe 2 de la même Déclaration: "Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination." Les peuples d'Ukraine, de Biélorussie, de Hongrie et d'Allemagne de l'Est, par exemple, ont-ils reçu le droit de libre détermination? L'Assemblée générale craint-elle d'examiner cette question parce qu'elle ferait intervenir la guerre froide ou, plutôt, parce que son examen déplairait aux Russes?

67. Pouvons-nous dire que ces peuples, parce qu'ils sont blancs, sont moins fondés à jouir du droit de libre détermination? Non; je soutiens que, lorsque la Déclaration parle de "tous les peuples", il faut entendre tous les peuples y compris les blancs.

68. Il est affirmé au paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la Déclaration:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

N'est-il pas vrai que, du fait du colonialisme russe, les territoires de l'Allemagne, de la Corée et du Viet-Nam, jadis des pays unifiés, ont été divisés ou démembrés? N'est-il pas vrai que les colonialistes russes veulent perpétuer la division de ces pays et, dans le cas de la Corée, en violation flagrante des nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale visant à la réunification de ce pays?

69. Je n'ai examiné, à titre d'exemples, que quelques paragraphes ou principes contenus dans la Déclaration. En fait, chacun des paragraphes de cette déclaration s'applique aussi bien aux pays d'Europe et d'Asie maintenus en captivité sous le colonialisme russe qu'aux pays d'Afrique encore dépendants. Pouvons-nous avoir la conscience tranquille tant que l'Assemblée générale n'assurera pas la mise en œuvre complète de la Déclaration pour ces pays d'Europe ou d'Asie?

70. De l'autre côté de la Première Avenue, en face du bâtiment de l'Assemblée, il est un petit bâtiment au faîte duquel les drapeaux de neuf pays captifs d'Europe sont en berne. Ces neuf drapeaux rappellent chaque jour à l'Assemblée générale que la Déclaration sur le colonialisme n'est pas encore mise en œuvre en Europe. Les revendications des peuples épris de liberté qui mettent leurs drapeaux en berne ne sont pas moins fondées que celles des Angolais en exil au Congo (Léopoldville). Il est d'autres peuples en Europe, en Asie et en Amérique qui connaissent le même sort. Chaque jour, leurs habitants continuent à s'enfuir par milliers de leur patrie vers l'Europe occidentale, Hong-kong, New York et Miami pour y vivre une misérable vie d'exil, à seule fin de respirer l'air de la liberté, et ils le font au péril de leur vie. Ces gens sont quelques-uns parmi les millions de réfugiés, pour emprunter quelques paroles à l'éloquente déclaration du représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, les "millions de réfugiés partout dans le monde qui languissent loin de leur patrie et aspirent à rentrer dans leurs foyers" [1168ème séance, par. 166]. Les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale ne pourront avoir leur signification pleine et entière tant que l'indépendance et la liberté ne seront pas rendues à ces peuples.

71. Ma délégation fait donc sienne l'opinion déjà exprimée à l'Assemblée générale selon laquelle le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept doit poursuivre ses travaux. Nous reconnaissons aussi qu'il devrait poursuivre ses efforts pour aider en premier lieu à décoloniser les pays d'Afrique qui sont encore sous domination coloniale. Mais ma délégation croit fermement que le Comité spécial devrait étendre ses activités aux pays qui sont tombés sous le joug du colonialisme russe en Europe, en Asie et dans d'autres parties du monde. Lorsque ces pays seront décolonisés à leur tour, l'Assemblée générale pourra alors se présenter devant le tribunal de l'histoire et dire avec fierté qu'elle s'est acquittée des obligations qui lui incombaient en vertu de la Charte. Cette œuvre accomplie, les Nations Unies auront rempli leur mission historique: elles seront, pour emprunter de nouveau une expression au représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, "les Nations Unies d'un monde libre".

72. M. Abdul Monem RIFA'I (Jordanie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Conformément à la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale, le Président de la seizième session ordinaire a désigné les 17 membres du Comité spécial, chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et de s'acquitter des tâches indiquées dans cette résolution. Un rapport de près de 600 pages sur les travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept portant sur la période allant du 20 février 1962 au 19 septembre 1962 est soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée [A/5238]. Avant d'étudier les différents aspects de ce rapport et de présenter des observations sur son contenu, je tiens à rendre hommage au Rapporteur du Comité spécial, M. Nahmuddine Rifai (Syrie), pour les louables efforts qu'il a déployés dans la préparation de cet utile rapport.

73. Il est aisé de se rendre compte, à la lecture de ce rapport, de la persévérance avec laquelle les membres du Comité se sont acquittés de leur tâche avec dévouement et avec un sens profond de leurs responsabilités. En sept mois, le Comité a tenu 117 séances, dont 18 en Afrique. Au cours de ces séances, il a examiné la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance à 12 territoires totalisant près de 29 millions d'habitants. C'est là un travail impressionnant dont nous devons féliciter chaleureusement les membres du Comité, son distingué président, M. Jha (Inde), et son vice-président, M. Coulibaly (Mali).

74. Quant au rapport, le mieux est selon moi de le lire à la lumière de la résolution qui portait création du Comité spécial. Cette résolution, dans son esprit et dans sa lettre, était destinée à assurer sans restriction la réalisation rapide des objectifs de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance et sur la décolonisation. Un point important de la résolution 1654 (XVI) est qu'elle n'imposait pas des modalités ou formes de procédure particulières, ni ne restreignait le mandat donné quant à l'application de la Déclaration. Elle ne limitait pas l'action à une région particulière, à un certain type de territoire non autonome, et n'imposait pas une période définie ou un ordre de priorité déterminé. Tout cela était laissé à la discrétion du Comité spécial, qui a élaboré sa méthode et a organisé lui-même ses travaux. En ce qui concerne la constitution du Comité lui-même, la résolution n'a pas défini non plus la durée du mandat de ses membres.

75. Cependant, le Comité spécial a pu arrêter une bonne méthode de travail. En parvenant à un accord sur ce point, le Comité a eu des discussions fructueuses et utiles. Les divergences d'opinion quant aux fonctions du Comité et à sa méthode de travail, qui sont mentionnées au chapitre premier du rapport, ont été aplanies dans un esprit de compréhension et le Comité a pu prendre des décisions acceptables sur les questions du règlement intérieur, du rassemblement de renseignements, des pétitions écrites et de l'audition de pétitionnaires, des groupes de visite, de la méthode d'examen de la situation des territoires et des relations avec d'autres organes des Nations Unies.

76. Ma délégation tient à se déclarer satisfaite de l'objectivité dont ont fait preuve les membres du Comité dans l'organisation de leurs travaux. Je voudrais cependant faire certaines observations sur ce point au sujet de la question de l'examen de la situation des territoires et de celle des groupes de visite; ces questions sont traitées au paragraphe 112 du chapitre premier du rapport.

77. En ce qui concerne les territoires, le Comité a décidé que priorité serait donnée aux territoires d'Afrique, ce que ma délégation approuve particulièrement.

78. Cet ordre de priorité a été adopté pour les raisons suivantes qui sont exposées au paragraphe 149 du chapitre premier du rapport:

"Si le Comité spécial a décidé d'examiner par priorité la situation dans les territoires situés sur le continent africain, c'est parce qu'il a estimé que c'est en Afrique que le plus grand nombre d'individus continuent de vivre sous un régime colonial, que c'est en Afrique que l'on trouve encore les plus grands territoires coloniaux et que c'est enfin en Afrique que l'on rencontre les problèmes les plus difficiles."

79. Dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV), il est question de l'octroi de l'indépendance et de la liberté à tous les peuples de la terre et à tous les territoires non autonomes sans aucune distinction, condition ni réserve. Ce principe de l'indépendance universelle a été établi parce qu'on a reconnu pleinement que tous les peuples assujettis de la terre désirent ardemment conquérir leur liberté et gagner leur indépendance. Le désir de la dignité humaine et la fièvre de la liberté ont enflammé tous les cœurs et tous les esprits. Ceux qui ne concrétisent pas leurs sentiments par des effusions de sang et des sacrifices les expriment par des larmes et des soupirs. Tous les peuples sont égaux dans leur désir de liberté et d'indépendance et tous doivent avoir des possibilités égales d'accéder à cette indépendance. Ma délégation appuie donc l'avis exprimé par le représentant de la Guinée [131^{ème} séance] qui a proposé de fixer une date précise et rapprochée pour achever l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les peuples de la terre.

80. Je comprends que, pour faciliter sa tâche, le Comité spécial devait établir un programme pour la mener à bien. Ce programme, pour reprendre les termes du rapport, a été vertical plutôt qu'horizontal. En d'autres mots, il s'agissait de prendre chaque cas en particulier et de l'examiner en détail. Ma délégation estime que les travaux du Comité spécial, en ce qui concerne la mise en application de la Déclaration d'indépendance, pouvaient se faire à la fois dans un sens vertical et horizontal.

81. On constate, d'après son rapport, que le Comité spécial a créé notamment un Sous-Comité du questionnaire et un Sous-Comité des pétitions. Ces dispositions ont été prises en vue d'examiner tel ou tel cas par priorité et d'en étudier les différents aspects, mais le Comité pourrait ainsi mettre des années à venir à bout de sa tâche.

82. De l'avis de ma délégation, le Comité spécial aurait pu arrêter d'autres dispositions pour couvrir des domaines plus étendus. Il aurait pu créer d'autres sous-comités pour mettre en œuvre la Déclaration dans d'autres continents et régions, au lieu de se limiter à une seule région et de devoir lui accorder la priorité, en laissant les autres territoires sur la liste d'attente.

83. A cet égard, le rapport mentionne ce qu'il appelle les questions de plus grande importance et les questions d'importance relative. Pour ce qui est de l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les peuples et territoires non autonomes, nous ne devrions pas établir une distinction ou une classification entre ce qui est important et ce qui l'est moins. Les problèmes diffèrent bien entendu selon leur importance politique et leurs répercussions politiques, mais cela ne devrait pas avoir d'effet sur le principe fondamental selon lequel l'indépendance doit être accordée à tous ceux qui en sont privés, qu'ils connaissent des crises politiques ou non. Le rapport mentionne aussi des questions qui menacent la paix internationale. Le Comité des Dix-Sept ne devrait pas, selon moi, prendre pour seul critère de ses travaux la menace à la paix internationale.

84. Ma délégation considère que le Comité spécial est expressément prié, au paragraphe 4 du dispositif de la résolution 1654 (XVI), "de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre".

85. Nous avons besoin de savoir, par exemple, où en est la décolonisation depuis la promulgation de la Déclaration et ce qui reste encore à faire dans ce domaine. Nous avons besoin de savoir quels sont, dans le monde, les territoires dont les peuples n'ont pas encore obtenu leur liberté et acquis leur indépendance et dans quelles conditions ils vivent. Nous avons besoin de savoir quelle est l'attitude et quelles sont les réactions des puissances coloniales quant à la décolonisation et de savoir dans quelle mesure elles sont disposées à mettre fin au régime colonial. Nous avons besoin de ces renseignements préalables pour nous permettre de poursuivre l'application de la Déclaration dans le cadre d'une opération d'ensemble et immédiate.

86. Nous aurions donc aimé que le rapport mentionne les régions et les nations qui ont été soit oubliées soit privées de la sollicitude et de la sympathie de la communauté mondiale des nations libres. Nous devons commencer à leur donner vie et énergie. Le représentant de l'URSS a déclaré que 88 territoires, groupant au total 70 millions d'habitants, étaient encore sous la domination coloniale. Dans une lettre adressée au Président du Comité spécial, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a dressé un état des territoires qui avaient été administrés par ce pays et avaient obtenu l'autonomie et l'indépendance. Le rapport lui-même ne présente pas une telle étude. Il y est dit:

"Le Comité spécial, après avoir décidé d'étudier en priorité la situation dans les territoires d'Afrique, n'a pas jugé utile, dès le début de ses travaux, de dresser une liste complète de tous les territoires qui relèvent de sa compétence, bien que l'établissement d'une telle liste puisse être nécessaire par la suite." [A/5238, chap. 1er, par. 151.]

87. Mon pays appartient à une région arabe dont certaines parties situées sur les côtes de la péninsule Arabe ne sont pas encore autonomes et subissent toujours une domination coloniale. La patrie arabe étant une entité unique, la domination étrangère sur une quelconque de ses parties pourrait constituer une menace à l'indépendance et à l'unité de l'ensemble. Les Arabes ont payé cher leur indépendance. De l'est à l'ouest, du Tigre à l'Atlantique, la clameur de leur lutte nationale continue à se faire entendre. Pour répondre à leurs aspirations nationales, l'agression armée étrangère en Palestine doit cesser et l'indépendance de tous les territoires nationaux doit être obtenue. Ce problème préoccupe vivement les délégations arabes au moment où l'Assemblée discute la question de l'indépendance et de la décolonisation.

88. L'élargissement du champ des activités du Comité spécial pourrait conduire à envisager d'augmenter le nombre de ses membres. Ma délégation estime qu'une telle augmentation se justifie et je désire me réserver le droit de reprendre la parole sur ce point en tenant compte de l'évolution du débat.

89. La deuxième question sur laquelle j'ai une observation à faire est celle des groupes de visite. Je reconnais que le Comité a agi sagement en envoyant des groupes de visite dans certains pays quand cela était nécessaire. Les réunions que le Comité a tenues en Afrique l'ont rendu plus accessible aux pétitionnaires et lui ont permis de prouver de façon plus concrète qu'il se préoccupe des aspirations légitimes des peuples africains. Le Comité a pu observer de près les aspects déplaisants du colonialisme en Afrique et se rendre compte des aspirations des Africains à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté.

90. La résolution 1654 (XVI) n'a pas établi de conditions ou de limites aux réunions du Comité en dehors du Siège de l'Organisation. Le paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la résolution autorise le Comité spécial à se réunir en tout autre lieu que le Siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, lorsque cela pourrait être nécessaire pour lui permettre de s'acquitter efficacement de ses fonctions. Ma délégation estime cependant qu'une telle autorisation devrait être définie et réglementée avec plus de précision.

91. Un point important sur lequel je désire attirer l'attention est l'observation faite par le Comité spécial au paragraphe 152 du chapitre premier de son rapport, sur ses relations avec d'autres organes des Nations Unies qui agissent eux aussi pour la liquidation du colonialisme. Ma délégation se rend bien compte de ce que le Comité appelle le "danger de doubles emplois et par conséquent de gaspillage d'efforts et d'argent". Sur ce point, nous examinerons très attentivement la suggestion que le Secrétaire général par intérim a faite dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1] au sujet de la possibilité de combiner tous les travaux touchant ce domaine, sous l'égide du Comité spécial.

92. Je ferai maintenant quelques brèves observations de caractère général sur les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial, relatives aux territoires dont il s'est occupé. Il va sans dire que les projets de résolution figurant au rapport représentent les conclusions du Comité et les mesures qu'il recommande à l'Assemblée générale en ce qui concerne les territoires africains dont la situation a été examinée et où le régime colonial et la discrimination raciale se manifestent sous leurs formes les plus odieuses. Ma délégation qui rejette toute forme de colonialisme en Afrique et ailleurs votera en faveur de ces recommandations, ainsi que de toute autre proposition qui pourrait contribuer à briser définitivement le joug du colonialisme.

93. En ce qui concerne la situation en Rhodésie du Sud, nous constatons que l'Assemblée générale a adopté récemment deux résolutions [1755 (XVII) et 1760 (XVII)] qui ont été votées à une large majorité après de longs débats à la Quatrième Commission et à l'Assemblée générale. Ma délégation n'a pas manqué de s'associer aux efforts déployés pour l'application des principes du droit et de la démocratie dans ce territoire africain.

94. En ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Nord, le rapport du Comité spécial montre que la situation dans ce territoire est loin d'être satisfaisante. Une élection a eu lieu récemment en vertu d'une constitution qui, selon le Comité spécial, n'est pas conforme au paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, a un caractère discriminatoire et est contraire aux principes fondamentaux de libre détermination. La situation en Rhodésie du Nord est clairement exposée dans le rapport du Comité. Ma délégation appuie sans réserve les vœux et les aspirations nationales de l'écrasante majorité africaine de ce territoire.

95. Au Nyassaland, la situation montre que les Africains sont déjà en majorité dans les organes législatif et exécutif. Ma délégation espère, comme le Comité spécial, que les pourparlers entre le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et M. Banda permettront de fixer une date rapprochée pour l'indépendance du Nyassaland. Nous espérons aussi que les vœux des habitants du territoire qui repoussent la Fédération d'Afrique centrale seront réalisés.

96. Pour ce qui est du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland, ma délégation se préoccupe beaucoup de la situation dans ces territoires, telle qu'elle est décrite dans le rapport. On n'y fait pas grand-chose pour y mettre en place des institutions représentatives et l'on craint fort que ces territoires ne soient absorbés par la République sud-africaine.

97. Ma délégation a suivi avec intérêt les événements qui ont eu lieu récemment à Zanzibar et les efforts déployés par le Comité spécial. Nous espérons vivement qu'un accord interviendra bientôt sur le système électoral et sur la date des élections de manière que l'indépendance ne soit pas retardée plus longtemps.

98. Quant à la Guyane britannique, nous avons appris que les négociations qui ont repris récemment à Londres n'ont pas donné de résultats positifs. Nous demandons instamment que l'on fixe une date proche pour l'accession du territoire à l'indépendance et nous souhaitons que les parties en cause aboutissent le plus tôt possible à un accord sur les élections et le système électoral.

99. Au sujet de l'Angola et du Mozambique, point n'est besoin pour moi de répéter que ma délégation est profondément préoccupée comme le sont, en vérité, toutes les délégations ici présentes par la situation grave qui règne dans ces deux territoires africains, vastes et importants, dont la population totale est de plus de 11 millions d'habitants. Le refus opiniâtre du Gouvernement portugais de reconnaître ses devoirs et ses responsabilités, son mépris persistant des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et la manière flagrante dont il viole les principes d'une conduite civilisée exigent des mesures décisives. Nous prendrons donc pleinement en considération les mesures proposées par le Comité spécial au paragraphe 9 du chapitre VII et au paragraphe 44 du chapitre XI et aux recommandations pertinentes. Cependant, nous préférons ne traiter le problème de l'Angola que lorsque l'Assemblée examinera le point 29 de l'ordre du jour.

100. En ce qui concerne le Sud-Ouest africain, la question a déjà été examinée par la Quatrième Commission. Ma délégation note avec satisfaction l'unanimité avec laquelle la résolution a été adoptée par la Commission. Elle espère que le Gouvernement sud-africain cédera devant les vœux unanimes de l'Organisation internationale.

101. Quant au Kenya, nous notons avec satisfaction les progrès qui ont été réalisés dans ce territoire vers l'accession à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté. Nous sommes convaincus qu'une fois cette dernière étape franchie le Kenya réalisera pleinement ses aspirations nationales.

102. Pour ce qui est d'Aden, l'Assemblée devrait accorder une attention particulière à ce territoire arabe en raison de son importante position stratégique. Le Royaume-Uni utilise la colonie d'Aden comme base militaire centrale dans son système de défense et menace ainsi toute la région.

103. En faisant entrer Aden dans la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud, on perpétue son statut colonial. La Fédération a été imposée contre la volonté de la population d'Aden, qui n'a pas eu encore la possibilité d'exprimer ses aspirations nationales. La situation d'Aden et son statut posent un problème si grave qu'il réclame un examen approfondi et immédiat. Nous prions instamment le Comité spécial d'accorder une attention particulière à la question d'Aden.

104. M. SYLLA (Madagascar): Nous voici maintenant au cœur de l'une des plus importantes questions portées à l'ordre du jour de la dix-septième session. Les orateurs qui m'ont précédé ont été unanimes à souligner la grande signification de la décision que nous allons prendre: celle de traduire dans les faits l'immortelle Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) que, dans un grand élan de générosité, l'Assemblée générale a adoptée le 14 décembre 1960, et où elle "proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations".

105. Après avoir, dans la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, affirmé la dignité et les droits imprescriptibles de la personne humaine, l'Orga-nisation, poursuivant son œuvre grandiose d'émancipation, a, par sa résolution 1514 (XV), établi le droit des peuples à la liberté, au libre choix de leurs destinées, en un mot à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance.

106. Au cours de sa seizième session, notre assemblée, inquiète de voir que la libération des peuples colonisés ne s'effectuait pas au rythme qu'elle espérait, a adopté, le 27 novembre 1961, une nouvelle résolution [1654 (XVI)] où elle réaffirmait les principes qu'elle avait posés un an auparavant et demandait instamment aux Etats intéressés: "d'agir sans plus tarder afin d'assurer scrupuleusement l'application et la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration". Cette résolution a décidé la création d'un Comité spécial de 17 membres chargé d'assurer l'application de la Déclaration, et c'est le rapport de ce comité [A/5238] que nous sommes présentement appelés à examiner.

107. Madagascar a eu l'honneur d'être désigné par M. Mongi Sl'm, alors président de l'Assemblée générale, pour faire partie de ce comité. Ma délégation a participé de son mieux à ses travaux, aussi bien à ceux qui se sont déroulés pendant sept mois à New York qu'à ceux des sessions spéciales tenues en Afrique. C'est dire que mon gouvernement est pleinement d'accord sur les conclusions du rapport et apportera sa pleine et entière contribution aux mesures qui seront décidées ici pour en assurer l'application rapide et complète.

108. Madagascar, jadis indépendante, a perdu sa souveraineté nationale en 1896. Elle l'a regagnée en 1960, après de paisibles et amicales négociations avec la France, et lorsque, après 20 mois d'une période transitoire d'autonomie interne, elle a jugé que les conditions d'une accession à l'indépendance totale étaient remplies. Si, malgré quelques périodes difficiles, Madagascar a, de 1896 à 1960, poursuivi son ascension sociale et économique, je puis ici attester que sa population a toujours conservé vivace son aspiration à l'indépendance, et a accueilli avec enthousiasme l'affirmation solennelle donnée par la France, en 1944, à la suite de la Conférence de Brazzaville que ses buts étaient uniquement de conduire les peuples dont elle avait la charge à la libre gestion de leurs affaires. Et, sous l'impulsion du général de Gaulle, fidèle à ses promesses et à son idéal, la France a libéré, en moins de huit ans, 15 pays africains et Madagascar.

109. Si je rappelle ces faits, c'est pour montrer aux peuples colonisateurs quelle est la voie dans laquelle ils doivent s'engager pour faire droit à la requête instantane que leur adresse la conscience universelle. Le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept leur trace les méthodes à suivre pour cela. Il faut qu'ils s'y plient. Il faut qu'ils comprennent qu'un tournant de la vie des peuples doit être franchi, que le cours de l'histoire est irréversible.

110. Tout homme est l'égal de tout autre homme, et, quelle que soit sa couleur, il a droit à la liberté. Que l'on ne vienne pas objecter que certaines tribus sont encore à l'état sauvage, qu'elles ne sont pas mûres pour l'indépendance, qu'elles ne sont satisfaites de leur sort, alors qu'en réalité elles sont soumises à un régime d'asservissement. Etant de bonne foi, nous reconnaissons que certains peuples colonisés d'Afrique sont encore arriérés. Est-ce de leur faute ou de celle de leurs colonisateurs qui, sciemment, les maintiennent dans l'analphabétisme, car ils savent que l'homme instruit, évolué, est à même de pouvoir chercher à se libérer, en portant sa cause devant les plus hautes instances? N'est-ce pas la honte de notre siècle de voir l'apartheid, c'est-à-dire la supériorité d'un homme sur un autre homme déterminée par le simple critère de la peau, le blanc étant le maître et le noir le valet voué aux travaux serviles, le premier exploitant l'autre à des fins mesquines: l'appât au gain, la recherche de la richesse et du confort? Comment peut-on concevoir un tel déséquilibre des peuples, une telle inégalité dans les droits de l'homme? Oui, comment peut-on, dans ces conditions, aspirer à la paix universelle?

111. Pour nous, Malgaches, nous pensons à la possibilité de la coexistence. Depuis notre indépendance, tous les étrangers vivant sur notre sol jouissent des mêmes libertés humaines que nous. Pourquoi n'en serait-il pas ainsi dans les autres pays où les noirs, en plein XXème siècle, sont encore opprimés? C'est un appel à la fraternité des hommes que Madagascar adresse à l'Afrique du Sud et au Portugal. Les peuples sous le joug colonial continueront la lutte pour leur émancipation. Ils n'auront de cesse que lorsqu'ils l'auront obtenue. Madagascar et tous les autres Etats épris de justice et d'égalité les y aideront.

112. Le Royaume-Uni a, pour sa part, compris et admis cela. Il a à son actif une impressionnante liste de pays libérés par lui depuis la dernière guerre et, tout récemment encore, ma délégation a salué à cette même place, avec vous tous, l'admission du Tanganyika, de la Trinité et Tobago, de l'Ouganda. Le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept montre que cette œuvre n'est pas achevée. Nous insistons amicalement mais fermement pour que, malgré les difficultés que nous ne méconnaissons pas, le Royaume-Uni applique les conclusions du Comité des Dix-Sept, non seulement pour la Rhodésie du Sud, mais encore pour les autres territoires africains et pour la Guyane britannique, visés également dans le rapport.

113. Mais ici apparaît la différence fondamentale entre l'attitude du Royaume-Uni, qui entend appliquer les principes de la Charte et les accepte loyalement, et celle des autres Etats, notamment l'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal qui, eux, répudient publiquement ces principes et refusent d'admettre que les territoires qu'ils administrent ont droit à l'indépendance et doivent y accéder dans les meilleurs délais.

114. Il ne faut pas réduire l'entreprise généreuse de décolonisation dans laquelle notre organisation s'est résolument engagée à une simple question de politique. En aucun cas, elle ne devrait servir de prétexte à des attitudes démagogiques qui ne tromperaient personne, car nul n'ignore ici combien est ardue notre tâche et combien de problèmes délicats doivent être résolus afin que des échecs sanglants ne soient pas la rançon d'une hâte injustifiée.

115. Notre but final n'est pas de poser des postulats inapplicables, mais de concilier la liberté politique des peuples à libérer avec leur bonheur, l'épanouissement de leur personnalité, un exercice paisible et harmonieux de la liberté reconquise. Des questions techniques se posent. Chaque cas doit être examiné dans son propre contexte. C'est au Comité des Dix-Sept, c'est en dernière analyse à nous tous, Membres de l'Organisation, qu'incombe le choix des méthodes et la fixation des étapes. Et enfin la décision finale doit appartenir aux peuples colonisés, par la voie de l'autodétermination.

116. La délégation malgache estime que, sur un point aussi primordial de la Charte des Nations Unies et de l'idéal qui nous rassemble à l'Organisation, aucun compromis n'est possible. Tous les Etats doivent obéir à nos résolutions et les appliquer car elles reflètent la conscience du monde, et notre organisation doit user de tous les moyens à sa disposition pour les y contraindre en cas de besoin. Cette attitude de la délégation malgache est conforme à celle prise, lors de la récente Conférence de Libreville^{3/}, par les 12 Etats qui forment l'Union africaine et malgache.

117. Avant que l'indépendance soit octroyée aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, les colonisateurs doivent les préparer, afin qu'ils soient à même d'assumer les lourdes tâches qu'entraîne la gestion d'un Etat. N'est-ce pas justement ce qui a été fait pour les Etats d'Afrique d'expression française, où l'on est passé d'un régime à un autre sans rupture d'équilibre et sans heurt et où jamais la paix n'a été troublée? Cette préparation des peuples avant l'indépendance est nécessaire, mais elle exige un complément indispensable: l'assistance au nouvel Etat indépendant jusqu'à ce qu'il ait atteint sa maturité, et cela sous toutes les formes: assistance technique et assistance financière, notamment.

118. Notre attitude répond enfin aux sentiments profonds du peuple malgache tout entier qui, sous l'égide de son président, Philibert Tsiranana, entend prendre une part active à la grande œuvre de libération humaine que nous poursuivons au sein de l'Organisation.

119. Pour nous Malgaches, cette libération humaine s'applique non seulement aux peuples noirs d'Afrique encore colonisés, mais aussi aux hommes d'autres races, d'autres couleurs, tenus sous le joug du néo-colonialisme. Ceux-là aussi, qu'ils soient de race blanche ou jaune, ont droit à la liberté et à l'autodétermination. Il ne faut pas que des hommes puissent, par la force, imposer à d'autres hommes une situation de fait qu'ils sont astreints à subir contre leur gré et qui ne répond pas à leur légitime désir de vivre comme ils l'entendent.

120. Pour terminer, je tiens, ici, à donner l'assurance que nous apporterons notre contribution aux efforts des 110 Etats Membres de notre organisation pour promouvoir le bien-être de tous les hommes.

121. M. CHANDERLI (Algérie): Dans la longue lutte de l'homme pour ses libertés, il y a eu des étapes particulièrement importantes qu'il faut marquer d'une pierre blanche, car elles représentent des victoires essentielles. Parmi ces moments historiques qui jalonnent cette marche triomphale vers la conquête des libertés fondamentales, la Déclaration adoptée par notre assemblée sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux occupe une place de choix. C'est à la suite de cette déclaration, et pour en traduire dans les faits les principes généreux, que nous avons décidé de constituer l'an dernier un Comité spécial [résolution 1654 (XVI)]. C'est le rapport de ce comité [A/5238] que nous examinons aujourd'hui. Je voudrais à cette occasion rendre hommage au Comité des Dix-Sept et à son rapporteur, car, en vérité, ils ont accompli une tâche considérable qui va contribuer efficacement à la mise en application de la Déclaration générale sur le colonialisme. En effet, le colonialisme moribond n'a cependant pas disparu de la surface de la terre, et nous en trouvons, notamment en Afrique, des survivances abominables.

^{3/} Conférence des chefs d'Etat africains et malgache, réunie du 10 au 13 septembre 1962.

122. L'Algérie combattante, qui a été le prestigieux fer de lance de la lutte contre le colonialisme en Afrique, n'a pas à rappeler ici ses positions fondamentales à ce sujet. Bien plus, à l'occasion de l'admission de notre pays à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, le Premier Ministre du Gouvernement algérien a indiqué avec force, dans son discours [1147^{ème} séance], que la pierre angulaire de la politique de l'Algérie indépendante serait avant tout la lutte contre le colonialisme. C'est dire avec quelle attention nous suivons les travaux de l'Assemblée générale dans ce domaine et, particulièrement, ceux du Comité des Dix-Sept.

123. L'Algérie, son peuple et son gouvernement n'épargneront aucun effort, sous quelque forme que ce soit, pour contribuer à la liquidation rapide et définitive du colonialisme. En Afrique, où trop de peuples et trop de territoires sont encore sous la domination étrangère, nous comptons apporter, à tous nos frères luttant pour leur dignité, la solidarité agissante de l'Algérie. C'est pourquoi nous ne croyons pas nécessaire de nous étendre ici sur nos intentions et sur notre volonté d'action. Elles sont connues et, bien plus, nous avons déjà eu l'honneur d'apporter une aide concrète, directe dans certains cas. Nous nous proposons d'accroître ce soutien et de faire en sorte qu'il soit aussi efficace que possible.

124. Nous avons devant nous le volumineux rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept; c'est un document remarquablement instructif, car non seulement il rend compte des progrès réalisés, mais également des difficultés rencontrées dans l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Décidés à coopérer activement à l'entreprise de décolonisation, nous éviterons de rétenir l'attention de l'Assemblée par une analyse détaillée des questions soulevées dans ce rapport. Les orateurs qui ont traité de ce sujet ont déjà exprimé les idées qui sont souvent les nôtres. Nos options étant connues, il est donc inutile de répéter ce que beaucoup de nos amis ont déjà dit, ici, et tout récemment, les représentants de la Guinée [1169^{ème} séance] et de l'Irak [1170^{ème} séance] dans des interventions magistrales sur ce point particulier de notre ordre du jour. Nous nous contenterons donc de faire une suggestion pratique qui permettrait peut-être d'accélérer la mise en application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme en fonction de l'activité du Comité des Dix-Sept.

125. En effet, ma délégation aura l'occasion d'intervenir, ici même, ou devant la Quatrième Commission suivant le cas, pour exprimer son point de vue au sujet de chacun des territoires qui ont fait l'objet des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Qu'il me soit cependant permis de dire, dans le cadre de cette intervention de caractère général, que les 10 chapitres du rapport du Comité relatif à 10 territoires différents traduisent une remarquable similarité quant aux problèmes auxquels les peuples de ces territoires ont à faire face. Dans chaque cas, on relève le maintien scandaleux de pratiques de discrimination et de persécutions raciales, l'absence de libertés politiques fondamentales, la continuation de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme et les privilèges exorbitants d'intérêts économiques étrangers; enfin, des machinations inadmissibles tendant à retarder injustement l'accession à l'indépendance de ces territoires. Les Nations Unies se doivent, dans notre esprit, d'adopter une attitude plus ferme pour mettre fin à ces pratiques indignes de la Charte qui nous lie.

126. Il a été souvent question, au cours des années récentes, du problème de la date d'accession à l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux, et c'est à ce sujet que nous nous permettrons de faire une suggestion pratique. Comme on le sait, des propositions multiples ont été faites à ce sujet tendant à fixer une date précise, plus ou moins lointaine, pour la libération de ces territoires. Les propositions avancées à cette tribune comme devant la Quatrième Commission avaient ceci de commun qu'elles envisageaient la même date pour toutes les colonies ou territoires dépendants. Nous souhaiterions apporter un élément réaliste à ces propositions qui ont, pour la plupart, soulevé des objections nombreuses.

127. Nous suggérons que le Comité des Dix-Sept soit chargé par l'Assemblée générale d'étudier le cas particulier de chaque territoire et, compte tenu de ses observations, de proposer une date précise applicable à chaque territoire pour son accession à l'indépendance. Nous pouvons par exemple, sans trop de difficultés, prévoir que le Comité des Dix-Sept pourrait proposer formellement une date extrêmement rapprochée pour l'indépendance de Zanzibar et celle de la Guyane britannique. Il pourrait, de la même façon, étudier le cas d'autres territoires, s'entourer de toutes les informations nécessaires, procéder à des consultations utiles et proposer des dates limites qui tiendraient compte avec réalisme de la situation politique et économique du territoire considéré.

128. Ces propositions, soumises à l'Assemblée générale, pourraient être acceptées ou amendées après discussion et feraient admettre l'objet de mise en demeure si nécessaire, en assurant que les puissances coloniales ne soient pas toujours consentantes.

129. J'ajouterai, comme suggestion complémentaire à ce qui précède, que le Comité des Dix-Sept, justement afin de s'informer et de consulter, devrait multiplier les missions de visite soit dans les territoires coloniaux, soit dans les capitales des puissances coloniales. L'exemple de la mission du Comité des Dix-Sept à Londres est significatif quant aux résultats positifs qui peuvent être atteints de cette manière. En outre, le Comité devrait spécialiser certains de ses membres, par petits groupes éventuellement, dans les différents problèmes qu'il examine, afin d'accélérer son travail. En effet, si les 17 membres du Comité devaient étudier, les uns après les autres, les différentes questions soumises à leur examen, nous craignons que le temps dont ils auraient besoin pour ce faire ne soit extrêmement long et qu'ils ne puissent terminer leurs travaux aussi rapidement que l'Assemblée le souhaite.

130. Voilà des idées que nous livrons aux réflexions de l'Assemblée, avec l'espoir qu'elles contribueront à faciliter la tâche de ceux qui, en notre nom et avec nous, travaillent à résoudre les problèmes posés par la survivance de la domination coloniale, notamment en Afrique.

131. Pour compléter cette intervention, j'ajouterai un mot sur la question de l'élargissement éventuel du Comité des Dix-Sept. Ma délégation n'a pas d'objection, a priori, à une telle initiative. Nous croyons, cependant, que l'on ne devrait augmenter le nombre des membres du Comité que si cela était vraiment jugé nécessaire.

132. L'œuvre de décolonisation est sans doute la plus noble des tâches que notre organisation a choisi courageusement d'entreprendre. La liquidation du colonialisme, nous le savons, contribuera largement à réduire les tensions internationales. Ce faisant, nous aurons rapproché l'heure où un monde pacifié ne se souviendra qu'à travers ses livres d'histoire qu'il a connu une période dominée par la tragique aberration de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, de la domination, du racisme et de l'injustice sociale. L'une des pages les plus sombres de l'histoire de l'humanité aura alors été tournée à jamais. Mais d'ici là nous devons demeurer vigilants et continuer sans relâche le combat nécessaire pour la libération de l'homme. Aucun d'entre nous n'est vraiment et ne sera vraiment libre aussi longtemps qu'un peuple et un territoire demeureront sous la domination étrangère.

133. Ceci est en tout cas le sentiment profond du peuple et du gouvernement algériens. Et nous n'aurons de cesse que lorsque tous les hommes de la Terre seront libérés de l'oppression et de l'injustice.

134. M. CISSE (Sénégal): L'importance du rapport [A/5238] dont l'Assemblée générale se trouve saisie aujourd'hui ne saurait échapper à ma délégation, qui fut parmi les promoteurs de la résolution 1514 (XV) sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. C'est une tâche des plus importantes que de faire le point de la décolonisation depuis la date à jamais mémorable du 14 décembre 1960, à laquelle notre assemblée a adopté la résolution 1514 (XV) donnant ainsi à sa politique une orientation nouvelle, conformément à ce que l'on est convenu depuis d'appeler "l'esprit de Bandoung" et qui devait soulever de la part des peuples opprimés, asservis et épris de dignité et d'indépendance, une vague d'espoir et d'enthousiasme. Les termes de la résolution résonnent encore à nos oreilles. Jamais l'Organisation n'avait fait un pas aussi décisif pour promouvoir le respect de sa charte et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, ni même reformulé avec autant de netteté et de vigueur les principes directeurs de son action dans le monde.

135. Et les peuples coloniaux ne s'y sont pas trompés; la résolution 1514 (XV) a sonné le glas du colonialisme, annonçant des temps nouveaux, un monde de dignité, d'indépendance, d'harmonie et de paix. Mieux, et c'est là un facteur d'une portée inestimable, les pays colonisés qui luttent pour leur indépendance nationale savent qu'ils ne sont plus seuls, que leur cause est juste et que la conscience internationale, que notre organisation incarne, s'est émue et jouera en leur faveur pour hâter leur libération du joug odieux du colonialisme. On a dit, et cela est certainement vrai, que la résolution sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux constitue une nouvelle charte de l'action des Nations Unies. Cela est évident puisque, par l'adoption de cette résolution, l'Organisation a abandonné les vœux pieux pour déclarer que la pratique du colonialisme compromet son œuvre et jure avec les principes mêmes sur lesquels elle repose, et en a décrété la fin immédiate.

136. Les résultats ne se sont pas fait attendre. Pour s'en convaincre, il suffit de parcourir du regard notre assemblée pour qui il est devenu une tradition, à chaque session, de saluer l'admission de nouveaux Membres qui ont fraîchement échappé au joug du colonialisme. Il suffit aussi de parcourir la salle pour se rendre compte que les absents à ce rendez-vous universel sont nombreux. Dans la seule Afrique, 100 millions d'individus ne sont pas représentés ici. L'afflux des pétitionnaires d'Afrique, comme des autres parties du monde, est aussi une preuve que la colonisation est encore vivace, qu'elle a conservé toutes ses forces, et que l'Assemblée doit redoubler de vigilance, persister dans son effort et donner les derniers coups — ceux-là mortels — à ce monstre. C'est là l'intérêt du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept.

137. Avant tout, ma délégation tient à adresser aux membres de ce comité ses félicitations les plus vives pour le travail considérable qu'ils ont accompli. L'immensité de leur tâche serait, s'il en était encore besoin, la preuve que la résolution 1514 (XV) n'a reçu qu'un début d'application. Nous nous devons aussi de féliciter les membres du Comité d'avoir, dans leur plus grande majorité, examiné la situation des pays encore dépendants et formulé des recommandations dans l'esprit de la résolution précitée.

138. L'examen même partiel du rapport montre clairement que la décolonisation en est arrivée à un stade ultime, mais qui n'en requerra pas moins que nous redoublions d'efforts. L'Organisation se heurte au bastion du colonialisme: les colonies de peuplement en Afrique centrale et en Afrique orientale. Les puissances administrantes se sont hâtées de promouvoir l'accession à l'indépendance des colonies d'exploitation, conformément à la résolution 1514 (XV). Cependant, à la lumière des événements récents survenus dans les Rhodésies, on est amené à penser que c'est pour mieux s'opposer à la vague de libération qui secoue le monde que l'on a accordé l'indépendance aux colonies d'exploitation, pour concentrer les efforts pour la résistance dans celles qui restent.

139. Les Rhodésies et le Nyassaland constituent un exemple typique; le colonialisme le plus aveugle y livre ses dernières batailles avec l'énergie du désespoir. Car, en fait, qu'est-ce que ces régimes où 200 000 ou 300 000 blancs gouvernent au nom de 3 millions de noirs, où, pour voter, il faut jouir d'un certain revenu et avoir atteint un certain degré d'instruction, alors que le gouvernement ne néglige rien pour empêcher les noirs de remplir les conditions du cens ?

140. Le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud est des plus familiers à notre organisation: une poignée de colons y multiplient les subterfuges et les astuces constitutionnels pour empêcher la population africaine de jouir des bienfaits de l'indépendance et perpétuer ainsi leur domination sur le pays. L'Assemblée connaît les machinations constitutionnelles des colons d'Afrique centrale: les lois électorales capacitaires et censitaires qu'inspire une odieuse volonté de domination et qui excluent du corps électoral la majorité des populations africaines, la dissolution pure et simple des partis politiques nationalistes que l'on accuse de prêcher l'agitation et la subversion alors qu'on les a sciemment accusés à la violence, l'emprisonnement des leaders de ces partis dont le délit consiste à demander le retour de leur pays à la dignité et à la liberté — tout cela est bien connu. L'Assemblée ne se laissera certainement pas tromper par la mince façade constitutionnelle dont on s'entoure en Afrique centrale.

141. On s'obstine à nous répéter que la Rhodésie du Sud est autonome depuis 1923; l'ONU s'est prononcée à ce sujet en juin dernier [voir résolution 1747 (XVI)], et nous rejetons cet argument fallacieux pour exiger l'abrogation de la Constitution de ce pays, laquelle ne prévoit ni l'institution du suffrage universel, ni la mise sur pied de pouvoirs qui représentent authentiquement la volonté du peuple. On ne peut s'y tromper. La résolution 1514 (XV) est lumineuse; c'est aux autochtones et non aux colons, si bien intentionnés soient-ils, qu'il faut remettre le pouvoir. L'indépendance que nous réclamons n'est pas pour les colons, qui n'ont jamais été asservis, mais pour les autochtones.

142. Le rapport est explicite à ce sujet; le dénominateur commun des pays de l'Afrique centrale, orientale et méridionale, c'est le racisme, l'exploitation des noirs, les pires violations des droits de l'homme. Qu'est-ce que cette fédération que sir Roy Welensky veut à tout prix imposer aux Africains, sinon un autre subterfuge pour mieux les tenir en main et perpétuer leur asservissement? Cette fédération ne serait qu'une caricature de l'aspiration de l'Afrique à l'unité. C'est un procédé grossier auquel les forces extrémistes et réactionnaires ont recours pour conserver leur domination. Il y a dans l'attitude de ces gouvernements une grande part de provocation.

143. La position de ma délégation est connue: il faut accorder à ces pays leur indépendance. Et, surtout, qu'on ne vienne pas prétexter le manque de préparation pour retarder leur libération. Les populations de ces pays sont passées par des épreuves telles que leur maturité est évidente; et puis, si les puissances administrantes ne leur ont que parcimonieusement dispensé les bienfaits de l'éducation, tout porte à croire que seule l'indépendance leur permettra de faire appel à la coopération internationale pour la promotion de leurs peuples.

144. Le Sud-Ouest africain connaît un sort encore plus sombre. L'Afrique du Sud, prétextant la caducité illusoire du Mandat confié par la Société des Nations, multiplie les tentatives d'intégration du Territoire. Ce que l'Assemblée sait de l'extraordinaire politique d'apartheid qu'elle a maintes fois condamnée doit expliquer pourquoi une pareille annexion nous indigné et pourquoi nous nous y opposons.

145. Ma délégation déplore que le Royaume-Uni évoque les dissensions et les divergences de vues entre les formations politiques locales pour retarder l'indépendance de la Guyane britannique, de Zanzibar, du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland, du Souaziland et du Kenya. Elle espère aussi que le Royaume-Uni se lavera bientôt du soupçon de retarder l'indépendance du Kenya pour des considérations militaires et stratégiques.

146. Le Portugal, de même que l'Afrique du Sud, persiste dans son attitude de défi à l'Organisation et ne se maintient en Angola, comme au Mozambique, que par la force des armes. L'Afrique du Sud, si extraordinaire que cela paraisse, dépense annuellement 60 millions de livres pour maintenir son armée de répression; le Portugal ne perpétue sa domination sur ses colonies que par l'envoi périodique de renforts pour maintenir l'ordre, un ordre qui répugne à la conscience internationale. Nous rejetons avec dédain l'argument selon lequel les colonies portugaises feraient partie intégrante du territoire national portugais. C'est là un argument auquel les colonialistes ont recours et qui ne repose que sur du sable. Ce n'est pas la première fois qu'on l'évoque à cette tribune, et ma délégation est fermement convaincue que, devant notre détermination, le Portugal y renoncera, comme les autres avant lui. L'administration portugaise en Angola, au Mozambique, en Guinée dite portugaise et aux îles du Cap-Vert s'est soldée par un échec. Le niveau de vie des populations autochtones de ces territoires est le plus bas d'Afrique; qui plus est, on ne leur épargne rien. La discrimination raciale, le travail forcé, un régime policier, tel est leur lot.

147. La position de ma délégation est nette: on n'a pas appliqué la résolution sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux à tous les pays que nous venons d'énumérer. L'Organisation se doit de faire comprendre nettement aux puissances administrantes qu'elle n'est pas dupe, que les pays en question ne jouissent ni de l'autonomie, ni de l'indépendance. L'Assemblée générale doit engager le Royaume-Uni, dont on connaît le passé louable de décolonisateur, à cesser de faire le jeu des colons et à assurer la primauté des intérêts des populations autochtones en leur accordant l'indépendance. L'Assemblée générale doit aussi exclure de son sein les membres qui érigent en doctrine la violation flagrante de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, en l'occurrence le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud. L'Assemblée n'a certainement pas manqué d'être saisie d'angoisse devant les mises en garde du président de la ZAPU⁴. C'est parce que le Royaume-Uni a remis le sort des Africains entre les mains d'une poignée de colons que nous avons à faire face aujourd'hui à l'odieuse politique d'apartheid. Il ne faut pas que l'on répète cette erreur en Rhodésie. Il ne faut pas que l'on tolère la mainmise de l'Afrique du Sud sur le Sud-Ouest africain, ni la consolidation de la Fédération raciste et oppressive de sir Roy Welensky, dont on connaît le rôle au Katanga.

148. Nous autres Africains, nous avons tout à perdre dans la constitution de ce que l'on a judicieusement dénommé "Alliance impie". Si, sur le sol africain, le dictateur Salazar, le champion de la suprématie des blancs, sir Roy Welensky, et le raciste Verwoerd se donnaient la main, c'en serait fini du progrès, de la dignité et de la liberté dans cette partie de l'Afrique, et l'action de l'Organisation s'en trouverait compromise pour longtemps. Cette alliance mettrait en péril la sécurité de nos Etats et la paix du monde. Les Nations Unies doivent prévenir ce mal. Pour ce faire, les Membres de l'Organisation doivent prendre nettement conscience de leurs responsabilités et retirer aux tenants de l'apartheid le soutien inavoué qu'ils leur portent, de même qu'ils doivent mettre un terme à leur politique de duplicité qui consiste à condamner le Portugal à la tribune de l'ONU alors que, d'un autre côté, on fournit à ce pays armes et munitions qui lui permettent de poursuivre en Afrique sa campagne d'extermination.

149. Lorsque l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 1514 (XV), ma délégation était parmi celles, nombreuses, qui avaient exprimé leur satisfaction de voir la communauté internationale reconnaître à nouveau ses devoirs envers les peuples dépendants. Aujourd'hui, ma délégation prend à son compte les conclusions du Comité des Dix-Sept, déclare que la résolution 1514 (XV) n'a reçu qu'un début d'application, et votera en faveur de tout projet de résolution destiné à hâter la libération des peuples opprimés.

La séance est levée à 12 h 40.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite)

7. M. MELO FRANCO (Brésil): Durant les débats sur la procédure qui se sont déroulés en séance plénière au sujet de l'interprétation du point 25, la délégation du Brésil a préféré ne pas intervenir. Elle était certaine que l'Assemblée générale, en sa sagesse, trou-verait la formule la meilleure pour nous épargner une double discussion ou pour éviter des projets de résolution superflus ou contradictoires sur différentes questions attribuées tantôt aux séances plénières, tantôt à la Quatrième Commission, et se référant tous au chapitre général de nos efforts en vue de liquider le colonialisme dans le monde.

8. C'est toujours soucieuse d'éviter une double discussion du sujet que la délégation du Brésil prend aujourd'hui la parole sur le point 25. Aussi ma délégation ne considérera-t-elle maintenant que les aspects généraux du problème et du rapport (A/5238) qui nous est présenté par le Comité spécial^{1/} et laissera-t-elle à son représentant à la Quatrième Commission le soin de traiter des aspects particuliers à chaque territoire. Plus précisément, la délégation du Brésil se bornera à examiner, ici, le chapitre premier du rapport du Comité spécial et, d'une manière tout à fait générale, l'œuvre de ce comité durant son existence de moins d'un an.

9. Le rapport du Comité spécial est non seulement l'un des documents les plus volumineux publiés jusqu'ici par les Nations Unies, mais aussi l'un des plus importants quant au traitement des problèmes posés par la décolonisation. En nous le présentant, le Rapporteur, M. Najmuddine Rifai, de la Syrie, a fort bien su mettre en relief, et en toute justice, la tâche immense accomplie par chaque membre dans l'exercice du mandat conféré par l'Assemblée générale.

10. Lorsque, l'année dernière, l'Assemblée adopta la résolution 1654 (XVI) créant le Comité spécial, dont la dénomination aujourd'hui consacrée est celle de Comité des Dix-Sept, il n'était pas difficile de prévoir quelles fonctions allait assumer cet organe des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation. Pour orienter l'évolution des territoires dépendants sur le chemin de l'autonomie ou de l'indépendance, la Charte des Nations Unies, comme l'on sait, avait prévu, d'une part, le Conseil de tutelle, et avait, d'autre part, donné à l'Assemblée générale la possibilité d'instituer le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

11. La révolution fondamentale provoquée au sein de l'Organisation par l'adoption sans voix dissidente, le 14 décembre 1960, de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)] eut pour principale conséquence l'établissement du Comité des Dix-Sept. Lié directement à l'Assemblée générale, le Comité allait accepter, ou même attirer à soi, en vertu des larges attributions qui lui étaient confiées, la fonction d'organe supérieur d'étude et de mise en œuvre de décisions, pratiquement sur toutes les questions de décolonisation, sans jamais chercher à se dérober devant aucun problème de ce genre.

12. Si, lorsqu'on établit le bilan de son œuvre pendant cette première année de son existence, l'on constate que le Comité des Dix-Sept ne s'est occupé que de quelques territoires, c'est parce que, malgré le désir de la majorité de ses membres, il lui était manifestement impossible de traiter de tous les territoires dépendants existant encore dans le monde contemporain.

13. A ce stade de notre examen, deux questions connexes peuvent immédiatement se poser: première-

ment, l'ampleur de son mandat, tel qu'il est interprété par le Comité des Dix-Sept, est-elle compatible avec les dispositions de la Charte? Deuxièmement, cet organe n'est-il pas sur le point de se superposer non seulement à divers comités spéciaux, mais à la Quatrième Commission elle-même? Sur ces deux points, la délégation du Brésil croit pouvoir répondre par la négative. En fait, le Comité des Dix-Sept, à la lumière de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, n'est pas allé au-delà de son mandat, mais il a su, au contraire, agir dans les limites fixées par la Charte et par les résolutions importantes qui sont venues interpréter et compléter la Charte sur ce point. Telle, par exemple, la résolution 1541 (XV), qui fournit aux Etats Membres des critères objectifs, grâce auxquels est dûment interprété un concept fondamental pour notre action en matière coloniale, celui de territoire non autonome.

14. On allègue, d'autre part, que la Quatrième Commission perd sa raison d'être si le Comité des Dix-Sept, comme il lui est arrivé de le faire, présente des projets de résolution directement à l'Assemblée générale. La délégation du Brésil ne voit aucun inconvénient à ce procédé, du moment que chaque délégation conserve le droit d'exprimer son opinion sur chaque sujet, de proposer des amendements et de voter en toute liberté. Nous estimons aussi qu'il est utile que l'étude de questions complexes soit faite d'abord par un organe spécialisé, puis reconsidérée librement par l'une des grandes commissions, avant que l'Assemblée générale prenne la décision finale.

15. Revenant aux fonctions du Comité des Dix-Sept, on constate qu'en pratique celui-ci est venu se superposer non seulement au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, mais aussi à divers comités chargés de questions coloniales bien déterminées et dont l'activité n'est plus qu'un instrument permettant au Comité des Dix-Sept d'accomplir sa tâche. Il convient de rappeler aussi que le Conseil de tutelle voit diminuer son importance à mesure que sont mis en vigueur les moyens qui nous rapprochent du but pour lequel il a été établi.

16. En effet, le Comité des Dix-Sept étend son action sur tout le domaine de la décolonisation pour les trois raisons suivantes. D'abord, le Comité accepte la responsabilité de classer comme territoires non autonomes des territoires jusqu'alors en dehors du champ d'action des Nations Unies — responsabilité qui lui a été expressément confiée par l'Assemblée générale et qui est bien dans l'esprit de la Charte. Cette compétence est des plus importantes en raison des conséquences qui peuvent découler de l'exercice du principe d'autodétermination. Ensuite, le Comité est saisi du problème des territoires administrés par le Portugal, transformant ainsi le Comité des Sept^{2/} en un organe subsidiaire chargé d'étudier minutieusement leurs conditions. Finalement, le Comité a été chargé de la question du Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain, faisant donc également du Comité spécial des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain l'un de ses organes subsidiaires.

17. Dans cette perspective, la tâche déjà réalisée par le Comité des Dix-Sept durant l'année en cours est énorme, même si elle n'est que partielle, car, comme nous l'avons dit, le domaine de la décolonisation est beaucoup plus étendu que celui que peuvent viser ses activités.

^{2/} Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal.

18. La délégation du Brésil est toujours convaincue que, dans la lutte pour la paix, la solution qui sera donnée au problème colonial joue un rôle de premier plan. Elle l'a déjà affirmé et insiste encore sur ce point: l'ère du colonialisme est historiquement dépassée et il ne reste plus qu'à en liquider les résidus. Mais, précisément parce que ce sont des résidus, il est nécessaire de les traiter avec le plus grand soin et la plus grande efficacité, de crainte que le colonialisme ne vienne ajouter d'autres maux à ceux qu'il a déjà engendrés. Le colonialisme, de nos jours, est un archaïsme historique et sociologique, dont la disparition pacifique ne pourra être que bienfaisante pour les Etats et les collectivités humaines. Son extinction retirera de la société contemporaine des éléments politiques, économiques, sociaux et émotionnels qui mettent en danger la paix et la sécurité internationales.

19. Il est incontestable d'autre part que les Nations Unies ont contribué pour une large part à précipiter le processus de liquidation du colonialisme en augmentant l'efficacité des mesures prises dans ce sens. Si, avant la première guerre mondiale, la décolonisation revêtait, en règle générale, des caractères belliqueux, avant la seconde guerre, déjà, elle a pu prendre parfois un aspect relativement pacifique en plus d'un point. Mais c'est depuis la seconde guerre mondiale que les Nations Unies ont su imposer à cette évolution un caractère réellement pacifique, malgré quelques exceptions douloureuses et sanglantes. Il ne faut pas cacher, non plus, que cela est dû en partie à la conscience que certaines puissances coloniales ont prise du fait qu'il ne leur était plus possible de résister à la marée croissante des revendications nationales des peuples dépendants.

20. Comme résultat de l'action des Nations Unies et de la compréhension de certaines puissances coloniales, des centaines de millions d'individus ont accédé à la vie souveraine, dans différents pays, sous diverses formes d'Etat. Les Nations Unies ont collaboré, directement ou indirectement, à l'accession à l'indépendance politique de plus de 700 millions d'êtres humains.

21. Aujourd'hui, nous nous acheminons irrévérablement vers la définition, par le moyen de l'autodétermination, des trois derniers territoires sous tutelle des Nations Unies.

22. En sa qualité de membre du Comité spécial des Nations Unies pour le Sud-Ouest africain, le Brésil croit qu'une solution juste et pacifique sera trouvée pour ce problème qui a déjà fait l'objet de 63 résolutions des Nations Unies, depuis plus de 16 ans de discussions. La Puissance mandataire doit comprendre que tous les faits relevés sur son administration du Territoire — qu'ils soient bons, comme elle l'allègue, ou mauvais, comme l'affirment les Nations Unies — ne peuvent conduire qu'à une seule conclusion: celle que l'option des populations doit être un acte de la volonté même de ces populations, manifestée en toute liberté. La Puissance mandataire doit comprendre, en outre, que sa position à cet égard, du point de vue international, est la source de graves frictions qui ne peuvent qu'empoisonner l'atmosphère et qui compromettent en grande partie l'équilibre auquel aspirent justement les Etats africains souverains, dont la majorité n'a commencé que récemment à jouir de cette souveraineté, mais qui démontrent déjà une maturité expressive dans le traitement de leurs problèmes nationaux et internationaux.

23. Quant aux territoires non autonomes, le tableau est encore impressionnant. Il y a plus d'une cinquantaine de ces territoires sur la carte du monde et leur population totale s'élève à environ 80 millions de personnes. La principale puissance en cause, le Royaume-Uni, a pourtant montré sa compréhension de l'urgence du problème et de l'anachronisme du système colonial.

24. Ces territoires non autonomes sont de structures démographiques diverses. Les uns présentent un pourcentage relativement élevé de population descendant des colonisateurs. Dans des cas de ce genre, nous avons assisté, ces derniers temps, à des luttes atroces, telles que celle qui a été menée pendant sept ans en Algérie, pays que nous avons déjà la satisfaction de voir ici en qualité d'Etat Membre. Il est pourtant hors de doute qu'une solution a déjà été trouvée, et effectivement mise en vigueur, dans un passé plus lointain, pour des territoires d'une telle structure démographique. Mon pays, le Brésil, est un exemple frappant de ces sociétés multiraciales dans lesquelles les droits de l'homme sont garantis et pratiqués, sans préjugés ni discrimination de race, de couleur ou de croyance. Ces territoires de peuplement, comme leur nom l'indique, peuvent être peuplés d'hommes de toute origine et de toute condition, pourvu que soient respectés les caractéristiques "nationales" provenant de leur véritable structure démographique, précisément parce qu'ils sont assez grands et assez riches pour accueillir en leur sein tous les hommes de bonne volonté qui y sont nés ou qui y ont été reçus.

25. A cet égard, il faut reconnaître qu'une différence fondamentale doit être établie entre les colonisateurs et leurs descendants, d'une part, et le pouvoir économique, généralement installé dans la métropole, d'autre part, pouvoir qui cherche à identifier ses intérêts égoïstes aux besoins des colonisateurs et de leurs descendants, créant ainsi des oppositions interraciales qui ne font que porter préjudice aux véritables intérêts des peuples.

26. C'est dans cette perspective, estime la délégation du Brésil, que ces problèmes peuvent être examinés par l'Assemblée générale. C'est aussi dans ce complexe que se situe le Royaume-Uni en tant que principale puissance coloniale intéressée. Nous avons confiance en la traditionnelle sagesse politique des Britanniques pour parvenir à la solution qui sera la meilleure, et conforme à la Charte des Nations Unies.

27. Des raisons de nature diverse, comme la grande majorité des Etats Membres le savent d'ailleurs, placent la délégation du Brésil dans une position particulière en ce qui concerne le problème des territoires sous administration portugaise. A cet égard, le Brésil désire exprimer de nouveau deux souhaits ardents: tout d'abord, que le débat qui doit se dérouler devant la Quatrième Commission soit dépourvu de tout élément passionnel; ensuite, que l'on trouve une formule pour que le Portugal accepte un dialogue constructif avec les Nations Unies pour le profit effectif des populations des territoires qu'il administre, et dans le sens de l'histoire contemporaine. Ce sens est d'ailleurs celui de l'histoire même du Portugal, qui a su accepter la marche du Brésil vers l'indépendance sans compromettre l'ensemble des liens étroits qui unissent les deux pays.

28. Un grand nombre d'Etats désirent vivement — et pareil désir se justifie dans une large mesure — parvenir à des solutions concrètes et immédiates telles qu'elles sont postulées dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le Brésil partage ce désir, mais, en même temps, il désire rappeler que nous devons tous nous efforcer de ne pas tomber dans des mesures, qui, au lieu de conduire à une solution pacifique et définitive des conflits coloniaux, pourraient être la source de nouvelles frictions, de nouvelles complications, et de troubles pour une paix déjà précaire et instable, une paix dont le renforcement devrait être notre principal but.

29. C'est ainsi que la délégation du Brésil estime de son devoir de relever, une fois de plus, à cette occasion, que, tout en reconnaissant que les sanctions sont parties intégrantes de la Charte et s'y trouvent explicitement contenues, il faut considérer leur application en évaluant avec sérénité leur opportunité et leur convenance. Il faut recourir aux sanctions, premièrement lorsqu'elles peuvent être effectivement appliquées, et secondement, quand elles sont adoptées de telle manière qu'elles garantissent la paix et la sécurité des régions où elles doivent être appliquées. Pour la délégation du Brésil, tant que des sanctions, au lieu de corriger une situation concrète ou de régler pacifiquement une question, peuvent mettre en danger l'existence même des Nations Unies en tant qu'instrument essentiel de la paix, il est préférable d'en différer l'application jusqu'à ce que le recours à des sanctions représente un moyen effectif de pacification.

30. On peut donc, dès maintenant, comprendre quels sont les principes qui guident la délégation du Brésil dans l'examen du point 25 de notre ordre du jour, principes que je résumerai de la manière suivante.

1) Nous sommes partisans d'une prolongation de l'existence du Comité des Dix-Sept pour une année encore, délai qui pourrait même être étendu à la lumière du rapport qui sera présenté à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale.

2) Nous sommes partisans d'une concentration des efforts du Comité, grâce à l'élimination d'autres comités et sous-comités spéciaux qui traitent des questions coloniales. Je m'empresse d'ajouter que, de par leur nature et en raison du travail qu'ils accomplissent, le Conseil de tutelle prévu dans la Charte et le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes ne tomberaient évidemment pas sous le coup de cette suppression.

3) Nous considérons ouverte la question de la structure, de la composition, du nombre de membres et des méthodes de fonctionnement du Comité spécial, qui pourra être aussi bien le Comité des Dix-Sept que celui des Vingt et Un, ou ce que l'Assemblée générale, en sa sagesse, préférera.

4) Nous pensons que, dans le système de fonctionnement du Comité spécial, on pourra prévoir la possibilité de recourir à des Etats Membres ne faisant pas partie du Comité, pour des missions spéciales au sein de sous-comités ad hoc, selon une procédure à établir.

5) Nous croyons finalement que le bilan positif présenté par le Comité des Dix-Sept mérite les éloges des Etats Membres, malgré les réserves que l'on pourrait faire sur quelques points particuliers.

31. Avant de terminer cette intervention, la délégation du Brésil voudrait encore saluer les efforts des Etats Membres qui font partie du Comité des Dix-Sept. Elle le fait, en se référant tout spécialement aux deux membres latino-américains, l'Uruguay et le Venezuela, qui, grâce à une participation lucide et constante, ont su donner la mesure de la pensée latino-américaine tout au long des travaux du Comité.

32. Sir James PLIMSOLL (Australie) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'Australie est membre du Comité des Dix-Sept. Nous avons participé à ses travaux activement pendant toute l'année. J'ai eu personnellement l'honneur de représenter l'Australie et le plaisir de visiter l'Afrique au cours du voyage que le Comité des Dix-Sept y a fait.

33. L'Australie a participé à la discussion de toutes les questions dont s'est occupé le Comité des Dix-Sept; nous avons pris part à l'audition et à l'interrogation des pétitionnaires, et je voudrais cet après-midi montrer brièvement comment l'Australie évalue et juge la situation à la lumière de son expérience.

34. Je tiens tout d'abord à rendre hommage à M. C. S. Jha (Inde), président du Comité et ancien représentant permanent de son pays auprès des Nations Unies, qui nous a apporté un point de vue constructif, ainsi, bien entendu, qu'une très riche expérience dans le domaine du fonctionnement des organes des Nations Unies et de leurs possibilités d'aboutir à des réalisations. Je nommerai aussi M. Coulibaly (Mali), vice-président du Comité et président de notre groupe lors de son séjour en Afrique. Pour ma part, j'ai été très heureux de travailler sous la direction de M. Coulibaly et de pouvoir observer la dignité et l'intégrité dont il a fait preuve au cours de notre voyage. Notre rapporteur était M. Rifai (Syrie), qui possède, en plus de ses qualités de rapporteur, une expérience particulière dans ce domaine. Il a été membre de la mission de visite en Nouvelle-Guinée australienne et administrateur spécial des Nations Unies au plébiscite du Samoa-Occidental. Je tiens aussi à rappeler les services rendus par les membres du Secrétariat tant au Siège que durant notre voyage en Afrique.

35. Il serait utile de rappeler ici l'esprit et les principes qui ont inspiré l'Australie dans sa participation aux travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Mon pays est en faveur de la libre détermination pour tous les peuples du monde. C'est là une attitude loyale et c'est l'esprit que nous nous sommes efforcés de faire entrer dans la Charte lors de sa rédaction à San Francisco en prenant l'initiative de certaines dispositions essentielles concernant les territoires coloniaux. Nous croyons à la libre détermination. Nous croyons aussi à la suppression de la discrimination fondée sur la couleur, dans les colonies non moins que dans les Etats indépendants. En dehors de toute considération de justice ou d'efficacité, nous connaissons les sentiments d'humiliation et de frustration que doivent éprouver tous ceux qui sont victimes de la discrimination en raison de la couleur, de la race ou de tout autre motif.

37. En ce qui concerne les activités du Comité des Dix-Sept, l'Australie a toujours pensé qu'il ne devrait pas y avoir de séparation entre les puissances administrantes et les autres membres du Comité. Nous avons une tâche commune qui nous est assignée par la Charte des Nations Unies et qui nous est également dictée par la résolution 1654 (XVI) adoptée par l'Assemblée. Nous pensons que notre tâche consiste, au Comité, à œuvrer ensemble en vue d'assurer la réalisation des objectifs de la Charte; nous concevons le Comité comme une équipe et non comme un ensemble de groupes divisés sur la base de l'origine géographique ou de distinctions entre puissances administrantes et puissances non administrantes.

38. J'espère qu'en étudiant ce rapport nous prendrons tous mieux conscience du fait que les territoires dépendants ne sont pas d'un modèle unique. Dans sa partie générale comme dans les études des divers territoires, le rapport montre bien que des problèmes différents se posent dans des territoires différents. Des territoires différents sont à des stades différents de développement et les puissances administrantes y ont envisagé leurs tâches et leurs obligations dans un esprit différent et selon des méthodes différentes. Tout cela fait qu'il serait peu réaliste et même artificiel, à mon sens, de songer à fixer une date limite applicable à tous les territoires sans tenir compte de leur situation actuelle, de la politique poursuivie par les puissances administrantes ou du degré de coopération qui existe entre la puissance administrante et les Nations Unies.

39. J'ai dit que les puissances administrantes n'agissent pas toutes de la même manière. Deux d'entre elles, l'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal, suivent, tant dans les principes qu'elles proclament que dans la pratique qu'elles suivent, une politique que la plupart des membres de l'Assemblée générale considèrent comme ne remplissant pas pleinement les obligations qui leur incombent en vertu de la Charte. A la présente session, l'Australie a voté à la Quatrième Commission pour un projet de résolution sur le Sud-Ouest africain [voir A/5310], qui n'est pas encore venu en séance plénière, mais qui représente les vues de presque tous les membres de l'Assemblée et qui est fondé sur un principe essentiel: celui de donner effet au droit de libre détermination.

40. Comme nous l'avons déjà dit aux sessions précédentes de l'Assemblée et comme nous le dirons encore à la présente session, l'Australie considère que le Portugal devrait se conformer à l'obligation qui lui incombe d'accorder aux populations de ses territoires d'outre-mer le droit de disposer librement d'elles-mêmes et qu'il devrait prendre des mesures pour assurer l'exercice de ce droit.

41. Mais, en ce qui concerne les autres puissances administrantes, j'estime qu'il ne peut y avoir de doute à l'Assemblée sur le fait qu'elles agissent dans la bonne direction. Il peut y avoir des différences quant à la cadence suivie et quant aux méthodes employées, mais je ne crois pas qu'un observateur impartial puisse mettre en doute la sincérité qui anime ces puissances administrantes dans leur désir d'amener les territoires à la libre détermination. Comme je l'ai dit, on constatera toujours des différences en ce qui concerne la cadence du mouvement et les méthodes employées, mais il est certain que des pays comme l'Australie, les Etats-Unis et le Royaume-Uni s'efforcent honnêtement de remplir les obligations de la Charte. Nos traditions, imprégnées du respect des droits de l'homme et de la croyance en ces droits, nous y obligent. Une opinion publique bruyante nous y pousse; nous devons rendre compte à nos parlements de la manière dont nous nous acquittons de ces tâches. Dans nos pays, le public, les parlements et les gouvernements sont tous au courant de ce qui se passe ici, aux Nations Unies, et des déclarations qui y sont faites par des représentants de toutes nuances.

42. Les délibérations des Nations Unies exercent sur la formation de l'opinion une influence considérable non seulement sur la pensée de ceux qui représentent ici les Etats Membres, mais aussi dans nos pays sur l'opinion publique elle-même. J'ai souvent songé à cette sorte de force impondérable que libèrent les Nations Unies lorsqu'elles prennent des décisions réfléchies, force qui constitue l'un des moyens les plus efficaces d'exercer une influence sur ce qui se fait aujourd'hui dans le monde, plus particulièrement dans le domaine du colonialisme.

43. Sans parler du rôle joué par les puissances administrantes, les problèmes qui se posent dans les territoires eux-mêmes diffèrent d'un territoire à l'autre. Les antécédents historiques, par exemple, sont différents. Les peuples de certains territoires dépendants ont vécu en sociétés ou en communautés organisées et sont riches d'un long passé historique et d'une ancienne et lente évolution culturelle unifiée; peut-être ont-ils même formé pendant longtemps un groupe organisé en une seule communauté. On trouve au contraire dans certaines parties du monde, en Nouvelle-Guinée australienne par exemple, des territoires qui n'ont jamais connu, au cours de leur histoire, de communauté homogène, où il n'y a jamais eu de communications matérielles dans l'ensemble du territoire et où ont vécu des tribus dispersées, dont certaines étaient très petites et qui avaient des communications très limitées, si même elles en avaient, avec les tribus voisines. Il est impossible de traiter de tels territoires exactement de la même façon. Une société comprenant une seule race ou une seule religion ou une seule tribu se trouve dans une situation tout à fait différente de celle d'une société groupant de nombreuses tribus de races diverses et peut-être même de nombreuses sectes religieuses antagonistes. Depuis quelques années, on a parfois dû s'efforcer de créer un sentiment d'unité là où il n'avait jamais existé auparavant. Nous devons tenir compte de la réalité de certains de ces problèmes.

44. On peut être convaincu, comme je le suis et comme l'est aussi le Gouvernement australien, qu'il ne devrait pas y avoir de discrimination entre des populations de couleur différente ou de religion différente. Mais la conviction que des distinctions de cette nature ne devraient pas exister ne doit pas nous faire oublier que, dans certains cas, la discrimination est un état de fait, fondé sur des facteurs dont nous devons avoir raison. C'est parfois une tâche de réconciliation et d'éducation qu'il faut accomplir; il faut dissiper la crainte — parfois inspirée du dehors — qui règne parmi les différents groupes d'une même société. Nous devons nous efforcer de faire disparaître ces obstacles. Cela implique parfois un devoir d'éducateur, au sens très large du terme. J'ai entendu des représentants parler du problème de l'éducation des populations en vue de les préparer à l'autonomie. Il ne s'agit pas simplement d'éduquer les populations autochtones; il s'agit très souvent d'éduquer, si je puis dire, certains des groupes dominants eux-mêmes à l'intérieur d'une société en les familiarisant avec l'idée du travail en commun et en les amenant peu à peu à accepter des formes coopératives d'action politique ou commerciale.

45. Les travaux accomplis par le Comité des Dix-Sept depuis un an ont montré qu'il ne s'agit pas toujours des divergences entre la puissance administrante et la population locale qui retardent l'indépendance. Les obstacles proviennent parfois de divergences qui se font jour à l'intérieur du territoire dépendant lui-même, entre les groupes autochtones du territoire, ou entre des groupes qui y ont immigré depuis longtemps mais qui ne sont pas nécessairement composés d'Européens. La Guyane britannique et Zanzibar, deux des territoires qui ont été étudiés par le Comité des Dix-Sept, en fournissent des exemples. Le Comité tout entier estime que le plus urgent est de rapprocher les différents groupes à l'intérieur de ces deux territoires afin qu'ils puissent accéder à l'indépendance et se gouverner eux-mêmes, avec toutes les obligations que cela comporte, sur la base d'un accord conclu entre les groupes. Il ne s'agit ni dans un cas ni dans l'autre de conflits entre la population du territoire et la Puissance administrante. Comme je l'ai dit, cet avis est partagé à des degrés divers par tous les membres du Comité des Dix-Sept.

46. J'ajouterai que, de l'avis de l'Australie, il n'appartient ni à l'Assemblée générale, ni au Comité des Dix-Sept, ni plus généralement aux Nations Unies, de faire un choix entre les chefs ou les partis d'un territoire. Il ne nous appartient pas d'imposer à un territoire un chef plutôt qu'un autre. Ce que nous devons faire, c'est préparer le moment où la population elle-même aura choisi celui qu'elle veut suivre et la forme de société et de constitution qu'elle désire adopter.

47. Comme je l'ai dit, les problèmes changent d'un territoire à l'autre et dans bien des cas il ne s'agit pas d'une simple question de colonialisme. On trouve dans la plupart des situations qui se présentent des éléments qui ne sont pas coloniaux. Certains des problèmes qui se posent dans ces territoires sont des problèmes que l'humanité a toujours connus: comment élever le niveau de vie pour tous, comment favoriser l'exercice des droits de l'homme. Ces problèmes ne se posent pas seulement dans les territoires coloniaux. Il y a des problèmes raciaux: comment obtenir des groupes de race différente qu'ils vivent côte à côte en bonne intelligence. Il y a les problèmes économiques de développement et la nécessité de trouver des marchés extérieurs pour la production primaire; il faut enfin apprendre à surmonter la peur: peur des conflits qui peuvent se déchainer entre divers groupes d'une même communauté, ou encore peur de voir intervenir des voisins puissants. On comprend mieux de quoi il s'agit en prenant des cas particuliers. L'Australie, par exemple, dans son propre territoire de Nouvelle-Guinée, a dû faire face à certains de ces problèmes: édifier une société unique, habituer la population à considérer le monde comme un tout et à voir les possibilités qui s'offrent à elle, alors que cette même population avait parfois été totalement coupée du reste du monde jusqu'à ces dernières années. On constate en Nouvelle-Guinée des craintes très réelles parmi la population autochtone quant à ce que l'avenir lui réservera. J'estime que, dans ce territoire, l'Australie et les Nations Unies ont su établir une coopération fructueuse, coopération qui subsistera, j'en suis sûr, et qui permettra à la population d'accéder à la libre détermination.

48. Mais la véritable question qui se pose très souvent dans un territoire est de savoir comment faire pour arriver à un résultat. Il ne s'agit pas de savoir quelles sont les intentions de la puissance administrante ni à quels mobiles obéissent les dirigeants de la population autochtone. Il s'agit plus souvent de savoir comment passer à la dernière étape, celle qui donnera au pays déjà presque autonome l'indépendance de fait, comment concilier les divers éléments qui luttent entre eux et avec la puissance administrante, comment régler les conflits qui se produisent à l'intérieur du territoire et ceux qui s'élèvent entre les différents pouvoirs intéressés.

49. Nous nous apercevons parfois, au cours des discussions qui ont lieu à l'Assemblée générale ou dans les commissions, que chaque pays raisonne en fonction de ses propres intérêts. En Afrique par exemple, tel pays souhaiterait naturellement que son voisin nouvellement indépendant soit un Etat avec lequel il puisse espérer entretenir des relations pacifiques. Par conséquent, nous ne pouvons pas examiner ces problèmes d'une manière abstraite, ni prétendre que les intérêts nationaux n'entrent pas en jeu.

50. Ce que je viens de dire n'était qu'un aperçu général de la position de l'Australie en tant que membre du Comité des Dix-Sept; je parlerai maintenant brièvement des travaux du Comité lui-même depuis un an. Je n'ai pas l'intention de parler de certains territoires en particulier. Comme membre du Comité, l'Australie a eu la possibilité de faire connaître son opinion — et elle l'a fait — au sujet de presque tous les territoires qui ont été étudiés, et le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept expose quelle a été notre politique. Je n'ai donc pas l'intention d'y revenir. Mais je présenterai quelques observations d'ordre général, dont la première portera sur des questions de procédure.

51. En ce qui concerne la procédure à suivre par le Comité, l'Australie a adopté une position très semblable à celle que le représentant des Etats-Unis a exposée hier à l'Assemblée générale [1171^{ème} séance]. Selon nous, les décisions prises par le Comité devaient autant que possible l'être par un assentiment unanime plutôt que par un vote. Cette prise de position a été inspirée en grande partie par les sentiments que j'ai exposés cet après-midi: nous pensons que le Comité ne devrait pas se diviser en puissances administrantes et en puissances non administrantes, mais que nous devons plutôt nous efforcer de trouver un terrain d'accord aussi étendu que possible; dans certains cas, d'ailleurs, il y a eu une grande mesure d'accord. Le débat qui s'est déroulé au début de l'année sur la Rhodésie du Sud a montré que le Comité n'aurait peut-être pas pu arriver à un accord unanime sur une déclaration détaillée, mais qu'il pouvait parvenir à un accord presque unanime sur une ligne de conduite générale. Nous avons pu nous mettre d'accord sur un dossier qui a été emporté à Londres par un sous-comité chargé de discuter avec le Gouvernement britannique. Beaucoup d'entre nous ont estimé qu'au lieu de voter sur des résolutions et de risquer ainsi de diviser le Comité inutilement et prématurément, il était préférable de nous considérer les uns les autres comme des associés et que le Comité dans son ensemble se considère comme l'associé de la puissance administrante du territoire considéré, dans l'entreprise qui consiste à chercher à atteindre pour ce territoire les objectifs visés. Nous avons estimé que nous pouvions parfois faire des progrès plus réels en cherchant à stimuler, à suggérer ou à observer, plutôt qu'à adopter des formules qui ne pourraient recueillir l'accord de certains membres influents.

52. Personnellement, j'ai l'impression que les travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept ont été, dans l'ensemble, meilleurs au début de l'année que vers la fin. Au début de l'année, le Comité passait beaucoup plus de temps à ses travaux. Certains représentants pourront être enclins à le critiquer et à dire que l'essentiel est d'aller vite. Mais la rapidité n'est pas un objectif en soi. Ce qu'il faut, c'est une rapidité qui conduise à des résultats positifs et justes.

53. Le Comité a passé beaucoup de temps sur la Rhodésie et le Nyassaland. Après un long débat sur la Rhodésie du Sud, marqué par l'audition de pétitionnaires et par une discussion détaillée, un sous-comité composé de six représentants de puissances non administrantes a été créé. Ce sous-comité s'est rendu à Londres, où il a eu avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de franches conversations. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a pris cette visite très au sérieux. Le sous-comité a été reçu par les ministres les plus importants du Cabinet britannique. Cette visite a eu une influence sur la façon de penser des Britanniques, de même qu'elle a exercé une influence sur l'état d'esprit et la compréhension des problèmes au Siège de l'Organisation. Selon moi, le Comité a ainsi fait œuvre utile et productive et, quoi qu'on puisse penser de la question de la Rhodésie du Sud qui est si difficile à traiter en soi, sans parler des attitudes des gouvernements en la matière, je crois qu'on doit rendre au Comité des Dix-Sept l'hommage qu'il mérite pour sa contribution à ce sujet.

54. Plus avant dans l'année, et pour diverses raisons, le Comité n'a pas pu procéder à un examen approprié dans le cas de certains territoires. Des votes ont parfois été imposés sur des projets de résolution qui n'avaient pas fait l'objet d'un examen suffisant ou qui ne reflétaient pas la situation correctement. Mais ces choses arrivent dans n'importe quel organe. La situation ne m'inspire pas un pessimisme exagéré, bien que les choses n'aient peut-être pas pris le tour que mon gouvernement aurait désiré. Il n'y a nulle raison de désespérer. Le temps a fait défaut, particulièrement vers la fin, et je crois que le Comité a voulu faire trop de choses en trop peu de temps, sachant que l'Assemblée générale allait se réunir et qu'elle attendrait de recevoir un rapport. Peut-être le Comité a-t-il ainsi voulu s'occuper de trop de territoires et le faire trop rapidement. Mais il procédera l'an prochain, au cours de ses travaux, à un nouvel examen plus approfondi de certains des territoires déjà étudiés.

55. Je crois que la plupart des Etats Membres se sont efforcés honnêtement d'apporter leur contribution aux travaux du Comité et que nous ne devons pas juger ce travail au seul vu du rapport. Il faut se souvenir aussi des entretiens officieux qui ont eu lieu entre nous tous et qui ont eu une influence sur la pensée de chacun d'entre nous. Nous ne pouvons nous attendre toujours à ce qu'il en sorte des résultats immédiats. Nous savons, après tout, qu'il faut un certain temps dans nos propres gouvernements pour que la politique définie passe dans les faits et soit admise par chacun de ceux qui sont appelés à l'appliquer. Les Nations Unies possèdent cette sorte d'influence que nous sommes trop souvent enclins à sous-estimer ou à méconnaître: l'influence directe ou la pression indirecte que peuvent exercer des discussions raisonnées, qui sont souvent plus importantes que des résolutions.

56. J'ai dit que la plupart des Etats Membres avaient essayé honnêtement d'apporter leur contribution aux travaux du Comité. Je dois cependant dire quelques mots de l'attitude de l'Union soviétique, parce que l'Union soviétique, tant au Comité que dans le présent débat, a parlé de l'attitude de ceux qu'elle appelle les "pays occidentaux", ce qui comprend l'Australie, je suppose, et qu'elle a prétendu que ces pays ne s'étaient pas acquittés honnêtement de leurs obligations. Pendant les travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept, l'Union soviétique a tenté à maintes reprises de se servir du thème du colonialisme pour intensifier la guerre froide et elle a cherché à diviser le Comité. Je me rappelle qu'à l'occasion de la discussion relative à un certain territoire l'Union soviétique a délibérément imposé un vote, alors que d'autres pays, y compris les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, cherchaient à faire l'unanimité et à élargir le terrain d'accord plutôt qu'à sanctionner ou à cristalliser les divergences. L'Union soviétique a critiqué d'autres pays, mais pour ce qui est de ses propres territoires elle s'est réfugiée derrière le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 concernant les affaires qui relèvent de la compétence nationale. La Charte s'applique à tous les pays et à tous les peuples. Elle ne se limite pas à ceux qui relèvent actuellement de la juridiction des pays occidentaux; à ce sujet je citerai un passage d'une déclaration faite le 11 octobre 1962 par sir Garfield Barwick, ministre australien des affaires étrangères, devant la Chambre des représentants. Il a dit:

"J'estime que cette déclaration "générale" — il s'agit de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme — "s'applique également aux peuples asservis à l'Union soviétique et à la Chine communiste, et j'espère que les Nations Unies porteront en temps voulu leur attention sur ces territoires. On constate que, tandis que la Grande-Bretagne s'emploie à accorder l'indépendance à tant de peuples, l'Union soviétique et la Chine communiste s'emploient à étendre leurs empires et à augmenter le nombre des régions qui leur sont assujetties."

57. Je présenterai maintenant quelques observations au sujet de ce que le Comité des Dix-Sept doit faire. Je pense que j'ai déjà donné une idée de mes vues sur ce point. Tout d'abord, le Comité doit s'assurer que les puissances administrantes s'efforcent loyalement, à un rythme raisonnable et par des moyens raisonnables, de donner effet aux dispositions de la Charte relatives à la libre détermination. Le Comité devrait stimuler de diverses manières, en donnant des idées et en posant des questions par exemple, l'action des puissances administrantes. Je parle en qualité de représentant d'une Autorité administrante et je puis dire que l'intérêt manifesté par les Nations Unies ne nous a jamais froissés. Au contraire, nous l'avons accueilli favorablement et nous avons cherché à tenir compte des avis exprimés ici, soit par l'Organisation des Nations Unies elle-même, soit par des pays apportant leur contribution personnelle aux débats. Il y aura toujours des divergences de vues, mais il n'y en a pas qu'aux Nations Unies, au Comité des Dix-Sept et dans les autres organes des Nations Unies. Il existe des divergences dans les territoires intéressés. Il existe des divergences au sein même des puissances administrantes. Dans tous nos pays qui ont des parlements libres et une presse libre qui peut rapporter ce qui se passe dans le monde, la discussion existe: discussion habituelle, bien informée, reflétant de diverses manières ce qui se dit ici, ce dont les représentants font état ici et ce que leurs gouvernements disent chez eux.

58. Les autorités administrantes ont leurs responsabilités propres. En tant que telles, elles ont bien entendu la responsabilité d'appliquer la Charte, d'assurer l'ordre public dans les territoires qu'elles administrent, d'y maintenir une forme de société organisée, une structure politique organisée en marche vers l'indépendance. Elles ont la responsabilité d'empêcher la rupture de l'ordre public, l'interruption des services sociaux, le non-fonctionnement des services de la santé, l'écroulement du système économique. Elles ont l'obligation de prendre en considération les avis émis par les organes des Nations Unies et ceux qui sont exprimés ici par chaque pays. Une autorité administrante sait que, si elle méconnaît ces avis ou ces recommandations, elle le fait solemment, que son choix engage sa responsabilité et qu'elle doit être sûre des raisons qui la poussent à ne pas se conformer aux avis exprimés ici.

59. Quant aux autres pays, ils peuvent faire des critiques et suggestions constructives, mais ils ont la responsabilité de ne pas gêner les puissances administrantes ou ceux qui travaillent dans les territoires en provoquant des vagues d'émotion injustifiables ou en rendant plus difficile la réconciliation entre les divers éléments dans un territoire. Je sais qu'il s'agit souvent là d'une question d'opinion. Il est naturel que les puissances administrantes aient tendance à adopter un point de vue assez différent de celui qui voit les choses de l'extérieur. Dans chaque cas, c'est une question d'opinion. Mais il s'est trouvé des cas où une intervention extérieure a eu pour effet de rendre plus difficiles l'accord, la conciliation ou l'édification d'un Etat en situation de fonctionner.

60. Il ne faut pas non plus s'en tenir à de simples déclarations. Il ne suffit pas d'adopter une résolution réclamant l'indépendance immédiate. Il est utile de rappeler à chacun que l'objectif visé est l'indépendance et de stimuler tous les intéressés. Mais ce n'est pas une simple déclaration qui fera naître un Etat indépendant, qui permettra d'édifier une économie, qui suffira à réconcilier les éléments opposés d'une même communauté.

61. A mon sens, il est très important que les membres du Comité des Dix-Sept soient pleinement conscients, dans leurs travaux, de ce que peut représenter un organe des Nations Unies et de la grande influence qu'il peut exercer s'il sait imposer le respect et si ses déclarations et décisions sont réalistes. C'est ainsi que le Comité pourra exercer une influence et commander le respect parmi la population d'un territoire. Si une résolution adoptée, qui peut être séduisante dans l'abstrait pour des personnes qui ne vivent pas dans le territoire intéressé, n'a rien de réaliste pour ceux qui y vivent, elle ne produira pas l'effet recherché. Elle ne pourra qu'affaiblir, dans ce territoire, le prestige du Comité des Dix-Sept, voire celui des Nations Unies.

62. Je puis me résumer ainsi. L'Australie croit à la libre détermination comme étant l'objectif que doivent atteindre tous les peuples du monde. Nous estimons que nous avons tous l'obligation, ensemble et séparément, de favoriser la libre détermination pour tous les peuples. Nous voulons l'élimination de la discrimination fondée sur la couleur, la race ou la religion, parmi tous les peuples du monde, coloniaux ou indépendants. Nous voulons que dans tous les territoires coloniaux naisse une société fondée sur une libre détermination véritable, sans discrimination pour motifs de race, de sexe ou de religion et où chacun ait des chances égales de jouer un rôle dans la vie économique, sociale et politique du pays. Nous voulons que le passage du statut de territoire colonial à celui de pays indépendant s'opère, s'il se peut, sans chaos ni destruction, car il importe que les nouveaux Etats prennent le départ dans les meilleures conditions possible. Nous voulons les lancer avec toutes les chances de leur côté pour ce qui est des biens d'équipement, des marchés intérieurs et extérieurs, de la structure de l'enseignement et du système de gouvernement constitutionnel. Nous ne voulons pas que ce qui existe déjà dans une certaine mesure risque d'être détruit par des combats, des conflits ou une agitation sociale inutile.

63. L'Australie continuera à coopérer avec les Nations Unies pour que ces objectifs soient atteints. Nous le ferons en notre qualité d'Autorité administrante, en notre qualité de membre du Comité des Dix-Sept et pour nous conformer aux obligations qui incombent à tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, puissances administrantes ou puissances non administrantes.

La séance est levée à 16 h 25.

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application

Organisation des travaux de l'Assemblée. 885

Président: M. Muhammad ZAFRULLA KHAN
(Pakistan).

de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale
(A/5238) [suite]

16. M. ROS (Argentine) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation argentine désire exprimer sa reconnaissance et présenter ses félicitations aux membres du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI) ^{1/}, en particulier aux représentants de l'Uruguay et du Venezuela, pour les travaux qu'ils ont accomplis dans cet organe de l'Assemblée générale. Le document A/5238, qui contient le rapport du Comité spécial, montre l'ampleur des travaux accomplis en cette première année d'activité.

17. Lorsqu'elle a examiné le rapport, notre délégation a tenu compte aussi des travaux accomplis par tous les comités qui, au cours de l'intervalle compris entre la seizième et la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale, ont étudié des questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes ainsi qu'au cas particulier du Territoire sous mandat du Sud-Ouest africain. Le panorama qui se présente à nous, bien qu'éclairé par l'accession à l'indépendance de divers territoires, pose actuellement des problèmes, tant au point de vue de la structure de l'Organisation qu'en ce qui constitue le fond de la question de la décolonisation; ces problèmes méritent une analyse sérieuse et nous devons exprimer à leur propos notre opinion qui est largement inspirée par les idéaux de la Charte des Nations Unies et par notre position traditionnelle devant les problèmes coloniaux.

18. En ce qui concerne les problèmes d'organisation, nous estimons que le Comité des Dix-Sept a accompli sa tâche avec succès, bien que la délimitation de sa compétence ait quelque peu manqué de précision, ce qui provient du désir de satisfaire des opinions parfois éloignées les unes des autres. Le Comité des Dix-Sept, inspiré par les fins proposées dans la résolution 1514 (XV), a surmonté l'obstacle constitué par cette imprécision de la délimitation de sa compétence. C'est ainsi que le rapport soumis à l'Assemblée générale à sa présente session montre une ligne d'action orientée fermement vers l'application rapide de la résolution 1514 (XV) et que les projets de résolution figurant dans ledit rapport réaffirment cette volonté dans les cas particuliers de plusieurs territoires.

19. Nous partageons l'opinion exprimée par le Secrétaire général dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1] en ce qui concerne la nécessité de réduire la dispersion des compétences en matière coloniale. Le nombre des comités spéciaux en la matière pendant l'année qui s'achève montre la nécessité de concentrer les travaux au Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI). Nous avons vu des cas où une même question a été traitée simultanément par deux comités. Il faut donc remédier à ce défaut, qui est d'ailleurs normal puisque l'Assemblée traverse actuellement une période d'expérimentation; l'organe créé par ladite résolution doit réunir toute la compétence qui est dispersée dans d'autres comités spéciaux. A cet effet, le Comité des Dix-Sept pourra créer tous les sous-comités nécessaires à l'accomplissement de ses travaux. Le projet de résolution adopté par la Quatrième Commission [A/C.4/L.757] prévoit la dissolution du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain, dont les fonctions seront reprises par le Comité des

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux; rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes

^{1/} Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

Dix-Sept. Le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal et le Sous-Comité de l'Angola devraient avoir une fin identique. Nous affirmons qu'il doit en être ainsi, car le fait d'attribuer à des comités divers la compétence qui appartient logiquement à l'organe créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI) est préjudiciable au prestige dudit organe et double, lorsqu'il ne triple pas, les tâches de l'Organisation. Naturellement, cette opinion ne tend pas à minimiser les excellents travaux accomplis par lesdits comités spéciaux et qui ont été exposés dans les rapports présentés.

20. Nous nous permettrons toutefois de faire une exception à la suggestion précédemment émise. Nous affirmons que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes doit être maintenu au cours du remaniement structural du mécanisme des Nations Unies concernant les questions coloniales. Nous estimons nécessaire qu'il soit étroitement relié au Comité des Dix-Sept, mais nous pensons aussi, en nous fondant sur l'expérience que nous avons acquise après y avoir travaillé pendant trois ans, que le genre de travail que le Comité des renseignements accomplit actuellement conformément à la Charte a un caractère distinct de celui qui est effectué au Comité spécial. Le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes accomplit ses travaux dans une ambiance sereine qui est favorable à l'équilibre et à l'objectivité avec laquelle on doit accueillir les renseignements communiqués par les puissances administrantes. Il nous est difficile de croire que le Comité spécial pourrait consacrer le temps nécessaire à un examen sérieux de ces renseignements.

21. Une autre question qui mérite une observation est celle de la composition actuelle du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI). Si ce comité est appelé à centraliser les travaux effectués séparément par des comités spéciaux, il sera obligé de créer des sous-comités, ainsi qu'on l'a déjà fait dans le cas des pétitions. C'est là un argument qui justifie certainement l'élargissement du Comité spécial. Le caractère universel du Comité spécial rendra également cet élargissement nécessaire. Nous affirmons que l'Amérique latine, qui était représentée dans les comités spéciaux, devra continuer à l'être dans une proportion appropriée lors de l'élargissement prévu. Nous présumons que la proportion actuelle ne sera pas modifiée de façon défavorable par l'augmentation du nombre des membres.

22. Quittant les questions de structure, nous abordons certaines questions de fond qui se posent à nous. Nous devons exprimer notre regret et notre découragement devant l'absence de coopération avec les Nations Unies que l'on constate chez certaines puissances administrantes. C'est ainsi que le Portugal n'a donné aucun signe montrant qu'il pourrait accepter la moindre possibilité d'entente. Le rapport du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal ainsi que le rapport sur l'Angola montrent que le Gouvernement portugais a une attitude d'incompréhension en face du problème posé, ainsi qu'une insistance marquée à chercher en vain à s'abriter derrière le paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2 de la Charte des Nations Unies, bien que l'Organisation se soit déclarée compétente par un vote massif de la quasi-totalité de ses membres. En ce qui concerne le Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain, l'Afrique du Sud estime qu'elle peut continuer à méconnaître les responsabilités qui découlent du Mandat, malgré l'avis consultatif de la Cour internationale de Justice et les nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Nous devons admettre qu'à part ces attitudes résolument négatives les autres puissances administrantes ont généralement coopéré de façon sincère avec les Nations Unies, ce qui facilite à certains points de vue l'œuvre de décolonisation.

23. L'évolution vers l'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux n'est pas la même dans tous les territoires; les problèmes sont différents; les difficultés intérieures des partis locaux retardent parfois inutilement la date de l'indépendance. Le problème des minorités d'origine européenne qui détiennent le contrôle du gouvernement du territoire peut entraver un développement harmonieux vers le libre exercice de l'autodétermination dans certains territoires, en raison de l'absence de vision politique et du manque de générosité de leurs dirigeants. Malgré les difficultés occasionnées par ces divers facteurs, nous croyons cependant que tous les peuples coloniaux parviendront à acquérir la liberté. Notre tâche, qui est aussi celle du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI), est de parvenir à ce que cette liberté soit obtenue le plus rapidement possible, dans la paix et en collaboration étroite avec les puissances administrantes, si elles comprennent les fins poursuivies par les Nations Unies et prennent une attitude de solidarité sincère envers l'Organisation.

24. Notre pays, qui a subi une occupation étrangère sur une partie de son territoire, comprend le désir de liberté immédiate qui anime les peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique. Nous pensons que l'ère de liberté en laquelle nous vivons permettra l'élimination du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, même dans le cas des territoires de faible étendue. Ainsi, l'occupation des îles Malouines, qui a constitué au cours du processus d'expansion de l'impérialisme britannique une violation brutale de notre souveraineté alors que notre pays faisait ses premiers pas dans la voie de l'indépendance, est considérée par le peuple argentin comme un phénomène qui ne peut contribuer de manière profitable à la compréhension mutuelle et à l'amitié qui rapprochent deux peuples unis par de nombreux liens. La présence anachronique du Royaume-Uni dans ces îles faiblement peuplées est dépourvue de sens politique et nous espérons que le Royaume-Uni, qui a pris une attitude généreuse dans d'autres parties du monde, aura la même attitude dans ce cas particulier.

25. Nous ne voulons pas terminer sans exprimer notre désir fervent qu'au cours de l'année prochaine de nouveaux pays accèdent à l'indépendance et que d'autres assurent et accélèrent le processus qui mène à cette fin. Pour qu'il s'accomplisse harmonieusement, sur des bases démocratiques, sans discrimination politique, raciale ou économique, et avec une conception généreuse de l'avenir des peuples intéressés, nous faisons confiance à l'Organisation, au Comité spécial, ainsi qu'à la compréhension et à la collaboration que les puissances administrantes sauront offrir.

26. M. MacQUARRIE (Canada) [traduit de l'anglais]. Lorsque la résolution 1654 (XVI) a été adoptée l'an dernier, la délégation canadienne a reconnu qu'il était logique et raisonnable de créer un organe chargé de veiller à l'application de la Déclaration de 1960 sur le colonialisme [résolution 1514 (XV)] et de faire des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés dans l'application de la Déclaration. Cette déclaration est considérée à juste titre comme un document historique. Elle indique dans les termes les plus clairs avec quelle ardeur l'Assemblée générale désire accélérer, par tous les moyens dont elle dispose, le mouvement vers l'indépendance qui est une des caractéristiques les plus passionnantes et les plus importantes de l'époque à laquelle nous vivons.

27. Ma délégation n'a pas de motif d'être insatisfaite des progrès continus qui ont été réalisés depuis deux ans dans l'application de la Déclaration. Dix-sept nouveaux Membres se sont joints aux Nations Unies en septembre et octobre 1960, au début de la quinzième session. Fiers de leur indépendance et désireux de conserver toute son impulsion au mouvement de libération, ces nouveaux membres ont joué un rôle particulièrement décisif dans l'adoption de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme à une majorité écrasante lors de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, le 14 décembre 1960 [947ème séance]. Depuis lors, 10 nouveaux pays indépendants sont devenus Membres de l'Organisation. Plusieurs autres pays se trouvent actuellement au seuil de l'indépendance et nous nous préparons à les accueillir également.

28. Le Canada a voté pour la résolution qui a institué le Comité des Dix-Sept, étant entendu que le Comité aurait pour tâche de suivre avec grande attention les progrès accomplis dans l'application des principes de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme, d'offrir des suggestions quant aux mesures pratiques à prendre dans ces territoires particuliers et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale à sa présente session.

29. Comme nous l'avons montré clairement en d'autres occasions, l'attitude du Canada en ce qui concerne le problème de la suppression du colonialisme repose sur un certain nombre de considérations. En tout premier lieu, il nous paraît essentiel que les principaux droits fondamentaux de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales, notamment le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et le droit pour l'individu d'être à l'abri de toute discrimination fondée sur la race, la couleur, la croyance religieuse ou la conviction politique, soient pleinement respectés partout dans le monde. Deuxièmement, le Canada désire faire tout ce qui est en son pouvoir pour favoriser l'évolution vers l'autonomie complète et vers l'indépendance de tous les peuples dépendants qui désirent se libérer de la domination coloniale, la rapidité de cette évolution ne devant être limitée que par des considérations pratiques de stabilité intérieure. Nous croyons fermement à la politique du "bon départ", c'est-à-dire à la mise sur pied d'une économie viable solidement fondée sur une administration compétente. Troisièmement, le Gouvernement canadien estime que la Déclaration sur le colonialisme doit s'appliquer dans le monde entier. Quatrièmement, chacun des territoires coloniaux qui restent à des problèmes spéciaux et des conditions qui lui sont propres. Les solutions envisagées par les Nations Unies doivent donc être pragmatiques. Des méthodes différentes doivent être appliquées dans chaque cas selon les circonstances. Cinquièmement, les puissances administrantes ne peuvent partager avec d'autres ou faire endosser par d'autres les responsabilités qu'elles ont envers les peuples dépendants placés sous leur contrôle. Pour que les Nations Unies contribuent à une évolution ordonnée, il faut qu'elles tiennent compte de ces responsabilités, aussi bien que des aspirations des habitants du territoire colonial intéressé.

30. Le Comité spécial a accompli avec vigueur et fermeté sa tâche difficile. Ma délégation est particulièrement heureuse de rendre hommage à la compétence et à la sagesse du Président du Comité, M. Jha, de l'Inde, que nous avons accueilli récemment en tant que représentant de son pays au Canada.

31. Le Comité a fait beaucoup de bon travail en étudiant les problèmes posés dans les territoires qu'il a examinés. Le volume du rapport indique assez l'importance des problèmes non encore résolus. L'expérience acquise par le Comité prouve clairement que, pour réaliser des progrès dans ce domaine très important et complexe, il est bon que toutes les parties intéressées soient animées d'un esprit de compromis. Chaque fois qu'il a été possible de se mettre d'accord, le Comité a fait des propositions constructives et pratiques. Malheureusement, au lieu de chercher des solutions pratiques aux problèmes existants, la délégation soviétique s'est servie des délibérations du Comité spécial pour mettre en avant des propositions ex. têmes concernant les territoires coloniaux, propositions qu'on savait être inacceptables pour les puissances administrantes. Le sujet dont le Comité s'occupe, c'est-à-dire l'accession des peuples dépendants à l'autonomie, est trop important pour qu'on s'en serve comme d'un moyen de marquer des points insignifiants dans les débats du Comité ou de faire adopter des résolutions qui n'auront pratiquement aucune chance d'être mises à exécution.

32. Le Comité a parfois adopté des résolutions adressées directement aux puissances administrantes. A notre avis, cela sortait du cadre du mandat du Comité et était très regrettable, eu égard à l'autorité et au prestige de l'Assemblée générale. Le Comité devrait s'en tenir à faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale. S'il estime que la situation dans un territoire particulier requiert d'urgence l'attention de l'Assemblée, il est libre de le faire savoir. Si elle le juge bon, l'Assemblée peut alors prendre des mesures, selon la procédure établie pour la convocation d'une session extraordinaire ou d'une session extraordinaire d'urgence. De toute manière, la responsabilité de faire directement des recommandations aux puissances administrantes doit incomber uniquement à l'Assemblée générale.

33. Ayant fait ces observations, je soulignerai que ma délégation est d'avis que l'idée fondamentale qui a conduit à créer le Comité des Dix-Sept est bonne: il faut qu'il existe un certain organe, responsable devant l'Assemblée, qui soit chargé de peser et d'évaluer les progrès accomplis dans l'application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme en date du 14 décembre 1960. La seule autre possibilité, et nous estimons qu'elle ne peut être pratique sauf dans des circonstances spéciales, serait de créer plusieurs organes subsidiaires ayant chacun un mandat limité et particulier. Cela soulèverait de sérieux problèmes de coordination. Il y aurait aussi un réel danger que la prolifération de comités spéciaux pour les questions coloniales, de compositions très diverses, n'entraîne la publication de rapports de valeur inégale ainsi qu'un gaspillage d'efforts et de fonds. Tout cela serait particulièrement regrettable au moment où les Nations Unies s'efforcent de faire des économies de personnel et d'argent.

34. Ma délégation ne veut pas présenter pour l'instant des observations sur les recommandations particulières faites par le Comité des Dix-Sept. Certaines de ces recommandations ont été dépassées par les événements, comme ce fut le cas pour la Rhodésie du Nord et pour la Guyane britannique. Les conclusions et recommandations du Comité relatives à la Rhodésie du Sud ont été examinées par l'Assemblée générale qui a pris sa décision à leur sujet. En ce qui concerne le Sud-Ouest africain, la question a déjà été examinée par la Quatrième Commission, auprès de laquelle j'ai eu plus d'une fois l'honneur de représenter mon pays.

35. Le résultat de la discussion sur le Sud-Ouest africain, qui vient de se terminer à la Quatrième Commission, prouve qu'il est possible d'arriver à une unité fondamentale, même sur une difficile question coloniale, si l'on s'efforce patiemment et sérieusement de prendre en considération les différents points de vue et d'agrandir ainsi au maximum le terrain d'entente. Pour des raisons analogues, nous persistons à croire que la meilleure méthode de travail pour le Comité spécial est celle qui consiste à réaliser l'accord. Cette méthode laisse toute liberté à tous les Membres, permet à l'opinion de la majorité de s'exprimer clairement et vigoureusement et supprime la nécessité de procéder à des votes qui diviseraient souvent le Comité.

36. Dans l'avenir immédiat, le Comité spécial, poursuivant ses travaux, continuera de s'occuper surtout des problèmes relatifs à l'application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme dans les territoires d'Afrique. Nous reconnaissons le bien-fondé de la décision du Comité de donner la priorité aux territoires d'Afrique qui subissent encore la domination coloniale. C'est dans ce continent que se posent certains des problèmes les plus difficiles qu'il reste encore à résoudre.

37. Dans son rapport, le Comité spécial reconnaît:

"... qu'il n'a, en aucune façon, terminé la tâche que lui a confiée l'Assemblée générale et qu'il reste encore bien des territoires dans lesquels la situation doit être étudiée en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration" [A/5238, chap. 1er, par. 151].

Les situations de fait qui existent dans bien des parties du monde et ne sont pas limitées à une région géographique particulière justifient pleinement cette conclusion. Pour des raisons faciles à comprendre, on a beaucoup parlé depuis plusieurs années de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, parce que ce sont les régions où le mouvement irrésistible du nationalisme a surgi et s'est élancé toujours plus vite. Ce sont justement les grands progrès réalisés dans ces régions qui ont stimulé l'intérêt et concentré l'attention du monde sur l'évolution qui s'y produisait.

38. Cependant, l'Assemblée générale a reconnu que le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ne doit pas oublier que la Déclaration sur le colonialisme, comme la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et comme la Charte des Nations Unies, a été conçue pour être d'application universelle. Les résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée sur la question n'accordent aucune dispense et n'admettent aucune exception. Les droits et libertés inscrits dans la Déclaration appartiennent à tous les peuples dépendants, où qu'ils se trouvent. De l'avis de la délégation canadienne, tel est l'angle sous lequel les Nations Unies doivent envisager l'application de toutes déclarations et résolutions de l'Assemblée générale ayant trait aux droits fondamentaux et aux libertés fondamentales. C'est leur application universelle, sans distinction, que nous devons avoir en vue. En tenant compte des méthodes qu'elle a établies et des priorités qu'elle a arrêtées, l'Assemblée générale doit agir pour assurer cette application universelle. Lorsque nous abordons le problème du colonialisme, nous devons tous nous souvenir que les circonstances historiques qui ont favorisé la formation des empires belge, britannique, hollandais, français et allemand au XVIIIème siècle et au XIXème siècle ont conduit, à la même époque, à l'établissement d'un empire russe qui a soumis à une domination étrangère des cultures anciennes et des nations entières. Ainsi, le colonialisme s'est répandu, à partir de l'Europe, non seulement au-delà des océans, mais aussi sur de vastes étendues de terres. De plus, dans les temps modernes, nous avons été témoins d'une deuxième poussée de l'impérialisme russe. Des pays libres, constitués en vertu du droit de libre détermination dont on a favorisé l'exercice à la fin de la première guerre mondiale, ont été engloutis par l'empire communiste.

39. Il ne s'agit pas là de faits purement historiques dont l'importance est effacée par le temps; il s'agit d'un aspect essentiel du problème que nous discutons aujourd'hui et que nous avons discuté à l'Assemblée en maintes autres occasions et sous des titres divers. Il s'agit du problème de l'application universelle des droits et libertés proclamés par notre charte.

40. En poursuivant les buts et principes élevés qui sont énoncés par la Charte, l'Organisation a contribué largement à apporter la liberté et l'indépendance à de nombreux pays. L'histoire nous apprend que, depuis 1939, 44 nations, groupant au total plus de 840 millions d'habitants, ont accédé à l'indépendance. Aujourd'hui, leurs représentants jouent un rôle important dans nos délibérations.

41. Mais que dire de la situation des peuples assujettis qui se trouvent dans l'empire soviétique? Les estimations peuvent varier, mais il y a environ 96 millions de personnes qui sont soumises à la domination soviétique et qui n'ont jamais été autorisées à exercer le droit de libre détermination que l'Union soviétique proclame à grands cris pour les autres. Que l'Union soviétique persiste à refuser aux nations soumises à sa domination l'exercice du droit à des élections libres et du droit d'expression, c'est un phénomène unique et inquiétant à l'époque où dans le monde entier l'une des plus hautes aspirations de l'humanité est l'évolution de tous les peuples dépendants, dans la paix et dans l'ordre, vers la liberté.

42. Ce phénomène est d'autant plus inquiétant que ce qui se passe effectivement dans l'empire soviétique ne correspond absolument pas aux grandes protestations de la propagande soviétique. Tout de suite après la révolution soviétique, on a fait beaucoup de bruit autour de la croyance communiste au droit de libre détermination. Vers 1920 et peu après, les Etats indépendants ont effectivement vu le jour dans la masse continentale qui est maintenant dominée par le communisme russe. Cependant, les aspirations nationalistes des différents peuples qui habitaient cette immense étendue ont été rapidement étouffées dès que les dirigeants du parti communiste à Moscou se sont rendu compte que ces Etats étaient résolus à préserver leur liberté politique et leur héritage culturel et linguistique de l'ingérence du Kremlin. Avec un mépris grossier de l'indépendance qui avait été d'abord reconnue à ces Etats et sans aucun égard pour les traités d'amitié et de non-intervention qui liaient alors ces Etats à l'Union soviétique, on a en-voyé l'Armée rouge asservir de nombreuses nations, petites mais fibres. C'est ainsi que, même dans une période où des progrès étaient accomplis ailleurs, c'est-à-dire depuis 1939, l'Union soviétique a annexé plus de 680 000 kilomètres carrés de territoire, comprenant une population de 22 millions d'habitants. En employant des tactiques inventées au cours de la période révolutionnaire et perfectionnées à une époque plus récente, l'empire soviétique a absorbé dans les 23 dernières années les Etats baltes, les îles Kouriles, le sud de l'île Sakhaline, Tannou-Touva qui faisait autrefois partie de la Mongolie, certaines provinces finlandaises, certaines provinces polonaises, la Bessarabie et le nord de la Bukovine qui appartenaient autrefois à la Roumanie, la Prusse orientale, la Rhuténie qui faisait autrefois partie de la Tchécoslovaquie et qui est surtout ukrainienne de culture et de langue.

43. De plus, cette extension de la domination soviétique s'est toujours accompagnée de la suppression systématique du nationalisme politique dans les régions assujetties et de la destruction de cultures, de langues et de religions auxquelles les populations étaient attachées de longue date. Quand la résistance était acharnée, l'Union soviétique employait la déportation comme moyen de renforcer sa domination. Non moins de sept minorités nationales ont été ainsi exilées de leurs régions d'origine et c'est seulement en 1957 qu'un semblant d'effort a été fait pour restituer à certaines de ces minorités ne serait-ce qu'une minuscule fraction des droits dont elles avaient été privées.

44. Nous n'avons là qu'une petite partie de l'histoire de la tyrannie soviétique, histoire qui ne fait pas honneur à un pays jouissant du rang de grande puissance à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Cette histoire expose au grand jour les raisons pour lesquelles l'Union soviétique et ses partisans consacrent tant de temps, dans les débats des Nations Unies, à critiquer et à condamner les actions des autres.

45. Elle explique pourquoi les représentants de l'Union soviétique au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ont eu recours à une tactique qui ne pouvait avoir d'autre but que celui d'entraver les travaux du Comité. Les représentants de l'Union soviétique cherchaient manifestement à masquer les laides réalités qui existent dans la sphère de l'impérialisme soviétique en les couvrant du rideau de fumée de leurs attaques virulentes contre les puissances occidentales. Afin de détourner l'attention de sa pratique du mal, l'Union soviétique fait depuis longtemps des sermons sur les péchés d'autrui.

46. Le Canada, conformément à ses traditions et à ses convictions, a salué avec grande satisfaction l'évolution régulière qui s'est produite depuis 20 ans en faveur de l'indépendance. Nous nous sommes efforcés d'encourager cette évolution en exerçant notre influence dans le sens de la conciliation, de l'ordre et du progrès. Nous avons été heureux de pouvoir aider les nouveaux Etats à affermir sur des bases solides leur stabilité économique et sociale.

47. C'est pourquoi nous déplorons que le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales, qui a caractérisé toutes les réalisations des Nations Unies pendant cette période, n'ait pas pénétré dans les régions soumises à la domination soviétique. Le contraste éclate au grand jour entre la conduite des puissances occidentales et celle de l'Union soviétique, et nul n'ignore la contradiction qui se mani-feste entre les déclarations de l'Union soviétique et ses actes. Il nous suffit de tourner nos regards vers le mur de Berlin pour voir avec quelle opiniâtreté l'Union soviétique cherche à isoler de la contagion de la liberté les peuples opprimés qui vivent derrière le rideau de fer.

48. Les opinions que je viens d'exprimer ne traduisent aucun changement d'attitude de la part du Canada. Dans le discours qu'il a prononcé dans la discussion générale devant l'Assemblée en septembre 1960 [871ème séance], le Premier Ministre du Canada avait relevé le contraste frappant qui existait entre le bilan des puissances d'Europe occidentale et celui de l'Union soviétique. M. Diefenbaker s'était alors adressé au président Khrouchtchev pour l'inviter à traduire en actes ses nombreuses protestations d'intérêt en faveur des droits des peuples dépendants, en accordant aux nations placées sous sa domination le droit de choisir leurs propres chefs et leur propre forme de gouvernement par des élections libres et secrètes. Le Premier Ministre du Canada avait alors déclaré:

"En fait, la présente Assemblée est composée en très grande partie de pays qui sont d'anciens territoires coloniaux, territoires sous mandat ou territoires sous tutelle du Royaume-Uni, du Commonwealth et d'autres nations.

"Je me permettrai de poser ici cette question: à combien d'êtres humains l'URSS a-t-elle accordé leur indépendance? Pouvons-nous oublier comment l'une des colonies d'après guerre de l'Union soviétique a cherché à se libérer, il y a quatre ans, et ce qu'il en est advenu?

"Je fais cette observation parce que l'histoire du Commonwealth et d'autres pays incite à faire une comparaison avec la domination imposée à certains peuples et territoires, sous couleur, dans certains cas, de libération et toujours accompagnée, pour ceux qui la subissent, de la perte de la liberté politique. Comment concilier la tragédie qui a suivi le soulèvement hongrois de 1956 avec l'assertion pleine d'assurance qu'a faite ici le président Khrouchtchev, il y a quelques jours? M. Khrouchtchev a dit [869ème séance]:

"Nous avons toujours voulu et nous voudrions toujours que les peuples d'Afrique et des autres continents, en se libérant du joug colonial, établissent dans leur pays le régime de leur choix."

"J'approuve cette idée et j'espère que ces mots annoncent, pour l'avenir, un changement d'attitude de la part de ceux que représente M. Khrouchtchev.

"Mais que dire de la Lituanie, de l'Estonie, de la Lettonie? Que dire des Ukrainiens épris de liberté et de tant d'autres peuples d'Europe orientale que je n'énumérerai pas, de peur d'en oublier? M. Khrouchtchev a continué en disant:

"La suppression complète et définitive du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations est dictée par tout le cours de l'histoire mondiale des dernières dizaines d'années."

"Il ne peut y avoir deux poids et deux mesures dans les affaires internationales.

"Je demande au Président du Conseil des ministres de l'URSS de donner aux nations qui sont sous sa domination le droit à des élections libres et la possibilité de choisir, de manière véritablement libre, la forme de gouvernement qu'elles désirent. Si le principe qu'il a énoncé, et qui doit s'appliquer de façon universelle, entraîne pour lui cette conclusion, des mesures seront prises pour exécuter les obligations de la Charte des Nations Unies et un nouvel espoir naîtra pour l'humanité entière." [871^{ème} séance, par. 193 à 197.]

AI-je besoin d'ajouter que l'Union soviétique n'a pas répondu à cette invitation? Aucun signe n'est venu montrer aux Nations Unies qu'un adoucissement ait été apporté à la situation intolérable qui règne dans l'empire soviétique.

49. Conformément à la position définie par son premier ministre, le Gouvernement canadien a continué à insister pour que les Nations Unies portent leur attention sur les conditions qui règnent dans l'empire soviétique et plus particulièrement sur la négation des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales. Ces conditions devraient être examinées dans toutes les discussions de l'Assemblée au sujet de ces droits et libertés et du statut des peuples dépendants, où qu'ils se trouvent. Notre intention est de replacer dans une juste perspective les réclames violentes que l'Union soviétique fait pour le compte des autres au sujet de droits et d'avantages qu'elle refuse aux peuples assujettis de l'empire soviétique.

50. Il est incontestable que la Déclaration sur le colonialisme doit s'appliquer partout dans le monde. Il est incontestable qu'elle est loin d'être généralement appliquée. Il est bien évident que le Comité spécial a encore devant lui beaucoup de travail utile à accomplir. Si j'ai insisté dans ma déclaration sur le problème de l'impérialisme soviétique, c'est que jusqu'à présent, de l'avis de mon gouvernement, les Nations Unies n'ont pas prêté à ce problème l'attention qu'il mérite. Alors que les Nations Unies examinent la situation dans beaucoup d'autres régions, pourquoi ne se tournent-elles jamais vers les régions soumises à la sombre tyrannie soviétique? L'Assemblée n'a aucune raison d'opérer un choix parmi ceux qu'elle dénonce comme oppresseurs.

M. Crowe (Royaume-Uni), vice-président, prend la présidence.

51. M. BUDO (Albanie): Deux années se sont écoulées depuis que l'Assemblée générale a adopté la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) sur l'élimination du système odieux du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. A la session précédente, l'Assemblée, par sa résolution 1654 (XVI), notant avec regret la violation des dispositions de la Déclaration par les puissances coloniales, créait un Comité spécial de 17 membres chargé de veiller à l'application de ces dispositions et de lui présenter à ce sujet un rapport à la présente session.

52. Les résolutions et les mesures adoptées par l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont ranimé les espoirs des peuples subjugués et ont donné un nouvel élan à leur mouvement et à leur lutte légitime de libération nationale. Elles ont été appuyées par tous les peuples épris de liberté et de paix.

53. Cependant les puissances coloniales non seulement n'ont pas tenu compte des obligations qui leur incombent tant sur la base des résolutions susmentionnées qu'en vertu de la Charte, mais, face aux efforts de l'Organisation et à la lutte croissante des peuples pour se délivrer des chaînes du colo-niaisme, ont multiplié leurs agissements et se sont employées par tous les moyens à leur disposition à maintenir, fût-ce sous des formes nouvelles, ce régime honteux d'asservissement et d'exploitation des peuples qui est à la base même du système impérialiste.

54. Au cours de cette année, de nouveaux pays ont, grâce à leur lutte, accédé à l'indépendance. C'est ainsi que nous avons eu la joie d'accueillir parmi nous à cette session six nouveaux Membres à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il importe en particulier de souligner que la victoire historique remportée, grâce à sa longue lutte héroïque, par le vaillant peuple d'Algérie a été le triomphe hautement mérité de ses aspirations légitimes. Par sa lutte couronnée de victoire, le peuple algérien n'a pas seulement libéré sa patrie: il a été, par son exemple, une source d'inspiration et d'encouragement pour tous les peuples luttant contre l'asservissement colonial, et a apporté une grande contribution à la cause du mouvement de libération nationale.

55. D'autres nations, des dizaines de millions d'êtres humains, souffrent encore sous le joug de la domination étrangère. Dans divers points du globe, des peuples livrent des combats contre les oppresseurs colonialistes, des milliers d'hommes tombent au champ de bataille ou sont victimes de mesures de répression atroces en raison uniquement de la lutte qu'ils mènent pour la reconnaissance de leurs droits légitimes et inaliénables à la liberté et à l'indépendance. La résolution 1514 (XV) prescrit dans son paragraphe 5:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

56. Nous ne pouvons nous empêcher d'exprimer notre préoccupation à l'égard de l'application de la Déclaration et de l'état de choses intolérable dont sont actuellement victimes des millions d'hommes assujettis, et qui constitue en même temps une menace constante à la paix et à la sécurité internationales. Les dispositions de la Déclaration ne doivent pas rester lettre morte; elles doivent se traduire dans les faits et elles doivent contribuer efficacement à la lutte des peuples asservis qui cherchent à mettre un terme une fois pour toutes et sans plus tarder au régime colonial.

57. Les Nations Unies ne peuvent rester indifférentes devant le sort de ceux qui souffrent encore sous la domination coloniale des impérialistes. Le rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238] ainsi que les faits patents de la situation régnant à l'heure actuelle dans les territoires dépendants d'Afrique et d'autres continents témoignent de l'importance que revêt la question de l'élimination définitive et immédiate du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes.

58. Certains orateurs qui m'ont précédé dans ce débat ont exposé la situation sérieuse existant dans les territoires qui ont été l'objet d'une étude dans le rapport présenté par le Comité spécial, ainsi que dans d'autres territoires dépendants, et nous ont dépeint la position négative adoptée en la matière par les puissances administrantes respectives, leur attitude obstructionniste et leurs manœuvres diverses pour éviter l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Des faits irréfutables cités à cette tribune nous ont montré, à l'évidence, la façon dont les puissances ont foulé aux pieds les dispositions de la Déclaration, ainsi que leurs efforts redoublés en vue de prolonger autant que possible leur domination sur les territoires se trouvant sous leur administration.

59. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni poursuit en Afrique sa politique, érigée en système, visant à sauvegarder, sous des formes nouvelles, ses intérêts impérialistes et colonialistes.

60. Dans les deux Rhodésies et au Nyassaland, où sévit la discrimination raciale la plus abominable, le Royaume-Uni, ne respectant point la Déclaration du 14 décembre 1960, ne renonce pas à ses manœuvres législatives et autres mesures discriminatoires intolérables visant à assurer la position privilégiée de la minorité des colons blancs et à sauvegarder les intérêts des colonialistes britanniques qui retirent de ces pays des bénéfices fabuleux.

61. En ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Sud, le Royaume-Uni n'a tenu aucun compte de la résolution 1747 (XVI), et en particulier de l'alinéa a de son paragraphe 2, dans lequel l'Assemblée générale demande la convocation d'une conférence constitutionnelle où seraient représentés tous les partis politiques, en vue d'élaborer "une constitution qui remplacerait la Constitution du 6 décembre 1961 et garantirait les droits de la majorité de la population sur la base du principe "à chacun une voix". Contrairement à la demande de l'Assemblée et en dépit de l'opposition résolue de la population africaine, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni vient justement de mettre en vigueur la Constitution discriminatoire de 1961. L'arbitraire et les pratiques discriminatoires au détriment de la population africaine, qui représente la majorité écrasante, continuent comme par le passé; un régime de répression sans merci frappe toutes les forces progressistes de la population autochtone; les partis politiques sont toujours interdits et les combattants de la liberté languissent dans les prisons des maîtres blancs.

62. Des moyens visant aux mêmes buts sont appliqués dans d'autres territoires sous administration britannique. Ainsi qu'il ressort du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, malgré ses promesses et ses déclarations, a recours, au Kenya, à Zanzibar et en Guyane britannique, à sa méthode traditionnelle bien connue consistant à diviser pour régner; il s'efforce de semer des discordes de toutes sortes et de favoriser le séparatisme et le régionalisme. Les patriotes du Kenya mettent en garde l'Organisation contre tout délai qui pourrait être dangereux tant pour l'avenir de ce pays menacé de démembrement et de fragmentation en de nouveaux Katangas que pour la paix en général.

63. A Zanzibar, les autorités britanniques ne cessent d'arrêter et d'emprisonner les patriotes qui luttent contre l'oppression coloniale. Le 5 mai 1962, elles ont arrêté le journaliste James Bugenko et 14 autres patriotes. La population de Zanzibar s'est élevée avec vigueur et a protesté énergiquement contre de tels actes; elle a dévoilé, en particulier, la coopération, dans cette abominable besogne, entre les autorités britanniques et le consulat des Etats-Unis à Zanzibar, coopération qui vise à écraser, par tous les moyens de répression, la lutte des combattants de ce territoire pour la liberté. La population de Zanzibar s'est prononcée contre la prétendue aide des Etats-Unis et a fermement exigé le démantèlement des bases américaines de fusées à Zanzibar.

64. En ce qui concerne la Guyane britannique, le Royaume-Uni a encore retardé l'indépendance de ce territoire et n'a même pas fixé une date à cet effet.

65. Au Moyen-Orient, à côté de la guerre d'extermination qu'il mène contre l'héroïque peuple d'Oman, qui lutte depuis des années pour sa liberté et son indépendance, le Royaume-Uni tend à transformer sa colonie d'Aden en une base militaire principale, devant servir ses plans agressifs dans cette zone où sa position a été sérieusement ébranlée par suite de la défaite subie en ce qui concerne le canal de Suez. Les mesures prises dans ce sens dernièrement par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, y compris ses tentatives pour créer une fédération entre Aden et les zones contiguës, nous fournissent une preuve de plus des liens étroits qui existent entre les plans de stratégie militaire des impérialistes et leur système de domination coloniale et, par là, du danger que représente pour la cause de la paix la survivance de ce régime d'asservissement des peuples.

66. Malgré la résolution 1514 (XV), et bien que l'Assemblée générale et l'opinion publique mondiale aient condamné à maintes reprises la politique colonialiste du Portugal et ses prétentions absurdes au sujet de ses colonies, le gouvernement de ce pays continue à ne tenir aucun compte des obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la Charte et des résolutions de l'Organisation. Logique avec sa position foncièrement négative et insensée, le Gouvernement portugais a publié, le 28 août 1962, un plan tendant à annexer purement et simplement ses colonies au Portugal comme faisant partie intégrante du territoire de la métropole. Si paradoxal que cela puisse paraître, c'est là un fait qui correspond à la conception que ce gouvernement se fait de ses colonies. Le monde est au courant de la guerre d'extermination que mènent, depuis deux ans, en Angola, les colonialistes portugais. On ne saurait trop attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur cette guerre atroce qui a pris le caractère d'un véritable génocide. Les Nations Unies doivent agir d'urgence afin de mettre un terme au massacre d'une population qui lutte pour son droit inaliénable à une vie libre et indépendante.

67. Un régime de terreur et de répression règne dans les autres colonies portugaises. Le dirigeant de la lutte de libération nationale de la Guinée dite portugaise et des îles du Cap-Vert, Amílcar Kobra, parlant à une conférence de presse, le 27 août 1962, du régime de terreur coloniale dans son pays, soulignait que la capitale, Bissão, est transformée en une grande prison; plus de 9 000 agents de police équipés d'armes modernes terrorisent la population autochtone et environ 3 000 combattants de la liberté se meurent dans les prisons et les camps de concentration. Parmi les méthodes utilisées par les autorités coloniales contre les Africains, il citait l'empoisonnement, les tortures sauvages, l'anéantissement de villages entiers. Parlant de la lutte de libération nationale, qui prend des proportions toujours plus grandes, il attirait particulièrement l'attention sur l'aide fournie au Portugal, pour mener sa guerre coloniale, par l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord et par les puissances impérialistes qui font partie de ce bloc agressif, en tout premier lieu les Etats-Unis.

68. Nul doute que, sans cette aide, le Portugal ne serait jamais en mesure ni de tenir tête à la lutte croissante de libération nationale des peuples se trouvant sous sa domination, ni de fouler aux pieds les nombreuses résolutions adoptées à son sujet par l'Assemblée générale. Il est bien connu que, sur la base de l'accord en vigueur entre le Portugal et les Etats-Unis, ce dernier pays a construit des bases militaires dans les îles des Açores. Pour le renouvellement de cet accord, le Gouvernement portugais a exigé des Etats-Unis de nouvelles fournitures d'armements et un plus grand appui diplomatique en ce qui concerne sa politique coloniale en Afrique. Le journal La Tribune des Nations affirmait récemment que le Portugal avait demandé au Gouvernement des Etats-Unis d'exercer son influence auprès de certains de ses alliés aux Nations Unies afin que ceux-ci lui accordent leur appui au sein de l'Organisation au sujet de ses problèmes coloniaux; le journal ajoutait que cette demande avait obtenu l'approbation du Pentagone.

69. La coopération étroite entre les colonialistes portugais et les impérialistes américains s'applique à toutes les colonies portugaises. C'est grâce à cette coopération que le Portugal est en train de construire maintenant de nouvelles bases en Angola et au Mozambique.

70. Le leader nationaliste du Mozambique, A. Gvambe, dans une déclaration récente, disait notamment à ce sujet qu'à part les 10 bases existant déjà au Mozambique les Portugais en construiraient encore cinq autres, dont l'une à proximité de la frontière du Tanganyika. Toutes ces bases sont construites, affirme-t-il, avec l'aide directe du bloc des pays de l'OTAN, et en vue de réprimer le mouvement de libération au Mozambique et dans d'autres pays d'Afrique. Nous estimons nécessaire d'attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur l'importance que revêt la suppression des bases militaires des puissances occidentales en territoire africain et dans les autres territoires sous leur dépendance. Cela répond tant à la nécessité de créer des conditions favorables à la libération des peuples subjugués qu'à la paix en général.

71. En Afrique du Sud, le gouvernement applique toujours sa politique criminelle d'apartheid contre la population de couleur. Ne tenant aucun compte de la Déclaration de l'Assemblée générale et des nombreuses résolutions adoptées à son sujet, ce gouvernement continue à maintenir sa domination coloniale sur le Sud-Ouest africain. Les mesures extraordinaires qu'il a prises dernièrement, l'accélération de ses préparatifs militaires visant à réprimer par la force des armes le mouvement de libération nationale dans le Sud-Ouest africain ne peuvent manquer d'inquiéter les Nations Unies et d'attirer leur attention sur la gravité de la situation. Ainsi qu'il est préconisé dans le rapport du Comité spécial, l'Organisation doit adopter sans plus tarder des mesures concrètes en vue d'assurer au plus tôt l'accession du Sud-Ouest africain à l'indépendance.

72. La situation qui règne dans les territoires encore soumis au régime colonial présente un sinistre tableau. Ainsi, des millions d'êtres humains subissent encore l'exploitation la plus inhumaine, vivent dans la misère, sont l'objet de la discrimination raciale et de l'humiliation la plus abominable, sont privés des droits politiques, économiques et sociaux les plus élémentaires, et sont constamment soumis à un régime de terreur féroce et de répression qui s'aggrave à mesure que se développent le mouvement et la lutte de libération nationale de ces peuples, et qui va, dans certains cas, jusqu'à la guerre coloniale d'extermination. Les maîtres colonialistes, les monopoles de la métropole et leurs instruments locaux, les colons blancs, implantés du dehors dans les territoires dépendants, tiennent en leurs mains tous les pouvoirs, retirent des bénéfices énormes et jouissent de tous les privilèges au détriment des populations autochtones.

73. La position négative obstinément adoptée par les puissances coloniales à l'égard de la résolution 1514 (XV) et des autres résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale, ainsi qu'envers les principes mêmes de la Charte, est contraire aux obligations qui incombent à ces puissances en tant que Membres de l'Organisation. Cette position anachronique, qui pèse si lourdement sur la vie de millions d'êtres humains, est condamnée par tous les peuples épris de liberté et de paix et ne peut plus être tolérée.

74. Nul doute que, si les puissances colonialistes ont pu maintenir jusqu'à présent leur domination coloniale, si elles ont pu résister encore à la puissante vague du mouvement des peuples pour l'indépendance, c'est grâce à leur solidarité et surtout grâce à l'appui et à l'aide qu'elles reçoivent de la première puissance impérialiste, les Etats-Unis. Ce pays constitue à présent le principal rempart du colonialisme contemporain. Il est l'adversaire le plus dangereux du mouvement de libération nationale des peuples, de tous ceux qui luttent pour se délivrer du joug colonial ou pour consolider leur indépendance et leur souveraineté nationale. Les Etats-Unis portent donc la responsabilité première du maintien actuel du système abhorré de l'exploitation coloniale, dont les monopoles américains sont copartenaires avec les autres colonialistes et tirent des bénéfices énormes.

75. Un trait caractéristique de la période qui a suivi la seconde guerre mondiale est le fait que les puissances impérialistes, en face du nouveau rapport des forces dans le monde, et assaillies par la vague montante de la lutte de libération des peuples subjugués, se sont rendu compte de l'impossibilité de maintenir plus longtemps encore les formes périmées de domination politique dans les colonies; elles ont estimé nécessaire de recourir, pour sauvegarder leurs intérêts, à de nouvelles méthodes, plus voilées que les précédentes et mieux adaptées aux conditions nouvelles. C'est ainsi qu'elles se sont vues forcées dans certains cas de faire des concessions politiques en sauvegardant en même temps leurs intérêts économiques, principalement le contrôle sur les matières premières et sur les denrées alimentaires, ainsi que les marchés pour leurs produits industriels et pour leurs capitaux.

76. Dans cette forme d'exploitation néo-colonialiste des peuples, aux anciens colonialistes se sont ajoutés de nouveaux partenaires, comme les Etats-Unis, l'Allemagne de l'Ouest et d'autres encore. Certainement, dans cette ruée vers le néo-colonialisme, les Etats-Unis se sont révélés le concurrent le plus puissant et le plus redoutable pour les anciennes puissances coloniales, ainsi que l'adversaire le plus dangereux des peuples luttant pour leur indépendance.

77. Dès qu'a commencé l'extraction, par les étrangers, de l'or, des diamants, du cuivre et d'autres minéraux dans des régions telles que l'Afrique du Sud, la Rhodésie et le Congo, le capital américain a concurrencé le capital européen. Pour avoir une idée de l'afflux du capital des Etats-Unis en Afrique, il convient de noter que, tandis qu'en 1939 les investissements américains dans ce continent se montaient seulement à 100 millions de dollars, en 1959 le total des investissements atteignait plus de 2 milliards de dollars et donnait un bénéfice de 20 p. 100, soit 400 millions de dollars. Il importe de faire observer que, si le total des investissements américains actuels en Afrique est inférieur à ceux des puissances coloniales européennes, le fait significatif est que les investissements de ces dernières vont en diminuant, tandis que ceux des Etats-Unis croissent sans cesse.

78. L'aide que les puissances occidentales proposent aux pays sous-développés récemment devenus indépendants ne répond point à leurs nécessités de développement rapide; elle poursuit des objectifs qui n'ont rien de commun avec les intérêts de ces pays.

79. Dans une brochure récemment publiée par la Mission des affaires étrangères de la Kenya African National Union, où l'on décrit en détail la pénétration néo-colonialiste américaine en Afrique, il est dit notamment en ce qui concerne la prétendue aide américaine:

"Les formes variées de l'aide des Etats-Unis aux pays sous-développés ne visent pas à donner à ces pays ce dont ils ont besoin pour leur développement rapide; elles visent plutôt à créer des bases de pénétration pour les investissements américains et à satisfaire les exigences de l'impérialisme américain. Cela signifie l'extraction à bas prix des minéraux et autres ressources nécessaires aux industries des Etats-Unis. Cela signifie la conquête de marchés et de profits nouveaux pour les produits manufacturés provenant des Etats-Unis ou pour les industries de consommation établies à l'étranger par le capital américain. Cela signifie aussi le contrôle des matières stratégiques, la création de bases et d'alliances militaires supplémentaires, ainsi que l'engagement des pays économiquement dépendants à suivre la politique étrangère du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis."

Dans un autre passage, il est dit:

"La prétendue assistance donnée par les Etats-Unis aux pays africains n'est autre chose que la fourniture d'armes destinées à être employées contre les peuples mêmes de ces colonies et pour protéger les investissements des compagnies américaines qui les exploitent."

80. Certainement, la pénétration néo-colonialiste des Etats-Unis ne se limite pas à l'Afrique, elle s'étend aux autres continents et à de nombreux pays. Ainsi les Etats-Unis, en dehors de la domination coloniale directe, se servent de méthodes nouvelles camouflées en vue d'établir la domination financière et politique de l'impérialisme américain.

81. Nul doute que les peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'Amérique latine savent à quoi s'en tenir. Forts de leur propre expérience de la domination colonialiste ou de l'expérience des autres peuples qui n'ont pu se délivrer des chaînes du colonialisme que grâce à une longue lutte, ils sauront faire échouer les plans et les visées de tous les néo-colonialistes, y compris les Etats-Unis.

82. Plus que jamais, la situation internationale actuelle évolue en faveur des peuples. La lutte des peuples contre le colonialisme et le néo-colonialisme, qui constitue des sources de guerre et de tension internationale, va s'accroissant et remporte victoire sur victoire. Cette lutte est étroitement liée au mouvement des peuples pour la défense de la paix. La paix et la liberté des peuples sont inséparables l'une de l'autre. Chaque victoire dans la lutte pour l'indépendance nationale affaiblit les forces de l'impérialisme agressif et constitue un coup porté aux forces de guerre et une contribution à la consolidation de la paix.

83. Les Nations Unies ne doivent épargner aucun effort en vue de contribuer efficacement à la lutte des peuples pour l'indépendance. C'est la tâche la plus élevée de l'Organisation. Les puissances coloniales ne tiennent pas compte de la Déclaration et des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale en la matière et ne veulent pas renoncer à leurs intérêts colonialistes et impérialistes. L'Assemblée générale doit adopter des mesures adéquates énergiques et décisives pour forcer les puissances coloniales à appliquer et mettre en œuvre complètement et immédiatement la Déclaration sur l'élimination, le plus rapidement possible et sans délai, du système colonialiste sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Il faut en finir une fois pour toutes avec cette séquelle honteuse pour notre société qu'est le colonialisme.

84. L'ONU doit exiger aussi de tous ses membres qu'ils s'abstiennent d'accorder à n'importe quelle puissance coloniale une assistance destinée à être employée contre la lutte des peuples pour se délivrer du colonialisme.

85. Etant donné l'attitude obstinée négative du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud à l'égard de toutes les résolutions de l'Organisation qui les concernent, il n'est que temps, pour l'Assemblée générale, d'adopter des mesures décisives pour forcer ces puissances coloniales à appliquer immédiatement la Déclaration aux territoires sous leur administration respective et d'exiger, le cas échéant, l'application des sanctions prévues au Chapitre VII de la Charte.

86. La délégation albanaise estime que le Comité spécial, par son travail considérable, a fait œuvre utile. Son rapport nous fournit un exposé important de la situation dans les territoires qui font l'objet de son étude, ainsi que de l'attitude négative adoptée par les puissances coloniales vis-à-vis de la Déclaration. Nous considérons que les conclusions et les recommandations contenues dans le rapport faciliteront la tâche de l'Assemblée générale dans l'adoption des mesures nouvelles propres à donner au plus tôt effet à la Déclaration.

87. Ma délégation appuiera toutes les mesures susceptibles de tendre efficacement à l'objectif recherché: l'élimination, une fois pour toutes et sans délai, du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes.

88. M. IQBAL (Pakistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Permettez-moi d'abord d'adresser les félicitations les plus sincères de ma délégation au Comité spécial pour son rapport sur la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5238].

89. Je rappellerai ici que le Comité spécial a été créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale, qui avait été proposée par 38 Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie, dont le Pakistan, et adoptée le 27 novembre 1961. Elle était destinée à atteindre les objectifs fixés dans la résolution 1514 (XV), adoptée le 14 décembre 1960. La résolution 1514 (XV), dont mon pays s'honore d'avoir été également l'un des auteurs, a reçu avec raison le titre de Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, car elle proclame solennellement "la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations" et elle déclare que "des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes".

90. Ma délégation est heureuse de constater que, deux ans après l'adoption de cette résolution historique, de nombreux peuples ont été reconnus comme nations libres et de nombreuses nations ont accédé à l'indépendance. En 1960, 18 nouveaux Etats ont été admis comme Membres de l'Organisation. En 1961 et en 1962, nous avons été heureux d'accueillir le Tanganyika, le Sierra Leone, l'Ouganda, la Trinité et Tobago, la Jamaïque, le Rwanda, le Burundi et l'Algérie dans notre communauté internationale d'Etats souverains. Nous avons aussi le ferme et sincère espoir que, dans un proche avenir, le problème du colonialisme sera définitivement résolu de manière juste et appropriée.

91. Je puis dire que la position de mon pays sur ce problème est bien connue. Nous nous sommes toujours élevés contre le système du colonialisme sous sa forme traditionnelle et sous toutes ses autres formes. Le colonialisme, dans le sens admis du terme ou dans son sens implicite et de quelque manière qu'on prétende le justifier, conduit toujours à une exploitation d'un genre ou d'un autre et retarde la marche naturelle de l'homme vers la liberté, en l'empêchant de secouer le joug imposé par d'autres hommes.

92. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'énumérer les maux qu'engendre le colonialisme, car on en a déjà parlé longuement dans les précédents débats de l'Assemblée. Depuis deux ans, une des préoccupations majeures des Nations Unies est de trouver les moyens de hâter le processus de décolonisation, grâce à l'application effective de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, dans le plus bref délai.

93. Ma délégation attache une grande importance au rapport du Comité spécial, qu'elle a étudié très attentivement. A notre avis, le programme de travail adopté par le Comité est judicieux. En décidant de donner la priorité aux territoires dépendants d'Afrique et de s'en occuper avant d'entreprendre l'examen d'autres territoires, le Comité a choisi une sage ligne de conduite, car c'est certainement en Afrique que des peuples et des territoires demeurent encore soumis dans une très large mesure à la domination coloniale et vivent dans des conditions tragiques et déplorables qui sont une source de tension explosive. Nous avons assisté aux débuts foudroyants de l'indépendance africaine: il est indiscutable que sa réali-sation totale équivaldra presque à la solution du problème du colonialisme.

94. Nous devons aussi féliciter le Comité pour sa décision de se rendre en Afrique et d'y tenir des réunions, ce qui, tout en montrant la ferme intention du Comité d'affronter les problèmes là où ils se trouvent, avec toutes leurs conséquences tragiques et explosives, a également — selon les propres paroles de M. Diallo Telli, ambassadeur de Guinée — "soulevé en Afrique un intérêt considérable et renforcé les espoirs et la confiance des peuples africains que de nouvelles et décisives étapes seraient franchies en vue d'assurer l'accélération du processus de leur libération définitive" [1169ème séance, par. 2].

95. Le Comité spécial a accompli une tâche vraiment très utile en attirant l'attention des Nations Unies sur les conditions qui règnent dans 12 territoires coloniaux, dont 11 territoires d'Afrique et un territoire d'Amérique du Sud. Cependant, il reste encore d'autres territoires dont la situation relève des travaux du Comité, bien que, pour des raisons évidentes, il n'ait pas encore adopté un programme de travaux futurs concernant ces territoires. Les problèmes complexes que posent certains territoires dépendants comme les îles éparpillées dans l'océan Pacifique ou les petites enclaves enfermées dans un autre territoire doivent également être examinés, et des suggestions et recommandations constructives seraient nécessaires, surtout en ce qui concerne les mécanismes d'autodétermination ou d'accession à l'indépendance pour ces territoires.

96. Nous avons également étudié avec grande attention les recommandations du Comité spécial se rapportant aux autres comités, sous-comités et comités spéciaux qui s'occupent actuellement de la question de l'application de la Déclaration dans les territoires dépendants de toutes catégories. On pourrait envisager soit de fusionner avec le Comité spécial ces divers organes des Nations Unies qui s'occupent de domaines très voisins, soit de coordonner d'une manière ou d'une autre leurs méthodes de travail. A notre avis, il conviendrait d'augmenter le nombre des membres du Comité spécial, à condition bien entendu que cela n'entrave pas sa liberté d'action. Le rapport du Comité contient des études particulières sur les territoires non autonomes administrés par le Royaume-Uni et par le Portugal. Comme ce document l'indique, les conditions varient beaucoup d'un territoire à l'autre: certains territoires semblent prêts à assumer immédiatement les responsabilités de l'indépendance, tandis que les progrès réalisés dans d'autres sont très limités.

97. La situation dans les territoires dépendants de l'Afrique australe, notamment en Rhodésie du Sud, au Mozambique, en Angola et au Sud-Ouest africain, est indéniablement alarmante et pose des problèmes qui appellent des solutions rapides. Nous savons naturellement que certaines puissances administrantes ont agi de manière plus louable que d'autres et nous avons toujours enregistré avec satisfaction la contribution apportée par le Royaume-Uni à la cause de la liberté et de l'indépendance. J'ai déclaré l'an dernier dans mon intervention sur la même question du colonialisme:

"La politique britannique qui consiste à orienter les colonies vers l'autonomie est diamétralement opposée à celle de certaines autres puissances coloniales qui prétendent, en vertu d'une fiction, ne pas considérer leurs territoires d'outre-mer comme des colonies et, en conséquence, ne sont pas disposées à prendre pour politique de préparer ces territoires à l'autonomie ou l'indépendance." [1061ème séance, par. 6.]

Etant donné l'observation que je viens de faire, nous espérons sincèrement que, devant la situation angossante qui se présente en Rhodésie du Sud, le Royaume-Uni exercera son influence et s'acquittera de ses responsabilités, conformément aux vœux librement exprimés de la population autochtone.

98. Si nous estimons que, dans chacun des territoires dépendants quels qu'ils soient, le transfert des pouvoirs doit se faire pacifiquement et harmonieusement, notre manière d'aborder le problème du colonialisme ne doit pas se fonder sur des émotions, mais doit être réaliste et constructive. Le problème du colonialisme présente trois grands aspects. En premier lieu figure le désir passionné de liberté éprouvé par les peuples non autonomes qui aspirent à l'indépendance. C'est à cause de ce désir universel de liberté nationale que le processus de libération est irrésistible et irréversible. Vient en second lieu le rôle des puissances administrantes qui sont directement responsables de l'octroi de l'indépendance à leurs territoires coloniaux. C'est pourquoi il est impossible d'atteindre dans l'ordre et dans la paix les objectifs inscrits dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux sans le concours et la coopération des puissances administrantes. Enfin, bien que la résolution 1514 (XV) ait catégoriquement affirmé que "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance", il existe dans certains territoires dépendants des peuples auxquels il faut donner aussi rapidement que possible une formation, surtout en ce qui concerne l'exercice du pouvoir politique. C'est la seule méthode qui permettra à ces peuples d'assumer les responsabilités qui incombent à un Etat indépendant et d'empêcher leurs pays de sombrer dans l'anarchie et la confusion.

99. Nous avons déjà été témoins du fait que, dans les territoires dépendants où il a été possible de réaliser un heureux compromis entre ces trois aspects du problème du colonialisme, le transfert des pouvoirs s'est effectué pacifiquement et des pays ont accédé à l'indépendance sans heurts. C'est ainsi que le cercle magique, symbole d'harmonie, s'inscrit dans les trois côtés du triangle.

100. En conclusion, nous sommes heureux de constater que, grâce aux efforts des Nations Unies et de ses organes qui s'occupent de la question de l'application de la Déclaration, en particulier du Comité spécial, les peuples assujettis avancent rapidement vers la liberté; le jour n'est pas très éloigné où l'homme pourra, en tous points du globe, s'enorgueillir de respirer dans un monde libéré, un monde véritablement libre, un monde fondé sur l'amitié et la coopération des peuples et des Etats, où tous s'efforceront de réaliser les idéaux de la Charte pour que règne partout un ordre meilleur.

M. Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

101. M. SMIRNOV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) [traduit du russe]. Plus de deux ans se sont écoulés depuis le jour où, sur la proposition de l'Union soviétique, présentée par le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev [869ème séance, par. 189], l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies a adopté à l'unanimité [947ème séance] la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. C'était une grande victoire pour les forces progressistes de l'humanité entière. La Déclaration a permis de déployer une attaque encore plus vaste contre le colonialisme afin de l'extirper définitivement.

102. Chaque année, de nouveaux Etats et de nouveaux peuples se voient octroyer l'indépendance. De novembre 1961 à ce jour, nombre de nouveaux Etats ont obtenu l'indépendance: le Tanganyika, la Trinité et Tobago, la Jamaïque, le Rwanda, le Burundi, l'Algérie et l'Ouganda. Les colonisateurs portugais ont été mis à la porte de leurs anciennes colonies en Inde, et les colonisateurs hollandais ont été contraints à régler avec l'Indonésie le problème de l'Indonésie occidentale.

103. Cependant, la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration laisse encore, à notre avis, toujours à désirer, car elle se heurte à une opposition féroce de la part des forces coloniales réunies. Il faut absolument faire encore preuve de détermination et d'unité dans l'action pour vaincre l'opposition des colonisateurs et obtenir la mise en œuvre complète de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

104. De même que quelqu'un qui se noie s'accroche à un fétu de paille, les colonisateurs s'accrochent à n'importe quelle possibilité pour conserver leurs positions coloniales dans les territoires administrés. Ils emploient à cette fin toutes sortes de méthodes artificieuses, en posant aux démocrates et aux philanthropes, tout en s'efforçant de freiner la marche des peuples vers la liberté, l'indépendance et le progrès.

105. Les Etats coloniaux et les Etats qui leur sont rattachés au sein des différents blocs s'efforcent avant tout de tirer parti de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et de tous ses organes où l'on décide de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration. Il n'est pas de question, il n'est pas de décision visant à faire appliquer la Déclaration qui ne se heurte à l'opposition de ces pays. Il suffit de prendre connaissance des comptes rendus des séances et de voir quels sont les Etats qui votent régulièrement contre ou qui s'abstiennent de voter pour savoir à qui il faut imputer le retard dans l'application de la Déclaration. Les mêmes faits se sont produits lors des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept, qui était chargé, comme on le sait, de formuler des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale à sa présente session. Ainsi qu'il apparaît du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept [A/5238], on a pu constater nettement, au cours de ses travaux, deux attitudes différentes: l'attitude des représentants des puissances coloniales et de leurs alliés qui s'efforcent par tous les moyens de différer la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration, et celle de tous les autres pays qui insistent sur l'application immédiate des principes de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

106. Ainsi, le représentant des Etats-Unis, en essayant de restreindre l'efficacité du Comité, a suggéré que les recommandations définitives du Comité se rapportent "à des types de situations plutôt qu'à des cas individuels" [ibid., chap. 1er, par. 19]. C'est bien le représentant des Etats-Unis qui a contesté au

Comité le droit d'entendre les pétitionnaires et d'envoyer des missions sur les lieux sans l'accord de la puissance administrante. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a menacé "... de retirer la coopération du Royaume-Uni au Comité spécial, s'il y avait quelque tentative que ce soit d'intervention dans l'administration des territoires dont il avait la responsabilité" [ibid., chap. 1er, par. 25].

107. A la lumière de ces faits, il semble pour le moins étrange que le représentant de l'Australie ait déclaré à la 1173ème séance de l'Assemblée, le 21 novembre 1962, que l'attitude de l'Union soviétique a fait obstacle aux travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Qui donc s'est opposé à l'envoi de missions sur les lieux, à l'audition de pétitionnaires, qui a fait objection aux recommandations du Comité? Le représentant de l'Australie pense-t-il vraiment que les participants à l'Assemblée n'ont pas pris connaissance du rapport du Comité?

108. Ainsi qu'on l'a souligné maintes fois du haut de cette tribune, notamment dans les interventions de la délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie, les pays socialistes sont à ce sujet en faveur d'une application totale et immédiate de la Déclaration et sont désireux de collaborer dès maintenant et à l'avenir avec tous ceux qui partagent cette opinion. Mais comment peut-on collaborer avec ceux qui se refusent à mettre en œuvre la Déclaration?

109. Le Comité des Dix-Sept a travaillé dans des conditions difficiles car il s'est heurté sans arrêt à la résistance des colonialistes et des forces qui leur sont alliées. Toutefois, ces forces n'ont plus maintenant une influence décisive et n'ont donc pu exercer un effet considérable sur les résultats des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Il est certain que, sans ces difficultés, le Comité aurait pu parvenir à de meilleurs résultats.

110. Ayant examiné de façon approfondie la documentation que contient le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, la délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie ne peut manquer de noter avec satisfaction que dans l'ensemble c'est bien l'esprit de la Déclaration qui a prévalu dans les travaux du Comité. Dans l'état actuel de l'opinion publique et de la situation dans le monde en général, persister à défendre ouvertement le colonialisme n'est guère possible. C'est pourquoi les Etats coloniaux, en appliquant la théorie contemporaine du néo-colonialisme, utilisent divers moyens et méthodes malhonnêtes pour prolonger l'existence des régimes coloniaux existants dans les territoires qu'ils administrent. A ce propos, il faut que tous les peuples du monde soient en alerte, qu'ils dévoilent à temps les manœuvres des colonisateurs et qu'ils y opposent la résistance nécessaire. Ce serait se laisser aller à une illusion dangereuse que de refuser de voir ce qui se passe dans le monde, fût-ce sous une forme camouflée.

111. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni applique dans tous ces domaines une politique particulièrement subtile et voilée. Jusqu'à ces derniers temps, c'est ce gouvernement qui tire encore les ficelles du colonialisme dans tous les points du globe. Les colonialistes britanniques n'ont pas encore renoncé à la politique qui consiste à "diviser pour régner". Ainsi, au Kenya, le Royaume-Uni s'est mis à attiser les tendances locales et séparatistes, à favoriser les scissions et la création de cinq ou six nouveaux Katangas. Mais cette politique provoque une résistance de plus en plus grande de la part du peuple du Kenya, ainsi que des peuples d'autres territoires où les colonisateurs essaient d'implanter cette politique. Aussi sont-ils contraints de rechercher d'autres méthodes qui leur permettent, pour l'extérieur, de faire semblant d'octroyer l'indépendance, tandis qu'en réalité le régime colonialiste subsiste toujours. Cette activité a eu pour résultat la création, contre la volonté des populations, de la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, dans le dessein de faire échouer l'octroi de l'indépendance à ces territoires. Les peuples de cette fédération mènent une lutte héroïque pour une indépendance authentique de ses trois parties: la Rhodésie du Sud, la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland.

112. Le Gouvernement colonialiste de la Fédération, ayant à sa tête sir Roy Welensky, est allé, afin de consolider sa domination sur ces territoires, jusqu'à organiser de prétendues "élections" en vue d'élire un parlement fédéral. Il serait difficile d'inventer, en matière d'"élections", une farce plus hypocrite. La population totale de la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland étant de 9 millions d'habitants, seuls 120 755 électeurs ont été admis à voter et 15 000 personnes seulement ont participé au vote qui a eu lieu le 27 avril 1962. Sir Roy Welensky a néanmoins proclamé de façon retentissante la "victoire" du parti fédéral unifié qui a obtenu 54 des 59 sièges au Parlement. Et voilà comment le Royaume-Uni essaie de créer une Fédération en Afrique centrale.

113. Dans la partie sud de la péninsule Arabique, le Royaume-Uni s'efforce d'unifier ses possessions, y compris Aden, en une Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud. Dans l'Asie du Sud-Est, il préconise un plan d'unification des colonies en ce qu'on désigne par le terme "la grande Malaisie". Dans tous ces plans, le but est le même — conserver sa domination, sous une forme voilée, sur les colonies de ces régions.

114. L'argument le plus courant dont se servent les colonisateurs du Royaume-Uni et d'autres pays pour contrecarrer l'application de la Déclaration est le prétendu manque de préparation de ces territoires à l'autonomie des points de vue politique, économique et social.

115. De tels trucs pour différer l'octroi de l'indépendance sont appliqués dans presque tous les territoires administrés par les pays colonisateurs. Etant donné que la détermination du degré de préparation à l'indépendance et son accomplissement dépendent entièrement des colonisateurs, ceux-ci sont décidés à différer indéfiniment l'octroi de l'indépendance. A ce propos, il convient de citer la déclaration du Premier Ministre de la Trinité et Tobago, M. Williams, le 20 novembre 1962, devant la London School of Economics. Voici un extrait de cette déclaration:

"Les Indes occidentales représentent un citron dont le Royaume-Uni a exprimé tout le jus et il fait seulement attention à ne pas glisser sur le reste."

116. Si c'est ainsi que le Royaume-Uni prépare à l'indépendance toutes ses autres colonies, les Nations Unies devront attendre longtemps la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il sied de rappeler aux représentants des Etats coloniaux le paragraphe de la Déclaration qui dit:

"Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance." [Résolution 1514 (XV).]

117. On cherche à atteindre les mêmes buts par d'autres subterfuges, par exemple en semant la discorde entre les tribus et entre les partis politiques. La Puissance administrante applique au Kenya une tactique — si l'on en juge d'après le rapport du Comité spécial — qui consiste à démontrer que la diversité des points de vue des partis politiques sur différentes questions ne permet pas à la Puissance administrante de soutenir un parti contre les autres, ce qui l'empêche par conséquent d'octroyer l'indépendance.

118. Les faits démontrent que les colonialistes britanniques ignorent la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et qu'ils continuent d'opprimer et d'exploiter les peuples des territoires qui dépendent du Royaume-Uni. Ils refusent de prendre des mesures radicales pour octroyer l'indépendance aux peuples asservis, ils les privent des droits démocratiques élémentaires en continuant d'appliquer la politique de discrimination raciale et en réprimant par la force brutale toute velléité de libération nationale véritable. Mais nous sommes convaincus que les colonies restantes parviendront à obtenir la liberté et l'indépendance.

119. La politique coloniale d'oppression et de rapine la plus effrénée et la plus brutale est appliquée par le Portugal dans les territoires qui dépendent de lui. C'est spasmodiquement que ce petit pays s'efforce de maintenir sa domination sur des territoires dont la superficie est 22,5 fois celle du Portugal et la population 1,3 fois plus nombreuse que celle du Portugal lui-même.

120. Toute l'humanité progressiste s'indigne des événements sanglants déclenchés par les autorités dans les colonies portugaises et particulièrement en Angola où se poursuit une guerre coloniale. L'armée coloniale portugaise qui reçoit de l'armement des pays membres de l'OTAN extermine la population locale sans défense. Des dizaines de milliers d'Africains ont été tués et des milliers d'autres, fuyant les tortures et la mort, ont quitté leurs foyers et se sont réfugiés au Congo. Mais aucune souffrance n'a pu contraindre les Angolais à renoncer à leur désir de libérer leur pays. Cette lutte aurait été couronnée de succès depuis longtemps si le Portugal n'avait pas été aidé par de nombreux pays membres de l'OTAN qui fournissent au gouvernement de Salazar des armes et lui accordent des prêts, utilisés pour faire la guerre au peuple angolais et aux peuples d'autres territoires dépendant du Portugal. Les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée portugaise et d'autres colonies portugaises endurent des humiliations et privations intolérables et sont victimes d'une politique de rapine et d'extermination massive.

121. C'est sans aucune gêne que le Portugal ne met pas en œuvre la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le Gouvernement portugais a tout bonnement déclaré que toutes ses colonies étaient des "provinces d'outre-mer" et que, cela étant, il ne s'estimait pas tenu de leur appliquer la Déclaration.

122. La situation n'est pas meilleure, au point de vue de l'octroi de l'indépendance, dans les colonies appartenant à l'Espagne, à la France, aux Pays-Bas, aux Etats-Unis et à la République sud-africaine. Les colonisateurs ont les uns pour les autres une entière compréhension et un appui total; ils agissent de concert et selon une entente préalable contre le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples de leurs colonies. C'est à cette fin qu'on installe dans les territoires administrés, ou à proximité, des bases militaires et qu'on équipe en armes les forces qui luttent contre les peuples des colonies.

123. Depuis que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance a été adoptée, on a pu constater de façon irréfutable le grave danger que présentent pour le mouvement de libération nationale les bases militaires en territoire étranger. Ces bases existent dans de nombreux pays d'Afrique, d'Asie, d'Amérique et d'Océanie, mais nous avons en vue avant tout les bases installées sur les territoires dépendants du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis, de la France, des Pays-Bas, du Portugal, de la Belgique et de l'Espagne. Ce n'est un secret pour personne que les blocs d'agression des puissances occidentales utilisent ces bases, en fin de compte, pour la lutte contre le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples des colonies et des pays dépendants.

124. En prenant la parole à la 1380^{ème} séance de la Quatrième Commission, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a confirmé, sans chercher à le dissimuler, que des armes sont livrées à la République sud-africaine, tout en le justifiant, à vrai dire, par la fiction d'intérêts spéciaux dans cette région.

125. Les peuples des territoires dépendants exigent on ne peut plus catégoriquement que l'octroi de l'indépendance soit accompagné de la liquidation des bases militaires sur leurs territoires, du retrait de ces territoires des forces armées étrangères qui y sont stationnées et de l'arrêt des fournitures d'armes aux Etats qui les utilisent ou qui pourraient les utiliser contre le mouvement de libération nationale.

126. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie se joint à l'opinion déjà exprimée par de nombreuses autres délégations pour souligner que l'octroi de l'indépendance politique ne constitue que le premier pas sur la voie difficile qui mène vers l'indépendance totale, c'est-à-dire politique, économique et spirituelle, des nations qui ont souffert pendant longtemps sous l'oppression colonialiste. Il ne faut jamais perdre de vue que les colonisateurs ont édifié au cours des siècles leur politique dans les territoires dépendants dans le dessein de maintenir les populations de ces territoires dans l'ignorance, la pauvreté, le manque de confiance dans leurs propres forces. Voyez comment vivent les peuples en Rhodésie du Sud, au Nyassaland, au Sud-Ouest africain, au Kenya, au Mozambique, en Angola, en Guyane britannique, en Guinée portugaise, en Guinée espagnole et dans tous les autres territoires coloniaux ou dépendants. Sans parler de l'absence de droits politiques, de la privation pour la population autochtone des colonies, du droit de vote, du droit d'association, du droit aux réunions et meetings, de la liberté de parole et de presse, ces populations sont également privées du droit de posséder de la terre, de travailler, d'étudier, de bénéficier de soins médicaux, des assurances sociales, etc. Ces gens sont en fait privés de la possibilité de vivre.

127. On ne peut que s'indigner à la lecture du rapport du Comité spécial sur la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration en prenant connaissance de la situation des peuples des colonies et des pays dépendants. La discrimination raciale et l'inégalité de droits vont jusqu'à l'extrême. Voici quelques exemples.

128. En Rhodésie du Nord, on traite un homme suivant la couleur de sa peau. Il y a des hôpitaux pour les Européens et d'autres pour les Africains. Il arrive souvent que l'ambulance de secours d'urgence, appelée sur le lieu d'un accident, revient à vide si le blessé est un Africain. On traite chaque Africain comme un criminel en puissance. La discrimination raciale entraîne aussi une inégalité des niveaux de salaire. Les salaires des mineurs sont, pour les Africains, sept à dix fois inférieurs à ceux d'un blanc de la même spécialité. D'après les données statistiques gouvernementales pour 1960, il n'y avait à fréquenter l'école que la moitié seulement des enfants africains d'âge scolaire. A peine 2 à 3 p. 100 d'élèves africains peuvent compter recevoir une instruction universitaire.

129. Les colonisateurs aiment souvent parler de l'état de prospérité des populations des territoires qu'ils administrent et des biens matériels qu'ils leur assurent. Dans le New York Times du 10 avril 1961, un correspondant, Benjamin Welles, dans un article intitulé "Une île espagnole paisible au large des côtes d'Afrique donne une leçon d'intégration", décrit comme suit la colonie espagnole de Fernando Poo:

"La ravissante île espagnole de Fernando Poo... est un paradis de paix et d'ordre par opposition au continent agité d'Afrique..."

"Ensemble vivent et prospèrent 16 000 Africains et 4 000 Européens, sans aucune friction."

Et ainsi de suite dans le même esprit. Or la situation réelle dans l'île n'a rien de commun avec le tableau qu'en a brossé l'auteur de l'article.

130. Le Rio Muni (partie continentale), l'île de Fernando Poo et un groupe de petites îles constituent la colonie de la Guinée espagnole, qui compte une population de 212 000 habitants, dont 4 500 sont des blancs. La misère et l'absence de tous droits, voilà le lot de la population autochtone de la colonie. Sur tout le territoire de la Guinée espagnole, il n'y a qu'une seule école secondaire (strictement réservée aux blancs) et deux écoles professionnelles qui comptent en tout 217 élèves.

131. En 1957, lorsque la Nigéria se trouvait encore sous la domination coloniale complète de l'administration anglaise, elle avait conclu avec l'Espagne un accord sur l'emploi de travailleurs nigériens dans la colonie espagnole. Depuis cette époque, des dizaines de milliers de travailleurs nigériens sont allés travailler sous contrat dans l'île. Des centaines d'entre eux sont morts par suite de sévices et de pénibles conditions de vie. Les travailleurs nigériens tout comme la population autochtone se trouvent dans une situation d'esclaves. La moindre faute est passible d'une amende, de coups de fouet, d'emprisonnement. Ils habitent dans des logements misérables et sales, à huit dans une petite pièce. Des hommes jeunes et forts perdent leur santé au bout d'un ou deux ans et beaucoup d'entre eux en meurent.

132. Voilà le "paradis" réalisé sur l'île de Fernando Poo par les administrateurs espagnols. Et cela n'est qu'un spécimen de la situation des populations dans toutes les colonies où les colonialistes réalisent pour la population une vie aussi paradisiaque.

133. Toute l'humanité progressiste, notamment le peuple biélorussien, s'indigne de la façon dont les puissances administrantes bafouent les populations de tous les territoires coloniaux et dépendants. Nous avons exprimé à la Quatrième Commission [1361ème séance] notre juste indignation à ce sujet, mais nos dires ont été repoussés "avec mépris" par M. Godber, représentant du Royaume-Uni.

134. Nous n'avons jamais eu d'illusion quant à la "sympathie" de M. Godber à notre égard, mais il devra quand même tenir compte de l'opinion publique mondiale et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni devra finalement prendre des mesures concrètes pour mettre en œuvre la Déclaration. Les peuples des pays coloniaux et dépendants et toute l'humanité progressiste l'exigent instamment. Cette injustice historique doit être réparée et le colonialisme doit être enterré.

135. Il est difficile de se faire l'avocat du diable. Il est plus difficile encore de défendre le colonialisme, mais il trouve quand même toujours des défenseurs. Ceux-ci votent à l'Organisation des Nations Unies contre les résolutions conçues pour faire mettre en œuvre la Déclaration; ils se prononcent contre ceux qui démasquent la nature véritable du colonialisme, ils se soutiennent et se complimentent les uns les autres. Ainsi, prenant la parole au Comité des Dix-Sept et évaluant la politique appliquée par le Royaume-Uni au Nyassaland, le représentant des Etats-Unis a dit que "[le Dr Banda et] le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni [avaient] droit [tous deux] à des encouragements et des éloges pour [leur] récente initiative" [A/5238, chap. IV, par. 63].

136. Au cours de l'examen par le Comité spécial de la question du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland, le représentant de l'Australie a déclaré que "le Royaume-Uni avait généralement eu pour politique d'encourager les peuples à établir un système de gouvernement démocratique et responsable" [ibid., chap. V, par. 147].

137. Dans le rapport du Conseil de tutelle [A/5204, 2ème partie, chap. II, par. 138], le représentant des Etats-Unis, en analysant les activités déployées par l'Autorité administrante australienne en Nouvelle-Guinée et à Nauru, affirme que:

"... l'Administration a fait un effort remarquable ...",

"... son travail est excellent ...",

"... les progrès ... en santé publique sont admirables ...",

"... l'Autorité administrante méritait des éloges".

138. Le colonisateur se comble réciproquement d'éloges de toutes manières. C'est comme dans une fable du grand écrivain russe Krylov: "Le coucou loue le coq de ce qu'il loue le coucou." Ce n'est pas des louanges que méritent en fait les colonisateurs, mais une réprobation universelle, pour leurs agissements dans les territoires qu'ils administrent, pour la misère et les peines qu'endure la population autochtone, pour le sang versé dans la lutte contre le colonialisme, pour la non-application de la Déclaration.

139. Les représentants de la plupart des pays, en intervenant aux séances du Comité des Dix-Sept, à celles de la Quatrième Commission, aussi bien qu'aux séances plénières de la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée, soumettent à une critique sévère le colonialisme et les pays qui n'appliquent pas la Déclaration. En réponse, les colonisateurs, cherchant à esquiver leur responsabilité, ont recours, comme d'habitude, à des calomnies contre l'Union soviétique et contre d'autres pays socialistes.

140. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie pensait que la couronne de lauriers pour les calomnies anti-soviétiques devait revenir au représentant des Etats-Unis, mais aujourd'hui nous avons dû renoncer à cette idée et nous devons probablement offrir cette couronne au vainqueur, le représentant du Canada. Le représentant du Canada comprend-il qu'il se prononce contre les fondements mêmes sur lesquels est édifiée l'Organisation des Nations Unies? Il me semble qu'il ne le comprend pas.

141. Le représentant de l'Australie, M. Plimsoll, en prenant la parole à la séance précédente, n'a pas résisté non plus à la tentation d'avoir recours à la calomnie à l'adresse de l'Union soviétique. Les colonisateurs et leurs alliés font toujours appel à la calomnie lorsqu'ils se trouvent le dos au mur et qu'ils n'ont rien à dire pour se justifier.

142. Nous sommes convaincus que la majorité des membres de l'Organisation ne se laissera pas dévier de l'étude de la question en cours par les manœuvres des colonisateurs.

143. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie condamne la façon d'agir des puissances administrantes par suite de l'insuffisance de l'application de la Déclaration et demande que soient prises toutes les mesures possibles pour que le colonialisme soit définitivement liquidé en 1963. A cet égard, nous appuyons la proposition du Président de la Guinée, M. Sekou Touré [voir A/PV.1148, par. 33], pour qu'à la date du 24 octobre 1963, jour anniversaire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, tous les pays et peuples coloniaux, conformément au désir des populations, se voient octroyer l'indépendance. Les puissances coloniales doivent mettre fin immédiatement à toutes les mesures de représailles utilisées contre les peuples qui luttent pour leur libération. Il est indispensable d'assurer à la population autochtone la possibilité d'exercer ses droits et libertés démocratiques, y compris la liberté de parole, de presse et de réunion.

144. Toutes les lois qui admettent la discrimination raciale, les restrictions et limitations quant aux partis politiques, aux syndicats et à d'autres organisations sociales et politiques doivent être rapportées. Tous les détenus politiques doivent être libérés. Tous les pouvoirs doivent être transférés, dans tous les territoires non autonomes, aux représentants du peuple, élus par voie démocratique, sur la base du suffrage universel direct.

145. La mise en œuvre de toutes ces mesures et d'autres encore pour la liquidation du colonialisme doit être effectuée sous un contrôle constant et rigoureux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Des mesures décisives, allant jusqu'aux sanctions, doivent être prises contre les Etats qui, depuis deux ans déjà, refusent délibérément de mettre en œuvre la Déclaration. Le moment est venu, pour le Conseil de sécurité, de s'occuper de ces questions.

146. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie est intervenue et continuera d'intervenir résolument contre toutes les formes du colonialisme. Nous appuierons les mesures les plus radicales qui puissent assurer l'application de la Déclaration.

147. La liquidation du colonialisme est une des tâches les plus importantes de notre temps et sa solution immédiate est dans l'intérêt de millions d'êtres humains, de l'humanité tout entière. Les peuples des colonies se verront octroyer finalement la liberté tant désirée et pourront profiter de leur droit légitime de disposer eux-mêmes de leur sort. La liquidation totale et définitive du colonialisme posera les fondements de relations entre les pays et les peuples fondées sur une égalité réelle des droits, elle consolidera les liens d'amitié et de collaboration entre tous les peuples de notre planète qui maintiendront et raffermiront la paix sur la terre.

148. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Deux orateurs sont encore inscrits pour la présente séance; avant de donner la parole à l'orateur suivant, j'annonce que je ferai, à la fin de la présente séance, une déclaration sur l'ordre de nos travaux pour la semaine prochaine.

149. M. KOIRALA (Népal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je profite de l'occasion qui m'est offerte pour préciser que la politique de non-alignement suivie sans défaillance par le Népal a pour seul et unique objectif le maintien de la paix. La paix ne sera jamais qu'un vain désir tant que le colonialisme ne sera pas éliminé, sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, tant que le désarmement universel ne sera pas réalisé et tant que les ressources techniques, scientifiques et économiques du monde ne seront pas mises en commun pour lutter contre la faim, la maladie et l'analphabétisme. Le colonialisme, que nous définissons comme "l'intrusion lente, graduelle et imperceptible de l'Ouest dans les pays de l'Est pour la satisfaction de besoins en matières premières et en débouchés, qu'une industrialisation hautement mécanisée rend toujours plus pressants", est un mal absolu, et représente aujourd'hui un véritable anachronisme.

150. Le Népal, quoiqu'il n'ait jamais été soumis lui-même à aucun joug, se rend parfaitement compte que le mouvement anticolonial fait partie du mouvement plus général en faveur de la paix, et mon pays s'oppose à toute domination, de quelque ordre qu'elle soit, d'une nation par une autre. Si nous nous dressons contre le colonialisme, ce n'est pas que nous ayons subi, à une époque quelconque de notre histoire, les iniquités du régime colonialiste, mais c'est parce que toute notre politique est fondée sur une foi profonde dans les libertés fondamentales et dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine.

151. Pour préciser notre position à l'égard du colonialisme et les raisons qui la motivent, je ne peux mieux faire que de citer quelques extraits du discours prononcé le 2 septembre 1961 par mon souverain, le roi Mahendra du Népal, à la Conférence des chefs d'Etat ou de gouvernement des pays non alignés, réunie à Belgrade, conférence qui, à bien des égards, a sonné le glas du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations:

"Depuis quatre ou cinq siècles, l'Europe a évolué beaucoup plus vite que les autres continents à maints égards, surtout du point de vue de la science et de la technique. C'est pourquoi elle s'est dotée d'un système économique et politique dynamique, assorti d'une certaine échelle des valeurs humaines qui, à quelques différences de forme près, est devenue la règle dans tout le continent européen, ainsi qu'un modèle pour beaucoup d'autres pays et continents, fascinés et même éblouis par ses splendeurs. Sous l'impulsion que lui ont donnée des transformations économiques radicales, la civilisation européenne, telle qu'elle s'est développée au cours de cette période fructueuse, a pris un caractère excessivement extroverti, pour emprunter une expression de la psychologie moderne, qui l'a poussée à se tourner vers l'extérieur.

"Au cours de la période, plusieurs pays d'Europe occidentale se sont agressivement élançés au dehors, en porte-flambeaux de la civilisation européenne, et ont déclenché les phénomènes extrêmement pénibles que l'on a appelés par la suite le colonialisme et l'impérialisme. La civilisation asiatique, en revanche, est dans l'ensemble une civilisation introvertie, de sorte qu'elle se montre sous son meilleur jour lorsqu'elle regarde vers l'intérieur, mais sous le pire lorsqu'elle cherche à se tourner vers l'extérieur. La prise de contact entre la civilisation asiatique et le colonialisme d'Europe occidentale a accentué les tendances naturelles de l'Asiatique à la contemplation et au repli sur lui-même. L'Asie s'est repliée plus encore sur son propre "empire" individualiste, éclairé par son seul égoïsme, tandis que des puissances d'Europe occidentale... réduisaient l'humanité en esclavage en se taillant de grands empires sur lesquels le soleil ne se levait jamais, tout au moins pour les peuples colonisés.

"Toutefois, si nous regardons le monde d'aujourd'hui, nous constatons que le phénomène le plus important de la situation internationale n'est pas le colonialisme, mais la lutte anticoloniale des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique. Après une lutte longue et acharnée, le mouvement anticolonial en Asie est presque arrivé à sa maturité. Presque tous les pays d'Asie anciennement colonisés ont acquis leur indépendance... Non seulement ces pays ont conquis leur indépendance politique, mais ils ont déjà bien avancé sur la voie de l'indépendance économique.

"La réussite du mouvement anticolonial en Asie et le soutien puissant que les nouveaux pays indépendants d'Asie lui ont accordé ont ensemble imprimé une forte impulsion à la lutte des pays africains pour leur indépendance. Certains de ces pays l'ont conquis au cours des dernières années, et, s'agissant du continent dans son ensemble, on constate dans tous les pays africains un énorme mouvement des masses vers leur libération.

"Le Népal se range résolument du côté des forces révolutionnaires. Nous estimons que le colonialisme est, sans restriction, un mal, un ordre social et politique qui suppose entre les hommes des relations inacceptables. Il faut appuyer la révolution anticoloniale partout où elle se manifeste, sous quelque forme que ce soit, et le Népal a toujours adopté une attitude inflexible à cet égard. Si les puissances coloniales déclarent que nous n'apprécions pas comme il convient leurs intentions et que nous ne comprenons pas leurs problèmes, répondons-leur qu'elles ne comprennent pas nos sentiments.

"Mais, tout en prenant cette position inflexible contre le colonialisme, nous reconnaissons que certaines puissances coloniales ont agi de meilleure grâce et avec plus de hauteur de vues et d'imagi-nation que d'autres, dans leur réaction devant le défi des temps présents. Une puissance coloniale comme le Royaume-Uni, après avoir compris que les jours du colonialisme étaient comptés, a agi, dans l'ensemble, de façon à mériter l'approbation de nombreux pays. Ayant donné l'exemple en asservissant de nombreuses populations, le Royaume-Uni a aussi donné l'exemple en leur accordant la liberté.

"Mais on peut observer, à ce stade, que nous serons induits en erreur — et cela gravement — si nous en déduisons que la lutte contre le colonialisme est arrivée à terme. Il nous faut au contraire nous tenir prêts et être prêts à livrer un dur et long combat pour assurer la liquidation complète du colonialisme^{2/}..."

152. Je demande à l'Assemblée de m'excuser de lui avoir fait entendre une aussi longue citation. J'ai pensé toutefois qu'il convenait en cette occasion de réaffirmer la politique de mon pays à l'égard du colonialisme et, par conséquent, que le long extrait dont j'ai donné lecture était indispensable pour montrer quelle est l'opinion de mon souverain, de mon gouvernement et du peuple népalais sur les divers problèmes que pose le colonialisme. Ma délégation estime d'autre part, comme le Ministre adjoint des affaires étrangères de Pologne l'a fait remarquer le 15 novembre 1962 [1169ème séance] à si juste raison, que la question du colonialisme ne le cède en importance qu'à celle du désarmement général et complet, ce qui nous autorise à faire une petite digression. En effet, le problème du colonialisme n'est pas un phénomène isolé dans la politique mondiale actuelle. Le colonialisme et les mouvements qui le combattent, leurs succès et leurs échecs ne représentent en réalité qu'un aspect du mouvement plus général en faveur de la paix. Il serait vain que l'humanité entière consacre toute son énergie à maintenir des relations honnêtes entre les nations, à établir la coexistence pacifique dans une liberté plus grande et à préserver la paix, le bonheur et la sécurité dans le monde, si nous n'abandonnions pas et ne résolvions pas en même temps comme il convient les problèmes posés par le colonialisme. Tous ces problèmes sont liés entre eux, de sorte que nous manquerions à notre devoir si nous ne reconnaissons pas maintenant que l'accès au statut d'indépendance ne constitue pas le but suprême d'une nation. Disons plutôt que le mouvement anticolonial participe du mouvement plus général en faveur de la paix et que le succès du premier contribuera beaucoup au triomphe final du second. Il est réconfortant de constater que le problème du colonialisme a été envisagé dans sa véritable perspective, comme il ressort des déclarations faites par les représentants, toutes empreintes de sagesse et de modération, et offrant des suggestions pratiques.

153. Nous sommes saisis du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238]: les constatations, les suggestions et les conclusions qu'il renferme nous ont permis de nous faire une idée exacte du colonialisme tel qu'il est pratiqué par de nombreux Etats dans bien des parties du monde. Ainsi que beaucoup d'autres délégations l'ont fait remarquer, cet énorme rapport de près de 600 pages n'est pas un document ordinaire: il représente un jalon important dans le processus de décolonisation des pays et des peuples assujettis. Les espoirs des nations et des peuples opprimés, et leur aspiration à se libérer de la domination extérieure, se trouvent exprimés avec feu dans ce volume. Bien que le Comité, faute de temps, n'ait pas pu s'occuper de nombreux autres territoires coloniaux ou non autonomes, il a cependant examiné 12 territoires: la Rhodésie du Sud, la Rhodésie du Nord, le Nyassaland, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland, le Souaziland, Zanzibar, la Guyane britannique, le Mozambique, le Sud-Ouest africain, le Kenya et l'Angola. Le Comité a entendu des pétitionnaires, il a rassemblé des renseignements, il s'est déplacé et il nous a soumis des observations et des conclusions dont la lecture est fort intéressante et encourageante. Ma délégation tient à adresser ses vives félicitations au Président, au Vice-Président, au Rapporteur et aux autres membres du Comité pour le dévouement avec lequel ils se sont acquittés de la tâche qui leur a été confiée par l'Assemblée générale, ainsi que pour l'excellent rapport qu'ils nous ont présenté.

154. Nous nous associons à toutes les délégations qui ont approuvé les travaux et les méthodes du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Il faut souligner l'importance du fait que, pénétré de la gravité de ses responsabilités, le Comité a décidé de mener ses travaux sans recourir à des votes, sauf en quelques occasions.

155. Ma délégation approuve aussi sans réserve le refus du Comité de s'en tenir au rôle de simple commission d'enquête ou de centre d'information. La grande latitude laissée au Comité par l'Assemblée [résolution 1654 (XVI)] dans l'accomplissement de sa tâche, qui est d'étudier "l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre", justifie amplement l'affirmation du représentant de l'Union soviétique selon laquelle le Comité n'a pas été créé pour se livrer à de stériles discussions.

156. Au cours du débat sur la question, on s'est demandé si le Comité avait bien fait d'examiner les territoires un à un. De l'avis de ma délégation, cette méthode était pourtant la seule méthode légitime qu'on pouvait suivre utilement étant donné les circonstances. La question du colonialisme a été si souvent soulevée et discutée depuis des années que nous savons tous ici à quoi nous en tenir quant à la situation coloniale en général dans le monde. Le Comité a été créé pour trouver les moyens de mettre en œuvre la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et il s'est attelé comme il le devait à la tâche de trouver les moyens de résoudre chaque type de problème colonial. Pour accomplir sa mission historique, le Comité a décidé avec raison d'examiner en priorité le continent africain, où règne la forme la plus subtile du colonialisme.

157. Nous sommes heureux de constater qu'il n'y a pratiquement plus personne qui conteste les méfaits du colonialisme et la nécessité de le supprimer. La plupart des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique sont maintenant libres et les autres sont sur le point d'accéder à la liberté et à l'indépendance. Ainsi, l'histoire des XVIII^{ème} et XIX^{ème} siècles, marquée par la pénétration des pays de l'Ouest dans les pays de l'Est, subit un renversement progressif; comme l'a dit justement notre roi Mahendra, cela est dû à l'éclosion, dans les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, d'un sentiment patriotique intense auquel on a donné le nom de nationalisme et qui traduit le désir d'être libre de toute domination intérieure ou extérieure, de choisir son propre système politique, économique et social, sans aucune pression extérieure.

158. Nous ne cherchons pas ici à diminuer le rôle des Nations Unies dans le processus de décolonisation. Nous voulons simplement faire remarquer que l'indépendance a souvent été réalisée sans l'appui effectif des Nations Unies. Pour prendre un exemple récent, l'Algérie s'est libérée du joug étranger à la suite de la lutte incessante menée par le peuple algérien. En revanche, les Nations Unies ont joué un rôle décisif dans la solution du problème de l'Irian occidental. Là, les Nations Unies sont allées jusqu'à assurer l'administration du territoire. Ce dernier exemple n'est pas loin de justifier la foi mystique de nombreux peuples assujettis qui attribuent aux Nations Unies le pouvoir de tout faire et de tout réussir. Cette foi se fonde surtout sur la résolution 1514 (XV), qui déclare:

"La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiale.

"Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination; en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel."

Cette résolution historique constitue la Grande Charte de l'histoire des Nations Unies et traduit le désir universel de l'humanité: vivre et laisser vivre, dans une atmosphère d'égalité, de liberté et de justice.

159. Les grands traits de cette résolution peuvent se résumer ainsi: réaffirmation de la foi en la dignité de la personne humaine, proclamation du droit inaliénable des peuples à la libre détermination, reconnaissance du fait que l'existence du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération internationale. Mais il ne suffisait pas de réaffirmer une foi, de proclamer un principe ou de reconnaître un fait indéniable pour briser les solides remparts du colonialisme. Après un an, l'Assemblée a dû admettre, sur une initiative de l'Union soviétique, que la Déclaration resterait lettre morte si on ne trouvait pas des moyens pratiques de la mettre en œuvre. Au paragraphe 5 du dispositif, la résolution déclarait sans ambiguïté:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

En raison de l'intransigeance et des atermoiements dont ont fait preuve les puissances coloniales dans l'application de cette disposition de la résolution, l'Assemblée a estimé avec raison qu'il fallait créer un Comité spécial de 17 membres afin d'assurer la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration. La résolution 1654 (XVI) qui a créé le Comité a souligné à nouveau avec vigueur que "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance". Cette disposition de la résolution est d'autant plus importante que les puissances coloniales, cherchant toujours à temporiser, avalent l'habitude de prêter l'état arriéré des peuples assujettis pour faire obstacle à leur marche vers l'indépendance, ce qui était un argument absolument contraire à la logique.

160. Le Portugal a récemment avancé le plus fallacieux de tous ces arguments en déclarant que l'Angola, le Mozambique et les autres territoires portugais d'outre-mer n'étaient pas véritablement des territoires d'outre-mer mais faisaient partie du Portugal métropolitain. En s'attaquant avec décision au fondement même d'affirmations aussi dénuées de tout fondement, le dernier alinéa du préambule de la résolution a repoussé comme il convenait les prétextes avancés par les puissances coloniales pour pouvoir conserver leur position de maîtres pendant une durée indéterminée.

161. Les efforts déployés par certaines de ces puissances coloniales pour renverser le cours des événements n'ont pas réussi à apaiser le vent de changement qui, depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, souffle en faveur de la lutte anticoloniale. Le nombre des Membres qui composaient l'Organisation des Nations Unies a plus que doublé en 17 ans et huit nouveaux territoires ont accédé à l'indépendance depuis un an seulement. Les Nations Unies ont joué un rôle fondamental dans l'accélération du processus d'indépendance en ce qui concerne le Burundi, le Rwanda, le Tanganyika et le Samoa-Occidental. Le processus d'accession à l'indépendance s'est fait dans l'ordre pour la Jamaïque, la Trinité et Tobago et l'Ouganda, ce qui est au crédit des dirigeants et du peuple du Royaume-Uni, aussi bien que de ceux des territoires intéressés. Le cas de l'Algérie a été unique, en ce sens que ce pays a accédé à l'indépendance après huit années d'une lutte amère et héroïque. Grâce à la sagesse politique et à la clairvoyance dont les chefs algériens et le gouvernement du président de Gaulle ont fait preuve dans leurs efforts pour mettre fin au drame algérien, l'aube de la liberté et de l'autodétermination s'est enfin levée sur l'Algérie. Une fois encore, nous félicitons toutes ces nouvelles nations pour leur accession à l'indépendance et nous leur souhaitons bonne chance pour la tâche encore plus difficile de leur développement économique et social.

162. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, le temps travaille pour la lutte anticoloniale, pour la justice, pour la liberté et pour la libre détermination. Le Comité des Dix-Sept a été chargé avec raison d'accélérer le processus de décolonisation. Il a examiné jusqu'ici 12 territoires et ses observations sur chacun d'eux figurent dans son rapport. Bien que plusieurs délégations aient déjà commenté les observations et constatations du Comité, ma délégation ne croit pas inutile de revenir sur ces conclusions.

163. Pour ce qui est de la Rhodésie du Sud, la grande question est que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a pas jugé bon de prendre des mesures pour transférer tous les pouvoirs à la population de ce territoire. Une grande puissance comme la Grande-Bretagne, alléguant une convention constitutionnelle, s'est laissée aller à l'inaction, tandis qu'une infime minorité blanche continue de fouler aux pieds la destinée d'une grande majorité autochtone. Convaincue qu'une convention reste une convention tant qu'elle n'a pas été abrogée et que nous établirions un heureux précédent en la faisant abroger, ma délégation a voté en faveur des résolutions 1755 (XVII) et 1760 (XVII) qui demandent à l'autorité supérieure d'abandonner sa politique d'inertie et d'assumer réellement ses responsabilités.

164. En ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland, après avoir examiné à fond la situation dans ces deux territoires et après avoir étudié les dépositions des pétitionnaires, le Comité spécial a confirmé le droit inaliénable des peuples de ces territoires à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance nationale. Le Comité a aussi jugé bon de recommander la fixation de dates pour l'accession de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Nyassaland à l'indépendance.

165. Il y a longtemps que l'Afrique du Sud manifeste son intention d'annexer les trois territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire: le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland. Après avoir rappelé le droit inaliénable des peuples à l'indépendance, le Comité spécial a demandé à l'Assemblée générale de déclarer, malgré les objections des puissances occidentales, qu'une telle initiative aurait des conséquences graves et que toute tentative de porter atteinte d'une façon quelconque à leur intégrité territoriale serait considérée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies comme un acte d'agression qui viole la Charte des Nations Unies.

166. Le Comité a fait une étude détaillée des causes des troubles qui se sont produits à Zanzibar à la suite des élections générales de 1961. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni est invité à favoriser l'harmonie et l'unité entre les divers éléments politiques de Zanzibar et à accélérer l'accession à l'indépendance.

167. Nous savons très bien que les entretiens qui ont eu lieu à Londres à l'automne de 1962 entre le Royaume-Uni et la Guyane britannique n'ont abouti à aucun résultat positif. Pour décourageant qu'il soit, cet échec ne doit pas nous faire perdre de vue l'objectif ultime. Le Comité a prié les gouvernements intéressés de reprendre immédiatement les négociations en vue d'aboutir à un accord sur la date de l'indépendance. Nous espérons que l'échec récent n'empêchera pas la reprise des négociations.

168. Le cas du Sud-Ouest africain est très grave. Ce territoire international se trouve menacé d'annexion par le Gouvernement sud-africain qui est totalement engagé dans une politique d'apartheid. Le Comité a conclu à ce sujet que le moment est venu pour les Nations Unies de prendre d'urgence des mesures pour empêcher l'annexion du Sud-Ouest africain par l'Afrique du Sud et pour faire en sorte que la résolution 1514 (XV) soit appliquée au plus tôt. Le projet de résolution présenté à l'Assemblée générale par la Quatrième Commission [voir A/5310] et dont ma délégation s'honore d'être un des auteurs est fondé sur les constatations, conclusions et recommandations du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept et du Comité du Sud-Ouest africain; il réaffirme la proclamation solennelle du droit inaliénable du peuple du Sud-Ouest africain à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté nationale.

169. Le Comité a demandé à la Puissance administrante de prendre des mesures pour que le Kenya accède à l'indépendance le plus tôt possible.

170. Au sujet des malheureux territoires du Mozambique et de l'Angola, le Comité a réaffirmé à juste titre le droit des peuples à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance. La question de l'Angola sera examinée par l'Assemblée très prochainement et ma délégation a toujours pris sur cette question une attitude ferme et claire. Nous exposerons de nouveau notre opinion lorsque le moment sera venu.

171. Ainsi, le point essentiel qui se dégage de l'étude du rapport est la réaffirmation des principes de l'égalité des nations et du droit inaliénable de tous les peuples à l'indépendance et à la libre détermination. Le Comité spécial, par son examen approfondi des problèmes en jeu, a confirmé la Déclaration de l'Assemblée [résolution 1514 (XV)] selon laquelle "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance". En effet, ma délégation estime qu'on remédiera plus vite et mieux à ce manque de préparation dans une atmosphère d'égalité et de liberté que dans l'atmosphère d'inertie mentale qui résulte de la domination étrangère.

172. Dans la plupart des cas, le Comité a recommandé l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance et il a demandé aux puissances administrantes, à une ou deux exceptions près, de prendre les mesures nécessaires pour transférer effectivement tous pouvoirs aux peuples des territoires intéressés. Sur ces bases, la délégation de la Guinée a suggéré la fixation d'une date précise pour l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les territoires et peuples dépendants. Plusieurs autres délégations en ont parlé. Bien qu'elle respecte l'esprit dans lequel cette suggestion a été faite, ma délégation estime qu'une telle mesure ne pourrait pas être appliquée à tous les territoires. Sans doute serait-il souhaitable de fixer une date précise pour l'accession à l'indépendance de certains territoires; il est même certain qu'une date limite devrait être décidée maintenant pour quelques-uns de ces territoires. La position de ma délégation est que, si l'Assemblée générale fixe une date limite, cette fixation devra s'entendre avec une certaine souplesse, car les circonstances peuvent être variables dans chaque cas et il faudra en tenir compte dans l'application pratique.

173. Avant de terminer, je dirai quelques mots des questions d'organisation. Nous approuvons dans son ensemble le rapport du Comité et nous sommes convaincus qu'il peut continuer à jouer un rôle très constructif dans l'accélération du processus de décolonisation. Dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1], le Secrétaire général par intérim a attiré notre attention sur la multiplicité des comités et sous-comités qui traitent de questions de même nature et il a suggéré que les travaux soient regroupés en un comité unique. Pour des raisons d'économies budgétaires et de coordination des travaux, plusieurs délégations ont approuvé cette suggestion. Ma délégation approuve elle aussi les vues du Secrétaire général par intérim et nous accorderons grande attention à toute proposition qui pourrait être faite à ce sujet. Pour le moment, on pourrait peut-être élargir la composition du Comité des Dix-Sept en tenant compte de la composition de tous les autres comités qui traitent de questions se rapportant au colonialisme. Le comité élargi pourrait, comme d'habitude, se diviser en sous-comités qui s'occuperaient de territoires particuliers.

174. En conclusion, on peut dire que nul n'ose plus aujourd'hui défendre le colonialisme au nom de quelque mission civilisatrice, ou sous tout autre prétexte. Ce fait même est déjà une arme puissante aux mains des forces anticoloniales. Une fois amorcés, les mouvements du cœur ne s'arrêtent plus. En outre, le

Comité a reçu l'appui de tous les Etats Membres, grands ou petits, coloniaux ou non. Toutes ses délibérations ont été marquées par la modération et l'absence de rancune, ce qui suffit à montrer que le colonialisme touche à sa fin. Quelques exceptions demeurent, quelques vestiges du colonialisme subsistent encore, particulièrement dans les territoires où de puissants intérêts pétroliers ou miniers et la présence de nombreux colons blancs s'ajoutent à la domination coloniale. Dans l'ensemble, tout un continent est devenu majeur et nous nous trouvons au seuil d'une ère nouvelle qui ne connaîtra pas la discrimination entre les hommes.

175. M. MALALASEKERA (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation n'est pas intervenue plus tôt dans la discussion générale sur les travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept parce que notre opinion sur l'ensemble de la question du colonialisme est bien connue. Ma déclaration sera d'ailleurs brève. Nous désirons simplement dire quelques mots au sujet des travaux du Comité et du rapport soumis à notre examen [A/5238].

176. Dans cette discussion, on a soulevé certaines questions concernant la composition numérique du Comité, ses méthodes de travail et la portée de ses activités. On a parlé à plusieurs reprises de la fixation d'une date limite pour la liquidation définitive du colonialisme.

177. Ma délégation tient d'abord à rendre hommage au Comité qui, sans avoir bénéficié d'aucune expérience passée, a su trouver les méthodes qui conviennent le mieux à son action. Chaque fois qu'il le pouvait, le Comité s'est efforcé de prendre ses décisions par accord unanime. Certes, dans tout organe des Nations Unies, l'unanimité est souhaitable, pourvu que ce soit avec l'idée d'arriver à des résultats positifs. Quand la possibilité d'arriver à des résultats positifs est en jeu, unanimité ne peut pas et ne doit pas devenir synonyme de paralysie: il ne faut pas qu'une sorte de droit de veto s'oppose à des décisions prises par moins que la totalité des membres d'un organe. En fait, nous doutons qu'un comité des Nations Unies créé par l'Assemblée générale puisse, selon la Charte, renoncer au principe démocratique des décisions prises à la majorité des voix. Nous devons nous rappeler à ce propos que le Comité spécial est avant tout un organe chargé de l'application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Ce sont donc des fonctions quasi exécutives qu'il exerce, surtout si l'on considère l'urgence qui s'attache à son action. La tâche qui lui est assignée est vaste et difficile. Il faut donc lui laisser une grande liberté d'action pour l'établissement des meilleures méthodes d'élaboration rapide de ses recommandations à l'Assemblée.

178. C'est pourquoi ma délégation appuie sans réserve la ligne de conduite suivie par le Comité qui a appliqué une procédure très libérale pour l'audition des pétitionnaires, surtout ceux qui réclament la liberté des peuples au nom desquels ils parlent. C'est aussi la raison pour laquelle ma délégation souhaiterait que le Comité spécial ait toute latitude de se rendre dans les régions relevant de son mandat chaque fois qu'il le jugera nécessaire.

179. Lorsqu'on réfléchit aux droits et aux devoirs du Comité des Dix-Sept, il importe de ne pas oublier qu'il a reçu le mandat le plus large qui ait jamais été donné à un organe exécutif des Nations Unies. C'est le mandat découlant d'une Déclaration adoptée à une majorité écrasante par les Nations Unies et ayant le formidable soutien de l'opinion publique mondiale.

180. De même, en ce qui concerne l'ordre de priorité, le Comité a déjà donné des preuves de sa sagesse en décidant d'examiner en priorité les colonies qui subsistent encore en Afrique; en effet, c'est en Afrique que le colonialisme défend ses dernières positions et qu'il espère même réussir à opérer une contre-offensive.

181. A en juger par les craintes exprimées devant l'Assemblée, par de nombreux signes et par l'attitude rien moins que satisfaisante souvent adoptée par les puissances métropolitaines dans les territoires, l'expression "néo-colonialisme" n'est plus un simple euphémisme: elle désigne un processus réel qui, lentement, insidieusement, derrière la fumée et le vacarme de la guerre froide, est en train de devenir une grande cause de conflits qui s'enflent jusqu'à prendre les dimensions d'un choix entre la guerre et la paix. Fort heureusement, le Comité des Dix-Sept a été alerté par les signes avant-coureurs de la tempête menaçante et il saura, j'en suis sûr, faire appel au Conseil de sécurité s'il est nécessaire.

182. Comme on l'a souligné maintes fois, le Comité spécial tient entre ses mains le sort d'une cinquantaine de millions d'êtres humains qui sont encore privés du droit de libre détermination consacré par la Charte. C'est donc une terrible et solennelle responsabilité que le Comité a assumée. Mais il ne s'agit pas seulement des hommes. A notre époque, tout territoire qui n'est pas libéré devient un point stratégique en puissance qui attire à lui les forces de conflit actuellement déchaînées dans le monde. Par exemple, même si les colonies de l'Afrique centrale et de l'Afrique australe ne comprenaient que la moitié de leur population actuelle, leur importance dans l'équilibre mondial des puissances n'en serait pas diminuée. Par conséquent, ce ne sont pas seulement les hommes, mais aussi les territoires qui sont en jeu.

183. C'est pourquoi, si le facteur humain a une importance primordiale et même sacrée, les régions soumises au régime colonial ont elles aussi une importance capitale. Ce ne sont pas seulement les peuples que nous devons libérer, mais aussi leurs patries. Les hommes et leur pays forment une unité indivisible.

184. J'ajouterai encore quelques mots sur cette question capitale. Il s'agit du domaine où des intérêts économiques vitaux sont en jeu pour les puissances coloniales. On en déduit qu'il doit nécessairement y avoir conflit entre ces vastes intérêts économiques et la liberté des peuples. Ma délégation est d'avis que ce conflit n'est pas inéluctable. Au contraire, une association peut même s'établir, à condition qu'elle repose sur la reconnaissance de la souveraineté nationale. Lorsque des intérêts économiques vitaux sont en jeu, les dirigeants des grands combinats industriels et commerciaux devraient être les premiers à comprendre qu'il n'est pas de bonne politique — et que c'est même faire preuve d'un bien mauvais sens des affaires — de risquer ces intérêts en les opposant à une évolution irrésistible. Celui dont la maison présente un danger d'incendie devrait être le dernier à s'opposer à la création d'un corps de pompiers.

185. En insistant sur cette idée de priorité, ma délégation n'a pas l'intention d'exclure d'autres territoires qui luttent actuellement pour leur liberté, comme la Guyane britannique qui, même selon les critères colonialistes, est certainement prête aujourd'hui à recevoir son indépendance sans qu'on la lui marchandé davantage.

186. Un mot encore au sujet des dates limites. Dans son principe même, une telle expression contredit en quelque sorte la Déclaration sur le colonialisme. Mais nous sommes certains que M. Telli, représentant de la Guinée, lorsqu'il a proposé [1169ème séance] de fixer au 24 octobre 1963 la date limite pour l'accession des colonies à l'indépendance, ne songeait nullement à prévoir un délai qui retarderait l'indépendance immédiate qui est réclamée, car chaque jour de prolongation du colonialisme est un jour de trop, dans un monde où des hommes s'élancent vers les étoiles sur les ailes de la liberté, tandis que d'autres restent enchaînés dans les ténèbres de l'esclavage. Nous demandons aux puissances métropolitaines de faire l'effort de volonté et de clairvoyance nécessaire pour se mettre au rythme du mouvement de libération en Afrique. Parallèlement, ma délégation estime que le Comité spécial devrait s'efforcer, dans ses recommandations, d'établir la date qui, à son avis et à la lumière des faits, serait à retenir pour l'accession à l'indépendance de chaque territoire particulier.

187. Nous exprimons notre confiance pleine et entière au Comité spécial qui va maintenant devoir affronter une année difficile au cours de laquelle, nous en sommes sûrs, de nombreux autres peuples actuellement coloniaux se joindront aux nations libres et entreront à l'Organisation mondiale.

La séance est levée à 18 h 15.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite)

1. M. SOULEYMANE (Mauritanie): Cette année encore, notre assemblée a le redoutable honneur de mettre en accusation le colonialisme rétrograde et doit persévérer dans ses efforts pour contribuer à faire disparaître ce mal dont souffre encore la conscience des hommes.

2. Il y a plus de deux ans, et plus précisément le 23 septembre 1960, le Président du Conseil des Ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, intervenant au début de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale [869^e séance], demandait formellement l'inscription à l'ordre du jour d'une question intitulée "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". Après le long débat historique qui devait s'ensuivre la résolution 1514 (XV) fut adoptée le 14 décembre 1960 à la quasi-unanimité, illustrant une fois de plus le principe d'autodétermination des peuples et réaffirmant la volonté de notre organisation de participer à la mise en œuvre de ce principe. Quelle qu'ait été son intention ou les buts visés, il faut reconnaître que l'initiative du Président de l'Union soviétique a suscité beaucoup d'admiration et de sympathie dans le monde entier, y compris chez les peuples mêmes des pays colonisateurs.

3. Ainsi donc, notre organisation, dont le rôle important en matière de décolonisation n'est plus à souligner, aborde ce point de son ordre du jour avec le souci d'apporter de nouvelles idées et de susciter plus de progrès encore dans la liquidation des dernières séquelles du colonialisme.

4. Nous ne nous faisons aucune illusion, car nous savons que le chemin est encore long et que les sacrifices en hommes et en énergie sont plus que jamais nécessaires. Cependant, persuadés que le droit et la justice sont du côté des peuples luttant pour leur dignité et leur existence, nous ne pouvons nous permettre de douter un seul instant du triomphe final des forces de progrès et de libération.

5. Il est certain que nous avons affaire à un ennemi redoutable, à une force qui a fait ses preuves tout au long de l'histoire de l'humanité. Assurément, le colonialisme a existé de tout temps et en tout lieu. Les qualificatifs pour le caractériser différaient, mais l'institution elle-même est née avec les hommes et s'est perpétuée à travers les âges sous des formes diverses mais toujours avec la même nocivité.

6. A l'origine des mouvements de colonisation nous trouvons toujours les mêmes mobiles et les mêmes préoccupations. Tout au long de la vie des peuples et des Etats, nous découvrons que les hommes ont constamment cherché, par la voie de la violence, la satisfaction de leur volonté de domination et de leurs tendances à exploiter les richesses d'autrui. Cette volonté se traduit toujours par un expansionnisme non fondé, mais que l'on cherche à légitimer a posteriori en faisant appel à une certaine morale ou à un droit reposant sur la force. Que ce soit dans l'antiquité, au Moyen Age ou de nos jours, les résultats de pareilles situations sont bien connus.

7. Jadis, au temps du féodalisme classique, après avoir anéanti l'adversaire et occupé son fief, le seigneur n'avait plus qu'à réduire le reste du clan ou de la tribu en esclavage et s'approprier tous les biens. Le même processus caractérise, avec beaucoup plus de raffinement, la situation coloniale moderne. N'oublions pas, cependant, qu'elle s'est instituée sous les mêmes traits caractéristiques; rares furent les colonies ou les protectorats instaurés en dehors de la violence et des massacres. Les expéditions et les guerres coloniales, les "pacifications" sont encore dans nos mémoires. A son début, le régime colonial faisait commerce des hommes; à l'instar des féodaux du Moyen Age, qui réduisaient les vaincus à l'esclavage, les colonisateurs exportaient les habitants des territoires conquis, à la grande joie des négriers, vers d'autres horizons. Il ne pouvait d'ailleurs en être autrement, car toutes ces doctrines de domination coloniale tenaient de l'exploitation et du racisme.

8. Ce faisant, l'institution coloniale a suivi une évolution lente et progressive. Elle a gagné, le temps aidant, en raffinement et en séduction. Les causes sont demeurées, mais les formes ont subi des mutations. En d'autres termes, le colonialisme s'adapte, s'assouplit et se métamorphose continuellement.

9. Un des aspects les plus constants du colonialisme est sa dépendance du contexte international. Comme nous le savons, la colonisation classique reposait sur la loi du plus fort, c'était le règne des armes et de la terreur, de l'inégalité entre les hommes et de la primauté d'un droit modelé à l'usage des détenteurs de la puissance militaire et économique, en l'occurrence des grandes familles et des empires européens. Cette domination et cette exploitation durant plusieurs siècles devaient provoquer les premières failles du système. La concurrence entre les empires coloniaux s'installait et devait engendrer la première guerre mondiale dont la fin désastreuse faisait apparaître aux yeux des détenteurs de la force les futures transformations mondiales.

10. Une certaine évolution était amorcée, mais les mêmes facteurs de domination et d'exploitation persistaient. Des empires coloniaux désintégrés laissaient la place à un nouvel ordre colonial, bénéfice des vainqueurs de cette première épreuve militaire à l'échelle du monde, dont les véritables raisons résidaient dans la course aux conquêtes coloniales. Ainsi le terrain était favorable à la naissance et au développement des théories impérialistes dont les plus tristement célèbres avaient pour nom nazisme et fascisme. Il est étrange de noter que les causes demeurent les mêmes: domination, expansionnisme, racisme et exploitation.

11. Toutes ces forces conjuguées ont constitué l'une des causes de la seconde guerre mondiale. Nous déplorons toujours les dévastations de cette dernière, mais nous reconnaissons aussi qu'elle a permis de dégager un nouvel équilibre des forces. Le monde n'appartient plus, malgré les apparences et les situations provisoires, aux maîtres d'hier.

12. Deux puissances mondiales géantes se sont dressées l'une contre l'autre, et ont consacré, après Yalta, la division du monde en deux zones précises d'influence. Mais qu'à cela ne tienne, l'antagonisme entre l'Est et l'Ouest devait créer un climat favorable à l'épanouissement des nationalismes et des indépendances et faciliter le mouvement de décolonisation. Le système colonial était forcé d'évoluer, parfois même dans le sens du progrès.

13. Ainsi, après ce long cheminement, il s'agit actuellement, dans ce domaine, de munir progressivement notre organisation d'armes efficaces pour la liquidation du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Nous sommes convaincus, et un passé récent le confirme, que beaucoup de problèmes coloniaux peuvent trouver leur solution ici. Il suffit seulement que les Etats intéressés y mettent de la bonne volonté et ne tardent plus à respecter leurs obligations découlant d'une charte à laquelle ils ont librement adhéré.

14. Ce rôle primordial de l'Organisation des Nations Unies tire sa vigueur des principes qui sont sa raison d'être. Peut-on reprocher aux hommes du XX^{ème} siècle d'avoir cru et de continuer à croire en notre charte? Que dit-elle? "Foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites..." Voilà une des sources d'énergie pour ceux qui luttent afin que ces paroles ne restent pas lettre morte.

15. Ceux qui continuent à croire aux vertus du régime colonial sont aussi parmi ceux qui, à San Francisco, ont signé, le 25 juin 1945, la Charte des Nations Unies, et, par conséquent, ont donné force exécutoire à l'Article premier de cette même charte qui invite au développement entre les nations de "relations amicales fondées sur le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes..."

16. Mais où en sommes-nous en cette proche fin d'année? Nous constatons qu'il y a toujours ceux qui ont accepté le principe de décolonisation et ont presque achevé son application, et ceux qui refusent obstinément de décoloniser. Ceux-là nous rappellent décidément que l'indépendance est presque toujours acquise au prix du sang. Certains Etats africains ont constitué une exception en accédant à l'indépendance dans l'amitié et la coopération avec l'ancienne métropole. Cela tenait presque de l'accident historique dû à la poignante personnalité d'un homme et à son sens de l'histoire. Evidemment, ce n'est pas à force de souhaits que Salazar s'inspirera de De Gaulle!

17. La guerre d'Algérie vient juste de prendre fin et nous pensions qu'elle serait l'occasion de mûres réflexions pour les puissances coloniales qui ne saisissent pas encore le sens du monde de demain. Pourtant, cette guerre d'Algérie a permis de dégager certaines vérités immuables. Elle a prouvé qu'un peuple dépourvu de moyens pouvait dresser sa volonté face à un adversaire dont la puissance était redoutable à plus d'un titre et que, finalement, cette volonté l'emporte sur les armes et impose la liberté. Salazar et d'autres pourraient utilement se pénétrer de ces vérités et tirer profit de ces expériences.

18. Nous savons que la lutte pour l'indépendance est longue et pleine d'embûches. Personne n'accepte de décoloniser de plein gré, mais toujours sous des contraintes de natures diverses. Il est évident que les causes invoquées par les colonisateurs ne doivent pas nous décourager dans notre croisade de la liberté.

19. Chaque fois qu'un problème de décolonisation se pose, la puissance mise en cause déclare qu'il s'agit d'une affaire purement nationale et invoque le principe de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un Etat. Mais, lorsque la volonté d'indépendance se fait plus précise et plus violente, on proclame alors que le peuple en question n'est pas préparé à l'indépendance ou bien qu'il s'agit non pas de refuser l'indépendance mais de la conférer plutôt à un gouvernement stable et libre.

20. Toutes ces manœuvres dilatoires sont bien connues et elles continuent à être employées en Afrique et ailleurs par ceux qui ne veulent pas encore se rendre à l'évidence et qui croient à la politique du "dernier quart d'heure".

21. Nous ne pouvons que nous féliciter de voir que, depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, le nombre des Etats indépendants a plus que doublé. Cela ne doit pas nous empêcher cependant d'être impressionnés par le grand nombre des peuples subjugués qui luttent sans relâche pour leur dignité et leur libération. Notre attention est attirée davantage par les pays où des conflits armés permanents opposent colonisateurs et colonisés, tel le cas de l'Angola par exemple. Mais il y a tous les autres territoires où le déséquilibre des forces en présence est si colossal que chaque révolte est réprimée dans le sang, étouffée et entourée de secret.

22. C'est dans la mesure où les puissances coloniales renoncent à un passé révolu qu'il sera possible de liquider, sans effusion de sang, les dernières séquelles d'un colonialisme agonisant que tout condamne.

23. Dans sa vocation de contribuer et de participer au règlement pacifique des conflits coloniaux, l'Organisation mérite, à plus d'un titre, notre admiration. On n'insistera jamais assez sur le caractère fondamental et historique du texte de la résolution 1514 (XV) qui est une déclaration dont peuvent s'inspirer les dernières puissances coloniales. Dans le mémoire explicatif accompagnant la lettre par laquelle le président Khrouchtchev saisissait formellement l'Assemblée générale, le 23 septembre 1960, d'une question intitulée "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", le chef d'Etat soviétique demandait l'indépendance immédiate de tous les pays et peuples coloniaux^{1/}. Une fois de plus, notre reconnaissance va à l'Union soviétique pour avoir songé à faire cette proposition si essentielle à l'élan des peuples colonisés vers la libération.

24. Un an après l'adoption de cette résolution capitale, c'est encore l'Union soviétique qui a appelé l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur le problème de l'application de cette déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux^{2/}.

25. C'est ainsi que la résolution 1654 (XVI) devait être aussitôt adoptée, résolution dont l'un des apports les plus précieux fut la création d'un Comité spécial de 17 membres chargés d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration et de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations. C'est avec une réelle satisfaction que nous avons accueilli cette décision, conscients du rôle important et des lourdes responsabilités qui lui incombent. Il suffit pour s'en convaincre d'examiner le volumineux et précieux rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5238]. Nous tenons à féliciter chaleureusement le Comité spécial et ses différents groupes de travail qui, sous la présidence éclairée du représentant de l'Inde, M. Chandra Shekhar Jha, nous ont permis d'apprendre beaucoup et d'envisager sous un jour nouveau le grave problème de la décolonisation.

26. Nous avons grandement apprécié la contribution du représentant du Mali au sein de ce comité spécial. C'est avec beaucoup de réalisme qu'il a développé ses vues en ce qui concerne la priorité à observer dans l'examen des divers cas concrets de décolonisation, priorité aux territoires dépendants d'Afrique et priorité aux cas urgents tels que l'Angola.

27. Cela dit, si notre organisation peut contribuer à la solution pacifique des conflits coloniaux, il lui est par contre difficile de participer avec la même efficacité à la lutte contre le néo-colonialisme. Il faut bien constater, en effet, que les forces du colonialisme ne désarment jamais complètement. On essaie de récupérer de la main gauche ce que l'on a donné, à contrecœur, de la main droite. Les moyens de se maintenir en place, d'exercer des pressions de toute nature ne sont pas à démontrer. Cela relève d'une technique habile et subtile. Il s'agit, pour le pays qui vient d'accéder à la souveraineté, de faire preuve de perspicacité et de savoir distinguer ce qui procède d'une domination déguisée de ce qui rentre dans le cadre de la véritable coopération entre Etats égaux et souverains.

28. Certains essaient, par des manœuvres de diversion, de localiser et de dénoncer le néo-colonialisme là où il ne se trouve pas en réalité.

29. Dans le cas particulier de notre continent, l'Afrique, nous croyons que rares sont les pays qui, à la suite d'une longue expérience, ne sont pas à même de découvrir toute tentative de porter atteinte à leur souveraineté. Il est vrai que le néo-colonialisme peut s'introduire par la voie de conventions particulières avec l'ancienne métropole, conventions qui perpétuent certains intérêts et qui protègent des situations acquises durant la période de domination coloniale. Il peut exister aussi grâce à la mise à la disposition de l'Etat nouvellement indépendant d'une assistance dite technique, mais qui n'est ni appropriée, ni assortie des garanties requises et qui peut aboutir à une forme d'administration indirecte.

30. Pour s'opposer à cela, il appartient à chaque Etat de faire la preuve de son aptitude à gérer ses propres affaires en fonction de l'intérêt de ses populations. Cette preuve, beaucoup d'Etats africains la donnent quotidiennement sans faire de démagogie.

31. Parfois, l'on a tenté de dénaturer le sens des liens qui existent entre certains Etats et leur ancienne métropole, à des fins de publicité internationale. La vérité, c'est que ces Etats-là désirent bannir toute rancune et toute haine à l'égard des anciens colonisateurs, les aidant ainsi à remplacer le mythe du "diviser pour régner" par la devise "unir pour coopérer".

32. Si donc le colonialisme classique européen, c'est-à-dire la division du monde en colonies d'exploitation ou de peuplement, est agonisant, il n'est ni réaliste ni de bonne politique de lui substituer, à une échelle plus grande encore, la division du monde en zones d'influence de l'Est ou de l'Ouest.

33. Dans le cadre de la décolonisation, certaines voix se sont fait entendre pour dénoncer un néo-impérialisme économique susceptible de mettre en danger les Etats africains associés au Marché commun. Nous entendons poursuivre notre édification nationale en respectant des étapes qui s'imposent et en recherchant l'aide, d'où qu'elle vienne. Alors, à quoi bon vouloir nous persuader que nous sommes atteints d'un mal que nous ne ressentons pas dans l'état actuel de notre développement? Nous avons des urgences à satisfaire et, si l'aide du Marché commun contribue à trouver des solutions immédiates à certains de nos problèmes, pourquoi la rejeter et par quoi la remplacer? Cela ne signifie pas que nous ne nous réservons pas le droit de procéder à de nouveaux examens de nos engagements, si notre évolution l'impose.

34. Enfin, après avoir tant parlé du colonialisme et de la décolonisation, nous aurions mauvaise conscience si nous n'attirions pas l'attention de cette assemblée sur une forme de domination plus grave pour la paix du monde que toutes celles exposées plus haut. Depuis quelques années, en effet, nous assistons à l'avènement d'un néo-colonialisme pratiqué par ceux-là mêmes qui, hier, luttaient pour leur dignité, leur liberté et l'indépendance de leur pays. Par une sorte de mimétisme, toute une doctrine annexionniste est en train de s'élaborer dans les cerveaux de certains hommes d'Etat et de certains responsables d'Afrique et d'ailleurs. Cet impérialisme annexionniste repose invariablement sur les causes que nous avons passées en revue plus haut. Il est l'illustration même de cette volonté de domination dont nous parlions et de la convoitise à l'égard des richesses des pays voisins, souvent sous-estimés. A notre sens, il est plus déshonorant encore que le colonialisme et l'impérialisme classiques, car il est assorti du désir, de la part de ceux qui le pratiquent, de dissimuler à leur opinion publique leurs difficultés internes et l'état de déconfiture de leur appareil gouvernemental. En plus des raisons classiques, on invoque soit la race, soit la religion, soit la continuité territoriale, soit l'idée d'unité avec tout ce qu'elle recèle de pouvoir magique sur l'opinion publique interne. On a même vu l'exemple d'Etats qui revendiquaient comme leur propriété un territoire auquel nulle frontière ne les liait et dont le peuple se distinguait du leur par son particularisme et son système.

35. La nouveauté de cette forme de domination provient aussi du fait qu'elle participe de la démagogie et du désir de discrediter les autres. Que de fois n'a-t-on pas entendu parler de "valet du colonialisme", d'"agent de l'impérialisme", d'"Etat fantôme" et nous en passons. En réalité, ceux qui se prévalent de cette nouvelle façon de coloniser le voisin sont les véritables instruments, souvent inconscients, du néo-colonialisme.

36. Un rapide coup d'œil les dévoile et l'on constate avec étonnement que des milliers de fonctionnaires étrangers dirigent, en dernier ressort, leur administration et contrôlent leurs services publics, que des milliers d'enseignants forment leur jeunesse dans la langue et le système de leur ancienne métropole, que des centaines de milliers de colons possèdent la majorité de leurs bonnes terres cultivables et de leurs fermes, que l'économie de leur pays est entre les mains de monopoles étrangers et qu'ils vivent et dépendent de l'aide financière, économique et militaire de plusieurs grandes puissances.

37. Il était de notre devoir de dénoncer avec véhémence, à cette tribune, cette nouvelle menace à la souveraineté et à la coexistence pacifique des Etats, menace qui est en contradiction avec le mouvement général des peuples vers le progrès et la liberté, menace aussi à l'égard de la Charte et de l'existence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

38. En terminant, toutes nos pensées vont vers les hommes qui luttent encore en ce moment même, sur les champs de bataille anonymes, contre les forces obscures du colonialisme, pour recouvrer leur dignité et leur liberté. Ce long débat sur la décolonisation est un hommage universel qui leur est rendu.

39. Nous espérons que l'année 1963 sera celle de l'indépendance, celle qui élargira davantage encore notre cercle de fraternité.

40. M. TARAZI (Syrie): Notre assemblée traite en ce moment de l'un des problèmes les plus importants qu'elle ait eu à examiner depuis que la Charte est entrée en vigueur: celui de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

41. La paix mondiale ne saurait être préservée et maintenue tant que nous n'aurons pas mis définitivement fin au système colonial devenu incompatible avec les données actuelles de notre époque et les impératifs des Nations Unies.

42. Nous sommes redevables à l'Union soviétique de la suggestion faite par l'entremise de son premier ministre, M. Khrouchtchev, de déclarer immédiatement l'indépendance de tous les pays et de tous les peuples coloniaux.

43. C'est ainsi que, le 14 décembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale adopta la fameuse résolution 1514 (XV) dont le texte avait été proposé par 43 pays asiatiques et africains. La date du 14 décembre 1960 marquera les annales de l'histoire contemporaine de son empreinte indélébile. Ce jour-là, le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et de leurs destinées, droit sur lequel était fondée la Charte, a été pris en main par l'Assemblée générale elle-même afin de lui donner une vigueur nouvelle et de faire en sorte que les vestiges de l'impérialisme, naguère tant vantés par ceux qui se prétendaient investis d'une mission sacrée de civilisation, disparaissent définitivement.

44. Il arriva cependant que les puissances coloniales auxquelles s'adressait directement l'appel de l'Assemblée ne prêtèrent pas attention à la volonté unanime des Membres de l'Organisation qui s'exprimaient au nom de la conscience publique mondiale. Elles persistèrent dans leur politique antérieure qui consistait à n'accorder l'indépendance qu'en fonction de leurs intérêts, lesquels, souvent, n'étaient compris qu'a posteriori.

45. Usant de subterfuges juridiques surannés, les autorités administrantes n'ont cessé de proclamer leur attachement à des positions acquises souvent par la ruse et par la violence et au mépris des règles de la morale. L'histoire du colonialisme est liée à une multitude de conditions sociales, économiques et politiques qui sont aujourd'hui complètement dépassées. Les deux guerres mondiales ont eu pour résultat de faire éclater les contradictions qui se cachaient derrière le phénomène colonial.

46. La victoire de la révolution d'Octobre 1917 en Russie a ouvert la voie à un phénomène nouveau, celui de la distinction entre pays capitalistes et pays socialistes. Cette distinction, reposant sur des critères qualitatifs, a rendu impossible tout compromis entre les grandes puissances en vue d'un partage mutuel des territoires subjugués. Au lendemain de la seconde guerre mondiale, de nombreux pays asiatiques sont parvenus à acquérir leur indépendance. Peu après, ils ont été suivis des pays africains qui sont venus grossir les rangs de ceux qui luttent pour la libération des peuples et pour une paix véritable sans laquelle l'humanité ne saurait atteindre ses objectifs de prospérité et de bonheur.

47. Tout récemment, nous avons acclamé la présence parmi nous de la Jamaïque, de la Trinité et Tobago, du Rwanda, du Burundi et de l'Ouganda. Nous avons eu également le privilège de voir l'Algérie siéger parmi nous, à la suite des souffrances innombrables endurées par un peuple qui a mené une lutte héroïque et implacable pour la restauration de ses droits et de ceux de tous les peuples opprimés.

48. La lutte de l'Algérie a été le point culminant des guerres de libération nationale.

49. En dépit des facteurs que je viens d'énumérer, les puissances coloniales n'ont pas voulu donner effet à la fameuse Déclaration adoptée le 14 décembre 1960 par l'Assemblée générale; aussi celle-ci fut-elle dans l'obligation de réitérer, par sa résolution 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, les principes qu'elle avait déjà entérinés et de créer un Comité spécial de 17 membres chargé "d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-septième session".

50. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, auquel la République arabe syrienne s'honore d'appartenir, a entrepris une tâche difficile et délicate au cours d'un laps de temps relativement restreint. Il a pu mettre à notre disposition un rapport volumineux et instructif dont la valeur, en tant qu'instrument de travail, ne saurait être contestée [A/5238].

51. Je ne voudrais pas faire l'éloge du rapport car il se trouve que le Rapporteur du Comité spécial est membre de ma délégation. Qu'il me soit permis de remercier tous ceux qui ont bien voulu faire l'éloge du Rapporteur et de les assurer de la gratitude de mon pays qui se sent vraiment touché des marques d'estime qui lui ont été ainsi témoignées. Ma délégation a hautement apprécié la méthode de travail que le Comité spécial a adoptée; elle lui a été reconnaissante de s'être rendu en Afrique, sur l'invitation de S. M. le roi Hassan II du Maroc, de l'empereur Haile Selassie d'Ethiopie, ainsi que du Gouvernement du Tanganyika.

52. Nous pensons que le fait d'examiner de près les problèmes qui se posent dans les territoires africains dont l'indépendance n'a pas encore été proclamée constitue la meilleure façon d'agir, contrairement à l'idée émise par certains à ce sujet. En effet, l'audition sur place des pétitionnaires et les consultations avec les gouvernements des pays africains jouissant de leur indépendance et connaissant bien les maux dont souffrent les peuples encore dominés sont un garant sûr de l'efficacité des résultats que ne manqueront pas de produire les efforts continus et vigilants du Comité spécial.

53. Nous sommes d'avis que, à la lumière du débat qui se poursuit actuellement, le Comité spécial devrait continuer la noble tâche qui lui a été assignée par l'Assemblée générale, au cours de sa seizième session. Nous déplorons l'attitude passive des puissances coloniales qui n'ont pas entendu donner la suite qui convient à l'appel qui leur a été adressé visant à mettre fin à leur administration.

54. En effet, aucun argument de nature à maintenir celle-ci ne saurait être retenu. Les puissances coloniales ont beau se retrancher derrière l'immaturité et la faiblesse de leurs administrés, la volonté unanime des Nations Unies veut qu'elles se retirent en abandonnant les territoires qu'elles gèrent à leurs propriétaires légitimes. Personne ne leur tiendrait rigueur si elles obtempéraient à cette demande claire et précise.

55. La Déclaration du 14 décembre 1960, en son paragraphe 3, prévoit ce qui suit:

"Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance."

Aussi, nous ne voyons pas pourquoi on ne fixerait pas une date limite à l'expiration de laquelle le système colonial devrait complètement disparaître pour être remplacé par le système normal et juste de l'indépendance. Au lieu de cela, que constatons-nous actuellement dans le seul continent africain auquel le Comité spécial a consacré, à juste titre, le plus clair de son temps?

56. De la lecture du rapport du Conseil spécial [A/5238], plusieurs idées se dégagent que nous voudrions brièvement exposer. Il apparaît, d'une part, que certains territoires devraient, d'ores et déjà, être déclarés indépendants. Ils ne le sont pas encore par suite d'une carence dont la puissance administrante assume l'entière responsabilité. Il en est ainsi de Zanzibar et du Kenya.

57. La position du Bassoutoland, du Botswana et du Swaziland a été assortie par le Royaume-Uni d'un système d'administration compliqué et ambigu qui la rend fragile et caduque. Des territoires contigus à la République sud-africaine sont administrés par un Haut Commissaire britannique qui a son siège en territoire sud-africain. Si la situation dont souffrent les peuples de ces territoires n'était pas aussi grave, on croirait assister à un spectacle de vaudeville qui pourrait fort bien se transformer en drame.

58. En effet, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni se prononce publiquement contre la politique de discrimination raciale pratiquée par la République sud-africaine. Cela ne l'empêche cependant pas de maintenir auprès de celle-ci un Haut Commissaire chargé d'administrer des territoires adjacents et qui ne manquera pas d'imiter les méthodes de ceux avec qui il cohabite, même si ces méthodes sont dénoncées par le gouvernement qui l'a nommé.

59. En ce qui concerne la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, nous pensons que la situation requiert notre examen. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, passé maître dans l'art colonial, prétend s'en laver les mains. Pour lui, les trois pays en question sont devenus autonomes et il n'assumerait que leur défense et leur représentation à l'étranger. Pour le reste, il n'a pas à s'occuper de leur libération, car les blancs se sont libérés de sa contrainte et ont constitué leur propre structure politique. Celle-ci n'est qu'artificielle. Des populations blanches, minoritaires entendent gouverner les majorités africaines, parce que des artifices juridiques, qui ne trompent personne, ont été mis en place afin de continuer, sous le couvert de l'autonomie formelle, une exploitation coloniale et d'échapper ainsi à la conclusion finale. Que faut-il admirer le plus, l'astuce britannique qui veut assurer la survie d'un système colonial condamné ou l'entêtement des colons européens qui, sous l'égide d'un sir Roy Welensky, d'un sir Edgar Whitehead, veulent maintenir une suprématie au mépris des lois de l'histoire?

60. Il n'en est pas moins vrai que c'est là un triste exemple de la fameuse théorie des races qui fut préconisée par l'Allemand Nietzsche, le Français Gobineau et l'Anglais Houston Stewart Chamberlain et qui n'a servi qu'à couvrir l'enrichissement illégitime et injustifié d'une poignée d'Européens au détriment des masses noires d'Afrique.

61. Dans son ouvrage intitulé The Politics of African Nationalism, qui vient de paraître à New York, M. George W. Shepherd, professeur à l'Université de Denver (Colorado), nous dit ceci à propos de la Fédération centrafricaine:

[L'orateur poursuit en anglais.]

"Il est manifeste que la Fédération d'Afrique centrale n'est pas viable. Les partis nationalistes africains de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Nyassaland ont lutté avec acharnement contre cette fédération et s'en retireront dès qu'ils arriveront au pouvoir."

[L'orateur poursuit en français.]

3/ George W. Shepherd, Jr., The Politics of African Nationalism, New York, Frederick A. Praeger, édit., 1962, p. 206.

62. M. Shepherd ajoute plus loin:

[L'orateur poursuit en anglais.]

"Les blancs n'ont pas d'autre choix que d'accepter l'inévitable".

[L'orateur reprend en français.]

63. Il est à souhaiter que les colons blancs et le Royaume-Uni soient en mesure de méditer ces réflexions érites par quelqu'un qui n'est pas communiste, mais qui entend au contraire maintenir l'Afrique dans l'orbite de l'Occident.

64. Il va de soi que les mêmes réflexions s'appliquent au Sud-Ouest africain. Le Comité spécial devrait être en mesure de faire comprendre à la République sud-africaine que son attitude, eu égard à ce territoire, est faite de mépris pour la Charte et pour les obligations qu'elle a instituées. La population du Sud-Ouest africain n'a que trop souffert de ce mépris.

65. L'attitude du Portugal n'est pas non plus à louer. Le Portugal entend utiliser des artifices constitutionnels pour se dérober aux obligations qui découlent du fait même qu'il administre des territoires africains. On a beau décréter que le Mozambique et l'Angola sont des provinces portugaises, la réalité est tout autre. La population africaine n'y est pas traitée sur un pied d'égalité avec la population européenne. Elle continue de souffrir de l'exploitation, de la faim et de l'ignorance.

66. Ainsi donc, la politique d'assimilation ne saurait tromper que ceux qui veulent l'être. La France a essayé vainement de l'appliquer après la seconde guerre mondiale sous le couvert de l'Union française prévue par la Constitution de 1946 et de la Communauté française en vertu de la Constitution de 1958. Le Portugal, dont les ressources juridiques et politiques sont loin d'égaliser celles de la France, ne pourrait prétendre continuer dans une voie qui n'est pas réaliste.

67. La lutte du peuple angolais pour sa libération fait l'objet d'une admiration unanime. Il est regrettable que des puissances aussi responsables que le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis et l'Australie n'aient pas jugé bon d'approuver la résolution que le Comité spécial nous propose au sujet de l'Angola [A/5238, chap. XI, par. 44], résolution qui se trouve être en parfaite concordance avec les injonctions du Conseil de sécurité en la matière.

68. Faut-il, pour convaincre les représentants des pays en question, rappeler ces paroles d'un expert anglais dans les questions africaines, M. John Hatch, qui travaille actuellement comme expert en Sierra Leone? M. John Hatch, dans son ouvrage intitulé Africa Today and Tomorrow paru récemment, dit ce qui suit:

"... Les deux territoires (l'Angola et le Mozambique) sont parmi les plus arriérés du continent. On fait très peu de chose pour fournir aux habitants un niveau d'instruction raisonnable et cela diminue naturellement pour les Africains les chances de prétendre au statut d'"assimilados"... Le travail forcé est d'un usage courant; il est organisé sur la base de pourcentages par des agents recruteurs asiatiques. Non seulement les planteurs font usage du système du travail forcé, mais l'administration y a recours pour les travaux routiers".

[L'orateur reprend en français.]

69. Pour en arriver à Aden, ma délégation pense que le maintien de la présence britannique dans le sud de la péninsule Arabique constitue une grave atteinte aux droits légitimes de la nation arabe. Aden constitue une base militaire et nucléaire qui menace l'intégrité de tous les pays arabes avoisinants. Elle devrait être démantelée, car nous sommes contre le maintien des bases parce qu'elles menacent la paix et la sécurité, surtout lorsqu'elles se trouvent en territoire étranger.

70. D'autre part, la création d'une fédération artificielle entre des chefs de petits clans dans le seul but de perpétuer un régime de domination ne saurait qu'entraver la marche du progrès par le maintien de structures féodales dépassées. Les peuples arabes ne sauraient accepter de voir certains de leurs territoires complètement aliénés dans le but de servir des intérêts pétroliers.

71. Permettez-moi de vous lire, dans cet ordre d'idées, ce qu'a écrit le Manchester Guardian dans son numéro du 15 novembre 1962:

[L'orateur poursuit en anglais.]

"Le Gouvernement a peu d'excuses pour pousser à l'exécution de ses plans, discutés mardi à la Chambre des communes, tendant à faire entrer la Colonie d'Aden dans la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud. Il est vain de prétendre que c'est là ce que désire la population d'Aden. Quant à la population de la Fédération, elle n'a pas encore atteint le niveau de maturité politique qui lui permettrait d'avoir une opinion. Le nouveau régime sera imposé, non accepté, et nous devrions savoir maintenant que les fédérations de ce genre ne sont pas viables.

"Il est vrai qu'au mois d'août le Gouverneur du Conseil exécutif d'Aden a approuvé le plan de fusion, mais depuis lors un des cinq ministres, et peut-être même trois, se sont ravisés. Il est vrai aussi que le Conseil législatif d'Aden a approuvé le plan en septembre, mais seule une minorité des membres élus a voté pour le plan et ces membres avaient été élus voici près de quatre ans, par un corps électoral très limité et à la suite d'élections boycottées par l'opposition nationaliste.

"Les gouvernements intéressés (celui de la métropole et celui de la colonie) ne peuvent se faire d'illusions sur la popularité de ce plan et ils ont retardé prudemment d'un an les élections qui devaient avoir lieu au début de janvier. La fusion doit prendre effet en mars. Il y a certainement des difficultés pratiques qui interdisent une campagne électorale immédiate, mais c'est là un argument pour retarder la fusion encore davantage.

"Certains des chefs les plus actifs de l'opposition sont en prison et le Gouvernement d'Aden qui a devant lui des jours difficiles peut s'estimer heureux que la Cour suprême ait refusé tout récemment un appel demandant la mise en liberté sous caution du Secrétaire général du Congrès des syndicats d'Aden (TUC). Moins heureusement pour lui, au même moment, juste avant le débat à la Chambre des communes, on a appris que certains détenus avaient été battus, non pas fouettés, mais battus au bâton. Neuf prisonniers avaient reçu 12 coups de bâton chacun pour avoir refusé leur nourriture. Or ces détenus n'avaient pas été condamnés, ils n'avaient même pas encore été jugés. Nous en entendrons encore parler.

"Peut-être le Gouvernement britannique est-il arrivé à la conclusion que la possession de la base d'Aden est indispensable et que la fusion doit être imposée par la contrainte, puisque le consentement ne sera sans doute pas obtenu. L'ennui est que la contrainte qu'on devra exercer est justement ce qui mettra le plus cette base en danger."

[L'orateur reprend en français.]

72. Les peuples arabes continuent d'ailleurs de souffrir du fait qu'on a créé en leur sein un Etat artificiel qui s'est appelé l'Etat d'Israël. Cette création n'a été faite qu'en vue de maintenir la domination coloniale et d'empêcher les Arabes de réaliser leurs aspirations réelles, en les mettant en état d'alerte et en les menaçant de disparition.

73. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept aurait dû aborder la question palestinienne dans son rapport. Comme il ne l'a pas fait, nous attirons son attention sur cette particularité flagrante et déplorable.

74. Nous voudrions également que le Comité spécial nous renseigne au sujet de certains territoires situés en dehors de l'Afrique et dont le statut n'est pas nettement défini. Les territoires en question ne sont pas administrés et gouvernés par leur population, mais par des métropoles européennes qui n'en font pas état dans leurs rapports.

75. Telles sont les observations que ma délégation a cru devoir formuler au sujet du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Je dirai, en guise de conclusion, que le Comité spécial devrait se remettre à la tâche le plus vite possible, afin que nous soyons en mesure de finir, en 1963, l'œuvre que nous avons amorcée en 1960. Aucun retard ne saurait être permis en la circonstance. L'heure avance, les peuples souffrent, la paix est menacée. N'épargnons aucun effort pour parvenir au but assigné.

76. Sir Patrick DEAN (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la résolution 1514 (XV) connue plutôt sous le nom de Déclaration sur le colonialisme a été généralement acclamée comme un événement important dans l'histoire des Nations Unies. Ensuite, la création par l'Assemblée générale, à sa seizième session, d'un Comité spécial chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration et de formuler des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre a été considérée comme importante parce qu'elle reflétait le désir de l'Assemblée de voir accéder rapidement à l'indépendance tous les territoires qui n'y avaient pas encore accédé.

77. Mais, contrairement à l'impression donnée dans ce débat par le représentant de l'Union soviétique et ses associés, l'adoption de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme et la création d'un Comité spécial de 17 membres n'étaient pas les premières mesures prises par les Nations Unies au sujet des territoires non autonomes. Avant même la fondation de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les auteurs de la Charte, parmi lesquels la délégation de mon pays a joué un rôle de premier plan, avaient rédigé les dispositions importantes qui figurent aux Chapitres XI et XII et qui établissent des principes directeurs à l'intention des Etats Membres qui administrent des territoires non autonomes, et portant création du régime de tutelle pour ceux des territoires qui étaient placés sous mandat international. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni s'est toujours acquitté loyalement de ses obligations en vertu des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte. Les 16 années qui se sont écoulées entre la signature de la Charte et la création du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ont vu accéder à l'indépendance non moins de 16 des anciens territoires britanniques, avec plus de 630 millions d'habitants au total; 12 de ces territoires sont membres du Commonwealth. A eux seuls, ces 12 nouveaux Etats du Commonwealth forment le neuvième de l'Assemblée générale.

78. La politique du Gouvernement britannique envers les territoires non autonomes qu'il administre est claire. Nous estimons que les peuples de ces territoires doivent accéder aussi vite que possible à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance. Nous avons toujours considéré et nous considérons ces territoires comme des pays ayant leur propre originalité, leurs traditions particulières et leur mode de vie, bien qu'ils soient placés pour le moment sous l'administration du Gouvernement britannique. En ce qui nous concerne, nous n'avons jamais été enclins à penser que ces territoires faisaient partie intégrante de la métropole et ce respect de leur caractère propre a toujours été à la base de toute l'attitude prise par les gouvernements et administrations britanniques devant les problèmes de ces territoires, politiques, économiques ou sociaux. Il était donc naturel que le Gouvernement britannique considère ces territoires comme des nations embryonnaires, puisqu'ils n'étaient en aucune manière incorporés au Royaume-Uni lui-même et qu'au fur et à mesure de leur développement ils assumeraient inévitablement de plus en plus la responsabilité directe de leurs propres affaires.

79. Contrairement à l'Union soviétique, nous ne nous opposons pas au nationalisme; nous créons des nations nouvelles. Notre but a été de faire en sorte que les nations nouvelles ne soient pas faibles et divisées, mais fortes et stables; nous estimons en effet qu'elles ont un rôle de plus en plus important à jouer dans les affaires mondiales et dans le progrès économique et social de l'humanité. Comme le représentant du Royaume-Uni, sir David Ormsby-Gore, l'a dit dans son discours sur la question à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale:

"Telles sont les convictions sincères et profondes du peuple britannique. Depuis de nombreuses années, elles ont guidé nos actes à l'égard des populations des territoires d'outre-mer. C'est sur ces convictions que continueront à s'appuyer les efforts que nous déploierons en commun, jusqu'à ce que nous ayons atteint les buts que nous nous sommes fixés dans notre politique et que les peuples de ces pays aient réalisé leurs aspirations nationales."
[925ème séance, par. 53.]

80. La preuve la plus convaincante de la sincérité de notre politique et de notre adhésion à ces objectifs, c'est la présence à l'Assemblée de tant d'Etats Membres indépendants qui ont été autrefois sous administration britannique. Tous les ans, nous accueillons de nouvelles nations dans le Commonwealth indépendant. A la dernière session de l'Assemblée, nous avons admis comme Membres le Sierra Leone et le Tanganyika, dont la population totale dépasse 11 millions d'habitants et qui ont accédé tous deux à l'indépendance en 1961. Cette année a vu l'indépendance de trois autres anciens territoires britanniques, la Jamaïque, la Trinité et Tobago, et l'Ouganda, dont la population totale dépasse 9 millions d'habitants. Ainsi, en ces deux années qui se sont écoulées depuis le discours du représentant britannique dont je viens de citer quelques phrases, le nombre des habitants vivant dans des territoires sous administration britannique, déjà beaucoup amoindri dans les années immédiatement précédentes, a diminué de moitié. Cependant, les représentants de la Pologne et de la Tchécoslovaquie, dans leurs longs discours sur la "décolonisation", n'ont pas trouvé place pour mentionner ces réalisations positives.

81. Ces pays n'ont pas vu le jour par hasard ou de manière indépendante. Il y a eu dans leur évolution beaucoup plus que des proclamations d'indépendance, comme le représentant de l'Australie l'a fait remarquer dans son discours prononcé ici mercredi dernier [1173ème séance]. Le Gouvernement britannique a apporté beaucoup de soins et d'attention à la création dans chaque territoire d'un service de fonctionnaires compétents, à l'institution de tribunaux impartiaux et à la création de parlements représentatifs. L'avènement de ces pays à la condition de nations libres et indépendantes est l'issue logique et concrète de cette politique persévérante de préparation et de formation.

82. Dès le début de l'administration britannique, chaque organe législatif d'un territoire a été habilité à légiférer sur tous les points intéressant les affaires intérieures du territoire; le progrès vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance a consisté dans le retrait graduel du contrôle du Gouvernement britannique et l'élargissement régulier de l'exercice de ce contrôle par la population locale. A chaque étape de ce progrès, les mesures prises résultent de discussions entre le Gouvernement britannique et les représentants de la population des territoires; dans ces discussions, la contribution des représentants de la population augmente naturellement depuis les premières étapes, où le Gouvernement britannique joue le premier rôle, jusqu'à l'étape finale, où c'est aux habitants eux-mêmes de décider de la forme de leur constitution. Ainsi, le passage de la dépendance à l'indépendance ne se fait pas par le retrait soudain d'une administration toute-puissante qui laisserait un vide à sa place, mais par le retrait final d'une autorité qui reculait de plus en plus à l'arrière-plan depuis un certain temps.

83. Comme je l'ai dit, la preuve la plus nette de ce processus est fournie chaque fois qu'un territoire accède à l'indépendance et entre à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, soit comme Etat séparé, soit en tant que partie d'un ensemble plus vaste. Mais nous devons souligner qu'entre-temps les autres territoires non autonomes ne restent pas figés dans l'immobilité: ils progressent rapidement le long de la même route que tant d'anciens territoires coloniaux ont déjà suivie. Je citerai plus loin quelques exemples de ce processus continu qui se déroule dans les territoires encore placés sous notre administration.

84. Ainsi, la politique et la pratique appliquées par le Gouvernement britannique envers ses territoires dépendants sont en harmonie complète avec la lettre et l'esprit du Chapitre XI de la Charte; en fait, notre politique et notre pratique ont en grande partie inspiré ce chapitre. Nous étions sûrs, nous sommes sûrs, que notre politique est la bonne; nous avons continué en 1961 et en 1962, comme nous l'avions fait les années précédentes, à conduire nos territoires à l'indépendance aussi rapidement que possible. Nous n'avons pas besoin de déclarations, de résolutions ou de comités pour confirmer la justesse de notre politique. L'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV) et la création du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept par la résolution 1654 (XVI) n'ont pas provoqué de changements dans la méthode ni l'orientation de notre politique. Néanmoins, dans l'esprit de coopération dont nous avons fait preuve dans le passé envers le Conseil de tutelle et le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, nous avons accepté de coopérer avec le Comité des Dix-Sept, de lui fournir des renseignements et de participer à ses discussions. En même temps, nous avons bien précisé que nous ne pourrions accepter aucune forme d'intervention du Comité dans l'administration des territoires dont nous avons la charge et que nous nous acquitterions de notre responsabilité pleinement et sans crainte.

85. En acceptant l'invitation du Président de l'Assemblée à être membre du Comité des Dix-Sept, nous entendions que la tâche essentielle du Comité serait, comme l'établit nettement la résolution 1654 (XVI), "d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre". En d'autres termes, le Comité aurait pour fonction de passer en revue ce qui a été accompli et d'indiquer d'une façon générale, pour guider l'Assemblée et ceux qui ont la charge de l'administration de territoires dépendants, les grandes lignes de l'action future. Conformément à cette conception de la tâche du Comité, la délégation britannique a mis à sa disposition tous renseignements sous la forme de documents constitutionnels, de comptes rendus et documents de conférences, etc., en plus des renseignements de base dans le domaine politique et constitutionnel qu'elle avait déjà fournis en vertu de l'engagement qu'elle avait pris à la seizième session de l'Assemblée. La délégation britannique a assisté à toutes les séances du Comité et lui a fourni des exposés sur les faits nouveaux intervenus récemment dans nos territoires. Nous avons envoyé notre représentant accompagner le Comité dans son voyage en Afrique, bien que nous eussions de sérieuses appréhensions au sujet de ce voyage. Nous avons invité les représentants du Comité à venir à Londres pour s'y entretenir avec nos ministres. Nous avons l'espoir que le Comité, mis en présence de tous les faits, parviendrait à trouver un terrain d'entente entre les diverses délégations et pourrait ainsi établir un rapport d'ensemble sur ce qui a été réalisé et ce qu'il reste à faire.

86. Cependant, le résultat des travaux du Comité n'est pas entièrement satisfaisant. En premier lieu, étant donné le grand nombre des territoires inscrits à son ordre du jour, ma délégation estimait que le Comité ne devrait pas examiner chaque territoire séparément en grand détail, mais devrait plutôt s'efforcer de faire une revue d'ensemble et parvenir à des conclusions générales sur quelques-uns des points les plus importants du problème qui se présentait. Le Comité a toutefois décidé d'examiner un par un le cas de tous les territoires inscrits sur sa liste et cette décision a eu pour résultat qu'après avoir tenu 117 séances il n'avait réussi à terminer l'examen que de 12 territoires, dont trois avaient déjà été examinés à fond par d'autres organes de l'Assemblée.

87. En deuxième lieu, il a été décidé vers le début des travaux du Comité que tous ses membres chercheraient à se mettre d'accord sur les diverses questions en cours d'examen sans recourir à des votes. Cette méthode de travail dite de l'assentiment unanime se fondait sur la saine hypothèse qu'il ne servirait à rien de bon d'imposer l'adoption de résolutions inacceptables pour ceux à qui elles s'adresseraient.

88. Cependant, le Comité a vite abandonné la méthode de l'assentiment unanime et il a adopté une série de résolutions dont plusieurs, je regrette de le dire, étaient fondées sur une compréhension insuffisante des faits et étaient déjà dépassées par les événements. De plus, certaines des décisions du Comité ont été prises selon une procédure parfaitement étrangère aux procédures parlementaires normales des Nations Unies. Par exemple, ce qu'on a appelé un "appel" relatif à Zanzibar a été adopté par le Comité à Dar es-Salam un peu plus d'une heure après que l'on eut soulevé cette question pour la première fois, avant même qu'un texte écrit eût été distribué. Je n'ai pas besoin de faire de plus amples observations sur un tel procédé.

89. En troisième lieu, ma délégation estime que, l'audition de pétitionnaires contre le gré des puissances administrantes constituait une manière incorrecte de procéder et que, de toute façon, elle n'était pas nécessaire puisque le Comité disposait de renseignements complets sur la situation dans tous les territoires britanniques. Or non seulement le Comité a entendu des pétitionnaires de nos territoires, mais il s'est même rendu en Afrique, surtout afin d'entendre encore d'autres pétitionnaires. Vu l'état précaire des finances de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, la dépense de plus de 100 000 dollars entraînée par ce voyage semble plutôt excessive pour une telle fin.

90. Enfin, le Comité n'a fait aucun effort sérieux pour coopérer avec les autres comités chargés de l'examen de questions coloniales et il n'a pas eu recours comme il aurait dû le faire à leurs compétences spéciales en certains domaines. Par exemple, le Comité a discuté la situation au Mozambique alors que le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal travaillait encore à son rapport, ce qui a motivé des protestations de ce dernier comité. La résolution sur le Mozambique a été adoptée dans les 24 heures qui ont suivi l'adoption du rapport du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal [A/5160 et Corr.1], ce qui excluait toute possibilité d'examiner sérieusement ce rapport. Le Comité a entendu des pétitionnaires du Sud-Ouest africain alors que le Comité spécial chargé de ce territoire était en train de siéger; les mêmes pétitionnaires ont pu se présenter la même semaine devant les deux comités, ce qui a été fort commode pour eux.

91. Je regrette d'avoir à faire des critiques de ce genre sur les travaux du Comité, mais il est important de juger et d'évaluer franchement le résultat de ses travaux jusqu'à maintenant s'il doit les continuer pendant une nouvelle période. A ce sujet, je dois bien préciser que, lorsque mon gouvernement a accepté de siéger au Comité et de coopérer avec lui, c'était en tenant compte de sa composition et du mandat défini pour le Comité dans la résolution 1654 (XVI). Cependant, on trame actuellement dans cette maison le projet d'augmenter le nombre des membres du Comité ou de l'autoriser expressément à intervenir dans l'administration des territoires dont le Gouvernement britannique a la charge, contrairement aux principes qui ont toujours été appliqués sur ce point. Ma délégation doit faire devant l'Assemblée les réserves les plus expresses en ce qui concerne la question de sa participation future aux travaux du Comité si de tels projets devaient être retenus.

92. Tout examen d'ensemble des travaux du Comité doit faire une place au rôle joué par les représentants de l'Union soviétique, qui se sont naturellement empressés de faire avorter toute méthode constructive et qui ont cherché à tout moment à faire du Comité une tribune pour la propagande de la guerre froide, comme le représentant des Etats-Unis l'a noté récemment dans son discours. Comme toujours, ils ne se sont intéressés qu'aux critiques destructives, non aux solutions constructives, et cela dérivait inévitablement de l'objectif fondamental de l'Union soviétique qui est de créer le chaos et la confusion dans les nations nouvelles. Leur tactique s'est manifestée nettement dès le début; par exemple, à la 49ème séance, le 11 mai, le représentant de l'Union soviétique au Comité des Dix-Sept a cherché à tourner en ridicule les efforts déployés par les délégations pour parvenir à un accord et a dit:

"Comment pourrait-il y avoir accord? Comment pourrait-il y avoir compromis?... Nous ne pouvons concevoir de coopération avec les puissances coloniales."

93. Poursuivant cette même politique d'attitude négative, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a pris fréquemment une position différente de celle des autres membres du Comité. A la 26ème séance du Comité, il s'est opposé à ce que, comme suite à l'invitation du Gouvernement britannique, un sous-comité se rende à Londres et il a dit:

"Je sais, certes, qu'il est arrivé au cours de l'histoire que l'on aille à Canossa pour y confesser ses péchés. Mais il ne peut en être ainsi pour nous. Plusieurs siècles se sont écoulés depuis Canossa. Nous n'avons pas de péchés à confesser ni que nous devions aller nous faire pardonner à Londres."

Venant du représentant de l'Union soviétique, cette déclaration a de quoi surprendre, c'est le moins qu'on puisse dire.

94. Dans les discussions sur certains territoires, les représentants de l'Union soviétique ont délibérément écarté toutes considérations pratiques et se sont montrés peu soucieux des intérêts des populations intéressées. Ils n'ont pas cessé de demander la fixation de dates précises pour l'accession à l'indépendance, alors qu'ils devaient savoir eux-mêmes que leurs propositions étaient totalement dénuées de réalisme; par exemple, dans les cas de la Rhodésie du Nord, du Nyassaland et des territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a demandé avec insistance que l'Assemblée générale fixe une date antérieure au 31 décembre 1962 pour l'accession de ces territoires à l'indépendance, alors que même les pétitionnaires de ces territoires ne l'avaient pas demandé. Ces manœuvres et d'autres initiatives du représentant de l'Union soviétique ont été rejetées de façon décisive par la majorité des membres du Comité.

95. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a souvent dénoncé la prétendue absence de coopération des puissances qu'il lui plaît d'appeler "les puissances coloniales". L'heure est venue pour son gouvernement de donner un exemple de coopération en ce qui concerne ses propres territoires dépendants. S'il est vrai que la domination britannique s'est exercée pendant longtemps sur des territoires d'Afrique et d'Asie, le retrait de cette domination lors de l'accession de ces territoires à l'indépendance a été rapide et continu depuis 1945. C'est pourquoi nous invitons instamment aujourd'hui le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique à examiner sa propre conduite avant de critiquer la nôtre. En 1815, Ceylan est passé tout entier sous la domination britannique; au même moment, la Russie occupait l'Azerbaïdjan. Ceylan a accédé à l'indépendance en 1947; quand pouvons-nous espérer voir l'Azerbaïdjan indépendant? La Nigéria et le Ghana sont passés sous l'influence britannique au milieu du XIX^{ème} siècle. Lagos a été proclamée colonie en 1862, un protectorat a été établi sur la Côte-de-l'Or en 1874. Dans la même période, on a vu la Russie conquérir les Etats indépendants de l'Asie centrale qui avaient une très ancienne civilisation; le dernier Etat kazak indépendant a été soumis en 1854, la conquête des trois Etats uzbeks du Turkestan a été achevée en 1876 et l'ensemble du Turkménistan a été finalement soumis et annexé peu après 1880. Après près d'un siècle de domination britannique, le Ghana est devenu indépendant en 1957 et la Nigéria est devenue indépendante en 1960; à quelle date est fixée l'indépendance des territoires soviétiques de l'Asie centrale?

96. Après quelques années d'occupation britannique, Chypre a été officiellement annexée à la Grande-Bretagne en 1914; trois ans auparavant, en 1911, le Tannou-Touva avait été occupé par les Russes et proclamé protectorat. Chypre est devenue indépendante en 1960; nous voulons croire que les plans soviétiques pour l'indépendance du Tannou-Touva seront bientôt portés à notre connaissance.

97. Les territoires occupés par le Gouvernement britannique pendant la première guerre mondiale ont été placés après cette guerre sous mandat de la Société des Nations; après la seconde guerre mondiale, ceux qui n'avaient pas accédé à l'indépendance ont été placés sous la tutelle des Nations Unies. Le dernier d'entre eux, le Tanganyika, est devenu indépendant l'an dernier.

98. Qu'en est-il des territoires acquis par l'Union soviétique pendant et après la seconde guerre mondiale, notamment l'Estonie, la Lituanie, la Lettonie, la partie méridionale de l'île Sakhaline et les îles Kouriles? Ces territoires ont-ils été mis sous le régime de tutelle? Des renseignements ont-ils été communiqués sur ces territoires en vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte? La Déclaration sur les pays coloniaux leur est-elle appliquée? Telles sont les questions auxquelles la délégation britannique espère que le représentant de l'Union soviétique donnera des réponses quand le Comité des Dix-Sept en viendra à s'occuper de ce problème.

99. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique pendant le présent débat, qui a le titre de Ministre des affaires étrangères de l'Estonie, a parlé avec chaleur contre la création de fédérations ou autres unions contrairement aux vœux des populations intéressées. Se souviendrait-il du malheureux sort de son propre pays, l'Estonie, qui était un Etat libre et indépendant et qui était membre de la Société des Nations jusqu'en 1940, année où il a été incorporé de force à l'Union soviétique? Je sais parfaitement qu'en attirant l'attention de l'Assemblée sur ces choses je risque de m'attirer le déplaisir du représentant de l'Union soviétique. Lui et ses amis s'appliquent avec grande diligence à propager la fable selon laquelle seules les puissances occidentales auraient participé à l'expansion coloniale au XIX^{ème} siècle et seuls existeraient encore les empires coloniaux des pays de l'Ouest. Rien ne peut être plus éloigné de la vérité, comme le représentant du Canada l'a prouvé abondamment dans le discours impressionnant et convaincant qu'il a prononcé vendredi dernier [1174^{ème} séance]. Comme première mesure pour tenter de remplir les obligations prévues par les dispositions de la Charte concernant les territoires non autonomes, l'Union soviétique devrait, à notre avis, fournir des renseignements sur ses territoires non autonomes conformément à l'Article 73, g, de la Charte.

100. Je ferai maintenant quelques observations sur certains chapitres du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept, mais auparavant je tiens à rendre hommage à son éminent rapporteur pour le travail et le soin qu'il a consacrés à la préparation de ce document. Comme il apparaîtra d'après ce que j'ai déjà dit, ma délégation ne peut approuver toute la teneur ni toutes les conclusions du rapport, mais cela ne diminue en rien le mérite de M. Rifai qui a réussi à rassembler en un faisceau des centaines de faits et d'arguments et à les présenter à l'Assemblée en un document unique, clair et complet. Il mérite vraiment les remerciements de l'Assemblée pour son travail.

101. En examinant séparément les divers territoires britanniques visés dans le rapport du Comité, je me bornerai aux questions de progrès politique et constitutionnel, bien que le développement économique, social et culturel ait aussi une importance capitale.

102. Je commencerai par les territoires du Betchouanaland, du Bassoutoland et du Souaziland.

103. Comme il est dit dans le rapport, le Bassoutoland est un petit pays de 28 500 kilomètres carrés et de 800 000 habitants, qui forme une enclave située à l'intérieur de l'Afrique du Sud. Le Betchouanaland, avec une superficie plus de 20 fois supérieure à celle du Bassoutoland, n'a que la moitié de sa population. Le Souaziland, le plus petit des trois, n'a que 17 400 kilomètres carrés de superficie et 280 000 habitants. Ces territoires sont assez souvent désignés sous le terme de territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire parce que, durant la plus grande partie de leur association à la Couronne britannique, leur administration a été confiée à un Haut Commissaire nommé par le Gouvernement britannique. Ces territoires ont été associés à nous parce que leurs peuples avaient demandé protection contre des voisins plus puissants. En 1909, lorsque l'Union sud-africaine a été créée par le Gouvernement britannique, les chefs africains de l'époque ont demandé que leurs territoires fussent exclus de l'Union et le Gouvernement britannique a accédé à cette demande. Si ces territoires ont conservé leur individualité distincte, ils le doivent donc au fait que la Grande-Bretagne a répondu aux appels de leurs peuples. Au point de vue politique, ils sont entièrement indépendants de la République sud-africaine et, malgré les allégations inconsidérées du représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, telle est toujours la politique de la Grande-Bretagne. Sir Winston Churchill a déclaré en avril 1954:

"Il ne peut être question que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté puisse accepter actuellement le transfert du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland à l'Union sud-africaine. Nous nous sommes engagés, depuis le South Africa Act de 1909, à ne pas transférer ces territoires tant que leurs habitants n'auront pas été consultés et tant que le Parlement du Royaume-Uni n'aura pas eu l'occasion d'exprimer son avis."

Cette définition de la politique britannique est encore valable aujourd'hui.

104. Non seulement ces territoires sont tous trois parfaitement indépendants de la République sud-africaine au point de vue politique, mais chacun de ces territoires est lui-même une entité politique distincte. Je vais parler de chacun d'eux successivement. J'ai l'intention de décrire avec assez de détails leur statut constitutionnel précis, car il ressort des discours de certains représentants, notamment ceux de la Birmanie et de l'Irak, que cette question n'est pas encore parfaitement claire pour tout le monde.

105. La Constitution actuelle du Bassoutoland correspond à des propositions faites par les Bassoutos eux-mêmes. A la fin de 1956, le Conseil du Bassoutoland a créé deux comités dont les membres étaient des membres du Conseil et qui étaient chargés l'un de la réforme constitutionnelle et l'autre des affaires de chefferie; en juillet 1958, le Conseil a approuvé un rapport établi d'après les travaux de ces deux comités. Puis il a envoyé à Londres une délégation chargée d'avoir des conversations avec le Gouvernement britannique. Il en est résulté un accord sur une nouvelle constitution dont la principale caractéristique était l'entrée de 40 membres élus au Conseil du Bassoutoland et de trois membres élus au Conseil exécutif. D'autre part, les membres du Conseil exécutif prenaient chacun la responsabilité d'un département ministériel ou d'un secteur particulier de l'administration, sans devenir officiellement des ministres; des membres élus sont maintenant chargés de l'éducation et de la santé publique, des travaux publics et du commerce, et de l'administration locale. Moins de 18 mois après la mise en vigueur de la nouvelle Constitution, le Conseil du Bassoutoland a exprimé le désir de nouvelles réformes constitutionnelles et il a prié le Haut Commissaire et le Chef suprême de prendre des dispositions pour créer une commission constitutionnelle dotée d'un mandat étendu. Cette commission aurait pour tâche d'examiner le fonctionnement de la Constitution de 1959 et de faire des propositions pour la perfectionner, notamment en ce qui concerne l'institution d'un gouvernement responsable, le rôle constitutionnel du Chef suprême dans un système de gouvernement responsable, la composition du Conseil exécutif et l'addition à la Constitution de dispositions protégeant les droits de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales. La commission a été constituée avec une composition très large comprenant des représentants du National Party, du Marema Tlou, du Freedom Party et du Congress Party. Elle est maintenant à l'œuvre et elle a reçu des témoignages de tous les secteurs de la population dans toutes les parties du territoire. Plus de 20 000 personnes ont assisté à 41 réunions, 640 personnes ont fait des dépositions orales, 1 200 mémoires écrits ont été présentés. Ces faits montrent nettement combien on cherche à s'assurer des vœux de la population au sujet de la future constitution, et je ne connais aucun autre exemple d'une consultation populaire aussi complète. Une sous-commission va procéder au tri et au collationnement des témoignages apportés à la commission et à la préparation générale de ses futures sessions. Le rapport de la commission sera évidemment très important pour déterminer la prochaine étape du développement constitutionnel du territoire.

106. Quant au Betchouanaland, sa constitution actuelle, qui est entrée en vigueur en décembre 1960, est fondée sur les recommandations d'un comité constitutionnel composé de huit membres du Conseil consultatif mixte dont quatre Africains et quatre Européens, et de quatre fonctionnaires. La Constitution institue un Conseil législatif de 35 membres, dont 21 membres élus, quatre membres désignés et 10 membres fonctionnaires. Dix des 21 membres élus sont des Africains, ainsi que deux des quatre membres désignés. Les 10 fonctionnaires sont membres du Conseil en vertu de leurs fonctions. Il est absolument faux de les qualifier de "colons blancs", comme l'a fait le représentant de la Pologne.

M. Seydoux (France), vice-président, prend la présidence.

107. Les membres élus, Africains, Asiatiques et Européens, sont choisis par leurs propres communautés; les Asiatiques et les Européens sont élus au scrutin direct et les Africains sont élus par le Conseil africain, dont la plupart des membres sont eux-mêmes élus au scrutin direct. Tout comme au Bassoutoland, des membres élus du Conseil législatif sont entrés au Conseil exécutif et des membres africains s'occupent maintenant des travaux de deux départements ministériels importants, celui des services sociaux et celui des ressources naturelles. La nouvelle Constitution fonctionne bien; elle a nettement lancé le territoire sur la route qui le mènera à l'autonomie interne et elle devrait normalement subsister sans changement pendant les quatre années du mandat de l'actuel Conseil législatif qui a été élu en 1961. Cependant, le Commissaire résident a décidé de reviser la Constitution en 1963, l'an prochain; il a l'intention de faire prochainement des propositions en vue d'un nouveau progrès constitutionnel, en consultation avec les représentants des partis politiques, les chefs, les autres intérêts et les collectivités. De son côté, le Gouvernement britannique sera prêt à étudier toutes propositions relatives à la prochaine étape qui auront recueilli l'appui général de l'opinion dans le territoire.

108. Tandis qu'au Bassoutoland et au Betchouanaland de nouvelles constitutions sont déjà en vigueur, on continue à élaborer la nouvelle constitution du Souaziland. Le Commissaire résident a créé un comité constitutionnel composé de membres africains et européens, et chargé de faire des recommandations sur la forme que devra prendre la constitution. Le Comité a terminé ses travaux à la fin de l'an dernier; son rapport a été publié en mars dernier, accompagné des observations officielles du Gouvernement britannique. Avant de prendre une décision définitive sur une question si importante pour la population du Souaziland, le Gouvernement britannique a voulu connaître les réactions de l'opinion publique dans l'ensemble du territoire. La publication du rapport accompagné des observations du Gouvernement britannique a permis aux divers points de vue de s'exprimer librement et publiquement. Nous pensons que les décisions relatives à la forme de la nouvelle constitution du Souaziland seront prises dans le courant des mois prochains.

109. Ainsi, les trois territoires sont dans une situation transitoire et de nombreux problèmes se posent. Un des plus importants, qui intéresse à des degrés divers les trois territoires, concerne le rôle et les pouvoirs des chefs. Les chefs constituent un élément vital dans le gouvernement des territoires et ils sont dans la vie de leurs peuples une force de cohésion, mais leur rôle doit être adapté pour s'intégrer dans le nouveau cadre de la société africaine moderne. Ce n'est là qu'une des difficultés qui compliquent la réforme constitutionnelle, mais il y en a d'autres, par exemple dans deux des territoires les difficultés provoquées par la présence de races différentes.

110. L'important est que le Gouvernement britannique est au courant de ces problèmes; il connaît également leur degré d'urgence; il accélère au maximum la recherche de leur solution. A cet effet, il applique les mêmes méthodes de consultation et de négociation qui ont réussi avec les populations d'autres territoires. Il est certain de trouver une solution heureuse aux problèmes constitutionnels de ces trois territoires. Le bref exposé que je viens de faire sur la situation dans ces trois territoires montre que la description que le représentant de la Syrie en a faite ici ce matin était bien loin de correspondre à la réalité.

111. Je désire encore, à ce propos, signaler l'opposition complète entre la situation véritable dans les territoires sous administration britannique et les exposés outrageusement inexacts qui ont été faits devant l'Assemblée par les représentants des délégations communistes et le porte-parole de la délégation de l'Arabie Saoudite. Mais la technique employée est celle des allusions et insinuations calomnieuses et l'on nous fournit rarement des faits qui viendraient à l'appui des accusations lancées. Toutefois, dans un ou deux cas où l'on a cité de prétendus faits, ils étaient sans aucun fondement. J'en citerai quelques exemples. Le représentant de la Pologne a déclaré:

"C'est ainsi qu'aux termes de ce qu'on appelle la Convention du Mozambique, conclue par le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud et la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, le Gouvernement portugais s'est engagé à envoyer chaque année dans ces pays des dizaines de milliers d'Africains pour y travailler dans les mines." [1169ème séance, par. 73.]

112. Le fait est que la Convention du Mozambique ne concerne pas et n'a jamais concerné la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland; c'est un arrangement bilatéral entre le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud, qui ne concerne pas du tout la Fédération. D'un autre côté, le représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite a prétendu que les colons blancs du Nyassaland possédaient la plus grande partie des terres fertiles de ce territoire. En fait, sur la superficie totale des terres du Nyassaland qui est de 9 320 000 hectares, 8 millions d'hectares sont des terres réservées aux Africains, 1 million d'hectares sont du domaine public, notamment les réserves forestières, et 320 000 hectares seulement, soit moins de 3,5 p. 100 de la superficie totale, sont détenus en propriété privée ou à bail, et ces 320 000 hectares sont cultivés par des exploitants de toutes races, Européens, Africains et Indiens, et non uniquement par des "colons blancs". Je cite ces chiffres pour montrer comment certaines délégations ont cherché à présenter à l'Assemblée une version délibérément falsifiée de la réalité.

113. Je parlerai maintenant de deux autres territoires, l'un en Amérique du Sud, l'autre en Afrique orientale, qui ont à résoudre des problèmes analogues malgré leur éloignement géographique: la Guyane britannique et Zanzibar. Dans les deux territoires, le principe de l'indépendance pleine et entière est accepté depuis quelque temps, mais des difficultés locales en ont empêché la réalisation. Dans les deux territoires, des élections ont eu lieu dans l'été de 1961 et elles ont abouti à peu près à un équilibre entre les grands partis. Dans les deux territoires, les désaccords politiques normaux qui sont la sève même de la démocratie ont été aggravés par des divergences entre les diverses communautés, et ces dissensions se sont brusquement manifestées sous forme de troubles importants à Zanzibar en juin 1961 et de troubles de moins d'intensité à Georgetown en février 1962. Dans les deux cas, le gouvernement élu a jugé nécessaire de proclamer l'état d'urgence et de faire appel aux troupes britanniques pour aider les forces de police locales à rétablir l'ordre. Les organes législatifs de Zanzibar et de la Guyane britannique ont adopté à l'unanimité, l'un en septembre et l'autre en octobre 1961, des résolutions demandant que des mesures soient prises pour accélérer l'accession à l'indépendance; donnant suite à ces résolutions, le Gouvernement britannique a invité des délégations représentant le gouvernement et les partis d'opposition de chaque territoire à venir à Londres discuter en conférence des prochaines réformes constitutionnelles. La conférence sur Zanzibar s'est réunie à Londres en mars et avril 1962; la conférence sur la Guyane britannique s'est réunie en octobre et novembre de cette même année. Etant donné que certaines délégations ont tenté de donner une idée fautive des débats et des résultats de cette dernière conférence, ma délégation a demandé que le rapport de cette conférence soit distribué comme document des Nations Unies. Dans les deux cas, il n'y avait pas de différend sur un certain nombre de questions, mais l'accord n'a pas pu se faire entre les deux grands partis sur certaines questions importantes. Dans les deux cas, il fallait décider si le territoire accèderait à l'indépendance sur la base des résultats des élections de 1961, comme le voulaient les partis du gouvernement, ou si de nouvelles élections auraient lieu avant l'indépendance, comme le réclamaient énergiquement les partis de l'opposition.

114. Pour la Guyane britannique, il se posait aussi la question de la représentation proportionnelle. Le Gouvernement britannique a dû déclarer aux deux conférences que les progrès constitutionnels à venir dépendaient forcément de l'aptitude des divers partis à résoudre eux-mêmes leurs différends, mais le désaccord a persisté malgré de longues discussions sur les questions controversées. Le Gouvernement britannique n'a donc pas pu fixer, pour le moment, la date de l'indépendance de la Guyane britannique ni celle de Zanzibar; l'indépendance complète reste le but à atteindre, mais les prochaines étapes vers ce but dépendent forcément de ce que les chefs politiques et les peuples des deux territoires réussiront à faire pour aplanir les différends qui les séparent.

115. Depuis la fin de la conférence de Zanzibar, le Résident britannique fait de son mieux pour trouver une solution qui rapproche les deux parties et qui permette de nouveaux progrès constitutionnels; le Gouverneur de la Guyane britannique s'efforcera de même dans ce territoire de concilier les différends entre partis lorsque la délégation qui a participé à la conférence reviendra à Georgetown. Nous espérons fermement que dans les deux territoires les discussions aboutiront vite à un accord sur les prochaines mesures à prendre et je suis certain que tous les membres de l'Assemblée admettront que la solution de ces problèmes doit venir des territoires eux-mêmes; elle ne peut certainement pas leur être imposée de l'extérieur.

116. Nous avons entendu le représentant de la Pologne lancer contre nous son accusation bien connue: "diviser pour régner", ce qui est son thème favori; mais, je le répète, notre objectif est la pleine et entière indépendance de la Guyane britannique et de Zanzibar; le processus aboutissant à cette fin se heurte uniquement au désaccord entre les grands partis de ces territoires. Nous avons œuvré, et nous continuerons à le faire, pour maintenir la paix, pour diminuer la tension, pour aplanir les différends et pour ouvrir ainsi la voie vers l'indépendance.

117. Avant de quitter ces deux territoires, je dois rectifier deux autres déformations des faits. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a prétendu que les bénéfices des sociétés étrangères en Guyane britannique ne sont pas contrôlés par le gouvernement élu de ce territoire, mais par une commission fiscale de la Puissance administrante. Il a également prétendu qu'avec l'assistance de la Puissance administrante de nombreuses sociétés étaient exemptes de tout impôt.

118. Ces allégations sont toutes deux entièrement fausses. D'une part, le Gouvernement britannique ne contrôle pas les bénéfices des sociétés étrangères en Guyane britannique et il n'a pas de commission fiscale dans ce territoire. Toutes les questions fiscales sont régies par la législation locale et dépendent du Ministre des finances du Gouvernement de la Guyane britannique, qui est un ministre élu. D'autre part, la législation du territoire prévoit des dégrèvements limités en faveur de tous les bénéfices réalisés afin d'encourager la création ou le développement des industries locales. Toutefois, c'est au gouvernement élu de la Guyane britannique et non pas au Gouvernement britannique qu'il appartient de donner à telle ou telle société le bénéfice de ces dégrèvements.

119. Avant de passer aux autres territoires africains, je dirai quelques mots des affirmations faites au sujet d'Aden par certains représentants, notamment ceux de l'Irak, de la Syrie et de la Jordanie. Il est parfaitement exact que le Gouvernement britannique a dans ce secteur d'importantes obligations dans le domaine de la défense; il n'y a là rien de secret. Il est exact aussi que, pour remplir ces obligations, des forces britanniques sont stationnées à Aden. Toutefois, la proposition tendant à faire entrer Aden dans la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud n'a pas été conçue par le Gouvernement britannique, mais a été élaborée par les ministres du Gouvernement d'Aden et de la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud en vue de mettre fin aux divisions qui existent actuellement entre leurs populations, qui sont de la même race, parlent la même langue, pratiquent la même religion et ont les mêmes intérêts économiques. Le territoire d'Aden, qui a seulement 195 kilomètres carrés de superficie et 200 000 habitants, ne peut vraiment pas envisager l'indépendance comme Etat isolé, tandis que l'union avec la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud lui permettrait de partager l'entière indépendance future de la Fédération. Je donne ces précisions pour rétablir les choses telles qu'elles sont, en raison des déclarations trompeuses qui ont été faites ici à ce sujet.

120. Je passe maintenant au Kenya et à la Rhodésie du Nord. Ces deux territoires sont à une étape cruciale de leur développement constitutionnel et les prochains mois seront décisifs. D'importantes conférences constitutionnelles sur chacun de ces terri-toires se sont réunies à Londres en 1960. Ces conférences ont été le point de départ d'une série d'événements qui ont abouti, dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Nord, aux propositions constitutionnelles de février 1962, et, dans le cas du Kenya, à une deuxième conférence constitutionnelle qui a terminé ses travaux en avril 1962. Conformément aux décisions adoptées au cours de ces négociations, aux dispositions ont été prises dans les deux territoires pour organiser des élections avec un corps électoral plus étendu. En Rhodésie du Nord, ces élections ont eu lieu voici quelque semaines, mais elles ne sont pas encore achevées et il y aura encore des élections pour plusieurs sièges le 10 décembre. Au Kenya, les travaux des diverses commissions pour la délimitation des circonscriptions et d'autres questions importantes sont toujours en cours en vue de la préparation des élections et de la mise en vigueur d'une nouvelle constitution l'an prochain.

121. Ces deux territoires sont donc dans une période de transition et je sais que l'Assemblée, qui admet sans réserve les objectifs que le Gouvernement britannique s'efforce d'atteindre, jugera sagement les obstacles et les dangers qu'il faut encore surmonter et partagera notre ferme intention de donner au Kenya et à la Rhodésie du Nord autant d'assistance et d'encouragement que possible pour réaliser de nouveaux progrès constitutionnels.

122. Pour finir, je passe au Nyassaland. Ainsi qu'il avait été convenu au début de l'année entre le Dr Hastings Banda et le Gouvernement britannique, une conférence constitutionnelle s'est réunie à Londres ce mois-ci. A cette conférence ont assisté des représentants de tous les partis du Nyassaland, notamment le Malawi Congress Party du Dr Hastings Banda; elle s'est terminée le 23 novembre.

123. La conférence est parvenue à un accord complet sur un projet de constitution comportant l'autonomie du territoire, constitution qui sera instituée en deux étapes. Selon cette nouvelle constitution, le Conseil exécutif actuel, qui est présidé par le Gouverneur, sera remplacé par un cabinet ministériel présidé par un premier ministre et le Gouverneur devra consulter ce cabinet dans l'exercice de la plupart de ses fonctions. La première étape de cette constitution autonome entrera en vigueur dans les trois mois. C'est pour le Nyassaland un progrès important et décidé à la suite d'un accord, un progrès accompli après consultation et avec l'agrément de tous les intéressés.

124. Le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept se termine par deux annexes, dont une est le texte d'une lettre en date du 4 septembre 1962 adressée par le représentant du Royaume-Uni au Président du Comité des Dix-Sept; je crois qu'un rappel de cette lettre conviendra parfaitement en guise de conclusion à mon discours. Cette lettre résume l'essentiel de la politique suivie par le Gouvernement britannique depuis de longues années et qu'il continuera de suivre à l'avenir.

125. Nous avons créé dans chacun de nos territoires des gouvernements distincts afin que les habitants acquièrent de l'expérience dans l'administration de leurs propres affaires et afin que le passage de la bureaucratie à la démocratie se réalise aussi vite que possible par étapes progressives et naturelles. Nous avons élaboré avec les habitants des plans de gouvernement représentatif; nous avons créé des services publics qui dépendent non d'un parti ou d'une tribu, mais de tous les habitants du pays qu'ils desservent. Où donc, je vous le demande, peut-on trouver un tel système dans l'empire soviétique? Nous avons créé des tribunaux impartiaux libres de toute ingérence du pouvoir exécutif et qui rendent la justice sans distinction de partis, de races ou d'opinions politiques; nous avons créé des forces de sécurité locales afin que ces pays, lorsqu'ils auront accédé à l'indépendance, aient à leur disposition le moyen de faire respecter l'ordre public sans recourir à l'aide ou à l'intervention de l'extérieur.

126. Enfin, nous avons constamment eu pour objectif de surmonter les différends entre races, groupes ou tribus, et de promouvoir un véritable patriotisme national.

127. A la lettre que je viens de rappeler était jointe une liste chronologique des progrès constitutionnels réalisés de décembre 1960, date à laquelle l'Assemblée générale a adopté la Déclaration sur le colonialisme, en septembre 1962. On constate d'après ce document que chaque mois a été marqué par des succès importants dans la direction de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance des territoires sous administration britannique. Je prie instamment tous les membres de l'Assemblée de lire avec soin l'annexe I du rapport actuellement soumis à leur examen. Ce n'est pas seulement un tableau des progrès accomplis. A ce simple titre, il est déjà assez convaincant, mais mieux encore il montre clairement les méthodes et principes que nous appliquons dans les territoires administrés par nous et qui, à notre avis, doivent régir les progrès ultérieurs. L'annexe I donne ainsi la meilleure réponse à ceux qui doutent de nos intentions et dénigrent ce que nous avons réalisé.

128. Je rappelle que notre secrétaire d'Etat, lord Home, a déclaré l'an dernier devant l'Assemblée: "Nous avons tenu notre parole à l'égard de l'immense majorité et nous tiendrons notre parole à l'égard de la petite minorité qui reste" [1017ème séance, par. 112].

129. Le PRESIDENT: Je donne la parole au représentant de la Pologne pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

130. M. WOLNIAK (Pologne) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a eu la bonté de dire, dans son discours, que, tout en reconnaissant que de nouveaux pays indépendants d'Afrique et d'autres régions avaient été admis à l'Organisation, nous n'avions pas chanté les louanges de la politique coloniale britannique. Je dois admettre que nous pourrions même nous sentir honorés d'avoir été choisis pour faire l'objet de cette plainte. En effet la Pologne se trouve sur ce point en honorable compagnie, en compagnie de la majorité écrasante des Membres de l'Organisation. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni semble adopter une logique plutôt étrange: il voudrait faire une vertu de ce qui n'était qu'une nécessité. Mais je suis sûr que les Nations Unies ne verraient aucun inconvénient à cette attitude si le Royaume-Uni voulait bien montrer quelque esprit de coopération avec l'Organisation en s'occupant de libérer les dernières colonies britanniques encore très nombreuses. Malheureusement, le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept nous dit qu'on déplore l'absence d'une coopération sincère de la part des autorités britanniques, ou que leur coopération est loin d'être satisfaisante, s'agissant des territoires britanniques non autonomes.

131. Le PRESIDENT: Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Irak pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

132. M. PACHACHI (Irak) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a accusé ma délégation et d'autres délégations de pays arabes d'avoir fait des affirmations trompeuses au sujet de la question d'Aden et de l'Arabie du Sud. Je dois avouer que j'ai été un peu déçu à l'audition du discours du représentant du Royaume-Uni, car j'avais espéré qu'il tenterait de répondre aux nombreuses questions que nous avions posées à ce propos. Il s'est contenté de dire que l'idée de la Fédération avait été lancée par les ministres de la Fédération et d'Aden, et n'avait en aucune manière été suggérée par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni.

133. Dans ma déclaration [1170ème séance], j'ai donné lecture de la lettre que les ministres avaient adressée au Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies et aux relations avec le Commonwealth et dans laquelle ils indiquaient eux-mêmes qu'ils considéraient comme entendu que le Royaume-Uni conserverait son autorité sur Aden. J'ai aussi montré que les ministres de la Fédération et d'Aden n'avaient pas été librement élus comme représentants du peuple. J'ai montré que certains des ministres avaient été nommés et que d'autres avaient été élus, et que les élections avaient eu lieu il y a plusieurs années avec un mode de scrutin tout à fait contraire à la démocratie et avaient été boycottées par tous les partis nationalistes d'Aden. Nous ne pouvons donc pas considérer comme valable cette lettre adressée au Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies. Nous devons la considérer, et je crois que ce serait juste, comme une lettre écrite par des personnes qui ne sont pas libres et qui ne représentent certainement pas leur pays.

134. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a fait une autre observation: étant donné qu'Aden n'est pas viable et ne peut accéder seule à l'indépendance, le fait de se joindre à la Fédération lui permettrait, selon ce qu'a dit le représentant du Royaume-Uni, de partager l'indépendance future de la Fédération. Or j'ai donné lecture de l'article 2 de l'accord portant création de la Fédération. Cet article dit très nettement qu'aucune disposition de l'accord ne porte atteinte à la souveraineté du Royaume-Uni sur Aden. J'ai cité aussi d'autres articles concernant le droit d'Aden de se séparer de la Fédération. J'ai montré que, loin d'offrir à Aden la promesse de l'indépendance dans le cadre de la Fédération, l'accord empêche nettement Aden — je dirais même l'empêche absolument — de jamais obtenir l'indépendance, que ce soit dans le cadre de la Fédération ou en dehors d'elle.

135. Je pense donc que le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'a pas dit l'exacte vérité — je pense en fait que c'est plutôt lui qui a fait des affirmations trompeuses — quand il a déclaré que la Fédération permettrait à Aden d'accéder à l'indépendance, qu'il a appelée l'objectif ultime de la Fédération. Comme je l'ai dit, le texte de l'accord exclut l'indépendance d'Aden. L'article 2 est inconditionnel, il est clair et catégorique.

136. J'avais espéré que le représentant du Royaume-Uni nous dirait pourquoi l'on s'était tellement hâté de faire adopter le plan fédéral par la Chambre des communes il y a 15 jours, malgré les signes évidents d'opposition qui se manifestaient dans le territoire et bien que des élections fussent prévues pour janvier prochain. Notre opinion, et celle des partis nationalistes d'Aden, c'est qu'on n'aurait pas dû faire passer à la hâte le plan fédéral devant le Parlement avant que des élections aient été organisées selon un système beaucoup plus démocratique, élections auxquelles tous les partis nationalistes auraient pu participer. Au contraire, le plan fédéral a été présenté à la Chambre des communes après avoir été approuvé par le Conseil législatif d'Aden, qui, comme je l'ai déjà montré, a quelques représentants élus, mais élus depuis quatre ans selon un mode de suffrage tout à fait antidémocratique et qui en fait des personnages très peu représentatifs de leur pays.

137. On a déclaré que les élections ne pouvaient se faire en janvier. C'est peut-être exact, mais, si les élections ne pouvaient se faire en janvier, il n'y avait nul besoin de se hâter de faire adopter le plan fédéral par le Parlement avant qu'elles aient pu se faire, sinon en janvier, du moins à une autre époque de l'année prochaine.

138. Comme je l'ai dit, je suis vraiment déçu que le représentant du Royaume-Uni ne nous en ait pas dit davantage sur ce point très important.

139. M. BAYONA (Colombie) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Quand on parle de la décolonisation, quand on fait le bilan de ce que la communauté internationale a réalisé dans ce domaine primordial, on ne peut éviter de citer, même au risque de répéter ce qui a déjà été dit, une preuve éloquente qui montre dans toute leur ampleur les résultats obtenus: en un peu plus de 15 ans d'existence, l'Organisation a vu le nombre de ses membres atteindre et dépasser la centaine. Cette croissance extraordinaire justifie pleinement à elle seule les efforts des hommes qui, à San Francisco, après l'hécatombe mondiale, ont fondé un nouvel ordre international sur la reconnaissance de principes essentiels visant au développement et au perfectionnement de la société humaine.

140. La liquidation du régime colonial, qui retient aujourd'hui l'attention des peuples et des gouvernements, est une étape dans une des grandes époques de l'histoire de l'humanité. C'est la fin d'un mouvement d'expansion lancé par les grandes puissances de l'Occident et dans lequel, à vrai dire, le mobile principal n'était pas tellement le simple profit de la puissance coloniale. Elle avait aussi une mission plus élevée, qui souvent a dégénéré et parfois a été oubliée, mais qui en fin de compte a laissé des fondations sur lesquelles les nouveaux Etats se dressent aujourd'hui dans l'indépendance. La décolonisation est la conséquence inévitable d'un mouvement historique de libération qui, heureusement, porte ses fruits dans certaines régions du monde.

141. D'autres représentants ont déjà analysé, dans des interventions sereines et judicieuses, les véritables prodromes de cette période où nous vivons. Sans remonter plus loin, ils ont évoqué la Charte des Nations Unies, car c'est dans ce document magistral que l'intelligence humaine a consacré en formules lapidaires ce qu'on pourrait appeler la philosophie de l'anticolonialisme. C'est la Charte qui a suscité cette apparition prodigieuse de nouveaux Etats qui n'est pas encore terminée et c'est de la Charte qu'émane ce dynamisme permanent qui devra établir la liberté et l'indépendance en tous les points de la terre.

142. Divers représentants africains, notamment ceux du Gabon [1169ème séance] et de la Côte-d'Ivoire [1171ème séance], ont signalé dans ce débat l'activité de certains hommes d'Etat occidentaux en faveur de la décolonisation. Leur rôle ne s'est pas borné à faire inscrire certaines dispositions dans le statut constitutionnel des Nations Unies, il s'est aussi manifesté par des actes concrets qui témoignent de la sincérité de leurs auteurs. Nous devrions toujours nous en souvenir quand on parle du colonialisme. C'est là en effet une réalité que prétendent minimiser les hommes qui se posent faussement en champions de la liberté, en même temps que, dans leur désir de domination universelle, ils réduisent en esclavage et veulent annihiler des peuples entiers.

143. Le représentant de l'Argentine à la Sixième Commission, M. José María Ruda, dans son discours sur le point 75 de l'ordre du jour, intitulé "Examen des principes du droit international touchant les relations amicales et la coopération entre les Etats conformément à la Charte des Nations Unies", a eu l'amabilité de rappeler que, sur l'initiative de la délégation de la Colombie, la Conférence de San Francisco avait inscrit dans la Charte un principe qui doit régir les relations internationales: le principe de la bonne foi. A ce propos, il a dit:

"Nous estimons que la portée éthique et juridique de ce principe de la bonne foi ne se situe pas uniquement sur le plan des abstractions, mais au contraire que ses répercussions doivent se faire sentir sur le plan effectif des relations internationales^{6/}."

144. Aux Nations Unies, quand on assiste à certains débats, notamment ceux qui portent sur le colonialisme, on entend des déclarations qui incitent à se demander si ceux qui les prononcent respectent réellement le principe de la bonne foi. Il semble qu'il existe très souvent, au-dessus des considérations relatives au sort des peuples, des intérêts plus importants au nom desquels on cherche à convertir toute réunion sur l'anticolonialisme en tribune propice à la guerre froide.

145. Naguère, j'ai pu observer à la Quatrième Commission combien certaines délégations étrangères au groupe des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie s'inquiétaient parce qu'un certain projet de résolution sur le Sud-Ouest africain ne prévoyait pas de sanctions contre la Puissance administrante qui ne s'acquitte pas de ses obligations internationales. Des pressions ont été exercées, mais les auteurs du projet, agissant de manière aussi raisonnable qu'indépendante, ont maintenu leurs appréciations et ont présenté un texte qui a été adopté presque à l'unanimité. Les promoteurs de la guerre froide en ont été pour leurs frais et la cause du peuple africain s'est vue fortifiée par une résolution qui, grâce à la forme sous laquelle on l'a adoptée, représente l'opinion péremptoire de la communauté internationale qui devra peser d'un grand poids dans les décisions futures du Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine.

146. Dans le même ordre d'idées, on voit mieux la signification de certains concepts relatifs à la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. Cette résolution constitue sans aucun doute un instrument historique; elle a eu de l'influence et elle en aura encore sur l'accélération du mouvement de décolonisation. On ne peut nier que cette résolution se détache entre toutes les autres par l'exposé et la précision du thème traité. Les délégations africaines et asiatiques qui avaient présenté le projet de résolution^{2/} sont dignes de l'estime générale par les nobles fins qu'elles avaient à l'esprit. Toutefois, ma délégation ne partage pas les points de vue des délégations qui prétendent donner un nom précis à cette résolution, tandis qu'elles portent de violentes attaques verbales contre certaines puissances. On a déjà dit ici-même que la résolution, par sa nature, appartient aux Nations Unies du fait qu'elle a été approuvée par beaucoup d'Etats, non point par un ou quelques-uns. Ces Etats ne peuvent se déclarer uniques maîtres et seigneurs d'une cause dont l'origine remonte à de nombreuses années et qui, avant 1960, avait produit des fruits réels et avait ouvert la voie qui devait conduire et qui conduira à l'indépendance beaucoup d'autres peuples.

147. La délégation de la Colombie est fermement convaincue que le chemin qui reste à parcourir dans cette pénible marche vers la liberté des peuples encore soumis à la domination coloniale sera moins dur s'il existe une coopération plus loyale entre tous les Etats Membres de l'Organisation. Il est hors de doute que la compréhension des problèmes facilitera la découverte des solutions pacifiques et efficaces.

148. Comme j'ai eu l'honneur de le déclarer à la Quatrième Commission lors de l'examen des questions de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain, où ma délégation a voté pour les projets de résolution présentés, la Colombie s'inspire de l'article premier de la Charte des Nations Unies. L'égalité de droits des peuples, leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes, le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous sans distinction d'aucune sorte sont des normes qui se complètent et dont l'application universelle marquera le triomphe indiscutable de l'Organisation.

149. Cette attitude est avant tout un culte incessant des idéaux qui hier encore — qu'est-ce que 150 années dans la vie millénaire des peuples? — ont inspiré et animé le mouvement d'émancipation de la Colombie et de tous les pays de l'Amérique latine. A cette époque, des patriotes célèbres ont donné au peuple le texte de la Déclaration des droits de l'homme et ont accéléré la réalisation de l'épopée américaine, sans doute un des mouvements de libération les plus fameux de l'histoire de l'humanité. Telle est la tradition que la Colombie cultive et protège non seulement à l'intérieur de son territoire, où la Constitution nationale est fondée sur la reconnaissance des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, mais aussi dans le domaine international, où la Colombie plaide pour l'application fidèle de tous les principes inscrits dans la Charte des Nations Unies.

150. A ce qu'on dit, à côté de la décolonisation l'Organisation mondiale doit affronter un autre problème grave si elle entend maintenir la paix et la sécurité internationales: le problème du désarmement. Sans aucun doute, le désarmement général et complet est une des grandes aspirations de l'humanité; il serait insensé d'abandonner l'espoir de la réaliser. Toutefois, un célèbre homme d'Etat d'un pays aupaquisme exemplaire, la Suisse, avait bien raison quand il affirmait que le désarmement est et restera un faux problème tant qu'on n'aura pas créé les conditions qui permettront seules de le réaliser. "Le désarmement, disait-il, suppose en premier lieu le renoncement à l'usage de la force, à la menace même d'employer la force pour le règlement des différends. Il suppose en outre la création d'un certain ordre international." En ce sens, il serait peut-être plus exact de parler du perfectionnement du nouvel ordre international. On peut donc soutenir que pour le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales il vaudrait mieux réaliser avant le désarmement, selon les termes de la Charte,

"... la coopération internationale en résolvant les problèmes internationaux, d'ordre économique, social, intellectuel ou humanitaire, en développant et en encourageant le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion".

Cette évocation des grands problèmes de la communauté internationale n'est pas fortuite, encore moins inopportune. Quand on examine les divers aspects de la décolonisation, rien ne peut se rapprocher plus du sujet que les droits fondamentaux de la personne humaine. On ne peut oublier que les tendances modernes du droit international soulignent de plus en plus la haute valeur du respect de la dignité de la personne humaine dans l'équilibre de la société internationale. C'est là une condition indispensable pour parvenir à une véritable "coexistence pacifique", car rien ne sera plus difficile que de faire coexister des peuples libres maîtres de leur destin et des peuples opprimés privés de leurs libertés essentielles. A quoi sert le désarmement si les causes de guerre subsistent? Si l'on parvient à réaliser un accord sur le désarmement, combien de temps sera-t-il respecté si les grandes puissances prétendent continuer leur politique de domination et d'expansion? La liquidation du système colonial de l'Occident touche à sa fin. Quand donc commencera l'application du principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes dans les pays opprimés par l'impérialisme soviétique?

151. C'est un motif de satisfaction pour les Nations Unies et d'espérance pour toute l'humanité que de pouvoir apprécier ce que signifie la présence de nouveaux Etats à l'Organisation mondiale. Au-delà de la simple question numérique, c'est l'apport des intelligences au service des idéaux suprêmes du genre humain. A une précédente séance de l'Assemblée générale, le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Madagascar a prononcé un excellent discours chargé de sens, qu'il faut se rappeler et citer souvent. Parlant de l'œuvre réalisée par l'Organisation dans les domaines de la libération de l'homme, cet homme politique africain a déclaré:

"Pour nous Malgaches, cette libération humaine s'applique non seulement aux peuples noirs d'Afrique encore colonisés, mais aussi aux hommes d'autres races, d'autres couleurs, tenus sous le joug du néo-colonialisme. Ceux-là aussi, qu'ils soient de race blanche ou jaune, ont droit à la liberté et à l'autodétermination. Il ne faut pas que certains hommes puissent, par la force, imposer à d'autres hommes une situation de fait qu'ils sont astreints à subir contre leur gré et qui ne répond pas à leur désir légitime de vivre comme ils l'entendent." [1172ème séance, par. 119.]

Ce sont là des paroles remarquables; elles montrent la route que l'Organisation devra suivre, car on trouve dans le préambule de la Charte une réaffirmation de foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme et dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine. Observer ces principes est indispensable pour établir une paix durable où disparaîtront pour l'humanité la crainte et la terreur des armes, qu'elles soient de type classique ou atomiques.

152. Après ces considérations préliminaires sur le déroulement actuel et futur de la politique anticolonialiste où l'Organisation s'est engagée, ma délégation désire rappeler les travaux accomplis par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238] représente un apport utile pour l'examen de la question, et je ne dis pas cela par bienveillance envers ses auteurs. Je reconnais simplement la diligence avec laquelle les membres du Comité ont mené à bien, pendant leur première session, le mandat qui leur avait été confié par la résolution 1654 (XV). Nous qui siégeons à la Quatrième Commission, nous avons pu bénéficier de ces travaux, en particulier pour l'étude des questions relatives à la Rhodésie du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain. La présentation rationnelle des renseignements, des délibérations et des conclusions relatives à chacun des territoires a beaucoup facilité la tâche de la Commission.

153. Cependant, la délégation de la Colombie maintient ses réserves sur certaines conclusions et recommandations adoptées, notamment celles qui touchent l'application de sanctions. Le souci d'être objectif sur le pouvoir qu'ont les Nations Unies de recourir à ces mesures, en certains cas des objections de caractère juridique fondées sur les dispositions de la Charte, une appréciation réaliste des complications qui peuvent surgir d'une telle manière de faire et surtout le désir permanent d'essayer tous les moyens pacifiques avant de recourir à des mesures de ce genre, telles sont les principales raisons pour lesquelles la Colombie a voulu adopter une attitude prudente devant cette question délicate.

154. D'autre part, en ce qui concerne les méthodes de travail du Comité spécial et les incidences de ses délibérations, nous jugeons constructives les observations faites par les délégations des Etats-Unis et de l'Australie. Tout semble indiquer que, si le Comité se libère à l'avenir des influences de la guerre froide et peut agir selon des motifs techniques plutôt que politiques — si l'on peut parler d'une technique de la décolonisation — les résultats seront plus favorables. Que les expériences de la première année de travail servent vraiment de leçons pour les plans d'avenir.

155. Ma délégation approuve pleinement la réorganisation prévue pour le Comité spécial et la suppression des comités créés pour des fins analogues dans le domaine de la décolonisation. La concentration de ces activités en un seul organe compétent, outre l'économie budgétaire qui en résultera pour l'Organisation, permettra, comme on l'a déjà dit, d'éviter les doubles emplois qui pourraient à un certain moment ralentir ou paralyser l'œuvre entreprise. Lorsque les suggestions relatives à l'augmentation du nombre des membres, au roulement des membres, à la représentation géographique et à d'autres questions connexes auront été présentées en totalité, la délégation de la Colombie donnera son avis définitif sur ces points. Elle déclare en tout cas que, si l'on augmente le nombre des membres du Comité, il faudra donner une représentation plus importante à l'Amérique latine, continent toujours prêt à défendre la cause de la liberté. Les actuels représentants de l'Amérique latine au Comité, c'est-à-dire les représentants de l'Uruguay et du Venezuela, ont collaboré brillamment à ses travaux et méritent de cordiales félicitations.

156. Une analyse de la situation dans chacun des territoires examinés dans le rapport du Comité ne nous paraît pas utile ni opportune dans cette discussion générale. La pratique montre qu'il est plus indiqué d'en discuter à la Quatrième Commission. La délégation de la Colombie interviendra alors, comme elle l'a déjà fait pour la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain, avec le ferme propos de contribuer à la solution des problèmes.

157. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Colombie, M. José Antonio Montalvo, dans le discours qu'il a prononcé à l'Assemblée le 28 septembre dernier, a déclaré :

"La Colombie est en faveur de l'autonomie et l'indépendance de tous les peuples et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Toutefois, nous ne voudrions ni blesser, ni insulter des pays amis auxquels les Nations Unies demandent de libérer des territoires qui sont encore sous leur administration." [1137ème séance, par. 104.]

Ce sera là une règle invariable que ma délégation observera toujours et notamment au sujet des territoires qui font actuellement l'objet de différends graves. Elle ne peut prendre une autre attitude en examinant, par exemple, les questions relatives aux territoires administrés par le Royaume-Uni et par le Portugal.

158. Dans le premier cas, nous rendons hommage à cette grande puissance dont l'action historique a permis à tant de peuples d'être aujourd'hui représentés à l'Assemblée. Souhaitons que des situations comme celle de la Rhodésie du Sud disparaissent définitivement et que s'établissent dans les territoires qui sont près d'accéder à l'indépendance des gouvernements démocratiques garantissant les droits de l'homme. Dans le deuxième cas, la Colombie nourrit le vif espoir que le Portugal, conscient des transformations qui se manifestent dans la communauté internationale, détournera le danger qu'il courrait en allant à contre-courant de l'histoire, car elle tend à renverser le colonialisme qui est anachronique. Si l'on passe en revue la géographie politique du monde, le panorama ne peut être plus éloquant. Les empires coloniaux de presque tous les pays d'Europe ont disparu. La France, la Belgique, les Pays-Bas, sans parler du Royaume-Uni, ont accepté ce qui est une tendance fondamentale de l'époque et ont liquidé leurs empires coloniaux, en laissant ainsi le champ libre à une floraison de nouveaux Etats. Le Portugal ne peut faire exception. La Colombie, dans un geste d'amitié sincère, se déclare convaincue que ce pays acceptera finalement d'engager avec les Nations Unies un dialogue constructif qui conduira à l'application du principe de la libre détermination dans les territoires qu'il administre.

159. De même que les relations de type colonial disparaissent de jour en jour, on voit surgir de plus en plus fort et de plus en plus net le concept de l'indépendance entre peuples et nations libres. Ce nouveau lien semble devoir unir les nations que les mouvements d'émancipation ont pu séparer. La différence est que cette union sera plus solide et plus durable, parce qu'elle s'inspire des principes fondamentaux de l'égalité des droits des hommes et des nations, sans discrimination d'aucune sorte.

160. On peut s'imaginer ainsi combien il serait profitable d'agir conformément aux exigences de l'heure présente pour éviter que certaines attitudes ne suscitent des divisions portant atteinte à des liens historiques d'amitié. Le respect et l'application opportune de la libre détermination paraît être le meilleur et le seul moyen de surmonter ces vicissitudes de l'histoire. Pour ce faire, le plus tôt sera le mieux.

La séance est levée à 13 h 10.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (A/5238) (suite)

En l'absence du Président, sir Patrick Dean (Royaume-Uni), vice-président, prend la présidence.

1. M. VOLIO (Costa Rica) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI), publié sous la cote A/5238, est tellement important et tellement significatif que l'Assemblée générale fait bien de lui consacrer plusieurs séances pour l'examiner à fond. Les nombreux renseignements qui figurent dans ce document et dans ses annexes aideront certainement les Nations Unies à poursuivre leur lutte contre le colonialisme en employant des moyens appropriés à la nature du mal qu'elles veulent éliminer.

2. La délégation du Costa Rica se plaît à souligner la part constructive prise par le Venezuela et l'Uruguay aux travaux du Comité spécial. Ces deux pays ont fait preuve en l'occurrence du sens élevé des responsabilités dont ils sont coutumiers et, par leur truchement, l'Amérique latine a manifesté une fois de plus l'intérêt primordial qu'elle attache à la décolonisation depuis les premières délibérations des Nations Unies.

3. Les pays d'Amérique latine, qui étaient tous représentés à la Conférence de San Francisco, s'y sont employés avec diligence à forger pour la lutte contre le colonialisme des armes nouvelles et plus efficaces. En étroite collaboration avec d'autres pays, ils ont pris la tête du mouvement dans ce sens et ont tout mis en œuvre pour que le Conseil de tutelle soit un des organes principaux des Nations Unies et que les Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte renferment des dispositions qui marquent un progrès considérable par rapport au Pacte de la Société des Nations.

4. Les différences entre le Pacte et la Charte sont notables en ce qui concerne les peuples soumis au joug colonial. La question n'est évoquée que deux fois dans le Pacte, à l'Article 22 et à l'alinéa b de l'Article 23, et chaque fois d'une façon qui trahit une conception restrictive et paternaliste de la responsabilité des puissances coloniales envers les peuples assujettis. L'Article 22 stipule que ces puissances doivent veiller au "bien-être" et au "développement" des peuples autochtones. Aux termes de l'alinéa b de l'Article 23, les Membres de la Société des Nations "s'engagent à assurer le traitement équitable des populations indigènes dans les territoires soumis à leur administration".

5. Dans la Charte des Nations Unies, en revanche, trois chapitres, notamment le Chapitre XI, imposent clairement aux puissances coloniales l'obligation d'amener rapidement les peuples assujettis à l'autonomie et de développer leurs "libres institutions politiques" dans le respect absolu du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, principes que le Pacte de la Société des Nations n'énonçait pas.

6. Malgré ses imperfections de structure, le Conseil de tutelle a progressé dans la voie de la décolonisation et, lorsque son action s'est trouvée paralysée, l'Assemblée générale a pu surmonter les obstacles en créant des comités spéciaux qui ont donné une forte impulsion à la croisade entreprise. Cette nouvelle étape a abouti à l'adoption des fécondes résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale et à l'entrée en action d'un organe nouveau et plus efficace, le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

7. La participation de l'Amérique latine à l'élaboration de la nouvelle conception de la lutte pour l'émancipation des peuples assujettis à une domination étrangère est la conséquence des mouvements de libération de nos propres pays qui ont laissé une empreinte profonde et ineffaçable sur l'esprit de leurs populations, à tel point que la condamnation du colonialisme prend la valeur d'une clause liant juridiquement les parties dans divers instruments du système régional panaméricain. Il suffit, à cet égard, de citer la résolution XXXIII de la neuvième Conférence internationale américaine, en date du 2 mai 1948, dont le préambule débute par les trois alinéas suivants:

"... le processus historique de l'émancipation de l'Amérique ne sera pas terminé tant qu'il existera sur le continent des peuples et des régions soumis au régime colonial ou des territoires occupés par des pays non américains;

"... l'idéal qui inspira le geste de l'indépendance de l'Amérique animera toujours nos peuples et nos gouvernements unis par l'obligation morale de lutter, par tous les moyens pacifiques en leur pouvoir, pour supprimer du continent toute situation de dépendance, quelle qu'en soit la forme, politique, économique ou juridique;

"... depuis leur indépendance, les Etats américains ont été d'accord pour poursuivre cet objectif, lequel a été défini dernièrement d'une façon précise, au cours des réunions de consultation des ministres des relations extérieures tenues à La Havane et à Rio de Janeiro, dans des résolutions condamnant le régime colonial en Amérique et consacrant le droit des peuples de ce continent de disposer librement de leur destin".

8. Fidèle à ce glorieux passé, la délégation du Costa Rica a étudié avec une attention particulière le rapport du Comité spécial sur ses premiers travaux. Elle a noté avec satisfaction que ce rapport contribuerait puissamment aux efforts déployés par les Nations Unies pour mettre fin au colonialisme. Le Comité spécial a su arrêter judicieusement sa procédure et déterminer un ordre de priorité pour l'examen des questions soumises à son examen par l'Assemblée générale. Il a accompli sa tâche conformément aux lignes directrices tracées par la Charte et par les résolutions auxquelles il doit sa création. Cependant, comme je l'indiquerai plus loin, des influences extérieures se sont fait sentir dans ses travaux et ont peut-être rendu son œuvre moins constructive.

9. Je n'ai pas l'intention d'analyser le rapport dans le détail; il est inutile, en effet, de répéter des observations déjà faites à cette tribune par d'autres délégations. Pour exprimer notre opinion quant au fond, il suffira de dire que, dans la majorité des 12 cas examinés par le Comité spécial, on s'est sensiblement rapproché de l'autodétermination complète et que les Nations Unies doivent redoubler d'efforts pour accélérer le processus et atteindre le plus rapidement possible les objectifs fixés par les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale. La complexité des problèmes qui se posent et toutes les difficultés qui se présentent, loin de plaider en faveur d'un ralentissement de la mise en œuvre des décisions de l'Assemblée, font ressortir la nécessité de surmonter ces obstacles dans les plus brefs délais. A cette fin, les parties intéressées, en particulier les puissances administrantes, doivent mobiliser tous les moyens dont elles disposent dans la certitude que l'humanité progressera ainsi vers une des dates les plus glorieuses de son histoire, celle de la disparition du régime colonial.

10. Ma délégation croit utile de souligner les différences entre les attitudes adoptées par les trois puissances administrantes mentionnées dans le rapport. Elle espère ainsi encourager celle qui s'est montrée soucieuse d'appliquer les dispositions de la Charte et des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale relatives au colonialisme, et chercher à influencer sur les deux autres dont le comportement ne mérite jusqu'ici que le blâme.

11. Il ressort d'une étude attentive du rapport du Comité spécial que le Royaume-Uni accepte l'évolution vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance totale des pays soumis à son administration, à pleine conscience des responsabilités qui lui incombent, en tant que Puissance administrante, en vertu de la Charte et des résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI), et ne met pas obstacle à l'action menée par les Nations Unies pour hâter le processus de décolonisation. Dans la Rhodésie du Nord, dans la Rhodésie du Sud, au Nyassaland, à Zanzibar, au Kenya, au Bassoutoland, au Betchouana-land et au Souaziland, les difficultés qui freinent l'accession à l'autonomie complète sont dues non à l'obstruction du Royaume-Uni, mais à un ensemble de conditions politiques, économiques et sociales propres à ces territoires. Le plus marquant de ces facteurs est d'ailleurs l'odieuse et tenace opposition des minorités blanches qui détiennent le pouvoir et empêchent la politique officielle éclairée et les efforts du Royaume-Uni de porter leurs fruits.

12. Une situation analogue a existé en Amérique à l'époque coloniale. Les autorités coloniales feignaient un grand respect pour les lois progressistes dites "Leyes de Indias", mais se gardaient bien de les appliquer. Cependant, le Royaume-Uni est en mesure d'exercer son autorité et son influence pour vaincre la résistance obstinée des minorités blanches et les faire renoncer à leur politique discriminatoire contraire à la libre détermination de la population autochtone. Il devra aussi, dans divers cas, activer la décolonisation malgré les divergences entre les groupes politiques qui luttent pour l'autonomie et renoncer sur ce point à son actuelle attitude paternaliste ambiguë. Au Bassoutoland, au Betchouanaland et au Souaziland, la Puissance administrante devra faire un effort spécial pour améliorer, avec la collaboration des Nations Unies, les déplorable conditions économiques et sociales qui règnent en ce moment, et hâter d'autre part l'avènement de libres institutions politiques.

13. Mon pays se réjouit de noter que trois des territoires administrés par le Royaume-Uni arrivent au seuil de l'indépendance. Ce sont le Nyassaland, le Kenya et la Guyane britannique. Cette dernière viendra bientôt augmenter le nombre des Etats américains et, avec la Jamaïque et la Trinité et Tobago, grossir les rangs des membres de l'association panaméricaine. Nous l'espérons fermement.

14. C'est un tableau bien différent que nous révèle le rapport du Comité spécial en ce qui concerne le Mozambique, l'Angola et le Sud-Ouest africain, territoires soumis à la domination du Portugal et de la République sud-africaine. Non seulement la politique d'intolérance raciale de la minorité de colons blancs et son mépris absolu de la dignité de la majorité autochtone s'y donnent libre cours, non seulement aucune évolution vers l'autonomie ne s'y dessine, mais encore on y entrave l'action des Nations Unies au point de leur refuser toute intervention, ce qui les empêche de mener à bien leur noble entreprise d'élimination de toutes les formes de discrimination et de la domination coloniale exercée par les puissances en question. Il est à la fois pénible et irritant de voir comment y sont traités ces travailleurs, dont la condition rappelle l'esclavage. Afin de mettre un terme à ces atteintes à la liberté et à la dignité de l'homme, les Nations Unies ne doivent rien négliger pour peser de toute leur autorité morale en faveur des peuples qui subissent le joug portugais et sud-africain. La délégation du Costa Rica veut croire qu'on ne laissera pas plus longtemps le Portugal et la République sud-africaine défier la conscience universelle représentée par les Nations Unies.

15. L'importance et l'ampleur de la tâche confiée par l'Assemblée générale au Comité spécial exigent qu'il poursuive ses travaux pendant tout le temps nécessaire pour donner effet aux résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI). Le Costa Rica souhaite toutefois qu'à l'avenir le Comité spécial ne soit plus troublé par les échos pernicieux de la guerre froide qu'y a malencontreusement fait retentir une grande puissance, ainsi qu'il ressort du rapport. En effet, lors de l'examen des divers cas par le Comité spécial, cette puissance a affecté de passer sous silence tous les éléments positifs et a voulu établir un lien arbitraire et sans aucun fondement entre les erreurs et omissions commises par les puissances administrantes et l'ensemble de valeurs morales et politiques qui caractérise le monde occidental. Elle a ainsi introduit, mal à propos et contrairement au vœu de l'Assemblée générale, un facteur de paralysie et de désunion dont l'influence, si elle se prolongeait, pourrait fausser l'action du Comité spécial et la mener à l'échec.

16. Il faut exclure totalement la guerre froide des délibérations du Comité spécial si l'on veut vraiment atteindre les objectifs de l'Assemblée générale en matière de lutte anticolonialiste; ils n'ont absolument rien à voir avec les dangers et les craintes que la guerre froide a apportés à l'humanité. La grande œuvre de la décolonisation doit être abordée dans un esprit de sympathie profonde et sincère pour le sort des peuples assujettis à une domination étrangère, sans jamais être mise au service des intérêts politiques égoïstes d'un pays quelconque.

17. La lutte anticolonialiste doit sa raison d'être, son dynamisme et sa haute valeur morale au désir ardent, au droit inaliénable des êtres humains assujettis à la domination étrangère de ne plus éprouver ce sentiment de dépossession, d'infériorité sociale, économique et politique qu'engendre le régime colonial, d'être délivrés de la persécution, de la discrimination et de la sujétion, et surtout de recouvrer la dignité originelle qu'ils ont perdue. Cette lutte anticolonialiste a un caractère universel puisqu'elle vise à rendre à des millions d'hommes leur terre natale et la possibilité de s'y livrer librement et sans ingérence extérieure aux activités qui les mèneront à un plein épanouissement sur les plans matériel et spirituel.

18. La nature même du processus, les sacrifices consentis depuis des années, les espoirs mis dans la victoire finale, la part que les peuples libérés prendront au progrès de l'humanité, tout cet immense trésor matériel et spirituel de la croisade libératrice imposent le respect et exigent que ceux qui collaborent à l'entreprise n'aient pas d'intentions étrangères à ses nobles fins.

19. Pour toutes ces raisons, la délégation du Costa Rica demande qu'on prolonge le mandat du Comité spécial pendant le temps que réclamera l'accomplissement de sa mission, mais qu'on modifie sa composition pour empêcher l'intervention de la guerre froide dans ses travaux. Il est indispensable, à cette fin, d'exclure la puissance responsable de la situation que j'ai évoquée. En effet, l'étude du rapport montre que, si cette puissance a fait intervenir la guerre froide dans les travaux du Comité spécial, cela n'avait rien de fortuit, mais correspondait à un plan préconçu et découlait d'une politique générale. Un changement volontaire de cette politique au cours de la nouvelle phase des activités du Comité spécial paraît improbable. Si d'autres exclusions s'imposaient pour donner effectivement suite à notre suggestion, nous croyons que l'Assemblée générale devrait s'y résoudre dans l'intérêt même de la décolonisation.

20. Il est temps d'en finir avec la tendance à faire intervenir des arrière-pensées politiques dans l'examen du cas des peuples assujettis, à envisager la réalité à travers des verres déformants et à dénaturer la cause généreuse que nous défendons. Aucune étiquette "Est" ou "Ouest" ne doit être appliquée aux mouvements de libération des peuples coloniaux ni aux efforts déployés par les Nations Unies pour les appuyer. Ils ont une valeur et une signification propres; leur caractère les met très au-dessus des vicissitudes de la guerre froide.

21. M. AGUIRRE (Uruguay) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation uruguayenne tient d'abord à dire la fierté et la gratitude qu'elle éprouve d'avoir été choisie pour siéger au Comité spécial. Une des plus hautes préoccupations de l'Organisation internationale, une de ses plus nobles entreprises et l'objet de ses efforts les plus constants a été la lutte pour éliminer le colonialisme. Au stade où cette action est parvenue, il est certain que le Comité créé par la résolution 1654 (XVI) pour veiller à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) est l'instrument par excellence, le remède le plus approprié pour rendre la santé — la santé que représentent la liberté et la dignité dans leurs expressions politiques — aux hommes des vastes territoires coloniaux dont on s'est occupé jusqu'ici.

22. Nous avons écouté avec grande attention les observations et suggestions formulées à cette tribune au sujet de l'œuvre du Comité et du rapport qui en rend compte [A/5238]. En tant que membre de cet organe, l'Uruguay a jugé préférable de connaître avant tout l'opinion de ceux qui, de l'extérieur, en se tenant dans une expectative compréhensible, ont suivi les premiers pas du Comité en lui prêtant un précieux appui et en lui donnant de judicieux conseils. Etant donné les avis exprimés et leur caractère éminemment constructif, dont nous sommes reconnaissants aux intéressés, nous nous croyons maintenant autorisés à faire part des réflexions que nous inspirent sept mois d'expérience au Comité.

23. Nous devons en premier lieu rendre hommage au Président du Comité, M. Jha, représentant de l'Inde, qui a largement mérité l'éloge à lui décerné par sir Hugh Foot lorsqu'il l'a spirituellement félicité d'avoir rendu possible la coexistence entre le lion et l'agneau, étant bien entendu, comme sir Hugh Foot l'a précisé, qu'il s'agissait du lion africain-asiatique et de l'agneau administrant.

24. Notre hommage va aussi au Vice-Président, M. Coulibaly, représentant du Mali, qui s'est toujours montré à la hauteur de sa tâche, et au Rapporteur, M. Rifai, représentant de la Syrie, qui a su s'acquitter avec tact et sens pratique d'une des missions les plus délicates qu'ait jamais eu à remplir un rapporteur d'un organe des Nations Unies. Nous n'oublierons pas non plus les louanges dues à tous les fonctionnaires du Secrétariat qui, sous la direction de M. Protitch et M. Chacko, ont fourni la base indispensable à l'action du Comité.

25. Quant aux travaux du Comité, nous dirons qu'au cours de ses sept premiers mois d'existence il a eu le grand mérite de marquer par des réalisations pratiques la période obligatoire d'expérimentation et de formation qu'a traversée cet organe nouveau; en plus de l'essai nécessaire en matière de formes et de procédures, il a abordé le fond même du problème. Nous traiterons de ces deux aspects: d'une part, de la mise au point des méthodes, à propos desquelles nous parlerons des normes qui nous paraissent indiquées pour l'organisation des travaux de l'Assemblée générale, et, d'autre part, des progrès réalisés quant au fond, en nous inspirant les observations que nous avons entendues et que nous approuvons.

26. Le Comité a créé des sous-comités pour étudier de manière approfondie certaines situations. A notre avis, cette façon de diviser le travail est non seulement commode et utile, mais encore indispensable pour gagner du temps et accroître l'efficacité.

27. Dans l'exécution de sa mission, le Comité s'est rendu en Afrique et a siégé dans certaines capitales de ce continent. Nous ne pouvons trop souligner les avantages de cette manière de faire qui a produit une impression notable sur l'opinion publique africaine, a renforcé le prestige du Comité et a mis en vedette son action. Le Comité a entendu des pétitionnaires et a ainsi bénéficié de renseignements de source directe qui sont toujours utiles; en effet, ce procédé, malgré ses inconvénients inévitables, fournit, à qui veut voir l'ensemble d'un problème et la répartition des opinions, un fil conducteur permettant d'arriver à une meilleure compréhension de la situation. Des délégations ou des sous-comités ont été chargés de traiter directement de certaines questions avec les puissances administrantes, moyen qui peut être très efficace pour atteindre les objectifs visés. Les données rassemblées grâce à ces activités ont permis de formuler à la fin de chaque chapitre du rapport des conclusions et recommandations qui sont soumises à l'Assemblée pour qu'elle les examine et adopte des résolutions en conséquence.

28. J'en viens maintenant à nos observations. On note dans le rapport à l'étude une extrême diversité quant aux conclusions des chapitres relatifs aux différents territoires examinés.

29. Pour la Rhodésie du Sud, comme le précise le document A/5124, le Comité spécial a adopté sur le rapport du Sous-Comité constitué pour s'occuper de la question et a soumis à l'Assemblée générale, en demandant l'examen immédiat pour raison d'urgence, un projet de résolution qui a été transmis aux Etats Membres par le Secrétaire général. Toutefois, il s'agit ici d'un cas spécial qui représente une exception et non la règle.

30. Pour la Rhodésie du Nord, le Comité a présenté des conclusions et des recommandations, y compris un projet de résolution à l'intention de l'Assemblée générale; le Secrétaire général a transmis le tout au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni.

31. Pour le Nyassaland, le Comité a adopté des conclusions et recommandations — mais sans projet de résolution — qui, comme les précédentes, ont été transmises par le Secrétaire général au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni.

32. Pour le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland, le Comité a adopté un texte énonçant diverses considérations et a recommandé à l'Assemblée une série de dispositions.

33. Pour Zanzibar, le Comité a estimé qu'il se trouvait devant une situation d'urgence et il a lancé, par l'entremise du Secrétaire général, un appel adressé à la Puissance administrante. Sur le fond du problème, il a proposé un projet de résolution à l'Assemblée générale.

34. Pour la Guyane britannique, le Comité a adopté une résolution dans laquelle il s'adresse au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et à celui du territoire et il a demandé au Secrétaire général de la communiquer à la Puissance administrante.

35. Pour le Mozambique, le Comité a proposé à l'Assemblée générale un projet de résolution dans lequel est prévue une intervention du Conseil de sécurité.

36. Pour le Sud-Ouest africain, le Comité a approuvé un ensemble de conclusions et de recommandations ne comprenant pas de projet de résolution.

37. Pour le Kenya, il a présenté un projet de résolution à l'Assemblée générale.

38. Pour l'Angola, il a proposé à l'Assemblée générale un projet de résolution dans lequel est prévue une intervention du Conseil de sécurité.

39. Cette diversité montre bien que nous en sommes à un stade expérimental où l'on essaie divers moyens et qui peut être riche d'enseignements pour l'action future du Comité, voire pour un aménagement de son mandat, ainsi que pour l'examen de ses travaux par l'Assemblée générale et pour la coordination avec d'autres organes existants.

40. La délégation uruguayenne estime que les études auxquelles se livre le Comité spécial devraient aboutir à une série de conclusions et de recommandations soumises à l'Assemblée générale; la Quatrième Commission devrait les examiner et élaborer en conséquence des projets de résolution qui seraient finalement adoptés en séance plénière. Cette méthode assurerait une collaboration effective entre les différents organes intéressés et permettrait de gagner du temps, d'agir plus efficacement et de mieux coordonner les efforts.

41. En cas de situation d'urgence excluant qu'on puisse attendre l'ouverture de la session de l'Assemblée, le Comité devrait agir immédiatement et chercher une solution en adoptant lui-même des résolutions et en demandant au Secrétaire général de transmettre ses conclusions et ses appels à la Puissance administrante. En prévision de pareilles circonstances, dont il lui appartiendrait d'apprécier le caractère, le Comité spécial devrait être expressément habilité à appeler l'attention du Secrétaire général et à solliciter son concours, soit simplement pour qu'il prête ses bons offices, soit pour qu'il saisisse le Conseil de sécurité, selon la gravité et l'urgence de l'affaire.

42. Il convient de noter que le Comité a déjà recouru effectivement à l'entremise du Secrétaire général et que, d'autre part, au cours de la présente session, l'Assemblée générale a adopté une résolution sur la Rhodésie du Sud [1760 (XVII)], cependant que la Quatrième Commission a approuvé un projet de résolution relatif au Sud-Ouest africain [A/5310, projet de résolution II], où sont prévues certaines mesures de la part du Secrétaire général. Le premier de ces textes l'invite à prêter ses bons offices pour favoriser la conciliation et aider à atteindre les objectifs définis dans les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Le second tend à le prier de nommer un représentant résident de l'assistance technique au Sud-Ouest africain et à prendre les dispositions voulues pour assurer une présence effective des Nations Unies dans ce territoire.

43. En ce qui concerne la résolution adoptée par l'Assemblée, il s'agit, à notre avis, du type d'action nécessaire dans tous les cas. Le Comité spécial devra, quand il l'estimera nécessaire, demander une intervention immédiate du Secrétaire général. C'est précisément ce qui s'impose dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud à la veille de l'organisation d'élections et de l'en-trée en vigueur de la constitution de décembre 1961 à laquelle une résistance a été opposée. En revanche, pour le Sud-Ouest africain où une mission de nature permanente est envisagée, ma délégation a déjà dit à la Quatrième Commission [1386ème séance] que des demandes de ce genre seraient plus utilement adressées au Comité spécial qu'au Secrétaire général.

44. Nous cherchons en ce moment à réaménager un édifice complexe d'organes dont les attributions se chevauchent. Confier directement au Secrétaire général une tâche permanente du type envisagé reviendrait à disperser les efforts, à créer un nouveau cas de double emploi et en outre à commettre une faute qui devrait être ultérieurement réparée, puisque nous imposerions au Secrétaire général un surcroît de responsabilité au risque de compromettre l'efficacité de son action. Je répète qu'il nous paraît souhaitable, voire indispensable, de recourir à son intervention en cas d'urgence, mais nous ne croyons pas indiqué d'avoir recours à lui comme moyen ordinaire de régler des situations dans leur évolution normale.

45. Ces observations nous amènent à parler de l'activité future du Comité spécial par rapport à celle d'autres organes ayant des fonctions précises en ce qui concerne certains aspects de la lutte contre le colonialisme. A notre avis, il serait pratique, économique et efficace de tout rassembler entre les mains du Comité spécial. Nous apprécions comme elle le mérite l'œuvre accomplie par les organes spéciaux qui se sont occupés du Sud-Ouest africain, des territoires portugais et de l'Angola, mais nous partageons l'opinion du Secrétaire général et de la majorité des orateurs qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune: il convient maintenant de centraliser les opérations, et l'organe le plus qualifié est le Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale et dont nous étudions actuellement le rapport. Pour le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola, il faudra bien entendu tenir compte de ses relations avec le Conseil de sécurité.

46. En ce qui concerne le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, nous estimons, comme les délégations de l'Argentine et du Brésil, qu'il ne doit pas disparaître. En effet, les motifs qui ont incité à le créer existent toujours et sa tâche ne se confond pas avec celle du Comité spécial, auquel il peut au contraire prêter un précieux concours, ce qu'il a du reste fait jusqu'ici. Comme le représentant de l'Irak l'a souligné, il s'agit d'un organe technique dont les travaux sont très utiles pour le Comité spécial. La compétence de ce dernier s'étend à un si grand nombre de territoires qu'il ne pourrait examiner toutes les situations, à tous les stades. Le Comité des renseignements l'aidera donc puissamment en préparant la documentation sur la base de laquelle le Comité spécial fondera ses décisions. Dans le système de relations que nous avons décrit entre le Comité spécial, la Quatrième Commission, l'Assemblée plénière et le Secrétaire général, le Comité des renseignements jouera le rôle d'un élément de base appuyant efficacement tous les efforts déployés.

47. J'ai parlé du caractère expérimental de cette question des méthodes et procédures, en vue de tracer le chemin qui paraîtrait le meilleur pour l'avenir. J'ai précisé qu'à mon sens le Comité spécial devrait désormais formuler des conclusions et recommandations générales. Il y a lieu d'ajouter que, dans les circonstances présentes et étant donné que le rapport est examiné directement en séance plénière, l'inclusion de projets de résolution dans le rapport facilite les travaux de l'Assemblée.

48. Le climat des séances plénières ne se prête guère à l'élaboration de projets de résolution qui doivent d'abord être mis au point par des groupes d'étude comme les commissions ou comités spéciaux. C'est la formule adoptée cette fois par le Comité spécial qui a permis d'examiner directement ici son rapport conformément à la décision prise lors de la répartition des questions inscrites à l'ordre du jour.

49. Si nous passons à la façon dont le Comité spécial s'est acquitté quant au fond de la mission à lui confiée par la résolution 1654 (XVI), nous devons dire qu'il a agi comme il le devait, en gardant toujours présents à l'esprit les objectifs suprêmes énoncés dans la Déclaration sur l'autorité de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Nous ne pouvons nous enorgueillir des résultats obtenus pour les territoires examinés, mais des mesures importantes ont été prises, des démarches sérieuses ont été faites auprès des puissances administrantes et l'on peut aujourd'hui espérer voir s'accroître bientôt le nombre des pays indépendants Membres de l'Organisation. Nous n'approuvons pas sans aucune réserve tout ce qui a été fait au Comité spécial, mais il s'est toujours efforcé d'accomplir la noble tâche qui lui incombait.

50. Parmi les points sur lesquels nous croyons devoir insister, en répétant des observations antérieures, figure la décision contestable prise par le Comité d'adopter lui-même des résolutions sur le fond des questions soumises à son examen. Sans doute lui appartient-il de recommander et de proposer des projets de résolution, mais c'est à l'Assemblée, où sont représentés tous les Etats Membres, de conférer à ces textes le poids de son autorité. Voilà pourquoi, songeant aux situations qui pourraient requérir une action d'urgence, nous avons suggéré de recourir au Secrétaire général ou de signaler le cas à son attention.

51. Un autre problème a soulevé des difficultés au Comité: celui de la situation politique intérieure qui fait parfois obstacle à l'accession d'un territoire à l'indépendance. L'objectif essentiel des efforts du Comité est précisément l'indépendance. Il n'est ni habilité par son mandat, ni effectivement en mesure de résoudre ou de traiter des problèmes de politique intérieure. Tenons-nous-en donc fermement à l'objectif primordial de l'indépendance. Le reste viendra à son heure, une fois l'indépendance obtenue.

52. Cette observation, pour valable qu'elle soit, à notre avis, dans la majorité des cas, ne s'applique pas à celui de la Rhodésie du Sud. Il importe ici au premier chef, comme nous l'avons déjà indiqué, de savoir à qui seront transférés ou dévolus les pouvoirs. Le bénéficiaire ne peut être autre que la totalité de la société politique, la masse et l'autorité, le peuple et le gouvernement. Il n'y a pas souveraineté pleine et véritable sans suprématie du peuple, c'est-à-dire de la masse, les pouvoirs devant appartenir légitimement à tous les citoyens et non à une fraction de la population. C'est pourquoi nous appuyons la résolution adoptée par l'Assemblée et prévoyant une intervention du Secrétaire général pour prévenir un transfert impopulaire et antidémocratique des pouvoirs à un groupe d'habitants, à un groupe minoritaire qui imposerait sa loi à la majorité, à un groupe partiellement étranger au territoire, qui dominerait les autochtones.

53. Quant au projet de résolution relatif à la Rhodésie du Nord, ma délégation considère qu'étant donné les faits nouveaux survenus depuis que le Comité a approuvé ce texte vers le milieu de l'année il serait bon de lui apporter quelques amendements pour mieux tenir compte de la situation actuelle. Cet exemple précis illustre bien l'intérêt d'un simple énoncé de conclusions et de recommandations en fonction desquelles l'Assemblée élaborerait, le moment venu, des résolutions appropriées.

54. Quant aux projets de résolution présentés par le Comité à l'Assemblée sur le Mozambique et l'Angola, ma délégation maintient les réserves qu'elle a faites touchant le caractère constitutionnel et la conformité à la Charte des paragraphes 6, 7 et 8 des deux projets. Ces réserves l'ont amenée à s'abstenir dans le cas du Mozambique. Elle n'a voté pour le texte relatif à l'Angola qu'en raison de la gravité extrême de la situation dans ce territoire.

55. On nous pardonnera de nous étendre si longuement sur cette question. Ma délégation attache une haute importance à l'œuvre pour laquelle a été créé le Comité spécial. J'approche, toutefois, du terme de mes observations.

56. A cette tribune, au cours de la présente discussion, on a cité la phrase d'un pétitionnaire entendu par la Quatrième Commission, qui s'est écrié: "Les peuples libres comprendront-ils jamais ce que c'est que naître dans l'esclavage, vivre sans espoir dans l'esclavage et finir par mourir dans l'esclavage?" Nous ne croyons pas que dans les conditions actuelles, ici, aux Nations Unies, cette phrase s'applique dans le cas des territoires soumis au régime colonial traditionnel. Nous ne croyons pas qu'on puisse parler de vivre sans espoir dans l'esclavage. L'espoir qui ne s'est peut-être jamais éteint même aux heures les plus sombres a été ravivé par l'œuvre de l'Organisation internationale et s'affermi devant les perspectives de réalisation que lui ouvre l'action du Comité, devenu l'arme de la croisade menée par les Nations Unies pour éliminer définitivement le colonialisme. Le nombre même des Etats Membres, qui est aujourd'hui de 110, témoigne éloquentement et irréfutablement d'une progression résolue et assurée qui ne s'arrêtera que lorsque l'objectif ultime sera atteint. Mieux vaut ne pas fixer de dates précises. Il paraît aussi utile ou plus utile et en tout cas certainement plus réaliste, plus conforme à l'existence de conditions fatalement différentes, de s'en tenir à l'idée d'accomplir le plus vite possible la tâche fixée. A cette fin, nous sommes disposés à répéter sans cesse sur tous les tons, avec toute la force et toute l'autorité dont nous pouvons disposer, nos appels aux puissances administrantes pour leur faire prendre conscience de leurs responsabilités. Le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud restent apparemment insensibles à la pression d'un courant que rien ne peut arrêter. Ce sont les principaux champions du mépris des tendances et des espérances qui font la dynamique du monde moderne. Puissé la Providence guider notre action pour que nous fassions comprendre et accepter à ces deux Etats les impératifs de l'humanitarisme et de l'amour du prochain.

57. La France a laissé la voie libre à de nombreux millions d'hommes, habitant des millions de kilomètres carrés, qui jouissent aujourd'hui de l'indépendance politique et contribuent très utilement aux efforts déployés pour assurer les mêmes avantages à leurs frères. Le Royaume-Uni a manifesté une compréhension digne des grandes traditions britanniques. Je rappellerai à ce propos la célèbre déclaration de Chatham lors de la guerre qui devait aboutir à l'indépendance des Etats-Unis:

[L'orateur poursuit en anglais.]

"Nous serons finalement obligés de partir. Faisons preuve de modération quand nous le pouvons, n'attendons pas d'y être forcés."

[L'orateur reprend en espagnol.]

Cette judicieuse et noble remarque a été parfaitement interprétée par ceux qui ont dirigé la politique du Royaume-Uni en matière coloniale depuis 17 ans. Nous savons toutefois que tout n'est pas terminé. Ce mouvement général ne peut s'arrêter aux frontières de la Rhodésie du Sud, du Kenya, de Zanzibar, ou de tant d'autres territoires qui attendent encore la consécration de l'indépendance.

58. Il y a beaucoup à faire, mais il est faux de prétendre que les habitants des territoires dont s'occupe le Comité spécial sont condamnés à vivre sans espoir dans l'esclavage et à mourir dans l'esclavage. En revanche, par un étrange paradoxe, on connaît d'autres territoires, d'autres peuples, dont le cas ne peut être inscrit à notre ordre du jour, mais pour qui les raisons d'espérer sont remplacées par des murs de béton, l'autodétermination par la menace des chars blindés et les possibilités d'expression par une impitoyable répression policière qui étouffe toute tentative de soulèvement. Dans ces territoires-là effectivement, pour la honte de l'Organisation, on peut dire que l'espoir est mort et que les êtres humains végètent, dépouillés de leurs plus nobles prérogatives.

59. Pour terminer, nous ferons simplement observer que la teneur même du rapport, le mandat confié au Comité spécial, le soutien encourageant fourni par toutes les délégations qui ont participé à la discussion, l'engagement solennel pris par l'Organisation et par l'humanité laissent prévoir qu'à la prochaine session de l'Assemblée nous accueillerons ici avec joie un nombre considérable d'Etats nouvellement parvenus à l'indépendance.

M. Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) prend la présidence.

60. M. DADET (Congo [Brazzaville]): En prenant la parole sur la question de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et en le faisant au nom d'une nation africaine, j'ai profondément conscience d'être obligé de répéter ce qui a été dit par les représentants d'autres délégations, ou de la mienne au cours des précédentes sessions de notre assemblée, aussi bien qu'à la présente session. Le problème de la libération des derniers territoires non autonomes du monde se maintient, avec l'évidence la plus cruelle, au premier plan de notre ordre du jour. Il y a là une tâche dont nous avons à poursuivre inlassablement la réalisation. Le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux a effectué un travail considérable pour lequel ma délégation présente à ses membres ses chaleureuses félicitations et leur exprime sa profonde gratitude.

61. Les discussions de cet organisme l'ont amené à traiter des problèmes qui sont examinés par ailleurs par d'autres groupes de travail de notre assemblée, mais le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a condensé dans son œuvre l'ensemble de nos préoccupations à l'égard de la libération future de nos frères encore esclaves ou assujettis. Le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238] est le reflet fidèle et précis de notre inquiétude. Et je crois que notre angoisse est partagée par une écrasante majorité de peuples libres, car presque tous comprennent maintenant l'anachronisme que représente la persistance dans certaines parties du monde de statuts d'infériorité qui, sous une dénomination ou une autre, privent des millions d'hommes et de femmes de l'exercice démocratique de leurs droits de citoyens.

62. Pour supprimer ou retarder désespérément l'octroi de l'indépendance et d'une liberté totale et universelle dont la définition semble pourtant si clairement et si simplement établie par notre charte, des systèmes juridiques d'une étonnante habileté et parfois d'une déconcertante complexité ont été inventés: ils vont de la doctrine de l'apartheid à une prétendue politique d'assimilation, en passant par des régimes électoraux compliqués dont le but est toujours de frustrer les uns au bénéfice des autres.

63. Je ne crois vraiment pas que les rédacteurs de la Charte des Nations Unies, auxquels l'Afrique libérée ne cesse de rendre hommage, aient eu des arrière-pensées aussi subtiles lorsqu'ils ont écrit qu'ils étaient résolus à proclamer leur foi "dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites".

64. Comment peut-on souscrire sincèrement à ces principes et professer par ailleurs un prétendu développement parallèle qui n'est que l'asservissement d'une race par une autre, ou une prétendue société multiraciale dans laquelle seuls quelque 1 p. 100 de privilégiés exercent la plénitude de leurs droits, ou même certaines formules constitutionnelles plus élaborées qui permettent à une minorité de prétendre parler au nom de la majorité?

65. Je m'égare en revenant sur des arguments qui ont été tellement répétés tout au long de nos débats qu'ils inondent aujourd'hui les archives de l'Organisation. Mais notre lassitude ne doit pas être prise pour de la faiblesse ou pour de la résignation. L'impatience grandissante des peuples libres d'Afrique rejoint chaque jour plus étroitement celle de leurs frères encore asservis, et leur solidarité de plus en plus consciente risque de faire éclater demain les frontières de la sagesse et de la modération.

66. Modérée, l'Union africaine et malgache l'a toujours été, et certains nous l'ont parfois reproché. Mais notre mesure s'arrête aux limites que nous imposent la fidélité à nos convictions démocratiques et notre foi dans la liberté. Au cours de la Conférence des chefs d'Etats africains et malgache, tenue à Bangui, en République centrafricaine, du 25 au 27 mars 1962, notre groupe a pris des décisions nettes sur l'aide concrète à fournir aux pays de notre continent qui ne sont pas encore indépendants. Cette assistance sera marquée sur le plan diplomatique par l'approbation de toute sanction que l'Organisation prendra pour mettre à la raison les colonialistes impénitents; sur le plan financier, par le secours de nos modestes ressources donné à nos frères africains; sur le plan militaire, par notre collaboration dans la formation technique des combattants des armées de libération; sur le plan intellectuel et sociâl, enfin, par la participation à l'instruction des cadres des nouvelles nations.

67. La lecture du rapport du Comité spécial nous confirme dans notre résolution. Elle nous indique les différents points sur lesquels doit porter notre effort. Nous faisons confiance au Royaume-Uni, car nous savons que ce pays a su créer une forme de démocratie qui compte parmi les plus libérales du monde. Nous savons aussi qu'il a su en répandre les principes à travers son ancien empire. Mais, en Rhodésie du Sud, le Royaume-Uni se trouve aux prises avec une coalition de colons européens, prêts à toutes les aventures pour ne pas renoncer à leurs privilèges. Ce problème ne saurait être éludé en affirmant qu'il s'agit là d'un territoire déjà autonome et que l'intervention de l'ancienne Puissance administrante ne peut plus en changer le régime intérieur.

68. Une coalition analogue de colons a paralysé l'Algérie pendant des années et coûté une longue guerre à la France et au peuple algérien.

69. Il ne faut pas tolérer au sud la même erreur qui a été commise au nord de l'Afrique. Il ne faut pas que, par l'artifice d'un suffrage restreint, une minorité blanche gouverne un pays au mépris des droits de la majorité noire. Les restrictions au droit de vote, fondées sur la fortune et l'instruction, sont un anachronisme que l'Europe occidentale a abandonné depuis longtemps. Il est vrai qu'il subsiste encore dans le monde des monarchies plus ou moins absolues, mais elles reposent, du moins nous l'espérons, sur le consentement traditionnel du peuple, sur sa confiance dans son roi ou son prince. Il n'y a pas de monarchie en Rhodésie, mais une oligarchie constituée par une classe et une race favorisées, et cette oligarchie est rejetée par le peuple africain. C'est notre fierté, dans l'Afrique indépendante de langue anglaise et de langue française, que d'avoir conduit aux urnes électorales nos pères parfois encore illettrés et nos femmes souvent mal instruites. Peu d'entre eux se sont trompés. Ils ont su choisir les chefs qu'ils méritaient et dont ils avaient besoin. C'est pourquoi il ne faut pas qu'un grand pays d'Europe nous invite à retourner à des formules constitutionnelles que même une dictature, de droite ou de gauche, n'oserait pas instituer.

70. La résolution 151 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale a posé en son paragraphe 3 le principe suivant:

"Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance."

Ce qui est vrai à l'échelle des nations l'est aussi à l'échelle des individus. L'insuffisance de culture ou la pauvreté ne saurait servir de motifs pour restreindre l'exercice par un citoyen de ses droits politiques les plus élémentaires.

71. Un problème analogue se pose en Rhodésie du Nord où les privilèges de la minorité blanche sont aussi exorbitants qu'en Rhodésie du Sud, et où l'on a cherché à les protéger et à les renforcer par le maintien d'une fédération qui n'a jamais été acceptée par la population rhodésienne et qui a été le principal obstacle à l'admission rapide du Nyassaland à notre organisation. Nous souhaitons vivement que le Royaume-Uni adopte dans cette région une politique courageuse, digne de ses traditions et libérée de toute pression mue par des intérêts particuliers. Nous demandons aussi au Royaume-Uni d'appliquer le principe de l'autodétermination au Bassoutoland, au Betchouanaland et au Souaziland et de les protéger contre une annexion dont nous connaissons la menace et les terribles conséquences qu'elle entraînerait pour ces petits pays et leurs malheureux peuples.

72. A Zanzibar, nous pensons qu'il n'y a pas de difficultés majeures et nous avons le ferme espoir que ce pays se joindra à notre organisation dans très peu de temps. Si les chefs de partis ne peuvent s'y mettre d'accord, pourquoi ne pas suivre la proposition faite au Comité spécial par le représentant de Madagascar [voir A/5238, chap. VI, par. 137], et soumettre la question de l'indépendance à un référendum organisé sous contrôle international? La France a procédé, dans les territoires coloniaux, à des consultations de ce genre et leur issue a donné satisfaction à tous.

73. Quant à la Guyane, elle semble plus avancée encore sur la voie de l'indépendance et son admission à notre organisation ne devrait plus être retardée. Enfin, le Kenya doit échapper aux derniers efforts des colons européens qui tentent de retarder son évolution, et il doit accéder lui aussi à la souveraineté dans les délais les plus brefs. Nous avons dit que nous faisons confiance au Royaume-Uni; nous comptons sur son gouvernement éclairé pour vaincre les résistances qui restent à surmonter. Nous ne pouvons pas en dire autant du Portugal. L'anachronisme, ici, n'est pas défendu seulement par une poignée de colons, il est installé dans les palais de Lisbonne et ne s'en ira qu'avec le régime de M. Salazar, lorsque le peuple portugais aura la force de le modifier ou de s'en débarrasser.

74. Nous ne sommes pas, à priori, hostiles à l'assimilation ni à la création d'une société multilatérale, mais alors celle-ci doit être fondée sur l'égalité de tous, dans le même statut juridique, politique et social. En cinq siècles, le Portugal a pu donner le titre d'"assimilés" à 2 p. 100 de ses sujets africains; encore savons-nous avec quelle réserve il faut accepter ce terme qui cache lui aussi des discriminations. En tout cas, un simple calcul d'arithmétique nous indique combien il faudrait encore de centaines d'années pour faire, de tous les habitants de l'Angola, du Cabinda et du Mozambique, des Portugais à part entière. Nous ne savons pas si le monde durerait assez longtemps pour voir l'achèvement d'une aussi longue et aussi consciencieuse politique dite civilisatrice. Alors, nous préférons penser que nos frères dominés par le gouvernement de Lisbonne ne sont pas des citoyens portugais, qu'ils ont déjà acquis assez de civilisation pour devenir des hommes libres et qu'ils obtiendront le reste par leurs propres efforts, avec l'aide des autres peuples d'Afrique et des Européens de bonne volonté.

75. Ma délégation se réserve le droit de traiter plus en détail la question des colonies portugaises, dans le cadre de ce point particulier de l'ordre du jour. Mais, puisque nous discutons ici le problème de l'indépendance dans son ensemble, nous tenons à affirmer que le Portugal doit être placé désormais non plus en présence de nos paroles mais en face de nos actions, et, puisqu'il croit, par sa politique, défendre certains de ses intérêts, nous devons lui montrer ce que cette même politique peut lui faire perdre de ses autres intérêts.

76. Nous avons à infliger une leçon analogue à l'Union sud-africaine, d'abord pour sa politique de ségrégation, dont je ne parlerai pas puisqu'elle a fait l'objet d'un débat spécial, ensuite pour l'annexion illégale du

Sud-Ouest africain par ce pays. Ici encore, nous sommes en présence d'une nation africaine condamnée aux "réserves indigènes", aux laissez-passer, au silence politique et à la stagnation économique pour la seule commodité d'une minorité de colons étrangers.

77. L'Afrique du Centre et du Sud est maintenant devenue le bastion d'une caste de privilégiés, qui ont formé entre eux une coalition désespérée pour résister jusqu'au bout à toute politique d'évolution. Cette résistance est irrévocablement condamnée. Il appartient aux puissances administrantes, et à leur défaut à notre organisation, de prononcer pacifiquement cette condamnation avant qu'elle ne le soit par la violence. Aujourd'hui, une guerre meurtrière sévit déjà en Angola. Il en sera de même peut-être demain en Rhodésie. Quand la violence est installée dans un peuple, elle est toujours accompagnée de la haine, elle détruit toutes les chances de fraternité et d'amitié qui existent entre individus de races et de classes différentes. Elle produit la peur et la rancune, la vengeance des uns et la fuite désespérée des autres. Elle compromet à jamais toutes possibilités de créer cette société multiraciale dont le Portugal a fait une caricature mais dont beaucoup d'entre nous sont fiers d'avoir fait une réalité.

78. Nous sommes certains qu'il resterait aujourd'hui beaucoup plus de colons français dans l'Algérie indépendante si les barricades d'Alger étaient tombées quelques années plus tôt. C'est dans l'intérêt bien compris de tous que nous devons faire disparaître les barricades de toutes sortes qui encombrant encore notre continent sous des étiquettes choisies par M. Salazar, M. Welensky ou M. Verwoerd.

79. C'est pourquoi mon pays approuvera toutes les mesures pratiques qui seront décidées par l'Organisation pour amener à la raison ceux qui n'ont rien appris. Nous appuierons, s'il le faut, leur expulsion de l'Organisation des Nations Unies afin que la limite soit bien établie entre ceux qui cherchent sincèrement à semer les germes de la paix et de la fraternité humaine recommandées par notre charte, et ceux qui méprisent celles-ci et ne récolteront que la guerre et la haine.

80. En conclusion, ma délégation approuve entièrement les recommandations du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Elle espère que la grande majorité de l'Assemblée partagera son point de vue et que les sanctions qui seront décidées, appliquées d'une manière progressive, aideront les obstinés à trouver le chemin de la sagesse et nos frères africains à être présents, la tête haute, au rendez-vous de la liberté.

81. BENITES (Equateur) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Ma délégation a étudié avec soin le rapport publié sous la cote A/5238 et tient à féliciter le Comité spécial de l'objectivité, de la clarté et du caractère complet de son exposé sur des territoires divers. Certains éléments, toutefois, sont communs à tous les territoires considérés ou à la plupart d'entre eux; nous allons tenter de les dégager.

82. En premier lieu, le rapport concerne principalement des territoires situés au sud du Sahara, ou, pour être plus précis, en Afrique au sud de l'équateur. Les seules exceptions sont la Guyane britannique, le petit territoire d'Aden et la petite colonie de Singapour. Pour le reste, il s'agit d'un ensemble africain, comprenant la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, le Souaziland, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland, Zanzibar et Pemba, le Sud-Ouest africain, l'Angola, le Mozambique et le Kenya, soit en tout 5 253 999 kilomètres carrés comptant au total, d'après l'Annuaire statistique des Nations Unies pour 1961, 18 236 550 habitants.

83. En deuxième lieu, la population en question se compose surtout d'autochtones soumis à la domination politique et économique d'un petit groupe de colons blancs qui ont institué un régime de discrimination et de ségrégation raciales.

84. En troisième lieu, il est notoire que l'organisation économique de ces territoires est fondée sur l'exploitation du sol et du sous-sol par la minorité blanche qui emploie à cette fin une main-d'œuvre autochtone à bon marché.

85. Enfin, il existe dans ces territoires des mouvements de libération nationale qui s'expriment par l'action de partis politiques et, dans quelques cas, par une résistance armée.

86. La situation peut se résumer comme suit: le colonialisme est particulièrement vivace en Afrique au sud de l'équateur; il repose sur la discrimination raciale et se traduit par l'exploitation des richesses naturelles à l'aide d'une main-d'œuvre autochtone à bon marché, ce qui a entraîné l'apparition de mouvements de libération dont l'objectif est l'indépendance totale. Bien entendu, on ne peut voir dans l'Afrique une entité ethnique, culturelle, ni même géographique. Rien que dans la partie située au sud du Sahara, il y a une véritable mosaïque de races et de cultures, de langues et de dialectes, de zones géographiques différentes: forêts, montagnes, plaines et zones arides. Cette diversité a été accentuée par la colonisation européenne qui s'est développée à la suite du Traité de Berlin et a ajouté de nouveaux groupes ethniques et culturels au fonds autochtone, de nouvelles langues étrangères à la multitude des dialectes vernaculaires.

87. On peut toutefois discerner un facteur d'unité dans les aspirations communes de tous les peuples africains à en finir avec l'odieux régime colonial. Le phénomène a eu deux conséquences notables: d'une part, les divers mouvements politiques de libération nationale s'inspirent de plus en plus d'un sentiment de cohésion et de solidarité panafricaines; d'autre part, les maîtres coloniaux se groupent aussi sur le plan international en une espèce de Sainte-Alliance secrète qui se manifeste, sur le plan militaire, par un accroissement inusité des armements et, sur le plan politique, par la constitution de fronts communs. L'évolution autochtone doit avoir tout son origine à la structure même de la société coloniale africaine, axée dès le début sur l'idée de la supériorité ethnique et culturelle de l'Europe telle que l'avait conçue le comte de Gobineau. Cette doctrine raciste s'est exacerbée en Afrique jusqu'à donner naissance à l'espèce de théologie élaborée par Daniel Malan et aux conceptions politiques rigides appliquées par des hommes de gouvernement comme les ministres Verwoerd et Welensky.

88. En dehors toutefois du racisme considéré comme un système social, il y a eu accord unanime sur l'utilisation économique de la main-d'œuvre autochtone, délibérément maintenue à un niveau inférieur. En 1896 déjà, dans une note au Foreign Office, sir Harry Johnson écrivait: "L'abondance de la main-d'œuvre garantira la sécurité financière du Protectorat." Les colonisateurs ont employé deux moyens pour parvenir à leurs fins: ils ont imposé de lourds tributs qui ont perpétué l'endettement du travailleur indigène; ils ont réparti les terres de telle façon que les autochtones n'obtenaient que les plus stériles et les plus malsaines, les meilleures étant réservées aux colons. La paupérisation des masses provoquait et continue de provoquer une saturation du marché du travail, qui fait que l'indice des salaires reste très bas. Dans beaucoup de territoires coloniaux, l'homme, en tant qu'instrument de travail, constitue toujours une importante marchandise d'exportation. Au Nyassaland, par exemple, où la densité démographique atteint 60 habitants par kilomètre carré, le pays ne peut nourrir sa population et des migrations considérables de travailleurs se produisent périodiquement.

89. En ce qui concerne le Bassoutoland, le Comité spécial indique dans son rapport:

"Les Bassoutos vont travailler dans la République sud-africaine, principalement dans les mines d'or. Le recensement de 1956 a fait état de 154 782 absents (en sus des 638 857 habitants décomptés dans le territoire)." [A/5238, chap. V, par. 8.]

Pour le Betchouanaland, le Comité écrit:

"Beaucoup d'hommes se rendent dans les territoires adjacents pour y travailler une partie de l'année, notamment dans les mines de la République sud-africaine." [Ibid., par. 37.]

Quant au Souaziland, il est signalé que 11 728 Souazis travaillaient en 1956 dans la République sud-africaine [ibid., par. 58].

90. Ces allées et venues des masses africaines paupérisées ont contribué à donner aux mouvements africains de libération leur caractère international. Il ne faut pas oublier que le continent est actuellement en pleine période de création d'Etats nouveaux. Lors de la constitution de l'Organisation, en 1945, trois Etats africains seulement figuraient parmi les Membres fondateurs: au nord du Sahara, l'Egypte, et, au sud du Sahara, le Libéria et l'Ethiopie. Pendant les 10 premières années, aucun Etat d'Afrique n'est entré à l'Organisation, jusqu'à l'admission de la Libye en 1955. Pendant les cinq années suivantes, seuls y entrèrent le Soudan et la Tunisie en 1956, le Ghana en 1957, la Guinée en 1958. On a appelé 1960 l'année de la libération coloniale, parce qu'elle a vu admettre à l'Organisation 16 Etats africains, suivis de trois autres en 1961 et de quatre encore au cours de la présente session. Ainsi, en sept ans, les rangs des Nations Unies se sont grossis de 28 pays d'Afrique, qui représentent près du tiers du nombre total des Etats Membres.

91. Ce serait faire preuve de l'aveuglement le plus absolu que de s'imaginer que ces peuples, qui ont vécu et souffert sous le joug du colonialisme, resteront indifférents au sort de leurs frères non encore parvenus à l'indépendance. Aussi comprenons-nous parfaitement leur véhémence, leur passion quand on traite ici du problème colonial. Quelles que soient les tendances politiques, les croyances religieuses, les différences quant au degré de développement, les variations linguistiques, il y a unité des Africains contre le colonialisme. Le danger que représentent pour la paix et la sécurité la perpétuation du colonialisme et la politique d'armement des grandes puissances n'est donc pas un vain mot.

92. Il ne faut pas oublier non plus que cette lutte se déroule dans un monde partagé entre des systèmes de vie opposés, avec tous les périls que cela comporte. C'est pourquoi nous croyons nécessaire de réaffirmer que tous ceux qui sont attachés aux idées démocratiques de l'Occident, fondées sur le respect de la liberté et de la dignité humaines et du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, doivent, non seulement en paroles mais aussi par leurs actes, ne rien négliger pour que soient effectivement et pratiquement éliminés le colonialisme, le racisme et l'exploitation de l'homme pour des raisons raciales.

93. Je voudrais tirer quelques conclusions des remarques qui précèdent. La première est qu'à notre avis la guerre froide ne doit pas influencer sur la liquidation du colonialisme, que ce soit au Comité spécial ou ailleurs. La deuxième est que le Comité spécial dont nous examinons le rapport doit être maintenu et renforcé pour éviter la dispersion des efforts entre de nombreux organes. La troisième est qu'il convient de lui assigner un mandat précis qui empêche toute confusion avec les attributions et prérogatives des grandes commissions de l'Assemblée générale. Enfin, nous recommandons de charger le Comité spécial d'entreprendre d'urgence une étude sur la situation économique et sociale des territoires encore soumis à la domination coloniale, notamment pour ce qui est du régime foncier, des fluctuations des salaires, des indices de la consommation et de la production, des mouvements migratoires, des méthodes et conditions de travail et, en général, de tous les facteurs socio-économiques, afin de faire en sorte que l'émancipation politique se réalise en conjonction avec un plan de développement économique approprié des territoires libérés.

94. Pour terminer, je dois souligner que ma délégation estime opportun, urgent et indispensable d'accorder l'indépendance immédiate à la Guyane britannique qui remplit toutes les conditions voulues pour pouvoir se gouverner elle-même.

95. M. COLLIER (Sierra Leone) [traduit de l'anglais]: Lorsque l'Assemblée générale a adopté en décembre 1960 la résolution 1514 (XV), maintenant devenue historique, elle a affirmé avec force que la communauté internationale venait de reconnaître le colonialisme comme un mal qu'il faut extirper de la société civilisée. Il en était d'ailleurs grand temps. Le monde, bouleversé et honteux des horreurs et des brutalités de la seconde guerre mondiale, a noblement conçu à San Francisco une Charte consacrée à l'instauration de la paix et de la sécurité internationales. A cette fin, l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'a cessé de persévérer dans sa détermination de faire disparaître les causes de tension dans le monde. L'indépendance à laquelle étaient promues de nombreuses nations et la dépendance dans laquelle demeuraient de nombreux pays et peuples coloniaux ont créé, ainsi que l'Organisation l'a estimé à juste titre, une situation internationale explosive d'où ne manqueraient pas de surgir des tensions et des conflits, tout à fait indépendamment du fait que la notion de l'assujettissement d'un peuple par un autre, qui implique le principe de la supériorité raciale, a été considéré comme absolument inacceptable pour un esprit civilisé.

96. C'est ainsi qu'a été adoptée, pour exprimer cette idée universelle, la résolution qui demandait l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à tous les pays et peuples coloniaux. Malgré cette résolution, l'Assemblée générale a constaté à sa seizième session qu'en fait de nombreux territoires étaient encore soumis à une domination et une exploitation coloniales et qu'il fallait se préoccuper de cette situation. Le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux a alors été constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI).

97. Je tiens à saisir cette occasion pour féliciter le Comité spécial, au nom de ma délégation, de son volumineux et excellent rapport [A/5238] et de la détermination et du dévouement dont il a su faire preuve dans l'accomplissement de sa tâche alors qu'il a eu à surmonter souvent de graves difficultés créées par certaines puissances coloniales ainsi que leurs manœuvres d'obstruction.

98. Ce qui montre bien que le colonialisme exerce encore son emprise mortelle en Afrique, c'est le fait que le Comité spécial a jugé nécessaire d'étudier en priorité la situation dans 11 territoires d'Afrique: Rhodésie du Sud, Rhodésie du Nord, Nyassaland, Souaziland, Bassoutoland, Betchouanaland, Zanzibar, Mozambique, Sud-Ouest africain, Kenya et Angola. Les conclusions du Comité spécial constituent une révélation de ce que ma délégation considère comme une situation très alarmante dans certains de ces territoires. Dans beaucoup d'entre eux, les puissances coloniales n'ont fait aucun effort sérieux pour mettre en œuvre les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV). Au contraire, nous avons constaté la violation la plus flagrante de nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée.

99. L'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal se sont encore signalés comme les pires coupables. Le Gouvernement sud-africain, non content de perpétrer les plus ignobles atrocités contre la population autochtone, sans défense, de ce pays, cherche maintenant à mettre la haute main sur le Sud-Ouest africain, bravant ouvertement l'opinion internationale. Est-ce que l'Organisation mondiale va rester là sans rien faire en attendant qu'aboutissent les ignobles machinations du Gouvernement sud-africain blanc, lâche autant qu'inhumain? Et que dire du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland où la majorité autochtone se voit toujours refuser le droit à l'autodétermination? Comme si cela ne suffisait pas, nous y voyons le spectre abominable et menaçant de l'apartheid se dessiner dans l'ombre.

100. Ma délégation est pleinement d'accord avec le Comité spécial lorsqu'il exprime son inquiétude au sujet des préparatifs militaires entrepris dans certains de ces territoires. Nous estimons que tous les préparatifs militaires sont répréhensibles et ont un caractère offensif où que ce soit. Nous ne pouvons nous permettre d'y faire objection dans certains cas et les excuser quand il s'agit d'autres pays et moins encore en Afrique. Ils constituent un motif de scandale pour la moralité internationale quand ils visent, comme c'est le cas, à étouffer les droits naturels de la vaste majorité des autochtones et à résister aux légitimes mouvements de libération nationale par la force des armes. Le Gouvernement sud-africain qui a porté son budget de défense de 12 millions de livres avant 1961 à 60 millions de livres en 1962 ne l'a pas fait en raison de menaces extérieures imminentes, mais parce qu'il veut réprimer et, si besoin est, exterminer les autochtones en raison de leurs légitimes aspirations à l'autodétermination. L'Afrique du Sud n'est d'ailleurs pas la seule à agir ainsi. Il est lamentable de penser que nous voyons en Afrique les Portugais avoir l'audace de commettre parfois contre notre population les pires horreurs de la tyrannie nazie. Le Portugal a au Mozambique des unités militaires comptant plus de 50 000 hommes, comprenant notamment des parachutistes et des commandos. On nous a dit en outre qu'au Mozambique seul on a construit 15 nouveaux aérodrômes.

101. On se demandera sans doute comment le Portugal a pu procéder à pareil déploiement militaire. Il n'y a pas à chercher bien loin, la réponse est: l'OTAN. Le rapport du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal [A/5160] nous apprend que la plus grande partie de l'équipement militaire et autre fourni au Portugal provient des pays de l'OTAN. Le Comité spécial déclare en outre que, contrairement aux assurances qui peuvent être données, le Portugal continuera à utiliser ces armes à des fins de répression contre la population de l'Afrique. C'est pourquoi ma délégation n'attache pas beaucoup d'importance aux belles paroles souvent hypocrites par lesquelles certains pays condamnent la conduite du Portugal en Afrique — non, certainement pas, puisqu'ils ont été ainsi parties à la politique regrettable et barbare du Portugal.

102. Cette attitude de consentement criminel et parfois de complicité non déguisée qui a caractérisé les politiques de certaines nations envers le colonialisme en Afrique n'a pas seulement été manifeste en ce qui concerne l'Angola et le Mozambique, mais aussi d'autres territoires comme la Rhodésie du Sud où les Britanniques ont persisté à chercher à abdiquer leurs responsabilités en invoquant des arguments spécieux qui n'ont convaincu personne.

103. Ces nations impérialistes, avec l'appui déclaré ou voilé de leurs amis, ont fait de leur mieux pour s'opposer aux impératifs de notre époque. Elles tentent désespérément d'arrêter la marche du mouvement de libération. Mais ni leurs odieuses conspirations pour faire échec aux légitimes aspirations de notre peuple, ni leurs tactiques et leurs manœuvres pour faire échouer nos efforts à l'Assemblée n'entraveront le mouvement irrésistible qui se renforce d'année en année. Le destin est de notre côté et nous finirons par triompher. Nous réduirons à merci et mettrons en déroute les alliances impies liguées contre nous pour contrecarrer l'évolution de l'histoire.

104. Ma délégation appuiera donc tout projet de résolution qui reconnaîtra la situation explosive dans ces territoires où le colonialisme est encore prospère et qui recommandera des mesures rigoureuses et décisives non seulement contre les pays qui perpétuent ce système, mais aussi contre ceux qui, par leur complicité, permettent à cette situation de se développer.

105. Ma délégation approuve entièrement la suggestion du Secrétaire général par intérim tendant à attribuer au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept toutes les activités sur le colonialisme qui sont actuellement confiées à quatre autres comités des Nations Unies. Indépendamment du fait que cette concentration entraînera une utile économie de temps et d'argent, il nous semble qu'elle évitera des doubles emplois et permettra d'obtenir de meilleurs résultats.

106. Une chose encore. Ma délégation estime que le Comité spécial a remarquablement souligné l'intransigeance de la politique portugaise en Afrique. Tant en Angola qu'au Mozambique, les Portugais continuent à refuser à la population autochtone ses droits civils et politiques et poursuivent sans trêve leurs pratiques du travail forcé, de la discrimination raciale et de l'oppression. Cependant, malgré cette liste bien connue d'atrocités, l'afflux d'armes envoyées au Gouvernement portugais par ses alliés de l'OTAN continue. Certains de ces gouvernements sont de ceux qui se complaisent à faire des homélies sur la moralité internationale et qui ont publiquement promis leur appui en faveur d'une décolonisation rapide et du rétablissement des droits des peuples à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance partout dans le monde. Mais comment pourra-t-il jamais être mis fin rapidement au problème colonial si certains gouvernements continuent à fournir aux puissances coloniales des armes offensives qui, comme ils le savent ou devraient le savoir, serviront à la poursuite de politiques néfastes et à renforcer l'emprise de fer exercée sur les peuples qui luttent courageusement dans ces territoires. Ma délégation voudrait croire que les Etats Membres qui ont dans ces territoires des intérêts vitaux sous la forme de gros capitaux investis ne laisseront pas ces intérêts leur masquer l'existence des problèmes qui menacent la paix et la sécurité mondiales. A notre avis, il faut non seulement bien dire, mais aussi bien faire.

107. Le monde a enduré assez longtemps cette gangrène qu'est le désir de l'homme d'assujettir son semblable de toutes sortes de façons. En Afrique, nous avons souffert particulièrement de la forme colonialiste et raciste de ce mal. Nous sommes enfin à une époque où l'homme civilisé s'insurge contre cette pratique et n'est plus disposé à en tolérer plus longtemps les manifestations. Il faut qu'à l'Organisation des Nations Unies nous traduisions dans nos actes ce désir universel de tous les hommes dignes de l'être. Si nous poursuivons la tâche qui a commencé si noblement par l'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV) et s'est poursuivie par l'adoption de la résolution 1654 (XVI) et les excellents travaux du Comité spécial, la période 1960-1970 méritera vraiment d'être acclamée par l'histoire et la postérité comme la période du développement.

108. M. CORNER (Nouvelle-Zélande) [traduit de l'anglais]: Il y a maintenant près de deux ans que la Déclaration sur le colonialisme a été adoptée par l'Assemblée. Alors que nous sommes réunis pour examiner l'application de la Déclaration, le moment semble venu de faire le point et de procéder à une réévaluation. Le rôle des Nations Unies dans l'abolition du colonialisme a été défini par les principes généraux qui ont été énoncés. Dans la présente discussion, nous étudions la tâche déjà accomplie et ce qui reste encore à faire.

109. Tournons nos regards vers le passé et nous constatons que huit pays, dont cinq en Afrique, ont accédé à l'indépendance depuis un an, et que ce rythme n'a été dépassé que pendant l'année record de la Déclaration même. Puis regardons vers l'avenir et nous nous apercevons que cinq territoires au moins, dont quatre en Afrique, auront probablement accédé à l'indépendance avant la fin de l'an prochain. Pour ces territoires, le but, qui est de passer à l'état de nations, est clairement en vue et proche, et ne pourrait être éloigné que par des dissensions intérieures.

110. On peut vraiment établir une opposition entre ces résultats et les progrès réalisés depuis deux ans pour ce qui est des autres grandes questions internationales. Pendant ce temps, les négociations sur le désarmement ont avancé péniblement pouce à pouce et un traité d'interdiction des essais nucléaires est un peu plus proche, mais la somme des progrès accomplis est piteuse comparée à l'enjeu que représente pour l'humanité la solution cherchée. Dans ces autres domaines, celui du désarmement ou du développement, si nous regardons la réalité en face nous nous apercevons que des solutions spectaculaires sont peu probables. La plupart des problèmes mondiaux les plus anciens se sont acheminés avec une lenteur inévitable vers leur solution, sauf dans le cas du colonialisme. Qu'on se place de n'importe quel point de vue sur le plan international, le succès atteint par la Déclaration n'est pas peu de chose et c'est là une preuve frappante du changement opéré dans les esprits. Nous mesurons aussi de la sorte nos propres progrès vers la liberté. Car, ainsi que le représentant de l'Algérie nous l'a rappelé, aucun de nous ne pourra être véritablement libre tant que tous nos semblables ne seront pas nos égaux en liberté et dignité.

111. Ainsi, en Nouvelle-Zélande, il nous est difficile d'être d'accord avec ceux qui prétendent que la Déclaration n'a pas encore porté de fruits. Le peu de place dont nous disposons dans ce bâtiment vient réfuter pareille assertion. L'impatience de voir achever l'œuvre de décolonisation est naturelle. La nécessité impérieuse d'achever le processus de libération pèse lourdement sur la conscience de nombreux représentants réunis ici, en particulier ceux dont le pays a accédé à l'indépendance récemment. Mais l'impatience doit nous inciter à de nouveaux efforts et non pas nous égarer en nous faisant oublier les tâches qui restent à accomplir.

112. En vérité, dans un monde humain où le progrès n'est possible que dans la concorde et la patiente recherche de solutions aux problèmes qui se posent, il est à peu près aussi dénué de bon sens de réclamer une décolonisation instantanée qu'un désarmement instantané, un développement instantané ou toute autre réalisation instantanée. La décolonisation n'est pas seulement un état d'esprit, bien que cela soit essentiel; c'est aussi un processus. Dans la plupart des territoires où la puissance administrante s'acquitte honnêtement de sa mission, le problème consiste à poser les fondations d'un Etat moderne aussi rapidement que possible. Le rythme peut toujours en être accéléré, et c'est là un rôle important qui revient aux Nations Unies comme nous pouvons nous-mêmes en témoigner, mais il est clair que le processus lui-même ne peut être instantané.

113. Le colonialisme, système de domination étrangère d'un peuple ou d'une race sur un autre peuple ou une autre race, ne peut et ne doit pas survivre dans les conditions de la vie moderne. Que ce fait soit si largement reconnu est un véritable succès qui ne tient cependant pas à la Déclaration seule. Ce document historique résume, énonce et proclame solennellement un ensemble de principes qui en soi ne sont pas nouveaux. Mais aujourd'hui, pour la première fois dans l'histoire, nous avons à la fois une volonté collective internationale et le moyen, par l'intermédiaire de l'Organisation, de mettre fin au colonialisme et d'en empêcher à jamais la réapparition. C'était en 1945 la thèse de la Nouvelle-Zélande et nous l'avons soutenue lorsque le Premier Ministre néo-zélandais d'alors affirmait que la doctrine de la tutelle était applicable dans ses grands principes à tous les territoires coloniaux. Et elle n'est controversée, à ma connaissance, par aucune des grandes puissances qui reconnaissent leurs obligations aux termes de la Charte.

114. Les questions que nous avons à résoudre maintenant semblent donc être surtout d'ordre pratique; examiner les meilleurs moyens de traduire en actes les principes de la Déclaration et, ce faisant, reviser le mécanisme employé par les Nations Unies en matière de décolonisation. Je sais bien que, selon d'autres théories, nous devrions simplement déclarer que dans quelques mois, par exemple en octobre 1963, le processus de décolonisation devra être entièrement terminé. Si nous acceptons qu'il en soit ainsi, il n'y a rien à ajouter; il est inutile de continuer à y penser et à discuter de moyens à employer et de situations pratiques. Il est inutile de discuter de la structure et des travaux de comités; car, si la décision doit dans chaque cas être automatique et toujours la même — l'indépendance dans quelques mois —, que reste-t-il à discuter? Je suppose toutefois que la plupart d'entre nous se préoccupent d'assurer le meilleur départ possible aux populations des colonies qui restent et par conséquent s'intéressent aux questions pratiques.

115. Il est compréhensible que le Comité spécial chargé du colonialisme ait fait porter ses efforts d'abord sur le continent africain. La libération de vastes régions du continent africain depuis quelques années constitue, dans le domaine des droits de l'homme, l'événement majeur et le plus émouvant de notre temps. Il n'est pas surprenant que l'éclat dont brille la liberté dans tant de nouveaux pays ait apporté un espoir nouveau et soudain aux populations des territoires qui restent dépendants. La détermination des chefs des Etats indépendants d'Afrique de hâter l'avènement de l'autodétermination dans tout ce continent est à la fois noble et encourageante.

116. Ainsi le Comité spécial s'est-il occupé la première année de 12 territoires, dont 11 en Afrique. Sur ces 11 territoires, huit relèvent à des degrés divers de la responsabilité du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, le Portugal en administre deux et l'Afrique du Sud un. Nous notons immédiatement une différence fondamentale dans la façon d'administrer ces groupes de territoires. D'une part, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a adopté une politique qui consiste à promouvoir activement l'autonomie et l'indépendance dans ses divers territoires: les Gouvernements du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud n'en ont pas fait autant. Dès les débuts de l'Organisation, le Royaume-Uni a coopéré avec elle dans l'application de cette politique. Les Gouvernements du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud ont au contraire refusé de coopérer et ont même préféré adopter une attitude de défi. Il va sans dire que ces politiques et attitudes différentes appellent de la part de l'Organisation des réactions différentes.

117. L'administration du Mandat de l'Afrique du Sud sur le Sud-Ouest africain va faire l'objet d'un avis de la Cour internationale de Justice que nous attendons; entre-temps, la Quatrième Commission a approuvé un projet de résolution II qui figure dans son rapport [A/5310]; ce texte constructif offre au Gouvernement sud-africain ce qui est probablement sa dernière chance de coopérer avec l'Organisation au sujet du Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain.

118. La Nouvelle-Zélande espère que les quelques indices d'une volonté de coopération qu'on a pu discerner de la part du Gouvernement sud-africain depuis deux ans iront en s'accroissant, avant qu'il soit trop tard.

119. L'évolution vers l'autodétermination des territoires du Portugal en Afrique est étouffée sous le mythe, auquel seul le Gouvernement portugais paraît encore attacher importance, que ces parties de l'Afrique sont des parties du Portugal lui-même. Cette attitude est contraire à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme. Elle menace de porter un tort irréparable à l'histoire souvent glorieuse du peuple portugais et d'anéantir les progrès solides que le Portugal a faits dans d'autres domaines à l'époque moderne. Malgré l'uniformité de l'administration portugaise en Afrique, nous devons néanmoins tenir compte de la diversité des conditions qui règnent dans les différents territoires. En Angola, la violence a éclaté; au Mozambique, il n'en est rien jusqu'à présent. L'enclave de Cabinda est très petite et elle se rapproche plus naturellement de l'une ou l'autre des Républiques congolaises que de l'Angola, par qui elle est actuellement administrée.

120. Alors que le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud se sont montrés peu disposés à faire face aux réalités et aux nécessités de l'époque présente, le Royaume-Uni avait, bien avant la Déclaration sur le colonialisme, donné la preuve, la preuve tangible, par la création d'Etats indépendants en Asie et en Afrique, de sa volonté de poursuivre sa politique qui tend vers le but de l'autodétermination de ses territoires dépendants. La majorité des Etats Membres ont reconnu la sagesse de cette politique et sa réalisation effective. Pour les territoires britanniques qui restent en Afrique, le but n'est pas contesté. S'il n'y avait pas de complications, il est certain qu'ils seraient déjà indépendants comme le sont le Ghana, la Nigéria, le Sierra Leone, l'Ouganda et le Tanganyika, dans le Commonwealth, et le Soudan et la Somalie, hors du Commonwealth.

121. Les complications qui font obstacle à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sont irritantes. Elles le sont pour la population des territoires dépendants, pour les Membres de l'Organisation et non moins, j'en suis certain, dans ce cas, pour la puissance qui a la charge des territoires. Chacune des trois parties — les dirigeants politiques du territoire intéressé, la puissance administrante et les Membres de l'Organisation — porte séparément la responsabilité de reconnaître qu'il faut supprimer les obstacles qui s'opposent à l'autodétermination définitive, puis jouer son rôle dans cette évolution. Dans certains des autres territoires britanniques, les complications ne sont pas graves et il est clair que l'indépendance est très proche. A Zanzibar et au Kenya, on se préoccupe surtout de l'unité nationale. Le Nyassaland, qui a un gouvernement africain, et la Rhodésie du Nord, qui en aura probablement bientôt un, doivent définir leurs relations l'une avec l'autre et avec la Rhodésie du Sud. La Rhodésie du Sud, qui est autonome et qui a jusqu'à présent un gouvernement entièrement composé de blancs, doit accélérer l'africanisation de son gouvernement et de son administration. Le Bassoutoland, le Betchoualand et le Souaziland sont situés à l'intérieur ou en bordure de l'Afrique du Sud. Les complexités de la situation de tous ces territoires doivent être reconnues et les responsabilités que nous avons tous envers eux ne peuvent être méconnues. Notre problème, qui est aussi celui de la Puissance administrante et celui des populations de ces territoires, est d'atteindre aussi vite que possible le but que nous nous sommes tous fixé.

La responsabilité qui nous incombe particulièrement en tant que Membres de l'Organisation est de veiller à ce que ce but soit atteint par des moyens pacifiques, car telle est la grande règle prescrite par la Charte des Nations Unies.

122. Chaque pays aborde le problème du colonialisme sous l'angle de sa propre expérience. Sans aucun doute, lorsque nous soulignons la diversité des territoires dépendants et la nécessité qui en découle de faire preuve de souplesse, nous sommes influencés en Nouvelle-Zélande par notre propre situation de pays du Pacifique. La Déclaration sur le colonialisme ne s'applique pas moins à la région du Pacifique qu'à d'autres régions, mais nous sommes enclins à penser, comme d'autres orateurs qui m'ont précédé, que la région du Pacifique exige peut-être des solutions particulières.

123. Les problèmes de la région du Pacifique, à la différence de ceux qui se posent en Afrique, relèvent plus de la géographie que de l'histoire. Ils résultent de la grande dispersion d'îles et de peuples répartis sur d'immenses étendues d'océan, désavantagés par leur isolement les uns des autres et du reste du monde et par le manque de ressources minières et d'autres ressources. L'application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme doit donc compter avec ces conditions particulières aussi bien qu'avec la politique.

124. En tant que Puissance administrante, bien que peu importante, la Nouvelle-Zélande a continué de mettre en pratique les principes qu'elle a constamment défendus dans cette enceinte. Au début de l'année notre ancien territoire sous tutelle du Samoa-Occidental est devenu indépendant, bien qu'il soit juste peut-être d'ajouter que l'évolution vers l'indépendance avait commencé de nombreuses années auparavant. La Nouvelle-Zélande a encore sous son administration un groupe d'îles du Pacifique sud qui n'ont ensemble que des liens assez lâches, les îles Cook et Nioué. Il est difficile de faire dépendre ces îles d'un des concepts classiques du colonialisme ou de l'impérialisme. Leur population, qui compte en tout 24 000 habitants, est d'origine polynésienne, comme le sont de nombreux Néo-Zélandais. Leur superficie est au total de 500 kilomètres carrés de terre ferme répartie sur 2 millions et demi de kilomètres carrés d'océan. Leurs ressources, purement agricoles, sont limitées et la Nouvelle-Zélande doit même leur apporter chaque année une importante contribution financière pour assurer les services sociaux et autres.

125. La Nouvelle-Zélande communique des renseignements politiques et autres au sujet de ces territoires depuis que l'Organisation existe. Le processus de développement constitutionnel qui se déroule depuis 10 ans se poursuit et nous semble tout à fait conforme aux principes de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme. Il ne convient pas ici d'entrer dans les détails qui seront fournis à la Quatrième Commission lorsqu'elle étudiera le point pertinent de l'ordre du jour, mais il est peut-être utile de donner un rapide aperçu de la situation.

126. Dès cette année, les assemblées législatives des îles Cook et de Nioué — élues naturellement au suffrage universel et par les habitants eux-mêmes — ont reçu plein contrôle sur leur budget et ont le pouvoir de faire les affectations de crédits et de dépenser non seulement leur revenu local, mais aussi les subventions versées par la Nouvelle-Zélande. L'an prochain, le conseil exécutif de chaque territoire sera choisi par l'assemblée législative, à la seule exception du Commissaire résident, nommé par la Nouvelle-Zélande. L'année suivante, les commissaires résidents se retireront des conseils. Ces conseils seront ainsi transformés en cabinets dûment constitués et l'autonomie interne sera entièrement réalisée.

127. Les populations de ces îles auront alors atteint un stade de développement constitutionnel tel qu'elles pourront valablement décider de leur statut futur, soit qu'elles restent seules, soit qu'elles s'associent à la Nouvelle-Zélande ou entrent dans quelque autre association du Pacifique sud, si cela est faisable. Nous envisageons donc de procéder alors à un genre de consultation conforme à la Charte et à la Déclaration afin de permettre à la population d'exprimer librement ses vœux.

128. Ce qui se passe ici à petite échelle a néanmoins, à mon avis, quelque valeur d'exemple. Au risque de sembler faire perdre du temps à l'Assemblée en l'entretenant de très petites questions alors que de beaucoup plus importantes figurent au premier plan de nos préoccupations, j'ai exposé dans leurs grandes lignes les plans de la Nouvelle-Zélande à l'égard de ses territoires du Pacifique en manière d'illustration, tirée de notre propre expérience, de la façon dont les principes de la Déclaration y sont appliqués. Cette application s'effectue dans un cadre probablement très différent de celui qui est normalement envisagé et qui n'a probablement pas eu une grande part dans la pensée de ceux qui ont rédigé la Déclaration. Dans une région aussi vaste et aussi variée que celle du Pacifique, beaucoup d'autres solutions sont possibles. Nous sommes cependant certains que, si tous les intéressés s'en tiennent à un point de vue pragmatique, les caractéristiques de la géographie et celles des divers territoires particuliers pourront être conciliées avec les buts des Nations Unies.

129. Dans le Pacifique comme en Afrique, ces buts et les obligations assumées par les puissances administrantes aux termes de la Charte sont généralement reconnus et respectés. Mais, de même que l'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal ont essayé d'échapper à leurs obligations, il y a dans la région du Pacifique une puissance qui en fait autant. Cinq puissances ont acquis des territoires dans le Pacifique à la suite de deux guerres mondiales. Quatre d'entre elles, dont la Nouvelle-Zélande, ont placé ces acquisitions sous tutelle internationale. La cinquième, l'Union soviétique, a conquis le sud de l'île Sakhaline et l'archipel des Kouriles, qui groupent au total près d'un demi-million d'habitants autochtones, ce qui est un chiffre important si l'on songe que les autres territoires non autonomes du Pacifique comptent ensemble environ 3 millions d'habitants. Non seulement l'Union soviétique n'a pas placé ses conquêtes sous tutelle internationale, mais elle ne les a jamais reconnues en tant que territoires non autonomes. En tant que Puissance administrante, l'Union soviétique a refusé de communiquer des renseignements sur leurs progrès politiques ou autres. Elle n'admet pas que leur indépendance soit possible et ne leur reconnaît pas le droit à l'autodétermination.

130. La politique de l'Union soviétique s'est traduite en fait par l'annexion pure et simple. L'annexion n'est pas une pratique reconnue par le nouvel ordre mondial établi par la Charte des Nations Unies. Pour autant que je sache, deux pays seulement n'ont pas reconnu cette situation: l'Afrique du Sud, qui voulait annexer le Sud-Ouest africain en 1946, et l'Union soviétique, qui a effectivement annexé toute une série de territoires non russes. La Pologne, la Tchécoslovaquie, la Roumanie, la Finlande et le Japon sont au nombre des pays qui ont eu à déplorer la perte d'une partie du territoire national et de provinces entières ainsi que le transfert de millions de personnes.

131. Je ne m'arrêterai pas sur ce sujet, non plus que sur l'invasion et l'annexion du Tibet par la Chine, sinon pour souligner que le colonialisme n'est pas seulement le fait de ceux qui reconnaissent leurs obligations, respectent la Charte et se montrent favorables aux intérêts de la communauté internationale. Il y a aussi des colonialistes délinquants, en Afrique et ailleurs, qui esquivent leurs responsabilités. Comme beaucoup de représentants l'ont déjà noté, le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a encore beaucoup à faire avant que les principes de l'autodétermination franche et libre s'affirment dans le monde. Nous voulons que la phase actuelle de la décolonisation s'achève aussi rapidement que possible. Les Nations Unies seront alors mieux à même d'examiner de plus près toute la question de la liberté de l'homme. Car, pour répéter ce que j'ai dit tout à l'heure mais dans un contexte différent, aucun de nous ne pourra vivre vraiment dans la liberté et la dignité humaine tant que tous les hommes ne seront pas libres. On ne triche jamais avec les dieux.

132. Après l'expérience de cette année, il ne fait aucun doute que le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a assumé le rôle principal en examinant l'application de la Déclaration. Le volume de travail qu'il a déjà accompli est impressionnant, mais, comme je l'ai dit, il reste beaucoup à faire encore. Au moment où nous faisons le point et procédons à une réévaluation, il est donc nécessaire non seulement de passer en revue toute la série des problèmes coloniaux, mais aussi de reviser et, lorsque cela est possible, d'améliorer le mécanisme institué par les Nations Unies pour y faire face.

133. Des orateurs qui m'ont précédé ont présenté des propositions de réorganisation du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Nous les avons étudiées avec intérêt. Nous sommes enclins à penser que le nombre exact des membres qui composeront à l'avenir le Comité n'a pas une importance primordiale, qu'il soit augmenté de quatre ou sept membres ou reste inchangé. Il ne serait pas avisé d'augmenter le nombre de ses membres au point que le Comité ne soit plus maniable et perde de son efficacité. D'autre part, nous verrions quelques avantages à la suggestion du représentant du Brésil selon laquelle le Comité aurait le pouvoir d'inviter certains pays à sa table en des circonstances spéciales si leur présence peut être particulièrement utile.

134. Ce qui importe, à notre avis, c'est que la répartition du travail soit plus efficace. La rapidité de la décolonisation et les efforts croissants des Nations Unies ont eu pour résultat une multiplicité de comités spéciaux qui traitent chacun un point du problème et dont les mandats font souvent double emploi. Le moment est venu de rationaliser ce développement désordonné et de confier au Comité spécial, dont les travaux seraient répartis entre des sous-comités si cela semblait préférable, la responsabilité que se partagent actuellement plusieurs comités. Ces derniers ne conserveraient plus alors aucune fonction et pourraient être supprimés. Seul le Conseil de tutelle ferait exception, non seulement parce qu'il est un organe principal des Nations Unies conformément à la Charte, mais aussi parce qu'il a ses propres méthodes qui ont fait leurs preuves et s'occupe maintenant spécialement d'une région, celle des territoires sous tutelle du Pacifique.

135. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a élaboré et éprouvé ses propres procédures; on devrait maintenant lui permettre de poursuivre ses travaux avec calme et réalisme. Les principes ont été posés. Les actes sont maintenant plus importants que les discours. Lorsque la puissance administrante se montre disposée à collaborer, il est évident que des résultats plus concrets et plus rapides sont possibles ainsi. Lorsque l'indépendance est ouvertement le but de la puissance administrante, la tâche du Comité est alors de l'aider et non pas de tout compliquer. Lorsque la puissance administrante n'est pas disposée à collaborer — et j'en ai cité certains cas —, nous estimons que le plus sûr moyen d'obtenir des résultats concrets est d'exercer progressivement une pression, dans le cadre reconnu que prescrit la Charte, pour faire progresser la cause des droits de l'homme et de l'autodétermination des peuples assujettis.

136. Dans les deux cas, le rôle des Nations Unies est important et comporte des responsabilités. En faisant le point des progrès accomplis depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration il y a deux ans, nous constatons que l'Organisation des Nations Unies a acquis un pouvoir, un véritable pouvoir, en matière de décolonisation. Cette œuvre a une importance immense et historique. La tâche qui nous attend n'est pas moins importante. Elle consiste à parachever ce pouvoir pour assurer aux peuples intéressés, d'une façon concrète et raisonnée, les profits les plus immédiats et les bienfaits les plus durables.

137. M. MOD (Hongrie): La dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale est la troisième session consécutive qui est saisie des questions générales de la liquidation du système colonial. L'Assemblée générale a adopté la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, le 14 décembre 1960, sans opposition. On était donc en droit d'attendre que les Etats Membres, en tout premier lieu naturellement les puissances coloniales, respectent aussi dans la pratique les dispositions de la Déclaration, c'est-à-dire qu'elles octroient immédiatement l'indépendance à leurs colonies.

138. Avant d'examiner l'état actuel du problème du colonialisme et des tâches qui s'ensuivent pour nous, nous devons donc répondre à la question de savoir pourquoi il était nécessaire d'inscrire à l'ordre du jour de la présente session la question de l'application de la Déclaration.

139. Etait-ce pour célébrer la réalisation de la décolonisation accomplie dans l'esprit de la Déclaration? Non. Etait-ce pour dresser le bilan des résultats obtenus en commun dans le processus accéléré de la décolonisation? Non. Etait-ce pour prendre de nouvelles mesures collectives, nécessitées par la situation qui s'est produite grâce à la coopération bienveillante et sincère des colonisateurs? Non et toujours non.

140. Ce ne sont pas les résultats obtenus en commun par la voie pacifique, mais c'est la résistance que les puissances coloniales opposent à l'évolution historique et aux résolutions adoptées par les Nations Unies dans l'esprit de cette évolution qui a nécessité pour la deuxième fois l'inscription de cette question à l'ordre du jour.

141. La résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale a précisé ce fait en termes exprès. Dans son préambule, en examinant les dispositions les plus importantes de la Déclaration, elle énonce ce qui suit (et je cite quelques fragments du préambule):

"Constatant avec regret qu'à quelques exceptions près il n'a pas été donné suite aux dispositions contenues dans ledit paragraphe [par. 5] de la Déclaration,

"Prenant note du fait que, contrairement aux dispositions du paragraphe 4 de la Déclaration, ...

"Constatant avec inquiétude que, contrairement aux dispositions du paragraphe 6 de la Déclaration..."

142. La plupart des interventions que nous avons entendues jusque-là ont constaté le même phénomène. Une des tâches principales qui s'imposent à nous dans la présente discussion est donc d'analyser les causes et les méthodes de la résistance des colonisateurs et d'élaborer une résolution donnant effet à des mesures aptes à briser cette résistance et assurant l'application immédiate et sans conditions des dispositions de la Déclaration.

143. Les orateurs qui m'ont précédé, ainsi que les délibérations des deux sessions précédentes de l'Assemblée générale, ont relevé l'importance que revêt la question de la liquidation du colonialisme dans cette période de la vie de l'humanité. C'est pourquoi je ne désire mentionner que quelques-unes des conclusions finales, principalement pour souligner de nouveau l'importance de la présente discussion. La liquidation du colonialisme est une question qui se pose en importance qu'à celle du désarmement général et complet; c'est donc un problème qui touche de près les intérêts de l'humanité entière. La liquidation du colonialisme est l'un des processus les plus révolutionnaires du milieu du XXème siècle, un processus qui, en raison de sa nature, opère des changements radicaux dans les relations entre peuples; il est donc révolutionnaire aussi en tant que facteur historique. Elle est étroitement liée à la question du désarmement; elle en est la condition à certains égards et la conséquence en d'autres circonstances. La position que prend un Etat, non seulement par des paroles, mais surtout par des actes, dans la question du colonialisme affecte donc l'humanité entière et cette prise de position est en même temps la pierre de touche du système social de l'Etat en question.

144. Dans les débats sur la liquidation du colonialisme, l'objet de la polémique est fourni dans tous les cas par quelques territoires où la gestion des affaires politiques et de l'économie nationale est contrôlée non par la population autochtone, mais par une puissance coloniale étrangère. Il est également de notoriété publique que les puissances coloniales respectives occupent ces territoires par la violence, sous prétexte de "civilisation" au stade du développement de la société humaine qui est connu sous le nom de capitalisme, de 100 à 400 ans avant l'époque actuelle. La Déclaration du 14 décembre 1960 ne demande à ces puissances que de rendre le pouvoir à la population de ces territoires qu'elles exploiteront pendant si longtemps.

145. La mise en application des principes de la Déclaration sert donc à réparer les injustices historiques commises par la société capitaliste. Mais ces principes indiquent également que, dans les conditions de l'actuel stade de développement de la société humaine, le maintien du colonialisme en tant que rapport entre différentes communautés humaines n'a désormais aucune base politique, économique ou morale. L'Union soviétique a le mérite historique incontestable d'avoir été la première à reconnaître ce fait et à suggérer les principes anticolonialistes énoncés dans la Déclaration du 14 décembre 1960.

146. Depuis 1960, un grand nombre de pays sont devenus indépendants et ont été admis à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Mais nous nous trouverions en contradiction avec les faits et avec les justes conclusions tirées de ces faits par l'Assemblée générale si l'accroissement du nombre des Membres de l'ONU nous faisait oublier le fait que ces résultats sont issus de luttes, souvent de luttes sanglantes, et non — comme les puissances coloniales voudraient nous le faire croire — le produit d'une évolution pacifique, du bon sens et de la générosité des puissances coloniales. Pour assurer la liquidation complète du colonialisme et la libération des peuples qui souffrent toujours sous le régime colonial, il importe beaucoup que justement ici-même, à l'ONU, nous ne perdions jamais de vue ce fait.

147. Les délibérations de l'Assemblée générale au sujet du colonialisme ont subi une évolution intéressante. Au début, lorsque la question de l'indépendance nationale des colonies avait été soulevée, les puissances colonisatrices ont déclaré tout net que cela ne regardait pas l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Même à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, en 1960, le représentant du Royaume-Uni, à titre d'explication de vote, après l'adoption de la Déclaration, a invoqué la Charte des Nations Unies pour prouver que la Déclaration était contraire à la Charte et ne concernait pas les colonies britanniques. M. Ormsby-Gore a déclaré le 14 décembre 1960:

"C'est ainsi qu'à notre sens le paragraphe 1 de la Déclaration n'est absolument pas applicable aux habitants des territoires que nous administrons puisqu'il s'agit d'une domination et d'une exploitation étrangères contraires à la Charte des Nations Unies, alors que l'administration britannique des territoires non autonomes respecte strictement les dispositions pertinentes de la Charte." [947ème séance, par. 49.]

148. Cette attitude était caractéristique, c'était celle de tous les autres pays qui se sont abstenus lors du vote sur l'adoption de la Déclaration. Mais, depuis lors, personne n'a dit que l'ONU n'était pas en droit de prendre position contre le colonialisme sans réserve et de façon conséquente, et c'était là le premier résultat appréciable de la Déclaration au sein de l'Organisation.

149. Les deux années qui se sont écoulées depuis 1960 sont marquées de toute une série de prétextes et de manœuvres de diversion auxquels les colonisateurs ont eu recours par le passé également, mais qui sont devenus significatifs du fait que, désormais, il leur était impossible de refuser carrément la Déclaration. Ces manœuvres sont multiformes, mais elles sont toutes destinées à poursuivre le même but: le maintien du système colonial.

150. Quant aux arguments et à l'attitude de l'Espagne et du Portugal, ces pays se sont cantonnés derrière des conceptions du Moyen Âge. Ils ont proclamé que deux fois deux font cinq et ils ont déclaré qu'ils ne tiendraient aucun compte d'un avis contraire. Tant pis pour l'histoire si elle les a dépassés de quelques siècles: jour après jour, ils violent la lettre et l'esprit de la Déclaration. Mais ils n'ont pas voté contre son adoption. Ces deux pays se sont abstenus de voter.

151. L'attitude du Royaume-Uni rappelle un peu ce qu'a dit l'emprunteur de la fable en retournant à son ami la cruche à l'anse cassée qu'il lui avait empruntée: "D'une part, je ne t'ai emprunté aucune cruche; d'autre part, elle avait déjà l'anse cassée lorsque je te l'ai empruntée."

152. D'une part, dans son intervention précitée, M. Ormsby-Gore a déjà fait savoir à l'Assemblée que la base de principe de la Déclaration, son paragraphe 1, "n'est absolument pas applicable aux habitants des territoires que nous administrons"; d'autre part, dans la discussion de la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, le représentant du Royaume-Uni au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a déclaré que "la Rhodésie du Sud jouissait de l'autonomie interne depuis 1923" [A/5238, chap. II, par. 62]. Autrement dit, le Royaume-Uni ne doit retourner aucune cruche à l'ONU; d'ailleurs, dans ce cas concret, la cruche était depuis longtemps en mains compétentes, non seulement avant que les Nations Unies l'aient exigé, mais bien avant que les Nations Unies aient été créées.

153. Les arguments des puissances coloniales peuvent être divisés en deux catégories.

154. Dans la première, le Portugal et l'Espagne déclarent: "Nous n'avons pas de possessions coloniales." On peut aussi classer les États-Unis qui font le silence sur leurs propres territoires sous tutelle, comme s'ils n'existaient pas du tout.

155. Dans la seconde, les représentants du Royaume-Uni disent: "Nos colonies progressent en plein accord et en ordre vers l'indépendance et l'autonomie." On ne sait quand elles atteindront l'un et l'autre de ces buts, mais elles l'atteindront toutes; elles n'ont qu'à attendre patiemment et se perfectionner. Quiconque n'est pas d'accord sur ce point, ou bien est un ennemi du "développement pacifique", ou bien introduit la guerre froide dans la discussion, ou encore ne comprend pas que tous les territoires ne sont pas encore mûrs pour l'indépendance, et cela pour des raisons différentes. Pour la plupart des territoires coloniaux, on prétend qu'il n'était pas encore possible de former suffisamment de cadres indigènes pour la gestion indépendante des affaires de ces territoires.

156. Ce sont là les arguments présentés par les colonisateurs et leurs amis. Nous assistons aussi à une manœuvre qui consiste à essayer de nous faire parler sur d'autres sujets, sur les pays socialistes par exemple. Nous comprenons fort bien que la délégation des États-Unis, et quelques autres délégations, se trouvent dans une situation peu enviable lorsque, dans cette enceinte, nous assistons au procès du colonialisme et que, pour en sortir, tout moyen leur semble bon. Ce que nous ne comprenons pas, cependant, c'est que ces pays ne se rendent pas compte que par cette manœuvre ils sous-estiment la majorité politique des membres de cette assemblée. Ma délégation, par exemple, a eu l'occasion d'expliquer plusieurs fois, et de prouver dans cette assemblée, comment la contre-révolution en Hongrie a été organisée, financée, armée et dirigée par les puissances occidentales. Tout le monde sait donc que ces événements peuvent être invoqués sous un seul aspect de la question, notamment par le fait que les mêmes puissances qui, en Union sud-africaine, en Rhodésie du Sud et en d'autres territoires, soutiennent et arment les forces réactionnaires, soutiennent et arment la réaction sous toutes ses formes et partout dans le monde. Mais cette tentative pour détourner l'attention de l'Assemblée générale de ses tâches réelles ne produira aucun fruit pour ses initiateurs et je pense qu'il serait grand temps que ces délégations se rendent compte que le niveau politique, dans cette assemblée, est tout de même bien plus élevé que dans les réunions des campagnes électorales de leur pays.

157. Il faut, à plus d'un titre, que nous détruisions ces allégations des puissances coloniales. En premier lieu, parce que la réalité de la vie des peuples coloniaux contredit toutes ces affirmations; leur prémisse est donc fausse. En second lieu, parce que, partant de là, elles amènent d'autres pays à en venir aussi à des conclusions erronées et trompeuses. D'autre part, les puissances coloniales désirent se servir de fausses conclusions pour induire en erreur les Nations Unies et l'opinion publique du monde entier, tout en se prétendant les défenseurs des droits des peuples et des droits de l'homme. Si l'allégation portugaise, selon laquelle le Mozambique et l'Angola ne sont pas des pays par eux-mêmes, mais des provinces du Portugal, ne servait pas seulement à tromper le monde extérieur, mais si le Portugal la prenait au sérieux, il faudrait que les conditions qui y existent en général soient du moins conformes au niveau de vie portugais, qui est d'ailleurs extrêmement bas à l'échelle européenne. Au cours de l'audition des pétitionnaires, au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, M. Simango, représentant de l'Union démocratique nationale du Mozambique, a dit qu':

"... son organisation, qui représentait les intérêts de 6 millions et demi d'habitants africains du Mozambique, tenait à informer le Comité que cinq siècles de domination coloniale portugaise se soldaient par l'exploitation économique, la répression politique et la dégradation sociale de la population africaine de ce vaste territoire." [A/5238, chap. VIII, par. 24.]

158. Dans son chapitre traitant du Mozambique, le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [ibid., chap. VIII] souligne l'inhumaine terreur policière que font régner les autorités portugaises et constate aussi que l'expression "province d'outre-mer" n'est qu'une pure fiction qui sert à tromper l'étranger. Pour autant que nous sachions, les habitants autres que ceux des possessions portugaises d'outre-mer sont traités en citoyens portugais. Au Mozambique, cependant, après cinq siècles de domination portugaise, il y a, d'après les statistiques officielles, en tout et pour tout 4 353 non-Portugais "assimilados", qui ont réussi à obtenir le premier degré de nationalité portugaise. Les autres 6 millions et demi d'habitants africains du Mozambique ne sont pas considérés, par le Portugal, comme ses nationaux du point de vue de sa conception de politique intérieure. De quel droit exige-t-il donc que nous, Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les considérions comme ressortissants portugais?

159. Les débats qui se sont déroulés l'an dernier et cette année sur la question de la Rhodésie du Sud rendent inutile une analyse détaillée de la manière dont le Royaume-Uni essaie d'escamoter l'autonomie. Ma délégation en a parlé amplement déjà à la Quatrième Commission. Maintenant, je ne désire que souligner la conclusion que nous en avons tirée: à l'issue du prétendu référendum de 1923, que le Royaume-Uni considère comme un fondement juridique, politique et moral, c'est sur la base de 8 000 et quelques voix que l'autonomie a été octroyée aux colons blancs. Ni à ce moment-là, ni depuis, personne n'a consulté la population autochtone. Par conséquent, le Royaume-Uni ne peut se poser en porte-parole de la population autochtone.

160. Les puissances qui se sont opposées à la liquidation du colonialisme emploient encore une méthode bien connue et qui n'est pas toujours sans effet: en camouflant l'essentiel des problèmes réels, elles nous accablent de propagande de guerre froide. Il est un fait notoire que les Etats-Unis ont d'importants capitaux investis en Afrique du Sud tout comme au Sud-Ouest africain. Nombre de délégations et de pétitionnaires ont relevé ce fait à la Quatrième Commission, de même qu'au cours des sessions antérieures de l'Assemblée générale. La meilleure preuve de la position des Etats-Unis est fournie par l'abstention de ce pays ou son vote contre les projets de résolution sur la question du Sud-Ouest africain. Cette attitude a été appréciée par un conseiller de la délégation sud-africaine à la seizième session de l'Assemblée générale, lorsqu'il a fait, de retour dans son pays le 20 décembre 1961, la déclaration suivante au "Windhoek Advertiser":

"La délégation du Royaume-Uni a livré une lutte sérieuse pour le compte de l'Afrique du Sud... Nous avons des obligations envers la Grande-Bretagne, car c'est grâce à elle que la motion demandant des sanctions économiques n'a pas obtenu la majorité des deux tiers des voix à l'Assemblée générale. Les Etats-Unis ont également contribué à ce résultat."

161. Comme en bien d'autres cas, les faits sont diamétralement opposés à ce que les puissances colonisatrices disent aux Nations Unies, et les faits ne se discutent pas. Il est notoire cependant que nombre de pays non alignés s'efforcent d'éviter les questions dites de guerre froide. C'est pourquoi, au lieu de discuter sur les faits, les puissances coloniales, si elles se trouvent en face d'une constatation qu'elles ne peuvent réfuter, la qualifient tout simplement de question de guerre froide; mais, en réalité, cet argument sert à faire reculer les pays non alignés devant la discussion du problème et à rompre par là l'unité des pays qui insistent sur la liquidation du colonialisme.

162. En ce qui concerne la pénurie générale de cadres dirigeants parmi les populations autochtones, ma délégation est entièrement d'accord avec le représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite qui, en analysant la situation en Rhodésie, a déclaré que cette référence à la pénurie des cadres est "un argument... désastreux, pour la situation de la Puissance administrante" [1168ème séance, par. 134].

163. Les puissances colonisatrices ont encore un argument que je voudrais analyser brièvement. Il consiste à dire qu'en plus de l'assistance politique et civilisatrice les pays colonisés et les territoires non autonomes reçoivent de la puissance coloniale une importante assistance économique, une assistance tellement importante que la puissance coloniale "y va de sa poche". Les plus raisonnables des puissances coloniales ne contestent plus le fait historique que le colonialisme a signifié pour la population du pays assujéti, en plus de l'extermination et de l'esclavage, la spoliation économique de son pays. Selon le nouvel argument, alors que c'était vrai par le passé, il n'en est plus ainsi actuellement.

164. Examinons tout d'abord quelques données concrètes. Les investissements directs du capital privé américain dans les territoires dépendant de pays d'Europe occidentale sont passés de 427 millions de dollars en 1949 à 906 millions de dollars en 1957. Pendant ces huit ans, les "investisseurs" américains y exportaient des capitaux nouveaux s'élevant à 229 millions de dollars et ils réimportaient aux Etats-Unis 1 159 millions de dollars de profits. En d'autres termes, les capitalistes américains — qui étaient probablement dans une situation moins favorable que les capitalistes du pays métropolitain — ont obtenu un accroissement de capital de 479 millions de dollars, sans avoir aucun risque à courir, réimportant en même temps des bénéfices s'élevant à 930 millions de dollars. Ces 930 millions de dollars proviennent de la soustraction pure et simple d'une partie du revenu national produit par les peuples de ces pays colonisés. La mesure du pillage dont ces pays ont été victimes apparaît aussi dans le fait que le total de 906 millions de dollars d'investissements de l'année 1957 a rapporté un bénéfice net de 239 millions de dollars, soit 26,3 p. 100.

165. Les statistiques publiées par les colonisateurs européens évitent soigneusement de faire des analyses d'une sincérité similaire. Nous connaissons cependant les chiffres d'affaires de certaines entreprises privées:

"Pour la Consolidated Gold Fields of South Africa, Ltd.,... le bénéfice net, en 1961, était de 4 100 000 livres sterling, pour un capital de 14 500 000 livres, dont la plus grande part est d'origine britannique... Pour l'Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, Ltd., avec un capital de 7 750 000 livres seulement, le bénéfice net, en 1961, était de 8 400 000 livres et les dividendes, de 4 900 000 livres... L'Union minière du Haut-Katanga... possède un capital de plus de 57 millions de livres et les dividendes pour 1959-1960 étaient approximativement de 19 500 000 livres... La Tanganyika Concessions, vieille compagnie britannique, ... a d'immenses propriétés forestières et minières... Son capital, d'origine britannique, est de 10 millions de livres et ses dividendes pour 1959-1960 étaient de 3 millions de livres^{1/}."

166. Vu ce qui précède, c'est faire une estimation trop modeste que de dire qu'il faut peut-être quatre années entières pour que le capital d'une puissance coloniale soit amorti aujourd'hui dans les colonies. Les choses allaient certainement plus vite "dans le bon vieux temps". Mais la situation actuelle prouve clairement que, du point de vue économique et social:

a) Les puissances coloniales, loin "d'y aller de leur poche", tirent, même aujourd'hui, des profits fabuleux du labeur des peuples colonisés et de leur économie nationale;

b) Les puissances coloniales vivaient au stade de développement dit capitaliste de l'évolution sociale, ou à un stade de transition vers le capitalisme, lorsque l'époque du pillage colonial a commencé, et elles vivent dans un système du même type à notre époque où ce pillage se poursuit. Le système social du type capitaliste est caractérisé, par conséquent, au cours de son histoire tout entière, du point de vue des pays colonisés, par sa qualité de parasite;

c) L'époque de l'évolution de l'humanité, où la population du monde était divisée en pays riches et pays pauvres, était l'époque des sociétés capitalistes. C'est un fait notoire que le niveau de vie des peuples, disons grosso modo des pays actuels de l'OTAN, avant l'ère du colonialisme, n'était pas beaucoup différent de celui des pays des autres continents.

167. Il s'ensuit donc logiquement qu'une des raisons pour lesquelles les puissances coloniales tiennent invariablement à leurs possessions est une simple cause matérielle: la chasse au profit, et non pas quelque mission civilisatrice transcendante.

168. Nous sommes tous d'accord — qui avec plaisir, qui sans joie — pour admettre que l'époque du colonialisme, plus exactement du colonialisme classique, tire à sa fin.

169. Mais les données que j'ai énumérées en parlant des aspects économiques du colonialisme démontrent aussi qu'aujourd'hui le pillage des richesses de différents pays colonisés est pratiqué non seulement par tel ou tel pays ou par les capitalistes d'un pays donné, mais par des groupements financiers dont les membres sont des contribuables importants des différentes puissances coloniales. Quelle que soit leur nationalité, ces hommes ont un trait caractéristique commun: ils veulent maintenir leurs privilèges coûte que coûte. Leur influence est si grande que, dans beaucoup de cas, ils peuvent intégrer la défense de leurs intérêts dans la politique officielle de leur pays. C'est ainsi que s'est formée, dans la lutte contre la liquidation du colonialisme, cette "unholy alliance" — l'Alliance impie — dont les membres voudraient tous renverser le cours de l'histoire.

170. Sur le continent africain lui-même, comme Basil Davidson, le publiciste anglais réputé, l'a écrit:

"Il existe sans doute aujourd'hui une alliance impie d'entraide et de coopération entre les hommes sinistres et bornés, en Afrique, qui croient que l'avenir ne doit pas être meilleur que le passé, mais qu'il doit être le même, que le colonialisme doit être maintenu, que la haine raciale doit persister.

"Le Portugal, l'Union sud-africaine, la Fédération de Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, l'Etat fantoche séparatiste du Katanga, avec les subventions importantes qu'il reçoit des entreprises minières relevant de la Belgique, les gouvernements de tous ces pays, avec leurs riches amis à l'étranger, se sont associés en un complot pour arrêter l'expansion de la liberté politique et économique en Afrique centrale et en Afrique du Sud. De puissants intérêts politiques et économiques britanniques sont engagés dans cet effort pour détruire tout espoir en un changement constructif^{2/}."

^{1/} Rosalyn de Ainslie, The Unholy Alliance, Salazar-Verwoerd-Welensky, p. 22 à 24.

imple perpètrent, au centre et au sud de l'Afrique, contre le propriétaire réel de ces territoires, la population autochtone.

172. Ils ne pourraient et n'oseraient commettre tous ces crimes s'ils ne jouissaient pas de l'assistance de l'Alliance impie. Le petit Portugal, avec ses quelques millions d'habitants, ne pourrait mener une guerre meurtrière contre l'Angola sans l'assistance et les armements de l'OTAN. Même les mercenaires du Katanga ne combattent pas pour rien; ils sont à la solde de l'Alliance impie qui leur fournit des armes. Le New Statesman a formulé d'une manière juste et précise l'activité déployée par le Royaume-Uni en ce sens dans un article où on peut lire notamment:

"Whitehead a reçu un prêt considérable dont une large part sert à financer sa police, tandis que le Dr Verwoerd en Afrique du Sud est approvisionné en avions militaires qui peuvent être employés contre les masses noires. Même certains députés torys sont consternés de cet emploi cynique des ressources britanniques^{3/}."

173. Tout cela n'est cependant que l'un des côtés de la question. L'Alliance impie ne protège pas seulement les privilèges des colons blancs en Rhodésie; elle ne maintient pas seulement le régime fasciste à la pointe de la baïonnette en Afrique du Sud, elle ne se moque pas seulement de l'ONU et de l'opinion mondiale en subventionnant l'armée de mercenaires du Katanga; en d'autres termes, elle ne se contente pas seulement de "soutenir" les colons blancs et d'empêcher la formation pacifique de la société "multiraciale" que ses représentants prêchent ici, aux Nations Unies. Les buts principaux qu'elle poursuit sont l'accroissement des profits, l'amortissement du capital à un rythme plus rapide que celui qu'il est possible d'obtenir dans le pays métropolitain. Puisque ses intérêts coïncident avec ceux de l'Afrique du Sud et des colons blancs de la Rhodésie du Sud, elle s'allie à eux. C'est ainsi et à ces fins qu'interviennent les accords secrets dissimulés aux peuples africains.

174. Malgré la contestation des gouvernements intéressés, il ressort des déclarations des pétitionnaires et des articles de la presse que cette alliance existe. Je dois ajouter cependant que, dans ce cas, quoique la question soit d'une extrême importance du point de vue des problèmes locaux africains, il ne s'agit que de l'un des moyens d'enrayer les mouvements africains de libération nationale, et ce moyen n'est même pas le plus important. Les principaux ennemis de l'application des principes de la Déclaration sont ceux des membres de l'Alliance impie qui ne siègent pas en Afrique, mais qui fournissent des armes et de l'argent pour les besoins de l'alliance qui déploie son activité antiprogressiste sur le continent africain même. De qui s'agit-il? Des pays de l'alliance politico-militaire, des pays qui mettent les armes entre les mains des colonisateurs portugais, des mercenaires du Katanga et des racistes sud-africains. Il s'agit des pays qui, sans consulter la population autochtone, construisent des bases militaires de fusées nucléaires et autres à Aden, à Beira (Mozambique), au Kenya, etc., dans l'intérêt de leurs plans d'agression.

175. Cette alliance militaire embrasse tous les pays qui possèdent des colonies en Afrique ou ailleurs, ou qui y ont des investissements importants dont la rentabilité dépend du maintien du statu quo — depuis les Etats-Unis d'Amérique jusqu'à la Belgique, le Portugal et la République fédérale d'Allemagne. Bien entendu, il s'agit de l'OTAN.

176. La politique que l'OTAN et ses membres poursuivent à l'encontre des peuples coloniaux et dépendants révèle en même temps le rapport étroit qui existe entre le désarmement général et complet et la liquidation du colonialisme. Sur quoi se fonde le pouvoir des mercenaires du Katanga, des colons de Rhodésie du Sud et des Portugais qui tiennent des peuples africains sous la domination coloniale? Il se fonde sur l'OTAN, sur les armements reçus des membres de l'OTAN, et non pas sur l'assistance des peuples. S'il faut liquider ces armements dans le cadre du désarmement général et complet, il est évident que l'oppression coloniale fondée sur la violence prendra fin, et la volonté de la majorité se fera valoir.

177. Il est donc également évident que celui qui a intérêt à ce que le colonialisme soit liquidé a également intérêt à réaliser le désarmement général et complet, non seulement pour assurer l'utilisation pacifique des moyens techniques et des vastes fonds qui deviennent disponibles après la réduction des dépenses militaires, mais aussi pour rendre impossible l'oppression coloniale.

178. Et enfin l'importance d'une relation historiquement établie apparaît ici. La formation du système capitaliste n'est pas seulement une coïncidence, elle est aussi l'explication de la naissance du colonialisme — ce système dans lequel des pays à niveaux de vie peu différents doivent se diviser en pays riches et pays pauvres. D'autre part, la liquidation politique et économique complète du colonialisme et de ses conséquences n'est réalisable qu'en même temps que le désarmement général et complet, qui est une condition militaire, économique, politique et technique de la liquidation, dans un temps historiquement court, de cette différence entre des pays riches et des pays pauvres. En dépit de toute opposition, la liquidation politique complète du colonialisme sera réalisée sous peu. Mais les conséquences économiques du colonialisme persisteront pendant assez longtemps, et ceci dans une large mesure, parce que les colonisateurs dépourvus de leurs privilèges politiques jouissent encore, en beaucoup d'endroits, de privilèges économiques illégaux qu'ils défendront avec acharnement. Et ces privilèges deviendront de plus en plus les principaux obstacles qui s'opposent au développement économique à l'échelle mondiale.

179. Pour conclure, je voudrais exposer le point de vue de ma délégation concernant directement le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238].

180. La résolution 1654 (XVI) et le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ont, sous maints rapports, répondu à notre attente; ils ont sans doute fait progresser d'un pas important la cause de la liquidation du colonialisme. L'activité du Comité spécial était compliquée, l'année dernière, par les travaux de plusieurs comités de moindre importance saisis de problèmes analogues. Ma délégation est d'accord sur la solution proposée par le Secrétaire général pour mettre fin à cette situation. Comme plusieurs autres délégations l'ont déjà souligné, si toutes les questions concernant le colonialisme sont renvoyées au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, et si les différents sous-comités sont supprimés, il faudra élargir le Comité spécial pour qu'il puisse s'acquitter de ses tâches.

181. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a pris des décisions justes à propos des 12 territoires coloniaux dont il s'est occupé. Ma délégation est en faveur de l'adoption de ces décisions par l'Assemblée générale.

^{3/} Voir New Statesman, 19 octobre 1962, p. 513.

182. Après une année d'expérience, il faudrait déjà définir plus précisément les attributions du Comité spécial, notamment en vue d'éviter une répétition des discussions de procédure qui, l'an dernier, ont pris beaucoup de temps au Comité spécial, particulièrement au début de ses travaux. Cette définition est nécessaire aussi parce que la Quatrième Commission a déjà chargé — et très justement — le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, et le chargera probablement à l'avenir aussi, de s'occuper des problèmes de ce genre concernant les colonies, problèmes qui exigent le concours d'un organe tenant des séances permanentes. La diminution heureuse du nombre des territoires coloniaux ne signifie pas, pour le moment, l'allègement des tâches du Comité spécial, car il y a un bon nombre de territoires coloniaux dont les problèmes n'ont pas encore figuré à l'ordre du jour du Comité spécial.

183. Les expériences que nous avons faites jusqu'ici à la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale et les débats sur la question du colonialisme — que nous examinons la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, celle du Sud-Ouest africain ou celle de la politique d'apartheid — confirment à nouveau la constatation que l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne peut aider les peuples coloniaux qu'en prenant une position anticolonialiste constante et conséquente. A ce propos, ma délégation prête son appui à la proposition du président Sekou Touré [1148ème séance] qui demande à l'ONU de fixer le mois d'octobre 1963 comme date limite de la liquidation du colonialisme. Il est notoire que les pays socialistes ont relevé, dès le début, la nécessité de fixer un tel délai.

184. Les interventions que nous avons entendues jusqu'ici montrent clairement que la majorité des Etats Membres des Nations Unies éprouvent de vives inquiétudes au sujet de l'allure que prennent les événements en plusieurs endroits au sud du continent africain, de la guerre d'extermination menée contre le peuple angolais, de la situation en Rhodésie du Sud et des conditions qui ressemblent au génocide en République sud-africaine et au Sud-Ouest africain. Ma délégation partage cette opinion que la situation dans cette région compromet la paix en Afrique et dans le monde entier. En même temps, il ne faut pas oublier la question des territoires coloniaux de l'Asie, de l'Océanie et du continent américain.

185. Etant donné ce qui précède, ma délégation pense que la résolution qui sera adoptée devrait contenir les dispositions suivantes.

186. En premier lieu, l'Assemblée générale devrait exiger l'abolition immédiate des mesures d'oppression militaires et policières prises contre les peuples coloniaux et la liquidation des forces d'oppression militaires et policières dans les pays coloniaux.

187. En deuxième lieu, l'Assemblée générale devrait déclarer que les privilèges économiques, politiques et militaires des colonisateurs par rapport à la population autochtone, ainsi que les bases militaires créées malgré la volonté et sans le consentement de la population autochtone, doivent être liquidés d'urgence comme étant contraires à la Charte des Nations Unies et à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

188. En troisième lieu, l'Assemblée générale devrait souligner une fois de plus que tout traité conclu, avant l'octroi de l'indépendance, avec un territoire colonial ne saurait être obligatoire pour le pays en question, après l'octroi de l'indépendance, que si ce pays l'accepte librement après qu'il aura recouvré son indépendance.

189. En quatrième lieu, l'Assemblée générale devrait inviter nommément toutes les puissances coloniales à mettre immédiatement en application les dispositions de la Déclaration, de la résolution 1654 (XVI), adoptée par l'Assemblée générale le 27 novembre 1961, et de la résolution qui sera adoptée.

190. En cinquième lieu, enfin, l'Assemblée générale devrait charger le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept de poursuivre ses travaux dans l'esprit de la Déclaration, de la résolution 1654 (XVI) et de la résolution qui sera adoptée.

191. La délégation hongroise est convaincue que le succès de la lutte contre l'Alliance impie, la liquidation définitive du colonialisme, n'est réalisable que par l'application de mesures expresses et non équivoques. Ma délégation est prête à appuyer tout projet de résolution qui faciliterait la réalisation de ce dessein.

La séance est levée à 18 h 10.

(Pakistan).

de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale
(A/5238) [suite]

5. M. BINDZI (Cameroun): Au moment où, au nom de la République fédérale du Cameroun, j'ai l'honneur d'aborder cette tribune pour examiner avec vous, à la lumière du rapport [A/5238] soumis par le Comité des Dix-Sept^{1/}, où nous en sommes avec l'application des résolutions adoptées depuis deux ans sur la décolonisation, j'avoue que je ressens une double anxiété,

6. Double inquiétude parce que, d'une part, je m'interroge déjà intensément sur la résolution — la troisième du genre — que nous adopterons éventuellement en conclusion de nos travaux, et aussi surtout parce que je me demande quel accueil sera réservé à cette troisième initiative de notre organisation, non par ceux-là qui souhaitent le maintien du statu quo, mais par les autres, ceux qui attendent de nous la fin de leur asservissement, leur délivrance, leur salut.

7. Les anxieux, les pauvres, les déshérités, ceux dont le cri ne peut parvenir dans ce sanctuaire que par l'écho atténué des porte-voix désintéressés que nous sommes, examineront en effet attentivement, et ce n'est pas peu dire, notre prochaine résolution. Ou ils y décèleront le souffle vivifiant qui ranime la flamme de l'espérance, ou alors ils y trouveront le poison mortel de l'abandon qui transforme l'homme même le plus modéré en désespéré, c'est-à-dire celui qui est prêt à mourir, à tout perdre parce qu'il n'a plus rien à conserver ou à gagner. C'est souligner l'importance de ce débat.

8. Les éminents orateurs qui m'ont précédé ont déjà tour à tour analysé, statistiques à l'appui, la situation dans les territoires africains encore dépendants sur le sort desquels le Comité des Dix-Sept, en se rendant en Afrique, a présenté des conclusions réfléchies et concrètes.

9. Qu'il me soit permis de féliciter ce comité pour le travail considérable fourni et le courage mis à aller constater sur place, autant que faire se pouvait, les réalités locales.

10. Que certains, surtout ceux qui ont adopté pour canon immuable de leurs relations avec notre organisation de ne jamais accepter aucune de ses commissions sur leur sol ou sur un sol qu'ils contrôlent, que ceux-là ne viennent pas accuser le Comité d'avoir entendu n'importe qui, ni lui reprocher d'avoir fait la publicité de sa présence au sein même du colonialisme afin de provoquer les dépositions de tous ceux qui voulaient dénoncer aux représentants des Nations Unies les drames de la situation dans les

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes

^{1/} Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

territoires où le Comité, en dépit de l'opposition qu'il a rencontrée, a pourtant jugé utile de se rendre.

11. Il est évident que, sur la situation intérieure des territoires dépendants et les mesures à prendre, ce qu'il y avait à dire l'a été avec beaucoup d'éloquence. Je crois qu'il faut être reconnaissant au Comité d'être allé par priorité en Afrique où il existe encore plus de colonies qu'ailleurs.

12. Ma délégation, quant à elle, se propose de porter le débat au niveau du dialogue avec les puissances administrantes, car il est prouvé que c'est leur mentalité, leur disposition actuelle à l'égard du problème posé, qui est en jeu. Les plus récentes expériences sont là, éloquentes en elles-mêmes. Il est évident que l'obstacle a toujours été la volonté politique des métropoles — je ne dis pas l'opinion publique des métropoles — qui s'est chaque fois opposée à l'émancipation des territoires coloniaux.

13. Ainsi je me propose, je le répète, non pas d'analyser la situation intérieure de chacun des pays, mais de passer en revue les arguments des puissances encore coloniales, dans cet ordre: le Royaume-Uni, le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud, l'Espagne et, dans une commune mesure, l'Indonésie et l'Australie à propos de l'Irian ou Nouvelle-Guinée.

14. Un rapide coup d'œil sur la carte de l'Afrique montre que le Royaume-Uni détient encore une grande partie de notre continent, je dirai même la plus grande partie, car, pour nous comme pour chacun, l'Histoire reste l'Histoire. Que l'Afrique du Sud soit indépendante, c'est incontestable. Qu'elle ait rompu tous liens avec le Royaume-Uni du fait de sa sortie du Commonwealth, ce serait trop dire. Au reste, le Sud-Ouest africain est là qui rappelle la responsabilité du Royaume-Uni dans le fait de la domination de certaines parties subtropicales de l'Afrique. Nous y reviendrons en temps opportun.

15. Le Royaume-Uni est donc responsable d'une grande partie de l'Afrique encore dominée actuellement. Il serait injuste de ne pas reconnaître qu'il en convient lui-même. Mais il dit: "Le problème est difficile; les pays ne se ressemblent pas. J'ai une grande expérience en la matière; faites-moi confiance et tout ira bien." C'est ce que nous a répété hier encore, à cette même tribune, le représentant du Royaume-Uni [1175^{ème} séance].

16. Comment, honnêtement, délivrer — pour employer cette expression bancaire dont je m'excuse — un "chèque en blanc"? Le dossier, à notre avis, ne semble pas mériter un tel blanc-seing.

17. D'abord, toute question de décolonisation est difficile. N'en pas convenir, c'est supposer que le Royaume-Uni n'a pas souffert de la libération des autres possessions devenues Etats indépendants. Que le Royaume-Uni ait perdu l'empire des Indes le cœur léger, tous nos efforts sont impuissants à nous en persuader. D'ailleurs, les difficultés qu'il s'est ingénié à laisser sur place sont bien le témoignage de l'espoir entretenu d'être vite rappelé en arbitre. Nous ne citerons aucune référence; nous ne donnerons aucun exemple. Nous voulons être compris; nous rejetons la polémique et nous en appelons à l'évidence.

18. Mais pourquoi veut-on nous persuader qu'il est plus difficile de décoloniser en Afrique qu'en Inde? Parce que, dans les territoires en cause, il existe un colonat blanc? Peut-être est-ce là qu'est la difficulté.

19. Cela me rappelle l'exemple que des confesseurs aimaient à citer chez nous à leurs ouailles pour leur inculquer la monstruosité du faux témoignage. "Supposez, leur disait-on, que vous vous permettiez de déplumer une volaille du haut d'une colline un jour d'orage. Supposer, à la suite de cette opération, que l'on vous enjoigne de restituer tout son plumage à l'oiseau; y arriveriez-vous?"

20. Le colonat blanc est minoritaire. Du fait de la colonisation, il a usé et abusé de tous les privilèges: accaparement des meilleures terres, confiscation de tous les droits, oppression, répression, détermination politique, etc...

21. La restitution intégrale? Mais aucun Africain n'y songe et ne vous l'a jamais demandée. Bien que juste dans son principe — nous nous en rendons compte — elle serait impossible en pratique. Ce qui est demandé, c'est un accommodement. Ce qu'il y a de monstrueux dans la colonisation, ce n'est pas le fait de quitter son sol natal pour d'autres lieux: c'est, une fois sur place, d'ériger en vérité révélée cette prétention selon laquelle l'originaire ne possède rien, est comparable à une bête sauvage, et que tout appartient désormais au nouvel arrivant, comme la terre au premier occupant. Car, à moins de lui dénier la qualité d'homme, qui est-ce donc que le premier occupant? Par une substitution inqualifiable, curieuse, abusive, c'est le dernier arrivé qui devient le premier occupant! Le comble, c'est que le Royaume-Uni conclut: "Faites-moi confiance et tout ira pour le mieux." Je ne prendrai qu'un exemple, celui de cette séance du 12 juin 1962 [1109^{ème} séance] où l'Assemblée examina la question de l'inscription éventuelle, à son ordre du jour, d'un point nouveau intitulé "Situation en Rhodésie".

22. Jamais, comme en ce jour-là, je n'ai entendu de déclaration aussi solennelle, aussi pathétique. Ecoutez-la, je vous en prie. C'est le représentant du Royaume-Uni qui parle:

"Dans tous les territoires où nous avons certaines responsabilités, le Royaume-Uni exerce son influence dans le sens de l'établissement de constitutions libérales. Je fais cette déclaration sans crainte d'être contredit. [Ibid., par. 29.]

"Je demande aux représentants qui s'intéressent de très près à la question, à ceux — et ils sont nombreux — qui ont la plus large expérience des méthodes et de la politique britanniques de réfléchir une fois de plus avant d'inviter l'Assemblée générale à prendre la responsabilité d'instituer un débat qui pourrait faire beaucoup de mal. [Ibid., par. 29.]

"Je demande instamment à l'Assemblée de prendre acte de la déclaration que je viens de faire, d'y réfléchir et, en conséquence, de décider de ne pas adopter, maintenant, la recommandation du Bureau." [Ibid., par. 30.]

23. Après le vote, dans cette même assemblée, le 31 octobre 1962, de la résolution que vous savez sur les Rhodésies [résolution 1760 (XVII)], pouvons-nous faire confiance à la parole donnée par la Grande-Bretagne? Je vous laisse juges. Chacun se souvient que le représentant de la Grande-Bretagne nous avait avoué que le processus constitutionnel que nous décrivions ici n'aurait pas lieu, que les élections n'auraient pas lieu avant le printemps 1963, etc.

Chacun se souvient aussi, en fin de compte, de la course contre la montre qui s'est livrée dans cet honorable hémicycle afin de parvenir à l'adoption d'un texte avant 18 heures (heure locale), c'est-à-dire 0 heure à Salisbury. On est donc, concrètement, le résultat de cette influence dont se targuait le délégué de la Grande-Bretagne et au nom de laquelle il nous adjurait de faire confiance?

24. Le délégué de la Grande-Bretagne, le 12 juin 1962 [1109ème séance], avait fait montre de ce grand talent devant lequel nous sommes pleins d'admiration et auquel nous rendons hommage. Mais le talent a ses barrières, qui sont les faits.

25. Certes, la Grande-Bretagne, comme elle le dit elle-même, peut se vanter de grands mérites en matière de décolonisation. Elle peut citer, comme elle l'a fait hier [1175ème séance], une liste impressionnante de pays. Nous le lui concédons volontiers, encore que, dans le fond, nous ne soyons peut-être pas complètement d'accord. Chacun, en cette matière, a sa propre conviction.

26. Nous croyons toutefois que c'est une raison supplémentaire et urgente de décoloniser en Afrique aussi. De grâce, que la Grande-Bretagne ne s'endorme pas sur ses lauriers; n'est-ce pas Francis Bacon qui l'en avertit, quand il écrit, avec ce flair commercial bien britannique: "La gloire ressemble au marché: parfois, quand vous y restez quelque temps, les prix baissent."

27. Je m'adresserai ensuite au Portugal. Avec lui, le dialogue est toujours très difficile, au risque de se réduire, comme au cours d'un récent procès judiciaire retentissant, à un monologue du juge d'instruction ou du procureur général, encore que je ne me sente pas la capacité de tenir le rôle de l'un ou l'autre de ces hauts magistrats.

28. Pour le Portugal, donc, il n'y a pas de colonies. Ce sont des provinces d'outre-mer, rattachées à la République par une constitution sacro-sainte octroyée par l'Acropole moderne qu'est le Portugal métropolitain.

29. Dans un monde où gagne "l'hérésie libératrice", Lisbonne a supplanté tous autres lieux saints dans la détermination et la prédétermination du destin d'autres peuples: Angola, Mozambique, Cap-Vert, etc. Ces territoires sont représentés au Parlement métropolitain. Ils votent. Certains de leurs autochtones, la minorité, s'ils en sont jugés dignes, en remplissant certaines conditions, peuvent devenir "assimilados". C'est, d'après le Portugal, l'émancipation idéale.

30. Nous avons entendu ici le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Portugal, intervenant à la fin de la discussion générale [1155ème séance]. Nous nous attendions, à des informations sur les intentions de son gouvernement et les mesures qu'il entend mettre en œuvre pour décoloniser. De cela, rien du tout. Qu'avons-nous entendu? Des comparaisons désobligeantes à l'égard de nos républiques, un alignement d'éléments statistiques dont un grand penseur moderne a dit que c'est la troisième forme du mensonge.

31. Nous avons en outre, à propos de Goa et des autres possessions anciennement portugaises, assisté à une longue lamentation sur l'une des plus grandes calamités qui, paraît-il, puissent s'abattre sur un être humain: perdre la citoyenneté portugaise.

32. Nous prendrons comme référence le Brésil, cette terre d'avenir qui respire l'espoir et la prospérité. Si toutes ses possibilités actuelles proviennent du fait qu'il a brisé les chaînes portugaises, alors, de grand cœur, nous disons: "Bonne chance aussi à Goa et aux autres colonies".

33. Réfuter les théories erronées du Portugal? A quoi bon! L'opinion mondiale en a fait abondamment justice. Ce qui nous afflige, après les démonstrations si brillantes que les différentes délégations se sont ingéniées depuis à produire, c'est le sentiment d'une idée fixe qui semble s'être emparée des Portugais. J'entends bien les milieux dirigeants portugais. Cette idée consiste à nous vanter les vertus de l'assimilation, cette assimilation dépassée, périmée, pour ne pas dire plus. Ainsi ne nous reste-t-il plus qu'à déplorer, avec Bossuet: "Le plus grand dérèglement de l'esprit, c'est de croire les choses parce qu'on veut qu'elles soient, et non parce qu'on a vu qu'elles sont en effet 2/."

34. Pourtant, dans son comportement interne et politique, le Portugal ne croit même pas que les choses soient si bien. Nous n'en voulons pour preuve que cette instabilité constitutionnelle, ce besoin de réadaptation qu'il s'efforce de satisfaire périodiquement, au fur et à mesure que nous énonçons ici son anachronisme et surtout au fur et à mesure que les populations intéressées manifestent bruyamment ou brutalement leur impatience. N'est-il donc pas temps de rompre avec tout ce passé de louvoiements, de temporisation, de mesures fragmentaires, pour voir enfin où est la vraie voie, celle de l'avenir, qui débouche sur l'amitié, l'entente durable et la vraie fraternité?

35. Se réfugier, en matière de décolonisation, dans cette sorte de manie tendant à la perfectibilité constitutionnelle, ce n'est pas régler le problème; c'est, comme l'a si bien dépeint Dante, se mettre dans la position de la Florence décadente; écoutez plutôt:

"Combien de fois, pour ne parler que de ces temps-ci, tu as changé d'institutions, de monnaie, de magistrature, de mœurs, et renouvelé les membres de ta Cité! Si tu as quelque souvenir de tes désastres et quelque sens, tu verras que tu ressembles à cette malade qui ne peut trouver de repos sur sa couche et qui tâche d'apaiser sa douleur en changeant d'attitude." (La Divine Comédie, liv. II, ch. VI).

36. Aussi, la refonte continue du statut des Africains ne trompe que le Portugal lui-même. Personne n'y croit, ni les populations intéressées, ni les Nations Unies.

37. Enfin, venons-en à l'Afrique du Sud. Là, il n'est, comme l'on dit, pire sourd que celui qui ne veut pas entendre. Je ne serais pas sincère si je ne voulais évoquer que l'affaire du Sud-Ouest africain qui, comme chacun sait, est un territoire sous mandat et que l'Union sud-africaine veut soustraire à la compétence de cette communauté internationale, hier Société des Nations, aujourd'hui Nations Unies. Peu importe le vocable, car c'est grâce à lui qu'avec la complicité de la Grande-Bretagne cette Afrique du Sud a aujourd'hui juridiction sur le Sud-Ouest africain.

38. Sans être juriste, je voudrais écarter d'un mot toute prétention de l'Afrique du Sud sur le Sud-Ouest africain. Y a-t-il jamais eu, en matière de droit privé, appropriation d'un legs en tutelle? On sait toute la rigueur de la loi sur le statut de la tutelle. Or, la majorité en l'occurrence ne peut être que l'indépendance, tout mandat perpétuel ou minorité perpétuelle étant à écarter systématiquement.

39. En outre, le tuteur ne peut pas arguer de l'absence de majorité; s'agissant de pays, nous ne voyons pas le fondement juridique qui peut autoriser l'Afrique du Sud à intégrer le Sud-Ouest africain. Là comme ailleurs et plus qu'ailleurs le principe de l'autodétermination doit être appliqué. La consultation impartiale de la population est indispensable.

40. Le Mandat à nos yeux demeure. Les Nations Unies ne peuvent qu'être subrogées dans les droits de la Société des Nations. Le domaine de Genève et la Cour internationale de Justice en sont les plus vivants témoignages.

41. Le devoir des Nations Unies en l'occurrence, c'est seulement, comme en droit privé, de déclarer la déchéance du Mandat de l'Afrique du Sud — même unilatéralement — le mandat ayant toujours ce droit dès lors que les termes du mandat ne sont plus respectés. Sans préjuger sa décision, nous sommes d'ailleurs certains que la Cour internationale de Justice prononcera son jugement en ce sens.

42. Mais là ne s'arrête pas et ne s'arrêtera jamais notre contentieux avec l'Afrique du Sud: il y a encore l'apartheid. Pour nous, c'est aussi une question coloniale. Nous affirmons et réaffirmons que le sol de l'Afrique du Sud appartient d'abord et en premier lieu aux véritables originaires qui ne sauraient être les seuls immigrants européens du XVIII^e siècle. Avant eux cette partie du monde était habitée par les Bantous. La force, la spoliation ont établi une situation de fait que nous enregistrons sans comprendre. Nous comprenons encore moins et d'autant moins que les derniers venus confisquent à leur bénéfice exclusif tous les droits au détriment des premiers occupants.

43. Si les Africains paient aujourd'hui les frais de leur hospitalité légendaire, la "reconnaissance du ventre" exige que l'on partage au moins tout en commun. Que, si l'on admet que les derniers venus ont acquis eux aussi droit de cité sur une terre qui n'avait jamais été la leur, les citoyens originaires et naturels ne soient point frustrés.

44. Nous raisonnons là dans les généralités, en nous conformant à notre indication du début. Nous ne voulons pas descendre à la critique des faits, qui sont en eux-mêmes accablants pour les puissances coloniales et les minorités impérialistes.

45. L'Afrique du Sud nous dit — et c'est M. Louw lui-même qui, répondant au représentant des Etats-Unis, le proclamait à cette tribune le 6 novembre 1962 [1165^e séance]:

"... en ce qui nous concerne, dans une situation où la population de race blanche" — et nous soulignons ce mot — "est incontestablement en minorité, nous sommes poussés naturellement par la volonté de survivre. Il en aurait été exactement de même si, dans ce pays-ci, avec une population d'environ 180 millions d'habitants, il y avait eu la même proportion entre les noirs et les blancs qu'en Afrique du Sud; dans cette hypothèse, il y aurait ici 30 ou 40 millions de blancs contre 140 millions de noirs et, dans de telles conditions, les blancs seraient poussés naturellement par la même volonté de survivre. Telle était la comparaison que je faisais. Pour rétablir les choses, il fallait que je monte à cette tribune pour dissiper ce qui a été certainement ce matin un malentendu de la part du représentant des Etats-Unis". [Ibid.]

46. Je laisse évidemment à son auteur cette affirmation sensationnelle selon laquelle "lorsqu'une population blanche est sans aucun doute en minorité, elle ressent un désir naturel de survivre".

47. Je laisse encore à M. Louw tout l'honneur d'affirmer que les Etats-Unis se seraient comportés de la même façon que l'Afrique du Sud s'ils avaient compté une majorité de noirs contre une minorité de blancs dans la même proportion.

48. Je pose seulement la question: pourquoi faut-il qu'une population minoritaire éprouve le besoin de survivre, alors que, dirigeante, elle ne court aucun risque, aucun danger?

49. Je laisse également tout le sens de discrimination raciale contenu dans l'expression "minorité blanche".

50. Je dois aussi dénoncer toute l'hypocrisie que cache l'euphémisme "éprouver le besoin de survivre" que M. Louw a voulu elliptique à dessein. Eprouver le besoin de survivre? En Afrique du Sud, chacun l'a compris, c'est parquer les populations majoritaires, les exploiter, les brimer à tous les points de vue, en un mot, leur dénier tout droit d'être des hommes.

51. Mais peut-on valablement prendre cela comme critère de rapports humains entre les communautés de ce monde qui se dit civilisé? N'est-ce pas là une monstruosité, un singulier retour en arrière? Quelle différence y trouver avec les plus purs canons de la doctrine nazie contre le régime duquel l'Afrique du Sud peut avoir quelque fierté de s'être battue? Ses morts, qui sont aussi nos morts — car les martyrs pour la liberté et le droit appartiennent à l'humanité entière — doivent éprouver quelque honte dans leur tombe de voir leur Etat honorer ce qu'ils ont combattu jusqu'à consentir le sacrifice suprême de leur vie.

52. Passons à l'Espagne. Son éminent représentant, M. de Lequerica, dans un élan spontané du cœur, s'est écrié ici le 5 octobre 1962 [1143^e séance], saluant, au cours du débat général, l'admission de nouveaux Membres:

"Quoi qu'on puisse penser de chaque cas en particulier, le mouvement dans son ensemble est une cause de joie et d'espoir. Nous assistons à une floraison printanière de peuples et de nations, notamment sur le continent africain, et il n'est que juste de louer la hauteur de vues et le sens de l'époque avec lesquels les anciens Etats qui avaient porté à d'autres terres les meilleurs éléments des vieilles cultures et civilisations ont favorisé l'évolution dont témoignent tant de joyeux avènements." [Ibid., par. 99.]

53. Et, comme en une espèce de remords, il regretta l'absence de la participation de l'Espagne à ce festival de libération:

"En Amérique, lors de la découverte et pendant trois siècles encore, les Espagnols ont donné l'exemple à bien des égards, et notamment sur le plan de l'émancipation. Quand l'heure de l'Afrique est venue, au milieu du XIXème siècle, le rôle de l'Espagne a été beaucoup moins important. Nous n'avons participé que très peu à l'épopée africaine du XIXème et du XXème siècle. D'autres peuples ont recueilli le profit et la gloire..." (Ibid., par. 134.)

54. Non, sincèrement, nous ne croyons pas que l'Espagne ait à se plaindre. Elle peut, elle doit, que dis-je, elle va y participer puisque M. de Lequerica a dit aussi:

"Nul ne peut nous empêcher de nous réjouir de cette floraison et de l'accession à la vie nationale de peuples dont les représentants ont parlé si souvent, non avec rancœur, mais avec reconnaissance de ceux qui, au cours de l'histoire, ont contribué à leur progrès matériel et moral." (Ibid., par. 101.)

55. Voilà que nous sommes d'accord! Ces paroles, je les dédie respectueusement au général Franco et à son gouvernement. Oui, il faut que personne ne se prive de cette joie! C'est lieu d'entonner comme à l'église: Laetamini, Laetamini! Réjouissez-vous! Peuples de Rio de Oro, de la Guinée équatoriale et de Fernando Póo! L'Espagne aussi veut participer "à cette joie de voir fleurir ceux qui naissent à la vie nationale". Vous n'aurez, j'en suis sûr, j'en suis certain, que des paroles non d'amertume, mais bien de reconnaissance à l'égard de l'Espagne!

56. La théorie des provinces d'outre-mer avec représentation dans les parlements métropolitains? Mais qui donc peut y ajouter quelque sérieux? Décidément l'histoire est un éternel recommencement. Bien naïfs étions-nous qui croyions ces théories usées et périmées!

57. Enfin deux brèves réflexions sur les deux Iriens, occidental et oriental. Que l'on sache bien que, pour le premier — c'est-à-dire l'Irien occidental — la question n'est pas résolue. L'Assemblée générale et la patrie de M. Ellsworth Bunker conservent une responsabilité déterminante devant Dieu et devant l'histoire. Ici même, nous avons pris date. Le New York Times du 13 novembre a publié une information sur la réaction parfaitement légitime — et nous l'approuvons complètement — de l'Administrateur des Nations Unies contre les indications de la presse indonésienne relatant des velléités d'annexion pure et simple de l'Irien occidental par l'Indonésie. Nous souhaitons que les alarmes du New York Times ne soient pas fondées. Si elles l'étaient, ce serait le coup de force et une agression ouverte contre les Nations Unies. Une fois encore, nous supplions que l'on respecte le processus de l'accord soumis à l'approbation de l'Assemblée générale. Le contraire serait simplement de la forfaiture.

58. En ce qui concerne l'Irien oriental, nous pouvons être édifiés. Nous avons écouté avec attention la semaine passée [1173ème séance] le représentant de l'Australie dont la modération réfléchie a toujours forcé le respect. Il nous a, en bref, mis en garde contre la hâte, en insistant sur la différence des problèmes entre les territoires. Il a mis l'accent sur les difficultés rencontrées, voire l'impossibilité d'accorder rapidement l'indépendance.

59. Nous répondons que tout cela n'est pas nouveau. Nous l'avons également entendu à propos de nos propres pays. Au reste, tout cela est périmé et dépassé. Comment en effet concilier cette prudence tardive, l'acceptation de faire bénéficier tous les hommes du droit à l'autodétermination, et le vote, au cours des deux dernières sessions, de deux résolutions, la 1514 (XV) et la 1654 (XVI), qui ont balayé tous les préalables possibles? Nous avouons humblement que nous ne comprenons pas la double attitude des puissances administrantes qui votent allègrement un texte et le déclarent ensuite inapplicable. N'avons-nous pas entendu le même représentant de l'Australie écarter jusqu'à toute idée de fixation de date?

60. Sans prendre parti sur cette question précise, nous nous demandons quand finalement les puissances administrantes jugeront que le moment opportun a sonné définitivement pour décoloniser. Nous craignons renvois sur renvois qui ne soient qu'un renvoi pur et simple aux calendes dites grecques.

61. J'ai exprimé une double inquiétude au début de cet exposé. Quelle sera la conclusion de ce débat? L'honneur de l'Organisation s'y trouve engagé, la paix dans les territoires aussi. Ma délégation estime que l'Assemblée s'est, par deux fois, engagée dans un sens qui ne souffre plus de recul. Je me souviens encore de l'enthousiasme qui souleva cet hémicycle en cette séance historique du 14 décembre 1960 [947ème séance] où nous adoptâmes ensemble la résolution 1514 (XV). Ce que nous nous sommes plu à y voir, ce n'est pas un acte fortuit, un produit des circonstances qu'engendre un moment d'intense émotion collective, un geste entre la propagande et la diplomatie. Au contraire, nous y avons décelé une orientation de fond réfléchie et irréversible, de même portée hautement humanitaire que la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme que cette résolution rappelle et reprend dans le paragraphe 1 de son dispositif. Et c'est là que la conclusion de nos débats engage la paix dans les territoires encore dépendants. Les populations qui attendent et espèrent en fondant leur espoir sur cette organisation seraient déçues si nous semblions revenir en arrière au cours de cette délibération. Il ne leur resterait plus que la ressource qu'engendre le désespoir. J'écarte d'avance une telle éventualité.

62. Je me suis volontairement abstenu d'examiner la situation dans les territoires de peur de réveiller certaines susceptibilités. Nous avons essayé de nous astreindre à demeurer sur les crêtes. Nous n'avons voulu échanger que des considérations d'ordre général. Nous croyons avoir réfuté les arguments présentés par la défense du statu quo, c'est-à-dire la colonisation.

63. Nous ne saurions mieux faire que d'emprunter, à titre de conclusion, cette adjuration du représentant de la France, M. Kosciuszko-Morizet, à sir Edgar Whitehead sur la question de la Rhodésie. J'ai choisi les paroles d'un représentant de la France à cause des relations amicales qui unissent cette dernière aux pays encore administrés, à cause d'un passé récent aussi. J'ai surtout choisi M. Kosciuszko-Morizet, dont la carrière aux Nations Unies restera une référence et la connaissance des problèmes africains une autorité.

64. Voici ce qu'à travers sir Edgar Whitehead il conseillait à toutes les vieilles gloires du monde qui se veulent encore coloniales:

"Dépêchez-vous, Monsieur Whitehead;" — Messieurs Whitehead du monde entier — "il n'est pas vrai que vous ayez devant vous tout le temps dont vous croyez pouvoir encore disposer. Il n'est pas vrai que, quelque spécifique que soit la question de Rhodésie, elle puisse être réglée en dehors du contexte international, en dehors du contexte mondial, en quelque sorte se traiter en vase clos. Là peut-être, l'audace est la sagesse suprême." [1163ème séance, par. 14.]

65. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Espagne pour exercer son droit de réponse.

66. M. DE LEQUERICA (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Je vais reprendre une partie de ce que vient de dire, en termes nobles et clairs qui font honneur à sa délégation, le représentant du Cameroun. Je parlerai aussi de ce qu'ont dit en termes courtois d'autres représentants, notamment celui du Gabon. J'ai généralement observé que tous les pays africains qui sont certainement intéressés par ces problèmes se sont prononcés d'une façon remarquablement modérée et ont fait preuve de compréhension à l'égard de l'Espagne et de sa délégation à l'Assemblée, au cours des rares allusions dont nous avons été l'objet. Je ne parle évidemment pas d'autres pays non africains, pour qui certains débats ne servent que de prétextes pour provoquer des perturbations, pour échanger des injures et porter des accusations dénuées de tout fondement. Je ne veux en aucune façon m'en occuper.

67. Pour préciser les idées exposées par le représentant du Cameroun, je dirai en termes concrets, pour mieux définir mes intentions, que, lors de la réunion de la Commission économique pour l'Afrique qui s'est tenue à Addis-Abéba en février 1961, ma délégation n'avait pas reçu à temps les instructions du Gouvernement espagnol destinées à son représentant; en raison de la résolution qui a été adoptée dans ces conditions, ma délégation a présenté au Conseil économique et social, à sa trente-quatrième session, la déclaration qui figure dans un document dont le Conseil a été saisi lors de sa réunion à Genève et dont il a fait état dans le rapport présenté à l'Assemblée générale [A/5203, par. 437].

68. Dans le document indiqué en premier lieu, il est dit textuellement ce qui suit:

"Ma délégation [la délégation espagnole] tient à déclarer maintenant que le Gouvernement espagnol est disposé à appliquer la résolution 1466 (XIV) de l'Assemblée et la résolution 24 (III) de la Commission économique pour l'Afrique.

"Le Gouvernement espagnol a collaboré et souhaite continuer de collaborer avec tous les organes des Nations Unies, en respectant scrupuleusement la lettre et l'esprit de la Charte. Cette politique, fondée sur les principes de la solidarité internationale et que l'on a pu constater tout récemment au sein d'autres organes des Nations Unies, l'amène aujourd'hui à préciser sa position de manière à éviter tout malentendu.

"Ma délégation demande donc au Conseil économique et social de considérer, lorsqu'il adoptera une résolution définitive sur cette question, que la position de l'Espagne ne diffère en rien de celle des pays européens visés aux paragraphes 2 et 3 du dispositif de la résolution 42 (IV) ... 3/

69. D'autre part, j'ajouterai que l'Espagne se félicite de ce que les autochtones aient unanimement reconnu la façon humaine et progressiste selon laquelle elle a accompli son œuvre de collaboration avec la population autochtone de l'Afrique équatoriale en vue d'assurer le progrès de cette population et elle se plaît à constater l'esprit d'amitié et de coexistence qui règne dans cette région.

70. Le Sous-Secrétaire à la Présidence vient de se rendre dans les territoires espagnols d'Afrique équatoriale. Je trouve reproduites, dans le journal ABC de Madrid du 21 octobre 1962, les paroles qu'il a prononcées, à Santa Isabel de Fernando Póo, en Afrique même. Le Ministre du Gouvernement espagnol a déclaré:

"Du point de vue économique, ces territoires ne présentent aucun intérêt pour l'Espagne, mais il y a quelque chose qui l'emporte sur les intérêts matériels: la conscience du devoir à accomplir. Si l'Espagne adoptait la position commode qui consiste à s'éviter des complications et à abandonner ces territoires à leur sort, comme ils ne peuvent pas se suffire à eux-mêmes, ces territoires seraient la proie des appétits étrangers et leurs habitants risqueraient de connaître les horreurs du communisme." Le Ministre a ajouté que "nous, Espagnols, nous sommes, plus que tout autre peuple, respectueux de l'autodétermination, mais de l'autodétermination authentique".

71. De même, parlant de l'Afrique équatoriale espagnole — et je signale spécialement ces paroles au représentant du Cameroun et à ceux d'autres pays africains qui se sont occupés de la question, parce que ces paroles définissent une attitude —, le Ministre a déclaré:

"Si, en raison de leur éloignement et de leurs caractéristiques humaines particulières, les habitants désiraient un jour modifier leur statut actuel et si une majorité devait se prononcer dans ce sens, l'Espagne ne créerait aucun obstacle pour convenir avec ces provinces de leur avenir."

72. M. POLIANYCHKO (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) [traduit du russe]: Le 23 septembre 1960 [869ème séance] de cette salle sont parvenus au monde entier les mots: "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". C'est le titre donné par le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, à ce document historique dans lequel s'exprimait la volonté unanime des peuples de notre planète: "mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations".

73. Le 27 novembre 1961, l'Assemblée générale, après débat sur la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration, a adopté la résolution 1654 (XVI) demandant aux Etats intéressés "d'agir sans plus tarder afin d'assurer scrupuleusement l'application et la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration". L'Assemblée générale a décidé de créer un Comité spécial chargé, au nom de l'Organisation, d'étudier les progrès réalisés et la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre et de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations à ce sujet. Ainsi, l'Assemblée générale a fait un pas important, du point de vue des efforts pratiques de l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration.

74. Le rapport du Comité spécial présenté à notre examen [A/5238] et les propositions et recommandations qu'il contient méritent, selon la délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine, d'être approuvées. Le Comité a eu raison de concentrer présentement son attention sur les territoires non autonomes régis par les principaux Etats coloniaux. Evidemment, cela ne signifie nullement que l'Organisation se désintéresse du sort des populations qui vivent dans d'autres possessions coloniales.

75. Depuis la proclamation de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)], presque deux années se sont écoulées. Pendant cette période, le colonialisme a subi de nouveaux coups mortels et la grande cause de la liberté a vu s'élargir ses limites. Mais les buts poursuivis par la Déclaration ne sont pas encore atteints.

76. Je rappelle le paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

77. La tâche est claire et parfaitement déterminée. Mais les puissances coloniales responsables des territoires sous tutelle et non autonomes se dérobent par tous les moyens à la solution de ce problème. Tout d'abord, elles ignorent les exigences de la Déclaration suivant lesquelles des mesures immédiates doivent être prises pour assurer la décolonisation des peuples encore asservis; là où la pression des événements oblige les colonialistes à céder du terrain, ils ont recours à toute sorte de subterfuges pour barrer à ces peuples la voie vers la liberté et l'indépendance réelles.

78. Le résultat est que plus de 50 millions de personnes, en Afrique, en Asie, en Amérique latine et en Océanie, restent sous la domination des colonialistes anglais, portugais, espagnols, américains, sud-africains, etc.

79. Quand on lit les comptes rendus des séances du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept et les rapports des autres comités et commissions qui s'occupent des territoires colonisés, quand on prend connaissance des "lois" publiées par les colonialistes de l'Afrique du Sud, de l'Angola, de la Rhodésie du Sud, de la Rhodésie du Nord, du Betchouanaland, du Mozambique, l'esprit se refuse à croire que les faits évoqués puissent se produire dans la seconde moitié du XXème siècle.

80. Le Portugal administre la colonie du Mozambique depuis 456 ans. Les succès des "civilisateurs" portugais sont stupéfiants: le Mozambique s'est transformé en un véritable empire de l'arbitraire, de l'ignorance et de la terreur.

81. Les autochtones du Mozambique sont divisés en deux groupes dont l'un est dit "population non civilisée" et l'autre "population assimilée". Les "non-civilisés" représentent 99,9 p. 100 de la population autochtone. Ils sont privés de tous droits politiques, économiques et sociaux. Les partis politiques, les syndicats, les coopératives et autres sociétés sont interdits. Tout est interdit au noir du Mozambique, sauf le droit d'être esclave chez les racistes blancs qui représentent 1 p. 100 de la population du pays.

82. Les colonisateurs se sont approprié les trois quarts de toutes les terres arables. Privant ainsi les Africains de leurs moyens d'existence, ils en ont fait leurs esclaves qu'ils exploitent sans merci et qu'ils vendent en outre par centaines de milliers, comme du bétail, pour aller travailler dans les mines de l'Afrique du Sud et de la Rhodésie du Sud.

83. La population du Mozambique végète dans la misère et l'analphabétisme. Seule, une quantité négligeable — quelque 0,8 p. 100 de la population autochtone — sait lire et écrire. Il n'y a pratiquement pas de soins médicaux pour les Africains. Les richesses du pays, minéral de fer, sucre, wolfram, coton, cuivre, or et minéraux radio-actifs, sont exportés en Europe et en Amérique. Avec l'aide des colonisateurs portugais se produit ainsi un troc typique de richesses contre misères en quantités équivalentes.

84. Aux exigences des populations du Mozambique, de l'Angola et d'autres colonies tendant à l'octroi immédiat de la liberté et de l'indépendance, le Portugal de Salazar répond par la terreur et les opérations militaires. Plus la conscience nationale s'accroît et plus la lutte pour la libération nationale des peuples subjugués se développe, plus la politique du Portugal se fait féroce et sanglante dans les colonies qu'il administre. En Angola, le Portugal mène une guerre d'extermination contre la population insurgée, en utilisant tous les types d'armement qu'il reçoit de ses alliés de l'OTAN, le Royaume-Uni et les Etats-Unis.

85. Les représentants du dictateur fasciste Salazar nous déclarent ici qu'en étudiant la question de l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance aux colonies portugaises l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'ingère illégalement dans "les affaires intérieures" du Portugal, sous prétexte qu'en 1951 ces colonies ont été déclarées "provinces portugaises d'outre-mer".

86. Ce truquage juridique des colonisateurs ne peut tromper personne. Les peuples des colonies ne prendront jamais les fictions juridiques des colonisateurs pour une liberté réelle. Dans leur lutte courageuse, ils s'appuient sur le seul droit légitime, le droit de n'importe quel peuple à vivre dans la liberté et l'indépendance. Si on ne donne pas à ces peuples le droit à une vie indépendante, le droit de choisir leur régime politique et social, d'organiser leur vie sur leur propre sol comme ils l'entendent, alors ils lutteront pour le conquérir, si nombreuses que puissent être les victimes qu'ils auront à porter sur l'autel de la liberté.

87. La grande bataille pour l'indépendance de son pays qu'a livrée le petit mais héroïque et courageux peuple algérien en est une preuve convaincante. Aujourd'hui, ce sont les champions de la liberté de l'Angola et de l'Oman qui nous apportent cette preuve. L'homme du XXème siècle ne peut pas vivre à genoux et il n'y consentira pas. Plus les colonisateurs résisteront à cette pression libératrice des peuples subjugués, plus sévère sera la sanction de l'histoire et plus lourd le châtiment qui s'abattra sur la tête des oppresseurs.

88. En dépit de tous les efforts des Nations Unies, le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud refuse de coopérer à la mise en œuvre des mesures destinées à l'octroi de l'indépendance à la population du Sud-Ouest africain. Bien au contraire, ce gouvernement a repoussé unilatéralement les accords internationaux concernant ce territoire; il foule grossièrement aux pieds les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies et toutes les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale concernant le Sud-Ouest africain. Dans cette région, le pouvoir se trouve entièrement entre les mains d'une insignifiante poignée de colons blancs qui applique ouvertement la théorie fasciste et raciste de l'apartheid, laquelle a été proclamée doctrine gouvernementale officielle de l'Afrique du Sud. La politique de l'apartheid confirme la tutelle perpétuelle des blancs sur les populations autochtones vouées à vivre dans l'analphabétisme et l'esclavage.

89. Toute l'existence de l'Africain, littéralement chacun de ses pas sont réglementés par des lois et des ordonnances racistes. L'Africain n'a même pas le droit de se déplacer librement dans son propre pays, de circuler d'une localité à l'autre. Conformément à la loi sur les activités subversives, toute protestation contre la ségrégation raciale, toute demande d'amélioration des conditions de travail peuvent être considérées comme des crimes contre l'Etat, entraînant un emprisonnement de cinq ans et davantage et même la peine de mort.

90. Il est significatif que le chef de l'administration pénitentiaire est le Commissaire général aux affaires indigènes et qu'il occupe en même temps les postes de président des services agricoles et fiscaux, de président de l'administration des mines de diamant et du Conseil pour les affaires de sociétés privées, de directeur du département des recettes de l'Etat, etc. C'est donc un gardien de prison qui dirige les activités les plus importantes de la vie intérieure du pays. Cela n'est pas pour surprendre, car l'Afrique du Sud n'est, au fond, qu'une vaste prison pour la population noire.

91. Les racistes de l'Afrique du Sud préparent toute la population blanche à la guerre, équiper l'armée d'engins de guerre modernes afin de pouvoir noyer dans le sang le mouvement croissant de libération nationale des Africains.

92. Face à ce défi lancé ouvertement par les racistes de l'Afrique du Sud, le moment est venu de réagir par des mesures décisives afin de dégriser ces colonisateurs qui ne connaissent plus de bornes et de mettre un terme aux souffrances du peuple du Sud-Ouest africain.

93. La délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine appuie entièrement la proposition tendant à retirer au gouvernement Verwoerd le mandat sur le Sud-Ouest africain et visant à prendre des mesures décisives ayant pour but d'octroyer l'indépendance à ce territoire.

94. Nous, qui avons adopté la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, n'avons pas le droit de laisser se dévaluer nos décisions concernant les problèmes coloniaux. Nous ne pouvons rester indifférents au fait que les décisions des Nations Unies sont effrontément méconnues par les colonisateurs et que les peuples en lutte peuvent perdre confiance en l'efficacité de l'Organisation. Il vient un jour où aux paroles, même les plus nobles, si elles ne sont pas prises en considération, on doit préférer des actes résolus.

95. Ceux-ci sont d'autant plus nécessaires que dans la partie sud du continent africain est en train de se former une alliance politico-militaire puissante constituée par les colonialistes de l'Afrique du Sud, du Portugal et de la Rhodésie. Les buts visés par ce groupement créent une menace pour l'avenir des peuples africains et représentent un foyer potentiel de danger de guerre dans le monde.

96. Ce n'est un secret pour personne que l'entente Welenski, Whitehead, Verwoerd et Salazar trouve des appuis auprès de l'OTAN et surtout auprès du Royaume-Uni et des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, dont les intérêts économiques et politiques dans cette région sont bien connus de tous.

97. Par exemple, on ne peut pas ignorer le fait que, jusqu'à présent, la promesse du Royaume-Uni de transférer le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland à l'Afrique du Sud a toujours force juridique. Sur ces territoires, le pouvoir appartient aux colons blancs — sujets britanniques et sud-africains. Le Gouvernement britannique ne prend aucune mesure en vue de l'octroi de l'indépendance à ces territoires, tandis que les racistes de l'Afrique du Sud, dans la Constitution de 1961, se sont hâtés de confirmer leurs prétentions sur le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland.

98. Nous appuyons le projet de résolution [A/5238, chap. V, par. 214] du Comité spécial où il est déclaré "que toute tentative faite pour annexer le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland... sera considérée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies comme un acte d'agression qui viole la Charte" et où l'on réaffirme "le droit inaliénable [des peuples de ces territoires] à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance".

99. Le Royaume-Uni demeure toujours le plus grand empire colonial. Le mouvement de libération nationale dans les colonies britanniques se trouve à différentes étapes de son développement, mais il ne fait aucun doute que tous les peuples des colonies désirent ardemment obtenir leur liberté et acquérir leur indépendance nationale. Ce désir rencontre toujours la même résistance opiniâtre de la part des colonisateurs britanniques.

100. Sous des prétextes divers, on renvoie à plus tard l'octroi de l'indépendance à la Guyane britannique, au Kenya, au Nyassaland et à Zanzibar. Dans ces pays où les éléments nationaux sont prêts dès aujourd'hui à assumer le pouvoir, les colonialistes appliquent leur devise favorite "diviser pour régner".

101. Le parti populaire progressiste de la Guyane britannique, dirigé par M. Jagan, actuel premier ministre du gouvernement local, a remporté des succès aux élections, à plusieurs reprises depuis 1953, malgré les manœuvres de la Puissance administrante. Cependant, la politique du parti dirigeant n'ayant pas l'heur de plaire au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, ce dernier s'efforce par tous les moyens de remettre à plus tard l'octroi de l'indépendance à la Guyane britannique, et, en même temps, d'ébranler le parti populaire progressiste.

102. Prenant prétexte de certaines différences d'opinions entre les deux partis qui forment la base de la coalition gouvernementale, on temporise quant à l'octroi de l'indépendance à Zanzibar et Pemba, bien que les deux partis exigent la mise en œuvre immédiate du droit à l'autodétermination.

103. Conformément à la Constitution de 1960 pour le Nyassaland, chaque Africain élu au Conseil législatif représente plus de 120 000 habitants, alors qu'un membre du même Conseil, choisi d'après ce qu'on appelle la liste supérieure, c'est-à-dire une liste formée principalement d'électeurs blancs, ne représente que 800 personnes. Mais, notwithstanding ces conditions dites "démocratiques", le parti de la population africaine, le Malawi Congress Party, a remporté la victoire aux élections du mois d'août de l'an dernier.

104. Cependant, la Puissance administrante n'a encore pris aucune mesure effective pour mettre en œuvre la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, en ce qui concerne le Nyassaland. C'est l'administration coloniale du Royaume-Uni qui continue de régner. En dépit des vœux clairement exprimés par la population, le Nyassaland fait toujours partie d'une fédération artificiellement créée dans laquelle le pouvoir est aux mains du gouvernement raciste de Roy Welenski.

105. En ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Nord et la Rhodésie du Sud, les racistes blancs, avec l'appui et l'aide efficace du Royaume-Uni, ont établi un régime d'obscurantisme et de terreur qui diffère peu de celui du Mozambique ou de l'Afrique du Sud. Il est clair que les gouvernements de Roy Welenski et d'Edgar Whitehead suivent la même voie que celui de Verwoerd en Afrique du Sud.

106. Les titres des lois régissant la vie politique des Africains de la Rhodésie du Sud sont, à eux seuls, significatifs: loi sur l'ordre public, loi sur la détention préventive, loi sur les organisations illicites; loi sur le maintien de l'ordre public, etc.; toutes ces lois n'ont pas été promulguées dans un passé lointain, mais récemment, depuis deux ou trois ans. Elles sont la réponse des colonisateurs à la poussée du mouvement de libération nationale, aux exigences de la Déclaration sur l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance.

107. En dotant la Rhodésie du Sud d'une nouvelle constitution, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a déclaré qu'il transmettait au peuple toute la responsabilité concernant son avenir. Mais que comprend donc le peuple de la Rhodésie du Sud? Deux cent mille Européens auxquels cette constitution accorde tous les pleins pouvoirs, ou 3 millions d'Africains qui, par cette nouvelle manœuvre de la "démocratie" anglaise, se voient confirmés dans leur ancien état d'esclavage?

108. Tout cela montre qu'en changeant les méthodes d'administration coloniale le Gouvernement britannique s'efforce de dissimuler sa domination, sous une forme plus subtile de dépendance et de soumission de la colonie à la métropole.

109. En fait, la moelle même de toute domination coloniale, c'est l'exploitation économique, le pillage économique des colonies. Si les colonialistes n'entendent pas quitter ces territoires, c'est précisément parce qu'ils en retirent des richesses considérables et qu'ils exploitent le travail et les biens des autres peuples. Jamais le cas ne s'est présenté qu'ils renoncent volontairement et sans lutte à la domination coloniale. S'ils sont contraints de quitter les colonies, s'ils sont dans l'obligation d'accorder à ces populations l'indépendance politique, ils s'efforcent alors de les lier par des conventions et accords inégaux, afin de s'assurer et de consolider des positions économiques, c'est-à-dire s'assurer la poursuite de leur exploitation économique.

110. Les accords et conventions de ce genre sont, pour les colonialistes et les monopoles internationaux, une ligne de repli qui garantit le maintien de la domination impérialiste et l'asservissement économique des peuples d'autres pays. Il faut qu'au stade actuel de notre examen de la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration l'Assemblée générale décide que la mise en œuvre logique du principe de l'autodétermination des peuples est incompatible avec une pratique qui consiste à imposer des relations et accords inégaux entre Etats.

111. Saisis de crainte pour leurs empires coloniaux qui craquent à toutes les coutures, les puissances coloniales unissent leurs efforts pour lutter contre le mouvement croissant de libération nationale. On a mis en place au service du colonialisme un système de blocs militaires: OTAN, CENTO, OTASE. Dans le cadre des alliances militaires, on se cotise pour une caution mutuelle entre colonialistes en vue d'étouffer par la force des armes tout mouvement de libération nationale en Afrique, en Asie, en Amérique latine.

112. Des Etats comme le Portugal, l'Espagne, l'Afrique du Sud n'auraient pu résister aux mouvements de libération nationale des peuples s'ils n'avaient profité d'une large aide économique et militaire de leurs puissants alliés des blocs militaires, avant tout des Etats-Unis d'Amérique et du Royaume-Uni, et aussi de l'Allemagne occidentale, de la France, etc. Cette aide et cet appui sont conditionnés par les intérêts communs qu'ont les puissants monopoles internationaux, et l'impérialisme international dirigé par les Etats-Unis, à l'exploitation économique et la soumission politique d'autres peuples.

113. La liquidation du colonialisme suppose la mise en œuvre logique et totale du droit des peuples à l'autodétermination, le transfert à ces peuples d'une souveraineté pleine et entière qui ne doit pas être limitée par des accords inégaux, qu'ils soient économiques, militaires ou politiques.

114. Pour terminer, je tiens à dire quelques mots à propos des tentatives faites par certains orateurs pour faire dévier l'Assemblée de la question que nous traitons. Les représentants du Royaume-Uni et du Canada se sont montrés particulièrement empressés à cet égard; ils ont repris, en duo, le vieux refrain de la calomnie antisoviétique. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a parlé des traits communs de la politique coloniale de l'impérialisme anglais et de la Russie tsariste. Certes, il y a des points communs, mais la politique de l'Union soviétique en matière de nationalité, y compris la Transcaucasie et l'Asie centrale et dont M. Dean a voulu se faire le défenseur mal venu, n'a rien à voir avec la politique du tsarisme russe. Nous voudrions rappeler au représentant du Royaume-Uni qu'en 1917 le tsarisme a été détruit grâce aux efforts réunis des peuples de l'ancien empire russe et, avant tout, aux efforts des révolutionnaires russes eux-mêmes; cela, il faut bien le dire, en dépit de l'intervention armée de l'impérialisme international, y compris l'impérialisme anglais, qui, de toutes ses forces, a tenté de rétablir la prison tsariste des peuples.

115. M. Dean a versé des larmes de crocodile sur le sort du peuple d'Azerbaïdjan. Aujourd'hui, la République socialiste soviétique d'Azerbaïdjan est une des 15 républiques souveraines et égales en droits de l'Union soviétique, en même temps que la RSS d'Ukraine. On peut se permettre de demander au représentant du Royaume-Uni qui, en 1918, a fusillé les membres du premier gouvernement de la République socialiste soviétique d'Azerbaïdjan? Ce sont les interventionnistes anglais; par la force armée, ils ont essayé de soumettre à leur domination le peuple de l'Azerbaïdjan et les peuples de l'Asie centrale qui, avec le grand peuple russe, se sont soulevés, pendant la révolution d'Octobre, contre le joug tsariste.

116. Mais, ces tentatives des impérialistes ont complètement échoué et, aujourd'hui, les colonialistes anglais pleurent sur le passé, car ils n'ont pu se faire prendre à charge par les peuples de la Transcaucasie et de l'Asie centrale, comme ils l'ont fait pour les peuples du Kenya, de la Rhodésie, du Nyasaland et des autres possessions coloniales britanniques.

117. Sur les ruines de la Russie tsariste s'est créée une puissante union de peuples réellement libres, l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques. Je me permettrai de rappeler les paroles prononcées à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale par le chef du Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchchev:

"Le Gouvernement tsariste a appliqué dans les marches de la Russie une politique essentiellement coloniale qui ne différait guère de ce que l'on peut voir, à l'heure actuelle, dans les pays coloniaux. Ouzbeks, Kazakhs, Tadjiks et autres nationalités non russes étaient dédaigneusement catalogués comme "étrangers". Ils n'étaient pas considérés comme des hommes et étaient impitoyablement exploités. On fomentait parmi ces peuples la discorde, la haine et les guerres intestines, et l'Empire tsariste ne se maintenait que par la force de baïonnettes et par l'oppression. Lorsque les peuples d'Asie centrale et de Transcaucasie ont obtenu la liberté nationale et des droits égaux à ceux des autres peuples de la Russie, ils ont montré ce qu'ils pouvaient faire pour développer l'économie et la culture nationales.

"Le développement de notre pays a-t-il souffert du fait que ces peuples ont reçu le droit à l'indépendance et à l'autonomie? Notre pays multinational connaît-il la discorde et l'inimitié entre les populations, la désagrégation de l'Etat? Pas du tout, et la chose est impossible." [869^{ème} séance, par. 207 et 208.]

"En URSS, toutes les nationalités se sont rapprochées, se sont très étroitement unies. Une amitié véritable est née entre ces nationalités, et toutes les épreuves de la seconde guerre mondiale n'ont pu l'ébranler. Ce ne sont pas seulement les minorités nationales qui ont bénéficié de ces grands changements, mais aussi les Russes, les Ukrainiens et les Biélorussiens, qui représentent la majorité des habitants de l'Union soviétique.

"Nous sommes fiers d'avoir prouvé par l'expérience des anciennes marches de la Russie que les pays de l'Est peuvent parfaitement, en l'espace d'une génération, rattraper le retard, mettre fin à la misère, à la maladie et à l'ignorance et s'élever au niveau des pays économiquement développés." [Ibid., par. 210 et 211.]

118. Quant au discours du représentant du Canada, nous pouvons dire que de telles déclarations sont devenues une banalité. De temps à autre, les hommes d'Etat et les diplomates du Canada montent à la tribune dans leur propre pays, aux sessions de l'OTAN ou ici, sur ordre de l'extérieur, mais animés de leur propre zèle, pour verser un flot trouble de mensonges, inspirés par une haine aveugle contre les peuples de l'Union soviétique qui, les premiers, ont brisé les chaînes de la domination et de l'esclavage capitaliste.

119. La révolution d'Octobre, qui a annoncé au monde le commencement d'une ère nouvelle, une ère de liberté et d'égalité véritables pour tous les peuples, pour toutes les races, est comme une flamme brûlante pour les yeux et les mains rapaces des impérialistes. Ceux qui sont habitués à édifier leur bonheur en très grande partie aux frais d'autres peuples gardent rancune aux peuples des Etats socialistes qui ont montré par leur exemple comment il faut agir pour flanquer à la porte les pillards étrangers, disposer soi-même de ses propres richesses et organiser sa propre existence.

120. Certains cercles internationaux qui ont intérêt à attiser la haine contre l'Union soviétique et à miner son autorité cherchent souvent à charger de cette tâche ingrate ceux qui sont prêts à les servir. Malheureusement, les hommes politiques canadiens montrent assez souvent qu'ils sont prêts à cela, dans un esprit antisoviétique clairement marqué. Il est inutile d'analyser les insinuations ordurières du représentant du Canada à l'adresse des peuples soviétiques, y compris le peuple ukrainien. Nous voudrions seulement faire remarquer que c'était là une pitoyable tentative de substituer aux problèmes réels de la libération des peuples du colonialisme, laquelle exige une solution immédiate, des "problèmes" qui viennent à l'esprit de colonialistes affolés qui, perdant toute maîtrise d'eux-mêmes, livrent un combat d'arrière-garde désespéré contre le mouvement de libération nationale.

121. Il est curieux de souligner cependant que le représentant du Canada, mêlant la calomnie aux soupçons hypocrites, s'est efforcé de jouer sur l'amour-propre des peuples soviétiques en les gratifiant d'épithètes pompeuses pour adoucir ses propos trompeurs et tendancieux. Il a qualifié le peuple ukrainien de "peuple épris de liberté" sans soupçonner, apparemment, que, sur les lèvres d'un défenseur du colonialisme, la reconnaissance même des mérites d'un peuple peut avoir le ton d'une insulte. Que la délégitimation du Canada ne se fasse pas d'illusions: notre peuple connaît les motifs réels qui ont obligé les hommes d'Etat de ce pays, s'ils interviennent à une tribune politique, nationale ou internationale, à se laisser mener par le bout du nez par la réaction impérialiste. Oui, du moment qu'il s'agit des Ukrainiens et autres peuples soviétiques, le peuple ukrainien est un peuple épris de paix et c'est précisément pour cela qu'il ne tolérera pas que les impérialistes et leurs thuriféraires s'ingèrent dans les affaires intérieures de nos frères, les peuples socialistes qui ont acquis leur indépendance, leur liberté et leur puissance, et qui édifient leur lumineux avenir communiste.

122. La liberté et la sécurité dans le monde seront toujours menacées tant qu'à tous les peuples ne seront pas assurées l'égalité et l'indépendance, tant que ne sera pas brisé le dernier maillon de la chaîne du colonialisme. Le droit de chaque peuple à en finir avec le joug étranger est sacré et inaliénable. Nous sommes convaincus que ce droit triomphera infailliblement sur tous les points du globe.

123. La délégation ukrainienne appuiera toute proposition tendant à faire atteindre la noble fin proclamée dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux; la liquidation totale du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

M. Plimsoll (Australie), vice-président, prend la présidence.

124. M. RAMOS (Philippines) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le processus de décolonisation commencé à la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale est un des chapitres les plus brillants de l'histoire des hommes toujours en quête de la liberté. Ce processus a suscité une révolution dont l'ampleur et la signification sont égales à celles des autres grands événements politiques qui ont profondément marqué notre civilisation et le cours de l'histoire.

125. Deux grandes forces ont permis cette révolution. L'une est la poussée du nationalisme, qui, gagnant toutes les couches de la société, a déclenché l'affirmation militante du droit à l'autodétermination et aux autres droits fondamentaux de l'homme. L'autre résulte du développement des moyens de communication modernes qui ont accéléré la diffusion dans le monde entier des principes de liberté inscrits dans la Charte des Nations Unies.

126. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a elle-même joué un rôle capital dans cette révolution. Elle a servi de catalyseur dans le processus de décolonisation, elle a orienté sur des voies pacifiques les mouvements d'indépendance et a permis aux nations qui venaient d'acquiescer leur indépendance de trouver aussitôt la place qui leur revenait dans une communauté d'Etats libres respectueux du principe de la légalité. Les travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept prouvent combien les Nations Unies se soucient de voir les territoires encore colonisés se libérer rapidement. Les progrès signalés par le Comité sont encourageants.

127. Nous avons tout lieu de nous réjouir de cette évolution, mais l'après des débats sur la question du colonialisme prouve que notre tâche est loin d'être achevée. Le colonialisme est en effet comme une maladie parasitaire qui ne réagit pas toujours de la même manière à un traitement donné. Ce mal présente les phases classiques d'une guérison apparente et d'une rechute brusque; ce qui le caractérise avant tout, c'est la ténacité avec laquelle il s'attache aux victimes qu'il a choisies. Ainsi, de nos jours, alors que nous luttons pour hâter la fin du colonialisme à l'ancienne mode, nous voyons surgir des formes de domination plus subtiles, aussi dangereuses dans leurs effets qu'habiles à dissimuler leur véritable caractère. Un des aspects essentiels de notre tâche consiste à être vigilants pour déceler toutes les manifestations de cette nouvelle forme du colonialisme, les dénoncer partout où elles risquent d'apparaître et les empêcher de se maintenir, en y mettant autant d'énergie et de résolution que nous en avons mises à vaincre les formes plus anciennes du colonialisme.

128. Il ne faut jamais oublier que le colonialisme, quelle que soit sa forme, n'est jamais justifié. A la base de toutes les formes du colonialisme se trouve en effet, comme premier principe, la doctrine néfaste qu'un groupe d'hommes est supérieur à un autre. Dans sa forme la plus primitive, le colonialisme viole les droits fondamentaux du peuple asservi, déforme et pervertit sa personnalité et exploite sans pitié son patrimoine national.

129. Si mon pays s'intéresse spécialement au problème du colonialisme, c'est parce que nous, Philippines, avons été asservis pendant plus de quatre siècles. Nous avons été une colonie espagnole pendant plus de trois siècles et les Etats-Unis d'Amérique nous ont dominés pendant près d'un demi-siècle. Nous partageons donc dans une plus ou moins grande mesure avec les peuples des anciennes colonies la douloureuse expérience qui consiste à être gouverné contre sa volonté par des puissances étrangères.

130. Les Philippines sont un des plus anciens peuples révolutionnaires du monde. Sous la domination espagnole, pendant près de quatre siècles, nous nous sommes soulevés en moyenne tous les deux ans. Le dernier de ces soulèvements obstinés réussit finalement en 1898.

131. Le 12 juin 1898, le chef des forces révolutionnaires philippines proclama la République des Philippines, premier Etat démocratique libre à apparaître dans l'Asie coloniale. Pour défendre cette première République des Philippines, notre peuple luttait contre les Etats-Unis d'Amérique dans une guerre qui dura plus de trois ans et ne prit fin que lorsqu'il ne nous resta plus rien pour résister aux forces des Etats-Unis, supérieures en armes et en nombre.

132. Puis, notre peuple s'engagea dans une campagne résolue et intransigeante pour obtenir l'indépendance immédiate, absolue et totale. Cette campagne fut menée pacifiquement, par des moyens constitutionnels, les Etats-Unis ayant adopté pour ligne de conduite de reconnaître le droit à l'autodétermination du peuple philippin. Il a fallu pourtant plus de 30 ans d'efforts pacifiques pour que cette politique aboutisse à une loi qui fixait une date précise pour la reconnaissance de l'indépendance des Philippines. Après ces 30 ans, une dizaine d'années s'écoulèrent encore avant que la République des Philippines ne fût finalement restaurée.

133. Cet événement historique eut lieu le 4 juillet 1946, au début même de ce processus de décolonisation dont j'ai parlé. La République restaurée des Philippines, Membre originaire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, fut la première des anciennes colonies d'Asie à se comporter en Etat libre et indépendant. En ce sens, on peut dire que nous avons ouvert la voie à l'émancipation des peuples coloniaux, voie que nous cherchons maintenant à consolider et à parfaire.

134. Après ce bref historique du mouvement d'indépendance aux Philippines, qui éclaire l'attitude de mon gouvernement devant le colonialisme, j'évoquerai maintenant une partie du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, dont nous sommes saisis sous la cote A/5238. Il s'agit de la partie qui touche notre souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord, à propos du projet de création d'une nouvelle fédération appelée la Fédération de Grande Malaisie.

135. Ces deux sujets, la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord et la Fédération de Grande Malaisie, intéressent particulièrement les Philippines parce que la création de cette nouvelle Fédération de Grande Malaisie impliquerait le transfert de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord. Les Philippines revendiquent officiellement la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord. Un différend qui n'est pas encore réglé existe à ce sujet entre les Philippines et le Royaume-Uni.

136. En exposant la politique de son gouvernement devant l'Assemblée dans la matinée du 27 septembre 1962, le Vice-Président et Secrétaire aux affaires étrangères des Philippines a mentionné brièvement la revendication du Gouvernement des Philippines sur le territoire du Bornéo du Nord. Il a dit notamment:

"Nous accompagnons nos revendications de l'assurance de notre désir sincère de voir la question réglée par des moyens pacifiques et compte tenu du droit des habitants du Bornéo du Nord à disposer d'eux-mêmes, de préférence sous les auspices des Nations Unies." [1134^{ème} séance, par. 25.]

137. Plus tard au cours de la même séance, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a dit:

"...en ce qui concerne les revendications sur le Bornéo du Nord, je dois déclarer, afin qu'il en soit pris acte, que le Royaume-Uni n'a aucun doute quant à ses droits de souveraineté sur le territoire du Bornéo du Nord" [Ibid., par. 127.]

Par ces déclarations des représentants des deux gouvernements en cause, le problème de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord a été nettement posé.

138. Le différend entre les Philippines et le Royaume-Uni au sujet de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord provient surtout des interprétations divergentes données par les deux pays à un acte signé le 22 janvier 1878 par le sultan Jamal Al Alam, chef du Sultanat des Soulou. Avant cette date, le Sultan des Soulou était le souverain et maître incontesté du Bornéo du Nord. L'acte est écrit en caractères arabes et le texte est en langue malaise. Le mot clef est le mot malais "padjak" qui signifie "bail", ce qui, à notre sens, signifie clairement que le territoire a été loué et non pas vendu ou cédé, comme le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni le prétend à tort.

139. Le mode de paiement, par versements annuels, corrobore notre conviction que cet accord était un bail. Il s'y ajoute le fait que le montant du loyer était de 5 000 dollars malais, porté par la suite à 5 300 dollars malais par an, ce qui équivaut à 1 800 dollars des Etats-Unis environ par an, ou 150 dollars des Etats-Unis par mois, pour un territoire couvrant 76 400 kilomètres carrés, à peu près la superficie de l'Irlande.

140. Lorsque le premier bénéficiaire du bail, une société privée du nom de British North Borneo Company, a transféré au Royaume-Uni, le 26 juin 1946, ses droits sur le territoire, elle a transféré des droits découlant d'un bail et non pas des droits de souveraineté, pour la simple raison que la société ne pouvait transférer des droits qu'elle ne possédait pas elle-même. Lorsque le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a annexé, avec une hâte bien compréhensible, le territoire du Bornéo du Nord en tant que colonie de la Couronne, le 10 juillet 1946 — six jours après la restauration de la République des Philippines —, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a accompli là un acte dont la légalité peut paraître pour le moins douteuse.

141. Sept ans auparavant, un tribunal britannique avait émis un avis ainsi conçu:

"Il est parfaitement clair que le successeur des droits de souveraineté du Sultan des Soulou est le Gouvernement des îles Philippines..."

Cette citation, qui éclaire singulièrement la question de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord, est tirée d'une décision du Chief Justice Macaskie, de la Cour suprême du Bornéo du Nord, lors d'un procès intenté par les héritiers du sultan Jamalul Kiram, chef du Sultanat des Soulou de 1894 jusqu'à sa mort en 1936. Bien que nous ne soyons pas disposés à admettre tous les avis émis par le juge Macaskie, nous nous référons à sa décision pour expliquer la raison qui a poussé le Sultan des Soulou à résilier le bail sur le territoire quelques années plus tard.

142. L'affaire portée devant les tribunaux de Bornéo était une action en revendication intentée en vue d'obtenir un jugement désignant les héritiers de feu le sultan Jamalul Kiram, auxquels revenait le droit de percevoir le loyer prévu dans l'acte de 1878. Dans sa décision, le juge Macaskie a fait une distinction entre ce qu'il appelait "les héritiers privés" du Sultan décédé, auxquels revenait le droit de toucher la somme annuelle de 5 300 dollars malais, et le "successeur des droits de souveraineté" du Sultan. Le juge Macaskie a désigné comme héritiers privés du Sultan la princesse Tarhata Kiram et huit autres personnes, et comme successeur des droits de souveraineté le Gouvernement des Philippines.

143. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni connaissait parfaitement l'opinion du juge Macaskie selon laquelle le Gouvernement des Philippines était le successeur des droits de souveraineté du Sultan des Soulou. Il savait également que la princesse Tarhata Kiram et huit autres personnes avaient été déclarées héritiers privés dudit Sultan par la Cour suprême du Bornéo du Nord. Mais, lorsqu'il a annexé le Bornéo du Nord le 10 juillet 1946 et assumé la souveraineté sur ce territoire cinq jours plus tard, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'en a fait notification ni au Gouvernement des Philippines, ni aux héritiers du Sultan. Un Américain éminent, grand défenseur du principe de l'autodétermination, qui n'est autre que l'honorable Francis Burton Harrison, auteur d'une étude juridique sur l'affaire du Bornéo du Nord, a appelé l'annexion du Bornéo du Nord par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni un acte d'agression politique. En 1957, le sultan Esmail Kiram a fait une proclamation résiliant le bail de 1878. Cette résiliation a été officiellement notifiée au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni à Londres, à la British North Borneo Company à Jesselton et au Secrétaire général de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à New York.

144. Voyons maintenant une autre partie du rapport du Comité spécial concernant la question de l'autodétermination des habitants du Bornéo du Nord. Le Comité a fait distribuer un certain nombre de pétitions concernant des territoires coloniaux. L'une d'elles^{4/}, datée du 9 septembre 1962, émanant de partis politiques du Bornéo du Nord, du Sarawak et du Brunei, demande à l'Organisation des Nations Unies qu'elle "...intervienne au sujet du transfert de souveraineté proposé au Sarawak et au Sabah" — le Bornéo du Nord est aussi connu sous le nom de Sabah — "étant donné qu'un tel transfert priverait les peuples de ces territoires de leur droit à dis-poser d'eux-mêmes et de leur droit à l'indépendance totale". Comme autre solution, la pétition demande à l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'organiser et de tenir un plébiscite avant qu'il ne soit procédé au transfert de souveraineté.

^{4/} A/AC.109/PET.46, document mimeographié seulement.

145. On lit notamment dans cette pétition:

"13. La Commission [Cobbold] a conclu qu'un tiers environ de la population était très favorable à la réalisation de la "Grande Malaisie" sans conditions, un tiers l'acceptait, mais à certaines conditions et en exigeant certaines garanties, et le reste y était opposé. Cette conclusion est complètement fautive, ne peut être étayée par des faits et ne saurait être acceptée par des observateurs objectifs et impartiaux."

146. Dans le rapport Cobbold^{5/} lui-même il est reconnu ce qui suit:

"Lorsque nous avons évalué l'opinion des habitants du Bornéo du Nord ... nous n'avons pu arriver qu'à une appréciation approximative. Nous ne garantissons pas qu'à l'avenir leur opinion ne se modifiera pas dans un sens ou dans l'autre. En tenant compte de toutes les difficultés et de l'impossibilité où nous étions d'atteindre toutes les parties de ces vastes territoires, nous sommes arrivés à établir une opinion générale, raisonnablement bien fondée sur des renseignements de source privée ou représentative."

147. Dans une autre partie du rapport Cobbold, il est admis que "faute de temps" les habitants du territoire n'ont pu "étudier avec soin" les conséquences que pourraient avoir pour le Bornéo du Nord les projets de création de la Fédération de Grande Malaisie. Ailleurs, nous lisons ce qui suit:

"Il n'y a pas eu d'élections ... Ce n'est que récemment qu'on a prévu d'organiser des élections aux conseils de district et aux conseils municipaux^{6/}."

148. En d'autres termes, depuis 1881, époque à laquelle la British North Borneo Company a entrepris d'administrer le Bornéo du Nord pour le compte du Sultan des Soulou, et jusqu'en 1946, année où le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a annexé le Bornéo du Nord en tant que colonie de la Couronne, les habitants du territoire n'ont même pas eu l'occasion d'élire leurs représentants locaux.

149. La situation est semblable dans le domaine de l'enseignement. Les chiffres donnés par le rapport Cobbold montrent que parmi les habitants âgés de 10 ans ou plus, 72 000 seulement savent lire et écrire, et 227 000 sont illettrés. Sur une population autochtone de plus de 300 000 habitants, deux seulement ont fait des études supérieures.

150. Il est utile aussi de noter que selon ce qu'on appelle la "Liste chronologique des progrès constitutionnels" [A/5238, annexe I] les gouvernements intéressés ont déjà décidé en principe que la future Fédération de Grande Malaisie, qui doit comprendre le Bornéo du Nord, sera constituée le 31 août 1963, mais il n'y est pas mentionné un point important de cette décision, à savoir l'entente réalisée entre les gouvernements intéressés, selon laquelle ils concluront dans les six mois un accord en bonne et due forme prévoyant le transfert de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord à la future Fédération de Grande Malaisie. Il est à présumer que cette période de six mois a commencé le jour où la décision a été prise, vers la fin de juillet ou le début d'août 1962.

151. La série de mesures conduisant à l'incorporation du territoire dans la future Fédération de Grande Malaisie, dont l'échéance est fixée au 31 août 1963, rend pratiquement certain que les habitants de ce territoire auront, après cette date, perdu le droit d'exprimer leur opinion réelle sur la question primordiale de l'autodétermination.

152. Nous espérons sincèrement qu'avant cette échéance la revendication du Gouvernement des Philippines sur le Bornéo du Nord aura été réglée dans la légalité et la justice. Selon cette revendication, en effet, le droit des habitants du Bornéo du Nord à l'autodétermination serait assuré.

153. Le territoire du Bornéo du Nord est très proche des Philippines. De nombreuses îles de l'archipel des Philippines — les îles de la Tortue et les îles Mangsee — sont à faible distance du Bornéo du Nord. A partir des îles situées à l'extrême sud de l'archipel des Philippines, on peut atteindre le Bornéo du Nord en barque ou en pirogue.

154. L'avenir du Bornéo du Nord présente donc pour les Philippines un intérêt vital du point de vue de leur sécurité nationale. Ce territoire est comme un bouchon qui ferme notre grande mer intérieure, la mer des Soulou, et présente donc une grande importance stratégique pour les Philippines.

155. En faisant valoir leur revendication légitime concernant la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord, les Philippines n'ont cependant ni l'intention, ni le désir de passer outre aux vœux des habitants de ce territoire. Le Bornéo du Nord n'est pas un atoll du Pacifique habité par des albatros, ni une île de l'Antarctique habitée par des pingouins. Elle est peuplée par près d'un demi-million d'habitants dont le droit à l'autodétermination doit être respecté et pris en considération.

156. C'est pour cette raison même que M. Macapagal, président des Philippines, a donné le 27 juillet 1962 l'assurance solennelle suivante:

"Les Philippines s'en tiennent loyalement au principe de la libre détermination des peuples. C'est pourquoi, au cas où il deviendrait nécessaire, à quelque moment que ce soit, de déterminer les vœux des habitants du Bornéo du Nord quant à leur avenir, les Philippines les appuieront au cas où ils voudraient exercer ce droit, de préférence par un plébiscite sous les auspices de l'Organisation des Nations Unies."

157. Cette assurance solennelle a été réitérée devant l'Assemblée [1134ème séance, par. 25] par le Vice-Président et Secrétaire aux affaires étrangères des Philippines dans sa déclaration sur la politique de son pays, que j'ai déjà citée.

158. Mon gouvernement n'a ménagé aucun effort pour que ce différend au sujet du Bornéo du Nord soit réglé rapidement à l'amiable et sur une base bilatérale.

159. Sous la pression toujours croissante de l'opinion publique des Philippines, la Chambre des représentants du Congrès des Philippines a adopté à l'unanimité, le 24 avril 1962, une résolution invitant

^{5/} Report of the Commission of Enquiry into North Borneo and Sarawak, 1962, London, Her Majesty's Stationery Office, Command Paper 1794, chap. 3, par. 143.

le Président des Philippines à revendiquer la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord. Pourtant, avant que le Président ait pu donner suite à cette résolution, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a informé le Gouvernement des Philippines qu'il s'opposerait et ferait obstacle à une telle revendication, dans le dessein d'empêcher la présentation de cette revendication avant même que son bien-fondé ait été examiné.

160. Le 22 juin 1962, mon gouvernement a fait le premier pas vers une solution négociée du problème du Bornéo du Nord. Il a informé le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de la revendication de souveraineté des Philippines sur ce territoire et a demandé au Royaume-Uni que des conversations aient lieu, soit à Manille, soit à Londres, pour discuter tous les problèmes concernant cette question.

161. Il n'a été tenu aucun compte de cette demande. Le Gouvernement des Philippines s'est alors trouvé dans la nécessité d'envoyer un aide-mémoire réitérant sa demande de conversations bilatérales. Ce n'est que le 8 août 1962 que le Gouvernement des Philippines a reçu un aide-mémoire du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Cet aide-mémoire, cependant, passait complètement sous silence la demande du Gouvernement des Philippines concernant des conversations bilatérales. Le 12 septembre, peu de temps avant l'ouverture de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, une nouvelle note a été envoyée au Gouvernement britannique, renouvelant encore une fois la demande des Philippines concernant des conversations bilatérales.

162. Mon gouvernement est très préoccupé par la manière quelque peu cavalière dont nos demandes réitérées ont été traitées par le Royaume-Uni pendant cinq mois. Il nous est de plus en plus difficile de ne pas en tirer la conclusion que le Royaume-Uni ne veut pas tenir compte de notre revendication, étant apparemment déterminé à nous placer devant le fait accompli.

163. Entre-temps, en effet, la période de six mois pendant laquelle devait être envisagé le transfert du territoire du Bornéo du Nord à la future Fédération de Grande Malaisie est presque arrivée à expiration. Mon gouvernement ne pourrait accepter cet état de choses sans s'émouvoir, d'autant plus que, comme nous l'avons déjà fait remarquer, les modalités de transfert ne prévoient pas un exercice véritable du droit à l'autodétermination par les habitants du Bornéo du Nord. C'est pourquoi nous avons informé les gouvernements intéressés que nous ne pourrions en aucune manière accepter l'Accord de Londres au sujet du territoire du Bornéo du Nord comme un fait accompli qui ne tiendrait aucun compte de la revendication des Philippines, ce que ces gouvernements n'ignorent nullement. Nous leur avons également fait savoir que nous maintenons notre revendication au sujet du Bornéo du Nord et que nous la maintiendrons jusqu'à ce que le différend soit réglé par des moyens pacifiques conformément aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies.

164. Mon gouvernement a gardé sa sérénité devant ce qui semble être une indifférence voulue à l'égard de nos demandes réitérées de conversations bilatérales. Mais nous sommes persuadés que le Royaume-Uni, que les Philippines considèrent comme un allié dans la cause de la paix mondiale, cessera de ne tenir aucun compte de notre juste revendication. La simple justice et les intérêts bien compris des peuples en cause exigent que notre différend avec le Royaume-Uni au sujet du Bornéo du Nord soit réglé avant la création d'une Fédération de Grande Malaisie, pour garantir aux habitants du Bornéo du Nord l'exercice du droit de libre détermination, et, en même temps, assurer la paix, l'amitié et l'entente des peuples de cette partie du monde.

M. Muhammad Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

165. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Royaume-Uni pour qu'il exerce son droit de réponse.

166. Sir Patrick DEAN (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le représentant des Philippines vient de parler de la revendication de son gouvernement sur le territoire du Bornéo du Nord. A l'appui de sa revendication, il a avancé un certain nombre de déclarations, d'arguments et de citations.

167. Ma délégation étudiera ces arguments, déclarations et citations avec tout le soin qu'ils méritent sûrement. En attendant, je ne dirai qu'une chose: c'est là une revendication toute nouvelle. La Constitution des Philippines de 1946, aussi bien que la résolution de 1961 du Congrès des Philippines sur les eaux territoriales, ont toutes deux défini les limites des Philippines en excluant le Bornéo du Nord. En outre, il existe dans la population du Bornéo du Nord une forte opposition à la revendication des Philippines. Les chefs des cinq organisations politiques du Bornéo du Nord ont envoyé le mois dernier au Président des Philippines une lettre ouverte où il est dit notamment:

"Nous ne croyons pas — et notre peuple ne croit pas — que le Gouvernement de la République des Philippines puisse revendiquer un territoire quelconque en invoquant l'ancien Sultanat des Soulou, ou pour quelque autre raison. Nous estimons que, quoi qu'on puisse dire au sujet de cette prétendue revendication, pas un seul des peuples du Bornéo du Nord ne désire faire partie de la République des Philippines ni ne voudrait y consentir."

168. Je suis autorisé par mon gouvernement à déclarer une fois de plus à ce sujet que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a aucun doute quant à sa souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord et je réserve formellement ses droits sur ce point.

169. J'ajouterai peut-être que pour le cas où il semblerait utile, après une étude plus approfondie, de donner une réponse plus complète à la dernière déclaration du représentant des Philippines, ma délégation se réserve le droit d'intervenir plus tard dans le présent débat.

170. M. SONN VOEUNSAI (Cambodge): Ma délégation ne se propose pas, au cours de la présente intervention, de traiter le problème de la décolonisation dans son ensemble. Les représentants qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune en ont parlé avec éloquence et avec chaleur. Il nous est loisible aussi de nous référer aux diverses déclarations qui ont été faites, du 28 novembre au 14 décembre 1960, quand l'Assemblée générale avait examiné la question de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux; ces déclarations ont été consignées dans quelque 260 pages de comptes rendus sténographiques des séances.

171. Ma délégation voudrait vous parler seulement des aspects généraux du travail qui a été accompli par le Comité des Dix-Sept pendant sept mois, en s'attachant, autant que possible, à tirer des leçons utiles pour l'accomplissement des tâches futures que l'Assemblée générale pourrait confier à ce comité de la décolonisation. Ce faisant, elle manifeste son grand désir de contribuer utilement à la réalisation d'une entreprise qui honore la communauté internationale.

172. La délégation cambodgienne tient cependant à réaffirmer la position de son pays en ce qui concerne la libération des peuples encore assujettis, et à rappeler les principes essentiels qui l'ont toujours guidée. Cette position et ces principes ont été définis clairement par le chef vénéré de notre Etat, Son Altesse Royale le prince Norodom Sihanouk, tant à la Conférence de Bandoung en 1955^{2/} qu'à celle de Belgrade en 1961^{3/}. A ce sujet, je voudrais citer des passages du discours qu'il a prononcé dans cette dernière ville, le 3 septembre de l'année dernière, devant une trentaine de chefs d'Etat ou de gouvernement des pays non alignés:

"Nous nous sommes réunis", a-t-il dit, "pour réaffirmer et défendre tous les principes sacrés de la souveraineté des Nations, de la liberté pour les peuples de choisir leur régime, leurs institutions, leur politique dans la mesure où elle n'est pas fondée sur l'agression et ne constitue pas un danger pour la paix mondiale."

Et plus loin, il ajoutait:

"Nous, Cambodgiens, n'ignorons nullement que, si le colonialisme est moribond, il n'a pas pour autant disparu de la surface du globe. Nous savons que, en Afrique notamment, des peuples versent leur sang pour obtenir leur liberté. Mais ces peuples savent qu'ils ne sont plus seuls comme nous le fîmes dans notre lutte pour l'indépendance. Par contre leurs oppresseurs savent aussi que leur combat est sans issue et que la réprobation générale les entoure. Dans ces conditions, sans ménager notre appui à nos frères courageux, sans pusillanimité, je crois que dans leur intérêt même nous devons prendre garde aux sursauts d'un colonialisme anachronique, qui rendraient leurs luttes plus longues et plus sanglantes."

"Notre combat contre les survivances du colonialisme gagnera en efficacité s'il est lucide, s'il est mené avec la certitude qui est la nôtre que la victoire définitive est proche."

"Notre force nouvelle, une force qui ne fera que s'accroître, s'exprimera d'autant mieux qu'elle refusera de se laisser entraîner par les rancœurs d'un passé douloureux. Et c'est pourquoi j'ai la conviction que notre voix sera plus impressionnante, mieux écoutée, si elle s'élève sans haine et sans passion^{2/}."

173. C'est avec cette détermination, et aussi avec cette lucidité et cette objectivité, que ma délégation a eu l'honneur de participer, en tant que membre, aux travaux du Comité spécial sur la décolonisation.

174. Parlant maintenant de ces travaux, je voudrais vous dire que nous avons été immédiatement pénétrés de leur importance qu'avait rehaussée la présence, à la séance d'ouverture, du Président de la dernière session de l'Assemblée générale et du Secrétaire général par intérim. Je ne puis m'empêcher de vous rappeler les recommandations qu'ils nous ont faites: "Il est apparu de plus en plus urgent", a dit M. Mongi Slim, "de hâter l'accession à la souveraineté des nations se trouvant encore sous administration coloniale. Il est d'autre part éminemment souhaitable que l'évolution de ces pays s'opère dans l'harmonie et la paix, sans convulsions génératrices de ressentiments et de méfiance^{10/}." Et U Thant avait ajouté: "Les membres du Comité, conscients des lourdes responsabilités qui leur ont été confiées, mèneront sans aucun doute leurs travaux dans un esprit de coopération."

175. Les travaux ont été conduits activement. Il importe maintenant d'en dresser le bilan. A mon avis, celui-ci comporte des aspects positifs mais aussi des aspects négatifs; mais, avant de vous les présenter, je voudrais attirer votre attention sur deux principes importants qui ont guidé l'action du Comité.

176. D'une part, il s'agit de la recherche d'une coopération effective des puissances administrantes. C'est assurément dans ce sens que le Comité spécial a délégué six de ses membres pour se rendre à Londres, afin de conférer avec le Gouvernement britannique sur toutes les questions se rapportant à l'avenir des territoires qui sont sous administration, directe ou indirecte, de ce dernier. C'est ainsi qu'il a suivi avec un grand intérêt les efforts entrepris par le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain et par le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal, pour entrer en contact avec les puissances administrantes intéressées. Enfin, je voudrais vous signaler également qu'un questionnaire, préparé par un sous-comité, a été adopté puis adressé par les soins du Secrétaire général au Royaume-Uni, au Portugal et à l'Afrique du Sud.

177. D'autre part, le Comité spécial s'est attaché à obtenir le plus de renseignements possible sur la situation des territoires qu'il étudie. C'est dans cet esprit qu'il a créé un sous-comité des pétitions et qu'il s'est rendu en Afrique. Mais, pour étayer son opinion, il ne s'est pas contenté de n'écouter qu'un seul son de cloche et il est toujours disposé à entendre les exposés des puissances administrantes. Quant à ma délégation, il ne lui aurait pas déplu d'entendre, au sein du Comité spécial, les déclarations des représentants du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud.

178. Et maintenant, quels sont les aspects positifs du bilan?

179. Premièrement, des méthodes de travail et une certaine procédure ont été définies; nous ne cesserons pas de les améliorer, compte tenu de l'expérience acquise.

180. Deuxièmement, une douzaine de territoires parmi ceux qui requièrent une action urgente ont été examinés; l'Assemblée générale a maintenant une vue plus précise sur les problèmes qui les intéressent.

181. Troisièmement, des suggestions et des recommandations, dont un grand nombre sous forme de résolutions, ont été formulées: elles pourront aider les délégations ici présentes à prendre les décisions qui s'imposent.

^{10/} Voir A/AC.109/SR.1, mimeographié seulement.

^{3/} Conférence des pays non alignés, tenue à Belgrade en septembre 1961.

^{2/} Conférence de Belgrade, publiée par la Revue de politique internationale, Belgrade, 1961, No 4, p. 32.

182. Mais il y a aussi les aspects négatifs que je ne saurais passer sous silence. Je pense à cette sorte d'impuissance qu'on éprouve en constatant qu'aucun résultat concret n'a été obtenu. Et pourtant, le Comité spécial ne s'était pas résigné à attendre la dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale pour lui faire rapport, comme le lui avait recommandé le paragraphe 4 de la résolution 1654 (XVI). Comme son rapporteur, M. Najmuddine Rif, l'a signalé (1167^e séance) quand il a présenté son rapport (A/5238), chaque fois que les conclusions et recommandations ont été adoptées, elles ont été transmises par les soins du Secrétaire général par intérim aux puissances administrantes intéressées: le 18 juin pour la Rhodésie du Nord, pour le Nyassaland, pour Zanzibar; le 1^{er} août pour la Guyane britannique.

183. Il est désolant d'apprendre que, dans presque tous les cas, aucune suite n'a été donnée, aucun commencement d'exécution effectué. Il est regrettable aussi de constater que les membres des comités spéciaux pour le Sud-Ouest africain et pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal n'aient pas eu la possibilité de se rendre dans les pays intéressés. Enfin il est malheureux qu'à cette heure aucune réponse n'ait encore été reçue des puissances auxquelles le questionnaire avait été adressé.

184. De cette analyse succincte du bilan des réalisations du Comité des Dix-Sept, il serait utile de tirer des leçons pour l'avenir. De l'avis de ma délégation, les suivantes paraissent être importantes.

185. Premièrement, il est nécessaire d'inviter, d'une façon ferme et pressante, les puissances administrantes à apporter au Comité spécial leur pleine coopération.

186. Deuxièmement, il est souhaitable que le Comité spécial dispose de pouvoirs plus étendus ou puisse recourir à tout moment à une instance supérieure, session extraordinaire de l'Assemblée générale ou Conseil de sécurité.

187. Troisièmement, le Comité doit procéder à l'examen de la situation dans les territoires d'une façon plus systématique, en étudiant une à une des rubriques bien déterminées, comme l'existence des droits de l'homme et du citoyen, la non-discrimination raciale, la participation des autochtones aux affaires publiques, les conditions d'une réelle autodétermination.

188. Qu'il me soit permis maintenant de dire quelques mots au sujet des conclusions et recommandations relatives aux 12 territoires examinés.

189. Je ne reviens pas sur les positions qu'a prises ma délégation au sein du Comité spécial, sur ces cas spécifiques; elles sont déterminées à la fois par les aspirations légitimes des populations intéressées et par les recommandations précises contenues dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Je pense toutefois qu'il faudrait que l'Assemblée générale tienne dûment compte de l'évolution récente de la situation dans ces territoires. Certaines suggestions formulées il y a trois ou quatre mois pourraient être revisées. Il en serait ainsi, par exemple, pour la Rhodésie du Sud, où la constitution du 6 décembre 1961 est mise en application malgré la résolution 1760 (XVII), pour la Guyane britannique, à la suite de l'échec de la Conférence de Londres du mois dernier. Dans certains cas même, il serait possible de fixer des dates limites pour l'octroi de l'indépendance.

190. Pour les décisions concernant des questions particulières comme celles du Sud-Ouest africain et des territoires sous administration du Portugal, il est évident que l'Assemblée générale doit attendre les rapports de la Quatrième Commission pour se prononcer.

191. Je voudrais aussi vous faire part des points de vue de ma délégation sur des propositions précoisées concernant l'avenir du Comité.

1) Fixation d'une date limite pour l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les pays et peuples coloniaux. Ma délégation n'est pas contre ce principe, mais elle croit qu'il ne correspond pas nécessairement à la réalité et qu'il est préférable de retenir la suggestion suivant laquelle le Comité spécial est habilité à proposer une date précise pour chaque territoire, compte tenu du désir librement exprimé de la population. Nous désirons que l'évolution des nations vers la souveraineté se fasse dans l'harmonie et la paix, mais l'obtention de la liberté pour les individus et pour les peuples opprimés ne saurait être démesurément différée.

2) Elargissement éventuel du Comité. Je ne doute pas que la tâche du Comité est écrasante. Mais ma délégation estime qu'une augmentation trop considérable du nombre de ses membres pourrait nuire à l'accélération de ses travaux.

3) Concentration des tâches. Ma délégation pense que le Conseil de tutelle doit être maintenu (sa suppression ne peut d'ailleurs résulter que d'un amendement de la Charte), mais que les autres comités spéciaux pourraient être supprimés. Il reste la question du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes qui, en plus des études spéciales concernant des domaines techniques, doit maintenant, en vertu de la résolution 1700 (XVI), examiner les renseignements d'ordre politique et constitutionnel. Cette nouvelle activité intéresse directement le Comité des Dix-Sept qui, du fait que le Comité des renseignements ne se réunit qu'une fois par an, vers le mois d'avril, pourrait la prendre à son compte.

192. Voilà les quelques observations que ma délégation a l'honneur de soumettre à l'Assemblée, au sujet des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. En vous les présentant, nous n'avons pas de plus grand désir que de contribuer, dans la mesure de nos faibles moyens, mais avec une absolue sincérité, à la solution de ce difficile problème de la décolonisation. C'est sans louange ni critique, sans haine ni passion, mais avec une vue objective et une grande détermination, dans le respect de la Charte et des obligations d'Etat Membre des Nations Unies, que le gouvernement et le peuple cambodgiens souhaitent voir mettre fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

193. Pour terminer, je voudrais de nouveau citer Son Altesse Royale le prince Norodom Sihanouk qui a dit:

"Ma pensée va vers tous ceux qui, par le monde, versent leur sang pour leur liberté et leur indépendance. À ceux-là, je tiens à exprimer notre entière solidarité et notre conviction que le jour est proche où nous aurons la joie de les accueillir parmi nous."

194. M. KAKA (Niger): Nous avons parcouru avec beaucoup d'intérêt le rapport important présenté par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le Comité des Dix-Sept mérite les félicitations de l'Assemblée pour le rapport volumineux et très documenté qu'il vient de nous fournir. Pour sa part, la délégation de la République du Niger l'approuve sans réserve et saisit cette occasion pour adresser ses plus vifs remerciements à tous ceux qui ont pris part à la constitution de ce document historique dont d'éminents orateurs ont su, à cette même tribune, analyser avec talent le contenu extrêmement intéressant et instructif.

195. Il est hors de doute que l'Afrique est, de tous les continents, celui qui a le plus souffert et qui, malheureusement, continue de souffrir encore des effets de l'expansionnisme européen.

196. Afrique, tu as été meurtrie dans ta chair et dans ta dignité! En 1885, à Berlin, autour d'une table, tu as été découpée comme un gâteau au mépris de tous scrupules et de toute conscience par des hommes obsédés par l'appât du gain. Sourds à tous tes appels, insensibles à tes pleurs et à tes gémissements, occupés qu'ils étaient de s'accrocher à tes flancs frémissants comme ces parasites suceurs, lestiques, ils déniaient aujourd'hui à tes enfants le droit d'être eux-mêmes sur la terre de leurs pères. Les colons britanniques devenus plus Rhodésiens que les Bantous par la force des choses s'occupent d'organiser de véritables chasses à l'homme noir afin de s'emparer de ses terres.

197. Quelle ironie du sort! La stupidité de 200 000 colons blancs rhodésiens a transformé ce beau pays d'Afrique en un enfer pour les 3 millions de Rhodésiens noirs où l'injustice est devenue la règle d'or.

198. Cependant, les Bantous ne réclament que la justice et l'égalité devant la loi. Seul l'égoïsme sordide des uns empêche les deux communautés de vivre ensemble dans un esprit fraternel.

199. Il est vraiment regrettable de constater que, par leur obstination et leur entêtement, les tenants du pouvoir actuel ne se rendent pas compte que le temps travaille contre eux et que, tôt ou tard, la loi du nombre jouera à leur détriment.

200. C'est pourquoi nous pensons que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ce haut lieu de la conscience universelle, doit pouvoir agir efficacement pour le rétablissement de l'égalité et de la justice dans ce pays.

201. Et c'est le lieu et le moment de dire que le Gouvernement britannique a une grande part de responsabilité morale dans la situation actuelle de la Rhodésie du Sud. Il peut, s'il le voulait, rétablir la confiance entre les deux communautés en suspendant la constitution actuelle et en convoquant une nouvelle conférence à laquelle seraient conviés tous les dirigeants rhodésiens. Ils trouveront, j'en suis sûr, une formule qui sauvegardera les intérêts des uns et des autres.

202. J'ose croire que le Gouvernement britannique ne restera pas indifférent à l'appel de la conscience universelle. En tout cas, il est mis au banc d'épreuve, car d'autres territoires non moins importants, étudiés par le Comité spécial, attendent d'être indépendants dans les délais les plus brefs. Dans tous les cas, la pratique de l'autodétermination permettra aux populations de décider de leur sort.

203. Le colonialisme, cette honte du XXème siècle, est à son déclin. Et c'est pourquoi nous ne comprenons pas l'attitude pour le moins stupide du gouvernement de Lisbonne face à ce problème. Son expérience coloniale, plusieurs fois séculaire, devrait lui dicter une attitude plus réaliste et plus raisonnable.

204. La roue de l'histoire tourne, tourne et tournera toujours. Il n'appartient pas au seul Gouvernement portugais de l'arrêter ou de modifier quelque peu sa course.

205. Il est injuste de la part du gouvernement de Lisbonne de décider unilatéralement de l'annexion de ses colonies sans que les intéressés puissent dire leur mot.

206. Nous savons évidemment comment les Portugais et les autres se sont partagé la dépouille de l'Afrique au cours de la célèbre Conférence de Berlin vers la fin du siècle dernier. Nous savons également que l'appât du gain a été le seul mobile qui a conduit au dépeuplement de l'Afrique. Le Portugal a été l'un de ces pays qui ont taillé une part très importante dans la chair palpitante et sanglante du colosse sans défense. Et aujourd'hui l'on vient nous parler ici du droit du Portugal à disposer du sort des millions de populations africaines.

207. Cette situation, pour le moins anachronique, ne peut durer, car les autres partenaires du Portugal à Berlin ont restitué à l'Afrique ce qu'ils lui avaient ravi. Les plaies de ce continent trop meurtri dans sa chair et sa dignité se cicatrisent déjà. Les colonies portugaises ne sauraient faire exception à la règle. Elles s'émanciperont et deviendront des Etats indépendants et souverains.

208. Le gouvernement de Lisbonne doit méditer la leçon de l'histoire, lui dont l'histoire coloniale est si riche de souvenirs. Le 18 octobre 1962, à cette même tribune [1155ème séance], le représentant du Portugal, dans sa déclaration de politique générale, disait:

"Nous ne prétendons pas être parfaits. Mais c'est un fait que, dans la nation portugaise, conformément aux Articles 55 et 56 de la Charte, tous sont égaux, tous jouissent des mêmes droits politiques et civiques, tous bénéficient de la même représentation politique, tous ont accès aux mêmes possibilités de progrès éducatif et social, et tout cela aussi bien en droit qu'en fait." [Ibid., par. 43.]

209. Je me permets de dire au représentant du Portugal que notre expérience de pays qui a connu la colonisation pendant un demi-siècle nous permet de douter de l'égalité dont il est fait état. C'est peut-être l'égalité du cheval et du cavalier.

210. Plus loin, après avoir fait l'inventaire des réalisations portugaises pendant plus de quatre siècles de domination, il déclara encore:

"En réalité l'Angola et le Mozambique sont, dans tous les domaines, deux des territoires d'Afrique les plus avancés et ils peuvent soutenir la comparaison avantageusement avec les territoires des pays qui nous ont critiqués le plus vivement." [Ibid., par. 48.]

211. Nous n'avons jamais déclaré qu'il n'y a eu aucune réalisation dans les colonies portugaises. Au contraire, nous sommes heureux d'apprendre que ces colonies sont les plus avancées d'Afrique, et cela dans tous les domaines. C'est dire donc que ces territoires sont à présent capables de se gouverner eux-mêmes, vu le degré de développement qu'ils ont atteint.

212. La déclaration de M. Nogueira nous encourage dans notre conviction qu'il est grand temps d'accorder sans tarder l'indépendance à l'Angola, au Mozambique et à la Guinée dite portugaise. Le Portugal y gagnera, car il aura préservé la coopération fructueuse entre lui et ces territoires devenus indépendants et souverains.

213. J'en arrive maintenant à un autre problème, celui du Sud-Ouest africain, que l'Afrique du Sud administre depuis décembre 1920.

214. Pour résumer toute la politique réactionnaire de ce pays, qu'il me suffise de citer ici M. Verwoerd, premier ministre du Gouvernement de la République d'Afrique du Sud, au cours du congrès de son parti tenu le 27 septembre 1962 à Windhoek:

"Il faut que le monde entier comprenne — et je tiens à souligner cela d'une manière claire et sans équivoque — que les destins de l'Afrique du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain sont irrévocablement liés et soudés, et qu'aucune intimidation, aucun danger, aucune menace ne nous détourneront de notre tâche et de notre devoir à l'égard des blancs et des populations de couleur. La seule voie pour l'Afrique du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain consiste en une évolution séparée des blancs et des populations de couleur, et cette évolution doit être menée honnêtement."

215. Cette déclaration, claire et précise, se passe de tout commentaire.

216. Le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud continue donc toujours sa politique inhumaine au mépris de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la Charte de San Francisco. Ce pays, où une minorité, parce qu'elle dispose des moyens de répression, gouverne malgré l'immense majorité, doit faire l'objet de sévères sanctions, car, après tout, le Mandat qu'il exerce sur le Sud-Ouest africain ne signifie pas que ce territoire lui appartienne. Le mépris avec lequel ce gouvernement continue d'accueillir toutes les résolutions se rapportant à sa politique d'apartheid justifie bien notre position à son égard.

217. Nous savons qu'il n'est pas seul, car, derrière lui, se profile la silhouette de quelques puissances d'argent qui continuent à lui prodiguer sympathie et solidarité.

218. Le Sud-Ouest africain n'étant pas la propriété de l'Afrique du Sud, notre organisation serait complice de génocide aux yeux de la population de ce territoire et aux yeux du monde entier si elle n'envisageait pas le retrait du Mandat et l'octroi de l'indépendance sans conditions; sinon, nous risquons de nous trouver devant le fait accompli, c'est-à-dire son annexion pure et simple.

219. En effet, le rapport [A/5238] mentionne bien au paragraphe 8 du chapitre IX: "Toutes les références du Mandat ont, cependant, été retirées ensuite de la Constitution par le South West Africa Affairs Amendment Act de 1949."

220. C'est pourquoi le gouvernement et le peuple du Niger sont prêts à appuyer toute initiative tendant à arracher le Sud-Ouest africain des griffes du Gouvernement de la République de l'Afrique du Sud.

221. Nous faisons nôtre cette recommandation du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain:

"... le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain désirera peut-être attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur la nécessité impérieuse d'une action continue et ferme de sa part, qui pourrait consister à impartir au Gouvernement sud-africain un bref délai pour qu'il se conforme aux résolutions de l'Assemblée, faute de quoi serait envisagée la possibilité d'une abrogation du Mandat et d'une prise en charge simultanée de l'administration du Territoire en vue de préparer sa population à l'indépendance..." [A/5212, 2^{ème} partie, par. 43, du rapport du Président et du Vice-Président.]

222. Je ne puis terminer cette intervention sans lancer un suprême appel aux populations encore sous domination étrangère qui doivent réfléchir sur les leçons de l'histoire. Les mouvements de libération nationale doivent, partout, conjuguer leurs efforts de manière à présenter toujours un front commun, tant il est vrai que l'union fait la force. Ce faisant, ils sèment et développent l'esprit révolutionnaire qui facilite la lutte. Leurs efforts joints aux nôtres ne manqueront pas de précipiter l'heure de la libération nationale. Qu'ils soient assurés, dans cette voie, de l'appui moral et actif de la République du Niger.

223. Enfin, convaincue que tous les peuples réclament le droit inaliénable de disposer d'eux-mêmes, ma délégation appuiera toute initiative tendant à supprimer le colonialisme, cette honte du XX^{ème} siècle, dans les délais les plus brefs.

224. M. DUGERSUREN (Mongolie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dans l'histoire de l'humanité, l'année 1960 a ouvert un chapitre remarquable des annales de la libération des peuples, en particulier des peuples d'Afrique.

225. Dans le courant de cette année 1960, 17 territoires coloniaux et dépendants ont obtenu leur indépendance.

226. Le 14 décembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale, sur l'initiative du Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique, a adopté la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. En approuvant cette grande charte de la liberté, les Nations Unies ont affirmé à nouveau les aspirations légitimes des peuples opprimés et exploités à la liberté et à la dignité, et, exprimant la volonté d'une majorité écrasante, elles ont condamné le brutal colonialisme qui appartient à une ère révolue.

227. Deux ans se sont écoulés depuis cette date historique. Les peuples des territoires coloniaux et non autonomes, inspirés par la Déclaration, ont remporté de nouvelles victoires dans leur lutte pour l'indépendance nationale. Il est réconfortant de constater qu'à la présente session nous avons accueilli six nouveaux Membres à l'Organisation: l'Algérie, le Burundi, la Jamaïque, le Rwanda, la Trinité et Tobago et l'Ouganda.

228. A sa seizième session, l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies fait un autre progrès important vers la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration en créant le Comité spécial qui a pour tâche d'examiner et d'assurer l'application de la Déclaration. Il convient de noter que l'importante résolution 1654 (XVI) portant création du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration a été adoptée, elle aussi, sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique.

229. Ainsi, l'Assemblée générale discute à sa présente session une des plus importantes questions inscrites à son ordre du jour en vue de faire le bilan des résultats obtenus par les peuples et par l'Organisation dans l'application de la Déclaration, et d'élaborer des recommandations concrètes pour nos activités futures tendant à mettre fin au scandaleux régime colonial.

230. Nous sommes saisis du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5738] qui doit servir de base à nos délibérations.

231. Je me bornerai à quelques observations d'ordre général sur la question, sans examiner dans le détail la situation de tous les divers territoires dont traite le rapport du Comité spécial. Ma délégation a eu et aura encore l'occasion de développer les vues de mon gouvernement sur ces territoires à la Quatrième Commission.

232. Ma délégation est d'avis que, malgré les obstacles et les pressions exercées par les puissances coloniales tant à l'intérieur qu'à l'extérieur, le Comité spécial a fait un travail très méritoire. En abordant sa tâche, le Comité a très justement donné la priorité à l'Afrique, ce qui s'explique par l'urgence des revendications des colonies africaines. Son travail a été favorisé par le fait qu'il s'est rendu en Afrique et y a tenu un certain nombre de réunions.

233. En fournissant aux représentants de partis politiques des territoires coloniaux et à d'autres personnes intéressées l'occasion d'exprimer leurs opinions, le Comité a notablement contribué à attirer l'attention de l'opinion mondiale sur la situation dans ces territoires.

234. Les travaux du Comité n'ont évidemment pas été sans imperfections ni faiblesses, dont je parlerai tout à l'heure en présentant les propositions de ma délégation au sujet de l'activité future du Comité.

235. La désintégration progressive du régime colonial sous la pression croissante des mouvements de libération nationale des peuples opprimés est un des traits caractéristiques de notre temps. Depuis la seconde guerre mondiale, près d'un milliard et demi d'hommes ont été libérés du joug colonial et cela non pas grâce à la bienveillance des colonisateurs, comme les représentants des puissances occidentales voudraient le faire croire, mais grâce à la lutte héroïque des peuples coloniaux et dépendants.

236. Le mouvement des peuples vers la liberté et l'indépendance prend un nouvel élan et remporte de nouvelles victoires sur le colonialisme.

237. Nous devons pourtant constater ici que, bien que deux années se soient écoulées depuis l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de sa déclaration historique, le hideux système colonial n'a pas encore entièrement disparu, par la faute de l'attitude des puissances coloniales. L'application de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation rencontre une résistance obstinée de la part des puissances occidentales, qui essaient par tous les moyens de maintenir sous le joug colonial les habitants des territoires dépendants.

238. Sur notre globe, un certain nombre de pays, totalisant environ 50 millions d'habitants, se trouvent encore sous la domination coloniale. Les colonialistes s'agrippent en Afrique, dont une partie considérable n'est pas encore libérée du colonialisme. La Grande-Bretagne, le Portugal, l'Espagne, l'Afrique du Sud et d'autres puissances coloniales refusent d'accorder l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux.

239. Malgré la Déclaration des Nations Unies, le Portugal essaie de maintenir sa domination, au moyen de mesures de guerre, sur les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise et de certaines îles africaines, sans tenir aucun compte de la volonté clairement exprimée des peuples de ces territoires.

240. En Angola, les colonialistes portugais mènent depuis près de deux ans une guerre d'extermination. Ils sont en train d'anéantir le peuple angolais à l'aide d'armes fournies par les puissances membres de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord (OTAN), pour briser la volonté du peuple angolais et étouffer ses aspirations à la liberté et à l'indépendance nationale. Les massacres sans précédent dont le peuple angolais a été victime de la part des Portugais sont bien connus. Les colonialistes portugais mènent aussi une guerre coloniale contre les populations de la Guinée dite portugaise et des îles du Cap-Vert. De même, ils préparent une guerre au Mozambique, où des contingents considérables de l'armée et de la police reçoivent un armement important pour écraser le mouvement de libération nationale des 6 millions d'Africains du Mozambique.

241. Le fait que les dirigeants portugais sont soutenus par leurs alliés de l'OTAN est la seule explication de l'impertinence avec laquelle ils passent outre aux décisions des Nations Unies et aux revendications légitimes des peuples. Les monopoles des puissances de l'OTAN, qui profitent largement de l'exploitation des ressources des colonies portugaises, ont grand intérêt à y maintenir le régime colonial.

242. Au mépris de la Déclaration des Nations Unies et de la volonté des peuples des pays coloniaux, le Royaume-Uni se maintient avec ténacité dans ses colonies. La Rhodésie du Sud, la Rhodésie du Nord, le Nyassaland, le Kenya, Zanzibar, la Gambie, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland, le Souaziland, l'Oman et Aden, ainsi que de nombreux autres pays, souffrent sous le joug colonial de la Grande-Bretagne.

243. Au cours de la discussion sur la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, nous avons vu comment, par différents subterfuges et diverses manœuvres, comme la prétendue "autonomie" de la Rhodésie du Sud, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a essayé d'éluder la responsabilité de son pays concernant la situation en Rhodésie du Sud. Malgré la résolution 1760 (XVII) adoptée par l'Assemblée générale à la présente session, les colons blancs ont mis en vigueur en Rhodésie du Sud une constitution fondée sur la discrimination raciale, qui a été énergiquement condamnée par les Nations Unies. Il est évident que les autorités coloniales ont osé agir ainsi, au mépris des recommandations des Nations Unies, uniquement parce qu'elles sont soutenues par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Les Britanniques ont maintenu jusqu'à présent la Rhodésie du Nord, la Rhodésie du Sud et le Nyassaland dans une fédération coloniale artificielle, où une poignée de colons blancs domine le pays à l'aide de la discrimination raciale et contre la volonté des populations de ces territoires. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'est apparemment pas disposé à fixer une date limite pour l'octroi de l'indépendance au Kenya, alors que les habitants de ce pays, par la voix de deux partis, la Kenya African National Union (KANU) et la Kenya African Democratic Union (KADU) demandent fermement que tous les pouvoirs leur soient transférés en 1962.

244. La conférence constitutionnelle sur la Guyane britannique, que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni avait promis de convoquer, a été ajournée sous des prétextes divers.

245. Le Gouvernement de la République sud-africaine, qui a annexé le Territoire sous mandat du Sud-Ouest africain, exploite et opprime sans pitié la population de ce territoire en exerçant une discrimination raciale contre la population autochtone. La population du Sud-Ouest africain ne veut pas vivre plus longtemps sous l'administration de l'Afrique du Sud. Elle exprime sa volonté de liberté et d'indépendance par la voix d'organisations nationales telles que la National Union of South West Africa, la South West African People's Organization et d'autres encore.

246. Tandis que le vieux colonialisme classique compte ses jours, les puissances impérialistes sont en train de mettre au point de nouvelles méthodes plus subtiles d'asservissement et de domination. Le néo-colonialisme a recours à divers moyens pour arriver à ses fins. Il suffira d'en énumérer quelques-uns: l'asservissement économique des pays sous-développés par des arrangements et contrats commerciaux inéquitables et par une prétendue aide économique et des prêts; la domination politique en entraînant les pays dans des alliances militaires multilatérales et bilatérales et en établissant des bases militaires sur leur territoire, ainsi qu'en soutenant des régimes périmés et réactionnaires contre les mouvements de libération nationale des peuples, et par d'autres moyens.

247. Dans le discours qu'il a prononcé le 9 octobre 1962 à l'Assemblée générale, S. E. M. Sekou Touré, président de la Guinée, parlant des conséquences économiques du néo-colonialisme, a dit:

"Par le jeu des grands marchés économiques, nos pays sont soumis à une paupérisation constante qui fait des pays pauvres les pourvoyeurs des nations très développées. Se substituant à l'impérialisme politique, un impérialisme économique multinational cherche à étendre sa domination sur les pays non développés dans le domaine économique. C'est ainsi que la dégradation continue des termes de l'échange rend dérisoires, sinon inopérantes, l'aide et la coopération techniques dont bénéficient nos pays." [1148ème séance, par. 68.]

248. Le Marché commun fournit la base économique du néo-colonialisme collectif des puissances impérialistes. Le troisième Congrès des peuples africains a condamné à juste titre cette nouvelle forme du colonialisme. Il convient de relever ici que même le journal The New York Times a récemment exprimé le mécontentement du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis et l'inquiétude des agriculteurs américains devant la politique tarifaire des pays du Marché commun. Il est évident que dans les pays en voie de développement la réaction serait encore beaucoup plus forte.

249. Les alliances et les bases militaires des impérialistes sont devenues des instruments importants de domination politique. Les bases militaires établies en territoire étranger ont pour but d'étouffer les mouvements de libération nationale et d'autres mouvements progressistes dans différentes régions du monde. Ces bases sont là pour rappeler la cruauté des puissances coloniales impérialistes. Les puissances de l'OTAN, qui attachent une importance particulière à l'Afrique, ont déjà installé près de 40 bases aériennes et navales sur ce continent. Ces bases constituent une grave menace pour les mouvements de libération nationale sur ce continent et pour la paix et la sécurité des nations de cette région.

250. Je saisis cette occasion pour déclarer que ma délégation soutient les nombreuses délégations arabes qui ont exigé ici la suppression immédiate des bases militaires britanniques au Kenya et à Aden.

251. Les puissances impérialistes n'attachent pas moins d'importance aux alliances avec des régimes locaux féodaux ou d'autres régimes et éléments corrompus. Les régimes fantoches servent à camoufler commodément les plans impérialistes des puissances occidentales.

252. Les Etats-Unis d'Amérique sont devenus l'une des plus grandes puissances coloniales. L'impérialisme des Etats-Unis cherche à supplanter les anciennes puissances coloniales. Cette politique expansionniste des milieux dirigeants des Etats-Unis s'exprime par la doctrine selon laquelle il faut "combler le vide" qui se produirait quand les anciennes puissances coloniales doivent abandonner leurs colonies sous la pression du mouvement de libération nationale.

253. La revue britannique African Trade and Development a fait remarquer avec inquiétude que le fait même de la décolonisation a fourni une bonne occasion aux milieux d'affaires américains de remplacer les propriétaires de ressources africaines et d'écartier les obstacles du chemin des capitalistes américains. Plus de 200 sociétés américaines opèrent actuellement en Afrique et, selon certains renseignements, les investissements des Etats-Unis sur ce continent dépassent 3 milliards de dollars.

254. Grâce à la conversion du crypto-colonialisme voilé des Etats-Unis en un colonialisme évident, "l'empire colonial invisible" est devenu encore plus sinistre.

255. Sous le couvert de la tutelle, les Etats-Unis ont pratiquement transformé en colonies américaines de nombreuses îles du Pacifique, comprenant une population totale de près de 7 millions d'habitants. Le Viet-Nam du Sud, la Corée du Sud, Taiwan et Okinawa ont été réduits au même état.

256. Il est d'autant plus grave et dangereux que les impérialistes américains prêtent assistance à d'autres puissances coloniales dans la répression et la guerre qu'elles ont entreprises contre les populations des territoires coloniaux et dépendants.

257. Comme chacun sait, les milieux monopolistes de l'Allemagne occidentale, que la défaite de l'Allemagne hitlérienne a privés de leurs anciennes possessions coloniales mais qui ont gardé leurs ambitions expansionnistes, se donnent beaucoup de mal pour prendre pied dans l'économie des pays sous-développés. Les impérialistes de l'Allemagne occidentale s'intéressent spécialement à l'Afrique. M. Richard Jaeger, vice-président du Bundestag, exprimant la politique coloniale des milieux dirigeants de la République fédérale d'Allemagne, écri-

vait le 15 septembre 1960 dans le journal Abend-zeitung de Munich:

"La suppression de toutes les possessions coloniales... était du romantisme, dépourvu du sens des réalités. L'Afrique aurait encore eu besoin de la domination européenne pendant au moins un demi-siècle, sinon un siècle entier."

258. Ce ne sont là que quelques exemples des méfaits et des intentions néfastes des puissances coloniales.

259. La grande tâche des Nations Unies est à présent d'assurer l'application rapide de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme. Il faudrait pour cela rendre plus rationnel et efficace le travail des organes compétents des Nations Unies. Ma délégation estime elle aussi que, pour éviter d'inutiles doubles emplois et le gaspillage d'énergie et d'argent, tous les comités qui s'occupent des territoires coloniaux, sauf le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, devraient être dissous, et tous les travaux concernant l'application de la Déclaration devraient être concentrés sous les auspices de ce dernier comité.

260. La délégation mongole est en faveur de l'approbation du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept et des principales recommandations qu'il contient.

261. Notre délégation propose que l'Assemblée générale recommande au Comité spécial de terminer rapidement l'examen de tous les territoires coloniaux et dépendants et de continuer d'observer l'évolution de la situation dans ces territoires pour tenir l'Assemblée générale et d'autres organes intéressés des Nations Unies dûment informés en temps voulu de cette évolution.

262. Etant donné les circonstances, il serait très important de fixer une date limite pour la liquidation complète du colonialisme. A ce sujet, la délégation mongole accueille favorablement l'opinion exprimée par M. Sekou Touré, président de la République de Guinée, en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale, tendant à ce que la date du 24 octobre 1963 soit fixée comme date limite pour l'accession de toutes les colonies à l'indépendance.

263. Notre délégation estime que la résolution de l'Assemblée générale sur le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept devrait inviter de façon pressante les puissances administrantes à mettre fin immédiatement et complètement à toutes les actions militaires dans leurs territoires coloniaux, à retirer leurs troupes de ces territoires, à permettre à la population autochtone d'exercer tous ses droits et de jouir de toutes ses libertés démocratiques, et à faire procéder à des élections libres des organes du pouvoir, sur la base du suffrage universel. En outre, il est nécessaire aussi d'exiger l'abrogation de toutes les lois et de tous les règlements servant des fins colonialistes et sanctionnant la discrimination raciale.

264. De plus, selon ma délégation, l'Assemblée générale devrait déclarer sans équivoque aux autorités coloniales du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud que, si elles poursuivent les atrocités commises dans leurs territoires dépendants et continuent de faire fi des recommandations des Nations Unies concernant ces territoires, il en résulterait des conséquences sérieuses, y compris des sanctions économiques et autres.

265. La délégation mongole espère que les Nations Unies demanderont aux Etats Membres qui aident les puissances coloniales dans leurs méfaits de cesser immédiatement toute assistance qui pourrait être utilisée au détriment des peuples qui luttent pour leur liberté et leur indépendance.

266. Pour terminer, ma délégation exprime une fois de plus l'espoir de voir l'Assemblée générale adopter à sa présente session une résolution visant à la liquidation rapide et complète du honteux colonialisme, sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

267. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de la Tchécoslovaquie qui a demandé à faire usage de son droit de réponse.

268. M. PAVLIK (Tchécoslovaquie) [traduit du russe]: Usant de mon droit de réponse, je tiens à réagir très brièvement contre des allusions faites à l'adresse de mon pays dans les déclarations de certains représentants. Les représentants du Canada et de la Nouvelle-Zélande, en défendant le colonialisme, se sont en réalité faits les avocats d'une cause perdue d'avance. Voyant qu'il n'y a aucun espoir de gagner cette cause, ils essaient au moins de calomnier et de dénigrer leurs adversaires.

269. Faute de tout argument pour la défense du colonialisme, ces deux représentants ont essayé de détourner l'attention de l'Assemblée générale de la question débattue, par des attaques provocatrices contre des pays socialistes. Ils ont notamment évoqué une prétendue "annexion" par l'Union soviétique, après la seconde guerre mondiale, d'une partie du territoire tchécoslovaque.

270. Compte tenu de ce que le Canada et la Nouvelle-Zélande sont très éloignés de l'Europe centrale et de l'Europe orientale, on peut admettre que les connaissances historiques et géographiques relatives à ces régions font défaut à leurs représentants. Toutefois, on ne peut passer sous silence la grossière ignorance des avocats du colonialisme qui viennent à cette tribune.

271. Ainsi, la Russie dite subcarpathique, la région transcarpathique actuelle, dont la population, comme le représentant du Canada a dû le reconnaître lui-même, est ukrainienne de langue et de culture, après la seconde guerre mondiale, usant de son droit d'autodétermination et conformément à un accord signé le 29 juillet 1945 entre la Tchécoslovaquie et l'Union soviétique, s'est jointe à l'Ukraine soviétique. Cette région transcarpathique n'a jamais été peuplée par des Tchèques ni par des Slovaques et il n'y a eu aucun déplacement forcé de population.

272. Le Gouvernement tchécoslovaque a simplement reconnu à la population ukrainienne de cette région le droit à l'autodétermination. Un point, c'est tout. Cependant, les représentants du Canada et de la Nouvelle-Zélande ont oublié de dire que cette région a été arrachée à la Tchécoslovaquie en 1939, avant la seconde guerre mondiale, à la suite de la trahison munichoise des puissances occidentales, abandonnant à Hitler la Tchécoslovaquie pour qu'il la mette en pièces. Si l'on veut parler de sa partie orientale, elle a été abandonnée à Horthy, dictateur fasciste de Hongrie à l'époque.

273. A vrai dire, cette région des Carpathes aurait dû être rattachée à l'Ukraine soviétique dès après la première guerre mondiale. Mais les intrigues antisoviétiques des puissances occidentales ont empêché ce rattachement et ce territoire a reçu un statut spécial qui le rattachait temporairement à la République tchécoslovaque.

274. Cependant, en 1938 et 1939, les puissances occidentales ont jeté la Tchécoslovaquie par-dessus bord et consenti au démembrement du pays, y compris la région transcarpathique qui a été livrée au dictateur fasciste de la Hongrie.

275. Et voilà qu'aujourd'hui on verse des larmes de crocodile parce que la population ukrainienne de la région transcarpathique, usant de son droit d'autodétermination, s'est jointe à l'Ukraine soviétique à laquelle elle appartient ethniquement, géographiquement et historiquement.

276. Les impérialistes et leurs avocats voudraient bien enfoncer un coin entre la Tchécoslovaquie et l'Union soviétique en réchauffant un problème qui, depuis longtemps, a été résolu par consentement fraternel et dans un respect absolu de la volonté du peuple.

277. Comme on a pu le voir au cours de ce débat, les colonialistes et leurs avocats restent isolés. Ils s'adressent des compliments réciproques et rivalisent d'efforts pour provoquer les pays socialistes.

278. Mais la plupart des délégations ignorent ces manœuvres de diversion et concentrent leur attention sur la question qui figure à l'ordre du jour — la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux — et sur la question de la liquidation complète et définitive du colonialisme.

La séance est levée à 18 h 5.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite)

1. M. PAVICEVIC (Yougoslavie): L'Assemblée générale est saisie du rapport [A/5238] du Comité des Dix-Sept^{1/} qui, en raison du temps limité dont il disposait et de la complexité comme de l'envergure du problème, n'a pas été en état de s'occuper cette année de tous les territoires qui se trouvent toujours sous la domination coloniale. Toutefois, par son contenu et son caractère, le rapport représente un document important qui permet à l'Assemblée générale de dresser un bilan des efforts faits jusqu'à présent dans l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)], d'évaluer les résultats obtenus, d'analyser les difficultés et leurs causes, et, finalement, de décider des mesures à prendre pour la mise en œuvre immédiate de cette déclaration.

2. En tant que membre du Comité des Dix-Sept, la délégation yougoslave a eu l'occasion d'exprimer son point de vue sur la situation dans les territoires qui font l'objet du rapport du Comité. Ceci étant, et vu que la position de la Yougoslavie en ce qui concerne la question du colonialisme et sa place dans la situation actuelle très complexe est suffisamment connue, je ne m'arrêterai qu'aux aspects qui sont communs à toutes les colonies existant aujourd'hui et qui caractérisent la situation présente dans le domaine de la décolonisation.

3. Il ne fait aucun doute qu'après l'adoption de la Déclaration un certain nombre de peuples colonisés ont accès à l'indépendance, et que certains changements positifs ont eu lieu dans quelques-uns des territoires toujours dépendants en vue de préparer leurs peuples à l'indépendance. Cependant, malgré ce développement relativement favorable, la situation générale dans le domaine de la décolonisation en général — et pour ce qui est en particulier de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration d'indépendance — est encore loin d'être satisfaisante. Le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept nous amène plutôt à conclure que nous assistons à un développement propre à susciter des inquiétudes.

4. Naturellement, nous sommes loin de nier le caractère relativement progressif de certaines mesures entreprises par quelques puissances administrantes dans les domaines politique, économique et social ou dans celui de l'enseignement, dans un certain nombre de colonies. Comparées à la situation existant antérieurement dans ces colonies, c'est-à-dire examinées d'un point de vue rétrospectif, ces mesures peuvent être considérées comme représentant un certain progrès, bien que minime et lointain à venir. Si, au contraire, nous avons à apprécier ces actions à la lumière des demandes de l'Assemblée générale pour la mise en œuvre immédiate de la Déclaration, de même qu'à la lumière des obligations qu'ont les puissances coloniales d'adapter leur politique et leurs actions aux besoins et aux conditions de l'époque actuelle, et en premier lieu aux demandes des peuples colonisés — ce qui, à notre avis, devrait être le seul critère valable —, il devient évident que les mesures déjà prises ne sont pas suffisantes. Toute autre conclusion à ce sujet ne pourrait avoir pour résultat, pensons-nous, qu'un faux sentiment de contentement, et par cela même ne pourrait que nuire à la lutte des peuples colonisés pour leur indépendance, ce qui, bien entendu, ne servirait les intérêts ni des peuples colonisés, ni de la communauté internationale et de la paix dans le monde.

5. Aucun lecteur objectif du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept ne peut se soustraire à l'impression que, dans cette dernière phase du colonialisme classique, certains événements et changements ont lieu dans l'attitude des parties les plus intéressées et les plus directement engagées, notamment les peuples colonisés et les forces colonialistes. Il s'agit, dans notre opinion, de changements qui, en raison des conséquences possibles et probables pouvant en découler, doivent être l'objet d'une attention toute particulière de la part de l'Assemblée générale.

6. La détermination des peuples colonisés, dont la conscience politique et la force grandissent de jour en jour, d'achever leur liberté et leur indépendance, par voie pacifique si possible, ou par la lutte si cette solution leur est imposée, est un fait que l'on ne peut plus méconnaître. Ceci d'autant plus que cette détermination s'accompagne de nombreuses preuves de réalisme et de modération dans la recherche des solutions aux différents problèmes orées par le colonialisme, par exemple; la réforme du système électoral, la garantie raisonnable des intérêts des colons blancs, les modalités du transfert de pouvoir aux organes représentatifs et exécutifs, etc. En adoptant une telle attitude, les peuples colonisés créent de leur côté les conditions favorables pour une décolonisation plus accélérée et moins douloureuse, mais ils déclinent en même temps toute responsabilité quant aux conséquences éventuelles qui s'ensuivraient si les puissances coloniales poursuivaient la même politique qu'elles ont pratiquée jusqu'ici.

7. Au lieu de s'adapter à la situation nouvelle et aux demandes justifiées et raisonnables des peuples colonisés, les forces colonialistes passent à la contre-offensive — plus particulièrement dans les territoires qui, pour des raisons militaires, politiques et économiques, représentent les bastions du colonialisme classique. C'est pourquoi nous assistons de plus en plus à des mesures visant à étouffer les mouvements de libération nationale, à interdire les organisations politiques autochtones et à emprisonner les leaders politiques, comme ceci a récemment été le cas en Rhodésie du Sud.

8. Nous sommes aussi témoins des tentatives visant au maintien de la position dominante et privilégiée de la minorité blanche et des intérêts économiques étrangers par l'imposition des constitutions élaborées sans la participation et contre la volonté des peuples colonisés, ou par l'emploi de la force. Ajoutons à ceci les actions délibérées pour aggraver les différences entre les groupements ethniques ou politiques, comme cela est le cas dans les deux Rhodésies, au Kenya et en Guinée britannique à laquelle on refuse l'indépendance en raison d'intérêts politiques plus larges qui sont entièrement étrangers à la situation réelle dans ce territoire. Finalement, au lieu de montrer une compréhension pour les aspirations justifiées des peuples colonisés, on répond par la guerre coloniale en Angola ou par des préparations de grande envergure ayant pour but la suppression des mouvements de libération nationale en Afrique centrale et en Afrique du Sud, où les budgets militaires des colonisateurs doublent d'année en année.

9. Ce qui est particulièrement inquiétant dans cette phase de décolonisation, c'est que les puissances coloniales et les gouvernements minoritaires blancs ne sont pas seuls à appliquer une telle politique. Ils jouissent de l'appui des milieux politiques et financiers d'un certain nombre de pays dont les intérêts politiques, stratégiques et économiques demandent le maintien de la présente situation dans le domaine colonial et l'établissement de systèmes de gouvernement qui sauvegarderaient le plus longtemps possible la position privilégiée des intérêts étrangers. La mise au service d'une pareille politique d'arrangements militaires et l'utilisation de la position privilégiée des intérêts économiques étrangers dans les territoires dépendants, pour les mêmes buts, ne peuvent, bien entendu, avoir que des conséquences extrêmement négatives.

10. La vraie situation dans les régions où sévit encore le colonialisme extrême ne peut être déguisée ni par les théories dénouçant le manque de maturité de certains pays, ni par l'évocation de ce qu'on appelle le "good record" de certaines puissances coloniales, pas plus que par les tentatives ayant pour but d'obscurcir le vrai problème par l'emploi d'une rhétorique parlementaire et de discours adressés aux audiences en dehors de cette salle. Les bons discours ne peuvent pas être substitués à une mauvaise politique, à une mauvaise pratique. Par un ton anticolonial du discours, on ne rachète pas un vote adverse. Le vote en faveur des résolutions anticoloniales n'est pas suffisant pour justifier l'appui réel à la politique des puissances coloniales.

11. En soulignant ce que nous considérons comme manquant de réalisme et étant négatif dans l'attitude des puissances coloniales et des forces colonialistes, nous ne perdons de vue ni les difficultés objectives, ni la diversité des problèmes auxquels on a à faire face dans les différentes colonies. Nous ne nions pas le fait qu'il est dans l'intérêt général aussi bien que dans l'intérêt des peuples colonisés d'accéder à l'indépendance dans les meilleures conditions possibles et qu'une période de préparation pour l'indépendance pourrait, dans certains cas, s'avérer désirable. Toutefois, nous n'avons jamais pensé et nous ne croyons pas aujourd'hui que les difficultés objectives et les circonstances particulières aux différentes colonies pourraient être utilisées pour justifier un délai quelconque dans le processus de décolonisation. D'ailleurs, anticipant les arguments des puissances coloniales, l'Assemblée générale avait déjà donné une réponse dans la Déclaration dont un des paragraphes dit que le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique, social et de l'éducation ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance [par. 3]. Une réponse adéquate est de ce fait donnée aux théories du paternalisme qui reconnaissent le droit et la capacité de juger du degré de maturité de la préparation à l'indépendance à tous, sauf aux peuples dont le sort est en cause. En ce qui nous concerne, nous croyons que ce droit n'appartient qu'aux peuples colonisés dont la coopération immédiate et entière représente une condition préalable pour le succès de toute préparation à l'indépendance.

12. Nous sommes contre la simplification exagérée aussi bien que contre une généralisation injustifiée. Nous acceptons le fait qu'il y a des différences dans l'attitude de certaines puissances coloniales, ou plutôt dans la politique suivie par elles. Il n'y a pas de doute que ces différences sont importantes et que l'on doit en tenir compte dans la considération du problème colonial. Mais, en même temps, nous devons également constater qu'il y a des différences importantes dans la politique et dans l'attitude d'une même puissance coloniale envers les divers territoires sous son administration. De telles différences n'existent pas, bien entendu, dans le cas du Portugal dont la politique est négative et réactionnaire sur tout le front des réalisations coloniales. Toutefois, analysant la politique du Royaume-Uni dans cette phase de décolonisation, ou pour mieux dire de colonialisme, c'est avec regret que nous constatons l'existence de différences tangibles entre une politique réaliste d'adaptation aux demandes des peuples colonisés dans le passé et la politique pratiquée par rapport au Kenya, à la Rhodésie du Nord et surtout par rapport à la Rhodésie du Sud. Une politique réaliste envers un des territoires sous administration britannique ne devrait et ne pourra jamais servir de justification à une politique négative envers un autre de ces territoires. Il en va de même de l'argument du "good record" qui milite plutôt en faveur d'une politique conséquente et positive de décolonisation que d'une politique contraire.

13. Au sein du Comité des Dix-Sept, la délégation yougoslave, animée du désir de faciliter les efforts communs et l'accomplissement de la tâche confiée audit Comité par l'Assemblée générale, s'est également prononcée en faveur de la coopération avec les puissances coloniales. Qu'il me soit permis de répéter ici ce que nous avons notamment déjà souligné au sein du Comité des Dix-Sept, que la base de cette coopération ne saurait être autre que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et l'obligation des puissances coloniales de procéder immédiatement et sans ambiguïté à la mise en œuvre de cette déclaration avec la pleine participation des peuples colonisés et de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

14. Sur la base du rapport et des conclusions du Comité des Dix-Sept [A/5238], et avec une appréciation objective de la situation actuelle dans le domaine de la décolonisation, l'Assemblée générale devrait, à notre avis, demander aux puissances coloniales de prendre sans délai les mesures nécessaires pour la création, dans les territoires dépendants, d'organes exécutifs et représentatifs issus d'élections sur la base du suffrage universel et égal pour tous, et de faire en sorte que ces organes s'associent aux efforts communs faits en vue d'accélérer et de terminer le processus de décolonisation. La réalisation d'une participation active des peuples colonisés aux efforts communs de décolonisation, devrait, à notre avis, être une des tâches essentielles du Comité des Dix-Sept. Ce comité, comme nous le savons, n'a pas été établi en vue de recueillir des données statistiques transmises par les puissances coloniales et d'en faire une analyse post factum, mais bien pour agir en tant qu'un instrument actif et efficace et un organe d'action politique et pratique de la communauté internationale dans la mise en œuvre immédiate et conséquente de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance. C'est dans ce sens que le rôle du Comité des Dix-Sept devrait, à notre avis, être conçu et renforcé.

15. La mise en œuvre des mesures dont je viens de parler nécessiterait que la plus haute priorité soit donnée à ceux des territoires dépendants qui, en raison de leur développement, paraissent avoir la situation politique la plus aiguë. Le Comité des Dix-Sept devrait en même temps recourir plus souvent à l'utilisation de méthodes adéquates pour déterminer les aspirations et les désirs des peuples de ces territoires en ce qui concerne leur avenir immédiat.

16. En d'autres termes, le Comité des Dix-Sept devrait élaborer davantage et perfectionner la procédure et la méthode de travail qui lui permettraient le maximum d'activité et d'initiative pour répondre de la manière la plus efficace aux demandes d'une situation donnée.

17. Nous espérons que, dans l'accomplissement de ses tâches, le Comité pourra compter sur une compréhension et un appui beaucoup plus constructifs, aussi bien de la part des puissances coloniales que de la part de tous les autres pays, plus particulièrement de ceux qui, d'une façon ou d'une autre, sont en mesure d'apporter une grande contribution à la réalisation des buts et des principes de la Charte et de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance.

18. Les nombreuses suggestions faites en ce qui concerne la méthode et la substance du travail du Comité des Dix-Sept — celles que nous avons déjà entendues et celles que nous entendrons, plus particulièrement celles qui se rapportent à la fixation des dates limites pour l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires dépendants individuels — représentent, à notre avis, une contribution importante et une base solide, aussi bien pour les actions nouvelles de l'Assemblée générale que pour le travail futur du Comité des Dix-Sept.

19. La délégation yougoslave estime que les buts que l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'est donnés en adoptant la Déclaration et en créant le Comité des Dix-Sept rendent une concentration des efforts et une unification au maximum des activités de l'Assemblée générale dans le domaine colonial extrêmement désirables. Une organisation rationnelle de ces activités, réalisée au moyen de la concentration des efforts au sein du Comité spécial, est une condition importante pour la réalisation de la tâche principale que nous nous sommes tracée en adoptant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, à savoir la libération de tous les peuples colonisés.

20. A notre avis, toutes les autres considérations et tous les intérêts particuliers devraient être subordonnés à la réalisation de cette tâche principale. Il n'est pas, bien entendu, dans nos intentions de dire qu'en cas de situation spécifique — s'il s'en produit — on ne pourrait faire des exceptions, si ces exceptions sont justifiées par des conditions particulières dans un territoire donné ou dans un domaine spécifique de la décolonisation et si, de ce fait, une exception à ce principe est dans le seul et exclusif intérêt d'une mise en œuvre accélérée et plus complète de la Déclaration.

21. La délégation yougoslave est aussi d'avis qu'il serait nécessaire et en accord avec le but fondamental de la Déclaration ainsi qu'avec l'existence du Comité des Dix-Sept d'adapter le Secrétariat des Nations Unies, au point de vue de l'organisation et du travail, aux exigences de cette nouvelle situation, afin qu'il puisse servir plus efficacement encore à la réalisation des tâches que l'Assemblée générale s'est données en proclamant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

22. Fidèle aux principes qu'elle a toujours défendus et à la position qu'elle a toujours prise sur le problème de la décolonisation, la délégation yougoslave n'épargnera à l'avenir aucun effort pour contribuer à la recherche des solutions qui permettront aux peuples colonisés de prendre, au sein de la communauté internationale, la place qui leur revient et dont ils ont été si longtemps privés, consciente que, ce faisant, elle apportera sa contribution à la sauvegarde de la paix et au développement de la coopération internationale.

23. Dato'ONG (Fédération de Malaisie) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'adoption de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, qui fait l'objet de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, marque une étape historique dans les efforts déployés par les Nations Unies pour atteindre un des objectifs essentiels de la Charte: l'édification d'un ordre mondial juste et pacifique, fondé sur le respect effectif des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, le respect de la dignité et de la valeur de la personne humaine, ainsi que de l'égalité de droits des nations grandes et petites. Un seul autre événement peut être considéré comme ayant été aussi positif et aussi exaltant: l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme en 1948.

24. Pour donner suite à cette résolution et pour traduire concrètement les principes qu'elle énonce, l'Assemblée générale a adopté à sa session suivante, c'est-à-dire à la seizième session, la résolution 1654 (XVI) créant un Comité spécial de 17 membres chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale.

25. Nous sommes maintenant en possession du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238]. Avec ses presque 600 pages, c'est un des rapports les plus volumineux qu'ait jamais présentés un comité des Nations Unies, ce qui montre bien l'ampleur du travail réalisé. En sept mois seulement, le Comité a tenu au total 117 séances, tant à New York que lors de séjours dans des territoires africains. Au cours de cette période, le Comité spécial a étudié la situation de 12 territoires coloniaux, tous situés en Afrique à l'exception de la Guyane britannique.

26. Nous approuvons la décision prise par le Comité spécial de donner priorité aux territoires situés en Afrique, parce que, comme le souligne le rapport:

"... c'est en Afrique que le plus grand nombre d'individus continuent de vivre sous un régime colonial, ... c'est en Afrique que l'on trouve encore les plus grands territoires coloniaux et... c'est enfin en Afrique que l'on rencontre les problèmes les plus difficile." [A/5238, chap. 1er, par. 149.]

27. Ma délégation approuve également les autres raisons qu'avance en ce sens le Comité spécial, à savoir que l'importance qu'il a accordée à l'Afrique se justifie par le caractère impérieux des problèmes qui se posent dans les colonies d'Afrique et la nécessité de prendre d'urgence des mesures appropriées en vue d'éviter des difficultés encore plus grandes à l'avenir.

28. Le rapport du Comité spécial fournit à l'Assemblée générale une foule de renseignements précieux sur la situation des territoires que le Comité a étudiés jusqu'à présent, ainsi que sur les problèmes auxquels il s'est heurté. En soumettant ce rapport, le Comité spécial a posé un nouveau jalon dans la suite des tentatives faites par la communauté internationale pour liquider définitivement les derniers vestiges du colonialisme.

29. Je tiens à saisir l'occasion qui m'est offerte de féliciter ici au nom de ma délégation le Comité spécial qui, sous l'habile direction de son président, M. C. S. Jha, représentant de l'Inde, et de son vice-président, M. Sori Coulibaly, représentant du Mali, a mené à bien une tâche délicate en étudiant un dossier si fourni dans le délai relativement court dont il disposait. M. Najmuddine Rifai, représentant de la Syrie et rapporteur du Comité, mérite une mention spéciale pour la compétence et la clarté avec lesquelles il a exposé les conclusions du Comité dans le rapport dont l'Assemblée est saisie.

30. Bien que la tentation soit vive, je m'abstiendrai pour le moment d'entreprendre un examen détaillé des problèmes relatifs à chaque territoire. Il convient cependant de souligner dès le départ que les problèmes qui se posent dans les colonies d'Afrique sont urgents et appellent des solutions immédiates. L'entêtement que met le Gouvernement portugais, par exemple, à refuser d'accepter les réalités de l'heure et à dénier obstinément aux peuples qui lui sont assujettis le droit à l'autodétermination est une source constante de heurts qui pourraient bien engendrer des menaces plus graves à la paix et à la sécurité internationales. Le maintien des pratiques de discrimination et de ségrégation raciales qui rend si aigus les problèmes posés dans de nombreuses colonies africaines, notamment les territoires administrés par le Portugal et le Sud-Ouest africain où le régime inique de l'apartheid est imposé par le Gouvernement sud-africain, est tout aussi dangereux par ses répercussions éventuelles.

31. L'intention avouée que manifeste le Gouvernement sud-africain d'annexer les trois territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland, a suscité chez les membres du Comité spécial de vives inquiétudes et les a incités à avertir le Gouvernement sud-africain que toute tentative faite pour annexer ces territoires ou pour porter atteinte d'une façon quelconque à leur intégrité territoriale sera considérée par l'Organisation des Nations Unies comme un acte d'agression qui viole la Charte des Nations Unies.

32. Les problèmes raciaux existant dans de nombreuses colonies africaines ne doivent pas faire obstacle à la satisfaction des espoirs et des aspirations naturelles des peuples africains à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Toute tentative visant à empêcher l'exercice de cette autodétermination par l'imposition constante de discriminations raciales destinées à perpétuer la domination d'une minorité raciale sur l'immense majorité de la population autochtone est non seulement contraire à la Charte et à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, mais constitue même une politique à courte vue lourde de dangers pour les territoires intéressés et aussi sur le plan international. Quoi qu'il en soit, une telle tentative ne peut réussir puisque, par sa nature même, elle s'oppose au courant de l'histoire et au processus irrésistible et irréversible de libération des peuples asservis.

33. L'histoire de la décolonisation contient de nombreux exemples très nets de territoires à population multiraciale qui ont accédé à l'indépendance en s'inspirant du principe de l'égalité et de l'harmonie raciales et qui ont réussi dans cette entreprise. La Fédération de Malaisie compte parmi les pays du monde contemporain où des peuples de races diverses, ayant des caractéristiques culturelles, religieuses et linguistiques différentes, ont décidé de s'unir pour accéder à la dignité de l'indépendance. C'est cette même unité que la Malaisie d'avant l'indépendance, luttant pour se libérer de la domination coloniale britannique, avait créée dans un esprit de tolérance, de coopération et d'égalité, qui constitue aujourd'hui la base solide sur laquelle le peuple malais a fondé et développe sa stabilité et sa prospérité politiques, économiques et sociales.

34. La politique de la Fédération de Malaisie en matière de colonialisme n'a pas besoin d'être explicitée davantage. Nous nous opposons au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, qu'il s'agisse du colonialisme traditionnel tel que le pratiquent les puissances d'Europe occidentale ou du nouveau genre de colonialisme encore plus sinistre de l'impérialisme communiste. Nous sommes d'avis que le colonialisme, sous quelque forme que ce soit, constitue une source constante de frictions internationales et une menace à la paix et à la sécurité du monde, et qu'il faut donc l'éliminer rapidement.

35. Le rapport du Comité spécial a souligné une nouvelle fois qu'il est urgent de mettre fin au colonialisme. Il a révélé en outre que, même à l'intérieur d'un continent comme l'Afrique, les problèmes diffèrent d'un territoire à l'autre. Nous approuvons donc la façon dont le Comité a abordé le problème en étudiant les territoires un à un, car cette façon de procéder est la seule qui permette de dégager les problèmes propres à chacun d'entre eux et de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations propres à les résoudre. Là où les puissances administrantes pratiquent une politique éclairée, les Nations Unies doivent les aider de leurs encouragements, afin d'accélérer encore le processus de décolonisation. D'un autre côté, les Nations Unies doivent exercer une pression plus forte pour obtenir l'élimination de tout ce qui fait obstacle à ce processus de décolonisation.

36. J'ai quelques observations à faire sur l'avenir du Comité spécial. Tous les représentants qui ont abordé ce sujet ont été unanimes à dire que le Comité spécial devait poursuivre son œuvre. Ma délégation est entièrement de cet avis. Certains orateurs ont avancé des suggestions concrètes quant à l'élargissement de sa composition et à la coordination de ses travaux avec ceux d'autres comités chargés de tel ou tel problème colonial. Nous appuierons toute proposition qui pourrait faciliter et accélérer cette importante tâche des Nations Unies.

37. Pour ce qui est de la composition du Comité spécial, il convient de noter qu'en désignant ses 17 membres le Président de la seizième session de l'Assemblée générale avait dûment tenu compte du principe de la représentation géographique, pour permettre au Comité spécial de bénéficier, dans l'accomplissement de l'importante tâche qui lui avait été confiée, de la sagesse et de l'expérience de personnes représentant un éventail de régions aussi vaste que possible.

38. Ma délégation relève avec satisfaction que le Comité spécial comprend bon nombre de représentants de pays d'Afrique et d'Asie qui n'ont souvent accédé eux-mêmes à l'indépendance qu'à une date récente. C'est là un facteur important, car ces représentants ont particulièrement à cœur de voir les peuples assujettis accéder à l'indépendance rapidement et dans l'ordre, souci qui provient de leur connaissance et de leur expérience directes de la domination coloniale, comme de leur compréhension intime des nombreux problèmes qu'a posés leur propre lutte pour l'indépendance. Les représentants des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie qui siègent au Comité spécial doivent donc être à même de contribuer à ses travaux de façon utile et constructive.

39. L'Assemblée générale a chargé le Comité d'un problème grave qui intéresse la vie, le destin et les aspirations de millions d'individus encore asservis à une domination étrangère. Ces peuples attendent des Nations Unies qu'elles défendent leur cause, en espérant et en escomptant de toutes leurs forces que les efforts que nous déployons ici mèneront sans tarder à la suppression des injustices et des infamies qu'ils endurent depuis si longtemps.

40. Il est regrettable que certains pays membres aient délibérément utilisé la tribune du Comité spécial à des fins de guerre froide et de propagande. Ce genre d'activité dessert les intérêts mêmes des peuples coloniaux. Etant donné la confiance que l'Assemblée générale a mise en lui, le Comité spécial a de lourdes responsabilités. L'Assemblée générale est en droit de s'attendre que le Comité s'en acquitte fidèlement dans l'intérêt réel et pour le bien des millions d'habitants des pays colonisés.

41. Avant de terminer, je ferai quelques observations sur une déclaration qu'a faite hier [1177ème séance] le représentant de la République des Philippines au sujet d'une revendication du Gouvernement philippin, qui prétend à la souveraineté sur le territoire du Bornéo du Nord. Pour mon gouvernement, cette revendication ne concerne actuellement que les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et des Philippines. Mais, puisque le représentant des Philippines a parlé de la future création d'une Fédération de Grande Malaisie, il me paraît utile d'apporter ici certaines précisions.

42. Mon gouvernement a été amené à élaborer le plan de création d'une Grande Malaisie à cause du désir très vif de la population du Bornéo du Nord d'accéder à l'indépendance en fusionnant avec la Fédération de Malaisie. Ce vif désir se manifeste partout dans le territoire. Tous les partis politiques du territoire approuvent ce plan. Il n'y a pratiquement pas de voix dissidente. Les partis politiques United National Kadazan Organisation, United National Sabah Organisation, Borneo Utara National Party, Pasok Momogun Party et North Borneo Indian Congress ont formé une alliance et se sont prononcés en faveur du plan. Cette alliance, désignée sous le nom de Sabah Alliance Party, représente tous les secteurs de la population du Bornéo du Nord.

43. Je souligne en passant que le Pasok Momogun Party, dont je viens de citer le nom, était le seul parti du Bornéo du Nord représenté parmi les trois pétitionnaires qui ont adressé au Comité des Dix-Sept la pétition dont le représentant des Philippines a parlé hier. Ce même parti, le Pasok Momogun Party, fait maintenant partie du Sabah Alliance Party qui, je le répète, appuie le plan de création d'une Grande Malaisie.

44. M. KIRONDE (Ouganda) [traduit de l'anglais]: La ligne politique que mon gouvernement se propose de suivre vis-à-vis de l'impérialisme sous tous ses divers aspects et dans ses différentes manifestations est déjà connue de tous. Ayant accédé à l'indépendance tout récemment, l'Ouganda tient à sauvegarder cette indépendance toute neuve ainsi qu'à aider ceux qui sont encore esclaves de l'impérialisme. On ne peut envisager cette question de l'impérialisme de deux façons différentes, aucun compromis n'est possible, et ma délégation compte bien, en agissant en étroite collaboration avec les autres pays du monde qui chérissent la liberté, harceler l'ennemi jusqu'à la victoire finale. Le plus grand danger qui guette aujourd'hui l'Afrique vient peut-être de l'extrémisme sud du continent africain où le vent de changement, qui a depuis cinq ans acquis la force d'un ouragan, a frappé au sud le mur de l'apartheid pour se répercuter au nord, si bien que toute l'Afrique risque maintenant d'être la proie de ce monstre sud-africain de l'apartheid et du racisme. Aucun Etat africain n'est à l'abri des tentacules de ce monstre. Son action se fait déjà sentir jusqu'au Katanga, à l'Angola, et au Mozambique, dans les territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland, qui sont tous empêchés d'accéder à l'indépendance, soit par la République sud-africaine, soit par des sympathisants ou des admirateurs de sa politique raciale.

45. Je n'ai pas l'intention de parler de chacun des pays encore placés sous domination coloniale; je me limiterai à ceux où la situation est la plus désespérée et la plus explosive. J'avertis d'abord les représentants ici présents que dans certains pays la domination coloniale sévit dans toute sa dureté, sa brutalité et son injustice, mais sous un camouflage. Je pense à des pays comme la République sud-africaine et la Rhodésie du Sud. Les anciennes puissances coloniales y ont remis le pouvoir, en totalité ou en partie, à un groupe de colons blancs prêts à tout, qui, après s'être partagé tous les pouvoirs politiques, se posent maintenant en Etats démocratiques indépendants.

46. Selon moi, le régime colonial s'est maintenu dans ces deux pays et sous une forme pire que la précédente, parce que le pouvoir politique est passé de Whitehall à Cape Town ou à Salisbury et qu'au lieu de lutter contre une puissance coloniale lointaine et détachée, ayant une tradition de libéralisme et professant une politique de décolonisation, comme la Grande-Bretagne, les Africains doivent maintenant lutter contre l'impérialisme blanc qui est sur place et dont la politique repose sur la supériorité raciale et la sujétion perpétuelle des peuples africains. C'est bien, et de loin, la pire de toutes les formes d'impérialisme, parce qu'elle induit si facilement en erreur toute personne non avertie et parce qu'en Afrique du Sud, dans les Rhodésies et dans les colonies portugaises la lutte pour l'autodétermination est devenue pour les autochtones africains une lutte pour la vie même. L'effort commun d'armement et la conspiration d'alliance et d'aide mutuelle entre le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud, la Fédération de Rhodésie et du Nyassaland et l'Etat séparatiste fantoche du Katanga sont autant d'indices d'une volonté bien arrêtée de perpétuer le colonialisme et de maintenir un règne de terreur. Des formes modernes d'esclavage, de tyrannie, de cruauté fanatique et de haine froide sont ainsi devenues les caractéristiques d'un régime qui repose essentiellement sur la crainte.

47. Les problèmes étaient relativement simples quand l'Inde, par exemple, ou même mon propre pays, l'Ouganda, luttait pour conquérir leur liberté, alors que la situation des pays où le gouvernement est aux mains d'une minorité blanche est extrêmement confuse. On pourrait dire, en reprenant un proverbe ougandais, qu'elle fait penser à un serpent dans une marmite en terre cuite. Pour pouvoir se servir de la marmite, qui est souvent le seul ustensile du ménage, il faut tuer le serpent, mais en tuant le serpent on risque de briser la marmite. Le mal qui ravage ces régions est si profond et bouleverse à tel point tous les rouages de la chose politique que le seul remède possible doit être administré à dose massive et de l'extérieur.

48. Il est maintenant bien évident que la poignée de colons portugais qui vivent au Mozambique et en Angola, envieux de la position inattaquable qu'ont réussi à se tailler les colons blancs en Afrique du Sud et dans les deux Rhodésies, repoussent l'idée désormais dépassée de l'assimilation et de l'intégration à la mère patrie et réclament la mainmise complète sur la politique afin de pouvoir finalement revendiquer leur indépendance en suivant l'exemple de leurs frères blancs d'Afrique du Sud.

49. De plus, ces pays qui se prétendent des Etats indépendants ne sont nullement tenus de communiquer aux Nations Unies des rapports périodiques sur leur administration et ils peuvent ainsi promulguer les lois les plus draconiennes et adopter les mesures répressives les plus sévères sans que les Membres de l'Organisation puissent leur demander de rendre compte de leurs actes. A mon avis, les Etats Membres devraient envisager sérieusement la possibilité de demander au gouvernement blanc d'Afrique du Sud, qui représente 2 millions de blancs, de communiquer des rapports périodiques, conformément à l'alinéa g de l'Article 73 de la Charte, sur la façon dont il traite les 10 millions d'Africains dont il a la charge. Si la Grande-Bretagne est tenue de fournir des rapports sur le Kenya, elle devrait aussi, ou bien le Gouvernement de la Rhodésie du Sud le devrait, faire rapport sur la façon dont l'un ou l'autre administre le territoire de la Rhodésie du Sud. Le critère essentiel dans les deux cas est l'existence de rapports de maître à serviteur entre la classe gouvernante et les peuples autochtones assujettis. Ce critère repose sur la possession du pouvoir politique et de tout ce qui en découle par la classe dirigeante de race blanche, d'une part, et l'impuissance et la soumission forcée des peuples autochtones, d'autre part. Du point de vue humanitaire comme à d'autres points de vue, ceux qui détiennent tout pouvoir sur une autre race ou une autre classe assument automatiquement le rôle de tuteurs et il est normal qu'ils rendent compte de la façon dont ils exercent cette tutelle sur les peuples assujettis dont ils ont la charge. La nécessité de fournir de tels rapports est d'autant plus impérieuse quand une minorité représentant 10 p. 100 de la population s'arroge le pouvoir et impose sa loi à la majorité, comme c'est le cas dans la République sud-africaine.

50. Pour toucher de façon plus précise la question brûlante de la Rhodésie du Sud, je dois redire encore une fois que le Gouvernement britannique a le devoir de déclarer en termes non équivoques qu'il n'accordera pas l'indépendance à la Rhodésie du Sud tant que le pouvoir politique ne sera pas retiré à la minorité blanche et remis aux autochtones, qui constituent l'immense majorité de la population. La Rhodésie du Sud est à peu près le dernier pays où la Grande-Bretagne puisse défendre la cause des Africains et éloigner de nous le désastre qui menace d'engloutir l'Afrique tout entière.

51. Les perspectives qui s'offrent à ce territoire, au reste de la Fédération d'Afrique centrale et aux deux territoires portugais de l'Angola et du Mozambique sont extrêmement sombres car la suprématie blanche y est totale, malgré le vent puissant de nationalisme africain qui continue à balayer l'Afrique en tous sens, amenant les Etats africains à l'indépendance l'un après l'autre. Aussi sûrement que la nuit succède au jour, le heurt entre le nationalisme et le panafricanisme, d'une part, et les forces de l'apartheid et du racisme, d'autre part, est proche et inévitable.

52. Dans les territoires portugais de l'Angola et du Mozambique, la situation est encore plus désespérée et inextricable que partout ailleurs en Afrique. Il est ardu et ingrat de comparer l'un à l'autre les régimes de deux colonies, parce qu'en disant que l'un est pire que l'autre on semble préférer un mal à un autre; mais, en considérant qu'un mal peut être moindre qu'un autre, on peut dire que le type de colonialisme de l'Afrique du Sud est un mal moindre que celui que subissent les colonies portugaises, parce que dans le premier cas les noirs savent où ils en sont vis-à-vis des blancs et parce que le principe du développement égal et parallèle, tout injuste qu'il soit, tend à donner à l'Africain la possibilité de recueillir quelques miettes de civilisation qui tombent de la table du maître. Dans les colonies portugaises, au contraire, il est indéniable que l'on compte maintenir éternellement les autochtones dans le rôle d'ilotes, de porteurs d'eau et de bûcherons au service de leurs seigneurs blancs. Après 450 ans de colonialisme portugais, il n'existe pas dans tous les territoires portugais d'Afrique une seule école secondaire pour Africains, ni par conséquent une seule université, ce qui a pour résultat lamentable que l'on peut compter sur ses 10 doigts le nombre d'Africains possédant un diplôme universitaire.

53. Il est évident que le Portugal est incapable d'améliorer et de promouvoir le bien-être social, politique et économique du peuple africain. C'est d'ailleurs un pays européen arriéré. Charité bien ordonnée commence par soi-même; le Portugal ferait bien de mettre de l'ordre chez lui avant de vouloir étendre à l'Afrique sa "mission civilisatrice". Les Nations Unies ont le devoir de s'assurer que l'Angola et le Mozambique accèdent rapidement à l'indépendance ou, à défaut, qu'ils soient placés sans délai sous la tutelle de l'Organisation.

54. En ce qui concerne la question de la Fédération d'Afrique centrale, ma délégation est fermement d'avis qu'il est tout à fait vain de vouloir séparer ce qui a été uni. La meilleure façon de faire l'unification de l'Afrique est de procéder d'abord à des groupements de gouvernements à l'échelon régional, et le démembrement de la Fédération serait donc une fausse manœuvre. La seule chose à faire maintenant est de donner à chacun une voix, sans répartir les habitants en citoyens de première et de deuxième classe et limiter ainsi le droit de vote de la grande majorité de la population autochtone de la Fédération d'Afrique centrale.

55. Pour en venir à un pays plus proche du mien, ma délégation est d'avis qu'il faut maintenant organiser des élections générales au Kenya le plus tôt possible. Pour trouver la solution la plus satisfaisante aux problèmes raciaux et tribaux qui s'y posent actuellement, le Kenya a besoin d'un gouvernement jouissant de l'appui de la majorité de la population. De tels problèmes fournissent immanquablement aux impérialistes un fructueux terrain d'action.

56. Ma délégation considère la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale comme la Grande Charte des peuples coloniaux et comme la marque d'une ère nouvelle dans l'histoire des Nations Unies. Fidèle à l'esprit de cette résolution sur la décolonisation, ma délégation a à cœur de voir accéder à l'indépendance tous les territoires qui n'y sont pas encore parvenus.

M. Liu (Chine), vice-président, prend la présidence.

57. M. BENHIMA (Maroc): Les débats habituels sur le colonialisme devant notre organisation ressemblaient, il y a quelques années encore, à un procès où les parties, demeurant absentes, plaident en quelque sorte par personnes interposées l'une se voyant d'autant plus contrainte à la passion que l'autre feignait le désintéressement quand ce n'était pas l'insouciance.

58. De tels débats, conclus dans l'indifférence de la majorité, laissent en général les problèmes dans leur stade statique au point de vue de l'intervention de notre organisation, et la confrontation entre le colonisé et le colonisateur était immanquablement transférée sur le plan de la lutte directe, chaque fois plus inégale et plus violente, mais où la victime n'était plus toujours la partie perdante.

59. De nombreux peuples n'ont pas pu suivre d'autre itinéraire, et le phénomène colonial lui-même a commencé à disparaître à la suite d'échecs militaires aussi dramatiques pour ceux qui défendaient ce phénomène colonial que pour ceux qui cessaient d'en être les victimes. L'inéluctabilité de ce processus, jointe à la dynamique du courant de libération dans le monde, a fini par amener les puissances colonisatrices les plus réticentes à penser à une possibilité de résoudre par des voies différentes les problèmes que posait leur domination.

60. L'Organisation des Nations Unies offrait en effet un cadre adéquat pour la confrontation pacifique des parties et la recherche d'une solution satisfaisante pour chacune d'elles.

61. Les débats n'ont pas toujours été aisés; ils n'ont pas toujours été couronnés de succès. Mais le dialogue tempérait toujours quelque peu le désespoir des uns et la violence des autres; il apportait aussi la possibilité d'un témoignage dont le coefficient d'objectivité facilitait l'arbitrage.

62. Depuis quatre ans notamment, et sauf quelques exceptions parfois douloureuses, nous avons assisté à une évolution à peu près conforme à ces idées et à ces principes. Mais il n'a pas semblé complètement rassurant de se fier de façon passive à la seule vertu de ce processus et à la valeur de certains exemples, même très bien réussis.

63. La responsabilité de l'Organisation ne pouvait se limiter à l'énoncé de certains principes, quel que soit leur poids moral ou juridique. L'expérience avait montré la nécessité d'une vigilance plus étroite et même l'institution d'organes particulièrement appropriés pour veiller à l'exécution rapide et fidèle des principes de la Charte et des décisions de la majorité. Sur le plan du colonialisme, divers organes existent qui sont de création concomitante à la Charte ou ultérieure, nés de nouvelles interprétations de la Charte même ou du pragmatisme de sa jurisprudence. Et, s'il est vrai que certains ont joué un rôle particulièrement satisfaisant dans la voie de la libération des peuples, d'autres n'ont manifesté malheureusement qu'une sclérose dangereuse pour la vie de l'Organisation tout entière.

64. Au cours de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, qui a examiné avec une attention toute particulière plusieurs aspects de la situation internationale, et qui a dégagé des courants assez forts vers la solution rapide de certaines crises endémiques, l'Assemblée a adopté la résolution 1514 (XV), qui a été saluée par l'opinion mondiale comme un des événements les plus importants de la vie de l'Organisation et qui a eu, spécialement dans les pays encore colonisés à l'époque, un remarquable retentissement. On se rappelle qu'elle n'a pas obtenu ici le concours de toutes les puissances; néanmoins, elle n'a pas provoqué ouvertement leur hostilité, et la mauvaise humour de certaines d'entre elles n'a pas altéré l'enthousiasme général.

65. Mais cette importante décision, qui a ranimé l'espoir dans l'Organisation, risquait de demeurer lettre morte si elle n'était, sans retard, consolidée par la création d'un organisme spécialement conçu pour sa mise en application. Au cours de la seizième session, l'Assemblée générale a eu la sagesse d'adopter la résolution 1654 (XVI), tendant à la création du Comité des Dix-Sept, chargé de veiller à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

66. La délégation du Maroc a suivi avec un vif intérêt les consultations qui ont abouti à la composition du Comité et, ultérieurement, les travaux de cet organisme tant en ce qui concerne ses réunions au Siège que celles qui ont été tenues dans différents pays. L'importance que nous avons accordée à son rôle et à son travail nous a du reste incités à solliciter qu'il tienne une session à Tanger, et ma délégation saisit cette occasion pour exprimer de nouveau ses remerciements au Secrétariat et au Comité lui-même pour l'honneur qui nous a été fait en nous permettant de l'accueillir dans notre pays. Je peux vous affirmer, comme mes collègues de l'Ethiopie et du Tanganyika n'auront pas manqué de le faire, l'immense espérance des populations du continent africain qui ont vu les représentants des 17 pays Membres examiner sur place, avec intérêt et dévouement, tous les problèmes qu'ils ont pu confronter sur notre continent.

67. Je puis affirmer également que tous les dirigeants des mouvements de libération qui ont pu être entendus à l'occasion de ces sessions africaines ont désormais une foi plus solide dans le rôle de l'Organisation quant à la liquidation du colonialisme, et accordent, de ce fait, une place plus large au principe de l'évolution pacifique des rapports entre pays colonisés et pays colonisateurs.

68. Si l'on ne peut préjuger des conclusions que les puissances coloniales ont tirées d'un an d'existence et d'activité du Comité, on peut sans erreur affirmer que les peuples qui luttent pour leur indépendance ont investi un immense capital de confiance dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et ont remis avec une grande espérance une partie de leur lutte entre ses mains. Il nous semble que c'est là un résultat dont notre organisation doit particulièrement être fière, car, plus que jamais, sa cause se confond avec celle de la liberté et, plus que jamais, cette liberté semble devoir être conquise et consolidée dans l'équilibre et l'harmonie.

69. Nous avons entendu, au sein du Comité des Dix-Sept comme au cours du débat actuel, de nombreuses critiques adressées au Comité, les unes dirigées contre son existence même, d'autres dénonçant les faiblesses de sa procédure et des objectifs de son action.

70. Nous admettons qu'un organisme qui existe à peine depuis un an et dont la tâche si lourde a sans doute mis à l'épreuve une méthode de travail qui a été recherchée beaucoup plus dans le désir de coopération et d'efficacité souhaitées par la majorité de ses membres que dans une définition statique qui aurait été retenue dès sa création puisse faire l'objet de certaines critiques. Mais les termes dans lesquels ces critiques ont été formulées nous donnent le droit de remettre en cause la sincérité de certaines puissances coloniales qui doivent, en fait, viser davantage l'existence du Comité que certains aspects de son activité. S'il en était ainsi, ces puissances nous donneraient, plus que par le passé, des raisons de souhaiter son maintien et de reconnaître les mérites certains de son activité.

71. Le remarquable rapport [A/5238] qui nous a été présenté par M. Najmuddine Rifai, représentant de la Syrie, est un document dont la valeur n'échappera ni aux Membres de l'Organisation, ni aux peuples qui ont confiance en elle et qui trouvent dans ce document un diagnostic précis de tous les aspects de la domination coloniale, là où elle existe encore.

72. Les auditions des pétitionnaires, les entretiens avec certaines autorités administrantes nous sont rapportés dans une authenticité et une objectivité qui donnent à notre débat actuel sur le problème le plus passionnant de notre siècle une tournure d'où la passion est totalement absente. J'ajouterai que, par la diversité de ses études, le rapport se présente comme une synthèse de l'ensemble des problèmes concernant les territoires non autonomes et qui sont répartis entre plusieurs comités spéciaux. Je suis sûr que les mérites de chacun de ces comités ne seraient guère diminués si l'ensemble des questions concernant la fin du colonialisme était désormais centralisé entre les mains du Comité des Dix-Sept. Les recherches qui ont été faites et les rapports des comités spéciaux constituent un apport d'ordre historique et technique appréciable pour la suite des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept. Bien entendu, pour des raisons tenant à la Charte même, l'existence du Conseil de tutelle demeure hautement souhaitée, ainsi que celle du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Pour des raisons politiques qui n'échappent à personne, le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola doit être maintenu pour continuer sa tâche auprès de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité.

73. Ma délégation se rallie à la suggestion qui a été faite à cette tribune par plusieurs éminents orateurs, tendant à l'augmentation du nombre des membres du Comité des Dix-Sept. Différents chiffres ont été avancés, mais rien ne semble s'opposer à un accord imminent sur le nombre supplémentaire de membres dont la participation serait considérée comme utile à la tâche de cet organisme, tout en lui évitant les inconvénients d'un appareil très lourd dans son articulation, et sans altérer l'atmosphère de coopération et d'harmonie qui doit continuer à le caractériser.

74. D'autre part, à l'occasion du discours qu'il a prononcé devant l'Assemblée générale, en octobre dernier [1148ème séance], le président Sekou Touré a exprimé le vœu de voir l'Assemblée se mettre d'accord et arrêter une date limite à laquelle tous les peuples colonisés auraient recouvré leur liberté. Mon éminent collègue, le représentant de la Guinée, a renouvelé cette suggestion au cours du débat actuel [1169ème séance]. Je sais quelles sont les divergences de vues qu'une telle suggestion n'a pas manqué de provoquer. Là encore ma délégation espère qu'un accord interviendra bientôt et sera formulé dans le projet de résolution qui sera soumis à l'Assemblée.

75. L'existence du Comité des Dix-Sept, sa méthode de travail, les modifications nécessaires à apporter à sa composition et à sa procédure méritent certainement des commentaires plus complets que ceux que ma délégation a jugé utile de formuler. C'est là un instrument dont il est vain de prétendre qu'il est actuellement à l'état de perfection souhaitable; mais cet aspect de son existence n'exclut pas une action d'amélioration et de perfectionnement à entreprendre, soit en son sein, soit par l'Assemblée générale elle-même.

76. Ce qui demeure primordial dans l'examen de son rapport, c'est davantage la finalité qui a été assignée au Comité et l'analyse du progrès qu'il aura réalisé sur la voie de la mise en application de la Déclaration sur la fin du colonialisme.

77. La fusion sous un même point de l'ordre du jour de ces deux aspects de la question ne doit pas faire perdre de vue à l'Assemblée que le vrai débat doit porter sur le processus de la décolonisation.

78. Nous avons considéré que l'innovation la plus importante introduite par les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) dans le domaine de la lutte contre le colonialisme était l'introduction d'une méthode de travail fondée sur le dialogue et la coopération entre les puissances administrantes et des pays Membres choisis parmi les plus qualifiés pour exprimer au sein de l'Organisation les revendications des peuples encore colonisés.

79. Nous avons effectivement fondé un grand espoir sur la portée d'un tel événement qui modifie complètement la nature des rapports entre les derniers défenseurs de la domination coloniale et les peuples qui se sont reconnu le devoir de lutter au sein de l'Organisation pour mettre un terme à cette domination.

80. Mais la substitution du dialogue à la confrontation violente ne doit pas seulement donner bonne conscience à ceux qui ne l'avaient pas auparavant et paralyser le cours de l'histoire sous prétexte que ce dialogue a besoin de temps pour porter ses fruits. Il serait particulièrement dangereux pour la paix que l'on se réfugie confortablement dans le pacifisme de cette politique et que l'on oublie les risques de réveil douloureux après une patience déçue. Car, de façon générale, si cette méthode a eu le mérite d'éviter des crises aiguës ici ou là dans les différents territoires encore dépendants, elle ne semble pas avoir conduit jusqu'à présent à des résultats concrets sur la voie d'une libération proche.

81. Je ne ferai pas une analyse de la situation dans chacun des territoires intéressés par le rapport. La Quatrième Commission, qui étudie en détail les problèmes relatifs à chacun d'entre eux nous offre une occasion plus appropriée de nous attarder devant chaque cas et d'examiner l'évolution correspondante. Mais, de façon générale, la nature des conflits n'a pratiquement pas changé et les puissances administrantes, même quand elles admettent en principe la perspective du changement, ne semblent pas prendre les mesures nécessaires pour en accélérer l'avènement.

82. Dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, nous nous trouvons encore devant un comportement colonialiste intégral, et le Gouvernement portugais continue à manifester une indifférence totale à toute action des Nations Unies, quelle que soit sa nature. Aucun progrès n'est réalisé dans la voie de la collaboration avec les Nations Unies. Et, dans les territoires en question, la guerre se développe et les deux parties s'installent dans le climat d'une lutte à outrance qui semble laisser aux armes le soin de décider de l'avenir. Le conflit armé entre bientôt dans sa quatrième année et exclut de plus en plus un recours au dialogue ou à toute autre voie pacifique.

83. Ni les injonctions des Nations Unies, ni les conseils des amis les plus proches, ni encore moins la valeur des expériences nombreuses et récentes ne semblent entamer l'obstination des autorités portugaises. Les tentatives faites par le mouvement nationaliste angolais vers la recherche d'une discussion restent ignorées et les dirigeants de la lutte pour la libération ne manqueront pas de ce fait d'être renforcés dans la détermination d'engager à leur tour une guerre totale à laquelle l'Afrique, sinon le monde entier, ne pourra pas rester indifférente.

84. Si, en Angola, la situation tragique ne suscite aucun changement dans l'attitude du Portugal il n'est guère prévisible qu'il prenne une attitude différente au Mozambique ou en Guinée.

85. Quant à l'Afrique du Sud, le défi chaque jour plus insolent qu'elle lance à l'Organisation des Nations Unies traduit, s'il le fallait, le mépris avec lequel elle continue de pratiquer dans le Sud-Ouest africain et sur le territoire même de la République une politique d'extermination raciste dont elle a annoncé publiquement la philosophie dans ses institutions et dont les lois, de plus en plus coercitives, s'étendent maintenant aux blancs eux-mêmes qui la désapprouvent.

86. Le testament du Dr Mallan est chaque jour enrichi par ses successeurs et sa doctrine traverse les frontières de tous les Etats africains où la minorité européenne domine pour transformer cette immense région qui va du Cap à Elisabethville en une zone de terreur raciste où aucune valeur religieuse, humaine ou même de droit international n'a plus droit de cité.

87. Cet exemple semble particulièrement suivi en Rhodésie du Sud où nous avons gardé, jusqu'à il y a quelques semaines encore, l'espoir que l'autorité du Gouvernement britannique et ses obligations internationales autant que sa responsabilité morale pourraient imposer à la minorité blanche les bases d'une solution équitable. Une constitution ignorant les droits les plus élémentaires de la majorité autochtone est imposée par le gouvernement de sir Roy Welensky, fermant ainsi brutalement la porte à tout espoir de négociations, comme cela paraissait possible lors de la visite du Sous-Comité pour la Rhodésie du Sud à Londres en avril dernier.

88. Le Gouvernement britannique invoque son incapacité légale et son impuissance matérielle à intervenir directement dans le conflit, mais il oublie sans doute que c'est Londres qui a conquis le territoire et que c'est Londres qui a investi la minorité blanche de l'autorité et de la puissance qu'elle détient.

89. Mais alors, que penser de la situation au Kenya ou en Guyane, où aucun obstacle de cette nature n'existe pour retarder l'octroi de l'indépendance à ces deux pays? Depuis longtemps, les dirigeants nationalistes dans l'un et dans l'autre ont accepté de mettre fin à une lutte armée et ont déposé le couteau au vestiaire pour s'asseoir autour des fameuses tables rondes.

90. Il faut bien le reconnaître, la Grande-Bretagne utilise ici et là des facteurs d'ordre interne à ces territoires, qui ne doivent relever que de leur seule souveraineté, pour retarder indéfiniment la date d'une indépendance solennellement reconnue dans son principe.

91. Voilà la situation actuelle dans les principaux territoires auxquels le Comité des Dix-Sept a consacré l'essentiel de ses travaux, fort de l'investiture de l'Assemblée générale et animé par l'esprit qui a présidé au cours des deux dernières années à l'adoption des deux résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) qui ont proclamé solennellement la nécessité de l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les peuples qui n'en bénéficiaient pas encore.

92. Nous refusons d'être déçus par ces résultats. Bien au contraire, le Comité des Dix-Sept a entrepris une tâche dont la difficulté égale la noblesse, mais qui demande certainement une persévérance dynamique et une vigilance soutenue pour arriver au terme d'une mission qui restera la plus grande fierté de notre organisation.

93. Vous me permettrez, dans l'examen des responsabilités du Comité des Dix-Sept et de la tâche qui lui a été confiée, de préciser que cet organisme ne s'est pas penché sur tous les problèmes du colonialisme ni sur le destin de tous les territoires où la domination étrangère persiste sous une forme ou sous une autre.

94. A l'occasion du même débat devant l'Assemblée générale, lors de la seizième session [1043ème séance], ma délégation a traité du problème de certains territoires qui font partie intégrante du Maroc et qui cependant demeurent jusqu'à ce jour exclus de la souveraineté effective de l'autorité marocaine. Dans un souci de préserver le caractère amical des relations de mon pays avec les pays qui sont responsables de cet état de choses, je m'abstiens de revenir sur la manière dont ces parties de notre territoire national restent soumises à une autorité non marocaine. Fidèle à deux principes qui ont guidé l'action de son père, S. M. Hassan II répugne à la controverse devant les instances internationales entre le Maroc et ses amis et voisins. Il a d'autre part une profonde confiance dans la vertu des amitiés développées par une histoire commune et consolidées dans l'épreuve. Il vient récemment encore, par des gestes solennels, de réaffirmer sa croyance dans ces deux principes en réinvestissant toute sa confiance dans les déclarations d'amitié faites par l'éminent représentant d'un pays ami, directement intéressé dans cette situation, et qui a été l'hôte d'honneur du Maroc.

95. En évoquant ce problème particulier à mon pays, je renouvelle l'espoir de mon gouvernement d'aboutir à la reconnaissance de ses droits par la voie des négociations, voie que nous avons constamment suivie depuis sept ans pour chercher à résoudre d'autres problèmes primordiaux pour l'épanouissement complet de notre souveraineté nationale.

96. Dans d'autres circonstances, des chemins différents nous ont été imposés dont le résultat n'a en rien altéré nos principes. Mais il est certainement très réconfortant de constater qu'entre pays traditionnellement amis on soit de part et d'autre sincèrement disposé à préférer la négociation à tout autre recours.

97. De nombreuses délégations ont salué avec satisfaction, à cette tribune, l'accord intervenu entre l'Indonésie et les Pays-Bas^{2/}, accord qui, après plusieurs années d'un conflit inutile, a mis fin par la voie des négociations à une situation qui était sur le point de provoquer probablement une guerre aussi longue que celle qui a précédé l'indépendance.

98. Ce sont là incontestablement des exemples qui méritent d'être mis en relief, mais qui ne sont malheureusement que des éclaircies dans un horizon encore sombre car, depuis des années, tout le monde parle de la fin du colonialisme et de sa liquidation; mais, quand on se penche sur la carte de quelques continents, on constate encore que d'immenses territoires, avec de nombreuses populations, se débattent avec plus ou moins de chance dans les contradictions de l'ordre colonial qui proclame, devant les instances internationales, les meilleures intentions, alors que son comportement réel correspond bien plus à ses intentions originelles.

99. Il suffirait d'examiner, par exemple, la situation dans le Moyen-Orient pour se rendre compte que la lutte du peuple d'Oman dure depuis plusieurs années, disséminant l'élite du pays et contraignant son souverain légitime à l'exil sans que le Royaume-Uni manifeste la moindre disposition libérale.

100. Quant à la tragédie de la Palestine, 15 ans de manœuvres conjuguées du sionisme international et de l'impérialisme qui le soutient n'ont pas imposé la mystification de la légitimité d'un foyer israélite bâti sur les ruines de foyers arabes. Ne sommes-nous pas, dans ce cas de la Palestine, précisément devant un exemple frappant d'une profonde hypocrisie intellectuelle et politique qui, au nom d'une injustice dont le nazisme et ses complices européens sont seuls responsables, établit la plus grande injustice de l'histoire en arrachant plus d'un million d'Arabes au foyer de leur religion, de leur race et de leur civilisation.

101. De quelle sorte de paix pourrait-on parler, et à quel genre de conférence peut-on inviter les représentants des immigrants israélites d'Europe pour siéger avec les Arabes et transformer une annexion en fait accompli?

102. C'est une illusion immense et très dangereuse à entretenir que de croire qu'un changement de langage puisse modifier le comportement effectif du colonialisme. On a sûrement substitué une politique adaptée avec souplesse aux exigences d'intérêts politiques permanents et susceptible, dans bien des cas, d'étouffer les aspirations légitimes, mais qui ne pourra en aucun cas — et pendant longtemps — détourner le cours de la libération des peuples de sa direction naturelle, et encore moins consolider les assises de la paix et instaurer une coopération fructueuse entre les peuples.

103. M. DAAR (Somalie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Représentant d'un pays d'Afrique qui, avant l'indépendance, a souffert des conséquences néfastes de la division coloniale que continuent à subir des territoires somalis colonisés, représentant d'un pays qui s'est toujours voué à la cause de la libération complète du continent africain des derniers vestiges du colonialisme, je suis impatient d'exposer nos vues à l'Assemblée sur la question en discussion.

104. Il fut un temps où les colonialistes pouvaient profiter de ce qu'il n'y avait pas de présence des

^{2/} Accord entre la République d'Indonésie et le Royaume des Pays-Bas concernant la Nouvelle-Guinée occidentale (Irian occidentale), signé au Siège de l'Organisation, le 20 septembre 1962.

Nations Unies dans les territoires qu'ils avaient colonisés pour imposer aux autochtones des mesures d'oppression et de répression, au mépris flagrant des principes de la Charte des Nations Unies. Ma délégation constate avec une satisfaction immense qu'il en va tout autrement aujourd'hui. L'épais brouillard d'incertitude et de crainte qui pesait sur les populations sans défense de ces territoires s'est dissipé grâce à la force formidable émanant de la résolution historique 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, résolution qui a immédiatement fait la lumière sur tout le régime de tyrannie et de terreur imposé par les impérialistes impitoyables. Ils ne peuvent plus désormais supprimer, à l'insu de tous, les combattants de la liberté qui sont résolus à rompre les chaînes de l'esclavage et de la sujétion, et qui sont guidés par la puissante et historique Déclaration qui fait l'objet de la résolution et par laquelle l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies a solennellement affirmé certains principes.

105. Le paragraphe 1 du dispositif de la résolution 1514 (XV) stipule:

"La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales."

Le paragraphe 5 du dispositif de la même résolution se lit comme suit:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

106. Convaincue de la valeur des justes idéaux inscrits dans la Charte des Nations Unies et résolue à faire appliquer la célèbre Déclaration dont je viens de citer certains passages, l'Assemblée générale a créé, par sa résolution 1654 (XVI), le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. La création de ce comité a été pour les Nations Unies une victoire importante et a porté un coup mortel au colonialisme, car elle permet désormais de prévenir des dangereuses menaces à la paix et à la sécurité internationales.

107. Le rapport qui nous est soumis par le Comité spécial [A/5238] prouve bien que les décisions prises par l'Assemblée générale et consignées dans les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) étaient justifiées par la nécessité urgente de liquider complètement le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

108. Ma délégation note avec regret que le rapport ne parle pas des régions du territoire somali qui subissent encore le joug colonial, sous différentes formes déguisées et détournées. Quoi qu'il en soit, je ne puis que féliciter vivement le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept pour les efforts infatigables qu'il a déployés et pour l'efficacité certaine avec laquelle il s'est acquitté des tâches délicates dont l'Assemblée générale l'avait chargé. L'ampleur et la valeur du rapport justifient largement les félicitations que ma délégation, comme certainement beaucoup d'autres, adresse au Comité spécial.

109. Il y a quelques jours, la Quatrième Commission, à la fin de son débat sur le Sud-Ouest africain, a recommandé dans un projet de résolution [voir A/5310, par. 27] la dissolution du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain. Ce projet de résolution répondait au désir exprimé par le Secrétaire général dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1] de voir diminuer le nombre des comités existant actuellement.

110. Comme le représentant de l'Irak l'a bien expliqué il y a quelques jours [1170ème séance], nous n'avons que faire d'un grand nombre de comités, dont le seul résultat est qu'ils font double emploi et qu'ils empâtent les uns sur les autres. Ma délégation approuve donc entièrement les représentants qui sont intervenus avant moi pour se prononcer en faveur de la dissolution de tous les comités, à l'exception peut-être du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal.

111. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept devra donc reprendre toutes les tâches confiées jusqu'ici aux comités dissous. On semble s'accorder à penser que le nombre actuel des membres du Comité spécial devrait être augmenté, mais des avis divers ont été exprimés quant à savoir de combien de nouveaux membres.

112. Étant donné les diverses tâches qui lui ont déjà été confiées et celles qui pourraient lui être attribuées, la composition du Comité spécial devrait être assez large pour qu'il puisse constituer ses propres sous-comités, qui seraient chargés de telle ou telle tâche. Ma délégation serait donc disposée à appuyer la suggestion du représentant de l'Irak tendant à ajouter sept nouveaux membres aux 17 membres actuels, ce qui, j'en suis sûr, permettrait la répartition géographique équitable qui est envisagée.

113. Ma délégation est heureuse de noter que le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a entériné les conclusions et recommandations du rapport du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain [A/5212] dont mon pays avait l'honneur d'être un des sept membres. J'ai à peine besoin de rappeler à l'Assemblée que la question du Sud-Ouest africain est soumise à l'examen des Nations Unies depuis leur fondation. Ma délégation regrette de devoir constater que le Gouvernement sud-africain a violé le mandat qui lui était confié lors de la disparition de la Société des Nations.

114. Ma délégation a donc étudié la question du Territoire sous mandat du Sud-Ouest africain avec le plus grand sérieux et en toute objectivité, et elle est parvenue aux conclusions ci-après:

a) L'intolérable système de l'apartheid a pénétré dans tous les secteurs de la vie de ce territoire;

b) L'Afrique du Sud a failli à ses obligations de puissance mandataire et a négligé de faire progresser les autochtones du Sud-Ouest africain dans les domaines économique, social, politique et de l'éducation;

c) L'Afrique du Sud s'est non seulement refusée obstinément à coopérer avec les Nations Unies pour mettre en œuvre les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale sur le Sud-Ouest africain, mais est allée jusqu'à induire en erreur les représentants des Nations Unies;

d) Les Nations Unies doivent intervenir énergiquement et établir une présence des Nations Unies dans le Territoire pour appliquer les résolutions 1566 (XV) et 1702 (XVI) qui concernent à la fois les aspects politiques et économiques de la situation au Sud-Ouest africain;

e) Le monde doit s'unir contre l'Afrique du Sud et contre sa politique au Sud-Ouest africain, afin de l'empêcher d'exploiter l'indifférence dont certaines délégations ont fait preuve en s'abstenant d'appliquer les résolutions antérieures relatives au Sud-Ouest africain, et de saisir ce prétexte pour perpétuer leur tyrannie sur la population autochtone du Territoire;

f) La mise en œuvre de la résolution 1702 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale permettrait aux Nations Unies d'atteindre leurs objectifs et de satisfaire les aspirations des autochtones du Sud-Ouest africain;

g) Ma délégation estime sage et praticable la première mesure recommandée par le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain, qui consisterait à accorder à l'Afrique du Sud un bref délai pour lui permettre de coopérer avec les Nations Unies pour la mise en œuvre des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale sur le Sud-Ouest africain;

h) Tout en tenant compte de la procédure contentieuse engagée devant la Cour internationale de Justice contre l'Afrique du Sud par l'Éthiopie et le Libéria et tout en espérant que le jugement interviendra prochainement, nous estimons qu'il faut envisager l'éventualité d'abroger le Mandat.

115. C'est la deuxième mesure recommandée par le Comité spécial et elle pourrait être appliquée si cela devenait nécessaire. Cela signifierait évidemment que l'administration du Territoire serait simultanément prise en charge par les Nations Unies.

116. Ma délégation est donc heureuse de constater que dans leur immense majorité les représentants siégeant à la Quatrième Commission de l'Assemblée sont parvenus aux mêmes conclusions. Nous en sommes d'autant plus satisfaits qu'il y a quelques jours, rappelons-le, la Commission a adopté une résolution avec une seule abstention et sans opposition, sur cette question délicate du Sud-Ouest africain [voir A/5310, par. 27].

117. Je tiens à souligner trois aspects importants de cette résolution: d'abord, elle traite d'une façon satisfaisante les points que j'ai signalés, conformément à la position de ma délégation et de nombreuses autres délégations; ensuite, elle assigne au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, qui a les compétences voulues pour s'acquitter de cette tâche délicate, le mandat indiqué dans la résolution 1702 (XVI); enfin, cette résolution a été adoptée à la quasi-unanimité, ce qui est particulièrement important car c'est la première fois dans l'histoire des Nations Unies qu'une résolution concernant le Sud-Ouest africain rencontre un appui aussi général.

118. Ma délégation n'a pas l'intention d'analyser le changement d'attitude de certaines délégations quant à la question du Sud-Ouest africain. Cela pourrait être une façon de chercher des compliments ou de nous en attribuer en partie le mérite, ce qui ne serait guère modeste de notre part. Mais je tiens à souligner énergiquement combien ma délégation se félicite de la quasi-unanimité qui s'est faite lors de l'adoption de la récente résolution sur le Sud-Ouest africain. Quels qu'aient pu être les divers mobiles en jeu, ils ne peuvent être considérés que comme de nobles intentions qui méritent notre appréciation et notre gratitude. Il n'y a rien d'autre à ajouter, si ce n'est que l'Afrique du Sud doit regarder la réalité en face et s'incliner devant l'autorité des Nations Unies, avant d'y être contrainte.

M. Muhammad Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

119. Pour ce qui est de la Rhodésie du Sud, la position obstinée qu'a prise le gouvernement des colons n'a pas évolué et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a rien fait pour répondre à l'appel lancé par les Nations Unies dans la résolution 1747 (XVI), mais les événements récents montrent que la situation s'est aggravée dans le Territoire depuis l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la résolution 1755 (XVI) à la reprise de la seizième session.

120. On pourrait avoir l'impression que depuis l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la résolution 1760 (XVII) cette situation explosive a perdu de sa gravité et que nos vives inquiétudes ont été apaisées par l'adoption de cette résolution.

121. Ma délégation sent très nettement qu'alors même qu'ils n'assistent pas en personne à nos débats la voix des chefs de la population de la Rhodésie du Sud résonne sans cesse à nos oreilles et nous atteint au plus profond de nos cœurs.

122. Compte tenu de tout ce que je viens de dire, gardons toujours présentes à l'esprit les dispositions essentielles de la résolution 1760 (XVII). Ma délégation espère ardemment que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et le gouvernement des colons de la Rhodésie du Sud entendront les appels répétés des Nations Unies et que les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale pourront désormais être effectivement mises en œuvre.

123. La question de la Rhodésie du Nord a été traitée en détail dans le rapport du Comité spécial. La situation dans le territoire peut se résumer ainsi: premièrement, la Constitution du 28 février 1962 prévue pour la Rhodésie du Nord n'est pas conforme aux principes énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV); deuxièmement, les autochtones de la Rhodésie du Nord sont manifestement victimes de discriminations, du fait des conditions à remplir pour pouvoir être inscrit sur les listes électorales; troisièmement, l'appartenance forcée de la Rhodésie du Nord à la Fédération d'Afrique centrale se heurte à l'opposition farouche de l'immense majorité des autochtones du territoire; quatrièmement, une minorité de colons blancs se cramponne au pouvoir, lésant ainsi les autochtones de la Rhodésie du Nord; cinquièmement, les habitants de la Rhodésie du Nord doivent se voir reconnaître le droit à l'autodétermination pour pouvoir décider du destin de leur propre pays.

124. Cependant, les résultats des élections organisées en octobre dernier semblent montrer que le United Nations Independence Party et l'African Congress Party pourraient former un gouvernement de coalition s'ils détenaient les 11 sièges qui restent encore à pourvoir.

125. Ma délégation espère donc que, s'il en est ainsi, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni facilitera les choses à la majorité africaine, qui exige à bon droit l'indépendance immédiate hors de la Fédération et le respect de l'intégrité du territoire.

126. Quant au Nyassaland, ma délégation est heureuse de noter que M. Hastings Banda, le chef nationaliste, est actuellement en train de négocier à Londres avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Je pense donc qu'il est encore prématuré de parler de cette question.

127. Le Comité spécial s'est également occupé des trois territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland [A/5238, chap. V]. Il a clairement dégagé quatre circonstances importantes qui déterminent généralement la situation de ces territoires: premièrement, la crainte d'être annexés par l'Afrique du Sud; deuxièmement, l'insuffisance de leur développement économique de base; troisièmement, la discrimination raciale qui y est largement pratiquée; enfin, l'absence de progrès constitutionnels raisonnables.

128. Cela étant, ma délégation approuve sans réserve la résolution que le Comité spécial recommande dans son rapport [A/5238, par. 214]. Cette résolution demande à la Puissance administrante, c'est-à-dire en l'occurrence au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, de prendre les mesures suivantes:

a) Abroger les dispositions constitutionnelles actuelles;

b) Convoquer immédiatement une conférence constitutionnelle avec la participation des leaders politiques démocratiquement élus des trois territoires afin de fixer la date de leur accession à l'indépendance.

c) Entreprendre un effort sérieux d'assistance économique, financière et technique par l'intermédiaire des programmes de coopération technique des Nations Unies et par l'intermédiaire des institutions spécialisées, afin de remédier à la situation écono-mico-sociale déplorable régnant dans les trois territoires.

d) Restituer aux autochtones toutes les terres qui leur ont été enlevées, sous quelque forme ou sous quelque prétexte qu'ait eu lieu cette aliénation.

129. Ma délégation est heureuse de noter que les habitants du Kenya se sont vu reconnaître le droit à l'autodétermination et que le jour n'est plus loin où nous verrons ce pays frère devenir souverain et indépendant.

130. De même, j'espère que les habitants de Zanzibar et de la Guyane britannique régleront les divergences mineures qui font obstacle à leur marche vers l'indépendance totale et qu'ils prendront bientôt la place qui leur revient dans la grande famille des Nations Unies.

131. Enfin, et ce n'est pas le moins important, les tristes exemples de l'Angola et du Mozambique préoccupent sérieusement ma délégation, qui constate avec regret que le Portugal refuse de coopérer avec les Nations Unies pour préparer à l'indépendance les autochtones de ces territoires.

132. C'est pourtant la méthode qu'ont traditionnellement suivie d'autres puissances coloniales qui ont eu la sagesse de voir clair et de regarder la réalité en face, et ont ainsi rempli leurs obligations avec dignité et pour le bien de tous les intéressés. Si le Portugal et son complice en matière de sujétion de l'homme, l'Afrique du Sud, refusent de faire de même, ma délégation peut leur prédire en toute certitude qu'ils se condamnent à la catastrophe.

133. En conclusion, ce rapport détaillé du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a porté un coup fatal au cœur du colonialisme et j'espère que le jour est proche où celui-ci disparaîtra complètement de la surface du globe.

134. M. TCHOBANOV (Bulgarie): Deux ans se sont écoulés depuis le jour où l'Assemblée générale, à sa quinzième session, a adopté la Déclaration — véritablement historique — sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Les idées que cette déclaration a proclamées sont bien la bannière sous laquelle les peuples coloniaux, les uns après les autres, arrachent de haute lutte leur indépendance nationale, la bannière aussi sous laquelle un certain nombre de peuples, qui n'ont pas encore brisé le joug de la servitude coloniale, continuent de mener un combat héroïque qui nous rapproche chaque jour du moment de l'écroulement définitif de l'édifice honteux du colonialisme.

135. Au cours de l'année écoulée, la lutte de libération nationale a marqué de nouveaux succès considérables: l'Algérie, le Rwanda, le Burundi, l'Irian occidental ont accédé à l'indépendance. La mer des Caraïbes a vu, à son tour, venir la liberté: la Jamaïque et l'Etat de Trinité et Tobago sont maintenant libres. Tout récemment encore, l'Ouganda est venue se joindre à la famille des nations indépendantes.

136. La délégation de la République populaire de Bulgarie est heureuse de saluer bien chaleureusement les peuples et gouvernements de ces pays, leur indépendance nationale nouvellement recouvrée et de souhaiter vivement la bienvenue à leurs représentants à cette tribune.

137. Il n'y a pas lieu cependant, en présence de ces succès, de se rassurer prématurément et d'attendre les bras croisés le moment où le système colonial se mourra de lui-même. Plus de 80 territoires dans les différentes parties du monde, peuplés de plus de 60 millions d'habitants, continuent à se trouver sous la dépendance coloniale. L'Organisation doit concentrer son attention et sa vigilance sur la question coloniale aussi longtemps que le dernier peuple n'aura pas brisé les chaînes de l'esclavage colonial.

138. Les travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept, dont nous discutons le rapport actuellement, a grandement contribué à cette œuvre et nous tenons à dire ici toute notre satisfaction du travail énorme accompli par ce comité, ainsi que des résultats très sérieux auxquels ses travaux ont abouti. La liquidation des derniers vestiges du colonialisme est à l'heure actuelle l'une des tâches les plus essentielles de l'Organisation. Il convient de rappeler que c'est pour elle une obligation qui découle des termes exprès de la Charte et qui prend figure, dans les circonstances actuelles, d'un devoir moral de tout premier ordre. La liquidation du colonialisme est un impératif historique incontestable de notre époque.

139. La grande révolution d'Octobre en Russie a sonné le glas de l'impérialisme dans une double acception du mot. En Russie même, cette révolution a détruit à la fois la servitude sociale et la servitude nationale, brisant les privilèges iniques et exorbitants des grands propriétaires terriens et des privilégiés de la fortune dans le domaine de la finance, de l'industrie et du commerce. Le Grand Octobre a du même coup détruit les murailles de cette "prison des nations" qu'était la Russie tsariste pour les dizaines de millions de travailleurs de nationalité non russe. Cette révolution, la plus grandiose de toutes celles que l'histoire du genre humain ait connues, a produit une puissante réaction en chaîne, à la fois dans les deux directions majeures: celle de l'émancipation sociale et celle de l'émancipation nationale.

140. Le premier aspect de la révolution d'Octobre a eu pour effet, quelque 25 ans plus tard, après la défaite militaire des puissances de l'axe, toute une série de révolutions à caractère socialiste dans différentes parties du monde, si bien qu'actuellement à peu près un tiers du genre humain a définitivement aboli l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme.

141. Son deuxième aspect, celui de l'abolition radicale de l'oppression d'une nation par une autre, a donné une poussée vigoureuse aux mouvements de libération nationale dans les pays coloniaux. Si bien que maintenant, alors que, il y a un quart de siècle seulement, la majorité des humains appartenait à des pays se trouvant sous la dépendance coloniale ou semi-coloniale, aujourd'hui, comme cela a été noté il y a quelques instants, il ne reste plus que quelque 60 millions d'hommes dans les différents territoires coloniaux.

142. Les effets de la grande révolution socialiste d'Octobre en Russie sont donc comparables — mais en infiniment plus grand — à ceux de la grande Révolution française de 1789 pour ce qui concerne l'abolition de la monarchie absolue, des servitudes féodales et, jusqu'à un certain point, de l'oppression nationale en Europe occidentale et, partiellement, dans d'autres parties du monde. C'est bien ce que j'entendais en disant tout à l'heure que la liquidation de l'oppression coloniale est un impératif absolu de notre temps.

143. A côté de cette raison majeure pour l'abolition du système colonial, il y a une raison subsidiaire, mais très importante aussi, à l'abolition de ce système périmé: le souci majeur de l'opinion publique des peuples du monde est à l'heure actuelle de se prémunir contre une nouvelle guerre mondiale qui, dans les circonstances présentes, ne pourrait être que l'holocauste thermonucléaire total. Le colonialisme étant la source principale de la guerre, il convient, pour prévenir la guerre, d'abolir aussi rapidement que possible tout ce qui subsiste du colonialisme. Au siècle passé, l'un des idéologues du colonialisme britannique, Joseph Chamberlain, déclarait: "Si, pour un instant, nous évoquions l'histoire de notre pays durant le siècle écoulé, nous verrions que toute guerre, grande ou petite, à laquelle nous avons pris part a, en dernier ressort, été conduite pour des intérêts coloniaux. C'est absolument vrai et demeurera vrai aussi longtemps que cette époque ne sera pas révolue."

144. Comme je viens de le mentionner il y a quelques instants, des tentatives sont faites sur différents points du globe pour freiner le processus de décolonisation, et ceci, aux termes de la Déclaration de 1960, crée "des conflits croissants qui constituent une grave menace à la paix mondiale".

145. Il convient de se pencher avec une attention toute particulière sur le cas d'une région géographique où la politique et les agissements des colonialistes ont conduit à un état de choses intolérable portant en lui des dangers excessivement graves. Je veux parler de la partie méridionale du continent africain comprenant la République sud-africaine, les Rhodésies, l'Angola, le Mozambique et le Katanga. Il n'y a rien de fortuit ni d'arbitraire dans le fait que, sur les 12 territoires coloniaux dont le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a eu à s'occuper en détail, neuf appartiennent à cette région géographique précisément. Dans cette partie de l'Afrique, 4 millions seulement d'Européens cherchent par tous les moyens à maintenir 50 millions d'Africains dans un état qui diffère bien peu de l'esclavage pur et simple.

146. C'est à dessein que, parlant de la question coloniale, nous avons compris dans le nombre des colonies la République sud-africaine également. Il nous a semblé que le fond importe beaucoup plus que la forme. Or, quant au fond, cette soi-disant République n'est en réalité qu'une colonie où "la métropole", au lieu de demeurer en Europe, s'est transportée en entier au centre de la colonie. Bien qu'aucune mer ni aucun océan ne sépare métropole et colonie, la population autochtone de cette prétendue république subit une oppression et une exploitation exactement du type colonial. Dans cette région géographique, les privilèges des minorités blanches s'étendent, comme chacun le sait, à tous les domaines de la vie. Les droits politiques sont un apanage exclusif de ces minorités, alors que les Africains en sont à peu près complètement privés. L'industrie se trouve à 100 p. 100 entre les mains des groupements monopolistes occidentaux. La terre fertile appartient entièrement aux blancs alors que les Africains ont été entassés dans les terrains réservés ("reservations") et les régions semi-désertiques. Au Nyassaland par exemple, les blancs possèdent par tête d'habitant 50 fois plus de terre que les Africains, au Souaziland 36 fois plus. Les blancs jouissent de la gratuité de l'enseignement public et il est dépensé, par tête d'élève blanc, des dizaines de fois plus d'argent que pour un enfant africain. Ceux-ci ne peuvent obtenir qu'une instruction tout à fait rudimentaire capable tout au plus de les rendre aptes à mieux servir leurs maîtres blancs.

147. Le niveau de vie moyen de la population blanche est l'un des plus élevés au monde, alors que le revenu moyen des Africains dans la Fédération de Rhodésie et du Nyassaland est de 40 fois inférieur à celui des Européens dans ce même territoire.

148. Les esclavagistes blancs ne veulent à aucun prix se priver de leurs privilèges exorbitants et semblent décidés à tout afin de les maintenir. C'est là un des facteurs majeurs qui s'opposent aux aspirations des peuples de cette partie de l'Afrique à la liberté et à l'indépendance. Ce facteur, cependant, n'est pas le seul.

149. De plus en plus fréquemment, ces temps derniers, apparaît le rôle sinistre des puissants groupements financiers de la Grande-Bretagne, des Etats-Unis, de l'Allemagne occidentale et d'autres pays occidentaux encore. Il est à peine besoin d'évoquer le rôle de l'Union minière du Haut-Katanga dans le drame congolais.

150. Le Comité des Dix-Sept a accueilli une pétition remarquable de la part d'une certaine Mlle Ginwalla [voir A/5238, chap. XII, par. 3 à 6], document qui décrit en détail la nature et les activités de ces groupements, activités qui exercent une influence particulièrement néfaste sur la politique de tel gouvernement occidental. Outre l'Union minière à laquelle je viens de faire allusion, une place particulièrement importante est occupée par des compagnies à capitaux anglais et américains telles que: The Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, dénommée le mauvais génie des Rhodésies; ensuite, The Diamond Corporation, The American Climax Corporation, The Tanganyika Concession, etc.

151. Les investissements de ces monopoles rapaces s'élevaient, à la fin de 1958, à la somme de 5 milliards de dollars, dont 3 milliards de capitaux britanniques, 600 millions de capitaux américains, et le reste: français, allemands, occidentaux, etc.

152. Les bénéfices de ces monopoles sont fabuleux. L'on pourrait citer, à titre d'exemple, l'une des plus petites de ces corporations, l'Union Corporation, laquelle, sur un capital de 1 250 000 livres sterling, a réalisé en 1958 un bénéfice net de 1 900 000 livres.

153. Dans les conseils d'administration de ces groupements siègent des personnages qui sont intimement liés aux gouvernements des pays occidentaux; et ce n'est un secret pour personne que des questions d'une importance vitale pour les millions d'habitants de l'Afrique sont réglées par ces gouvernements dans l'intérêt des monopoles et au grand détriment des peuples d'Afrique; il suffira de rappeler le Katanga et les Rhodésies.

154. Aux deux facteurs susmentionnés, il y a lieu d'ajouter les cercles politiques des coloniaux influents dans les pays occidentaux, cercles pour lesquels le maintien du système colonial dans la partie méridionale du continent africain présente de l'intérêt, non seulement du point de vue des avantages économiques qu'on en retire, mais bien, et plus encore, pour des considérations de caractère politique et stratégique. Pour ces cercles, le maintien des positions des Européens dans la partie méridionale de l'Afrique présente un grand intérêt en tant que moyen destiné à exercer une pression continue sur les pays qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance nationale, à l'effet d'influer sur leur politique intérieure et extérieure.

155. Toutes les forces ci-dessus mentionnées se trouvent réunies dans ce que, ces temps derniers, on a, si à propos, appelé "l'Alliance impie" ("the Unholy Alliance").

156. Comme membres de ces coalitions des forces des ténèbres se sont particulièrement signalés les gouvernements de Verwoerd, de Salazar et de Welensky, ainsi que des personnages de l'espèce de Tshombé.

157. Toutes les tentatives de dissimuler l'existence de cette coalition se sont avérées vaines, puisqu'un nombre trop grand de preuves vient démontrer son existence. Ladite coalition jouit non seulement de l'appui politique, mais aussi de l'assistance financière et en fournitures d'armes d'un certain nombre d'Etats membres de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord (OTAN). L'assistance que l'OTAN a accordée au Portugal pour l'écrasement du soulèvement populaire héroïque en Angola est trop bien connue pour qu'il soit nécessaire d'y insister.

158. Dans son rapport [A/5160], le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal indique ce qui suit:

"... une grande partie du matériel militaire et autre que le Portugal obtient de diverses sources, et principalement d'Etats membres de l'OTAN, a été abondamment utilisée et continue à l'être par les forces militaires portugaises et les autres forces portugaises de répression pour opprimer le peuple angolais et les peuples d'autres territoires sous administration portugaise ... Il est évident que toute assistance de cet ordre implique ceux qui la fournissent dans la répression des mouvements de libération dans les territoires sous administration portugaise." [Ibid., par. 439.]

159. Un grand nombre de faits ont été produits devant le Comité des Dix-Sept et à la Quatrième Commission de cette assemblée — faits relatifs à l'assistance sur une vaste échelle que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni accorde aux racistes sud-africains, assistance qui revêt la forme de fournitures de matériel de guerre et de construction d'usines de matériel de guerre.

160. Il y a trois mois seulement, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a accordé à Whitehead un emprunt dont une grande partie sera utilisée au renforcement des forces de police chargées d'exercer la répression à l'égard des patriotes de la Rhodésie du Sud.

161. C'est bien la raison pour laquelle il est impossible, lorsqu'on parle de cette "Union sacrée" — ou plutôt "Union impie" — à laquelle je faisais allusion, de ne pas parler aussi de ces forces redoutables en dehors de l'Afrique qui soutiennent la coalition par des moyens politiques, économiques, financiers et militaires. Ce sont là les forces qu'affrontent les peuples de l'Afrique méridionale.

162. Il est donc aisé de voir que, dans cette partie du continent africain, nous sommes en présence d'une situation qui constitue une menace très sérieuse pour la paix et la sécurité dans le monde. Il y a, d'une part, les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, des Rhodésies, de la République sud-africaine et d'autres qui aspirent à la liberté et à l'indépendance nationale; ce sont des aspirations en tout point naturelles et légitimes et que rien ni personne ne saurait étouffer. Il y a, d'autre part, "l'Alliance sacrée" — ou plutôt "l'Alliance impie" — et les amis de cette dernière, en Occident, qui tentent par tous les moyens, y compris la force armée, d'étouffer la lutte de libération nationale.

163. Aux Nations Unies, les gouvernements des membres de "l'Alliance sacrée" montrent le plus grand mépris pour les décisions de notre organisation. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la République sud-africaine n'est-il pas venu nous déclarer [1128ème séance], sans la moindre équivoque, du haut de cette même tribune, que ni les critiques, ni les menaces, ni la peur ne feront dévier l'Afrique du Sud du chemin ... que les racistes sud-africains croient juste. La position de Salazar est identique à celle-ci, comme est identique celle de Whitehead qui, le 31 octobre, a déclaré à la 1367ème séance de la Quatrième Commission qu'il s'était rendu à New York dans le but unique d'expliquer à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ce que son gouvernement raciste est en train de faire en Rhodésie du Sud, et nullement dans l'intention de modifier en quoi que ce soit la politique qu'il avait pratiquée jusqu'ici.

164. En Angola, comme vous le savez, les choses ont été poussées au point que le conflit imminent a fait explosion — conflit au cours duquel les Por-tugais, avec une cruauté qui est caractéristique des colonialistes, ont fait des dizaines de milliers de victimes.

165. Au Mozambique, en Rhodésie du Sud, dans la République sud-africaine, la situation est si tendue qu'il y a lieu de s'attendre à tout instant à quelque explosion semblable à celles de l'Angola et de l'Algérie.

166. Il est indispensable que l'Organisation se penche avec toute l'attention voulue sur ces faits troublants et prenne, s'il le faut, des mesures énergiques tendant à assurer la mise en application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et à écarter aussi la menace très sérieuse pour la paix et la sécurité suspendue sur cette partie du monde.

167. Ce sont là les conclusions auxquelles le Comité des Dix-Sept a abouti, et elles se trouvent consignées dans les recommandations et dans le projet de résolution que son rapport présente. Ma délégation considère comme un point très important le fait que ce rapport nous propose, dans un certain nombre de cas, d'envisager l'éventualité d'un recours au Conseil de sécurité pour les cas où les Etats colonisateurs persisteraient dans leur refus de se conformer aux résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, proposant alors d'aller jusqu'à l'application des sanctions prévues par la Charte. Je déclare que ma délégation est prête à appuyer sans la moindre réserve ces suggestions du Comité des Dix-Sept.

168. Si nous avons insisté plus particulièrement sur la situation dans les territoires situés dans la partie méridionale de l'Afrique, c'est que c'est dans ces régions surtout que la Déclaration de 1960 se heurte à une résistance particulièrement acharnée et que les problèmes les plus ardues se trouvent concentrés. Ceci, cependant, ne veut nullement dire qu'il serait permis de se désintéresser des colonies situées dans d'autres parties du monde. Vous trouverez des obstacles à la mise en exécution de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, ainsi qu'une application faussée de celle-ci, un peu partout, aussi bien en Afrique qu'en Asie, en Amérique et dans le Pacifique.

169. Le Comité des Dix-Sept s'est particulièrement occupé de la situation en Afrique, et nous comprenons fort bien les raisons qui l'ont poussé à agir de la sorte. Lorsqu'il se remettra au travail dans le proche avenir, il aura évidemment à connaître aussi de la situation dans les territoires dont il ne s'était pas occupé jusqu'ici. Un travail énorme reste encore à effectuer dans le domaine de la décolonisation, et le Comité des Dix-Sept devrait évidemment poursuivre sa tâche dans l'avenir avec une énergie accrue, utilisant l'expérience qu'il a su accumuler au cours de ses travaux. Il sera à même, dans l'avenir, de s'acquitter de toutes les tâches dont la présente session aura à le charger, et aussi d'achever l'examen de la situation dans toutes les colonies.

170. Le Comité déclare, au paragraphe 148 de son rapport [A/5238], que les méthodes et procédures qu'il avait jusqu'ici suivies sont les plus appropriées pour la circonstance. Il nous semble que les bons résultats auxquels ce Comité a abouti viennent confirmer la justesse de cette appréciation.

171. Le fait d'avoir visité un certain nombre de territoires africains et entendu des pétitionnaires a permis au Comité des Dix-Sept d'avoir des impressions d'une grande richesse, bien que pas toujours directes, et cela lui a donné la possibilité de nous présenter des recommandations et des projets de résolution d'une grande valeur, qui se signalent surtout par leur objectivité exemplaire et par la riche documentation sur laquelle ils sont basés.

172. Il y a lieu de regretter que le Comité ait été dans l'impossibilité de visiter les territoires qui faisaient l'objet de ses investigations. Il apparaît cependant à la lecture du rapport que nous sommes en train de discuter que le Comité avait bien pris la décision de visiter en principe chacun de ces territoires et avait fait tout ce qui dépendait de lui pour s'y rendre. S'il n'a pu le faire, c'est de toute évidence du fait des obstacles créés par les puissances coloniales. Vu la gravité du problème, l'Assemblée générale devrait, à notre avis, inviter lesdites puissances à coopérer avec le Comité pour que ces visites puissent avoir lieu.

173. Dans la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a proclamé un certain nombre de principes fondamentaux relativement aux problèmes coloniaux. Ces principes sont la loi internationale en matière coloniale, et tout Etat Membre est tenu de les observer scrupuleusement, sous peine de se trouver en violation de l'obligation la plus essentielle à laquelle il a souscrit en entrant dans cette organisation.

174. Malheureusement, et comme cela a été amplement démontré au cours de ce débat, dans un nombre extrêmement grand de colonies, cette Déclaration n'a pratiquement pas été appliquée du tout. Dans un certain nombre de cas, comme celui de l'Angola, la répression militaire se poursuit de plus belle. L'expérience a, de plus, montré que, chaque fois qu'une colonie était sur le point d'accéder à l'indépendance, la puissance coloniale s'évertuait à poser des conditions, à imposer des restrictions, dont la quantité et la nature sont telles que leur application équivaldrait à un refus de donner effet à la Déclaration.

175. L'Assemblée aurait à s'occuper tout particulièrement de ce dernier aspect du problème et à prendre des mesures qui s'imposent.

176. Nous sommes d'avis tout d'abord qu'il convient de fixer un délai limite à l'application intégrale de la Déclaration, comme cela a déjà été proposé par certaines délégations.

177. Déjà en décembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale a invité les puissances coloniales à effectuer le transfert des pouvoirs, leur demandant de remettre ceux-ci entre les mains des populations autochtones. Les deux années qui se sont écoulées depuis étaient largement suffisantes pour que ce transfert s'opérât. Comme nous le savons tous, il n'en a rien été dans l'immense majorité des cas. Si un délai était fixé, comme nous le proposons avec d'autres délégations, le colonialisme se trouverait pour ainsi dire hors la loi après l'expiration du délai. La fixation du délai donnerait une impulsion vigoureuse aux mouvements de libération nationale et exercerait une forte pression sur les puissances coloniales, les obligeant de manière efficace à mieux respecter la loi internationale. Si cela ne suffisait pas l'ONU serait fondée à avoir recours aux mesures extrêmes et à aider de manière plus directe les mouvements de libération nationale.

178. Il conviendrait, en second lieu, de proclamer un certain nombre de principes tendant à l'octroi d'une indépendance nationale authentique dépourvue de toutes sortes de conditions et de restrictions.

179. C'est ainsi, par exemple, que très souvent les puissances coloniales s'assurent d'avance la faculté de maintenir des troupes ou d'établir des bases militaires après la proclamation de l'indépendance. C'est le cas, par exemple, du Kenya, où le Royaume-Uni a l'une de ses bases militaires les plus importantes. Le rapport du Comité note que la principale revendication des nationalistes de ce territoire porte sur le retrait des troupes britanniques et l'évacuation de la base. S'il n'était pas fait droit à cette revendication, le Royaume-Uni aurait entre les mains, une fois le Kenya proclamé "indépendant", un moyen redoutable pour exercer une pression sur les futurs gouvernements du Kenya, sans compter les risques effroyables que ce pays courrait en cas de guerre nucléaire.

180. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a le devoir évident d'aider les peuples du Kenya et d'autres pays coloniaux se trouvant dans une position similaire à se débarrasser des restrictions de cette nature, restrictions qui grèvent leur avenir d'une hypothèque bien dangereuse.

181. Il conviendrait d'adopter une attitude similaire à propos de toutes autres restrictions apportées à la souveraineté nationale, restrictions que les puissances coloniales essaient d'imposer par les moyens les plus divers, à savoir: traités inégaux, clauses constitutionnelles assurant des privilèges à des non-Africains et ainsi de suite.

182. Ma délégation émet l'espoir que les mesures que la présente session de l'Assemblée générale aura à prendre seront susceptibles de donner une poussée vigoureuse au processus d'émancipation des peuples de la servitude coloniale et à la liquidation définitive du honteux système colonial.

183. M. SULEIMAN (Soudan) [traduit de l'anglais]: C'est la troisième fois que l'Assemblée générale discute la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. A la différence des débats précédents sur diverses questions coloniales qui ont eu lieu dans d'autres commissions, notre discussion s'inspire d'une déclaration solennelle figurant dans la résolution 1514 (XV) qui "proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations". A cette fin, l'Assemblée générale a prié le Comité spécial, par sa résolution 1654 (XVI), "d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-septième session."

184. Le rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238] traite de 12 territoires dépendants, dont 11 sont situés en Afrique. Nous devons nous féliciter de la décision qu'a prise le Comité de donner priorité à l'étude des territoires africains, car la situation y est très alarmante et menace la paix et la stabilité de la région. Après avoir étudié les chapitres concernant ces territoires, ma délégation juge inutile de parler de la Rhodésie du Sud, des territoires de l'Angola et du Mozambique, et du Sud-Ouest africain, puisqu'ils font l'objet d'autres points de l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée.

185. Pour ce qui est de la situation en Rhodésie du Nord, nous constatons que le facteur qui s'oppose manifestement à la réalisation de l'indépendance complète est l'attitude et la position prises par la minorité européenne. Les chefs africains ont fait preuve d'assez de modération et de sagesse dans leur façon d'aborder le problème. Malgré une constitution inapplicable qui tend à assurer la suprématie à la minorité européenne, ils ont présenté des candidats aux récentes élections. Bien que 100 000 Africains seulement sur 2 500 000 au total aient été autorisés à voter, il est clair qu'ils étaient tous partisans de l'indépendance complète et de la libération de leur pays de l'exploitation économique qu'ils subissent patiemment depuis des dizaines d'années. Nous appuyons de toutes nos forces la recommandation du Comité spécial qui demande l'indépendance immédiate du Territoire.

186. La situation au Nyassaland nous semble beaucoup plus favorable et l'indépendance y est proche. Nous sommes particulièrement heureux de savoir que les entretiens qui ont eu lieu dernièrement à Londres entre les chefs africains et les membres du Gouvernement britannique se sont terminés dans une atmosphère cordiale et ont donné de bons résultats.

187. Pour ce qui est des trois territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le Bassoutoland, le Souaziland et le Betchouanaland, le principal problème qui se pose est le risque d'être annexés par la République sud-africaine dont la politique d'apartheid est condamnée par le monde entier. Sur ce point nous estimons qu'il est aujourd'hui plus urgent que jamais de rappeler au Royaume-Uni l'engagement qu'il a pris en 1909 d'accorder sa protection à ces territoires et la déclaration faite à la Chambre des communes par sir Winston Churchill et affirmant que ces territoires ne seraient pas transférés à l'Afrique du Sud sans que leurs habitants soient consultés. D'autre part, le Comité spécial a souligné la situation économique précaire de ces territoires et l'absence de dispositions constitutionnelles qui permettraient à l'opinion publique de s'exprimer véritablement. Ma délégation approuve les recommandations du Comité spécial qui demandent que des mesures soient prises pour préparer l'indépendance de ces territoires.

188. Le Comité spécial a entendu plusieurs pétitionnaires au sujet de la situation à Zanzibar. Il semble que le seul problème qui se pose aux partis politiques soit de s'entendre sur la date des élections. Nous espérons que ce différend sera bientôt réglé afin que la population de l'île puisse poursuivre sa marche vers l'indépendance.

189. Nous devons constater que, malgré certaines difficultés, le Kenya a réalisé des progrès sensibles depuis deux ans dans la voie de l'indépendance. Nous espérons fermement que la nomination d'un nouveau Gouverneur du Kenya correspond, de la part du Royaume-Uni, au désir d'accélérer la mise au point de dispositions constitutionnelles préparant l'accession à l'indépendance de cet important territoire africain. Le seul grand problème qui reste à résoudre est celui qui pose la fuite rapide des capitaux liquides qui fait peser sur le pays, à la veille de son indépendance, la menace de la banqueroute.

190. En ce qui concerne la Guyane britannique, nous pensons que son indépendance est fortement retardée sans raison valable, si ce n'est que le parti au pouvoir ne plaît pas au Gouvernement britannique. Nous espérons que l'Assemblée générale adoptera les recommandations nécessaires pour aider ce territoire à accéder à l'indépendance.

191. En résumé, nous devons souligner que les problèmes importants auxquels doivent faire face les territoires africains encore dépendants sont créés par les facteurs suivants.

192. Premièrement, l'attitude de la minorité européenne, qui dénie absolument à la majorité africaine le droit de jouer son rôle légitime dans des gouvernements librement élus. Deuxièmement, les intérêts financiers européens dont les capitaux accumulés ne peuvent être protégés que si la minorité européenne est au pouvoir. Troisièmement, la politique de l'Afrique du Sud et du Portugal, qui ne peuvent tolérer de voir se créer autour d'eux des États africains gouvernés par une majorité africaine.

193. Dans ces conditions, nous tenons à souligner que, pour aider ces territoires à conquérir leur indépendance, nous devons avant tout réaffirmer solennellement les principes de la Charte et demander à la Puissance administrante, c'est-à-dire au Royaume-Uni, de remplir ses obligations envers l'Organisation.

194. En conclusion, nous devons féliciter le Comité spécial de son rapport si utile et de l'attitude conciliante qui a présidé à ses délibérations. Nous espérons que l'Assemblée générale examinera sérieusement les projets de résolution présentés par le Comité spécial. Quant à l'action future du Comité spécial, ma délégation appuiera toutes dispositions qui pourront l'aider à mener sa tâche à bonne fin.

Gouvernement des Pays-Bas nos condoléances les plus sincères en cette triste circonstance.

196. M. SCHURMANN (Pays-Bas) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dans la douleur que ressentent si profondément les hommes et les femmes des Pays-Bas, du Surinam et des Antilles néerlandaises devant la mort de S. A. R. la princesse Wilhelmine, qui a régné sur les Pays-Bas pendant 50 ans, les paroles de respectueux hommage que le Président de l'Assemblée vient de prononcer ont été un réconfort à leur peine.

197. Durant son long règne, la reine Wilhelmine a marqué notre mode de vie de sa forte personnalité et s'est acquis le respect et l'amour de ses sujets. Pendant la guerre, elle a maintenu bien haut le flambeau de notre espoir et de notre confiance et, après son abdication, elle a fait la preuve de sa grandeur d'âme en s'effaçant complètement de la vie publique et en se dévouant discrètement à la cause de la paix et à l'allègement des souffrances d'autrui.

198. Ce sera pour moi un honneur que de transmettre vos condoléances à notre famille royale, à notre gouvernement et aux peuples du Royaume des Pays-Bas.

La séance est levée à 17 h 35.

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite) 986

Président: M. Muhammad ZAFRULLA KHAN
(Pakistan).

dant, malgré toutes ces grandes réalisations, nous nous heurtons à un problème qui n'a pas encore été résolu jusqu'ici: le problème du colonialisme. C'est un problème né des rapports que l'homme entretient avec un autre homme qui peut ne pas lui ressembler et dont la couleur peut être différente; l'un et l'autre sont cependant des êtres humains, égaux à tous égards et habilités à bénéficier des mêmes droits et des mêmes privilèges.

15. Nous lisons dans la Charte des Nations Unies:

"Nous, peuples des Nations Unies, résolus...

"... à proclamer à nouveau notre foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites..."

16. Ces nobles principes sont également inscrits dans les constitutions de tous nos pays. Certaines d'entre elles ont été proclamées avant même que le colonialisme n'eût été introduit dans la plupart des régions qu'il a subjuguées. Toutefois, ces idées et ces principes élevés n'étaient applicables qu'à l'intérieur des frontières des pays qui les proclamaient et non dans les territoires qu'ils dominaient.

17. Dès sa création, l'Organisation a établi, sous son autorité, un régime international de tutelle pour l'administration et la surveillance de certains territoires. Les fins essentielles de ce régime étaient notamment les suivantes:

"... favoriser le progrès politique, économique et social des populations des territoires sous tutelle ainsi que le développement de leur instruction; favoriser également leur évolution progressive vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes ou l'indépendance, compte tenu des conditions particulières à chaque territoire et à ses populations [et] des aspirations librement exprimées des populations intéressées..."

"... encourager le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous, sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion, et développer le sentiment de l'interdépendance des peuples du monde".

18. La Charte des Nations Unies contient également, au Chapitre XI, des dispositions tout aussi nettes sur la façon de sauvegarder les droits et intérêts des populations des territoires non autonomes.

19. Au début, l'Organisation a adopté une attitude prudente quant à la mise en œuvre de ces principes et à l'émancipation des peuples courbés sous le joug de la domination et du colonialisme. Les Nations Unies s'attendaient évidemment à ce que les colonisateurs s'acquittent des obligations qu'ils avaient assumées en souscrivant à la Charte. Mais ce processus s'est déroulé plutôt lentement. Dans certains cas, les colonisateurs ont fait la sourde oreille et n'ont tenu aucun compte de ces obligations.

20. Il est vrai que le colonialisme a été banni de nombreux pays depuis quelques années. Nous avons eu la grande joie de voir bien des pays frères conquérir leur liberté et leur indépendance et nous avons pu constater combien était importante leur contribution aux travaux des Nations Unies.

21. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite*)

14. M. RIAD (République arabe unie) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'homme a accompli, à l'époque moderne, des progrès considérables, illimités, dans de nombreux secteurs de la vie humaine. Ses réalisations dans les domaines de la science, de la technique, de la médecine, de l'agriculture, de l'industrie et récemment dans la conquête de l'espace extra-atmosphérique ont été universellement saluées comme la marque de sa supériorité et de son génie. Cepen-

*Reprise des débats de la 1178ème séance.

(XV)], adoptée il y a deux ans, a été l'occasion pour des millions d'individus dans le monde entier et en particulier pour ceux qui sont encore soumis à une organisation étrangère d'entendre réaffirmer que l'Organisation prend à cœur leurs aspirations et qu'elle est fermement résolue à mettre fin au colonialisme. Cette déclaration, que beaucoup d'éminents orateurs qui m'ont précédé dans ce débat ont considérée à juste titre comme une des plus grandes réalisations des Nations Unies et comme un flambeau éclairant une ère nouvelle, proclame solennellement "la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations", et déclare en outre que "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance". Aucun Etat Membre n'a osé voter contre ces principes, mais les puissances coloniales continuent à avoir recours à bien des subterfuges ou prétextes pour se maintenir dans leurs derniers retranchements.

22. L'argument le plus courant est que tel ou tel territoire n'est pas prêt pour l'indépendance. Outre le fait que cette affirmation contredit de façon vraiment flagrante les dispositions de la Déclaration que j'ai citées il y a un instant, ma délégation considère qu'aucun argument valable ne peut être avancé en toute honnêteté à l'appui de cette thèse. On a déjà dit que tel ou tel territoire était trop pauvre pour être autonome. Je prétends que cet argument des colonialistes est sans valeur. De plus, notre propre expérience prouve que, bien loin de faire empirer la situation économique des nouveaux pays indépendants, l'abolition du colonialisme y a toujours suscité un véritable éveil. Les peuples qui deviennent indépendants lancent leur pays avec enthousiasme sur la voie du développement et redoublent d'efforts quand ils savent qu'ils ne sont plus exploités au profit des étrangers.

23. Dans certains pays qui ont lutté pour conquérir leur indépendance et qui y sont parvenus, les interventions étrangères continuent en fait à paralyser les efforts déployés pour animer la vie nationale. Ainsi, par leur intervention directe ou indirecte, les colonialistes ont provoqué au Congo une situation explosive, au mépris des résolutions des Nations relatives au respect de l'indépendance réelle, de l'unité et de l'intégrité territoriale de ce pays.

24. Pour certains autres territoires, les colonialistes continuent à maintenir la fiction juridique aujourd'hui dépassée selon laquelle ils feraient partie de la métropole; cependant, il va de soi que ces territoires n'ont aucun lien commun, ethnique, social ou culturel avec ceux qui soutiennent cette théorie. Le seul lien possible, s'il y en a un, repose essentiellement sur la force. La fiction juridique qui lie ces territoires à leurs maîtres est une de ces anomalies de l'histoire créées et perpétuées par le déséquilibre des forces.

25. Dans notre région du monde, nous constatons une domination et une exploitation étrangères unifiées en leur genre, qui entrent manifestement dans le cadre du sujet dont nous discutons.

26. Je veux parler des nombreux territoires de la péninsule Arabique qui sont victimes de la domination britannique. La communauté internationale continue à ne pas se rendre compte de la dureté du colonialisme britannique dans cette région du monde, surtout parce qu'on dissimule très soigneusement la situation à l'opinion publique. La maladresse des Britanniques est si totale qu'ils ont réussi à isoler ces territoires du reste du monde. Alors que l'Asie et l'Afrique ont été balayées par une grande vague de décolonisation qui a permis l'accession à l'indépendance de nombreux territoires et de nombreux peuples, le colonialisme britannique s'est fait délibérément et systématiquement de cette partie du monde un camp retranché.

27. Je me permettrai d'exposer aussi brièvement que possible les événements qui ont conduit à cette situation intolérable qui n'est certainement conforme ni aux dispositions de la Charte ni à l'esprit de notre temps. Après avoir occupé Aden au début du XIX^{ème} siècle, les Britanniques ont progressé vers l'Est en couvrant non moins de 2 000 kilomètres. Lors de cette invasion, ils ont occupé l'une après l'autre les régions qu'ils traversaient. Ils n'ont cependant pas voulu les désigner sous le nom de colonies, comme ils l'avaient fait pour Aden. Ils se sont contentés de les qualifier de protectorats. Le Gouvernement britannique a déclaré que ses forces étaient là pour protéger ces territoires des envahisseurs français et portugais. En fait, leur véritable but était d'avoir le contrôle de toutes les voies de communication menant aux colonies britanniques en Orient, notamment en Inde. Plus tard, les Britanniques ont inventé un autre prétexte: ils resteraient dans la région pour protéger également ces émirats contre une invasion éventuelle de leurs voisins arabes. Plus tard encore, ils ont trouvé une nouvelle excuse à leur domination, la nécessité de protéger les cheiks les uns contre les autres.

28. Je reconnais que les habitants de ces territoires ont besoin d'être protégés, mais, s'ils doivent l'être, c'est bien contre la domination étrangère britannique qui est fondée sur des bases fausses, illégales et injustes. Ces gens devraient, en toute justice, être protégés contre l'exploitation britannique.

29. Le Gouvernement britannique a toujours soutenu que sa présence dans la région est fondée sur tout un réseau de traités et d'accords conclus entre les souverains de ces territoires, d'une part, et le Gouvernement britannique ou ses agents, d'autre part. En réalité, les ancêtres de ceux qui détiennent aujourd'hui le pouvoir n'avaient alors d'autre choix, devant l'invasion d'imposantes forces armées britanniques, que de souscrire à ces prétendus accords de protectorat, puisqu'ils ne pouvaient ni résister ni repousser cette puissante nation étrangère. Ces accords ne doivent en aucun cas être considérés par la communauté internationale comme des traités valables conclus entre parties égales. Comment accepter comme un traité international valable un instrument en vertu duquel un souverain "s'engage, en son nom et au nom de ses héritiers et successeurs, à ne jamais céder, vendre, hypothéquer ou laisser occuper son territoire sauf au bénéfice du Gouvernement britannique"? Ce n'est là qu'un exemple des clauses de ces traités qui ont été imposés à l'époque aux souverains de ces pays et en vertu desquels les Britanniques continuent à dominer et à coloniser cette région du monde.

30. Même au XX^{ème} siècle, les Britanniques n'ont pas renoncé à leur méthode qui consiste à contraindre les souverains à souscrire à n'importe quelle concession ou accord nécessaire pour garantir leurs intérêts dans la région, en particulier en ce qui concerne le pétrole. La population de ces territoires vit dans des conditions effarantes de misère, d'analphabétisme et de dénuement, mais la richesse de leurs terres ne leur a jamais rien rapporté; au contraire, c'est un fléau que la domination britannique ne cherche qu'à perpétuer.

31. Ainsi, la population de ces territoires se heurte à trois ennemis redoutables: la domination britannique, l'exploitation par certaines compagnies pétrolières et la présence au pouvoir de réactionnaires soutenus par la Grande-Bretagne. Je me bornerai à citer à cet égard deux exemples récents pour montrer jusqu'où va cette oppression. Vous n'ignorez pas que la population de l'Oman a pris les armes pour résister à la domination britannique, dirigée par l'agent britannique à Mascate. L'aviation militaire britannique a lancé des avions à réaction contre le peuple de l'Oman; des villages ont été bombardés et une population paisible a été victime de toutes sortes de terreurs. Le Gouvernement britannique s'est justifié, à ironie, en prétendant n'être intervenu qu'à la demande du Sultan de Mascate qui revendique l'Oman. Le deuxième exemple concerne l'imposition par le Gouvernement britannique d'une sorte de fédération réunissant un certain nombre de cheikats du sud à la colonie d'Aden. Je ne parlerai pas longuement de cette grave question qui a déjà fait l'objet d'un examen détaillé devant le Comité spécial², comme il ressort de la section D du chapitre XII du rapport dont nous sommes saisis [A/5238]. Je tiens cependant à souligner à quel point sont périmées les méthodes qu'utilise le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni en imposant un régime à un peuple sans se préoccuper de ses vœux et en allant à coup sûr à l'encontre de ses aspirations.

32. La politique britannique, fondée sur la force, qui consiste à dénier à la population d'Aden son droit naturel à la libre détermination, est en contradiction flagrante avec la Charte des Nations Unies et la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le Gouvernement britannique ou ses forces armées à Aden ne pourront pas continuer à demeurer indifférents à ces droits reconnus ni à s'opposer à la marée d'émancipation et de liberté, en particulier après la grande révolution yéménite qui s'est produite en septembre dernier et qui a renversé une fois pour toutes l'ancien régime réactionnaire.

33. Ma délégation partage la vive préoccupation qui s'est exprimée dans le présent débat au sujet du maintien à Aden d'une base militaire britannique dotée des armes et des engins les plus modernes. Nul ne peut nier que l'objectif réel ainsi visé est de perpétuer la domination britannique dans la région. J'estime non seulement que cela va contre les intérêts des habitants, mais que c'est une menace à la paix et à la sécurité dans cette région. La délégation de la République arabe unie espère sincèrement que cette question sera examinée en détail et d'urgence afin que ces populations puissent être libérées de la domination étrangère.

34. Ma délégation ne pourrait considérer comme complète une discussion sur le problème du colonialisme qui n'évoquerait pas l'acte colonial le plus effroyable qui ait été commis dans notre histoire, je veux parler de la conspiration coloniale sioniste contre le peuple palestinien, qui a entraîné l'expulsion de ce peuple de la Palestine et l'occupation de son pays par des forces étrangères. Les Nations Unies ne peuvent se permettre de rester indifférentes au droit naturel et tout à fait élémentaire qu'a le peuple palestinien à rentrer dans ses foyers et à recouvrer son pays et son indépendance.

35. A sa seizième session, l'Assemblée générale a demandé aux Etats intéressés d'agir sans plus tarder afin d'assurer scrupuleusement l'application et la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration et a décidé de créer un Comité spécial chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-septième session [résolution 1654 (XVI)].

36. Avant d'examiner le rapport présenté par le Comité spécial, qui fait l'objet de notre discussion, j'ai l'agréable devoir de féliciter le Comité pour la tâche admirable qu'il a accomplie. Je tiens à louer les membres du Comité pour la façon dont ils ont répondu à l'attente des peuples dépendants du monde entier et pour les résultats qu'ils ont atteints dans le délai relativement bref dont ils disposaient.

37. Le Comité a décidé d'examiner en priorité les territoires d'Afrique. Il a examiné certains d'entre eux et a fait rapport à leur sujet. Cependant, il a mission de s'occuper de tous les cas de colonialisme. A cette fin, l'Assemblée générale pourrait peut-être, si elle le juge bon, envisager la possibilité d'en élargir la composition afin de permettre au Comité de faire face à la situation qui se présentera certainement à lui. Plusieurs représentants ont déjà fait allusion à cette idée et certaines suggestions ont été avancées dans la discussion générale. Ma délégation est résolument favorable à l'augmentation du nombre des membres du Comité.

38. A la lecture des 10 chapitres du rapport traitant des territoires examinés par le Comité spécial, on peut relever un certain nombre de problèmes analogues: retard injustifié dans l'octroi de l'indépendance, manifestations diverses de discrimination raciale, exploitation des autochtones par les colons européens, imposition de certains arrangements, et surtout manœuvres variées pour diviser la population d'un même territoire.

39. Le Comité a examiné notamment les questions de la Rhodésie du Sud, du Sud-Ouest africain et des territoires administrés par le Portugal. Je n'en parlerai pas, puisque deux d'entre eux ont déjà fait l'objet d'un débat à la Quatrième Commission et que le troisième est actuellement à l'examen. Je m'en tiendrai donc aux autres territoires examinés par le Comité spécial.

40. Le premier territoire dont traite le rapport après la Rhodésie du Sud est la Rhodésie du Nord. Le rapport expose en détail la situation qui règne dans ce territoire où une population de 2 500 000 Africains est soumise à la domination de 77 000 blancs qui refusent de reconnaître à la majorité africaine l'égalité des droits politiques, sociaux et économiques.

41. Aux élections qui ont eu lieu le 30 octobre 1962, 4 p. 100 seulement des Africains ont pu voter en raison des conditions d'électorat. Toutefois, les 100 000 Africains qui ont pu voter n'ont laissé aucun doute quant à leur volonté d'obtenir l'indépendance immédiate, de voir disparaître la Fédération d'Afrique centrale et de faire respecter l'intégrité territoriale de leur pays. Des élections partielles doivent encore avoir lieu en décembre.

42. La discrimination sociale et économique va toujours de pair avec la discrimination politique. Je n'ai pas l'intention d'analyser en détail la situation sociale et économique de la Rhodésie du Nord: M. Kenneth Kaunda l'a fait en avril 1962 devant le Comité spécial [A/5238, chap. III, par. 33 à 63]. La vie quotidienne de la population dépend en fait entièrement du bon vouloir des sociétés étrangères, comme la South African Company, qui exploitent les richesses minérales et les ressources humaines. C'est d'ailleurs cette même société qui fournit à sir Roy Welensky et à son parti leur principal soutien financier. Les efforts entrepris pour détacher la région la plus riche du pays et l'annexer à la Rhodésie du Sud s'inscrivent dans le cadre du dessein colonialiste qui vise à absorber complètement la population, du point de vue économique, au profit de ses exploiters. Nous espérons que le projet de résolution recommandé par le Comité spécial sera adopté, car il tient compte des grands vœux de la population: indépendance immédiate, dissolution de la Fédération d'Afrique centrale et respect de l'unité et de l'intégrité territoriale du pays.

43. Le rapport aborde ensuite le cas du Nyassaland, au sujet duquel il ne recommande pas de projet de résolution. Nous sommes heureux de noter que les entretiens qui ont eu lieu à Londres ont été couronnés de succès. Le Nyassaland a pu progresser vers l'indépendance beaucoup plus facilement que la Rhodésie du Nord, peut-être parce que la minorité européenne y est plus réduite; maintenant que M. Banda a réussi dans ses négociations, le Nyassaland est beaucoup plus près de l'objectif qu'il cherche à atteindre avec le plein appui de la population: l'indépendance et la séparation totale d'avec la Fédération d'Afrique centrale. Nous espérons fermement que le jour de la proclamation de l'indépendance du Nyassaland est proche.

44. Le chapitre suivant du rapport traite des territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le Basoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland. Les déclarations des pétitionnaires de ces territoires, telles qu'elles sont résumées dans le rapport, font ressortir la misère qui y règne, par suite des longues années d'exploitation et de mauvaise gestion de la Puissance administrante. Il est certain que, si ces pays étaient indépendants et pouvaient organiser des élections au suffrage universel, bien des injustices seraient supprimées et, avec l'aide des Nations Unies, ces pays pourraient affermir leur économie et utiliser leurs ressources naturelles et humaines, que la Puissance administrante exploite actuellement à son bénéfice exclusif.

45. Nous sommes certains que, pour atteindre cet objectif conformément à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, l'Assemblée générale adoptera les recommandations du Comité spécial invitant notamment le Royaume-Uni à suspendre les dispositions constitutionnelles actuelles, à procéder à des élections au suffrage universel des adultes et à convoquer une conférence constitutionnelle chargée de fixer selon les vœux de la population la date de l'accession à l'indépendance de chacun des trois territoires intéressés, ainsi que les recom-mandations concernant les remèdes à apporter à la situation économique-sociale déplorable des trois territoires, la fourniture d'une assistance économique, financière et technique par l'intermédiaire des programmes de coopération technique des Nations Unies et par l'intermédiaire des institutions spécialisées, et l'appel invitant instamment l'Autorité administrante à restituer aux autochtones toutes les terres qui leur ont été enlevées.

46. Depuis deux ans, Zanzibar a été à plusieurs reprises le théâtre de désordres dus en particulier à un climat de tension et à des désaccords entre les partis politiques. Cependant, tous les pétitionnaires des différents partis politiques ont été unanimes à souhaiter l'indépendance le plus tôt possible. Toutefois, c'est la mésentente entre les partis qui a fourni à la Puissance administrante le prétexte qu'elle invoque pour retarder l'indépendance. Puisque les divergences entre partis politiques semblent maintenant ne plus porter que sur la date des élections, nous espérons qu'on parviendra très vite à un accord. Nous comptons donc que les recommandations du Comité spécial seront adoptées par l'Assemblée générale et que l'appel des Nations Unies sera entendu tant par la Puissance administrante que par la population de Zanzibar, qui pourra ainsi atteindre l'objectif de l'indépendance, que tous s'accordent à souhaiter.

47. Pour ne pas quitter le continent africain, je passerai maintenant au chapitre X du rapport, relatif au Kenya. Ce chapitre expose les réalisations acquises depuis deux ans et qui ont finalement conduit le pays, après bien des déboires, presque à la veille de son indépendance. Le Kenya jouit maintenant de l'autonomie interne et ce sont les partis nationalistes qui sont au pouvoir. La Conférence constitutionnelle a atteint des résultats très importants puisqu'elle a abouti à un accord sur une nouvelle constitution contenant une déclaration des droits et instituant un parlement bicaméral, l'une des chambres étant élue au suffrage universel des adultes. Toutefois, la date de l'indépendance et des nouvelles élections n'a pas encore été fixée. Nous espérons que la Puissance administrante ne tardera plus longtemps à la faire. La résolution recommandée par le Comité spécial va dans ce sens et nous espérons qu'elle sera adoptée.

48. Venons-en enfin à la Guyane britannique. Un accord est intervenu sur le principe de l'indépendance, mais la Conférence constitutionnelle qui s'est finalement réunie en octobre 1962 vient de se terminer sur un échec. Il semble que les partis continuent à demeurer divisés quant à la question de savoir si les élections doivent avoir lieu sur la base de la représentation proportionnelle ou par circonscription. Là encore, nous pensons que, si l'indépendance n'avait pas été retardée si longtemps, le pays ne se trouverait pas dans l'impasse où il est aujourd'hui. Retarder l'indépendance ne fait que compliquer les choses pour les parties intéressées. Les divergences sont aplanies beaucoup plus aisément quand un pays est libre de choisir lui-même sa voie. En fait, la plupart du temps, les divergences sont aggravées, voire suscitées, de l'extérieur. Nous espérons donc que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni suivra la procédure normale en transférant au Gouvernement de la Guyane britannique les pouvoirs qu'il détient encore, afin que le pays puisse accéder rapidement à l'indépendance.

49. Nul n'ignore la position de ma délégation sur cette question très importante de la liquidation du colonialisme. Mon gouvernement l'a précisée à maintes reprises et ma délégation l'a réaffirmée en bien des occasions devant les organes des Nations Unies chaque fois que la question était soulevée. Nous avons toujours soutenu que le droit des peuples à la liberté et à l'indépendance est un de leurs droits naturels. C'est pour cette raison et aussi parce que nous nous sentons solidaires des peuples soumis à une domination coloniale que nous n'avons jamais cessé de prôner ce principe et que nous ne relâcherons pas nos efforts tant que tous nos frères qui souffrent encore du colonialisme n'auront pas recouvré leur indépendance et leur liberté. Nous espérons que le jour est proche où nous verrons la fin de l'ère coloniale et l'accession de tous les territoires coloniaux à l'indépendance.

50. M. SOSA RODRIGUEZ (Venezuela) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Une des réalisations les plus positives des Nations Unies et qui caractérise l'époque où nous vivons est le processus de décolonisation, amorcé timidement à San Francisco dans les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte et renforcé de manière claire et impérative, 15 ans plus tard, dans la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Cette déclaration a consacré les vœux de la communauté internationale en faveur de l'éradication définitive des systèmes encore en vigueur de domination et de subjugation d'un peuple par un autre.

51. L'année suivante, la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale est venue accélérer le processus de décolonisation pour le faire passer du simple stade des déclarations de principes à celui de l'intervention active des Nations Unies. La création du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, comme on appelle le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, a été décidée par la résolution 1654 (XVI).

52. Le Comité, né de la nécessité de doter les Nations Unies d'un organe spécial chargé d'étudier, de surveiller et d'accélérer le processus de décolonisation, se présente comme une instance nouvelle dotée de pouvoirs sans équivalent dans l'histoire de l'Organisation, mais très bien adaptée à la fin visée qui est l'élimination du colonialisme dans la société moderne.

53. Sans nier les mérites des efforts déployés par les Nations Unies pour résoudre les problèmes coloniaux jusqu'en 1960 et en tenant plutôt compte du fait que cette activité a abouti à la résolution 1514 (XV), il faut reconnaître qu'à partir de ce moment et après la création du Comité spécial les Nations Unies ont changé de ton dans l'examen des questions coloniales; s'il est certain que ce ton nouveau doit toujours rester conforme à l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies, il n'en est pas moins vrai qu'on n'avait jamais auparavant prétendu exercer une pression plus concrète sur les puissances administrantes en les invitant instamment à réviser leur politique colonialiste afin de l'adapter au processus de la libre détermination des peuples, unique formule qui permette de résoudre les questions relatives à la structure des sociétés à l'époque présente.

54. L'action des Nations Unies dans le processus de décolonisation ne doit pas être seulement idéaliste, mais aussi pragmatique, et rester dans le cadre de la Charte qui doit être considérée comme un document vivant et interprété dans le sens de l'évolution historique, comme l'affirme le paragraphe 18 des considérations générales du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix chargés de la question de la communication de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte^{3/}.

55. Lorsque le Président de l'Assemblée générale, en conformité du paragraphe 3 du dispositif de la résolution 1654 (XVI), a décidé de faire figurer le Venezuela parmi les 17 pays devant former le Comité, nous avons accepté cette honorable mission et apporté notre concours au nouvel organe. Nous étions guidés par notre position anticolonialiste, mais dépourvus de préjugés qui auraient pu donner lieu à des actions trop hâtives, explicables en un certain sens mais pas toujours favorables à la cause des peuples encore soumis au régime colonial.

56. C'est dans cet esprit que la délégation du Venezuela a occupé son siège au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept et a réitéré dès le début sa position mûrement réfléchie devant les problèmes coloniaux, en tant que mandataire d'un peuple qui a conquis son indépendance depuis à peine 150 ans, une indépendance douloureuse obtenue après 15 ans d'une lutte où a péri 40 p. 100 de notre population et pour laquelle il a fallu remplacer par l'action armée l'absence totale, dans le monde d'alors, des systèmes collectifs de coopération internationale visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies ou des propositions et recommandations d'un comité spécial.

57. Je rappellerai à ce propos l'attitude prise par la délégation du Venezuela au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept lorsqu'il a discuté les méthodes de travail et la procédure à adopter, attitude qui est exposée au paragraphe 98 du rapport du Comité.

58. En tant que représentant du Venezuela, j'ai réaffirmé en cette occasion que nous avons toujours été anticolonialistes pour des raisons historiques et à cause du tempérament de notre peuple latino-américain, qui, ayant été soumis à la domination coloniale jusqu'au XIX^e siècle, apprécie pleinement les bienfaits de l'indépendance. J'ai également déclaré en cette occasion que, selon nous, le processus de décolonisation ne pouvait être identique pour tous les territoires non autonomes ou sous tutelle et que la date de l'indépendance devait être fixée dans chaque cas en tenant compte des circonstances particulières qui permettraient à un territoire déterminé d'accéder à l'indépendance dans des conditions propres à assurer sa stabilité et sa viabilité en tant qu'Etat indépendant.

59. C'est sur ces principes de base que la délégation du Venezuela a établi sa position en ce qui concerne les 12 territoires dépendants examinés par le Comité depuis le début de ses travaux à la fin de février 1962 jusqu'au mois de septembre dernier; dans chaque cas, elle a insisté pour que fût examinée objectivement chaque situation particulière, afin que les suggestions et recommandations du Comité s'adaptent à la réalité et soient effectivement conformes au mandat confié par l'Assemblée générale.

60. Nous avons été heureux que le Comité des Dix-Sept ait en général partagé ces mêmes idées, ce qui a permis à la délégation du Venezuela de voter pour toutes les résolutions figurant dans le rapport du Comité, qui constituent ses recommandations à l'Assemblée générale. Certaines de ces recommandations sont le résultat du voyage fait en Afrique par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, en mai et juin de l'année en cours, à la suite des invitations reçues des Gouvernements du Maroc, de l'Ethiopie et du Tanganyika. Je tiens, à cette occasion, à réitérer aux représentants de ces pays la gratitude du Venezuela pour la merveilleuse hospitalité que leurs gouvernements ont réservée aux membres du Comité. Ce voyage a permis au Comité un contact direct avec le continent le plus touché par les problèmes coloniaux, qu'il examinait à ce moment-là.

61. Le voyage à Londres du Sous-Comité de six membres chargé d'avoir des entretiens avec le Gouvernement britannique au sujet de la situation en Rhodésie du Sud a été lui aussi très constructif. C'est pourquoi je tiens aussi à exprimer à nouveau notre gratitude pour la courtoisie et l'amabilité dont ont fait preuve en cette occasion les autorités du Royaume-Uni.

62. En notre qualité de membre du Comité des Dix-Sept, il nous est difficile de procéder à un examen des erreurs de cet organe ou de mettre en relief les avantages que sa création a procurés aux peuples qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Ces deux aspects ont fait et continueront de faire l'objet des observations d'autres délégations, en particulier de celles qui ne font pas partie du Comité et peuvent juger avec une plus grande impartialité l'œuvre dont le rapport précité fait état.

63. Certaines délégations qui sont intervenues dans ce débat ont parlé de l'action future du Comité des Dix-Sept et de l'opportunité d'en élargir la composition et de prendre des décisions quant à l'existence d'autres organes subsidiaires, afin de canaliser l'activité future des Nations Unies dans ce domaine particulier au moment où elle semble atteindre son point culminant.

64. Le Secrétaire général a déjà émis, dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1], l'idée de supprimer tous les autres comités et sous-comités chargés des diverses questions relatives aux territoires non autonomes, en vue de confier exclusivement ces tâches au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Quelques représentants ont proposé, par exemple, que le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal ou le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes cessent leurs activités qui seraient centralisées par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept où se fait déjà une partie de ce même travail. Conformément à cette même tendance, la Quatrième Commission a adopté, il y a quelques jours, un projet de résolution [voir A/5310] présenté par plusieurs délégations d'Amérique latine, d'Afrique et d'Asie, demandant à l'Assemblée générale de mettre fin aux fonctions du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain.

65. Ma délégation a pris note de ces points de vue, ainsi que des opinions exprimées par diverses délégations, tendant à concentrer en un seul organe toutes les activités de cette nature déployées par les Nations Unies, afin d'éviter des doubles emplois et des contradictions lors de l'examen des questions coloniales, comme cela s'est produit à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale.

66. Cette unification aurait pour conséquence la nécessité d'élargir la composition du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, qui resterait le seul organe subsidiaire en matière coloniale et assumerait une responsabilité encore plus grande et un travail plus vaste. Sur ce point, divers représentants sont allés jusqu'à indiquer le nombre des nouveaux membres qui devraient compléter le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Certains ont parlé de quatre nouveaux membres, d'autres de sept. Il existe là des opinions différentes mais qui méritent toutes d'être prises en considération.

67. Dans ce même ordre d'idées, il y a lieu de ne pas oublier que toute augmentation du nombre des membres du Comité entraînerait sans doute la nécessité de réviser ses méthodes actuelles de travail et, comme l'a signalé le représentant de l'Irak [1170ème séance], il pourrait procéder à l'examen simultané de divers territoires moyennant la constitution de sous-comités spéciaux et abandonner ainsi la méthode d'examen consécutive qu'il a suivie jusqu'à maintenant.

68. Au début de mon intervention, je me suis référé à plusieurs reprises aux résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI), et j'ai mis en relief leur signification dans le processus de décolonisation. Ma délégation souhaite que le présent débat se termine par l'adoption d'un nouvel instrument des Nations Unies qui tienne à perfectionner davantage ce qui a été fait dans le domaine de l'action anticoloniale; elle souhaite aussi que la résolution qui sera adoptée ici soit parfaitement conforme aux deux résolutions précitées et que ces trois résolutions expriment ensemble les principes directeurs de l'action internationale dans son effort final en vue de liquider le colonialisme dans le monde.

M. Bingham (Etats-Unis d'Amérique), vice-président, prend la présidence.

69. M. VAKIL (Iran): Avant de procéder à l'examen du rapport (A/5238), qui constitue l'objet principal des présents débats, je me propose de faire quelques observations d'ordre général relatives aux activités de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en matière de décolonisation. Ces observations nous paraissent nécessaires pour placer la question actuellement soumise à l'examen de l'Assemblée dans son contexte.

70. Pour assurer le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes et en faire le fondement du développement des relations amicales entre les nations, la Charte confère à l'Organisation de grandes responsabilités à l'égard des populations des territoires soumis au régime colonial. Ceux-ci sont classés par la Charte en deux catégories, la première comprenant les territoires placés sous le régime international de tutelle, et la deuxième tous les autres territoires dont la population ne s'administre pas encore elle-même.

71. Faut-il rappeler que cette division de territoires dépendants en deux catégories différentes par la Charte n'est qu'un accident de l'histoire, les territoires placés sous le régime de tutelle étant des anciennes colonies des puissances vaincues des deux guerres mondiales, et les autres celles des vainqueurs? Cela veut dire qu'aucune différence de nature n'existe réellement entre les deux catégories de territoires, et, bien qu'exprimées d'une manière différente, les fins du régime de tutelle sont et ne peuvent être qu'analogues à celles qui concernent les territoires non autonomes. La nature de la fonction des Nations Unies dans les deux cas est essentiellement la même et consiste à exercer le contrôle de la communauté internationale sur les Etats qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer ces territoires, et son but final, dans les deux cas, est la préparation de la population de ces territoires à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance.

72. Malgré la similitude existant entre les deux catégories de territoires, il faut reconnaître que les 11 territoires placés sous le régime international de tutelle étaient dans une situation privilégiée par rapport aux territoires dits non autonomes qui, à la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, étaient 10 fois plus nombreux et, au point de vue de la population, beaucoup plus importants.

73. Les dispositions des Chapitres XII et XIII de la Charte relatives au régime international de tutelle, et particulièrement celles concernant l'obligation par l'autorité administrante de présenter un rapport annuel, et la possibilité pour le Conseil de tutelle de recevoir les pétitionnaires et d'envoyer des missions de visite, sont de nature à établir un lien très étroit entre la communauté internationale et la population de ces territoires.

74. En ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes, par contre, la Charte ne met pas les mêmes moyens à la disposition des Nations Unies. Le seul lien entre l'Organisation et les populations des territoires non autonomes a été assuré pendant 15 ans par les renseignements statistiques et autres de nature technique que les autorités administrantes communiquaient, selon les termes de l'Article 73, au Secrétaire général. Là aussi, certaines autorités administrantes, se refusant à s'acquitter de leurs obligations internationales, tenaient l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans une ignorance complète de la situation existant dans les territoires sous leur administration.

75. Comme on pouvait s'y attendre, le résultat de l'application de cette méthode n'a pas tardé à se faire sentir. Le régime international de tutelle, fonctionnant dans l'ensemble d'une façon satisfaisante, a conduit à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance huit des 11 territoires sous tutelle. Le rythme de développement et le processus de décolonisation dans les territoires non autonomes ont été par contre, sauf dans des cas tout à fait exceptionnels, beaucoup plus lents, et l'on est en droit de dire que dans certains cas aucun progrès dans le sens de la préparation de la population à s'administrer elle-même n'a été réalisé. Durant les 15 dernières années, des changements très importants, sinon révolutionnaires, ont complètement transformé le visage du monde, et l'éveil de la conscience nationale des peuples anciennement subjugués et colonisés est incontestablement l'une des causes profondes de ces changements. L'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, représentant la communauté internationale, ne pouvait et n'a fait que refléter et traduire progressivement ces changements dans les décisions qu'elle a prises en matière coloniale.

76. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV) est l'aboutissement logique et le couronnement de toutes ces décisions. Cette déclaration, complément indispensable des Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte, vise essentiellement à mettre en harmonie l'Organisation des Nations Unies avec les vérités du monde d'aujourd'hui. La promesse de la Charte de l'Atlantique⁴ d'assurer "à tous les hommes de tous les pays une existence affranchie de la peur et du besoin" et la foi proclamée, au préambule de la Charte, dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations grandes et petites, ont acquis leur consécration dans la Déclaration. L'idée maîtresse de la résolution 1514 (XV), de l'avis de ma délégation, était de combler les lacunes que je viens de mentionner en donnant à la communauté internationale la possibilité d'exercer un contrôle plus efficace sur le développement du processus de décolonisation dans les territoires d'indépendance et, plus particulièrement, à l'égard de cette catégorie infortunée comprenant les territoires non autonomes.

77. C'était dans cette intention que le Comité des Dix-Sept, créé l'année dernière par l'Assemblée générale [résolution 1654 (XVI)], a été chargé d'examiner la situation dans l'ensemble de ces territoires en ce qui concerne l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Faut-il souligner qu'en émettant cette opinion ma délégation n'a nullement l'intention de limiter le sens et la portée historique de la résolution 1514 (XV)? Ce que nous cherchons, c'est à déterminer sur le plan pratique les mesures effectives que l'Organisation des Nations Unies peut et doit prendre pour atteindre les objectifs de ladite résolution. C'est dans ce contexte que, de l'avis de ma délégation, nous devons aborder le rapport présenté par le Comité des Dix-Sept.

78. Ce rapport est un travail constructif et objectif, et les membres du Comité spécial méritent des éloges pour la façon dont ils ont accompli la tâche qui leur était confiée. Nos observations seront d'ordre général et principalement limitées au chapitre premier de ce rapport, qui est consacré à l'examen général de la question. Tout en reconnaissant la valeur de l'œuvre accomplie par le Comité spécial et en approuvant d'une façon générale les méthodes et la procédure qu'il a adoptées, on remarque quelques lacunes résultant sans doute du caractère sans précédent de ces activités et qui seront certainement — nous en sommes persuadés — comblées à l'avenir.

79. La première décision à prendre pour la mise en application de la résolution 1514 (XV) aurait dû être, de l'avis de ma délégation, la délimitation du champ d'activité du Comité spécial en établissant la liste des territoires dépendants auxquels les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) sont applicables. L'établissement d'une liste complète de ces territoires, à laquelle le paragraphe 151 du chapitre premier fait allusion, nous paraît d'autant plus important que la définition et l'interprétation de l'expression "territoires non autonomes" ont fait l'objet pendant plusieurs années, à la Quatrième Commission tout autant qu'à l'Assemblée générale, de longs débats.

80. C'est à la suite de ces débats que l'Assemblée générale a adopté, à sa quinzième session, la résolution 1514 (XV). Celle-ci énonce les principes qui doivent guider l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans la détermination du statut d'un territoire non autonome. Dans d'autres résolutions subséquentes, l'Assemblée générale a appliqué ces principes généraux aux cas particuliers de certains territoires non autonomes. La résolution 1542 (XV), par exemple, énumère les neuf territoires non autonomes sous administration portugaise, et la résolution 1747 (XVI) stipule que la Rhodésie du Sud est un territoire non autonome au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

81. Considérés sous l'angle du processus de décolonisation, les territoires dépendants, dont le nombre dépasse encore 60, peuvent, nous semble-t-il, être classés en deux catégories.

82. La première catégorie comprend la majorité des territoires non autonomes, pour la plupart en Afrique, sous l'administration du Royaume-Uni. S'il est vrai que la situation de ces territoires n'est pas actuellement explosive et que même l'Autorité administrante fait généralement preuve de sagesse et de compréhension, il n'en demeure pas moins que le rythme de développement y est loin de satisfaire les exigences de notre temps et les objectifs de la résolution 1514 (XV). Nous estimons que les efforts de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en ce qui concerne ces territoires doivent viser particulièrement à pousser les autorités administrantes à accélérer le processus de décolonisation.

83. La deuxième catégorie de territoires dépendants qui méritent l'attention immédiate de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, parce que la situation y est de nature à menacer la paix dans le continent africain, comprend le Territoire sous mandat du Sud-Ouest africain, les territoires sous administration portugaise et la Rhodésie du Sud — pour ne citer que ceux-là. Ce qui rend la situation de ces territoires particulièrement dangereuse est le refus obstiné des autorités administrantes de faire droit aux aspirations légitimes des populations autochtones et de s'incliner devant les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale.

84. Le sort des populations du Sud-Ouest africain constitue, depuis 1946, l'une des préoccupations principales de l'Assemblée générale. Durant ces 16 années, tous les moyens pacifiques dont dispose l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont été mis en œuvre pour amener le gouvernement de Pretoria à s'acquitter de ses obligations internationales. Mais les résolutions nombreuses de l'Assemblée générale et l'avis consultatif de la Cour internationale de Justice en cette matière^{5/} sollicité par l'Assemblée n'ont pu changer aucunement l'attitude intransigeante de ce gouvernement.

85. Il est particulièrement à regretter qu'en refusant de respecter les droits de la population du Sud-Ouest africain et en pratiquant la politique de discrimination et de ségrégation raciales d'apartheid le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud s'est fait le champion de la violation non seulement des obligations qu'il a assumées en vertu de la Charte et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, mais aussi des principes fondamentaux de la morale universelle. Il y a quelques jours seulement, la Quatrième Commission a adopté, par 96 voix contre zéro, avec une abstention, un projet de résolution [A/5310, projet de résolution II] prévoyant de nouvelles mesures tendant à permettre à l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'exécuter les responsabilités qui lui incombent à l'égard de la population du Sud-Ouest africain. Pouvons-nous espérer que le Gouvernement de Pretoria entendra enfin la voix de la raison, prêter son concours à l'application des dispositions de ce projet et épargnera ainsi au monde une catastrophe que la continuation de la situation actuelle ne tardera pas à produire?

86. La situation en Angola et dans l'ensemble des colonies portugaises est actuellement l'objet de deux points séparés de l'ordre du jour de la présente session [points 29 et 54]. Le point de vue de ma délégation sur ces questions sera exprimé en temps voulu, au cours des débats qui auront lieu à leur propos. Je me contenterai maintenant de réaffirmer la nécessité urgente, pour l'Assemblée générale, de prendre des mesures effectives en prévision de l'accession des populations de ces territoires à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance.

87. En effet, la question qui se pose n'est pas de savoir si ces territoires deviendront ou ne deviendront pas indépendants; cette question est réglée d'une façon catégorique et irrésistible par le déterminisme de l'histoire. Il s'agit simplement de savoir si ces populations deviendront indépendantes dans la paix et dans l'harmonie ou, au contraire, au prix de guerres sanglantes et de pertes incalculables.

88. La situation de la Rhodésie du Sud a suscité et suscite encore des soucis et des inquiétudes. La Rhodésie du Sud est l'exemple même de la colonie de peuplement, où une minorité européenne de 200 000 âmes, composée de gens qui sont venus s'installer dans un pays pour s'y enrichir, s'est emparée des ressources économiques du pays et essaie par tous les moyens possibles de se maintenir dans une situation privilégiée par rapport aux 3 millions d'Africains de ces territoires.

89. La position de ma délégation au sujet de la Rhodésie du Sud est claire. Nous estimons que ce territoire est un territoire non autonome au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte et que, par conséquent, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni doit user de tous ses pouvoirs pour mettre en application les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et pour faire respecter les droits des populations autochtones. Les 3 millions d'Africains de la Rhodésie du Sud n'ont jamais eu la possibilité de manifester librement leur volonté. La Constitution de 1923 et celle de 1961 ne peuvent être considérées que comme une émanation de la volonté de la minorité européenne; elles ne peuvent pas, par conséquent, déterminer le statut de ce territoire.

90. Tant que l'égalité des droits politiques et le suffrage universel sur la base du principe "à chacun une voix" — principe sine qua non de la démocratie — ne seront pas reconnus et accordés à la population de la Rhodésie du Sud, aucun progrès dans le sens de la décolonisation ne pourra être réalisé. Cependant, nous avons confiance dans le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, qui, dans le passé, a toujours fait preuve de sagesse et de réalisme dans sa politique coloniale; nous espérons que, dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud et malgré les complications qu'il est impossible de ne pas reconnaître, une solution pacifique et satisfaisante sera trouvée.

91. Je voudrais maintenant faire connaître brièvement le point de vue de ma délégation en ce qui concerne l'avenir du Comité spécial. Il ne me semble pas nécessaire de réaffirmer l'utilité et la nécessité de l'existence de ce comité, qui devient l'organe indispensable à la réalisation de l'un des buts fondamentaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Comme le Secrétaire général par intérim l'a fait observer avec pertinence dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel [A/5201/Add.1], et partageant l'avis d'un grand nombre d'orateurs qui m'ont précédé, nous estimons que la coordination des efforts de l'Organisation dans le domaine de la décolonisation et la concentration de ces efforts dans un organe compétent et bien équipé s'avèrent indispensables.

92. Quatre comités et sous-comités créés par l'Assemblée générale — le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola, le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal, le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain et le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes — s'occupent actuellement de questions coloniales. De ces quatre comités, il me semble juste et logique d'éliminer les trois premiers et de transférer leurs mandats au Comité spécial; car, même sans ce transfert de mandats, le Comité spécial, par application de la résolution 1654 (XVI), est parfaitement habilité à examiner la situation dans les territoires relevant de sa compétence.

93. Mais, en ce qui concerne le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, ma délégation n'est pas entièrement convaincue de l'utilité et de l'opportunité de son élimination; et cela, pour les raisons suivantes. En premier lieu, ce comité, qui a été créé par l'Assemblée générale, qui est chargé d'examiner les renseignements transmis par les autorités administrantes en vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte, fonctionne régulièrement, sous des titres différents, depuis 1946 et a rendu incontestablement — et nous pensons qu'il pourra encore rendre — des services précieux sans pour autant occasionner des dépenses considérables. En second lieu, ma délégation doute fort que le Comité spécial, assumant déjà de lourdes responsabilités, puisse se charger encore de la tâche du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. En effet, compte tenu du fait que le mandat confié au Comité spécial doit être rempli de manière à atteindre les objectifs fixés dans la résolution 1654 (XVI) dans une période limitée, il ne faut pas charger ce comité de nouvelles activités qui risqueraient de ralentir son travail essentiel. Pour ces raisons, nous pensons que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, loin de faire double emploi avec le Comité spécial, sera le complément utile, sinon indispensable, de celui-ci.

94. Je n'ai pas fait allusion au Conseil de tutelle, quoique sa composition actuelle soit loin de correspondre sinon à la lettre, du moins à l'esprit de la Charte, parce que, le Conseil de tutelle étant l'un des organes principaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, toute modification le concernant est inévitablement liée à la révision de la Charte.

95. La conséquence logique de la suppression des trois comités ou sous-comités que j'ai mentionnés sera l'élargissement de la composition actuelle du Comité spécial de façon à lui permettre de s'acquitter de ses lourdes tâches. Plusieurs idées et suggestions ont été avancées à ce sujet au cours du présent débat. Mais, en abordant cette question, il ne faut pas perdre de vue qu'un élargissement démesuré du Comité spécial aurait pour effet la prolongation de ses débats et, par voie de conséquence, le ralentissement du rythme de ses travaux. L'adjonction de quatre nouveaux membres — suggestion qui a été faite pour la première fois, si je ne me trompe, par le représentant de la Guinée [11698^{me} séance] et qui porterait le nombre des membres actuels du Comité à 21 — nous paraît de nature à concilier ces deux points de vue et, par conséquent, reçoit l'appui de ma délégation.

96. Je conclus en souhaitant au Comité spécial plein succès dans sa tâche gigantesque et j'aime à espérer que l'Assemblée générale, à sa prochaine session, aura à enregistrer de grands progrès dans le domaine de l'application pratique de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, que l'on a pris coutume d'appeler "la charte de la libération".

97. M. PALAR (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Permettez-moi d'abord, Monsieur le Président, de présenter à la délégation néerlandaise nos sincères condoléances à l'occasion du décès de la princesse Wilhelmine, ex-reine des Pays-Bas. Ce fut une grande reine, comme j'ai pu le savoir personnellement, et son peuple la considérait et l'aimait comme une mère.

98. La tâche du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale, connu sous le nom de Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, consistait à étudier l'application de la Déclaration de 1960 sur la décolonisation [résolution 1514 (XV)], à formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et à faire rapport à l'Assemblée lors de sa dix-septième session. Avant de présenter mes observations sur le rapport du Comité [A/5238], je tiens à souligner que j'ai grand plaisir à exprimer la satisfaction sans réserve qu'inspirent à ma délégation les suggestions et recommandations que contient ce document. J'adresse nos félicitations au Président, au Vice-Président, au Rapporteur et à tous les membres du Comité pour leur excellent travail.

99. De nombreux représentants ont déjà fort justement analysé, loué et critiqué la teneur du rapport, et je puis m'associer en particulier, au nom de ma délégation, aux déclarations faites par la plupart de mes collègues d'Asie et d'Afrique; je ne tenterai donc pas de porter un jugement sur telle ou telle suggestion ou recommandation du Comité. Je me bornerai à souligner brièvement la triste conclusion que l'on est bien obligé de tirer de l'ensemble des constatations du Comité: la plupart des injonctions expresses contenues dans la Déclaration sur la décolonisation sont enfreintes de façon flagrante par plusieurs puissances administrantes.

100. Par exemple, les faits prouvent de façon incontestable qu'en Angola, au Mozambique, en Afrique du Sud, en Rhodésie du Sud et dans d'autres pays dépendants diverses mesures de répression sont prises contre les peuples coloniaux, ce qui, les représentants des Etats Membres ne l'ignorent certainement pas, est contraire au paragraphe 4 de la Déclaration. De plus, des lois en vigueur en Angola et au Mozambique, ainsi que dans d'autres territoires, ont un caractère nettement discriminatoire envers l'immense majorité des peuples coloniaux alors qu'elles favorisent les petites minorités blanches. Dans les deux Rhodésies, le pouvoir est en fait transféré à une faible minorité contre la volonté expresse de la population, contrairement au paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration. Le rapport du Comité prouve en outre amplement que les injonctions figurant au paragraphe 3 de la Déclaration sont généralement méconnues par les puissances administrantes; c'est un point sur lequel j'aurai l'occasion de revenir plus longuement dans la suite de mon intervention.

101. Ma délégation n'a que des louanges à adresser au Comité pour la tâche qu'il a accomplie jusqu'ici, mais nous ne croyons pas pouvoir passer sous silence le fait que, sur un total d'environ 62 territoires dépendants, 12 seulement ont été étudiés jusqu'à présent, quoique, je le reconnais, ce soient les plus vastes et les plus peuplés. En d'autres termes, il reste encore à évaluer les progrès réalisés dans l'application de la Déclaration pour une cinquantaine de territoires. Ma délégation est d'avis que nous demandions au Comité spécial de mener sa tâche à bonne fin en faisant rapport à la prochaine session de l'Assemblée générale. Ou, pour reprendre la phraséologie plus formelle de la résolution 1654 (XVI), l'Assemblée générale doit autoriser le Comité spécial à se servir de tous les moyens dont il disposera dans le cadre des procédures et des modalités qu'il adoptera pour bien s'acquitter de ses fonctions, afin de faire rapport sur tous les autres territoires à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée.

102. C'est une tâche bien lourde à accomplir en moins de huit mois et beaucoup considéreront que ce délai est trop court. Ma délégation pense donc que le Comité devrait également disposer de moyens propres à accélérer ses travaux. Nous songeons à un élargissement de la composition du Comité auquel pourraient venir s'adjoindre quatre nouveaux membres ou davantage. Cela permettrait aux membres du Comité de se diviser en cinq ou six groupes dont chacun, peut-être avec l'aide d'un rapporteur du Secrétariat, pourrait faire rapport au Comité réuni en séance plénière sur un certain nombre de territoires dépendants. Aux yeux de ma délégation, cette méthode devrait permettre au Comité de présenter à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée un rapport concernant tous les territoires restants. Nous avons l'intention de prévoir des dispositions en ce sens dans un projet de résolution qui pourra être considéré comme le projet d'une troisième résolution de l'Assemblée générale sur la décolonisation.

103. La première résolution sur la décolonisation qui contenait une déclaration de principes fondamentaux acceptés par tous a été adoptée à une écrasante majorité. Cependant, on s'est rendu compte l'année suivante que cette déclaration n'avait été mise en œuvre que dans une mesure très limitée. L'Assemblée générale a donc adopté une deuxième résolution sur la décolonisation, par laquelle elle a créé le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept pour étudier l'application de la déclaration de l'année précédente et faire des recommandations sur la mesure dans laquelle elle avait été mise en œuvre. Le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a fait de l'excellent travail pour les territoires qu'il a examinés jusqu'ici, mais cela ne représente malheureusement qu'une faible part de ce qui reste encore à accomplir. Nous nous trouvons donc maintenant dans l'obligation de présenter un troisième projet de résolution pour hâter la mise en œuvre des dispositions de la résolution adoptée l'an dernier.

104. La délégation indonésienne est convaincue que la situation du monde d'aujourd'hui ne nous permet pas de retarder davantage la décolonisation. De plus, nous sommes persuadés qu'une des responsabilités primordiales des Nations Unies est de faciliter cette évolution par tous les moyens en leur pouvoir. C'est pourquoi nous pensons que l'Assemblée générale devrait non seulement demander au Comité spécial de mener sa tâche à bonne fin en lui faisant rapport à sa prochaine session, mais envisager la possibilité de lui confier la mission de fournir une assistance active pour les étapes finales de la décolonisation.

105. Je viens de dire que la situation du monde d'aujourd'hui ne nous permettait pas de retarder davantage la décolonisation. J'insisterai sur ce point et je l'examinerai notamment à la lumière du paragraphe 3 de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation, dont je me permettrai de rappeler les termes exacts: "Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance." Cela représente à mon sens beaucoup plus qu'un avertissement sérieux adressé aux puissances administrantes: c'est aussi une façon de reconnaître que l'octroi de l'indépendance ne dépend plus en premier lieu des mouvements de libération nés chez les peuples coloniaux intéressés. Certes, il ne faut pas sous-estimer la force des mouvements de libération. D'ailleurs, le troisième alinéa du préambule de la Déclaration, en reconnaissant le désir passionné de liberté de tous les peuples dépendants, reconnaît également leur rôle décisif dans l'accession de l'indépendance. Toutefois, il est devenu de plus en plus évident depuis quelques années que la situation mondiale est le véritable facteur qui décide du moment où un territoire dépendant recouvrera sa liberté, et force nous est de constater qu'en règle générale la tendance est à une décolonisation rapide.

106. En premier lieu, et peut-être au premier plan, il y a concurrence évidente entre les deux principales parties opposées dans la guerre froide, qui désirent s'attirer les faveurs des peuples dépendants et des nouvelles nations indépendantes. Il faut compter également, tant à l'intérieur qu'hors du cadre des Nations Unies, avec la forte pression anticolonialiste exercée par les pays communistes et reposant sur l'analyse marxiste du colonialisme considéré comme un produit du capitalisme et, comme tel, devant être écrasé. La lutte ardente et de plus en plus forte des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique en faveur de la décolonisation immédiate, telle que l'ont définie les deux résolutions célèbres de l'Assemblée générale, a aussi une influence décisive sur l'évolution des événements. Enfin, je crois qu'il est vrai de dire que parmi les gens du peuple, dans bien des pays occidentaux, il existe maintenant un courant réel de sympathie pour ces populations qui languissent encore sous la domination coloniale et le désir de voir adopter par leurs gouvernements une attitude plus réaliste. C'est peut-être en partie à cause de cet état d'esprit que la plupart des anciennes et actuelles puissances coloniales ont reconnu le droit des peuples à la libre détermination; n'oublions pas que c'est grâce à la nouvelle attitude coopérative des pays occidentaux que l'Assemblée a pu adopter à une écrasante majorité les deux résolutions sur la décolonisation.

107. Il semble ainsi que la situation mondiale concorde dans l'ensemble avec le désir des peuples coloniaux de voir hâter le processus de décolonisation. Il y a malheureusement plusieurs exemples de pays qui restent en arrière. Ici je pense à ces puissances coloniales qui, tout en reconnaissant le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, n'en continuent pas moins à affirmer que certains territoires dépendants ne peuvent pas accéder immédiatement à l'indépendance, parce qu'ils sont peu étendus et qu'ils ne sont pas viables du point de vue économique. En d'autres termes, en dépit de l'injonction figurant au paragraphe 3 de la Déclaration, les déficiences des territoires sont continuellement présentées comme de bonnes raisons d'affirmer qu'ils ne peuvent s'attendre à accéder à une indépendance réelle.

108. A mon avis, il est temps de parler franchement et de voir cette question fondamentale dans sa vraie perspective. Arrêtons-nous un instant pour examiner les raisons qui justifient la présence du paragraphe 3 dans le texte de la Déclaration. Je viens de suggérer que cette mise en garde expresse adressée aux puissances coloniales est aussi, en fait, une façon de reconnaître implicitement la tendance actuelle de la situation mondiale quant à la décolonisation. Je ferai aussi remarquer qu'il y a plus: ce paragraphe revient à admettre que certains territoires ne sont en effet peut-être pas encore tout à fait prêts et qu'il y aura des difficultés réelles à surmonter. C'est précisément pour cela que le paragraphe 3 a été inséré dans la Déclaration, pour nous faire bien comprendre que l'existence dans les territoires dépendants de difficultés ou de déficiences, de quelque ordre que ce soit, ne doit pas nous empêcher de leur reconnaître le droit à la libre détermination. Il serait stérile que l'Assemblée se contente de reconnaître purement et simplement le droit à la souveraineté. Une fois que nous avons proclamé ce droit pour tous les territoires, nous sommes, par le fait même, obligés de faire respecter la Déclaration dans le délai le plus bref. C'est à cela que les peuples coloniaux eux-mêmes désirent aboutir et c'est de toute façon la voie que nous impose l'évolution de la situation mondiale.

109. Tel est donc le grand problème qui se pose à nous: comment accorder sans plus attendre aux peuples dépendants ce droit à la libre détermination que nous leur avons reconnu expressément, étant donné les difficultés certaines qu'il faudra surmonter par suite du manque de préparation de beaucoup de ces territoires? Ma délégation est convaincue que ce problème ne peut être résolu que si nous n'avons pas peur des idées neuves et hardies. Une chose est sûre, les Nations Unies doivent s'attendre à jouer un rôle important, voire décisif, dans le déroulement des derniers stades de la décolonisation. En fait, je l'ai déjà laissé entendre, l'Organisation doit être prête à assumer un rôle entièrement neuf.

110. Le cas de l'Irian occidental offre un exemple du genre de tâche que nous avons à l'esprit. Le rôle d'administrateur temporaire du territoire joué par l'Organisation lors du passage de l'administration des Pays-Bas à celle de l'Indonésie pourrait bien devenir un précédent historique de la façon dont l'Organisation pourrait aider de petits territoires dépendants à passer de leur état de dépendance à l'indépendance. Aussi proposerai-je que le Comité spécial fasse figurer dans son rapport sur chacun des territoires dépendants auquel la souveraineté devra être transférée des recommandations précises sur le type d'indépendance qui semblerait le mieux adapté au territoire considéré.

111. Une fois que les peuples coloniaux ont obtenu la souveraineté, c'est à eux de décider ce qu'ils désirent en faire: se joindre à un Etat déjà souverain, former une entité politique avec d'autres nouveaux Etats souverains pour être plus viables du point de vue économique et politique, ou essayer de réussir par eux-mêmes. De ce point de vue, il n'est peut-être pas inutile de rappeler que les régions orientale et occidentale du Pakistan sont à plus de 1 500 kilomètres l'une de l'autre, et que l'Alaska et Hawaï sont séparés l'un et l'autre par plusieurs milliers de kilomètres du reste des Etats-Unis. Aussi la distance ne peut-elle être considérée en aucune manière comme un obstacle à la formation d'entités politiques.

112. Il se pourra cependant qu'au moins pendant un certain temps certains territoires qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance préfèrent rester entièrement souverains, malgré les difficultés que cela suppose. J'insiste pour que dans de tels cas les nations plus anciennes et plus expérimentées, qui commencent à peine à se rendre compte elles-mêmes de la nécessité de former des entités politiques plus vastes, considèrent avec tolérance ce vœu bien compréhensible de petits peuples qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance. J'estime personnellement que nombre d'entre eux se rendront en fait rapidement compte de la nécessité de se joindre à des entités politiques plus vastes, plus rapidement que certains d'entre nous ne s'y attendent aujourd'hui. Il suffit de considérer le courant puissant de panafricanisme qui se manifeste parmi les nouvelles nations indépendantes d'Afrique pour voir les choses avec optimisme. De plus, je pense que les territoires dépendants sont prêts, pour la plupart, à tenir compte de toute recommandation que le Comité spécial pourrait formuler à cet égard.

113. Permettez-moi maintenant de souligner brièvement certains des aspects pratiques du nouveau rôle que ma délégation envisage pour les Nations Unies en matière de décolonisation. Essentiellement, nous estimons que le Comité spécial devrait être invité et autorisé à faire des recommandations sur deux points supplémentaires: le type d'indépendance qui conviendrait le mieux à tel ou tel territoire, selon ce que nous venons d'indiquer, et l'opportunité pour l'Organisation elle-même de jouer un rôle actif dans l'administration d'un territoire donné pendant une certaine période. Pour pouvoir s'acquitter de cette nouvelle tâche, nous pensons que le Comité spécial devra vraisemblablement pouvoir disposer d'un rapport préparatoire rédigé par les spécialistes du Secrétariat et analysant les différentes voies ouvertes aux territoires intéressés. Ce rapport préparatoire devrait également s'efforcer de déterminer si, pendant une certaine période, un territoire devrait considérer qu'il partage en fait sa souveraineté avec l'Organisation, ou si l'Organisation devrait se contenter d'aider à administrer le territoire jusqu'à ce qu'il soit parvenu au stade où il réussirait finalement à être viable du point de vue économique et politique, soit par ses propres moyens, soit en s'associant à une entité politique plus large.

114. A partir des conclusions du rapport préparatoire et de ses propres délibérations, le Comité spécial devrait ainsi être à même de formuler des recommandations judicieuses à l'intention de l'Assemblée qui pourrait à son tour décider de la marche à suivre qui conviendrait le mieux pour chaque territoire. Si l'on concluait, avec l'assentiment du territoire introussé, qu'il est nécessaire de prévoir une assistance de l'Organisation pour l'administration, l'organe le plus indiqué pour entreprendre cette tâche pourrait bien être le Comité spécial lui-même.

115. J'ai commencé par demander simplement que le Comité spécial accélère ses travaux pour pouvoir faire rapport sur tous les territoires restants, à la prochaine session de l'Assemblée. Il semble maintenant que je doive conclure en suggérant que le Comité spécial aborde un nouveau sujet d'étude et que l'ensemble de l'Organisation envisage d'assumer un nouveau rôle afin de hâter le processus de décolonisation. Je puis vous l'assurer, je n'ai nullement l'intention d'accabler l'Organisation de nouvelles responsabilités. Notre rôle n'a cessé de croître d'année en année et à un rythme de plus en plus rapide, et l'Organisation est maintenant chargée d'un si grand nombre de tâches que sa situation financière risque d'en être déséquilibrée. Je pense cependant que les Etats Membres se rendent bien compte que les Nations Unies sont notre seul espoir de voir résoudre certains problèmes importants auxquels des groupes plus petits de nations ou des pays pris isolément seraient incapables de faire face. La solution du problème que pose la décolonisation dans les derniers territoires dépendants est très urgente, les peuples coloniaux l'exigent, la situation du monde l'exige. Il est indéniable que le domaine où l'action des Nations Unies a été la plus fructueuse est celui de la lutte contre le colonialisme. La victoire n'est néanmoins nullement acquise et ma délégation insiste donc très énergiquement pour que l'Assemblée donne à l'Organisation la possibilité de consolider le plus rapidement possible les résultats acquis.

M. Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

116. M. QUAISON-SACKKEY (Ghana) [traduit de l'anglais]: Il y a deux ans, à sa quinzième session, l'Assemblée adoptait la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, figurant dans la résolution 1514 (XV). Les Nations Unies réparaient ainsi l'injustice commise aux dépens des peuples et des territoires assujettis, dont le sort n'avait été régi, selon ce qu'avaient décidé les délégués réunis à San Francisco en 1945, que par les Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte.

117. Aux yeux de ma délégation, cette déclaration anticolonialiste a une importance et une portée comparables à celles de la Charte elle-même et doit être considérée comme modifiant l'esprit et le but des Chapitres XI et XII. La responsabilité de la communauté internationale envers les territoires et peuples coloniaux, déjà inscrite dans la Charte, a été confirmée par l'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV), mais le but de cette résolution est de mettre fin immédiatement à cette responsabilité par l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance aux territoires qui ne la possèdent pas encore. Selon la Déclaration de 1960, l'indépendance doit être complète, totale, définitive, inconditionnelle.

118. Le Gouvernement ghanéen a toujours affirmé que le colonialisme est un mal que l'humanité ne doit pas tolérer. C'est un mal qui provoque des conflits entre les nations et qui a même été à l'origine d'une guerre mondiale. Aux yeux de la délégation ghanéenne, le problème de la décolonisation occupe à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée une place aussi importante que le problème du désarmement général et complet. Il ne peut en être autrement puisque le développement d'une coopération pacifique entre les Etats sur la base de l'égalité, et le maintien même de la paix et de la sécurité internationales, dépendent de la libération complète des peuples courbés sous le joug du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme.

119. C'est pour cela que le Ghana est préoccupé par la façon dont est mise en œuvre la résolution 1514 (XV). Pourquoi l'Assemblée doit-elle être encore saisie du problème de la décolonisation, deux ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux? Le Gouvernement ghanéen ne peut accepter qu'un tel retard soit apporté à la liquidation du colonialisme sous tous ses aspects et dans toutes ses manifestations, car le Ghana ne peut tolérer qu'une puissance étrangère impose arbitrairement à un peuple, sans son consentement, un système politique et économique destiné à servir exclusivement ses propres intérêts. Le maintien du régime colonial suppose nécessairement que les intérêts et le développement des peuples coloniaux soient subordonnés à ceux de la puissance coloniale. Notre opposition au colonialisme sous tous ses aspects est totale, intransigeante et implacable. Elle n'est pas moins nette dans les cas où la puissance coloniale pratique la coercition derrière un masque de paternalisme ou tempère la force par le contrôle indirect. Nous devons exercer une vigilance et une résistance encore plus grandes quand la puissance coloniale recourt à des tactiques néo-colonialistes pour préserver sa suprématie, car c'est là un type de colonialisme plus dangereux et plus insidieux par lequel la puissance coloniale cherche à perpétuer son hégémonie en agissant par personne interposée, par l'intermédiaire d'un gouvernement local, et renforce sa position en ayant recours à tout un arsenal astucieux d'avantages et de moyens de pression économiques, militaires et idéologiques.

120. C'est compte tenu de toutes ces considérations que mon gouvernement s'est réjoui sans réserve de l'accession à l'indépendance, moins de deux ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration, de l'ancien Cameroun britannique qui fait maintenant partie de la République fédérale du Cameroun, du Samoa Occidental, du Sierra Leone et du Tanganyika. L'Algérie, dont la longue et héroïque lutte pour la liberté restera à jamais un symbole pour les autres peuples et territoires coloniaux, est également devenue une nation, et de même le Rwanda, le Burundi, la Jamaïque, la Trinité et Tobago, et l'Ouganda.

121. On ne peut cependant nier, même en tenant compte de tous ces résultats positifs, qu'il subsiste de nombreux territoires qui continuent à subir la domination coloniale et dans lesquels le processus de décolonisation n'a même pas encore été amorcé ou demeure désespérément lent et laborieux. Les puissances coloniales persistent à dresser de sérieux obstacles sur la voie de l'émancipation complète et de l'indépendance de tous les peuples coloniaux.

122. Consciente de ce fait, l'Assemblée générale a décidé l'an dernier qu'il fallait prendre des mesures énergiques pour que la Déclaration soit effectivement et rapidement mise en œuvre. Elle a donc adopté la résolution 1654 (XVI) par laquelle elle note que la Déclaration n'est pas appliquée et que:

"...tout nouveau retard dans l'application de la Déclaration est une source continue de conflits et de discorde sur le plan international, entrave sérieusement la coopération internationale et crée, dans de nombreuses régions du monde, une situation de plus en plus dangereuse qui peut constituer une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales".

La résolution créée ensuite un Comité spécial chargé par l'Assemblée:

"...d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée lors de sa dix-septième session".

123. Tel est donc le mandat du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept dont le rapport est maintenant soumis à l'Assemblée [A/5238]. Le Comité mérite des félicitations chaleureuses pour la tâche qu'il a su mener à bien dans le court laps de temps dont il disposait. Son rapport est un réquisitoire sévère contre le colonialisme, un réquisitoire qui a d'autant plus de poids qu'il a été rédigé avec un grand souci d'objectivité et beaucoup de sérieux. Certes, on est en droit de penser qu'il aurait pu être un peu moins volumineux et que ses conclusions générales auraient gagné à être plus étoffées, mais ma délégation approuve les méthodes de travail adoptées par le Comité. Félicitons-le particulièrement d'avoir pris la décision de donner priorité aux territoires non autonomes d'Afrique, car c'est sur ce continent que vit la majorité des peuples coloniaux et c'est là que le processus de décolonisation se heurte à la résistance impitoyable et inique des puissances coloniales. De l'avis de ma délégation, le Comité a agi sagement en allant s'informer sur place de la situation de territoires particuliers, car il a eu ainsi la possibilité de s'enquérir directement des aspirations des populations intéressées et de leur apporter en même temps le réconfort moral dont elles ont grand besoin dans leur lutte pour l'indépendance et la liberté. Ma délégation a également été heureuse de constater que le Comité a réellement pris conscience de ses responsabilités au lieu de se considérer comme un simple groupe d'étude. Du point de vue de la procédure, ma délégation est satisfaite des efforts déployés par les membres du Comité pour parvenir à s'entendre sans avoir recours à des votes, sauf quand cela était absolument nécessaire.

124. Le rapport du Comité constitue une condamnation formelle mais objective du régime colonial et représente un instrument précieux que l'Assemblée devrait utiliser pour accélérer le processus de décolonisation dans les territoires étudiés. Ma délégation ne s'étonne pas de relever à la lecture de ce rapport que, malgré leurs caractéristiques propres et les divergences entre les manifestations des régimes coloniaux dans ces divers territoires, ils ont bien des problèmes communs. Le principal d'entre eux est la subordination des intérêts des autochtones à ceux de la puissance coloniale qui les sauvegarde généralement, dans les pays où il existe des minorités blanches, en se servant d'une minorité de colons blancs qui ont en main le contrôle effectif de l'administration locale et de l'organisation économique du territoire.

125. Les moyens employés pour perpétuer cette suprématie sont la discrimination raciale, la ségrégation et le refus d'accorder les libertés civiles et politiques fondamentales. Le système tout entier repose sur l'exploitation — exploitation des ressources locales minérales et agricoles dans l'intérêt des puissances coloniales, grâce à la main-d'œuvre autochtone à bon marché. Le peuple assujéti se voit refuser le droit d'évoluer et de progresser, et même le réconfort de l'éducation, sauf lorsqu'une telle évolution est nécessaire pour amener une situation de stagnation qui sauvegarde les intérêts des puissances coloniales et de leurs hommes de paille, les colons. Enfin, les puissances coloniales invoquent tous les prétextes possibles pour retarder l'accession à l'indépendance, cependant qu'elles renforcent leurs positions en créant des bases militaires et en développant ces installations avec l'aide de leurs alliés de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord.

126. Un bref aperçu de la situation qui règne dans les territoires étudiés par le Comité ne fera que confirmer ce que je viens de dire. En Rhodésie du Sud, une pseudo-constitution de caractère nettement discriminatoire pour la majorité africaine a été élaborée malgré l'opposition de cette majorité africaine et au mépris flagrant de l'exigence précise prévue dans la résolution 1747 (XVI). Des lois répressives ont été promulguées et les activités nationalistes sont toujours interdites. L'Assemblée a adopté deux autres résolutions, la résolution 1755 (XVII) qui demande la libération des chefs nationalistes actuellement en résidence surveillée, détenus ou emprisonnés, et la résolution 1760 (XVII) qui prie le Royaume-Uni de suspendre la Constitution actuelle, de convoquer une conférence en vue d'en élaborer une nouvelle et d'octroyer les droits politiques à tous les habitants du territoire.

127. Mais rien ne permet de penser que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ait l'intention de prendre les mesures réclamées par ces résolutions; il n'est pas certain non plus que la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland doive être démantelée, alors que la majorité des habitants de l'Afrique centrale n'en veulent pas. Entre-temps, les autorités locales ont renforcé leur structure policière et militaire, avec l'assistance ouvertement accordée par le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud.

128. Il est encore temps pour le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni d'agir comme il en a le devoir, pour instaurer en Rhodésie du Sud des conditions qui permettront l'établissement de relations harmonieuses entre les races et l'organisation d'élections générales au suffrage universel des adultes. La majorité devrait gouverner en Rhodésie du Sud qui deviendrait immédiatement l'Etat africain indépendant de la Rhodésie du Sud.

129. Quant à la Rhodésie du Nord, on refuse toujours de faire droit au désir clairement exprimé de sa population en faveur de l'indépendance. Pas de suffrage universel, mais un système incroyablement complexe en vertu duquel 4 p. 100 seulement des Africains qui constituent la majorité de la population ont le droit de vote, contre 40 p. 100 pour la minorité européenne. Mus par un louable esprit de conciliation, les chefs nationalistes ont cependant consenti à participer aux élections, mais leurs aspirations à une indépendance immédiate ne doivent pas être méconnuées plus longtemps. Ma délégation appuie sans réserve le projet de résolution recommandé par le Comité spécial [A/5238, chap. III, par. 205], et nous prions instamment le Royaume-Uni de prendre immédiatement des dispositions pour transférer tous les pouvoirs aux habitants du territoire afin de permettre à la Rhodésie du Nord de devenir un Etat vraiment africain.

130. En ce qui concerne le Nyassaland, je dois souligner une fois encore que la population africaine s'est prononcée à une majorité écrasante contre le maintien de la Fédération d'Afrique centrale. Il est heureux que les revendications de M. Hastings Banda, chef du Malawi Congress Party, relatives à l'indépendance des habitants du Nyassaland, aient été considérées favorablement par le Gouvernement britannique. Le Ghana espère fermement que le Nyassaland accèdera à l'indépendance d'ici la prochaine session de l'Assemblée générale. Il faut appliquer aussi bien à la Rhodésie du Nord qu'à la Rhodésie du Sud les leçons que l'on peut tirer de l'exemple du Nyassaland et il faut renoncer à vouloir imposer la prétendue Fédération d'Afrique centrale.

131. Les problèmes qui se posent pour les territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland, ont également été étudiés en détail dans le rapport du Comité spécial. Comme j'ai déjà eu l'occasion de le dire ailleurs, le colonialisme a laissé la population de ces trois territoires à un niveau relativement bas de développement économique et social. Nos frères de ces territoires vivent en outre dans la crainte constante d'être annexés par l'Afrique du Sud, malgré les dénégations du gouvernement de ce pays. Les dispositions constitutionnelles actuellement en vigueur ne sont pas satisfaisantes et encouragent la généralisation de la discrimination raciale. Nous faisons nôtres sans aucune réserve les recommandations du Comité spécial selon lesquelles les dispositions constitutionnelles actuelles devraient être suspendues et une conférence constitutionnelle devrait se réunir après l'intervention d'élections au suffrage universel des adultes. Cette conférence, à laquelle participeraient des représentants élus de la population, fixerait une date pour l'accession à l'indépendance dans un délai d'un an au maximum.

132. A Zanzibar, il y a malheureusement désaccord entre les deux grands partis politiques quant au type de régime électoral et à la date des nouvelles élections. On nous a dit cependant que les positions s'étaient rapprochées. Nous espérons que la population du territoire formera un front national afin de pouvoir désormais avancer sans délai dans la voie de l'indépendance.

133. Je passe maintenant au Kenya, où les colonialistes, appliquant le principe "diviser pour régner", ont semé la mésentente entre les tribus pour retarder l'indépendance. Là aussi, le grand problème qui se pose vient de la présence d'un groupe minoritaire de colons blancs qui se sont attribué toutes les terres fertiles et qui détiennent ainsi la clef de l'économie du pays. La Puissance administrante maintient que le Kenya pourrait accéder à l'indépendance dès demain s'il y avait vraiment unanimité entre les partis politiques du territoire. Le Ghana ne comprend pas un tel argument. Qu'on organise des élections générales au suffrage universel des adultes et l'on sera surpris du résultat. Nous espérons que des élections générales auront lieu bientôt dans le territoire afin que, guidés par ce grand défenseur de la liberté qu'est Jomo Kenyatta, la population accède sans retard à une pleine indépendance.

134. La question des territoires portugais est actuellement examinée à la Quatrième Commission et le conflit de l'Angola doit être discuté ici même en séance plénière; ma délégation se réserve donc d'en parler en détail à un autre moment. Mais nous ne pouvons rester insensibles devant le fait que le Gouvernement portugais se refuse obstinément à respecter les dispositions de la Charte, tout comme celles de la Déclaration. En Angola, une guerre sans merci continue à opposer les nationalistes africains — qu'on les appelle des rebelles si l'on veut — aux autorités portugaises. Cette guerre insensée doit cesser et nous demandons au Portugal de répondre aux appels qui lui sont adressés de tous les points du monde et qui le supplient de renoncer à poursuivre cette guerre en Angola. Le Portugal lui-même, pour si obstiné qu'il soit, ne peut arrêter l'ouragan de changement qui balaye l'Afrique entière et il ferait bien de prendre des mesures immédiates pour remettre le pouvoir aux habitants de l'Angola après des élections générales sur la base du principe "à chacun une voix".

135. Il est temps que le Portugal et l'Espagne abandonnent les enclaves qu'ils possèdent encore en Afrique. Si ces deux Etats désirent voir s'établir entre eux et l'Afrique une coopération fructueuse, le moment est venu pour eux d'abandonner toutes leurs idées anachroniques sur l'Afrique. L'indépendance de l'Angola, l'indépendance du Mozambique, l'indépendance du Cabinda et l'association de la Guinée portugaise et du Cap-Vert aux Etats africains indépendants voisins ne pourraient que servir la gloire de tous les intéressés.

136. Il ne me reste plus qu'à parler de la Guyane britannique, dont on retarde l'indépendance en raison de divergences politiques intérieures. Nous déplorons vivement que la récente conférence constitutionnelle se soit soldée par un échec. Nous avons appris que le Premier Ministre de la Guyane britannique, M. Cheddi Jagan, était prêt à faire des concessions aux partis de l'opposition et qu'en tout état de cause tous les partis semblaient maintenant d'accord sur la nécessité d'organiser des élections avant l'indépendance. Il semblerait donc opportun à ce moment-là de former un groupe comprenant cinq ou six personnalités du Commonwealth qui offriraient leurs bons offices aux intéressés et les aideraient à sortir de l'impasse où les ont conduits leurs divergences. Cependant, ma délégation appuie le projet de résolution proposé par le Comité spécial, qui peut servir de point de départ à une action future.

137. De l'examen des grandes lignes du rapport, il semble se dégager deux grands types d'attitude chez les puissances coloniales qui combattent les efforts déployés par l'Organisation pour faire appliquer la Déclaration effectivement et rapidement.

138. D'un côté, nous trouvons l'attitude d'un groupe de puissances coloniales, en tête desquelles se trouve malheureusement le Royaume-Uni, qui invoquent le prétexte du manque de préparation dans les domaines politique ou économique ou dans celui de l'enseignement pour retarder l'indépendance de territoires soumis à leur administration. Il est évident que ce prétexte est indéfendable, car, pour reprendre les termes mêmes de la Déclaration, "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance". Un tel argument ne peut davantage se défendre sous l'angle de la justice ou de la morale, car ce sont généralement ceux-là mêmes qui, jouant le rôle d'arbitre de la situation, invoquent le manque de préparation comme excuse pour retarder l'indépendance qui ont tout à gagner au maintien du statu quo. Quoi qu'il en soit, le régime colonial a laissé invariablement derrière lui un tel héritage d'analphabétisme, de misère et de maladie, auquel on ne s'attaque avec détermination qu'après l'indépendance — comme dans le cas du Ghana — que cet argument est absolument insoutenable. En même temps, comme on l'a déjà souligné maintes fois, ce groupe de puissances coloniales est généralement d'intelligence avec tout un ensemble de plus en plus puissant de trusts financiers et industriels comme celui qui domine l'Afrique orientale, centrale et australe, dont ces puissances servent les intérêts.

139. D'un autre côté, nous trouvons l'attitude de plusieurs autres puissances coloniales, comprenant le Portugal, l'Espagne et l'Afrique du Sud, qui prétendent s'abriter derrière la fiction juridique selon laquelle les territoires soumis à leur administration feraient partie intégrante de la métropole. Ces puissances, notamment le Portugal, ont eu recours à la force armée pour étouffer les aspirations nationales des populations de leurs territoires. Pour commettre des massacres odieux et des atrocités contre le peuple angolais, le Portugal a reçu une assistance directe et indirecte de ses alliés de l'OTAN avec lesquels il est étroitement lié, car il est absurde de penser que le Portugal, l'un des pays les plus pauvres d'Europe, pourrait entretenir des forces militaires importantes et bien équipées sans l'aide active qu'il reçoit de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord.

140. Le problème pratique qui se pose à nous est le suivant. Que peut faire l'Assemblée, dans le cadre de l'examen général du rapport du Comité, pour hâter la disparition radicale de ces formes de colonialisme et faire en sorte que la Déclaration soit pleinement et immédiatement appliquée? Elle doit demander aux puissances coloniales de donner immédiatement leur plein effet à toutes les dispositions de la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV), dispositions qui sont catégoriques et impératives. En ce qui nous concerne, toutes les puissances coloniales qui, d'ici au 31 décembre 1962, n'auront pas accordé l'indépendance aux pays africains encore dépendants seront considérées comme des agresseurs qui troublent la paix mondiale. Au-delà de cette date, les puissances coloniales présentes en Afrique seront considérées par le Ghana comme transgressant la Charte des Nations Unies et défiant la conscience de l'humanité.

141. Il va de soi que nous approuvons le point de vue, d'ailleurs conforme aux conclusions générales qui se dégagent du rapport du Comité spécial, selon lequel l'Assemblée générale doit inviter les intéressés à cesser de refuser aux peuples coloniaux leurs libertés civiles et politiques, à instaurer le suffrage universel sans aucune discrimination et à organiser des élections sur la base de ce principe, afin d'accorder immédiatement l'indépendance à ces peuples. L'Assemblée générale doit réclamer aussi non seulement qu'il soit mis fin à toutes mesures de répression, mais aussi que toutes les bases militaires étrangères soient supprimées des territoires coloniaux, et elle doit prier tous les Etats de cesser d'accorder aux puissances coloniales une assistance qu'elles risqueraient d'utiliser pour perpétuer leur domination.

142. N'oubliez pas que le monde considère l'Organisation comme le dernier espoir des peuples asservis et opprimés, et permettez-moi de me faire loi l'écho des paroles que le Président de la République du Ghana, l'Oseyefo Kwame Nkrumah, a adressées à l'Assemblée le 23 septembre 1960:

"Je considère les Nations Unies comme la seule organisation qui offre quelque espérance pour l'avenir de l'humanité. Que l'on jette un coup d'œil sur l'Afrique: les colonialistes et les impérialistes sont toujours là. En ce XXème siècle, siècle de lumière, certains pays persistent à exalter les vaines gloires du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme. Tant qu'un seul pouce de la terre d'Afrique restera sous la domination étrangère, le monde ne connaîtra pas de paix. Aussi l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit-elle faire face à ses responsabilités; ceux qui, telle l'autruche proverbiale, voudraient se cacher la tête dans le sable de leur impérialisme, qu'elle leur dise de sortir la tête et de regarder l'ardent soleil d'Afrique qui parcourt maintenant le firmament de la rédemption africaine. Qu'elle adjure toutes les nations qui ont des colonies d'accorder l'indépendance totale aux territoires qui relèvent encore d'elles. A mon avis, avoir des colonies et être Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sont aujourd'hui incompatibles."

[869ème séance, par. 5.]

143. Pour terminer, je désire faire quelques observations sur les travaux futurs du Comité spécial et sur la nécessité de coordonner les activités des Nations Unies en matière coloniale, par suite de l'existence de quatre comités qui s'occupent de ces questions et dont les mandats chevauchent. Ma délégation approuve la suggestion avancée par le Secrétaire général [voir A/5201/Add.1], selon laquelle tous les travaux dans ce domaine devraient être confiés au Comité spécial, dont nous examinons actuellement le rapport. Il est évident qu'on éviterait ainsi des discussions pouvant faire double emploi et qu'on ferait des économies de personnel et d'argent, tout en parvenant à une plus grande efficacité.

144. En ce qui concerne le Conseil de tutelle, ma délégation se rend évidemment compte qu'il ne peut disparaître sans l'adoption préalable d'un amendement à la Charte. A notre avis, si, comme nous l'en prions instamment, l'Organisation elle-même applique aux territoires sous tutelle relevant directement de sa surveillance les mêmes principes qu'elle a insérés dans la Déclaration touchant les territoires coloniaux, le problème du maintien du Conseil en existence disparaîtra automatiquement. Dès que tous les territoires sous tutelle seront indépendants, le Conseil de tutelle, qui n'aura plus de raison d'être, cessera d'exister.

145. Quant au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, ma délégation pense elle aussi que ses responsabilités sont devenues plus réduites, du fait de l'accession à l'indépendance de bien des territoires dont elle s'occupait, ainsi que de la création du Comité spécial sur la décolonisation. C'est pourquoi ma délégation ne peut s'opposer à sa dissolution, mais nous espérons que les études et la documentation que le Secrétariat préparait jusqu'ici à son intention continueront à être à la disposition du Comité spécial.

146. A ce propos, je dois m'associer aux hommages qui ont été rendus aux fonctionnaires qui travaillent pour le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes depuis des années et je tiens à féliciter en particulier M. Arnold Kunst, avec qui j'ai eu le plaisir de collaborer lorsque j'ai présidé le Comité en 1960.

147. D'autre part, le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal et le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain ont des mandats qui sont remplacés en majeure partie par le mandat du Comité spécial sur la décolonisation. Dans le cas du deuxième, cette évolution est reconnue par la résolution que la Quatrième Commission a adoptée le 19 novembre 1962 et qui se a certainement approuvée par l'Assemblée générale; cette résolution prévoit que le Comité spécial sur la décolonisation sera chargé des tâches confiées jusqu'ici au Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain. Il devient donc inutile, à notre avis, de maintenir ces deux comités.

148. Le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola est dans une situation assez différente puisqu'il est chargé du double rôle de faire rapport au Conseil de sécurité, d'une part, sur la situation en Angola en tant que menace éventuelle à la paix et à la sécurité internationales, et de rendre compte à l'Assemblée générale, d'autre part, de l'évolution de la situation politique. Selon ma délégation, cette dernière fonction devrait être reprise par le Comité spécial sur la décolonisation, tandis que la première resterait intacte comme le représentant de l'Irak l'a suggéré.

149. Ces nouvelles responsabilités qui viennent s'ajouter aux tâches déjà énormes et urgentes qui lui ont été confiées exigent l'élargissement de la composition du Comité et nous appuyons la suggestion que le représentant de la Guinée a faite en ce sens, sans rompre, bien entendu, l'équilibre politique de cet organe. Le Comité pourrait ainsi créer des sous-comités qui s'occuperaient simultanément de plusieurs pays et étudieraient des questions particulières sans ralentir l'ensemble des travaux.

150. Il ne faudrait pas conclure des suggestions que j'ai présentées au sujet des travaux du Comité que le Ghana approuve en aucune façon la survivance de territoires coloniaux en Afrique ou ailleurs. A nos yeux, le Comité spécial est un comité temporaire; en fait, il doit disparaître le plus tôt possible. Il doit s'occuper des modalités de transfert des pouvoirs à tous les territoires qui ne sont pas encore indépendants. On s'est beaucoup préoccupé ici de l'ordre du jour surchargé des organes des Nations Unies. Le Ghana est convaincu que la seule façon d'alléger cet ordre du jour est que les puissances coloniales prennent des mesures immédiates pour transférer les pouvoirs et accorder l'indépendance aux territoires coloniaux. Ainsi les Nations Unies pourront économiser temps et argent et s'attaquer aux problèmes urgents de l'existence de l'homme sur la terre.

151. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Union soviétique qui désire faire usage de son droit de réponse.

152. M. GREN (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Je ne voudrais pas abuser du temps si précieux de l'Assemblée; cependant, certains représentants des puissances coloniales m'ont obligé à prendre la parole pour répondre à leurs attaques calomnieuses à l'adresse de notre pays.

153. Face au front de la lutte contre le colonialisme qui va sans cesse s'élargissant, les puissances coloniales se voient contraintes à recourir à des manœuvres plus subtiles pour endormir l'opinion publique, duper les peuples et conserver leurs colonies le plus longtemps possible. Tous les moyens, y compris la calomnie, leur sont bons pour contre-carrer ceux qui se sont déclarés les partisans constants et résolus de l'anticolonialisme.

154. Les représentants du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis, du Canada et de l'Australie ont décidé de s'occuper de l'histoire de notre pays; ils en donnent naturellement leur propre interprétation, en la falsifiant.

155. Mais l'histoire véritable de l'Union soviétique n'a rien de commun avec les falsifications et les calomnies dont M. Dean est un zéléateur fervent.

156. Permettez-moi de rétablir quelques faits de l'histoire de notre pays. Comme on le sait, dès que la grande révolution socialiste d'Octobre eut triomphé chez nous, les puissances occidentales entreprirent une intervention dans le dessein d'étouffer la jeune République soviétique. A cette intervention prirent part la Grande-Bretagne, les Etats-Unis et certains autres pays dont les représentants calomnient aujourd'hui notre régime, notre peuple.

157. A cette époque déjà, on camouflait cette intervention en affirmant à grands cris qu'on voulait sauver et libérer le peuple russe et les autres peuples de l'Union soviétique. Les buts réels de cette intervention sont bien connus. En tout cas, nous nous permettrons de rappeler qu'à la Conférence interalliée de Paris, le 23 décembre 1917, un accord a été conclu entre l'Angleterre et la France au sujet du partage des territoires soviétiques. Au paragraphe 3 de cet accord signé par le premier ministre français Clemenceau et par le ministre de la guerre britannique Milner, on lisait:

"Les zones d'influence attribuées à chacun des gouvernements sont les suivantes:

"Zone britannique: les régions kazakes, le Caucase, l'Arménie, la Géorgie, le Kurdistan; zone française: la Bessarabie, l'Ukraine, la Crimée."

158. Voilà le fond de l'affaire, semble-t-il. Certes, ce n'était pas pour libérer les peuples que les Britanniques débarquaient leurs forces au Nord et sur la mer Caspienne, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique en Extrême-Orient, la France sur la mer Noire, mais bien pour étouffer les jeunes républiques soviétiques qui, en une lutte acharnée, avaient conquis pour la première fois une véritable liberté; c'était pour établir leur domination sur ces territoires.

159. Le représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine a déjà dit [1177ème séance] que les interventionnistes britanniques avaient fusillé les représentants du premier gouvernement populaire de l'Azerbaïdjan pour se réserver les riches terrains pétrolifères de l'Azerbaïdjan. Mais c'est loin d'être le seul exemple et les peuples de l'Union soviétique le savent et se souviennent des multiples atrocités commises par les interventionnistes étrangers sur notre territoire, contre nos peuples.

160. Mais les rêves des interventionnistes ne devaient pas se réaliser. Tous les peuples de l'ancienne Russie tsariste, du plus petit au plus grand, prirent les armes pour défendre ce qu'ils avaient conquis.

A franchement parler, ce sont précisément les Etats-Unis, la Grande-Bretagne et la France qui, par leurs interventions, ont concouru eux-mêmes à la cohésion de l'Union soviétique, car les peuples de l'Union soviétique ont pu voir le danger que représentaient ces soi-disant "partisans de l'autodétermination et de la libération des autres peuples". En lieu et place de l'ancienne Russie tsariste, et grâce au consentement spontané de toutes les Républiques soviétiques, a été constituée l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques. Etant donné le paragraphe de l'accord précité, il semble que ce n'est pas par hasard que le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'inquiète de l'autodétermination de ces républiques soviétiques qui étaient précisément réservées à la zone d'influence britannique. Vaine inquiétude!

161. M. Dean a dit dans son intervention [1175^{ème} séance] que le représentant de l'URSS s'intitulait Ministre des affaires étrangères d'Estonie. Je peux déclarer que je n'en porte pas seulement le titre, mais que je suis vraiment le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la République soviétique estonienne et que je représente les intérêts de mon peuple. Mais je représente ici, avant tout, les intérêts de tous les peuples de la grande Union soviétique.

162. Quant à dire que je devrais connaître l'histoire de mon pays, je puis affirmer que je la connais. A ce propos, permettez-moi de citer quelques faits caractéristiques qui ressortent de cette histoire.

163. Le monde entier doit savoir que le peuple laborieux d'Estonie a participé activement, avec les travailleurs et les paysans de la Russie, à la grande révolution d'Octobre. Deux jours après le renversement du gouvernement provisoire à Pétrograd, le pouvoir soviétique fut établi à Tallinn. Il est vrai qu'il fut difficile à la jeune République soviétique estonienne de défendre son indépendance contre le camp de l'impérialisme mondial. Rappelons simplement qu'au début, avec l'aide des armées allemandes et plus tard des navires de guerre britanniques et des mercenaires d'autres pays occidentaux, la jeune République estonienne fut noyée dans le sang. M. Dean a rappelé dans son intervention que la République estonienne bourgeoise, créée de la main des impérialistes (c'est moi qui précise), était indépendante et même Membre de la Société des Nations. C'est vrai, elle fut Membre de la Société des Nations, mais ce qu'était cette indépendance, le peuple estonien le savait mieux que personne. Cette jeune République était criblée de dettes envers les puissances occidentales. Au cours de la guerre civile, la dette de l'Estonie aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique seulement, pour l'achat, par la bourgeoisie estonienne, de capotes tachées de sang, restes de la première guerre mondiale, et de pommes de terre séchées, s'élevait, en 1932, y compris les intérêts, à plus de 33 millions de dollars, à rembourser avant 1984.

164. Mais qui donc disposait de cette ressource naturelle du peuple estonien qu'est le schiste bitumineux? Les diplomates anglais et ceux d'autres pays occidentaux doivent bien le savoir, eux qui aiment tellement l'histoire. Le résultat de cette prétendue indépendance a été que, parmi les autres peuples d'Europe, l'Estonie avait le niveau de vie le plus bas, sans parler du chômage constant, de la réduction du nombre des écoles secondaires, etc. En 1940, au moment où le gouvernement profasciste estonien s'est trouvé isolé et ne pouvait plus s'appuyer sur l'aide de ses protecteurs impérialistes, les travailleurs estoniens ont chassé ce gouvernement et rétabli le pouvoir soviétique qui lui a ouvert largement la voie du développement économique et social.

165. Je citerai quelques exemples de ce que représente l'Estonie d'aujourd'hui. En 1962, près de 90 p. 100 des écoliers qui ont terminé le cycle primaire de sept ans poursuivent leurs études dans les établissements secondaires. Dans aucun pays capitaliste il n'y a un pourcentage aussi élevé d'étudiants par rapport à l'ensemble de la population. Pour ce qui est de la production d'électricité par tête d'habitant, la République soviétique d'Estonie occupe la première place dans le monde. La production de lait et de beurre par tête d'habitant est supérieure à celle de la plupart des pays capitalistes, y compris les Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Ces données mettent en évidence les succès que peut obtenir même un petit peuple comme le peuple estonien, entouré des peuples frères qui ont choisi la voie socialiste du développement.

166. D'autre part, on peut encore ajouter que la révolution de 1917 n'a pas seulement apporté au peuple russe le droit à l'autonomie. Avec l'aide fraternelle du peuple russe, de nombreuses petites nations et nationalités ont atteint en cinq ou six lustres un degré de développement qui, dans d'autres conditions, aurait demandé des siècles. Dans les frontières de la Russie tsariste, on trouvait des peuples encore nomades et d'autres peuples condamnés à l'extinction. L'Union soviétique est le seul pays au monde qui ait sauvé de nombreuses nationalités en voie d'extinction. On sait que plus de 40 nationalités ont pu, après la révolution d'Octobre, connaître l'écriture, créer leur littérature nationale, leur musique, leur art. Il n'est pas superflu de rappeler cela aux représentants de l'Australie, de la Nouvelle-Zélande et du Canada, ainsi qu'à celui des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, au cas où ils s'intéresseraient au sort des populations autochtones de leurs propres territoires.

167. Permettez-moi, à cet égard, de déclarer une fois encore que le peuple soviétique, y compris le peuple estonien, n'a nul besoin de ces avocats mal venus qui essayent ici de se faire valoir comme représentants de certains pays occidentaux. Nous voudrions dire à ces messieurs: l'histoire ne parle pas en votre faveur; au contraire, elle devrait vous servir de leçon de choses, vous apprendre que, si les rêves des impérialistes n'ont pu se réaliser grâce à l'intervention armée, il ne sert absolument de rien de lancer les attaques calomnieuses auxquelles ont recours les représentants des puissances coloniales.

168. Pourquoi faire tout cela? Pour détourner l'attention de l'Assemblée générale des documents essentiels qui sont traités à la présente session. Le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238] que nous examinons en ce moment montre la position et la politique véritables du Royaume-Uni et des autres puissances coloniales. D'ailleurs, je souligne que ce n'est pas la délégation soviétique qui avance ces données, mais qu'elles se trouvent dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

169. Je voudrais encore une fois citer un exemple. Au paragraphe 49 du chapitre II, le rapport dit:

"... la situation était explosive au plus haut point en Rhodésie du Sud et... la responsabilité en incombait au Royaume-Uni. Depuis 75 ans, les Afrioains, propriétaires légitimes du territoire, demandaient au Gouvernement britannique de leur transférer pacifiquement ses pouvoirs. A ces revendications, le Royaume-Uni n'avait répondu que par la répression armée et il avait finalement imposé en 1961 une Constitution qui faisait de la Rhodésie du Sud un Etat de colons blancs semblable à celui qui existait en Afrique du Sud depuis 1910..."

ou bien, par exemple, au paragraphe 99 du chapitre V:

"... Leur présence [des Britanniques] au Bassoutoland n'était pour eux qu'un moyen de conserver leurs positions politiques et économiques. Ils soumettaient les Basotho à des mesures répressives, employaient contre eux les gaz lacrymogènes et torturaient les détenus politiques..."

170. Est-ce par hasard que dans toutes les résolutions recommandées par le Comité à l'Assemblée générale, y compris celles qui ont déjà été adoptées par l'Assemblée, on exprime le regret que le Royaume-Uni n'ait pas encore pris de mesures pour transférer les pouvoirs aux populations autochtones de la Rhodésie du Nord, de la Rhodésie du Sud, du Betchouanaland, du Bassoutoland et du Swaziland, ainsi que l'exige la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale?

171. Voilà donc quelques brefs extraits du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, et, à la lumière de ces quelques faits indéniables, que reste-t-il donc des belles paroles prononcées par le représentant du Royaume-Uni sur la démocratie, l'esprit humanitaire, etc.?

172. L'examen des résultats des travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, auquel nous venons de procéder, constitue une sorte de forum qui approuve le travail de ceux qui ont apporté une contribution constructive à l'adoption des résolutions présentées au sujet de 12 territoires coloniaux, en même temps qu'il condamne ceux qui s'y sont opposés. Les puissances coloniales, par la position qu'elles ont adoptée au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, se sont placées parmi ces opposants. Ce jugement objectif fait bien voir quels sont ceux qui sont vraiment en faveur de la liquidation du colonialisme, et cette conclusion sera celle de tout observateur objectif qui aura suivi le débat sur les résultats des travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

173. Néanmoins, en dépit des faits, les puissances coloniales et leurs amis n'en cherchent pas moins à dénigrer la participation de la délégation de l'Union soviétique au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. On fait en même temps des allusions à une réorganisation des travaux du Comité spécial afin de transformer cet organe pratique des Nations Unies, appelé à traduire dans les faits l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, en un club de discussion dans lequel la question vitale de la libération des peuples assujettis serait noyée dans le flot des discours hypocrites des colonialistes et de leurs complices.

174. C'est très exactement la ligne politique que les Etats-Unis, le Royaume-Uni et certains de leurs alliés entendaient suivre au Comité spécial au début de ses travaux. Ils se sont opposés à ce que le Comité spécial prenne des décisions précises, puis à ce qu'on vote une résolution. Ils se sont opposés à l'audition des pétitionnaires qui, on le sait, ont fourni la matière de base pour les travaux du Comité spécial.

Enfin, ils se sont opposés au voyage d'information en Afrique du Comité et ce n'était pas par un souci particulier des finances de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

175. Heureusement, ces pays n'ont pas pu détourner le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept de la bonne voie et notre délégation constate encore une fois avec satisfaction que la délégation soviétique a apporté une contribution positive qui lui a valu les attaques rageuses des puissances coloniales.

176. On essaie de nous accuser de ne pas avoir fait preuve au Comité des Dix-Sept d'un grand désir de collaborer, parce que nous insistions sur le vote de résolutions et que nous nous opposions à l'adoption de décisions concertées. Nous sommes toujours disposés à discuter patiemment toutes les questions, à condition que nos partenaires désirent sincèrement les voir résoudre conformément à la volonté de la majorité. Mais quand on découvre que les partenaires cherchent à écarter le Comité de la bonne voie, à retarder sine die l'adoption de décisions sur des questions déjà parvenues à maturité, il est certain qu'on doit en venir à la méthode la plus démocratique, c'est-à-dire au vote qui dégage la volonté de la majorité.

177. C'est ainsi qu'a travaillé le Comité spécial et nous ne sommes pas responsables de ce que les puissances occidentales qui en étaient membres se soient placées dans l'opposition, contre la volonté de la majorité des membres du Comité. Ainsi, on a pu prendre la mesure de leur sincérité et de leur bonne foi dans la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, déclaration qui reflète la volonté de toute l'humanité.

178. A en juger par les déclarations du représentant du Royaume-Uni et de quelques-uns de ses partisans, on pourrait croire que le mal le plus grave serait dû à la position prise par la délégation de l'Union soviétique au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. En quoi? La délégation soviétique s'est toujours rangée du côté de la majorité des membres du Comité; elle n'a rien entrepris à l'encontre de l'exécution des tâches confiées au Comité par la résolution 1554 (XVI) adoptée par l'Assemblée générale à sa seizième session.

179. Notre pays n'a aucun intérêt en Afrique. Nous défendons les principes dont se font les champions tous les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie — les principes de la liquidation très rapide du colonialisme. Les déclarations des pays occidentaux ont, elles, précisément pour but de détourner l'attention de ce thème principal et essentiel. Ces déclarations, nous les rejetons comme indignes.

180. L'Union soviétique s'oppose et s'opposera toujours au colonialisme parce que c'est un système profondément étranger à notre structure sociale, à notre genre de vie, à notre conception du monde.

181. M. COULIBALY (Mali): Etant membre du Comité spécial de décolonisation, je n'ai pas l'intention, à ce stade de la discussion générale sur le rapport soumis à l'Assemblée (A/5238), de faire une longue déclaration. Au cours des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept, ma délégation a eu en effet l'occasion de réaffirmer sans aucune ambiguïté la position du Gouvernement de la République du Mali face au problème que pose la liquidation sans délai du colo-nalisme. Cette position est et demeure celle d'un peuple que des liens de fraternité unissent à d'autres peuples qui souffrent dans leur dignité et dans leur chair des humiliations et de la tyrannie de la domination étrangère. Je dis humiliations, car la domination imposée à un peuple faible par un peuple plus fort est une violation caractérisée de la dignité humaine.

182. Cette violation de la dignité, qui, à elle seule, est un acte des plus condamnables, est souvent doublée d'une véritable tyrannie, une barbarie sans nom, comme c'est le cas dans les territoires soumis à l'intolérable domination portugaise et sud-africaine.

183. Je ne veux pas évoquer, à ce stade avancé de la lutte de l'Organisation des Nations Unies contre le colonialisme, toutes les atrocités commises par les puissances coloniales, notamment par le Portugal en Angola, au Mozambique, en Guinée dite portugaise, ou par le gouvernement raciste de l'Afrique du Sud dans le Sud-Ouest africain, et en Afrique du Sud même, contre les Bantous. Je ne veux pas m'étendre non plus sur la répression brutale dont a été victime le mouvement nationaliste de libération au Kenya, répression qui n'avait pour but que de tuer la conscience nationale du peuple africain du Kenya, afin que les colons blancs puissent, en toute tranquillité, exploiter les terres volées aux populations autochtones. Je ne m'attarderai pas sur la situation dangereuse créée en Rhodésie du Sud, où la Puissance administrante prétend avoir accordé un régime d'autonomie, alors qu'une minorité raciale, formée de colons blancs, impose sa dictature à près de 3 millions d'Africains. Je ne répéterai pas également ici les nombreux témoignages qui nous ont été apportés par les pétitionnaires sur la situation à Zanzibar, en Rhodésie du Nord, au Betchouanaland, au Bassoutoland ou au Souaziland. Je ne citerai pas non plus les nombreux nationalistes africains torturés et encore en prison pour avoir engagé la lutte, d'ailleurs sous une forme pacifique, pour l'indépendance de leur patrie et pour le respect de leur dignité d'hommes.

184. Si j'ai évoqué ces faits en guise de préambule, ce n'est pas pour dresser un réquisitoire contre le colonialisme. Ma délégation considère en effet que le stade de l'accusation du colonialisme est déjà dépassé, car l'Assemblée a condamné à plusieurs reprises cette honteuse pratique, notamment au cours de sa quinzième session, en adoptant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)].

185. J'ai fait ces brefs rappels pour que les puissances coloniales et les gouvernements qui les soutiennent puissent apprécier objectivement la portée de la retenue et de la modération des délégations qui ont connu le régime colonial et que des liens de tous ordres unissent à d'autres peuples encore sous domination coloniale. Malgré notre indignation et notre révolte morale devant l'obstination de certaines puissances coloniales à maintenir sous leur domination d'autres territoires et d'autres peuples, nous nous sommes fait violence afin de rechercher, dans un esprit de compréhension mutuelle, les voies et les moyens les plus pratiques pour l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

186. C'est ce sens du réalisme et cette volonté de coopération qui ont guidé la plupart des membres du Comité spécial. Je me dois ici de rendre un hommage bien mérité à la grande expérience et au souci de conciliation dont ont fait preuve, au cours des travaux du Comité des Dix-Sept, M. Jha et M. Rifai, respectivement président et rapporteur du Comité. Il m'est agréable également, malgré les divergences de vues qui ont pu apparaître parfois, de féliciter tous les membres du Comité pour leur esprit de coopération, sentiment que j'ai pu apprécier particulièrement au cours du voyage en Afrique où j'ai eu l'honneur de présider les travaux du Comité.

187. Des délégations ont exprimé ici des réserves sur les méthodes de travail du Comité spécial. On a parlé du fait que la méthode dite du consensus n'a pas toujours prévalu. Je pense qu'il s'agit là d'un grief qui ne mérite pas d'être retenu. En effet, nous avons toujours pensé que l'unanimité est souhaitable dans les organes et comités des Nations Unies, en raison du fait que l'appartenance à l'Organisation est volontaire. Mais il ne nous a pas paru rationnel d'admettre que la recherche de cette unanimité se traduise par la confusion, le piétinement ou le renoncement à ce qui est juste et objectif.

188. La recherche de l'unanimité ne doit pas permettre à la minorité d'imposer ses vues à la majorité. Le Comité spécial n'a eu recours au vote qu'après avoir usé de toutes les possibilités de compromis et de conciliation. Les votes intervenus dans ces conditions, afin de permettre au Comité d'avancer dans ses travaux et de rester fidèle à son mandat, ne doivent pas être interprétés comme la volonté d'un groupe d'imposer ses vues à un autre groupe. Nous n'avons jamais considéré le Comité comme un forum de confrontation d'intérêts ou d'idéologies opposées, mais comme une commission chargée de dégager les voies et moyens d'appliquer une décision acceptée par tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, à savoir la Déclaration sur l'indépendance, déclaration adoptée par l'Assemblée générale sans aucune opposition. Que des divergences soient apparues au cours des travaux du Comité, cela est normal, comme dans toute assemblée; mais cela ne suffit pas pour mettre en cause des méthodes et des procédures de travail qui ont donné des résultats positifs.

189. On a reproché également au Comité spécial d'avoir écouté des pétitionnaires. Ce grief ne me paraît pas sérieux non plus, en raison de la pratique existant aux Nations Unies en la matière. Sur un problème aussi important que celui de l'accession à l'indépendance, comment peut-on apprécier objectivement la situation dans un territoire sans écouter les représentants des populations autochtones afin de connaître leurs aspirations, leurs préoccupations et les difficultés qu'elles rencontrent? S'il est utile d'écouter les puissances administrantes, je crois qu'il est indispensable d'entendre ceux que nous voulons aider dans leur accession à l'indépendance. Le contraire serait anachronique et ne serait pas conforme au mandat du Comité.

190. On a reproché également au Comité spécial de s'être rendu en Afrique. Trois gouvernements africains — les Gouvernements du Maroc, de l'Éthiopie et du Tanganyika — ont voulu apporter une contribution louable à l'effort de décolonisation des Nations Unies et ont invité le Comité à venir siéger dans leurs capitales respectives. Nous pensons que le Comité, qui travaillait sur des territoires situés en Afrique, a été bien inspiré d'accepter ces invitations, et nous félicitons le Secrétariat d'avoir facilité la mission du Comité en Afrique. Des délégations impartiales ont pu d'ailleurs apprécier le travail accompli par le Comité en Afrique. Les populations africaines encore soumises au régime colonial et qui ont pu s'entretenir avec le Comité en Afrique ont pu apprécier également l'intérêt que l'Organisation des Nations Unies attache à la liquidation de ce fléau que représente le colonialisme.

191. Après ces brèves observations, je dois confirmer que ma délégation approuve toutes les décisions du Comité spécial et apprécie les méthodes et les procédures de travail qu'il a adoptées.

192. Certes, le Comité spécial n'a pas pu examiner la situation dans tous les territoires visés par la Déclaration sur l'indépendance. Cela est dû au peu de temps dont il disposait et au sérieux avec lequel il a voulu s'acquitter de sa mission. Evidemment, il était possible au Comité de consacrer une ou deux séances de travail seulement à chaque territoire et d'adopter un projet de résolution demandant l'accession à l'indépendance. Une telle méthode de travail aurait relevé de la démagogie et aurait induit l'Assemblée générale en erreur. C'est cette attitude irresponsable que le Comité a voulu éviter en recherchant des solutions qui puissent être acceptées par les puissances administrantes et qui en même temps correspondent aux aspirations des populations opprimées. C'est ce souci d'objectivité qui a amené le Comité à envoyer un sous-comité à Londres pour s'entretenir avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni au sujet de la Rhodésie du Sud.

193. A notre sens, il faut plutôt regretter que les efforts déployés par le Comité spécial pour mettre en œuvre les dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance n'aient pas eu suffisamment d'écho auprès des puissances administrantes. En effet, si des puissances administrantes comme le Royaume-Uni et l'Australie ont fait des efforts certains pour coopérer avec le Comité, le Gouvernement portugais par contre, qui prétend contre le bon sens que les territoires qu'il administre en Afrique sont des provinces du Portugal, situé en Europe, a systématiquement refusé toute coopération avec le Comité.

194. Au terme de cette intervention, je voudrais insister sur le caractère irréversible de l'élan des peuples colonisés vers leur accession à l'indépendance. Un simple regard sur l'Assemblée aujourd'hui, pour ceux qui l'ont connue il y a 10 ans, suffit à démontrer l'absurdité du concept de domination éternelle des métropoles sur les colonies.

195. Nous reconnaissons que le Royaume-Uni, par exemple, a fait de gros efforts dans le domaine de la décolonisation. On nous a souvent cité ici les pays auxquels le Royaume-Uni a accordé l'indépendance dans l'amitié, chose que nous apprécions beaucoup et pour laquelle nous félicitons d'ailleurs le Gouvernement britannique. A ce propos, je voudrais citer un proverbe bambara qui dit: "Si vous transportez une vieille femme depuis le matin sur votre dos et que vous l'abandonniez le soir dans la forêt sans qu'elle atteigne sa destination, vos efforts de la journée ne peuvent être appréciés." C'est le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud pour le Royaume-Uni. En effet, le Royaume-Uni, qui est fier, peut-être non sans raison du reste, d'avoir conduit à l'indépendance 630 millions d'individus, semble vouloir abandonner les 3 millions d'Africains de la Rhodésie du Sud à la merci du pouvoir raciste et policier institué par la minorité de colons blancs installés dans cette partie du continent africain. Ce scénario nous rappelle étrangement le processus de formation de l'Etat connu aujourd'hui sous le nom de République de l'Afrique du Sud, où un gouvernement ayant érigé l'apartheid en système social, ravale au rang d'êtres inférieurs des millions d'Africains bantous.

196. Nous souhaitons que le Royaume-Uni, pour lequel nous avons beaucoup de considération et dont nous avons, en d'autres circonstances, apprécié les efforts dans le domaine de la décolonisation, continue de coopérer avec le Comité spécial de manière à conduire à l'indépendance, et conformément aux dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV), tous les territoires qu'il administre encore sous forme de colonies ou de protectorats. Cette coopération doit se traduire par la recherche constante et objective, dans un esprit de compréhension mutuelle, des moyens et mesures, y compris la fixation de dates, qui permettent aux territoires d'accéder à l'indépendance conformément aux vœux des populations autochtones. C'est ce genre de coopération que nous attendons de lui.

197. Quant au Portugal et à l'Afrique du Sud, qui se sont délibérément placés en marge de la légalité internationale, ma délégation pense que la communauté internationale doit utiliser tous les moyens dont elle dispose pour leur imposer le respect des décisions de l'Assemblée générale et des recommandations du Comité spécial.

198. Compte tenu de l'expérience de cette première année d'existence du Comité spécial, ma délégation pense que les pouvoirs du Comité doivent être renforcés. Celui-ci doit, à notre avis, s'occuper de l'ensemble des problèmes de décolonisation et s'intéresser à tous les territoires encore dépendants. Le Comité doit être habilité à faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale au moment opportun et même au Conseil de sécurité si la situation dans un territoire donné, au regard de la paix, nécessite un tel recours. Le Secrétariat doit, comme il l'a déjà fait, apporter tout son concours au Comité et faciliter les communications entre le Comité et les puissances administrantes. Le Comité ne doit pas être considéré comme une simple commission de renseignements ou un groupe de rédaction de projets de résolution. Il doit être un instrument efficace pour l'application intégrale et sans délai de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, déclaration qui constitue le complément indispensable de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. Il ne suffit pas, en effet, d'affirmer tout simplement que tous les hommes sont égaux; il faut permettre à tous les peuples de jouir de ce droit à l'égalité.

199. Pour permettre au Comité spécial de faire face aux nouvelles tâches qui pourraient lui être confiées, certaines délégations ont suggéré qu'il soit procédé à une augmentation du nombre de ses membres. Mais ma délégation souhaite que l'Assemblée générale, sur la base des différentes suggestions dont elle est saisie, adopte sur cette question une position qui sauvegardera à la fois l'efficacité et l'équilibre politique du Comité.

La séance est levée à 18 h 10.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite)

1. M. ROSSIDES (Chypre) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'accélération du processus de l'accession à l'indépendance des peuples assujettis est un problème qui intéresse particulièrement ma délégation. L'aspiration à la liberté et la lutte pour l'indépendance sont des sujets chers au cœur des Chypriotes.

2. L'histoire de Chypre, depuis plus de trois millénaires, a été marquée par des luttes glorieuses et sans cesse renouvelées pour sauvegarder ou recouvrer la liberté, pour repousser l'invasion ou rejeter les dominations étrangères successives qui ont balayé en tous sens ce carrefour méditerranéen des nations entre l'Orient et l'Occident.

3. Le peuple de Chypre s'est récemment libéré du joug colonial après une lutte pour sa libération qui a duré des dizaines d'années, dont les Nations Unies ont eu à connaître et qui s'est terminée par une résistance armée de quatre ans; il est donc naturellement animé de sentiments de solidarité fraternelle envers tous ceux qui luttent pour acquérir la liberté et la dignité humaines auxquelles ils ont droit. C'est donc pour nous une source d'immense satisfaction que de constater que les Nations Unies sont enfin à même de prendre des mesures efficaces pour assurer dans la paix ce passage à la liberté et à l'indépendance, en favorisant activement des solutions justes et en éliminant autant que faire se peut la nécessité du recours à la violence et aux effusions de sang.

4. Depuis quelques années, le processus de décolonisation a été vraiment rapide et impressionnant, si on le compare au passé. La grande augmentation du nombre des Membres de l'Organisation, où sont entrés en 1960 beaucoup de nouveaux pays indépendants, tous profondément dévoués à la cause de la liberté et respectueux des principes de la Charte, a provoqué une modification considérable dans l'équilibre des votes à l'Assemblée générale et a eu un effet vivifiant sur les Nations Unies, particulièrement lorsqu'il s'agit de questions où la liberté et la libre détermination entrent en jeu,

5. Ainsi, l'Assemblée générale a pu, à sa quinzième session, adopter à une majorité écrasante la Déclaration historique sur le colonialisme [résolution 1514 (XV)] qui a ouvert un chapitre nouveau dans l'histoire de l'humanité. La mise en œuvre de cette déclaration a une importance vitale pour toutes les nations et pour tous les peuples. C'est avant tout, sans aucun doute, un sujet de préoccupation pour les peuples assujettis eux-mêmes, dont les droits fondamentaux à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance doivent être rétablis; c'est aussi essentiellement une question de justice et de moralité fondamentales, car tous les peuples doivent pouvoir prendre la place qui leur revient de droit dans la communauté des nations, être libres de développer leur personnalité distincte et de réaliser leur destin par leur contribution au progrès mondial.

6. Aussi importants, toutefois, que puissent être ces aspects du problème, l'élimination rapide du colonialisme fait intervenir beaucoup d'autres éléments. Elle a des incidences de portée mondiale et demeure étroitement liée au problème d'ensemble de la paix mondiale dont dépend, en cette ère nucléaire, la survivance même de l'humanité.

7. En effet, la route qui mène à la paix mondiale passe par l'ordre mondial, et l'ordre mondial ne peut s'accomplir sans la liberté mondiale. Pour réaliser cette liberté, il faut d'abord se débarrasser du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations, car cet ordre mondial ne peut être fondé que sur la justice et sur l'équilibre, et il ne peut y avoir d'équilibre ou de justice tant que des nations cherchent à en dominer d'autres et que des millions d'êtres humains sont en révolte parce qu'ils sont forcés de vivre sous des régimes qu'ils n'ont pas choisis librement et qui n'expriment pas leur volonté démocratique.

8. La notion de la domination par la force doit être complètement éliminée. Pour cela, le colonialisme, système de domination qui a été sanctionné légalement pendant des siècles en tant que norme constitutionnelle, doit être aboli et cesser d'être une réalité toujours vivante dans le monde d'aujourd'hui. C'est pourquoi la mise en œuvre rapide de la Déclaration de 1960 est une nécessité vitale pour la paix mondiale. C'est alors seulement que l'humanité pourra envisager avec confiance la fin de toute domination par la force — qu'il s'agisse du colonialisme ou du néo-colonialisme —, la fin de toute injustice politique dans quelque partie du monde que ce soit et quelle que soit la forme que cette domination et cette injustice puissent encore prendre. En effet, un colonialisme périmé a, par son exemple, servi de bouclier à d'autres modes de domination qui entraînaient par conséquent d'autres formes de violation des droits de l'homme.

9. Cette marée montante de la liberté, une fois en mouvement, ne pourra jamais cesser d'aller de l'avant jusqu'à ce que la tâche soit achevée. Elle gagnera en impétuosité pendant que l'action systématique des Nations Unies la dirigera par des voies pacifiques vers la liberté universelle qui est le but désiré. Dans un tel climat où s'affirmerait de plus en plus l'esprit de coopération, l'ordre et la paix seront plus près d'être réalisés dans le monde.

10. L'œuvre de décolonisation qui progresse maintenant rapidement sous l'égide des Nations Unies peut constituer une étape beaucoup plus positive pour la réalisation des fins de la Charte et pour l'établissement d'une paix permanente que l'ensemble de tous les efforts en matière de désarmement.

11. Comme on peut le voir dans le Préambule de la Charte, les peuples des Nations Unies, "résolus à préserver les générations futures du fléau de la guerre", ont jugé nécessaire de "proclamer... [leur] foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, ... dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites" et de "créer les conditions nécessaires au maintien de la justice et du respect... du droit international"; ils ont proclamé aussi leur volonté de "favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande" et, à ces fins, se sont déclarés résolus "à unir [leurs] forces pour maintenir la paix et la sécurité internationales".

12. Tel est l'ensemble de principes qui constituent le fondement de la Charte et qui signifient que la paix ne se réalise pas seulement par les efforts déployés dans le domaine du désarmement, mais qu'elle doit être recherchée dans le respect de la justice, de la liberté et des droits de l'homme. C'est en ce sens que l'application de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme acquiert une importance essentielle, car le colonialisme, de même que toutes les formes de domination par la force, ne peut coexister avec les objectifs de la Charte ou avec un esprit de paix. Il est donc hautement encourageant que les Nations Unies aient enfin décidé d'éliminer systématiquement et énergiquement cet obstacle majeur qui entrave le progrès de l'Organisation vers l'établissement d'un monde pacifique "dans une liberté plus grande".

13. Toutes les nations et tous les peuples qui aspirent à la paix doivent contribuer de tout leur pouvoir à la suppression du colonialisme, poussés par un sentiment d'urgence et le sens de leurs responsabilités. Nous pourrions alors envisager avec plus de confiance des mesures plus importantes destinées à renforcer les Nations Unies et à affermir la sécurité et la paix internationales.

14. La création par l'Assemblée générale, à sa seizième session, d'un Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, ou Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, constitue avec le vaste mandat qui a été confié au Comité une mesure audacieuse, significative et révolutionnaire. La tâche que la Charte a confiée aux Nations Unies et qui consiste à promouvoir le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes prend maintenant une forme concrète et systématique qui lui a longtemps fait défaut, en particulier en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes. En effet, pour les territoires sous tutelle, le Conseil de tutelle avait été institué pour traiter de leurs problèmes et pour favoriser leur évolution progressive vers l'indépendance, mais aucun organe d'une autorité comparable n'avait été créé pour traiter des problèmes des territoires non autonomes ou pour aider leur évolution pacifique vers l'autodétermination et l'indépendance, car le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes n'a que des fonctions limitées et une autorité restreinte et ne peut pas favoriser l'évolution des territoires non autonomes vers l'indépendance. La création du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept était donc particulièrement nécessaire puisque les derniers territoires sous domination coloniale font maintenant presque tous partie de la catégorie des territoires non autonomes.

15. Nous espérons et sommes persuadés que les puissances coloniales comprendront elles-mêmes pleinement la nécessité de collaborer avec le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept dans sa grande tâche de décolonisation. Elles doivent le faire non pas de mauvais gré, mais dans un véritable esprit de coopération et dans l'intérêt commun, car, en accordant la liberté, elles se trouveront elles-mêmes libérées des concepts démodés imposés par leur politique coloniale qui a inévitablement rétréci leur largeur de vues, diminué leur prestige international et porté atteinte à leur réputation morale. Délivrées du fardeau de leur colonialisme, elles seraient bien mieux à même d'apporter leur contribution précieuse à l'effort mondial pour le progrès pacifique dans la liberté.

16. Ma délégation tient à exprimer sa grande satisfaction des travaux dont le Comité spécial a réussi à s'acquitter en si peu de temps avec diligence, sérieux et persévérance. Nous voulons aussi le féliciter de son rapport détaillé [A/5238] et rendre hommage à la sagesse et au talent du Président du Comité, M. Jha, de l'Inde, ainsi qu'au travail remarquable du Rapporteur du Comité, M. Rifai.

17. Il est clair que le Comité a dû faire face à des problèmes ardues et compliqués. Les territoires coloniaux où la minorité européenne qui s'y est établie occupe une position dominante présentent les difficultés les plus considérables. Poussées dans leurs derniers retranchements et jouissant encore de leurs derniers pouvoirs, ces minorités ne peuvent pas facilement se soumettre à un changement radical dans leur manière de vivre et dans la conduite de leurs affaires politiques. Pourtant ce changement doit se produire. Nous ne méconnaissons pas les difficultés que comporte un tel changement lorsqu'il entraîne l'abandon de privilèges et d'avantages qui ont déterminé pendant des générations la manière de vivre des colonialistes. Toutefois, le caractère inévitable de ce changement est une réalité qui exige une adaptation et un ajustement aux besoins impérieux de notre temps. Plus tôt les communautés européennes d'Afrique s'en rendront compte, mieux cela vaudra pour tous les intéressés. Essayer d'arrêter par la force le cours de l'histoire est un vain effort qui n'aboutit à rien. Prendre une attitude de coopération devant l'inévitable s'est toujours avéré la voie la plus sage, en particulier lorsqu'une telle méthode est conforme aux principes. Il faudra donc, tôt ou tard, et le plus tôt sera le mieux, tenir compte du droit démocratique des majorités africaines, car sans la reconnaissance de ce droit il n'y aura pas d'équilibre, d'harmonie ou de paix.

18. Les minorités européennes en Afrique, de culture et de civilisation occidentales, doivent être capables de saisir cette occasion, de comprendre la vaste portée et les ramifications de leur problème dans un monde d'interdépendance croissante, et d'avoir le courage moral d'entreprendre une action altruiste, tout autant dans leur propre intérêt largement conquis que dans l'intérêt de la communauté internationale. Il ne faut pas oublier en effet que c'est en donnant qu'on reçoit le plus.

19. Quoi qu'il en soit, les travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept doivent être poursuivis régulièrement afin que ses objectifs soient atteints le plus tôt possible. La chose est urgente, mais il ne faut certainement pas agir avec hâte et précipitation. Partout où une période de transition raisonnablement brève est nécessaire pour obtenir des résultats plus satisfaisants dans l'ordre et la coopération, les peuples intéressés ne devraient pas refuser ce délai, mais devraient faire preuve d'un esprit de coopération et de compréhension mutuelle. C'est ainsi que la marche vers l'indépendance doit se dérouler, avec détermination et un sentiment profond des responsabilités, pour atteindre le but dans un proche avenir.

20. Ma délégation pense que les travaux du Comité doivent être continués aussi longtemps que le processus de décolonisation rendra nécessaires ses services. Son mandat pourrait être renouvelé d'année en année, ou sous une forme plus prolongée à déterminer. Il est vrai que les fonctions du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ont, sous certains aspects, fait double emploi avec les activités d'autres comités chargés de s'occuper de certains territoires coloniaux, comme le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal, le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola et le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain, mais il ne faut pas oublier que le rapport du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal [A/5160], que nous avons essayé de préparer en toute objectivité après un examen approfondi de la question, traite de tous les territoires administrés par le Portugal, tandis que le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ne concerne que deux de ces territoires. Il faut admettre que le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal a procédé à un examen plus étendu et plus détaillé des problèmes, et qu'il ne peut donc manquer d'être utile au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

21. Cependant, ma délégation croit que, pour éviter des doubles emplois et des dépenses supplémentaires, les travaux doivent être concentrés au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept qui pourra d'ailleurs constituer des sous-comités, s'il le juge nécessaire, pour étudier des territoires particuliers. En même temps, le nombre des membres du Comité pourrait être augmenté si l'on estime que les circonstances le justifient. Dans l'ensemble, nous estimons que les travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept sont d'une importance capitale et qu'ils doivent être poursuivis résolument jusqu'au plein accomplissement de la tâche entreprise.

22. M. AKAKPO (Togo): Le 14 décembre 1960, au cours de sa quinzième session, l'Assemblée générale a proclamé, dans sa résolution 1514 (XV), le droit de tous les peuples à l'indépendance et a invité les puissances coloniales à "transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve".

23. Un an plus tard, lors de sa seizième session, devant le manque de coopération de certaines puissances coloniales, l'Assemblée générale a créé un

Comité spécial composé de 17 puissances et chargé de veiller à la mise en œuvre de la résolution 1514 (XV). Le Comité spécial des 17 puissances, créé en vertu du paragraphe 3 de la résolution 1854 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, a été chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il avait pour tâche, d'après le paragraphe 4 de ladite résolution, "d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration était mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-septième session". Le Comité spécial était également chargé, selon le paragraphe 5, "d'accomplir sa tâche en se servant de tous les moyens dont il disposerait dans le cadre des procédures et des modalités qu'il adopterait pour bien s'acquitter de ses fonctions".

24. Le rapport (A/5238) présenté par le Comité spécial le 20 septembre 1962 traite exactement de toutes les tâches que l'Assemblée générale lui a confiées. Ma délégation rend hommage au Comité spécial pour la conscience, la minutie et le sérieux avec lesquels il a accompli son œuvre.

25. En ce qui concerne le programme de travail, ma délégation se félicite de ce que le Comité spécial ait décidé, au cours de sa 8ème séance, d'accorder la priorité à l'examen de la situation dans les territoires d'Afrique, où existent non seulement le plus grand nombre de pays et de peuples encore sous domination, mais aussi les situations les plus explosives. Sur les 12 pays faisant l'objet de ce rapport, 11 sont africains, et tous sont des foyers importants de lutte pour la libération du joug colonial.

26. Cette particularité de l'Afrique tient au fait que c'est sur ce continent que les droits de l'homme et la dignité humaine ont été le plus souvent foulés aux pieds à l'époque de l'esclavage. Des milliers d'Africains ont été emmenés comme esclaves sur d'autres continents, et, si nous lisons l'histoire de leurs souffrances, nous devinons combien elles ont été terribles. Lorsque, enfin, la conscience universelle s'est réveillée et s'est élevée contre cette pratique odieuse qui consistait à considérer des êtres humains comme des marchandises, comme des machines, et à bénéficier gratuitement de leur sueur, de leurs peines, de leurs souffrances, en un mot de leur travail, on a mis un terme à l'esclavage pour lui substituer aussitôt une exploitation de l'homme déraciné, arraché à son foyer, à sa patrie, exploitation colonialiste, plus subtile, plus raffinée et plus cruelle.

27. Il n'est pas nécessaire de parler longuement de tous les méfaits dont l'Afrique et l'Asie ont été victimes de la part des capitalistes. Arrêt de leur civilisation propre, perte des libertés, perte de la dignité, perte des droits de l'homme, ignorance, misère, faim, maladies, sous-développement, telle est la liste, bien incomplète d'ailleurs, de ces méfaits.

28. La résultante de tous les agissements du colonialisme a été l'absence de contribution, de la part du continent africain, à l'œuvre de progrès universel. De même qu'hier on a mis un terme à l'esclavage, il faut aujourd'hui mettre fin au colonialisme. Les peuples africains ont pris conscience de leur droit à l'indépendance; ce phénomène s'est d'ailleurs produit dans bien d'autres pays du monde.

29. C'est ce que l'Organisation des Nations Unies — qui représente la conscience mondiale — a exprimé dans sa résolution 1514 (XV), adoptée le 14 décembre 1960, contenant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Les principes énoncés dans cette déclaration revêtent un caractère sacré, tout comme ceux qui sont inscrits dans la Charte des Nations Unies. Ces principes doivent être mis en œuvre par tous les moyens et par tous les pays.

30. A ce stade de ma déclaration, je dois rendre hommage à deux grandes puissances auxquelles va la reconnaissance des Africains et des Asiatiques, à savoir la France et le Royaume-Uni.

31. La France a octroyé l'indépendance à presque toutes ses colonies. Le Royaume-Uni continue le processus de décolonisation de ses territoires. Par contre, nous constatons avec indignation que certains pays comme le Portugal et la République sud-africaine s'obstinent à tenir des millions d'Africains sous leur domination. Ils comptent sans doute sur les forces matérielles pour détruire la force morale qui anime les peuples d'Afrique en lutte pour leur indépendance. Ils continuent à tuer les Africains par milliers, et, pour soustraire les territoires administrés par eux au processus de décolonisation, ils recourent à des subterfuges comme celui qui consiste, pour le Portugal par exemple, à déclarer que les colonies portugaises sont devenues des provinces de ce pays par le seul fait que le Parlement portugais a voté une loi dans ce sens; ou bien, comme c'est le cas pour l'Afrique du Sud, à prétendre que, la Société des Nations étant morte, le Mandat qui lui avait été confié concernant le Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain est devenu un titre foncier sur une propriété privée.

32. La décolonisation est un problème international dont l'Organisation des Nations Unies mesure toute la gravité. Elle conditionne en effet, avec le désarmement et d'autres problèmes, le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales.

33. Les efforts accomplis par l'ONU au moyen de ses divers organes — le Conseil de tutelle, la Quatrième Commission, le Conseil de sécurité, l'Assemblée générale elle-même et également la Cour internationale de Justice — pour libérer les peuples colonisés sont significatifs. Ainsi, au cours de cette année seulement, l'Afrique a reçu la visite de quatre organismes importants des Nations Unies: le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, le Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain, le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola et le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal.

34. Quelles sont les conclusions et recommandations auxquelles a abouti le Conseil spécial des Dix-Sept sur chacun des 12 territoires qui font l'objet de son rapport [A/5238]? Je me permettrai d'en faire une courte analyse.

35. Tout d'abord, en ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Sud, après avoir considéré que la grande majorité de la population du pays avait rejeté la Constitution du 6 décembre 1961, l'Assemblée générale a adopté, le 28 juin 1962, une résolution [1747 (XVI)] où elle priait l'Autorité administrante d'élaborer une constitution démocratique pour remplacer celle du 6 décembre 1961, qui était antidémocratique et discriminatoire. L'Assemblée a demandé, pour la Rhodésie du Sud, l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV).

36. Pour la Rhodésie du Nord, le Comité spécial, dans les conclusions de son rapport, souligne la nécessité de prendre immédiatement des mesures pour mettre fin à la Fédération et a fait ressortir le caractère antidémocratique et discriminatoire de la nouvelle Constitution [voir par. 193 et 197 du chap. III]. Dans ses recommandations, le Comité spécial insiste sur l'importance et la nécessité d'appliquer immédiatement la résolution 1514 (XV) et, en conséquence, recommande la fixation d'une date aussi rapprochée que possible pour l'accession à l'indépendance de la Rhodésie du Nord [voir par. 203 du chap. III].

37. Les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept en ce qui concerne le Nyassaland sont les suivantes: il affirme le droit imprescriptible du peuple du Nyassaland à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et note avec regret que la Puissance administrante n'a pas encore exécuté les dispositions du paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1514 (XV) aux termes duquel:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve..."

Il exprime enfin l'espoir que la date de l'accession du Nyassaland à l'indépendance sera fixée au cours des pourparlers qui auront lieu entre M. Banda et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni [voir par. 67 du chap. IV].

38. Quant aux territoires du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland, le Comité spécial recommande à l'Assemblée générale de réaffirmer le droit inaliénable des peuples de ces territoires à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance. Dans le cadre de la résolution 1514 (XV), il recommande également à l'Assemblée générale de déclarer solennellement que toute tentative d'annexion de ces territoires sera considérée par l'Organisation comme un acte d'agression qui viole la Charte des Nations Unies [voir par. 214 du chap. V].

39. De même, en ce qui concerne Zanzibar, le Comité spécial recommande que l'Assemblée générale témoigne sa satisfaction des progrès politiques réalisés par la population, et invite la Puissance administrante à prendre des mesures immédiates pour l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) et à ne négliger aucun effort pour permettre à Zanzibar d'accéder au plus tôt à l'indépendance [voir par. 154 du chap. VI].

40. Au sujet de la Guyane britannique, le Comité spécial prie les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et de la Guyane britannique de reprendre immédiatement les négociations en vue d'aboutir à un accord sur la date de l'indépendance de la Guyane britannique [voir par. 84 du chap. VII].

41. En ce qui concerne le Mozambique, le Comité spécial recommande que l'Assemblée générale réaffirme solennellement le droit inaliénable du peuple du Mozambique à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance, appuie les revendications du peuple du Mozambique en vue de son accession immédiate à l'indépendance, et, en outre, prie le Conseil de sécurité de prendre, en cas de non-coopération du Portugal avec les Nations Unies, des mesures pour que le Portugal se conforme à la résolution 1514 (XV) [voir par. 109 du chap. VIII].

42. A propos du Sud-Ouest africain, le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept a fait siennes les conclusions et recommandations figurant dans le rapport du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain [A/5212 et Add.1 à 3]. Le Comité spécial croit que le moment est venu pour les Nations Unies de prendre d'urgence des décisions concrètes à l'encontre de l'Afrique du Sud, pour éviter l'annexion du Sud-Ouest africain par l'Afrique du Sud et pour assurer au plus tôt son accession à l'indépendance [voir par. 124 du chap. IX].

43. Pour ce qui est du Kenya, le Comité spécial recommande à l'Assemblée générale d'affirmer le droit inaliénable de ce territoire à la liberté et à l'indépendance et d'inviter la Puissance administrante et tous les intéressés à n'épargner aucun effort pour que le Kenya accède le plus tôt possible à l'indépendance [voir par. 38 du chap. X].

44. Enfin, pour l'Angola, le Comité spécial recommande que l'Assemblée générale réaffirme solennellement le droit inaliénable du peuple angolais à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance; condamne la guerre que le Portugal mène contre le peuple de l'Angola et invite les autorités portugaises à mettre un terme sur-le-champ aux actes de cruauté; demande au Gouvernement portugais de prendre des mesures politiques, économiques et sociales de vaste portée en vue d'assurer le transfert des pouvoirs au peuple de l'Angola, conformément à la résolution 1514 (XV); et, enfin, prie le Conseil de sécurité, au cas de non-coopération du Portugal avec l'ONU, de prendre des mesures appropriées pour obtenir que le Portugal se conforme à ses obligations [voir par. 44 du chap. XI].

45. L'idée qui se dégage de l'étude du rapport dans son ensemble est que, d'une part, la volonté d'indépendance a pénétré fortement, comme je l'ai dit plus haut, tous les peuples africains, à tel point que, si l'on y résiste, on risque de mettre en danger la paix et la sécurité internationales; et que, d'autre part, l'octroi de l'indépendance à ces peuples a un caractère d'urgence. Comme l'a bien relevé le représentant de la Guinée [1169ème séance], cette libération doit être, selon le territoire, immédiate, très rapide, accordée le plus tôt possible ou dans les plus brefs délais. Et toutes ces expressions traduisent la même idée d'urgence.

46. Les Nations Unies, afin d'accélérer le processus de décolonisation, doivent redoubler d'efforts et prendre les mesures que la situation exigera pour amener très rapidement des puissances comme le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud à coopérer avec l'Organisation.

47. Enfin, ma délégation appuiera de toute sa force tout projet de résolution qui sera présenté pour sanctionner le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept et qui fixera un calendrier de dates d'indépendance pour les pays encore sous domination.

48. M. Taleb SLIM (Tunisie): Nous arrivons à la conclusion de notre débat sur le rapport [A/5238] du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

49. Nous avons écouté avec la plus grande attention les interventions des éminents représentants qui nous ont précédés et qui ont apporté une contribution très appréciable aux travaux de l'Assemblée. Nous sommes heureux de constater que la très grande majorité des orateurs a tenu à souligner une fois de plus les dangers que présente pour le monde la persistance d'un système colonial périmé fondé sur l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, et par surcroît universellement condamné.

50. Nous avons toujours pensé, quant à nous, que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, contenue dans l'historique résolution 1514 (XV), devait inaugurer l'ère de la libération des peuples et tracer le chemin de la réconciliation entre les peuples dans la paix, la justice et la dignité. Nous pensions que cette condamnation universelle du colonialisme, prononcée il y a deux ans, suffirait pour ouvrir les yeux aux puissances coloniales et les amènerait à renoncer à leur volonté de domination, à leurs rêves de dominions et d'empires, et à leurs manœuvres d'exploitation indignes des peuples. Nous pensions que la conscience universelle était suffisamment avertie pour tourner cette page douloureuse de l'histoire de l'humanité et mettre fin à l'humiliation et à l'indignité de l'homme colonisé, traqué par ses exploitants et privé des droits les plus élémentaires.

51. Un an après la proclamation de cette véritable charte de la décolonisation, l'Assemblée générale adoptait la résolution 1654 (XVI), qui créait un organe chargé de trouver des méthodes adéquates pour la mise en œuvre de ses dispositifs; ce faisant, l'Assemblée générale, tout en mettant sur pied cet organisme destiné à accélérer le processus de la décolonisation, voulait sauvegarder les chances d'entente et d'amitié entre les colonisateurs d'hier et les peuples libérés, et faisait appel à la coopération des puissances administrantes.

52. La Tunisie a eu le grand honneur d'être membre du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept et a eu l'avantage de participer à ses travaux. Guidée par sa propre expérience et inspirée par les leçons qui se dégageaient de la lutte des autres peuples d'Afrique pour leur indépendance, elle a apporté sa contribution à l'élaboration de cet important document que l'Assemblée est en train d'examiner. Ma délégation tient toutefois, tout en soulignant la position du Gouvernement tunisien sur le problème de la décolonisation, à faire quelques remarques qu'elle juge importantes.

53. La délégation tunisienne demeure convaincue que, pour réussir, ce processus de décolonisation doit être envisagé dans le contexte d'une coopération internationale réelle, dégagée de toutes sortes de conditions et de préalables. Pour nous, cela signifie une volonté expresse de la part des puissances administrantes d'apporter une contribution effective et en même temps une compréhension suffisante pour accepter les avis et les recommandations qui se dégagent des débats particuliers sur chaque territoire.

54. Tant qu'il demeure une réserve quelconque de la part de ceux qui ont la responsabilité du destin des peuples que la politique coloniale et les accidents de l'histoire ont placés sous leur domination, il est difficile d'entrevoir une libération rapide de ces peuples, conformément aux principes énoncés dans la résolution 1514 (XV).

55. Tant que les puissances administrantes restent décidées à défendre les intérêts égoïstes d'une classe de privilégiés dans les colonies et à les confondre avec les intérêts de leur gouvernement, tant que la mentalité du colon blanc attaché à sa prétendue mission civilisatrice, imbu de sa supériorité raciale, décidé à imposer sa loi par la force, subsiste, nous serons incapables d'aider les peuples à s'émanciper et à se libérer dans l'entente et dans la paix.

56. Or, l'expérience des puissances coloniales qui ont su se dégager de cette mentalité et qui ont pu ainsi conduire les peuples à leur émancipation et à leur indépendance, tout en gardant et en renforçant les liens d'amitié et de coopération avec eux, cette expérience, telle que l'ont connue la France et la Belgique, ne semble point profiter aux autres puissances coloniales.

57. On nous a souvent parlé, au cours de ce débat, de la coopération des puissances administrantes au sein du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept; mais le fait est que nous avons constaté, à de rares exceptions près, une politique parfois faite de friction systématique et de faits accomplis et toujours entourée de réserves ou de solennelles déclarations paternalistes. Il nous faut exprimer des doutes sur la valeur d'une telle coopération.

58. Je ne m'attarderai pas sur ce point, car il suffit de se rappeler comment le problème de la Rhodésie du Sud a été finalement traité. Je me bornerai à dire que cette obstination à laisser transformer une partie de notre continent en une seconde Afrique du Sud est vouée à l'échec grâce à la vigilance des nationalistes de la ZAPU^{1/}. Une telle politique ne peut, par ailleurs, qu'engendrer des difficultés dans les rapports que le Royaume-Uni entretient avec les Etats africains et mettre en danger l'avenir même des blancs dans cette partie de l'Afrique. Le Gouvernement tunisien exprime ici sa solidarité agissante envers les nationalistes de la Rhodésie et tient à les assurer de son appui total dans leur lutte pour la libération.

59. Est-il besoin, en parlant de la nécessité de la coopération des puissances administrantes, de souligner l'absence totale de coopération de la part du Portugal et de la République sud-africaine? L'Assemblée tolérera-t-elle plus longtemps que les principes de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays, et aux peuples coloniaux continuent d'être ignorés, voire bafoués par les puissances coloniales? Il est important d'insister, à cet égard, sur la nécessité de renforcer le mandat du Comité des Dix-Sept et de rester vigilants pour déjouer les manœuvres continues des puissances coloniales.

60. Ma délégation n'a pas l'intention de s'arrêter de nouveau à chacun des territoires qui font l'objet du rapport; elle a eu l'occasion d'exposer longuement son point de vue au sein du Comité spécial sur tous les territoires étudiés, et le rapport en rend bien compte.

61. Ma délégation voudrait s'arrêter un moment sur les méthodes de travail et la procédure du Comité spécial. Je veux tout d'abord exprimer ici notre gratitude à toutes les délégations qui ont bien voulu aborder, dans leurs interventions, ce problème particulièrement important, car il est certain que l'efficacité et le sérieux des travaux du Comité spécial dépendent étroitement de ses méthodes et de sa procédure. La délégation tunisienne a donné à cet aspect de la question toute l'importance qu'il mérite et a déployé ses efforts afin que le Comité s'emploie à dégager les méthodes les plus aptes à lui permettre de remplir sa tâche dans le cadre du mandat défini par la résolution 1654 (XVI).

62. Il est vrai qu'un malentendu fâcheux s'est produit, qui a détérioré, pendant une courte période, l'atmosphère de totale coopération que ma délégation aurait souhaité voir toujours régner au sein du Comité spécial. Comme nous avions accepté que le Président du Comité fût, en guise de conclusion, un résumé des débats relatifs à nos méthodes générales de travail, certains de nos collègues ont voulu comprendre que le Comité s'engageait par là même à renoncer à son droit de décision au profit du système du consensus. Cette procédure aurait permis de dégager de chaque débat des conclusions d'ordre général reprenant notamment les points sur lesquels il y avait eu accord. En un mot, le Comité devait se départir de la règle de la majorité pour adopter celle du plus petit dénominateur commun, et cela en dépit des termes du premier consensus établi par le Président et qui dit:

"Il a été entendu toutefois que le Comité procéderait à un vote si, dans un cas particulier, un représentant le jugeait nécessaire." [A/5238, par. 112, g, du chap. Ier.]

63. Je m'excuse d'insister sur ce point; mais il est, de l'avis de ma délégation, nécessaire d'éclaircir ce détail pour comprendre la genèse du rapport que le Comité des Dix-Sept soumet à l'Assemblée générale et l'évolution des travaux du Comité. De ce point de procédure dépendait, en effet, et dans une large mesure, la définition du Comité et du rôle qui lui a été assigné par l'Assemblée, car, si le Comité avait choisi la voie proposée du consensus, son rôle eût été tout autre. Nos travaux se seraient alors cantonnés dans l'analyse de documents abstraits et, à l'issue de débats quelque peu académiques, nous aurions tiré de vagues lignes générales destinées à inspirer l'action éventuelle de la Puissance administrante. Ce rôle était, à notre avis, contraire à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance et de la résolution 1764 (XVI).

64. Or, les premières situations qui se présentèrent au Comité spécial étaient urgentes et réclamaient des mesures qui, si elles n'étaient pas prises dans l'immédiat, risquaient de compromettre irrémédiablement l'application de la Déclaration dans ces territoires. C'était notamment le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud, qui était le premier territoire à être examiné. Il eût été impensable que le Comité aboutît à des conclusions descriptives d'ordre général, alors qu'un processus était déclenché, en Rhodésie, qui devait mener à la création dans ce territoire d'un statut en contradiction avec la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance.

65. C'est pour cela que les délégations du Mali et de la Tunisie, après avoir mûrement réfléchi, ont présenté le 21 mars 1962, à la 17ème séance du Comité spécial, un projet de résolution selon lequel le Comité — et c'est la disposition principale du projet

"Décide de créer un Sous-Comité de bons offices, composé de quatre membres, chargé de déterminer avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni les étapes futures que le Gouvernement britannique envisage de suivre en Rhodésie du Sud pour l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) à ce territoire".

Rien, dans ce paragraphe, n'était en contradiction avec le mandat du Comité qui, selon la résolution 1654 (XVI), peut se servir "de tous les moyens dont il disposera dans le cadre des procédures et des modalités qu'il adoptera pour bien s'acquitter de ses fonctions". Incontestablement, l'un des moyens les plus rapides et les plus efficaces était la création de sous-comités chargés d'étudier les étapes que la puissance administrante envisage de suivre pour appliquer la Déclaration sur l'indépendance. Des réserves sur l'expression "bons offices" ayant été faites, nous nous préparions à réviser notre texte quand le Royaume-Uni, dans un geste de coopération fort apprécié, accepta l'idée principale de notre projet et invita, le 29 mars 1962, soit exactement huit jours après le dépôt de notre projet, le bureau du Comité à se rendre à Londres.

^{1/} Zimbabwe African Peoples Union.

66. Ainsi, et sans vouloir tirer des conclusions définitives, les membres du Comité spécial ne pouvaient pas manquer de remarquer que le premier consensus avait abouti à un regrettable malentendu, alors que le premier projet de résolution avait conduit à une action rapide et mettait le Comité à même de disposer de renseignements de première main sur les intentions du Royaume-Uni quant à l'évolution de la Rhodésie du Sud vers l'indépendance.

67. Je ne veux pas m'étendre sur la valeur des résultats de la mission de six membres qui s'est rendue à Londres. Il ne fait pas de doute qu'une telle démarche constituait une mesure positive dans l'accomplissement de la tâche dévolue au Comité spécial par la résolution 1654 (XVI). S'il est vrai qu'on ne peut pas dire que cette mission du Sous-Comité pour la Rhodésie du Sud, à Londres, ait abouti à des résultats très tangibles, on ne peut pas nier qu'un précédent fort encourageant a été établi par le Comité et que tous ses membres ont été convaincus de la nécessité de recourir à des méthodes rapides afin de pouvoir étudier de plus près et de façon directe l'évolution des situations coloniales les plus urgentes.

68. Malheureusement, cela n'a apparemment pas suffi et le Comité spécial a dû consacrer, à deux ou trois reprises, encore beaucoup de temps à la question des résolutions. Nous devons toutefois dire aujourd'hui que le Comité a surmonté ces contradictions et que la procédure des résolutions est généralement reconnue comme la plus efficace. En ce qui concerne la procédure qui consiste à présenter des projets de résolution à l'Assemblée générale, ma délégation estime qu'elle n'est ni nécessaire ni même souhaitable. Mais, comme elle n'est certainement pas contraire aux règlements en vigueur, nous n'avons pas cru devoir nous y opposer.

69. Il est un autre point prévu par la résolution 1654 (XVI) sur lequel le Comité spécial n'a pas été en mesure d'atteindre les buts fixés par l'Assemblée générale: c'est l'envoi de missions de visite. L'opposition des puissances administrantes a été telle qu'il n'a pas été possible d'envisager sérieusement la question. Je crois, pour ma part, que c'est là une grande lacune et qu'il importe que nous fassions appel ici aux puissances intéressées pour qu'elles nous fournissent une coopération plus constructive dans ce domaine. Le Comité ne peut pas continuer à assumer ses responsabilités sans être à même de recueillir sur place le plus d'informations possible sur l'évolution de certains territoires vers les objectifs de la Déclaration relative à l'indépendance.

70. La résolution 1514 (XV), qui contient la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, énumère, à son paragraphe 5, les catégories de territoires qui entrent dans la compétence du Comité spécial. Elle énonce trois catégories: les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous les autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Si la définition des territoires sous tutelle est encore aisée, celle des territoires non autonomes l'est moins, car plusieurs territoires colonisés n'ont pas été, pendant très longtemps, considérés par l'Assemblée générale comme territoires non autonomes. Ce fut le cas de l'Algérie et de la Rhodésie du Sud, dont personne ne peut dire aujourd'hui que ce n'étaient pas des territoires colonisés. Nous pensons que l'Assemblée générale doit elle-même établir une fois pour toutes la liste nominale des territoires colonisés, sans plus se restreindre à la notion d'autonomie, mais en s'inspirant purement et simplement de la résolution 1514 (XV) qui ne se réfère qu'au critère de l'indépendance. L'Assemblée générale pourrait, dès cette session, établir au moins une liste provisoire qui guiderait les travaux du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance.

71. J'aimerais examiner rapidement un autre point, soulevé par plusieurs des orateurs qui nous ont précédés; je veux évoquer les perspectives d'avenir du Comité des Dix-Sept. Quelques délégations ont suggéré un élargissement du Comité pour qu'il puisse faire face à la tâche plus grande créée par la dissolution d'autres organes chargés de questions coloniales. De l'avis de ma délégation, il importe de garder au Comité des Dix-Sept l'équilibre assez délicat de sa composition, que reflète la présente distribution des sièges entre les différents groupes régionaux représentés. Bien que nous n'ayons pas d'objection de principe à une éventuelle augmentation du nombre des membres du Comité, nous estimons qu'il serait extrêmement difficile, sinon risqué, d'entreprendre une redistribution qui pourrait rompre l'harmonie déjà réalisée. Nous ne sommes pas entièrement convaincus par les arguments avancés en faveur d'une telle augmentation. Le Comité pourrait très bien, par ailleurs, pour s'acquitter des tâches nouvelles qui lui sont dévolues et si des circonstances impératives l'exigeaient, constituer des sous-comités composés éventuellement de délégations choisies en dehors du Comité lui-même. Nous aurions ainsi suivi une pratique déjà établie par l'Organisation, et notamment par le Conseil économique et social.

72. Voilà les observations de ma délégation sur le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept et sur le problème de la décolonisation en général.

73. Mon gouvernement continue à être préoccupé par la survivance du colonialisme, qui s'accroche désespérément à ses derniers bastions. Cette obstination est une source perpétuelle de conflits et d'effusion de sang. La tâche du Comité spécial consiste à éviter ces conflits et à accélérer la liquidation du colonialisme, qui constitue encore une menace réelle à la paix et à la sécurité internationales. Nous faisons appel aux puissances coloniales pour qu'elles contribuent, par une coopération loyale et sincère, à prévenir des conflits à l'égard desquels la Tunisie ne saurait rester neutre ni passive.

74. Je terminerai mon intervention par cette citation du discours qu'a prononcé le président Bourguiba à la Conférence de Belgrade^{2/}:

^{2/} Conférence des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement des pays non-alignés réunie à Belgrade du 1^{er} au 6 septembre 1961.

"Dans son essence, le nationalisme a été pour nous tous, anciens colonisés, un combat pour la dignité de l'homme sous toutes les latitudes. Le colonialisme, par contre, foule aux pieds cet attribut fondamental de la personne humaine. Ce racisme tantôt hypocrite, tantôt insolent ou cynique, nous l'avons combattu et le combattons toujours, et nous ne ménagerons aucun de nos efforts pour venir en aide à ceux qu'il opprime. Notre profond espoir de toujours, tout au long de notre lutte pour la liberté, le progrès et la démocratie, est que l'ère coloniale fasse place à l'ère de libre coopération pour le développement des peuples et pour la paix du monde."

75. M. CHAKRAVARTY (Inde) [traduit de l'anglais]: Un des changements les plus révolutionnaires et les plus significatifs qui se soient produits dans le monde depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale a été l'accession à l'indépendance et à la liberté de nombreux peuples et territoires coloniaux. La Charte des Nations Unies, signée à San Francisco le 25 juin 1945, a donné un nouvel encouragement aux peuples assujettis qui aspiraient à l'indépendance. Pendant les 15 premières années de l'existence de l'Organisation, de nombreux territoires sous tutelle et territoires non autonomes ont obtenu leur indépendance; ils sont devenus Membres de l'Organisation et l'ont ainsi renforcée. Bien que beaucoup de peuples soient devenus libres et qu'ils aient pris la place qui leur revenait dans la communauté mondiale, il en est encore un grand nombre qui demeurent sous une domination étrangère. Ceux d'entre nous qui ont récemment obtenu ou recouvré leur indépendance se sont naturellement inquiétés du maintien de la domination coloniale dans diverses régions du monde. Heureusement, ce sentiment a été partagé par la grande majorité des Etats Membres, de sorte que les Nations Unies se sont saisies de ce problème en tant que question urgente. Plusieurs résolutions ont été adoptées par l'Assemblée qui a invité les puissances administrantes à accélérer le processus de décolonisation. Ma délégation peut être fière du rôle qu'elle a joué dans cette lutte contre le colonialisme. Ayant connu nous-mêmes la domination coloniale, nous ne pouvions agir autrement et ce sera toujours pour nous un privilège que d'aider dans la mesure de nos modestes moyens ceux qui luttent encore pour leur liberté.

76. A la suite d'une déclaration faite par M. Nikita Khrouchtchev, président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, l'Assemblée générale a inscrit à l'ordre du jour de sa quinzième session une question intitulée "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". Le 14 décembre 1960, l'Assemblée a adopté la résolution 1514 (XV), dont le paragraphe 5 du dispositif stipulait:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

Etant donné qu'il y a eu quelque retard dans la mise en œuvre de cette résolution et surtout de ce paragraphe 5, l'Assemblée générale a adopté une autre résolution importante à sa seizième session en novembre 1961, la résolution 1654 (XVI). En vertu de cette résolution, un Comité spécial de 17 membres a été constitué. Il avait pour tâche d'examiner la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration maintenant célèbre qui figurait dans la résolution 1514 (XV) de décembre 1960. La délégation de l'Inde a été associée très étroitement aux travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Mon pays a été désigné comme l'un de ses 17 membres et le Comité lui a fait le grand honneur d'élire à sa présidence mon prédécesseur. Je tiens à profiter de cette occasion pour remercier les délégations qui ont rendu hommage à l'œuvre accomplie par M. Jha. Je désire aussi remercier sincèrement, au nom de ma délégation, M. Coulibaly, du Mali, pour les services éminents qu'il a rendus au Comité comme membre et aussi en présidant une partie de ses délibérations, notamment lorsque le Comité s'est rendu en Afrique. Je me joins enfin aux autres délégations pour rendre hommage à M. Rifai, le distingué rapporteur du Comité, pour le travail ardu et méticuleux qu'il a accompli pour la préparation du rapport. Tant du point de vue qualitatif que quantitatif, ce document est un des rapports les plus complets que les Nations Unies aient publiés depuis plusieurs années.

77. Ayant pris part à la préparation de ce rapport, ma délégation est naturellement en faveur de la méthode de travail adoptée par le Comité, ainsi que des recommandations et conclusions inscrites dans les différents chapitres. Le Comité a sagement décidé de commencer par s'occuper des territoires du continent africain, où des millions d'hommes vivent encore sous la domination étrangère et où certaines des pires manifestations du colonialisme subsistent encore. La décision du Comité de se rendre en Afrique a été une sage décision, comme les résultats obtenus le montrent, bien qu'elle ait entraîné certaines dépenses. Pendant son voyage en Afrique, le Comité a pu se rendre compte directement des réalités de la situation africaine et entendre des pétitionnaires des territoires colonisés présenter leurs requêtes. Beaucoup de ces pétitionnaires étaient venus de régions lointaines du continent africain et ont exprimé leur reconnaissance au Comité pour leur avoir épargné les tracasseries et la dépense d'un long voyage à New York. Nous pensons également que les Nations Unies elles-mêmes ont profité de ce voyage, car c'était la première fois qu'un comité de cette importance siégeait sur le sol africain.

78. L'Assemblée se rend parfaitement compte de l'œuvre louable accomplie par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni pour conduire ses nombreux territoires coloniaux à l'indépendance et à la liberté. Pour notre part, nous ne sommes jamais restés indifférents aux difficultés qu'il a pu rencontrer et nous n'avons jamais voulu sous-estimer ses efforts. Ma délégation apprécie à sa juste valeur l'attitude généreuse manifestée par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni dans ce domaine. Parfois, comme dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud, les mesures qu'il a prises ne répondent pas aux nécessités de la situation. En de tels cas, il nous est arrivé de devoir le critiquer, mais nous nous sommes toujours efforcés de présenter des suggestions constructives et, je l'espère, utiles.

79. Toutefois, en ce qui concerne le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain ou les colonies portugaises, les choses sont entièrement différentes. Alors que le Royaume-Uni a coopéré avec le Comité, ma délé-gation regrette profondément que le Gouvernement portugais et le Gouvernement sud-africain n'aient pas tenu compte de la Charte ni des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Il serait vraiment difficile de trouver quelque part des conditions aussi effroyables que celles qui sévissent en Angola et au Mozambique. Mais le flambeau de la liberté ne peut être éteint facilement, même au moyen des pires répressions. Au Mozambique et en Angola, les patriotes combattent pour la liberté tant sur leur territoire qu'au dehors: du profond de nos cœurs, notre sympathie va vers eux. Les Nations Unies doivent leur accorder sympathie et appui dans leur lutte contre un régime odieusement tyrannique.

80. Le Portugal doit se rendre compte qu'il n'est pas possible de renverser le cours de l'histoire et que, si l'on barre la route à ceux qui s'efforcent d'employer des méthodes pacifiques pour obtenir un changement, des conflits et des violences seront inévitables. Dans son propre intérêt bien compris, le Portugal doit accepter de transférer les pouvoirs aux habitants de ses territoires coloniaux sans plus de retard. Le temps presse, mais il n'est pas encore trop tard pour accorder d'une façon pacifique la liberté et l'indépendance aux populations du Mozambique et de l'Angola. Ainsi pourraient s'établir des relations cordiales et amicales entre le Portugal et ses colonies. Le choix d'une autre méthode provoquerait l'amertume, la haine et une révolution sanguinaire. C'est au Portugal qu'il appartient de faire son choix.

81. Ma délégation a écouté avec attention les suggestions présentées par plusieurs représentants au sujet des travaux futurs et de la composition du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel, le Secrétaire général par intérim a déclaré:

"... dans le domaine des territoires non autonomes, il y a ... quatre comités et comités spéciaux qui traitent de questions que l'on pourrait utilement examiner ensemble, ce qui permettrait d'alléger la tâche des délégations intéressées et, en même temps, de réduire les frais et de diminuer les besoins en personnel. Peut-être serait-il possible de confier l'examen de toutes les questions qui relèvent de ce domaine au Comité spécial créé en application de la résolution 1654 (XVI)." [A/5201/Add.1, p. 5.]

Le Comité spécial a examiné attentivement cet aspect de la question et, au paragraphe 152 du chapitre premier de son rapport [A/5238], il a signalé le danger de doubles emplois et par conséquent d'un gaspillage d'efforts et d'argent si une coordination appropriée n'est pas réalisée.

82. Compte tenu des opinions exprimées par le Secrétaire général par intérim et par le Comité spécial, ma délégation estime nécessaire que l'Assemblée générale examine la situation qui résulte de l'existence de plusieurs organes chargés de l'étude de questions connexes. A ce sujet, j'attire votre attention sur la recommandation de la Quatrième Commission tendant à mettre fin aux activités du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain et à confier les travaux dont il est chargé au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [voir A/5310, par. 27]. Ma délégation ne ferait aucune objection à l'emploi de la même méthode, si on le jugeait possible, pour d'autres comités travaillant dans le domaine du colonialisme et elle accepterait que le nombre des membres du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept soit augmenté si on l'estimait nécessaire pour cette raison. Quelle que soit la solution adoptée en définitive, nous affirmons avec force que l'Assemblée générale devra trouver à sa présente session le moyen d'éviter les doubles emplois et veiller à ce que tous les travaux entrepris dans le domaine du colonialisme soient bien coordonnés.

83. Dans le débat, des suggestions ont été faites sur la fixation d'une date limite par l'Assemblée générale pour l'indépendance des territoires encore soumis à une domination coloniale. L'Assemblée connaît parfaitement les vues de ma délégation à ce sujet. Nous considérons qu'il ne serait pas opportun que l'Assemblée générale ou le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept recommande une date ou des dates pour l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires intéressés. Ce n'est pas que nous soyons pour ou contre une date spéciale, mais nous ne croyons pas qu'il serait pratique de fixer une ou des dates. A notre avis, il ne convient pas qu'une institution étrangère dise au peuple d'un territoire non autonome quand il devra être libéré. C'est à ce peuple et à ses dirigeants qu'il appartient de régler leur destinée et de décider par eux-mêmes de la date la plus satisfaisante et la plus proche pour le transfert des pouvoirs. Les chefs éminents des peuples de ces territoires sont mieux placés pour en juger. Tout ce que nous pouvons faire, c'est exprimer aux peuples de ces territoires tous nos vœux pour leur avenir et demander aux puissances administrantes d'appliquer la Déclaration le plus tôt possible. Il n'est pas souhaitable que les Nations Unies fixent une date limite, car cette initiative risquerait de créer une situation embarrassante si le changement prévu n'avait pas lieu à cette date. La question de la fixation d'une date limite a été discutée très longuement en 1961 à la Conférence des chefs d'Etat ou de gouvernement des pays non alignés, à Belgrade. La Conférence est arrivée à la conclusion qu'il ne serait pas dans l'intérêt des peuples colonisés de fixer des dates limites, mais qu'il fallait réclamer que leur libération s'accomplisse au rythme des événements. On se rappellera que ces considérations très valables ont prévalu lors de la rédaction de notre grande déclaration qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV), qui ne fait aucune allusion à la fixation d'une date limite.

84. Il reste beaucoup de travail à accomplir et le Comité spécial doit continuer à fonctionner. Nous lui souhaitons de poursuivre ses travaux avec succès et nous espérons qu'il pourra s'occuper l'an prochain des derniers territoires coloniaux et faire des recommandations précises. Nous espérons aussi que le Comité obtiendra dans cette tâche difficile la coopération la plus complète, même de celles des puissances administrantes qui ont fort peu tenu compte jusqu'à présent des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale.

M. Auguste (Hafti), vice-président, prend la présidence.

85. Le PRESIDENT: Je donne la parole au représentant du Portugal, qui a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

86. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je regrette de devoir retarder de quelques minutes la clôture de cette discussion, mais je ne puis laisser passer sans les relever certaines observations que le représentant de l'Inde vient de faire. Le représentant de l'Inde est monté à cette tribune d'où il a lancé des paroles retentissantes, comme à son habitude. Ce n'est pas la première fois qu'un représentant de l'Inde vient prêcher ici la moralité et prendre aux yeux du monde l'apparence de la sainteté. Aujourd'hui, il est trop tard. Il s'est passé l'an dernier un événement qui a enlevé à l'Union indienne toute autorité morale pour parler de la Charte, en raison de ce que l'Union indienne a fait en décembre de l'an 1961. Le représentant de l'Inde lui-même a averti le Conseil de sécurité que cet événement allait s'accomplir, qu'il y eût une Charte ou non, qu'il y eût un Conseil de sécurité ou non, et cependant le représentant de l'Inde vient ici aujourd'hui oter des résolutions des Nations Unies! Je voudrais bien savoir comment son propre pays a respecté les résolutions mêmes qu'il a citées ici. Était-ce par respect pour les résolutions des Nations Unies que l'Union indienne a envahi l'an dernier un territoire portugais? On aurait pu escompter qu'un petit reste, un tout petit reste de bon sens retiendrait le représentant de l'Inde de monter à cette tribune pour y calomnier mon pays.

87. M. RAMOS (Philippines) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je sollicite l'indulgence de l'Assemblée au moment où je me permets de prendre à nouveau la parole sur la question du Bornéo du Nord. Cette question préoccupe beaucoup le gouvernement et le peuple des Philippines parce qu'elle affecte au plus haut point notre intérêt national. En conséquence, je suis chargé de préciser brièvement notre position sur les questions de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord et du droit de libre détermination du peuple de ce territoire, à la suite des répliques faites à notre première déclaration, de cette même tribune, à la 1177^{ème} séance. A cette séance, le représentant du Royaume-Uni, exerçant son droit de réponse, a fait une brève déclaration sur la revendication des Philippines quant à la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord. Les affirmations contenues dans cette déclaration étaient inacceptables pour ma délégation. Néanmoins, nous nous étions abstenus alors d'exercer notre droit de réponse parce que le représentant du Royaume-Uni avait laissé entendre qu'il pourrait faire une deuxième déclaration sur le même sujet dans le présent débat. Nous voulions éviter de prendre deux fois la parole pour lui répondre. Or la discussion est sur le point d'être close. Puisque le Royaume-Uni ne semble pas avoir l'intention de faire une nouvelle déclaration, j'ai demandé la parole pour présenter les observations ci-après.

88. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a dit ici que la Constitution de 1946 et la résolution adoptée en 1961 par le Congrès des Philippines au sujet des eaux territoriales ont fixé les frontières des Philippines en laissant en dehors le Bornéo du Nord. Je répondrai ce qui suit: sans entrer dans l'analyse préalable des aspects juridiques du problème, je donne à l'Assemblée l'assurance que les points qui ont été soulevés ont été dûment pris en considération par mon gouvernement avant de formuler sa revendication quant à la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord.

89. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a dit encore que, parmi les habitants du Bornéo du Nord, pas un ne désirait entrer dans la République des Philippines. Cette allégation d'une portée plutôt générale est pour le moins contestable. Permettez-moi de lire un extrait d'une lettre publiée récemment qui émane d'un officier en retraite de l'armée britannique, qui a vécu à Java, en Thaïlande, en Birmanie et au Bornéo depuis 1925. Je cite:

"Il y a de nombreux Philippins à Sandakan et en d'autres endroits du Bornéo du Nord. Il y a beaucoup de Malais des Soulou au Bornéo oriental et il y règne une grande sympathie raciale pour votre beau pays. Je suis certain que, si la Grande-Bretagne abandonnait le Bornéo du Nord, la plupart des gens qui y vivent préféreraient la souveraineté philippine à la fusion artificielle qui est envisagée."

Il s'agit là de la Fédération projetée de Grande Malaisie et la lettre citée est caractéristique de beaucoup d'autres messages semblables sur ce sujet.

90. Voici une nouvelle qui intéressera probablement l'Assemblée générale. C'est une dépêche de presse internationale qui vient de m'être remise il y a quelques minutes. Je me permettrai d'en donner lecture afin qu'elle soit reproduite au procès-verbal de la séance, car il est bon que le monde en ait connaissance.

"Une mission du corps législatif du Brunéi a contesté jeudi la prétention de la Malaisie selon laquelle, dans le territoire britannique du Bornéo du Nord, pratiquement tout le monde accepterait que le territoire entre dans la Grande Malaisie dont la création est proposée.

"Zaini Haji Ahmad, membre du Conseil du Brunéi, a dit ici: "La déclaration faite aujourd'hui (jeudi) par l'ambassadeur de Malaisie (Dato' Ong Yoke Lin) devant l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies est dénuée de fondement!"

"Dato' Ong Yoke Lin avait déclaré qu'au Bornéo du Nord il y avait dans la population "un désir très vif de réaliser l'indépendance par la fusion avec la Fédération de Grande Malaisie" et que "tous les partis politiques" du territoire appuyaient ce plan.

"Mais Zaini, qui est à Manille en qualité de membre d'une mission qui cherche à obtenir un appui en faveur d'une proposition nouvelle consistant à unir le Brunéi, le Sarawak et le Bornéo du Nord en un seul Etat, a qualifié l'affirmation de Ong de "dénuée de fondement" dans un télégramme qu'il a adressé à la délégation des Philippines auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

"Il a ajouté: "Le parti populaire du Brunéi qui est au pouvoir a mis formellement le Gouvernement britannique et le Gouvernement malais au défi d'accepter qu'un référendum soit tenu dans toute la nation sous le contrôle direct des Nations Unies et de permettre aux populations intéressées de choisir librement entre l'union avec la Fédération de Grande Malaisie et un Etat unifié indépendant du Bornéo du Nord."

"Zaini a soutenu que l'amendement de Londres concernant la formation d'une Grande Malaisie comprenant la Malaisie, Singapour, le Brunéi, le Sarawak et le Bornéo du Nord était conçu "pour nous enlever notre droit inaliénable à la libre détermination".

"Il a dit enfin que le parti populaire du Brunéi, qui a obtenu 16 sièges au Conseil législatif du Brunéi aux récentes élections, "représente les aspirations nationales dans tout le Bornéo du Nord britannique."

M. Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

91. Le transfert projeté de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord à la future Fédération de Grande

Malaisie affecterait d'une manière décisive le statut futur du peuple du Bornéo du Nord, non pour un jour ou pour une année, mais pour toujours. Si l'on a quelque doute sur les aspirations véritables de ce peuple au sujet d'une question qui est pour lui d'une importance suprême, il faut lui donner la possibilité d'exprimer ses vœux. A l'époque actuelle, alors que les Nations Unies ne cessent d'exprimer leur profonde préoccupation de voir respecter le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, le sort du peuple du Bornéo du Nord ne doit pas être réglé d'une manière précipitée et plutôt sommaire comme on l'envisage dans le calendrier établi pour la création de la future Fédération de Grande Malaisie.

92. Dans son rapport, la commission Cobbold admet elle-même qu'avant son arrivée il n'y avait pas eu un temps suffisant pour que tous les secteurs de la population aient pu étudier avec soin les incidences, pour le Bornéo du Nord, des propositions relatives à la Grande Malaisie^{3/}.

93. S'il en est ainsi, pourquoi tant se précipiter pour transférer la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord et en opérer la fusion dans une Fédération de Grande Malaisie, avant même d'avoir déterminé d'une manière précise les droits du peuple du Bornéo du Nord? La Fédération projetée de Grande Malaisie n'a pas encore de structure organique. Par conséquent, prétendre que l'indépendance du Bornéo du Nord peut être réalisée par cette fusion est une affirmation pour le moins prématurée.

94. Tout ce que nous avons demandé au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, c'est de siéger avec nous à une table de conférence et de régler la question juridique de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord par des voies pacifiques, comme il sied en raison de nos relations d'amis, d'alliés et de Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Nous réitérons cette demande, surtout après la déclaration faite par le représentant de la Malaisie qui a dit que "cette revendication ne concerne actuellement que les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni et des Philippines" [1178ème séance, par. 41].

95. Nous espérons que la tradition britannique de la justice, du fair play et du respect de la suprématie du droit incitera le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni à accéder sans réserve et sans équivoque à notre demande raisonnable de négociations bilatérales. Il existe un différend au sujet de cette question si importante de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord; il y a au moins un doute sérieux au sujet des aspirations véritables du peuple du Bornéo du Nord telles qu'elles apparaîtraient s'il pouvait exercer son droit d'auto-détermination.

96. Le Royaume-Uni ne voudra certainement pas ignorer ces questions graves et importantes, les écarter avec mépris comme s'il s'agissait de choses futiles et sans intérêt. Le Royaume-Uni ne voudra pas qu'il soit dit qu'il n'a pas fait en sorte que le transfert de la souveraineté sur le Bornéo du Nord fût opéré après l'établissement d'une situation nette.

97. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Afrique du Sud qui a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

98. M. BOTHA (Afrique du Sud) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au cours du débat, plusieurs orateurs ont affirmé que mon gouvernement avait l'intention d'annexer les territoires du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland. Cette affirmation absolument dénuée de fondement est grave parce qu'elle peut faire naître des soupçons qui nuiraient à l'harmonie des bonnes relations si nécessaires entre pays voisins.

99. C'est pourquoi j'ai demandé la parole, car je tiens à exposer la situation telle qu'elle est véritablement et à faire consigner ma déclaration au procès-verbal. Le South Africa Act de 1909, adopté par le Parlement du Royaume-Uni et portant création de ce qui était alors l'Union sud-africaine, envisageait le transfert de ces territoires à l'Union sud-africaine sous certaines conditions. Toutefois, les négociations au sujet de ce transfert, qui ont duré pendant des années, n'ont pas abouti. Dans une déclaration faite au Parlement le 9 février 1961, notre premier ministre, M. Verwoerd, a déclaré que les protectorats ne seraient jamais incorporés à l'Afrique du Sud. Par la suite, à plusieurs reprises, le Premier Ministre a encore défini en termes très clairs la position du Gouvernement sud-africain à ce sujet. Tout récemment encore, le 4 septembre 1962, s'adressant au Congrès du Transvaal du parti nationaliste, il a souligné qu'il n'était pas possible d'incorporer les protectorats et que, pour sa part, la République sud-africaine était disposée à les considérer comme de bons voisins. Voilà quelle est la situation de fait.

100. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Inde qui a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

101. M. Natwar SINGH (Inde) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation ne veut nullement engager une polémique avec la délégation du Portugal. L'histoire du Portugal est bien connue des Nations Unies. L'Organisation tout entière a condamné le Portugal. Notre attitude en ce qui concerne la décolonisation ne peut être mise en doute.

102. Pourtant, le représentant du Portugal a fait une certaine allusion à Goa. Cette allusion n'avait absolument aucun sens. Nous avons nettement établi notre position au sujet de Goa, à cette tribune même et dans d'autres organes des Nations Unies. Je veux simplement déclarer qu'il est inconcevable que l'Inde ait commis une agression contre l'Inde. Or Goa, c'est l'Inde.

103. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Portugal qui a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

104. M. DE MIRANDA (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je regrette de devoir prendre la parole à nouveau, mais, une fois de plus, je ne puis laisser sans réponse les observations du représentant de l'Inde. Le représentant de l'Inde dit que les actes du Portugal ont été condamnés par les Nations Unies. Je lui répondrai que les actes de l'Inde ont été condamnés par la conscience du monde. Quand il vient nous dire qu'il n'y a pas eu d'agression à Goa, il oublie que tout le monde sait que pendant 450 ans le drapeau qui flottait à Goa était le drapeau portugais et que l'Inde l'avait reconnu elle-même lorsqu'elle y avait installé un consulat. Il nous dit enfin qu'il a nettement établi la position de son pays. En effet! J'ai dit moi-même que le représentant de l'Inde avait nettement établi la position de son pays lorsqu'il avait dit: "Qu'il y ait une Charte ou non, qu'il y ait un Conseil de sécurité ou non". J'espère que le représentant de l'Inde ne m'obligera pas à revenir une fois de plus à la tribune.

105. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous avons terminé la discussion générale sur le rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. Nous devons maintenant attendre qu'un ou des projets de résolution nous soient présentés pour pouvoir reprendre l'examen de la question. Les dispositions concernant l'organisation de nos travaux à ce sujet seront annoncées en temps voulu.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite*)

12. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je rappelle que la discussion générale sur cette question est terminée, sous réserve d'un droit de réponse. Il reste maintenant à l'Assemblée à examiner un projet de résolution présenté par 22 délégations [A/L.410]. Un rapport sur les incidences financières de ce projet de résolution a été distribué [A/5351].

13. Avant de donner la parole au premier orateur, j'attire l'attention des membres de l'Assemblée sur le document A/L.413 qui a été distribué ce matin. Comme le rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238] est un document volumineux, on a pensé qu'il serait commode pour les représentants d'avoir un document unique où seraient regroupés les divers projets de résolution présentés à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale par le Comité spécial. Les projets de résolution ont été reproduits sans changement, tels qu'ils figuraient dans le rapport du Comité spécial. Le document A/L.413 n'est donc pas un document nouveau; il sera sans doute plus facile de s'y reporter quand nous examinerons les divers projets de résolution recommandés par le Comité spécial.

14. Je donne maintenant la parole au représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, qui a demandé à faire usage de son droit de réponse.

15. M. SHUKAIRY (Arabie Saoudite) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé à prendre la parole pour user de mon droit de répondre à la déclaration faite par sir Patrick Dean, représentant du Royaume-Uni, le 26 novembre 1962 [1175^{ème} séance]. Auparavant, je me permets d'exprimer ma reconnaissance à la délégation du Royaume-Uni pour m'avoir procuré l'occasion de reprendre la parole sur la question du colonialisme. Parler à nouveau sur cette question, c'est parler à nouveau en faveur de la cause de la liberté. C'est aussi parler à nouveau des dangers du colonialisme. Enfin, et surtout, c'est parler à nouveau des méfaits de l'impérialisme britannique.

16. En exposant à l'Assemblée le rôle que son gouvernement a joué dans la question du colonialisme, la délégation du Royaume-Uni a repris un argument déjà rebattu: le Royaume-Uni aurait accordé de bonne grâce l'indépendance à tant de millions de personnes, dans tant de pays. Cet argument est devenu une contrevérité tellement flagrante qu'il est à peine besoin de le réfuter. Que des millions de personnes qui se trouvaient sous la domination britannique soient devenues indépendantes, c'est là un fait historique indéniable. Mais que le Royaume-Uni leur ait accordé l'indépendance, c'est là un conte de fées bien britannique qui n'a ni queue ni tête.

17. Les Britanniques n'ont jamais accordé l'indépendance. C'est là un fait historique qu'il n'est guère besoin de prouver. Les peuples ont conquis leur indépendance sur les champs de bataille après des années et des années de lutte et au prix de la mort de milliers et de milliers de patriotes tombés au champ d'honneur. Je ne veux pas rouvrir les annales déjà closes des mouvements de libération en Asie et en Afrique. Tout au début de ce siècle, l'histoire de l'Egypte a été celle d'une lutte sanglante pour secouer le joug de la domination britannique. En Irak, peu après 1920, il a fallu pratiquement une guerre pour forcer les Britanniques à quitter le pays. En Inde, les restes de Gandhi peuvent porter témoignage de la brutalité avec laquelle les Britanniques ont réprimé le mouvement de libération. Il suffit de lire le livre de M. Nehru intitulé The Discovery of India pour comprendre tous les sacrifices consentis par le peuple indien pour conquérir son indépendance. A Chypre — et le cas de Chypre a été cité par le représentant du Royaume-Uni — le président Makarios peut parler à l'Assemblée de son exil et des souffrances de son peuple pendant son mouvement de libération. En Palestine, où s'est écrit le chapitre le plus sombre de l'histoire britannique, le Royaume-Uni avait reçu de la Société des Nations mandat de préparer le pays à l'indépendance, et les Nations Unies savent bien quel en a été le désastreux résultat: la Terre sainte partagée et son peuple déraciné, dépossédé et chassé de la patrie de ses ancêtres. Et le représentant du Royaume-Uni vient ici se vanter de l'évolution pacifique vers la liberté, le progrès et l'indépendance!

18. Ainsi, le passé du Royaume-Uni en matière de colonialisme mérite de subir un jugement portant condamnation et non pas qu'on en soit fier et qu'on s'en félicite. En aucun cas le Royaume-Uni n'a accordé l'indépendance. La libération a été imposée aux Britanniques par le feu et l'épée.

19. Il y a quelques cas très peu nombreux où, je le reconnais, le peuple intéressé a obtenu son indépendance sans coup férir. Mais il convient de rappeler que dans de tels cas les Britanniques n'avaient plus rien à retirer du pays, ou alors que le pays colonisé était devenu un fardeau pour le budget britannique. Pour la Grande-Bretagne, le colonialisme n'est ni la gloire ni la grandeur, ce n'est que pur intérêt et pur calcul. Lorsqu'un pays donné est utile aux intérêts britanniques, les Britanniques luttent jusqu'au dernier homme. Mais, lorsque la vache a été traitée jusqu'à la dernière goutte de lait ou qu'elle coûte trop cher à nourrir, elle est mise en liberté. C'est pourquoi les Britanniques ont parfois résisté à l'indépendance et parfois simplement lâché prise.

20. Même après l'octroi de l'indépendance, le Royaume-Uni s'efforce de conserver ses intérêts coloniaux. L'indépendance récente de la Trinité et Tobago est précisément un de ces cas. Il y a quelques jours seulement, le Dr Eric Williams, premier ministre de la Trinité et Tobago, a annoncé qu'il avait refusé un prêt britannique s'élevant à 14 millions de dollars. En expliquant son refus, le Dr Williams a déclaré: "J'avais demandé un prêt afin de créer des emplois pour la population de la Trinité et Tobago et non afin de créer des emplois pour les travailleurs britanniques." S'adressant à l'Assemblée, le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'est demandé d'où je pouvais bien tenir de tels renseignements. Je lui conseille de ne pas se hâter de donner un démenti téméraire. Pour sa gouverne, je le renvoie au New York Times du 26 novembre 1962, où il pourra lire la déclaration du Premier Ministre de la Trinité et Tobago.

21. Néanmoins, pour mettre à nu le rôle joué par le Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne le colonialisme, il n'est pas nécessaire d'exhumer les archives des XVIIIème, XIXème et XXème siècles. Le rapport du Comité spécial suffit à rendre nulles les prétentions du Royaume-Uni. En fait, n'eût été la politique coloniale du Royaume-Uni, les Nations Unies n'auraient pas proclamé la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, ni créé un comité chargé de mettre en œuvre cette déclaration. Joignant l'insulte aux torts qu'il cause, le Royaume-Uni a déploré que les dépenses afférentes à ce comité se soient élevées à 100 000 dollars, mais le Royaume-Uni semble oublier que c'est l'intransigeance britannique qui a coûté aux Nations Unies cette somme de labeur et d'argent. Au lieu d'exprimer sa vive préoccupation au sujet des fonds prélevés sur les ressources de l'Organisation, le Royaume-Uni ferait mieux de s'inquiéter des richesses et des trésors des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique qui sont allés s'accumuler dans le Trésor britannique pendant d'innombrables générations.

22. Je passe maintenant à des questions particulières et je montrerai que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a nettement déformé les faits. Je prends d'abord la question du Nyassaland. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré: "... le représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite a prétendu que les colons blancs du Nyassaland possédaient la plus grande partie des terres fertiles de ce territoire" [1175ème séance, par. 112]. Je dirai seulement qu'il a tronqué la déclaration que j'ai faite à l'Assemblée.

23. Qu'il me soit permis de citer toute cette partie de ma déclaration sur ce point:

"Au Nyassaland, les colons blancs possèdent un million d'acres des terres les plus fertiles, tandis que les noirs — je n'aime pas ce terme — ne sont que des ouvriers à gages. N'oublions pas qu'au Nyassaland il y a 600 fois plus de noirs que de blancs. Oui, au Nyassaland, les noirs sont 600 fois plus nombreux que les blancs et pourtant la plupart des terres fertiles appartiennent aux blancs." [1168ème séance, par. 130.]

On peut donc voir aisément à quel point le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déformé mes paroles en les citant.

24. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a mis en doute mes sources d'information. J'en citerai deux. Je donnerai d'abord lecture d'un extrait du livre Inside Africa de Gunther:

"Il y a très peu de colons blancs au Nyassaland, mais ils possèdent environ un million d'acres des meilleures terres. Les Africains, comme au Kenya, se plaignent que les régions où ils vivent sont si surpeuplées que le bien-être économique y est impossible, alors que d'immenses étendues qui appartiennent aux blancs demeurent inoccupées et inexploitées. Environ 200 000 Africains travaillent dans les plantations européennes de thé et d'abracasins." /

M. Gunther, je tiens à le préciser, est un auteur, un voyageur et un journaliste américain très connu. Il n'est pas communiste et les renseignements qu'il a recueillis sur place au Nyassaland montrent suffisamment que les dénégations du représentant du Royaume-Uni ne sont qu'absurdes, irréfutables et irresponsables.

25. Ma deuxième source est l'Encyclopédie britannique. Je donnerai lecture d'un passage du volume 16 sur le Nyassaland:

"Le thé est cultivé dans les plantations européennes... Bien que les Africains soient avant tout des agriculteurs qui exploitent leurs propres terres, beaucoup d'entre eux sont devenus des salariés employés dans les plantations européennes ou l'Union sud-africaine et en Rhodésie du Sud..."

"En 1951, le nombre des Africains qui travaillaient hors du protectorat était de 148 000 2/."

Ainsi s'exprime l'Encyclopédie britannique et non pas l'Encyclopédie soviétique. J'espère que le représentant du Royaume-Uni n'ira pas jusqu'à dénoncer sa propre encyclopédie.

26. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a parlé aussi des "exposés outrageusement inexacts qui ont été faits devant l'Assemblée par les représentants des délégations communistes et le porte-parole de la délégation de l'Arabie Saoudite" [1175ème séance, par. 111]. Je proteste contre cette insinuation du représentant du Royaume-Uni qui est insolente et sans fondement. En supposant que cette accusation soit vraie, il n'est pas outrageant de faire devant l'Assemblée des exposés inexacts. Ce qui est vraiment outrageant, c'est d'exercer une domination sur des millions d'êtres humains pendant des siècles, de les dépouiller de leurs richesses, d'exploiter leur sueur et leurs efforts, de leur acheter leurs matières premières au prix le plus bas et de leur vendre des produits finis au prix le plus haut. Voilà ce qui s'appelle agir, se comporter, se conduire de façon outrageante. Voilà ce qui est réellement outrageant, et c'est ce que les Britanniques ont perpétré dans le monde entier pendant des siècles.

27. Mes exposés ne sont pas outrageusement inexacts. J'ai cité l'Encyclopédie britannique, fruit du travail des plus grands esprits britanniques. Quant au fond, j'ai défendu la cause de la liberté des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique. Cette tâche est une source de fierté et de satisfaction pour moi-même et pour tous les représentants auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui défendent la cause de la liberté. Si quelqu'un ressent de la honte dans cette salle lorsque la question du colonialisme y est examinée, ce doit être la délégation du Royaume-Uni. Au lieu de parler de mes exposés outrageusement inexacts, les Britanniques feraient mieux de quitter la salle de l'Assemblée en signe de regret et de repentir, car ils ont été d'une cruauté sans pitié envers les peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique.

28. Que je me sois associé aux délégations communistes, c'est là encore une autre insinuation mensongère de la part de la délégation du Royaume-Uni. J'ai été le premier orateur à prendre la parole sur cette question, c'est un fait. C'est moi qui ai ouvert la discussion et par conséquent je ne me suis associé à personne. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni aurait pu insinuer que d'autres délégations se sont associées à moi, mais non que j'y ai suivi.

29. D'ailleurs, je m'enorgueillis de m'associer à toute délégation qui sert la cause de la liberté. Voilà quelle a été notre action à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Nous avons défendu la liberté chaque fois qu'on s'est battu pour elle. Je me suis associé aux délégations des pays d'Asie chaque fois que la liberté était en jeu. Je m' suis associé aux délégations des pays d'Afrique chaque fois qu'il s'agissait de discrimination raciale. Je ne me suis jamais associé à la délégation britannique, car elle s'est toujours rangée du côté du colonialisme et n'a jamais pris parti pour la liberté. Si la délégation britannique, contrairement à sa tradition historique, devait soutenir, ne fût-ce qu'une fois, la cause de la liberté, je n'hésiterais pas à m'associer à la délégation britannique. Qu'elle essaie une fois et je serai présent.

30. Mais le représentant du Royaume-Uni semble avoir oublié que la Grande-Bretagne a été une alliée dévouée des États communistes pendant la seconde guerre mondiale. C'était plus qu'une association: c'était une véritable camaraderie des armes. Maintenant que leur fle est saine et sauve et qu'ils ont sauvé leur tête, les Britanniques condamnent toute association avec les délégations communistes sur la question du colonialisme. Pour les Britanniques, cette association est une vertu; pour les autres, elle est un vice. Telle est la logique britannique.

31. En vérité, je m'associe effectivement à toutes les luttes menées en faveur de l'indépendance et de la souveraineté nationales. Comme toutes les délégations éprises de liberté, nous sommes les associés de la liberté et les associés de tous les peuples qui luttent pour leur liberté. Nous sommes les associés de tous les chefs des peuples d'Afrique et d'Asie qui luttent pour leur libération.

32. Alors que le représentant du Royaume-Uni s'en prenait à ma déclaration à cette tribune, un grand chef de l'Afrique m'adressait le télégramme que voici:

"Mon parti et moi-même vous félicitons d'avoir réclamé récemment la suppression des bases militaires britanniques au Kenya et à Aden. La Kenya African National Union (KANU) s'oppose sans réserve à des bases militaires étrangères sur notre sol, sous quelque forme que ce soit. Sur ce point, il ne peut être question de négocier avec les Britanniques; quelle que soit l'importance ou la nature de leur base, elle doit disparaître.

"Jomo Kenyatta."

Je suis l'associé de ces chefs qui luttent pour une noble cause. Je suis fier de m'associer à eux, autant que je le suis de me dissocier des Britanniques.

33. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, en parlant des trois territoires dépendant du Haut Commissaire, a déclaré ce qui suit:

"Au point de vue politique, ils sont entièrement indépendants de la République sud-africaine et, malgré les allégations inconsidérées du représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, telle est toujours la politique de la Grande-Bretagne." [1175ème séance, par. 103.]

Voyons qui fait des allégations inconsidérées. Est-ce la délégation du Royaume-Uni ou est-ce la délégation de l'Arabie Saoudite? Cette réfutation est une déformation volontaire de ma déclaration. Dans ma déclaration à l'Assemblée, j'avais dit que, malgré ses dénégations, le Royaume-Uni entretenait l'intention d'annexer ces territoires à l'Union sud-africaine. Cette intention se trahit dans le témoignage même invoqué par le Royaume-Uni. Le 13 avril 1954, sir Winston Churchill s'exprimait sur ce point en ces termes: "Il ne peut être question que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté puisse accepter actuellement le transfert." Or, cet "actuellement" est le nœud de toute la question. L'expression employée par sir Winston Churchill fait peser la menace d'une annexion à un autre moment, à tout moment.

34. Nous avons eu une autre preuve tout à fait récemment. Dans le rapport du Comité spécial, sous le titre "Observations de membres du Comité spécial", la position du représentant du Royaume-Uni est indiquée en ces termes:

"... les réalités géographiques et économiques entraînaient inévitablement en maints domaines des liens très étroits entre les territoires et l'Afrique du Sud. Ainsi, une union douanière existait entre eux depuis plus de 50 ans. En outre, un grand nombre d'habitants des territoires allaient travailler en Afrique du Sud..." [A/5238, chap. V, par. 130.]

35. Ensuite, dans sa déclaration à l'Assemblée, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a parlé du Basoutoland comme d'une "enclave située à l'intérieur de l'Afrique du Sud" [1175ème séance, par. 103]. Ces paroles ont pour but de préparer les esprits des Membres de l'Organisation à accepter l'annexion. J'espère que le représentant du Royaume-Uni ne condamnera pas le rapport des Nations Unies comme faux, ni sa propre déclaration devant l'Assemblée comme outrageusement inexacte.

36. Mais, si les dénégations du Royaume-Uni sur l'annexion sont sincères, comment se fait-il que le Royaume-Uni ait voté contre la résolution du Comité spécial qui a déclaré l'intégrité territoriale de ces territoires [A/5238, chap. V, par. 214]? Si le Royaume-Uni avait été sincère dans ses protestations, il n'aurait pu moins faire que de voter pour tous les paragraphes de la résolution du Comité spécial qui dénonçaient l'annexion et se prononçaient en faveur de la liberté et de l'indépendance. Le Royaume-Uni a fait l'inverse: il a voté contre la résolution et il est monté à cette tribune pour se disculper par un alibi.

37. La question de l'annexion n'a pas été seule déformée par les Britanniques. Toutes les prétendues réformes constitutionnelles dans cette région l'ont été aussi. D'après le rapport du Comité spécial, la position du représentant du Royaume-Uni a été celle-ci:

"... l'un des [problèmes les] plus délicats avait trait à la place des chefs dans la nouvelle structure de la société africaine." [Ibid., par. 134.]

38. En lisant ces mots, on pourrait conclure que l'administration britannique est très progressiste. Mais voyons quelle est la véritable situation. Je ne puis mieux faire que de m'en remettre encore à l'Encyclopédie britannique. Je cite le volume où il est question du Betchouanaland. Voici ce que dit l'Encyclopédie britannique de l'administration britannique et de ses intentions en matière de progrès, ainsi que de la place que le chef de tribu doit occuper dans la société africaine:

"En 1948, Seretse, fils de Sekgoma II et petit-fils de Khama, héritier de la chefferie des Bamangwato, a épousé une Anglaise, Ruth Williams. Pour des raisons indiquées dans un Livre blanc..." — un Livre blanc a été publié par le Gouvernement britannique au sujet de la situation de cette personnalité, chef de sa tribu, qui avait épousé une Anglaise — "le Gouvernement britannique a refusé de le reconnaître comme chef et l'a expulsé du Betchouanaland."

Il a été chassé de son pays pour les raisons indiquées dans le Livre blanc du Gouvernement britannique. L'Encyclopédie britannique poursuit:

"Cela a suscité dans la tribu un ressentiment qui a abouti à des troubles et à des effusions de sang. La plupart des Bamangwato ont affirmé qu'ils restaient fidèles à Seretse et ont refusé d'accepter ou de désigner un autre chef. En 1956,..." — et voici maintenant la triste fin de l'histoire — "après avoir renoncé à tous ses droits à la chefferie pour lui et ses descendants, Seretse Khama a été autorisé à retourner au Betchouanaland^{3/}."

Il n'a été autorisé à retourner dans sa patrie qu'après avoir renoncé à tous ses droits, pour la seule raison qu'il avait épousé une Anglaise. Je ne fais pas de commentaire, je ne tire pas de conclusions. C'est là une condamnation bien méritée des Britanniques, prononcée par l'Encyclopédie britannique elle-même.

39. Il y a enfin la question des bases militaires à Aden. Dans sa déclaration à l'Assemblée, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a dit:

"Il est parfaitement exact que le Gouvernement britannique a dans ce secteur d'importantes obligations dans le domaine de la défense." [1175ème séance, par. 119.]

40. Ce prétexte invoqué par le Royaume-Uni qui se propose de se défendre lui-même est plus criminel que le crime même. Les obligations britanniques en matière de défense sont d'importance primordiale, paraît-il. Elles sont certainement sacrées, mais seulement pour la Grande-Bretagne et dans les îles Britanniques. De telles obligations en matière de défense sont, quand on les remplit sur nos terres, par définition, de l'agression. Nous ne voulons pas que nos terres soient des bases militaires ni le champ d'opérations militaires. Nous ne voulons pas non plus que nos patries subissent une guerre à laquelle nous ne sommes pas parties. Ces obligations britanniques en matière de défense n'ont pas leur place dans les pays arabes. Les terres arabes doivent être défen-dues par les Arabes et les îles Britanniques par les Britanniques. Après tout, nous pourrions demander qui a investi le Royaume-Uni de ces obligations de défense en territoire arabe, dans la patrie arabe. Ce sont les Britanniques qui se sont donnés ces obligations eux-mêmes et pour eux-mêmes. Qu'ils se défendent dans les îles Britanniques s'ils le veulent, mais non pas sur nos terres et au prix du sacrifice de la vie des nôtres.

41. Pour terminer, j'exprimerai l'espoir que le Royaume-Uni saura à l'avenir comment traiter les déclarations d'autres délégations. Ici, à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, nous pouvons être en désaccord sur des interprétations, nous pouvons être en désaccord sur des conclusions, mais il est ignoble et dégradant pour n'importe quelle délégation de déformer les faits eux-mêmes et de les présenter de façon fausse. La délégation du Royaume-Uni, je le crains, n'a pas triomphé en cette épreuve. En Asie et en Afrique, les Britanniques pratiquent le colonialisme, et ici à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ils pratiquent l'art de déformer les faits. S'ils ne peuvent apporter une contribution en émancipant leurs peuples coloniaux, qu'ils ne viennent pas apporter une contribution en déformant les faits à l'Organisation.

42. Je compte que le représentant du Royaume-Uni ne montera pas une nouvelle fois à cette tribune pour déformer les faits et dire des contrevérités. On peut consulter l'Encyclopédie britannique, et la bibliothèque entière des Nations Unies est même accessible à tous.

43. M. PALAR (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous sommes saisis de plusieurs projets de résolution parmi lesquels le projet de résolution des 22 puissances [A/L.410]. L'Indonésie a l'honneur d'en être un des auteurs et elle a participé activement à sa rédaction. J'ai donc le grand plaisir de pouvoir exposer d'une manière assez détaillée les points principaux de la résolution proposée.

44. J'en résumerai d'abord brièvement les trois points dominants: premièrement, réaffirmation solennelle des objectifs et principes bien connus énoncés dans les deux résolutions précédentes sur la décolonisation, la résolution 1514 (XV) et la résolution 1654 (XVI); deuxièmement, décision d'élargir la composition du Comité spécial en lui adjoignant sept nouveaux membres; troisièmement, invitation adressée au Comité spécial à faire des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance.

45. Le deuxième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution fait ressortir que la Déclaration sur la décolonisation et la création du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ont suscité de grands espoirs non seulement chez les peuples coloniaux, mais encore "partout". Le mot "partout" a été employé délibérément pour reconnaître le fait — car les auteurs estiment qu'il s'agit bien d'un fait — que les espoirs des peuples coloniaux sont de plus en plus partagés par la masse de la population des anciennes puissances coloniales comme des puissances coloniales qui subsistent encore. A mon avis, c'est en grande partie à cause de cette disposition d'esprit favorable et réaliste de la part de leur population que la plupart des pays occidentaux ont voté les deux résolutions précédentes sur la décolonisation, de sorte que l'une et l'autre ont été adoptées à une majorité écrasante à l'Assemblée générale.

^{3/} Ibid., vol. 3, p. 287.

46. Toutefois, le projet de résolution a malheureusement dû noter avec regret que, dans de nombreuses colonies, les dispositions de la Déclaration n'ont pas encore été appliquées intégralement et que dans certains cas des mesures préliminaires n'ont même pas été prises. Certaines puissances coloniales ont refusé de coopérer avec le Comité spécial ou ont adopté une attitude négative au lieu de coopérer avec lui et ont ainsi retardé considérablement la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration. Le projet de résolution exprime la profonde inquiétude qu'inspire cette attitude. Il affirme en outre la conviction que de tels agissements peuvent constituer sur le plan international une source de conflits et de mécontentements qui entravent sérieusement à leur tour la coopération internationale et créent des situations de plus en plus dangereuses qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité dans le monde. C'est ainsi que le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution déplore le refus de certaines puissances administrantes de coopérer avec le Comité spécial. Les paragraphes 5 et 6 du dispositif invitent les puissances administrantes intéressées à mettre fin à toute action armée et répressive dirigée contre les peuples dépendants et à mettre en œuvre le paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration, pour permettre à tous les territoires et peuples coloniaux d'accéder sans retard à l'indépendance. Les membres de l'Assemblée se rappelleront que le paragraphe 5 du dispositif de la Déclaration [résolution 1514 (XV)] stipule :

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

Je rappellerai à l'Assemblée que cette résolution a été adoptée à une majorité écrasante.

47. Je passe maintenant au deuxième des trois points dominants du projet de résolution, la décision d'élargir la composition du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1554 (XV), dont il est question au paragraphe 7 du dispositif. Cette décision a été prise parce qu'on a reconnu qu'il est urgent que le Comité spécial accélère ses travaux afin de pouvoir faire rapport à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale sur tous les territoires dont il ne s'est pas encore occupé. Sa composition élargie, le Comité spécial pourrait se scinder en cinq ou six groupes. Chaque groupe, peut-être avec l'assistance d'un fonctionnaire du Secrétariat, pourrait ensuite faire rapport au Comité spécial plénier sur un certain nombre de territoires dépendants qui n'ont pas encore été examinés ni visités. Le projet de résolution ne propose pas la reconstitution du Comité, car nous désirons sauvegarder les précieuses connaissances déjà acquises par les membres actuels.

48. En choisissant de proposer le nombre de sept nouveaux membres, on a tenu compte de la nécessité d'assurer une représentation appropriée des pays que la décolonisation intéresse profondément, tout en procédant comme il se doit à une répartition géographique convenable des sièges.

49. Le projet de résolution ne contient pas de recommandation précise quant à la répartition même des nouveaux sièges. Toutefois, ma délégation estime — et je tiens à souligner ici que je parle maintenant uniquement au nom de la délégation indonésienne — que quatre au moins des sept sièges devraient être attribués à des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique. En outre, puisque la plupart des territoires sur lesquels le Comité doit encore faire rapport sont situés dans la région de l'Asie et du Pacifique, l'Indonésie estime qu'il serait maintenant équitable de réserver deux des nouveaux sièges aux pays d'Asie. De l'avis de ma délégation, la meilleure répartition des sept sièges proposés serait la suivante: deux pour l'Asie, deux pour l'Afrique, un pour l'Europe orientale, un pour l'Europe occidentale et un pour l'Amérique latine. Je tiens à souligner encore que ce n'est là que l'avis de ma délégation.

50. Le reste de mon exposé sur notre projet de résolution sera consacré surtout à la nécessité de fixer une date limite pour l'abolition complète du colonialisme, ce qui est le troisième point dominant de la résolution proposée et qui a une importance cruciale pour la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation. Dans le projet de résolution, la Déclaration est visée au dernier alinéa du préambule et à l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du dispositif.

51. Il convient de rappeler que le paragraphe 5 du dispositif de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation invite les puissances coloniales à prendre des mesures immédiates pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples des territoires dépendants. Personne ne s'étonnera d'apprendre que, lorsque nous avons ajouté, après le mot "mesures", le mot "immédiates", nous entendions y faire figurer expressément une injonction en ce qui concerne le moment où ces mesures devraient intervenir. On aurait pu penser que l'expression "mesures immédiates" était suffisamment simple, sans aucune ambiguïté et ne pouvait donner lieu à plusieurs interprétations différentes. Il semble toutefois que tel n'était pas le cas, car, depuis deux ans que la Déclaration a été adoptée, il est devenu trop évident que les deux mots "mesures immédiates" n'ont pas été interprétés nécessairement par les puissances coloniales comme on aurait pu s'y attendre d'après le sens que le dictionnaire leur donne, c'est-à-dire une action directe prise sans retard, tout de suite, sur-le-champ. Il est clair que certaines puissances coloniales, par exemple, accordent une valeur relative au mot "immédiates", lui donnant le sens de longue période de temps, puisque ces puissances n'ont pas même commencé à prendre les mesures les plus modestes en vue de la décolonisation. D'autres puissances semblent penser que le mot "immédiates" s'applique seulement à un certain minimum de mesures préliminaires — en d'autres termes, à la première ou aux deux premières mesures de toute une longue série de mesures qu'elles jugent nécessaire de prendre en vue d'effectuer comme il convient le transfert des pouvoirs. En vérité, les nations qui viennent d'obtenir leur liberté sont presque seules à interpréter l'expression "mesures immédiates" au sens littéral — ainsi que le stipule le paragraphe 5 — de mesures qui doivent être prises sans attendre, tout de suite, maintenant.

52. En conséquence, les auteurs du présent projet de résolution ont estimé devoir chercher à préciser le sens de cette disposition qui a été interprétée de façon très lâche par la plupart des puissances coloniales. Il faut faire comprendre aux puissances coloniales la nécessité de l'urgence et de la rapidité. En même temps, les tenants de l'abolition rapide et complète du colonialisme doivent recevoir quelque assurance que la notion de mesures immédiates qui figurait dans la Déclaration sur la décolonisation allait plus loin qu'un simple geste dépourvu de sens. Nous avons donc jugé qu'il fallait absolument demander à l'Assemblée générale d'autoriser le Comité spécial à faire des recommandations concernant la fixation d'une date limite pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration de 1960.

53. Il convient de noter que l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du dispositif du projet de résolution vise "des recommandations" sur la fixation d'une date limite et non pas "une recommandation". Cela est intentionnel. L'emploi du pluriel laisse au Comité spécial le champ libre pour présenter des recommandations diverses selon ce qui lui paraîtra approprié. Le Comité spécial aura ainsi la latitude de recommander, à son choix: 1) une date limite générale à laquelle tous les territoires non autonomes devront avoir accédé à l'indépendance; 2) une date limite particulière pour chaque territoire considéré; 3) une combinaison de 1 et 2, c'est-à-dire une combinaison d'une date limite générale et de dates limites particulières pour chaque territoire non autonome.

54. Il est clair que, contrairement à ce que beaucoup pensaient, notre projet de résolution n'habilite pas le Comité spécial à fixer lui-même une date limite. C'est l'Assemblée générale qui le fera et elle pourra soit accepter, soit rejeter la date limite ou les dates limites recommandées par le Comité spécial.

55. J'attirerai aussi l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le fait que le Comité spécial, aux termes de son mandat tel qu'il est stipulé au paragraphe 4 du dispositif de la résolution 1654 (XVI), est invité à formuler des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre. Ainsi, même en dehors de la disposition prévue sur ce point dans le présent projet de résolution, le Comité spécial est habilité à faire, s'il le désire, des recommandations concernant une date limite. Afin d'éviter de longues discussions au Comité spécial pour savoir s'il convient de le faire et afin de souligner le caractère "immédiat" que la résolution a stipulé, mais qui est resté lettre morte en pratique, les auteurs du projet de résolution ont jugé essentiel que le Comité spécial soit maintenant invité expressément à faire des recommandations concernant une date limite ou des dates limites.

56. Nous savons tous bien de quelle façon le Comité spécial travaille. Ses recommandations sont fondées sur une étude approfondie des territoires, sur sa connaissance des besoins et des vœux de leurs peuples et sur le jugement qu'il s'est formé de l'opinion des puissances coloniales intéressées. Si, comme on peut raisonnablement le concevoir, le peuple d'un territoire particulier demande spécialement au Comité de ne pas fixer de date limite dans son cas ou d'y surseoir et s'il persuade le Comité spécial de la sagesse de sa demande, celui-ci en rendra naturellement compte à l'Assemblée générale. Les auteurs du projet de résolution sont convaincus que le Comité spécial a des connaissances et une expérience suffisantes pour pouvoir recommander des dates limites précises pour chacun des territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Sur cette base, nous pensons par conséquent aussi qu'il ne doit pas être trop difficile pour le Comité de parvenir à recommander une date limite générale s'appliquant à tous les territoires considérés. La délégation indonésienne irait plus loin encore. Nous estimons — et il doit être bien entendu ici que je m'exprime sur ce point au nom de ma délégation seulement — que la date limite générale ne devrait pas en fait se situer à plus de deux ou trois ans, à partir de maintenant. Nous ne sommes nullement impressionnés par l'argument qu'on prétend convaincant selon lequel ce serait manquer au sens des responsabilités que de transférer la souveraineté à des territoires qui, en raison du peu d'importance de leur population ou de leur superficie, ne peuvent être considérés comme économiquement ou politiquement viables; dans la déclaration que j'ai faite en séance plénière le mois dernier, j'ai expliqué pourquoi ma délégation n'est pas impressionnée par cet argument. Si vous le permettez, je résumerai l'essentiel de ce que j'ai dit alors à ce sujet.

57. J'ai dit qu'un des problèmes majeurs auxquels nous devons faire face est de savoir comment faire respecter sans plus de retard le droit de libre détermination tel qu'il a été reconnu expressément, devant les difficultés qui sont à surmonter en raison du manque de préparation de plusieurs territoires. Ma délégation est convaincue que ce problème peut être résolu, mais à condition de ne pas avoir peur d'idées neuves et hardies. Une chose est certaine: les Nations Unies doivent s'attendre à jouer un rôle important, sinon décisif, dans la réalisation des dernières phases de la décolonisation. En vérité, comme je l'ai laissé entendre précédemment, l'Organisation devrait être prête à assumer une tâche toute nouvelle.

58. Un exemple du genre de tâche à laquelle ma délégation pense nous est fourni par le cas de l'Irian occidental. Le rôle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui est d'administrer provisoirement ce territoire pendant la période de transition entre l'administration néerlandaise et l'administration indonésienne pourrait devenir un précédent historique de la façon dont l'Organisation aiderait les petits territoires dépendants à passer à l'indépendance. C'est dans cet ordre d'idées que, je l'espère, le Comité spécial fera dans son rapport, sur chacun des territoires dépendants auxquels la souveraineté devra être transférée, des recommandations précises sur la forme d'indépendance qui semble la plus appropriée pour le territoire considéré.

59. Une fois que les peuples coloniaux, si petits soient-ils, auront conquis ou reçu leur souveraineté, il leur appartiendra de décider comment ils entendent exercer leur souveraineté nouvellement acquise, s'ils veulent s'associer à d'autres Etats souverains plus anciens, s'ils veulent s'unir à d'autres nouveaux Etats indépendants pour parvenir à une plus grande viabilité politique et économique, ou s'ils veulent voir s'il leur sera possible de réussir par leurs propres moyens. Il n'est peut-être pas superflu de rappeler ici aux Etats Membres que la partie orientale et la partie occidentale du Pakistan sont éloignées de plus de 1 600 kilomètres et que l'Alaska et Hawaï se trouvent l'un et l'autre à plusieurs milliers de kilomètres de la partie principale des Etats-Unis. La distance ne peut donc pas être considérée comme un obstacle à la formation d'entités politiques.

60. Toutefois, il peut se produire que, pour un certain temps tout au moins, certains des territoires qui auront accédé à l'indépendance récemment préfèrent rester entièrement souverains, malgré les difficultés que cela comporte. Personnellement, je suis convaincu que ces petites nations seront nombreuses à comprendre rapidement la nécessité de se joindre à des unités politiques plus importantes — et plus vite que certains d'entre nous ne le croient probable maintenant. De plus, je suis persuadé que la plupart des territoires dépendants seront disposés à tenir compte de toute recommandation que le Comité spécial pourra faire sur ce point.

61. Permettez-moi d'indiquer maintenant brièvement certains des aspects pratiques du nouveau rôle que ma délégation envisage pour l'Organisation en matière de décolonisation. Nous proposons, en substance, que le Comité spécial soit invité et autorisé à faire des recommandations sur deux autres questions: la forme d'indépendance qui semblerait le plus appropriée pour un territoire donné, conformément aux indications générales données ci-dessus; l'opportunité de confier à l'Organisation elle-même un rôle actif dans l'administration d'un territoire donné pendant un certain temps.

62. Nous estimons que le Comité spécial aura probablement besoin, pour exécuter cette nouvelle tâche, d'un rapport préparatoire établi par les experts du Secrétariat, où seraient étudiées les différentes possibilités applicables dans les territoires considérés. Ce rapport préparatoire devrait s'attacher particulièrement à rechercher si un territoire doit envisager de partager sa souveraineté pendant un certain temps avec les Nations Unies et non avec la puissance coloniale, ou si les Nations Unies doivent simplement apporter une assistance pour l'administration du territoire jusqu'à ce qu'il ait atteint un stade final de viabilité politique et économique assurée soit seul, soit rattaché à une unité politique plus importante.

63. Sur la base des conclusions du rapport préparatoire et de ses propres délibérations, le Comité spécial devrait alors être en mesure de faire des recommandations sérieusement réfléchies à l'Assemblée, qui, après les avoir examinées, pourrait décider quelle est la meilleure ligne de conduite à suivre pour chaque territoire. S'il était décidé, avec l'accord du territoire et du peuple intéressés, que l'assistance des Nations Unies est requise pour l'administration, l'organe le mieux à même d'entreprendre cette tâche serait peut-être le Comité spécial lui-même. Je suis d'avis qu'à cette fin il faudrait procéder à un remaniement considérable du Département de la tutelle et des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Cela explique, je crois, pourquoi ma délégation estime que le délai qui sera recommandé par le Comité spécial ne devra pas dépasser deux ou trois ans.

64. La tâche du Comité spécial élargi, telle qu'elle est envisagée aux alinéas a à d du paragraphe 8 du dispositif du projet de résolution, est claire. Le Comité est invité à rechercher les voies et moyens les mieux appropriés et à proposer des mesures concrètes en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration et à faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale à ce sujet, au plus tard à sa dix-huitième session. En outre, et ceci est très important, le Comité est invité à informer le Conseil de sécurité de tous faits survenus dans les territoires dépendants qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales.

65. J'ai presque fini maintenant de présenter le projet de résolution, car je suppose qu'il est à peine nécessaire d'expliquer pourquoi les auteurs ont exprimé au paragraphe 1 du dispositif la reconnaissance de l'Assemblée au Comité spécial pour ses travaux. De même, il n'est pas besoin d'expliquer le paragraphe 2 qui prend note avec satisfaction des méthodes et des procédures que le Comité spécial a adoptées pour s'acquitter de ses fonctions, telles qu'elles sont indiquées au chapitre premier de son rapport [A/5238], aux alinéas a, b, c, d et f du paragraphe 112. De même est évidente la nécessité des deux derniers paragraphes du dispositif du projet de résolution, l'un qui prie tous les Etats Membres, et notamment les puissances administrantes, de prêter leur entière coopération au Comité spécial, l'autre qui prie le Secrétaire général de continuer à fournir au Comité spécial tous les moyens et le personnel nécessaires à l'application du présent projet de résolution.

66. Il a fallu plus de trois semaines pour rédiger ce projet de résolution. Il représente un difficile mais heureux compromis entre deux points de vue très écartés. Les auteurs espèrent vivement que les membres de l'Assemblée générale lui apporteront leur appui comme ils l'ont fait si généreusement pour les deux précédentes résolutions [1514 (XV) et 1554 (XVI)] sur la décolonisation.

67. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Royaume-Uni qui a demandé à faire usage de son droit de réponse.

68. Sir Patrick DEAN (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'Assemblée générale est maintenant bien habituée aux méthodes oratoires dont le représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite se sert pour présenter ses allégations. Je n'ai pas l'intention de lui donner la réplique, ce qui ferait perdre du temps à l'Assemblée. Je suis certain que la plupart des membres de l'Assemblée traiteront les observations de ce représentant avec le mépris qu'elles méritent.

69. Je répondrai cependant à une des allégations que le représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite a jugé bon de faire et d'après laquelle mon gouvernement aurait l'intention de permettre l'incorporation des territoires du Betchoualand, du Bassoutoland et du Souaziland au territoire de l'Afrique du Sud. Lorsque j'ai pris la parole précédemment dans cette discussion, j'ai nié expressément toute intention de ce genre de la part de mon gouvernement. Je répète catégoriquement, au nom de mon gouvernement, que telle est sa position.

70. Il est vrai, c'est certain, que le South Africa Act de 1909 prévoyait comment ces territoires pourraient être incorporés à l'Union sud-africaine. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a toujours soutenu que cela ne constituait pas et ne constitue pas une obligation quelconque de transférer ces territoires à l'Afrique du Sud. Le fait que le Gouvernement britannique n'a pas abrogé ladite loi ne signifie pas cependant que nous envisagions le transfert de ces territoires à l'Afrique du Sud, même comme une possibilité très lointaine. Si nous n'avons pas abrogé cette loi, c'est parce que nous estimons qu'elle a déjà cessé d'être en vigueur et que toutes dispositions qui n'auraient pas cessé d'être en vigueur ont cessé de l'être au moment où l'Afrique du Sud a quitté le Commonwealth.

71. Pour renforcer doublement l'assurance donnée, je citerai les paroles prononcées par le ministre compétent, M. Peter Thomas, le 26 février 1962, à la Chambre des communes. Il a répondu comme il suit à une question sur la loi de 1909:

"Nous estimons que cette loi a cessé d'être en vigueur lorsque l'Afrique du Sud a quitté le Commonwealth."

Peu après, le 29 mars 1962, répondant à une question posée pour avoir l'assurance que l'avenir des territoires relevant de la Haute Commission ne s'orienterait pas dans la direction apparemment prise par le Sud-Ouest africain, le ministre a déclaré:

"Je peux vous assurer qu'il n'en est pas question et qu'il n'en a jamais été question. Je ne voudrais pas que vos observations puissent faire croire en quoi que ce soit que les territoires relevant de la Haute Commission aient des raisons de craindre. Nous avons établi très nettement que nos responsabilités envers eux demeurent et qu'ils ne seront pas absorbés par l'Afrique du Sud."

J'espère qu'étant donné ces déclarations claires et catégoriques de ministres britanniques l'Assemblée conviendra que cette question ne prête plus à discussion.

72. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant d'Haïti pour expliquer son vote avant le vote.

73. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti): Ma délégation n'a pas pris part au débat général, pour éviter d'allonger les délibérations de l'Assemblée générale et faciliter ainsi la tâche du Président, qui essaie d'assurer que la session soit close à la date prévue. Mais, comme ma délégation est, et a toujours été, profondément intéressée par les questions de décolonisation et a toujours été à la pointe du combat contre le colonialisme, elle désire rappeler brièvement que ce combat a commencé dès les premiers jours de l'indépendance d'Haïti qui, bien que sortie littéralement ruinée économiquement d'une guerre âpre et longue de plus de 15 années, demeurerait riche de l'espoir que la voie qu'elle venait d'ouvrir serait bientôt suivie par tous les peuples colonisés. Le président, Toussaint Louverture, ne s'était-il pas écrié prophétiquement, en mettant le pied sur le vaisseau Le Héros qui l'emmenait en captivité: "En me renversant, on n'a fait qu'abattre le tronc de l'arbre de la liberté à Saint-Domingue; mais il repoussera, parce que ses racines sont profondes et nombreuses"?

M. Haseganu (Roumanie), vice-président, prend la présidence.

74. Haïti a tendu une main fraternelle à tous les peuples épris de liberté, que ce soit sur le continent américain, en Europe, en Asie ou en Afrique. Elle a lutté pour la reconnaissance de l'égalité de droits des peuples, petits et grands. Elle a marqué sa sympathie agissante dans les assises internationales, à la défunte Société des Nations ou au sein des Nations Unies. Maintes résolutions qui constituent autant de jalons sur la route difficile et longue de l'émancipation coloniale portent la signature d'Haïti. On voudra bien me pardonner de rappeler ici l'initiative qu'avaient prise, au cours de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, les délégations d'Haïti, de l'Inde, du Liban, des Philippines et du Yémen pour présenter un projet de résolution^{4/} relatif à la réalisation de l'objectif d'autonomie ou d'indépendance dans les territoires sous tutelle. Il s'agissait, entre autres choses, de la fixation du délai dans lequel lesdits territoires devaient accéder à l'indépendance. Ce projet de résolution est devenu la résolution 558 (VI) de l'Assemblée générale, le 18 janvier 1952. En introduisant le projet de résolution, le représentant d'Haïti en expliquait ainsi l'économie:

"... ce que nous voulons... ce à quoi vise ce projet de résolution, c'est demander aux autorités administrantes de nous faire savoir quelles sont les mesures prises ou envisagées... qui ont pour but de mener, dans le minimum de temps possible, chacun des territoires sous tutelle au but ultime du système international de tutelle, c'est-à-dire le self-government ou l'indépendance.

"Nous désirerions aussi demander aux autorités administrantes de nous renseigner sur la façon dont les conditions particulières à chaque territoire et à ses populations, sur la façon dont les aspirations librement exprimées de celles-ci sont prises en considération.

"Nous voudrions encore demander aux autorités administrantes un autre renseignement: les dispositions actuelles des accords de tutelle sont-elles suffisantes pour tenir compte de tous les facteurs mentionnés plus haut?

"Nous voudrions enfin leur demander une dernière information relative à la période de temps que l'on estime nécessaire pour que chaque territoire sous tutelle atteigne au but final du système international de tutelle, c'est-à-dire à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance^{5/}..."

75. Ceci date de la sixième session de l'Assemblée générale, il y a 10 ans. Il n'est pas vain de dire que la résolution 558 (VI) a été le premier coup de bélier porté au rempart soigneusement gardé par les puissances coloniales pour prévenir l'intervention des Nations Unies dans toute décision relative à la date de l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires colonisés. On ne s'y est guère trompé à l'époque. Il n'est que de consulter les comptes rendus de la Quatrième Commission pour s'en rendre compte et voir l'acharnement mis par les puissances coloniales à combattre cette résolution. La satisfaction que la délégation d'Haïti garde du vote de l'Assemblée générale peut se résumer dans l'opinion exprimée par la délégation amie du Guatemala qui, avec bien d'autres, avait soutenu la résolution, savoir que c'était l'une des propositions les plus constructives qui eussent été adoptées à cette date-là. La délégation d'Haïti est donc à l'aise pour faire connaître sa position à l'égard du projet de résolution [A/L.410] qui nous est actuellement soumis.

76. Quand la Charte des Nations Unies a été rédigée, ses auteurs ont concentré leur attention, en matière coloniale, sur l'idée que l'autodétermination et l'indépendance des peuples seraient favorisées en tout premier lieu par l'institution et le fonctionnement du régime de tutelle. C'est pourquoi le Conseil de tutelle a été conçu comme un des organes principaux de l'Organisation. Tous les anciens territoires sous mandat, à l'exception du Sud-Ouest africain, ont passé sous ce régime; et à cet égard le régime a plus ou moins atteint son but, puisque huit des 11 territoires sous tutelle sont maintenant indépendants, et que les trois qui restent sont les territoires les plus petits et les moins peuplés.

77. Par contre, l'espoir d'utiliser le régime de tutelle comme l'instrument de l'évolution de tous les territoires coloniaux ne s'est pas réalisé, aucune puissance administrante n'ayant accepté de mettre volontairement ses colonies sous ce régime. Les Nations Unies ont alors essayé de favoriser l'évolution et la libération des colonies en utilisant la déclaration contenue au Chapitre XI de la Charte et en établissant [résolution 146 (II)] un comité chargé d'étudier les renseignements reçus par les Nations Unies sur la base de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 dans les domaines économique, social et de l'éducation. Un travail intelligent et une interprétation progressivement plus large de son mandat ont fait de ce comité un instrument utile pour maintenir l'attention des Nations Unies sur les territoires non autonomes et exercer une certaine pression sur les puissances administrantes. Malgré tout, l'influence de ce comité a été restreinte, du fait que le développement politique était soustrait à son examen et que les territoires coloniaux où se posaient quelques-uns des problèmes les plus irritants, tels que les colonies portugaises et la Rhodésie du Sud, échappaient à son attention.

78. Depuis s'est accentué le développement révolutionnaire et heureux des dernières années, au cours desquelles les faits ont devancé la lente action des Nations Unies. Les territoires coloniaux se sont libérés les uns après les autres — parfois par des procédés pacifiques, parfois par la violence — et de nouveaux pays souverains sont venus par dizaines prendre leur place légitime dans l'Organisation. Cette tempête a évidemment révolutionné les conceptions et les méthodes de travail en ce qui concerne les territoires encore dépendants. Il ne s'agissait plus d'établir de minutieux questionnaires pour les territoires sous tutelle ou d'éplucher les statistiques scolaires des territoires non autonomes. Le principe sacro-saint de la parité des membres, administrants et non administrants, dans les organes de tutelle et d'information perdait toute raison d'être.

79. Ce dont il était question, désormais, c'était de parfaire l'œuvre de décolonisation au plus vite, là où elle n'était pas encore achevée. C'est ce qu'ont énoncé l'historique résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960, contenant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux; qui marque un tournant dans l'évolution de la philosophie de l'anticolonialisme, et la résolution 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961, qui a ouvert la voie à une nouvelle action des Nations Unies. C'est à ce dernier stade que nous nous trouvons à présent et notre rôle est de mener à bonne fin et le plus rapidement possible la tâche nouvelle fixée par la Déclaration de 1960 sur la fin du colonialisme. Le but étant clair, il faut maintenant perfectionner les méthodes d'action.

80. Je voudrais ouvrir ici une petite parenthèse. Si les membres de l'Assemblée veulent bien se reporter à l'article 101 du règlement intérieur, ils y liront que, parmi les grandes commissions de l'Assemblée générale, la Quatrième Commission est connue sous le nom de "Commission de tutelle, y compris les territoires non autonomes". Ceci traduit bien l'esprit de 1945; le régime de tutelle devait être la pierre angulaire des questions coloniales. Et puis, comme, dès le début, des doutes s'étaient élevés sur l'extension et l'efficacité de ce régime, on a ajouté au nom de la Quatrième Commission les mots "y compris les territoires non autonomes", au mépris d'ailleurs de la langue française.

81. Cette dénomination ne paraît plus correspondre à la réalité. Ce que fait la Quatrième Commission maintenant, quand elle s'occupe du Sud-Ouest africain, des territoires portugais, et même du rapport du Conseil de tutelle, c'est de la décolonisation. Je voudrais donc proposer que le nom de la Quatrième Commission soit modifié, que la Quatrième Commission s'appelle désormais "Commission de la décolonisation". Je crois à la valeur du symbolisme et j'estime que cette décision soulignerait et rendrait claire pour tous l'importance que les Nations Unies attachent à cette question. Je voudrais croire que la légère modification à apporter à l'article 101 du règlement intérieur de l'Assemblée générale ne soulèvera pas de difficulté.

82. La délégation d'Haïti serait obligée à toutes les délégations de faire connaître leur avis à cet égard et, dans le cas où il serait favorable, de bien vouloir indiquer la procédure qui leur semblerait la plus pratique pour amender l'article 101. J'espère que le Président voudra bien nous guider à ce sujet. Si besoin en est, la délégation d'Haïti est toute disposée, avec le concours de délégations amies, à déposer un projet de résolution formel, de façon que, dès la prochaine session de l'Assemblée générale, la Quatrième Commission porte le nouveau nom de "Commission de la décolonisation".

83. Je reviens au projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée est saisie. La délégation d'Haïti approuve la prorogation du Comité spécial établi en vertu de la résolution 1654 (XVI) et l'élargissement de sa composition, comme il est actuellement proposé. Ma délégation approuve sans réserve l'idée que cet organe soit confirmé comme l'organe central de la décolonisation sous toutes ses formes, directement responsables devant l'Assemblée générale.

84. Le projet de résolution ne le dit pas de façon expresse, mais il semble aller de soi que tous les autres organes subsidiaires de l'Assemblée générale qui s'occupent actuellement des questions de décolonisation devraient disparaître. Ceci a été clairement et brillamment démontré par plusieurs représentants au cours du débat général, notamment par ceux de la Guinée [1169^{ème} séance] et de l'Irak [1170^{ème} séance].

85. Seul le Conseil de tutelle, dont le rôle actuel est d'ailleurs bien réduit, peut continuer à subsister, à défaut d'une modification de la Charte, en attendant que, par la force même des choses, il soit amené à se faire hara-kiri. L'Assemblée générale a été saisie d'un projet de résolution de la Quatrième Commission [voir A/5310, par. 27, projet de résolution III] visant à mettre fin à l'existence du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain; ainsi que d'un projet analogue [voir A/5349, par. 30, projet de résolution III] relatif au Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal. Ce sont là des décisions que la délégation d'Haïti trouve tout à fait judicieuses et qui sont dans la ligne même des mesures qui s'imposent si l'on veut rationaliser le fonctionnement de l'Organisation.

86. Il nous semble que l'on pourrait aller encore plus loin. L'Assemblée, nous semble-t-il, devrait aussi mettre fin à l'existence du Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola. Il n'est évidemment pas souhaitable de perpétuer la situation actuelle, où le problème de l'Angola fait l'objet de quatre débats différents: un double débat en séance plénière, à l'occasion de l'examen du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept^{6/} [A/5238] et du rapport du Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola [A/5286], et un double débat à la Quatrième Commission, à l'occasion de l'examen du rapport du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal [A/5160] et du rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes [A/5215].

87. Cette dispersion des débats est non seulement une perte de temps, mais une source de confusion et de contradiction dont seule la puissance coloniale peut bénéficier. Le seul argument avancé pour maintenir en vie le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola est le besoin d'un organe de liaison avec le Conseil de sécurité. Cet argument n'a guère de poids. En effet, le Comité des Dix-Sept peut directement appeler l'attention du Conseil de sécurité sur toute situation qui fait l'objet de son examen et, d'ailleurs, ceci est prévu dans le projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis.

88. D'autre part, le maintien d'un sous-comité pour l'Angola indépendamment du Comité élargi des Dix-Sept entraînerait nécessairement double emploi, même si le mandat de ce sous-comité était limité. Comment pourrait-il juger de la nécessité de saisir le Conseil de sécurité, si ce n'est sur la base d'un examen très étendu de la situation en Angola, de l'audition de pétitionnaires, de la visite des territoires limitrophes, voire d'une enquête en Angola même, c'est-à-dire toutes activités qui devraient être réservées au Comité élargi des Dix-Sept? Bien entendu, ce dernier comité pourrait désigner un sous-comité permanent pour l'Angola, s'il l'estimait nécessaire.

89. La délégation d'Haïti ne voit pas de logique à maintenir en vie le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. On pense justifier son maintien en le qualifiant de comité technique. Mais il ne remplit plus ce rôle. Si, dans le passé, il étudiait les questions sociales, économiques et celles intéressant l'éducation, le Comité des renseignements s'est donné pour tâche primordiale [voir par. 152 à 154 de son rapport (A/5215)] d'étudier le développement du pouvoir législatif et du pouvoir exécutif, l'introduction d'un système d'élections démocratiques, la liberté d'action des partis politiques, etc., c'est-à-dire les voies d'accès à l'indépendance que doit précisément surveiller le Comité des Dix-Sept.

90. Double emploi d'autant plus futile et désormais dangereux que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes ne dispose que de renseignements officiels reçus des puissances administrantes, qu'il n'a jamais accepté d'entendre des pétitionnaires et que, de plus, sa composition demeurerait paritaire (autant de membres non administrants que de membres administrants), alors que l'on a vu le Conseil de tutelle lui-même fonctionner pendant quelque temps avec une majorité de membres non administrants. Cet usage, qui est calqué sur la règle suivie au Conseil de tutelle, et qui avait pu avoir jadis sa justification, est maintenant périmé.

91. La suppression du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes préviendrait la répétition des procédures quelque peu absurdes qui ont été employées. En effet, si l'on a bien discuté en séance plénière du rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept, où il est fait état de la situation politique dans certains territoires comme le Bassoutoland, le Souaziland, la Guinée dite espagnole, etc., c'est devant la Quatrième Commission que les pétitionnaires en provenance de ces territoires se sont présentés pour exposer leurs points de vue sur cette même situation, mais dans le cadre artificiel et étroit de l'examen du rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes.

92. Puis on a assisté à un spectacle extraordinaire, qui a dû laisser perplexe le profane. Des appels réitérés, presque des supplications, ont été adressés aux membres de la Quatrième Commission par des personnes qui voulaient prendre part au débat général sur plusieurs points groupés de l'ordre du jour n'ayant aucune relation directe avec l'audition des pétitionnaires, et, ce qui est encore plus grave, qui voulaient présenter des projets de résolution dont la soumission était retardée parce qu'on était paralysé par le débat qui se poursuivait en séance plénière sur le rapport du Comité des Dix-Sept.

93. Bien entendu, la disparition éventuelle du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes ne changerait rien à la procédure prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Les renseignements continueraient d'être fournis au Secrétaire général par les puissances administrantes. Ils seraient analysés et résumés par le Secrétaire général comme par le passé, et cette documentation serait mise à la disposition du Comité élargi des Dix-Sept. Une fois toutes les activités sur la décolonisation centralisées entre les mains de ce dernier comité, rien n'empêcherait celui-ci d'organiser son travail par la voie de sous-comités spécialisés suivant les territoires étudiés, de manière à pouvoir examiner de pair, avec célérité et efficacité, un grand nombre de situations différentes.

94. La délégation d'Haïti ne verrait aucune objection à autoriser — si besoin en était — le Comité des Dix-Sept à désigner également dans ses sous-comités des Membres de l'ONU qui ne feraient pas partie du Comité élargi. L'essentiel est que le travail de tous les sous-comités soit coordonné et soit sous l'autorité directe et unique du Comité élargi qui deviendrait, pour ainsi dire, un nouvel organe principal des Nations Unies. Cela permettrait d'éviter à l'avenir les doubles et triples emplois, les rapports multiples et mal coordonnés, les discussions répétées et séparées sur les mêmes questions, génératrices d'une profonde apathie.

95. Telles sont les quelques idées qu'a désiré exposer la délégation d'Haïti, les quelques suggestions qu'elle a voulu livrer à l'appréciation bienveillante de l'Assemblée, à l'occasion de l'examen du projet de résolution [A/L.410] portant sur l'œuvre du Comité spécial chargé de veiller à l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960. Elle les présente dans l'esprit de la collaboration franche et loyale qui a toujours guidé ses activités aux Nations Unies.

^{6/} Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

96. M. HELEN (Suède) [traduit de l'anglais]: Maintenant que nous sommes saisis du projet de résolution A/L.410 présenté par de nombreux Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie, il convient sans doute de l'examiner à la lumière de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)] présentée par les Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie qui étaient alors au nombre de 43 et que l'Assemblée a adoptée à une majorité écrasante il y a deux ans.

97. La délégation suédoise avait voté pour la Déclaration parce qu'elle avait trouvé que les idées fondamentales qui y étaient exprimées étaient saines et utiles et qu'elle les estimait conformes aux dispositions de la Charte relatives au principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Ce principe n'est d'ailleurs pas une innovation, une invention des Nations Unies, car il est aussi ancien que l'histoire de l'homme civilisé. Toutefois, il a revêtu un caractère plus urgent encore depuis quelques années. Notre opinion sur cette grande question a été exprimée devant l'Assemblée générale le 14 décembre 1960 dans les termes suivants:

"Le gouvernement et le peuple suédois ont suivi avec un intérêt soutenu et avec la plus vive sympathie le processus historique grâce auquel la grande majorité des peuples autrefois non autonomes jouissent désormais de cet immense bienfait qu'est la liberté nationale. Si elle contribue à maintenir le désir de liberté vivace dans l'esprit des hommes du monde entier, la Déclaration aura servi un but utile." [946ème séance, par. 11.]

Il semble bien certain que cette cause a vraiment été servie par la Déclaration dans les deux années écoulées depuis son adoption, deux années de décolonisation intense qui ont amené plusieurs nouveaux Membres à l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

98. L'opinion publique en Suède, qui se manifeste par la voix des représentants de nos partis politiques et de nos grands syndicats ainsi que par celle de beaucoup de nos écrivains et journalistes les plus éminents, s'intéresse vraiment à ce qui se passe dans les territoires encore sous domination coloniale ainsi que dans ceux qui bénéficient maintenant du régime pour lequel ils ont lutté.

99. Cette opinion se reflète claire et vigoureuse dans l'attitude de la Suède en tant que nation et que Membre actif de l'Organisation. Nous sommes en faveur d'une décolonisation rapide, énergique et réaliste. La Suède est fière d'avoir soutenu la Déclaration dès le début. Aussi le Gouvernement suédois est-il toujours partisan des idées fondamentales qui y sont contenues et désireux de leur voir atteindre leur plein développement dans le projet de résolution A/L.410.

100. Néanmoins, ma délégation éprouve quelques doutes au sujet de certaines parties du projet de résolution, en particulier les paragraphes 2 et 8 du dispositif. Je soulignerai que c'est avant tout en raison de considérations d'ordre pratique.

101. Il est de l'intérêt de tous, c'est-à-dire des peuples non autonomes eux-mêmes, des puissances métropolitaines et des Nations Unies, que le passage de l'état de dépendance à celui de souveraineté s'effectue autant que possible dans l'ordre et la paix. La Déclaration contient un paragraphe affirmant que le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance. Nous l'approuvons; rien ne doit être prétexte à refuser à des peuples la liberté qu'ils désirent.

102. Cependant, nous sommes convaincus que le processus de décolonisation sera favorisé le plus efficacement et que les nations nouvelles elles-mêmes tireront le plus grand profit si un certain équilibre est maintenu entre la volonté de liberté d'un pays neuf et la possibilité pratique d'exercer cette liberté sans qu'elle soit mise en danger. Cet équilibre n'est peut-être pas toujours réalisable, mais il vaut la peine d'essayer d'y parvenir.

103. Puisque telle est notre conviction, nous estimons nécessaire de souligner, comme nous l'avons fait auparavant et jusque-là sans être en contradiction avec l'opinion exprimée par de nombreux Etats africains eux-mêmes, qu'il n'est pas réaliste que l'Assemblée fixe une date limite générale établie sur une base théorique pour l'accession à l'indépendance de tous les territoires encore dépendants. Nous ne pouvons nous cacher que le passage trop rapide du statut colonial à l'indépendance peut entraîner de graves difficultés pour la population même du territoire intéressé.

104. La Charte des Nations Unies en tient compte elle-même tant au Chapitre XI qui traite des territoires non autonomes qu'au Chapitre XII qui traite des territoires sous tutelle. L'alinéa b de l'Article 73 fait aux puissances administrantes un devoir de développer la capacité des populations de ces territoires à s'administrer elles-mêmes et de les aider dans le développement progressif de leurs libres institutions "dans la mesure appropriée aux conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations et à leurs degrés variables de développement". La disposition correspondante pour les territoires sous tutelle est l'alinéa b de l'Article 76, selon lequel aussi il faut tenir compte des conditions particulières à chaque territoire et à ses populations.

105. La fixation d'une date limite ou de dates limites plus ou moins automatiquement valables pour les différents territoires, comme le représentant de l'Indonésie vient de l'envisager dans son intervention, ne semble pas permettre la grande souplesse que la Charte, à bon escient à notre avis, présuppose. Elle ne semble pas tenir compte non plus du fait que dans la plupart des cas le passage à l'indépendance a été l'heureux aboutissement de négociations entre la puissance métropolitaine et les chefs élus des partis politiques du territoire. Le projet de résolution invite, au paragraphe 5 du dispositif, les puissances administrantes à respecter les dirigeants légitimes des partis politiques des populations intéressées et leurs activités politiques. Serait-il alors vraiment sage que les Nations Unies, en fixant une date limite générale, restreignent la possibilité qu'ont ces dirigeants de choisir le moment où il leur semblera le plus avantageux d'entamer les négociations qui donneront le jour à leur nation?

106. L'Assemblée générale peut-elle être absolument sûre à sa dix-huitième session que, si elle fixe une fois pour toutes cette date limite pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration, aucun territoire dépendant n'en concevra pas un espoir déraisonnable d'une prompte autodétermination?

107. Comment pouvons-nous être sûrs, d'autre part, qu'aucun territoire ne sera omis? Le projet de résolution vise l'ensemble des territoires mentionnés au paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1514 (XV). Qui établira la liste définitive de ces territoires? La sagesse de l'Assemblée est certainement grande, mais l'est-elle assez pour une pareille tâche? J'en doute.

108. Les méthodes de travail du Comité spécial ont été controversées pendant la discussion générale sur la question. Néanmoins, les auteurs du projet de résolution ont décidé d'exprimer dans la résolution non seulement notre reconnaissance au Comité spécial, mais aussi leur propre opinion sur l'utilité des méthodes et des procédures que le Comité spécial a élaborées au cours de ses travaux. Je ne vois pas comment nous pourrions, à l'Assemblée générale, après avoir étudié le rapport et assisté à la discussion générale dont il a fait l'objet, avoir une opinion bien fondée et ferme sur un point qui est l'objet d'une controverse entre les membres du Comité eux-mêmes.

109. D'après un des alinéas du préambule du projet de résolution, l'Assemblée générale réaffirmerait sa conviction que tout retard dans l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance a créé ou créerait — la rédaction est un peu ambiguë — "des situations de plus en plus dangereuses qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales". Aux termes du paragraphe 8, l'Assemblée générale inviterait en outre le Comité élargi "à informer le Conseil de sécurité de tous faits survenus dans ces territoires, qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales".

110. Mon gouvernement ne peut qu'approuver le principe selon lequel des situations qui menacent ou qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales doivent être portées à l'attention du Conseil de sécurité, puisque c'est l'organe qui, en vertu de l'Article 24 de la Charte, a la responsabilité principale du maintien de la paix et de la sécurité, et qui en a en fait le pouvoir principal. Cependant, il faut se garder d'oublier que, quelle que soit la façon dont une situation puisse être caractérisée par l'Assemblée générale ou un de ses organes subsidiaires, c'est au Conseil de sécurité lui-même qu'il appartient de déterminer en toute indépendance la nature de la situation devant laquelle il se trouve et les mesures qu'il juge approprié et nécessaire de prendre.

111. Malgré les questions, les réserves et les observations qui viennent d'être exprimées, la délégation suédoise estime que le projet de résolution représente à beaucoup d'égards une utile contribution à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Nous estimons que les puissances métropolitaines qui vivent encore le drame de la décolonisation doivent être mises au fait de l'opinion mondiale telle qu'elle ressort des résolutions des Nations Unies. Cette opinion qui est la nôtre s'applique tout autant aux puissances métropolitaines dont le mécanisme démocratique est souvent critiqué au cours de débats publics dans notre pays qu'aux puissances dont les traditions et l'honnêteté des intentions sont depuis longtemps pour nous un sujet d'admiration. La délégation suédoise est fermement convaincue que certaines des puissances administrantes font de grands efforts en vue d'une décolonisation rapide et réaliste. Néanmoins, il serait bon à notre avis que toutes les puissances administrantes prennent conscience de l'opinion publique mondiale au sujet de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration.

112. La délégation de la Suède émettra ses votes conformément aux opinions qu'elle vient d'énoncer dans sa délégation.

113. M. GREN (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: La délégation de l'Union soviétique apprécie hautement le fait que le projet de résolution [A/L.410] soumis à notre examen est le résultat des longues discussions et du labeur d'un groupe important de signataires. Nous estimons devoir leur exprimer notre reconnaissance pour le travail accompli. Les auteurs de ce projet de résolution se sont fondés sur les objectifs et les principes de la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV).

114. On le sait, la résolution 1514 (XV) a été adoptée à l'unanimité. Personne n'y a fait opposition. Cette résolution proclamait solennellement la nécessité absolue de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

115. Depuis l'adoption de cette déclaration historique, deux années se sont écoulées. L'an dernier, lorsque a été adoptée la résolution 1654 (XVI) sur l'application de la Déclaration, de nombreuses délégations ont proposé, on le sait, de fixer des dates limites pour la liquidation du colonialisme. A la présente session, les exigences touchant la fixation de ces dates limites se sont faites plus pressantes et, comme on le sait, une proposition formelle a été présentée aux termes de laquelle la date limite pour la décolonisation serait fixée au 24 octobre 1963, date de la "Journée des Nations Unies".

116. La délégation soviétique attache une grande importance au règlement de cette question des dates limites. A notre avis, mieux vaudrait qu'elles soient plus explicitement énoncées dans le texte du projet de résolution et qu'une date définitive soit fixée pour la liquidation du colonialisme. Il en résulterait que le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration aurait des directives plus précises. Il serait plus juste que la date précise de la décolonisation soit fixée dans la résolution elle-même plutôt que de charger de cette tâche le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

117. La délégation soviétique estime qu'il serait juste que le projet de résolution soumis présentement à notre examen charge le Comité spécial de tenir le Conseil de sécurité au courant de tous faits survenant dans les territoires considérés, et qui risqueraient de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales.

118. Il y a longtemps que la nécessité s'impose de donner ce pouvoir au Comité spécial car la situation dans divers territoires est telle qu'elle devient une réelle menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales; c'est ce que reconnaissent plusieurs projets de résolution soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée ou déjà adoptés par elle.

119. D'autre part, le projet de résolution des 22 puissances présente, quant à nous, un certain nombre de points faibles. Nous relevons d'abord que ce projet ne dit rien d'une obligation pour les puissances administrantes de retirer leurs forces et leurs missions militaires et d'éliminer leurs bases militaires des territoires dépendants.

120. Dans ce projet ne figure pas non plus un paragraphe invitant les Etats Membres de l'Organisation qui apportent une aide aux puissances coloniales à cesser immédiatement de fournir cette aide, laquelle peut être utilisée à des fins militaires et à des mesures de répression contre les populations de ces territoires.

121. Au stade actuel, alors que les populations des territoires coloniaux exigent que leur soit transférée l'autorité complète, il importe au plus haut point de souligner dans ce projet de résolution la nécessité d'assurer à ces populations la possibilité de jouir en fait de toutes les libertés et droits démocratiques et d'organiser des élections au suffrage universel et direct.

122. De plus, il serait très utile de noter dans le projet de résolution la nécessité d'abroger tout accord avec lesdits territoires qui pourrait entraîner directement ou indirectement une limitation de la souveraineté des futurs Etats indépendants ou qui viserait à assurer des droits particuliers et des privilèges aux métropoles, à leurs citoyens et à leurs entreprises, la nécessité d'abroger tout acte législatif adopté précédemment qui aurait pour effet d'assurer l'intégration de tel ou tel territoire ou de telles parties de ces territoires aux pays de la métropole, et la nécessité du retour aux populations autochtones de toutes les terres dont, pour une raison ou pour une autre, elles auraient été dépossédées.

123. Etant donné les lacunes précitées, nous estimons que le projet de résolution des 22 puissances ne cadre pas entièrement avec les tâches qui incombent actuellement aux Nations Unies en ce qui concerne la liquidation du système colonial.

124. Nous avons déjà abordé l'étape d'extirpation des séquelles du honteux système colonial; plus vite nous y mettrons fin, moins les peuples coloniaux auront à souffrir et plus grandes seront les possibilités offertes pour affermir la paix dans le monde.

125. C'est pourquoi la délégation soviétique préférerait voir figurer dans le projet de résolution des 22 puissances les considérations que nous venons de mentionner; néanmoins, dans l'ensemble, nous approuvons le projet de résolution figurant dans le document A/L.410 et présenté par les 22 puissances, encore que nous le considérons comme insuffisant et incomplet.

126. Pour ce qui est des travaux du Comité spécial lui-même, la délégation soviétique voudrait faire observer, en tant qu'élément positif, que, d'après le projet de résolution, l'Assemblée générale exprime sa reconnaissance audit Comité pour le travail accompli en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et prend note avec satisfaction des méthodes et des procédures que le Comité a adoptées pour s'acquitter de ses fonctions.

127. Une telle constatation reflète l'avis dominant qui a été exprimé au cours de la discussion du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238].

128. Etant donné que l'ampleur et la complexité des travaux du Comité spécial s'accroissent, le projet de résolution prévoit l'élargissement de sa composition en lui adjoignant sept nouveaux membres. Nous voudrions souligner à ce sujet que, si l'Assemblée générale décide d'élargir la composition du Comité spécial, toute mesure de cette nature doit être effectuée sur la même base que celle qui a été adoptée lors de la création du Comité. Beaucoup d'orateurs qui sont intervenus dans la discussion ont exprimé le même souhait et cette nécessité a été largement reconnue.

129. Nous soulignons particulièrement ce point parce que le Comité spécial, comme on peut le voir dans le projet de résolution, aborde l'étape décisive des travaux qui lui sont confiés par la résolution 1654 (XVI) et par la présente résolution.

130. Dans ces conditions, il est très important de s'en tenir à la représentation équitable des régions géographiques déjà observée dans la composition du Comité spécial et de veiller à ce que soient représentés parmi les nouveaux membres tous les groupements existant à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Compte tenu de ce principe, nous sommes disposés à appuyer les propositions des signataires du projet de résolution sur l'élargissement de la composition du Comité spécial.

131. Ces observations prises en considération, nous appuierons le projet de résolution des 22 puissances du groupe des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie et nous voterons en sa faveur.

M. Zafrulla Khan (Pakistan) reprend la présidence.

132. M. BELAUNDE (Pérou) [traduit de l'espagnol]: En diverses occasions, la délégation du Pérou a exprimé avec force et clarté sa sympathie pour toutes les mesures qui tendent à accélérer le mouvement d'émancipation des pays qui ont été soumis à la domination coloniale. Nous avons considéré ce mouvement d'émancipation comme une des caractéristiques de l'époque présente ainsi qu'une des tâches qui doivent être considérées avec le plus de sympathie et auxquelles les Nations Unies doivent apporter leur totale collaboration. Notre pensée peut se résumer en une formule: le fait le plus marquant du XIX^{ème} siècle a été l'accession à l'indépendance des pays d'Amérique; le fait le plus marquant du XX^{ème} siècle est l'accession à l'indépendance des nouveaux pays d'Asie et d'Afrique. C'est pour cette raison que nous voyons avec une profonde sympathie et avec un plein sentiment de solidarité l'indépendance des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie.

133. Il y a plus; il y a une tradition culturelle qui remonte aux commencements de notre vie spirituelle. Avec la découverte de l'Amérique apparaissent les principes du droit international formulés par Vitoria, et Vitoria est la première autorité philosophique et juridique qui ait énoncé de la manière la plus limpide le principe de la libre détermination, de l'autonomie, de l'intangibilité du droit de tous les peuples de la terre à se gouverner eux-mêmes. C'est dans cet esprit que la délégation du Pérou a envisagé l'œuvre confiée au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept et, naturellement, nous devons appuyer et applaudir la tâche accomplie.

134. En ce qui concerne ce grand mouvement d'émancipation, il n'est pas superflu d'établir un parallèle avec le nôtre. Le mouvement de libération de l'Amérique latine a connu d'énormes difficultés; il s'est consolidé à une époque où l'Angleterre, qui sympathisait avec notre indépendance, s'est vue entraînée par l'invasion napoléonienne de l'Espagne à prendre une position d'alliée de l'empire espagnol, et les Etats-Unis eux-mêmes, qui auraient pu avoir eux aussi une bienveillance platonique pour notre indépendance, ont été retenus par les négociations pour l'acquisition des deux Florides. Notre indépendance s'est faite, pour citer Bolivar, presque contre la volonté de l'univers.

135. Par bonheur pour nos frères d'Asie et d'Afrique, leur mouvement d'émancipation, bien qu'il ait été dans de nombreux cas le résultat d'une lutte héroïque que nous admirons et que nous avons suivie avec une solidarité profonde, s'est effectué en grande partie avec la coopération des grandes puissances coloniales grâce à un changement d'attitude que l'humanité doit applaudir, changement qui leur impose précisément la continuation de leur œuvre et une coopération pleine et désintéressée avec les nouveaux pays. Mais il est une chose plus avantageuse encore pour le mouvement d'émancipation des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, c'est l'existence des Nations Unies.

136. A notre époque se dessinait à peine une entente entre les Etats-Unis et l'Angleterre contre ce que nous pourrions appeler le noyau des puissances réactionnaires ou extrêmement conservatrices d'Europe, mais il n'y avait pas d'institution qui aurait pu encourager et aider les pays émancipés et accélérer le processus d'émancipation de ceux qui n'avaient pas encore atteint l'indépendance.

137. L'existence des Nations Unies est, en ce moment, le grand avantage de nos frères d'Afrique et d'Asie qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance et que nous avons reçus si cordialement comme Membres de cette institution, ainsi que de ceux qui sont à la veille d'y accéder et qui sont appelés à entrer à l'Organisation. C'est pourquoi la délégation du Pérou a pris dès le début un intérêt particulier à ce qu'en toute action et en toute circonstance les Nations Unies témoignent que l'universalité est leur élément essentiel. Cette universalité nous permet, comme elle nous a permis, d'intégrer à la communauté internationale, de plein droit, les nouveaux pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Nous espérons sincèrement achever cette œuvre d'intégration par l'entrée des autres pays dont nous favorisons l'indépendance.

138. Telle étant l'attitude de la délégation péruvienne, pleinement solidaire des deux représentants du Pérou au Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, l'Assemblée comprendra que nous voyions avec sympathie l'œuvre qui a été accomplie et que nous approuvions d'une manière générale le projet de résolution A/L.410 dont nous sommes saisis.

139. Néanmoins, s'agissant de certains mots ou expressions figurant dans le projet de résolution, je dois dire en toute franchise que nous qui aimons les Nations Unies nous avons à cœur qu'aucune résolution ne puisse être l'objet de critiques faute d'employer le terme exact ou l'expression juste et adéquate. Il nous semble que nous devons éviter tout ce qui est ou implique une exagération, une imprécision ou une attitude que la prudence déconseillerait peut-être. C'est dans ce sens que, respectueusement et sans présenter d'amendement, je dois dire que ma délégation aurait préféré voir parler, par exemple, de tout retard dans l'indépendance comme "pouvant créer" et non comme "créant" des situations dangereuses, ce qui suppose l'affirmation catégorique de quelque chose qui est en cours de réalisation, tandis que les termes "pouvant créer" signifient que tout retard créerait éventuellement des situations dangereuses.

140. De même, parmi les pays d'Amérique latine, nous qui nous unissons si cordialement à nos frères d'Afrique et d'Asie dans leur mouvement d'émancipation, nous considérons que l'expression "une date limite appropriée", dans le préambule et dans le dispositif, est un peu vague et qu'il aurait mieux valu employer l'expression "des dates limites approchées" ou peut-être ne pas fixer une date de façon automatique et mécanique lorsqu'il s'agit d'un processus qui peut exiger, disons-le, une assistance plus ou moins longue et dont le cours d'accomplissement et d'arrivée à maturité ne peut être fixé d'avance. Mais ces réserves que me fait faire, dans un esprit de sincérité absolue, mon souci de perfection et de critique constructive, ces réserves ne font dévier en rien mon adhésion enthousiaste à l'esprit et dans l'ensemble à la lettre du projet de résolution auquel le Pérou donnera son vote affirmatif.

141. Notre désir est que le mouvement d'émancipation se maintienne dans le cadre des dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, avec une fidélité absolue à l'esprit qui l'inspire et le meut, à l'abri de la guerre froide, avec ce caractère noble et désintéressé, comme la plus grande manifestation de cet esprit de liberté qui anime en réalité le progrès de l'homme. Je suis persuadé que mes paroles trouveront un écho dans tous les organes des Nations Unies parce qu'en réalité il ne suffit pas que les peuples accèdent à la liberté. Ils y viennent dans des situations économiques difficiles; ils y viennent souvent après avoir traversé des périodes de guerre qui ont laissé des plaies, des souffrances et des conséquences défavorables, et pour cela les Nations Unies ont, je l'affirme ici sincèrement, un champ d'action admirable pour contribuer par leur assistance technique et économique à la consolidation de l'indépendance des pays qui y ont accédé et à l'émancipation de ceux qui aspirent encore à atteindre la liberté. C'est la grande tâche des Nations Unies, à laquelle nous devons tous contribuer avec nos vœux et nos applaudissements.

142. M. LUQMAN (Mauritanie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je vais parler du document A/L.410 dont nous sommes saisis.

143. Ce serait être très déloyal envers notre propre conscience que de retarder l'heure de la liberté des peuples et des nations. Essayons d'être à la hauteur des circonstances qui nous appellent à vivre dans un monde changeant, absolument différent de ce qu'il était hier.

144. Je rappelle la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Il ressort du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238] que certaines des puissances qui administrent encore des territoires dépendants n'ont pas encore été capables de considérer l'ensemble du problème comme elles l'auraient dû. Nous demandons à ces pays de changer leur attitude devant cette question et de coopérer avec nous à l'émancipation de la partie de l'humanité qui subit encore le joug colonial.

145. Le projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis prouve clairement et complètement que nous avons encore beaucoup à faire pour mettre en œuvre les principes de la Charte, comme nous en avons le devoir. La portée du projet de résolution est double. Premièrement, la liberté des peuples intéressés doit être acquise par les efforts des Nations Unies. Deuxièmement, les mesures à cet effet doivent être prises rapidement, énergiquement et sans délai.

146. Le paragraphe 5 du dispositif du projet de résolution s'adresse aux puissances administrantes qui ont recours aux armes pour réprimer les mouvements de libération dans les territoires considérés et demande qu'il soit mis fin à l'emploi de la force.

Le paragraphe 6 prie les puissances intéressées de prendre des mesures immédiates pour préparer les territoires et peuples coloniaux à accéder sans retard à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance. Les auteurs du projet de résolution visent aussi à contribuer à accélérer le processus d'autodétermination et de décolonisation.

147. On a proposé d'adjoindre sept membres au Comité spécial. Nous pensons que la tâche du Comité spécial en sera très probablement facilitée, ainsi que l'application de la Déclaration sur l'émancipation des peuples et des territoires soumis au joug colonial.

148. Ma délégation est un des auteurs du projet de résolution et elle invite instamment tous les Membres à voter en sa faveur.

149. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je rappelle aux représentants qu'à l'ouverture de la séance de cet après-midi, à 15 heures, l'Assemblée entendra une allocution de S. E. le Président du Chili. En conséquence, je les prie d'être ponctuels.

La séance est levée à 13 h 5.

Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, et, d'autre part, la fixation d'une date limite pour l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les pays et à tous les peuples coloniaux.

45. Ma délégation est toujours en faveur de l'accélération des travaux du Comité spécial, car le gouvernement et le peuple cambodgiens désirent voir mettre fin, dans les plus brefs délais, à toutes les formes du colonialisme et de la domination étrangère. C'est dans ce sens qu'elle a présenté certaines observations au cours de son intervention du 27 novembre dernier [1177^{ème} séance]. Parlant du nombre des membres du Comité spécial, la délégation cambodgienne a exprimé la crainte qu'une augmentation trop considérable de ce nombre ne soit de nature à entraver l'accélération des travaux.

46. En ce qui concerne la fixation d'une date limite pour l'ensemble des territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, ma délégation avait dit qu'elle n'était pas contre ce principe, mais, ayant à l'esprit le paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1514 (XV), nous pensons qu'une date fixe pourrait être ou trop rapprochée ou trop éloignée étant donné le grand nombre de situations plus ou moins différentes.

47. Nous notons, cependant, que les paragraphes du projet de résolution qui correspondent à cet aspect de la question tiennent compte, d'une part, du désir de voir se terminer la complète application de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation et, d'autre part, de la nécessité de laisser au Comité spécial la possibilité d'examiner toutes les situations avant de présenter ses recommandations sur une date limite d'application générale.

48. Je voudrais signaler, par ailleurs, à propos du rapport du Secrétaire général [A/C.5/962] relatif aux incidences financières du projet de résolution, que des économies seront probablement réalisées du fait de la dissolution éventuelle du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain et du Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal.

49. En conclusion, nonobstant les observations qu'elle vient de formuler en toute objectivité, ma délégation votera en faveur du projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée est saisie.

50. M. BINGHAM (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je désire d'abord exprimer, au nom de ma délégation, notre reconnaissance pour les grands efforts qu'ont faits, nous le savons, les rédacteurs du projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis [A/L.410 et Add.1]. Nous savons que ce texte a exigé beaucoup de travail et d'esprit de compromis de la part des uns et des autres et nous félicitons particulièrement le Président d'avoir rapproché bien des avis divers et essayé de les concilier. Nous savons que dans cette tâche les négociateurs ont rencontré de nombreuses difficultés. Toutefois, je tiens à déclarer que ma délégation est déçue à certains égards par le projet de résolution. D'abord, aucun effort n'a été fait pour corriger ou pour tenter de corriger certains défauts des méthodes de travail du Comité spécial, dont nous avons parlé dans notre déclaration dans la discussion générale [1171^{ème} séance]. Aucun effort n'a été fait non plus pour essayer d'éliminer la tendance à la guerre froide au sein du Comité, ce dont nous avons parlé aussi dans la discussion générale.

51. La difficulté principale que nous voyons dans ce projet de résolution est la mention, au dernier alinéa du préambule et à l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8,

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite*)

42. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous allons reprendre l'examen du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238]. L'Assemblée est saisie d'un projet de résolution présenté par 34 puissances [A/L.410 et Add.1].

43. Je donne la parole aux représentants qui désirent expliquer leurs votes.

44. M. SONN VOEUNSAI (Cambodge): Ma délégation se prononcera en faveur du projet qui nous est soumis [A/L.410 et Add.1], où les dispositions essentielles concernant l'œuvre de décolonisation entreprise par les Nations Unies se trouvent mentionnées. Mais elle ne peut s'empêcher de manifester ses regrets de ne pouvoir se joindre aux auteurs, comme elle l'avait fait deux années de suite pour les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI). Cette non-participation, qui ne saurait être interprétée comme une réprobation tacite, est motivée par des considérations d'ordre pratique concernant, d'une part, le nombre des membres du de la fixation d'une date limite pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les territoires.

*Réprise des débats de la 1192^{ème} séance.

52. Il nous semble qu'il y a de nombreux arguments contre une telle idée et nous n'avons entendu aucun argument convaincant en sa faveur. J'y reviendrai dans un moment. Auparavant, je mentionnerai brièvement certains autres points du projet de résolution sur lesquels nous éprouvons quelques difficultés.

53. D'abord, au paragraphe 2, ma délégation suppose que les méthodes et les procédures mentionnées comme ayant été adoptées par le Comité sont celles qui sont décrites au paragraphe 112 du chapitre premier du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5238]. Nous aurions toutefois préféré que la résolution le dise explicitement.

54. De même, en ce qui concerne le paragraphe 6, nous interprétons ce paragraphe comme comprenant l'idée de l'exercice du droit à la libre détermination dans toutes ses diverses manifestations. Nous aurions souhaité que ce paragraphe fût aussi complet que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance [résolution 1514 (XV)] l'est elle-même sur ce point.

55. Pour ce qui est du paragraphe 7, ma délégation estime qu'un élargissement de la composition du Comité spécial n'est pas nécessaire, ni même peut-être souhaitable. Nous craignons qu'il ne devienne ainsi trop nombreux et peu maniable. Toutefois, si l'on devait élargir sa composition, nous préfererions qu'on ne dépasse pas le chiffre de quatre nouveaux membres.

56. Quant à la répartition des sièges, s'il doit y avoir de nouveaux membres, nous nous en remettons volontiers au Président de l'Assemblée. Nous présumons, bien entendu, qu'il procédera à une sage et large consultation des membres de l'Assemblée générale. Je suis obligé de dire, cependant, que nous ne pourrions considérer comme équitable le genre de répartition des sièges qu'a suggéré le représentant de l'Indonésie lorsqu'il a présenté le projet de résolution au nom des auteurs.

57. En ce qui concerne l'alinéa c du paragraphe 8, ma délégation doute qu'il soit sage d'adopter un alinéa qui invite le Comité spécial à présenter à l'Assemblée générale l'an prochain un rapport complet contenant ses suggestions et ses recommandations sur l'ensemble des territoires mentionnés au paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration relative à l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. D'abord, nous craignons que, du fait qu'il y est question non de territoires déterminés mais de catégories de territoires, un temps précieux ne soit perdu au Comité spécial simplement pour déterminer quels territoires relèvent du paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration. Même si cette tâche pouvait être accomplie, nous pensons qu'il serait pratiquement impossible, étant donné le temps dont on disposera, de présenter à l'Assemblée un rapport suffisamment complet traitant de l'ensemble des territoires en question en les examinant un par un.

58. Je reviens maintenant à la question des dates limites, que nous considérons comme le défaut fondamental du projet de résolution tel qu'il nous est présenté. Je répéterai brièvement les considérations qui, à notre avis, militent contre l'idée d'une date limite générale.

59. Avant tout, il nous semble que cette idée représente une simplification excessive de ce qui est un problème fondamentalement très complexe, dont les nombreux aspects varient dans chaque cas. Pour cette raison, il nous paraît impossible de fixer un délai ou une date limite qui puisse être applicable pour tous les territoires. En fait, nous estimons que toute tentative de fixer une telle date limite serait si dépourvue de réalisme qu'elle jetterait effectivement le discrédit sur les Nations Unies elles-mêmes et, particulièrement, sur les efforts généralement louables qu'elles accomplissent dans le domaine de la décolonisation.

60. Quelle date limite, je vous le demande, envisagerait-on que le Comité spécial puisse fixer? S'agirait-il d'un délai de plusieurs années? Je me rappelle qu'à la seizième session [1050ème séance] le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la Nigéria avait suggéré 1970 comme date limite pour l'accession à l'indépendance de tous les territoires d'Afrique. Mais, si je me souviens bien, cette suggestion n'a pas recueilli beaucoup d'approbations. Le sentiment général a été que la fixation d'une date aussi lointaine pourrait en fait servir d'excuse pour le retard apporté à l'octroi de la libre détermination et de l'indépendance. Inversement, envisagerait-on de fixer une date limite rapprochée, 1963 par exemple, comme l'a suggéré à cette tribune, plus tôt dans le cours de la session, un très distingué représentant? Selon moi, un tel délai serait absolument chimérique et il n'y aurait pas un seul représentant dans cette salle qui pourrait réellement supposer un seul instant que tous les territoires pourraient accéder à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance dès 1963 ou dans l'avenir immédiat. Tenter de fixer une date de ce genre, ou la fixer effectivement, reviendrait à induire tragiquement en erreur les populations des territoires intéressés et à susciter en elles des espoirs démesurés que ne justifieraient en aucune façon les possibilités d'aboutir à un tel résultat. Puis-je demander ce qui arriverait si la date fixée était dépassée sans que l'indépendance fût réalisée? Les Nations Unies fixeraient-elles une nouvelle date et, lorsque celle-ci serait passée, encore une autre date? Ce serait, à mon avis, couvrir l'Organisation de ridicule.

61. D'autre part, on a dit que la fixation d'une date limite accélérerait le processus de décolonisation, l'octroi de la libre détermination et de l'indépendance. Je poserai alors cette question: De quelle manière précise une telle date serait-elle utile? Dans quel territoire la fixation d'une date limite générale accélérerait-elle la réalisation de l'indépendance? Au contraire, la fixation d'une date limite générale pourrait fort bien entraver ce processus et, comme on dit, aller à l'encontre du but visé.

62. Peut-être fera-t-on observer que le projet de résolution ne charge pas le Comité spécial de fixer une telle date limite générale. Cependant, il me semble, lorsque je confronte le dernier alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, que le projet de résolution, pris dans son ensemble, doit être interprété comme donnant cette instruction au Comité spécial. Il est peut-être exact que, de ces deux dispositions, l'alinéa susvisé du préambule soit le plus regrettable. En tout cas, leur combinaison aboutit à un résultat tout à fait inacceptable pour ma délégation. Ce serait charger d'une tâche impossible le Comité spécial qui a des travaux si importants à accomplir. Le Comité spécial perdrait, je le crains, une bonne partie de son temps limité à disputer d'un problème réellement insoluble: celui de la fixation d'une date limite générale.

63. Pour ces motifs, ma délégation demande formellement un vote séparé sur le dernier alinéa du préambule ainsi que sur la dernière ligne de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8: "y compris des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite appropriée".

64. Pour terminer, j'adresserai un appel aux membres de l'Assemblée. Quelques délégations peu nombreuses ont lutté très âprement pour faire introduire cette notion de date limite dans le projet de résolution; en disant cela, je pense à une certaine délégation en particulier. En agissant ainsi, ces délégations sont parfaitement dans leur droit et je tiens à rendre hommage au talent et à la ténacité qu'elles ont mis à lutter pour cette idée à chaque étape du processus d'élaboration et de présentation du projet de résolution. Les chefs de gouvernement ont toute raison d'être fiers du travail accompli sur ce point par leurs représentants. Ce n'est pas une raison cependant pour que ceux d'entre nous qui s'opposent à cette idée par conviction ne votent pas également selon cette conviction. Ce n'est certainement pas un manque de respect envers une délégation, un pays ou un groupe de pays que de voter contre une proposition émanant de l'un ou l'autre d'entre eux. Ces divergences d'opinion traduisent au contraire la vigueur et la santé de l'Organisation et ce serait un jour bien triste pour les Nations Unies que celui où il en irait autrement et où l'on considérerait comme un manque de respect envers une délégation ou un groupe de délégations le fait de s'opposer à une proposition qu'elles auraient présentée. Pour cette raison, j'adresse un appel aux délégations — je crois qu'elles sont la majorité — qui s'opposent à cette idée de date limite pour qu'elles votent contre ces deux dispositions de la résolution, c'est-à-dire le dernier alinéa du préambule et la dernière partie de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8.

65. On ne peut supprimer d'un projet de résolution, par la simple abstention, des dispositions qu'on estime erronées. Pour cela, il faut des votes négatifs. Ma délégation serait très heureuse de pouvoir voter le projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis. Je regrette de dire que nous ne pourrions le faire si le dernier alinéa du préambule et la dernière partie de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 sont maintenus. J'ai le regret d'ajouter que, si tel devait être le cas, toute notre attitude envers le Comité spécial en serait influencée.

66. M. OKAZAKI (Japon) [traduit de l'anglais]: Depuis novembre 1960, il est de tradition à l'Assemblée que de nombreux pays d'Asie et d'Afrique présentent conjointement une importante résolution sur les principes généraux de la politique des Nations Unies en ce qui concerne la question du colonialisme.

67. Je pense à la résolution 1514 (XV) qui a été présentée à l'origine par 43 pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, et à la résolution 1654 (XVI) qui a été présentée de même par 38 pays des mêmes continents.

68. Les pays en question sont vraiment ceux que le problème du colonialisme touche de plus près. Pour la grande majorité d'entre eux, ils ont fait, à tel ou tel moment de leur histoire récente, l'expérience de régimes coloniaux de différents genres. Il est indéniable que certains de ces pays ont beaucoup souffert, mais ils ont refusé de succomber à la tentation d'envisager avec passion la question du colonialisme. Au contraire, ils ont fait preuve de leur haute sagesse politique en choisissant résolument une attitude constructive fondée sur le respect de la réalité.

69. Les activités du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, constitué en vertu de la résolution 1654 (XVI), ont prouvé amplement le bien-fondé de cette attitude. Une discussion franche et directe entre les membres de ce comité spécial, qui représente toutes les nuances d'opinion à l'Organisation, nous a aidés à mieux comprendre non seulement la situation réelle dans différentes parties du monde, mais aussi les opinions diverses et également importantes de différentes nations partageant les mêmes convictions. Ma délégation estime que toute l'Assemblée doit manifester par un vote chaleureux sa reconnaissance au Comité spécial pour l'esprit dans lequel il a abordé sa tâche et l'excellent travail qu'il a accompli.

70. Fidèles à cette tradition, nous, les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, nous avons entrepris cette année encore la tâche de rédiger un projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1]. Ma délégation a eu, une fois de plus, l'honneur de s'associer à toutes les étapes de cette entreprise commune. Je puis assurer l'Assemblée que tous ceux d'entre nous qui ont participé à cette tâche ont discuté le problème pendant plusieurs semaines de la façon la plus sérieuse durant de longues heures.

71. La principale difficulté, on le comprend aisément, a surtout porté sur la fixation d'une date limite pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Il ne fait aucun doute, comme cela a toujours été le cas dans nos discussions, qu'un grand esprit de conciliation était nécessaire de la part de toutes les délégations intéressées et qu'un accord a été réalisé dans une large mesure sur presque tous les points, à l'exception de cette question d'une date limite. Le projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée est maintenant saisie est le fruit de ce travail.

72. La délégation japonaise a toujours élevé une objection contre l'idée de fixer une date limite pour l'accomplissement du processus de décolonisation. Nous avons exposé notre point de vue sur ce sujet chaque fois que l'occasion l'exigeait. En bref, la position fondamentale de ma délégation est que la fixation d'une date limite par l'Assemblée est certainement en contradiction avec les hautes fonctions politiques propres à cet organe. En s'efforçant d'agir ainsi, l'Assemblée serait dangereusement entravée par les fluctuations de la politique intérieure rapidement changeante de tel ou tel territoire et laissée finalement à la merci de ces fluctuations. Certains de nos collègues semblent croire que la fixation d'une date limite pourrait exercer une pression politique puissante sur des puissances administrantes qui auraient tendance à retarder leur action. Je regrette de dire que je ne suis pas de cet avis. La constitution d'une nation et son accès à la libre détermination sont des affaires sérieuses. Nous pensons que nous ne pouvons pas nous permettre de poursuivre un gain politique incertain au risque d'exposer aux difficultés et aux dangers les plus graves tous les intéressés, y compris l'Organisation, ce qui serait très certainement le cas si nous fixions une date limite. Néanmoins, la délégation japonaise apprécie pleinement la sincérité des motifs qui ont amené certains de nos collègues à préconiser la fixation d'une date limite.

73. J'ai exposé les motifs des importantes réserves que ma délégation doit faire sur le septième alinéa du préambule et la dernière ligne de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du projet de résolution. Si ces dispositions sont mises aux voix séparément, nous nous estimerons obligés de voter contre. Autrement, ce document est le résultat d'un accord équitable et général entre de nombreuses délégations de pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Bien que certains d'entre nous puissent ne pas être entièrement satisfaits de certains termes de la résolution, il ne devrait pas être difficile de souscrire, dans l'ensemble, à sa teneur générale.

74. Peut-être est-il superflu de souligner ici la nécessité d'une interprétation très attentive et raisonnable d'un document écrit, particulièrement d'une résolution de l'Assemblée générale traitant d'une question aussi importante que celle du colonialisme. Le fait que le Comité spécial s'est acquitté brillamment de sa tâche est largement dû, à mon sens, à la haute sagesse que tous ses membres ont montrée dans l'interprétation des deux résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI) et, en particulier, de l'étendue de la compétence du Comité spécial lui-même. Le projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis constituera également, lorsqu'il sera adopté, un document de base important pour le Comité spécial. Certaines de ses dispositions exigent, de l'avis de ma délégation, qu'il soit interprété et mis en œuvre de la façon la plus minutieuse par tous les intéressés.

75. Je pense plus particulièrement ici aux alinéas a et c du paragraphe 8. En ce qui concerne l'alinéa c par exemple, je suis certain que nous sommes tous conscients ici des conséquences sérieuses que pourrait avoir très certainement une interprétation donnée à la légère d'un membre de phrase tel que "l'ensemble des territoires mentionnés au paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration".

76. Avant de terminer, je désire souligner que l'augmentation de 17 à 24 du nombre des membres du Comité spécial risque de créer de nouvelles difficultés. Toutefois, nous sommes persuadés que le Président de l'Assemblée, dont nous avons tous eu amplement l'occasion d'admirer la constante sagesse, saura réorganiser l'important Comité spécial de manière à maintenir et même à améliorer, si possible, ses bonnes conditions actuelles de fonctionnement.

77. M. Taïeb SLIM (Tunisie): La délégation tunisienne a déjà eu l'occasion d'exposer son point de vue sur le rapport soumis par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238] à l'Assemblée générale [1181ème séance] et ne reviendra donc pas sur tous les points que soulève le projet de résolution des 34 puissances [A/L.410 et Add.1]. Nous voulons simplement exprimer aux auteurs de ce projet notre reconnaissance pour l'effort accompli.

78. Sur l'ensemble, ma délégation, qui a eu l'occasion de participer aux consultations qui ont précédé l'élaboration du projet, est en faveur du texte proposé. Ce texte, nous le savons, est le résultat de plusieurs transactions et compromis, et nous ne pouvons nous attendre à ce qu'il coïncide parfaitement avec nos points de vue. C'est pour cela que, bien que ce projet n'évoque pas, entre autres, l'important problème de la liste des territoires qui relèvent de la compétence du Comité spécial, nous sommes disposés à voter en sa faveur.

79. Sur un autre point cependant, ma délégation, qui est membre du Comité spécial, a de sérieuses réserves à faire; il s'agit du paragraphe 7, qui vise à élargir la composition de ce comité par l'adjonction de sept nouveaux membres. Nous voulons attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le danger de compromettre le très délicat équilibre établi par la composition actuelle que cette modification présente. Ce n'est pas que la répartition actuelle soit parfaite, mais elle s'est révélée à l'expérience proportionnellement bien représentative des tendances existant dans l'Organisation sur les problèmes du colonialisme et de la décolonisation. Nous comprenons toutefois que, devant l'augmentation du nombre des Membres de l'Organisation, il soit nécessaire d'apporter un petit ajustement à la composition du Comité spécial. A cet égard, il convient de rappeler que sur les six derniers nouveaux Membres de l'ONU quatre appartiennent à l'Afrique et deux à l'Amérique centrale et méridionale. Nous pensons que l'adjonction de deux membres eût été possible et utile dans le cadre de l'équilibre actuel. En effet, une rapide analyse montrerait que la composition actuelle du Comité spécial donne un léger avantage au continent africain, d'ailleurs très compréhensible si l'on songe que les territoires colonisés d'Afrique sont les plus importants, les plus peuplés de tous les territoires encore soumis au colonialisme. Tous ceux qui croient à la décolonisation ne peuvent envisager la représentation de l'Afrique que dans une perspective d'avenir.

80. Il ne fait pas de doute qu'au sein de l'Organisation les Etats africains sont ceux dont le nombre augmente le plus rapidement, au fur et à mesure que la décolonisation se poursuit. Nous restons donc convaincus que l'équilibre existant dans la composition actuelle du Comité spécial doit être maintenu. A notre avis, l'adjonction de deux, trois ou, à la rigueur, quatre membres pourrait être acceptée et réalisée sans détruire complètement l'équilibre actuel. Il n'en serait pas de même si l'on augmentait le nombre des membres de sept, comme le propose le projet de résolution, ce qui non seulement menacerait l'équilibre du Comité, mais risquerait également de compromettre dangereusement l'efficacité de ses travaux.

81. L'efficacité des travaux du Comité spécial est une chose à laquelle, j'en suis convaincu, les membres de l'Assemblée tiennent autant que nous. Par ailleurs, l'une des raisons le plus souvent avancées en faveur d'un tel élargissement du Comité spécial est la dissolution éventuelle des autres comités chargés de questions qui relèvent également du Comité. Or, aujourd'hui même, la Quatrième Commission vient de reconduire le principal organe dont la compétence s'étend à la plupart des territoires étudiés par le Comité spécial, ce qui détruit l'argument essentiel en faveur d'un élargissement aussi important.

82. C'est pourquoi ma délégation voterait en faveur d'un amendement tendant à réduire à quatre au plus le nombre proposé. Aucun amendement n'ayant été présenté à cet effet, nous demandons un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7 du projet de résolution, et nous nous prononcerons contre ce paragraphe. Si ce paragraphe est maintenu, ma délégation votera cependant en faveur du projet dans son ensemble.

83. M. DEMETROPOULOS (Grèce): La délégation hellénique sera heureuse de voter en faveur du projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1] dans son ensemble.

84. Une base constante de notre politique est le principe que tous les peuples non indépendants doivent exercer leur droit à l'autodétermination dans les plus brefs délais historiquement possibles. Depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, la nécessité d'atteindre cet objectif a été acceptée et réalisée par presque toutes les puissances coloniales, et depuis quelques années l'Organisation des Nations Unies a contribué, par sa voix et par ses moyens, à accélérer ce processus.

85. Le Conseil de tutelle approchant du terme de sa mission, celle-ci a été reprise, dans un domaine plus vaste, par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

86. Il ne nous est pas possible d'approuver sans réserve tous les points du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept [A/5238], ni même tous les paragraphes et alinéas du projet de résolution sur lequel nous sommes appelés à voter. Dans un domaine où se rencontrent tant de tendances et tant de préjugés, tant d'idéalismes et tant de résistances profondément ancrés, mais aussi tant de méprises sur les objectifs et sur les moyens les plus efficaces pour les atteindre, ce serait peut-être trop demander qu'une œuvre à laquelle tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont voulu collaborer soit exempte de toute imperfection et puisse réunir tous les suffrages sans réserve. Mais nous voulons rendre hommage tant aux membres du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept qu'aux auteurs du projet de résolution pour leur esprit de réalisme, qui a permis d'aboutir, dans cette question si vaste et si complexe, à un document généralement acceptable.

87. Nous partageons la conviction des auteurs de ce texte que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)] et la création du Comité spécial [résolution 1654 (XVI)] ont apporté une contribution morale inestimable à l'effort de décolonisation. Nous félicitons les auteurs du projet de résolution pour la modération avec laquelle ils ont tenu à redéfinir le mandat du Comité spécial. Nous sommes convaincus que les membres de ce comité, s'inspirant de l'esprit qui a présidé à l'élaboration dudit projet, sauront mener à bonne fin leur lourde tâche en interprétant leur mandat avec toute la retenue qui s'impose, étant donné la complexité et la variété des problèmes dont ils sont saisis et les limitations légales dont ils devront tenir compte.

88. Au moment où le régime de tutelle touche à sa fin et où l'on peut déjà entrevoir la fin du colonialisme, notre pensée se porte vers les peuples dont l'autodétermination ne se trouve pas encore à l'ordre du jour de l'Organisation, et vers tous ceux dont l'indépendance n'est encore que nominale, limitée qu'elle est par des régimes politiques autoritaires ou par des servitudes imposées par des volontés étrangères.

89. M. BOZOVIC (Yougoslavie) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation yougoslave votera pour le projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1], ce vote étant conforme à la position bien connue de la Yougoslavie sur le problème de la décolonisation.

90. Le projet de résolution est, à notre avis, le résultat d'un travail acharné au cours duquel les auteurs se sont efforcés de concilier bien des points de vue différents. D'une manière générale, on peut dire qu'ils ont réussi, et il convient de les en féliciter.

91. Je ferai cependant une observation sur le paragraphe 7 du projet de résolution, qui prévoit l'élargissement de la composition du Comité spécial par l'adjonction de sept nouveaux membres qui seront désignés par le Président de l'Assemblée générale.

92. La délégation yougoslave n'a eu et n'a actuellement aucune objection majeure à opposer à cet élar-gissement de la composition du Comité spécial, mais nous voulons nous déclarer convaincus que les désignations devraient être faites sur la même base que lors de la création de cet organe, afin de maintenir l'équilibre qui existe en son sein. Nous pensons qu'il est nécessaire de procéder à un choix très prudent afin de sauvegarder le délicat équilibre dont le représentant de la Tunisie vient de parler.

93. Bien entendu, nous voterons également en faveur de l'alinéa relatif à la fixation d'une date limite appropriée, parce que nous pensons qu'une date limite peut être fixée, à condition de consulter les populations des territoires non autonomes intéressés; c'est là, je crois, une des conditions essentielles. Les populations de ces territoires sont en effet les meilleurs juges du délai qui leur sera nécessaire pour accéder à l'indépendance. Ni les puissances coloniales ni l'Assemblée générale ne peuvent fixer une date sans s'informer des vœux exprimés des populations, et le Comité spécial, ou tout autre organe, devra mettre sur pied les moyens et procédures nécessaires pour s'assurer des vœux des populations. Ces vœux devront être pris en considération avant de prendre une décision au sujet d'une date limite. Toutefois, je soulignerai une fois de plus que l'idée d'une date limite est étroitement liée aux vœux exprimés des populations, dont il doit être tenu compte dans la dernière phase du processus de décolonisation.

94. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Trois représentants ont demandé la parole pour faire usage de leur droit de réponse. Je donne d'abord la parole au représentant de la Guinée.

95. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): Le compromis qui est actuellement soumis à la sanction de l'Assemblée générale nous a donné tant de soucis, a exigé de nous tant d'efforts, et tant de sacrifices de la part de tous ceux qui ont contribué à son élaboration, que ma délégation était venue dans cette salle avec la ferme décision de ne point intervenir dans sa discussion. Cependant, un certain nombre d'interventions ont été faites à cette tribune qui exigent un minimum de mise au point de la part de la délégation guinéenne. Toutefois, malgré la légitimité que nous pourrions invoquer pour répondre comme il convient à une déclaration qui nous a énormément peiné, nous nous efforcerons de faire une mise au point extrêmement brève qui se résumera en deux appels.

96. Tout d'abord, le premier appel s'adressera à notre frère M. Taleb Slim de Tunisie, à notre frère Taleb Slim, qui sait parfaitement mieux que beaucoup de représentants dans quelles conditions les membres du Comité des Dix-Sept avaient été désignés l'année dernière, puisque aussi bien c'était le représentant de la Tunisie, lequel avait le privilège de présider l'Assemblée, qui avait nommé les membres de ce comité; à ce frère, nous disons que nous aurions souhaité, très sincèrement souhaité, que cette intervention vint d'une autre délégation.

97. Notre frère Slim, qui a pris part avec nous à l'élaboration du projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1], sait tous les efforts qui ont été déployés de tous côtés, et il s'est plu à le reconnaître à cette tribune. Sachant parfaitement combien est délicat l'équilibre qui a été réalisé, sachant que le texte qui est soumis aujourd'hui à l'approbation de l'Assemblée ne représente la pensée intrinsèque de personne, nous voudrions simplement insister auprès de lui pour qu'il ne donne pas suite à sa proposition de vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7.

98. Nous ne voulons pas insister sur les mérites d'un élargissement du Comité des Dix-Sept; on en a suffisamment parlé ici et ailleurs. Nous voudrions seulement, au nom de la solidarité pour laquelle nous avons personnellement beaucoup sacrifié, au nom de cette solidarité qui est à la base de nos rapports, demander à M. Slim et, à travers lui, à tous nos frères d'Afrique et d'Asie de ne pas insister pour un vote séparé ou pour un amendement quel qu'il soit, car le texte qui est soumis actuellement est véritablement un texte de compromis, un compromis fragile dans lequel le moindre changement risquerait de détruire l'ensemble de l'édifice élaboré si difficilement.

99. De son côté, le représentant des Etats-Unis a fait une déclaration dont je suis obligé de dire, avec la franchise que justifient les relations d'amitié qui lient la République de Guinée aux Etats-Unis, qu'elle a été pour nous extrêmement pénible. Je dois dire très nettement et très clairement que nous aurions préféré avoir, en face de nous, le représentant authentique d'une puissance coloniale. De quoi s'agit-il? Il s'agit de la question de date limite.

100. Le problème a été soulevé à deux reprises, au cours de la dix-septième session, tout d'abord par notre propre ministre des affaires étrangères [1131ème séance] et ensuite par le chef de l'Etat guinéen [1148ème séance] que je crois, jusqu'à nouvel ordre, être un chef d'Etat ami du Gouvernement américain, et je suis sûr que le représentant des Etats-Unis le sait, lui qui a tant insisté ici sur la nécessité de n'insulter personne.

101. Le moins que je puisse dire, et je n'hésite pas à le faire, c'est que certaines de ces déclarations apparaissent comme une insulte flagrante à l'égard de la République de Guinée.

102. Qu'avons-nous dit? Que disons-nous et que sommes-nous décidés à continuer de dire? Dans la résolution 1514 (XV), l'Assemblée générale a décidé que des mesures immédiates — je dis bien immédiates — seront prises pour permettre à toutes les populations qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, de l'obtenir sans aucune condition ni réserve.

103. Mieux encore, avant d'en arriver là, toutes les puissances coloniales, quelles qu'elles soient, ont toujours cherché à justifier le maintien de la colonisation par la nécessité d'assurer l'évolution des peuples intéressés. Or, la résolution 1514 (XV) a posé à nos yeux un principe qui est capital, qui est cardinal, qu'il ne faut pas oublier, en condamnant cette thèse de façon formelle et catégorique. Cette condamnation figure au paragraphe 3 de la résolution, et je ne le rappellerai que pour mémoire. Ce paragraphe se lit ainsi:

"Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance."

104. Je pose donc à mon tour une question: pour quelle raison veut-on prolonger la colonisation puisque aussi bien l'Assemblée, à la quasi-unanimité, s'est prononcée pour que des mesures immédiates soient prises pour conférer cette indépendance en écartant automatiquement et d'office le manque de préparation, considéré comme un prétexte absolument fallacieux? Je voudrais savoir pourquoi l'on voudrait pouvoir poursuivre la colonisation.

105. Des mots durs ont été prononcés tout à l'heure; on a même parlé de manque de responsabilité, de manque de réalisme. S'il s'agit du réalisme colonial, nous sommes d'accord, parce que nous ne nous plierons jamais à ce réalisme-là; mais je voudrais rappeler que nous ne parlons ici qu'au nom des populations qui nous ont mandatés, ou au nom de nos frères qui se trouvent encore sous le joug colonial, et il conviendrait d'informer ceux qui ne le savent pas que l'ensemble des forces vives du continent africain s'est déjà prononcé clairement et sans aucune équivoque pour l'indépendance en 1963. Qu'il s'agisse de réunions de chefs d'Etat, à quelque nuance politique qu'ils appartiennent, qu'il s'agisse des organisations politiques, de nos organisations de jeunesse, de nos organisations syndicales, de nos groupements féminins — et je ne veux pas lasser l'Assemblée à qui je ne veux pas énumérer les dates de ces réunions —, toutes les forces vives de l'Afrique ont déjà demandé l'indépendance pour 1963. Et l'on vient maintenant à cette tribune taxer ceux qui traduisent les sentiments, les aspirations et les idées de ces populations de manque de réalisme!

106. Nous aurions encore beaucoup de choses à dire, mais nous ne répondrons pas, du moins publiquement et de cette tribune, à ce que nous considérons comme une offense qui nous a été adressée ici. Bien mieux, notre réponse sera un appel, et cet appel s'adressera au représentant des Etats-Unis.

107. Nous avons été extrêmement frappés par la contradiction majeure existant dans la première partie de l'intervention du représentant des Etats-Unis dans laquelle il insistait sur le compromis extrêmement laborieux auquel on est arrivé au sein du comité de travail aussi bien que dans le groupe africano-asiatique. Je veux rappeler que, pour la Guinée, le texte qui est soumis actuellement est extrêmement éloigné de notre position originale, laquelle demandait que soit fixée au 24 octobre 1963, dix-huitième anniversaire de l'Organisation, la date limite à laquelle non pas tel ou tel territoire devrait avoir accédé à l'indépendance, mais à laquelle les puissances coloniales devraient être contraintes de remplir toutes les obligations découlant de l'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV). C'est pourquoi, bien que ce document s'écarte très largement de notre position, nous l'avons accepté par solidarité, car nous avons toujours estimé — et nous continuons à le faire — que la solidarité, entre les peuples d'Afrique d'abord, et entre les peuples d'Afrique et d'Asie ensuite, est la condition fondamentale, la condition première de la libération de nos peuples. C'est au nom de cette solidarité que nous avons accepté tous ces sacrifices pour aboutir à un texte qui s'éloigne si sensiblement de notre position initiale.

108. Je voudrais donc — et c'est là mon appel au représentant des Etats-Unis — lui demander, au nom du réalisme des opprimés, au nom du réalisme des colonisés, au nom du réalisme des peuples africains dont son peuple se proclame l'ami, de ne pas insister. Nous avons réalisé un équilibre extrêmement fragile. Nous voudrions donc lui demander avec insistance de ne pas maintenir sa proposition de vote par division. Je le lui demande au nom de ma délégation, je le lui demande au nom de mon gouvernement, je le lui demande au nom des peuples africains encore asservis.

109. En ce qui concerne l'idée de date, toutes les discussions qui ont été amorcées à cette tribune n'auraient pas dû l'être; elles sont absolument prématurées. Au représentant des Etats-Unis et à ceux qui se frottent les mains et n'osent plus paraître à une tribune officielle, ici ou ailleurs, nous disons qu'ils auront la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale pour discuter de cette question. En effet, que demandons-nous? Nous prions le Comité des Dix-Sept d'étudier cette question, de rechercher tous les faits qui s'y rapportent et de faire des recommandations à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale, qui aura à prendre une décision en la matière. Et voilà ce que l'on qualifie d'absolument irréaliste!

110. A bien des égards, il semble qu'un progrès très net ait été accompli à la dix-septième session en ce qui concerne le problème de la décolonisation. Que l'on se rappelle les décisions déjà prises par les organes compétents — et plus particulièrement par la Quatrième Commission — sur le Sud-Ouest africain, sur la Rhodésie du Sud et, tout dernièrement, sur l'ensemble des territoires sous administration portugaise. Toutes ces décisions marquent un progrès très net. Or, l'idée de date est l'une des rares idées nouvelles contenues dans le projet de résolution. Le reste n'est qu'un rappel de ce qui a déjà été fait. Je suis prêt à discuter aussi longuement qu'il le faut, mais je tiens à dire — et ce sera ma conclusion — que l'Assemblée générale a déjà écarté le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique et social comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance. L'Assemblée générale a décidé que des mesures immédiates devraient être prises par les puissances coloniales afin de transférer tous les pouvoirs aux peuples coloniaux. Tout le monde a reconnu ainsi ou bien que ce processus est lent ou, dans certains cas, qu'aucune mesure n'a été envisagée. Je dis mieux: certaines puissances coloniales n'ont même pas accepté d'appliquer la résolution 1514 (XV) à leurs colonies.

111. Les représentants présents dans cette salle se rappelleront certainement que les déclarations du représentant des Etats-Unis, ce soir, à cette tribune, ressemblent singulièrement à ces avertissements et à ces annonces de catastrophes que l'on lançait de cette même tribune lorsqu'en 1960 on a parlé pour la première fois de l'indépendance immédiate de tous les territoires coloniaux. Nous nous rappelons en tout cas le jour où, pour la première fois à cette tribune, en 1959, le président Sekou Touré a parlé de "libération immédiate". Nous nous souvenons des sarcasmes qui avaient accueilli cette proposition.

112. Au cours de la discussion de la proposition de l'Union soviétique tendant à l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à tous les pays et peuples coloniaux^{2/}, nous nous rappelons parfaitement les sarcasmes qui avaient accueilli, à l'époque, cette proposition que tout le monde qualifie maintenant comme étant une des œuvres maîtresses de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

113. En ce qui concerne ce que l'on a dit aujourd'hui au sujet de la fixation d'une date limite, je suis persuadé — et c'est un espoir que j'exprime — que le représentant des Etats-Unis sera l'un des premiers à reconnaître, demain, que l'Assemblée générale, à sa dix-septième session, aura accompli une grande œuvre en adoptant les dispositions contenues dans le projet de résolution soumis à notre sanction.

114. Je renouvelle à mon frère Taleb Slim et au représentant des Etats-Unis mon appel pour qu'ils n'insistent pas sur leur demande de vote par division.

Si cet appel n'était pas entendu, je redemanderais la parole pour formuler une autre proposition concrète.

115. M. PALAR (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé la parole pour ajouter quelques mots autres brillant plaider que mon collègue de la Guinée a prononcé en faveur de notre projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1]. Je ferai d'abord quelques observations pour répondre aux opinions exprimées ici par le représentant des Etats-Unis. Je crains que ce qu'il a dit n'exerce une grande influence sur certains de nos collègues; c'est pourquoi je m'efforcerai de neutraliser son discours.

116. L'objection la plus importante qui ait été soulevée par le représentant des Etats-Unis concerne le dernier alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 de notre projet. Je vais en donner lecture. Le dernier alinéa du préambule est rédigé comme suit:

"Considérant que, pour accélérer le processus de décolonisation, il est nécessaire de fixer une date limite appropriée pour l'application intégrale des dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" [A/L.410 et Add.1].

Je constate que la principale critique faite ici porte sur la fixation d'une date limite. On suppose que nous réclamons spécialement une date limite générale. Or il n'est pas question d'une date limite générale dans le dernier alinéa du préambule. Sinon, nous l'y aurions visée. Ce que nous avons demandé dans ce texte, c'est la fixation d'une date limite appropriée pour tout territoire particulier qui n'est pas encore indépendant. Nous avons développé cette idée à l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8. C'est donc là que l'Assemblée peut savoir ce que nous voulons exactement.

117. Nous avons rédigé délibérément cet alinéa dans les termes suivants:

"A proposer des mesures concrètes en vue de l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, y compris des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite appropriée".

Comme je l'ai déclaré ce matin, le mot "recommandations" a été employé intentionnellement parce que nous voulons laisser la possibilité de fixer une date limite pour tout territoire dépendant et aussi la possibilité de fixer une date limite générale.

118. Mais qui va fixer la date limite ou les dates limites? Ce n'est pas le Comité spécial. Le Comité spécial fera des recommandations à l'Assemblée générale qui les acceptera ou les rejettera. Le Comité spécial doit étudier à fond la situation des territoires dépendants. Sur la base de cette étude qui, bien entendu, tiendra compte des désirs de la population et des dirigeants des mouvements politiques, et en prenant en considération d'autre part les vues des puissances coloniales, le Comité spécial fera des recommandations à l'Assemblée générale.

119. Si ces recommandations doivent être faites — et je pense qu'elles le seront —, il ne sera pas très difficile alors de fixer une date limite générale parce que ce sera très probablement la date limite prévue pour le territoire le plus en retard sur la voie de l'indépendance. Par conséquent, la crainte que cette date limite ne soit fixée, comme mon pays l'espère, à deux ou trois ans n'est pas nécessairement justifiée. En fait, connaissant le Comité spécial, où les puissances coloniales sont représentées, je crains que la date limite générale ne soit pas celle que ma délégation souhaiterait. J'espère néanmoins que le Comité spécial fera une recommandation répondant aux vœux de ma délégation. Quoi qu'il en soit, c'est au Comité spécial qu'il appartiendra même de décider s'il devra recommander une date limite générale ou non.

120. Sur cette base, par conséquent, il me semble que les craintes exprimées par le représentant des Etats-Unis ne sont pas justifiées. C'est pourquoi je lui adresse un appel pour qu'il veuille bien reconsidérer sa position. S'il ne le fait pas, je suivrai alors l'exemple que le représentant de la Guinée vient de nous donner, et je déclarerai que je ferai une autre proposition.

121. Enfin, j'adresserai un appel au représentant de la Tunisie. Nous savons qu'il a fait tout ce qu'il a pu pour faire accepter les idées de sa délégation par notre comité de rédaction. J'espère cependant que le représentant de la Tunisie, qui est un ami personnel, voudra bien reconsidérer sa proposition. S'il ne peut le faire, je serai obligé de prendre une position qui sera concrétisée dans une proposition que je pourrai présenter plus tard.

122. M. ADEYINKA (Nigéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation n'avait pas l'intention d'intervenir dans le débat sur ce projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1] dont la Nigéria est un des auteurs. Mais, puisque le représentant des Etats-Unis a rappelé, dans son explication de vote, la déclaration faite par mon ministre des affaires étrangères à la seizième session sur la question d'une date limite, ma délégation croit devoir intervenir maintenant afin de mettre les choses au point et de dissiper tout malentendu dans l'esprit des membres de l'Assemblée.

123. Le représentant des Etats-Unis a dit que mon ministre des affaires étrangères avait proposé l'année dernière la date limite de 1970 pour la liquidation du colonialisme. Ce n'est là ni une citation exacte, ni une interprétation correcte. Cette déclaration peut donc créer un malentendu en laissant croire que la Nigéria n'appuie pas l'octroi de l'indépendance immédiate aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et qu'elle adopte une position neutraliste sur cette question. C'est là une interprétation que nous rejetons entièrement. Au surplus, la Nigéria était un des auteurs de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale.

124. La vérité est qu'à la seizième session mon ministre des affaires étrangères a soulevé pour la première fois [1050ème séance] l'idée d'une date limite en tant que stimulant et catalyseur de la décolonisation. Prenant en considération tous les facteurs et problèmes en cause, il a envisagé ensuite la date précise de 1970, date avant laquelle, à laquelle, mais non au-delà de laquelle, la tâche de la décolonisation devrait être terminée. Je tiens à répéter ces mots parce qu'ils sont extrêmement importants: date avant laquelle, à laquelle, mais non au-delà de laquelle, la tâche de la décolonisation devrait être terminée. Il ne s'agit pas là de quelque chose de statique. Il s'agit de quelque chose qui évolue.

125. Ayant soulevé la question d'une date limite, ma délégation se félicite sincèrement que l'idée ait gagné du terrain aux Nations Unies. Nous n'éprouvons donc pas les craintes et les inquiétudes qui ont été exprimées par la délégation des Etats-Unis. La fixation d'une date limite est destinée à donner une nouvelle impulsion au mouvement de décolonisation, étant donné que le mot "immédiat" semble avoir perdu son sens pour les puissances coloniales.

126. Puisque j'ai la parole, je désire déclarer que ma délégation considère les vues exprimées par la délégation des Etats-Unis avec de très sérieuses appréhensions, notamment en ce qui concerne la demande de vote séparé qu'elle a faite sur cet important projet de résolution qui est le résultat d'un compromis délicat mais bien équilibré et qui devrait maintenant être adopté à l'unanimité. Ma délégation estime que, pour que le mouvement de décolonisation déjà lancé par les deux résolutions précédentes [1514 (XV) et 1654 (XVI)] continue à bénéficier de tout le prestige des Nations Unies, la troisième résolution sur ce sujet ne doit pas avoir une moindre envergure que les deux précédentes. A notre avis, les délégations devraient se contenter d'exprimer leurs réserves, qui seront entièrement consignées dans les procès-verbaux de l'Assemblée.

127. Pour ces raisons, ma délégation se voit obligée de résister à l'appel adressé par le représentant des Etats-Unis en faveur d'un vote séparé. Nous voyons là une tentative d'amenuiser l'importance et la signification de la troisième résolution sur la décolonisation. Aussi demandons-nous très instamment au représentant des Etats-Unis, ainsi qu'au représentant de la Tunisie, de ne pas insister sur leurs propositions de votes séparés.

128. En revanche, nous nous associons à l'appel adressé par le représentant de la Guinée. Je crois que les représentants ici présents auront accepté cet appel de bonne foi et qu'après avoir entendu les divers discours prononcés à cette tribune sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux et ayant compris que tous les peuples d'Afrique doivent être libérés ils se joindront également à nous pour voter le grand projet de résolution qui est actuellement soumis à l'Assemblée.

129. M. Taleb SLIM (Tunisie): Je tiens à remercier M. Diallo Telli, notre frère de Guinée, pour les brillantes paroles par lesquelles il m'a lancé un appel pour que je n'insiste pas sur ma demande de vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7 du projet de résolution. Je tiens à l'assurer que le représentant de la Tunisie ne saurait rester sourd à son appel s'il ne s'agissait que d'un petit détail. Je tiens à rappeler au représentant de la Guinée que, sur ce point particulier, il y a une divergence de vues assez importante pour ma délégation dont l'opinion est, d'ailleurs, partagée par plusieurs de nos amis, dans cette assemblée et dans nos différents groupes.

130. Je voudrais dire à mon frère de Guinée que l'équilibre du Comité des Dix-Sept est certainement plus important pour la décolonisation que l'équilibre du projet de résolution qui, d'après ma délégation, ne sera pas — je le répète, ne sera pas — compromis par le vote séparé que nous demandons. Par ailleurs, il y a dans ce texte plusieurs choses qui ne coïncident pas avec nos vues et, cependant, par solidarité, nous ayons déclaré que nous voterions pour le projet dans son ensemble.

131. C'est pour cela que j'ai dit et répète que si le paragraphe 7 était modifié de manière que "sept" soit remplacé par "quatre ou moins", cela constituerait un compromis qui pourrait assurer l'unanimité sur ce paragraphe. Je regrette de constater que notre propre appel pour un compromis de ce genre n'a pas été entendu. C'est pourquoi je m'exouse auprès de mon frère Diallo Telli de devoir lui dire que je suis obligé d'insister pour que l'on vote séparément sur le paragraphe 7.

132. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Afghanistan pour une motion d'ordre.

133. M. PAZHAWAK (Afghanistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation est un des auteurs du projet de résolution soumis actuellement à l'Assemblée [A/L.410 et Add.1] et cela suffit à expliquer notre position et nos idées à ce sujet. D'autre part, ma délégation a pour tradition, lorsque nous présentons une suggestion ou un projet de résolution, de le faire toujours avec un esprit libre et de réfléchir à la question en nous inspirant des débats qui se déroulent à l'Assemblée. Avec tout le respect qui est dû aux opinions qui seront exprimées par d'autres orateurs, je crois pouvoir dire qu'un débat très constructif s'est déroulé cet après-midi sur ce projet de résolution; aussi avons-nous écouté très attentivement les diverses opinions exposées à ce sujet. Actuellement, ma délégation désire simplement présenter une demande à l'Assemblée. En tant qu'un des auteurs du projet de résolution, et parlant uniquement au nom de ma délégation, je crois qu'il nous faut du temps pour réfléchir aux opinions exprimées sur le projet de résolution et je suis très heureux de constater que nous disposons effectivement du temps nécessaire après ce débat.

134. Je regrette d'avoir retardé le déroulement des travaux de l'Assemblée en présentant cette motion d'ordre, mais je propose formellement que tout vote ou toute procédure sur le fond soit ajourné jusqu'à lundi après-midi, au plus tard, afin que les auteurs du projet de résolution puissent se mettre en rapport avec d'autres délégations et revenir ensuite présenter les résultats de ces consultations. Telle est ma proposition et j'espère qu'elle sera considérée comme acceptable. J'espère que mes collègues seront d'accord avec moi.

135. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée a entendu la proposition du représentant de l'Afghanistan. Je ne considère pas qu'il s'agisse d'une motion d'ajournement de la séance ou du débat. Le représentant de l'Afghanistan a proposé que le vote sur le projet de résolution soit renvoyé à lundi après-midi. Le Président s'en remet sur ce point à l'Assemblée.

136. M. BINGHAM (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je n'ai pas d'objection à faire à la motion et je sollicite l'indulgence de l'Assemblée pour répondre très brièvement au représentant de la Guinée. Je veux simplement dire que j'ai été profondément ému par la façon dont il a interprété mes précédentes observations. Je puis l'assurer que la dernière chose que j'aurais voulu faire aurait été de l'offenser ou d'offenser son pays qui est vraiment un ami du mien. Puisque mes paroles ont eu apparemment cet effet, je ne puis que dire au représentant de la Guinée, pour lequel j'ai une grande estime et que je considère comme un ami, que j'éprouve le plus vif regret de ce malentendu et lui présente toutes mes excuses.

137. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): Je prends acte avec satisfaction de la déclaration que vient de faire le représentant des Etats-Unis. Je suis heureux qu'il ait parfaitement interprété la réaction de la Guinée. A mon tour, je puis l'assurer que je le considère comme un ami et, au nom de mon pays, que la République de Guinée considère son pays comme un pays ami.

138. Mais ce que nous voudrions par-dessus tout, c'est qu'à travers la Guinée les Etats-Unis soient l'ami de l'Afrique et des peuples africains aujourd'hui courbés sous le joug colonial. Je suis persuadé qu'il me comprend et que j'en ai pas besoin d'insister.

139. Je sais les bonnes intentions qui sont à la base de la proposition du représentant de l'Afghanistan, encore que ma délégation aurait préféré, les choses étant parfaitement claires, qu'on passât au vote ce soir. Par solidarité, par amitié et par estime spéciale pour le représentant de l'Afghanistan, je ne puis que déférer à la proposition qu'il vient de faire. Mais, par expérience, nous savons que, pour nous, les petits et les humbles, rarement le temps travaille pour nous. Je souhaite connaître une exception lundi.

140. Quoi qu'il en soit, l'Assemblée sait déjà — et je voudrais en tout cas, en tant que représentant de la Guinée, réaffirmer — que nous avons considéré l'adoption de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance comme une grande entreprise de paix pour le continent africain. Nous avons considéré l'établissement du Comité des Dix-Sept, chargé de l'application de cette déclaration, l'année dernière, comme un nouvel acte de paix dans le continent africain; et toutes les mesures que nous demandons aujourd'hui s'inscrivent dans le même sens. Les peuples africains sont décidés, quoi qu'il arrive, à se libérer. Le seul problème qui se pose est celui de savoir si cette libération sera pacifique — comme c'est notre vœu le plus cher, et nous savons que l'Organisation peut énormément aider dans cette voie — ou devra se faire contre notre gré, malgré nous, dans le sang. Je souhaite que chaque représentant, dans cette salle — et mon ami, le représentant des Etats-Unis, le premier —, fasse en sorte que la libération inévitable de l'Afrique s'effectue dans la paix.

141. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Puisque aucune objection n'a été faite à la proposition du représentant de l'Afghanistan, nous procéderons au vote sur le projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1] lundi après-midi, conformément à cette proposition.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

142. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous sommes prêts maintenant à aborder les autres parties du rapport du Comité spécial. Avant de le faire, je donne la parole au représentant de la Syrie pour une déclaration sur la procédure de vote.

143. M. RIFAI (Syrie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je remercie le Président de me donner la parole, mais je crois avoir déjà précisé que la déclaration que j'avais l'intention de faire au sujet de la procédure interviendrait lorsque l'Assemblée aurait statué sur le projet de résolution actuellement en discussion. Je ne pense pas que le moment soit venu pour moi de faire ces propositions sur la procédure à suivre au sujet des divers projets de résolution qui restent à examiner et qui figurent dans le rapport du Comité. Je crois que cela pourrait être renvoyé à lundi après-midi.

144. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Dans ces conditions, je me propose de lever la séance. L'Assemblée générale se réunira demain matin pour examiner les questions qui font l'objet des rapports de la Quatrième Commission.

145. M. YOMEKPE (Ghana) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je regrette d'intervenir en ce moment, mais je voudrais soumettre la question suivante à l'attention du Président. Une séance de la Quatrième Commission est prévue pour demain matin. Nous espérons qu'il serait possible de procéder maintenant à l'examen des rapports de la Quatrième Commission. Je constate que le Rapporteur de la Commission est ici et je pense que les membres de la Commission qui sont également présents estimeront comme moi que nos travaux seraient facilités si l'Assemblée procédait maintenant à la discussion de ces rapports au lieu de la renvoyer à demain.

146. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée a entendu la proposition du représentant du Ghana. S'il n'y a pas d'opposition, je considérerai que l'Assemblée est d'avis de poursuivre sa séance.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

POINT 25 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale (suite)

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): On se souviendra que vendredi dernier 14 décembre [1194^e séance], nous avons décidé, dans la soirée, d'ajourner à cet après-midi le vote sur le projet de résolution des 34 puissances (A/L.410 et Add.1). Nous allons donc maintenant procéder au vote. Je rappelle aux membres de l'Assemblée que les incidences financières de ce projet de résolution sont exposées dans le rapport de la Cinquième Commission (A/5354).

2. Des votes séparés ont été demandés: premièrement, par les Etats-Unis, sur le dernier alinéa du préambule, deuxièmement, par la Tunisie, sur le paragraphe 7 du dispositif; troisièmement, par les Etats-Unis, sur le dernier membre de phrase de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 qui se lit ainsi: "... compris des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite appropriée".

3. Je donne maintenant la parole aux représentants qui désirent expliquer leur vote.

4. M. JAKOBSEN (Danemark) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation danoise a des réserves à faire sur le projet de résolution A/L.410 et Add.1 dont nous sommes saisis. Par exemple, nous ne sommes pas sûrs que l'élargissement envisagé de la composition du Comité spécial présenterait un avantage. Selon notre expérience, plus la composition d'un organe administratif s'élargit, plus son efficacité tend à diminuer.

5. En outre, je pense à ce qui est prévu à l'alinéa d du paragraphe 8. Nous ne considérons pas comme de bonne pratique constitutionnelle qu'un comité de l'Assemblée puisse s'adresser directement au Conseil de sécurité. Une décision aussi importante doit être laissée à l'Assemblée générale tout entière.

6. Cependant, ces observations ne sont que des critiques secondaires, mais nous avons une objection déterminante à faire. Nous devons nous opposer directement à l'une des dispositions de ce projet; il s'agit de la fixation d'une date limite pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme. Je désire que l'on me comprenne bien. Mon gouvernement a nettement exprimé son désir de voir liquider le plus vite possible tous les vestiges des empires coloniaux, mais nous ne pensons pas que la fixation d'une date limite précise procède d'une attitude réaliste. Nul n'est actuellement en mesure de nous dire quelle devrait être cette date. Si le moment est venu, nous n'avons pas à attendre une date déterminée; si le moment n'est pas venu, nous ne devons pas risquer d'amener des troubles dans un territoire parce que nous aurons fixé une date. En conséquence, la délégation danoise votera contre le dernier alinéa du préambule et aussi contre la disposition correspondante du dispositif, l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8.

7. Nous espérons donc sincèrement que les auteurs du projet de résolution ne s'opposeront pas à des votes séparés sur ces dispositions et peut-être sur certaines autres, comme l'a indiqué l'autre jour [1193^e séance] notre collègue de la Guinée. Nous regretterions vivement une telle attitude et nous voterions naturellement contre. Ce serait une méthode très peu démocratique et, à notre avis, il serait indigne de la part de l'Assemblée d'empêcher une délégation de manifester l'attitude qu'elle prend sur chaque partie d'une résolution importante. La manière la plus démocratique est de donner à tous les pays la possibilité de se prononcer "pour" ou "contre" quand ils le veulent.

8. J'adresse un appel à nos amis d'Asie et d'Afrique afin qu'ils n'abusent pas de la majorité qu'ils peuvent avoir. Je suis certain qu'en agissant ainsi ils perdraient à la longue plus de sympathie qu'ils ne gagneraient d'avantages en imposant de cette manière l'adoption d'une résolution.

9. Cela dit, je déclare que ma délégation, malgré ses réserves et ses objections, votera pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

10. La question du colonialisme a été au premier plan pendant cette dix-septième session de l'Assemblée générale. Elle est aujourd'hui au centre de la politique mondiale et elle y demeurera tant qu'elle n'aura pas été réglée définitivement. Les pays occidentaux, parmi lesquels le Danemark, ne peuvent que rechercher l'abolition du colonialisme le plus rapidement possible. De nos jours, la partie la plus grande du monde où la liberté est supprimée ne se situe pas dans les régions où subsistent des vestiges de l'ancien colonialisme. Il est manifeste que l'ère coloniale a pris fin. Nous sommes allés si loin qu'aucune nation d'Asie, d'Afrique ou d'Europe ne sera satisfaite tant qu'elle n'aura pas accédé à l'indépendance; et les arguments selon lesquels certains pays vivraient mieux du point de vue social et du point de vue économique s'ils étaient dépendants sont bien faibles. L'homme ne vit pas que de pain.

11. Nous sommes souvent enclins à voir dans notre époque l'ère de la lutte entre la dictature communiste et la démocratie, et à considérer cette lutte comme son aspect le plus important. Je ne suis pas certain cependant que les historiens de l'avenir ne considéreront pas avant tout notre époque comme l'ère où la majorité des nations d'Asie et d'Afrique ont exigé leur indépendance et l'ont obtenue. L'Occident l'a reconnu. Voyez ce qui s'est passé en Asie et en Afrique depuis 15 ans. Le résultat n'est pas si mauvais. Il est vrai que certaines tâches sombres demeurent encore aujourd'hui, mais ce ne sont guère que les régions sous domination portugaise, dont nous avons tant discuté.

12. Nous comprenons l'impatience africaine et nous admirons la solidarité africaine, mais les pays d'Afrique peuvent être assurés que les vestiges du colonialisme ne sont pas considérés par la grande majorité des pays de l'Occident comme un actif, mais comme un lourd fardeau. Tant que ces vestiges n'auront pas disparu, nous n'aurons pas toute la force morale nécessaire pour protester contre le manque de liberté dans d'autres régions beaucoup plus vastes du monde. Plus vite nous y parviendrons, mieux cela vaudra.

13. Mon pays ne croit pas que l'impatience, si compréhensible soit-elle, si impatient qu'on soit à vouloir fixer des dates limites, nous aidera à atteindre ce noble objectif. Nous ne croyons pas non plus que l'intolérance nous servira, car elle empêchera certaines délégations d'exprimer leurs opinions devant l'Assemblée sur diverses parties de la résolution. Il importe qu'il n'y ait aucun doute sur l'attitude du Danemark: nous nous opposerons à toute tentative visant à maintenir les derniers vestiges du colonialisme et nous éprouvons un sentiment de solidarité devant tout effort réaliste destiné à mettre fin à cette regrettable situation; c'est pourquoi la délégation danoise votera en faveur du projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis.

14. M. CARDUCCI-ARTENISIO (Italie) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation italienne n'a pas jugé nécessaire de prendre part à la discussion générale sur le rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale. En fait, nous pensons que notre conduite passée en matière coloniale et notre point de vue sur le problème de la colonisation sont bien connus de tous les Membres de l'Organisation.

15. Permettez-moi de résumer les principes sur lesquels l'Italie a fondé sa participation aux travaux du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept^{1/} en citant un passage pertinent du discours que le Ministre des affaires étrangères de mon pays a prononcé à cette tribune le 28 octobre 1962:

"a) Pleine acceptation et plein appui à la Déclaration de 1960;

"b) Recherche de tous les moyens propres à faciliter et à accélérer ce processus d'indépendance, en accord avec les puissances administrantes, non seulement pour atteindre l'objectif final, mais encore pour mettre au point, comme il se doit, tous les instruments politiques, administratifs et économiques nécessaires;

"c) Appui à toutes les initiatives destinées à assurer l'accession à l'indépendance des pays par des méthodes appropriées et pacifiques, afin que les Etats de création nouvelle puissent être un élément de stabilité et de collaboration efficace avec tous les autres Etats." [1136ème séance, par. 189.]

Ces principes, de même que notre profonde conviction que le processus de décolonisation doit s'effectuer aussi rapidement que possible et que l'Assemblée générale doit se préoccuper de la responsabilité particulière conférée au Comité spécial, nous inciteront à voter en faveur du projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1]. Ce sont les mêmes principes et la même conviction qui dicteront notre attitude en la matière.

16. Nous tenons toutefois à exprimer notre désaccord sur un point essentiel du projet de résolution: les dispositions concernant la fixation d'une date limite pour l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Nous doutons aussi beaucoup qu'il soit opportun d'élargir la composition du Comité spécial. En fait, nous ne sommes nullement certains que l'adjonction de membres nouveaux, si qualifiés soient-ils pour cette tâche, permettra nécessairement d'accélérer les travaux du Comité et de les rendre plus efficaces. Les résultats pouvant être obtenus par le Comité ne dépendent pas nécessairement, selon nous, du nombre de ses membres.

17. Dans le même souci d'efficacité, la délégation italienne estime que l'idée de la fixation d'une date limite, à un certain moment, pour l'application intégrale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux constituerait un inconvénient plus qu'un avantage pour les activités du Comité spécial. Nous ne devons pas oublier que nos travaux futurs seront extrêmement difficiles et que le Comité spécial devra s'attaquer à un certain nombre de problèmes non résolus que l'Organisation a déjà examinés, mais sans résultats concrets.

18. Nous devons imaginer toutes sortes de mesures, non seulement pour la conduite à tenir envers les puissances qui se sont montrées jusqu'à présent réticentes à coopérer avec les Nations Unies, mais aussi pour la protection des instruments politiques et administratifs nécessaires pour conduire à l'indépendance les populations encore soumises à un régime colonial. Je rappellerai à ce propos les suggestions très intéressantes faites par le représentant de l'Indonésie [1194ème séance] sur le rôle que les Nations Unies et le Comité spécial pourraient jouer. Ces problèmes et bien d'autres retiendront notre temps, nos énergies et notre imagination dans les prochains mois. C'est pourquoi, à notre avis, il serait peu judicieux de charger le Comité spécial de tâches donnant lieu à controverse qui ne pourraient que ralentir considérablement ses travaux. Pour ces raisons, la délégation italienne, tout en appuyant l'ensemble du projet de résolution, votera contre les dispositions relatives à la fixation d'une date limite si elles sont mises aux voix séparément.

19. M. SOLOMON (Trinité et Tobago) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation s'était inscrite vendredi soir

^{1/} Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

[1194ème séance] pour expliquer sa position après les votes, mais, à la suite des observations conciliantes et diplomatiques que le représentant de l'Indonésie a faites à cette même séance, nous croyons devoir plutôt exposer notre point de vue avant les votes.

20. Je voudrais en particulier dire quelques mots sur le septième alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/L.410 et Add.1. La délégation de la Trinité et Tobago est d'avis que le Comité spécial recommande une date limite pour l'accession à l'indépendance de chaque territoire non autonome. Nous estimons que les discussions sur l'état de développement des territoires non autonomes, discussions provoquées par exemple par les rapports du Comité spécial et du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, ont eu pour effet de détourner imperceptiblement l'attention de l'Assemblée et du monde vers la question non pertinente de l'état de développement des territoires intéressés. Je dis "non pertinente" parce que la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux exclut expressément cette considération comme critère pour l'octroi de l'indépendance.

21. La délégation de la Trinité et Tobago estime que la recommandation, par le Comité spécial, de dates limites pour l'octroi de l'indépendance corrigerait la situation et réaffirmerait l'obligation morale primordiale qu'ont les puissances administrantes d'accorder aussitôt que possible l'indépendance aux territoires qu'elles administrent. En effet, bien que les puissances administrantes aient l'obligation morale de favoriser le développement économique et social des territoires dont elles ont la charge, tant avant qu'après l'accession à l'indépendance, cette obligation est distincte de celle de l'octroi de l'indépendance. Cependant, ce que ma délégation considère comme non réaliste, c'est la proposition tendant à ce que le Comité spécial fixe une date unique pour l'accession de tous les territoires non autonomes à l'indépendance. La situation est différente pour chaque territoire et chacun a ses problèmes particuliers. Par exemple, dans certains territoires l'accession à l'indépendance ne dépend plus que de l'accord des représentants des populations elles-mêmes sur les formes constitutionnelles qu'elles veulent se donner.

22. Ma délégation estime donc qu'il serait tout à fait normal que le Comité spécial, après un examen approfondi de la situation politique de chaque territoire non autonome, fasse figurer dans son rapport des recommandations sur la date à laquelle chacun des territoires devrait accéder à l'indépendance. Une date limite unique pour tous les territoires serait nécessairement celle à laquelle le dernier territoire serait à même d'accéder à l'indépendance. Par conséquent, la fixation d'une pareille date aurait pour effet de fixer pour tous les autres territoires une date plus tardive qu'il ne serait nécessaire. Cela pourrait donc être un prétexte pour retarder le progrès des autres territoires vers l'autonomie. Donc, si les dispositions en question signifient, comme l'a dit le représentant de l'Indonésie, que le Comité spécial ne recommanderait pas une date générale, mais des dates particulières pour les divers territoires, ma délégation souhaiterait que ce soit dit explicitement. Sinon, ma délégation a l'intention de s'abstenir dans les votes sur le septième alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du dispositif.

23. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La parole est au représentant de la Guinée pour une motion d'ordre relative à la procédure de vote.

24. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): La délégation guinéenne, le 14 décembre [1194ème séance], a eu l'occasion, à cette tribune, de lancer deux appels pour demander aux auteurs de propositions de votes séparés sur le projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1] de bien vouloir renoncer à ces propositions pour les raisons que nous avons alors expliquées longuement. Nous regrettons profondément que ces appels n'aient pas été entendus et, compte tenu de l'heure à laquelle ils ont été lancés, compte tenu de l'importance capitale de cette question, compte tenu des espoirs immenses placés par l'Afrique colonisée en les débats de l'Assemblée, nous avons pensé qu'il était de notre devoir de monter à nouveau à cette tribune non seulement pour nous opposer à ces votes séparés, mais, avant de le faire, pour lancer un suprême appel aux intéressés.

25. A nos frères d'Asie et d'Afrique, nous tenons à dire à nouveau que le document qui est soumis aujourd'hui à l'approbation de l'Assemblée est le fruit d'un compromis qui nous a coûté énormément d'efforts et qui a coûté à certaines délégations — comme la mienne — énormément de sacrifices.

26. Véritablement, on nous fait un procès d'intention. Nous avons écouté tous les orateurs qui sont montés à cette tribune pour s'élever contre la fixation d'une date limite. L'impression pénible que nous en avons retirée est que ces orateurs, dans leur quasi-totalité, n'ont pas pris la précaution de lire attentivement le texte qui leur était soumis.

27. Que demandons-nous, en effet? Que le Comité des Dix-Sept, ou ce comité remanié, étudie la question et fasse rapport à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale. Pour cette raison, nous pensons que tous les représentants qui ont avancé des arguments à cette tribune contre la fixation d'une date limite gagneraient à attendre le rapport du Comité, afin que le débat s'instaure normalement à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale.

28. A l'orateur qui m'a précédé à cette tribune — le représentant de la Trinité et Tobago — je voudrais dire qu'effectivement le représentant de l'Indonésie [1194ème séance] avait parfaitement interprété la pensée des auteurs du projet de résolution. Il n'a jamais été question, il n'est pas question dans notre esprit de fixer une date unique d'accession à l'indépendance pour tous les pays. Cela est clair et net. A cet égard, la position des auteurs du projet de résolution est celle qui est fixée au paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1514 (XV), à savoir la nécessité de l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à tous les pays et peuples coloniaux. Nous sommes, je dois l'avouer, véritablement renversés. Il y a deux ans que l'Assemblée générale a décidé, par cette résolution, que les puissances coloniales — les puissances administrantes — devaient prendre des mesures immédiates pour transférer tous les pouvoirs aux peuples colonisés. Compte tenu du fait patent non seulement que, dans certains cas, ces mesures n'ont pas été prises, mais que certaines puissances coloniales vont jusqu'à mettre en cause l'applicabilité de ladite résolution aux territoires qu'elles administrent, nous demandons au Comité chargé de sa mise en œuvre d'étudier cette question et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale à sa dix-huitième session. Je précise bien qu'il s'agit de faire des recomman-dations. Je ne vois donc pas, sur le plan rationnel, ce qu'on peut invoquer contre l'attribution de cette tâche à un comité qui a la confiance totale de l'Assemblée. S'il y a des délégations qui ont peur de ce que pourrait faire le Comité, je dis que nous, nous n'avons pas peur, car, de toute façon, l'Assemblée générale a déjà décidé, d'une part, qu'aucun retard, sur les plans politique, économique ou social, ne saurait normalement justifier un délai quant à l'octroi de l'indépendance, et, d'autre part, que les puissances administrantes devaient prendre des mesures immédiates pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires. De plus, aucun orateur ne nous a dit les raisons pour lesquelles il s'effrayait qu'une limite soit fixée aux tergiversations des puissances administrantes.

29. Pour cette raison, nous disons une fois de plus à nos frères d'Afrique et d'Asie que le document qui est actuellement soumis à l'approbation de l'Assemblée ne représente réellement la pensée intrinsèque de personne, que c'est le fruit d'un compromis extrêmement laborieux et, sur la base de la solidarité concrétisée à Bandoung en 1955 et dans toutes les réunions d'Afrique et d'Asie depuis lors, nous leur adressons un appel en soulignant que c'est le minimum acceptable. Nous avons réalisé un équilibre tellement fragile et tellement éloigné des positions doctrinales de chaque délégation que nous croyons que c'est notre devoir de demander à nos frères d'Afrique et d'Asie d'apporter leur appui à un document qui n'a d'autre objectif que de servir la cause de la libération des peuples d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'ailleurs.

30. Mais nous ne limiterons pas notre appel à nos frères d'Afrique et d'Asie. A nos amis d'Amérique latine, qui ont joué ici le rôle historique que tout le monde sait, au moment où l'Asie et l'Afrique étaient quasi absentes, nous disons: faites confiance au Comité des Dix-Sept, n'empêchez pas que ce comité puisse faire une étude objective qui puisse permettre à l'Assemblée générale de prendre une décision en toute connaissance de cause. En effet, à ceux qui soutiennent ici qu'il y aurait danger à imposer aux puissances coloniales une date limite pour exécuter les obligations nées pour elles de l'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV), nous disons: attendez que notre comité puisse fournir, en toute objectivité, des éléments qui vous permettront de prendre une décision en toute connaissance de cause, parce que toute décision prise avant serait une décision passionnelle et, partant, indigne de l'Assemblée.

31. Nous ne limiterons pas davantage notre appel à nos amis d'Amérique latine, qui ont joué — nous sommes heureux de le constater et de le confirmer — avant notre apparition sur la scène internationale un rôle que nous n'avons cessé de louer en faveur de la décolonisation de l'Afrique et de l'Asie. Nous lancerons le même appel aux pays socialistes. Nous n'avons pas besoin d'insister. En effet, à cette tribune comme ailleurs, ils ont constamment soutenu toutes les thèses dont se réclament les forces vives de l'Afrique, qu'il s'agisse de gouvernements africains, de partis politiques, de mouvements de jeunesse et de femmes, ou de syndicats. Nous leur faisons néanmoins appel pour que, par leur vote, ils confirment leurs positions passées et permettent que le grand espoir des peuples colonisés puisse se réaliser à l'issue de la dix-septième session.

32. Mieux, nous voudrions nous adresser aux puissances de l'Europe occidentale, de l'Europe coloniale et à leurs alliés, pour leur dire: vous êtes persuadés que le colonialisme est mort; mais il y a tous les problèmes de coopération qui se posent désormais; nous vous disons très franchement, très loyalement; aidez-nous à oublier un passé si lourd d'humiliations, de difficultés! aidez-nous à abréger les souffrances des peuples encore sous le joug colonial! aidez-nous à être nous-mêmes, car le moment est venu de cesser une politique si manifestement contraire à vos intérêts.

33. Nous disons donc à toutes les familles spirituelles de l'Assemblée que le document qui leur est soumis pour adoption, véritablement, ne tranche aucun problème de fond. Nous demandons que le problème de date limite — date limite sur laquelle toutes les forces vives de l'Afrique, une fois de plus, se sont prononcées — soit transmis au Comité des Dix-Sept, afin qu'il l'étudie avec tout le soin possible et fasse rapport à la dix-huitième session. Il sera temps, à ce moment-là, d'en discuter. Et à ceux qui invoquent ici des considérations de démocratie, nous disons: n'empêchez pas l'Assemblée d'étudier une question qui tient à cœur à tout un continent, peut-être même à plus d'un continent.

34. La délégation de Guinée, si les auteurs des propositions de votes séparés insistaient, se verrait dans l'obligation de s'opposer formellement au vote par division sur le septième considérant et sur l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, concernant le problème de date limite. En effet, nous sommes en présence de deux propositions de votes séparés, émanant de deux délégations et portant, dans l'ensemble, sur trois paragraphes. Ma délégation demande qu'il y ait des votes distincts sur chacune de ces propositions, et notamment sur celles qui visent le septième considérant et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8.

35. M. PACHACHI (Irak) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le représentant de la Guinée vient d'adresser un nouvel appel à tous les représentants et spécialement à ceux qui ont demandé des votes séparés sur le septième alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du projet de résolution A/410 et Add.1. Il a ajouté que, si son appel n'était pas entendu, il invoquerait l'article 91 du règlement et s'opposerait à des votes séparés sur ces passages du projet de résolution. Nous appuyons la position prise par le représentant de la Guinée.

36. J'ai demandé la parole, toutefois, pour m'opposer à une autre demande de vote séparé qui a été faite vendredi soir [1194ème séance] par le représentant de la Tunisie. Il a demandé un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7 relatif à l'élargissement de la composition du Comité spécial sur la question du colonialisme.

37. On se souviendra que dans la discussion générale l'écrasante majorité des Etats Membres a émis l'avis que cet élargissement était souhaitable dans les circonstances présentes pour de nombreuses raisons. Ma délégation a été parmi les premières à proposer [1170ème séance] cet élargissement. Nous avons indiqué nos raisons. Nous avons dit que pour pouvoir accomplir sa tâche dans le plus bref délai possible le Comité spécial devrait se diviser en sous-comités restreints. Avec ses 17 membres actuels, ce ne serait guère possible. Nous avons dit aussi qu'en égard à l'importance de la tâche du Comité il serait désirable que d'autres Membres de l'Organisation, appartenant aux diverses régions géographiques du monde, aient l'occasion de contribuer à cette tâche capitale des Nations Unies avec les 17 membres choisis par le Président de la seizième session. Nous avons dit que l'adjonction de sept membres était peut-être préférable à l'adjonction de quatre membres parce qu'elle permettrait de mieux répartir les travaux au sein du Comité spécial et donnerait plus de souplesse au Président de l'Assemblée dans son choix de membres appartenant aux diverses régions géographiques.

38. Le représentant de la Tunisie a parlé de "l'équilibre" au sein du Comité spécial. Je ne sais pas ce qu'il a voulu dire par là. Le représentant de l'Indonésie, en présentant le projet de résolution [1194ème séance], a bien précisé qu'une composition élargie, loin de détruire l'équilibre actuel au sein du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, favoriserait cet équilibre, voire l'améliorerait. On a dit aussi qu'un élargissement de la composition compromettrait l'efficacité des travaux du Comité. J'attends encore qu'on me démontre de façon valable pourquoi et en quoi l'efficacité des travaux du Comité spécial serait compromise avec l'adjonction de sept membres.

39. Le nombre 24 n'est pas trop élevé par rapport au nombre total des Membres de l'Organisation, qui est de 110. On se rappellera que, lorsque la Charte est entrée en vigueur, l'Organisation ne comprenait que 51 membres, mais qu'elle avait pourtant un conseil, comme le Conseil économique et social, comprenant 18 membres. Or 18 membres représentent plus du tiers des 51 membres que comprenait l'Organisation en 1945, alors qu'aujourd'hui nous proposons le nombre 24 pour 110 Membres, c'est-à-dire une proportion de moins du quart, s'approchant du cinquième. La proportion est donc beaucoup plus réduite que celle qui avait été prévue pour le Conseil économique et social au début de l'existence de l'Organisation.

40. Le représentant de la Tunisie a dit ensuite que, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes étant maintenu, il n'y aurait aucune raison d'accroître le nombre des membres du Comité spécial. Il est exact que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes sera maintenu, mais son mandat découle du Chapitre XI de la Charte et il s'occupe de la communication de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, et je suis sûr que le représentant de la Tunisie reconnaîtra que ce mandat est assez différent de celui du Comité spécial, qui a été établi par la résolution 1654 (XVI). Quoi qu'il en soit, la résolution 1700 (XVI), qui prévoit le maintien du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, contient un paragraphe demandant que le Comité soumette des rapports pertinents, de nature technique ou autre, au Comité spécial. Par conséquent, le fait que le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes soit maintenu ne réduit en aucune manière les responsabilités du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept, et ce pour deux raisons: d'une part, leurs mandats sont différents; d'autre part, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes est invité à soumettre des rapports pertinents et des renseignements de nature technique au Comité spécial.

41. Le représentant de la Tunisie a dit:

"Aucun amendement n'ayant été présenté à cet effet" — c'est-à-dire pour que le chiffre 4 soit adopté au lieu du chiffre 7 — "nous demandons un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7 du projet de résolution, et nous nous prononcerons contre ce paragraphe. Si ce paragraphe est maintenu, ma délégation votera cependant en faveur du projet dans son ensemble." [1194ème séance, par. 82.]

Cela montre que le représentant de la Tunisie ne fait pas une objection majeure au maintien de ce paragraphe, puisque ce maintien n'influencera pas son vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

42. Le représentant de la Tunisie propose l'adjonction de quatre membres au lieu de sept. Y a-t-il là une si grande différence? En ajoutant trois membres de plus, cela influencera-t-il tellement l'efficacité des travaux du Comité spécial et cela affectera-t-il tellement son équilibre? Certainement pas.

43. Je dois donc dire que nous ne sommes pas convaincus par les arguments qu'avance le représentant de la Tunisie. S'il accepte quatre nouveaux membres, il peut certainement en accepter sept. Trois membres supplémentaires ne bouleverseront pas les choses.

44. Quel effet aurait un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7? Cela risquerait de permettre à la minorité de mettre en échec la volonté de la majorité, telle qu'elle a été exprimée à maintes reprises dans la discussion générale. Trente-quatre délégations d'Asie et d'Afrique se sont associées pour présenter le projet de résolution et ont demandé que le Comité spécial soit augmenté de sept membres. C'est donc le désir de la grande majorité du groupe des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, qui représente, après tout, la moitié des Membres de l'Organisation. Je pense que l'Assemblée reconnaîtra qu'ils sont particulièrement intéressés par la question du colonialisme.

45. Je suis certain que d'autres groupes encore appuient notre projet de résolution. Nous espérons même le voir adopté par l'Assemblée à une très forte majorité. Mais, s'il y a un vote séparé, le risque existe que la minorité puisse faire prévaloir son point de vue sur celui de la grande majorité. Il pourrait en résulter la suppression totale de ce paragraphe, ce qui signifierait que la composition du Comité spécial ne serait pas élargie.

46. Comme le représentant de la Guinée l'a dit, le projet de résolution est le résultat de consultations et d'efforts laborieux et difficiles. C'est parce qu'il résulte d'un compromis que nous avons pu en être cosignataires avec la majorité du groupe des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Je renouvelle donc mon appel au représentant de la Tunisie en lui demandant de ne pas insister pour demander un vote séparé. Il est membre du Comité spécial et je suis sûr qu'il n'a jamais voulu donner l'impression que certains membres de ce comité ne voudraient pas en voir d'autres se joindre à eux. Nous pourrions alors voter le projet de résolution en totalité et j'espère qu'il sera adopté à une majorité écrasante.

47. M. Taleb SLIM (Tunisie): Aucun élément nouveau n'étant intervenu, et le projet de résolution [A/L.410 et Add.1] étant demeuré tel qu'il était, la délégation de la Tunisie ne voit aucune raison de renoncer à son attitude première. Les motifs qui nous inspirent, nous l'avons dit, sont de principe. Le représentant de l'Irak, se référant à mon intervention du 14 décembre [1194ème séance], m'a demandé ce que la Tunisie entend par "équilibre". Je voudrais lui rappeler ce que j'ai dit alors:

"Nous voulons attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur le danger de compromettre le très délicat équilibre établi par la composition actuelle que cette modification présente. Ce n'est pas que la répartition actuelle soit parfaite — et je répète que la répartition au sein du Comité des Dix-Sept n'est pas parfaite — "mais elle s'est révélée à l'expérience proportionnellement bien représentative des tendances existant dans l'Organisation sur les problèmes du colonialisme et de la décolonisation. Nous comprenons toutefois que, devant l'augmentation du nombre des Membres de l'Organisation, il soit nécessaire d'apporter un petit ajustement à la composition du Comité spécial. A cet égard, il convient de rappeler que, sur les six derniers nouveaux Membres de l'ONU, quatre appartiennent à l'Afrique et deux à l'Amérique centrale et méridionale. Nous pensons que l'adjonction de deux membres" — je n'ai jamais dit que j'étais d'accord pour quatre membres — "eût été possible et utile dans le cadre de l'équilibre actuel." [1194ème séance, par. 79.]

48. Je n'entends pas me livrer à une dissertation sur une question au regard de laquelle nous avons expliqué déjà abondamment notre position. Nous sommes très touchés par tous les appels qui nous ont été adressés, que ce soit par le représentant de la Guinée ou par celui de l'Irak, au nom de la solidarité africaine et africano-asiatique. Cette solidarité, nous nous en réclavons. C'est en son nom, nous l'avons dit, que nous nous disposons à voter en tout état de cause en faveur d'un projet qui, à nos yeux, est susceptible de plusieurs améliorations. Par solidarité, nous nous abstenons de présenter des amendements à ce projet. Mais je ne crois pas qu'il y ait ici quelqu'un qui puisse nous contester le droit — et le désir — de manifester une opposition sur un point déterminé du projet. C'est pour cela que nous insistons pour que l'on vote séparément sur le paragraphe 7, et, si l'on venait à s'y opposer, nous insisterions pour que l'Assemblée se prononce sur la motion de division.

49. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je vais maintenant inviter l'Assemblée à statuer sur les demandes de votes séparés. Deux demandes de votes séparés ont été présentées. L'une porte sur le dernier alinéa du préambule et sur le dernier membre de phrase de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, ainsi conçu: "... y compris des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite appropriée". Le premier vote portera sur la demande de vote séparé sur ces deux passages, à savoir le dernier alinéa du préambule et les derniers mots de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8.

50. Je donne la parole au représentant de la Guinée pour une motion d'ordre.

51. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): Il est possible qu'une proposition guinéenne ait échappé à l'attention des membres de l'Assemblée, mais j'ai demandé expressément qu'il soit procédé à des votes distincts sur chacune des motions de division, et notamment sur celles qui se rapportent au septième considérant et à l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, qui émanent toutes deux de la délégation des Etats-Unis.

52. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je mets aux voix la proposition tendant à un vote séparé sur le dernier alinéa du préambule. Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Maroc, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Népal, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Portugal, Afrique du Sud, Espagne, Suède, Trinité et Tobago, Turquie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Venezuela, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Cameroun, Canada, Ceylan, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Costa Rica, Chypre, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, France, Grèce, Guatemala, Honduras, Islande, Inde, Irlande, Italie, Japon, Luxembourg, Mexique.

Votent contre: Maroc, Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Somalie, Soudan, Syrie, Tanganyika, Togo, Ouganda, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Algérie, Bulgarie, Burundi, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République centrafricaine, Tchad, Congo (Léopoldville), Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Ethiopie, Gabon, Ghana, Guinée, Haïti, Hongrie, Indonésie, Irak, Côte-d'Ivoire, Jordanie, Libéria, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritanie, Mongolie.

S'abstiennent: Thaïlande, Tunisie, Cambodge, Iran, Jamaïque, Laos, Liban.

Par 50 voix contre 47, avec 7 abstentions, la proposition est adoptée.

53. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je vais maintenant mettre aux voix la dernière demande. Je le fais à dessein, parce que j'aurai quelque chose à dire au sujet de la demande de vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7 et, je le précise, non sur la question de fond, mais à titre d'observation.

54. Je mets aux voix maintenant la proposition tendant à un vote séparé sur les derniers mots de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, à savoir: "... y compris des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite appropriée". Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

Le vote commence par Haïti, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Honduras, Islande, Inde, Irlande, Italie, Japon, Luxembourg, Mexique, Népal, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Portugal, Afrique du Sud, Espagne, Suède, Trinité et Tobago, Tunisie, Turquie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Venezuela, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Cameroun, Canada, Ceylan, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Costa Rica, Chypre, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, France, Grèce, Guatemala.

Votent contre: Haïti, Hongrie, Indonésie, Irak, Côte-d'Ivoire, Jordanie, Libéria, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritanie, Mongolie, Maroc, Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Somalie, Soudan, Syrie, Tanganyika, Togo, Ouganda, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Algérie, Bulgarie, Burundi, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République centrafricaine, Tchad, Congo (Léopoldville), Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Ethiopie, Gabon, Ghana, Guinée.

S'abstiennent: Iran, Jamaïque, Laos, Liban, Thaïlande, Cambodge.

Par 51 voix contre 47, avec 6 abstentions, la proposition est adoptée.

55. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous arrivons à la troisième demande de vote séparé. Comme je l'ai dit, j'ai une ou deux observations à faire avant de la mettre aux voix. Je constate d'abord que c'est une chose admise que le Président doit être au service de l'Assemblée générale. Il doit faire de son mieux pour s'acquitter de toute mission que l'Assemblée générale lui confie. Je pense que c'est aussi son devoir de soutenir le point de vue de la présidence.

56. Je peux dire, en toute conscience, que je suis absolument impartial au sujet de la teneur du paragraphe 7. Je serais parfaitement satisfait si le Comité spécial gardait sa composition actuelle. Je m'efforcerais de faire de mon mieux pour répondre au désir de l'Assemblée générale sur ce point, quelle que soit sa décision. Les auteurs du projet de résolution auraient pu ne proposer aucune augmentation du nombre des membres du Comité spécial; ils auraient pu proposer que de nouveaux membres soient élus par l'Assemblée générale; ils auraient pu encore désigner eux-mêmes les membres supplémentaires qu'ils voudraient voir faire partie du Comité spécial. Mais ils ont jugé bon d'en laisser le soin au Président. Dans la discussion sur la question d'un vote séparé, on a beaucoup insisté avec vigueur sur le fait que, de l'avis d'une certaine délégation ou de quelques délégations, tout élargissement de la composition du Comité spécial risquerait d'en rompre l'équilibre délicat. Si tel est l'avis de certaines délégations, cela signifie que charger le Président de ce devoir ou de cette responsabilité revient à lui confier une mission impossible à remplir. Si tel continue à être le cas, il se pourrait qu'il me soit impossible de donner suite à la demande de l'Assemblée.

57. Je mets maintenant aux voix la proposition tendant à un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 7. Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la Thaïlande, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Thaïlande, Trinité et Tobago, Tunisie, Turquie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Cambodge, Cameroun, Canada, Chine, Costa Rica, Danemark, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, France, Grèce, Honduras, Islande, Inde, Irlande, Italie, Luxembourg, Mexique, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Panama, Paraguay, Portugal, Afrique du Sud, Espagne, Suède.

Votent contre: Togo, Ouganda, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Afghanistan, Albanie, Algérie, Brésil, Bulgarie, Burundi, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, République centrafricaine, Tchad, Chili, Congo (Léopoldville), Cuba, Chypre, Tchécoslovaquie, Gabon, Ghana, Guinée, Haïti, Hongrie, Indonésie, Irak, Jordanie, Liban, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritanie, Mongolie, Maroc, Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Somalie, Syrie, Tanganyika.

S'abstiennent: Venezuela, Yougoslavie, Bolivie, Birmanie, Ceylan, Colombie, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Ethiopie, Guatemala, Iran, Côte-d'Ivoire, Jamaïque, Japon, Laos, Libéria, Népal, Pérou, Arabie Saoudite, Soudan.

Par 46 voix contre 38, avec 21 abstentions, la proposition est rejetée.

58. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous allons maintenant procéder aux votes sur le projet de résolution. Je mets aux voix le dernier alinéa du préambule. Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Canada, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: République centrafricaine, Ceylan*, Tchad, Congo (Léopoldville), Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Dahomey, Ethiopie, Gabon, Ghana, Guinée, Haïti, Hongrie, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Côte-d'Ivoire, Jordanie, Laos, Libéria, Libye, Mali, Mauritanie, Mongolie, Maroc, Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Arabie Saoudite, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Somalie, Soudan, Syrie, Tanganyika, Thaïlande, Togo, Tunisie, Ouganda, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Algérie, Bulgarie, Burundi, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie.

Votent contre: Canada, Chili, Colombie, Costa Rica, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Finlande, France, Grèce, Guatemala, Honduras, Islande, Irlande, Italie, Japon, Luxembourg, Mexique, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Afrique du Sud, Espagne, Suède, Turquie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Venezuela, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil.

S'abstiennent: Chine, Chypre, Fédération de Malaisie, Inde, Jamaïque, Liban, Madagascar, Népal, Trinité et Tobago, Birmanie, Cambodge, Cameroun.

Le Portugal ne prend pas part au vote.

Il y a 54 voix pour, 40 voix contre et 12 abstentions.

N'ayant pas obtenu la majorité requise des deux tiers, l'alinéa n'est pas adopté.

59. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): Je vois, Monsieur le Président, que, dans votre interprétation de l'Article 18 de la Charte, vous avez estimé qu'il s'agissait là d'une question importante. Je ne voudrais absolument pas revenir sur une décision présidentielle, mais je me pose tout de même la question de savoir, en me fondant sur des précédents récents, si c'est là vraiment, aux termes de l'Article 18 de la Charte, une question que l'on peut qualifier d'importante et, de ce fait, requérant — d'après le paragraphe 2 de l'Article 18 de la Charte — la majorité des deux tiers.

60. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La façon dont j'ai annoncé le résultat du vote a été correctement interprétée par le représentant de la Guinée comme signifiant que l'ensemble de la question, y compris certainement le présent projet de résolution, est une question importante au sens de l'Article 18 de la Charte. J'aurais pensé qu'il serait le dernier à prétendre le contraire. En tout état de cause, c'est ainsi que j'ai décidé. Si un représentant désire faire appel de la décision présidentielle, je soumettrai bien entendu cet appel à l'Assemblée; je tiens à rappeler à l'Assemblée que la décision présidentielle peut être renversée à la majorité simple.

* Le représentant de Ceylan a demandé ultérieurement au Secrétaire général que son pays figure au nombre de ceux qui se sont abstenus.

61. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): Je croyais, Monsieur le Président, m'être exprimé clairement en disant que je n'entendais pas m'opposer à une décision présidentielle surtout venant d'un président tel que vous-même. Je ne m'oppose donc pas à votre décision, mais je note tout de même avec satisfaction que 54 délégations se sont prononcées en faveur de la thèse soutenue par les peuples africains.

62. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je mets aux voix maintenant le dernier membre de phrase de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8. Ce membre de phrase est le suivant: "... y compris des recommandations sur la fixation d'une date limite appropriée". Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la Nouvelle-Zélande, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Niger, Nigéria, Pakistan, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Arabie Saoudite, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Somalie, Soudan, Syrie, Tanganyika, Thaïlande, Togo, Tunisie, Ouganda, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Algérie, Bulgarie, Burundi, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Cambodge, République centrafricaine, Tchad, Congo (Léopoldville), Cuba, Tchécoslovaquie, Dahomey, Ethiopie, Gabon, Ghana, Guinée, Haïti, Hongrie, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Israël, Côte-d'Ivoire, Jordanie, Laos, Libéria, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritanie, Mongolie, Maroc.

Votent contre: Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Norvège, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Afrique du Sud, Espagne, Suède, Turquie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, États-Unis d'Amérique, Venezuela, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Canada, Chili, Colombie, Costa Rica, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Finlande, France, Guatemala, Honduras, Islande, Irlande, Italie, Japon, Luxembourg, Mexique, Pays-Bas.

S'abstiennent: Trinité et Tobago, Uruguay, Birmanie, Cameroun, Ceylan, Chine, Chypre, Fédération de Malaisie, Grèce, Inde, Jamaïque, Liban, Népal.

Le Portugal ne prend pas part au vote.

Il y a 55 voix pour, 38 voix contre et 13 abstentions.

N'ayant pas obtenu la majorité requise des deux tiers, le dernier membre de phrase de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 n'est pas adopté.

63. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée va maintenant voter sur l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, modifié.

Par 25 voix contre zéro, avec 5 abstentions, l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8, modifié, est adopté.

64. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je mets maintenant aux voix l'ensemble du projet de résolution des 34 puissances (A/L.410 et Add.1) tel qu'il a été modifié. Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

Le vote commence par le Niger, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Niger, Nigéria, Norvège, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Arabie Saoudite, Sénégal, Sierra Leone, Somalie, Soudan, Suède, Syrie, Tanganyika, Thaïlande, Togo, Trinité et Tobago, Tunisie, Turquie, Ouganda, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, États-Unis d'Amérique, Haute-Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Algérie, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Bulgarie, Birmanie, Burundi, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Cambodge, Cameroun, Canada, République centrafricaine, Ceylan, Tchad, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Congo (Léopoldville), Costa Rica, Cuba, Chypre, Tchécoslovaquie, Dahomey, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Equateur, Salvador, Ethiopie, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, Gabon, Ghana, Grèce, Guatemala, Guinée, Haïti, Honduras, Hongrie, Islande, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Irlande, Israël, Italie, Côte-d'Ivoire, Jamaïque, Japon, Jordanie, Laos, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Mauritanie, Mexique, Mongolie, Maroc, Népal, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande.

Votent contre: néant.

S'abstiennent: Afrique du Sud, Espagne, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, France.

Le Portugal ne prend pas part au vote.

Par 101 voix contre zéro, avec quatre abstentions, l'ensemble du projet de résolution modifié est adopté.

65. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donnerai maintenant la parole aux représentants qui désirent expliquer leurs votes. Je donne d'abord la parole au représentant de l'Afrique du Sud.

66. M. BOTHA (Afrique du Sud) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation de l'Afrique du Sud a suivi avec intérêt le débat sur le rapport du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) de l'Assemblée générale. Nous avons espéré que, conformément aux déclarations faites par diverses délégations dans la discussion, l'attention voulue aurait également été accordée à un éventuel projet de résolution sur le sort misérable de centaines de millions de personnes qui ont perdu leur indépendance par la force armée et par la conquête et qui sont soumises au colonialisme depuis 1945. Cela ne s'est cependant pas produit. Ma délégation regrette cette manière d'aborder le problème du colonialisme sous un seul aspect, sans égard aux centaines de millions de gens qui vivent sous le joug impérialiste de la plus grande puissance coloniale de notre époque.

67. La délégation de l'Afrique du Sud, tout en appréciant l'esprit dans lequel la résolution avait été déposée, estime que certains de ses paragraphes contiennent des éléments qu'elle ne peut approuver et certaines dispositions qui, de l'avis de ma délégation, vont au-delà des stipulations de la Charte. C'est pourquoi ma délégation n'a pas pu voter en faveur du projet de résolution et, en conséquence, s'est abstenue.

68. M. AGUIRRE (Uruguay) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Ma délégation, qui est membre du Comité spécial constitué aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI), estime nécessaire d'expliquer le sens du vote qu'elle vient d'émettre.

69. Elle ne peut pas dire qu'elle souscrit à tous les paragraphes de cette résolution ni, pour préciser davantage, à tous les termes employés dans son texte, mais elle s'associe avec enthousiasme au sens général et à l'objectif de la résolution que nous venons d'adopter.

70. Au cours des votes séparés, nous avons voté contre le septième alinéa du préambule parce que nous considérons que sa rédaction n'est adaptée ni aux réalités ni aux possibilités. Il est dit dans cet alinéa que, pour accélérer le processus de décolonisation, il est nécessaire de fixer une date limite appropriée pour l'application intégrale des dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV). Ma délégation estime que ce critère de nécessité et la mention d'une date limite au singulier ne s'ajustent pas à la réalité. Nous n'avons pas en vue le fait que le Comité spécial a la faculté de juger opportune la fixation d'une date après étude d'un cas d'espèce. Cette possibilité est implicitement comprise parmi les facultés conférées au Comité par la résolution qui l'a créé et il peut en user quand il le juge bon.

71. Beaucoup d'éléments peuvent intervenir pour accélérer le processus de décolonisation: attitudes, efforts, dispositions — et ces éléments sont vraiment nécessaires. Toutefois, nous ne pouvons pas sanctionner de notre vote un texte qui attribue à la fixation d'une date une importance primordiale, un caractère de nécessité pour l'accélération du processus de décolonisation. Ce n'est pas le moment maintenant de nous étendre en arguments sur cette relation, mais, si cette nécessité avait vraiment un fondement, l'histoire de ces dernières années aurait été différente de ce qu'elle a été.

72. La rédaction de l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 envisageait le même aspect sous une forme que nous trouvions plus proche de la réalité, plus proche des possibilités, en corrigeant comme il convient sa traduction en espagnol. Dans ledit alinéa, on lit dans le texte espagnol "en particular", alors que l'original en anglais emploie "including" et la version française "y compris". Il nous paraît évident que l'équivalent espagnol de "including" et "y compris" est assez différent de "en particular". Cela sera sans doute mis au point par le Secrétariat. Une fois la traduction rectifiée, le paragraphe autorisait, à notre avis, par sa mention de recommandations au pluriel, une interprétation sensiblement différente de l'interprétation qui s'imposait inévitablement pour le septième alinéa du préambule. De là notre abstention sur ce point.

73. Sir Patrick DEAN (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation s'est abstenue dans le vote de la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée. Je voudrais en expliquer les raisons. La politique de mon gouvernement en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes soumis à notre administration est que les populations de ces territoires doivent progresser aussi rapidement que possible vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance. Cette politique est entièrement en harmonie avec l'esprit et la lettre du Chapitre XI de la Charte et nous sommes certains que notre politique est la bonne.

74. Comme je l'ai dit dans la discussion générale sur la question, le 26 novembre 1962 [1175ème séance], nous n'avons besoin d'aucune déclaration, d'aucune résolution, d'aucun comité pour confirmer la justesse de notre politique. C'est pour cette raison que ma délégation s'est abstenue dans le vote de la résolution 1514 (XV) sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et dans le vote de la résolution 1654 (XVI) qui a créé le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

75. En de nombreuses occasions, ma délégation a expliqué sa position en la matière. Nous ne pouvons accepter d'intervention de l'Assemblée dans l'administration des territoires dont nous demeurons responsables. Nous nous acquitterons de notre responsabilité pleinement et sans crainte. Nous ne pouvons la partager ou la transférer. Nous n'avons aucune intention de l'éluder. L'accession à l'indépendance d'un si grand nombre de nos anciens territoires depuis 15 ans est une preuve suffisante du succès de notre politique en ce domaine. Pour ces raisons, ma délégation n'a pas pu voter pour la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée.

76. Néanmoins, avec les réserves que je viens d'énoncer au nom de mon gouvernement, sous réserve également de la composition satisfaisante du Comité spécial élargi, mon gouvernement espère pouvoir rester membre du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre et continuer à participer à ses travaux pendant l'année qui vient. Si ma délégation peut en fait continuer à être membre du Comité spécial, nous nous attendons à ce que le Comité spécial examine en temps voulu, entre autres questions, celle des territoires d'Europe et d'Asie qui ont été occupés — certains d'entre eux au cours des 30 dernières années — par une puissance coloniale dont j'ai parlé assez longuement dans une intervention précédente.

77. M. POLDERMAN (Pays-Bas) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au nom de ma délégation, je voudrais expliquer très brièvement notre vote sur le septième alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8 du projet de résolution qui vient d'être adopté. Ma délégation n'est pas opposée à la fixation de dates limites pour l'autodétermination, d'une façon générale, à condition toutefois que ces dates ne soient pas imposées aux puissances administrantes sans tenir compte des réalités de chaque cas d'espèce et des vœux des populations. C'est pourquoi nous étions d'avis de demander aux puissances administrantes de fixer des dates limites pour l'exercice de l'autodétermination ou l'accession à l'indépendance, en consultation avec les populations.

78. Toutefois, la fixation par les Nations Unies d'une date limite générale pour tous les territoires ou la fixation d'une date limite pour un territoire particulier nous semblent dénuées de réalisme et peu favorables à la coopération indispensable entre les puissances administrantes et les Nations Unies. Pour ces raisons, nous avons été obligés de voter contre le septième alinéa du préambule et l'alinéa b du paragraphe 8.

79. M. MARSH (Jamaïque) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation de la Jamaïque est particulièrement sensible au désir d'indépendance étant donné que nous-mêmes avons, pour la première fois, le privilège de jouir des droits que confère la souveraineté et d'en exercer les responsabilités. Nous nous préoccupons particulièrement de ce problème du colonialisme, car la plupart des colonies qui restent sont en Afrique. L'humiliation de tout Africain est ressentie par tout citoyen de la Jamaïque, quelle que soit son origine.

80. Ma délégation s'est abstenue dans les votes sur les deux alinéas relatifs à une date limite. Certes, l'idée est séduisante et, en cet âge de planification, elle pourrait paraître, à première vue, logique. Nous croyons néanmoins que la souplesse est essentielle dans toute situation politique. Pendant le débat, un représentant a parlé de situations qui risquent d'être nuisibles pour "nous, les petits". C'est une situation rigide telle que celle qui existerait si des dates limites étaient fixées qui serait précisément défavorable à "nous, les petits". Dans une telle situation la force serait le facteur dominant et la possibilité d'examiner les exigences de chaque cas disparaîtrait. A ce moment-là, il pourrait se produire des retraits cyniques, au mépris des besoins d'ordre économique et sans tenir compte de la nécessité d'une préparation politique et de la création d'institutions parlementaires.

81. Ma délégation continuera d'appuyer toute proposition faite à l'Assemblée qui, à notre avis, aiderait de manière certaine les peuples qui luttent pour le droit à la libre détermination.

82. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Deux des auteurs de la résolution que nous venons d'adopter ont demandé à exercer leur droit de réponse. Je regrette de ne pouvoir faire droit à cette demande, car le passage final de l'article 90 du règlement intérieur ne le permet pas.

83. Je donne la parole au représentant de la Guinée, non pour l'exercice du droit de réponse, mais pour une déclaration qu'il désire faire en tant qu'un des auteurs de la résolution.

84. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): La majorité des membres de l'Assemblée vient de se prononcer, par 55 voix contre 38, sur la nécessité de fixer une date limite aux puissances coloniales afin qu'elles exécutent la résolution [1514 (XV)] relative à l'indépendance des peuples et territoires colonisés. Comme le Président l'a dit tout à l'heure, la délégation guinéenne serait la dernière à estimer que ce n'est pas là une question importante. Mieux, nous avons soutenu et nous continuons de soutenir que la question de la décolonisation est de loin la plus importante à laquelle l'Assemblée générale ait à faire face.

85. Ma délégation voudrait transmettre sa gratitude à tous ceux qui ont soutenu cette idée, qui correspond exactement, quoi qu'on dise, aux aspirations profondes des peuples africains encore sous le joug et la domination de l'étranger. Notre satisfaction, notre réconfort sont de voir que, par 55 voix contre 38, la voix de l'Afrique souffrante, de l'Afrique humiliée, de l'Afrique sous domination coloniale a été entendue au sein de l'Assemblée. Qui plus est, nous sommes heureux de constater qu'aucune voix de pays non aligné ne figure parmi les 38, qu'aucune voix africaine n'y figure non plus. Nous sommes heureux de constater que deux voix seulement d'Asie figurent parmi les 38. C'est là certainement, pour les peuples africains, la meilleure consolation.

86. Quoi qu'il en soit, ces peuples sont décidés, quelles que soient les forces opposantes, à se libérer, et ils se libéreront. Notre vœu a été et demeure que l'Assemblée soit un facteur de paix, pour faire en sorte que cette libération s'effectue de façon paisible.

87. Je voudrais redire notre gratitude à tous ceux qui, malgré les pressions, malgré tout ce qui a pu se passer dans l'ombre et durant le week-end, ont apporté à notre thèse, à celle des peuples africains, une si écrasante majorité. Je vous remercie au nom des peuples d'Afrique.

88. M. BINDZI (Cameroun): Ma délégation a participé au débat général sur la décolonisation, à l'occasion de l'examen du rapport soumis par le Comité des Dix-Sept [A/5238]. Elle a par conséquent exprimé et précisé sa position de la manière qu'il lui a paru nécessaire.

89. Nous venons d'entériner un texte très important. Comme l'a dit ici mon collègue de Guinée, ma délégation a patronné ce texte, avec d'autres pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Malheureusement, ce texte, comme il l'a si bien dit, est le fruit d'un compromis particulièrement laborieux et il est normal, il est habituel que, dans une telle situation, les positions puissent être quelquefois divergentes.

90. Tout à l'heure, dans un vote de procédure, ma délégation, avec beaucoup d'autres, a estimé, en son âme et conscience, qu'il convenait de permettre à chacun (et pas seulement à ceux qui ne partagent pas avec nous l'honneur d'être africains, mais qui sont quand même des hommes, avec leurs opinions propres, car ma délégation respecte de façon absolue toutes les opinions, d'où qu'elles viennent) de libérer ses scrupules de conscience; c'est pourquoi elle s'est prononcée en faveur du vote par division. Ma délégation estime en effet qu'il n'y a pas, d'une part, des opinions sacrées et, d'autre part, des opinions qui ne le seraient pas.

91. Ensuite, cela va sans dire, ma délégation, en tant que coauteur, a voté en faveur du texte qui était soumis à l'Assemblée générale, avec la conviction que, quelles qu'aient été les attitudes des uns et des autres au départ, un texte important allait être adopté par l'Assemblée. Et, comme pour tout ce qui, ici, recueille l'approbation de l'Assemblée entière, je suis sûr que tous, même ceux qui n'ont pas apporté leur appui à ce texte, feront tout ce qui est en leur pouvoir pour s'y conformer et le mettre en application. Cela m'autorise à espérer que bientôt tous les peuples encore sous la domination coloniale verront venir le jour de leur libération.

92. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Nous passons à l'examen des autres parties du rapport du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

93. Je donne la parole au représentant de la Syrie pour une déclaration sur le déroulement des votes.

94. M. RIFAI (Syrie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Maintenant que l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution concernant les travaux du Comité spécial, je voudrais attirer brièvement l'attention sur les recommandations particulières faites par le Comité spécial sur divers territoires et qui figurent dans son rapport [A/5238].

95. L'Assemblée générale a déjà pris des décisions sur le chapitre II, qui traite de la Rhodésie du Sud, sous la forme de deux résolutions, la résolution 1755 (XVII) adoptée le 12 octobre 1962 et la résolution 1760 (XVII) adoptée le 31 octobre 1962. Le chapitre III traite de la Rhodésie du Nord et contient un projet de résolution dont l'adoption est recommandée à l'Assemblée générale. Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif de ce projet de résolution demande instamment au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de prendre certaines dispositions en vue des élections législatives. Etant donné que, dans l'intervalle, la constitution envisagée est entrée en vigueur, que les élections ont déjà eu lieu et qu'il y a même eu d'autres événements, comme nous l'apprenons dans les journaux, le projet de résolution devrait être modifié pour tenir compte de ces événements ultérieurs. Certaines délégations s'apprêtent donc à présenter à l'Assemblée générale un nouveau projet de résolution relatif à la Rhodésie du Nord.

96. Le chapitre IV traite du Nyassaland. Il contient les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial sur ce territoire. Depuis l'adoption de ces conclusions et recommandations par le Comité spécial, des entretiens portant sur une constitution ont eu lieu entre le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et le Dr Banda. L'Assemblée générale voudra sans doute adopter aussi sur ce territoire une résolution prenant acte des conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial et tenant compte des événements récents. Un projet de résolution relatif à ce territoire a été élaboré et il sera prochainement présenté pour examen à l'Assemblée générale.

97. Le chapitre V traite des territoires relevant du Haut Commissaire, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland. Il contient un projet de résolution adopté par le Comité spécial et présenté à l'Assemblée générale pour examen. Ce projet de résolution appelle lui aussi certaines modifications. La Quatrième Commission a entendu récemment des pétitionnaires de certains de ces territoires. Il conviendra sans doute aussi de tenir compte de ces déclarations dans la résolution que l'Assemblée générale adoptera au sujet de ces territoires. Un projet de résolution contenant quelques légères modifications a été préparé et sera bientôt présenté à l'Assemblée générale.

98. Le chapitre VI du rapport a trait à Zanzibar et contient un projet de résolution présenté à l'Assemblée générale pour examen. Ce projet de résolution, comme celui qui a été recommandé au sujet du Kenya, pourrait être examiné par l'Assemblée générale sans modification.

99. Le chapitre VII concerne la Guinée britannique. Il contient un projet de résolution adopté par le Comité spécial le 30 juillet 1962. Depuis lors, une conférence a eu lieu à Londres entre les dirigeants de la Guinée britannique et des représentants du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Un rapport sur cette conférence a été présenté par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni [A/5315]. Je crois savoir qu'un projet de résolution sur ce territoire, tenant compte des faits nouveaux les plus récents, est en cours de préparation et sera prochainement présenté par certaines délégations à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale.

100. Le chapitre VIII a trait au Mozambique et le chapitre XI à l'Angola. Ces chapitres contiennent deux projets de résolution, l'un sur le Mozambique, l'autre sur l'Angola, présentés à l'Assemblée générale pour examen. On sait que l'Assemblée a déjà adopté [1194ème séance] une résolution sur les territoires administrés par le Portugal. Pour cette raison et vu que les recommandations figurant dans la résolution de l'Assemblée sur les territoires administrés par le Portugal reflètent essentiellement les recommandations faites au sujet du Mozambique par le Comité spécial, nous pensons qu'un vote sur le projet de résolution proposé par le Comité spécial sur le Mozambique ferait double emploi; on s'accorde à reconnaître qu'un vote sur ce projet de résolution est maintenant inutile. La question d'Angola, au contraire, se présente différemment. La situation dans ce territoire a été examinée non seulement par le Comité spécial et par le Comité spécial pour les territoires administrés par le Portugal, mais aussi par le Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola. Il faut se rappeler aussi que la question d'Angola a été examinée par le Conseil de sécurité et que le Conseil en reste saisi. Pour toutes ces raisons, l'avis général est que la question d'Angola doit être traitée dans un projet de résolution séparé et plusieurs délégations sont en train de préparer un texte de projet pour le soumettre à l'Assemblée. Je crois qu'il sera présenté bientôt.

101. Le chapitre IX concerne le Sud-Ouest africain. Comme la Quatrième Commission a tenu compte de ce chapitre lorsqu'elle a examiné le rapport du Comité spécial pour le Sud-Ouest africain et comme une résolution sur ce projet a déjà été adoptée [1194ème séance], le sentiment général est qu'un vote sur le projet de résolution proposé par le Comité spécial à l'examen de l'Assemblée n'est pas nécessaire, maintenant.

102. Finalement, nous ne restons saisis que des projets de résolution sur le Kenya et sur Zanzibar [voir A/L.413] recommandés par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept à l'Assemblée générale pour adoption. J'ai déjà dit que ces deux projets de résolution n'exigent pas de modification. L'Assemblée pourrait donc passer immédiatement à l'examen et à l'adoption des projets de résolution sur le Kenya et sur Zanzibar.

103. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Les membres de l'Assemblée viennent d'entendre l'exposé fait par le représentant de la Syrie, rapporteur du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept. S'il n'y a pas d'opposition, je vais mettre aux voix les projets de résolution proposés sur Zanzibar et sur le Kenya par le Comité spécial des Dix-Sept.

104. Je mets aux voix le projet de résolution sur Zanzibar (A/L.413).

Par 84 voix contre zéro, avec 4 abstentions, le projet de résolution sur Zanzibar est adopté.

105. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je mets aux voix maintenant le projet de résolution sur le Kenya (A/L.413).

Par 88 voix contre zéro, avec 4 abstentions, le projet de résolution sur le Kenya est adopté.

106. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Royaume-Uni pour une explication de vote.

107. Sir Douglas GLOVER (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je désire expliquer les votes de ma délégation sur les résolutions que l'Assemblée générale vient d'adopter sur le Kenya et sur Zanzibar. Je répéterai d'abord quelle est la position de mon gouvernement sur l'adoption par l'Assemblée de recommandations relatives à des territoires non autonomes particuliers.

108. Ma délégation est d'avis que rien dans la Charte n'autorise l'Assemblée générale à adopter de telles recommandations. En fait, la Charte reconnaît expressément la responsabilité des puissances administrantes pour l'administration des territoires sur lesquels elles communiquent des renseignements. A notre avis, l'Assemblée n'a ni le pouvoir, ni le droit de chercher à usurper une responsabilité qui appartient nettement à la puissance administrante seule. Ma délégation est donc opposée en principe à des résolutions de ce genre; elle ne peut les considérer que comme des tentatives d'ingérence dans l'administration de nos territoires.

109. Cependant, ayant réaffirmé sa position de principe, ma délégation admet que certaines délégations membres du Comité spécial des Dix-Sept ont cherché sincèrement à reconnaître les mesures que mon gouvernement a prises et continue à prendre au Kenya et à Zanzibar pour conduire ces territoires à l'indépendance. Mon gouvernement n'épargne aucun effort pour favoriser l'harmonie et l'unité parmi les populations du Kenya et de Zanzibar et faire accéder ces deux territoires à l'indépendance le plus tôt possible. L'esprit de ces résolutions est donc parfaitement conforme à la politique effectivement suivie par mon gouvernement. En conséquence, et sans porter atteinte à la position de principe que je viens d'indiquer, ma délégation s'est abstenue dans les votes sur ces deux résolutions.

Déclaration du Président

110. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je rappelle que la Cinquième Commission siégera ce soir à 20 heures.

111. Nous sommes parvenus à la dernière semaine de la session, selon la décision prise par l'Assemblée générale sur recommandation du Bureau. Je ne suis pas en mesure de faire continuer la séance plénière de cet après-midi, aucune autre question n'étant prête pour examen par l'Assemblée générale. Bien que nous travaillions tous sous pression, il est regrettable de constater qu'il y a des retards et c'est particulièrement regrettable en ce qui concerne des questions sur lesquelles il ne s'agit que de légers amendements ou modifications de rédaction. Quoi qu'il en soit, je tiens à donner à l'Assemblée l'assurance que je travaillerai avec diligence à hâter les travaux de la session, que ce soit en commission ou en séance plénière, afin que la session puisse être close le vendredi 21 décembre à 18 heures. C'est ce que je m'efforcerai de faire, mais je ne puis garantir que j'y réussirai car tout dépendra de la diligence de ceux qui ont encore à travailler, soit en commission, soit ailleurs, et qu'il s'agisse de rédiger ou de voter des projets de résolution. Je suis persuadé que tous les représentants s'efforceront de faire de leur mieux.

112. Je tiens à déclarer néanmoins que, si les travaux de l'Assemblée ne sont pas achevés vendredi 21 décembre à 18 heures, la session devra être ajournée et il devra y avoir une reprise de la session.

La séance est levée à 17 h 40.

1956 (XVIII). La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, qui figure dans sa résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960, et les résolutions 1654 (XVI) du 27 novembre 1961 et 1810 (XVII) du 17 décembre 1962 par lesquelles l'Assemblée générale a créé le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux,

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité spécial¹⁷,

Tenant compte des observations du Comité spécial relatives à la liste des territoires qu'il doit examiner¹⁸,

Notant avec un profond regret que, trois ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration, de nombreux territoires restent encore sous domination étrangère et que, dans certains cas, des mesures même préliminaires n'ont pas été prises en vue de l'application de la Déclaration,

Déplorant l'attitude négative de certaines puissances administrantes et leur refus partiel ou complet de coopérer avec le Comité spécial à l'application de la Déclaration,

Déplorant en outre l'assistance donnée à certaines puissances administrantes par certains États, assistance qui leur permet de persister dans leur refus d'appliquer la Déclaration,

Ayant adopté des résolutions sur la Rhodésie du Sud¹⁹, le Sud-Ouest africain²⁰, les territoires administrés par le Portugal²¹, Aden²², Malte²³, les îles Fidji²⁴, la Rhodésie du Nord²⁵, le Nyassaland²⁶, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland²⁷ et la Guyane britannique²⁸,

1. Réaffirme ses résolutions 1514 (XV), 1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII);

2. Prend acte avec satisfaction du travail accompli par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et approuve ses méthodes et procédures;

3. Approuve le rapport du Comité spécial et invite les puissances administrantes à appliquer les conclusions et recommandations qui y figurent;

4. Prie le Comité spécial de continuer à rechercher les voies et moyens les meilleurs d'assurer l'application immédiate et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance et de rendre compte à l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa dix-neuvième session au plus tard;

5. Regrette profondément le refus de certaines puissances administrantes de coopérer avec le Comité spécial et leur inobservation persistante des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale;

6. Invite le Comité spécial à porter à la connaissance du Conseil de sécurité tous faits, survenus dans l'un quelconque des territoires qu'il examine, qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales;

7. Prie tous les États de s'abstenir de tout acte pouvant gêner la mise en œuvre des résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale et le Comité spécial en vue de l'application de la Déclaration;

8. Prie en outre les puissances administrantes de prêter leur entière coopération au Comité spécial et de faciliter la tâche des sous-comités et groupes de visite chargés par le Comité spécial de se rendre dans les territoires relevant de son mandat;

9. Prie le Secrétaire général de continuer à fournir au Comité spécial tous les moyens et le personnel nécessaires à l'application de la présente résolution.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Nous abordons l'examen du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5446/Rev.1].

2. Les membres de l'Assemblée se souviendront qu'au moment de l'adoption de l'ordre du jour de la dix-huitième session, l'Assemblée générale a approuvé une recommandation par laquelle le Bureau proposait que

"les parties du rapport du Comité spécial traitant de certains territoires particuliers soient examinées par la Quatrième Commission, étant entendu qu'aucune décision ne serait prise en séance plénière au sujet de ces territoires avant que les rapports pertinents de la Quatrième Commission aient été présentés" [1210^eme séance, par. 88].

Voici quels sont les territoires dont il s'agit: territoires sous administration portugaise, point 23 de l'ordre du jour; question du Sud-Ouest africain, point 55 de l'ordre du jour; question de la Rhodésie du Sud, point 75 de l'ordre du jour.

3. Le rapport de la Quatrième Commission concernant les territoires sous administration portugaise est, me dit-on, en voie d'élaboration et sera prêt la semaine prochaine. Nous avons déjà examiné d'urgence en séance plénière les rapports de la Quatrième Commission concernant la question du Sud-Ouest africain et la question de la Rhodésie du Sud. Toutefois, ces deux points figurent encore à notre ordre du jour car nous devons être saisis des rapports du Secrétaire général mentionnés dans les résolutions pertinentes adoptées au cours de la présente session. Il s'agit d'abord de la résolution 1889 (XVIII) du 6 novembre 1963 sur la question de la Rhodésie du Sud. Au paragraphe 8 du dispositif, l'Assemblée générale:

"Prie le Secrétaire général de continuer à prêter ses bons offices pour favoriser la conciliation dans le territoire, comme il y a été invité par le paragraphe 4 de la résolution 1760 (XVII), et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale pendant la dix-huitième session, ainsi qu'au Comité spécial, sur les résultats de ses efforts."

4. Ensuite, sur la question du Sud-Ouest africain, nous avons la résolution 1899 (XVIII) du 13 novembre 1963. Au paragraphe 5 du dispositif, l'Assemblée générale prie le Secrétaire général:

"a) De poursuivre ses efforts afin d'atteindre les objectifs fixés aux paragraphes 5 et 6 de la résolution 1805 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale;

"b) D'inviter le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud à lui faire connaître sa décision à propos des dispositions de ces paragraphes, au plus tard le 30 novembre 1963;

"c) De faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale immédiatement après qu'il aura été saisi de la réponse du Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud."

5. Eu égard à la date spécifiée dans la résolution dont je viens de donner lecture, je propose de procéder de la façon suivante: l'Assemblée différerait l'examen des points concernant la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain jusqu'au moment où nous aurons reçu les deux rapports du Secrétaire général; elle passerait dès maintenant à l'examen du point 23 et les représentants seraient libres de discuter, dans le cadre du débat général, tous les problèmes relatifs à ce point.

6. Après la discussion générale, l'Assemblée étudierait les projets de résolution dont elle est saisie sur le point 23. Ceux des représentants qui désireraient prendre la parole et présenter des observations touchant tels ou tels territoires auront l'occasion de le faire avant que soit voté chacun des projets de résolution.

7. J'espère que cette procédure nous permettra de terminer l'examen général de ce point vers le milieu de la semaine prochaine. Il ne nous resterait plus alors que la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain dont nous pourrions nous occuper à la fin de la semaine. S'il n'y a pas d'objection, je me propose de suivre la procédure que je viens d'indiquer.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

8. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): J'invite M. Natwar Singh (Inde), Rapporteur du Comité spécial, à présenter le rapport de ce comité [A/5446/Rev.1].

9. M. NATWAR SINGH (Inde) [Rapporteur du Comité spécial] (traduit de l'anglais): En ma qualité de rapporteur du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, j'ai l'honneur de présenter à l'Assemblée générale le rapport de ce Comité, concernant ses travaux en 1963. Ce rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] a déjà été distribué et comprend cinq parties [A/5446 et Add.1 à 4]. Le premier additif se rapporte aux territoires sous administration portugaise, le deuxième traite du Sud-Ouest africain et les additifs trois et quatre ont respectivement trait à la Rhodésie du Sud et à Aden. Le rapport contient au total un millier de pages et c'est avec anxiété que je voyais grossir son volume. Il faut cependant comprendre que ce document a une très grande importance puisqu'il traite de nombreux territoires coloniaux et touche donc à la vie de millions d'êtres humains qui n'ont pas encore obtenu la liberté et l'indépendance.

10. Tous ces territoires relèvent du mandat du Comité spécial et certains d'entre eux ont fait l'objet, pour la première fois, d'une discussion au sein d'un comité des Nations Unies. On se rappellera que le Comité spécial a été créé à l'origine, au cours de la seizième session de l'Assemblée générale [résolution 1654 (XVI)] avec un effectif de 17 membres, pour s'occuper de la mise en œuvre de la fameuse Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux adoptée par l'Assemblée générale à sa quinzième session [résolution 1514 (XV)].

11. A sa dix-septième session, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 1810 (XVII), qui portait le nombre des membres du Comité à 24, l'invitant à rechercher les moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Le Comité élargi, composé de 24 membres, était invité à soumettre à l'Assemblée générale, à sa dix-huitième session, un rapport complet sur l'ensemble des territoires visés par la déclaration de 1960.

12. Le Comité spécial a commencé ses travaux le 20 février 1963. Sa première séance a été inaugurée par le Secrétaire général et je tiens à saisir cette occasion pour dire combien le Comité a apprécié l'intérêt manifesté par le Secrétaire général à l'égard de ses travaux et également l'assistance qu'il lui a fournie en tout temps. La dernière séance du Comité spécial a eu lieu le 21 octobre 1963, et pendant cette période de février à octobre, le Comité a tenu 101 séances. En outre, le Sous-Comité des pétitions, le Groupe de travail et les Sous-Comités pour la Rhodésie du Sud, Aden et la Guyane britannique, créés par le Comité spécial, ont également tenu plusieurs séances, certaines même en dehors du Siège des Nations Unies.

13. Je traiterai maintenant brièvement de la teneur du rapport. Le chapitre premier porte sur la création, l'organisation et les travaux du Comité. Le chapitre II concerne les territoires sous administration portugaise. La Rhodésie du Sud, le Sud-Ouest africain et Aden sont traités aux chapitres III, IV et V. On remarquera que ces quatre chapitres ont été distribués comme documents distincts. Le chapitre VI traite de Malte, le chapitre VII des Fidji, le chapitre VIII de la Rhodésie du Nord, du Nyassaland, du Kenya et de Zanzibar, le chapitre IX du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland, le chapitre X de la Guyane britannique, le chapitre XI de la Gambie, le chapitre XII de Gibraltar et le chapitre XIII de Fernando Poo, d'Irni, de Rio Muni et du Sahara espagnol. Le dernier chapitre, chapitre XIV, porte sur les décisions prises par le Comité en exécution de la résolution 1850 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale, relative au rapport sur la discrimination raciale dans les territoires non autonomes et donne la liste des pétitions concernant les territoires qui ont fait l'objet d'un examen au sein du Comité en 1963.

14. La plupart de ces chapitres sont divisés en trois sections principales: la section A donne des renseignements sur le territoire intéressé, la section B résume les discussions du Comité et la section C contient les décisions prises par le Comité.

15. J'aimerais faire observer que trois des chapitres du rapport, c'est-à-dire ceux qui traitent des territoires sous administration portugaise, de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain, ont fait l'objet d'un examen à la Quatrième Commission au cours de l'actuelle session de l'Assemblée générale. Les rapports de la Quatrième Commission sur le Sud-Ouest africain et la Rhodésie du Sud ont déjà été examinés par l'Assemblée générale et le rapport sur les territoires sous administration portugaise lui sera soumis d'ici un jour ou deux.

16. Ainsi que l'explique la partie du chapitre premier [A/5446/Rev.1] du rapport consacrée à ses activités futures, le Comité spécial, malgré tous ses efforts, n'a pas été en mesure de terminer l'examen de tous les territoires relevant de son mandat. Cependant, comme le montre le paragraphe 50, chapitre premier, les territoires déjà examinés par le Comité comprennent la plupart des régions d'Afrique où de vastes colonies continuent d'exister et où l'on rencontre les problèmes coloniaux les plus délicats. Sous réserve de toute décision que l'Assemblée générale pourra prendre au terme du débat actuel, le Comité spécial espère pouvoir s'occuper au cours de l'année prochaine des territoires qui restent.

17. En ce qui concerne la méthode de travail et la procédure, le Comité spécial s'est mis d'accord pour suivre celles qui avaient été adoptées par cet organe en 1962 et approuvées par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 1810 (XVII).

18. Le rapport du Comité, aux paragraphes 53 à 59, attire l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur certaines difficultés qu'il a rencontrées en ce qui concerne la tâche des missions de visite et des sous-comités créés par ses soins pour étudier les problèmes dans certains territoires. Je voudrais ici attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur l'introduction du rapport annuel du Secrétaire général ayant trait aux travaux de l'Organisation pour la période allant du 16 juin

1962 au 15 juin 1963. Dans ce document, le Secrétaire général déclare ce qui suit:

"Quant aux territoires portugais et au Sud-Ouest africain, les Etats Membres responsables de leur administration ont refusé de coopérer avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou d'appliquer ses résolutions. Dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud, le Royaume-Uni a maintenu sa position constitutionnelle touchant ce territoire, mais il a coopéré avec le Comité spécial lorsque ce dernier a étudié la question et il a procédé à des échanges de vues avec un sous-comité du Comité spécial à Londres." [A/5501/Add.1, Section IX.]

19. Le Comité spécial espère que toutes les puissances administrantes coopéreront pleinement avec lui dans l'accomplissement de ses travaux futurs et permettront aux groupes de visite de se rendre dans les territoires lorsque le Comité spécial le jugera nécessaire et utile.

20. Avant de conclure, je tiens à exprimer la vive satisfaction du Comité des Vingt-Quatre pour le travail remarquable effectué par S.E. Najmudine Rifai, de Syrie, mon prédécesseur, en tant que rapporteur du Comité. Il a participé en cette qualité aux travaux du Comité depuis sa création; il a continué d'occuper son poste jusqu'au 9 septembre dernier, date à laquelle il a été désigné pour d'autres fonctions dans son pays. Une partie importante du rapport que je viens de présenter à l'Assemblée générale a été préparée par ses soins. Personnellement, je lui suis très reconnaissant d'avoir accompli la moitié de ma tâche de façon si efficace et si diligente.

21. C'est avec plaisir également que j'exprime la reconnaissance du Comité des Vingt-Quatre à son Président, l'ambassadeur Sori Coulibaly, du Mali, pour l'habileté avec laquelle il a dirigé les débats de l'année 1963. Sa patience, son amabilité, sa profonde compréhension du problème du colonialisme et son tact diplomatique lui ont gagné l'affection et le respect de tous les membres du Comité. S.E. Carlos María Velázquez, de l'Uruguay, et S.E. Sonn Voeunsai, du Cambodge, les deux vice-présidents du Comité, ont également contribué grandement à la réussite et à la bonne marche des travaux de cet organe. La grande expérience et les connaissances remarquables de M. Velázquez ont apporté au Comité une aide inappréciable. M. Sonn n'a jamais épargné aucun effort dans l'accomplissement de la tâche confiée au Comité par la Déclaration figurant dans la résolution 1514 (XV) et c'est souvent grâce à son initiative que le Comité a obtenu les résultats que l'on connaît. M. Sonn a présidé avec grande distinction aux travaux du Sous-Comité d'Aden et il a présenté un rapport très utile [A/5546/Rev.1, chap. V].

22. Le Comité spécial est également reconnaissant à M. Mahmoud Mestiri, représentant adjoint permanent de la Tunisie, pour la manière très efficace dont il a présidé le Sous-Comité des pétitions. Il a été aidé activement dans cette tâche par M. Leonardo Díaz González, du Venezuela, vice-président du Sous-Comité des pétitions.

23. Enfin, je tiens à rappeler les services dévoués et très précieux rendus au Comité par les membres du Secrétariat désignés par le Secrétaire général pour y travailler. M. Protitchet, maintenant, M. Amachree, sous-secrétaire en fonctions, ont consacré leurs efforts et leur temps aux travaux du Comité spécial; celui-ci leur est reconnaissant de leur activité, de leur courtoisie et de leurs conseils précieux. Le Comité spécial a une dette de gratitude toute particulière à l'égard du secrétaire du Comité et de ses collègues, pour la façon excellente et très efficace dont ils ont travaillé. Je saisis maintenant officiellement l'Assemblée générale de ce rapport.

24. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Avant de donner la parole au premier orateur inscrit, je désire vous informer que j'ai l'intention de clore la liste des orateurs pour la discussion générale lundi prochain, 2 décembre, à 18 heures.

25. M. COULIBALY (Mali): Mon ami M. Natwar Singh, de la délégation de l'Inde, vient de présenter avec éloquence le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

26. En ma qualité de Président du Comité spécial, je voudrais renouveler ici mes remerciements à tous les membres du Comité pour le travail qu'ils ont accompli en siégeant pendant toute la période comprise entre les deux sessions. Je voudrais également dire mes remerciements au Secrétaire général U Thant pour les facilités mises à la disposition du Comité dans l'accomplissement de son mandat. Qu'il me soit permis aussi de renouveler à tous les membres du Secrétariat et aux interprètes mes remerciements pour la contribution appréciable qu'ils ont apportée au travail du Comité et à la préparation du rapport qui vient d'être présenté à notre assemblée [A/5446/Rev.1].

27. Le fait que le Conseil de sécurité, instance suprême de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, se soit réuni deux fois en l'espace de six mois pour examiner la politique coloniale du Portugal en Afrique, prouve, s'il en est encore besoin, que le colonialisme constitue non seulement la plus grande injustice à l'égard des peuples opprimés mais également une menace sérieuse à la paix et à la sécurité internationales.

28. En examinant la situation dans les territoires coloniaux, conformément aux résolutions 1514 (XV), 1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale, le Comité spécial s'est toujours efforcé d'obtenir la coopération des puissances administrantes, afin que les peuples sous domination étrangère puissent accéder à l'indépendance complète, sans conditions ni réserves, et par des voies pacifiques. Malheureusement, cette volonté de coopération du Comité spécial n'a pas toujours rencontré un écho favorable auprès des puissances coloniales.

29. C'est ainsi que, malgré les efforts répétés du Comité spécial, le Gouvernement portugais a refusé toute coopération avec lui. En effet, le gouvernement réactionnaire et retardataire de Salazar a poussé le cynisme jusqu'à considérer les activités du Comité comme illégales du fait que le Portugal n'a pas voté en faveur de la Déclaration contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV), ni en faveur de la résolution 1654 (XVI) créant le Comité spécial.

30. S'agissant du Sud-Ouest africain, le Gouvernement raciste de l'Afrique du Sud a également refusé de coopérer avec le Comité spécial, malgré l'invitation qui lui a été adressée à cet effet.

31. Le Royaume-Uni, qui est la puissance coloniale administrant le plus grand nombre de territoires encore non autonomes, est membre du Comité spécial et participe à ses délibérations et à ses décisions. Je voudrais dire à cette occasion que ma délégation a particulièrement apprécié le désir de coopération que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a manifesté en participant aux travaux du Comité spécial. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a reçu deux fois à Londres un sous-comité sur la Rhodésie du Sud et a eu avec lui des entretiens assez approfondis sur la situation de ce territoire.

32. Du moment que la politique officielle annoncée par le Royaume-Uni en matière de décolonisation est d'accélérer le processus de l'autodétermination des populations qu'il administre, le Comité spécial espérait rencontrer une compréhension et une coopération plus dynamiques auprès du Gouvernement britannique. Malheureusement, tel n'a pas toujours été le cas. En effet, malgré deux visites du Sous-Comité à Londres, le Royaume-Uni n'a pas cru devoir épouser les thèses de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sur la question de la Rhodésie du Sud.

33. C'est ainsi que le Comité spécial a regretté également que le Gouvernement de Londres ait refusé l'accès des territoires d'Aden et de ses protectorats à un sous-comité du Comité spécial. Le Comité spécial, qui examinait la situation d'Aden pour la première fois, avait jugé indispensable de s'enquérir des vues des populations avant de formuler des recommandations à l'Assemblée générale afin de hâter l'accession de ces territoires à l'indépendance, conformément aux désirs des dirigeants politiques du pays et selon les formes qui leur conviennent.

34. Malheureusement, cette sincère volonté de coopération du Comité spécial a été interprétée par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni comme une tentative du Comité en vue de s'ingérer dans l'administration du territoire et, à notre grand regret, la puissance administrante a pris toutes les mesures nécessaires pour empêcher l'entrée du Sous-Comité à Aden.

35. Au moment où le Comité spécial a abordé la question de la Guyane britannique, des troubles sociaux très graves avaient lieu dans ce territoire et, sur la demande des dirigeants politiques locaux, le Comité spécial a décidé l'envoi sur place d'un sous-comité de bons offices. Ce sous-comité avait pour mandat d'aider les dirigeants des deux principaux partis politiques à surmonter leurs divergences afin que le pays puisse accéder sans délai à l'indépendance.

36. Comme il l'a fait pour le Sous-Comité d'Aden, le Royaume-Uni a encore refusé l'entrée du Sous-Comité en Guyane britannique. Néanmoins, le Sous-Comité a pu s'entretenir à New York avec les dirigeants politiques de la Guyane britannique et a dégagé les recommandations qui figurent dans le rapport soumis à l'appréciation de l'Assemblée. Alors que les dirigeants politiques de la Guyane britannique étaient préoccupés de rechercher une solution d'entente sur la base de leurs entretiens avec le Sous-Comité, afin que le territoire puisse accéder sans délai à l'indépendance, le Royaume-Uni a convoqué le mois dernier à Londres une conférence sur la Guyane britannique. Quand on sait que les divergences entre les deux principaux partis politiques de la Guyane britannique servent de prétexte au Royaume-Uni pour retarder l'accession du territoire à l'indépendance, on ne peut que regretter la décision du Gouvernement britannique de convoquer une conférence qui a eu pour résultat de faire s'opposer davantage l'un à l'autre les deux chefs politiques de la Guyane britannique, au moment même où ces derniers se préoccupent de trouver une solution d'entente.

37. Si j'ai insisté sur les difficultés rencontrées par le Comité spécial au sujet de l'envoi de sous-comités ou de groupes de visite, c'est pour que l'Assemblée générale soit bien informée des conditions dans lesquelles le Comité a travaillé. Le Comité a été en effet privé d'un de ses moyens les plus efficaces, ce qui l'a obligé à s'acquitter de son mandat selon les seules méthodes dont il disposait.

38. A la lumière de l'expérience des deux années d'existence du Comité spécial, je pense que l'Assemblée générale doit inviter à nouveau les puissances coloniales à coopérer plus efficacement avec le Comité. Je ne pense pas que le rôle du Comité spécial soit uniquement d'instaurer un débat général sur la situation de chaque territoire et de voter une résolution, comme cela se passe déjà à la Quatrième Commission ou en séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale. Le Comité spécial a utilisé cette méthode de travail pour les grands territoires coloniaux d'Afrique, où la lutte de libération avait besoin d'être connue et soutenue par l'opinion internationale, en raison des atrocités commises par les puissances coloniales, comme le Portugal. Par ailleurs, les débats que le Comité spécial a organisés sur la situation dans ces territoires — notamment les séances tenues en Afrique au cours de l'année 1962 sur l'invitation des Gouvernements du Maroc, de l'Ethiopie et du Tanganyika — ont contribué à faire connaître aux populations africaines sous domination étrangère l'intérêt que la communauté internationale porte à leur sort.

39. Il convient de souligner que les territoires africains sous domination étrangère constituent en fait, par leur superficie et leur population, des entités nationales, et que le seul problème qui se pose pour eux est leur accession à l'indépendance. A cet égard, les débats du Comité spécial ont contribué d'une part à battre en brèche les thèses des puissances coloniales, et d'autre part à élever le niveau de lutte des mouvements nationalistes.

40. Sur la base de mon expérience des deux années d'existence du Comité, et compte tenu du fait que le Comité a presque terminé maintenant l'examen des grands territoires d'Afrique et présenté des recommandations à l'Assemblée générale sur chacun de ces territoires, je pense qu'il pourrait aborder l'examen des territoires qui restent selon des méthodes appropriées.

41. Le Comité spécial étant chargé de proposer à l'Assemblée générale des recommandations et des suggestions en ce qui concerne l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) à tous les territoires non autonomes, il serait éminemment souhaitable que toutes les puissances coloniales coopèrent avec lui de façon dynamique et avec une sincère conviction.

42. Evidemment, le Comité pourrait se passer de longues séances de travail et voter une résolution sur chaque territoire non autonome pour demander que ce territoire accède à l'indépendance, mais cela ne serait pas conforme à l'esprit de son mandat. Cela n'aurait pas non plus de sens, car la résolution 1514 (XV) reconnaît déjà à tous les territoires et peuples coloniaux le droit à l'indépendance sans condition ni réserve. Ce qui me paraît donc essentiel, c'est que les puissances coloniales acceptent de coopérer avec le Comité spécial afin de dégager avec lui les moyens et les méthodes les plus appropriés permettant à tous les peuples coloniaux d'accéder à l'indépendance. Je suis convaincu que dans beaucoup de cas l'Organisation des Nations Unies pourrait aider les puissances coloniales à résoudre certaines de leurs difficultés et contradictions, et hâter ainsi l'accession des territoires coloniaux à l'indépendance dans les meilleures conditions et sans manifestations de haine.

43. Les territoires que le Comité spécial doit examiner au cours de sa prochaine session sont généralement des petits territoires à faible population. Ils présentent de ce fait des particularités qu'il ne serait pas objectif d'ignorer. Dans l'examen de la situation de ces territoires, il serait indispensable que le Comité puisse bénéficier d'une loyale et sincère coopération de la puissance administrante. L'un des aspects les plus importants de cette coopération devra être de permettre au Comité d'avoir des contacts directs avec les représentants des populations de ces territoires, de manière à connaître le plus objectivement possible leurs vœux et leurs aspirations. Le Comité serait ainsi en mesure de présenter à l'Assemblée générale des propositions et des suggestions quant aux mesures à mettre en œuvre pour l'accession de ces territoires à l'autodétermination. Le Comité pourrait également attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur l'aide que la communauté internationale doit apporter à certains de ces territoires en vue de leur faciliter l'exercice de leurs droits à l'indépendance.

44. Je suis profondément convaincu que le sort des millions d'hommes encore soumis à la honteuse domination étrangère ne doit pas être laissé au seul pouvoir discrétionnaire des puissances coloniales. Les puissances coloniales doivent donc reviser leurs positions et ne pas considérer les activités du Comité spécial comme une ingérence dans l'administration des territoires qu'ils administrent. Je crois donc fermement que non seulement les puissances administrantes doivent accepter les sous-comités ou les groupes de visite du Comité spécial dans les territoires sous leur domination, mais qu'elles doivent également diffuser dans ces territoires la résolution 1514 (XV), ainsi que les efforts de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation. J'ai été informé en effet que, dans certains territoires coloniaux, la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux était complètement ignorée des populations. Certains territoires non autonomes sont également dotés théoriquement d'un statut qui ne correspond à rien de positif au regard de l'autodétermination, mais ce statut théorique permet à la puissance administrante d'entretenir le concept selon lequel la résolution 1514 (XV) ne s'applique pas à ces territoires.

45. J'ai volontairement insisté sur ces détails afin que l'Assemblée générale soit bien informée des conditions dans lesquelles le Comité spécial a travaillé, de façon qu'elle puisse prendre en conséquence les dispositions nécessaires en vue de l'application rapide et efficace de la Déclaration.

46. Il est regrettable que les indécisions du Conseil de sécurité à prendre des mesures adéquates pour imposer aux puissances coloniales ses propres décisions et celles de l'Assemblée générale n'aient pas encore permis de fixer une date limite pour l'accession de tous les territoires à l'indépendance. Les résultats des récents débats du Conseil de sécurité sur les territoires administrés par le Portugal et sur la question de la Rhodésie du Sud sont assez significatifs à cet égard. Mais malgré cet état de choses, il est permis d'espérer que tous les territoires encore sous domination étrangère seront libérés d'ici la vingtième session de l'Assemblée, afin que tous les peuples puissent, sans haine et sans préjugés raciaux, célébrer ensemble le vingtième anniversaire de notre organisation, qui constitue pour toute l'humanité le garant le plus sûr du maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales.

47. L'accession du Kenya et de Zanzibar à l'indépendance le mois prochain, et celle, probable, de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Nyassaland au cours de l'année 1964, constituent à cet égard des facteurs assez encourageants. Fort de la confiance de l'Assemblée générale et conscient de l'espoir que placent en lui des millions d'hommes encore privés de leurs droits inaliénables, le Comité spécial doit à notre avis poursuivre sa tâche et harceler le colonialisme dans ses derniers retranchements.

48. M. ALAINI (Yémen): Ma délégation prend la parole pour la première fois depuis la perte douloureuse et tragique du président John F. Kennedy. Qu'il me soit permis, Monsieur le Président, d'adresser par votre entremise à Mme Kennedy, à la famille Kennedy, au président Johnson, au Gouvernement et au peuple de cette grande nation d'Amérique nos condoléances les plus sincères. Celles-ci vont également à la délégation des Etats-Unis auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et à son chef éminent, M. Stevenson.

49. Le Comité de la décolonisation, dont le nom officiel est Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, nous présente un rapport sur son activité [A/5446/Rev.1]. Ma délégation trouve un intérêt tout particulier à le commenter.

50. De l'avis de la délégation de la République arabe du Yémen, ce rapport est un des plus sérieux et des plus consciencieux qu'un organe, créé par notre Organisation, ait jamais préparé. Complet à tous les points de vue, ce document précieux et précis est digne de la considération attentive de l'Assemblée générale. Le Comité qui a veillé à sa composition et à sa rédaction mérite toute notre appréciation et nos remerciements.

51. Ce rapport, actuellement soumis à l'étude de l'Assemblée générale au cours de sa dix-huitième session, comprend plusieurs chapitres et traite du cas de nombreux pays et territoires où règne encore le régime colonial.

52. Ma délégation, qui a à cœur de s'occuper de l'intérêt de tous les pays coloniaux visés par la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, se trouve aujourd'hui dans l'obligation, pour des raisons de limitation de temps, de concentrer son attention, dans le débat général, sur l'étude et l'exposé du problème relatif à son territoire national arraché à la mère patrie par les colonialistes et réduit, hélas, au stade d'une possession ou d'une protection étrangère.

53. Ce territoire arraché au Yémen c'est, comme le savent les membres de l'Assemblée, Aden et les territoires qui entourent ce port, c'est-à-dire la partie du Yémen qui est désignée dans nos documents sous le titre: "Aden et les Protectorats d'Aden". Il est donc normal que ma délégation consacre son intervention actuelle, d'une façon toute spéciale, à ce territoire du patrimoine national occupé par l'étranger. D'ailleurs, le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, constatant l'importance du problème colonial si particulier qui se pose dans ce territoire et son caractère inquiétant, a traité cette question dans un document spécial indépendant du rapport général. L'Assemblée générale comprendra notre légitime attitude à cet égard et excusera ma délégation d'être dans l'obligation de consacrer son exposé d'une façon toute particulière à ce problème colonial qui intéresse un territoire purement yéménite.

54. Le rapport sur Aden, présenté par le Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V¹/], est un des documents les plus intéressants publiés par les soins de notre Organisation. Cet excellent travail, soigneusement conçu et clairement rédigé, relate consciencieusement les faits et la situation dans le port d'Aden ainsi que dans les autres régions sud du Yémen occupées par le Royaume-Uni.

55. Historiquement, depuis toujours et même au cours du premier millénaire avant la chrétienté, alors que les habitants du Yémen — ou du Youmnat comme on l'appelait jadis, ou le pays de Saba comme les historiens le qualifient maintenant — étaient, il y a 3 000 ans, les maîtres de la navigation et du commerce international; tant qu'ils avaient le monopole du commerce, depuis cette date aussi reculée de l'histoire jusqu'à nos jours, le commerce extérieur du sud du Yémen n'a jamais cessé de s'effectuer par le seul débouché naturel sur l'océan Indien.

56. Ce débouché, cette porte naturelle de tout le pays sur l'océan, est formé par un port idéal, bien abrité et protégé par la nature, je veux parler du port d'Aden. Comme preuve évidente de l'identité de ce port avec l'intérieur du pays, il faut se rappeler ce qui suit: les Yéménites, qui furent les ingénieurs des premiers barrages du monde, ont érigé alors, dans les montagnes rocheuses d'Aden, des œuvres d'art et des aménagements destinés à conserver l'eau des pluies rares, tellement précieuse dans cette région. Ces aménagements hydrauliques de la plus haute importance ne pouvaient être que l'œuvre de tout un peuple, car ces réalisations constituent actuellement les travaux d'hydrologie les plus extraordinaires que le génie humain, il y a 30 siècles, a laissés au monde.

57. Chaque touriste passant par Aden peut admirer cette grande réalisation. C'est un témoignage éclatant et irréfutable que le peuple yéménite tout entier s'est occupé de ce port naturel sur l'océan Indien depuis des temps immémoriaux. En effet, les habitants du Yémen — qui ne peuvent former qu'une entité — avaient, dans les premiers millénaires avant la chrétienté, édifié des barrages dans la région montagneuse et à l'intérieur du pays, avec le barrage de Maarel comme œuvre témoin de ce génie exclusif de notre nation, réalisé à cette date aussi ancienne que l'histoire. Voici donc que les Yéménites, maîtres des mers et réalisateurs de grandes œuvres hydrauliques, utilisent leur port naturel d'Aden pour le commerce international qu'ils ont monopolisé, et construisent des barrages sur le modèle de ce qu'ils ont édifié à l'intérieur du pays.

58. Je m'excuse d'être remonté si loin dans la recherche historique pour démontrer l'identité d'Aden avec le Yémen, mais il est de mon devoir de couper court à toute prétention qui pourrait surgir. Faut-il expliquer davantage qu'Aden fut et demeure le seul port naturel de toute la région sud-ouest du Yémen, puisqu'il forme son seul débouché sur l'océan Indien? Il est donc normal que son existence et sa dépendance n'ont formé et ne forment actuellement encore qu'une unité inséparable de l'intérieur, une entité géographique, économique et ethnique avec le pays tout entier.

59. Comment ce port si naturel, si dépendant de la mère patrie, fut-il spolié par le colonialisme et comment fut-il possible à l'Empire britannique d'arracher à tout un peuple cette porte naturelle contre toutes les réalités historiques, ethniques et économiques? La réponse à cette question est simple. Jamais la puissance coloniale britannique n'a pu séparer effectivement ce port yéménite de l'intérieur du pays, et nous pouvons affirmer que depuis toujours, et maintenant encore, Aden était et reste notre premier port commercial. Ce fait reste vrai, bien que ce port soit sous la domination britannique, car, ainsi que le prouvent toutes les statistiques et que je peux l'affirmer sans crainte d'être contredit, 75 p. 100 du commerce yéménite s'effectue encore actuellement par l'intermédiaire d'Aden.

60. Il y a ainsi une situation qui découle de l'histoire aussi bien que de la géographie et de l'économie et qui fait d'Aden une partie intégrante et inséparable du Yémen à tous les points de vue. Quant à la population, dans sa très grande majorité, elle est restée essentiellement yéménite, malgré les efforts considérables entrepris par la Grande-Bretagne, depuis plus d'un siècle, pour encourager l'établissement des étrangers à Aden.

61. L'histoire de la colonisation d'Aden, qui démontre comment l'Empire britannique a pu arracher administrativement ce port de sa mère patrie, est des plus intéressantes et quelquefois des plus drôles, bien que cette histoire soit souvent tragique.

62. Pendant la grande expansion de l'Empire britannique, au début du siècle dernier, l'Angleterre, alors maîtresse des mers, devait rechercher, sur la fameuse route des Indes, un port naturel bien abrité et facile à défendre qui servirait de point de ravitaillement pour la flotte de Sa Majesté.

63. Aden, dont les ancêtres avaient découvert les qualités exceptionnelles comme port et comme forteresse, avait été ainsi aménagé par eux depuis des temps immémoriaux. Ce port exceptionnel devait plaire à l'Amirauté britannique dès le début du siècle dernier. Il fallut pourtant attendre l'année 1839 avant que l'Angleterre ait eu l'occasion de l'occuper et d'en faire une possession britannique. A cette époque, la Compagnie des Indes, sachant que le Yémen était alors engagé dans sa lutte nationale contre un autre agresseur d'envergure, l'Empire ottoman, trouva le moment propice pour s'emparer par la force de ce bastion. Ce drame de l'amputation fut accompli, comme je viens de le dire, pendant que l'autorité centrale yéménite était, depuis déjà longtemps, surmenée par sa lutte à l'intérieur du pays.

64. Il faut peut-être rappeler que la guerre héroïque et glorieuse du Yémen contre l'Empire ottoman, qui se déroulait alors à l'intérieur, avait laissé les régions du sud sans protection aucune, ce qui a facilité la tâche de l'expédition britannique, laquelle fut envoyée de Bombay, dans l'Inde, pour accomplir une mission de colonisation au moment où le Yémen, ce brave combattant, était à bout de forces dans sa lutte contre les Ottomans.

65. C'est donc dans ces conditions malheureuses, et sans beaucoup de gloire, qu'Aden fut détachée de la mère patrie par la force des armes pour dépendre désormais du siège de la Compagnie des Indes, établi alors à Bombay.

66. Constatant avec le temps la valeur stratégique et économique grandissante d'Aden, les autorités britanniques ont commencé à s'occuper de la protection de cette nouvelle perle de la couronne impériale. La Grande-Bretagne savait bien que le territoire qu'elle venait de conquérir faisait partie d'un pays glorieux et elle se rendait compte pratiquement que, dès que le peuple de ce territoire occupé saurait que ses frères du Yémen libre seraient en mesure de reprendre son port et de récupérer son bien, ils le feraient grâce à l'union de ses enfants, si naturelle entre les citoyens d'un même pays. Il fallait donc profiter du chaos où les choses se trouvaient dans le sud du Yémen pendant que les grandes batailles de l'indépendance se déroulaient à l'intérieur pour créer une ceinture de sécurité autour d'Aden afin que le colonialisme puisse l'accaparer définitivement en l'isolant du reste du pays par des régions soumises ou protégées. Profitant donc de ce vacuum, comme on l'appelle maintenant, le Ministère des colonies devait alors entrer en jeu et agir avec l'habileté qui lui est propre.

67. C'est ainsi que commence l'histoire du protectorat britannique dans le Yémen et c'est ainsi que des traités furent signés avec les chefs locaux, traités de protection ou d'amitié d'un caractère étrange et même fantastique. Ces fameux traités et documents furent multipliés et leur nombre actuel n'est pas inférieur à 90. Je parlerai plus tard de ces documents fantastiques. Quant à l'objet de ces traités, je laisse au lieutenant-colonel sir Bernard Reilly, gouverneur d'Aden, le soin de nous l'expliquer lui-même.

[L'orateur poursuit en anglais.]

"Les traités, qui accordent spécifiquement la protection britannique à certains Etats, sont tous rédigés à peu près sous la même forme. Cette forme est très simple car les dispositions sont limitées à quelques courtes clauses indiquant que la gracieuse faveur et protection du souverain britannique sera assurée au dirigeant intéressé qui, pour sa part, s'engage à n'avoir aucune relation avec une autre puissance étrangère quelle qu'elle soit. Il y a trente et un traités de protection et, à eux tous, ils couvrent à la fois les parties orientales et occidentales du Protectorat d'Aden. Collectivement, ils imposent au Gouvernement de Sa Majesté britannique l'obligation de défendre les Etats intéressés, ce qui signifie, en fait, l'ensemble du Protectorat, contre toute attaque extérieure et de les protéger contre toute agression ou ingérence de l'extérieur. Ils constituent donc, d'une certaine manière, la pierre angulaire de la structure du Protectorat et, tant pour les chefs que pour la population des Etats et pour la puissance protectrice, ce sont les plus importants de tous les traités qui gouvernent les rapports entre le Gouvernement britannique et ses associés arabes en Arabie du Sud^{2/}.

"...

"L'objet de ces traités était de créer, sur le continent, une région, derrière et près d'Aden, libre de toute ingérence et liée aux Anglais par une amitié et des intérêts mutuels^{3/}."

[L'orateur reprend en français.]

68. Voilà donc, clairement expliqué par le Gouverneur, l'objet de ces traités. Mais comment convaincre les chefs locaux — les émirs et les sultans — qui se trouvaient derrière et près d'Aden de la nécessité de signer ces traités? A cette fin, plusieurs tactiques ont été employées. Tout d'abord, ce fut la plus traditionnelle, celle de "diviser pour régner". C'est ainsi que les agents du Ministère des colonies devaient inciter les chefs locaux les uns contre les autres, flatter leur orgueil personnel et tribal, les soulevant les uns contre les autres; une fois qu'ils étaient bien engagés dans cette lutte fratricide, on les alimentait en armes et en argent, puis on leur

^{2/} Sir Bernard Reilly, Aden and the Yemen, Londres, Stationery Office, 1960, p. 16.

^{3/} Ibid., p. 15.

présentait des traités de protection afin, prétendait-on, de les protéger. L'autre méthode est celle de l'utilisation de la force directe, ou celle de l'intimidation; ce fut surtout le cas dans les régions du littoral et dans les îles, et partout ailleurs où la marine britannique pouvait intervenir. La troisième tactique fut celle de l'argent et de l'intrigue.

69. Voyons maintenant quels sont ces protégés de Sa Majesté britannique. Ce sont de braves gens, de bons citoyens, des chefs honorables qui ont toujours été des leaders locaux, des chefs de tribus ou chefs de régions qui, se trouvant sans le soutien du Gouvernement central yéménite engagé lui-même, comme nous l'avons expliqué, dans sa lutte contre l'occupant ottoman, ont été, les uns après les autres, amenés à signer un traité qui garde les privilèges du chef, flatte ses sentiments d'orgueil et lui procure — il faut le dire — un peu d'argent. Quelquefois, le fait d'avoir à poser ses empreintes digitales sur un papier qu'il ne sait même pas lire et qu'on a appelé "traité" lui donne ou lui confirme le titre d'émir ou de sultan, et le droit d'être reçu à Aden avec plusieurs et parfois jusqu'à 11 coups de canon.

70. Ainsi, en 1959, il y avait, grâce à ces traités, 25 Etats protégés par le Royaume-Uni et déployés au-delà et autour d'Aden, réalisant la situation expliquée par le gouverneur, sir Bernard Reilly, qui a pour but d'isoler cette base stratégique de l'Empire. Notons qu'un seul continent — peut-être deux — compte autant d'Etats que le Yémen occupé. Des 25 Etats établis sur ce territoire, 20 constituent ce que l'on appelle le Protectorat d'Aden-Ouest, et cinq ce que l'on appelle le Protectorat d'Aden-Est.

71. Quelle est la nature de ces traités, et que sont ces Etats amis et protégés du Royaume-Uni? Le Gouverneur et commandant en chef d'Aden de 1932 à 1940, le lieutenant-colonel Reilly devenu plus tard sir Bernard Reilly, nous l'explique dans les passages de son ouvrage que je viens de citer (voir par. 67). Il était donc normal qu'en l'absence de l'autorité traditionnelle, chaque chef de tribu gérât ses propres affaires. De là à dire qu'il était indépendant, il y a une différence.

72. Toujours est-il que, profitant de ce chaos, les forces britanniques ont pu débarquer à Aden, le 10 janvier 1839, deux ans après la chute de Sana devant les attaques de l'Empire ottoman. Ainsi, pendant que le nord succombait en partie sous la pression militaire ottomane, Aden se rendait à l'Empire britannique, après un bombardement en bonne et due forme effectué en janvier 1839.

73. Il faut rappeler que, bien avant les Britanniques, les Portugais avaient essayé sans succès de couper cette porte et cette citadelle du Yémen. A ce moment, le pays n'était pas encore engagé dans sa guerre d'indépendance contre l'agression ottomane et pouvait ainsi facilement refouler l'agression portugaise. Il n'aurait pas été nécessaire de fournir une telle explication si les autorités britanniques n'avaient prétendu qu'à leur arrivée en 1839, les princes de la région étaient indépendants depuis déjà un siècle. Ce rappel historique est encore valable en réponse à la même thèse, présentée par un responsable et mentionnée dans le rapport, thèse d'après laquelle l'autorité centrale aurait cessé dès 1728. A cet égard, je citerai le passage suivant du rapport:

"Après cette date [1728] rien ne permettait de dire qu'aucun chef yéménite eût exercé la moindre autorité sur la région et, lorsque les Britanniques avaient occupé Aden en 1839, le Yémen n'avait nullement protesté et il n'était pas davantage venu en aide au sultan de Lahedj. Or, à l'époque, le Yémen était pleinement indépendant et il n'aurait certainement pas permis aux Britanniques d'occuper Aden s'il avait considéré ce territoire comme sien." [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V, par. 85.]

74. Est-ce que les auteurs de cette thèse peuvent nous expliquer comment un pays qui vient de perdre sa capitale, après une lutte acharnée de plusieurs siècles, peut s'opposer en même temps à un autre agresseur d'une puissance encore supérieure, surtout dans les zones côtières contrôlables par la marine britannique devenue alors maîtresse des mers? Nous réclamons donc un peu de respect pour les proportions des choses et la réalité historique.

75. Voyons maintenant quelle est la situation dans cette région du Yémen, après l'occupation d'Aden. Le port se trouve désormais sous le contrôle du Gouvernement britannique; il dépend administrativement de la base de l'Empire à Bombay et sert de station d'approvisionnement en charbon pour les bateaux de la Grande-Bretagne, plus spécialement de la fameuse Compagnie des Indes. Pour permettre à Aden de continuer à être le port par excellence sur l'océan Indien, la Compagnie des Indes le déclare, en 1853, port libre afin que les transactions commerciales yéménites traditionnelles continuent à s'effectuer dans la ville d'Aden et par l'entremise de son port. Plus tard, le percement du canal de Suez donne à Aden une importance encore plus grande; il fallait alors à tout prix activer la domination britannique sur les territoires avoisinants. Sir Bernard Reilly ne le cache pas quand il déclare:

[L'orateur poursuit en anglais.]

"L'intérêt que les Britanniques poursuivaient en établissant ces relations avec les Etats arabes, était d'assurer la sécurité d'Aden et surtout des routes maritimes de l'Inde et de l'Orient^{4/}."

[L'orateur reprend en français.]

Maintenant, sir Bernard Reilly réduit ces Etats à d'autres proportions et parle de tribus arabes.

76. Voyons aussi comment le colonialisme britannique s'y est pris pour étendre sa domination autour et au-delà d'Aden. C'est simplement le hasard de l'occupation qui a déterminé les limites de la domination britannique, domination confirmée, il faut le dire, par les fameux traités, plus drôles que réels, déjà mentionnés. Et voici que l'homme du Ministère des colonies nous avoue, dans son livre-document déjà cité, que "ces documents forment le noyau à partir duquel le Protectorat d'Aden s'est étendu progressivement"^{5/}.

77. Il est en conséquence aussi clair que l'eau pure que ce qu'on veut appeler Aden et les Protectorats fut formé grâce à un grignotement du territoire yéménite par une action de colonisation de longue haleine. Le rôle d'Aden fut, dans ce sens, celui de la goutte d'huile qui fait tache et s'étend dans toutes les directions. C'est donc uniquement le hasard de l'occupation qui a fait de cette région sud du Yémen un territoire colonisé et séparé de la mère patrie; et cela, bien entendu, accompli sans aucune considération ni de la volonté des populations, ni des réalités historiques, géographiques, économiques, ethniques ou autres.

^{4/} Ibid.

^{5/} Ibid.

78. Dans tous les pays, il y a des régions qui ont un caractère spécial, avec un nom qui leur est propre. Au Royaume-Uni par exemple, il y a le pays de Galles, l'Ecosse. En France, il y a la Normandie, le Languedoc. En Italie, il y a la Lombardie, la Sicile. En Espagne, il y a l'Andalousie, la Catalogne. Et combien d'autres régions naturelles d'un même pays, à travers le monde, ont leur caractère particulier, avec un nom qui les distingue. Mais ces régions naturelles du Yémen occupé n'ont même pas un nom commun ou particulier. Leur nom vient de leur rôle par rapport à Aden — "Aden et les Protectorats d'Aden" — et ce nom en lui-même veut dire ce qu'il dit.

79. Il faut ajouter qu'au début de l'occupation britannique d'Aden et de l'expansion de cette occupation, on l'a appelé: "Aden et les neuf cantons". Depuis que les neuf cantons ou protectorats ont dépassé le nombre de neuf, pour atteindre celui de 25, ce nom n'a plus coïncidé avec la réalité; c'est alors qu'on a inventé deux noms: "Etats du Protectorat d'Aden-Ouest" et "Etats du Protectorat d'Aden-Est".

80. Dernièrement, peut-être pour atténuer le ridicule de maintenir 25 Etats, les autorités du Royaume-Uni ont essayé d'en faire un seul, voire deux; toujours, bien entendu, avec une entité différente afin de l'isoler du Yémen proprement dit. Je sais qu'il y a la Corée du Nord et la Corée du Sud. Mais là, pour les diviser, on s'est entendu sur le 38ème parallèle et le nom de Corée a été maintenu. Tandis qu'ici on ne veut même pas prononcer le mot Yémen. Tout citoyen de cette région sait pertinemment qu'il est avant tout yéménite; en conséquence, toute union est facile sous le nom réel de Yémen. Faut-il ajouter que tout Yéménite, qu'il habite le nord, le sud, l'est ou l'ouest, est fier d'appartenir à ce pays de vieille civilisation, le pays de Youmnat, le pays de la reine de Saba? Ces sultans, ces émirs, ces cheiks ou chefs locaux savent tous qu'ils sont avant tout et après tout des yéménites, qu'ils appartiennent à cette nation qui, il y a 20 ou 30 siècles, a édifié des barrages, des gratte-ciel de 20 étages, qui a réalisé des œuvres d'art, construit des routes, percé des tunnels, qui a été maîtresse des mers et a monopolisé pendant près de 15 siècles la route internationale de l'encens, que ce pays fut appelé l'Arabia felix, c'est-à-dire l'Arabie heureuse: Yémen.

81. Ce n'est pas en inventant des noms pour une région naturellement dépendante de tout un pays glorieux et uni qu'on arrive à consacrer une rupture artificielle entre ce pays et la région qu'on cherche à lui arracher pour la dominer.

82. Après avoir exposé les faits généraux qui ont conduit à détacher artificiellement le sud du Yémen de la mère patrie, par la colonisation d'Aden et des régions avoisinantes, après avoir mis en relief l'identité historique de ce glorieux pays, après avoir relaté les manœuvres et les moyens qui ont amené les chefs locaux à signer des traités illégaux et souvent ridicules, engageant leurs signataires à rester à perpétuité sous la domination britannique, jusqu'à la fin du monde, après avoir démontré l'interdépendance d'Aden et de ses régions environnantes avec l'intérieur du pays, je vais m'attacher à démontrer l'identité ethnique d'Aden et des Protectorats d'Aden et du Yémen libre.

83. Partout dans le monde il y a des émigrés yéménites: en Indonésie, en Malaisie, dans les pays voisins et arabes, aussi bien qu'en Europe (en France, en Italie ou ailleurs). Au Royaume-Uni même, on trouve des colonies d'émigrés yéménites, à Londres, à South Shields, et plus particulièrement à Cardiff. Quiconque visite ces colonies d'émigrés, dispersés dans le monde, se rend compte de leur identité ethnique, se rend compte qu'ils sont les ressortissants d'un même pays, qu'ils professent la même religion, qu'ils ont les mêmes coutumes, qu'ils dégustent les mêmes plats, chantent les mêmes chansons. Quand vous leur demandez quelle est leur nationalité, tous sont fiers de dire: "Yéménites". Or, les uns viennent d'Aden, les autres des régions avoisinantes; ou bien ils viennent de Sana, de Taïz ou d'ailleurs. Bien que la plupart viennent de la région occupée, il ne vient à l'esprit d'aucun d'eux de dire qu'il n'est pas Yéménite et qu'il est de la région occupée. D'ailleurs, chacun d'eux est trop fier pour se souvenir volontiers qu'il vient de la partie du Yémen occupée par l'étranger.

84. Et dire, avec cela, que les autorités coloniales ont poussé la dispersion et la mutilation du Yémen jusqu'à vouloir créer une nationalité relative à Aden, une nationalité "adénaise", en rapport avec le port d'Aden.

85. C'est comme si on voulait créer une nationalité "cardiffienne" relative au port de Cardiff. Toutes ces finasseries ont été inventées par la puissance coloniale pour essayer de retarder autant que possible la restitution de cette région du Yémen et faire durer le régime colonial, ou perpétuer ce que l'on appelle actuellement le néo-colonialisme, c'est-à-dire la colonisation camouflée que l'on cherche à instaurer dans le pays.

86. Maintenant, le glas de la colonisation a sonné. Comment faire pour maintenir la domination britannique sur Aden et sur l'éventail de protection qu'on a déployé autour de cette base? Le glaive de la décolonisation est passé aux mains des Nations Unies. Un Comité spécial a été créé à cet effet et tient ce glaive d'un bras ferme et décidé.

87. Le Ministère des colonies se doit donc d'agir vite pour sauver Aden de la décolonisation et le soumettre au néo-colonialisme. Aden n'est plus simplement une base de ravitaillement sur la route des Indes. C'est maintenant quelque chose de beaucoup plus important: un bastion et un bouclier. C'est la seule base militaire britannique de toute la région et le siège du quartier général des forces navales britanniques dans le Moyen-Orient. C'est aussi une base aérienne des plus importantes. On nous dit que plus de 10 000 hommes s'y trouvent stationnés. Le pétrole arabe indispensable à l'économie et à la machine de guerre impériale est à proximité. La raffinerie de pétrole d'Aden est une des plus importantes du Moyen-Orient. Depuis l'évacuation de Suez et du Kenya, c'est Aden qui est devenu le bastion britannique de tout le Moyen-Orient. La ceinture de protection autour de cette base impériale — ou impérialiste — doit donc être maintenue, n'en déplaise à la population locale yéménite, au Yémen, au monde arabe et même au Comité de la décolonisation.

88. Pour le maintien de la présence britannique, il faut parvenir à l'isolement total de cette région, et non seulement un isolement physique, mais aussi un isolement intellectuel et sentimental. Mieux, il faudrait créer un esprit d'hostilité avec les pays arabes, et plus particulièrement avec la République arabe du Yémen, pour l'en détacher définitivement et consacrer une division artificielle. Mais le peuple yéménite, que ce soit dans le nord ou dans le sud, a cessé de dormir. Des citoyens éveillés de plus en plus nombreux de ce grand peuple s'organisent. Ils forment des partis politiques, des organisations sociales, des syndicats. Ils envoient des délégations où il le faut pour défendre leur cause et exprimer leurs aspirations. Les représentants du peuple yéménite viennent ici aux Nations Unies poursuivre leurs revendications justes et claires. Ils cherchent à hâter la décolonisation de leur pays. Des pétitionnaires se sont fait entendre, qui ont fait circuler des mémorandums. Plusieurs mémoires vous ont été en particulier adressés, Monsieur le Président. Ainsi, les peuples et gouvernements soucieux, de par le monde, du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, de même que les puissances intéressées ou préoccupées par les questions qui concernent la sécurité et la stabilité dans cette partie du monde, commencent à s'alarmer. Les représentants de ces puissances discutent avec une anxiété manifeste cette brûlante question et ne cachent pas leur impatience au sein de cette grande organisation.

89. Et voici maintenant que le Comité spécial — appelé aussi Comité de la décolonisation, ou encore Comité des Vingt-Quatre — nous présente un rapport qui ne contient pas moins de 236 pages mimeographiées traitant uniquement de la question d'Aden. Ce rapport nous apprend qu'étant donné l'importance de cette question qui entre dans le cadre des problèmes de la décolonisation, le Comité spécial a jugé indispensable de créer à son tour, par une résolution en date du 3 mai 1963, un sous-comité auquel ladite résolution a fixé un mandat déterminé et précis. Le paragraphe 4 de cette résolution est ainsi libellé:

"Décide d'envoyer dans ces territoires un sous-comité dont les membres seront désignés par le Président" [voir A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V, appendice, par. 6].

90. Or, la puissance colonisatrice — en l'occurrence le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni —, qui pourtant s'élève contre ce que l'on appelle les "murs" ou "rideaux", érige autour de ces territoires un barrage pour arrêter le courant bienfaiteur des Nations Unies. En effet, les diplomates membres de ce sous-comité, et par conséquent d'un organe créé par les Nations

Unies, ne se sont pas vus autorisés à mettre le pied sur ces territoires et ils ne sont parvenus à trouver aucun moyen pour forcer ce barrage colonial. En vertu de cette mesure de défi consistant à interdire l'accès d'Aden aux membres du Sous-Comité et qu'ont prise les autorités du Royaume-Uni, les délégués de notre Organisation se sont vu traités comme des indésirables à Aden par le Ministère des colonies et son administration. A leur intention, le Département de l'immigration à Aden a fait circuler une lettre à cet effet (ibid., appendice, annexe III). Permettez-moi de vous en donner lecture:

91. Ces honorables délégués, ambassadeurs et hauts dignitaires de plusieurs puissances représentant eux-mêmes l'autorité des Nations Unies avec tout son prestige, se trouvent ainsi traités tout simplement comme des indésirables par des autorités qui occupent le sud de notre pays. Je laisse au Président et aux membres du Sous-Comité le soin de nous expliquer eux-mêmes, de vive voix, leurs péripéties avec les autorités du Royaume-Uni. Je relève néanmoins à cet effet les passages suivants du rapport du Sous-Comité:

"Enfin, le Sous-Comité note avec regret que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni considère la présence d'une mission de visite dans les territoires d'Aden comme une ingérence dans les affaires intérieures de ces territoires. C'est là méconnaître entièrement l'esprit de la visite envisagée, laquelle n'a pour but que de s'assurer des vues de la population de manière à appliquer la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

"Le Sous-Comité ne saurait trop marquer son profond regret et sa déception devant la position adoptée par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni.

Cette décision n'a pas seulement empêché le Sous-Comité d'accomplir l'une des tâches concrètes dont l'avait chargé le Comité spécial, mais en lui refusant l'accès du territoire même dont il devait s'occuper, elle l'a privé de l'un des moyens les plus efficaces de s'acquitter des principales tâches qui lui étaient confiées." [Ibid., appendice, par. 31 et 32.]

92. Après cette description de l'accomplissement de sa mission, le Sous-Comité en arrive aux conclusions suivantes:

"Les pétitionnaires ont fait observer qu'à l'origine le Royaume-Uni avait occupé Aden pour servir ses propres intérêts et qu'aujourd'hui sa politique dans le territoire continuait à être orientée vers la défense de ses intérêts. Ils ont spécialement attiré l'attention sur la base militaire établie à Aden et se sont élevés contre son maintien parce qu'elle constituait un instrument de domination coloniale." [Ibid., par. 60.]

93. Le rapport continue de nous éclairer en disant:

"Les pétitionnaires ont été unanimes à rejeter les divers gouvernements établis à Aden et dans les Protectorats d'Aden, à savoir le Gouvernement de l'Etat d'Aden, les gouvernements des divers Etats protégés et le Gouvernement de la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud. Ils ont déclaré que lesdits gouvernements étaient dominés par les Britanniques, soit directement, soit par l'intermédiaire d'hommes qui acceptaient de leur servir d'instrument. Il s'agissait donc de gouvernements fantoches qui ne représentaient pas le peuple et dont les lois étaient autant d'actes illégaux.

"Les opinions exprimées par les pétitionnaires concernant le statut constitutionnel d'Aden sont bien mises en lumière dans un mémoire présenté par le Peoples Socialist Party." [Ibid., par. 65 et 66.]

94. Il faut expliquer que le Peoples Socialist Party est le parti qui groupe toutes les forces actives et éclairées du Yémen occupé. C'est un parti soutenu par l'extraordinaire organisation puissante et disciplinée de l'Aden Trades Union Congress, aussi bien que par l'Arab Women's Association, l'Arab Youth Organization, le Graduates' Congress, ainsi que par les Sports Unions. Ce parti représente donc la grande majorité des forces organisées et constitue une organisation puissante et représentative. Voici ce que nous dit le mémoire publié dans le rapport et qui a été adressé par ce puissant parti politique au Président du Sous-Comité; je reprends le rapport:

"On y relève que si, aux termes de la nouvelle Constitution, Aden s'appelle désormais l'Etat d'Aden, son statut n'a pas été modifié. Malgré cette appellation fallacieuse, Aden reste une colonie. Le mémoire signale également les pouvoirs étendus exercés par le Royaume-Uni et par le Gouverneur, qui a pris le titre de Haut Commissaire. Le Gouverneur est nommé par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, et toute ordonnance doit recevoir son assentiment pour entrer en vigueur; s'il refuse sa sanction à une ordonnance, celle-ci est sans effet. Le Gouverneur peut également arrêter la discussion d'un projet de loi au Conseil législatif. Il a le pouvoir de légiférer lui-même sans en référer au Conseil législatif, pour assurer "la paix, l'ordre et le bon gouvernement de la colonie". Le mémoire relève que cette dernière formule est si élastique qu'elle permet au Gouverneur de légiférer à son gré. En outre, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni peut refuser de reconnaître la validité de toute ordonnance adoptée par le Conseil législatif d'Aden, auquel cas ce texte cesse immédiatement de s'appliquer. Enfin, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni s'est réservé, tout comme le Gouverneur, le pouvoir de promulguer des lois pour assurer "la paix, l'ordre et le bon gouvernement de la colonie".

"Le mémoire appelle également l'attention sur les règlements ou textes d'application qui peuvent être promulgués par le Gouverneur, le Gouverneur en Conseil, un ministre ou même un fonctionnaire tel que le commissaire de police. Ces dispositions subsidiaires peuvent être de grande portée et modifier même la législation sur des points essentiels. Le pouvoir de prendre des règlements d'application est dans bien des cas un pouvoir discrétionnaire qui échappe au contrôle des tribunaux ou des institutions représentatives. En particulier, les règlements d'application ne sont jamais soumis au Conseil législatif.

"Les pétitionnaires ont également condamné le Conseil législatif actuel. Ils l'ont présenté comme dénué de tout caractère représentatif, ayant été élu en 1958 à un suffrage très restreint. Ils ont souligné qu'à cette époque la colonie comptait environ 200 000 habitants, mais que, par suite du cens électoral et, en particulier, de la disposition selon laquelle les habitants non originaires d'Aden ne pouvaient voter que s'ils étaient sujets britanniques, il n'y avait que 5 000 électeurs. Ce régime excluait du suffrage des milliers d'Arabes, alors que les étrangers qui se trouvaient être sujets britanniques, y compris les "expatriés" temporaires et les fonctionnaires britanniques, avaient le droit de vote. Pour cette raison, on a organisé un boycottage qui a eu pour résultat, d'après les chiffres officiels publiés par le gouvernement, l'abstention de 73 p. 100 des 5 000 électeurs.

"Les pétitionnaires ont également relevé que, bien que le mandat du Conseil législatif eût dû expirer à la fin de l'année 1962, il avait été prolongé d'un an sans nouvelles élections. Ils ont estimé que des élections auraient dû avoir lieu à cette époque, puisque le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni envisageait d'importants changements qui affecteraient le statut du territoire. D'une part, il y avait les propositions tendant à faire entrer Aden dans la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud, propositions auxquelles, le gouvernement ne l'ignorait pas, une grande partie de la population était opposée. D'autre part, il y avait un plan dit d'"évolution constitutionnelle" qui prévoyait la mise en place d'un système semi-ministériel. Il y avait donc, comme le déclarait le mémoire du Peoples Socialist Party, "d'excellentes raisons pour organiser des élections générales et pour consulter le peuple avant de prendre des mesures aussi graves".

"Ce mémoire relevait également qu'en 1958 les 12 membres élus s'étaient présentés aux élections en leur propre nom et non en tant que représentants de partis politiques ayant un programme défini. Plusieurs partis politiques s'étant constitués depuis lors, on aurait dû, "selon la bonne pratique constitutionnelle", leur donner l'occasion, avant d'instituer un système de gouvernement semi-ministériel, de mesurer leur force au cours d'élections générales. Le parti qui aurait obtenu la majorité des sièges aurait alors formé le gouvernement et aurait pu "représenter réellement et démocratiquement le peuple lors de toute négociation concernant l'entrée dans une fédération" ou au cours de toute négociation intéressant le statut et l'avenir de l'ensemble du pays.

"Les pétitionnaires ont également appelé l'attention sur la manière dont les quatre nouveaux membres du Conseil législatif avaient été élus en 1962. Au lieu d'être élus par la population, ils l'avaient été par le Conseil législatif lui-même, constitué en collège électoral. Cette procédure a été critiquée comme n'étant ni démocratique ni constitutionnelle. M. Adhal a indiqué, dans une communication adressée au Sous-Comité, que ce système avait permis au gouvernement de faire élire ses propres candidats. Tous les membres élus dans ces conditions sont actuellement ministres. L'un d'eux, le Ministre de l'Instruction publique, avait été battu aux précédentes élections législatives en 1959. Un autre, le Ministre d'Etat, avait été battu quelques semaines plus tôt aux élections municipales.

"Le mémoire du Peoples Socialist Party conclut ainsi son exposé de la question des élections:

"Depuis 1958, le gouvernement craignait très fort d'affronter l'opinion dans des élections générales. Il a eu recours à tous les moyens imaginables pour éviter une consultation populaire, alors que mille raisons d'ordre constitutionnel et légal devraient l'engager à tenir des élections générales."

"Les pétitionnaires ont également dénoncé la corruption dont était entachée la vie politique à Aden. Ils ont déclaré que deux ministres, le Ministre des travaux publics et le Ministre d'Etat, avaient été reconnus coupables de corruption à la suite d'une enquête publique sur les affaires municipales décrétée par le Gouverneur en 1962. A ce propos, ils ont remis au Sous-Comité une copie du rapport de la commission d'enquête, en date du 16 juillet 1962 ..." [Ibid., par. 66 à 73.]

95. Voyons maintenant comment le rapport du Sous-Comité décrit, à son tour, l'attitude de ces pétitionnaires à l'égard de ce que l'on a appelé "la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud":

"Les pétitionnaires se sont montrés particulièrement préoccupés par la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud, créée en 1959, à laquelle Aden s'est joint au mois de janvier 1963. Ils l'ont qualifiée de "fausse fédération", de "fédération fictive" créée par les Britanniques pour servir leurs intérêts coloniaux et maintenir leur domination coloniale sur la région. L'un des pétitionnaires, M. Adhal, l'a dépeinte comme "un prétexte pour permettre aux Britanniques de conserver leur autorité dans la région, d'y maintenir leurs bases militaires et de dominer ainsi les pays voisins". Un autre, M. Mohamed Aidaroos, sultan déposé du Bas-Yaef, a déclaré que, "depuis plus de 100 ans, la Grande-Bretagne a pour politique de diviser pour régner, politique d'arrestations et de meurtres, de menaces et de tyrannie, et, comme elle voit maintenant que le peuple n'en peut plus, elle crée une Fédération dans l'espoir qu'elle l'empêchera ainsi de faire valoir des droits".

"A l'appui de cette déclaration, les pétitionnaires ont déclaré que la Fédération avait été créée par les Britanniques sans que le peuple ait été consulté. A ce propos, M. Mohamed Aidaroos a déclaré: "La population du sud n'a jamais refusé et ne refusera jamais une véritable fédération pour elle-même, qui servirait ses propres intérêts, présents et futurs, parce qu'elle croit à l'unité de tout le peuple arabe; mais, si elle refuse cette fédération, c'est parce qu'elle est l'œuvre des Britanniques."

"En outre, les pétitionnaires ont déclaré que la Fédération était entièrement sous l'autorité des Britanniques. La Constitution déclare clairement qu'aucune de ces dispositions ne modifie les conditions des traités qui ont été imposés aux dirigeants de chacun des Etats qui la constituent et qui les ont placés sous la dépendance des Britanniques. Les dirigeants sont encore sous les ordres des conseillers britanniques. Enfin, conformément aux dispositions de la Constitution de la Fédération, tous les pouvoirs importants ont été confiés au Haut Commissaire ou au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni." [Ibid., par. 76 à 78.]

96. Plus loin, le rapport nous parle de la législation limitant les activités politiques et les droits de l'homme, dans les termes suivants:

"Les pétitionnaires se sont beaucoup plaints de certaines lois en vigueur dans le territoire qui limitent les activités politiques et les droits de l'homme. Les paragraphes suivants sont fondés en grande partie sur l'examen minutieux de ces lois que contenait le mémoire présenté par le Peoples Socialist Party, mais presque tous les pétitionnaires ont mentionné les conséquences qu'elles avaient sur la vie politique du territoire. Ils ont tout particulièrement appelé l'attention sur la législation applicable à la presse, au mouvement ouvrier, aux sociétés et organisations, aux droits de la personne (notamment à la détention sans jugement et à la déportation sommaire) et aux réunions publiques, ainsi que sur la loi relative à la sédition." [Ibid., par. 88.]

97. Le rapport nous explique comment la section 334 de l'Aden Criminal Procedure Ordinance permet la détention sans jugement. Nous y lisons ce qui suit:

"On a attiré l'attention sur la section 334 de l'Aden Criminal Procedure Ordinance, qui stipule que "lorsqu'un individu accusé d'une infraction ne donnant pas droit à la mise en liberté provisoire et arrêté sans mandat par un commissaire de police comparaît ou est amené devant un tribunal, il pourra être remis en liberté provisoire par le commissaire ou le tribunal, sauf s'il y a des raisons de croire qu'il s'est rendu coupable d'une infraction que les lois punissent de la peine de mort, ou qu'il est dans l'intérêt de l'ordre public qu'il ne soit pas remis en liberté provisoire".

"On a souligné que le membre de phrase "ou qu'il est dans l'intérêt de l'ordre public qu'il ne soit pas remis en liberté provisoire" a été conçu pour permettre au Gouvernement d'Aden d'emprisonner sans jugement ses adversaires politiques et que cette disposition a déjà été appliquée à cette fin et l'est encore. Parmi les personnes arrêtées et détenues sans jugement figurent les dirigeants de mouvements politiques et ouvriers dont les noms suivent:

"1) Abdulla Ali Murshed, dirigeant de syndicat;

"2) Idris Hambala, dirigeant de syndicat et membre du Peoples Socialist Party;

"3) Abdulla Al-Asnag, secrétaire général de l'Aden Trades Union Congress et président du Peoples Socialist Party;

"4) Abdulla Ali Obaid Wahti, agent de diffusion du journal de l'Aden Trades Union Congress.

"Tous ont demandé, lors de leur jugement, d'être mis en liberté provisoire, ce qui leur a été refusé à tous, la Couronne ayant objecté que c'était dans l'intérêt de l'ordre public qu'ils ne le soient pas." [Ibid., par. 100 et 101.]

98. Le rapport nous explique aussi comment et sur quelle base s'effectue la déportation sommaire et nous parle de l'interdiction des réunions publiques, de l'exposition des affiches ou des images sur les bâtiments. Voici ce qu'il déclare:

"On a appelé l'attention sur les vastes pouvoirs discrétionnaires que détient le Gouverneur en vertu de la section 4 de la Vagrants and Undesirables Ordinance. Conformément à ladite section, le Gouverneur peut ordonner à toute personne de quitter le territoire si l'intéressé, n'étant pas un sujet britannique né à Aden, est, entre autres, "une personne qui, pour des raisons politiques ou autres, ne lui semble pas devoir résider dans la colonie".

"Il a été déclaré que ce pouvoir avait été largement utilisé pour déporter des dirigeants politiques, des dirigeants de mouvements ouvriers et des travailleurs. Une simple grève d'une journée rend un travailleur passible de déportation sans jugement et, en fait, des déportations massives de centaines d'ouvriers ont eu lieu. Cette législation place "le travailleur, les simples citoyens et les dirigeants de mouvements politiques et ouvriers sous une menace constante. Tout individu dont les opinions politiques ne sont pas très appréciées par les autorités se voit déporté par les autorités s'il se trouve qu'il est né du mauvais côté de la frontière." On a également souligné les épreuves et les souffrances humaines que ces déportations massives causent non seulement aux individus intéressés mais aussi à leurs femmes et à leurs familles, qui restent souvent sans ressources." [Ibid., par. 102 et 103.]

99. Le rapport nous explique également la répression en disant ce qui suit:

"Presque tous les pétitionnaires ont parlé d'événements qui compromettent la paix et la sécurité dans la région. Ils ont décrit, parfois longuement, ce qu'ils ont appelé le régime de terreur et de répression dans les Protectorats. Ils ont déclaré que le monde ne savait rien ou presque rien des attaques constantes dirigées par les forces britanniques, en particulier la Royal Air Force contre les populations des Protectorats; on ne mentionnait guère les morts et les blessés, les villages détruits, les récoltes brûlées, le bétail perdu, les centaines de personnes emprisonnées et les réfugiés dispersés dans la montagne ou dans les pays voisins. Le monde n'était pas non plus au courant de la résistance farouche que le peuple opposait à la domination britannique pour défendre sa liberté. Aucune agence d'information n'avait envoyé de correspondant dans ces régions pour faire des reportages sur ces actions militaires, les destructions qu'elles laissaient derrière elles, et les dommages causés aux habitants. Chaque région avait résisté seule, sans pouvoir obtenir d'aide de l'extérieur. Le Sous-Comité a reçu un grand nombre de photographies prises dans diverses localités des Protectorats et montrant des maisons détruites par les bombes, des plantations incendiées, des réfugiés vivant dans des grottes et des combattants armés.

"Les paragraphes suivants donnent les récits de pétitionnaires qui semblent le mieux illustrer les événements survenus dans ces régions.

"M. Mohamed Abubaker ben Farid, qui est en exil au Caire, a déclaré que les forces britanniques n'avaient occupé son pays d'origine, le Haut-Aulaqui, qu'en 1951-1952. Jusqu'en 1959, la population avait lutté sur le plan politique contre les Britanniques en refusant de collaborer avec eux. Brusquement, en mai 1959, sans avertissement, des avions et des chars britanniques ont lancé une première attaque contre les villages et les foyers. Les gens des tribus ont organisé la résistance dans la montagne, mais, au mois de mai 1960, les Britanniques ont envoyé 4 000 soldats dans la région et des centaines de personnes ont été forcées de se réfugier au Yémen et en Arabie Saoudite. Environ 12 000 raids ont été effectués par la Royal Air Force contre les Aulaquis et les régions avoisinantes. Le pétitionnaire a présenté au Sous-Comité une liste partielle énumérant 40 maisons détruites, neuf femmes tuées par les bombes et neuf hommes emprisonnés, qu'il connaissait tous personnellement." [Ibid., par. 114 à 116.]

100. Le rapport reproduit les textes des avertissements des raids aériens et nous présente une liste des raids sans merci accomplis contre la population:

"Malgré nos avertissement répétés, Al-Mushi et d'autres auteurs de troubles poursuivent leurs activités subversives et leurs attentats contre l'ordre public. Il a été décidé de déclencher une action aérienne contre la maison d'Al-Mushi et les champs qui l'entourent.

"Nous vous engageons donc à évacuer immédiatement les femmes et les enfants dans un rayon d'un mille autour de la maison d'Al-Mushi. Si vous ne le faites pas, vous en subirez les conséquences." [Ibid., par. 119.]

101. Le rapport nous présente en outre les revendications de la population comme elles ont été expliquées par les pétitionnaires. Notons que la première de ces revendications, revendication à laquelle la délégation de la République arabe du Yémen se joint, bien entendu, sans aucune réserve, est "la cessation immédiate du régime colonial". Je suis persuadé que la presque totalité des délégations ici présentes soutiennent avec autant de chaleur, et je dirai autant de ferveur, cette revendication juste et équitable, et conforme à la déclaration des Nations Unies relative à la décolonisation. Dans la liste des revendications, on trouve aussi la dissolution de la Fédération ainsi que l'organisation des élections ou d'un plébiscite sous contrôle des Nations Unies.

102. En arrivant à la fin du rapport du Sous-Comité, on trouve, en résumé, les conclusions auxquelles il est finalement arrivé. Le Sous-Comité déclare ce qui suit:

"Le Sous-Comité, en se rendant dans des pays avoisinants, n'a fait qu'appliquer une des dispositions de la résolution du 3 mai 1963 du Comité spécial. Etant mis dans l'impossibilité de visiter les territoires intéressés, il s'est rendu là où des personnes en provenance d'Aden et des Protectorats d'Aden ont été en mesure de venir lui faire part de leurs vues sur la situation et l'avenir de leur pays.

"Effectivement, le Sous-Comité a pu entendre un grand nombre de gens appartenant à toutes sortes de catégories de la population: représentants et dirigeants de partis politiques, délégués syndicaux, représentants élus, anciens sultans ou chefs de tribus, civils et militaires, fonctionnaires, commerçants, agriculteurs, étudiants, hommes et femmes de diverses organisations.

"La présence du Sous-Comité dans des pays avoisinants d'Aden et des Protectorats d'Aden a permis à ces personnes de faire connaître leurs points de vue et de formuler leurs demandes quant à l'avenir de leur pays. C'est là un aspect positif du travail du Comité spécial dans la recherche des voies et moyens les mieux appropriés pour l'application rapide de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

"Un des résultats les plus réconfortants de cette action provient des nombreuses indications sur la foi ardente et l'espoir placés dans les Nations Unies comme un instrument de libération pacifique des peuples sous régime colonial.

"Le Sous-Comité a constaté un désir général de mettre fin à la domination coloniale. Les quelques différences de points de vue ne portent pas sur la fin recherchée mais plutôt sur les moyens et conditions d'atteindre ce but." [Ibid., par. 158 à 162.]

103. A ce stade de la discussion générale sur le rapport du Comité de la décolonisation, ma délégation, qui s'est limitée aujourd'hui à traiter de la question d'Aden, se réserve le droit d'intervenir plus tard, avec la permission de notre Président, pour discuter la question des autres territoires mentionnée dans le rapport général.

104. Ma délégation veut néanmoins mettre en relief son soutien de la revendication principale des pétitionnaires; je veux dire la cessation immédiate du régime colonial, revendication tellement juste et naturelle, et pour laquelle le Comité spécial a été créé.

105. M. ALEKSEEV (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) [traduit du russe]: Les dernières minutes du colonialisme s'égrènent inexorablement à l'horloge de l'histoire. Nous ne sommes pas seulement témoins de sa disparition infaillible, mais aussi participants à la lutte contre cet odieux anachronisme de portée internationale. Je parle de lutte parce que, sans lutte, le colonialisme ne capitulera pas. Le colonialisme est condamné mais n'abandonnera pas de lui-même l'arène de l'histoire. Cela est évident pour nous. Nous voyons que le colonialisme, ce phénomène honteux — second de l'esclavage, qui ne fait pas honneur au siècle de la civilisation — résiste avec acharnement. Comme dans tout combat, dans la lutte internationale contre le colonialisme, il se trouve des défenseurs de ce système qui, sous un prétexte ou sous un autre, recherchent des palliatifs politiques pour aider à subsister cette pieuvre que maudit l'humanité.

106. Nous vivons et luttons à une époque où les peuples qui gémissent encore sous le joug colonialiste ne veulent plus porter le fardeau de l'exploitation et de l'humiliation. Ils font impérieusement appel à la conscience mondiale. Jusqu'à quand subsistera ce colonialisme qui entretient l'inégalité entre les peuples? Ce colonialisme qui place les pays faibles dans un état de subordination politique, économique et sociale par rapport aux pays forts et dominateurs.

107. Les peuples des pays coloniaux et des pays dépendants ont levé bien haut l'étendard de la lutte de libération nationale, l'étendard de la lutte pour l'égalité complète avec les autres peuples, pour la liberté et l'indépendance. En même temps, ils mettent leurs espoirs dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies et font un pressant appel à son aide. Écoutant cet appel, l'Assemblée générale, à sa quinzième session en 1960, a adopté la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Le projet^{6/} de cette déclaration, vous le savez, avait été déposé par le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique; le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Nikita Serguéévitch Khrouchtchev, en avait saisi l'Assemblée à sa quinzième session.

108. Dans la déclaration qu'il a faite à la quinzième session, en septembre 1960, le président Khrouchtchev a souligné notamment que:

"... le moment est venu de poser la question de la suppression complète et définitive du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, pour mettre fin à cette honte, à cette sauvagerie, à cette barbarie" [869^eme séance, par. 181].

^{6/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, seizième session, Annexes, point 87 de l'ordre du jour, document A/4502.

109. Trois années ont passé depuis que la Déclaration sert de directive à l'Organisation des Nations Unies et à ses organes. Ces trois années ont confirmé de la manière la plus éclatante la vérité indiscutable que le sort du colonialisme, c'est-à-dire l'heure de sa disparition définitive et irrévocable de l'arène de l'histoire, aussi bien en Rhodésie du Sud et dans le Sud-Ouest africain que dans les territoires sous administration portugaise, et dans tous les autres pays qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, dépend de la façon dont les dispositions de la Déclaration seront mises en œuvre et observées.

110. Voilà pourquoi, au sein même et en dehors de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, on entend réclamer avec une telle insistance le respect absolu, la mise en œuvre immédiate de la Déclaration et condamner résolument le système colonial. D'ailleurs, le colonialisme est condamné non seulement par les noirs qui se trouvent encore sous son joug ou qui l'ont récemment secoué. Les jaunes et des blancs, autrement dit des personnes de toutes races éprises de liberté, d'égalité et d'indépendance, le condamnent et le stigmatisent également.

111. La délégation ukrainienne a étudié avec le plus grand soin le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5446/Rev.1]. Elle a ainsi pu constater l'œuvre importante accomplie par le Comité ainsi que les grands efforts que tous ses membres ont dû déployer pour préparer le rapport dont l'Assemblée est saisie. Sans l'aide que le Comité nous a apportés en recueillant tous les documents à ce sujet, en les collationnant, en les présentant sous une forme aussi convaincante et en les mettant à la portée de tous, il nous serait malaisé de nous acquitter de notre tâche.

112. Je me fais l'interprète de la délégation ukrainienne pour remercier sincèrement le Comité et son Président, l'ambassadeur Coulibaly, pour l'œuvre importante qu'ils ont accomplie.

113. Le rapport du Comité spécial confirme une fois de plus que, si chacun des pays coloniaux et des pays dépendants présente dans son évolution certaines particularités qui lui sont propres, pour aborder le problème de la liquidation du colonialisme dans tous ces pays, il y a des principes communs qui doivent servir de base à la politique de ceux qui luttent pour l'élimination définitive du système colonial.

114. Ces principes reposent sur la nécessité d'accorder l'indépendance à tous les pays et peuples coloniaux et dépendants, sans exception aucune.

115. S'inspirant de ces principes, l'Assemblée générale doit repousser et rejeter tout prétexte invoqué pour empêcher que tel ou tel territoire non autonome accède à l'indépendance; elle doit exiger de tous les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qu'ils respectent très strictement à l'égard des peuples et des pays coloniaux et dépendants les dispositions de la Charte, de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme [résolution 217 A (III)] et de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

116. De la lecture du rapport du Comité spécial aussi bien que de la discussion des problèmes coloniaux à la présente session, notamment à la Quatrième Commission, il ressort au fond deux positions.

117. D'un côté, on trouve les Etats qui, comme l'exige la Déclaration, se déclarent inconditionnellement en faveur de l'élimination immédiate du colonialisme. C'est la position de la grande majorité des pays.

118. De l'autre côté, on trouve une minorité d'Etats, parmi lesquels tout d'abord des puissances coloniales, dont dépend avant tout l'application des dispositions de la Déclaration et des résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale. En substance, ils invoquent divers prétextes pour ralentir l'élimination définitive du colonialisme, pour retarder le jour où ce honteux système disparaîtra à tout jamais.

119. Ce n'est ni aujourd'hui ni hier que se sont précisées les deux positions opposées que je viens de mentionner. Les problèmes du colonialisme figurent à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale littéralement depuis les premiers jours de l'existence de l'Organisation. Déjà en 1946, en effet, on avait discuté de la situation dans les possessions coloniales portugaises, à la première session de l'Assemblée générale.

120. L'Assemblée générale s'est aussi occupée d'autres questions concernant le colonialisme. Depuis, la lutte héroïque de nombreux peuples a été couronnée de succès. Sur le seul continent africain, des dizaines de pays ont accédé à l'indépendance. Il faut reconnaître qu'une certaine part du mérite en revient à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Cependant, pour de nombreux pays et peuples coloniaux et dépendants, le cours du temps s'est comme arrêté.

121. Près de 70 territoires comptant au total 50 millions d'habitants se trouvent toujours sous le joug du colonialisme cependant que pour l'Organisation des Nations Unies le problème de leur libération reste pour ainsi dire perpétuellement en suspens.

122. En Rhodésie du Sud, dans les colonies portugaises, de nouvelles générations ont grandi depuis que la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance à ces territoires a été inscrite pour la première fois à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

123. L'Assemblée générale a déjà adopté plus de 65 résolutions sur le Sud-Ouest africain et voilà 17 ans qu'un pétitionnaire, le pasteur Michael Scott, vient présenter des plaintes à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Mais, selon le dicton, "tirée à hue et à dia, la charrette reste là". Le Sud-Ouest africain est toujours, comme par le passé, écrasé sous la botte des colonialistes. Il y a là un paradoxe et un reproche vivant pour les Nations Unies.

124. Ainsi, une misérable poignée de puissances coloniales, par leur politique d'atarmoiements et de tergiversations quant à l'élimination du système colonial, ont réussi pendant ces longues années à méconnaître la volonté de l'immense majorité des pays qui, s'inspirant des décisions de l'Assemblée générale et des dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, sont en faveur de l'élimination immédiate et inconditionnelle de tous les vestiges du colonialisme.

125. Nous avons déjà eu l'occasion à la Quatrième Commission d'attirer par exemple l'attention des représentants sur la façon dont trafique en longueur la solution d'un problème comme celui de la Rhodésie du Sud. Ce problème a été discuté à diverses sessions de l'Assemblée générale et étudié deux fois par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Par deux fois, le problème a été confié à un sous-comité spécialement créé à cet effet, dont les membres se sont rendus à Londres en vue de pourparlers avec le Gouvernement britannique. Tout récemment encore, la question de la Rhodésie du Sud a été examinée par le Conseil de sécurité. Du reste, dans chaque résolution et dans chaque recommandation adoptées, on a souligné l'importance particulière que revêt le facteur temps pour une heureuse solution de cette question de la Rhodésie du Sud.

126. Je dois faire observer que de nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies consacrées aux problèmes du colonialisme ainsi que les décisions de certaines conférences africaines insistent constamment sur la nécessité de donner sans tarder satisfaction aux aspirations légitimes des peuples coloniaux.

127. Si la première Conférence des peuples africains^{7/} qui s'est tenue à Accra en décembre 1958 a lancé le mot d'ordre "L'indépendance au cours de notre génération", un an plus tard, la deuxième Conférence des peuples africains^{8/} qui s'est réunie à Tunis lançait déjà le cri "Indépendance immédiate". La même exigence était formulée à la Conférence au sommet des 32 pays indépendants africains^{9/} à Addis-Abéba.

128. Prenant en considération les intérêts des peuples coloniaux et la nécessité de leur accorder immédiatement la liberté et le droit à l'autodétermination, la Déclaration a proclamé solennellement "la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations".

129. C'est précisément compte tenu de la réalité de la situation que l'Assemblée générale souligne chaque fois la nécessité d'accorder sans tarder l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux, car de la date de l'indépendance dépend le caractère, pacifique ou non, des moyens utilisés pour la réaliser.

130. Prendre le parti de la minorité des puissances coloniales, adopter leur politique d'atavismes et de tergiversations, c'est suivre une voie lourde de conséquences dangereuses pour la paix et la sécurité internationales.

131. Néanmoins, les puissances coloniales ne veulent pas s'écarter de cette voie. A quelles manœuvres tactiques, à quels artifices n'ont-elles pas recours?

Elles mettent en branle tout leur appareil de propagande pour justifier aux yeux de l'opinion mondiale leurs desseins colonialistes pleins de rapacité.

132. Nous savons d'après le rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en Rhodésie du Sud et du débat sur cette question à la Quatrième Commission que dans ledit pays sont interdits tous les partis politiques qui reflètent les aspirations de la population et qui, de l'avis des racistes de la Rhodésie du Sud, sont des partis "subversifs"

133. C'est à très juste titre que le représentant de la République du Congo (Brazzaville), dans la déclaration qu'il a faite à la Quatrième Commission (1482^e séance), le 15 novembre 1963, a souligné que l'argument le plus courant des colonialistes consiste à dire que les "nationalistes sont des communistes". Ils s'en servent pour justifier leur répression sanglante de la lutte de libération nationale.

134. Mais ce n'est pas seulement sous l'étendard de l'anticommunisme que les colonialistes dissimulent leurs honteux agissements. Sans aucun scrupule, ils osent faire croire qu'ils sont presque comme des bienfaiteurs des peuples coloniaux. En même temps, ils attribuent au colonialisme des traits qui seraient en somme étrangers à son essence même, qui est un dessein de l'exploitation. A les entendre, ces prétendus "amis" des peuples coloniaux n'ont de cesse d'apporter aux peuples asservis les bienfaits de la civilisation contemporaine. Mais ils se gardent de dire que cette initiation à la civilisation est incompatible avec l'oppression et que les chaînes de l'esclavage n'ont jamais été le symbole de la liberté et de l'indépendance.

135. Mais l'arsenal tactique des colonialistes n'en est pas épuisé pour autant. Ainsi, contre tout bon sens et en dépit des décisions de l'Assemblée générale, le Royaume-Uni persiste à affirmer que la Rhodésie du Sud n'est pas un territoire tombant sous le coup de l'Article 73 de la Charte. On a même inventé pour la Rhodésie du Sud la notion de "colonie autonome".

136. De son côté, pour justifier sa politique coloniale d'usurpation, le Gouvernement portugais veut se dissimuler — il faut bien le dire — derrière un autre écran: il prétend que les colonies portugaises ne sont pas des colonies mais des "provinces d'outre-mer" qui font partie intégrante de la métropole. Il s'efforce même de donner une base méthodologique et théorique à sa politique coloniale. Tout le monde connaît ces tentatives du Gouvernement portugais, puisqu'elles sont décrites dans le rapport du Secrétaire général^{10/} présenté en application de la résolution adoptée par le Conseil de sécurité à sa 1049^e séance, le 31 juillet 1963^{11/}. Faisant contre mauvaise fortune bon cœur, le Gouvernement portugais a mis au point sa propre doctrine de l'autodétermination et, se retranchant derrière elle, il cherche à faire passer le différend de principe au sujet des colonies portugaises pour une simple querelle sur l'interprétation à donner au mot "autodétermination".

137. Comme l'a déclaré récemment au nom de son gouvernement le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Portugal, il ne s'agirait pas tant d'autodétermination à proprement parler que de la définition à donner au mot "autodétermination". Il existe, affirme-t-il, différents types d'autodétermination, de même qu'il y a plusieurs systèmes de gouvernement.

138. De l'avis du Portugal, si la population autochtone participe à la direction des affaires d'une colonie, c'est donc qu'elle prend part également à l'adoption des décisions qui en déterminent l'orientation et de celles qui affectent sa vie.

139. Que de divagations, que de chicaneries évidentes dans tout cela! L'autodétermination, n'est-ce pas avant tout l'indépendance politique nationale, c'est-à-dire la direction des affaires des pays sans ingérence étrangère, ni hégémonie étrangère? Peut-on parler d'autodétermination en Angola, au Mozambique, en Guinée portugaise et dans les autres territoires portugais alors que ces territoires sont gouvernés de l'étranger et que la population autochtone y participe seulement à l'administration, mais sans en déterminer les formes ni les méthodes, alors que la population autochtone n'a qu'une toute petite part — encore peut-on en douter — dans la direction des affaires de son propre pays?

140. Même si, comme le déclare le Gouvernement portugais, la population autochtone participe aux élections aux conseils municipaux, aux conseils législatifs, etc., cette participation à la vie du pays est fondée sur l'inégalité; les étrangers ont la part du dictateur; les habitants autochtones ont la part de subordonnés qui n'ont qu'à exécuter la volonté des dictateurs étrangers, lesquels occupent tous les postes de commandement dans les colonies.

141. La promulgation même de la nouvelle loi organique qui, aux dires des autorités portugaises, doit permettre d'adopter de nouveaux statuts politiques et administratifs dans les prétendus "territoires d'outre-mer" est bien la preuve que, pour la population de ces territoires, ses droits politiques et autres étaient et sont encore rognés et amenuisés.

142. La nouvelle loi organique, les amendements apportés à la Constitution, les réformes introduites ont tous pour objet d'atténuer l'ardeur de la lutte de libération nationale menée dans les colonies portugaises et de créer l'illusion d'une autonomie dans ces territoires.

143. Ce n'est pas par hasard que le Comité spécial chargé des territoires administrés par le Portugal a qualifié comme suit toutes ces réformes et les précédentes:

"De l'avis du Comité, les réformes que le Portugal prétend avoir introduites non seulement ne satisfont pas les aspirations essentielles des peuples de ces territoires, mais n'ont même pas encore apporté jusqu'ici d'améliorations sensibles aux conditions politiques, économiques, sociales et de l'enseignement 12/."

144. En un mot, on aura beau jouer sur l'interprétation à donner au terme "autodétermination", on aura beau introduire des réformes partielles, on ne réussira pas pour autant à dissimuler la vérité au sujet du statut colonial des peuples des territoires administrés par le Portugal. Il ne s'agit pas là d'une discussion sur la notion d'autodétermination mais de bien autre chose, à savoir que les populations des colonies portugaises doivent obtenir et exercer le droit de se séparer du Portugal, de jouir de l'indépendance et de la liberté et de pouvoir les mettre en œuvre.

145. Les outrages et les humiliations que les asservisseurs font constamment subir aux peuples coloniaux, le verbiage employé pour prouver que les peuples coloniaux d'Afrique ne sont pas encore mûrs pour l'autonomie, ne sont pas prêts à vivre sans le joug colonial, sont les spasmes d'agonie du colonialisme et de son idéologie raciste, disons même fasciste, établissant une distinction entre races supérieures et races inférieures.

146. La politique des colonialistes confirme seulement que le colonialisme est une doctrine raciste, la doctrine de la domination des uns par les autres, des faibles par les forts, l'idéologie de l'exploitation politique, économique et sociale de certains pays par d'autres.

147. Mais une telle politique n'a pas résisté et ne résiste pas à l'épreuve du temps. Elle se targuait d'infailibilité tant que de nombreux pays, aujourd'hui Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, se trouvaient encore sous la domination étrangère. On répandait alors les mêmes fables au sujet des populations de ces pays qui ont aujourd'hui brisé les chaînes du colonialisme; on affirmait toujours plus haut qu'elles n'étaient pas mûres pour vivre dans l'égalité et la liberté ni capables d'un développement autonome. Mais quelqu'un pourrait-il me citer un seul exemple de pays auquel on se serait hâté d'accorder l'indépendance qui y aurait renoncé et aurait exprimé le vœu de porter à nouveau le joug du colonialisme? Il n'en est pas d'exemple et il ne peut y en avoir!

148. En revanche, on pourrait citer de nombreux cas où c'est seulement après l'éviction des colonialistes que les colonies de jadis se sont ouvertes au progrès et que leurs populations se sont trouvées en possession de forces et de magnifiques ressources pour se développer économiquement, socialement et politiquement.

149. C'est de l'efficacité avec laquelle les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et la Déclaration sur la décolonisation seront mises en œuvre, c'est de l'instant où le colonialisme aura complètement disparu que dépendent non seulement les moyens employés pour y parvenir, mais aussi les délais dans lesquels les séquelles du colonialisme pourront être éliminées dans les pays qui en auront été libérés. L'élimination des séquelles de la domination coloniale est une question d'actualité qui revêt une énorme importance et sa solution dépend directement de la rapidité avec laquelle seront appliquées les résolutions et autres recommandations concrètes de l'Assemblée générale sur le colonialisme. En retarder ou en faire échouer l'application revient à ajourner sine die la lutte contre les conséquences néfastes de la domination coloniale.

150. Dans le rapport du Comité spécial ainsi que dans les dossiers démographiques de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, on relève de nombreux faits qui caractérisent bien les graves conséquences du colonialisme dans les domaines politique, économique et social. Ainsi, selon les données dont dispose l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour 1960, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, la mortalité de la population de couleur est deux fois supérieure à celle de la population blanche; en "Guinée portugaise", on compte un médecin pour 23 000 habitants; et au Nyassaland, un pour 33 000 habitants.

151. On pourrait indéfiniment citer des chiffres de ce genre. De tels chiffres ne sont pas muets: ils parlent, ils crient. Si on avait diffusé comme documents officiels de l'Organisation des Nations Unies non seulement les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, des comités de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les rapports de comités, sous-comités et commissions qui se sont rendus sur place pour étudier la situation, les déclarations des pétitionnaires, des cartes et autres documents, mais aussi des documents photographiques, des films, nous aurions — n'en doutons pas — un tableau bien plus tragique encore du sort auquel le colonialisme condamne des millions d'innocents. Ce tableau serait plus effrayant encore — je m'en excuse, mais j'essaie de l'imaginer un instant — si la Quatrième Commission siégeait non à New York mais dans la colonie dont elle examine les problèmes, si l'Assemblée générale, en examinant la question de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation se réunissait non au Siège mais quelque part en Afrique. Nous entendrions alors, sans nul doute, la protestation, vivante et puissante, de millions d'habitants contre les retards injustifiés qui sont apportés à l'octroi de la liberté et de l'indépendance.

152. Nous savons tous fort bien qu'il ne suffit pas d'adopter une résolution. Ce n'est pas ainsi que la solution s'acquiert; elle n'est qu'amorcée. Ce qui importe, c'est l'efficacité et la rapidité avec lesquelles sont mises en œuvre les dispositions de la résolution adoptée. De cela dépend non seulement l'autorité de ladite résolution, mais le prestige de l'Organisation elle-même aux yeux de l'opinion mondiale. On ne saurait prendre plus longtemps son parti qu'un seul paragraphe de la résolution sur les questions du colonialisme soit en somme scrupuleusement appliqué d'année en année, à savoir le paragraphe comme quoi la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, du Sud-Ouest africain, des colonies portugaises, etc., ne doit pas être retirée de l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale.

153. Le moment est venu, enfin, de mettre les points sur les i. La voie des attermoissements et des tergiversations est celle des colonialistes, mais non pas celle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. On ne saurait tolérer plus longtemps qu'une minorité de puissances coloniales continue de méconnaître la volonté de la majorité des Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour faire prévaloir ses propres intérêts économiques et stratégiques. Le moment est venu de régler leurs comptes à ceux qui pratiquent une politique de discrimination à l'égard des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et empêchent l'Organisation des Nations Unies de s'acquitter des tâches qui lui sont confiées.

154. La délégation de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine est profondément convaincue que la ruine du colonialisme est une nécessité historique inéluctable. Elle reconnaît en même temps que, pour que le colonialisme soit réellement défunt, les peuples et l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne doivent reculer devant aucun effort. Voilà pourquoi la délégation ukrainienne appuie résolument les mesures les plus décisives qui peuvent être prises pour assurer l'application immédiate de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Nous sommes fermement en faveur de l'exécution immédiate des résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale et le Conseil de sécurité sur les questions coloniales, car c'est ainsi seulement que les espoirs de liberté et d'indépendance que nourrissent les pays et les peuples coloniaux et dépendants pourront être pleinement satisfaits.

155. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

156. M. KING (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: L'avant-dernier orateur a, si je l'ai bien compris, prétendu qu'Aden faisait partie du Yémen. Je suis autorisé à déclarer ici que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté n'a aucun doute quant à sa souveraineté sur le territoire d'Aden et je réserve formellement ses droits en l'espèce.

157. S'agissant des nombreuses allégations concernant la politique de mon gouvernement au sujet d'Aden, il est répondu à la plupart d'entre elles aux paragraphes 162 à 179, 276 à 285 et 364 à 392 du chapitre V du rapport du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre [A/5446/Rev.1]. Toutefois, le cas échéant, ma délégation se réserve le droit de répondre plus tard en détail.

158. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant du Yémen pour exercer son droit de réponse.

159. M. TARCICI (Yémen): Ma délégation a eu l'avantage de parler pendant peut-être une heure et demie pour prouver qu'historiquement, économiquement, ethniquement et géographiquement Aden fait partie intégrante du Yémen; ma délégation l'a prouvé, documents en mains.

160. Après ce long exposé bien établi, le représentant du Royaume-Uni vient nous annoncer encore une fois que son gouvernement et sa délégation n'ont aucun doute sur l'autorité de son pays en ce qui concerne Aden. Si le représentant du Royaume-Uni, en prenant cette attitude, se réfère aux traités que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté britannique a signés avec des chefs locaux, nous demandons à être autorisés à expliquer ce que sont ces traités, sur quelle base ils sont fondés, quelle est leur forme et leur durée. A cette heure tardive, je ne veux pas retenir l'Assemblée générale afin de donner des explications sur ces traités, sur l'attitude légale ou illégale du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni dans la partie sud occupée de notre pays. Mais je réserve, avec l'autorisation du Président, mon droit d'expliquer toute la situation lors de la séance de demain ou lors de celle qui suivra.

161. Néanmoins, j'attire l'attention de la délégation du Royaume-Uni sur le fait que ces traités ne peuvent pas avoir une valeur quelconque, puisqu'ils sont établis pour une durée qualifiée de perpétuelle. En effet, le Royaume-Uni a signé avec des chefs locaux des traités à perpétuité, c'est-à-dire jusqu'à la fin du monde. Parmi ces chefs locaux, il me vient à l'esprit l'un de nos bons citoyens, le cheik d'Al Aqrabi; il est le chef d'une localité de 1 500 personnes, dont la fortune est de 300 chèvres et quelques chameaux, en temps de prospérité. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni appelle cette localité l'Etat d'Al Aqrabi.

162. Si le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a aucun doute quant à son autorité sur cette partie occupée du Yémen et si son autorité relève de ce genre de traité, vous avez une idée de ce qu'est l'autorité britannique et le droit britannique sur notre partie occupée du Yémen.

163. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Avant de lever la séance, je désire vous informer que le Président de la Quatrième Commission m'a demandé d'aviser les membres de l'Assemblée que sa commission tiendra demain deux séances, une le matin et une l'après-midi.

164. Qu'il me soit permis de prier les orateurs de s'efforcer de limiter, dans la mesure du possible, la longueur de leurs interventions afin que nous puissions tous les entendre au cours des séances prévues pour l'examen du point 23.

La séance est levée à 13 h 30.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. MOLINA ORANTES (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation du Guatemala tient à exprimer ses félicitations et ses remerciements au Comité spécial pour l'excellent rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] qu'il a présenté à cette Assemblée. Il contient un examen approfondi et consciencieux des problèmes qui lui ont été soumis et recommande, en outre, les mesures qui permettraient le mieux de les résoudre.

2. Nous avons pu apprécier au cours de nos discussions à la Quatrième Commission que le rapport du Comité spécial a été l'un de ses auxiliaires les plus précieux, par la valeur des renseignements qu'il donne et par la pertinence des conclusions qu'il tire.

3. Néanmoins, ma délégation se voit dans l'obligation d'intervenir — brièvement d'ailleurs selon le vœu du Président — pour exprimer ses réserves au sujet de l'annexe I du rapport qui contient la liste préliminaire des territoires auxquels s'applique la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

4. La liste en question, élaborée sans aucun doute à partir des rapports d'Etats colonisateurs, mentionne le territoire de Belize que le Royaume-Uni a rebaptisé "Honduras britannique" et qui est cependant sous la souveraineté exclusive du Guatemala.

5. Le territoire de Belize, dont la possession a été usurpée par le Royaume-Uni, fait partie intégrante du sol guatémalien, non seulement pour des raisons géographiques mais, essentiellement, pour des raisons historiques et juridiques. Récupérer ce territoire constitue le désir suprême de toute la nation guaté-malienne, qui est prête, pour ce faire, à consentir tous les sacrifices. Le tableau, vu du Royaume-Uni, se présente d'une façon radicalement différente. Pour le Gouvernement britannique, Belize n'est rien d'autre qu'un territoire lointain et isolé, qu'un des nombreux éléments de son empire colonial, dont il s'est emparé pour des raisons exclusivement économiques et stratégiques. Pour cette raison, il lui a semblé facile et commode de le cataloguer comme territoire non autonome.

6. Ma délégation ne peut accepter cette désignation unilatérale et proteste énergiquement contre le fait que le territoire de Belize ait été inclus dans la liste qui figure à l'annexe I du rapport.

7. La souveraineté sur Belize appartient uniquement et exclusivement au Guatemala et l'occupation britannique de son territoire est une gangrène qui ronge son intégrité territoriale. Le Guatemala ne cessera ses efforts que lorsqu'il aura réussi à se débarrasser de cette gangrène.

8. La résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale contient, à son paragraphe 6, une disposition formelle qui, de l'avis de ma délégation, est la seule applicable au territoire guatémaltèque de Belize, appelé à tort Honduras britannique. Dans ce paragraphe, il est stipulé ce qui suit:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

9. En maintenant un régime colonial anachronique dans un territoire appartenant au Guatemala, le Royaume-Uni non seulement viole de manière flagrante les termes du paragraphe précité, mais va résolument à l'encontre des principes fondamentaux honorés par les nations américaines, principes qui répudient le colonialisme et la nouvelle apparence sous laquelle il se déguise: le néo-colonialisme.

10. Je vous prie, Monsieur le Président, de bien vouloir faire consigner au procès-verbal la protestation catégorique et les réserves de ma délégation devant le fait que le territoire de Belize a été inclus dans la liste des territoires non autonomes du rapport A/5446/Rev.1 sous le nom trompeur et impropre de Honduras britannique.

11. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Compte tenu de la demande du représentant du Guatemala, je tiens à souligner que sa déclaration, comme celle de tous les représentants qui prennent la parole en séance plénière, sera enregistrée dans le procès-verbal de séance.

12. M. PINOCHET (Chili) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] du Comité spécial que nous examinons aujourd'hui est un des documents les plus importants dont l'Assemblée générale ait été saisie pendant cette dix-huitième session. Les problèmes examinés dans ce rapport présentent un intérêt vital pour des millions d'êtres humains qui ont placé leurs espérances dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies et savent que leur avenir repose en grande partie entre les mains de cet organisme international.

13. Il suffit de lire ce rapport du Comité spécial, appelé communément de "décolonisation", pour se faire une idée assez complète des derniers problèmes coloniaux qui sont aujourd'hui en voie d'être résolus.

14. La tâche confiée au Comité spécial par l'Assemblée générale aux termes de la résolution 1654 (XVI) consiste à étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le long titre de ce Comité correspond bien aux 400 pages de son important rapport.

15. L'autodétermination et l'indépendance des colonies sont notre objectif. Néanmoins, l'application de ces principes fondamentaux crée des situations diverses. Le Comité spécial a étudié ces situations dans douze groupes de territoires coloniaux composés, chacun, de territoires plus petits. Pour chaque situation, le Comité spécial a proposé la solution qui convenait le mieux. Dans les cas les plus graves qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales, il a fait rapport au Conseil de sécurité, conformément à l'alinéa d du paragraphe 8 du dispositif de la résolution 1810 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale. Dans d'autres cas, le Comité a invité la puissance administrante à rédiger une nouvelle constitution permettant la libre expression de la volonté populaire, le transfert à la population des pouvoirs souverains et la proclamation de l'indépendance.

16. En ce qui concerne certains territoires non autonomes, il a recommandé de fixer une date aussi rapprochée que possible pour l'accession à l'indépendance. Dans d'autres cas, enfin, il a ajourné toute recommandation, faute de renseignements plus complets.

17. A plusieurs reprises, la délégation chilienne a précisé devant la Quatrième Commission son avis sur certaines questions examinées dans le rapport. Je songe aux territoires sous administration portugaise, à la Rhodésie du Sud et au Sud-Ouest africain. Plutôt que d'analyser maintenant la situation des derniers territoires coloniaux, je préfère aborder un problème qui préoccupe tout spécialement ma délégation et dont j'ai déjà parlé brièvement au moment de l'examen des territoires sous administration portugaise. Il s'agit de l'avenir qui attend les petits territoires coloniaux une fois qu'ils auront déclaré leur indépendance et des responsabilités qui incomberont à l'Organisation des Nations Unies à cet égard.

18. Le Chili estime être suffisamment autorisé pour exposer ses idées sur ce point avec clarté et sans détours. Sa position anticolonialiste est bien connue. Ce que nous désirons réellement, c'est que les petits territoires coloniaux qui exerceront bientôt leur droit à l'autodétermination puissent bénéficier de l'aide et des conseils de l'Organisation des Nations Unies afin que l'indépendance représente réellement pour eux le début d'une étape vers des progrès effectifs dans tous les domaines.

19. Quand, voici 150 ans, les colonies espagnoles d'Amérique ont déclaré leur indépendance, elles n'ont pas trouvé les conseils et l'aide efficaces d'un organisme international comme celui dont nous disposons aujourd'hui. Ce qui aurait pu alors être obtenu relativement aisément pour l'union continentale nous coûte aujourd'hui d'énormes efforts et les progrès sont lents et difficiles. Je pense parfois que cette expérience latino-américaine ne profite pas suffisamment à nos frères africains.

20. Dire aujourd'hui que la colonisation touche à sa fin est presque un lieu commun. Les colonies les plus grandes et les plus importantes sont devenues des pays indépendants et, à l'exception de quelques territoires dont l'indépendance approche, le reste des colonies est constitué en grande partie par des territoires coloniaux peu étendus et à peine peuplés. Leurs habitants proclameront leur indépendance par l'exercice d'un droit que personne ne leur dénie, bien que cette indépendance risque souvent de n'être viable ni du point de vue politique ni du point de vue économique.

21. Dans la liste préliminaire des territoires qui figure dans le rapport du Comité spécial et auxquels s'applique la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, on compte au moins de 12 à 15 cas de ce genre. Cette liste préliminaire n'inclut que les territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes. Le Comité spécial prépare maintenant, conformément à l'alinéa a du paragraphe 8 de la résolution 1810 (XVII) une liste complémentaire qui englobera "tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance". Je crains bien que, lorsque nous arriverons à ce que j'appellerai le "fond du panier", nous ne trouvions plus en fait que de petits territoires.

22. Dans la liste en question, qui figure à l'annexe I du rapport, on compte des territoires de 1 000 habitants ou même moins qui vivent sur des territoires si petits que leur superficie ne dépasse pas parfois cinq ou six kilomètres carrés — soit deux milles carrés — et qui sont cependant considérés dans cette liste comme des colonies ayant une personnalité propre. Que l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies puisse ou non élargir demain cette salle de réunion pour recevoir 100 nouveaux Membres, que 100 nouveaux drapeaux nationaux flottent à l'extrémité de leur mât, le long de l'East River, que la Cinquième Commission ne trouve pas des moyens économiques suffisants pour faire face subitement à des dépenses deux fois plus élevées, telles ne sont pas les questions qui intéressent la délégation chilienne aujourd'hui. Ses préoccupations sont d'un autre ordre; son inquiétude est différente.

23. Dans un monde qui avance vers de grandes intégrations, que ce soit des économies ou des peuples en quête d'unité, il me semble rétrograde, anachronique et illogique de placer l'accent sur la division, sur le fractionnement et la désintégration tant politique et économique que culturelle et sociale. Cela nous conduirait fatalement au néo-colonialisme et les Etats non viables courraient le risque de tomber de nouveau sous l'influence intéressée et pernicieuse de grands Etats.

24. Notre but doit continuer d'être — et j'en souligne ici l'importance — l'indépendance pour tous les peuples et la disparition de toutes les colonies et de leur cortège d'abus, de pauvreté et d'exploitation économique éhontée. L'indépendance doit être accordée aux peuples qui ne connaissent pas encore les avantages de la liberté, du progrès et de la civilisation; mais l'indépendance doit être un point de départ vers une amélioration des conditions de vie des peuples asservis et, cela, nous ne devons pas l'oublier.

25. L'Organisation des Nations Unies, qui encourage le juste droit à l'indépendance, assume donc une responsabilité en ce qui concerne le destin de ces peuples, qui ont d'autant plus besoin d'aide que leurs économies sont plus faibles et leurs traditions politiques et institutionnelles plus instables. La délégation chilienne n'est pas la seule à se soucier de la viabilité politique et économique des membres les plus jeunes de la famille internationale. Nous savons que les autres délégations se soucient également de cette question, comme nous en avons eu plus d'une fois la preuve au cours des réunions du Comité spécial.

26. A mon avis, l'opinion exprimée à cet égard au cours de la séance plénière d'hier [1266ème séance] par le représentant du Mali est très importante. M. Coulibaly, Président du Comité spécial, a affirmé avec raison qu'il ne s'agissait pas uniquement de faire approuver des résolutions sur l'indépendance, notamment dans le cas de petites colonies; sa recommandation visant à ce que les populations de ces territoires aient la possibilité d'exposer elles-mêmes leurs plans à venir est une mesure pratique et pertinente que ma délégation appuie pleinement.

27. Ce problème n'est pas nouveau. Parmi les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements leur est applicable ou non, il en est qui prévoient des mesures telles qu'une association entre Etats ou l'intégration de deux Etats indépendants [résolution 1541 (XV), annexe]. L'association comme l'intégration doivent résulter d'un choix libre et c'est à ces mesures que se réfèrent les principes VI, VII, VIII et IX de ladite annexe.

28. Les solutions générales que je viens d'indiquer sont, certainement, utiles et ont été appliquées avec succès à plusieurs reprises. Mais ne pourraient-elles pas être complétées par d'autres éléments, nés au cours de ces dernières années de la décolonisation?

29. Chaque cas doit être examiné en lui-même. Je suppose que personne ici ne croit qu'il existe une recette convenant à tous les petits Etats à venir ni n'oserait proposer une fédération disparate de tous ces Etats.

30. La délégation chilienne estime qu'il convient de charger le Comité spécial d'étudier les moyens d'appliquer la résolution 1514 (XV) aux territoires coloniaux de faible superficie et de population limitée afin que l'Organisation des Nations Unies puisse leur prêter aide et assistance pour que leur indépendance politique et économique devienne viable. Des recommandations concrètes sur cette étude devraient être présentées à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-neuvième session.

31. Au cours des délibérations du Comité spécial en 1963, deux cas se sont présentés de nouveaux pays désireux de s'unir ou de former une confédération à leur avantage mutuel. L'un de ces deux cas porte sur la création possible d'une fédération de l'Afrique orientale comprenant le Tanganyika, l'Ouganda et le Kenya, une fois que le Kenya aura accédé à l'indépendance, fixée au 12 décembre 1963. Cette décision de former une fédération a été applaudie au sein du Comité spécial où on l'a considérée comme une nouvelle preuve du profond désir des Africains de travailler à la réunification et au développement de l'Afrique. Il est important de noter qu'aucun de ces trois pays ne pense que cette fédération pourrait mettre en danger l'exercice de leur souveraineté et de leur indépendance. Au contraire, les trois Etats essaient d'harmoniser et de conjuguer deux principes importants de l'époque contemporaine: l'indépendance et l'intégration.

32. A propos de cette fédération, le représentant du Chili au Comité spécial a déclaré ce qui suit:

"... (elle) résulterait du libre vœu des peuples intéressés, elle correspondrait à une réalité géographique et historique et elle donnerait aux trois territoires la possibilité de renforcer leur infrastructure et leur économie et, partant, d'élever le niveau de vie et la dignité des habitants" [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. VIII, par. 159].

La délégation chilienne se fait un devoir de féliciter de nouveau le Tanganyika, l'Ouganda et le Kenya pour l'initiative qu'ils ont prise.

33. Un autre cas significatif cité dans le rapport est l'association future entre la Gambie et le Sénégal actuellement à l'étude. Les raisons données par les deux gouvernements méritent considération. Dans un communiqué conjoint en date du 26 octobre 1962, les Gouvernements gambien et sénégalais ont affirmé que, par cette association, "... ils espèrent contribuer à la stabilité, au développement et à la prospérité de leurs deux pays et à la cause de l'unité africaine" [ibid., chap. XI, par. 33].

34. Un communiqué de la Gambie daté du même jour va même plus loin dans son évaluation des avantages de l'association prévue:

"L'indépendance doit fournir un moyen efficace de donner au peuple gambien plus de prospérité et de bien-être, mais, pour des raisons d'ordre économique, la Gambie pourrait avoir de la difficulté à atteindre cet objectif isolément comme Etat indépendant et souverain." [ibid., par. 34.]

Et je souligne le mot "isolément".

35. Afin de réaliser ces objectifs si souhaitables, la Gambie a demandé et obtenu du Secrétaire général des Nations Unies qu'il envoie une équipe d'experts en questions constitutionnelles, économiques et financières pour aider son gouvernement à décider de la forme à donner à ses relations futures avec le Sénégal. Il va de soi que ces études ne doivent pas servir de prétexte pour retarder la date de l'indépendance absolue de la Gambie, comme on l'a prétendu. Les conversations sur l'association pourront se poursuivre efficacement après la date de l'indépendance.

36. Il convient d'insister sur le fait que, quelle que soit la décision prise en vue de renforcer la viabilité de l'indépendance, cette décision doit être volontaire, c'est-à-dire qu'elle doit être prise par le nouvel Etat exerçant pleinement sa souveraineté et son indépendance. L'Organisation des Nations Unies pourrait commencer à entreprendre les études prévues et à donner les conseils nécessaires avant même que les droits susmentionnés soient pleinement exercés.

37. Si dans le cas du Tanganyika, de l'Ouganda et du Kenya, du Sénégal et de la Gambie, pays qui représentant bien des milliers de kilomètres carrés de territoire et plusieurs millions d'habitants, on a estimé utile d'étudier et d'adopter des solutions destinées à garantir l'union et une étroite collaboration économique et politique, cette idée est à plus forte raison opportune en ce qui concerne les cas à venir de territoires de superficie limitée et de faible population.

38. Encourager l'indépendance des colonies et se désintéresser aussitôt après de l'avenir de ces populations est une solution aussi facile qu'irréfléchie. L'enthousiasme que provoque la naissance d'Etats nouveaux ne peut nous faire oublier la mission sacrée de décolonisation de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, mission qui ne s'achève pas avec les dernières réjouissances du premier jour de l'indépendance.

39. De toutes les missions de cet organisme international, aucun n'est plus respectable et plus lourde de sens que celle qui a pour but de libérer les peuples. Faisons en sorte que l'indépendance soit authentique et satisfasse pleinement à l'un des désirs les plus nobles du cœur humain: la liberté, non pas la liberté dans la pauvreté et l'incertitude, dans un monde de super-Etats toujours plein de dangers pour les petits territoires, mais la vraie liberté et la vraie indépendance qui s'affirment dans le progrès, dans l'amélioration du niveau de vie et dans la dignité de l'être humain.

40. La délégation du Chili espère que l'Assemblée générale adoptera, au cours de cette dix-huitième session, des mesures pratiques de nature à faciliter l'indépendance et à assurer la viabilité des petits territoires coloniaux.

41. M. COOMARASWAMY (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation prend la parole aujourd'hui pour faire une déclaration sur une question qui représente, peut-être, la réalisation la plus importante des Nations Unies depuis dix-huit ans qu'elles existent: la libération des peuples du colonialisme.

42. Au début du XX^{ème} siècle, les notions jumelles de colonialisme et de supériorité raciale étaient à leur zénith. Des impérialistes notoires pensaient que les blancs avaient une mission civilisatrice à remplir à l'égard des populations noires, jaunes et brunes d'Asie, d'Afrique et autres continents sous-développés. Ils assimilaient à un droit divin le droit des blancs à dominer les autres races et jugeaient que ces dernières devaient s'estimer trop heureuses d'avoir des maîtres doués d'une telle supériorité. Les blancs étaient "civilisés", les autres ne l'étaient pas.

43. Il y a même encore aujourd'hui des nations qui estiment qu'elles ont une mission civilisatrice à remplir en des lieux comme l'Afrique et qui prétendent qu'il est de l'intérêt des peuples de ces régions de continuer à subir la loi de leurs maîtres blancs. L'exemple le plus frappant est, assurément, celui du Portugal. Mais il y a d'autres puissances qui ont des idées du même genre, encore qu'à un moindre degré, au sujet de certains territoires.

44. En dépit de ces déviations monstrueuses par rapport à la ligne générale de la pensée moderne sur cette question, la roue de l'histoire, depuis le début du siècle, a tourné inexorablement dans le sens opposé. Le Pacte de la Société des Nations et la Charte des Nations Unies ont tous deux souligné le droit de tous les peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et ont cherché à briser le joug odieux du colonialisme et à mettre un terme à la servitude et aux souffrances que ce concept a toujours impliqué pour l'homme.

45. A ce propos, ma délégation tient à souligner que la "civilisation" n'est pas le propre de certaines nations, bien que l'article 38 du Statut de la Cour internationale de Justice mentionne les "nations civilisées". La notion de "civilisation" est toute relative et se conçoit différemment selon les normes auxquelles on se réfère et les comportements admis par les divers peuples. Un pays comme le mien, dont la civilisation est vieille de près de 2 500 ans et qui peut s'enorgueillir de sculptures antiques et d'ouvrages d'irrigation anciens qui se comparent favorablement aux réalisations modernes, a certes le droit de mettre en doute l'exactitude de cette distinction désobligeante.

46. Sans doute certaines puissances ont possédé des colonies dès le XVI^{ème} siècle, mais ce n'est qu'aux environs du siècle dernier que le colonialisme a pris une nouvelle importance économique et stratégique du fait de la révolution industrielle, qui a amené l'industrie de type moderne et le capitalisme financier à s'élancer vers des horizons nouveaux pour chercher des matières premières, des débouchés pour les produits finis et la possibilité de faire des investissements. La "ruée sur l'Afrique" et l'extension de tentacules coloniales sur de vastes et fécondes régions d'Afrique, d'Asie, du Pacifique et d'Amérique centrale ont été les conséquences logiques, sinon souhaitables, du jeu de toutes ces forces industrielles, capitalistes et impérialistes. Le colonialisme contemporain est un produit de la civilisation occidentale à l'époque du capitalisme privé, de l'individualisme bourgeois, de l'économie non planifiée, de la démocratie parlementaire et des menées démagogiques. Il a résulté du jeu subtil de plusieurs mobiles.

47. Mais, pour dissimuler leurs véritables raisons de vouloir des colonies, certaines puissances coloniales ont proclamé que leur "principal objectif" était de répandre la civilisation occidentale. C'est assurément une ironie de l'histoire que certains des pays qu'elles se mettaient en devoir de "civiliser" de cette façon aient été des pays qui pouvaient s'enorgueillir de cultures anciennes et de fières civilisations qui existaient plusieurs milliers d'années avant ces nouvelles civilisations qui n'en étaient même pas au stade barbare de leur évolution à l'époque où ces anciennes civilisations avaient atteint un niveau élevé de progrès, bien que, par la suite, certaines d'entre elles aient subi un déclin.

48. Dans certains de ces pays, les puissances colonisatrices ont délibérément retardé la pendule du progrès de façon à conserver le plus longtemps possible ces domaines fertiles d'exploitation internationale. Un des arguments qui ont été invoqués pour justifier le maintien du joug colonial dans certains pays est l'idée que les peuples de ces territoires seraient incapables de se gouverner eux-mêmes et qu'ils auraient, par conséquent, tout intérêt à être sous la coupe de "nations avancées". Mais cet argument ne fait que mettre en valeur le principe d'une mission sacrée et justifie la perte pour la puissance coloniale de tout droit à se maintenir au pouvoir lorsqu'elle manque aux devoirs qu'elle a de rendre un tel peuple capable de se gouverner lui-même et de faire passer avant toute autre considération les intérêts des habitants du territoire. Cela donne aussi le droit à l'Organisation mondiale d'enlever à ces puissances l'administration de ces territoires pour s'en charger elle-même. L'Assemblée générale, dans sa résolution 1514 (XV), a déclaré que de tels arguments ne devaient pas être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance.

49. Le principe de la mission sacrée a d'abord été énoncé en termes généraux pour justifier l'assujettissement de peuples, généralement de peuples de couleur, à des nations blanches étrangères. Pour tenter de justifier moralement cet état de choses monstrueux — où l'on voit des millions d'individus privés de leur droit inaliénable à se gouverner eux-mêmes sans avoir jamais volontairement renoncé à ce droit — on a affirmé que les puissances dominantes étaient tenues, du fait de leur mission sacrée, de gouverner les peuples arriérés, incapables de se gouverner eux-mêmes, dans l'intérêt même desdits peuples. En d'autres termes, les puissances dominantes sauvaient ces peuples d'eux-mêmes.

50. Selon cette thèse, cependant, il fallait que la prospérité des habitants du territoire l'emporte sur toute autre considération, et la mise en coupe réglée des territoires était une violation du principe de la mission sacrée. Combien y a-t-il de puissances administrantes qui puissent seulement prétendre qu'elles ont rempli cette mission avant la fondation de l'Organisation des Nations Unies? Combien n'y en a-t-il pas qui ont continué à exploiter les populations des territoires non autonomes uniquement ou principalement dans leur propre intérêt et ont négligé, d'une manière générale, l'intérêt des populations de ces territoires, même depuis que les Nations Unies existent? N'y en a-t-il pas qui exercent une pression économique, dans leur propre intérêt, sur certaines de leurs anciennes colonies, qui ont accédé à l'indépendance politique mais non à l'indépendance économique, et qui parviennent ainsi à leurs propres fins politiques et économiques dans ces territoires? Nous pouvons voir ces pressions s'exercer jusque dans les couloirs de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

51. L'Article 73 de la Charte indique clairement, désormais, que l'administration de ces territoires par une puissance étrangère ne peut avoir qu'un caractère provisoire et que l'objectif ultime est de permettre auxdits territoires de s'administrer eux-mêmes. Cet Article souligne aussi que chacune des puissances administrantes doit rendre des comptes à la communauté internationale. A l'heure actuelle, le principe de la mission sacrée implique l'ultime transmission de tous les pouvoirs aux habitants de tous les territoires non autonomes, et je ne saurais trop souligner le mot "tous". Au cours des années 40, les Etats-Unis, sous la présidence de Franklin D. Roosevelt, ont fortement ressenti la nécessité de mettre un terme au colonialisme. Pour le président Roosevelt, le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes faisait partie intégrante de la Charte de l'Atlantique. Il a vu "une véritable houle monter vers l'indépendance" et il a préconisé "une sorte de tutelle internationale" jusqu'à ce que ces territoires soient prêts pour l'indépendance dans un avenir prévisible.

52. Bon nombre de ces territoires se heurtent, en outre, au problème que pose l'existence de minorités non indigènes, lesquelles exercent souvent le pouvoir en raison de leurs liens étroits avec la puissance métropolitaine. Ces minorités ont généralement une meilleure situation économique, sociale et politique que les habitants autochtones. La Rhodésie du Sud et les territoires portugais de l'Angola et du Mozambique en sont des exemples classiques. La loi et la pratique reconnaissent aux personnes qui appartiennent à ces minorités un domicile local et un nom.

53. En 1946, dans la résolution 66 (I), 74 territoires étaient énumérés comme territoires non autonomes par huit Etats Membres qui les administraient. Quarante-trois territoires étaient énumérés par le Royaume-Uni et 16 par la France. Ces 74 territoires avaient une population globale de 215 millions d'habitants. A cette époque, il n'y avait en Afrique que quatre Etats indépendants alors qu'on y comptait 25 territoires non autonomes. A l'heure actuelle, il n'y a guère que 40 de ces 74 territoires qui ne soient pas encore indépendants, et leur population totale est de 50 millions; en outre, l'Organisation des Nations Unies compte aujourd'hui parmi ses Membres 32 Etats africains indépendants. Cela suffit à prouver l'ampleur de la réussite des Nations Unies dans ce domaine.

54. L'année 1960 a été une année de grandes réalisations pour notre organisation. C'est cette année-là que l'Assemblée, sur la proposition de M. Nikita Khrouchtchev, Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, a adopté, le 23 septembre 1960, la résolution 1514 (XV) qui contient la célèbre Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Comme l'a dit notre Secrétaire général, l'adoption de cette Déclaration est considérée comme marquant un tournant décisif dans les efforts que déploie l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour réaliser les principes et buts nobles de la Charte.

55. Le soin d'appliquer cette Déclaration a été confié à un Comité spécial de dix-sept membres par la résolution 1654 (XVI) et le nombre des membres de ce comité a été porté à vingt-quatre par la résolution 1810 (XVII).

56. Le Comité spécial, dans l'annexe I à son rapport, a énuméré 64 territoires auxquels la Déclaration s'applique. Cette liste sera complétée l'an prochain. Le Comité spécial a déjà étudié le cas de 26 de ces territoires qui couvrent une superficie de 2,4 millions de milles carrés approximativement et ont une population totale de 37 millions d'habitants environ. Les autres territoires ne couvrent qu'une superficie de 200 000 milles carrés environ et leur population ne dépasse guère huit millions d'habitants. Le Comité spécial a droit à toute notre gratitude pour la manière diligente dont il s'est acquitté des tâches que lui avait confiées l'Assemblée générale. Il convient de souligner ici ce que le Comité spécial a fait observer, à savoir que c'est en Afrique que le plus grand nombre de gens vivent encore sous des régimes coloniaux, en Afrique que l'on trouve encore les plus vastes territoires coloniaux et que l'on se heurte à certains des problèmes coloniaux les plus difficiles à résoudre. La raison de ce phénomène est la volonté de certaines nations puissantes de continuer leur exploitation économique de ce malheureux continent.

57. Mais les forces organisées du nationalisme africain et asiatique ont exercé une influence considérable sur l'Organisation des Nations Unies en ce qui concerne l'application des déclarations incluses dans l'Article 73 de la Charte et dans la résolution 1514 (XV). Avant la dernière guerre, la culture occidentale et l'influence politique de l'Occident jouaient un rôle très important dans les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Mais avec l'apparition, peu de temps après la guerre, de nouvelles nations indépendantes, comme l'Inde, l'Indonésie, le Pakistan, la Birmanie, Ceylan, et l'apparition d'influences nouvelles, comme en Egypte, il y a eu un réveil des peuples assujettis et l'appel à l'indépendance s'est fait entendre dans ces deux grands continents.

58. Cette résurrection du nationalisme a été due à de nombreux facteurs parmi lesquels on peut citer, tout d'abord, l'accession à l'indépendance de certaines des nations les plus importantes; en second lieu, la contribution à l'effort de guerre qui avait été réclamée aux peuples des territoires dépendants et pour laquelle ils demandaient alors la récompense qui leur était due; troisièmement, le caractère inévitable, dans le contexte de la fierté nationale et du sentiment national, de la révolte contre le colonialisme, et enfin le fait que les peuples coloniaux exigeaient, à juste titre, une part plus grande des commodités de l'existence, surtout lorsque celles-ci étaient le produit de l'exploitation de ressources naturelles qui se trouvaient dans les territoires coloniaux et étaient mises en valeur principalement dans l'intérêt des maîtres coloniaux.

59. La Charte des Nations Unies a été signée par 50 Etats dont 12 étaient des Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique. Depuis lors, jusqu'à l'ouverture de la présente session, 61 autres Etats sont devenus Membres de l'Organisation, dont 44 sont des Etats africains et asiatiques. Les Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie soutiendront leurs frères qui vivent sous la domination coloniale en Afrique, en Asie et dans d'autres parties du monde pour toutes les questions relatives à leur progrès économique, social et politique et à leur accession à l'indépendance. Nous sommes reconnaissants au bloc socialiste et au groupe des Etats latino-américains du concours précieux qu'ils nous apportent dans ce domaine. Les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie considèrent l'Ouest avec suspicion non seulement parce que leurs peuples ont su, il n'y a pas si longtemps, ce que c'était qu'être colonisés, mais aussi à cause des luttes héroïques qu'ils ont dû engager pour accéder à l'indépendance. La vaine résistance opposée par les puissances coloniales aux justes aspirations de ces peuples ne peut qu'engendrer chez ces derniers l'amertume et le mépris pour leurs anciens maîtres et les détourner, quel que soit leur désir de ne pas s'engager, de toute sympathie pour les puissances occidentales.

60. La délégation ceylanaise n'hésitera jamais à apporter son concours chaleureux et spontané aux peuples de tous les territoires non autonomes dans leur lutte pour acquérir le droit de se gouverner eux-mêmes. Ma délégation sait bien qu'il reste beaucoup de peuples à libérer de maux du colonialisme. Comme l'a dit, le 27 septembre 1961, M. Felix Dias-Bandaranaike, secrétaire du Parlement ceylanais:

"On nous a souvent expliqué, ces temps derniers, que le colonialisme aurait cessé d'être un vrai problème du fait qu'un nombre croissant de territoires dépendants parviennent au stade de l'indépendance.

"... Pourtant, l'idée que le colonialisme n'est plus un vrai problème parce que le pourcentage des gens qui vivent sous le régime colonialiste ne cesse de diminuer est tout simplement fausse... En fait, le colonialisme a le don de prendre des formes et des aspects nouveaux pour s'adapter à l'évolution de la situation." [1017ème séance, par. 175 et 176.]

61. Une grande majorité des territoires dont il est question dans le rapport du Comité spécial sont administrés par le Royaume-Uni. Ma délégation n'approuve certes pas les mesures prises par le Royaume-Uni dans certains de ces territoires en vue de mettre fin rapidement à l'administration coloniale et de permettre auxdits territoires de se gouverner eux-mêmes, mais elle tient cependant à rendre hommage au Royaume-Uni, qui a accordé l'indépendance à Ceylan sans qu'un seul coup de feu soit tiré, pour son attitude éclairée, d'une manière générale, à l'égard du colonialisme. En s'inclinant de bonne grâce, au cours des 20 dernières années, devant les revendications d'indépendance, le Royaume-Uni a réussi à maintenir ses anciennes colonies dans le Commonwealth. Dans la lettre du Royaume-Uni, en date du 10 septembre 1963, qui figure à l'annexe II du rapport [A/5446/Rev.1], nous relevons que des dates ont été fixées, dans les prochains mois, pour l'accession à l'indépendance de certains territoires, comme le Kenya, Zanzibar, Singapour et Malte.

62. Ma délégation regrette donc de constater en lisant le rapport du Comité spécial que la politique du Royaume-Uni à l'égard de certains des territoires dont il est question dans ce rapport comporte certains aspects fort peu satisfaisants.

63. Pour ma délégation, ce qu'il y a de moins satisfaisant dans le rapport, c'est la position prise par le Royaume-Uni en ce qui concerne la proposition du Comité spécial d'envoyer des missions de visite en Guyane britannique et à Aden. Dans l'un et l'autre cas, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a refusé de prêter son concours au Comité et s'est opposé à l'envoi de ces missions de visite, de sorte que les membres du sous-comité ont dû se contenter de se rendre dans des territoires voisins d'Aden et d'entendre à New York les deux principaux dirigeants politiques de la Guyane britannique.

64. D'après le rapport [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. X], le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré, à propos de l'envoi éventuel d'une mission de visite en Guyane britannique, que son gouvernement ne pouvait partager ses responsabilités avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies et ne pouvait donc autoriser cette visite, et que le Premier Ministre de Guyane britannique, M. Cheddi Jagan, n'avait pas le pouvoir d'autoriser une telle visite. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a ajouté que l'envoi de telles missions de visite équivaldrait à une ingérence administrative.

65. De l'avis de ma délégation, adopter une telle attitude, ce n'est pas seulement faire un pas en arrière, c'est aussi marquer pour l'autorité de l'Assemblée générale un mépris qui n'est plus de mise, étant donné l'évolution de la situation, quand bien même il aurait pu être admis il y a dix ans. Dès 1950, le Gouvernement danois a autorisé une mission de visite à se rendre au Groënland. En 1954, dans sa résolution 850 (IX), l'Assemblée générale a considéré que, afin d'apprécier aussi justement que possible l'opinion de la population d'un territoire non autonome au sujet du statut ou du changement de statut qu'elle désire, une mission devrait, avec l'accord de la puissance administrante, et si l'Assemblée générale le juge souhaitable, se rendre dans le territoire non autonome avant ou pendant la période où la population est invitée à se prononcer sur son statut futur ou sur les modifications futures de son statut. Par sa résolution 1654 (XVI), l'Assemblée générale a autorisé le Comité spécial à se réunir en tout autre lieu que le Siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, lorsque cela pourrait être nécessaire pour lui permettre de s'acquitter efficacement de ses fonctions, en consultation avec les autorités compétentes, et elle a invité les autorités intéressées à assurer au Comité leur coopération la plus complète dans l'accomplissement de ses tâches. L'Assemblée a repris cette invitation dans sa résolution 1810 (XVII).

66. Ma délégation estime que des arguments et positions de ce genre sont tout à fait erronés et déplacés au moment où les puissances coloniales font entendre partout leur chant du cygne. Ma délégation ne voit pas comment une visite tendant à s'assurer de l'opinion de la population quant à son avenir pourrait constituer une ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un Etat ou pourrait équivaloir à un partage des responsabilités. La responsabilité des Nations Unies aux termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte et de la résolution 1514 (XV) est bien distincte de celle de la puissance administrante. Une visite de ce genre est un des moyens les plus efficaces de permettre au Comité d'accomplir ses tâches, comme il le fait observer dans son rapport. M. Jagan a souligné qu'une telle visite aurait aidé le Comité et le sous-comité à se faire une idée plus claire de la situation.

67. Si le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a pris une mauvaise position en ce qui concerne la visite que le sous-comité proposait de faire en Guyane britannique, il a adopté une attitude pire encore lorsqu'une demande identique a été présentée au sujet d'Aden. Dans ce cas, le Comité spécial avait adopté, le 3 mai 1963, une résolution dans laquelle il décidait, notamment, d'envoyer dans ces territoires un sous-comité dont les membres seraient désignés par le président et dans laquelle il exprimait l'espoir que la puissance administrante prêterait tout son concours au sous-comité. C'était la première décision de ce genre prise par le Comité spécial. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a refusé de revenir sur sa position.

68. Mais il est même allé plus loin et il a commis un acte que ma délégation juge indigne d'une puissance qui est elle-même membre du Comité spécial, un acte qui témoignait du plus grand mépris pour le Comité spécial directement et l'Organisation des Nations Unies indirectement. Je veux parler de la lettre datée du 23 mai 1963 [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V, annexe II] par laquelle l'inspecteur des services d'immigration d'Aden a informé toutes les lignes aériennes et maritimes qu'aucun des cinq membres du sous-comité dont les noms figuraient dans la lettre ne serait autorisé à débarquer s'il arrivait dans l'Etat d'Aden. Ma délégation déplore, comme le sous-comité, qu'une telle mesure ait été prise par un Membre permanent, qui est aussi membre du Comité spécial, à l'encontre des membres d'un organisme officiel de l'ONU et de représentants d'Etats Membres, d'autant qu'une telle mesure équivalait à mettre en doute la bonne foi desdits Membres.

69. Des actes de ce genre peuvent ébranler la confiance que d'autres délégations peuvent avoir en la bonne foi du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et lui aliéner leur sympathie. Une telle répugnance de sa part à autoriser des missions de visite à se rendre dans ces territoires peut aussi justifier l'idée que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni souhaite dissimuler au reste du monde la réalité de la situation dans les territoires de la Guyane britannique et d'Aden, parce que cette réalité ne serait pas agréable ou conforme à ses propres objectifs. Ma délégation espère que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, à l'avenir tout au moins, ne persistera pas dans cette attitude déraisonnable, permettra au Comité spécial d'envoyer des missions de visite et leur prètera son concours.

70. Ma délégation voudrait, à ce stade, dire quelques mots des conclusions du Comité spécial concernant certains territoires. La Guyane britannique est un territoire qui a fait l'objet d'un rapport du sous-comité [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. X], approuvé par le Comité spécial. Les recommandations du sous-comité figurent dans les paragraphes 62 à 65 de l'appendice à son rapport. Le sous-comité reconnaît que ce territoire doit accéder à l'indépendance le plus tôt possible et qu'un groupe d'experts en matière constitutionnelle devrait être envoyé en Guyane britannique pour formuler des recommandations en vue de l'élaboration d'une constitution qui soit acceptable pour toutes les parties intéressées.

71. Ma délégation estime que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'est pas fondé à prétendre que l'octroi de l'indépendance peut être retardé jusqu'à ce que les deux principaux partis politiques aient réglé leurs divergences de vues en ce qui concerne les principes sur lesquels doit reposer la nouvelle constitution. Ce n'est pas là un préalable indispensable. Il semble que ce soit un expédient commode qui a été utilisé aussi dans mon pays pendant cinq ans environ avant que nous accédions à l'indépendance en dépit des divergences qui nous divisaient. Ma délégation ne peut non plus approuver l'idée que le Gouvernement britannique imposerait une solution au peuple de la Guyane britannique, comme l'a proposé M. Sandys le 6 novembre 1962. L'obstacle n'est pas infranchissable et il peut être surmonté si le Royaume-Uni accepte véritablement de coopérer avec le Comité spécial et l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans ce domaine.

72. On peut citer encore un autre point peu satisfaisant en ce qui concerne ce territoire. En 1953, le People's Progressive Party, dirigé par M. Jagan et M. Burnham, l'a emporté aux élections générales. Après cela, la Constitution de 1953 a été suspendue sous le contrôle de la force armée et la Commission Robertson^{1/} a précisé dans son rapport de 1954 que la suspension de la Constitution était justifiée et que le People's Progressive Party était dominé par les communistes. Il semble que l'épouvantail du communisme soit un autre prétexte commode. M. Jagan est maintenant Premier Ministre et M. Burnham, chef de l'opposition. M. Jagan a pris la parole, il y a quelques semaines, devant le groupe des Etats africains et asiatiques et nous a dit qu'on l'accusait une fois de plus de communisme. Il nous a dit qu'il n'était pas communiste. Ma délégation a l'impression que l'on qualifie de communistes des socialistes progressifs afin de retarder l'indépendance de leurs territoires. De toute façon, c'est aux peuples des divers territoires et non à la puissance administrante ou à toute autre puissance étrangère qu'il appartient de décider si un pays doit avoir un gouvernement communiste, socialiste ou conservateur.

73. M. Jagan a fait observer que la puissance administrante avant eu recours à tous les moyens et à tous les procédés pour détruire le mouvement d'indépendance en Guyane britannique et qu'elle avait invoqué les divisions qu'elle avait elle-même suscitées comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance. Ma délégation regrette de découvrir que la politique qui consiste à "diviser pour régner" n'est pas encore reléguée dans le passé; elle espère qu'elle le sera très bientôt. La délégation ceylanaise partage l'opinion du sous-comité, qui estime que l'Organisation des Nations Unies devrait faire tout son possible pour aider les dirigeants de la Guyane britannique à créer un climat d'harmonie et d'unité dans lequel le territoire pourrait accéder rapidement à l'indépendance.

74. Je voudrais maintenant parler du territoire d'Aden. Le Comité spécial a adopté une résolution le 3 mai 1963. Cette résolution n'a pas été appliquée du fait que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni ne s'est pas prêté à son application. Le Sous-Comité pour Aden a estimé que l'Organisation des Nations

Unies devait intervenir de toute urgence et que la population devait être consultée avant l'octroi de l'indépendance sur une base beaucoup plus large que par le passé et avec toutes les garanties nécessaires. Les recommandations du sous-comité qui figurent au paragraphe 176 de son rapport sont précises, nettes et propres à être mises en œuvre. La résolution adoptée par le Comité spécial le 19 juillet 1963 au paragraphe 478 du rapport [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V] devrait être adoptée par l'Assemblée générale en son nom propre, avec les modifications nécessaires, et le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni devrait être invité à appliquer cette résolution, qui est éminemment juste et raisonnable et demande que la population d'Aden soit consultée par la voie du suffrage universel des adultes.

75. Ma délégation a étudié avec soin la position du représentant du Royaume-Uni au Comité, telle qu'elle est exposée dans les paragraphes 162 à 179 du chapitre V du rapport. Il ressort clairement de cette déclaration que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a reconnu le droit des populations d'Aden à l'indépendance mais a allégué la désunion qui règne dans le territoire ainsi que d'autres difficultés comme prétextes pour retarder le moment où ces populations disposeront d'elles-mêmes. Ma délégation estime donc que le meilleur moyen pour la puissance administrante, qui semble, en l'occurrence, être une partie intéressée, de surmonter ces difficultés serait de solliciter l'appui et le concours de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, au lieu d'entraver les travaux des comités spéciaux de l'Organisation en leur refusant son concours et en prenant même des mesures qui équivalent à faire fi de l'autorité de l'Organisation, ainsi qu'en témoigne la lettre adressée aux compagnies aériennes et maritimes que j'ai mentionnée tout à l'heure.

76. Le Comité spécial a aussi adopté des résolutions au sujet de Malte, des îles Fidji, de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Nyassaland, du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland, et de la Gambie. Ma délégation appuiera sans réserve tout projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée générale sera saisie au sujet de ces territoires et elle espère que les puissances administrantes appliqueront les résolutions du Comité spécial et de l'Assemblée générale. Ma délégation tient à appeler tout spécialement l'attention sur le paragraphe 2 du dispositif de la résolution du Comité spécial sur le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. IX, par. 113], aux termes duquel la puissance administrante est priée à nouveau de prendre immédiatement des mesures pour restituer aux autochtones les terres qui leur ont été enlevées, sous quelque forme ou sous quelque prétexte qu'ait eu lieu cette aliénation. Ce paragraphe reprend le texte du paragraphe 5 du dispositif de la résolution que le Comité spécial a adoptée l'an dernier. Tout cela rappelle à ma délégation la manière dont, au cours du siècle dernier, les paysans pauvres des régions montagneuses et d'autres régions de mon pays se sont vu enlever leurs terres, en vertu des dispositions iniques d'une loi intitulée la Waste Lands Ordinance, sans recevoir aucune indemnité, et la manière dont ces terres ont été attribuées à des sociétés et à des particuliers britanniques pour en faire des plantations de thé et de caoutchouc. C'est nous maintenant qui, selon la loi des "nations civilisées", devons indemniser les sociétés étrangères et individus étrangers pour ces mêmes terres et d'autres biens. C'est cette même loi des nations civilisées qui a privé nos paysans de leurs terres, il y a environ cent ans.

^{1/} Commission constitutionnelle de la Guyane britannique.

77. Il y a une autre question de quelque importance dont ma délégation voudrait parler maintenant. Il suffit de consulter l'annexe I du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1] pour constater qu'il y a, dans la liste préliminaire des territoires auxquels s'applique la Déclaration faisant l'objet de la résolution 1514 (XV), un certain nombre de territoires qui, du fait de leur petite superficie ou de leur faible population ou pour ces deux raisons à la fois, pourraient être incapables de subsister seuls s'ils accèdent à l'indépendance ou à l'autonomie par le jeu normal des dispositions de l'Article 73 et de la résolution 1514 (XV). Ma délégation suggère donc que, dans tout projet de résolution qui pourrait être présenté sur cette question, le Comité spécial soit invité à étudier tout particulièrement l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale et des résolutions qui en ont découlé aux petits territoires coloniaux à population clairsemée, à étudier aussi la question de l'assistance que l'Organisation des Nations Unies pourrait leur fournir, afin que leur indépendance puisse être réelle politiquement et économiquement, et à présenter à l'Assemblée générale, à sa prochaine session, des recommandations concrètes sur cette étude. Ma délégation craint que ces territoires, si l'on ne procède pas ainsi, ne se heurtent à de graves difficultés politiques et économiques après leur accession à l'indépendance ou à l'autonomie. Ma délégation appuie à cet égard la suggestion faite aujourd'hui par la délégation chilienne.

78. J'en ai terminé avec les observations que ma délégation désirait présenter sur le rapport du Comité spécial. Nous suggérons aussi que, pour éviter tout double emploi, toutes les tâches qui étaient précédemment accomplies par d'autres organismes, tels que le Comité des renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes, soient confiées au Comité spécial, qui peut devenir le seul comité chargé d'assurer l'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte et de la résolution 1514 (XV). Telle est la suggestion que le Secrétaire général a faite dans l'introduction à son rapport annuel sur l'activité de l'Organisation, présenté à l'Assemblée générale à sa dix-septième session^{2/}.

79. L'abolition rapide et totale du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes, en dépit d'arguments de forme périmés fondés sur la compétence qu'invoquent certaines puissances coloniales, non seulement éliminerait un des principaux obstacles au maintien de la paix mais contribuerait aussi à inscrire dans la réalité les principes concernant l'égalité et le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes qui sont consacrés par la Charte. Il n'y a pas de doute que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, depuis dix-huit ans qu'elle existe, a donné confiance et espoir aux peuples dépendants qui luttent pour leur libre détermination.

Mais il reste encore beaucoup à faire, car tous les peuples doivent être libres et il ne doit plus y avoir que des peuples libres politiquement et économiquement, avant que notre tâche soit terminée. Comme l'a écrit Clarence Day dans This Simian World^{3/}, "Nos télescopes nous révéleront peut-être un jour les collines d'Arcturus, mais à quoi cela nous servira-t-il si nous ne pouvons découvrir l'âme du monde?" Comment pouvons-nous découvrir l'âme du monde, quand des puissances administrantes continuent, en dépit du paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1810 (XVII), à intervenir par la force armée et à prendre des mesures répressives contre des peuples qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, notamment contre les activités politiques de leurs dirigeants légitimes?

80. Je conclurai en citant une déclaration du président Kennedy, faite devant cette assemblée, le 20 septembre 1963:

"L'Organisation des Nations Unies ne peut survivre si elle reste statique. Ses obligations augmentent en même temps qu'elle prend plus d'ampleur. La Charte doit être modifiée, et la pratique des Nations Unies aussi. Les auteurs de la Charte n'ont pas voulu en faire quelque chose d'éternellement figé. La science des armes et de la guerre fait que nous sommes aujourd'hui, bien plus qu'il y a 18 ans à San Francisco, un même monde et une même race humaine, dont la destinée est commune." [1209ème séance, par. 74.]

81. Ce sont des pensées comme celles-là qui faisaient du président Kennedy un homme d'Etat de si grande valeur et d'une telle envergure et qui nous font maintenant ressentir sa mort tragique comme une perte pour tous les peuples du monde, sans distinction de race, de couleur ou de croyance, et pour la paix internationale. Les corps des hommes périssent et pourrissent, mais leur souvenir demeure vivant et continue à nous inspirer. Espérons que ses successeurs demeureront fidèles à ses idéaux nobles et élevés, dans l'intérêt du monde en général et des territoires coloniaux en particulier, puisque les Etats-Unis, de l'avis de ma délégation, ont le pouvoir et le devoir d'exercer une influence sur celles des puissances coloniales qui persistent dans l'intransigeance. Nous ne pouvons pas attendre moins d'un pays qui a produit d'aussi grands hommes qu'Abraham Lincoln et John F. Kennedy.

82. M. AZIMOV (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Trois années se sont écoulées depuis qu'ici même, dans la salle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, a été adoptée la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Nous sommes fiers que ce document historique ait été adopté sur l'initiative du Gouvernement soviétique et de son chef, N. S. Khrouchtchev^{4/}.

83. Les idées de la grande Révolution d'octobre sont des idées de paix, de bonheur, de fraternité et d'égalité sur toute la terre. Le peuple de l'Union soviétique, par sa lutte héroïque, son labeur désintéressé en vue de l'édification d'une société socialiste humaniste apporte sa contribution active à la suppression définitive de la surface de la terre du mal, de l'oppression, de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme. Les buts du pays de la Révolution d'octobre, la politique et l'idéologie de l'Etat soviétique sont radicalement inconciliables avec le colonialisme, la tyrannie, l'oppression des peuples.

84. L'Union soviétique, fidèle à cette politique de paix et au soutien de la lutte des peuples opprimés pour l'indépendance nationale proclamés par le grand fondateur de l'Etat soviétique, V. I. Lénine, est toujours intervenue et continuera à le faire pour défendre la juste cause de la libération des peuples des colonies de la domination étrangère, en faveur de l'élimination totale du système colonial, en faveur de la liberté absolue et de l'indépendance de tous les peuples.

85. L'immense majorité des Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies a accueilli avec satisfaction et approuvé la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Seul un petit groupe de puissances coloniales s'est abstenu lors du vote sur cette déclaration. C'est là une grande victoire pour les pays et les peuples épris de paix et de liberté, et qui revêt une importance particulière pour les continents où le honteux système colonial subsiste encore dans maintes régions.

86. En adoptant cette Déclaration, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a reconnu comme légale et juste la lutte des peuples soumis à l'esclavage en faveur de l'indépendance et comme illégales et criminelles les actions visant à écraser ce mouvement. La Déclaration est apparue comme une source importante d'appui moral à la lutte des peuples coloniaux de la part de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et a déjà produit ses fruits. Elle a inspiré des forces nouvelles pour la lutte de libération des peuples et a créé de nouvelles conditions favorables pour leur victoire.

87. Cependant, tous les peuples ne sont pas encore libérés de l'esclavage colonial. Des territoires comptant au total 50 millions d'âmes sont encore sous le joug des colonialistes. Les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée portugaise et d'autres territoires du continent africain gémissent sous le joug portugais. Les peuples des colonies espagnoles partagent encore le sort de leurs frères angolais. Plusieurs pays d'Asie subissent la domination de l'Angleterre, du Portugal, de l'Australie, soit directement, soit en tant que protectorats ou territoires sous tutelle. Les peuples de ces territoires mènent un combat héroïque pour la liberté et l'indépendance. Le Kenya, Zanzibar, le Nyassaland, la Rhodésie du Sud, Malte se trouvent au seuil de l'indépendance. Les peuples des colonies espagnoles luttent contre l'arbitraire policier et la terreur fasciste. Le peuple de Rhodésie du Sud mène une lutte acharnée pour sa libération. Les peuples du Bassoutoland, du Souaziland, du Betchouanaland se soulèvent. Les peuples de la Guyane britannique, d'Oman, d'Aden et d'autres colonies anglaises réclament la liberté et l'indépendance. Voilà plusieurs années déjà que le peuple du Viet-Nam défend son droit à une vie paisible et à un développement indépendant.

88. Le colonialisme ne dépose pas les armes. Il contre-attaque, regroupe ses forces, tente de se renforcer dans des zones déterminées et, si possible, de passer à la contre-attaque dans tel ou tel secteur du front de la lutte anticoloniale. Le sud de l'Afrique est l'un de ces secteurs. Et c'est précisément dans cette lumière qu'il convient d'examiner la nature internationale et politique des événements au Congo et au sud de ce pays. Ces événements reflètent l'intention de tout le bloc colonialiste de créer un barrage défensif aux points d'accès les plus proches des colonies au sud de l'Afrique, d'établir une sorte de "cordon sanitaire" et d'opposer la force des colonialistes à la volonté des Etats épris de paix.

89. Le sol brûle sous les pieds des colonisateurs portugais. Les colonialistes portent le fer et le feu dans les régions gagnées par le mouvement patriotique. Ils ne reculent pas devant les méthodes de répression les plus barbares. Dans leur fureur, les membres des expéditions punitives fusillent les femmes, les vieillards et les enfants, détruisent les récoltes et le bétail, brûlent les villages.

90. Les peuples des colonies continuent comme auparavant à vivre privés de leurs droits politiques et sociaux. Le travail forcé et l'esclavage existent jusqu'à maintenant dans les colonies portugaises et espagnoles. La population africaine en Afrique du Sud, dans le Sud-Ouest africain et en Rhodésie du Sud est soumise à des avaries inhumaines et à la discrimination raciale.

91. Comment peut-il se faire qu'à notre époque, à l'ère de l'énergie atomique et de la conquête de l'espace, des crimes aussi monstrueux soient encore perpétrés sur la terre? Il ne peut y avoir à cela qu'une réponse: la cause en est l'avidité et la cupidité d'une poignée infime mais puissante d'exploiteurs, leur soif de gain, leur volonté d'obtenir les profits les plus grands possibles.

92. La délégation de l'Union soviétique, à la Quatrième Commission, a déjà fourni des données sur la façon d'opérer des monopoles en Afrique.

93. D'après le journal londonien Financial Times, le bénéfice que retirent 21 sociétés pétrolières anglaises de leurs investissements à l'étranger s'élève à 438 millions de livres sterling, ce qui dépasse le bénéfice global de 456 firmes anglaises auxquelles appartiennent les entreprises de construction mécanique, les chantiers navals et la métallurgie en Angleterre même.

94. Le gigantesque consortium anglo-hollandais Unilever a été pendant des dizaines d'années un des monopolisateurs du commerce avec l'Afrique occidentale. Le salaire payé dans les entreprises et les concessions de sa filiale, l'United Africa Company est de 6 à 19 shillings par semaine tandis que le bénéfice prélevé dans le même temps sur chaque travailleur atteint en moyenne 4 livres sterling 6 shillings. D'après le témoignage de l'hebdomadaire français France-Observateur du 23 février 1963, la moyenne annuelle des bénéfices des compagnies étrangères opérant dans les colonies portugaises oscille entre 20 à 45 p. 100.

95. Les monopoles étrangers au Proche et au Moyen-Orient réalisent des bénéfices encore supérieurs.

Rien que par la vente du pétrole brut dans les ports d'expédition, les monopoles pétroliers américains, anglais, français et hollandais qui se sont emparés des concessions dans les pays du golfe Persique gagnent de 5 à 6 dollars par tonne, ce qui veut dire qu'ils font un bénéfice de 500 p. 100, car le prix du pétrole n'atteint pas un dollar. Au cours des 13 dernières années, de 1950 à 1962, l'extraction du pétrole, rien que dans les six principaux pays exportateurs de pétrole, l'Iran, l'Irak, le Koweït, l'Arabie Saoudite, Bahrein et Qatar, ont rapporté aux exploiters occidentaux environ 12 milliards de dollars de bénéfice net.

96. Comment ne pas se rappeler à ce sujet les paroles du grand fondateur du communisme, Karl Marx?

"Assurer un bénéfice de 10 p. 100 et le capital est prêt à toute entreprise; 20 p. 100, il s'enflamme; 50 p. 100, il est positivement prêt à se casser le cou à fond; pour 100 p. 100, il foule aux pieds toutes les lois humaines; pour 300 p. 100, il ne recule devant aucun crime, même si cela devait le conduire à la potence."

97. Les bénéfices qui affluent dans les coffres-forts américains, anglais, allemands, belges et autres ne proviennent pas seulement d'investissements.

98. L'impérialisme fait un large usage, dans son propre intérêt, du système qu'il a lui-même créé d'une division internationale inégale du travail dans le monde capitaliste. Les matières premières et les produits alimentaires représentent environ 80 p. 100 des exportations des Etats d'Afrique, du Proche-Orient et de l'Amérique latine. Les monopoles internationaux créent sur le marché mondial capitaliste des conditions de travail extrêmement défavorables pour les pays peu développés. Alors que les prix des produits manufacturés livrés aux pays en voie de développement et aux colonies par les pays capitalistes avancés ne cessent de s'élever, les prix des produits d'exportation de ces pays ne cessent de baisser.

99. Par suite de cette politique, des richesses immenses sont soutirées de l'Afrique tout comme d'autres régions du monde. Des économistes ont calculé que les revenus que l'Angleterre et d'autres pays développés retirent de l'Afrique par suite de ce que l'on est convenu d'appeler les "ciseaux des prix" — les termes de l'échange — sont évalués entre 170 et 200 millions de livres sterling, ce qui représente le quart du revenu national des Etats africains. Ce commerce à conditions inégales a procuré, en 1961, aux monopoles de l'Allemagne de l'Ouest un supplément de bénéfices de 1 500 millions de marks.

100. Le 10 janvier 1961, l'influent journal suisse Neue Zürcher Zeitung publiait des faits extrêmement intéressants, par exemple qu'en 1958 la valeur des matières premières exportées par les pays en voie de développement représentait environ 25 milliards de dollars. Cependant, la même année, les prix ont baissé d'environ 20 p. 100, si bien que les pays insuffisamment développés ont en réalité perdu 5 milliards de dollars. Le même journal remarque entre autres que, par suite de la baisse des prix et des fluctuations considérables des prix des matières premières sur les marchés mondiaux, les pays insuffisamment développés ont subi des pertes qui ne sont pas compensées par l'assistance économique qu'ils reçoivent.

101. La propagande occidentale fait du battage autour de ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler l'"assistance" économique aux pays en voie de développement et aux colonies qui serait un bien pour les peuples de l'Asie, de l'Afrique, de l'Amérique latine et l'Océanie. En fait, la réalité réfute ces affirmations des apologistes du colonialisme. Les chiffres sont parfois plus éloquentes que toute parole. Ainsi, jusqu'en 1960, les Etats africains avaient reçu des Etats-Unis, sous forme d'"assistance" 936 millions de dollars. A première vue, il semble que ce soit là une somme non négligeable. Mais en réalité, les Etats-Unis n'ont pas fait le sacrifice d'un seul cent à l'Afrique, car, au cours des dernières années, les monopoles américains ont retiré d'Afrique pour plus d'un milliard et demi de dollars de bénéfice, et cela uniquement sur les investissements. Le montant des crédits alloués pour l'aide aux Etats arabes de 1945 à 1956 est près de deux fois inférieur au bénéfice de la société pétrolière Aramco pour une seule année, soit environ 300 millions de dollars.

102. Parlant à la Conférence au sommet des pays indépendants africains à Addis-Abéba, le Président du Ghana, M. Kwame Nkrumah^{5/}, déclarait que le continent africain est peut-être le continent le plus riche du monde, mais que toutes ces richesses s'en vont en Europe occidentale et au-delà des mers: 52 p. 100 de l'or déposé à Fort Knox, où les Etats-Unis conservent leur réserve d'or, provient de l'Afrique. Un vaste flot d'or, de diamants, d'uranium, de platine, de titane et d'autres richesses minérales part de l'Afrique pour venir irriguer le système économique de l'Occident.

103. Oui, les pays occidentaux s'efforcent de trouver des formes nouvelles leur permettant de continuer leur politique qui consiste à s'assurer des bénéfices maximaux dans les pays d'Asie, d'Afrique, d'Amérique latine et d'Océanie. Cette politique des grandes puissances occidentales est à ce point de vue particulièrement dangereuse pour les jeunes Etats, car grâce à elle les pays occidentaux cherchent à conserver leur position dans les pays insuffisamment développés au point de vue économique. Sur ce point, nous pourrions citer de nombreux exemples montrant comment ces grandes puissances essaient de maintenir les pays en voie de développement dans un état de perpétuelle dépendance économique, de les forcer à prendre leur parti de n'être que des fournisseurs de matières premières agricoles aux pays capitalistes hautement industrialisés. Les milieux des monopoles comprennent fort bien que l'industrialisation est la base même du progrès dans les pays en voie de développement ainsi que de la consolidation de leur indépendance. Voilà pourquoi la prétendue "assistance" des pays occidentaux aux pays en voie de développement s'applique, non pas à développer et à renforcer les branches essentielles de l'économie nationale de ces derniers mais à satisfaire les besoins de leur consommation; voilà pourquoi cette assistance s'ac-compagne, en règle générale, de toutes sortes de conditions politiques qui amenuisent la souveraineté de ces pays.

^{5/} Conférence des pays indépendants africains, 22-25 mai 1963.

104. Tout cela permet d'apprécier correctement la politique des puissances coloniales et leur résistance tenace à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

105. Leur exploitation rapace des richesses et des ressources naturelles de ces pays, le bon marché de la main-d'œuvre des esclaves coloniaux permettent aux monopoles de l'OTAN de retirer des bénéfices fabuleux. Pour conserver ces bénéfices, le capital est prêt à perpétrer n'importe quel crime, à faire couler le sang à torrents afin de conserver sa position, non seulement dans les colonies, mais dans d'autres pays encore. C'est pourquoi la nécessité se fait sentir de plus en plus instamment d'éliminer les conséquences économiques et sociales du colonialisme et de lutter contre le néo-colonialisme.

106. L'examen des questions coloniales à l'Organisation des Nations Unies depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration historique montre que la politique de brigandage et de pillage est sévèrement condamnée par la majorité écrasante des Etats Membres de l'Organisation. Elle est condamnée par tous les peuples épris de liberté. Néanmoins, de nombreuses décisions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies destinées à accélérer la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sont restées jusqu'ici lettre morte. Le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud, la Grande-Bretagne et d'autres puissances coloniales non seulement ne tiennent pas compte des décisions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité, mais encore renforcent les mesures de répression contre les populations tombées sous leur domination.

107. Le Gouvernement du Portugal mène une guerre ouverte contre les peuples de l'Angola et de la Guinée portugaise. Il entretient sur le pied de guerre une armée afin de noyer dans le sang toutes les tentatives du peuple du Mozambique d'établir un système de gouvernement conforme à ses aspirations. Le Gouvernement raciste de l'Afrique du Sud déclare ouvertement ses visées annexionnistes sur le Sud-Ouest africain. Il rejette des regards de convoitise vers le Bassoutoland, le Souaziland et le Betchouanaland. Les racistes de Rhodésie du Sud, avec la bénédiction du Royaume-Uni, contractent avec l'Afrique du Sud et le Portugal une alliance pour lutter contre les peuples africains. Cette politique des colonialistes aggrave ainsi la situation et constitue une grave menace à la paix et à la sécurité non seulement dans cette partie du monde, mais également dans le monde entier.

108. Le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud et la Rhodésie du Sud n'ont pu mener cette politique que grâce à l'appui moral et politique croissant qu'ils reçoivent des puissances principales de l'OTAN.

109. Lors de l'examen au Conseil de sécurité de questions concernant la situation en Afrique du Sud, en Rhodésie du Sud et dans les colonies portugaises, les représentants du Royaume-Uni, de la France et de certains autres pays non seulement déclarent se solidariser avec les colonialistes portugais et les racistes d'Afrique du Sud et de Rhodésie du Sud, mais prennent effectivement des mesures qui empêchent le Conseil de sécurité d'adopter des décisions efficaces susceptibles de contribuer à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration.

110. Mais, on le sait fort bien, il ne s'agit pas seulement d'un appui politique. Les Etats Membres de l'OTAN continuent à aider économiquement, financièrement et militairement les Gouvernements du Portugal, de l'Afrique du Sud et de la Rhodésie du Sud. Des avions à réaction et des bombes au napalm américains, des blindés anglais, des armes à feu pour l'infanterie et d'autres armes et matériels militaires d'Allemagne occidentale arrivent en flot ininterrompu aux gouvernements de Salazar, de Verwoerd et de Field, cela en dépit des décisions de l'Assemblée générale, et sont utilisés pour réprimer les mouvements de libération nationale dans les colonies. Selon une information publiée dans le journal anglais The Observer, les soldats portugais qui sont stationnés en Angola, en Guinée et au Mozambique ont reçu une formation militaire spéciale dans des unités de l'OTAN avant d'être envoyés en Angola, au Mozambique et en Guinée portugaise.

111. Sous le prétexte de conserver leurs positions, les pays membres de l'OTAN ont disséminé des bases militaires dans le monde entier. Les stratèges de l'OTAN usent leur salive à affirmer que ces bases serviraient à la défense du "monde dit libre". Par ailleurs, ils restent muets comme la tombe sur le fait que ces bases ont déjà été utilisées et continuent de l'être contre les peuples qui luttent pour leur liberté. On connaît le rôle honteux joué par l'OTAN dans la lutte contre les peuples d'Afrique, du Proche-Orient et du Moyen-Orient. Nous nous rappelons tous l'usage qui a été fait des bases militaires installées sur le continent africain, à Malte, à Chypre, des bases de Bizerte, d'Aden, de Singapour et d'autres bases contre les peuples d'Egypte, d'Algérie, du Liban, du Yémen, d'Oman et d'autres pays. L'utilisation des bases militaires de l'Angola et du Mozambique contre les mouvements de libération nationale de ces pays et à des fins de provocation à l'encontre d'autres pays africains témoigne de façon éclatante que ces bases sont devenues les points d'appui du colonialisme et des sources de menace latente en Afrique.

112. La présence d'un énorme réseau de bases militaires étrangères en Asie, en Afrique et en Amérique latine va à l'encontre des intérêts des pays et des peuples de ces continents, constitue une menace à leur développement normal indépendant et un obstacle sérieux à l'occasion à l'indépendance des peuples qui ne l'ont pas encore obtenue.

113. Se rendant compte de l'échec de la politique coloniale, les colonialistes s'unissent. Mais les peuples qui ont voulu mettre fin au système du colonialisme et du néo-colonialisme s'unissent eux aussi. Les colonialistes d'aujourd'hui sont des alchimistes qui, grâce à la "pierre philosophale" du néo-colonialisme, essaient d'arrêter le cours de l'histoire.

114. Les décisions prises à la Conférence au sommet des pays indépendants africains à Addis-Abéba ont une importance considérable pour la cause de la lutte contre les régimes coloniaux. A cette conférence, est née l'unité des pays africains et des peuples d'Afrique sur la base de la lutte pour l'élimination rapide du colonialisme et du néo-colonialisme. La ferme détermination des pays indépendants africains d'accélérer l'affranchissement définitif du continent africain des régimes colonialistes a reçu l'appui de tous les peuples épris de liberté.

115. Le Gouvernement soviétique a salué la création de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine et l'adoption à l'unanimité de la Charte de cette organisation. Dans son message aux chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement des pays africains qui avaient participé à cette conférence, le Chef du Gouvernement soviétique, Nikita Serguéévitch Khrouchtchev, écrivait:

"Les peuples d'Afrique peuvent sans aucun doute compter sur l'appui du peuple et du Gouvernement soviétiques dans la mise en œuvre des décisions de la Conférence visant à la liquidation accélérée du colonialisme et sur une aide pratique aux combattants pour l'indépendance nationale. La lutte pour liquider complètement et définitivement le honteux système colonial et pour assurer à tous les peuples le droit à un développement libre et indépendant est une des directives principales de notre politique internationale. Le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique a non seulement soumis à l'Organisation des Nations Unies le projet de la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, qui est à la base de la décision adoptée à l'Organisation des Nations Unies sur la liquidation du colonialisme, mais il a aussi accordé une aide matérielle à de nombreux peuples pour qu'ils accèdent à l'indépendance et la défendent contre les attaques des impérialistes. Nous nous associons à la demande unanime des participants à la Conférence d'arrêter toute aide aux gouvernements des puissances coloniales susceptibles d'être employée pour réprimer les mouvements de libération nationale en Afrique. Les alliés des puissances coloniales — comme il a été dit dans les décisions de la Conférence — doivent se rendre compte que le moment est vraiment venu de faire un choix: soit l'amitié avec les gouvernements et les peuples d'Afrique, soit l'appui accordé à ceux qui les oppriment."

116. Notre organisation, lorsqu'elle a adopté cette Déclaration historique, a non seulement accordé un appui moral aux peuples coloniaux, mais elle a assumé, en fait, une très grande responsabilité quant à leur libération et à la liquidation complète des régimes coloniaux. La mise en application de la Déclaration devait être contrôlée tout d'abord par le Comité des Dix-Sept, puis par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, dont nous discutons actuellement le rapport [A/5446/Rev.1].

117. Le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre a accompli un travail considérable. Nous saluons les efforts sincères de la majorité des membres du Comité présidé par M. l'ambassadeur Coulibaly en vue de la mise en application aussi rapide que possible de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

118. Le devoir de l'Organisation des Nations Unies est de surmonter la résistance des puissances colo-nialistes, de tracer la voie à la liquidation sans délai des régimes coloniaux qui subsistent dans plusieurs régions d'Asie, d'Afrique, d'Amérique latine et d'Océanie et d'accorder une aide de tout genre aux peuples qui luttent pour leur liberté et leur indépendance.

119. Nous estimons que 1965 doit être l'année de la suppression complète et définitive du système colonial.

"Il est du devoir de l'Assemblée" — a souligné le Ministre des affaires étrangères de l'URSS, Andreï Andreevitch Gromyko, dans sa déclaration au cours de la discussion générale — "d'élaborer et d'entériner, en s'appuyant sur la Déclaration, des solutions susceptibles de favoriser la liquidation sans délai des régimes coloniaux sur les territoires où ils subsistent encore ... C'est pour l'Organisation des Nations Unies un point d'honneur de faire tout pour qu'à la date de [son] anniversaire le honteux système du colonialisme ait entièrement disparu de la terre et que tous les peuples, grands ou petits, en Afrique, en Asie, ou en Amérique latine, soient libres et indépendants." [1208ème séance plénière, par. 189 et 191.]

120. Nous savons que les puissances colonialistes résisteront de façon opiniâtre à la mise en vigueur de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

121. Néanmoins, le Comité spécial doit, avant la dix-neuvième session, mener à bien les tâches qui lui ont été confiées par l'Assemblée générale. Il doit examiner la disposition concernant la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration dans tous les territoires coloniaux, notamment les petits territoires. Les petits territoires ne doivent pas être laissés de côté, car, à mesure que de nouveaux pays conquièrent leur indépendance, les colonialistes essaient de se retrancher sur des îles et des enclaves isolées.

122. En outre, le Comité spécial doit se livrer à une étude de l'influence des monopoles étrangers dans le sud de l'Afrique, et aussi dans les territoires coloniaux des pays arabes de l'Orient, du Sud-Est asiatique, de l'Amérique latine et de l'Océanie sur la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le Comité devra présenter à l'Assemblée générale un rapport sur cette question.

123. Nous savons que toutes les tentatives des colonialistes pour s'opposer au processus de liquidation du système colonial sont vouées à l'échec, mais cela ne diminue nullement l'énorme importance des tâches confiées au Comité.

124. Pour ce qui est de l'activité du Comité spécial au cours de l'année qui vient de s'écouler, il est juste que l'Assemblée générale l'approuve et appuie la recommandation aux termes de laquelle ses pouvoirs doivent être prolongés [A/5240/Rev.1, chap. I, par. 60].

125. Les mots "démembrement du système colonial" reviennent fréquemment à nos oreilles ces derniers temps, mais l'ampleur et les conséquences énormes de ce phénomène historique ne sont pas encore admises par tous. Il s'agit pourtant en fait d'une immense révolution dans l'histoire de l'humanité.

Une révolution anti-impérialiste sur le plan mondial se déroule actuellement sous nos yeux. L'impérialisme n'est plus à même de disposer du sort de centaines de millions d'êtres humains et il a perdu son pouvoir illimité sur les énormes ressources matérielles qui vont pouvoir être mises au service des intérêts nationaux des peuples eux-mêmes.

126. Sans vouloir en aucune façon diminuer les mérites des peuples afro-asiatiques, il faut dire que la première manifestation de notre époque de par son importance historique, c'est-à-dire l'apparition d'un système socialiste mondial, a créé les prémisses indispensables au développement couronné de succès du deuxième phénomène important de notre temps, le démembrement du système colonial.

127. La liquidation de la domination politique de l'impérialisme marque la fin d'une époque dans la vie des peuples de l'Asie et de l'Afrique. Jamais encore les peuples de ces colonies et semi-colonies n'avaient pu entrevoir des perspectives aussi vastes et encourageantes.

128. Il est du devoir de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et de chacun de nous de contribuer à la liquidation définitive du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et sous toutes ses manifestations, à l'élimination de la guerre et au renforcement de la paix sur terre.

129. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: En dehors de la demande que vous nous avez présentée, M. le Président, il se trouve que la délégation du Libéria a déjà eu l'occasion de traiter de questions relatives aux territoires sous administration portugaise, à la Rhodésie du Sud et au Sud-Ouest africain. Ainsi, et sauf par analogie, j'entends limiter exclusivement cette intervention à la situation qui règne dans les autres territoires dont il est question dans le rapport du Comité spécial, sur la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5446/Rev.1].

130. Je commencerai donc par le territoire de Malte et, pour éclairer la question, je me permettrai de rappeler brièvement les renseignements fournis par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni en tant qu'autorité administrante et qui sont les suivants: en vertu d'une Constitution entrée en vigueur en mars 1962, Malte est devenue l'Etat de Malte, disposant d'un gouvernement représentatif et d'une assemblée législative de cinquante membres élus au suffrage universel des adultes. Le Gouvernement de Malte, à l'heure actuelle, est entre les mains d'un cabinet maltais élu, composé d'un Premier Ministre et de sept autres ministres. D'autre part, le Gouverneur de Malte doit agir conformément aux avis du cabinet sauf dans certaines circonstances exceptionnelles et le Gouvernement de Malte partage la responsabilité des décisions en ce qui concerne les affaires étrangères et la défense. En plus, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a fait part de sa volonté d'accorder l'indépendance à l'Etat de Malte.

131. L'Assemblée reconnaîtra que ces renseignements sont tout à l'honneur de l'autorité administrante. Toutefois, divers membres du Comité spécial ont soulevé des questions pertinentes, ainsi qu'il ressort du rapport même, et que ma délégation considère d'une importance vitale pour la stabilité de Malte en tant que nation. Avec votre permission, M. le Président, je voudrais évoquer deux de ces questions.

132. En ce qui concerne la Constitution que mentionne le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, le représentant de la Yougoslavie, comme il est indiqué au rapport du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. VI, par. 64], a fait observer que les recommandations du Comité constitutionnel qui ont pris effet dans la nouvelle Constitution ont été rejetées par les partis maltais les plus importants, le Labour Party et le Nationalist Party, et que seul le Progressive Constitutional Party, qui n'a obtenu qu'un siège aux récentes élections, a approuvé ces recommandations. De plus, le chef du Nationalist Party a indiqué qu'à son avis la Constitution actuelle ne traduit pas les aspirations du peuple maltais.

133. Le représentant de la Tunisie a, de son côté (ibid., par. 90), souligné le problème de la passation définitive des pouvoirs aux vrais représentants du peuple de Malte, qui, selon le représentant de la Tunisie, doit avoir lieu conformément à la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale et dans les meilleures conditions possibles. Ces deux représentants ont exprimé l'opinion — qui a été partagée par la majorité des membres du Comité — selon laquelle la convocation d'une conférence constitutionnelle bénéficiant d'une représentation adéquate des parties politiques, constituerait la meilleure façon d'atteindre ce but. Etant donné les objections soulevées par le Nationalist Party, les graves accusations du Labour Party à l'égard des méthodes de campagne électorale, de même que le fait qu'un parti politique tel que le Progressive Constitutional Party, ayant approuvé la recommandation, n'a pu obtenir qu'un seul siège, il apparaît vraisemblablement que les arguments en faveur d'une conférence constitutionnelle sont valables.

134. Passant maintenant de la question de Malte à celle du territoire des îles Fidji, je devrais peut-être mentionner quel enthousiasme qui s'est emparé de moi soudainement à l'idée que, dans un proche avenir, la résolution 1514 (XV) serait mise en application en ce qui concerne le peuple maltais, s'est évanoui. Ici, l'histoire est toute différente et bien triste en vérité. Il conviendrait peut-être de rappeler que le Royaume-Uni a colonisé ces îles et leur population en 1874. Près d'un siècle s'est écoulé depuis lors. Mais résumons ce qu'a dit le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni sur ce territoire: "L'un des problèmes les plus récents consiste à développer l'économie et les activités sociales". Je cite à nouveau le rapport:

"En vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte, la tâche première de la puissance administrante devrait être d'encourager l'ensemble de la population à se proposer des fins communes d'ordre culturel, social, économique. Ces fins stimuleraient à leur tour des aspirations politiques qui seraient celles de la majorité des deux principaux groupes de la population. Ces aspirations détermineraient par suite l'époque et le résultat de l'application du principe d'autodétermination, l'un des buts de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, consacrés par la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale." [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. VII, par. 29.]

135. Ces arguments ont été soigneusement élaborés, à tel point que l'on a omis l'élément le plus essentiel, à savoir la question de l'indépendance. Mais ce qui est aussi grave, c'est l'attitude apparemment très satisfaite de l'autorité administrante qui croit pouvoir disposer d'un siècle encore pour mettre en œuvre ses programmes concernant le territoire des îles Fidji et ses habitants. Je constate, à la lecture du rapport, que le problème séculaire des échecs de la puissance administrante, qui n'entreprend aucune mesure pour supprimer les obstacles à l'intégration du territoire, reste entier. L'administration se divise entre des groupes raciaux et des communautés, ce qui est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies.

136. La puissance administrante reconnaît elle-même l'insuffisance du développement dans les domaines social, économique, culturel et de l'enseignement. De plus, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'a pas donné de renseignements suffisants sur le territoire. Ces problèmes ne sont pas nouveaux pour ma délégation. Au cours de neuf sessions consécutives de l'Assemblée générale, j'ai eu personnellement l'occasion de souligner ces mêmes difficultés. Je voudrais donc demander à la délégation du Royaume-Uni quelles déclarations lui paraissent justes et raisonnables elle attend en l'occurrence des membres de l'Assemblée. Je demanderai maintenant à la délégation du Royaume-Uni la permission de répondre à cette question de la façon suivante: le temps du contentement de soi est révolu. Le Royaume-Uni ne peut suspendre le développement politique des populations des îles Fidji sous prétexte d'un éventuel développement culturel, social et économique dans l'ensemble des îles. Je n'ai pas besoin de dire à la délégation du Royaume-Uni que ces questions sont si étroitement liées aux aspects politiques qu'il est impossible de les en dissocier. Mais, plus encore, je dois déclarer au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni qu'après environ un siècle d'administration il n'a plus le droit de décider ou de faire quoi que ce soit qui retarde l'indépendance du territoire et de la population des îles Fidji. Cela découle clairement de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale qui dit notamment: "Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance".

137. Ma délégation se voit donc contrainte de déclarer que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni devrait prendre des mesures immédiates en vue de:

a) éliminer tous les obstacles à l'intégration du territoire, y compris celui de la discrimination raciale;

b) mettre sur pied des institutions politiques valables;

c) accélérer le progrès social, économique et celui de l'enseignement des populations des îles Fidji;

d) orienter les tendances vers l'autodétermination de ces populations et entreprendre les mesures nécessaires à cet égard, et

e) accorder l'indépendance aux populations des îles Fidji.

138. Une fois de plus, je puise de courage dans la lecture du rapport qui m'apprend que le but poursuivi par cette assemblée à l'égard des peuples non autonomes sera atteint dans un avenir pas trop lointain, par les populations du Kenya, de la Rhodésie du Nord, du Nyassaland et de Zanzibar. En réaffirmant les droits inaliénables de ces peuples à l'indépendance et en souhaitant qu'aucun obstacle ne les empêche d'atteindre cet objectif ultime, je m'associe aux membres du Comité spécial et, au nom de ma délégation, je félicite à l'avance les populations de la grande lutte qu'elles ont menée pour leur libération et pour leur accession à l'indépendance. Je me rappelle la contribution apportée par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, en tant qu'autorité administrante, et sa volonté de se conformer à notre calendrier pour l'octroi de ce droit à l'indépendance. C'est pourquoi j'adresse également au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni mes félicitations sincères. Je suis certain qu'après avoir accédé à l'indépendance, ces populations sauront vivre en paix avec le Royaume-Uni et qu'il existera entre elles des relations de bon voisinage.

139. Je ne m'étendrai pas plus longuement sur ces traits favorables de la situation, de crainte d'éclipser le sentiment d'inquiétude que nous cause la situation qui règne dans trois autres Etats non autonomes d'Afrique, le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland. Au cours de sa précédente session, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 1817 (XVII), par laquelle elle invitait la puissance administrante:

"... à suspendre immédiatement les dispositions constitutionnelles actuelles et à procéder sans plus tarder, dans les trois territoires, à des élections au suffrage universel direct des adultes".

Ensuite, la résolution demande à l'autorité administrante:

"... d'abroger les dispositions constitutionnelles actuelles et de convoquer immédiatement une conférence constitutionnelle avec la participation des dirigeants politiques démocratiquement élus des trois territoires, afin de fixer selon leurs vœux la date d'accession à l'indépendance de chacun de ces territoires".

140. Du rapport du Comité spécial, il ressort ce qui suit:

a) Pour le Bassoutoland, une commission constitutionnelle a été créée, mais son rapport ne sera présenté qu'à la fin de 1963, après l'ajournement de la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale;

b) La conférence constitutionnelle du Souaziland a mis fin à ses travaux sans parvenir à un accord;

c) En ce qui concerne le Betchouanaland, le Secrétaire d'Etat du Royaume-Uni pour les colonies a déclaré en avril 1963 que le moment était venu de revoir la Constitution de ce territoire et d'envisager un progrès plus important dans le domaine politique.

141. En ce moment toutefois, des négociations sont en cours au sujet de la convocation d'une telle conférence constitutionnelle. Ma délégation reconnaît que l'autorité administrante a pris certaines mesures en vue d'appliquer la résolution de l'Assemblée générale.

rale à cet égard, mais certaines circonstances soulignent l'urgence de la question. Tout d'abord, l'Assemblée a admis que les dispositions constitutionnelles envisagées pour ces territoires et la législation électorale en vigueur étaient discriminatoires et ne correspondaient pas aux désirs de la population et qu'elles n'étaient pas non plus conformes à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. En second lieu, pour ce qui est du Souaziland, la nouvelle Constitution a été imposée aux représentants de la population directement intéressée plutôt qu'acceptée par eux. Je n'entreprendrai pas l'examen détaillée des défauts de cette Constitution. Il suffit de dire que ma délégation ne peut admettre qu'un double système de vote soit imposé à un peuple. Nous notons qu'au Bassoutoland, bien que le Congress Party ait obtenu 32 sièges sur 40, la puissance administrante a établi ce qu'elle a appelé un gouvernement de coalition, composé de membres nommés, fonctionnaires coloniaux et chefs de tribus. Ma délégation ne peut aucunement accepter cela.

142. Comme le représentant de l'Éthiopie l'a dit au Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. IX, par. 38], nous sommes en face de la situation sérieuse représentée par les territoires de la Haute Commission entièrement encerclés par un voisin hostile et infiniment plus puissant qui pratique une politique d'oppression contre ses propres habitants africains. Ce voisin, c'est la République sud-africaine dont la politique d'apartheid provoque un flot de réfugiés en direction des territoires de la Haute Commission. Comme l'a fait observer plus loin le représentant de l'Éthiopie, nous ne pouvons prendre à la légère l'avertissement adressé par le Gouvernement sud-africain au Gouvernement britannique concernant ce qu'il appelle des "représailles". Ce n'est pas sans une grave inquiétude que ma délégation prend note du refoulement en Afrique du Sud des réfugiés nationalistes africains par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni alors qu'il savait, ou qu'il aurait dû savoir, que ces réfugiés encourent la peine de mort conformément à la législation du Gouvernement sud-africain. Ma délégation est tout aussi préoccupée du fait que l'administrateur de ces territoires doit résider en Afrique du Sud. Nous savons que le Gouvernement sud-africain souhaite annexer les territoires de la Haute Commission. Ma délégation lance donc un appel au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni pour qu'il s'entienne résolument à sa décision d'empêcher l'Afrique du Sud d'annexer les territoires en question.

143. Je voudrais maintenant attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée et la vôtre, M. le Président, sur certains actes qui, au Bassoutoland, ont été considérés comme des crimes par l'autorité administrante, et pour lesquels des autochtones ont été arrêtés et jetés en prison.

144. Trente jeunes gens ont été arrêtés et incarcérés, sous l'inculpation d'avoir chanté des hymnes nationaux qui n'étaient pas du goût de la jeune police européenne. Ils ont été maintenus en prison pendant huit mois et ensuite poursuivis et condamnés à de courtes peines. Je me rappelle que je possède moi-même un disque sur lequel sont enregistrés les hymnes nationaux de tous les pays d'Amérique latine.

Mes amis d'Amérique latine peuvent-ils s'imaginer combien d'arrestations d'Africains auraient lieu si un tel disque parvenait au Bassoutoland ou s'il était découvert là-bas entre les mains d'Africains.

145. Dix jeunes gens ont été arrêtés, pour avoir organisé une cérémonie en l'honneur de l'anniversaire de la reine, et accusés de sédition. La police a expliqué que ces personnes auraient dû assister à la cérémonie officielle et que, ne l'ayant pas fait, elles avaient commis un acte séditieux. Telle est la définition succincte de la sédition donnée par les autorités au Bassoutoland. Des pétitionnaires nous ont rappelé l'alliance néfaste entre l'Afrique du Sud et le Royaume-Uni à l'égard des territoires de la Haute Commission. La police sud-africaine a le pouvoir de pénétrer au Bassoutoland pour y enlever de force les réfugiés qui ont cherché asile contre la répression en Afrique du Sud.

146. Il est évident qu'en ce qui concerne les territoires de la Haute Commission les populations de ces territoires ont un besoin extrêmement urgent d'obtenir immédiatement le droit à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance. Ma délégation lance donc un appel au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni pour qu'il prenne immédiatement les mesures permettant aux populations des territoires de la Haute Commission d'atteindre ce but, afin d'éviter toutes les tensions et les querelles internationales dans cette partie du monde, de crainte qu'elles ne causent à la paix et à la sécurité internationales un danger auquel le monde entier ne pourrait échapper.

147. Ma délégation partage l'inquiétude du Comité spécial en ce qui concerne la situation en Guyane britannique, qui, particulièrement ces derniers temps, s'est détériorée de façon assez inquiétante. Ma délégation rappelle que la question restant en suspens concernant le développement de ce territoire est celle d'une conférence constitutionnelle chargée de fixer la date de l'indépendance. La politique coloniale "diviser pour régner" a produit son effet sur la population de la Guyane britannique et fomenté la désunion au sein de la population. Nous sommes d'avis que les influences étrangères de caractère économique ont également un effet sur la situation. Ma délégation lance un appel aux populations de la Guyane britannique pour qu'elles s'unissent et aplanissent leurs divergences, pour lutter ensemble contre l'ennemi commun ou contre les influences qui s'exercent contre leur indépendance. Ma délégation partage le point de vue du Comité spécial selon lequel, à titre de mesure intérimaire et sans préjudice d'une décision ultérieure, le sous-comité aurait dû avoir la possibilité de rechercher sur place, avec les parties intéressées, les voies et les moyens les plus propres à permettre au pays d'accéder sans délai à l'indépendance.

148. Comme on l'a vu généralement par le passé, les représentants du Yémen et du Royaume-Uni ont chacun réservé les droits de leurs gouvernements respectifs sur Aden et les protectorats d'Aden, l'un et l'autre prétendant avoir la souveraineté sur ces deux territoires. Ma délégation préférerait, dans cette intervention, ne pas étudier en détail le caractère juridique de la question de la souveraineté d'une puissance coloniale sur les territoires colonisés.

J'exprimai donc les regrets de ma délégation quant au refus du Royaume-Uni de permettre aux membres du sous-comité de pénétrer dans le territoire d'Aden pour y entendre les opinions de la population sur la question essentielle de son avenir politique, qui auraient toutes pu servir de base à des recommandations du Comité spécial à l'Assemblée générale pour accélérer l'octroi de l'autodétermination et de l'indépendance à Aden et à ses protectorats. Ma délégation voudrait également adresser un appel au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni pour que celui-ci adopte les mesures permettant à la population d'Aden et de ses protectorats d'exercer aussitôt que possible leurs droits à l'autodétermination.

149. Le représentant du Chili a retracé l'histoire du développement d'Aden et de ses protectorats et des relations des territoires avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Ma délégation examinera ces renseignements ainsi que ceux fournis par l'autorité administrante et se réserve le droit de s'y référer dans les délibérations à venir concernant la question d'Aden et de ses protectorats.

150. Etant donné que le Comité spécial a différé l'examen des territoires de Gibraltar, Fernando Póo, Ifni, Rio Muni et du Sahara espagnol, et que ma délégation aura la possibilité d'examiner les renseignements disponibles sur ces territoires dans une des grandes commissions de l'Assemblée générale, je réserve le droit de ma délégation de faire plus tard des observations à ce sujet.

151. Enfin, au nom de la délégation du Libéria, j'adresse mes félicitations et mes remerciements sincères au Comité spécial pour le rapport qu'il a présenté à l'Assemblée.

152. M. CARSALES (Argentine) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation argentine estime que le rapport du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1] dont nous sommes saisis constitue l'un des documents les plus considérables présentés à cette session de l'Assemblée générale.

153. Il procède la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux qui, d'après le Comité spécial chargé d'examiner la situation en ce qui concerne son application, est une manifestation de foi, une source d'inspiration pour tous ceux qui vivaient encore sous le régime colonial et l'expression du désir universel d'accélérer le processus de libération.

154. L'écroulement du colonialisme est l'un des événements historiques les plus importants de notre siècle. Les Nations Unies, il est vrai, n'en ont pas pris l'initiative, qui est due aux efforts inlassables et glorieux des peuples soumis. La mission de notre organisation a été de confirmer, dans la Charte et dans de nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale qui ont culminé dans la résolution 1514 (XV), le droit des territoires coloniaux à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance, et de créer un mécanisme approprié pour l'accomplissement rapide, pacifique et juste de ce processus.

155. De là l'importance du travail du Comité spécial, chargé de la tâche difficile d'étudier la façon dont, dans la pratique, la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations sur les progrès accomplis et de proposer des mesures concrètes pour la pleine réalisation des objectifs fixés.

156. Une liste, qui n'est pas complète, des territoires qui sont visés par la Déclaration et, par conséquent, relèvent de la compétence du Comité, donne pour ceux-ci une superficie totale de 6 750 000 kilomètres carrés et une population de 45 millions d'habitants.

157. La seule mention de ces chiffres montre clairement quelles peuvent être l'ampleur et la complexité de la tâche du Comité. De la lecture du rapport se dégage l'impression qu'il l'a accomplie de façon active et consciencieuse et, à ce propos, la délégation argentine tient à féliciter les membres du Comité et le personnel du Secrétariat pour les efforts inlassables et efficaces qu'ils ont déployés en vue d'obtenir une meilleure application de la résolution 1514 (XV). Nous voudrions pouvoir adresser les mêmes compliments aux autorités administrantes, mais, malheureusement, ce n'est pas possible dans tous les cas. S'il est vrai que certaines d'entre elles ont plus ou moins coopéré avec le Comité — ce que nous nous plaisons à reconnaître — d'autres ont catégoriquement refusé toute collaboration. Pareille attitude ne saurait persister.

158. Ma délégation ne parlera pas de chacun des problèmes des différents territoires sur lesquels porte le rapport du Comité spécial. Cela prendrait un temps dont l'Assemblée générale ne dispose pas. De plus, certains chapitres du rapport — je ne dirai pas les plus importants, car la lutte d'un peuple pour sa libération a la même importance quelles que soient les circonstances et l'ampleur de cette lutte, mais qui présentent les plus grandes difficultés et la plus grande urgence —, ces chapitres donc ont déjà fait l'objet d'une étude à la Quatrième Commission, où la délégation de l'Argentine a expliqué sa position. Nous ne répéterons pas nos déclarations ici.

159. Le tableau d'ensemble que présente le rapport du Comité spécial comporte certains aspects négatifs, mais aussi des raisons d'espérer une solution rapide et favorable du problème. Nous appuyons pleinement la déclaration ci-après qui figure au paragraphe 45 du rapport du Comité:

"Tout en prenant note des progrès réalisés depuis, en matière de décolonisation, le Comité spécial a conscience que cette décolonisation, dans certaines parties de l'Afrique et ailleurs, ne s'effectue pas à un rythme satisfaisant. Il s'inquiète particulièrement des situations dangereuses existant dans les territoires sous administration portugaise, au Sud-Ouest africain et en Rhodésie du Sud." [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. premier, par. 45.]

160. Par contre, d'autres territoires sont sur le point d'accéder à l'indépendance, comme le Kenya et Zanzibar, que nous nous préparons à accueillir très bientôt dans cette Assemblée. Nous espérons que ces heureux événements se répéteront l'an prochain en ce qui concerne d'autres pays que leur évolution politique, économique et sociale a déjà amenés au seuil d'une indépendance pour laquelle ils ont si longtemps lutté.

161. Le Comité spécial, qui a déjà étudié une série de territoires — 26 exactement — de superficie et de population très variées, devra s'occuper, à mesure que ses travaux progressent, de territoires en général moins grands et dont la situation politique est, dans certains cas, assez mal connue. Chacun d'entre eux a ses caractéristiques et présente ses problèmes particuliers et, dans beaucoup de cas, il ne sera pas possible d'appliquer les solutions qui ont été adoptées pour des territoires plus vastes jouissant d'une autonomie économique. La délégation argentine espère que le Comité spécial continuera à étudier les territoires visés par la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale avec le réalisme dont il a fait preuve jusqu'ici et qu'il abordera l'examen de chaque cas en évitant les formules toutes faites, c'est-à-dire des formules qui ont été appliquées avec succès auparavant, mais qui pourraient ne pas être les plus indiquées et les plus équitables. A cet égard, nous avons entendu ce matin une déclaration intéressante et lucide du représentant du Chili.

162. Dans le même ordre d'idées, la délégation argentine a noté avec satisfaction, dans le rapport du Comité spécial, le recours fréquent à une procédure relativement nouvelle mais qui offre de grandes possibilités. Je veux parler de celle de l'accord général. Nous estimons que, dans certains cas, la situation n'a pas suffisamment évolué pour donner lieu à l'adoption de résolutions, car ces résolutions présentent, d'autre part, des difficultés de rédaction susceptibles de réduire les appuis qu'elles trouveraient. Dans ces conditions, il nous semble que la méthode de l'accord général est le plus propre à conduire à des résultats positifs.

163. Bien que la tentation d'exposer à nouveau la position de la République argentine au sujet du colonialisme et de ses conséquences soit pour nous très grande, nous y résisterons. Notre histoire politique et notre action dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies depuis sa création sont la meilleure preuve de nos idéaux et de nos objectifs. Pour le reste, l'horloge de l'histoire sonne les derniers instants de cette conception périmée de la vie politique internationale moderne, et il est inutile de débattre maintenant de questions déjà tranchées. Nous sommes en présence d'un processus irréversible qui échappe même à la volonté des puissances administrantes.

164. Rien n'est plus digne ni plus généreux que l'objectif que les Nations Unies se sont assignées: émanciper définitivement les territoires coloniaux et les incorporer, d'une manière ordonnée, rapide et pacifique, à la communauté des nations qui peuplent aujourd'hui notre planète. C'est à la réalisation de cet objectif, l'un des fondements de la Charte des Nations Unies, que la République argentine s'est engagée — je le réaffirme aujourd'hui — à consacrer tous ses efforts.

165. Nous sommes certains que le colonialisme finira par disparaître, sous toutes ses formes et manifestations, y compris dans les territoires de moindre dimension. La République argentine subit elle-même aujourd'hui les conséquences de la politique coloniale d'une grande puissance. L'occupation des îles Malouines — violation flagrante de notre souveraineté, à l'époque de l'expansion de l'impérialisme, à un moment où notre pays lui-même accédait à peine à l'indépendance — est un acte de force qui n'a jamais été accepté par le Gouvernement ni par le peuple argentins.

166. A l'annexe I du rapport du Comité spécial que nous examinons en ce moment, nous trouvons sur la liste préliminaire des territoires auxquels s'applique la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale les îles Malouines. A plusieurs reprises, la délégation argentine a, par d'expresses réserves formulées devant cette organisation, notamment à la Quatrième Commission qui s'occupe des renseignements fournis sur les territoires non autonomes, affirmé la souveraineté de l'Argentine sur ce territoire; en réaffirmant aujourd'hui nos droits imprescriptibles et inaliénables sur les îles Malouines, qui ne sont ni une colonie ni une possession d'une nation quelle qu'elle soit, mais font partie intégrante du territoire national argentin et sont comprises dans son domaine et relèvent de sa souveraineté, nous tenons à souligner l'importance que nous accordons au paragraphe 6 du dispositif de la résolution 1514 (XV) ainsi conçu: "Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

167. En cette ère de liberté, la présence anachronique du Royaume-Uni dans ces îles, très peu peuplées, n'a pas de sens et représente un phénomène de l'histoire qui ne peut continuer, sous peine de porter atteinte à la compréhension mutuelle et à l'amitié qui lient deux peuples unis déjà par tant d'autres liens. Je ne crois pas pécher par excès d'optimisme en exprimant l'espoir de voir le Royaume-Uni faire preuve, dans ce cas particulier, de cette compréhension des réalités du moment présent et de cette vision de l'avenir dont il a su témoigner à l'égard d'autres parties du monde.

168. Nous ne voulons pas conclure sans exprimer l'espoir que la mise en œuvre de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale fera, au cours des mois à venir, des progrès positifs, se manifestant par l'entrée de nouveaux pays dans la communauté internationale et par une évolution nette et rapide d'autres pays vers le même objectif. Nous désirons aussi que ce processus se déroule dans une atmosphère de paix et sur des bases démocratiques, sans discriminations d'ordre racial, politique ou économique de quelque genre que ce soit. A cet effet, la coopération de tous les Etats Membres des Nations Unies — et plus spécialement des puissances administrantes — est une condition fondamentale et indispensable. L'organe le plus indiqué pour exprimer cette volonté de collaboration est sans aucun doute le Comité spécial, dans la capacité duquel nous avons confiance et où nous trouvons la garantie du respect constant des intérêts suprêmes des territoires et des peuples coloniaux.

169. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Tous les orateurs qui étaient inscrits pour ce matin ont pris la parole. Je donne maintenant la parole au représentant du Mexique qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

170. M. PEON DEL VALLE (Mexique) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le représentant du Guatemala a formulé, au cours de cette séance, une protestation et des réserves quant au fait que Belize figure sous la dénomination de Honduras britannique à l'annexe I du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1] que nous examinons en ce moment, et en particulier sur la liste des territoires non autonomes auxquels s'applique la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale. A cette occasion, le représentant du Guatemala a déclaré que la souveraineté sur le territoire de Belize appartient exclusivement à son pays, c'est-à-dire au Guatemala.

171. Tout d'abord, je voudrais que figure au procès-verbal à cette occasion — comme à diverses autres occasions passées — la déclaration faite par mon gouvernement et que l'on trouve dans la documentation officielle de diverses instances internationales, aussi bien mondiales que régionales et interaméricaines, ainsi que dans les divers autres moyens d'information du public, et aux termes de laquelle, s'il se produisait un changement dans le statut international de Belize, il serait impossible de ne pas tenir compte des droits historiques et juridiques du Mexique sur ce territoire. Mon gouvernement a également eu l'occasion de déclarer que, pour sa part, le Mexique ne méconnaît pas le droit du peuple de Belize à l'autodétermination et son droit, par voie de conséquence, de prétendre à une pleine indépendance, s'il le désire, par la libre affirmation de sa volonté.

172. Deuxièmement, je tiens également à préciser que le fait qu'un territoire figure sur la liste de ceux à propos desquels des renseignements sont transmis conformément à l'Article 73 e de la Charte ne saurait, par lui-même, affecter la souveraineté qui peut ou non appartenir aux autorités qui, étant en fait les seules responsables de la situation et du développement de ces territoires, doivent, à ce titre, informer les Nations Unies de la situation qui règne dans ces territoires.

173. Lorsque cette question de la signification à donner à l'introduction des noms des territoires non autonomes dans la liste des territoires au sujet desquels l'Assemblée générale devait recevoir des renseignements, conformément à l'Article 73, paragraphe e, de la Charte, fut soulevée pour la première fois devant la Quatrième Commission de l'Assemblée générale le 8 décembre 1946^{6/}, la délégation guatémaliennne déclara qu'elle s'abstiendrait lors du vote sur le projet de résolution, parce que le territoire de Belize figurait sur cette liste. La délégation du Mexique souligna alors que l'adoption du projet de résolution en question, où était pris acte de la liste des territoires sur lesquels des renseignements devaient être fournis, n'impliquait nullement la reconnaissance de la souveraineté d'un Etat quelconque sur un territoire déterminé. Ma délégation avait ajouté que cette résolution n'aurait qu'une signification pratique en ce sens qu'elle servirait à indiquer quelles étaient les autorités responsables, à un moment donné, de l'administration desdits territoires.

174. La délégation guatémaliennne avait souscrit à cette interprétation et avait ajouté que son intention était d'éviter toute possibilité de doute ou d'incertitude dans l'avenir.

175. Au cours de la même séance, une autre délégation au moins s'était déclarée d'accord quant à l'interprétation donnée par la délégation mexicaine. Aucune autre délégation ne s'est opposée à cette interprétation.

176. J'ai rappelé ces faits en raison de leur rapport avec la situation qui nous occupe en ce moment.

177. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): La parole est au représentant du Royaume-Uni pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

178. M. KING (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je me réfère aux déclarations qu'ont faites aujourd'hui les représentants du Guatemala et de l'Argentine et au cours desquelles ils ont contesté la souveraineté sur le Honduras britannique et sur les îles Malouines du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté dans le Royaume-Uni. Le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté n'a aucun doute en ce qui concerne la souveraineté qu'il possède sur le Honduras britannique et sur les îles Malouines et je tiens à réserver formellement ses droits en la matière.

179. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Espagne pour lui permettre d'exercer son droit de réponse.

180. M. DE PINES (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Ma délégation souhaite exercer son droit de réponse à l'égard des contre-vérités qu'a énoncées le représentant de l'Union soviétique et rappeler à l'Assemblée que nous avons déjà exposé en détail notre position au sujet du processus de décolonisation, ainsi que notre désir de collaborer avec l'Assemblée et tous les organes de l'ONU. L'accusation selon laquelle la terreur règne dans les territoires administrés par l'Espagne et qu'on y pratique les travaux forcés est absurde et fausse, de même que toute une série d'autres accusations dépourvues de fondement. Les conditions qu'a décrites le représentant de l'Union soviétique sont, sans aucun doute, celles qui règnent dans le vaste empire colonial qu'administre son pays.

181. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant du Guatemala pour lui permettre d'exercer son droit de réponse.

182. M. MOLINA ORANTES (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Etant donné l'heure avancée, mon intervention sera très brève, mais je me vois obligé de prendre la parole en raison des observations que vient de faire le représentant du Mexique. Il a dit que son pays se réservait de discuter des droits de souveraineté sur le territoire guatémaltèque de Belize, au cas où le statut juridique de ce territoire viendrait à être modifié. Ma délégation tient à déclarer dès maintenant qu'elle ne reconnaît à quiconque aucun droit sur le territoire de Belize, qui relève uniquement de la souveraineté du Guatemala. La déclaration du représentant du Mexique ne doit donc en aucune manière être interprétée comme impliquant une action conjointe avec mon gouvernement, dont la revendication a un caractère exclusif, comme il l'a déjà indiqué.

183. Le Mexique n'a jamais possédé de territoire au sud du fleuve Hondo, frontière nord du territoire de Belize, qu'on appelle à tort le Honduras britannique. D'une part, les cartes utilisées par les négociateurs espagnols et anglais qui ont signé le Traité de Versailles de 1783 — lequel traité concédait, aux sujets britanniques résidant dans la région comprise entre le fleuve Hondo et le fleuve Belize, certains droits de simple usufruit — et, d'autre part, beaucoup d'autres documents, parmi lesquels le Traité anglo-mexicain du 8 juillet 1893 relatif aux frontières^{1/}, démontrent sans aucun doute possible que la province du Yucatan ne s'étendait pas au sud du fleuve Hondo.

184. Je ne crois pas qu'il soit actuellement opportun d'examiner la question plus à fond. Je me bornerai simplement à citer ce qu'a dit, après la conclusion du Traité anglo-mexicain de juillet 1893 dont j'ai parlé, le Ministre des relations extérieures du Mexique, M. Ignacio Mariscal:

"Si l'on admet que l'Espagne possédait des droits de souveraineté sur Belize au moment où nous avons acquis l'indépendance, on ne peut prétendre que ces droits aient été transférés à notre République; en effet, nous n'avons pas acquis ce territoire pendant notre lutte pour la libération — lutte qui ne s'est jamais étendue au-delà du fleuve Hondo —, on ne nous a attribué la possession d'aucun territoire au sud de ce fleuve, ce territoire ne nous a pas non plus été cédé par l'Espagne en vertu du Traité de 1836, par lequel elle nous a cédé ses droits sur d'autres territoires, non plus que l'Angleterre, par le Traité de 1826, ne nous a reconnus comme héritiers des droits de l'Espagne sur Belize; enfin, nous ne pouvons, en vertu du droit des gens, revendiquer aucun autre titre au territoire que l'on appelle aujourd'hui le Honduras britannique."

Voilà ce qu'a dit alors le Ministre des relations extérieures du Mexique. Il semble à ma délégation qu'on ne puisse rien ajouter à cette opinion.

185. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne de nouveau la parole au représentant du Mexique pour lui permettre d'exercer son droit de réponse.

186. M. PEON DEL VALLE (Mexique) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Comme l'a dit le représentant du Guatemala, il ne convient pas aujourd'hui de discuter des droits de souveraineté sur Belize. Dans ces conditions, le Gouvernement mexicain et sa délégation à l'Assemblée continuent de réserver formellement leur position.

187. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Avant de lever la séance, je tiens à rappeler aux délégations que, comme je l'ai déjà annoncé, la liste des orateurs sera close lundi prochain, le 2 décembre, à 18 heures.

188. Je fais appel aux délégations pour que les représentants qui désirent intervenir dans le débat d'utiliser le temps qui reste disponible sur les séances prévues pour lundi et mardi, faute de quoi nous devons siéger de nuit mercredi, jeudi et vendredi, car l'examen du point en discussion doit être terminé au plus tard à la fin de la semaine prochaine, c'est-à-dire vendredi.

La séance est levée à 13 h 45.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. HSUEH (Chine) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le Comité spécial vient d'achever une deuxième année de travaux importants et fructueux. Nous sommes maintenant saisis de son rapport annuel d'activité [A/5446/Rev.1], qui comprend 14 chapitres, dont pratiquement chacun constitue un assez gros volume. En fait, même à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, où l'efficacité est à l'ordre du jour, il est rare qu'un comité accomplisse à lui seul une tâche aussi considérable dans des délais aussi brefs. Comme l'indique son rapport volumineux, le Comité spécial a pu examiner, au cours des 101 séances qu'il a tenues de février à octobre de cette année, la situation de 26 territoires, couvrant une superficie de près de 2 millions et demi de milles carrés et comptant une population de 37 millions d'habitants. Le Comité a droit à notre reconnaissance et à notre admiration à tous pour le travail utile qu'il a accompli. Je m'empresse d'associer ma délégation aux hommages chaleureux qui lui ont été rendus à l'Assemblée et à la Quatrième Commission.

2. La décolonisation, qui se poursuit sous la responsabilité du Conseil de tutelle et d'autres organes compétents des Nations Unies, a reçu un nouvel élan lorsque le Comité spécial a été créé le 27 novembre 1961. Il convient de noter que, depuis cette date, sept pays qui étaient auparavant des territoires coloniaux ont accédé à l'indépendance et ont été admis à l'ONU. Il ne fait aucun doute que d'autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore acquis leur indépendance les suivront dans cette voie.

3. Par l'intermédiaire de ce comité ainsi que du Conseil de tutelle et des autres organes intéressés, l'Organisation des Nations Unies accomplit l'une de ses missions sacrées, celle qui consiste à promouvoir et à encourager le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous les individus, sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion. Notre organisation exerce sa grande influence pour accélérer le processus d'émancipation visant à apporter l'égalité et la dignité à chaque être humain. Elle est maintenant le centre générateur de cette force irrésistible qui doit balayer toutes les notions médiévales de tyrannie, d'oppression et d'esclavage et ouvrir la voie lumineuse de la civilisation moderne.

4. Nous qui travaillons au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en ce moment, si captivant de son histoire, nous avons tout lieu de nous féliciter de la bonne fortune qui nous permet non seulement d'assister, mais aussi de participer à cette évolution historique. Bien entendu, l'Organisation n'aurait pu s'acquitter de cette noble mission, tout comme de ses autres tâches, avec autant de succès, sans l'effort concerté de tous ses Membres et sans la coopération de ceux qui sont directement intéressés. A cet égard, il faut souligner le rôle important qu'ont joué d'anciennes puissances coloniales d'Europe occidentale, notamment le Royaume-Uni et la France. Il est significatif que la plupart des nouveaux Membres admis à l'ONU ces dernières années sont d'anciennes colonies des puissances de l'Europe occidentale. Ces puissances, s'inspirant des nobles idéaux de la Charte des Nations Unies et guidées par la tendance marquée des temps modernes, ont reconnu le principe de l'autodétermination et l'ont appliqué à leurs colonies. Cette évolution se poursuit, ainsi qu'en témoigne un exemple cité à l'Annexe II du rapport du Comité spécial. J'estime que nous pouvons tous puiser un encouragement dans la lecture de cette annexe, qui reproduit une lettre du représentant du Royaume-Uni ainsi qu'une liste chronologique des progrès constitutionnels réalisés dans les territoires non autonomes sous administration britannique. Certes, on ne saurait dire que l'évolution intervenue dans tous les territoires énumérés dans ce calendrier est satisfaisante, mais il n'en ressort pas moins clairement que des progrès appréciables ont été réalisés dans un grand nombre d'entre eux. Il est à noter que certains de ces territoires ont accédé à l'autonomie et que d'autres sont prêts à devenir indépendants dans un proche avenir.

5. Le chapitre XIII du rapport indique également que l'Espagne, dont les anciennes colonies d'Amérique latine ont accédé à l'indépendance bien avant la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, a réaffirmé son engagement de respecter le principe de l'autodétermination en ce qui concerne les territoires d'Afrique sous administration espagnole. Nous devons reconnaître à chacun ses mérites et rendre hommage aux Gouvernements britannique et espagnol ainsi qu'à d'autres gouvernements qui ont adopté la même attitude à ce sujet.

6. Cela dit, je dois exprimer l'inquiétude ressentie par mon gouvernement du fait que d'autres territoires se trouvent encore sous la domination coloniale de pays d'Europe occidentale; il s'agit, notamment, des territoires d'Afrique auxquels le principe d'autodétermination n'a pas encore été appliqué et dont la situation est examinée dans le rapport du Comité spécial.

7. Comme vous nous l'avez rappelé à la 1266^{ème} séance, M. le Président, les chapitres du rapport portant sur des territoires déterminés ont été renvoyés par l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa 1210^{ème} séance, à l'examen de la Quatrième Commission. Je ne me propose donc pas d'en parler ici, mais je voudrais dire qu'il reste du devoir de cette assemblée, avec l'assistance du Comité spécial, de veiller à ce que cette œuvre inachevée soit menée à bonne fin. Nous espérons également que les gouvernements des puissances administrantes intéressées viendront s'associer aux efforts déployés par l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour participer à cette évolution historique.

8. L'Assemblée générale s'est jusqu'ici attachée à mettre fin au type de colonialisme pratiqué par l'Europe occidentale et, ce faisant, a donné la priorité aux territoires coloniaux d'Afrique. Ma délégation souscrit pleinement à cette manière d'agir. Nous pensons qu'elle est la seule façon correcte et logique de procéder, car nous reconnaissons tous que c'est en Afrique que la superficie la plus grande, toutes proportions gardées, a été sous domination coloniale pendant la période la plus longue.

9. Commençons par le commencement et concentrons nos efforts. Terminons-en d'abord avec le colonialisme en Afrique en y consacrant toute notre énergie et toute notre attention. Cela ne signifie pas, toutefois, qu'il faille fermer les yeux sur un autre genre de colonialisme. Tout en nous occupant du type de colonialisme pratiqué par les pays d'Europe occidentale, nous ne devons pas oublier qu'en Europe, en Asie et même en Amérique latine des peuples sont assujettis à un autre genre de colonialisme: le colonialisme russe ou soviétique.

10. L'an dernier, lorsque nous avons examiné cette même question, nombre de représentants ont rappelé à l'Assemblée le sort des peuples de l'Estonie, de la Lettonie, de la Lituanie, de l'Ukraine, de l'Allemagne de l'Est, de la Corée du Nord et d'autres territoires sous occupation soviétique, où le principe d'autodétermination n'a jamais été appliqué. Peut-être ne pourrions-nous pas apporter une aide immédiate à tous ces peuples qui connaissent la même infortune, mais nous devons leur faire savoir que nous ne les avons pas oubliés. Ne nous laissons pas obnubiler par l'argument fallacieux selon lequel il s'agirait d'un problème découlant de la guerre froide.

11. Je sais pertinemment que nous mécontenterons l'Union soviétique en discutant du colonialisme soviétique, mais nous ne pouvons pas écarter, sous prétexte qu'il s'agit d'un problème de la guerre froide, tout ce qui déplaît à l'Union soviétique. Nous devons nous servir d'une seule et même aune pour appliquer la Charte. Le colonialisme reste le colonialisme, qu'il soit pratiqué par les puissances d'Europe occidentale ou par l'Union soviétique. On ne peut en faire une question de guerre froide et s'en désintéresser complètement, uniquement parce qu'il est pratiqué par l'Union soviétique.

12. Prenons, par exemple, le cas des nations européennes qui vivent sous la domination soviétique. Quelle est leur situation? Le représentant de l'Espagne y a fait brièvement allusion dans sa déclaration du 29 novembre 1963 [1267^{ème} séance]. Je me permets d'affirmer que ces nations ne sont ni autonomes ni indépendantes; elles sont soumises à des régimes d'oppression qui leur sont imposés par une puissance étrangère, et l'exercice du droit d'autodétermination est refusé à leur population. Quel que soit le critère choisi, leur situation n'est pas différente — si elle n'est pas pire — de celle des territoires coloniaux d'Afrique. Pour achever ce parallèle, les patriotes en exil de ces nations européennes se sont organisés de la même manière que les patriotes africains dans leur lutte pour la liberté et l'autodétermination. L'une de ces organisations, l'Assemblée des Nations européennes captives, nous rappelle quotidiennement, par des panneaux exposés de l'autre côté de la rue, la domination coloniale soviétique qui règne dans ces pays. Pouvons-nous de bonne foi exclure ces peuples infortunés, ainsi que d'autres en Europe, en Asie et en Amérique latine, de notre souci d'accomplir notre mission sacrée d'émancipation? Leur demande d'autodétermination et de libertés fondamentales fait également partie de cette œuvre que nous devons achever.

13. Par conséquent, l'Assemblée générale peut contribuer pour beaucoup à ce grand mouvement historique. Il est nécessaire que le Comité spécial continue à nous prêter son assistance, et je suis certain que l'Assemblée accédera à la demande formulée par le Comité spécial dans son rapport en vue de proroger son mandat. Ma délégation sera heureuse de voter en faveur d'un projet de résolution dans ce sens.

14. L'une des tâches dont le Comité spécial continuera à s'occuper l'an prochain, comme il est indiqué au paragraphe 47 du chapitre I de son rapport, est de compléter la liste des territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Il s'agit certes d'une tâche importante, car cette liste montrera l'ampleur des activités que le Comité spécial est en mesure d'accomplir. Ma délégation espère sincèrement que cette liste, une fois complétée, comprendra tous les territoires qui se trouvent encore sous domination coloniale. Je suis persuadé que le Comité spécial, ayant déjà fourni un travail aussi excellent, n'épargnera aucun effort pour mettre fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

15. Avant de conclure, je voudrais préciser un seul autre point. Le rapport du Comité spécial contient une liste préliminaire des territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Cette liste sera sans aucun doute examinée lorsque le Comité spécial reprendra ses travaux l'an prochain. Je me permets d'appeler votre attention sur la question de l'insertion de Hong-kong et de Macao dans cette liste. Je n'attache aucune espèce d'importance ni aucune valeur à ce que le soi-disant expert bulgare en affaires chinoises a pu déclarer à ce sujet au paragraphe 27 du chapitre I du rapport. Mais je tiens à préciser que Hong-kong et Macao et leurs dépendances ont toujours fait partie intégrante du territoire chinois jusqu'à l'entrée en vigueur des dispositions territoriales actuelles découlant de traités conclus par la Chine avec la Grande-Bretagne en 1842, 1860, 1898, et avec le Portugal en 1887. Toute question que pourrait poser le statut de ces territoires devrait être examinée entre les Etats intéressés conformément aux principes du droit international. Même sous leur statut actuel, ces territoires ne semblent pas entrer dans la même catégorie que les autres territoires non autonomes énumérés dans la liste préliminaire.

16. Je ferai observer que d'autres territoires chinois sont également tombés sous la domination de puissances étrangères, comme ceux dont la Russie s'est emparée en vertu du Traité d'Aigun de 1858, du Traité de Pékin de 1860 et du Traité de Saint-Petersbourg de 1881, conclus entre la Chine et la Russie. Ces territoires ne figurent pas dans la liste préliminaire et il convient d'espérer que le Comité spécial tiendra compte de ces faits historiques et qu'il adoptera une attitude cohérente à l'égard de tous ces groupes de territoires situés aux confins de la Chine.

17. Enfin, il me reste la tâche agréable de souhaiter au Comité spécial au nom de ma délégation une nouvelle année de travaux fructueux et couronnés de succès.

18. M. VELAZQUEZ (Uruguay) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Puisque c'est la première fois que ma délégation prend la parole depuis la mort du président Kennedy, je voudrais, si vous le permettez, Monsieur le Président, commencer par rendre hommage à la mémoire de cet homme illustre.

19. Quelqu'un a dit que la véritable expérience de la mort, que l'expérience de ce que mourir signifie, ne s'acquiert que par la mort d'un être qui nous est proche, d'un parent, d'un des nôtres, de quelqu'un qui est près de notre cœur. Cette loi de l'expérience s'est accomplie une fois de plus lorsque nous avons senti, comme nous l'avons fait ces jours derniers, que quelque chose était mort en nous en même temps que le président Kennedy; cette loi n'est d'ailleurs que l'expression de la solidarité et de la fraternité essentielles et profondes de tous les êtres humains qui participent d'une même nature et sont tous fils du même Père. Si la douleur et la peine que nous ressentons aujourd'hui sont si profondes, si elles touchent aux racines mêmes de notre sensibilité, c'est parce que le président Kennedy appartenait à cette catégorie d'hommes exceptionnels que nous pouvons tous reconnaître comme nos véritables parents, car il aurait pu être l'un des miens, l'un de mon peuple et de mon pays comme il aurait pu appartenir à d'autres peuples et à d'autres pays — en vérité, je crois, à tous les peuples de toute la terre.

20. Je ne sais si cette vérité peut être comprise à ce moment dans son propre pays aussi clairement que nous-mêmes la comprenons. La perspective exige toujours la distance, et peut-être nous-mêmes, les hommes des Nations Unies, qui représentons d'autres continents, qui parlons d'autres langues, qui avons été formés par des cultures différentes, avons-nous aujourd'hui plus que d'autres le recul nécessaire pour concevoir la dimension universelle de cette figure et l'ampleur également universelle de cette tragédie.

21. Car, bien entendu, cette tragédie doit avoir un sens. Si un homme comme le président Kennedy a pu atteindre, dans la vie et jusque dans la mort, un tel sommet, c'est parce qu'il a su, en quelque sorte, incarner, comme seuls peuvent le faire les "grands" de l'histoire, non seulement les désirs de son peuple, non seulement les besoins de son époque, mais aussi les aspirations plus profondes de l'âme humaine et de la conscience universelle. Il n'est pas possible de concevoir cette dimension si celui qui a réussi à la posséder n'a pas aussi été un représentant authentique de la condition humaine qui nous est commune à tous et qui est la même chez les Américains, les Africains, les Européens et les Asiatiques, quelle que soit la couleur de leur peau et où qu'ils se situent sur le champ de bataille. C'est pour cela, c'est parce qu'il était, comme dit un vieux poème espagnol, "un homme essentiel" qu'il a été l'interprète accompli de concepts qui sont des concepts humains par excellence et qui donnent son sens à notre lutte sur cette terre: la paix, la justice, la liberté.

22. Peut-être est-il encore un peu trop tôt pour pouvoir apprécier à sa juste mesure la contribution qu'il a apportée à ces causes universelles, à ces idéaux permanents de la vie humaine. Mais nul ne peut nier que son courage, son imagination et sa dévotion sincère à ses idéaux, sa passion de la justice et surtout de l'égalité, sa lutte contre l'égoïsme et surtout contre les préjugés ont contribué de façon peut-être décisive à faire du monde d'aujourd'hui un monde qui n'est, en tout cas, pas pire que le monde d'hier et où commence à poindre l'aube d'un âge où, comme il le disait lui-même en des mots qui résonnaient d'un accent biblique, les forts seront justes, les faibles vivront en sécurité et la paix sera préservée.

23. Le gouvernement et le peuple uruguayens s'inclinent respectueusement devant la mémoire de cette illustre figure. A son épouse, à ses jeunes enfants, à son peuple, à ses représentants auprès de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, nous voulons dire que nous pleurons sa mort comme nous pleurerions celle d'un des nôtres. Car, devant la mort, tout ce que peut offrir la solidarité humaine, c'est cette faculté de partager spontanément la douleur d'autrui comme si c'était une douleur personnelle. Mais nous pouvons aussi les assurer que son exemple demeurera une source d'inspiration non seulement pour nous qui restons, mais pour les générations futures et particulièrement pour nos enfants, qui étaient si souvent présents dans ses pensées et dans ses décisions.

24. En peu de temps, deux hommes qui portaient tous deux le nom de Jean nous ont quittés, l'un presque immédiatement après l'autre. Tous deux avaient su se faire aimer du monde comme peu d'hommes ont su le faire. Et le souvenir qu'ils ont tous deux laissé, qui est plus fort que la mort, continuera de vivre pour toujours en nous-mêmes et en nos fils.

25. L'Uruguay étant membre du Comité spécial, dont j'ai l'honneur d'être l'un des vice-présidents, et comme j'ai participé à ses débats et approuvé ses recommandations, il serait peut-être plus indiqué de ma part de ne pas intervenir à nouveau au moment où c'est l'Assemblée générale qui doit porter un jugement sur nos travaux. Si je participe aux débats, ce n'est donc pas avec l'intention de plaider en faveur des recommandations du Comité spécial, mais avec le propos beaucoup plus modeste de formuler quelques observations de caractère général qui pourraient peut-être être utiles à l'Assemblée pour évaluer le rapport [S/5446/Rev.1] dans son ensemble.

26. Je veux cependant exprimer tout d'abord mon admiration et mes remerciements à M. Coulibaly pour la manière dont il a su accomplir une tâche qui n'a pas toujours été facile et qui a parfois été ingrate. Comme j'ai déjà eu l'occasion de le dire au sein du comité — et je me plais à le répéter aujourd'hui devant l'Assemblée —, c'est à son tact, à sa modération et à sa compréhension, à sa conception parfaite de la responsabilité qui lui incombait, qu'est dû, en grande partie, le succès, si l'on peut parler de succès, de la tâche accomplie par le Comité. Ce succès est également dû, dans une mesure égale, au vice-président, M. Sonn Voensai, du Cambodge, au rapporteur, M. Rifai, de la Syrie, qui a rempli avec beaucoup de talent ses fonctions pendant l'année passée et pendant une bonne partie de la deuxième session du comité, et à M. Natwar Singh, de l'Inde, qui a exécuté en peu de temps un travail excellent, témoignant ainsi des qualités que tous lui connaissaient déjà.

27. Si les efforts accomplis laissent un solde positif, en dehors de ce que représentent les recommandations et les mesures adoptées, c'est sans aucun doute l'esprit de collaboration et le sérieux qui ont toujours présidé à nos délibérations, même dans des circonstances qui auraient pu faire craindre qu'ils n'en fussent absents. Si le Comité spécial a remporté au cours de ses travaux une véritable victoire, c'est une victoire sur ce que nous pourrions appeler "l'esprit de la guerre froide". Et ce seul fait constitue, à mon avis, un succès remarquable, car c'est la preuve que la coopération internationale est possible, lorsque existe la volonté sincère de coexistence, et que, comme le dit l'Article premier de la Charte, les Nations Unies peuvent véritablement constituer un centre où s'harmonisent les efforts de toutes les nations vers des fins communes.

28. Le rapport dont nous sommes saisis contient un premier chapitre de caractère plutôt informatif et procédural et 13 chapitres où sont résumées les activités, que nous pourrions appeler de fond, entreprises par le Comité conformément aux termes de son mandat.

29. En ce qui concerne l'aspect procédural, je voudrais attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur trois points qui, à mon avis, revêtent une certaine importance.

30. Le premier a trait aux méthodes et procédures adoptées par le Comité spécial pour s'acquitter de ses fonctions. Comme on s'en souvient, l'Assemblée générale, au paragraphe 2 du dispositif de la résolution 1810 (XVII), a pris note avec satisfaction de ces méthodes et procédures, c'est-à-dire de celles qu'avait appliquées le Comité pendant sa première session et qui étaient en partie décrites au paragraphe 112 de son premier rapport^{1/}. Je dis "en partie", car, si quelques délégations se sont expressément référées à ce paragraphe au cours des débats de la dix-septième session, ma délégation croit que l'expression "méthodes et procédures" doit porter également sur d'autres aspects du problème qui ne sont pas mentionnés dans le paragraphe en question, et en particulier sur la procédure qui consiste, pour le Comité, à adopter lui-même des résolutions visant des objectifs que j'appellerai "extérieurs", c'est-à-dire des résolutions dont on peut ou dont on entend faire valoir les effets à l'égard d'Etats tiers ou de parties intéressées. Si l'on examine les décisions qu'a adoptées le Comité spécial sous forme de "résolutions" — sans parler des décisions qui ont été approuvées par consensus —, on remarque que l'une d'elles seulement, celle qui a trait au Bassoutoland, au Betchouanaland et au Souaziland, contient une recommandation adressée à l'Assemblée générale et tendant à ce que celle-ci adopte des mesures déterminées à l'égard de ces territoires.

31. Les 10 autres sont des résolutions du Comité lui-même, qui s'adresse à la puissance administrante soit pour lui faire part d'une appréciation, soit pour préconiser certaines mesures qu'il estime indispensables pour la réalisation de ses objectifs. Pour autant que ma délégation s'en souvienne, cette procédure n'a jamais soulevé aucune objection, et, par conséquent, en approuvant les procédures du Comité spécial, comme elle l'a fait dans la résolution 1810 (XVII) et comme elle le fera peut-être dans le cadre des décisions qu'elle prendra à la fin du présent débat, l'Assemblée doit signifier clairement que ces procédures lui agréent et qu'elle les approuve une fois de plus.

32. La seconde question dont je veux parler a trait à l'envoi de missions ou de groupes de visite, procédure également approuvée par l'Assemblée générale, qui est mentionnée dans les paragraphes 53 à 56 du chapitre premier du rapport et dont l'emploi est clairement justifié au paragraphe 54.

33. Ma délégation ne peut, pour des motifs fondamentaux, accepter l'argument dit "de principe" selon lequel la présence d'une mission ou d'un groupe de visite constitue une ingérence dans l'administration du territoire. Les missions de visite n'ont en général pour objet que de s'assurer, plus directement que par l'intermédiaire de la puissance administrante, des aspirations ou des opinions de la population d'un territoire, ou de vérifier certains faits ou états de choses sur lesquels il est souhaitable d'obtenir des précisions. Les fonctions d'un groupe de visite ne peuvent donc, dans aucun de ces deux cas, être considérées comme des fonctions administratives, concept qui, en droit public, a un contenu bien précis et, à coup sûr, très différent.

34. D'autre part, aux termes du paragraphe 5 du dispositif de la résolution 1654 (XVI), l'Assemblée générale rale a autorisé le Comité spécial à se servir "de tous les moyens dont il [disposerait] dans le cadre des procédures et des modalités qu'il [adopterait] pour bien s'acquitter de ses fonctions", moyens parmi lesquels peuvent et doivent figurer les missions de visite dans les territoires non autonomes — et il a en fait été convenu en principe que c'était là l'une des bases des travaux du Comité. Sans qu'il soit même besoin de se référer à ces textes, l'utilisation de missions de visite serait conforme à la doctrine dite des pouvoirs implicites qu'a énoncée au début du siècle dernier le célèbre juge Marshall, des Etats-Unis, et que la Cour internationale de Justice a faite sienne il y a quelques années seulement dans un avis consultatif bien connu.

35. Il est, en tout cas, de notoriété publique qu'il y a deux mois à peine une mission qui, pour l'essentiel, appartenait à la catégorie de missions dont je parle a été reçue dans des territoires qui étaient encore sous l'administration du Royaume-Uni, avec le consentement de son gouvernement, ce qui ne peut qu'indiquer un changement, à notre avis favorable, de la position constitutionnelle que ce pays avait toujours soutenue. Ma délégation s'en félicite et elle est convaincue que cette attitude facilitera la tâche du Comité spécial et ne manquera pas de rendre plus fructueuse la collaboration que ce pays lui prête.

36. Enfin, toujours à propos des aspects procéduraux du rapport, on remarquera qu'au paragraphe 30 du chapitre premier, après avoir expliqué les raisons pour lesquelles il n'a pu terminer la liste de tous les territoires auxquels s'appliquent les dispositions du paragraphe 5 de la déclaration figurant dans la résolution 1514 (XV), le comité indique son intention de parachever cette tâche au cours de l'année qui vient.

37. En réalité, comme on le voit d'après le rapport, le comité a travaillé sur la base d'une liste préliminaire établie par le groupe de travail et qui comprend, outre le Sud-Ouest africain, les territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes, au sens du chapitre XI de la Charte, qui ou bien ont été reconnus comme tels par les puissances administrantes intéressées — qui fournissent des renseignements les concernant — ou bien ont été déclarés comme tels par l'Assemblée générale elle-même, comme c'est le cas pour les territoires sous administration portugaise et pour la Rhodésie du Sud.

38. Le paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux mentionne, comme on s'en souvient, non seulement les territoires dont j'ai parlé, mais aussi ceux "qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance" et l'emploi, dans ce paragraphe, de la conjonction "et" indique qu'il s'agit d'une troisième catégorie de territoires, bien que le texte ne fournisse malheureusement pas d'explication complémentaire propre à en faciliter l'interprétation. La lecture des comptes rendus des débats de la quinzième session n'éclaircit pas non plus la question, à l'exception de quelques observations isolées qui ne sont pas suffisamment précises pour servir de principes directeurs sur le sujet qui nous occupe.

39. A défaut d'antécédents concrets, la seule interprétation qu'on puisse donc fournir est celle qui découle naturellement du texte même de la déclaration, encore qu'il faille le situer dans le cadre des autres résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Peut-être ne serait-il pas difficile, à la lumière de ce que le droit international reconnaît comme droit des Etats à l'indépendance et de certaines indications formulées par l'Assemblée générale elle-même dans ses résolutions 567 (VI) et 742 (VIII), de décider que le paragraphe 5 de la déclaration sera applicable dans le cas de certains territoires ou Etats dont la situation juridique actuelle peut prêter au doute ou à la confusion. Peut-être conviendrait-il de n'en exclure que les territoires dépendants qui ont décidé de s'intégrer à la métropole. Si cette décision résulte de la volonté réelle de ces peuples, les territoires incorporés ou intégrés paraissent jouir, en réalité, du même statut juridique que l'Etat auquel ils se sont unis et dont ils sont maintenant une partie, quel que soit le degré d'autonomie ou de décentralisation qui leur a été accordé; ils doivent par conséquent bénéficier du droit à l'indépendance du pays auquel ils se sont unis.

40. En dehors de ces cas, ma délégation serait, en principe, en faveur d'une application la plus large possible de la déclaration. Les objectifs de la déclaration sont des objectifs moraux valables, que nous acceptons tous. Aucun inconvénient ne pourrait résulter de leur application la plus large possible.

41. Il nous reste maintenant à analyser de façon sommaire certains des aspects de fond du rapport.

42. Naturellement, je n'ai pas l'intention de faire porter cette analyse sur chacun des territoires mentionnés dans le rapport, ni d'examiner de façon concrète les résolutions adoptées. Le rapport est rédigé de façon claire et explicite. Il relate comme il convient — et le mérite en revient, à mon avis, au rapporteur et au personnel du Secrétariat — les positions adoptées par les différents membres du comité sur chacun des problèmes soulevés pour les divers territoires.

43. Nous croyons qu'il y aurait peut-être lieu d'extraire du contexte de ces résolutions certains principes de caractère général qu'elles sanctionnent et qui constituent ou constitueront dans l'avenir ce qu'on pourrait appeler "la jurisprudence de la résolution 1514 (XV)".

44. Dans l'immédiat, il est possible de faire observer qu'à deux exceptions près, qui ne représentent pas une doctrine contraire, les résolutions adoptées par le Comité spécial, affirmant les principes fondamentaux de la déclaration, se réfèrent expressément — et en général par la même clause — au "droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance".

45. Cette affirmation réitérée a, selon ma délégation, une signification importante. En effet, bien que le paragraphe 2 de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux réaffirme le droit de tous les peuples à l'autodétermination, il n'y a aucun doute que la déclaration met bien davantage l'accent sur l'idée d'indépendance qui est mentionnée trois fois dans le préambule de la résolution 1514 (XV) et également trois fois dans son dispositif. Cette prédominance — au moins dans le texte — de la notion de l'indépendance sur celle de l'autodétermination a donné lieu, comme on se le rappellera, à des réserves formulées par certaines délégations et peut-être à des abstentions lors du vote.

46. Selon ma délégation, la tendance suivie par le Comité spécial, de même que par l'Assemblée dans ses nombreuses résolutions postérieures à la déclaration, constitue l'interprétation la plus correcte de la résolution 1514 (XV).

47. Tout d'abord, il convient de se rappeler que la déclaration fut adoptée à la même session que la résolution 1541 (XV) sur "les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer les renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non", résolution qui établit, notamment, les principes relatifs à la façon dont un territoire non autonome peut atteindre la pleine autonomie. S'il est vrai que nous sommes en présence de deux résolutions différentes, l'une et l'autre ont été approuvées par le même organe et à peu d'heures d'écart, et par conséquent celui qui les interprète ou l'organe chargé de leur application est obligé d'appliquer certains critères pour éviter d'aboutir à des conclusions contradictoires.

48. Une interprétation de la déclaration qui exclurait le principe de l'autodétermination mettrait évidemment en conflit direct les résolutions 1514 (XV) et 1541 (XV), car cette dernière indique expressément que la pleine autonomie ne peut être atteinte que si l'Etat est souverain et indépendant ou si le territoire non autonome s'associe librement à un Etat indépendant ou est intégré librement à la métropole ou à un autre Etat quelconque. Ces mêmes critères ont déjà été consacrés, en réalité, par des résolutions très antérieures à la déclaration, telles que la résolution 742 (VIII). Bien que l'on considère que la façon dont les territoires auxquels se réfère le chapitre XI de la Charte peuvent accéder à la pleine autonomie "avant tout en accédant à l'indépendance" — et j'insiste sur les mots "avant tout" —, la résolution indique aussi que l'autonomie peut être atteinte par l'association à un "Etat ou à un groupe d'Etats, à condition que cette association soit effectuée librement et sur un pied d'égalité absolue".

49. Certains ont invoqué, certes, d'excellentes raisons pour affirmer que l'indépendance doit être au moins une étape préliminaire et indispensable après laquelle — et seulement après laquelle — le territoire devenu indépendant pourrait accéder à d'autres formes d'organisations politiques. Cette idée repose certainement sur l'hypothèse, qui nous paraît raisonnable, selon laquelle l'exercice de la libre détermination présuppose que celui qui doit exercer cette libre détermination doit posséder, ne fut-ce que pour un moment, la pleine souveraineté. En d'autres termes, la libre détermination ne peut être exercée que par celui qui est déjà libre.

50. Ma délégation ne verrait aucun inconvénient à s'associer à ce raisonnement, ne fût-ce que parce qu'il constitue précisément la doctrine juridique au nom de laquelle la révolution de l'Amérique espagnole a eu lieu, n'était que le processus de décolonisation, tel que nous l'avons vu se dérouler et tel qu'il se déroulera certainement à l'avenir, montre précisément le contraire, à savoir que non seulement la libre détermination peut normalement être obtenue dans le cadre des structures coloniales, dans ce que l'on pourrait appeler "l'étape finale", mais aussi que le choix de régimes autres que celui de l'indépendance ou de la souveraineté totale s'est également effectué dans des territoires qui conservaient leur statut colonial, comme le prouvent les événements récents.

51. Ma délégation considère donc que le Comité spécial a suivi une sage politique, surtout si l'on tient compte de la nature des territoires qui seront examinés à la prochaine session et des problèmes qui se poseront inévitablement et imposeront une politique prudente et souple.

52. Néanmoins, je ne voudrais pas manquer de dire que, même si l'on accepte cette interprétation, il n'est pas douteux que la résolution 1514 (XV) exige, plus encore que les résolutions antérieures relatives au même problème, que l'acte d'autodétermination soit accompli en pleine et entière liberté; sans aucune possibilité de coercition et, avant tout, sans aucune réserve, condition ou exigence préalables, afin que, dans tous les cas, on soit sûr que la volonté de la population et son expression authentique ont été garanties, en ce qui concerne des solutions qu'elle aura véritablement choisies.

53. En ce sens, il nous semble que la résolution 1514 (XV) ouvre la porte à une intervention plus directe de l'Organisation des Nations Unies afin que celle-ci surveille la procédure des plébiscites qui pourront être organisés.

54. Par conséquent, je me permets de signaler l'importance qu'il y a lieu d'attribuer au paragraphe 9 du dispositif de la résolution adoptée par le Comité spécial sur Aden le 19 juillet 1963 (des dispositions analogues avaient déjà été adoptées dans l'Etat de Malte). Cette résolution recommande à l'Assemblée générale, en consultation avec la puissance administrante, d'adopter les mesures nécessaires pour assurer la présence effective de l'ONU avant et pendant les élections par lesquelles la population d'Aden exercera son droit de libre détermination. La possibilité d'une telle intervention est prévue, comme on le sait, par le principe IX qui figure en annexe à la résolution 1541 (XV), mais seulement dans l'hypothèse de l'intégration. Selon nous, le Comité a établi là un principe fort utile qui est parfaitement conforme à l'esprit de la déclaration et sur lequel il y a peut-être lieu de réfléchir profondément.

55. Un autre principe de ce que nous avons appelé la jurisprudence du Comité spécial est celui du suffrage universel des adultes — un homme, une voix — et de la création immédiate, pour établir les conditions dans lesquelles doit s'effectuer le transfert des pouvoirs, d'institutions représentatives. C'est à cela que se réfèrent beaucoup de résolutions, par exemple celles qui concernent le Bassoutoland, le Betchoualand et le Souaziland, Aden, les Iles Fidji et, plus tard, la Rhodésie du Sud.

56. Dans ces cas, et dans d'autres, le comité a préféré s'en tenir à des formules tout à fait générales, pour éviter de compromettre, par des formules rigides, l'objectif recherché. Cela est parfaitement conforme à l'historique de la résolution 1514 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale dont les auteurs ont cherché expressément à éviter de formuler des principes trop rigides. En particulier, selon nous, l'attitude du Comité a été très sage lorsqu'il a évité de prendre parti dans les cas où les intéressés ont exprimé leur préférence pour tel ou tel système électoral, comme ce fut le cas, en particulier cette année, pour la Guyane britannique. Cela m'amène à dire que ma délégation partage l'opinion générale du Comité sur le choix du système électoral, choix qui doit être fait directement par les intéressés, sans ingérence de l'Organisation, une telle ingérence ne pouvant manquer de constituer une violation du principe de non-intervention. En interprétant et en appliquant la résolution 1514 (XV), le Comité spécial a implicitement affirmé le principe qui correspond à l'historique de la résolution, à savoir que l'essentiel, en pareil cas, est la participation active de la population adulte, quel que soit le système électoral appliqué, à moins évidemment — et de là les expressions "institutions représentatives", "organes représentatifs", "secteurs représentatifs" qui figurent dans presque toutes les résolutions — qu'il ne s'agisse d'un système électoral qui, bien que fondé sur le suffrage universel, fausserait de façon évidente et flagrante l'expression de la volonté populaire.

57. Je crains de m'être un peu trop étendu, bien qu'en vérité j'aie cherché à être bref. Evidemment, il y a de nombreux autres facteurs que je pourrais analyser; je pense qu'ils le seront, peut-être avec une précision plus grande, par les orateurs qui prendront la parole après moi. Certaines questions dont l'examen n'a pas été achevé ont soulevé des problèmes d'une importance fondamentale qui, j'en suis certain, intéressent tous les membres de l'Assemblée. Je veux parler en particulier de la question de Gibraltar, où pour la première fois, tout au moins à la connaissance de ma délégation, on a discuté l'application du paragraphe 6 de la déclaration qui réaffirme le respect de l'intégrité territoriale et de l'unité nationale d'un pays en cas de conflit éventuel avec le principe de la libre détermination des peuples, également contenu dans la déclaration.

58. Ma délégation a déjà exprimé son point de vue, qui, à notre avis, est non seulement celui qui semble s'adapter le mieux au texte ainsi qu'à l'esprit de la déclaration, mais peut-être le seul qui soit susceptible de protéger les pays qui, en raison de leur petite superficie ou de leur faiblesse, ont été dépouillés au cours de l'histoire, soit par la force, soit par ce que les diplomates appellent la pression — qui n'est qu'une forme insidieuse de la force — d'une partie de leur territoire national. Nous sommes convaincus que la solution de cette question constituera une norme en conformité de laquelle d'autres situations analogues pourront être résolues. Malheureusement, nous trouvons encore de tels exemples en Amérique latine.

59. Cet idéal, comme tous les idéaux, paraît lointain, mais nous devons reconnaître que souvent, en collaboration avec les puissances administrantes et grâce aussi à l'action persévérante de notre organisation, nous nous sommes beaucoup rapprochés de notre but. Nous voulons atteindre celui-ci aussi rapidement que possible par des cheminements pacifiques qui éviteront d'accroître encore les souffrances de ceux qui déjà ont supporté tant de malheur. Tel doit être notre objectif. Pour atteindre ce but, il y a de nombreuses voies et de nombreux instruments. Le Comité spécial est l'un de ceux-là, et l'Assemblée générale ferait certes bien de le renforcer et de lui donner les moyens d'achever sa tâche jusqu'au bout.

60. Je réserve le droit de ma délégation d'intervenir à nouveau dans le cas où un ou plusieurs projets de résolution seraient soumis à l'Assemblée sur cette question.

61. M. MOD (Hongrie): Aujourd'hui, trois ans après l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)], nous pouvons tirer plusieurs enseignements de la manière dont elle a été appliquée. Trois ans, ce ne semble pas être beaucoup. Mais le caractère même de notre travail aux Nations Unies ne nous permet pas d'attendre indéfiniment. C'est pendant que nos travaux sont en cours qu'il faut tirer les enseignements ou trouver les solutions conformes à la situation changeante.

62. Nous pouvons nous rappeler quelle lutte a précédé l'adoption de cette déclaration, issue de nombreux compromis. Les principes y énoncés sont devenus, depuis 1960, une force matérielle pour les peuples vivant sous le joug colonial et luttant contre le colonialisme et pour les autres peuples du monde qui se solidarisent avec eux. Il est hors de doute que l'accélération du processus de décolonisation est en grande mesure attribuable au fait que, par l'adoption de la Déclaration, l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'est déclarée, elle aussi, sans équivoque, en faveur de l'égalité des peuples. La Charte même comprend le principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples. En 1960, lorsque la situation internationale le rendait possible, la Déclaration a énoncé l'idée de la liquidation définitive du système colonial.

63. Ce faisant, la Déclaration a sonné le glas d'un phénomène concomitant naturel d'une forme sociale historiquement déterminée, de la société capitaliste.

64. Il est un fait incontestable que, bien que la formation d'empires et l'oppression des peuples aient été des symptômes permanents au cours de l'histoire de l'humanité, la notion de l'empire colonial, toutefois, est, sur les plans historique et social, inséparable de celle de capitalisme. Permettez-moi de m'appuyer sur l'autorité de M. Kwame Nkrumah, qui est un des théoriciens éminents des peuples de l'Afrique libre — et je ne soulignerai, à cette occasion, que ce seul aspect de son activité étendue. Dans son livre intitulé Towards Colonial Freedom, il cite ce passage d'un discours d'Albert Sarraut, ministre des colonies du Gouvernement français au cours des années de 1920 à 1930: "L'origine de la colonisation n'est autre qu'une entreprise d'intérêt personnel, l'entreprise unilatérale, égoïste, du plus fort sur le plus faible." Et le président Nkrumah de constater: "Tel est le phénomène de l'agressivité capitaliste européenne, qui a été justement nommé "impérialisme colonial."

65. La Déclaration non seulement dénonce le colonialisme, mais elle dit qu'il est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies, qu'il constitue une grave menace à la paix mondiale et empêche le développement de la coopération internationale. En d'autres termes, elle met hors la loi le colonialisme avec toute son idéologie. On pourrait croire que, trois ans après l'adoption de la Déclaration, ce principe n'est plus contesté. Mais la réalité détruit cette croyance. Ce n'est pas seulement en 1960 que les apologistes du colonialisme ont lutté pour le maintien de leur domination et de leurs droits à l'exploitation. Ils luttent toujours, mais — la situation étant changée — ils le font par des moyens beaucoup plus subtils. Voici trois citations, à titre documentaire, relevées dans la discussion de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale.

66. Le représentant de la République sud-africaine a cité le premier ministre Verwoerd en ces termes:

"L'Afrique du Sud s'efforcera, en toute honnêteté et équité, d'assurer la paix, la prospérité et la justice pour tous, au moyen de l'indépendance politique associée à l'interdépendance économique." [1236ème séance, par. 35.]

67. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni a déclaré:

"Au Royaume-Uni, nous avons toujours considéré que nos colonies dépendantes devraient accéder à l'indépendance et que les territoires coloniaux devraient devenir maîtres de leur propre destinée." [1222ème séance, par. 77.]

Il a ajouté:

"La seule chose qui arrête le transfert des pouvoirs par le Royaume-Uni au gouvernement du pays intéressé, c'est le fait que nous voulons être sûrs que lorsque l'indépendance lui sera accordée ce pays pourra trouver son équilibre économique et qu'il acceptera une constitution qui, dès le jour de l'indépendance, assurera le bien-être de tous les secteurs de la population de ce pays." [Ibid., par. 81.]

68. Et, finalement, le représentant de l'Espagne de dire, au nom du Portugal, qui n'a pas participé à la discussion:

"Il faudrait plutôt rappeler ici l'effort prolongé, sincère, séculaire que le Portugal a accompli pour construire à l'intérieur de ses frontières métropolitaines et d'outre-mer, dans un esprit chrétien, une société multiraciale et égalitaire correspondant à la diversité humaine de ses peuples." [1213ème séance, par. 36.]

69. Vraiment, ce "meilleur des mondes" coloniaux ne vous rappelle-t-il pas le maître Pangloss, ce personnage du roman de Voltaire que je cite maintenant à mon tour. Voici ce qu'il disait:

"Il est démontré, disait-il, que les choses ne peuvent être autrement, car, tout étant fait pour une fin, tout est nécessairement pour la meilleure fin... Les pierres ont été formées pour être taillées et pour en faire des châteaux; aussi, Monseigneur a un très beau château. Le plus grand baron de la province doit être le mieux logé, et, les cochons étant faits pour être mangés, nous mangeons du porc toute l'année. Par conséquent, ceux qui ont avancé que tout est bien ont dit une sottise: il fallait dire que tout est au mieux."

Je tiens à dire que nous autres, les délégations représentant la majorité anticolonialiste de l'Assemblée générale, non seulement nous ne sommes pas d'accord avec nos maîtres Pangloss, mais nous sommes en désaccord avec Candide également, qui estime que Pangloss est "le plus grand philosophe de la province et, par conséquent, de toute la terre". Nous luttons contre eux de façon conséquente, par tous moyens appropriés, pour les démasquer.

70. Pendant les trois ans qui se sont écoulés depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration de 1960, la carte politique du monde a beaucoup changé. Qu'il me soit permis d'ajouter: à son avantage. Chaque année, on a vu l'accession à l'indépendance de nouveaux pays et leur admission à notre organisation. Les progrès réalisés sont donc incontestables. Mais les résultats obtenus, en comparaison avec le but que nous nous sommes proposé, ne sont que des résultats partiels. Des colonies existent toujours en Asie, en Amérique et en Océanie, mais ce qui constitue le plus grand obstacle à la liquidation des vestiges du colonialisme c'est la situation qui règne au sud du continent africain. Les conditions dans lesquelles les peuples vivent là-bas et les luttes qu'ils soutiennent ont déjà été relatées en détail, ces dernières années et cette année également, par nombre de délégations, y compris celle de mon pays. Ce n'est pas la première fois que nous discutons ici la question de "l'alliance impie" internationale qui domine le bloc géographique contigu que forment les territoires de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Rhodésie du Sud et de l'Afrique du Sud.

71. Ce n'est pas la première fois, au cours de l'histoire de l'humanité, que l'opresseur, non content du mal qu'il fait à un peuple opprimé, ne se gêne pas pour s'efforcer d'expliquer pourquoi il est nécessaire qu'il le fasse. Le mal de nos jours, le colonialisme, emploie plus d'une méthode pour camoufler sa face répugnante. L'"explication" que donnent les colons blancs vivant au sud du continent africain — soit en Afrique du Sud, soit en Rhodésie, soit dans les colonies portugaises — est la discrimination raciale ou, plus précisément, la prétendue théorie de la supériorité de l'homme à la peau blanche.

72. Etant donné la profusion des informations qui ont déjà été fournies à ce propos, je désire avant tout en tirer quelques conclusions.

1) La discrimination raciale est l'un des aspects du colonialisme qui est, à son tour, un phénomène historique qui révèle le caractère d'exploitation du système capitaliste.

2) La base théorique des méthodes de la discrimination raciale pratiquée au sud de l'Afrique est identique à la théorie du génocide adoptée par l'Allemagne hitlérienne, théorie qui a déjà été réfutée historiquement, politiquement, ainsi que scientifiquement. Voici pourtant ce que The Sunday Tribune of Durban écrit dans un éditorial:

"En tant que Sud-Africains, nous nous opposons fermement à l'intégration raciale. Nous ne voyons aucune justification biologique ou même morale pour suivre un telle voie et, de toute façon, en effet, nous ne la voulons pas."

3) Le maintien de la discrimination raciale pratiquée au sud du continent africain aurait déjà été depuis longtemps rendu impossible dans les conditions locales des forces opposées si les partisans de la discrimination raciale ne jouissaient pas de l'assistance politique, économique et militaire d'un groupe de pays qui, étant tous membres du bloc militaire de l'OTAN et vivant tous dans le cadre du mode de production capitaliste, estiment que le soutien de la discrimination raciale et leurs propres principes de politique extérieure sont compatibles.

4) Une des causes principales de ce fait réside dans la circonstance qu'il y a dans la plupart de ces pays — comme il a déjà été souligné dans les débats en commissions — des groupements économiques qui exercent une grande influence politique et qui sont matériellement intéressés à la possession des ressources en matières premières et à l'exploitation de la main-d'œuvre des territoires administrés dans le cadre de la discrimination raciale. Voici un autre exemple. Chester Bowles, dans son livre intitulé Africa's Challenge to America, écrit:

"Nous avons vu comment l'industrie américaine, en temps de guerre comme en temps de paix, est de plus en plus tributaire de certains minéraux clefs africains. Si le volcan sud-africain en ébullition faisait éruption, ou si l'équilibre instable des forces au Congo était rompu, notre position, à l'âge des fusées nucléaires, pourrait être irrémédiablement compromise^{2/}."

5) Pour éliminer la discrimination raciale, il ne suffit pas de changer la situation intenable qui règne au sud du continent africain; il faut encore modifier la politique extérieure des pays qui la soutiennent.

6) La théorie néfaste de la discrimination raciale est pire qu'une maladie épidémique des plus dangereuses. Elle empoisonne l'atmosphère à l'échelle nationale, ce qui est démontré par l'exemple de l'Allemagne d'avant la seconde guerre mondiale et, aujourd'hui aussi, par l'exemple de certains pays non africains. Elle empoisonne l'atmosphère sur le plan international également. Elle excite les méfiances entre les pays. Elle est une des causes qui ont entraîné la seconde guerre mondiale déclenchée en Europe, et elle peut amener le déclenchement d'une autre conflagration, en Afrique. Il faut comprendre, une fois pour toutes, que ni la couleur de la peau ni d'autres traits extérieurs n'assurent à un individu, à un groupe ou à un pays la supériorité sur les autres. L'espèce humaine tout entière forme un seul groupe racial.

73. Je veux enfin souligner que les crimes commis sur la base de l'idéologie de la discrimination raciale au sud du continent africain entraînent la responsabilité collective de l'OTAN entière, de tous les pays membres de l'OTAN, grands et petits également, responsabilité pour avoir permis que les facilités de leur organisation soient utilisées comme moyens modernes d'oppression des peuples, d'oppression coloniale. De plus, la responsabilité collective retombera sur l'ensemble des Nations Unies si l'Organisation ne prend pas les mesures nécessaires pour mettre fin à cet état de choses.

74. La troisième question dont je désire m'occuper dans le cadre de la présente discussion est également au nombre des problèmes qui revêtent un caractère plus général. De nos jours, on reconnaît de plus en plus, même au sein de l'ONU, que la situation internationale actuelle est pertinemment caractérisée par la conception de la coexistence pacifique des différents régimes sociaux.

75. La question se pose donc de savoir quelle est l'interdépendance entre la coexistence pacifique et la décolonisation ou, en d'autres termes, l'application de la Déclaration, les questions relatives aux luttes de libération nationale, les travaux et les tâches du Comité des Vingt-Quatre. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni, dans son discours du 1er octobre 1963, a donné à cette question la réponse suivante:

"J'espère qu'on me pardonnera de prononcer quelques paroles de mise en garde: très certainement, en envisageant des guerres de libération, soit pour modifier l'orientation de la politique coloniale portugaise, soit pour obliger le Gouvernement sud-africain à abandonner sa politique d'apartheid, certains risquent de tomber dans l'erreur qu'ils dénoncent si vigoureusement chez d'autres. La leçon du XXème siècle et de l'ère nucléaire, la même leçon pour les Africains, pour les Asiatiques et pour les Européens, est que la force ne peut jamais rien résoudre et qu'il faut résister aux emballements politiques, si puissants soient-ils, qui inspirent le désir de recourir à la force." [1222ème séance, par. 60.]

76. Il est vrai qu'au siècle nucléaire il appartient à tout le monde d'œuvrer pour éviter une guerre mondiale nucléaire, pour empêcher un suicide collectif. C'est l'un des piliers sur lesquels repose l'idée de la coexistence pacifique. Mais la coexistence pacifique n'est pas un moyen de perpétuer le système colonial, et ne pourra jamais être considérée comme tel.

77. La logique qui peut être dégagée du discours précité se présente un peu comme suit. Depuis des siècles déjà, le Portugal met au pillage et soumet à l'oppression les peuples de ses colonies. Jusqu'ici, les peuples opprimés n'ont pas mené de guerres de libération organisées. Voilà qui est juste et bien, ce statu quo pacifique. Le Portugal massacrait les fils de peuples étrangers "dans des conditions pacifiques". Ce n'est pas une agression, c'est le statu quo. Et si les peuples des colonies portugaises se sont soulevés maintenant pour chasser les occupants portugais ouvertement par la force, ce n'est pas bien, car cela modifie le statu quo prétendument pacifique et, par conséquent, constitue une guerre. La guerre de libération doit donc être abandonnée. Mais si les colons racistes massacrent les indigènes et leurs leaders et les enferment dans des ghettos en Afrique du Sud et en Rhodésie du Sud, si l'OTAN fournit pour ces mêmes colons blancs toutes les armes nécessaires à leur politique d'oppression sanguinaire, si l'OTAN met à la disposition du Portugal toutes sortes d'armes d'extermination, depuis les bombes au napalm jusqu'aux avions, aux fins de la guerre contre les Angolais, qui luttent pour la liberté, tout cela ne contredit pas "la leçon du XXème siècle", ce n'est que la défense du statu quo. Et il semble que la violation des accords conclus dans le cas de la Guyane britannique ne soit pas non plus en contradiction avec "la leçon du XXème siècle", puisque le manque de parole de la part du Royaume-Uni a eu pour but le maintien du statu quo, le maintien de la sujétion coloniale de la Guyane britannique.

^{2/} Chester Bowles, Africa's Challenge to America, Berkeley et Los Angeles, University of California Press, 1956, p. 100.

78. En d'autres termes, la délégation du Royaume-Uni juge que les guerres pour l'oppression du peuple, visant à maintenir le statu quo par la force des armes, sont justifiées, ne sont pas des guerres et ne troublent pas la coexistence pacifique.

79. Nous ne pouvons pas être d'accord sur cette opinion, car cela signifierait la falsification pure et simple de l'idée même de la coexistence pacifique. La révolution n'est pas en effet un article d'exportation. Mais ce que les patriotes angolais veulent n'est pas une indépendance d'exportation; ils veulent recouvrer l'indépendance de leur propre peuple. C'est là leur droit pour autant que, par exemple, le peuple anglais ou le peuple portugais ont droit à leur propre indépendance. Et, par ailleurs, la contre-révolution n'est pas non plus un article d'exportation. Néanmoins, les forces armées portugaises engagées en Afrique s'efforcent précisément d'y exporter la contre-révolution, le colonialisme, avec l'aide matérielle et militaire de l'OTAN, s'appuyant sur les armes fournies par l'OTAN et sur les bases militaires de l'OTAN.

80. Si l'OTAN, y compris le Portugal, donnait effet aux résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité en abandonnant la guerre qu'il mène contre les peuples de l'Angola et de la Guinée dite portugaise, elle donnerait suite, par là même, à ce que le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni a appelé "la leçon du XXème siècle". Nous sommes d'avis que dans la seconde moitié du XXème siècle, à l'époque de la coexistence pacifique, il est un principe fondamental qui veut que tous les peuples soient égaux, sans distinction de couleur ou de race, et qu'aucun peuple ne puisse être empêché par la force de se délivrer du joug colonial.

81. Si le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni dit, dans l'esprit de la Déclaration: "Nous avons accepté sans réserve le principe de la libre détermination. Nous avons accepté que la majorité gouverne" (ibid., par. 82), et s'il fournit lui-même en même temps des armes au Portugal, qui est l'agresseur de l'Angola, et à la minorité raciste des colons blancs de la Rhodésie du Sud, il est évident qu'il est le premier à violer le principe qu'il a lui-même formulé pour le XXème siècle en disant que "la force ne peut jamais rien résoudre". Et, qui plus est, qualifier d'agresseur le peuple angolais qui lutte contre l'agresseur portugais est, pour le moins, une logique à l'envers.

82. Enfin, et avant que les manœuvres de diversion ne soient commencées, je voudrais préciser à ce propos que le peuple hongrois, s'appuyant sur les principes du socialisme et sur ceux de la coexistence pacifique, est solidaire des patriotes d'Angola et des autres pays africains qui luttent pour la liberté. Mais notre solidarité ne revient pas à dire que nous désirons soutenir la guerre froide, mettons, contre le Royaume-Uni. Nous reconnaissons le droit à l'indépendance du peuple angolais et des autres peuples coloniaux, tout comme du peuple britannique. Ce n'est donc pas la guerre froide, mais l'observation conséquente des principes de l'ONU. Si les colonisateurs en faisaient autant, il serait possible d'éviter la guerre chaude ou froide, et le principe de la coexistence pacifique pourrait remporter une nouvelle victoire importante.

83. Pour terminer, je voudrais encore faire quelques remarques sur les activités du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, que nous avons suivies avec une vive attention. Nous estimons que le Comité accomplit une tâche très importante. Se conformant à l'esprit de la Déclaration, il a fait beaucoup plus pour mettre un terme au colonialisme que n'importe quel organe de l'ONU jamais saisi de cette question et de questions similaires.

84. Ma délégation estime que l'Assemblée générale doit confirmer les décisions que le Comité a prises au sujet des territoires coloniaux. A notre avis, il faut encore adopter, tout comme ces dernières années, une résolution concernant les tâches générales du Comité. Cette résolution pourrait constater, notamment: "que le maintien du honteux système colonial, qui affecte toujours directement une cinquantaine de millions d'hommes, est inconciliable avec la Charte des Nations Unies et avec la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux; que le colonialisme constitue, dans toutes ses manifestations, une grave menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales; que l'Assemblée générale condamne énergiquement l'attitude des puissances coloniales, qui sabotent l'exécution des résolutions des Nations Unies concernant la liquidation du colonialisme; qu'il faut accorder une attention particulière aux activités des sociétés minières étrangères et autres monopoles internationaux établis sur les territoires coloniaux, et qui sont des instruments importants de la continuation du système colonial.

85. Ma délégation suggère encore à l'Assemblée générale de lancer un appel exigeant des puissances coloniales la cessation immédiate de toute opération militaire contre les populations autochtones, le retrait de toutes leurs forces armées et de toutes leurs missions militaires, la liquidation des bases militaires établies sur les territoires coloniaux, la garantie aux populations locales du libre exercice des droits de l'homme et des droits civiques, l'abrogation immédiate de toutes les lois et ordonnances inspirées par la discrimination raciale, la mise en liberté immédiate de tous les prisonniers politiques et le transfert immédiat des pouvoirs aux représentants du peuple.

86. Ma délégation est d'avis que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre doit être chargé de suivre avec attention, à l'avenir, la situation qui existe dans les territoires coloniaux et, s'il y a nécessité, d'informer l'Assemblée générale et le Conseil de sécurité des événements. Enfin, le Comité devrait faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale, lors de la dix-neuvième session, sur la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration.

87. Après la longue domination de la honteuse exploitation coloniale, à l'époque où les sciences contribuent, avec des résultats sans précédent, au bien-être de l'humanité, il est grand temps de rayer le colonialisme, une fois pour toutes, des pages de l'histoire. Dans leur programme élaboré à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba, les chefs d'Etat^{3/} de 32 pays indépendants africains ont exprimé leur volonté qu'il en soit ainsi.

88. Jusqu'à présent, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a, elle aussi, contribué notablement à la liquidation du colonialisme. Le devoir de tous les Etats Membres est de mettre tout en œuvre pour continuer et achever ce travail, dans l'esprit de la Déclaration. Et nous pouvons espérer obtenir le succès, d'autant plus que les forces de l'anticolonialisme augmentent d'année en année au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies également.

89. Au nom de ma délégation, je désire déclarer une fois de plus que, dans leur lutte contre le colonialisme, les nouveaux pays indépendants peuvent compter toujours sur l'appui effectif du peuple hongrois.

M. Thors (Islande), vice-président, prend la présidence.

90. M. Taïeb SLIM (Tunisie): Le 14 décembre 1960, au cours de sa quinzième session, l'Assemblée générale a adopté à l'unanimité la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Un tournant décisif a été ainsi pris dans l'histoire des relations internationales, confirmant l'évolution de notre siècle vers la reconnaissance de la suprématie de l'homme et l'attachement aux principes de liberté et de dignité.

91. Cette déclaration posait un jalon nouveau dans l'histoire universelle et couronnait les efforts inlassables des pays épris de paix et de liberté et profondément attachés aux droits fondamentaux de l'homme, à la dignité, à la valeur de la personne humaine, à l'égalité de droits des peuples et des nations, grandes et petites.

92. Tout en mettant fin à un long chapitre de l'histoire, caractérisé par la domination, la subjugation et l'exploitation, la Déclaration ouvrait de nouvelles perspectives d'une ère de coopération, d'égalité, de détente internationale et laissait poindre, devant les peuples encore dépendants, une lueur d'espoir pour leur libération prochaine et la reconnaissance des droits inhérents à leur condition d'homme.

93. En adoptant la résolution 1514 (XV), l'Assemblée générale a été unanime à condamner le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes ainsi que toute domination étrangère. D'un coup, les principes traditionnels erronés qui étaient les fondements de l'expansionnisme européen se sont effondrés, les nouveaux rapports préconisés sont devenus plus humains parce que désormais fondés sur le droit à l'autodétermination, sur l'égalité et la solidarité internationale.

94. L'adoption à l'unanimité de la Déclaration a marqué la volonté de tous d'accepter cet ordre nouveau et a consacré le règne de la dignité humaine et de la justice. Aussi, le processus de décolonisation ainsi amorcé devrait-il se trouver accéléré; les peuples dépendants, à la fois anxieux et optimistes, attendent l'application des nouveaux principes, reconnus unanimement et sans équivoque comme étant dorénavant la pierre angulaire des relations internationales.

95. Une fois ces principes établis, il restait à les appliquer et à nous débarrasser de toute autre doctrine qui serait en contradiction avec eux et à créer ainsi les conditions nécessaires à l'éclosion de cet ordre nouveau. Un comité spécial, dont le nombre des membres, de 17 à l'origine, est passé à 24 en 1962, a été formé pour promouvoir l'application de la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

96. Pendant l'année écoulée, le Comité spécial s'est réuni sans désespérer pour chercher les voies et moyens propres à faciliter la réalisation des objectifs de la résolution 1514 (XV). Le Comité spécial s'est attelé à cette tâche exaltante avec ardeur et avec une foi inébranlable dans les principes de la Charte et de la Déclaration.

97. Il serait vain de vous entretenir de ses travaux et inutile de dresser un inventaire de ses réalisations. Le rapport exhaustif qui est soumis à votre attention [A/5446/Rev.1] est explicite. Cependant, la délégation tunisienne, membre de ce comité depuis sa création, voudrait, avec la permission du Président, faire part de son opinion sur la somme de travail accompli.

98. Je dois avouer que les résultats sont bien en deçà de ce que nous laissait espérer l'adoption unanime de la résolution 1514 (XV) et ne sont pas à la mesure des efforts prodigieux déployés par les membres du Comité. Je préciserai tout de suite que le retard que constatera l'Assemblée dans l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance n'est nullement imputable à notre comité, car le colonialisme reste une force réelle que notre comité a, certes, ébranlée, mais qu'il n'a pas pu complètement neutraliser.

99. Des territoires sous administration coloniale étudiés par le Comité spécial, trois seulement ont vu la date de leur accession à l'indépendance fixée par la Puissance administrante: ce sont le Kenya et Zanzibar, qui doivent accéder à l'indépendance au début de ce mois, et Malte, au printemps de 1964.

100. La Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland restent toujours dans l'expectative depuis la dissolution de la Fédération de l'Afrique centrale, et, d'atermolements en atermolements, la Puissance administrante ne se résout pas à fixer la date de leur accession à l'indépendance. Le problème de la Rhodésie du Sud reste entier malgré l'émotion de la conscience universelle. Le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland demeurent victimes des hésitations de la puissance tutélaire et soumis aux caprices d'un voisin menaçant et par trop entreprenant. Le Sud-Ouest africain trafne toujours le boulet d'un mandat anachronique et diffus que le mandataire lui-même continue à contester pour des motifs expansionnistes connus. Le drame de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise et des autres territoires sous domination portugaise ne saurait se dénouer pacifiquement tant que la puissance coloniale restera attachée à des concepts politiques erronés et à des fictions juridiques. En Guyane britannique, une solution est en vue. Elle n'est certainement pas parfaite, mais elle doit déboucher dans l'avenir le plus proche sur l'indépendance de ce territoire. La Gambie, qui a accédé à l'autonomie interne, voit son indépendance retardée pour des raisons étrangères aux dispositions de la résolution. Gibraltar reste soumis à un statut vieux de plus de deux siècles et que ne justifie que la raison du plus fort. Fernando Póo, Rio Muni ne voient pas de terme à leur exploitation et à leur subjugation. Les îles Fidji restent encore, sous prétexte du désaccord des communautés ethniques de ce territoire, sous domination coloniale. Ifni, Melilla, Ceuta, véritables enclaves à l'intérieur du territoire marocain, continuent à réclamer leur rattachement à la mère patrie. Nous souhaitons que l'Espagne réponde enfin à l'appel de la raison. Il en va de même du Sahara dit espagnol. Aden et les territoires de l'Arabie du Sud sont encore sous domination britannique, et il importe qu'ils accèdent à l'indépendance au plus tôt et puissent être en mesure de décider librement de leur sort.

101. Je n'ai parlé que de ceux des territoires colonisés que le Comité spécial a examinés. Il en existe d'autres qui restent soumis au joug de la colonisation et à l'exploitation étrangère. Leur nombre est important, et je ne citerai pour exemple que ceux qui sont mentionnés dans la liste préliminaire établie par le Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1 (annexe I)], liste qui, d'ailleurs, est loin d'être complète. Le nombre de ces territoires s'élève à 64. Le Royaume-Uni, le Portugal, l'Espagne, les Etats-Unis, la Nouvelle-Zélande, la France et l'Australie se les partagent. Il en est d'autres, enfin, non mentionnés dans la liste, qui méritent toute notre attention. Je ne citerai que certains territoires de la péninsule Arabique, tels Oman, Mascate et Hadramaout, ainsi que la Somalie dite française. L'état de ces territoires est d'autant plus désespéré que nous avons tendance à les oublier. Les conditions inhumaines et avilissantes qui sont les leurs sont une négation des droits de l'homme.

102. Cette énumération n'a pour objet que de permettre à l'Assemblée de mesurer l'ampleur du travail qui reste à effectuer et d'évaluer par comparaison les résultats — maigres hélas! — obtenus jusqu'ici. La cadence du processus de décolonisation est malheureusement lente, et des millions d'hommes encore soumis à la honte de la domination étrangère en pâtissent et continuent à se morfondre dans leurs souffrances et dans leur désespoir.

103. L'Assemblée générale, consciente de ses responsabilités, a adopté la résolution historique 1514 (XV) et a chargé un Comité spécial de l'application de cette résolution. La Tunisie faillirait à son devoir si elle n'éclairait l'Assemblée sur le déroulement de ce processus et ne l'informait des obstacles que les puissances coloniales opposent à l'application de la Déclaration. Les puissances administrantes non seulement refusent de coopérer avec le Comité spécial, mais en outre s'évertuent, par des manœuvres de toutes sortes, à le discréditer et à compromettre son travail. Elles ne se contentent pas seulement d'interdire l'accès de ces territoires à tout organe émanant du Comité, mais elles refusent aussi de lui transmettre des renseignements complets les concernant. Le refus de la Puissance administrante de permettre l'entrée à Aden et en Guyane britannique des missions d'enquête et d'information en est un exemple.

104. Ce palmarès peu brillant — je le reconnais — pousse à quelque pessimisme. Les Membres de l'Organisation — j'entends ceux qui sont mis en cause aujourd'hui — considéreraient-ils que l'adoption de la Déclaration n'était qu'un acte symbolique? Les puissances administrantes, en s'obstinant à refuser leur coopération au Comité spécial, croyaient peut-être réussir à en faire un organe symbolique qui se scléroserait et sombrerait dans la stérilité. Pensaient-elles que leur participation passive aux travaux du Comité leur donnerait une meilleure conscience envers les populations administrées, tout en leur procurant un répit sur le plan colonial, et leur épargnerait la censure de la conscience universelle? Visent-elles au discrédit et à la déconfiture du Comité spécial, afin de persuader les populations dominées qu'elles ont tort d'avoir un espoir quelconque en l'action des Nations Unies?

105. De ces manœuvres, le colonialisme n'a rien à gagner, car il est condamné à disparaître. Soucieux de ménager leur susceptibilité et désireux d'obtenir leur coopération, le Comité spécial a voulu associer les puissances administrantes à l'œuvre de décolonisation. Il était en droit d'attendre d'elles une coopération loyale et sincère. Malheureusement, le Comité s'est heurté à un refus, parfois nuancé, mais toujours constant. Cette attitude peu réaliste ne changera rien au processus de décolonisation. Seuls les moyens d'y parvenir changeront. L'Assemblée générale saura, espérons-le, préconiser les moyens nouveaux susceptibles d'aider le Comité spécial — ou tout autre — à mettre en œuvre la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance d'une manière efficace.

106. L'Assemblée générale se doit de prendre de toute urgence des mesures fermes pour vaincre la réticence des puissances coloniales et éliminer le colonialisme, qui continue à causer beaucoup de souffrances, à sacrifier des milliers de vies humaines, à provoquer des conflits armés et à menacer la paix et la sécurité, non seulement dans des régions isolées du globe, mais dans le monde entier.

107. Les chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement africains, réunis à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba, ont été sérieusement préoccupés par les problèmes soulevés par la décolonisation de l'Afrique et, convaincus de la nécessité d'accélérer l'accession inconditionnelle à l'indépendance nationale de tous les territoires africains encore sous domination étrangère, ils ont proclamé que la plus grande tâche qui reste à accomplir est la libération définitive de tous les Africains qui se trouvent encore sous le joug du colonialisme.

108. Ils ont été unanimes à reconnaître qu'il n'y aurait ni paix, ni bonheur, ni repos tant que d'autres Africains continueraient à geindre dans les chaînes de l'esclavage, et ils ont déclaré solennellement que l'occupation du territoire africain était une injure à leur propre liberté et une menace à leur indépendance.

Ils se sont engagés à tout mettre en œuvre pour mettre un terme à l'occupation étrangère en Afrique et pour aider les opprimés à recouvrer leur indépendance et leur dignité.

109. Ils ont invité, dans la résolution sur la décolonisation adoptée par la Conférence, les puissances coloniales "à prendre les mesures nécessaires pour assurer l'application immédiate de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et ont insisté sur le fait que leur obstination à conserver en Afrique des colonies ou des semi-colonies constituait une menace pour la paix du continent".

110. Si les puissances coloniales restent sourdes à leur appel, ils n'hésiteront pas à recourir à tous les moyens pour en finir avec le colonialisme en terre d'Afrique.

111. Du haut de cette tribune, j'en appelle aux puissances coloniales pour qu'elles réalisent que cette situation, aussi dangereuse qu'elle soit, contient des possibilités de coopération. A cette fin, elles doivent fonder et développer leurs relations avec l'Afrique sur le principe fondamental et sacré selon lequel tous les peuples, sans exception, ont le droit inaliénable à l'indépendance complète, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national. Elles doivent considérer une fois pour toutes que le mouvement général des peuples vers leur émancipation est un phénomène irréversible et irrésistible et que toute tentative directe ou indirecte de résistance à ce mouvement non seulement est immorale et contraire au droit des gens, mais est d'avance vouée à l'échec le plus certain.

112. Les puissances qui continuent d'assumer la responsabilité de l'administration des territoires coloniaux se doivent enfin de contribuer à assurer les meilleures chances de succès à ce mouvement historique dont dépendent en grande partie l'avenir et le bonheur de toute l'humanité.

113. Il serait grand dommage que le souci égoïste de préserver certains avantages politiques ou économiques à caractère immédiat et le maintien de certaines méthodes incompatibles avec la liberté des peuples viennent aggraver la situation et élargir ainsi le fossé existant. Par surcroît, cette situation acculerait les peuples geignant sous le joug colonialiste à recourir à l'usage de la force brutale, avec son cortège de malheurs et de misère, pour recouvrer leur droit à la liberté, à la dignité et à l'indépendance.

114. Je me réserve le droit d'intervenir au cours de ce débat sur d'autres points du rapport du Comité spécial.

115. M. SONN VOEUNSAI (Cambodge): Au moment où l'Assemblée générale va examiner le second rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (A/5446/Rev.1), la délégation cambodgienne, qui est membre de ce comité, voudrait faire part de ses considérations sur les problèmes de la décolonisation en général et sur les meilleures conditions à réaliser pour que l'œuvre entreprise par les Nations Unies soit couronnée de succès.

116. La décolonisation est une des plus grandes préoccupations de notre temps, au même titre que le désarmement et le développement économique. C'est un des objectifs de la Charte, qui a proclamé la foi de tous les peuples dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, et qui a reconnu le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. L'Article 73 de la Charte a défini les règles essentielles que doivent suivre tous les Etats Membres qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes.

117. La Déclaration historique qui a fait l'objet de la résolution 1514 (XV), du 14 décembre 1960, a proclamé la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Elle exige que des mesures immédiates soient prises dans tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés.

118. Si ma délégation a cru devoir rappeler ces principes et ces règles, que nous avons tous adoptés, c'est parce qu'elle a toujours pensé que nous devrions arriver, comme a dit l'autre jour le Secrétaire général, à une solution par la force des arguments plutôt que par l'argument de la force. Pour nous, la décolonisation est une nécessité et un devoir. C'est donc pour nous un objectif qu'il faudrait atteindre à tout prix. De ce fait, elle doit concerner toutes les nations éprises de paix, de justice et de liberté. On a parlé, en matière de coopération internationale, d'unir tous les efforts pour lutter contre la haine, la faim, la maladie, l'ignorance et la misère. Mais nous devons aussi unir nos efforts pour lutter contre la privation de liberté, contre l'assujettissement et contre l'oppression.

119. Le gouvernement et le peuple cambodgiens, en ce qui les concerne, ne ménagent et ne ménageront jamais leurs forces pour aider les peuples subjugués à se libérer. Tant à la Conférence de Bandoung⁴/ qu'à celle de Belgrade⁵/, Son Altesse Royale le prince Norodom Sihanouk, chef de l'Etat du Cambodge, s'est prononcé sans équivoque. Ayant lui-même entrepris la croisade de l'indépendance pour son pays, il est intimement pénétré de l'idée de la libération des peuples assujettis. Dans un de ses récents articles, il a écrit: "Pour les peuples afro-asiatiques ou latino-américains, il est essentiel d'obtenir d'abord et avant tout la liberté pour leur pays." Il a parlé aussi de "la magie qui s'attache au mot indépendance" et il a affirmé que "pour les peuples colonisés, l'indépendance prime tout; tout, c'est-à-dire la démocratie, la richesse, le bien-être, et même l'ordre et la paix".

120. Mais en face de cette détermination, le prince Norodom Sihanouk a toujours préconisé la modération, ⁵/ Conférence des chefs d'Etat ou de gouvernement des pays non alignés, réunie du 1er au 6 septembre 1961.

la sagesse et la plus grande objectivité. Il a dit, et je le cite de nouveau:

"Notre force nouvelle, une force qui ne fera que s'accroître, s'exprimera d'autant mieux qu'elle refusera de se laisser entraîner par les rancœurs d'un passé douloureux. Et c'est pourquoi j'ai la conviction que notre voix sera plus impressionnante, mieux écoutée, si elle s'élève sans haine et sans passion."

121. Conformément à cette ligne de conduite, la délégation cambodgienne s'est toujours abstenue, au cours des travaux du Comité spécial, de revenir sur "un passé douloureux"; malgré les déceptions que suscite en elle l'attitude des puissances administrantes, elle a évité de formuler des critiques ou des accusations à leur encontre. Mais, avec obstination, elle n'a cessé de coopérer à la recherche des voies et moyens les plus appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance.

122. Après huit mois de travail presque ininterrompu, le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre soumet maintenant à l'Assemblée le résultat de ses travaux, qui portent sur 26 territoires, grands et petits, lesquels totalisent une population de 37 millions d'habitants pour une superficie de plus de 6 millions de kilomètres carrés.

123. Avant de relater ces travaux et de faire état du point de vue de ma délégation sur chacun des territoires examinés, je voudrais attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur la constatation à laquelle le Comité est parvenu. On lit dans son rapport:

"Tout en prenant note des progrès réalisés depuis en matière de décolonisation, le Comité spécial a conscience que cette décolonisation, dans certaines parties de l'Afrique et ailleurs, ne s'effectue pas à un rythme satisfaisant." [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. 1er, par. 45.]

124. Il nous appartient donc de nous pencher sur les raisons qui ont motivé ce ralentissement injustifiable. De l'avis de ma délégation, la principale cause est l'insuffisance, pour ne pas dire le manque de coopération de la part des puissances administrantes. Déjà, l'année dernière, l'Assemblée générale avait constaté, dans sa résolution 1810 (XVII), l'attitude négative et le refus délibéré de certaines d'entre elles de coopérer avec le Comité spécial; elle a tenu à prier ces puissances administrantes de prêter leur entière coopération à cet organisme.

125. Voyons maintenant quels sont les arguments qui ont été avancés pour refuser cette pleine et entière coopération.

126. Certaines puissances administrantes ont essayé de contester la compétence du Comité spécial, et même de l'Organisation, en affirmant que les territoires qu'elles administrent leur appartiennent en propre. Or, l'Assemblée des Etats Membres a tenu, par sa résolution 1541 (XV), à définir les principes qui doivent guider ces derniers pour déterminer la nature de ces territoires; elle s'est, en outre, prononcée chaque fois à une très grande majorité sur des cas spécifiques comme celui des territoires sous administration du Portugal et celui du Sud-Ouest africain.

127. D'autres, tout en admettant le principe de la décolonisation, estiment que celle-ci doit être effectuée selon leur conception propre. De ce fait, elles méconnaissent complètement la résolution 1514 (XV), qui a précisé que les transferts de pouvoirs doivent être effectués "sans aucune condition ni réserve" et que "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique et social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance".

128. Pour les unes comme pour les autres, l'intervention des Nations Unies en général et celle du Comité spécial en particulier constituent une ingérence dans leurs affaires intérieures. A ce compte-là, même le règlement des questions de paix et de sécurité internationales, de celle du désarmement pourrait constituer une ingérence étrangère.

129. La coopération des puissances administrantes, le Comité spécial l'a constamment recherchée. Il avait érigé en règle l'invitation à ces puissances de participer à la discussion sur les territoires qu'elles administrent; dans la plupart des cas, il a suggéré l'envoi de sous-comités pour avoir les entretiens les plus approfondis avec les gouvernements intéressés. Mais il y a eu des fins de non-recevoir et des refus manifestes de coopérer de la part de certaines de ces puissances.

130. La deuxième cause réside dans le peu de considération pour les décisions qui ont été prises. Les résolutions qui ont été adoptées par l'Assemblée générale et le Conseil de sécurité — les plus hautes instances de l'Organisation — ne sont pas mises en application. Je sais qu'il ne s'agit en somme que de recommandations, mais il est évident que les recommandations ne sont formulées que pour être suivies; sinon, elles n'auraient aucune raison d'être.

131. Il y a aussi l'attitude hésitante, quelque peu équivoque, de certaines grandes puissances. J'ai vu dit qu'il faudrait que tous les Etats Membres unissent tous leurs efforts pour mettre fin à toute domination étrangère. Au stade actuel de nos travaux, il n'est plus possible de nous contenter de déclarations d'intentions, de professions de foi; il nous faut des actes et des prises de position claires et fermes. L'Assemblée générale avait demandé l'année dernière au Comité spécial [Résolution 1810 (XVII)] de ne lui proposer que des mesures concrètes en vue de l'application intégrale de la Déclaration; si ces mesures sont adoptées par elle au cours de la présente session, il faut qu'elles soient appliquées scrupuleusement.

132. Je voudrais signaler aussi que le Comité spécial a dû faire face à de nombreuses difficultés. Vous savez tous qu'il avait adopté certaines méthodes et procédures pour s'acquitter de ses fonctions. L'Assemblée générale en avait pris note avec satisfaction [ibid.]. Il s'agit, en plus des débats généraux au cours des réunions du Comité spécial, du recours à l'audition des pétitionnaires et à l'envoi des missions de visite ou des sous-comités.

133. Le Comité spécial a reçu un grand nombre de communications écrites et il a entendu de nombreux pétitionnaires. Je pense qu'il doit continuer à le faire et, à ce sujet, ma délégation est pleinement en faveur de la liberté et de la sécurité qui doivent être accordées à tout pétitionnaire qui désire se rendre à New York pour se présenter devant un organisme des Nations Unies. La question qui a été soulevée au sein de la Quatrième Commission il y a quelques semaines doit être résolue dans ce sens.

134. En ce qui concerne les missions de visite, le rapport du Comité spécial mentionne notamment ce qui suit:

"Le Comité spécial tient à souligner que, en refusant à un groupe de membres du Comité spécial l'accès d'un territoire relevant de son mandat, la puissance administrante intéressée l'a privé de l'un des moyens les plus efficaces de s'acquitter de la tâche que lui a confiée l'Assemblée générale, à savoir l'examen de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux." [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. Ier, par. 55.]

135. Dans le cas du Royaume-Uni, celui-ci a dit qu'une mission de visite dans un territoire "constituait une ingérence dans les affaires de ce territoire et qu'il ne pouvait partager ses responsabilités avec les Nations Unies" [ibid., par. 54]. C'est là une fausse conception du rôle que jouent les Nations Unies dans la détermination des aspirations des peuples. En ce qui concerne le Sous-Comité d'Aden, on est allé jusqu'à dire qu'il était composé de personnes dont l'impartialité était contestable, et qu'il constituait un organe subversif. Or, je peux assurer l'Assemblée que ce sous-comité a accompli sa tâche en toute objectivité.

136. De l'avis de ma délégation, l'administration d'un territoire par un gouvernement étranger à ce territoire constitue, dans le cadre de la décolonisation, une mission de tutelle. Du moment qu'on a prévu des missions de visite pour les territoires sous tutelle, pourquoi ne pourrait-on pas admettre ces missions pour les territoires qui relèvent de la compétence du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre?

137. Le Comité spécial a éprouvé aussi des difficultés pour établir la liste complète des territoires qu'il devra examiner. Au paragraphe 5 de la résolution 1514 (XV), il est question des territoires sous tutelle, des territoires non autonomes et de tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Le Comité spécial a décidé de s'occuper de cette liste lors de ses réunions en 1964, "sous réserve de toutes autres instructions qu'il l'Assemblée générale voudrait lui donner à sa dix-huitième session" [ibid., par. 47]. Ma délégation souhaite que ces instructions puissent être effectivement données et qu'au besoin un comité ad hoc soit désigné à cet effet.

138. Il y a, enfin, le cas des territoires pour lesquels il y a eu des revendications multiples de souveraineté. En règle générale, ma délégation est en faveur des négociations directes entre les parties intéressées, et elle pense que, en cas d'échec, des commissions de conciliation ou même d'arbitrage seraient nécessaires.

139. J'ai évoqué les différents problèmes de la décolonisation. Il peut y en avoir d'autres qui se poseront à nous, en raison de l'attitude des puissances administrantes et celle de leurs amis ou alliés. Selon la délégation cambodgienne, les règles à suivre pour obtenir une solution satisfaisante doivent découler du principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires intéressés, avec, pour corollaire, le droit de libre détermination. Il s'agit pour nous de nous conformer à la volonté et aux vœux librement exprimés des peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur. Il nous importe donc de réaliser les conditions nécessaires pour que ces consultations s'effectuent selon les dispositions de la Charte, dans le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous.

140. Il me reste maintenant à vous faire part de la position de ma délégation concernant les différents territoires qui ont été examinés par le Comité spécial en 1963.

141. Tout de suite, je voudrais vous dire notre espoir et notre joie de voir que les territoires suivants vont accéder incessamment à l'indépendance: le Kenya le 12 décembre 1963, Zanzibar immédiatement après, la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland au début de l'année 1964, et Malte le 31 mai 1964.

142. D'ores et déjà, nous nous réjouissons de voir bientôt ces pays rejoindre la grande communauté des Etats libres et souverains. Egalement, nous voudrions adresser nos félicitations à la Puissance administrante, le Royaume-Uni, puisque cette puissance est finalement arrivée à mener à bien sa tâche de décolonisation dans ces territoires.

143. Pour Gibraltar et les territoires administrés par l'Espagne, le Comité spécial en reprendra l'étude l'année prochaine. Certaines négociations sont encore nécessaires; il est donc prématuré de se prononcer sur cette question.

144. En ce qui concerne les îles Fidji, la Gambie et les territoires dépendant du Haut-Commissariat — le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland —, le Comité spécial avait prié la Puissance administrante de prendre certaines mesures en vue d'accélérer le processus de la décolonisation. Nous espérons que les efforts nécessaires seront effectués dans le sens demandé et nous réexaminerons la situation dans les mois à venir.

145. La délégation cambodgienne voudrait maintenant s'étendre plus longuement sur les autres territoires examinés.

146. Les questions relatives à la Rhodésie du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain et aux territoires sous administration portugaise ont été discutées longuement par la Quatrième Commission au cours des deux mois passés. La délégation cambodgienne a défini clairement son attitude sur chacune d'elles.

147. Pour la Rhodésie du Sud, dont la population a pleinement droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance, il s'agit de réaliser les conditions qui permettent à tous les habitants sans exception, sans distinction de race, de couleur, de degré d'instruction ou de fortune, de se prononcer librement sur l'avenir de leur pays. Sans cette consultation populaire préalable, il n'est pas juste de transférer les pouvoirs à un gouvernement qui ne représente, en fait, que la minorité blanche de la population du territoire. La dissolution de la Fédération de l'Afrique centrale, décidée à Victoria Falls, est en elle-même une bonne chose, car il ne faut jamais maintenir une association contre la volonté des populations intéressées; mais les conséquences qui découlent de cette dissolution doivent être examinées dans le contexte de l'autodétermination du peuple du Zimbabwe.

148. Pour le Sud-Ouest africain, la décolonisation est d'autant plus urgente que la situation dans ce territoire est aggravée par la politique d'apartheid qui y est pratiquée de tous temps et par les tentatives d'annexion d'une partie ou de la totalité du pays. Au stade actuel de la question — une question qui nous est soumise depuis 17 ans —, nous pensons que nous devons accroître la force de nos arguments par la prise de mesures de coercition appropriées. Le Gouvernement cambodgien, quant à lui, a déjà pris les dispositions nécessaires.

149. Pour les territoires sous administration portugaise, la parole appartient maintenant au Conseil de sécurité, qui va être saisi de cette question. La situation est grave, elle trouble la paix et la sécurité en Afrique et, par extension, elle constitue une menace sérieuse contre la paix et la sécurité internationales. L'attitude du Portugal n'autorise aucun espoir. L'Organisation des Nations Unies, et avec elle le Conseil de sécurité, est maintenant pleinement consciente de ses responsabilités.

150. La situation de la Guyane britannique est pour nous très préoccupante. Voilà un territoire qui aurait dû être indépendant depuis deux ans. Le principe en a été admis par la Puissance administrante, et des élections au suffrage universel ont été effectuées avec toute la régularité voulue. Nous ne pensons pas que l'existence d'une opposition, si forte soit-elle, puisse être considérée comme un obstacle à l'octroi de l'indépendance à ce territoire. Evidemment, la délégation cambodgienne souhaiterait la possibilité d'un accord ou d'un compromis entre les deux principaux partis de la Guyane britannique, et c'est pour cette raison qu'elle est en faveur de l'action du sous-comité de bons offices créé par le Comité spécial.

151. Je voudrais maintenant vous parler de la question d'Aden et des protectorats d'Aden, au sujet de laquelle le Comité spécial a décidé d'envoyer un sous-comité dans les territoires intéressés. Ce sous-comité, qui est chargé de s'informer des vues de la population et d'avoir des entretiens avec la Puissance administrante, n'a pas pu se rendre à Aden et dans les protectorats d'Aden, et n'a même pas pu avoir des conversations avec le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Etant autorisé par le Comité spécial à se rendre, si nécessaire, dans des pays avoisinants, le sous-comité est allé s'informer auprès de toutes les personnes en provenance des territoires intéressés, en République arabe unie, au Yémen, en Arabie Saoudite et en Irak. Il a accompli sa tâche en toute objectivité et il a rapporté fidèlement ce qu'il a vu et entendu.

152. Les recommandations que le sous-comité d'Aden a soumises au Comité spécial, et qui ont été par la suite adoptées par ce dernier [voir A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V, par. 478], découlent des principes suivants, qui ont été généralement admis: premièrement, la reconnaissance du droit de la population du territoire d'Aden et des Protectorats d'Aden à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance; deuxièmement, la nécessité de donner prochainement à la population de ces territoires la possibilité de décider de son avenir. La délégation cambodgienne voudrait déclarer qu'elle est fermement en faveur des mesures qui ont été préconisées, et elle propose leur adoption par l'Assemblée générale.

153. Pour terminer ma déclaration, il me reste à parler des activités futures du Comité spécial chargé de l'étude de la mise en application de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation.

154. Ma délégation estime que nous avons encore une tâche immense à accomplir. Le Comité spécial pourrait la mener à bonne fin si les conditions requises que j'ai mentionnées sont réalisées, et si les méthodes de procédure adoptées peuvent être entièrement appliquées.

155. En ce qui concerne l'action qui pourrait être entreprise au cours de l'année qui vient, et qui se rapporte surtout aux petits territoires, j'approuve entièrement les vues et les suggestions du Président de notre comité spécial, M. Coulibaly; mais je pense aussi que la recherche des solutions aux problèmes de la Rhodésie du Sud, du Sud-Ouest africain et des territoires sous administration portugaise doit être confiée au Conseil de sécurité ou à l'Assemblée générale réunie en session extraordinaire.

156. Ma délégation estime par ailleurs que, modifié ou non, le Comité spécial doit s'en tenir à 24 membres, car une augmentation de ce chiffre pourrait nuire à l'accélération de ses travaux. Elle pense aussi qu'il n'est pas encore possible de fixer une date limite pour l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les pays et peuples coloniaux. Nous pourrions toutefois souhaiter que cette date corresponde au vingtième anniversaire de notre organisation.

157. Pour conclure, je voudrais de nouveau citer Son Altesse royale le prince Norodom Sihanouk, qui a dit:

"Ma pensée va vers tous ceux qui par le monde versent leur sang pour leur liberté et leur indépendance. A ceux-là, je tiens à exprimer notre entière solidarité et notre conviction que le jour est proche où nous aurons la joie de les accueillir parmi nous."

Organisation des travaux

158. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Avant de lever la séance, et comme cela a déjà été annoncé, je dois rappeler aux représentants que la liste des orateurs concernant le point 23 de l'ordre du jour sera close ce soir à 18 heures.

159. La prochaine séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale aura lieu demain matin pour examiner le point 32 de l'ordre du jour. Dès que nous en aurons fini avec l'examen de cette question, nous poursuivrons la discussion générale du point 23. Mardi après-midi, c'est-à-dire demain, nous tiendrons une séance plénière au cours de laquelle nous poursuivrons la discussion générale du point 23, et mercredi nous tiendrons trois séances plénières: une le matin, une l'après-midi et une le soir, pour terminer le débat général sur ce même point.

La séance est levée à 13 heures.

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

33. M. PUREVJAL (Mongolie): L'Assemblée générale, sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique, a adopté, à sa quinzième session, la résolution 1514 (XV) intitulée "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". Cette déclaration, en tant que programme pour l'avenir immédiat, est devenue un document de base des Nations Unies et elle a servi d'inspiration aux peuples opprimés dans leur lutte pour la liberté et l'indépendance nationale. La question de la mise en œuvre immédiate de cette déclaration historique est l'un des problèmes fondamentaux dont les Nations Unies restent saisies. L'ignoble système colonial doit être liquidé définitivement, dans toutes ses formes et ses manifestations sur le globe terrestre.

34. Grâce à l'appui des pays socialistes et des peuples du monde, le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples opprimés remporte constamment de nouvelles victoires, faisant crouler le système colonial.

35. La délégation mongole est heureuse de noter que, depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration par l'Assemblée générale, la lutte des peuples pour la liquidation du colonialisme a remporté une série de succès dans nombre de pays. Durant cette période, la longue lutte héroïque du peuple algérien a été couronnée par une victoire éclatante sur les colonisateurs.

L'indépendance nationale a été acquise par plusieurs pays, notamment par le Tanganyika, l'Ouganda, le Rwanda, le Burundi, la Jamaïque, la Trinité et Tobago et d'autres. La République d'Indonésie a réussi à libérer une partie intégrante de son patrimoine national, l'Irian occidental, du joug colonial étranger. La longue et persévérante lutte du peuple du Kenya a enregistré un grand succès, grâce auquel ce pays va accéder à l'indépendance dans quelques jours.

36. Cependant, il faut noter avec regret que les puissances coloniales, en dépit de la Déclaration et des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, tentent obstinément de maintenir leur domination coloniale sur les pays dépendants et refusent, sous des prétextes variés, de leur octroyer l'indépendance. C'est pourquoi, aujourd'hui encore, plus de 50 millions d'hommes languissent sous le joug colonial dans 60 pays et territoires d'Afrique, d'Asie, d'Océanie et d'Amérique latine.

37. C'est la politique colonisatrice du Gouvernement portugais qui fournit l'exemple le plus frappant de ce que peut être le sabotage de l'application de la Déclaration et des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Les colonisateurs portugais, forts du puissant appui de leurs alliés de l'OTAN, maintiennent obstinément dans l'esclavage 12 millions d'hommes en Afrique, ayant recours pour ce faire aux méthodes de répression les plus cruelles contre les peuples assoiffés de liberté de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise et d'autres colonies. Les peuples des colonies portugaises ne veulent plus vivre en état d'esclavage et réclament résolument la liberté et l'indépendance nationales.

38. La lutte héroïque que le peuple angolais mène depuis plusieurs années déjà pour sa libération en fournit une illustration éclatante. Les expéditions punitives, les atrocités, l'extermination en masse d'une paisible population, tous ces crimes perpétrés par les agents de Salazar en Angola soulèvent la colère et l'indignation de toutes les honnêtes gens sur cette terre. La guerre imposée par les colonisateurs portugais en Angola coûte des milliers de vies angolaises. Selon le témoignage des pétitionnaires, plus de 50 000 habitants des villes et des villages de l'Angola auraient dernièrement perdu la vie à la suite des bombardements systématiques de l'aviation portugaise. Les forces de Salazar commettent, en Angola, les crimes les plus monstrueux contre l'humanité. La même situation existe en Guinée dite portugaise, dont le peuple est pareillement engagé dans une lutte sacrée pour sa libération et son indépendance nationales.

39. En dépit des appels des Nations Unies, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, le Royaume-Uni, la République fédérale d'Allemagne et d'autres membres de l'OTAN soutiennent pleinement le Gouvernement portugais dans sa politique coloniale et lui fournissent sans relâche armes et munitions.

40. Aux séances du Conseil de sécurité, au mois de juillet dernier, les représentants des Etats africains ont dénoncé avec vigueur les atrocités des colonisateurs portugais et ont exigé le droit pour le Conseil de sécurité de prendre des mesures efficaces envers le Portugal. Ce faisant, ils ont souligné le rôle décisif joué par les alliés du Portugal dans l'application de sa politique de colonisation. Lors de la discussion générale à l'Assemblée, plusieurs délégations ont également dans leurs interventions fait valoir que sans l'appui des pays de l'OTAN le Portugal ne serait pas à même de mener une guerre coloniale en Afrique. L'Espagne accorde un appui politique manifeste au Portugal. D'autre part, selon les informations de la presse, il existe entre Salazar, Verwoerd et Roy Welensky une alliance dirigée contre le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples d'Afrique.

41. L'attitude provocante du Gouvernement de Salazar, qui méprise les décisions des Nations Unies et les enfreint systématiquement, n'est pas compatible avec la qualité de Membre de l'Organisation internationale, qui a proclamé le droit de tous les peuples à l'autodétermination. Ma délégation estime que la nécessité s'impose aux Nations Unies de prendre les mesures les plus énergiques pour contraindre le Portugal à mettre en œuvre, à l'égard des colonies portugaises, la Déclaration de l'Assemblée générale sur la décolonisation. Aussi est-il nécessaire que les puissances occidentales cessent immédiatement toute aide matérielle et morale comparable à celle qu'elles ont accordée jusqu'ici au Portugal pour la conduite de sa guerre coloniale.

42. Un bon nombre de pays, dans les diverses parties du monde, se trouvent encore sous l'administration coloniale britannique. Ainsi, les peuples des deux Rhodésies, du Nyassaland, de Zanzibar, du Souaziland, du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et de la Gambie, pour ne citer que les territoires d'Afrique, n'ont toujours pas acquis leur indépendance nationale. La domination coloniale britannique continue de s'exercer sur les peuples de l'Arabie méridionale ainsi que sur ceux de plusieurs îles dans diverses régions du monde. Le Gouvernement britannique diffère délibérément l'octroi de l'indépendance à la Guyane.

43. Le 17 juin 1963, le Premier Ministre de la Guyane, M. Cheddi Jagan, a envoyé au Comité des Vingt-Quatre un télégramme dans lequel il accusait ouvertement les compagnies pétrolières, sucrières et de navigation américaines et anglaises de vouloir renverser son gouvernement en attisant le jeu des partis politiques du pays.

44. Bien que le Gouvernement britannique se voie contraint de dissoudre la Fédération coloniale de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, on ne sait toujours pas clairement quand ce gouvernement accordera l'indépendance à la Rhodésie du Nord et au Nyassaland. A cet égard, la délégation mongole appuie la résolution adoptée le 27 juillet 1963 par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, en vue de l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à ces deux territoires [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. VIII, par. 184].

45. Jusqu'ici, le Gouvernement britannique s'est refusé de faire justice aux demandes légitimes de la population de la Rhodésie du Sud, où sévit le régime raciste réactionnaire des colons blancs. Ignorant les résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale, le Gouvernement britannique refuse d'entreprendre quoi que ce soit pour l'abrogation de la Constitution raciste de la Rhodésie du Sud de 1961 et pour l'élaboration d'une nouvelle constitution garantissant les droits de la population autochtone africaine.

46. Le Gouvernement britannique nie même la compétence de l'Assemblée générale pour examiner ce problème; il est même question que le gouvernement raciste de Winston Field exige l'indépendance, sans modification du régime existant, donc avec maintien de la domination absolue d'un groupe de colons blancs sur les 3 millions d'habitants autochtones africains. Le régime de la Rhodésie du Sud, ainsi que le régime de Verwoerd, s'est érigé en bastion du colonialisme en Afrique, en vue de l'exploitation des ressources inépuisables du continent, qui attirent les monopoles des puissances occidentales.

47. La situation en Rhodésie du Sud est devenue menaçante. Le Royaume-Uni tentant de transférer tous les pouvoirs et les forces armées au gouvernement de Winston Field, un danger réel surgit, à savoir l'avènement d'un Etat raciste, à l'instar de l'Afrique du Sud, où les Africains, la majorité absolue de la population, seraient soumis à l'oppression et à la discrimination raciale.

48. L'Assemblée générale, ayant examiné à la session en cours la question de la Rhodésie du Sud, a flétri la politique du Gouvernement britannique envers la Rhodésie du Sud et a adopté deux résolutions [1883 (XVIII) et 1884 (XVIII)] tendant à satisfaire les aspirations légitimes et les demandes de la population africaine de la Rhodésie du Sud. Les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et les peuples du monde entier attendent du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni la réalisation des recommandations de l'Assemblée générale, qui a décidé de demeurer saisie de la question durant la session actuelle.

49. La politique du Gouvernement sud-africain suscite une indignation profonde des peuples épris de liberté. La population autochtone de l'Afrique du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain gémit sous l'oppression cruelle du régime raciste de Verwoerd, qui jouit du soutien complet des puissances occidentales. Le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud s'obstine à persévérer dans sa politique d'annexion envers le Sud-Ouest africain. Non seulement le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud refuse d'exécuter les diverses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale au sujet du Sud-Ouest africain, mais il rejette la compétence des Nations Unies quant à ce territoire. Le régime raciste de l'Afrique du Sud, dont la politique et les activités contrastent ouvertement avec les buts et les principes des Nations Unies, est devenu une sérieuse menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales.

50. Selon la liste établie par le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre [A/5446/Rev.1, annexe I], un nombre des puissances coloniales qui gouvernent des territoires non autonomes et sous tutelle se trouvent des puissances comme les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, la France et l'Espagne. Les Etats-Unis ont transformé en bases militaires les îles du Pacifique placées sous leur tutelle. Les colonisateurs français, afin de maintenir leur domination, ont recours à des mesures féroces de répression contre le peuple de la Somalie sous administration française. L'Espagne continue de maintenir sa domination coloniale dans quelques territoires africains.

51. Les faits que je viens de citer prouvent clairement que les puissances coloniales font acte de sabotage envers la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et s'efforcent de maintenir l'ancien colonialisme là où il existe encore. En même temps, elles essaient de ressusciter le colonialisme sous des formes encore plus subtiles et voilées, dans d'autres pays. L'essence de ce néo-colonialisme est la même que celle de l'ancien colonialisme, à savoir: un système d'oppression, d'exploitation et de domination des peuples.

52. Le néo-colonialisme veut tout d'abord éterniser la dépendance économique des pays sous-développés. Les champions les plus actifs de la politique du néo-colonialisme sont les Etats-Unis d'Amérique et la République fédérale d'Allemagne, lesquels s'ingèrent de plus en plus dans l'économie des jeunes Etats, sous le couvert d'une "aide économique". Dans la mise en œuvre de la politique du néo-colonialisme, on a recours à toutes sortes de moyens, y compris l'intervention dans les affaires d'autrui, l'imposition d'accords militaires, la création de bases militaires sur des territoires étrangers, l'asservissement économique et la constitution de fédérations coloniales. La politique du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis d'Amérique envers la Corée du Sud et le Viet-Nam du Sud fournit un exemple spectaculaire de l'application du néo-colonialisme par l'usage des forces armées et l'intervention directe dans les affaires d'autrui. Au cours de la session actuelle, les représentants de certaines puissances occidentales ont tenté d'exercer un chantage envers les pays sous-développés qui critiquent le néo-colonialisme en les menaçant de suspendre leurs investissements, ce qui revient à une forme de pression. Pour mener à bonne fin la décolonisation, il faut intensifier la lutte contre ce mal, il faut raffermir l'indépendance politique et l'indépendance économique des jeunes Etats récemment affranchis.

53. Les pays épris de liberté ne sauraient accepter l'attitude des puissances coloniales qui se dérobent à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme, dans toutes ses formes et manifestations, ni leurs tentatives en vue de préserver les vestiges du colonialisme dans diverses parties du monde. Car, ainsi que l'a déclaré le représentant du Mali, M. Sori Coulibaly, dans son intervention à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale:

"... le régime colonial constitue une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales. Il s'inscrit en faux contre les principes fondamentaux de la Charte, à savoir le respect de la dignité humaine et le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Il constitue également un acte de violence, car la puissance administrante et la minorité étrangère au pouvoir ne maintiennent leur domination sur le peuple opprimé que par l'usage de la force."
[1231ème séance, par. 108.]

54. D'après la Déclaration de l'Assemblée générale, il ne peut y avoir aucune raison ni motif valables pour refuser ou différer l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples des territoires non autonomes. Pourtant, il est bien connu que la politique d'attribution, dans le processus de décolonisation, suivie par les puissances occidentales, est manifestement dictée par certains intérêts égoïstes de leurs monopoles. Une telle politique constitue une violation flagrante de la Déclaration de l'Assemblée générale.

55. La position de notre délégation sur la question de la décolonisation a été définie dans le discours prononcé par notre ministre des affaires étrangères devant l'Assemblée générale le 1er octobre 1963 [1223ème séance], ainsi que dans d'autres interventions de notre délégation au cours de la discussion des aspects concrets de la décolonisation.

56. La République populaire de Mongolie, qui reconnaît et respecte le droit de tout peuple à l'autodétermination, intervient de façon suivie en faveur de la mise en œuvre, sans plus de délai, de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme. La position de notre pays s'est manifestée de façon marquante par sa participation active au mouvement anticolonialiste des peuples, notamment au mouvement de solidarité des peuples afro-asiatiques.

57. La République populaire de Mongolie salue les décisions prises par la Conférence des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement d'Afrique, réunie à Addis-Abéba en mai 1963, quant à la liquidation sans retard du colonialisme en Afrique. Les Etats africains indépendants exigent, en toute justice, que les Nations Unies prennent des mesures décisives afin d'accélérer la libération complète de l'Afrique de la domination étrangère. A ce propos, ma délégation approuve le programme exposé par le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la Guinée, M. Louis Lansana Béavogui, dans son discours à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale [1220ème séance].

58. Le Comité spécial créé par l'Assemblée générale a accompli, en dépit de la résistance des représentants des puissances coloniales, un travail positif important dans la poursuite des tâches à lui confiées. Le Comité a mené à bien de vastes enquêtes et des études exhaustives sur la situation dans une série de pays colonisés. Le rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] présenté par ce comité à l'examen de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale contient des données importantes dévoilant les desseins des colonisateurs, ainsi que des conclusions et des recommandations de valeur pour l'accélération de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme.

59. Nous considérons que les recommandations du Comité spécial doivent être reflétées dans des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Nous estimons que l'Assemblée générale, à la session en cours, doit sérieusement examiner la question de la non-application, obstinée et délibérée, de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme, par les puissances coloniales, en premier lieu par le Portugal et l'Afrique du Sud, ainsi que la question de leurs protecteurs. L'Assemblée doit prendre des décisions audacieuses, comportant des mesures concrètes d'action, afin de forcer les colonisateurs à exécuter les stipulations de la Déclaration. Pour parvenir à ces objectifs, il est de toute importance que soit fixée une date finale pour la liquidation complète du colonialisme dans le monde entier, comme cela avait été proposé à plusieurs reprises par certains Etats Membres de l'ONU. A cet égard, ma délégation salue chaleureusement l'idée avancée par certaines délégations tendant à ce que le régime infâme du colonialisme soit entièrement liquidé, dans le monde, pour le vingtième anniversaire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

60. La délégation mongole estime nécessaire que l'Assemblée générale adopte à la présente session une résolution qui contiendrait des recommandations concrètes tendant à accélérer l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il est important que l'Assemblée générale, en approuvant le rapport du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre, autorise ce dernier à poursuivre ses activités afin d'aboutir à la liquidation complète du colonialisme, sous toutes ses formes et manifestations.

61. Compte tenu de l'influence négative qu'exercent les monopoles capitalistes ayant des intérêts dans les pays colonisés et de leur attitude en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation, il est indispensable que l'Assemblée générale recommande au Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre d'étudier l'influence néfaste qu'exercent certaines compagnies internationales sur la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale sur ce sujet.

62. Il est également indispensable que les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale recommandent des mesures concrètes à prendre par les puissances administrantes afin d'octroyer l'indépendance aux pays colonisés. Les mesures suivantes doivent être prises en premier lieu: cessation immédiate de toute action militaire et de toute répression contre les peuples luttant pour la liberté et l'indépendance; retrait immédiat de toutes les forces armées des puissances administrantes; octroi aux peuples colonisés de la possibilité de jouir de tous les droits et libertés démocratiques; élections générales libres, afin de constituer des organes représentatifs, et transfert du pouvoir à ces organes.

63. Ma délégation est certaine que les décisions de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale marqueront un grand pas en avant dans la voie de la liquidation rapide du système colonial, dont l'existence est incompatible avec les objectifs suprêmes de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

64. M. CORNER (Nouvelle-Zélande) [traduit de l'anglais]: La Déclaration sur le colonialisme [résolution 1514 (XV)] est à ce point devenue un élément de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et de son activité quotidienne qu'il est difficile d'admettre que trois ans seulement se sont écoulés depuis son adoption. Dans ce bref laps de temps, 15 pays, dont beaucoup sont des pays d'Afrique, ont accédé à l'indépendance. Cependant, ce qui donne à la Déclaration son caractère révolutionnaire, ce n'est pas tant les résultats acquis, si importants soient-ils, mais bien plutôt le fait que le processus se poursuit et que des territoires encore dépendants avancent progressivement vers les buts énoncés par la Déclaration.

65. Certes, ce n'est pas avec la Déclaration qu'a commencé le processus de décolonisation. En fait, il est probable qu'un plus grand nombre de pays sont devenus indépendants avant qu'après 1960. Ce qui donne une telle importance à la Déclaration, c'est qu'elle a codifié les principes en vertu desquels tous les territoires doivent pouvoir exercer librement leur droit à l'autonomie et qu'elle a marqué ces principes du sceau de la communauté mondiale. Elle a ainsi établi le cadre de la décolonisation. Dorénavant, tous les pays sont liés par ces principes, même les quelques puissances administrantes réfractaires qui ne les reconnaissent pas. Dorénavant aussi, tous les territoires dépendants évolueront nécessairement selon les lignes fixées par l'Assemblée en 1960.

66. Si nous nous arrêtons parfois au cours du débat pour jeter un regard sur les résultats obtenus, c'est plus fréquemment encore que nous regardons en avant pour voir ce qu'il reste à faire. Les principes ayant été arrêtés, il s'agit maintenant de trouver les meilleurs moyens de les appliquer aux territoires qui se trouvent encore sous un régime colonial. C'est cette tâche qui fait, je pense, l'objet du présent débat.

67. Nous traitons actuellement de ce qu'on appelle fréquemment les séquelles du colonialisme. Mais, que peut-on dire de ces séquelles? Loin d'être dépourvues d'importance, elles se manifestent dans des territoires vastes et peuplés du sud de l'Afrique dont les problèmes complexes et particulièrement difficiles ont fait l'objet des débats de cette assemblée, ainsi que dans un très grand nombre de petits territoires à faible population. Si l'on étudie les territoires encore dépendants, on constate que, le sud de l'Afrique mis à part, il s'agit de territoires extrêmement différents et relativement peu étendus. Certains d'entre eux sont des nations à l'état embryonnaire qui, une fois les problèmes politiques réglés, évolueront en suivant la voie habituelle, vers l'indépendance. D'autres rechercheront peut-être l'indépendance en s'associant entre eux, comme certaines îles des Antilles; d'autres encore, tels les Etats de la Malaisie situés dans le Bornéo septentrional, en s'intégrant à un autre Etat.

68. Pour beaucoup de ces petits territoires, il n'y a toutefois pas de solution bien définie. Il existe pour eux toute une gamme de possibilités qui doivent encore être étudiées. Ce sont souvent des îles dont la population varie de quelques centaines à quelques milliers d'habitants. A cette échelle, la viabilité économique est à peine possible et la viabilité politique pose de sérieux problèmes. C'est là d'ailleurs une question d'ordre pratique et non une question de principe. En effet, les principes de la Déclaration et de la Charte s'appliquent aussi bien aux petites îles qu'aux territoires plus vastes et plus peuplés. Le droit à la libre disposition ne diminue pas avec la superficie, pas plus que l'exercice de responsabilités politiques ne peut être fonction de recensements. Il s'agit de garantir l'exercice de ces droits et de ces responsabilités à des territoires beaucoup plus petits que ceux dont nous avons eu à traiter jusqu'ici. Supposons qu'une île, dans le plein exercice de son droit à l'autodétermination, décide de ne pas choisir l'indépendance. Perdra-t-elle par là même la sympathie des Nations Unies, et notre organisation cessera-t-elle de s'intéresser à des ter-ritoires qui, en raison de leur faible population et de leur superficie peu étendue, décideraient de renoncer à une indépendance séparée?

69. Si la réponse à cette question est évidente, le problème n'en subsiste pas moins. Dans un discours plein d'intérêt [1267ème séance], le représentant du Chili a fait appel à l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour qu'elle entreprenne des études concrètes sur les problèmes qui se posent aux petits territoires. Ces études, dont il serait difficile de contester la nécessité, présentent un intérêt que l'on ne saurait qualifier de théorique pour quiconque tient à appliquer les principes universels de notre organisation aux territoires dépendants très variés qui subsistent encore, et plus particulièrement pour les pays chargés d'administrer des petits territoires. La Nouvelle-Zélande, qui est un de ces pays, ne laisse pas de réfléchir profondément à ces questions depuis de nombreuses années.

70. Elle est actuellement responsable de l'administration de 19 petites îles du Pacifique du Sud. Ces 19 petites îles sont disséminées sur un million de miles carrés d'océan au nord de la Nouvelle-Zélande elle-même. Leur population totale s'élève à 25 000 personnes, et le nombre des habitants varie de 8 000 dans la plus grande île à quelques centaines seulement dans plusieurs des petites îles. La population est polynésienne, comme de nombreux habitants de la Nouvelle-Zélande. Les liens historiques et familiaux qui existent depuis longtemps entre ces îles et la Nouvelle-Zélande ont pris une nouvelle importance depuis que de nombreux habitants des îles, qui sont citoyens néo-zélandais, ont émigré en Nouvelle-Zélande et s'y sont installés. Certaines de ces îles ne sont que des atolls sur lesquels la population actuelle parvient tout juste à subsister; d'autres sont plus grandes et offrent, dans le domaine de l'agriculture et de l'industrie légère, certaines possibilités de développement que l'octroi de subventions importantes de la Nouvelle-Zélande permet de réaliser progressivement. Ces îles, quelles qu'elles soient, n'ont aucune ressource minérale ou autre que celles qui viennent de la mer et du sol.

71. Ce groupe d'îles dispersées se trouve maintenant au carrefour de son destin. En votant pour la Déclaration sur le colonialisme, il y a trois ans, la Nouvelle-Zélande entendait appliquer aussitôt que possible à ces îles les principes qui y sont énoncés. Depuis un an environ, les représentants de ces îles, avec l'aide de spécialistes en matière constitutionnelle, étudient le droit à l'autodétermination et se préparent à l'exercer. Déterminer son propre avenir à un moment précis de l'histoire constitue en soi un choix solennel, choix qui est particulièrement difficile pour les îles Cook et Niue, du fait de leur isolement et de leur faible superficie. Les habitants de ces îles sont conscients de l'importance de la question et décidés à faire le choix le plus sage possible.

72. L'autodétermination, pour qu'elle représente véritablement l'expression de la volonté populaire et qu'elle résulte d'un choix vraiment libre, exige une soigneuse préparation. La condition préalable essentielle à l'autodétermination, c'est l'évolution politique, évolution qui ait atteint le stade où le gouvernement et l'administration locale sont entièrement aux mains des autochtones. Cette évolution, qui a commencé il y a de nombreuses années dans les îles Cook et Niue, est maintenant très avancée. Les assemblées législatives, qui sont élues de façon démocratique, ne comptent pas de sièges réservés et il n'existe pas de privilèges électoraux. Ces assemblées sont entièrement libres de décider l'emploi des crédits budgétaires, y compris les crédits importants provenant de subventions de la Nouvelle-Zélande. On supprime peu à peu les quelques restrictions qui subsistent encore en matière de législation. Les assemblées législatives exercent déjà un contrôle sur l'administration, par l'intermédiaire de comités exécutifs formés de personnes élues parmi leurs propres membres. D'ici à 1965, le contrôle de la fonction publique sera aux mains des autochtones et, cette même année, on se propose d'instaurer pleinement dans les îles Cook le gouvernement par ministère. Ainsi, ces îles verront se parachever la structure de leur gouvernement autonome: un premier ministre et un ministère seront seuls responsables des affaires et ne devront de comptes qu'à l'assemblée qui les aura élus.

73. L'étape qui suivra l'autonomie est, bien entendu, l'autodétermination. Bien qu'ils soient absorbés par la tâche de mettre au point les détails de leur évolution politique, les chefs élus et le peuple qu'ils représentent songent à l'avenir de leurs îles et en discutent. L'année dernière, les assemblées législatives ont examiné quatre solutions possibles, à savoir: indépendance, association avec la Nouvelle-Zélande, fédération avec d'autres îles du Pacifique ou autonomie complète, accompagnée d'une association volontaire avec la Nouvelle-Zélande. Par un vote unanime, elles ont décidé que les plans pour l'avenir constitutionnel du territoire devraient tendre vers l'association autonome librement choisie et librement maintenue avec la Nouvelle-Zélande.

74. Cette décision n'oblige pas, mais elle constitue un point de départ pour la préparation de plans, et c'est à ce titre qu'elle a été acceptée par la Nouvelle-Zélande. Cependant, l'acte officiel d'autodétermination exigera davantage. Il faudra que tous les habitants des îles examinent à nouveau les diverses solutions possibles et confirment clairement leur volonté. Cet aspect de la question intéresse manifestement la communauté mondiale tout entière. Conformément à la déclaration, l'Organisation des Nations Unies sera, par conséquent, invitée à étudier la question et à s'assurer que le choix est fait librement.

75. Si j'ai décrit assez longuement l'évolution vers l'autodétermination des plus petits des territoires dépendants, c'est que je voulais montrer le caractère pragmatique de la solution en cours d'élaboration, laquelle est fondée sur les désirs de la population elle-même et mise au point par ses représentants élus. Il s'agit là d'une expérience dont le plan d'exécution est parfois modifié ou adapté selon les circonstances. Il s'en dégagera, de l'avis des habitants, une formule qui répondra à leurs besoins particuliers tout en étant fondée sur les principes universels de l'autodétermination. Mais ce n'est pas là la raison pour laquelle je vous ai entretenus si longuement de ces territoires; mon but était de souligner que toute tentative d'application pratique des dispositions de la Déclaration sur le colonialisme exige nécessairement une entente tripartite entre la population du territoire, la puissance administrante et l'Organisation des Nations Unies elle-même.

76. C'est là un principe qui dépasse les territoires dont la Nouvelle-Zélande est responsable et concerne l'avenir des plus petits territoires. Peut-être l'idée la plus importante qui se dégage de la déclaration, c'est la nécessité d'une coopération — entre les populations intéressées, qui formulent leurs vœux, la puissance administrante, qui traduit ces vœux en réalités, et, enfin, les Nations Unies, qui aident et accélèrent ce processus. Nous avons confirmé par l'expérience l'utilité de cette collaboration; en effet, la facilité avec laquelle le Territoire sous tutelle du Samoa-Occidental a accédé à l'indépendance s'explique en grande partie par la tradition de coopération aisée et fructueuse avec notre organisation.

77. Peut-être prétendra-t-on que, en affirmant que la coopération est utile, on ne dit rien de neuf, sauf peut-être pour deux membres bien connus de notre organisation. Cela est vrai, sans aucun doute, mais il est également vrai que la coopération résulte d'un effort fait en commun. Il ne peut pas y avoir de coopération avec ceux qui refusent de reconnaître que l'indépendance est le but à atteindre, pas plus d'ailleurs qu'avec ceux pour qui seule compte l'indépendance immédiate. En ce qui nous concerne, l'expression "indépendance immédiate" pour tous les territoires ne veut pas dire grand-chose, pas plus que "développement immédiat" ou "désarmement immédiat". Ces expressions sont peut-être utiles comme slogans ou figures de style, mais il a bien fallu admettre qu'elles ne sauraient remplacer la préparation indispensable, aux Nations Unies comme ailleurs, pour obtenir des résultats valables. L'indépendance immédiate n'est pas conforme à la Déclaration, car cela sous-entendrait que les Nations Unies n'ont aucun rôle à jouer et qu'il n'y a pas de coopération possible.

78. La situation réelle a été fort bien résumée par le Président du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre, le représentant du Mali, à l'ouverture de ce débat [1266^eme séance], lorsqu'il a attiré l'attention sur le rôle utile que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre et l'ensemble des Nations Unies peuvent jouer, afin d'aider les territoires à accéder à l'indépendance, sans difficulté, et sans engendrer la haine, pour employer ses propres termes. Il a insisté sur l'action des Nations Unies en vue de créer les conditions voulues pour assurer une autodétermination véritable.

79. A mesure que nous concentrons davantage notre attention sur les plus petits territoires, nous constatons que cette action est toujours aussi nécessaire. Une coopération entre les puissances administrantes et les Nations Unies n'est peut-être pas le seul moyen de parvenir aux buts fixés par l'Organisation, mais, là où elle est possible, elle constitue certainement le moyen le plus efficace d'arriver à ces buts ainsi que l'a montré l'expérience acquise au cours de ces trois années.

80. M. PACHACHI (Irak) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au mois de décembre 1960, l'Assemblée générale a adopté une déclaration extrêmement importante sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Au cours de cette quinzième session historique, les débats qui se sont déroulés en séance plénière ont porté sur la question du colonialisme en général, sur sa place dans l'histoire et sur le rôle que les Nations Unies doivent jouer pour assurer sa liquidation définitive.

81. Cette année, l'Assemblée générale doit examiner les moyens les plus adéquats et les plus efficaces pour accélérer la mise en œuvre intégrale de la Déclaration, qui peut, à juste titre, être considérée comme l'un des succès les plus éclatants de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, un de ses jalons les plus lumineux.

82. Cette organisation a été créée pour répondre aux besoins désespérés de paix et de sécurité et pour satisfaire les aspirations éternelles de l'homme vers la liberté et la dignité. Nulle part, ce besoin ne s'est fait aussi nettement sentir que dans les colonies, car, parmi les nobles idéaux et les principes élevés inscrits dans la Charte des Nations Unies, aucun n'est plus caractéristique des tendances de notre époque que le droit à l'autodétermination et la notion de responsabilité internationale pour assurer le bien-être des populations non autonomes et leur évolution rapide vers la liberté et l'indépendance.

83. Tout d'abord, les Nations Unies ont adopté des mesures prudentes et mal assurées, en vue de mettre en œuvre ces dispositions de la Charte. Mais, au fur et à mesure que s'accroissait le nombre des Membres de l'Organisation et que s'intensifiaient dans le monde entier les mouvements de libération, l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'a plus pu s'en tenir aux mesures palliatives ni aux progrès prudents qui avaient marqué son activité des premières années. A cette époque, en effet, l'accession à l'indépendance était considérée comme un but lointain et même, dans certains cas, inaccessible. Maintenant, la nécessité d'atteindre ce but est devenue la préoccupation immédiate et la responsabilité des Nations Unies.

84. C'est en se fondant sur ces considérations que l'on doit envisager le travail du Comité des Vingt-Quatre. Son mandat est clair. Aux termes du paragraphe 8 de la résolution 1810 (XVII), il consiste:

"a) A continuer de rechercher les voies et les moyens les mieux appropriés, en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance;

"b) A proposer des mesures concrètes en vue de l'application intégrale de la Déclaration;

"c) A présenter à l'Assemblée générale, en temps opportun, et au plus tard à sa dix-huitième session, un rapport complet contenant ses suggestions et ses recommandations sur l'ensemble des territoires mentionnés au paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration;

"d) A informer le Conseil de sécurité de tous les faits survenus dans ces territoires, qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales."

85. Il ressort des termes de cette résolution que le Comité spécial a une fonction bien déterminée, qui est de présenter des recommandations en vue de l'application rapide des dispositions de la Déclaration dans tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. C'est en tenant compte de ce mandat bien défini qu'il convient d'examiner les recommandations du Comité spécial sur chaque territoire.

86. Malgré certains progrès accomplis depuis la création du Comité spécial, il y a deux ans, les travaux de cet organe sont loin d'être achevés. Dans certains territoires, la pleine mise en œuvre de la Déclaration continue de se heurter à de graves difficultés. Il y a des territoires dont le Comité ne s'est pas encore occupé et d'autres qui ne sont même pas inscrits à l'ordre du jour de ses délibérations. Etant donné que la Déclaration prévoit le transfert immédiat des pouvoirs aux peuples de tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, il est évident que non seulement le Comité se trouve en présence d'une tâche fort lourde, mais qu'il doit s'en acquitter dans le plus bref délai.

87. C'est pourquoi il a besoin de la collaboration loyale et sans réserve des Puissances administrantes. Or, celles-ci n'ont pas toujours coopéré en la matière comme en témoignent les débats sur les quatre principaux problèmes dont le Comité a traité, à savoir la Rhodésie du Sud, le Sud-Ouest africain, les territoires portugais et Aden. Une telle coopération serait conforme aux obligations morales et juridiques que les Puissances administrantes ont assumées en tant que Membres des Nations Unies. Il est aussi de leur propre intérêt d'aider le Comité des Vingt-Quatre à s'acquitter rapidement et efficacement de ses fonctions, car la prolongation de situations aussi dangereuses risquerait à la longue de troubler la paix et de compromettre les intérêts mêmes que prétendent défendre les Puissances administrantes en cause.

88. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre a estimé, à juste titre, que l'envoi de groupes de visite constituait l'un des moyens les plus efficaces d'accomplir sa tâche. Les tentatives faites par le Comité pour se renseigner sur la situation des territoires et sur les vues de leurs habitants se sont constamment heurtées au refus de certaines Puissances administrantes de coopérer en la matière. Le Comité spécial a très clairement défini le problème devant l'Assemblée générale, et, à cet égard, je me permets de citer un extrait du chapitre premier de son rapport:

"Il note cependant avec regret le refus du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de permettre à un groupe de membres du Comité spécial de se rendre à Aden et en Guyane britannique. Dans les deux cas, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a prétendu, pour expliquer son refus, que la présence d'une mission de visite dans un territoire constituait une ingérence dans les affaires de ce territoire et qu'il ne pouvait partager ses responsabilités avec les Nations Unies. La majorité des membres du Comité spécial n'ont pu admettre qu'une mission de visite, dont la fonction est de s'assurer des vues de la population quant à l'avenir d'un territoire ou d'offrir ses bons offices pour réunir les divers éléments politiques et, ce faisant, les aider à accéder à l'indépendance, puisse représenter une ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un territoire. Cette majorité ne saurait admettre non plus que, en acceptant l'envoi d'une mission de visite, la Puissance administrante partage les responsabilités qui lui incombent dans l'administration interne du territoire. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a, à l'égard de territoires non autonomes, des responsabilités qui découlent des dispositions de la Charte concernant ces territoires ainsi que l'adoption, par l'Assemblée générale, de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

"Le Comité spécial tient à souligner que, en refusant à un groupe de membres du Comité spécial l'accès d'un territoire relevant de son mandat, la Puissance administrante intéressée l'a privé de l'un des moyens les plus efficaces de s'acquitter de la tâche que lui a confiée l'Assemblée générale, à savoir l'examen de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux." [A/5446/Rev.1, par. 54 et 55.]

89. Nous espérons que l'Assemblée générale partagera les vues du Comité spécial sur cette importante question et que, par une résolution formelle, elle fera appel aux Puissances administrantes pour qu'elles collaborent pleinement avec le Comité spécial.

90. Avant de parler de certains territoires auxquels se réfère le rapport, je voudrais revenir sur le point qui a été soulevé, la semaine dernière [1267^{ème} séance], par les représentants du Chili et de Ceylan. Nous partageons entièrement leurs préoccupations à propos de la création de petits Etats qui ne seraient pas viables et estimons que le Comité spécial, dans ses efforts visant à accélérer la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration, doit encourager, chaque fois que cela est possible, la fusion de petits territoires. C'est en partie pour cette raison que nous nous félicitons de l'association proposée de la Gambie et du Sénégal et que nous préconisons l'unification d'Aden et du Yémen.

91. En tant que membre du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, ma délégation a exprimé ses vues sur les différents territoires, lesquelles se trouvent pleinement reflétées dans le rapport dont l'Assemblée générale est actuellement saisie, ainsi que dans les comptes rendus du Comité spécial. Je ne saurais donc reprendre le temps de l'Assemblée pour répéter ce que nous avons déjà dit et je me bornerai à faire des commentaires d'ordre général sur certains faits nouveaux qui sont intervenus depuis la dernière fois que le Comité spécial a étudié la situation de ces territoires.

92. La Quatrième Commission a déjà discuté les chapitres II, III et IV du rapport du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1], concernant les territoires administrés par le Portugal, la Rhodésie du Sud, le Sud-Ouest africain et elle a présenté à l'Assemblée générale ses recommandations à ce sujet.

93. En ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Sud, l'Assemblée générale a demandé une fois de plus au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de ne pas faire droit à la requête du présent gouvernement minoritaire de la Rhodésie du Sud, en vue de l'indépendance avant que le pouvoir de la majorité fondé sur le suffrage universel ne soit établi dans ce territoire.

94. La question de l'indépendance de la Rhodésie du Sud présente à nouveau un problème grave et urgent. Bien que le Gouvernement britannique ait déclaré qu'il n'accorderait pas l'indépendance tant que des mesures concrètes n'auraient pas été prises pour étendre le droit de vote et assurer l'élection d'une majorité africaine à l'Assemblée législative, les porte-parole officiels du Gouvernement des colons de la Rhodésie du Sud soutiennent toujours que le Royaume-Uni ne diffèrera pas son consentement à l'indépendance. Vu les interprétations contradictoires qui existent au sujet des conditions auxquelles le Gouvernement britannique a subordonné l'octroi de l'indépendance à ce territoire, nous pensons qu'une déclaration nette et claire de la part du Royaume-Uni s'impose maintenant en la matière.

95. D'autre part, l'observation que nous avons faite à propos de la Rhodésie du Sud, en mars dernier, devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre [136^{ème} séance], est toujours vraie:

"Pour lui (le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni), le choix semble être soit de prendre fermement position maintenant et d'exercer son influence morale, légale et matérielle, qui est considérable, pour empêcher un désastre en Rhodésie du Sud, soit de renoncer à ses responsabilités envers la collectivité internationale et la population africaine du territoire en permettant que se dresse une nouvelle citadelle de réaction et d'apartheid au cœur du continent africain."

96. La semaine dernière, la Quatrième Commission a achevé l'examen de la situation des territoires sous administration portugaise et adopté un projet de résolution dont l'Assemblée sera saisie cet après-midi, et qui tend à renvoyer la question au Conseil de sécurité. Nous espérons que le Conseil prendra les mesures nécessaires pour assurer l'application de la résolution qu'il a adoptée à sa 1049^{ème} séance, le 31 juillet 1963^{2/}. Les territoires portugais constituent, aujourd'hui, le groupe de colonies le plus nombreux et le plus ancien du monde. Depuis près de sept ans, en fait depuis que le Portugal a été admis à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, l'Assemblée générale se préoccupe de ce problème; mais aucun progrès appréciable n'a été enregistré à ce jour. Si les Nations Unies ont pu obtenir des résultats notables dans nombre d'autres questions coloniales, il leur reste encore à trouver le moyen de régler effectivement le problème des territoires portugais. Tous les efforts déployés en vue de persuader le Portugal de remplir les obligations que lui impose la Charte et d'appliquer les nombreuses résolutions pertinentes de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité sont, jusqu'à présent, demeurés vains.

97. Les Nations Unies ont le devoir de permettre à tous les peuples dépendants d'accéder rapidement et pacifiquement à l'indépendance et, nulle part, cette tâche n'est plus impérieuse et plus urgente que dans les colonies portugaises.

98. La question du Sud-Ouest africain demeure l'un des problèmes coloniaux les plus graves et les plus épineux qui se posent aux Nations Unies. On a déjà adopté une résolution demandant instamment aux Etats Membres de prendre certaines mesures à l'encontre de l'Afrique du Sud^{3/}. Si cette résolution est appliquée loyalement par tous les Membres de l'ONU et si les mesures recommandées sont prises et exécutées fidèlement, il y aura peut-être moyen de sortir de l'impasse. Le Conseil de sécurité, dont l'attention a déjà été attirée sur ce problème, peut être appelé à décider des mesures qu'il conviendrait de prendre à l'égard d'un Etat qui viole continuellement la Charte et méconnaît la volonté de la communauté internationale.

99. Parmi les autres territoires ayant fait l'objet d'un examen du Comité spécial, Malte est au seuil de l'indépendance, mais de nombreux problèmes persistent encore dans l'île. Les partis politiques sont loin d'être d'accord sur la forme de la constitution qui entrera en vigueur lors de la proclamation de l'indépendance, le 31 mai 1964, et nous croyons savoir que de nouveaux pourparlers doivent s'ouvrir à Londres, aujourd'hui, afin de régler les difficultés qui subsistent à ce sujet. Eu égard aux territoires africains qui doivent bientôt accéder à l'indépendance: le Kenya et Zanzibar, nous tenons à exprimer notre satisfaction et à adresser nos félicitations aux peuples intéressés.

100. La dissolution de la Fédération centrafricaine a ouvert à la Rhodésie du Nord et au Nyassaland la voie de l'indépendance, laquelle, nous l'espérons, ne se fera pas attendre.

101. Dans les territoires relevant de la Haute Commission, Bassoutoland, Betchouanaland et Souaziland, la situation est encore sérieuse. L'Afrique du Sud poursuit activement ses desseins à l'égard de ces territoires. Ceux-ci ne progressent que lentement sur le plan constitutionnel, et les problèmes économiques auxquels ils doivent faire face sont aussi épineux que jamais.

102. En Guyane britannique, on est arrivé à une impasse dangereuse. Nous souscrivons entièrement aux recommandations du Sous-Comité de la Guyane britannique [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. X, par. 59]. Il a été proposé d'envoyer dans ce territoire une équipe d'experts en questions constitutionnelles, mais malheureusement le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a unilatéralement décidé d'accepter la solution préconisée par l'un des partis, c'est-à-dire la représentation proportionnelle.

103. Un territoire auquel nous attachons naturellement une importance toute spéciale est Aden, dont la situation a été minutieusement examinée, cette année, par le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre. En effet, celui-ci a consacré 26 séances à l'étude de cet important problème colonial et créé un sous-comité qu'il a chargé de se rendre dans ce pays, afin de s'assurer des vues de la population et d'engager des pourparlers avec la Puissance administrante. La décision du Gouvernement britannique de retirer sa coopération a obligé le Sous-Comité à limiter ses activités aux pays voisins, où il a entendu un grand nombre de pétitionnaires et reçu des centaines de pétitions. Le rapport du Sous-Comité au Comité spécial, qui figure au chapitre V du document, parle de lui-même. En tant que Membre du Sous-Comité, il ne m'appartient pas de commenter ses travaux et je laisserai aux autres le soin d'apprécier la contribution qu'il a apportée à la cause de la liberté dans cette partie du monde.

104. J'ai eu l'honneur d'ouvrir le débat sur la question d'Aden, au sein du Comité spécial, en avril dernier, et nos vues en la matière sont bien connues. Elles ont d'ailleurs été résumées dans non moins de 44 paragraphes du rapport rédigé par le Comité spécial.

105. La question d'Aden présente tous les éléments d'une situation coloniale classique. Le territoire est tombé sous le contrôle britannique, après avoir été conquis par les armes et l'on en a fait par la suite une colonie de la Couronne. Il constitue maintenant une base militaire importante qui sert à protéger les intérêts de la Puissance coloniale dans cette région. On y maintient un régime non représentatif, particulièrement docile aux conseils et aux directives britanniques, et le territoire continue d'être séparé arbitrairement du Yémen. Nous avons toujours affirmé que ce territoire fait partie intégrante du Yémen et nous estimons que l'on ne doit pas empêcher ni retarder sa réunification avec la mère patrie.

106. Le représentant du Yémen a fait devant l'Assemblée l'historique détaillé et exact du problème; je ne voudrais pas répéter ce qu'il a dit, mais je pense qu'il importe de souligner le caractère douteux du fondement juridique de l'autorité britannique dans cette région. Comme je l'ai indiqué dans le cas d'Aden lui-même, cette autorité résulte d'une véritable conquête militaire, alors que dans le cas des protectorats elle repose sur des traités illégaux et léonins de protection conclus au cours de la seconde moitié du XIX^e siècle. De nombreux traités de ce genre ont été conclus avec divers sultans, émirs et cheiks de la vaste région qui s'étend à l'est d'Aden jusqu'à Mascate. Ces traités, qui ont été soit imposés de force, soit obtenus grâce à des pots-de-vin, mais qui n'ont jamais été sollicités volontairement, ont été signés par des cheiks féodaux ignorants qui n'avaient aucune souveraineté légale sur les terres et les populations au nom desquelles ils acceptaient des obligations aussi lourdes de conséquences. En outre, il est manifeste que ces traités étaient absolument léonins, ayant été conclus entre les chefs de tribus faibles et impuissants et ce qui constituait à l'époque le plus grand empire colonial du monde.

107. A une époque récente, le Gouvernement britannique a renforcé son autorité sur ces sultanats et ces cheikats en les unifiant au sein d'une fédération avec laquelle le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a conclu un traité en février 1959^{4/}. En vertu de ce

^{3/} Ibid., document S/5386.

^{4/} Traité d'amitié et de protection entre le Royaume-Uni et les Emirats arabes de la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud.

traité, le Royaume-Uni conserve le contrôle complet et exclusif des affaires étrangères. Les traités de protection et d'autres accords consultatifs conclus antérieurement avec les cheiks doivent demeurer en vigueur, les forces britanniques obtenant la liberté absolue de se déplacer et de s'installer à tout moment.

108. Ces dispositions, si importantes soient-elles, ne donnent pas réellement une image exacte et complète de l'étendue du contrôle et de l'influence exercés par le Gouvernement britannique sur ces territoires. Cette influence ne découle pas uniquement d'engagements écrits. Elle repose plutôt sur les relations d'allégeance qui lient ces cheiks féodaux au Gouvernement britannique.

109. La colonie d'Aden elle-même a été intégrée dans la Fédération en janvier 1963 sans le consentement de sa population et les méthodes les plus inusitées ont été employées à cette fin. Je voudrais rappeler très brièvement ce que j'ai déclaré à ce sujet devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre en avril dernier [149^{ème} séance], à savoir l'inclusion d'Aden dans la Fédération. J'ai déclaré notamment:

"La demande formulée par les partis de l'opposition que des élections aient lieu avant la fusion a été rejetée. Au lieu de cela, le plan fédéral a été adopté par le soi-disant Conseil législatif. C'est un conseil... qui a été élu d'une façon des moins démocratiques... Plus de 76 p. 100 de la population a boycotté les élections qui se sont tenues en 1959, et les membres élus n'ont pas obtenu plus de 2 p. 100 des voix de la population. La majorité des membres élus n'approuvaient pas la fusion qui n'a été adoptée que grâce aux voix des membres désignés du Conseil législatif. Ainsi, les destinées du peuple d'Aden ont été décidées pour une durée de 6 ans au moins par le vote minoritaire d'un conseil choisi sur une base électorale extrêmement restrictive et sélective, il y a quatre ans."

110. Il est maintenant clair que les principaux objectifs de la politique britannique à Aden et dans l'intérieur du pays sont les suivants: premièrement, séparer de façon permanente ces territoires du Yémen; deuxièmement, faciliter et renforcer le contrôle britannique sur cette région du monde arabe en vue de conserver la base militaire d'Aden pour la défense des intérêts pétroliers étrangers dans le golfe Persique.

111. Les représentants du Royaume-Uni ont déclaré devant le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre que la politique de leur gouvernement est d'amener la population du territoire à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance dans les plus brefs délais et dans des conditions favorables de stabilité. Nous serions les derniers à contester une telle politique si elle répondait vraiment aux vœux de la population intéressée. Mais nous avons des raisons de croire que l'indépendance, telle que le Gouvernement britannique l'envisage, ne sera pas conforme aux vœux de la population, et que, loin de rendre ce territoire fort et prospère, elle le maintiendra pour toujours sous la tutelle économique et politique du Royaume-Uni.

112. La tâche du Comité spécial consistait à trouver les meilleurs moyens d'assurer l'application rapide de la Déclaration de façon à traduire fidèlement les aspirations de la population d'Aden et dans des conditions de liberté et de sécurité. L'indépendance que veut accorder — ou déclare vouloir accorder — le Royaume-Uni est entièrement différente. Elle vise à maintenir au pouvoir un régime social arriéré, à préserver et à perpétuer les privilèges dont le Gouvernement britannique jouit actuellement dans les domaines économique, politique ou militaire. La déclaration de 1960, par contre, envisage une indépendance exempte de toute entrave, une indépendance fondée uniquement sur le libre choix des populations.

113. C'est précisément dans cet esprit que le Sous-Comité a présenté ses conclusions et ses recommandations et que le Comité spécial a adopté son projet de résolution du 19 juillet 1963 [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V, par. 478]. En fait, ce projet de résolution recommande essentiellement que la population du territoire soit consultée dans les conditions présentant les meilleures garanties et en toute liberté. Nous estimons que cette recommandation est des plus raisonnables. En fait, le Gouvernement britannique a accepté ce point de vue dans de nombreuses régions d'Afrique où des élections ont eu lieu dont sont issus des gouvernements nationaux traduisant fidèlement les opinions et les aspirations des populations intéressées. Tout ce que nous demandons, c'est que l'on procède de même pour Aden. Nous ne faisons pas de différence entre Aden et le Kenya, la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland.

114. Dans la résolution que le Comité spécial a adoptée le 19 juillet 1963, l'autorité administrante est invitée à effectuer:

"... les changements constitutionnels nécessaires en vue de créer un organe représentatif et de constituer un gouvernement pour tout le territoire... cet organe législatif et ce gouvernement devant être constitués à la suite d'élections générales qui auraient lieu au suffrage universel des adultes et dans le respect absolu des droits et des libertés fondamentales de l'homme".

On sera mieux à même d'apprécier et de comprendre l'importance du paragraphe 8 précité si on le rapproche du paragraphe 11 de cette même résolution, qui recommande que:

"... des pourparlers soient entrepris sans retard entre le gouvernement issu des élections... pour fixer la date de l'accession à l'indépendance".

115. La raison pour laquelle on a proposé qu'il y ait un seul organe législatif et un seul gouvernement pour tout le territoire et que, le moment de l'indépendance venu, les dispositions et les modalités de transfert des pouvoirs, ainsi que l'accord visant à fixer la date de l'accession à l'indépendance, seront conclus non pas avec divers gouvernements, cheiks ou sultans, mais avec un seul gouvernement représentant l'ensemble de la population, gouvernement émanant d'un organe législatif élu par la population tout entière au suffrage universel des adultes.

116. En outre, le projet de résolution du Comité spécial recommande à l'Assemblée générale:

"... de prendre les dispositions nécessaires, en consultation avec la Puissance administrante, pour assurer la présence effective des Nations Unies avant et pendant les élections".

117. Comme il ressort du rapport du Sous-Comité, les pétitionnaires qui ont été entendus par le Sous-Comité ont été unanimes à souhaiter que les Nations Unies interviennent sous une forme ou sous une autre, parce qu'ils ne se sentaient pas complètement en sécurité et ne pensaient pas que les élections pussent se dérouler librement et sincèrement si le soin de les organiser était laissé entièrement à l'autorité administrante ou aux gouvernements locaux actuellement au pouvoir. Il convient toutefois de noter que le Comité spécial n'a pas recommandé que les élections aient lieu sous la surveillance et la responsabilité directes des Nations Unies. Il a proposé d'assurer une présence effective des Nations Unies dans le territoire avant et pendant les élections. L'idée d'une présence des Nations Unies n'a rien de nouveau. Ces dernières années, de nombreux pays indépendants ont accepté la présence des Nations Unies sur leur territoire pour y accomplir certaines fonctions précises et à des fins déterminées. Si des pays indépendants acceptent cette procédure, l'autorité administrante ne devrait assurément faire aucune objection à ce qu'une présence des Nations Unies soit créée dans un territoire non autonome en vue d'appliquer la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance.

118. Nous espérons que l'Assemblée générale approuvera les recommandations formulées par le Comité spécial dans sa résolution du 19 juillet 1963, car elles constituent à notre avis le moyen le plus sûr et le plus raisonnable de résoudre la situation à Aden et dans les protectorats voisins. Il s'agit bien entendu d'un vaste territoire qui a été fortement négligé depuis plus d'un siècle, d'un territoire qui constitue actuellement l'un des derniers avant-postes coloniaux dans le monde arabe où la puissance coloniale cherche à se maintenir par divers moyens, en entretenant par exemple un régime tribal archaïque où des cheiks aux conceptions féodales nous sont présentés comme les véritables représentants de la population. Un tel régime n'a pas sa place de nos jours; il va à l'encontre de tous les progrès qui ont été accomplis dans tous les pays du monde dans la voie de la liberté et de la libération nationale. Alors que tous les peuples s'affranchissent du joug de la domination coloniale et se joignent au mouvement puissant et irrésistible de libération, nous constatons que l'Arabie du Sud continue de vivre dans les conditions médiévales les plus choquantes.

119. C'est dans cet esprit que nous demandons à l'Assemblée générale d'approuver le projet de résolution proposé par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre. Ma délégation appuiera naturellement tout projet de résolution qui serait présenté à l'Assemblée et qui contiendrait les dispositions essentielles du projet de résolution du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre.

120. M. GEORGESCU (Roumanie): L'Assemblée générale a de nouveau entamé la discussion d'un des problèmes politiques les plus importants que comporte son ordre du jour. Elle se fait ainsi l'écho de cet immense mouvement constitué par les millions et les millions d'hommes qui, aujourd'hui, dans le monde entier, luttent contre les dernières positions du colonialisme.

121. Trois ans se sont écoulés depuis l'adoption, par cette assemblée, de la Déclaration qui proclamait la liquidation immédiate et sans condition du colonialisme, et le mérite qu'ont eu les Nations Unies d'agir conformément aux exigences de l'histoire se voit, aujourd'hui, entièrement confirmé. Le document soumis par l'Union soviétique à la quinzième session^{5/} a été un instrument utile au service du progrès de l'humanité. Il a stimulé la lutte pour la libération des peuples des colonies et il a mobilisé de nouvelles forces à l'appui de cette cause.

122. Les nombreux pays et les nombreux peuples qui ont obtenu leur indépendance, par les réalisations importantes à leur actif et par la contribution qu'ils ont apportée à la solution des grands problèmes de l'humanité, ont démontré que le processus de la liquidation du colonialisme met en branle des forces immenses qui, maintenues pendant des siècles dans les ténèbres, avaient été de ce fait empêchées de s'affirmer avant leur libération.

123. Dans la mythologie grecque, Andromède, la noire fille de Céphée, avait été enchaînée et mise à la torture par Poséidon, le dieu des mers. Mais, plus tard, elle devint reine parmi les étoiles, et on peut la voir scintiller pendant les claires nuits d'été. La légende a eu, ici, le mérite de prévoir l'avenir.

124. Toute l'humanité apprécie l'importante contribution que la liquidation du colonialisme apporte à l'épanouissement de la civilisation et du génie de l'homme. Les régimes coloniaux ont été définitivement condamnés par l'histoire, et les peuples du monde entier unissent leurs voix pour demander la libération immédiate et totale des territoires qui se trouvent sous la domination coloniale. Pourtant, il y a encore des dizaines de colonies en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique latine.

125. Le racisme élevé au rang de politique d'Etat, les répressions et les expéditions armées menées contre ceux qui luttent pour leur liberté nationale, les lourdes peines auxquelles sont condamnés les leaders des mouvements révolutionnaires des colonies, la liquidation des cadres de certains peuples en voie d'accéder à leur libération, tout cela prouve que certaines forces du passé persistent encore dans leurs vains efforts pour arrêter l'histoire.

126. Certaines théories sont émises quant à l'effet bienfaisant de la continuité de la présence des puissances coloniales dans les différents territoires qui ont été sous leur domination pendant des décennies. Ces théories nouvelles ne font, en réalité, qu'en rééditer d'anciennes, qui alléguaient la prétendue mission civilisatrice des métropoles.

127. La réalité a été et continue d'être tout à fait différente. Des chercheurs assidus et honnêtes, des savants de grande renommée ont démontré que beaucoup de territoires sous le joug colonial se trouvaient, au moment de leur occupation, à un stade de développement et de prospérité nettement supérieur à celui d'aujourd'hui. Les peuples de ces territoires disposaient d'une organisation propre et ils avaient atteint un stade de développement matériel remarquable à cette époque. Les fouilles archéologiques de ces dernières années ont fait connaître des œuvres d'une réelle valeur artistique et culturelle.

^{5/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Annexe, point 87 de l'ordre du jour, document A/4502.

128. Réhabiliter l'histoire de nombre de ces peuples est l'une des préoccupations constantes des historiens de bonne foi. C'est une œuvre qui s'enrichit toujours davantage chaque année et qui devrait mettre définitivement fin à toutes ces fausses théories, contraires à la vérité, qui persistent encore dans certains cercles politiques intéressés à la prolongation des régimes coloniaux.

129. La délégation roumaine pense que l'Assemblée générale, en examinant de nouveau le problème du colonialisme, doit tenir compte de cet élément d'une extrême importance: le colonialisme représente aujourd'hui ce qu'il y a de plus rétrograde dans le monde, sape la cause du progrès et constitue une source de tensions et de conflits qui met en danger la paix et la sécurité internationales.

130. La situation actuelle dans le monde colonial confirme la justesse des constatations inscrites dans la résolution 1514 (XV), ainsi que dans les résolutions ultérieures, c'est-à-dire que la prolongation de la domination coloniale ainsi que tout délai dans l'application de la Déclaration sont un danger toujours plus grand pour la paix et la sécurité internationales et entravent sérieusement la coopération entre Etats. Or, ce sont là les principes mêmes qui sont à la base de notre organisation; leur promotion constitue la principale tâche des Nations Unies.

131. Les débats qui ont eu lieu à cette session sur les problèmes coloniaux ont démontré l'inquiétude croissante que suscite dans le monde entier la situation de l'Afrique centrale et de l'Afrique du Sud, zones où les régimes coloniaux sont actuellement les plus concentrés, et prouvent que cette situation est devenue une source permanente de conflits internationaux. La politique des puissances coloniales dans cette région crée des situations particulièrement graves pour le continent; je veux parler du racisme de l'Afrique du Sud et du Sud-Ouest africain, de la guerre coloniale et des atrocités commises dans les territoires portugais, du danger imminent que la Rhodésie du Sud devienne le second Etat raciste d'Afrique. De la tribune de l'Assemblée générale, on a mentionné à maintes reprises qu'à la base de cette politique se trouvent les intérêts des monopoles internationaux qui, pendant longtemps, ont imposé au développement économique et social de la région tout entière ce profil monstrueux caractérisé par des pratiques inhumaines et des conceptions racistes. La situation de cette partie du continent africain et ses graves répercussions sont une preuve évidente de la menace que présente le colonialisme, surtout à notre époque, quant aux relations pacifiques entre les nations.

132. A l'occasion de sa visite aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique, en juillet 1963, le Président du Tanganyika, M. Julius Nyerere, a déclaré, dans le discours qu'il a prononcé au club de la presse, à Washington:

"Nous considérons donc, en tant que nationalistes, que la prolongation du colonialisme dans n'importe quelle partie du monde, mais surtout en Afrique, est un affront à ceux d'entre nous qui ont obtenu l'indépendance.

Le Tanganyika ne peut s'estimer satisfait tant que la domination étrangère continue d'exister au sud de notre continent. Même si nous voulions ignorer les justes demandes de nos frères, notre propre intérêt nous obligerait à ne pas accepter cette situation. De nombreuses questions concernant le développement économique régional ne reçoivent pas de solution parce que les gouvernements coloniaux qui se trouvent sur nos frontières ne poursuivent pas les mêmes objectifs que nous dans le domaine du développement économique^{6/}."

133. La tranquillité et la sécurité de l'Afrique indépendante sont donc mises en péril et les nouveaux Etats sont privés d'un important levier pour leur développement économique et social, en l'espèce la coopération à l'échelon continental. L'Organisation des Nations Unies devra donc appuyer de la manière la plus efficace les efforts faits par les Etats africains en vue de consolider leur indépendance politique et économique, en mobilisant l'opinion internationale et en adoptant des mesures appropriées à la situation afin de décider les forces coloniales à libérer définitivement et complètement le continent africain.

134. La zone du sud de l'Afrique représente le noyau du colonialisme contemporain. Il y a aussi, en dehors du continent africain, un nombre considérable de territoires coloniaux qui se trouvent parsemés sur la surface du globe. Les puissances coloniales manifestent la même opposition à leur libération.

135. La politique poursuivie par les puissances administrantes fait l'objet d'une sérieuse inquiétude et suscite l'indignation surtout parce qu'aujourd'hui, au siècle de l'épanouissement du génie humain, l'oppression et l'exploitation continuent dans tous ces territoires, exactement comme un siècle ou deux siècles auparavant, et utilisent les formes et les méthodes propres au colonialisme classique. L'inquiétude manifestée par l'opinion internationale et par notre Organisation est on ne peut plus légitime si l'on prend en considération un autre facteur fondamental qui caractérise la politique coloniale contemporaine. Il faut remarquer la préoccupation particulière des puissances coloniales de garder, par l'intermédiaire de territoires dispersés dans les diverses parties du globe, un vrai réseau de points d'appui servant à maintenir le colonialisme en tant que système.

136. Comme on le sait, cette année même, ces puissances n'ont pas manqué d'utiliser à cet effet les bases militaires existantes de ce réseau pour assurer leur domination sur des territoires coloniaux; ce fut le cas, par exemple, de certains territoires qui se trouvent au sud du continent africain. La délégation roumaine accorde une attention particulière à ce genre de manifestations du colonialisme contemporain car de tels points de liaison coloniale, parsemés sur l'entière superficie du globe, constituent un sérieux danger pour les peuples récemment libérés comme pour la paix et la sécurité internationales.

137. L'Organisation des Nations Unies se voit en butte aux actions et aux méthodes les plus diverses, employées par les puissances administrantes pour prolonger leur domination sur les colonies. Lorsque les vieilles formes d'oppression deviennent vulnérables, on cherche de nouvelles formes mieux adaptées aux conditions de l'époque. Dans cet ordre d'idées, il faut remarquer le nombre croissant des plaintes dont les populations des différents territoires que les puissances coloniales ont privés de la possibilité d'exercer réellement leur droit à l'autodétermination, saisissent les Nations Unies. L'Assemblée générale examine actuellement la question d'Oman. Les représentants d'Aden dévoilent le caractère fictif de la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud; ils revendiquent le droit à une indépendance réelle, conforme aux aspirations de la population. De nombreux autres territoires coloniaux continuent à rester dans l'orbite politique et administrative de la métropole sous prétexte d'autonomie administrative interne.

138. Le danger d'une telle politique néo-coloniale plane tout particulièrement sur les petits territoires, qui, si l'on en croyait les puissances coloniales, ne pourraient exister par leurs propres moyens. A mesure que le processus de liquidation du colonialisme gagne cette catégorie de territoires, parsemés sur tous les continents — dans les régions du Pacifique, des Antilles ou de l'Atlantique —, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit veiller à ce que leur accession à l'indépendance s'effectue en conformité avec les dispositions de la Déclaration, sans que l'esprit de celle-ci soit dénaturé. On doit tenir compte de la volonté librement exprimée des populations respectives pour qu'une véritable libération s'accomplisse et pour qu'intervienne la liquidation complète des positions du colonialisme dans le monde. Toute violation de ces principes mènerait à la perpétuation des régimes coloniaux et à la création de nouveaux foyers de tension et d'anxiété.

139. L'image de tous ces problèmes propres au colonialisme, au stade actuel, est présentée d'une manière saisissante par le rapport du Comité des Vingt-Quatre [A/5446/Rev.1], chargé d'examiner la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

140. La délégation roumaine salue l'activité déployée par ce comité, chargé d'accomplir une des plus nobles tâches de notre Organisation, et appuie ses recommandations. Nous soulignons, de même, le mérite du Comité d'avoir accordé, cette année aussi, la priorité aux problèmes urgents, tout particulièrement à ceux de l'Afrique; nous apprécions également que le Comité ait étendu son activité aux autres territoires dépendants. Le rapport soumis cette année par le Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux ajoutera au dossier du colonialisme de nouveaux documents propres à démasquer ce dernier.

141. La grave situation du monde colonial, les implications qu'a cette situation pour la cause du progrès, de la paix et de la coopération internationales, ainsi que tout ajournement de l'application de la Déclaration, confirment qu'il s'impose d'urgence d'extirper du monde contemporain le fléau du colonialisme. La responsabilité et la compétence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans ce domaine s'accroissent donc en proportion directe du manque de coopération des puissances administrantes en ce qui concerne la mise en œuvre des dispositions de la Déclaration.

142. L'indépendance des peuples colonisés est le problème de l'humanité entière. Ce problème n'a jamais relevé et ne pourra jamais relever de la compétence exclusive des puissances administrantes.

143. Dans ces conditions, les appels à la modération et aux débats "parlementaires" au sein de l'ONU, l'énoncé, au Comité des Vingt-Quatre, au Conseil de sécurité et lors des débats actuels, de théories ayant trait à une compétence limitée des Nations Unies ne sont que l'écho des forces qui s'opposent, par tous les moyens, à la liquidation définitive de l'oppression coloniale. Non seulement ces forces ont pour but d'affaiblir l'efficacité de notre organisation, mais elles visent, dans une égale mesure, à diminuer son autorité à l'égard des peuples des colonies, à désarmer politiquement ces derniers, en soutenant la thèse que l'indépendance ne pourrait être obtenue que par la bienveillance des puissances coloniales.

144. L'Assemblée générale a le devoir d'intervenir pour l'immédiate mise en œuvre des dispositions de la Déclaration relative à la liquidation du colonialisme, en adoptant des résolutions qui puissent donner aux peuples des colonies un moyen de plus dans leur lutte pour la libération, lorsqu'ils en ont le plus besoin. Bis dat, qui cito dat, dit un adage latin. Celui-là donne deux fois, qui donne vite. Le mandat que recevra cette année le Comité des Vingt-Quatre doit refléter cette situation. Les tâches nouvelles confiées au Comité doivent confirmer que les peuples des colonies trouvent un appui et un allié dans l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

145. La délégation roumaine, exprimant la solidarité que la Roumanie manifeste d'une manière conséquente dans la lutte menée pour la liquidation totale et immédiate du colonialisme, apportera, à cette session aussi, son entière contribution à l'adoption de mesures tendant à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration adoptée il y a trois ans par l'Assemblée générale.

146. C'est la conviction de la délégation roumaine que, grâce aux efforts communs de toutes les forces anticoloniales, il est possible d'effectuer des pas décisifs pour écarter les obstacles qui continuent à se dresser sur la voie de la libération des peuples des colonies.

La séance est levée à 13 h 10.

CHAPITRE RELATIF AUX TERRITOIRES SOUS AD-MINISTRATION PORTUGAISE: RAPPORT DE LA
QUATRIÈME COMMISSION (A/5629)

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

32. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Nous poursuivons maintenant la discussion générale du point 23.

33. M. Mahmoud RIAD (République arabe unie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Il y a quelques jours à peine, l'Assemblée générale adoptait, à l'unanimité, une autre déclaration historique [1261^{ème} séance], à savoir la Déclaration des Nations Unies sur l'élimination de toutes les formes de discrimination raciale. Dans son action pour la justice et l'égalité envers toute l'humanité, cette organisation internationale, s'inspirant des principes mêmes de sa Charte, avait antérieurement adopté deux déclarations importantes. La première était la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, qui proclamait que tous les êtres humains naissent libres et égaux en dignité et en droits et que chacun peut se prévaloir de tous les droits et de toutes les libertés proclamés dans ladite déclaration, sans distinction aucune, notamment de race, de couleur ou d'origine nationale.

34. La seconde était la Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, par laquelle cette assemblée proclamait que la sujétion des peuples à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales. De plus, l'Assemblée déclarait que tous les peuples ont droit à la libre détermination et, en vertu de ce droit, doivent pouvoir déterminer librement leurs statuts politiques et poursuivre librement leur développement économique, social et culturel.

35. Il est réconfortant de noter les efforts accomplis par cette assemblée et son souci d'assurer l'application loyale de ces déclarations historiques. Inutile de préciser que le rétablissement des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, l'élimination de la discrimination raciale et la liquidation du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations contribuent à redonner à la personne humaine sa dignité et sa valeur, à assurer les droits égaux des hommes et des femmes ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites, et à promouvoir un progrès social et un niveau de vie meilleur dans une liberté plus grande. En outre, et c'est là peut-être le plus important, ces efforts tendent nécessairement à redresser l'injustice, à créer une base solide pour la coopération internationale et à maintenir l'idéal de paix universelle poursuivi par l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

36. Il n'est pas douteux que les efforts accomplis par l'Organisation dans les divers domaines que j'ai mentionnés ont permis d'obtenir des résultats tangibles qui doivent nous encourager à exiger la continuation d'une telle politique. Aujourd'hui, alors que le processus de décolonisation touche à sa fin, nous nous trouvons en face de situations nombreuses et variées. Dans certains cas, nous constatons que les colonialistes s'apprêtent à céder la place, mais qu'ils ont pris soin auparavant d'assurer le maintien de leur contrôle sur l'exploitation des ressources des territoires qu'ils occupent. Dans de nombreux autres cas, les colonialistes ont installé des colons étrangers en nombre important, leur ont octroyé le meilleur des terres et des autres ressources du pays qu'ils occupent, ont concentré le pouvoir entre leurs mains et, maintenant, ces mêmes colonialistes prétendent qu'ils ne sont pas en mesure d'assumer leurs responsabilités à l'égard de la population indigène et de la communauté internationale. Ailleurs, les colonialistes s'efforcent d'implanter des colonies d'émigrants venus de la métropole et de placer le monde en face du "fait accompli", comme c'est le cas pour les territoires portugais.

37. A quelques exceptions près, le refus des puissances coloniales de mettre en œuvre les dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux est motivé par leur désir de conserver les positions stratégiques qu'ils occupent dans les pays dépendants, ainsi que les monopoles étrangers grâce auxquels ils exploitent les ressources naturelles et humaines des pays placés sous leur domination.

38. Au mois de juillet de cette année, 32 gouvernements africains ont demandé au Conseil de sécurité d'étudier la situation dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal; le Conseil a décidé que la politique poursuivie par le Portugal, consistant à prétendre que les territoires placés sous son administration sont des possessions d'outre-mer et, en tant que telles, font partie intégrante de la métropole, va à l'encontre des principes de la Charte et des résolutions adoptées à cet égard par l'Assemblée générale et le Conseil de sécurité. De plus, le Conseil a déclaré que, dans ces territoires, la situation ainsi créée compromet gravement la paix et la sécurité en Afrique. Nous regrettons de constater que les efforts du Secrétaire général et de plusieurs gouvernements visant à persuader le Portugal de reconnaître aux habitants des territoires placés sous son administration le droit à l'autodétermination, tel que le conçoit l'Organisation des Nations Unies, n'ont pu aboutir à des résultats positifs.

39. Voilà pourquoi, aujourd'hui, après quatre mois, la résolution du Conseil de sécurité du 31 juillet 1963^{1/} n'a toujours pas été mise en œuvre. C'est aussi la raison pour laquelle l'Assemblée générale vient d'adopter une résolution demandant au Conseil de sécurité de réexaminer immédiatement cette question et de prendre les mesures nécessaires pour donner effet à ses propres décisions, en particulier à celles qui se trouvent contenues dans sa résolution du 31 juillet.

40. Il convient de noter que les Etats indépendants d'Afrique sont également déterminés à appuyer les nationalistes des territoires africains dépendants pour que ces derniers recouvrent leur liberté. Les décisions prises le 25 mai 1963 à Addis-Abéba, lors de la Conférence au sommet des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, doivent être lues attentivement et bien comprises, car cette volonté d'aider les populations des territoires dépendants d'Afrique continuera à se manifester à tous les niveaux et par tous les moyens.

41. L'attitude du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni au cours des débats du Conseil de sécurité sur la Rhodésie du Sud pendant le mois de septembre 1963 a constitué pour le moins une violation de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il est en vérité regrettable que le Royaume-Uni ait cru devoir faire usage de son droit de veto pour une question coloniale, essayant ainsi de saper l'autorité du Conseil.

42. Aujourd'hui seulement, nous avons reçu le rapport du Secrétaire général sur la question du Sud-Ouest africain, rapport présenté conformément à la résolution 1899 (XVIII) que l'Assemblée générale a adoptée au cours de la présente session. A notre grand regret, le Gouvernement sud-africain continue à refuser d'admettre la présence d'un représentant résident de l'Organisation des Nations Unies au Sud-Ouest africain, empêchant ainsi notre organisation d'adopter une assistance technique à la population de ce territoire.

43. Je me propose maintenant de présenter quelques observations sur la partie du rapport du Comité spécial traitant d'Aden et des protectorats de l'Arabie du Sud [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V]. De l'avis de ma délégation, il convient de féliciter le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre pour sa décision d'envoyer dans cette région un sous-comité chargé de recueillir sur place des renseignements sur les conditions existant dans ce territoire. Nous pensons que cette décision a été sage, non seulement parce qu'elle a inauguré le système des missions de visite en tant que méthode à adopter par le Comité spécial, mais encore parce que son importance est considérable eu égard à la situation à Aden et dans les protectorats. Le rapport présenté par le Sous-Comité ne peut que justifier la satisfaction qu'à l'origine nous avons éprouvée de la décision du Comité spécial.

44. Autant nous nous félicitons de l'action rapide et énergique prise tant par le Comité spécial que par son Sous-Comité, autant nous regrettons l'attitude du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni envers le Sous-Comité. Au lieu de coopérer avec le Sous-Comité, qui agissait au nom des Nations Unies dans leur ensemble, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a choisi de faire échec à sa tâche et à son mandat. Le refus par le Royaume-Uni de permettre aux membres du Sous-

Comité de se rendre dans le territoire ne peut que constituer une preuve supplémentaire des conditions déplorables qui existent à Aden et dans les protectorats sous administration coloniale britannique.

45. Le Sous-Comité d'Aden, ne pouvant pénétrer dans le territoire, a interrogé dans les capitales arabes avoisinantes de nombreux représentants et dirigeants de partis politiques et organisations diverses. Les pétitionnaires entendus ont été unanimes à exiger qu'une fin immédiate soit mise au colonialisme britannique, à réclamer l'organisation d'élections sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes, l'évacuation de la base militaire britannique d'Aden ainsi que des autres installations militaires, la réalisation de l'unité et la fin immédiate du règne de la terreur et de l'oppression à Aden et dans les protectorats. C'est sur la base de ces entretiens, et compte tenu de l'examen approfondi des conditions régnant dans le territoire, que le Sous-Comité a présenté au Comité spécial plusieurs recommandations concrètes, que ce dernier a adoptées à son tour. Parmi ces recommandations, la plus importante est celle qui demande que les populations d'Aden et des protectorats soient habilitées à exercer leur droit à l'autodétermination. Nous ne doutons pas que lorsque les populations d'Aden et des protectorats pourront se prononcer librement sur leur avenir elles décideront de s'unir au Yémen, leur mère patrie. Cela est d'autant plus certain qu'un grand mouvement se dessine, comme on le sait, en faveur d'une unité arabe plus grande, mouvement qui déjà façonne les événements et les tendances dans nos pays arabes.

46. Le Sous-Comité a également recommandé qu'un terme soit immédiatement mis à toutes les lois et règlements adoptés par les autorités coloniales pour empêcher la population d'exercer sa volonté. A cet égard, il est également de la plus haute importance que l'Assemblée générale fasse sienne la recommandation du Sous-Comité concernant les méthodes coloniales périmées telles que le bombardement de villes et de villages, l'emprisonnement et l'exil des dirigeants politiques et toutes mesures de répression mises en œuvre par la puissance coloniale à seule fin de renforcer sa domination sur la région.

47. A ce sujet, il convient également de parler de la base militaire d'Aden; le Royaume-Uni maintient cette base uniquement pour vaincre le mouvement nationaliste dans cette partie du monde. L'évacuation de cette base, demandée à l'unanimité par les pétitionnaires, devrait être également sanctionnée par l'Assemblée générale, étant donné notamment le paragraphe 5 du dispositif du projet de résolution adopté par le Comité spécial, selon lequel "... le maintien de la base militaire d'Aden ... compromet la sécurité de la région ..." [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. V, par. 478].

48. Ma délégation espère — et je suis sûr que cet espoir est partagé par de nombreuses autres délégations — que le Royaume-Uni réexaminera sa politique coloniale obstinée et permettra une accession rapide de ces territoires à la liberté et à la dignité nationale. Si on leur permet de faire un choix vraiment libre, sous la surveillance effective des Nations Unies, les populations d'Aden et des protectorats ne manqueront pas de jouer à nouveau leur rôle dans la marque de la civilisation humaine, rôle qu'elles ont joué avec tant de fierté au cours de l'histoire.

49. Nous espérons pouvoir accueillir dans quelques jours les représentants d'un Kenya indépendant et d'un Zanzibar indépendant, et les voir occuper dans cette salle les sièges auxquels ils ont droit. La lutte du peuple du Kenya pour recouvrer sa liberté et sa dignité restera une source d'inspiration pour les peuples qui sont encore sous la domination de l'étranger. Nous voulons rendre hommage à la population et aux dirigeants du Kenya, dont nous avons admiré les qualités d'hommes d'Etat lorsqu'ils ont eu à affronter des situations difficiles et à fournir une réponse claire à tous les prétextes malveillants qui ont servi à retarder inutilement l'indépendance de ce pays.

50. Nous voulons également dire toute notre satisfaction de pouvoir saluer bientôt l'indépendance de Zanzibar, et cela malgré toutes les épreuves que la population et les chefs de Zanzibar ont dû supporter; leur lutte pour la liberté est maintenant couronnée de succès.

51. Il reste encore beaucoup à faire pour libérer la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland. Il importe, lorsqu'ils deviendront indépendants, que ces pays ne soient pas surchargés d'obligations ou d'engagements imposés par la puissance coloniale.

52. Nous espérons que, lorsque la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland sera dissoute, les dispositions à prendre en vue de l'indépendance de la Rhodésie du Nord et du Nyassaland ne souffriront plus aucun retard.

53. Je voudrais maintenant remercier sincèrement le Comité spécial, au nom de ma délégation, pour ses efforts. Qu'il me soit également permis d'exprimer à ce comité toute notre gratitude pour son œuvre, dont témoigne le rapport que nous examinons en ce moment.

54. Nous relevons notamment que le Comité spécial n'a été en mesure d'examiner que 26 territoires sur les 64 dont il aura finalement à s'occuper. Cependant, nous comprenons qu'il y a encore certains territoires qui ne figurent pas sur la liste soumise au Comité spécial. Il est nécessaire d'examiner le statut de ces territoires qui ne sont ni indépendants, ni autonomes.

55. Le présent rapport du Comité spécial traite des territoires suivants: le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland, le Souaziland, Malte, les îles Fidji, la Guyane britannique, la Gambie, Gibraltar et les territoires africains sous administration espagnole.

56. Bien que nous soyons entièrement d'accord sur les décisions du Comité spécial relatives à ces territoires, nous voudrions pourtant parler d'une ou deux situations. Compte tenu de la menace proférée par la République sud-africaine d'incorporer les trois territoires dépendant de la Haute Commission, il est indispensable de prendre toutes les mesures nécessaires pour en garantir l'indépendance et l'intégrité territoriales. L'Assemblée pourrait peut-être, au cours de la présente session, se mettre d'accord pour désigner un nombre restreint d'observateurs qui seraient placés dans chacun de ces territoires et chargés d'étudier la situation de près ainsi que de faire rapport sur tout fait nouveau.

57. En ce qui concerne Gibraltar, nous ne doutons pas que ce territoire fasse partie intégrante de l'Espagne, tout comme Ceuta, Mellila, Ifni et le Sahara espagnol font partie intégrante du Maroc.

58. Le différend qui s'est élevé au sujet de la Guyane britannique a fait l'objet d'une décision arbitraire de la part du Colonial Office à Londres; nous espérons que les efforts de conciliation entre les divers partis politiques de ce pays seront intensifiés pour le plus grand bien de sa population.

59. Pour ce qui est des travaux futurs du Comité spécial, le refus de certaines puissances administrantes de recevoir les missions de visite nommées par le Comité nous préoccupe particulièrement. Nous aimerions que l'Assemblée générale adresse un appel urgent à ces pays pour qu'ils facilitent la tâche du Comité. Peut-être le Comité spécial devrait-il, s'il y est autorisé et s'il le désire, décider, dès le début de sa session de 1964, d'envoyer diverses missions de visite; chaque mission pourrait s'occuper de plusieurs territoires dans une région déterminée; les rapports que ces missions feraient au Comité spécial aideraient ce dernier à mieux apprécier la situation et épargnerait de longues discussions.

60. L'Assemblée générale pourrait donc juger utile de prendre au cours de cette session des mesures permettant de faciliter la tâche du Comité spécial dans son ensemble.

61. Au cours de cette session, le Comité spécial a reçu un mandat supplémentaire précis en vertu de la résolution adoptée le 14 novembre 1963 au sujet du Sud-Ouest africain [résolution 1899 (XVIII)]. Ce mandat consiste à étudier, en coopération avec le Secrétaire général et les organismes des Nations Unies, les implications des activités des industries minières et autres sociétés internationales possédant des intérêts au Sud-Ouest africain, afin d'évaluer leur influence économique et politique et leur mode d'opération.

62. Nous espérons et escomptons que ce sera une étude complète qui portera sur les activités en question, non seulement dans le Sud-Ouest africain, mais dans tous les territoires encore dépendants de l'Afrique centrale et de l'Afrique méridionale, car les opérations de ces sociétés internationales sont liées entre elles et intéressent de nombreux domaines dans plus d'un territoire.

63. Il a été dit, en toute bonne foi, que les Nations Unies ne devraient pas hâter l'accession à l'indépendance de certains pays et peuples coloniaux; l'argument à l'appui de cette thèse est qu'une accession prématurée à l'indépendance, d'un pays ou d'un peuple, peut le précipiter dans la chaos ou dans la guerre civile. Nous sommes persuadés que ce sont des événements récents qui ont inspiré ceux qui croient à cet argument et qui ont adressé cet avertissement; mais, en toute franchise, nous ne pensons pas que ces craintes soient justifiées. Car une comparaison objective entre la situation qui régnait dans un pays quelconque avant son accession à l'indépendance et celle existant après cette accession ne fera que démontrer que de grands avantages ont découlé de ce nouvel état.

64. Les secousses qui peuvent accompagner l'accession à l'indépendance ne sauraient s'expliquer que par la transformation et le rajustement à des conditions nouvelles. Cela, joint aux tentatives faites pour maintenir des lacunes grâce auxquelles les colonisateurs peuvent conserver leur influence même après leur départ, suffit à expliquer les difficultés inhérentes à toute phase de rajustement.

65. La mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux ne restaurerait pas seulement les droits et les libertés de ces peuples; elle contribuerait également à favoriser des relations amicales entre nations et à créer les conditions nécessaires au maintien de la paix et de la sécurité dans le monde.

66. M. SMIGANOWSKI (Pologne) [traduit de l'anglais]: Bien que trois ans se soient écoulés depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration historique sur la décolonisation [résolution 1514 (XV)], la plupart des organes des Nations Unies continuent à traiter de questions liées au colonialisme. Il est vrai que les affaires coloniales intéressent directement la Quatrième Commission de l'Assemblée générale, mais, si l'on examine de plus près les délibérations des autres commissions, on remarque qu'un certain nombre d'orateurs, au sein de la Première Commission, ont déclaré s'opposer à la présence de bases militaires appartenant à des puissances occidentales dans les territoires coloniaux et dans les Etats nouvellement libérés, sans parler des essais nucléaires qui sont effectués malgré les protestations énergiques des habitants de ces territoires.

67. A la Commission politique spéciale, nous avons longuement traité, et nous continuons de le faire, du problème de l'apartheid, qui n'est rien d'autre que la manifestation brutale d'une politique d'exploitation colonialiste de l'énorme majorité de la population, dans l'intérêt des colons européens.

68. La Deuxième Commission demande avec insistance la liquidation de la division périmée du travail, fondée sur l'exploitation des colonies par leur métropole.

69. La Troisième Commission a récemment approuvé un projet de Déclaration sur l'élimination de toutes les formes de discrimination raciale [voir A/5603 et Corr.1].

70. Comme nous le savons tous, la discrimination raciale est utilisée encore maintenant par les colonisateurs pour justifier la sujétion des peuples sous le prétexte, qui n'est plus valable, de les civiliser. N'est-il pas intéressant et significatif de noter que le Conseil de sécurité, principal organe de notre organisation, responsable du maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales, s'est occupé de plus en plus fréquemment de problèmes coloniaux?

71. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a joué un rôle important dans le processus de décolonisation, en se fondant sur les dispositions de la Déclaration de 1960. Il suffit de mentionner que 11 Etats Membres de notre organisation ont accédé à l'indépendance après cette date. De plus, nous attendons avec impatience l'imminente proclamation de l'indépendance de Zanzibar et du Kenya, dont les populations ont subi des pertes considérables au cours de la lutte menée pour leur libération. De même, nous nous félicitons de l'annonce de l'octroi de l'indépendance à Malte et au Nyassaland, l'année prochaine. Nous espérons que la Rhodésie du Nord viendra bientôt se joindre également à la famille des nations libres, et nous serons heureux d'accueillir tous ces Etats en qualité de nouveaux Membres de notre organisation.

72. Il est cependant regrettable que dans divers cas les puissances colonialistes continuent à refuser d'admettre que le processus d'émancipation des peuples colonisés est irréversible. Toutes ne sont pas disposées à tirer les conclusions qui s'imposent de la leçon donnée par le peuple algérien, à savoir que ni la répression ni la guerre menée même avec les moyens les plus modernes ne peuvent abattre une nation qui lutte pour son droit sacré à l'indépendance et que la victoire finale dans ce combat qui paraît inégal ne peut être que celle de cette nation même.

73. Bien que le domaine de la domination colonialiste se soit amenuisé au cours des dernières années, le danger inhérent à l'existence prolongée du colonialisme ne diminue en rien. Les peuples dépendants, avec une détermination sans cesse accrue, ont lutté pour secouer le joug colonial. Ils ne veulent pas vivre plus longtemps entravés par des liens coloniaux qui sont un anachronisme à une époque d'importantes transformations sociales et politiques et de grands progrès de la science et de la technique. Ils refusent, pour des raisons que l'on comprend, de vivre plus longtemps sous le joug colonial, alors que dans leur voisinage même les pays colonisés ont éliminé ce genre de régime et y ont substitué un statut indépendant.

74. Cependant, les puissances coloniales non seulement rejettent ces justes aspirations, mais s'efforcent même par la violence et par l'usage de la force de les anéantir.

75. Cette situation est lourde de dangers véritables, car à notre époque la paix est indivisible. C'est pourquoi la Pologne et, en fait, la communauté internationale tout entière s'intéressent tant à la liquidation rapide du colonialisme.

76. La situation qui menace le plus dangereusement la paix dans l'ensemble de l'Afrique est celle qui règne dans les colonies portugaises. Il y a plus: non seulement les troupes portugaises mènent la guerre contre la population autochtone, mais encore elles violent les frontières d'autres Etats africains. Elles ont bombardé le territoire du Sénégal, comme nous l'avons appris au Conseil de sécurité. Elles ont violé le territoire et l'espace aérien du Tanganyika et de la Guinée, comme l'ont indiqué les représentants de ces pays à la Quatrième Commission. Point n'est besoin de s'appesantir sur les dangers qui pourraient résulter de tels actes.

77. La position de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à l'égard des territoires portugais se trouve définie dans les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité. La dernière résolution a été adoptée en juillet 1962^{2/}. Aujourd'hui, en ce début du mois de décembre, il est clair que la résolution du Conseil de sécurité est restée lettre morte pour le Portugal, et cela comme toutes les résolutions antérieures sur les colonies portugaises. L'"interprétation" portugaise de l'autodétermination ne saurait tromper personne, et c'est à juste titre que notre organisation s'y oppose.

78. La délégation polonaise est absolument convaincue que le Conseil de sécurité, conformément à la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée par l'Assemblée générale, donnera effet à ses propres décisions de manière à obliger le Portugal à respecter le droit des peuples à l'indépendance.

79. Le rapport du Comité des Vingt-Quatre [A/5446/Rev.1] et les débats de la Quatrième Commission ont amplement prouvé que c'est grâce à l'assistance que lui procurent ses alliés que le Portugal parvient à poursuivre sa politique coloniale. L'armée portugaise, dans sa lutte contre les Africains, utilise de l'équipement militaire acquis par le canal de l'OTAN. Il est évident que sans l'assistance militaire, financière et économique des principales puissances de l'OTAN le Portugal ne parviendrait pas, avec ses ressources limitées, à maintenir sa domination en Afrique. De plus, la manière dont ces puissances ont voté à l'Assemblée générale comme au Conseil de sécurité — nous en avons eu un exemple tout récemment — n'est qu'une nouvelle manifestation de l'appui donné à la politique portugaise. Les représentants des pays d'Afrique ont eu raison, par conséquent, de déclarer que cette attitude des puissances occidentales engage leur responsabilité dans les actes des colonialistes portugais contre les populations de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée portugaise et d'autres territoires.

80. Cet appui donné au Portugal par ses alliés doit être interprété à la lumière des intérêts qu'ont les grands monopoles occidentaux dans les territoires africains sous domination portugaise. Ainsi, par exemple, l'industrie du diamant en Angola est monopolisée par la Companhia de Diamantes de Angola, dont les principaux actionnaires sont l'Union minière du Haut-Katanga, la banque américaine Morgan et l'Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa. La Société belge Petrofina contrôle l'extraction du pétrole en Angola.

81. Ces grandes compagnies sont étroitement liées à d'autres groupes financiers occidentaux qui opèrent en Afrique du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain, dans les Rhodésies et au Congo. Ce qu'on appelle la "ceinture dorée de l'Afrique", qui comprend les régions les plus riches du continent, a procuré au monde occidental, en 1961, 75 p. 100 de sa production de diamants industriels, 60 p. 100 de sa production de cobalt, 67 p. 100 de sa production d'or, 50 p. 100 de sa production de chrome, etc.

82. L'alliance de facto qui existe entre le Portugal et la République sud-africaine — qui refuse depuis des années au Sud-Ouest africain son indépendance — est significative. La question du Sud-Ouest africain a déjà été examinée au cours de cette session de l'Assemblée, et la délégation polonaise a donné son appui total à la résolution qui a été adoptée.

^{2/} Ibid.

83. L'Assemblée, au cours de cette session, a également adopté deux résolutions [1883 (XVIII) et 1889 (XVIII)] sur la Rhodésie du Sud. Dans ce territoire, la situation continue de s'aggraver. Le gouvernement minoritaire des colons exerce une pression considérable pour obtenir l'indépendance de la Rhodésie du Sud. Ainsi, on risque qu'un nouvel Etat raciste naisse en Afrique. Dans ce contexte, on ne peut que s'alarmer d'avoir vu le Royaume-Uni opposer, au Conseil de sécurité, son veto à un projet de résolution³/ invitant l'autorité administrante à ne pas transférer à l'actuel Gouvernement de la Rhodésie du Sud les attributs de la souveraineté, et en particulier le contrôle des forces armées.

84. Nous continuons à espérer que le Royaume-Uni respectera la résolution de l'Assemblée générale réclamant l'octroi à la Rhodésie du Sud d'une nouvelle constitution fondée sur le système du droit de vote universel, qui doit permettre l'établissement de l'Etat africain indépendant de Zimbabwe.

85. La Pologne considère la libération des peuples colonisés comme un acte de simple justice historique, quel que soit le système politique et économique des Etats accédant à l'indépendance grâce au processus de la décolonisation. Notre attitude, à cet égard, est conforme à la lettre et à l'esprit de la Déclaration de 1960 [résolution 1514 (XV)], qui, dans le deuxième paragraphe du dispositif, stipule clairement que "tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination" et qu'en vertu de ce droit "ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel".

86. Nous regrettons que les puissances coloniales ne respectent pas cette disposition si claire de la Déclaration et remettent constamment l'octroi de l'indépendance à leurs colonies en attendant l'établissement d'un gouvernement conforme à leurs vœux. C'est le cas de la Guyane britannique, un territoire qui a connu tous les stades du système britannique de développement constitutionnel. Il est autonome depuis 1961, mais il n'est pas encore parvenu à obtenir l'indépendance, et même la fixation d'une date pour cette indépendance est constamment remise sous les prétextes les plus divers. Je ne m'étendrai pas sur l'histoire des pressions extérieures exercées sur l'autorité administrante quant à la direction politique et au développement de la Guyane britannique. On sait que le Royaume-Uni ne coopère ni avec le Comité des Vingt-Quatre ni avec son sous-comité des bons offices et qu'il a choisi d'imposer plutôt à la Guyane britannique une décision que le Premier Ministre, M. Jagan, a qualifiée de manquement à la foi due au territoire et à son gouvernement élu.

87. Un autre moyen d'esquiver la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation, afin de préserver d'importantes positions stratégiques et économiques de la métropole, est la création de prétendues fédérations. La création de la Fédération de l'Arabie méridionale, dans laquelle Aden a été inclus, en constitue un exemple classique. Le rapport du Comité spécial nous apprend que cette fédération a été créée contre la volonté et en dehors de toute consultation des populations intéressées. Le Royaume-Uni ne cherche même pas à cacher les raisons pour lesquelles il entend maintenir son contrôle sur Aden. Il désire simplement préserver les intérêts pétroliers de l'Occident dans cette région et maintenir sur place ses bases militaires.

88. Les puissances coloniales n'ayant pas respecté les résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale lors de ses précédentes sessions, le Comité des Vingt-Quatre a été contraint de réexaminer les questions intéressant les territoires qui avaient fait l'objet de ces résolutions. Ainsi, malgré l'activité qu'il n'a cessé de déployer depuis la période de février à octobre 1963, le Comité n'est pas parvenu à étudier tous les territoires coloniaux que la résolution 1810 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale l'invitait à examiner.

89. Le rapport du Comité contient de nombreux renseignements sur la manière dont les puissances coloniales, directement ou indirectement, entravent le processus de la décolonisation. Je voudrais, sur ce point, dire une fois de plus combien la délégation polonaise apprécie le travail considérable accompli par le Comité, de même que les efforts de son président, M. Coulibaly. En tant que membre du Comité spécial, la Pologne a apporté sa modeste contribution au travail du Comité et a eu l'occasion d'expliquer sa position à l'égard des divers problèmes dont traite le rapport.

90. La Pologne appuie les conclusions et les recommandations du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, dont les méthodes de travail se sont révélées particulièrement utiles pour l'accomplissement de la tâche qui lui a été confiée. Nous sommes en faveur de la prolongation de son mandat et nous appuyons la proposition selon laquelle le Comité, dans ses travaux futurs, devrait donner la priorité aux territoires qui n'ont pas encore été examinés jusqu'à présent. Cette priorité ne devrait cependant pas priver le Comité de la possibilité de réexaminer les territoires dont traite le rapport actuel, tant du point de vue de l'évolution qui pourrait s'y produire que sous l'angle de la mise en œuvre des résolutions adoptées ici même.

91. La Conférence historique des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement africains, tenue à Addis-Abéba en mai 1963, a été un événement international important qui a favorisé l'accélération de la liquidation du colonialisme sur le continent africain et la consolidation de l'indépendance des Etats africains nouvellement libérés. La Pologne se félicite de la création de l'Organisation de l'unité africaine et elle appuie entièrement les résolutions adoptées à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba.

92. Je voudrais citer à cet égard le Président du Ghana, M. Kwame Nkrumah, qui déclarait à Addis-Abéba, le 24 mai 1963:

"L'indépendance n'est que le prélude à une lutte nouvelle et plus engagée encore pour le droit à conduire nos propres affaires économiques et sociales, à édifier notre société selon nos aspirations, sans connaître les contraintes et l'ingérence écrasantes et humiliantes des néo-colonialistes ... (Notre progrès économique veut la fin de la domination colonialiste et néo-colonialiste en Afrique... Tout montre que les impérialistes ne se sont pas retirés de nos affaires. Parfois, comme au Congo, leur ingérence est manifeste.)... Mais, généralement, elle se dissimule sous de nombreuses institutions qui se mêlent de nos affaires intérieures pour fomenter la dissension à l'intérieur de nos frontières et créer un climat de tension et d'instabilité politique."

93. Et il en est bien exactement ainsi. Malgré les déclarations entendues ici, le néo-colonialisme n'est pas un slogan creux. Il constitue une menace réelle dirigée contre l'indépendance économique et, partant, contre l'indépendance même des pays nouvellement libérés. La discussion générale, qui a eu lieu à la présente session, a confirmé que les Etats nouvellement libérés comprennent bien le danger du néo-colonialisme. Il faudra abandonner définitivement la philosophie du XIX^{ème} siècle formulée par Benjamin Disraeli, lord Beaconsfield, selon laquelle "les colonies ne cessent pas d'être des colonies du fait qu'elles sont indépendantes".

94. L'élimination du colonialisme et de ses séquelles et la défense des pays nouvellement libérés contre le néo-colonialisme sont étroitement liées à la question de la coexistence pacifique et au renforcement de la paix mondiale.

95. Le ralentissement du processus de décolonisation et le néo-colonialisme engendrent tous deux des tensions et créent des sources de conflits dangereux. La détente internationale, d'autre part, facilite l'émancipation des peuples colonisés et renforce les Etats nouvellement indépendants.

96. En effet, la coexistence pacifique ne peut signifier et ne signifie pas le maintien du statu quo colonial. La coexistence pacifique suppose entre les Etats des relations sur un pied d'égalité, tandis que le colonialisme, par sa nature même, contredit ce principe d'égalité des Etats et des nations.

97. La délégation polonaise est d'avis que l'Assemblée générale devrait recommander au Comité spécial de fixer des dates limites pour l'octroi de l'indépendance aux territoires coloniaux, en consultation avec les représentants de la population et, là où c'est possible, avec l'autorité administrante. Il est utile de se rappeler que la Déclaration de 1960 sur la décolonisation demandait déjà l'adoption de mesures immédiates pour le transfert, sans condition ni réserve, de tous les pouvoirs sur leurs territoires aux peuples colonisés. Nous croyons que le vingtième anniversaire de notre organisation, qui sera célébré en 1965, devrait être commémoré par la liquidation complète et définitive du colonialisme. Cette tâche est à la fois réaliste et digne d'être vigoureusement poursuivie par l'Assemblée générale.

98. M. SOW (Tchad): Il y a moins de trois mois, dans cette salle de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies, où déjà tant de voix se sont élevées pour défendre les libertés menacées du monde, un homme s'exprimait en ces termes:

"Notre conception du monde est différente... Une des différences essentielles tient à ce que le peuple américain croit à la libre détermination pour tous les peuples..."

"... nous croyons que dans le monde entier, en Europe orientale comme en Europe occidentale, dans le sud comme dans le nord de l'Afrique, dans les pays anciens comme dans les pays neufs, les peuples doivent être libres de choisir leur propre avenir sans discrimination ni solution imposée, sans contrainte ni subversion." [1209^{ème} séance, par. 44 et 45.]

99. Comme on l'a deviné, ces paroles, dont l'opportunité n'a jamais été plus évidente, sont extraites du discours prononcé, à cette même place, le 20 septembre 1963, par le regretté John Fitzgerald Kennedy. Depuis le jour fatal où une main criminelle a enlevé à la cause sacrée de la liberté un homme si universellement aimé, mon esprit aux abois se livre à toutes sortes de spéculations, car il n'est un secret pour personne qu'en conformité des décisions de la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba/ l'Afrique mène ces jours-ci une guerre sans trêve ni merci au colonialisme. Qui donc, dans une entreprise aussi colossale, pouvait mieux l'aider que le président Kennedy, dont le programme d'action était, en certains points, si pareil au sien? Et cette mort tragique qu'il vient de connaître, dans une région qui s'est toujours farouchement opposée à l'émancipation des noirs, ne suffit-elle pas à l'Afrique pour réclamer le président Kennedy comme l'un de ses plus grands et illustres martyrs? Si je dois considérer l'unanimité de l'hommage qui est chaque jour rendu à ce courageux leader prématurément enlevé à notre affection, je n'hésiterai pas à écrire que sa mort n'aura pas été vaine et que quelques-unes des idées pour lesquelles il a tant lutté et combattu feront rapidement leur chemin non seulement à travers le monde, mais aussi aux Nations Unies.

100. C'est dans cet esprit que ma délégation prie le Comité spécial sur la décolonisation de recevoir ses compliments les plus sincères pour l'important rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] qu'il vient de soumettre aux délibérations de l'Assemblée. Comme chacun le sait, il y a trois ans l'Assemblée générale, à sa quinzième session, adoptait à l'unanimité la déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Cette déclaration avait pour but de créer des conditions plus favorables à l'élimination pacifique et sans heurt du vieux système colonial. Malheureusement, pour des raisons qui ont été maintes fois évoquées ici, les dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV) n'ont jamais été appliquées. Il est même triste de rappeler que certains pays, comme le Portugal, l'Afrique du Sud, ont répondu à cette démarche si légitime des Nations Unies par des répressions sanglantes et barbares.

101. A sa seizième session, l'Assemblée générale, après avoir examiné la situation concernant l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, contenue dans la résolution 1514 (XV), adopta, le 27 novembre 1961, une nouvelle résolution [1654 (XVI)] par laquelle était créé un Comité spécial chargé de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations à l'Assemblée. En dépit de la bonne foi apportée par le Comité spécial et de ses efforts pour mener à bien la tâche qui lui était confiée, les puissances colonialistes ont toujours refusé de coopérer. Voilà pourquoi le processus de décolonisation se déroule dans des convulsions atroces, avec des chocs parfois si violents qu'ils n'épargnent même pas le pays colonisateur.

^{4/} Conférence au sommet des pays indépendants africains, réunie à Addis-Abéba du 22 au 25 mai 1963.

102. Il est définitivement admis que l'abolition du colonialisme n'a jamais été l'affaire exclusive des peuples dépendants. A ce propos, ma délégation estime qu'il est juste de rendre hommage une fois de plus aux Nations Unies pour les efforts qu'elles ont déployés dans ce domaine et qui ont amené à l'indépendance plus d'une trentaine de pays, dont le mien. Je m'empresse de souligner, pour l'histoire, que ce vœu des Nations Unies d'éliminer le colonialisme de la surface de la terre a rencontré la totale adhésion de la France et du Royaume-Uni, qui ont conclu que le moment était venu pour les peuples de décider eux-mêmes leur destin. Ce geste plein de grandeur de leur part a porté des fruits, car, entre colonisateurs et colonisés d'hier, il ne subsiste maintenant aucun souvenir douloureux, mais plutôt une collaboration franche et loyale.

103. Cependant, comme je l'ai fait remarquer plus haut, l'action des Nations Unies n'a pas toujours été féconde. Elle rencontre également la résistance acharnée et opiniâtre de certaines puissances administrantes, qui ne se sont pas seulement contentées de refuser leur coopération au Comité spécial, mais ont manœuvré pour lui créer toutes sortes d'obstacles, dont l'accès aux territoires placés sous leur mandat est l'un des moindres.

104. Eu égard au succès déjà remporté par les Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation, l'Assemblée générale se doit de trouver, au cours de cette session, une formule plus efficace qui permettrait à des millions d'êtres humains qui gémissent encore sous le joug colonial de recouvrer leur indépendance, afin de pouvoir mener une vie plus conforme à leurs aspirations et à leur dignité d'homme.

105. Ma délégation est donc d'avis que l'Assemblée générale doit confirmer les décisions que le Comité spécial a prises au sujet des territoires coloniaux. Elle adresse un suprême appel aux autres Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour qu'ils mettent toute leur influence au service de cette cause sacrée qu'est la décolonisation, car, comme l'a écrit si justement le regretté président Kennedy:

"Ce dont nous nous préoccupons, c'est du droit de tous les hommes à l'égale protection de la loi; et, puisque les droits de l'homme sont indivisibles, l'Organisation ne peut se montrer indifférente quand ces droits sont violés et négligés par un Etat Membre quelconque." [1209ème séance, par. 66.]

De nouveaux efforts doivent par conséquent être faits pour que la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, vieille de 15 ans, ait sa pleine signification.

106. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le Comité spécial, qui a été chargé de contribuer par ses travaux à la disparition du phénomène colonial, présente à l'Assemblée un deuxième rapport [A/5446/Rev.1]. La Déclaration capitale sur laquelle il s'appuie et qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV) date maintenant de trois ans. Il nous est donc possible d'analyser dans leur ensemble les travaux du Comité et de tracer avec une fermeté nouvelle et une vue plus large les voies que doit suivre notre organisation.

107. L'ampleur donnée au rapport du Comité spécial, ma délégation en est sérieusement persuadée, ne représentera pas une exception; le nombre des territoires étudiés; le nombre de ceux qu'il nous reste à examiner; le rythme du processus; le fait que l'on s'intéresse de plus en plus à mettre un terme à cette étape de la vie internationale qu'est le colonialisme, combattu à la base par notre Charte; les difficultés particulières rencontrées le long du chemin que chaque nouveau pays doit parcourir pour consolider son indépendance; les réactions diverses des pays métropolitains; il y a là autant de facteurs qui, étant donné leur complexité et celle des problèmes qui s'y rattachent, risquent fort de nous désorienter. En revanche, cela même nous oblige à préciser la valeur de l'expérience acquise, à examiner les méthodes suivies par le Comité et par l'Assemblée, à analyser les problèmes à venir et à modifier, s'il y a lieu, l'orientation des activités du Comité spécial. Notre organisation s'est enorgueillie de la souplesse plus grande dont elle a fait preuve devant les problèmes sans cesse changeants de la vie internationale. Il faut tirer parti une fois encore de cette faculté et faire de notre comité spécial l'instrument le plus adapté à la tâche de décolonisation.

108. Pour procéder à semblable analyse, il faut rappeler ce qui a précédé la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, ainsi que le Comité spécial lui-même. Comme on le sait, nous traitons d'un aspect de cette longue et fructueuse évolution qui s'est faite dans le cadre prévu par le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Les deux articles de ce chapitre, appelés déclaration étant donné qu'ils définissent certaines aspirations et tracent un vaste programme, nous servent de phares: l'Article 73 fixe de nettes limites aux pays métropolitains et énonce le principe du contrôle international; quant à l'Article 74, il fait appel aux grands principes de l'équité et de la coopération internationale, qui, par-delà les intérêts nationaux égoïstes, doivent triompher dans le monde où nous vivons.

109. Ces deux articles ont servi de règle aux efforts constants et décisifs que les Nations Unies ont déployés en faveur de la liberté des peuples auparavant enchaînés. Cependant, depuis 1945, on perçoit une évolution qui se poursuit depuis assez longtemps déjà pour que l'on puisse en découvrir les traits essentiels. C'est de ces caractéristiques, selon ma délégation, que nous pourrions déduire les principes qui guideront le Comité spécial dans ses futurs travaux.

110. L'Assemblée générale a tenu, pour commencer, à demander que, en accord avec les puissances coloniales, il soit établi une liste des territoires non autonomes. Cela fait, elle a demandé aux Etats responsables, conformément aux dispositions de l'alinéa g de l'Article 73, de l'informer du statut, de la situation et de l'évolution de ces colonies. A cet effet, elle a créé le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, qui est bientôt devenu permanent et dont l'existence attestait une fois encore l'intérêt constant que l'Assemblée générale portait à ces territoires. Celle-ci a ainsi posé un premier jalon fort important sur la voie du contrôle international.

111. Il y eut, comme il fallait s'y attendre, des réactions diverses de la part des pays métropolitains; inquiets de voir apporter des restrictions à ce qui jusqu'alors relevait de leur compétence exclusive, ils se sont efforcés de faire dévier le courant. La première réaction a consisté à retirer de la liste primitive divers territoires non autonomes; on a eu généralement recours pour cela à des changements constitutionnels. La deuxième réaction a été de faire en sorte que dans des cas concrets l'Assemblée générale elle-même accepte de limiter sa compétence, c'est-à-dire qu'elle-même dise où s'arrête sa compétence au sujet d'un territoire antérieurement non autonome. La question fut étudiée en détail et l'étude aboutit à la résolution dite des "facteurs", à savoir la résolution 742 (VIII), d'importance capitale. Il s'agit, en effet, d'une acceptation générale de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale en matière d'intervention dans les questions coloniales. Si l'on se rappelle l'histoire de la Société des Nations, on conviendra que c'était là un immense pas en avant.

112. Là-dessus sont entrés à l'Organisation une multitude de nouveaux Etats; il y avait parmi eux des pays qui, semblait-il, avaient la charge de territoires non autonomes. Cependant, devant l'attitude négative persistante des puissances administrantes, il était indispensable de déterminer — toujours dans le cadre de la Charte — dans quel cas on avait affaire à des territoires coloniaux. Une fois encore, on examina à fond le problème et, avec l'approbation de représentants du groupe des puissances dites coloniales, l'Assemblée générale adopta la résolution 1541 (XV). Le principe III, qui figure dans l'annexe à cette résolution, synthétise toute une longue évolution; il constitue en effet le digne couronnement des efforts répétés de notre organisation. Par ce texte, les puissances métropolitaines et les autres puissances reconnaissent que la possession de colonies constitue un fait de caractère international duquel résultent certaines obligations juridiques. Par cette résolution, l'Assemblée s'érige en organe représentatif de la communauté, en tutrice des peuples soumis au joug colonial, capable d'intervenir en faveur de ceux qui ne peuvent pas encore disposer d'eux-mêmes.

113. Ceux-là formeront le noyau de ce qui sera bientôt la pléiade des nations, principalement africaines, dont la présence ici renforcera notre organisation. Le Conseil de tutelle enregistre de brillants résultats en ce sens qu'il s'élimine en quelque sorte lui-même, puisque la majeure partie des territoires soumis au régime de tutelle deviennent indépendants. Avec ces nouveaux pays, chez lesquels l'esprit anti-colonialiste se manifeste avec une vigueur nouvelle, on estime désormais possible de définir concrètement l'objectif, qui est d'en finir avec le colonialisme. C'est alors que l'Assemblée générale adopte la résolution 1514 (XV), dans laquelle figure la Déclaration.

114. La Déclaration, à tous égards, met fin à une étape et marque le début d'une nouvelle phase. On y trouve bon nombre des principes que, laborieusement, l'Organisation a mis au point au cours de ses années d'existence: le rôle des Nations Unies y est mis en relief; le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes jusqu'à l'indépendance totale y est proclamé sans équivoque, et il est prévu que tous les droits seront transférés immédiatement et intégralement aux peuples précédemment soumis.

115. L'idée d'une action immédiate était présente en 1960. Cependant, il s'agissait d'une idée politique qui ne s'exprimait pas de manière concrète. Passée la première année, l'Assemblée a été forcée de se rendre compte que l'on n'avait guère progressé, tout au moins pas assez si l'on considère l'esprit dans lequel avait été adoptée la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. En conséquence, l'Assemblée a créé le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration [résolution 1654 (XVI)] et l'a prié d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration et de formuler des suggestions et recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés. Il s'agissait de la première année et, donc, inévitablement, d'une année de tâtonnement et d'expériences; les travaux de ce comité ont souvent fait double emploi avec ceux d'autres organes. Le Comité créé pour la mise en œuvre des dispositions de l'Article 73 e de la Charte existe jusqu'à ce jour. Les efforts visant à unifier les travaux des divers organes s'appuient sur des raisons valables. Une coordination plus poussée, grâce à une division des tâches ainsi qu'à une répartition des territoires eux-mêmes, semble opportune. En effet, un mécanisme mal conçu peut rendre inopérants les efforts les plus généreux et permettre aux puissances coloniales de jouer la carte qui leur conviendrait le mieux.

116. En 1962, le Comité spécial présente donc son premier et volumineux rapport^{5/}. Etant donné l'importance et l'arrière-plan historique de la question, on estime qu'il doit être examiné directement en séance plénière. On a fait de même, du reste, pour le deuxième rapport [A/5446/Rev.1]. Cependant, on a instauré en fait une pratique vicieuse. Les séances plénières, où se résument les travaux des diverses commissions, ne sont pas le lieu le plus indiqué pour un examen complet. En séance plénière, l'Assemblée générale ne peut pas non plus consacrer toute l'attention et tout le temps voulus à l'étude d'un rapport aussi vaste et aussi complet que celui du Comité spécial, qui mériterait beaucoup de soin et de réflexion. Nous avons entendu l'an dernier, et nous entendons cette année, une série de déclarations d'ordre général qui ne vont pas jusqu'au fond du problème, de sorte que le Comité ne reçoit pas les directives précises dont il a besoin. Il ne suffit pas que l'Assemblée générale prenne note avec satisfaction — comme elle le fait, par exemple, au paragraphe 2 du dispositif de la résolution 1810 (XVII) — des méthodes et des procédures adoptées par le Comité spécial; cela est à peine un commencement; il lui appartient de dire quelles sont les méthodes les plus indiquées pour éliminer les derniers vestiges du colonialisme; elle ne doit pas se contenter de demander au Comité spécial lui-même de continuer à rechercher les voies et les moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration. Ma délégation formule expressément l'espoir que l'on n'aura plus recours à l'avenir à cette manière de procéder, qui, étant donné sa nature, doit demeurer tout à fait exceptionnelle. Notre Quatrième Commission a à son actif de longues et brillantes années d'expérience; il n'y a aucune raison pour qu'on ne lui confie pas à l'avenir l'étude attentive et détaillée des rapports du Comité spécial.

117. Cela paraît d'autant plus opportun que le Comité lui-même reconnaît que son travail n'a pas été aussi facile ni aussi efficace qu'on le souhaiterait. Au paragraphe 45 du chapitre premier de son rapport [A/5446/Rev.1], il faut observer que la "décolonisation, dans certaines parties de l'Afrique et ailleurs, ne s'effectue pas à un rythme satisfaisant". C'est une raison de plus pour que l'Assemblée se préoccupe des problèmes qui se posent à lui et pour qu'elle lui suggère de nouvelles voies.

118. Jetons maintenant un regard sur l'appareil dont dispose le Comité spécial. L'agencement en est varié et, par lui-même, témoigne de cette longue évolution dont j'ai parlé plus haut. Le Comité reçoit les rapports des puissances administrantes, soit directement — pour celles qui participent à ses travaux —, soit par l'intermédiaire du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. A défaut, le Comité est informé par le Secrétariat, ou même par certains organes dont les travaux touchent aux questions coloniales. Ajoutant à ces méthodes d'autres moyens auxquels on n'avait eu primitivement recours que pour les territoires sous tutelle, il s'est réservé la possibilité d'entendre des pétitionnaires et il a prévu, jusqu'ici sans succès, l'envoi de missions de visite. Ce sont là des méthodes utiles sans doute, et qui le seraient plus encore si elles pouvaient être appliquées intégralement; cependant, ce sont des méthodes dont l'origine est ancienne. Le Comité spécial n'a pas innové en la matière; on peut même affirmer que nous ne sommes pas sortis des limites existant antérieurement à l'adoption de la Déclaration.

119. En sa qualité d'organe récent et en sa qualité d'héritier de la longue tradition anticolonialiste de notre organisation, le Comité spécial a élaboré de nouvelles méthodes auxquelles la délégation mexicaine attribue une exceptionnelle importance. Il a innové dans deux secteurs fondamentaux, lesquels fournissent sans aucun doute les éléments propres à faire de lui cet organe exceptionnel qui mettra fin au colonialisme. Je veux parler des négociations directes et des bons offices. Nous avons là des méthodes totalement nouvelles en matière coloniale. Rien de semblable n'a été prévu à San Francisco; et il ne fait aucun doute que nos prédécesseurs de la Société des Nations n'en croiraient pas leurs yeux. Qu'un organe de notre assemblée négocie directement avec une puissance métropolitaine au sujet de l'avenir d'un territoire non autonome, qu'il puisse jouer le rôle de commission de bons offices en cas de difficultés internes propres à l'ancienne colonie, cela suppose sans aucun doute une très heureuse évolution des affaires internationales.

120. Les sceptiques nous diront que les négociations directes avec le Royaume-Uni au sujet de la Rhodésie du Sud n'ont pas eu de succès; ils diront aussi que les bons offices, en ce qui concerne la Guyane britannique, n'ont pas été non plus très fructueux. Cependant, je pense que nous devons envisager ces grandes innovations avec l'optimisme qu'autorise l'expérience passée de l'Assemblée en matière coloniale: on a déclenché un processus de grande envergure, et les nouveaux chemins que nous avons découverts ne seront pas détournés de leur but. Les négociations directes et les bons offices sont aux yeux de ma délégation de grandes innovations qui justifient à elles seules les travaux du Comité spécial, et la poursuite de ces activités offre des garanties de succès. Sur une multitude de questions, les grandes puissances se sont refusées en principe à écouter celles qui ne le sont pas; cependant, elles ont parfois reconnu que l'intervention des petites puissances est non seulement bénéfique, mais indispensable. La réaffirmation persistante de ces principes et le recours répété à ces méthodes nous conduira là aussi au succès. Il n'est ni bon ni indiqué de se décourager devant les premiers échecs, qui sont inévitables. La conviction que ces mêmes puissances coloniales ont déjà accepté l'internationalisation du problème colonial nous assure à la longue de la réussite.

121. Ces nouvelles méthodes, cela va de soi, doivent être appliquées avec circonspection. Il y a des territoires étendus et viables qui sont sur le point d'accéder à l'indépendance; en ce qui les concerne, le Comité spécial peut se borner à un rôle de vigilance. Dans d'autres cas, on a affaire à des territoires dont l'avenir apparaît comme singulièrement obscur: ce sont des Etats viables, mais les puissances administrantes ne veulent absolument pas prêter l'oreille à l'opinion mondiale. Les nouvelles méthodes ne paraissent pas applicables en l'occurrence; le Comité devra peut-être se borner à demander, comme par le passé, des rapports à l'intention du Conseil de sécurité.

122. Il en est tout autrement pour les territoires dont la situation interne fait apparaître des difficultés particulières; de graves crises internes, héritages et reliquats de l'ère coloniale, troublent et rendent difficile l'approche de l'indépendance. Comme on le voit également d'après les précédents, les nouvelles méthodes sont singulièrement bien adaptées au cas de ces territoires.

123. Les bons offices semblent particulièrement indiqués pour les problèmes intéressants des territoires qui sont indiscutablement des territoires coloniaux, mais qui sont nés à la suite d'une mainmise impérialiste sur des nations déjà constituées. Des différends existent touchant la souveraineté sur ces territoires. Le Comité spécial ne doit pas s'abstenir d'exercer sa compétence à cet égard; au contraire, il doit veiller à concilier les intérêts de la population jusque-là soumise et ceux d'autres Etats, et recommander aux intéressés — comme la délégation du Mexique l'a proposé en 1962 — de recourir à la Cour internationale de Justice ou aux moyens de règlement pacifique prévus à l'Article 33 de la Charte, en vue de régler définitivement le désaccord.

124. Cependant, il y a d'autres territoires: il s'agit de vestiges des grands ensembles coloniaux, non viables en eux-mêmes en tant que nations et dont il resterait à justifier l'existence, une fois disparues les grandes possessions dont ils étaient destinés à garantir la sécurité. C'est de cela qu'a parlé de manière particulièrement heureuse le représentant du Chili [1267ème séance]. Cet aspect de la question a également fait l'objet d'un projet de résolution que le Mexique a présenté jadis; ce texte concernait l'éventualité d'une administration conjointe des Nations Unies visant à permettre le plus rapidement possible et dans les meilleures conditions l'exercice du droit de libre détermination. L'existence de territoires de ce genre et les problèmes qu'elle pose commencent maintenant à apparaître. Une fois réglé le cas des grands territoires qui, progressant d'un pas sûr, en sont arrivés à se constituer en Etats, nous trouvons devant nous des horizons très divers. Les principes élaborés pour les grands territoires africains ne sont pas adaptables à ces cas-là. Nous notons aussi que, si l'Afrique s'intéresse au premier chef au processus de décolonisation, l'importance de ce fait s'estompe lorsqu'il s'agit de territoires dont l'avenir intéresse davantage d'autres régions. Dans son deuxième rapport [A/5446/Rev.1], le Comité spécial traite de quatre territoires non africains, alors qu'il ne s'était occupé que d'un seul de ces territoires lors de sa première session. Cet intérêt plus soutenu que des Etats non africains portent à la liquidation du colonialisme s'ajoute à l'authentique et brillant palmarès des pays latino-américains en la matière; c'est pourquoi ma délégation a été profondément étonnée des négociations prolongées qui se sont déroulées au début de l'année du fait qu'un groupe de pays s'opposaient à l'attribution d'un siège à un représentant latino-américain au bureau du Comité spécial.

125. Pour ces problèmes, le Comité spécial n'a pas encore mis au point de méthode adéquate. Il semble même enclin à les traiter comme s'ils étaient identiques aux problèmes traditionnels. Pour Malte, par exemple, on n'a pas accepté les amendements proposés par l'Italie en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution pertinent, amendements visant à accorder au pays une assistance technique avant que soit consolidée son indépendance. De même, dans le cas des îles Fidji, on a agi sans tenir compte de la distinction entre les territoires viables et ceux qui ne le sont pas, ainsi que l'ont fait observer les représentants de l'Australie et du Venezuela. Ma délégation a l'espoir que, tenant compte de l'orientation des déclarations faites en séance plénière, le Comité parviendra à faire appliquer le plus largement possible le principe fondamental de la libre détermination des peuples, et qu'aussi il fera en sorte que les autorités administrantes ne puissent alléguer des raisons sans fondement pour maintenir sous leur dépendance des territoires qui ne font pas partie de la métropole.

126. Le Comité spécial peut considérer avec satisfaction son action passée. Cependant, la délégation du Mexique estime qu'il ne doit pas s'arrêter sur un chemin qui s'annonce long et difficile. Les décisions précises en vertu desquelles on aidait à accéder à l'indépendance des nations historiquement intégrées et économiquement viables appartiennent au passé.

Nous entrons maintenant dans une zone de clair-obscur où il faut que l'indépendance, fin en soi, apparaisse en outre de manière probante comme le meilleur moyen de permettre aux peuples souverains de progresser dans le domaine économique et social. Jusqu'ici, il était naturel de déduire la deuxième notion de la première, considérée comme une prémisse. Or, pour l'avenir, cette formule ne peut être considérée comme la seule valable; les autres solutions prévues dans la résolution 1541 (XV) pour mettre fin à une situation coloniale retrouvent ici leur importance.

127. Il est dit au paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV) que "des mesures immédiates seront prises... pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de [ces] territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve..."; cependant, il y est également dit que ce transfert doit se faire conformément aux vœux librement exprimés de ces peuples "afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complète". Selon ma délégation, cette partie du paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration commande l'avenir des petits territoires, qui, comme les épaves d'un grand navire englouti dans la tourmente, arrivent en vue de la côte mais, faute d'être poussées assez fort, ne peuvent franchir la barre. A ce problème déjà difficile à résoudre, il s'en ajoute un autre non moins important; il s'agit en particulier, comme on l'a dit, du problème que posent les enclaves impériales en territoire étranger: l'existence de ces enclaves, qui sont des vestiges des grands ensembles impériaux, va jusqu'à affecter dans certains cas l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale des Etats.

128. Des considérations semblables à celles que je viens d'exposer figuraient dans le projet de résolution que la délégation du Mexique avait présenté à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa seizième session^{6/}. Bon nombre d'idées qui n'apparaissaient pas alors se sont maintenant fait jour. Comme d'autres délégations d'Amérique latine, la délégation mexicaine se déclare confiante que l'Assemblée énoncera un certain nombre de règles qui orienteront avec succès les travaux ultérieurs du Comité spécial.

129. M. KANE (Sénégal): L'importance de la question examinée par l'Assemblée générale en ce moment n'est plus à démontrer. Déjà, les constituants de San Francisco en étaient conscients. La Charte des Nations Unies a donné aux peuples colonisés des raisons de lutter pour accéder à l'indépendance. Le préambule proclamait la "foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites". L'Article premier réaffirmait, en son alinéa 2, "le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes". Enfin, en signant la Charte, les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui ont la responsabilité des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas elles-mêmes ont reconnu, selon l'Article 73, "le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires", accepté la mission "d'assurer... leur progrès politique, économique et social" et "de développer leur capacité de s'administrer [eux]- mêmes, de tenir compte des aspirations politiques des populations et de les aider dans le développement de leurs libres institutions politiques".

130. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, que l'Assemblée générale a adoptée le 14 décembre 1960 [résolution 1514 (XV)], est venue ensuite s'ajouter à cet édifice et donner aux peuples colonisés l'espoir légitime de voir leur condition améliorée par l'accélération du processus de décolonisation.

131. Voici 18 ans que la Charte a été signée et voici trois ans que cette déclaration a été adoptée, et des millions d'êtres humains se trouvent encore sous le joug colonial, sous la férule et sous la domination de profiteurs et d'aventuriers étrangers. Comment ne pas admettre en ce cas, comme beaucoup d'orateurs l'ont dit avant moi, que les progrès réalisés sont restés bien en deçà des professions de foi et des déclarations de principe? Les problèmes sont trop sérieux pour que les puissances coloniales puissent se tirer d'affaire en rusant, soit en avançant des arguties juridiques, soit en utilisant des méthodes dilatoires. C'est compte tenu de ces considérations que les chefs d'Etat africains, lors de la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba, ont réaffirmé sans équivoque leur ferme détermination de déployer tous leurs efforts pour que l'Afrique soit complètement libérée du colonialisme et de la domination sous toutes leurs formes.

132. Le deuxième rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5446/Rev.1] constitue une étude d'ensemble, bien que l'examen de tous les territoires qui entrent dans la compétence du Comité ne soit pas entièrement achevé. La délégation du Sénégal tient, à ce stade, à féliciter le Comité des Vingt-Quatre pour les efforts qu'il a déployés dans l'accomplissement du mandat que l'Assemblée générale lui a confié en vertu des résolutions 1514 (XV), 1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII).

133. Puisque le rôle du Comité, aux termes de la résolution 1810 (XVII), est "de rechercher les voies et moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance" et "à proposer des mesures concrètes en vue de l'application intégrale de la Déclaration", nous pensons qu'il importe que le Comité adopte les méthodes de travail les plus efficaces pour parvenir à son objectif. Déjà, en deux années, il a acquis une expérience non négligeable. Ayant à examiner divers cas, parfois spécifiques, il n'est pas indiqué que la même méthode d'approche soit appliquée, mutatis mutandis, d'un territoire à l'autre. La création de sous-comités, l'organisation de missions de visite afin d'examiner la situation de certains territoires pour lesquels le Comité ne dispose que de peu de renseignements, nous semble une méthode à retenir parce qu'elle permet d'approcher de près la réalité.

134. Je suis d'accord avec le Président du Comité spécial, M. Sori Coulibaly, du Mali, pour dire que le rôle du Comité n'est pas d'ouvrir le débat sur la situation de chaque territoire et de voter une résolution, comme le font les commissions de l'Assemblée générale. Mais à part les cas très controversés — et c'est souvent celui des grands territoires —, il est recommandé que le Comité, au lieu de perdre une partie précieuse de son temps à ouvrir un débat pour ensuite voter un projet de résolution, cherche à parvenir à un consensus. La lecture du rapport nous montre d'ailleurs que, dans bien des cas, des résolutions ont été adoptées à l'unanimité, ce qui signifie donc que le consensus était réalisable et à réaliser.

135. Enfin — et c'est la dernière remarque que je vais faire sur les méthodes de travail du Comité —, il est important que soit recherchée l'application de la Déclaration non pas dans sa lettre, mais dans son esprit. Certains territoires, géographiquement minuscules et faiblement peuplés, présentent des particularités que l'on doit examiner avec objectivité. C'est le cas, notamment, du Territoire des Iles du Pacifique et de certains territoires de la mer des Caraïbes. Pour ces territoires, l'indépendance est-elle plus profitable aux yeux des populations intéressées qu'une autre forme d'accession à l'autonomie librement choisie par ces populations elles-mêmes? En cherchant la réponse à cette question, les membres du Comité feront preuve, je n'en doute pas, de prudence et de réalisme en ayant à l'esprit le principe VI de l'annexe à la résolution 1541 (XV).

136. L'Assemblée générale, en confiant au Comité spécial le mandat d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne la Déclaration, a par ailleurs invité les puissances qui administrent des territoires coloniaux à apporter au Comité "leur coopération la plus complète dans l'accomplissement de ses tâches". Il s'agit du paragraphe 7 de la résolution 1654 (XVI). Or, il ressort du rapport du Comité que, dans la plupart des cas, ces puissances ont refusé toute coopération. C'est le cas du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud. L'argument de l'incompétence de l'ONU quant à l'examen de la situation des territoires que ces pays administrent ne trouve plus d'écho qu'à Lisbonne et à Pretoria. La résolution 1514 (XV), de même que les nombreuses résolutions adoptées par l'Assemblée générale au sujet des territoires sous administration portugaise et du Sud-Ouest africain, ne suffit-elle pas à lever le moindre doute?

137. Dans le même ordre d'idées, l'argument d'ordre constitutionnel et l'argument fondé sur une prétendue ingérence des Nations Unies dans son administration coloniale, que le Royaume-Uni a soutenues au sein du Comité pour ce qui concerne la Rhodésie du Sud et Aden, ne peuvent convaincre que les défenseurs des colons qui n'osent pas ouvrir les yeux pour constater la réalité. Cela est d'autant plus regrettable à noter que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre attendait du Royaume-Uni, en tant que membre à part entière du Comité, autre chose que son opposition à l'envoi d'un sous-comité à Aden et son refus d'offrir ses bons offices pour aider les dirigeants des partis politiques de la Guyane britannique à résoudre leurs différends. Néanmoins, ma délégation, comme beaucoup d'autres d'ailleurs, nourrit l'espoir qu'à l'issue de ce débat, le Royaume-Uni fera un nouvel examen de conscience et entendra les nouveaux appels qui lui ont été lancés.

138. A l'heure actuelle, c'est le bilan de son action que l'Assemblée générale doit faire. Il ne servirait à rien, tout au moins pour les peuples opprimés qui attendent que l'étoile de la liberté brille enfin dans la nuit ténébreuse qu'ils traversent, il ne servirait à rien, dis-je, d'ouvrir à nouveau le dossier complet de la décolonisation devant cette tribune. Je sais que les représentants des pays anciennement colonisés sont tentés de le faire, parce qu'ils savent que certains de leurs frères vivent encore dans l'enfer du colonialisme, avec tout son cortège d'horreurs.

139. Au cours des trois dernières sessions, en séances plénières comme au sein des commissions de l'Assemblée, nous avons eu l'occasion de définir notre position sur le fond du problème. Nous n'y reviendrons pas. Qu'a-t-on fait? Que reste-t-il à faire? C'est à ces questions que l'Assemblée générale doit répondre et, de cette réponse, dépend l'orientation de son action future. La délégation du Sénégal essaiera, quant à elle, de répondre en toute objectivité à la question et de suggérer les mesures qu'elle estime que l'Assemblée générale doit prendre en vue d'appliquer intégralement la Déclaration.

140. Il est aisé, je crois, après avoir étudié le rapport du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, de savoir où nous en sommes. Le Kenya, Zanzibar et Malte sont à la veille de l'indépendance; les deux premiers territoires y accéderont au cours du présent mois, et le troisième dans le courant de l'année qui vient. La Gambie, la Rhodésie et le Nyassaland ont accédé à l'autonomie, et l'on peut espérer que la date de leur indépendance sera bientôt fixée par la Puissance administrante. C'est donc ici le moment de rendre hommage au Royaume-Uni pour les progrès constitutionnels, politiques et autres qu'il a fait accomplir à ces territoires, depuis l'adoption de la résolution 1810 (XVII). Nous nous félicitons, en tout cas, du fait que la dissolution de la Fédération de l'Afrique centrale ait été décidée lors de la Conférence de Victoria Falls^{7/}. Je rendrai aussi un hommage particulier aux chefs politiques de ces territoires pour tous les sacrifices qu'ils ont consentis dans le but de voir leurs peuples libres et indépendants.

141. Si, en ce qui concerne les pays ci-dessus mentionnés, des progrès sensibles ont été constatés, par contre, pour d'autres territoires, le processus de décolonisation est encore lent. Il s'agit de la Guyane britannique, qui attend toujours que soit fixée la date de son indépendance; il s'agit des îles Fidji, d'Aden; enfin, il s'agit des Territoires du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland, convoités par l'Afrique du Sud. Au sujet de ces territoires, qui relèvent du Haut Commissariat, l'Assemblée générale doit prendre les mesures nécessaires pour prévenir une agression éventuelle de l'Afrique du Sud.

142. Et que dire du drame que traversent l'Angola, la Guinée portugaise, le Mozambique et tous les territoires administrés par le Portugal, la Rhodésie du Sud et le Sud-Ouest africain? Nous pensons que, tant que le Conseil de sécurité restera indécis et l'Assemblée générale incapable de faire appliquer ses propres résolutions au sujet de ces territoires, ceux-ci doivent demeurer en permanence inscrits à l'ordre du jour du Conseil de sécurité et des sessions de l'Assemblée générale, car ils constituent une menace sérieuse à la paix et à la sécurité du continent africain.

143. Le Comité spécial, comme nous l'indiquait son Rapporteur le 28 novembre 1963 [1266ème séance], n'a pas achevé l'examen de la situation de tous les territoires auxquels s'applique la Déclaration. Je songe notamment aux territoires administrés par l'Espagne. A cet effet, l'Assemblée générale, en lui renouvelant le mandat qu'elle lui avait confié en vertu des résolutions 1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII), doit donner au Comité tous les moyens matériels et financiers qui lui permettront de remplir convenablement sa tâche.

144. Je voudrais terminer en précisant la position de mon pays à l'égard du problème de la Gambie. Les débats du Comité spécial consacrés à la Gambie ont porté sur deux questions, à savoir l'indépendance de ce pays et le problème de son association avec le Sénégal. A notre grand étonnement d'ailleurs, la résolution que le Comité a adoptée le 13 septembre 1963 [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. XI, par. 105] ne mentionne nulle part ces deux questions. C'est à croire vraiment qu'on cherche à créer des problèmes là où il n'en existe aucun. Voici pourquoi. Ici même, le 31 octobre 1961, le Président de la République du Sénégal déclarait: "... nous respecterons l'autodétermination du peuple gambien, qu'il veuille ou non s'unir à nous" [1045ème séance plénière, par. 32].

145. Par la suite, après des consultations qui ont eu lieu à Bathurst et à Dakar, dans une déclaration du 26 octobre 1962, les Gouvernements de la Gambie et du Sénégal sont convenus que "... si la Gambie accède à l'indépendance totale, un projet de coopération pourrait être étudié entre la Gambie et le Sénégal" [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. XI, par. 33].

146. A la demande du Gouvernement du Sénégal et de celui de la Gambie, avec l'accord du Gouvernement de Sa Majesté britannique, le Secrétaire général des Nations Unies a accepté de désigner un groupe d'experts des questions constitutionnelles, économiques, fiscales et financières. Aux termes de la déclaration du 26 octobre 1962, les conclusions du groupe d'experts seront étudiées par les deux gouvernements et formeront le sujet des négociations prochaines en vue d'une association amicale entre la Gambie et le Sénégal. Le groupe, composé de quatre experts, est en ce moment sur place; il y a d'ailleurs été précédé au mois de mai 1963 par une mission préliminaire de deux membres envoyés par les Nations Unies. Il est donc dans ce cas trop tôt, à notre avis, pour s'étendre sur la question de l'association, car les négociations à cette fin ne commenceront qu'après l'étude, par les deux gouvernements, du rapport des experts. A ce stade donc, nous ne pouvons que nous féliciter de l'accession de la Gambie à l'autonomie interne le 4 novembre 1963.

147. La résolution du Comité aurait dû, à notre avis, prendre au moins acte de cet événement important dans l'évolution harmonieuse du territoire vers l'indépendance, surtout si l'on sait que c'est seulement en juin 1963, après des entretiens qui ont eu lieu à Londres, que le Gouvernement de Sa Majesté britannique avait décidé d'accorder l'autonomie interne à ce pays.

^{7/} Conférence de l'Afrique centrale, réunie à Victoria Falls (Rhodésie du Sud), du 28 juin au 3 juillet 1963.

148. J'en aurai fini quand j'aurai dit que c'est la géographie, l'ethnie, la langue et tout un faisceau de relations qui lient le Sénégal et la Gambie. L'intention clairement exprimée par les Gouvernements de la Gambie et du Sénégal de rechercher une formule d'association amicale entre les deux pays a une base réelle et réaliste. Elle est dans la nature des choses et des hommes.

149. C'est avec une Gambie indépendante comme lui que le Sénégal désire s'associer. Nous ne pensons pas que, ce faisant, il y ait quelque entrave que ce soit à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux adoptée le 14 décembre 1960 par l'Assemblée générale. Nous sommes certains, en tout cas, que, ce faisant, la Gambie et le Sénégal ajouteront ensemble une pierre à l'édifice de l'unité africaine, dont les bases ont été jetées au mois de mai dernier à Addis-Abéba.

150. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je me permets de lancer à nouveau un appel aux délégations pour qu'elles soient présentes dans la salle à l'heure fixée pour le début des séances, afin que nous ne perdions pas de temps à attendre que le quorum soit atteint.

151. Je tiens également à lancer un appel pour que, dans la mesure du possible, les représentants limitent la durée de leurs interventions, car 35 orateurs sont inscrits pour les trois séances de demain.

La séance est levée à 17 h 35.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. BENHIMA (Maroc): Le Comité spécial pour l'application de la résolution [1514 (XV)] relative à la fin du colonialisme nous soumet cette année encore un rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] dont les multiples qualités nous donnent l'occasion agréable de rendre hommage aux membres du Comité.

2. On se souviendra que lors de sa création des critiques sans indulgence, exprimant souvent une hostilité manifeste, ont été adressées à ce comité; elles faisaient étalage d'arguments pour prouver à l'avance à la fois son inopportunité et même son inutilité. Mais bien que cet organe ne fonctionne que depuis deux années à peine, la somme de travail qu'il a accomplie constitue, de l'avis unanime, un apport si considérable que les rapports qu'il nous a soumis depuis sont devenus des références particulièrement indiquées pour une connaissance complète et constamment mise à jour de tous les aspects de la vie des peuples encore colonisés, de leurs relations avec les puissances coloniales, de leurs luttes et des perspectives de leur développement politique, économique et social.

3. Il est par conséquent incontestable que notre organisation a trouvé dans l'existence de ce comité un esprit, une méthode de travail et une approche pacifique du problème de son assistance aux peuples en voie de libération et de la liquidation du colonialisme.

4. Ma délégation tient à rendre hommage, pour ce remarquable travail, en particulier à M. Coulbaly, dont la finesse et le tact lui ont valu une collaboration sans réserve de tous les membres du Comité. Ce dernier a également trouvé dans l'expérience de

M. Velázquez une assistance précieuse, comme il a trouvé dans l'intelligence et le talent de M. Singh les ressources appropriées qui font la qualité du rapport.

5. Lorsque l'Assemblée a voté, le 14 décembre 1960, la résolution 1514 (XV), tendant à assurer les conditions nécessaires pour mettre fin au colonialisme, certains esprits chagrins y ont vu un cri de guerre et ont accusé ses promoteurs des desseins les plus révolutionnaires. Bien sûr, et l'on en conviendra aisément, cette résolution devait être le point de départ d'une action sans faiblesse de notre organisation pour affronter, partout où il sévit encore, un colonialisme réticent au mouvement d'émancipation qui pourtant venait de secouer des bastions impérialistes apparemment imprenables.

6. La détermination de tous les membres de cette assemblée qui ont apporté, avec leur foi, tous les concours à l'élaboration et à l'adoption de cette résolution, était clairement exprimée et tendait sans équivoque à une disparition aussi rapide que possible, et de toute manière complète, du fait colonial. Sur cet objectif, l'unanimité était réelle et si elle pouvait admettre le compromis, elle rejetait catégoriquement les faiblesses, les demi-mesures ou les compromissions.

7. Mais on doit relever également que, en servant de base à la création du Comité spécial pour son application, la résolution 1514 (XV) a permis d'instituer une méthode de travail dont un des mérites est d'avoir rendu possible le dialogue qui s'est instauré au sein du Comité entre les représentants des puissances administrantes et ceux qui représentent les intérêts des peuples encore non autonomes. Sur un problème aussi légitimement passionnant, et malgré la pénible expérience de ceux qui ne se sont libérés qu'au prix du sang, l'instauration de ce dialogue, la confiance réciproque qui devait nécessairement en découler sont autant de preuves que notre organisation est en mesure d'infléchir le mouvement de libération dans le sens le plus pacifique et d'une façon qui épargne aux uns et aux autres la loi implacable d'une lutte où la rançon de la liberté d'un peuple est la vie de la moitié de ses enfants.

8. Par ailleurs, tous les peuples encore dépendants et qui avaient salué avec espoir l'adoption de la résolution 1514 (XV), ont pu avoir, depuis, de nouvelles raisons de penser que cet espoir n'est pas vain, car les nombreux exemples de résolutions restées sans effet pouvaient à juste titre inspirer le scepticisme à ceux dont le destin ne dépendait que d'un nouvel énoncé de principes souvent répétés.

9. Le Comité spécial constitue à leurs yeux un instrument réel pour transformer les principes d'une résolution en actes et en situations chaque jour plus encourageants.

10. A l'occasion de ses différents déplacements, le Comité a constaté l'enthousiasme et la confiance des populations dans ce nouveau processus pacifique d'une évolution vers l'autodétermination et l'indépendance. Malgré des crises toujours déplorables, des problèmes de décolonisation ont été résolus ici ou là, dans le cadre de cet esprit et certains Etats, devenus, depuis lors, Membres de notre organisation, y sont arrivés avec moins de blessures et moins de rancœurs que certains autres.

11. Cependant, si certaines puissances colonisatrices ont parfois fait contre mauvaise fortune bon cœur et ont, avec souplesse, adapté leur comportement à cet esprit nouveau, elles ne l'ont peut-être pas toujours appliqué partout et quand il le fallait. On pourrait même penser qu'elles ont tenté dans certains cas d'invoquer un comportement satisfaisant comme un certificat moral de décolonisation pour mieux rejeter des revendications tout aussi légitimes dans certains territoires demeurés complètement soumis à une domination sans faille. Entre les résultats positifs déjà acquis et l'obstination systématique du colonialisme dans beaucoup de territoires, il faut que notre organisation n'abandonne ni son espoir, ni sa vigilance, ni sa détermination. Car la liste des pays qui demeurent sous la domination étrangère est malheureusement encore importante et, du reste, s'il n'y avait plus qu'un seul territoire privé de sa liberté, notre détermination devrait rester la même.

12. Comme la Quatrième Commission s'occupe particulièrement de la situation de ces territoires et comme, pour certains d'entre eux, des comités spéciaux sont chargés de veiller sur les transformations en cours et l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) à ces territoires, je m'abstiendrai de me référer successivement à chacun d'entre eux. Mais il est profondément affligeant de constater que, depuis plusieurs années, telle ou telle commission, tel ou tel comité reviennent inlassablement sur la situation dans ces territoires, comme on revient, par une thérapeutique d'entretien, sur une maladie chronique. Je me suis laissé dire, par quelques-uns des derniers tenants du colonialisme, que leur pays est assez solide pour pouvoir faire face sans danger à tous les remous qui se produisent dans leurs colonies, comme un corps sain peut sans danger vivre avec ses rhumatismes. Il semble que ces puissances, au lieu de s'adapter à la transformation, pourtant lente, qui doit s'opérer partout, se soient plutôt accoutumées sans risque à écouter chaque année des discours qui ne les émeuvent plus et auxquels elles se contentent de répondre par des déclarations où il n'y a aucun rapport entre leur profession de foi et la manière dont elles exercent leurs responsabilités.

13. Ces puissances, bien qu'elles admettent les principes de cette évolution et les perspectives logiques des changements nécessaires, ne semblent vouloir prendre aucune mesure pour accélérer ou même assurer à terme l'avènement de l'autodétermination et de l'indépendance.

14. Le régime colonial sous lequel le Portugal maintient les peuples de trois territoires en Afrique ne donne malheureusement aucun signe sérieux permettant de penser que soit cette transformation inéluctable, soit l'action des Nations Unies à l'égard du problème de la libération des peuples aient été prises en considération. L'armée portugaise s'est installée dans une guerre à outrance, avec les moyens modernes appropriés, et le Gouvernement de Lisbonne s'obstine à penser que son armée constituera éternellement un bouclier infranchissable s'opposant à la volonté des peuples de l'Angola, de la Guinée et du Mozambique.

15. Pourtant, au niveau de plusieurs de ses organes, notre organisation a inlassablement recherché les voies et moyens nécessaires pour amener le Gouvernement portugais à une compréhension plus réaliste du phénomène de l'autodétermination et du concept le plus sain de la sauvegarde de ses intérêts et de celui de ses ressortissants dans ces territoires. Bien plus, tous les efforts déployés à la Quatrième Commission, au Comité des Vingt-Quatre, au Sous-Comité chargé d'examiner la situation en Angola et au Conseil de sécurité, qui a examiné en avril 1963 les incidents provoqués par le Portugal à la frontière du Sénégal, et a consacré au mois de juillet plusieurs séances à la situation des territoires sous domination portugaise, semblent demeurer sans effet. Le Conseil s'apprête, dans les jours qui viennent, à reprendre de nouveau l'examen de la situation, et force nous est de constater que toutes les tentatives et toutes les méthodes d'approche, même les plus modérées, n'ont pu provoquer aucune réaction positive de la part du Gouvernement portugais.

16. Il est dès lors à craindre qu'en voulant échapper à une évolution, pourtant pacifique, pour laquelle les concours les plus qualifiés lui ont été offerts, le Portugal ne prépare des lendemains douloureux, aussi bien pour lui-même que pour les peuples dont il a la charge, et que les territoires que son armée s'acharne à soumettre ne demeurent un jour les derniers champs de bataille où l'Afrique serait acculée à achever sa libération au prix d'un sang qu'elle ne veut pourtant plus verser. Ni les injonctions des Nations Unies, ni les conseils des amis les plus proches, ni la valeur d'expériences nombreuses ne semblent entamer cette obstination et cette attitude d'entêtement qui ne peut conduire l'Afrique qu'à de nouvelles tragédies.

17. Par ailleurs, le Royaume-Uni nous a certes donné des raisons de penser qu'il s'oriente fermement vers la réalisation du principe de l'autodétermination dans de nombreux territoires soumis à son autorité. Cette année, en particulier, l'annonce de l'indépendance de Malte, la proclamation imminente de l'indépendance de Zanzibar et du Kenya ont apporté à l'Afrique et au monde entier la joie de l'avènement de la liberté dans ces pays. Cet exemple de coopération avec les Nations Unies et cette volonté de reconversion des rapports entre le Royaume-Uni et ses anciennes colonies sont l'objet d'une satisfaction légitime pour tous ceux qui, dans cet esprit de respect des peuples et de la sauvegarde des intérêts respectifs, ont contribué à faire prévaloir ce genre de solution dans des situations pourtant complexes. Mais cette action du Royaume-Uni se trouve quelque peu entachée de doutes quand on pense à la situation en Guyane, en Rhodésie du Sud, à Aden, à Oman, et dans le sud de la péninsule arabe.

18. Nous espérons fermement que les initiatives si heureusement prises à l'égard des trois anciennes colonies britanniques étendront sans trop de retard leur bienfaisante contagion aux autres territoires que je viens de nommer et qui continuent à lutter pour obtenir du même gouvernement un comportement identique.

19. Ma délégation a amplement exposé devant la Commission politique spéciale le drame de la Palestine, où un colonialisme d'inspiration et de méthode nouvelles a occupé, au moment même où les empires se démembraient, une terre géographiquement, historiquement et sociologiquement arabe. Les 2 millions d'immigrants venus de tous les points du monde — et qui n'ont aucun rapport avec la Palestine — pour expulser plus d'un million d'Arabes de leur patrie et de leurs foyers ne sont, malgré la diversité de leur origine, que les mercenaires d'une croisade moderne dont la philosophie sioniste ne cache en rien l'aspect strictement impérialiste.

20. Ma délégation a également exposé, il y a quelques jours, devant le Conseil de sécurité [1075ème séance], la politique du Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud à l'égard des 13 millions d'Africains de ce territoire. Là encore, le phénomène racial et la politique de ségrégation qu'il inspire viennent renforcer les origines et les objectifs colonialistes de la minorité blanche, qui a achevé la conquête de ce pays au début du siècle.

21. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre a certes accompli, dans le bref délai qui s'est écoulé depuis le début de son mandat, un travail méritoire dont les résultats doivent s'inscrire parmi les plus heureux et les plus fructueux, puisque des millions d'être humains ont vu cesser le drame dans lequel la négation de leur liberté les avait plongés, pour certains d'entre eux pendant des siècles. Il mérite que l'on réinvestisse en lui un immense capital de confiance, car son action a redonné à notre organisation et à ses efforts pour la décolonisation une certitude nouvelle et fraîche dans sa mission, et ne peut que renforcer l'espérance dans son idéal. Non seulement les perspectives d'avenir en ce qui concerne la libération des peuples pourront apparaître plus proches et plus sûres, mais, ce qui n'est pas négligeable, la liberté semble devoir être reconquise et consolidée dans l'équilibre et l'harmonie du monde.

22. Au cours des dernières semaines de sa session d'été, le Comité des Vingt-Quatre a examiné le problème de certains territoires marocains qui n'ont pas encore été remis sous l'autorité marocaine depuis que notre indépendance a été proclamée en 1956. L'Assemblée sait en effet, parce qu'elle en a été régulièrement saisie depuis cette date, qu'au moment de la reconnaissance de notre souveraineté les anciennes puissances protectrices n'ont pas rendu certaines parties de notre territoire sur lesquelles elles ont continué, pour des raisons diverses et que le Maroc n'a jamais reconnues, à exercer leur autorité civile ou militaire. Chaque année, la délégation marocaine a exposé ce problème devant l'Assemblée générale, avec la fermeté des principes, avec une modération consciente, avec la conviction qui était constamment la sienne, que ces questions recevraient sans délai une solution appropriée. Il est fort regrettable que, depuis sept ans que le Maroc consolide sa souveraineté intérieure et extérieure, il doive se trouver — presque le seul en Afrique actuellement — dans cette situation de quémendeur au sujet d'une partie de son territoire national. Sans doute, pour certaines de ces puissances, une guerre coloniale en Afrique du Nord avait imposé un modus vivendi de fait qui, en raison de cet état de guerre, a rendu les frontières provisoirement imprécises. Et sans que l'on ait réglé ce problème territorial quant au fond, on en reconnaissait l'existence et on admettait qu'il faudrait le régler à la première occasion. Mon pays, intimement associé à cette guerre, mais convaincu que ce problème recevrait, au lendemain de la guerre coloniale et sans délai, sa solution logique, s'est cependant trouvé exposé à certaines surprises sur ses frontières sud, et nous avons vu une partie importante de notre territoire amputée.

23. Je ne voudrais pas revenir sur un problème que l'Assemblée générale connaît depuis des années. Notre position quant à l'amputation de notre territoire national est identique à ce qu'elle a été dès le début, que ce fût ici ou ailleurs. Mais la persistance de cette dangereuse situation a révélé — et tout récemment encore — tous les dangers que ce modus vivendi dicté par la seule guerre coloniale comportait et toutes les difficultés qui pouvaient en résulter entre des voisins désireux pourtant de régler tous leurs problèmes pacifiquement et gardant, je l'espère, leur confiance en la solution logique qui s'impose et que la fraternité devra faire trouver.

24. Nous avons exposé également à plusieurs reprises le problème de nos territoires demeurés sous administration espagnole. Certes, le Gouvernement espagnol a montré, avant notre indépendance, son souci de notre intégrité territoriale et de notre souveraineté. Des actes concrets, des attitudes précises avaient démontré les dispositions du Gouvernement espagnol à mettre, en temps opportun, un terme à son protectorat et à tirer les conclusions logiques de cette fin du statut de protectorat, c'est-à-dire une reconnaissance intégrale de la souveraineté nationale sur un territoire intégralement replacé sous la souveraineté du Maroc.

25. Là encore, des exigences d'ordre militaire, imposées à la fois par la situation de faiblesse d'un pays qui vient d'accéder à l'indépendance et par ailleurs dictées par la conviction que les problèmes les plus délicats recevraient leur solution naturelle dans cet esprit de coopération fraîchement manifesté, nous ont laissé entendre que ce problème recevrait incessamment la solution qui convient. Il n'était pas le seul. Le contentieux avec l'Espagne ne comportait pas que des problèmes territoriaux. Il comportait des problèmes d'évacuation militaire. Il comportait d'autres problèmes d'adaptation administrative ou inhérents à plusieurs conventions d'assistance technique, judiciaire et culturelle. Nous nous sommes réjouis que l'esprit qui a animé nos rapports depuis l'indépendance ait permis de régler la plupart de ces problèmes dans un climat amical.

26. Mais le problème territorial demeure, pour le Maroc, non seulement un des aspects primordiaux de sa souveraineté, mais un des éléments vitaux de l'exercice de cette souveraineté. Quelle que soit la compréhension du Gouvernement marocain, quel que soit l'investissement de confiance qu'il est prêt à renouveler, il ne saurait admettre de nouveaux retards ni accepter d'explications visant à reporter chaque jour à plus tard, je veux dire chaque année à l'année suivante, un problème dont la solution se révèle de plus en plus utile non seulement pour le Maroc, mais pour ses rapports avec ceux qui détiennent encore les clés de cette situation et pour une plus grande stabilité de l'Afrique, comme pour les rapports de l'Afrique avec les pays qui sont responsables de cette situation.

27. Nous avons pris acte des excellentes dispositions manifestées au cours de l'entretien que le généralissimo Franco et le Roi du Maroc ont eu, en juillet 1963, à Barajas. Ces entretiens ont renouvelé, de toute façon, l'esprit qui anime les deux pays pour régler le problème. Il y a là la reconnaissance claire que les rapports des deux pays ne pourront évoluer vers leur finalité normale, c'est-à-dire une finalité dictée par le bon voisinage, une finalité dictée par la coexistence à l'intérieur du pays d'une communauté espagnole importante, que par l'existence de rapports économiques, culturels et sociaux très développés, par l'existence aussi, sur le plan international, d'intérêts, dans la région, dont la sauvegarde est indispensable à l'avenir et à la stabilité de l'un et de l'autre.

28. Depuis cette déclaration, malheureusement — et je le dis sans amertume, mais sous forme d'appel —, aucun acte positif n'est venu concrétiser le renouvellement de ces dispositions. Ces territoires demeurent sous administration espagnole intégrale. Aucune démarche, aucun étape n'a été accomplie, qui puisse constituer une indication sérieuse que la solution constamment proclamée approche et que des contacts substantiels permettront d'amorcer des démarches concrètes pour approcher de la situation du problème.

29. Ceci n'entame nullement notre confiance. Mais l'on nous comprendra si je dis qu'au moment même où l'Espagne proclame ici, à la satisfaction de l'Assemblée générale, qu'elle apporte des modifications importantes au régime de certains territoires africains demeurés sous son autorité, il est impensable qu'un pays comme le Maroc, tout en entretenant les meilleures relations avec l'Espagne, continue à se heurter à l'incompréhension, à se heurter à une situation qui, dans la pratique, n'est nullement évolutive.

30. Je sais aussi — et nous avons appuyé cette revendication de la manière la plus claire — que l'Espagne demande le retour à son territoire national de l'enclave de Gibraltar. Aucun pays, plus que le Maroc, ne connaît l'histoire de cette enclave; aucun pays, plus que le mien, n'est disposé à soutenir une telle revendication légitime. Mais comme nous avons eu l'occasion de le dire devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, la valeur morale et juridique de cette revendication ne se trouverait nullement soutenue si le pays même qui se fonde sur le même principe, sur le même droit pour réclamer la restitution d'une partie de son territoire, maintenait sous son administration une partie importante du sol marocain, sans absolument traduire dans les faits et de façon précise qu'une étape prochaine est annoncée pour la transformation de cette situation.

31. Ifni, le Sahara dit espagnol, Ceuta et Melilla demeurent toujours sous l'administration de l'Espagne. Notre confiance, si elle n'a pas été entamée par cette attente, doit désormais pouvoir être expliquée aussi devant notre opinion publique, non seulement par les raisons qu'a invoquées l'Espagne depuis 1956 et qui, une à une, ont disparu, mais parce que l'Espagne elle-même, au moment de l'évacuation de ses troupes du Maroc, a reconnu le caractère non fondé de certains de ses arguments.

32. En revenant sur le problème de ces territoires, je voudrais renouveler à la fois le caractère permanent et ferme de notre revendication et l'espoir que l'Espagne, qui a donné par ailleurs les preuves d'une évolution extrêmement méritoire, ne laissera pas un pays avec lequel ses rapports peuvent être développés grâce à tant de liens historiques, à tant de perspectives d'avenir, dans cette situation d'attente; car ni l'opinion publique marocaine, ni l'Afrique, dont nous sommes partie intégrante, ni le monde ne pourraient comprendre les raisons de notre patience. Si cette patience devait encore, en ce moment, trouver une justification, elle ne la trouverait plus que dans la parole de l'Espagne. Et cette parole, nous souhaitons qu'elle se concrétise dans les meilleurs délais, pour le bien de nos deux peuples et pour l'avenir de nos rapports.

33. M. LEKIC (Yougoslavie) [traduit de l'anglais]: La dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale se déroule dans une ambiance internationale améliorée, qui devrait permettre de recourir plus fréquemment à la politique de négociation et de règlement pacifique des différends. Ce fait, qui impose à la session actuelle des tâches correspondantes, devrait, à notre avis, déterminer largement la nature et la portée des activités que nous entreprendrons, cette année, notamment dans le domaine de la décolonisation. Nous avons le devoir, dans ces nouvelles conditions, de faire en sorte que le processus de règlement pacifique des différends déjà commencé non seulement se poursuive, mais gagne en portée et en profondeur aussi bien qu'en substance, afin d'englober des secteurs de plus en plus larges de nos complexes relations internationales. Nous pensons que le moyen d'œuvrer efficacement dans ce sens serait de supprimer tous les obstacles qui entravent l'évolution positive de la situation internationale et de faire disparaître les causes de frictions entre nations ainsi que les conflits susceptibles de compromettre la réalisation des aspirations du monde quant à une paix durable.

34. Malheureusement, il existe encore, dans le secteur colonial, un grand nombre d'obstacles, de sources de conflits et de tensions. L'existence de ces difficultés et leurs conséquences éventuelles justifient l'anxiété de la communauté internationale, particulièrement si nous songeons que certaines puissances coloniales ne sont pas disposées à s'associer aux efforts communs qui tendent à instaurer des conditions de paix durable reposant sur la liberté et l'égalité de tous. L'existence de ces deux problèmes se trouve amplement confirmée dans le rapport du Comité sur la décolonisation, qui lance un appel pressant pour la liberté de l'indépendance des peuples colonisés et condamne énergiquement les tentatives dangereuses que font les puissances coloniales et les forces colonialistes en général afin d'arrêter et de retarder la marche de l'histoire. Bien que vouées à l'échec — car l'expérience a montré que nulle puissance au monde ne peut empêcher un peuple d'obtenir sa liberté s'il le désire —, ces tentatives n'en constituent pas moins une menace à la paix mondiale. A l'époque actuelle, en effet, les distances ne se mesurent plus en milles, mais en heures et en minutes, de sorte que les tensions politiques et surtout les atteintes à la paix peuvent aisément se répercuter d'une partie du monde à l'autre.

35. Une analyse détaillée du rapport du Comité sur la décolonisation [A/5446/Rev.1] fait clairement ressortir que l'action des Nations Unies tendant à éliminer les relations anachroniques de domination et d'assujettissement qui vont à l'encontre de la Charte s'est heurtée à de sérieux obstacles à l'origine desquels se trouvent des forces puissantes. L'attitude et l'activité actuelles de ces forces montrent qu'afin de défendre leurs intérêts militaires, politiques et surtout économiques elles n'hésitent pas et n'hésiteront pas à prendre même des mesures qui menacent la paix et la sécurité du monde.

36. Grâce à l'aide considérable en armes et en matériel qu'il reçoit, dans le cadre de l'OTAN, de certains de ses alliés, le Portugal poursuit une guerre coloniale en Angola et dans la Guinée dite portugaise. En outre, ce pays prépare des opérations similaires au Mozambique.

37. On fournit actuellement au Gouvernement raciste de la Rhodésie du Sud des unités d'armée de l'air et d'armée de terre équipées de matériel moderne, et cela précisément à un moment où ce gouvernement se déclare prêt à régler ses comptes avec les forces qui demandent la reconnaissance de leur droit à l'autodétermination, et où des mesures sont prises sur la scène internationale pour mettre fin à la course aux armements.

38. Les peuples du Betchouanaland, du Souaziland et du Bassoutoland se voient refuser le droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes. En même temps, le Gouvernement de la République d'Afrique du Sud, recourant à certaines méthodes notoires de conquête coloniale — corruption, supercherie, ententes avec des individus représentant non pas le peuple mais les autorités coloniales, etc. —, s'efforce, impunément, d'obtenir un appui pour sa politique d'"Etats noirs indépendants" dans le cadre de la "république blanche". Dans le Sud-Ouest africain, la politique d'apartheid est actuellement appliquée. La population d'Aden, contrainte d'accepter un régime fédéral, se voit refuser le droit de libre détermination. Enfin, et ce n'est pas le moins important, le peuple de la Guyane britannique est à nouveau empêché d'accéder à l'indépendance et on lui dénie le droit exclusif de résoudre en toute liberté des problèmes qui, sans doute, n'existeraient pas sans ingérence extérieure.

39. En exposant la situation en matière de décolonisation, nous ne cherchons nullement à nier la réalité de certains progrès, qui se refléteront cette année dans l'accession à l'indépendance du Kenya et de Zanzibar et dans l'accroissement correspondant du nombre des Membres de notre organisation. Il s'agit là, certes, d'un événement important que nous accueillons tous avec joie, mais qui ne saurait et ne devrait pas nous faire oublier qu'au même moment nous nous heurtons, comme je viens de le mentionner, à de sérieuses difficultés. Nous apprécions le réalisme dont ont fait preuve certaines puissances coloniales en répondant aux vœux de celles de leurs colonies qui voulaient accéder à l'indépendance. Néanmoins, une politique réaliste à l'égard de certaines colonies ne saurait atténuer les effets d'une politique négative appliquée à d'autres territoires. Il est encore moins admissible d'invoquer un "bilan favorable" pour justifier des mesures visant à refuser le droit d'autodétermination aux populations de certains territoires, où les puissances coloniales et d'autres pays ont des intérêts particuliers. De toute façon, les deux arguments — celui d'une politique réaliste dans certains cas et celui du "bilan favorable" — militent en faveur de l'accélération et non pas d'un ralentissement du processus de décolonisation. Quoi qu'il en soit, lorsque nous voyons opposer ce "bilan favorable" aux demandes pressantes des peuples coloniaux, appuyées par les Nations Unies, en vue de l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance, nous croyons utile de rappeler que, comme l'a dit Francis Bacon, la gloire ressemble à un marché où les prix baissent lorsqu'on y reste un peu trop longtemps.

40. La délégation yougoslave n'a nullement l'intention de commenter la situation de toutes les colonies qui subsistent encore, car elle l'a déjà fait au cours des délibérations du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, dont la Yougoslavie est membre. Nous n'entendons pas davantage entamer une polémique avec les auteurs des interprétations formalistes et conservatrices des dispositions de la Charte, dans lesquelles les puissances coloniales recherchent obstinément la source de leur prétendu droit de domination sur les autres peuples et non point la source de leur obligation d'appliquer les principes et les buts de la Charte à tous les peuples, quels que soient leur couleur et leur stade de développement.

41. Certains prétendent que les peuples coloniaux ne sont pas mûrs pour décider de leur propre destin ou pour assumer les responsabilités découlant de la liberté et de l'indépendance. Qu'il me soit permis de leur répondre que nous avons entendu de tels "arguments" lorsque nous avons discuté de la lutte pour l'indépendance de pays dont les représentants contribuent puissamment, au sein des Nations Unies comme en dehors de l'Organisation, à la cause de la paix et de la coopération internationale. Par conséquent, il serait superflu d'amorcer une discussion des concepts qui proviennent uniquement d'un système de théories sur la valeur plus ou moins grande des races et des êtres humains. En tout cas, on ne saurait dire d'un peuple qui lutte pour sa liberté, prêt à faire les sacrifices que cela entraîne inévitablement, qu'il manque de maturité.

42. Ce qui importe aujourd'hui, à notre avis, c'est le fait que les vestiges du colonialisme et le processus de la décolonisation se présentent sous un jour nouveau. D'après la liste incomplète dressée par le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, il reste encore 59 colonies, représentant une population de près de 40 millions d'habitants.

43. Etant donné les nombreux aspects nouveaux que revêt ce problème, nous n'insisterons que sur ceux qui nous paraissent fondamentaux et qui affectent directement les activités diverses et, notamment, les travaux concrets des Nations Unies dans ce domaine.

44. Le plus important est, sans contredit, la résistance accrue que les forces colonialistes opposent aux mouvements de libération nationale, surtout — et l'on pourrait même dire exclusivement à l'heure actuelle — en Afrique centrale et en Afrique du Sud. Riche en ressources naturelles, dont l'exploitation liée à une main-d'œuvre à bon marché assure d'énormes profits, habitée par un certain nombre d'étrangers qui ont imposé leur domination, cette région est devenue la base et le bastion d'intérêts et de groupes privilégiés qui ne veulent pas admettre que le monde a changé et qui sont résolus à s'opposer, par la force s'il le faut, à toute modification du statu quo. C'est ainsi que s'est constituée une alliance de groupes privilégiés qui se traduit, sur le plan politique, par la formation d'un front commun des forces coloniales à l'intérieur et à l'extérieur de cette zone et, sur le plan militaire, par l'accélération de la course aux armements.

45. Bien entendu, la situation est aggravée par le fait que les puissances coloniales et les éléments colonialistes en Afrique bénéficient de l'appui de certains autres pays et de groupes politico-militaires, qui se trouvent profondément engagés dans cette région, à divers points de vue, économiquement en particulier. Ainsi, le problème de l'élimination du colonialisme ne dépend plus uniquement des puissances coloniales; il semble qu'il relève aussi, de plus en plus, du groupe des pays qui ne sont pas disposés à soutenir avec assez d'efficacité les efforts des Nations Unies visant à supprimer, une fois pour toutes, ces causes de frictions et de conflits internationaux.

46. L'existence d'une telle situation, qui, à tout moment, peut dégénérer en un conflit aux conséquences imprévisibles pour la paix du monde, ne saurait laisser indifférents les pays africains indépendants. Profondément épris de paix, mais convaincus que leur propre indépendance sera menacée aussi longtemps qu'il existera des relations de domination et d'inégalité sur le sol africain et dans le monde en général, les Etats africains exigent que le droit à l'autodétermination soit accordé aux peuples des régions non libérées de ce continent. Divisées pendant des siècles par la colonisation, les populations africaines se sont unies dans la lutte pour la décolonisation. A la Conférence historique d'Addis-Abéba^{1/}, elles ont lancé un appel aux puissances coloniales afin que les problèmes découlant du colonialisme soient réglés par des moyens pacifiques, y compris la reconnaissance du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Toutefois, les dirigeants africains ont déclaré, à la même occasion, qu'en l'absence d'une telle solution ils appuieraient sans réserve les mouvements de libération dont les drapeaux sont déjà brandis — et c'est là un fait qui mérite réflexion — par les générations qui sont nées en même temps que l'Organisation et la Charte des Nations Unies.

47. C'est ainsi que les mouvements de libération dans les pays africains qui demeurent sous la domination coloniale ont acquis le caractère d'un mouvement panafricain général, tendant à une complète émancipation politique et économique, ce qui constitue la seule réponse logique et compréhensible à l'unité des puissances coloniales dans leur résistance à la décolonisation et à l'établissement de relations d'égalité. Ce serait faire preuve d'une dangereuse myopie, nous semble-t-il, que de ne pas prévoir les nombreuses et sérieuses répercussions internationales de la politique que poursuivent actuellement les puissances coloniales et leurs alliés. La discrimination et la ségrégation raciales, le déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme à des millions de personnes, l'exploitation économique impitoyable et les guerres coloniales ne sont pas seulement contraires aux dispositions de la Charte concernant la protection de la dignité humaine et des intérêts des peuples coloniaux. Ces pratiques sont en outre les signes tangibles d'une politique qui constitue un constant défi aux pays africains directement menacés et à la conscience de l'humanité en général et qui risque de troubler la paix et la sécurité du monde. De plus, une telle politique a déjà causé — et menace de causer à nouveau — des malentendus plus graves encore entre les pays africains et autres qui luttent pour leur égalité, pour l'égalité des droits parmi les hommes, ainsi qu'entre les peuples et les Etats qui, d'une manière quelconque, s'efforcent de maintenir une situation d'où, plus d'une fois dans le passé, sont nés de vastes conflits. Enfin, il convient de souligner qu'une telle politique va directement à l'encontre des efforts tendant à placer les relations internationales sur une nouvelle base et à appliquer les principes de coexistence effective et pacifique — le seul autre choix étant une guerre de destruction totale. Devant la Quatrième Commission, l'un des pétitionnaires a signalé cette contradiction dans les termes suivants qui doivent retenir toute notre attention: "La coexistence pacifique ne s'étend pas à nous. Nous demeurons engagés dans un combat mené par un ennemi cruel et tenace. Pour nous, il n'existe pas d'accords."

48. On a tenté, dans certains milieux, de faire valoir que la lutte menée par les peuples coloniaux allait à l'encontre d'une politique active de coexistence ainsi que des efforts tendant à préserver la paix. On nous dit que "les guerres de libération n'en sont pas moins des guerres" et que les Etats se doivent d'éviter toutes les guerres, quelles qu'elles soient, tout comme les Nations Unies ont le devoir d'y mettre fin dans la mesure du possible. A cet égard, on oublie évidemment que les guerres de libération sont la conséquence directe du refus des puissances coloniales de mettre en pratique certains principes fondamentaux de la coexistence pacifique. Ces principes sont le droit à l'autodétermination et l'égalité de tous les peuples, aussi bien que le règlement pacifique des problèmes existants. D'autre part, la paix est non seulement l'antithèse de la guerre, mais également l'opposé de toutes ses causes. Combattre pour la paix signifie aussi combattre pour éliminer les causes de guerre, les foyers présents ou possibles de conflits, et tout ce qui peut empêcher l'établissement de relations fondées sur la liberté et l'égalité de tous les peuples. L'élimination du colonialisme est l'une des conditions préalables de la préservation de la paix — cela, nul ne saurait le nier.

49. C'est à la lumière de ces considérations que nous abordons l'examen de la situation actuelle des colonies, en espérant que le réalisme et la bonne volonté dont témoignent les peuples coloniaux et les pays directement menacés par l'existence continue du colonialisme seront mieux compris des puissances coloniales et de ceux qui les soutiennent. Il est encourageant de noter, cependant, que les forces anticoloniales, quoique suffisamment fortes pour atteindre leurs buts sans l'aide de notre organisation, se tournent vers les Nations Unies. Ce n'est pas là une manifestation de faiblesse, mais plutôt de force et de foi dans l'Organisation et dans la justice de la cause pour laquelle luttent les peuples coloniaux. Méconnaître cette attitude ne ferait qu'épuiser la patience des peuples coloniaux, qui se verraient contraints de prendre les armes en dernier recours.

50. Une telle perspective ne peut manquer de préoccuper tous les Membres des Nations Unies. Par conséquent, nous avons le devoir d'accéder pleinement et rapidement aux demandes des peuples coloniaux et des forces de paix dans le monde. Nous sommes également tenus de rechercher la solution du problème par des moyens pacifiques et notamment par voie de négociation entre les représentants des pays coloniaux et ceux des puissances coloniales. Notre organisation offre un cadre tout indiqué pour de telles négociations et de telles solutions. Si l'on considère ce que pourraient ainsi gagner les parties directement intéressées aussi bien que la communauté internationale, il semble irrationnel — et il pourrait même être nuisible en fin de compte — de perdre du temps à discuter la question de savoir si notre organisation est compétente pour intervenir dans les relations entre les peuples coloniaux et les puissances coloniales, si elle a le droit ou non d'envoyer des missions de visite chargées de s'enquérir de la situation véritable et de contribuer à la solution pacifique des graves différends qui existent actuellement. Nous devons accorder la plus grande attention à ces différends et laisser de côté, au présent stade, les considérations théoriques sur le point de savoir si un petit peuple peut accéder à l'indépendance, et dans quelles conditions.

51. La situation actuelle dans le domaine de la décolonisation montre les tâches qui s'imposent à notre organisation et au Comité des Vingt-Quatre, en tant qu'organe compétent pour rechercher des solutions aux problèmes coloniaux qui ne sont pas encore réglés. Par conséquent, il nous semble que la session de cette année devrait adresser un appel non seulement aux puissances coloniales, mais aussi aux pays qui ne se sont pas encore associés aux efforts communs tendant à éliminer le colonialisme, afin qu'ils prennent des mesures qui permettraient à la vingtième session de l'Assemblée générale de marquer à la fois la fin du colonialisme et le début d'une nouvelle ère où tous les peuples du monde pourront, en pleine liberté et dans la paix, édifier un meilleur avenir pour eux-mêmes et pour le monde en général. A cette fin, il faudrait que les puissances coloniales profitent de la grande possibilité qui leur est offerte du fait que les peuples colonisés ont confiance en l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Ces Etats devraient permettre à l'Organisation d'aider à liquider les problèmes encore existants dans ce domaine de la façon la moins pénible et la plus appropriée, en autorisant des visites dans les divers territoires et en prêtant leurs bons offices. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre devrait, de son côté, poursuivre ses efforts en vue de trouver des solutions pacifiques. Il devrait attirer l'attention du Conseil de sécurité sur tous les actes des puissances coloniales ou d'autres pays qui, à son avis, ne sont pas conformes à la Charte ou à la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Le rôle que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre serait ainsi appelé à jouer requiert sans doute une adaptation à la nouvelle situation et aux exigences de l'évolution actuelle. D'après nous, le Comité devrait mettre au point des méthodes de travail et des procédures lui permettant de fonctionner dans le cadre de son mandat, non seulement comme organe étudiant l'évolution des différents territoires, mais aussi comme organe politique qui, le cas échéant, exercerait son influence pour accélérer la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

52. M. DIAZ GONZALEZ (Venezuela) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le Venezuela a l'honneur de partager, avec 23 autres Etats membres, les responsabilités que l'Assemblée générale a confiées au Comité spécial chargé d'examiner la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

53. Par conséquent, il ne semblerait pas indiqué que ma délégation fasse des commentaires ou des observations sur le rapport A/5446/Rev.1, consignait les résultats d'un travail auquel elle a modestement contribué et qui, de ce fait, reflète notre position quant au problème colonial.

54. Qu'il me soit permis cependant de présenter quelques observations fondées sur l'expérience acquise pendant cette année de travail. Cela nous permettra de dégager certaines conclusions qui pourraient être utiles pour les activités futures du Comité.

55. Le rapport que le Comité spécial a soumis à l'Assemblée générale présente, de l'avis de la délégation du Venezuela, un bilan positif très important. Ce bilan n'est pas aussi encourageant que nous l'aurions souhaité. Mais, étant donné les circonstances dans lesquelles le Comité a dû travailler, il est évident qu'il est parvenu à des résultats grâce auxquels nous pouvons au moins avoir le sentiment du devoir accompli. Les obstacles que nous avons rencontrés n'ont pas été suffisants pour nous décourager. Bien au contraire, dans de nombreux cas, ils nous ont incité à persister dans notre effort pour empêcher qu'un organe, que l'Assemblée générale voulait vivant, ne s'ankylose. Il est inutile de chercher à arrêter la marche de l'histoire. La condamnation du colonialisme a été prononcée. Il nous reste maintenant à mener à chef son exécution. Un long chemin a été parcouru depuis que le principe, posé par le président Wilson, du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes a fait son apparition sur la scène internationale. La Déclaration historique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, point culminant de ce processus, est l'acte de décès du colonialisme. Comme nous l'avons dit à une précédente occasion, la question n'est plus de savoir quelle est la meilleure façon d'administrer une colonie, mais bien de trouver le moyen le plus rapide de conduire ces territoires à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance.

56. Pour accélérer le processus de décolonisation, l'Assemblée générale, par un vote unanime, a estimé opportun de créer le Comité spécial. C'eût été chose inutile si, en même temps, elle ne l'avait doté des éléments nécessaires pour lui permettre d'agir. Dans sa sagesse, l'Assemblée générale, par la résolution 1654 (XVI) portant création du Comité, a déclaré au paragraphe 5 du dispositif:

"Charge le Comité spécial d'accomplir sa tâche en se servant de tous les moyens dont il disposera dans le cadre des procédures et des modalités qu'il adoptera pour bien s'acquitter de ses fonctions".

57. Conformément à cette décision, le Comité spécial a adopté, et l'Assemblée générale a approuvé, une série de méthodes et de procédures dont l'efficacité a été démontrée dans le travail effectué jusqu'à présent par le Comité. L'Assemblée a développé ces méthodes et ces procédures par sa résolution 1810 (XVII). Dans le même ordre, le Comité a jugé absolument nécessaire, dans certains cas, de créer des missions de visite afin d'obtenir sur place des renseignements directs auprès des populations des territoires qui ont fait l'objet de ses débats. Il est regrettable que les autorités administrantes se soient systématiquement opposées à l'admission de ces missions dans le territoire qu'elles administrent. Par ailleurs, ces missions de visite, comme nous le savons tous, ne sont pas la prérogative exclusive du Comité spécial. D'autres organes des Nations Unies en ont également créé. Le refus de la part des puissances administrantes d'admettre ces missions peut être seulement considéré comme une preuve d'intransigeance contraire à l'esprit de coopération qui doit invariablement animer les rapports entre les Etats Membres et l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

58. L'argument selon lequel la puissance administrante est seule responsable de l'administration d'un territoire et, par conséquent, ne peut partager cette responsabilité est inacceptable. Si nous admettons que la puissance administrante assume une importante responsabilité dans les territoires qu'elle administre, il n'est pas moins certain que c'est aux Nations Unies qu'incombent en tout premier lieu l'obligation et le droit de veiller au respect, dans les territoires coloniaux, des principes consacrés par la Charte et à l'application intégrale et sans réserve des résolutions de l'Assemblée, notamment de la résolution 1514 (XV).

59. La délégation du Venezuela espère qu'à l'avenir les puissances administrantes feront preuve de plus de souplesse et apporteront une plus large collaboration au Comité spécial. Sans la coopération effective des puissances administrantes, le travail du Comité devient plus difficile. En particulier dans les terri-toires qui restent encore à l'étude, il serait peut-être indispensable d'envoyer des missions de visite. Le Comité devra être mis en mesure d'envoyer de telles missions, avec la collaboration de tous les intéressés, y compris la puissance administrante. Le fait que les missions de visite désignées par le Comité spécial au cours de l'année que nous examinons actuellement n'aient pu se rendre dans les territoires qu'elles avaient mandat de visiter ne signifie pas qu'elles n'ont pas accompli la tâche qui leur était confiée. Bien au contraire, elles ont fait un travail utile et, se voyant en même temps obligées de visiter le territoire d'Etats voisins, au prix souvent de grandes difficultés, comme ce fut le cas pour le Sous-Comité d'Aden, elles ont mené à bien un important travail de diffusion de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux et ravivé l'espoir que de nombreuses populations ont placé dans notre organisation, en tant que défenseur des droits des peuples à l'autodétermination et de la dignité humaine. Il y a lieu de tenir compte de l'œuvre qu'elles ont accomplie.

60. Depuis la création du Comité spécial, nombreux sont les peuples qui ont accédé à l'autonomie de gouvernement et à l'indépendance. Nous avons accueilli avec un plaisir tout particulier l'entrée dans le concert des nations libres de deux de ces pays situés dans notre hémisphère: je veux parler de la Jamaïque et de la Trinité et Tobago. Cependant, de nombreuses populations demeurent encore sous le joug colonial et, dans notre Amérique, d'immenses territoires restent encore occupés par des puissances étrangères. La tâche des Nations Unies, pour réaliser la suppression totale de ce mal, reste ardue.

61. Un examen attentif de la liste des territoires qui figurent au programme des travaux futurs du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1, Annexe I] permet facilement de conclure qu'une révision des méthodes et des procédures employées jusqu'à ce jour s'impose pour donner plus de souplesse et les adapter aux réalités. Si l'on ne peut nier que le phénomène colonial est unique, il faut reconnaître qu'au contraire les divers territoires colonisés présentent des caractéristiques souvent très différentes tant du point de vue géographique que de la superficie et des conditions ethniques et démographiques. Il est évident que, en vertu des termes mêmes de la Déclaration, l'indépendance et la liberté complètes ne peuvent être soumises à aucune condition ni réserve. Mais les Nations Unies ont aussi le devoir de veiller à ce que cette indépendance soit acquise dans les meilleures conditions possibles par les peuples qui l'obtiennent, faute de quoi les populations qui parviennent à l'indépendance seraient condamnées au chaos et à la misère au moment précis où elles recouvreraient leur souveraineté.

62. Dans son intervention en séance plénière, le 21 novembre 1961, M. Sosa Rodriguez, s'adressant à l'Assemblée générale qui discutait alors la question relative à l'application des dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, a exposé dans les termes suivants la position du Venezuela à cet égard:

"La vocation à l'indépendance est égale pour tous les peuples, mais la jouissance de cette indépendance doit être préparée soigneusement afin qu'il en découle bien-être et progrès. En conséquence, l'obligation qui incombe aux puissances coloniales ou administrantes ne consiste pas à donner immédiatement une indépendance nominale, mais à amorcer sans tarder le processus tendant à fournir aux pays et aux peuples soumis à leur domination les éléments indispensables à une vie indépendante. C'est là que l'Organisation des Nations Unies est appelée à jouer un rôle prépondérant pour ce qui est tant de l'orientation et de la surveillance de ce processus que de la mise en œuvre de ces différentes phases.

"Il a déjà été proclamé et reconnu qu'aucun pays ni peuple n'a le droit de maintenir un autre peuple sous le régime colonial. Ce principe ne doit pas se traduire dans la pratique par l'indépendance nominale immédiate de tous les peuples colonisés, ce qui impliquerait qu'ils se transformeraient du jour au lendemain en Etats abandonnés à leur propre sort, mais il doit signifier, au contraire, que les puissances coloniales ou administrantes doivent commencer immédiatement à investir les richesses de ces territoires coloniaux au profit de leurs habitants et à préparer promptement ces peuples colonisés à l'exercice de leur indépendance, afin que celle-ci puisse être accordée le plus rapidement possible dans des conditions qui assurent le bien-être à ces peuples. C'est de cette seule façon que les puissances coloniales pourront payer leurs dettes envers les peuples colonisés." [1059ème séance, par. 166 et 167.]

63. La délégation du Venezuela a le désir ardent de voir appliquer la Déclaration, rapidement et intégralement, à tous les territoires qui souffrent encore sous l'oppression coloniale. Cette même Déclaration énonce sans équivoque les principes qui doivent servir de guide et qui doivent être respectés dans son application. Les précautions nécessaires ont été prises pour envisager tous les cas possibles. Nous voulons insister sur ce point car il nous paraît d'une importance essentielle pour l'accomplissement des travaux futurs du Comité. Aux termes de l'alinéa a du paragraphe 8 du dispositif de la résolution 1810 (XVII), le Comité spécial est invité: "a) A continuer à rechercher les voies et moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance". Cependant, ainsi que nous l'avons répété en maintes circonstances, nous pensons que nous devons rechercher non seulement les moyens les plus appropriés mais encore les plus efficaces, en fonction de chaque cas particulier et, bien entendu, dans le cadre des dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV). En disant cela, nous avons à l'esprit certains territoires tels que Gibraltar, en Europe, séparé artificiellement du territoire espagnol, dont, pour des raisons géographiques et historiques, il fait partie intégrante et indivisible. Nous songeons également à la Guyane, aux îles Maldives et autres, en Amérique, ainsi qu'à l'Infi au Sahara espagnol, en Afrique, pour ne citer que quelques exemples qui constituent des cas particuliers auxquels il convient d'appliquer des méthodes et des procédés particuliers. En conséquence, les cas que je viens de citer, comme tant d'autres, ont été prévus au paragraphe 6 de la Déclaration qui figure dans la résolution 1514 (XV). Il y est dit en effet que "toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies".

64. Si l'on n'applique pas les termes de ce paragraphe de la Déclaration, cela reviendrait, comme nous l'avons dit au Comité spécial, à accepter le droit du plus fort comme base des relations internationales et à consacrer l'injustice commise à l'égard des petits pays ou des pays faibles qui ont été privés au cours de l'histoire de leurs droits légitimes sans autre raison que leurs propres faiblesses et la pression exercée par le plus fort. Ce serait en définitive mettre une entrave à l'action réparatrice de l'histoire.

65. Je ne veux pas m'étendre sur le contenu du rapport ni sur les cas précis dont il fait état, notamment parce que, comme je l'ai dit au début de mon intervention, nous avons l'honneur d'appartenir au Comité spécial et aussi, en partie, parce que les débats relatifs à ces cas nous ont donné l'occasion d'exprimer l'opinion de la délégation du Venezuela. Nous laissons à cette auguste assemblée le soin de juger les qualités ou les défauts de ce rapport, mais je tiens à dire que nous sommes persuadés que, dans un avenir rapproché, ce qui est aujourd'hui un simple rapport du Comité spécial deviendra un document historique fondamental, car il pose une jurisprudence, bonne ou mauvaise, mais unique en tout cas en matière coloniale. C'est un document dans lequel est condensé le témoignage de ceux qui ont vécu sous le régime de l'oppression coloniale et ont été les témoins et en même temps les protagonistes du processus irréversible de la décolonisation, et qui contiendra les résultats de l'une des entreprises les plus nobles auxquelles se soit consacré un organe des Nations Unies: la lutte pour faire respecter les principes fondamentaux consacrés par la Charte et la défense des droits inaliénables de tous les peuples, sans distinction de couleur, de race ou de religion, à se gouverner eux-mêmes, à déterminer librement leur sort, à l'indépendance et au respect de la dignité humaine dans le cadre de la liberté.

66. M. HAMDANI (Pakistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Pour déférer à votre désir, M. le Président, je serai aussi bref que possible. Ma délégation a étudié avec toute l'attention nécessaire le rapport monumental et de grande conséquence soumis par le Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1] et qui contient des renseignements et une documentation extrêmement précieux. Elle a déjà fait connaître ses vues sur certaines parties de ce rapport, à savoir celles qui concernent le Sud-Ouest africain, la Rhodésie du Sud et les territoires sous administration portugaise, lorsqu'elles ont été examinées au sein de la Quatrième Commission. Je m'en tiendrai donc à quelques brèves observations sur d'autres chapitres du rapport.

67. Dans sa déclaration de politique générale au cours de la discussion générale, M. Bhutto, ministre des affaires étrangères du Pakistan, a dit ce qui suit:

"Dans le monde entier, on voit le colonialisme faire place à des relations internationales fondées sur l'égalité et le respect mutuel. Nous espérons sincèrement que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni et les autres autorités administrantes continueront à suivre la voie de la sagesse et répondront aux aspirations des peuples intéressés en accordant l'autonomie et l'indépendance aux territoires non autonomes qu'ils administrent encore." [1220ème séance, par. 33.]

68. Ma délégation a noté avec une vive satisfaction que certains de ces territoires accèderont bientôt à l'indépendance, à savoir le Kenya le 12 décembre 1963, Zanzibar peu après, la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland au début de l'an prochain et Malte le 31 mai 1964. Nous espérons que ces territoires seront admis avant peu comme Membres de plein droit de notre organisation mondiale. A cet égard, nous adressons nos sincères félicitations non seulement aux populations des territoires intéressés, pour leur patience et leurs efforts pacifiques, mais aussi au Gouvernement éclairé du Royaume-Uni, autorité administrante. Notre déception n'en est que plus grande de voir que ce même gouvernement a jugé nécessaire de refuser au sous-comité et aux missions de visite l'autorisation de se rendre dans des territoires qu'il administre — Aden et la Guyane britannique — alors que nous savons que la fonction naturelle des missions de visite est d'établir et de maintenir des rapports directs avec les peuples intéressés dans l'intention de s'informer de leurs opinions et d'étudier leurs aspirations, en vue de leur permettre d'exercer leur droit à l'indépendance. C'est pourquoi, de l'avis de ma délégation, de telles actions de retardement portent atteinte à la bonne réputation du Royaume-Uni.

69. La délégation pakistanaise est au courant des efforts déployés en vue de la convocation d'une conférence constitutionnelle intéressante les territoires de la Haute Commission, à savoir le Bassoutoland, le Betchouanaland et le Souaziland. Nous voudrions insister auprès de l'autorité administrante pour qu'elle accélère l'application des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale en la matière.

70. En même temps, ma délégation regrette l'absence de coopération de la part de certaines autres puissances administrantes et leur refus de mettre en œuvre les résolutions du Comité spécial, de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité. A cet égard, permettez-moi de citer encore la déclaration de mon ministre des affaires étrangères:

"Il est profondément regrettable que le Portugal persiste dans une attitude qui est contraire à la marche de l'histoire et qui n'est pas digne de son grand passé. Alors que les systèmes coloniaux des autres puissances européennes sont en voie de dissolution totale, il est contraire aux lois de la vie d'escompter une perpétuation de la domination portugaise en Afrique. Nous voulons espérer que les dirigeants du Portugal, qui ont dressé leur pays contre le monde entier, auront la lucidité de voir où réside leur véritable intérêt en Afrique et dans le monde." [Ibid., par. 34.]

71. Je voudrais maintenant présenter quelques observations sur l'avenir du Comité spécial, notamment parce que nous lisons dans son rapport qu'il a conscience que la décolonisation, dans certaines parties de l'Afrique et ailleurs, ne s'effectue pas à un rythme satisfaisant [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. I, par. 44]. Le Président du Comité spécial, représentant du Mali, a attiré dans sa déclaration [1266ème séance] l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur cet aspect du travail du Comité, et ce point a été discuté par la suite de façon assez détaillée par les représentants du Chili et du Mexique. Ma délégation éprouve également quelque appréhension au sujet de cet état de choses et elle serait disposée à approuver les suggestions du représentant du Chili sur l'avenir des petits territoires coloniaux une fois qu'ils auront déclaré leur indépendance. C'est au sujet de ces territoires coloniaux, peu étendus et faiblement peuplés, qui ne sont viables ni politiquement ni économiquement, que le Comité spécial pourrait envisager de mettre davantage l'accent sur les principes relatifs à l'association entre Etats ou à l'intégration de deux Etats indépendants, qui constituent les principes VI, VIII, IX de l'Annexe à la résolution 1541 (XV). A cet égard, ma délégation aurait souhaité qu'il soit fait mention de ces principes dans le projet de résolution du Comité spécial relatif à la Gambie [ibid., chap. XI, par. 105], comme l'avaient suggéré plusieurs membres du Comité spécial, notamment les représentants de l'Italie et des Etats-Unis.

72. Je voudrais également ajouter que ma délégation approuve le savant exposé du Vice-Président du Comité spécial, le représentant de l'Uruguay [1268ème séance], qui a discuté de la "jurisprudence de la résolution 1514 (XV)", en particulier en ce qui concerne la nécessité d'une présence effective des Nations Unies avant et pendant les élections par lesquelles les peuples des territoires dépendants, Aden par exemple, exerceront leur droit de libre détermination.

73. D'une manière générale, ma délégation est d'accord sur les conclusions et recommandations du Comité spécial ainsi que sur les projets de résolution qu'il a présentés dans son rapport. Au cours de sa deuxième année d'existence, le Comité spécial a encore accompli un excellent travail. La délégation pakistanaise tient à féliciter tous les membres du Comité des efforts inlassables déployés par cet organe pour que les fins de la résolution 1514 (XV) soient plus largement respectées. En dépit de son activité remarquable et de sa diligence, le Comité spécial a été obligé d'ajourner à plus tard l'étude de plusieurs territoires.

74. Nous souhaitons au Comité spécial bon succès dans les efforts et tentatives qu'il déploiera, en se servant des méthodes et procédures actuelles, quitte à modifier légèrement ces dernières pour tenir compte des discussions de l'Assemblée générale, et nous faisons nôtre l'espoir exprimé par M. Azimov, représentant de l'Union soviétique, dans les termes suivants:

"C'est pour l'Organisation des Nations Unies un point d'honneur de tout faire pour qu'à la date de son vingtième anniversaire le honteux système du colonialisme ait entièrement disparu de la terre et que tous les peuples, grands ou petits, en Afrique, en Asie, ou en Amérique latine, soient libres et indépendants." [1267ème séance, par. 119.]

M. Thors (Islande), vice-président, prend la présidence.

75. M. ASTAPENKO (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) [traduit du russe]: La délégation de la République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie tient avant tout à exprimer sa reconnaissance au Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre pour le travail extrêmement important qu'il a accompli, ce dont témoigne le rapport qu'il a présenté à l'Assemblée générale [A/5446/Rev.1].

76. Près de trois années se sont écoulées depuis le jour où, sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique^{2/}, notre organisation a adopté la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. La Déclaration est le drapeau autour duquel se sont groupées toutes les forces pacifiques dans leur lutte pour aboutir à la liquidation totale du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Dans le bref moment de l'histoire écoulé depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration, les peuples de pays tels que l'Algérie, le Tanganyika, l'Ouganda, le Sierra Leone, le Rwanda, le Burundi, la Jamaïque, la Trinité et Tobago, le Samoa-Occidental ont accédé à l'indépendance et obtenu leur liberté. La lutte du peuple indien pour libérer ses territoires traditionnels de Goa, Diu et Damao a été couronnée de succès, de même que la lutte du peuple indonésien pour la libération de l'Irian occidental. Enfin, l'indépendance de pays coloniaux comme le Kenya, Zanzibar et Malte sera proclamée très prochainement.

77. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux a donné une vigueur nouvelle aux peuples qui luttent pour se libérer du joug colonial. Cette déclaration a été l'instrument du rassemblement de toutes les forces anticoloniales, parmi lesquelles le système mondial des pays socialistes, qui constitue un puissant appui et un bouclier pour les peuples qui luttent pour secouer le joug du colonialisme et pour leur libération nationale, puis les pays et les peuples opprimés par l'impérialisme, et enfin toutes les forces progressistes éprises de liberté. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a pour devoir de contribuer à la mise en œuvre, le plus rapidement possible, de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, afin que d'ici à un an ou deux il ne reste plus sur la terre aucune colonie ni aucun peuple asservi par l'impérialisme et le colonialisme. L'Organisation des Nations Unies peut et doit célébrer son vingtième anniversaire par la liquidation totale du colonialisme.

78. Cependant, 70 territoires restent encore sous le joug colonial. Leur superficie s'élève à près de 8 millions de kilomètres carrés et leur population à près de 50 millions d'habitants.

79. Les colonialistes, qui maintiennent sous leur domination des populations contre leur gré, ne veulent pas quitter d'eux-mêmes les colonies et s'opposent avec acharnement à l'application de la Déclaration.

80. Le sang et la sueur des peuples des colonies permettent aux colonialistes de réaliser des bénéfices fabuleux. Par exemple, la société coloniale britan-nique intitulée British South Africa, qui exploite les ressources naturelles de l'Afrique méridionale et de l'Afrique centrale, a réalisé entre le 1er octobre 1961 et le 30 septembre 1962 — comme le montre son bilan pour cette période — un bénéfice net dépassant 8 millions et demi de livres sterling. Ce profit compense à lui seul presque entièrement les capitaux investis par cette société dans l'économie de la Rhodésie du Nord au cours des dix dernières années.

81. Prenons un autre exemple, celui du consortium minier anglo-américain et sud-africain intitulé Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, qui opère surtout en Afrique méridionale et en Afrique centrale. D'après ses comptes rendus pour 1962, cette société a réalisé un bénéfice net de plus de 10 millions et demi de livres sterling. La portion de cette somme qui est tombée directement dans les poches des colonialistes sous forme de dividendes versés aux actionnaires représente un bénéfice de plus de 5 millions et demi de livres sterling. Le président de cette société, M. Harry Oppenheimer, dans une déclaration publiée par le Times de Londres du 6 juin 1963, parlant des buts que cette société cherche à atteindre, répétait les paroles de son père, président avant lui de cette société, à savoir que la société a pour but de "réaliser des bénéfices pour nos actionnaires".

82. Voilà donc le prétendu "souci des intérêts des peuples des colonies"! Voilà qui est dit assez carrément. Ce sont justement et seulement les bénéfices qui intéressent les colonialistes. La politique des colonialistes dans leurs colonies est déterminée par le culte "du veau d'or".

83. Pour assurer le maintien de leur domination dans les territoires coloniaux et continuer à "réaliser des bénéfices", les colonialistes ont recours à divers moyens et méthodes. Ils privent à dessein les peuples coloniaux de tous droits sociaux et politiques, les maintiennent dans un état d'arriération et d'ignorance, et n'hésitent pas à présenter le tout comme si c'était presque un bienfait dont ils gratifient les peuples coloniaux.

84. Le journal anglais The Times du 31 octobre 1962 dit, dans un éditorial de la rédaction, "qu'on peut sans aucun cynisme soutenir que l'analphabétisme n'est pas toujours un mal. Le chaos économique et politique dans lequel de nombreux pays en voie de développement se débattent encore serait infiniment plus grave si tous les citoyens de ces pays pouvaient lire ce que leurs journaux relatent à cet égard."

85. En s'efforçant de s'opposer au processus inévitable de libération des peuples coloniaux, les colonialistes ont recours à diverses ruses, répressions et guerres coloniales. Les colonialistes portugais, sud-africains et espagnols ont actuellement largement recours à la terreur et aux répressions sous la forme la plus féroce. C'est déjà la troisième année que le Portugal mène une cruelle guerre coloniale en Angola et pratique contre la population autochtone de ce pays la politique du génocide et de la "terre brûlée". Les méthodes de cette guerre honteuse débordent de plus en plus en Guinée portugaise, au Mozambique et dans les autres colonies portugaises.

^{2/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Annexes, point 87 de l'ordre du jour, documents A/4501 et A/4502.

86. Les dirigeants de la République sud-africaine mènent une politique de cruelle répression contre la population autochtone du Sud-Ouest africain. Ils pratiquent par ailleurs dans leur propre pays une politique antihumaine d'apartheid, ils délogent la population africaine autochtone pour la refouler dans des réserves et des camps de concentration appelés "Bantoustans". Les colonialistes anglais continuent la guerre coloniale contre le peuple d'Oman, fusillant et emprisonnant les combattants nationaux d'Aden, du Souaziland, de Brunéi et d'autres colonies.

87. Les puissances colonialistes forment un front unique dans la lutte contre les mouvements de libération nationale. Le bloc militaire et colonial de l'OTAN joue un sinistre rôle dans ces efforts, d'ailleurs voués à l'échec, des puissances coloniales. Chacun sait que les puissances dirigeantes du bloc de l'Atlantique nord fournissent une aide économique et militaire appréciable au Portugal de Salazar, et aux régimes racistes de la République sud-africaine et de la Rhodésie du Sud.

88. Ces derniers pays utilisent en grand, à titre d'aide contre les mouvements de libération dans leurs colonies, des armements reçus des Etats-Unis, des chasseurs à réaction et des bombes au napalm de France et d'Angleterre, des véhicules blindés britanniques, des armes à feu d'infanterie provenant d'Allemagne occidentale et d'autres catégories d'armes et d'équipements militaires de la part des pays de l'OTAN.

89. Par exemple, dans son numéro du 1er avril 1963, le Times de Londres fait savoir qu'à lui seul le Portugal a reçu des Etats-Unis, dans le cadre de l'OTAN, une aide militaire dont le montant s'élève à 341,6 millions de dollars. On peut juger de la destination essentielle de ces fonds par le fait qu'actuellement 90 p. 100 environ des troupes de Salazar se trouvent en Angola, au Mozambique et en Guinée portugaise.

90. Les néo-colonialistes d'Allemagne de l'Ouest fournissent une aide active au Portugal, à la République sud-africaine et à d'autres puissances coloniales.

91. Les pays de l'OTAN sont directement complices des crimes commis dans les colonies par les colonialistes. Partout où se répand le sang des combattants nationaux — tant sur les territoires des colonies portugaises qu'en République sud-africaine, en Rhodésie du Sud, à Oman, à Aden, à Brunéi — ce n'est pas seulement le fait des colonialistes militants du Portugal, de la République sud-africaine, de la Rhodésie du Sud et d'autres pays, c'est également le fait de leurs alliés et protecteurs au sein de l'OTAN.

92. Le vieux colonialisme s'est effondré dans l'abîme. Aujourd'hui, les colonialistes se trouvent face à l'échec complet de leur domination politique en Asie et en Afrique. Ils ont soif de revanche. Ils veulent à tout prix conserver les profits qui leur échappent. Les colonialistes ont maintenant recours aux moyens et aux méthodes plus subtiles du néo-colonialisme.

93. M. Harry Oppenheimer, personnalité fort connue, contraint d'admettre le caractère inévitable du démembrement de la Fédération de la Rhodésie et du Nyassaland, proclame ouvertement et sans détour, dans une déclaration sur les résultats de l'activité de la société Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, pour l'année 1962:

"Nous sommes convaincus que nous pourrions nous adapter aux nouvelles circonstances et que nous continuerons de jouer le rôle principal dans le développement de l'Afrique centrale."

94. Cette déclaration montre bien que les Oppenheimer et autres colonialistes s'adaptent aux nouvelles circonstances afin de maintenir leur domination grâce à de nouvelles méthodes néo-colonialistes. L'une de ces méthodes néo-colonialistes consiste à organiser une sorte de sabotage économique contre les peuples des colonies, à savoir la "fuite des capitaux" et à employer d'autres méthodes conçues pour saper l'économie des colonies.

95. Le Kenya offre un exemple frappant en ce domaine. Les monopoles impérialistes qui opèrent dans ce pays et prévoient que le peuple du Kenya réalisera inévitablement la conquête de son indépendance ont organisé la fuite des capitaux de ce pays. Si en 1955 les avoirs de 18 sociétés au Kenya représentaient 20 millions de livres sterling, ils étaient tombés à 12 millions de 1962. Grâce à cette mesure et à d'autres encore, la situation économique du Kenya s'est sérieusement détériorée et le chômage s'est accru dans des proportions sensibles.

96. Tout cela les colonialistes le font de propos délibéré pour obliger l'Etat nouvellement indépendant à solliciter l'aide de la puissance qui le gouvernait auparavant, pour contraindre cet Etat à accepter des contrats léonins, et continuer la domination coloniale sous d'autres formes.

97. Le néo-colonialisme se révèle de façon frappante également dans les programmes occidentaux d'"aide" économique aux nouveaux Etats. Selon les données du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies, l'aide économique des Etats-Unis aux pays d'Asie et d'Afrique s'élevait en 1960 à 1 milliard 460 millions de dollars. Cela signifie, premièrement, que cette somme représente 1 dollar par an par tête d'habitant. On conçoit facilement qu'avec cela on ne peut guère mener la grande vie.

98. Deuxièmement, cette "aide" est compensée, et avec usure, par les bénéfices que les monopoles des Etats-Unis et d'autres pays occidentaux retirent par suite de l'exportation de capitaux dans les pays sous-développés et des termes de l'échange dans le commerce avec ces pays. C'est ainsi par exemple que, d'après les données manifestement minimisées de la revue United States and World Report du 25 décembre 1961, les monopoles américains au cours de la seule année 1960 ont pillé les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique jusqu'à concurrence de 1 milliard 474 millions de dollars sous forme de bénéfices retirés des investissements dans ces mêmes pays, ce qui a entièrement compensé l'aide économique qui leur a été accordée.

99. Prenons un autre fait. Au cours de l'année fiscale 1962-1963, le Gouvernement britannique a donné à ses colonies, sous forme d'"aide", 19,5 millions de livres sterling conformément à la loi sur le développement et la promotion sociale des colonies.

Cela correspond cependant, par tête d'habitant des colonies, à moins d'une livre sterling par an. De plus, cette somme est compensée, et au-delà, par les profits nets réalisés au cours de la période précitée et qui sont exportés de ces colonies par trois monopoles coloniaux anglais: l'Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, la British South Africa Corporation et la Rhodesia Selection Trust. Et de tels monopoles se comptent par dizaines.

100. Cette "aide" permet en même temps aux puissances impérialistes d'attacher les nouveaux Etats au char de leur économie, en qualité d'auxiliaires fournisseurs de matières premières agricoles, et de conserver les leviers de leur domination économique, politique et militaire dans ces territoires.

101. Les colonialistes s'efforcent par tous les moyens possibles de conserver et même d'étendre leur domination et leur influence dans les pays coloniaux et dépendants; ils continuent d'exploiter avec rapacité les ressources nationales et la main-d'œuvre à bon marché et de piller les peuples de ces pays.

102. Dans le monde entier, les peuples épris de paix exigent la liquidation totale et complète du honteux système colonial et l'application dans les plus brefs délais de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Cette volonté des peuples est reflétée dans de nombreuses décisions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui tendent à faire appliquer immédiatement les dispositions de cette Déclaration.

103. Les peuples indépendants d'Afrique, reflétant les aspirations et les efforts de tous les peuples du continent africain à la Conférence au sommet d'Addis-Abéba, en mai 1963, ont exprimé leur détermination de faire accélérer la liquidation du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et manifestations en Afrique. Cette conférence marque une nouvelle étape dans le renforcement de la lutte des peuples des pays colonisés et dépendants pour leur libération nationale.

104. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a le devoir, dans ces conditions, de prendre des mesures efficaces pour satisfaire les exigences légitimes des peuples coloniaux, pour faire échec aux colonialistes et pour mettre en œuvre, le plus rapidement possible, la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

105. La République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, pour sa part, comme les autres pays socialistes, non seulement sympathise avec le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples des pays coloniaux et dépendants, mais leur accorde aussi une aide amicale. La République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie lutte énergiquement contre l'ingérence de l'impérialisme dans les affaires intérieures des pays qui se sont libérés. Elle appuie par tous les moyens les peuples de ces pays et s'élève contre toutes les formes de néo-colonialisme.

106. Tablant sur ces principes, notre délégation se félicite des efforts de la majorité des Etats membres du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre en vue de l'application au plus vite de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Nous appuyons les conclusions et les recommandations contenues dans le rapport du Comité et nous estimons que l'Assemblée générale doit approuver l'activité du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre et prolonger son mandat en vue de parvenir à ce que soient appliquées dans les plus brefs délais les dispositions de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

107. M. TARABANOV (Bulgarie): L'examen, par l'Assemblée générale, du rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5446/Rev.I] représente une étape importante du travail de la dix-huitième session. Cet examen permet, en effet, de discuter et de prendre des décisions sur toutes les questions particulières qui y sont incluses, ainsi que sur toutes celles dont le Comité n'a pas eu la possibilité de s'occuper.

108. Le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, créé en vue de rechercher les voies et moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, en même temps que de proposer des mesures concrètes en vue de cette application, a dû accomplir une tâche noble et extrêmement difficile.

109. Le processus de décolonisation des empires coloniaux, commencé dès la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, a suscité des remous profonds et des changements durables pendant la période de l'après-guerre. Les puissances coloniales ont essayé, par tous les moyens à leur disposition — surtout par la répression des mouvements de libération nationale et par de véritables guerres menées contre les peuples colonisés —, d'enrayer ce processus. Nous ne voudrions pas nous étendre ici sur les trop nombreux cas de guerre et de répression des mouvements de libération nationale qui ont eu lieu durant cette période en vue d'arriver à cette fin. Nous voudrions cependant souligner que ces guerres ont mis en péril, dans de nombreux cas, la paix et la sécurité. Elles n'ont pas réussi, cependant, à briser la volonté des peuples subjugués de libérer leurs pays du joug colonial.

110. Durant cette période, les puissances coloniales ont non seulement essayé de mater l'élan vers la liberté par des moyens de coercition et par la répression la plus brutale, elles ont également employé des méthodes extrêmement raffinées afin d'essayer de transformer certaines institutions des Nations Unies en instruments au service de leur politique. Elles ont essayé d'utiliser aussi bien le Conseil de tutelle, dans le passé, que les autres institutions traitant des questions coloniales, et elles ont cherché à en faire les instruments de leur politique, alors qu'en réalité ces organes ont été créés pour servir, d'après la Charte, à préparer les peuples à l'indépendance.

111. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, adoptée par l'Assemblée générale en 1960 [résolution 1514 (XV)] sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique^{3/}, marque une nouvelle étape dans la politique des Nations Unies à l'égard des problèmes coloniaux. Par cette décl-ration, la politique des Nations Unies a été orientée vers l'adoption de mesures ayant pour effet de transférer immédiatement le pouvoir aux peuples des territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance. Cette politique vise à la liquidation immédiate du joug colonial. Pour appliquer cette nouvelle politique des Nations Unies dans le domaine de la décolonisation, il fallait créer de nouvelles institutions répondant aux exigences nouvelles. C'est d'ailleurs la principale raison qui a été à la base de la création du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

112. Ce comité, composé d'abord de 17 puis, ensuite, de 24 membres, appelé à contribuer à la recherche des moyens permettant l'application rapide de la Déclaration sur la décolonisation, a travaillé de façon patiente et continue à rechercher les moyens permettant d'exécuter les tâches définies par la Déclaration de 1960 ainsi que par les résolutions [1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII)] votées ultérieurement dans ce domaine par l'Assemblée générale.

113. L'impression générale qui se dégage de notre discussion est que le Comité des Vingt-Quatre a joué un rôle positif dans la mise en pratique de la décolonisation.

114. Représentant un pays membre du Comité spécial pour la décolonisation, notre délégation ne peut manquer d'apprécier à sa juste valeur le travail de ce dernier. L'Assemblée générale a déjà été informée par le Président du Comité spécial, M. Coulibaly, représentant du Mali, et par le rapporteur des résultats obtenus, des difficultés rencontrées et des méthodes de travail appliquées.

115. Il est réconfortant sans doute de constater que, pendant la période écoulée, nous avons pu nous féliciter de certains résultats positifs dans le domaine de la décolonisation. Ces résultats sont dus à la lutte héroïque des peuples coloniaux pour leur libération nationale, à l'appui que cette cause a trouvé dans l'opinion publique internationale et aux efforts déployés par la majorité des Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il faut cependant relever, avec regret, que de nombreux pays et territoires languissent encore sous le joug colonial le plus féroce.

116. S'il n'a pas été possible d'annoncer à la dix-huitième session de l'Assemblée générale l'accession à l'indépendance de tous les pays et territoires sous domination coloniale, c'est parce que, au cours de cette période, de nombreux obstacles ont été érigés sur la voie de la décolonisation par les puissances coloniales et leurs partenaires. Ces puissances se sont efforcées, par tous les moyens, de faire échouer les efforts des peuples coloniaux désireux de rejeter l'oppression impérialiste. Il n'a même pas été permis aux sous-comités créés par le Comité spécial d'enquêter sur les conditions dans les différents territoires. Il ne s'agissait sans doute là que d'une tracasserie administrative, mais c'est déjà une indication très significative de l'attitude hostile des puissances coloniales à l'égard de la liquidation du joug colonial. Les puissances coloniales, mêmes celles qui, après l'adoption de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme, ont fait semblant d'accepter cette déclaration, n'ont pas mis fin à leur opposition farouche à la décolonisation et poursuivent les guerres et les répressions sanglantes contre les populations qui luttent pour la libération de leurs pays.

117. Il est à peine nécessaire de s'étendre ici sur l'atroce oppression que font subir les colonialistes portugais aux populations de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise et des autres territoires pour illustrer l'attitude négative du Portugal à l'égard de la politique de décolonisation des Nations Unies. Il n'est pas nécessaire non plus de faire le procès de la politique esclavagiste des racistes sud-africains envers les populations du Sud-Ouest africain et de l'Afrique du Sud elle-même. Un grand nombre de délégations africaines ont apporté à cet égard des détails édifiants aussi bien durant ce débat qu'aux séances du Conseil de sécurité, de sorte qu'il est inutile d'y revenir.

118. Or, ni le Portugal, petit pays de l'Europe méridionale, ni les racistes de l'Afrique du Sud ne pourraient avoir le courage et la force nécessaires de se dresser face à la vague montante de l'opinion publique mondiale qui appuie la lutte de libération nationale de ces territoires s'ils ne pouvaient compter sur leurs alliés et partenaires de l'OTAN, qui leur fournissent les armes et les munitions nécessaires, des fusils des plus ordinaires jusqu'aux avions les plus modernes. En dépit des nombreuses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de sécurité réclamant la suppression de toute aide et assistance aux gouvernements de ces deux pays et demandant d'autres mesures parallèles, les pays membres de l'OTAN — à quelques exceptions près — font la sourde oreille à ces appels pressants et continuent de développer leurs relations commerciales et financières avec ces deux Etats, auxquels ils prêtent toute l'assistance nécessaire pour leur permettre de continuer à opprimer les peuples colonisés. Il semble difficile pour certains milieux occidentaux de renoncer aux fabuleux profits qu'ils tirent de leur commerce avec les territoires coloniaux sous la domination du Portugal et de l'Afrique du Sud, ainsi que des investissements qu'ils y ont faits.

119. Dans ces conditions, les puissances occidentales membres de l'OTAN devraient au moins, aujourd'hui, cesser de prétendre passer pour les champions des peuples opprimés. Aucun pays et aucun peuple du continent africain n'oubliera jamais, nous en sommes persuadés, cette attitude des puissances occidentales membres de l'OTAN, ainsi que de leurs partenaires. Ce n'est pas par hasard que les pays africains, réunis à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba, ont adressé un appel aux "alliés des puissances coloniales" pour les inviter à "choisir entre leur amitié pour les peuples africains" et leurs amies, les puissances coloniales, qui oppriment les peuples africains.

120. D'autres puissances coloniales, comme le Royaume-Uni, comprenant qu'il n'est plus possible de s'opposer par les seuls moyens de la force brutale et de la terreur à l'élan irrésistible des peuples coloniaux luttant pour leur libération, s'emploient à chercher des méthodes plus raffinées et mieux adaptées aux conditions de la situation internationale actuelle. C'est ainsi qu'elles tentent de semer la division, comme on le voit par exemple dans le cas de la Guyane britannique. Elles affirment ne vouloir retarder que temporairement le processus de libération nationale, en prétextant rechercher des formes spécifiques pour la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration de 1960, et ce dans l'intérêt, disent-elles, et pour le bien-être des peuples colonisés. On retrouve ici la vieille formule employée par tous les colonialistes qui, dans le passé, sont allés imposer leur domination coloniale sous le prétexte d'apporter les bienfaits de la civilisation aux peuples arriérés. Les milieux coloniaux s'accrochent de toutes leurs forces à leurs proies et refusent de lâcher prise. Tout en cherchant à retarder le plus possible le processus de décolonisation, ces milieux s'efforcent de gagner du temps pour préparer de nouvelles formes d'oppression coloniale dans les pays qui luttent pour leur libération nationale.

121. Dans leur opposition à la décolonisation, les puissances colonialistes font preuve d'une belle ingéniosité pour ce qui est des justifications qu'elles prétendent avancer. Les colonialistes portugais, par exemple, affirment que dans leurs "provinces d'outre-mer" une prétendue nation multiraciale serait en train de se former, alors que ceux du Royaume-Uni et d'autres puissances coloniales s'ingénient à présenter les choses comme s'il ne s'agissait nullement de préserver de fabuleux profits, mais bien plutôt de déterminer quand et de quelle manière le processus de décolonisation doit parvenir à son achèvement.

122. L'histoire du colonialisme fourmille de justifications. Cependant, toutes reviennent à la formule de Kipling quant au "fardeau de l'homme blanc", chargé par la Providence de contribuer à la civilisation des peuples colonisés. Les vraies intentions du colonialisme ont pourtant toujours été celles que formulait en 1885 Jules Ferry, alors président du Conseil des ministres de France, lorsqu'il disait:

"Les nations d'Europe recherchent les colonies pour les trois raisons suivantes: premièrement, pour se procurer des matières premières des colonies; deuxièmement, pour assurer un débouché aux produits manufacturés de la métropole; troisièmement, pour trouver un terrain favorable à l'investissement des surplus de capitaux."

123. Il est aujourd'hui difficile de faire des dupes avec des affirmations du genre de celle selon laquelle il s'agit seulement de retarder temporairement le processus de décolonisation, sous le prétexte de chercher des modalités déterminées d'application de la Déclaration, ceci dans l'intérêt des peuples colonisés. La vérité est tout autre. Au moment où la vieille structure du colonialisme classique croule, les milieux colonialistes sont en quête de formes nouvelles qui leur permettraient de conserver l'essence même de leur politique colonialiste, définie de façon si précise par un expert comme Jules Ferry. Autrefois, les milieux colonialistes accaparaient, à leur profit, les matières premières et les marchés, dans les colonies, et investissaient. Maintenant, c'est à travers les investissements faits dans les colonies qu'ils cherchent à dominer les sources de matières premières dans leurs anciennes colonies et à s'assurer des marchés pour leurs produits manufacturés.

124. Mais, dans la recherche fébrile de formes nouvelles de leur vieille politique à l'égard de leurs anciennes colonies, afin de préserver leurs intérêts égoïstes ainsi que leurs positions économiques, politiques et stratégiques dans les milieux où ils sont encore maîtres, une politique, appelée ces derniers temps néo-colonialisme, ne pourrait en aucune manière servir de prétexte pour retarder le processus de décolonisation. Cette attitude est d'autant plus néfaste et condamnable qu'elle est adoptée dans le but de rechercher de nouvelles formes qui permettraient de continuer l'exploitation des colonies.

125. Dans leur tentative en vue d'arrêter le processus de décolonisation, les puissances coloniales s'ingénient à trouver des arguments, pour leur mauvaise cause, là où ils n'existent pas. Elles s'emploient même à tirer parti de la politique de coexistence pacifique, acceptée de plus en plus comme norme de conduite dans la vie internationale. Cette politique, qui exclut la guerre entre Etats en tant que moyen de régler les différends, a été invoquée par le représentant du Royaume-Uni, durant la discussion générale, lors de la dix-huitième session, quand il a déclaré:

"Les guerres de libération n'en sont pas moins des guerres. Or, les pays ont le devoir d'éviter les guerres, comme les Nations Unies ont le devoir d'empêcher les guerres si elles le peuvent, les guerres de toutes sortes." [1222ème séance, par. 60.]

126. Par des déclarations de cette sorte, qui ne sont pas une nouveauté, des efforts sont faits pour embrouiller la question, pour assimiler les guerres d'agression et les guerres entre Etats indépendants à la juste lutte que mènent les peuples pour se libérer de leurs oppresseurs. Mais de telles manœuvres sont vouées à l'échec. Par contre, les peuples opprimés des colonies ne sont pas partisans de la guerre. Ils n'en sont que les victimes. Ces peuples n'aspirent qu'à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration relative à l'octroi de l'indépendance, qu'à l'adoption de mesures immédiates pour leur transférer le pouvoir, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté librement exprimée. Ils n'aspirent qu'à jouir d'une indépendance complète, pour se borner à l'expression contenue dans la Déclaration même. Ce sont les puissances coloniales qui exercent une répression féroce contre les populations de ces pays, qui entreprennent des guerres et s'efforcent d'étouffer toute idée d'indépendance et de liberté dans ces territoires. Vouloir assimiler la lutte des peuples colonisés pour leur libération nationale, vouloir assimiler leurs aspirations à la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance à des guerres entre Etats pour régler des différends, c'est travestir la vérité, pour user d'une expression très modérée.

127. Cependant, malgré toutes les difficultés et tous les obstacles érigés par les puissances coloniales sur la voie de la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration relative à la décolonisation, il ne fait aucun doute que la lutte pour la liquidation du colonialisme continuera et que la victoire finale appartiendra aux peuples opprimés. Ces derniers ne pourront jamais se résigner au sort que leur ont préparé les colonialistes. Dans cette lutte, les Nations Unies ne peuvent qu'être aux côtés des peuples. Elles ne devront ménager aucun effort pour en finir une fois pour toutes et le plus tôt possible avec le joug colonial, honte de notre époque. Le Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre aura à jouer un rôle important dans ces efforts de l'ONU, en cherchant des voies et des moyens adaptés à chaque pays afin de hâter le processus de décolonisation. C'est pourquoi son travail devrait être poursuivi et intensifié pour faciliter la lourde tâche que les Nations Unies se sont fixées: en finir le plus vite possible avec ce phénomène honteux qui continue de troubler les relations internationales et la paix.

M. Sosa Rodríguez (Venezuela) reprend la présidence.

128. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Tous les orateurs inscrits pour la séance de ce matin ont pris la parole. Je donne la parole, pour exercer son droit de réponse, au représentant de la Mauritanie.

129. M. DADDAH (Mauritanie): Avant de répondre à certaines paroles qu'a eues M. Benhima à l'adresse de mon pays, je voudrais présenter les félicitations de la délégation mauritanienne au Comité des Vingt-Quatre pour le travail sérieux qu'il vient d'effectuer, ainsi que pour son rapport [A/5446/Rev.1], qui constitue à notre avis une contribution positive à la libération de toutes les parties de l'Afrique qui se trouvent encore sous la domination étrangère.

130. Je voudrais d'abord relever avec satisfaction, dans la longue intervention qu'a faite M. Benhima ce matin, une phrase dans laquelle il nous a dit que le Maroc voulait arriver à la satisfaction de ses revendications, cela pour le maintien de la paix et de la stabilité en Afrique. Ce sont des paroles qui, si elles sont prises isolément, peuvent à juste titre donner satisfaction à tous les Africains et spécialement aux Mauritaniens. Cependant, nous pensons que les actes ne sont malheureusement pas toujours conformes aux paroles. Des exemples douloureux et récents démontrent que si ce désir de maintien de la paix et de la stabilité a été exprimé ici, aux Nations Unies, il se peut qu'à Rabat la Royauté et ses agents les plus immédiats ne l'entendent pas de la même façon que M. Benhima.

131. En effet, nous avons vu l'armée marocaine envahir, dans une agression caractérisée, les frontières d'un pays frère voisin du Maroc ...

132. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je voudrais rappeler au représentant de la Mauritanie que je lui ai donné la parole uniquement pour lui permettre d'exercer son droit de réponse aux discours qui ont été prononcés ici même, mais qu'il ne doit pas s'écarter de la question à l'ordre du jour pour aborder des problèmes différents que l'Assemblée générale n'est pas actuellement en train de discuter.

133. M. DADDAH (Mauritanie): Je suivrai les directives présidentielles. J'ajoute cependant que, dans la mesure où l'exercice du droit de réponse m'a été accordé, si je rappelle certains faits, ce n'est pas par plaisir, mais parce qu'ils sont étroitement liés aux points auxquels je voulais répondre, et parce qu'ils méritent d'être signalés. Si je peux continuer à faire usage de mon droit de réponse, je poursuivrai.

134. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Le représentant de la Mauritanie a la parole. Je le prie tout d'abord de limiter sa réponse à ce qui se débat ici et de ne pas traiter d'autres problèmes qui ne sont pas à l'heure actuelle en discussion.

135. M. DADDAH (Mauritanie): Je disais que la façon dont le Maroc et ses chefs posent les problèmes du droit international était inquiétante et n'était pas en conformité avec ce que M. Benhima a rappelé ce matin.

136. Le peuple mauritanien souhaite vivement convaincre ceux qui étaient hier ses ennemis de la véracité de sa thèse et voudrait les voir devenir ses amis. Ceux qui persistent à se présenter comme des adversaires de la Mauritanie le font en partie parce que la République islamique de Mauritanie rejette avec énergie et indignation des revendications périmees et absurdes auxquelles eux-mêmes — y compris, j'en suis pour ma part profondément convaincu, M. Benhima, qui a pris la parole ce matin — ne croient pas.

137. Ceux qui se considèrent comme les adversaires de la Mauritanie recourent à une méthode, pour le règlement des différends territoriaux, qui nous semble, à nous tout au moins, moyenâgeuse, et qui est contraire à l'esprit de notre organisation et en contradiction flagrante avec la Charte des Nations Unies.

138. Voulant me conformer aux directives présidentielles, je ne reviendrai pas sur ce que je disais tout à l'heure, mais je crois que l'Assemblée comprend fort bien ce à quoi je pense. Je voudrais aussi rappeler aux Etats Membres que l'agression dont a été victime l'Algérie n'est pas la première: en 1959 et en 1960, l'armée marocaine et ceux qui se réclamaient de l'armée de libération nationale, financés et téléguidés par l'Istiqlal et par les autorités de Rabat, ont essayé — et d'ailleurs essaient encore — d'envahir la Mauritanie et d'y maintenir la subversion. Ces remarques, je voulais les faire, et je voulais en faire part à l'Assemblée.

139. Pour ce qui est du Rio de Oro, sans vouloir invoquer des arguments historiques et religieux que nous ne souhaitons pas développer ici car nous n'y croyons pas, nous pensons que ce territoire peuplé de Mauritaniens, que cette partie de la Mauritanie encore sous domination espagnole fait partie intégrante de notre pays, et tout vient appuyer notre thèse, que nous exposerons à l'avenir. En effet, le Rio de Oro est habité par des Maures et ces Maures ont, d'après notre expression à nous, nomades de la Mauritanie, la même zone de nomadisation que les autres Mauritaniens; des familles habitant dans cette partie de l'Afrique, dans cette partie de la Mauritanie, comprennent des membres qui se trouvent de l'autre côté de la frontière artificielle que l'administration occupante continue de maintenir.

140. Ainsi, la revendication que le représentant du Royaume du Maroc vient de formuler ici, fort éloquentement je dois le dire, est en contradiction avec ce que nous considérons — et qui a été considéré ici — comme un document officiel, un document important que le Maroc a fait publier en 1960 par son Ministère des affaires étrangères. Pour nous, ce document n'a pas de valeur réelle, mais pour le gouvernement qui l'a publié il doit quand même être l'expression de sa pensée. Il s'agit du Livre blanc sur la Mauritanie^{4/}. D'après ce texte, le Maroc ne revendique le Rio de Oro — et c'est écrit noir sur blanc — que parce que ce territoire fait partie de la Mauritanie, elle-même revendiquée par le Royaume du Maroc.

141. A ce propos, je me bornerai à rappeler que le Ministre des affaires étrangères de la République islamique de Mauritanie a fait une déclaration devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, dans laquelle il a exposé en détail ce que je viens de résumer ici. En outre, le Président de la République islamique de Mauritanie, parlant à cette même tribune, le 14 octobre 1963, a affirmé, à propos du Rio de Oro:

"C'est ... parce que nous avons toujours cru aux vertus du dialogue franc que nous espérons exercer, par la négociation dans l'amitié, notre souveraineté sur une vaste partie de notre territoire national non encore libérée." [1241ème séance, par. 29.]

142. Je peux comprendre l'impatience, l'impatience d'un roi, qui est redoutable pour ses sujets, et dont a parlé tout à l'heure aussi M. Benhima. Mais lui faisait allusion à l'Espagne, qui veut rentrer le plus rapidement possible en possession d'une partie de son territoire. Or, cette impatience, elle existe aussi en Mauritanie; mais nous ne voulons pas en parler ici, nous ne voulons menacer personne. Nos forces armées ne seront utilisées qu'en cas de légitime défense, et de légitime défense véritable. Mais nous voulons que l'Espagne elle aussi, l'Espagne que nous souhaitons pour amie malgré les différends qui peuvent nous opposer, comprenne que, pour nous, le Rio de Oro fait partie intégrante de la Mauritanie. Notre détermination est grande et nous sommes absolument décidés à faire d'abord tout ce qui est possible dans l'amitié pour que cette partie de notre sol national soit rattachée à notre pays. Nous ne reculons pas et nous voulons que nos droits soient respectés.

143. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Espagne pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

144. M. de PINIES (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Exerçant son droit de réponse, ma délégation voudrait que l'Assemblée prenne acte du fait que mon pays ne doute pas des titres qu'il invoque sur les territoires auxquels le représentant du Maroc et plus tard le représentant de la Mauritanie ont fait allusion. Ces titres sont clairs, et nous les avons exposés en ce qui concerne Ifni et le Sahara espagnol, au Comité spécial, et au sujet de tous les territoires précédemment évoqués devant la Quatrième Commission et l'Assemblée générale.

145. Néanmoins, ma délégation tient à rappeler ce qu'a dit son chef, le Ministre des affaires étrangères d'Espagne, devant l'Assemblée, au cours du débat général:

"Du fait de cette solidarité profonde et de longue date, la question de nos relations avec le Maroc se pose d'une manière très particulière. Ces relations peuvent se heurter parfois à certaines difficultés, comme il arrive toujours entre pays voisins, mais il y a peu de questions qu'on ne puisse résoudre par le dialogue et dans la sérénité. Le lien historique cordial qui nous unit aux peuples arabes et la façon scrupuleuse dont nous remplissons nos obligations internationales ont fait que l'Espagne a été récemment une des principales collaboratrices de l'indépendance du Maroc et garantissent qu'à l'avenir nous saurons toujours aborder les problèmes communs en toute amitié et animés du désir d'une entente parfaite.

"C'est cet esprit qui a présidé à la récente entrevue cordiale et encourageante de Barajas entre Sa Majesté le roi Hassan du Maroc et Son Excellence le chef de l'Etat espagnol, entrevue qui a marqué un point de départ pour de prochaines conversations qui, nous en sommes convaincus, seront fécondes." [1213ème séance, par. 19 et 20.]

146. D'autres part, ma délégation ne s'estime pas autorisée à présenter des commentaires sur ces conversations. Etant donné que les questions concernant Ifni et le Sahara espagnol n'ont pas encore été étudiées de façon appropriée, de même que la question de Gibraltar, territoire qui appartient à l'Espagne et à propos duquel le Ministre des affaires étrangères a clairement précisé notre position, il semble logique que les parties intéressées s'abstiennent à présent de mentionner ce fait.

147. En conséquence, ma délégation rappelle ce que nous avons déjà dit dans nos interventions devant le Comité spécial; je m'en remets à ses comptes rendus qui reflètent la position espagnole avec plus d'exactitude que ne le fait le rapport dudit Comité [A/5446/Rev.1]. Aussi, à notre avis, ce qui importe, au sujet de ce rapport, c'est que nous n'avons pas eu suffisamment de temps pour terminer la discussion. Ma délégation se réserve le droit d'intervenir de nouveau si elle le juge nécessaire lorsqu'elle aura eu la possibilité de lire les procès-verbaux.

148. A la suite de ce qu'a dit le représentant de la Mauritanie, je ne puis que signaler les bonnes relations entretenues par nos deux pays. Je n'ai rien d'autre à ajouter, si ce n'est pour rappeler, une fois de plus, que le Comité spécial n'a pas encore achevé ses travaux.

149. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant du Maroc pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

150. M. BENHIMA (Maroc): Il n'est pas dans les habitudes de la délégation marocaine d'entamer un dialogue avec l'orateur qui vient de précéder le représentant de l'Espagne. Je m'étais inscrit non pour déroger à cette habitude, mais pour faire les remarques rendues nécessaires par des écarts de langage. De plus, et surtout, l'allusion à un problème que l'orateur en cause a évoqué sans le connaître et alors qu'il ne le concerne pas m'oblige à apporter, du haut de cette tribune, quelques rectifications. Cependant, ma délégation est particulièrement satisfaite, Monsieur le Président, de la façon remarquable et pertinente dont vous avez bien voulu, tout en nous réservant notre droit, rappeler vous-même l'orateur au sein.

^{4/} Publié en 1960 par le Ministère des affaires étrangères du Maroc.

151. Toutefois, l'orateur a cru trouver, grâce à un esprit beaucoup plus aigu, dans ma déclaration très brève des choses que je n'y avais pas mises et il s'est livré, sur la base de certaines spéculations, à des développements aussi longs que nébuleux dont lui seul, je crois, a pu se gargariser quant à leur importance.

152. En ce qui concerne l'allusion à la revendication marocaine sur le Rio de Oro et l'ensemble du Sahara dit espagnol, ce n'est pas la première fois que mon pays présente une revendication solennelle à cette tribune ou devant des commissions qui examinent de tels problèmes. J'estime que le représentant de l'Espagne s'est très facilement abrité derrière le simple fait que les deux pays veulent entamer des négociations pour nier l'authenticité d'une telle revendication. Je prends cependant acte, une fois de plus, qu'il s'est référé à la déclaration de son Ministre des affaires étrangères ici même, en mentionnant le caractère spécial des rapports existant entre le Maroc et l'Espagne, rapports qui, entre autres, portent sur un contentieux dont la partie territoriale a bien été reconnue par le représentant de l'Espagne lui-même dans ses déclarations devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre.

153. Je voudrais, moi aussi, saisir cette occasion pour demander à l'Assemblée de se référer à la déclaration, ou plus exactement aux deux déclarations successives, de la délégation marocaine devant le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, et aux deux réponses que le représentant de l'Espagne a faites à cette occasion.

154. En ce qui concerne la revendication du représentant des autorités de Nouakchott sur des droits éventuels en ce qui concerne cette partie du Sahara, je suis bien obligé — et je ne l'avais pas voulu en prenant la parole ni tout à l'heure, ni maintenant — de faire tout simplement remarquer une chose qui n'a ni une valeur juridique ni une valeur de référence historique, mais qui correspond à une situation de fait que tout le monde connaît. La Mauritanie ayant été créée en 1960 par la dislocation du territoire national marocain, selon la volonté de la puissance colonisatrice de l'époque, si la France, que je nomme, avait cru que le territoire mauritanien qu'elle créait avait encore certaines parties de son sol dépendant d'une autre puissance protectrice, la France dis-je, se serait fait un devoir — et elle aurait eu raison de le faire — de demander à l'Espagne de céder à la Mauritanie tout territoire que celle-ci n'aurait pas encore recouvré.

155. Je ne voudrais pas m'étendre plus longuement sur ce sujet, mais j'estime que cette mise au point pourrait inciter le représentant de Nouakchott — qui a parlé de la royauté marocaine et a voulu se mêler de ce qui est beaucoup plus important que lui, c'est-à-dire les rapports entre l'Algérie et le Maroc, qui seront beaucoup plus durables que son existence — à réfléchir un peu au caractère inconsistant de ses pensées la prochaine fois qu'il osera prendre la parole sur cette question.

156. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant de la Mauritanie pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

157. M. DADDAH (Mauritanie): Je m'excuse de revenir une fois encore à la tribune et de retenir l'Assemblée à une heure aussi tardive. Cependant, ce que vient de dire M. Benhima ne peut pas rester sans réponse de la part du représentant du Gouvernement de la République islamique de Mauritanie.

158. M. Benhima a dit, entre autres choses, que la Mauritanie a été créée de toutes pièces en 1960. C'est là une déformation caractérisée et qui montre ce qu'est M. Benhima et ce qu'il représente. Il y a là une déformation de la vérité comme il y en a eu d'autres. C'est le fait d'un esprit de démagogie dont la diplomatie chérifienne, depuis plusieurs années — depuis au moins trois ans —, n'a cessé de faire preuve, dans ce cas simple et dans d'autres, pour tromper l'opinion publique sur la Mauritanie et sur ce qu'elle considère comme la chair mauritanienne.

159. La Mauritanie existe depuis bien longtemps. Elle a existé tout d'abord en tant que territoire qui a été le dernier à être pacifié par les troupes françaises, en 1900. Depuis lors, la Mauritanie a existé comme colonie distincte, à côté des autres colonies qui constituaient ce que l'on appelait alors les colonies de l'Afrique occidentale et, en même temps que ces autres colonies, avec lesquelles elle était administrée par le Haut Commissariat français installé à Dakar, lorsque le processus d'indépendance a été amorcé en 1958, elle a eu droit à l'autonomie pour accéder finalement à l'indépendance en 1960. Cela, je pense que toutes les personnes qui sont ici le savent. Cependant, après ce que vient de dire M. Benhima, j'ai dû le rappeler pour montrer que, si le représentant de la Mauritanie doit réfléchir à ce qu'il dit et à ce qui est plus important que lui — pour citer les paroles mêmes de M. Benhima —, il doit aussi attirer l'attention sur les déformations permanentes de la vérité auxquelles se livre le représentant du Maroc.

160. M. Benhima a dit aussi que le représentant de la Mauritanie s'occupe de questions qui sont beaucoup plus importantes que son existence. La Charte des Nations Unies déclare que les Etats, qu'ils soient petits ou grands, sont égaux. Je le rappelle uniquement pour montrer au représentant du Maroc que, en disant cela, il s'est écarté une fois de plus de ce qui est le principe même de notre organisation et des textes qui la régissent. Je crois connaître ces textes et je crois les respecter. Je souhaiterais tout simplement que le représentant du Maroc les respecte et les comprenne autant que le représentant de Nouakchott.

La séance est levée à 13 h 25.

POINT 23 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Rapport du Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. YATES (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dans l'hommage émouvant et délicat qu'elle a rendu la semaine dernière, du haut de cette tribune, à la mémoire du très regretté président John F. Kennedy [1264^{ème} séance], Mme Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit a déclaré que le président Kennedy "était devenu le symbole des valeurs qu'il défendait de manière si inébranlable".

2. La vitalité et les qualités hors de pair des valeurs que le président Kennedy faisait siennes n'apparaissent nulle part plus nettement que dans le discours célèbre qu'il a prononcé en qualité de sénateur au Sénat des Etats-Unis le 2 juillet 1957, deux jours avant l'anniversaire de l'indépendance des Etats-Unis du Royaume-Uni. Il a déclaré notamment:

"La force la plus puissante dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, ce n'est ni le communisme, ni le capitalisme, ni la bombe à l'hydrogène, ni la fusée téléguidée: c'est l'aspiration éternelle de l'homme à la liberté et à l'indépendance!/"

Le président Kennedy a poursuivi en disant que le plus important critère de la politique étrangère des Etats-Unis, à présent, est ce que nous faisons pour satisfaire le désir de liberté de l'homme.

3. En 1960, le peuple des Etats-Unis a élu M. Kennedy à la présidence de son pays et lui a donné l'occasion de modeler la politique extérieure de la nation. La politique étrangère des Etats-Unis reflète aujourd'hui les idéaux énoncés par M. Kennedy dans le passage que je viens de citer. Elle vise à aider à mettre un terme à l'ère coloniale en remplaçant sa domination paternaliste par des relations politiques fondées sur le consentement mutuel. Les Etats-Unis sont résolus à agir pour que le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes soit exercé dans les dernières régions coloniales du monde.

4. En Afrique, la décolonisation s'est effectuée rapidement. L'époque de ce que l'on a appelé "le fardeau de l'homme blanc" prend fin pour les Africains, qui ne veulent plus de la discrimination, de l'asservissement et de l'exploitation dont la colonisation était si souvent un élément. Ils exigent à juste titre le droit de se gouverner eux-mêmes et d'être maîtres de leur destin.

5. Il n'y a guère plus de 10 ans, on ne comptait en Afrique que quatre Etats indépendants: l'Egypte, l'Ethiopie, le Libéria et l'Afrique du Sud. Aujourd'hui, il y a 33 Etats indépendants en Afrique, dont 24 existent depuis moins de six ans. Quatre autres pays, la Rhodésie du Nord, le Nyassaland, le Kenya et Zanzibar, rejoindront les rangs des nations indépendantes dans quelques mois seulement.

6. L'Organisation des Nations Unies comptait à sa naissance 51 Membres. Il y en aura bientôt 115. Ainsi, dans un laps de temps incroyablement court, et d'une manière relativement pacifique, près d'un milliard d'êtres humains ont obtenu leur indépendance. Moins de 2 p. 100 de tous les peuples jadis placés sous la domination coloniale se trouvent encore dans la même situation.

7. Les Nations Unies peuvent être fières du résultat remarquable qu'elles ont obtenu en aidant tant de nations à accéder à l'indépendance; elles peuvent également s'enorgueillir des efforts qu'elles déploient à l'heure présente pour mettre fin à l'ère du colonialisme.

8. La délégation des Etats-Unis est prête à appuyer le maintien en fonctions du Comité spécial, dont nous examinons maintenant le rapport [A/5446/Rev.1]. Ce comité a un rôle utile à jouer, car dans un certain nombre de territoires africains dont nous examinons la situation il y a beaucoup d'agitation, du mécontentement, ainsi que des éléments susceptibles de provoquer une explosion. Malheureusement, dans certains cas, il n'y a que peu ou pas de communication effective entre les Africains, qui revendiquent le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes, et les autorités coloniales, qui résistent à cette exigence.

9. Les Etats-Unis ont déjà attiré l'attention sur les résultats néfastes de ce manque de communication et sur les conséquences du cycle qu'il tend à créer, cycle de répression provoquant une réaction violente, qui, par contrecoup, entraîne une répression plus sévère encore. Avec le temps, ce cycle peut devenir irréversible si l'intransigeance des parties intéressées persiste. La délégation des Etats-Unis espère que les parties en présence sauront, dans un esprit de bonne volonté, engager un dialogue sérieux et utile.

/ U. S. Congressional Record, vol. 103, p. 10 780.

10. Il est très regrettable que des questions étrangères au problème aient été introduites dans ce débat. Dans son intervention devant l'Assemblée générale, la semaine dernière, le représentant de l'Union soviétique [1267ème séance] a malheureusement cherché à transformer le débat en un nouveau champ de bataille de la guerre froide. C'est l'élimination du colonialisme qui devrait retenir ici toute notre attention, non la propagande ni les invectives soviétiques. Nous repoussons énergiquement la tentative soviétique de qualifier les Etats-Unis de pays impérialiste. Il y a un paradoxe intéressant: c'est que l'Union soviétique, qui déclame avec tant de véhémence contre l'impérialisme, est devenue la plus grande puissance impérialiste du monde. L'étendue de l'empire soviétique a été montrée avec beaucoup de force dans un récent article du professeur Carrington, du Royal Institute of International Affairs. Celui-ci relate que, lorsqu'il était écolier, il apprenait ses leçons de géographie en dessinant des cartes du monde où l'empire colonial britannique était coloré en rouge; ces cartes montraient que presque toutes les régions stratégiques du monde étaient aux mains des Britanniques et que ceux-ci tenaient sous leur dépendance un cinquième de la surface des terres du globe. Aujourd'hui, écrit le professeur Carrington, se référant à l'Union soviétique, "le dernier survivant des puissances impérialistes d'Europe a coloré en rouge des territoires aussi vastes que ceux de la reine Victoire ou de l'empereur Charles Quint".

11. Heureusement pour le reste du monde et peut-être aussi pour l'Union soviétique elle-même, en fin de compte, ce nouvel empire tend à éclater. Le fait est qu'à notre époque les empires ne constituent pas la condition naturelle de l'humanité. Peut-être nos amis soviétiques finiront-ils par tirer la leçon de leur propre expérience et par reconnaître avec nous que l'impérialisme n'a pas d'avenir dans un monde où la diversité doit pouvoir trouver place en toute sécurité. Le Royaume-Uni, la France et d'autres puissances coloniales ont abdiqué leur autorité sur leurs territoires coloniaux. L'Union soviétique peut-elle nous citer un seul territoire auquel elle ait renoncé? Elle ne le peut pas. Au contraire, cette même force qui a étendu la mainmise soviétique sur ses voisins est à la recherche, dans le monde entier, d'autres régions à dominer. Cet état de choses a été mis en évidence dans le débat du Conseil de tutelle qui a eu lieu au début de cette année, débat au cours duquel un représentant a fait ressortir le contraste que présente le sort des territoires repris au Japon après la guerre. Dans un cas, la population intéressée a été placée sous la protection du régime de tutelle des Nations Unies. Dans l'autre cas, près d'un demi-million d'êtres humains ont disparu dans ce que ce même représentant au Conseil de tutelle appelle les limbes de l'annexion; c'est-à-dire que le territoire n'a été ni placé sous tutelle ni même reconnu comme territoire non autonome, et que sa population n'a le droit ni de disposer d'elle-même ni de s'administrer elle-même.

12. J'estime que pour examiner l'œuvre du Comité spécial l'Union soviétique pourrait faire mieux que de lancer des attaques furieuses contre les Etats-Unis; je suggérerai à son représentant de relire le discours prononcé par le regretté président Kennedy le 10 juin 1963 devant l'American University; je lui suggérerai aussi de lire la déclaration du président Khrouchtchev rapportée dans les journaux de ce matin, dans laquelle il se prononce en faveur du relâchement de la tension internationale. Nous accueillons avec satisfaction des paroles de ce genre. Nous voudrions en trouver la confirmation en entendant le représentant de l'Union soviétique discuter sérieusement les problèmes dont le Comité spécial est saisi au lieu d'introduire la guerre froide dans notre débat.

13. Revenons maintenant à l'examen des travaux du Comité spécial. La délégation des Etats-Unis reconnaît l'existence du problème mis en lumière par les représentants qui ont estimé qu'il y a encore un vaste no man's land constitutionnel se situant entre l'indépendance souveraine et la dépendance coloniale qui n'a guère été exploré. C'est le problème des îles éloignées, des petites enclaves et des possessions exiguës, derniers vestiges de l'époque coloniale. Il est évident que dans ce cas l'indépendance classique peut ne pas être réalisable. Dans sa résolution 1541 (XV), l'Assemblée générale a déclaré qu'un peuple peut valablement atteindre la pleine autonomie envisagée par l'Article 73 de la Charte soit quand il devient Etat indépendant et souverain, soit quand il s'associe librement à un Etat indépendant, soit encore quand il s'intègre à un Etat indépendant. Un certain nombre de territoires ont opté pour l'association au lieu de l'indépendance lorsqu'ils ont fait connaître le genre de gouvernement qu'ils désiraient pour eux-mêmes. Nous estimons que le Comité spécial pourrait jouer un rôle très important dans ce domaine en étudiant les idées nouvelles et en suggérant des solutions équitables fondées sur tous les faits pertinents.

14. La délégation des Etats-Unis est entièrement d'accord avec le représentant du Chili, qui a déclaré avec tant d'éloquence ce qui suit:

"... Faisons en sorte que l'indépendance soit authentique et satisfasse pleinement à l'un des désirs les plus nobles du cœur humain: la liberté, non pas la liberté dans la pauvreté et l'incertitude, dans un monde de super-Etats toujours plein de dangers pour les petits territoires, mais la vraie liberté et la vraie indépendance, qui s'affirment dans le progrès, dans l'amélioration du niveau de vie et dans la dignité de l'être humain." [1267ème séance, par. 39.]

15. Que notre but soit de faire en sorte que tous les peuples qui se trouvent maintenant sous la domination coloniale se voient donner l'occasion d'exercer le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes et l'exercent sous sa forme parfaite, et qu'ils jouissent réellement des "droits fondamentaux de l'homme", du "progrès social" et des "meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande", qui sont les promesses de la Charte des Nations Unies pour tous les peuples.

16. M. DIALLO Telli (Guinée): La délégation guinéenne a examiné très attentivement les cinq documents et leurs annexes qui constituent l'important rapport [A/5446/Rev.1] de 950 pages mimeographiées soumis à notre examen par le Comité spécial de décolonisation sur la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. En outre, elle a écouté avec toute l'attention qu'il mérite le discours de présentation de ce rapport [1266ème séance] prononcé par M. Natwar Singh, représentant de l'Inde et Rapporteur du Comité de décolonisation. Par ailleurs, l'intervention de notre ami, M. Coulibaly, président du Comité de décolonisation [ibid], a tout naturellement retenu notre attention.

17. L'importance et la qualité du travail fourni par le Comité de décolonisation méritent l'appréciation et les éloges de tous ceux qui se penchent avec anxiété sur ce problème qui non seulement constitue le souci dominant des peuples africains et de leurs Etats, mais qui demeure également l'une des préoccupations centrales de notre organisation. Que tous les membres du Comité de décolonisation, et particulièrement son bureau et son président, trouvent ici l'expression de notre sincère gratitude pour le travail important qu'ils ont soumis à notre examen.

18. Ce volumineux travail, qui a été effectué au cours de 101 séances s'étalant du 19 février au 21 octobre 1963, comporte des études complètes et des suggestions appropriées sur 20 territoires coloniaux, et de nombreux renseignements sur cinq autres territoires pour lesquels, faute de temps, les recommandations adéquates ne seront formulées par le Comité qu'ultérieurement, au cours de l'année 1964.

19. Une des initiatives les plus heureuses prises par le Comité spécial au cours de la deuxième année de son existence est sans doute la décision de préparer la liste de tous les territoires auxquels s'applique la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

20. Il est bien dommage, à cet égard, que le Sous-Comité chargé de ce travail important n'ait pu mener à bonne fin sa tâche, qu'il conviendra donc de reprendre en 1964. Mais d'ores et déjà 64 territoires ont été dénombrés dans tous les continents, territoires administrés respectivement par l'Australie, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, l'Afrique du Sud, le Portugal, le Royaume-Uni, la France, la Nouvelle-Zélande et l'Espagne. Bien que très incomplète, cette liste montre néanmoins l'immensité de la tâche de décolonisation qui reste à accomplir et, par voie de conséquence, la nécessité de repenser l'action future du Comité de décolonisation et, vraisemblablement, le mandat de ce comité et ses méthodes de travail, pour conférer plus d'efficacité et de dynamisme à son action.

21. Qu'il nous soit permis, à cette occasion, de rappeler ici les paroles du Ministre des affaires étrangères de la République de Guinée qui, dans son intervention au cours de la discussion générale, le 30 septembre 1963, disait:

"Par ailleurs, la Déclaration sur l'indépendance ayant rendu caducs à nos yeux le Chapitre XI de la Charte et, par voie de conséquence, la fourniture de renseignements sur les territoires coloniaux, tous les organismes des Nations Unies fonctionnant dans ce domaine devraient être supprimés purement et simplement. Il en est ainsi principalement du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, dont nous devrions décider, au cours de la dix-huitième session, de la dissolution, faute d'attributions valables.

"Par contre, le Comité de décolonisation devrait, dans le même sens, être doté de pouvoirs suffisants et suffisamment précis, et munis de moyens adéquats pour lui permettre de parachever l'œuvre de décolonisation pacifique menée sous les auspices des Nations Unies." [1220ème séance, par. 147 et 148.]

22. C'est à la lumière des indications précises et des dispositions non équivoques contenues dans la Déclaration que nous allons à présent nous livrer à un examen critique du rapport du Comité de décolonisation en examinant successivement le mandat du Comité, ses méthodes de travail, et le cas particulier des petits territoires qui posent, selon certains, au regard de la décolonisation, des difficultés spéciales.

23. Tout d'abord, en ce qui concerne le mandat de ce comité dont la tâche essentielle est de veiller à l'exécution rapide et correcte de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance, nous constatons avec satisfaction l'heureuse évolution de l'opinion de l'Assemblée générale en la matière. En effet, si, au cours de la seizième session, la résolution 1654 (XVI) ne chargeait le Comité que d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration et de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration était mise en œuvre, la dix-septième session faisait, dans ce domaine, un pas important qui ne semble pas toujours avoir été perçu nettement. La résolution 1810 (XVII) élargissait singulièrement, à nos yeux, le mandat du Comité spécial, en invitant ce dernier:

"a) A continuer de rechercher les voies et moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance;

"b) A proposer des mesures concrètes en vue de l'application intégrale de la Déclaration;

"c) A présenter à l'Assemblée générale... un rapport complet contenant ses suggestions et ses recommandations sur l'ensemble des territoires mentionnés au paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration" — c'est-à-dire l'ensemble des territoires encore dépendants;

"d) A informer le Conseil de sécurité de tous faits, survenus dans ces territoires, qui risquent de menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales."

24. L'accroissement substantiel des prérogatives du Comité spécial, grâce à la résolution 1810 (XVII) précitée, est manifeste. Il est heureux, à certains égards du moins, que le Comité spécial ait fait pleinement usage de ses nouvelles prérogatives, en particulier en saisissant le Conseil de sécurité tant au sujet du colonialisme portugais que de celui qui règne en Rhodésie du Sud et dans le Sud-Ouest africain.

25. On pourrait maintenant se poser la question de savoir dans quelle mesure il serait possible, à nouveau, de renforcer le mandat du Comité spécial au cours de la dix-huitième session.

26. Nous pensons tout d'abord que, en supprimant le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes institué dans le cadre du Chapitre XI de la Charte, le Comité de décolonisation doit être doté de moyens nouveaux susceptibles de lui permettre d'exiger des puissances administrantes qu'elles s'acquittent de la responsabilité internationale découlant pour elles des dispositions non caduques du Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies. Ensuite, nous pensons que le Conseil de sécurité devrait investir le Comité de décolonisation de pouvoirs d'enquête suffisants dans tous les territoires coloniaux où existe une situation de nature à menacer la paix et la sécurité internationales. Finalement, l'Assemblée générale devrait prévoir, dans sa résolution de cette année, des moyens financiers suffisants pour permettre aux missions de visite et aux sous-comités spéciaux de mener à bonne fin la tâche à eux confiée par le Comité de décolonisation.

27. Certes, ces différentes mesures, destinées à renforcer le mandat du Comité, doivent être complétées par des mesures concernant la méthode de travail du Comité spécial. A cet égard, il convient de ne jamais perdre de vue que le stade de fourniture de renseignements sur les territoires coloniaux est définitivement révolu et que les informations, quelles qu'elles soient, recueillies par le Comité de décolonisation, ne devraient être prises en considération que dans la mesure où elles concernent ou facilitent la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance. Ainsi, à notre point de vue, ces informations devraient être beaucoup plus brèves et toutes exclusivement axées sur l'exécution de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance.

28. La délégation guinéenne est heureuse, à cet égard, de constater que le Président du Comité spécial exprimait le même souci lorsqu'il a déclaré dans son intervention du 28 novembre 1963:

"... Je ne pense pas que le rôle du Comité spécial soit uniquement d'instaurer un débat général sur la situation de chaque territoire et de voter une résolution, comme cela se passe déjà à la Quatrième Commission ou en séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale." [1266ème séance, par. 38.]

En conclusion de son analyse des méthodes de travail du Comité, il a dit:

"... je pense qu'il [le Comité] pourrait aborder l'examen des territoires qui restent selon des méthodes appropriées" [ibid., par. 40].

C'est exactement ce que nous suggérons pour éviter de transformer le Comité de décolonisation soit en comité de renseignements, soit en une Quatrième Commission permanente en dehors des sessions, pour reprendre les termes judicieux du Président du Comité spécial.

29. L'une des méthodes les plus positives utilisées jusqu'ici par le Comité étant indiscutablement celle des missions de visite, nous voudrions suggérer la constitution de plusieurs sous-comités qui se rendraient dans les principales régions intéressées du monde, non pas certes pour recueillir des renseignements, mais pour prendre contact, dans toute la mesure du possible, avec les représentants des populations dont le destin est en jeu et discuter concrètement avec eux des modalités d'accession à l'indépendance.

30. Cette méthode, qui avait été saluée en Afrique, en 1962, avec joie et réconfort par toutes les populations africaines, s'avère encore plus indispensable ailleurs, en raison des caractéristiques particulières et des problèmes spéciaux que soulève la décolonisation dans ces parties du monde. Par-dessus tout, nous espérons que cette méthode permettra enfin au Comité de décolonisation de s'acquitter intégralement du mandat précisé par la résolution 1810 (XVII) concernant l'application totale de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance à l'ensemble des territoires encore dépendants.

31. Une des caractéristiques communes de la quasi-totalité des territoires sur lesquels le Comité de décolonisation portera son attention au cours de sa prochaine session, c'est le fait que tous ces territoires ou presque tous sont des territoires à la fois petits par la superficie et comportant une population relativement très faible et des données économiques qui les rendent relativement peu viables, abandonnés à eux-mêmes dans l'arène internationale. A l'égard de ces pays, dont les particularités sont manifestes, de nombreuses voix se sont élevées ici et ailleurs et ont été largement répercutées par la presse, pour mettre l'Organisation des Nations Unies en garde contre l'application pure et simple de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance. A ce sujet, nous voulons dire très clairement que telle n'est pas notre manière de voir. Nous ne pensons point qu'une exception quelconque à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance soit justifiée à l'égard de tout territoire, quelles que soient sa superficie, sa population et ses données économiques ou autres. Pour nous, de même qu'aucune tare ni aucun handicap ne saurait justifier l'esclavage au niveau de l'individu, de même aucune particularité, de quelque nature qu'elle soit, ne saurait légitimer l'esclavage d'un peuple, c'est-à-dire sa domination par un peuple étranger.

32. Cependant, nous n'avons jamais voulu identifier l'indépendance à l'isolement. C'est pourquoi nous avons dit, et nous continuons à dire, que les petits territoires, comme les grands, doivent, sur la base du principe de l'autodétermination, accéder à l'indépendance et choisir librement, sans pression extérieure d'aucune sorte, le régime politique et la forme de gouvernement qu'ils préfèrent.

33. Les populations de ces petits territoires auront naturellement toute liberté de s'associer entre eux ou avec d'autres, ou de s'intégrer à des Etats déjà existants, à des conditions et selon des modalités qu'ils discuteront librement avec les partenaires qu'ils auront choisis. Certes, nous reconnaissons que, à l'égard de ces petits territoires, la communauté internationale peut avoir quelquefois des obligations particulières d'assistance et de protection, pour leur permettre de combler leur handicap et de négocier librement et en toute connaissance de cause les conditions et modalités de leur coopération institutionnelle avec d'autres territoires ou d'autres Etats.

34. A notre avis, ce devoir d'assistance spéciale des Nations Unies, c'est au Comité de décolonisation qu'il incombe de l'accomplir au nom de la communauté internationale en offrant, à la requête des populations intéressées, ses conseils et son assistance. Mais, nous le répétons, il n'y a là, à notre avis, rien qui puisse justifier le retard apporté à l'application de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance; à plus forte raison, rien, à nos yeux, qui puisse justifier une exception, si légère soit-elle, à la liberté totale et inconditionnelle des peuples de ces petits territoires.

35. Il y a bientôt trois ans que la Déclaration historique sur l'indépendance de tous les pays et de tous les peuples coloniaux a été adoptée par cette assemblée [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Si, depuis lors, quelques Etats, dont le processus d'indépendance était généralement en cours, ont réussi ou sont sur le point de réussir, grâce aux efforts de leurs peuples et dans le contexte international favorisé par les décisions des Nations Unies, à se débarrasser de la domination étrangère et à prendre leur place normale parmi nous, il reste que ce progrès ne doit point masquer l'entêtement criminel et la lenteur coupable qui caractérisent l'attitude de nombre de puissances coloniales face aux impératifs de la décolonisation.

36. A ceux qui nous crient constamment: "Patience!", nous répondrons comme toujours que toute libération d'un peuple ne peut que renforcer davantage l'amertume et la volonté d'émancipation de ceux qui sont encore sous le joug de la domination étrangère et qui, de ce fait, risquent de perdre patience en face de l'insolence, de la mauvaise foi ou de la répression de leurs maîtres provisoires. Notre avis unanime à tous, nous autres Africains, est que le rythme de décolonisation est lent, trop lent et qu'il convient, pour l'honneur et l'autorité morale de notre organisation, que tout soit fait pour hâter la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance.

37. Le Président du Comité spécial a souligné à plusieurs reprises dans son intervention [1266ème séance], pour s'en plaindre, le manque de coopération de la plupart des puissances coloniales à l'égard du Comité de décolonisation. Cela est fort regrettable. De leur côté, tous les chefs d'Etat africains, lors de la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba, ont exprimé la grande préoccupation de leurs peuples à cet égard et lancé un appel solennel aux alliés des puissances coloniales pour qu'ils choisissent clairement entre leur amitié pour les peuples africains, d'une part, et leur soutien aux gouvernements qui oppriment ces peuples, d'autre part.

38. Nous devons constater que les débats qui ont eu lieu récemment au Conseil de sécurité, à la demande de tous les gouvernements africains, sur le colonialisme portugais, nous ont laissé une impression bien pénible. Les alliés des puissances coloniales, qu'il s'agisse du colonialisme portugais ou de la forme pernicieuse de colonialisme que constitue l'apartheid, ces alliés ont fait des déclarations et ont pris des positions qui semblent indiquer un choix délibéré en faveur des oppresseurs des peuples africains. Il y a là une situation grave, très grave, qui mérite d'être éclaircie et, en tout cas, que les Africains ne pourront pas ne pas examiner très attentivement lors de leurs prochaines assises.

39. Pour ce qui nous concerne, c'est en raison des lenteurs, des réticences, du manque de coopération et de la mauvaise foi qui caractérisent très souvent l'attitude des puissances coloniales que nous avons suggéré l'année dernière [voir 1131ème séance, par. 53] à l'Assemblée générale de fixer un délai limite à la mise en application de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance. Cette initiative, bien qu'appuyée par la quasi-unanimité des Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie, n'a pas, pour les raisons que tout le monde connaît, obtenu à l'Assemblée la majorité requise des deux tiers [voir 1195ème séance, par. 62].

40. Dans la discussion générale de la présente session, de nombreuses délégations ont exprimé à nouveau le souhait de voir s'effectuer la décolonisation intégrale avant le vingtième anniversaire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, en 1965. C'est une idée que le Président du Comité de décolonisation, entre autres, a reprise dans son intervention précitée du 28 novembre 1963.

41. Mais si le Conseil de sécurité continue à esquiver ses responsabilités principales, si l'Assemblée générale elle-même hésite à adopter les mesures qui s'imposent, bientôt, très bientôt, la nécessité apparaîtra clairement à tous de s'engager plus à fond contre la colonisation, facteur d'injustice, d'instabilité et de guerre. Si les moyens pacifiques que nous préconisons au niveau des Nations Unies ne devaient pas prévaloir très rapidement, alors rien ne pourrait empêcher que les colonisés, usant de leur droit de légitime défense, s'efforcent de conclure partout, çà et là, le genre d'accord que le valeureux peuple de Goa et le peuple indien ont imposé au colonialisme portugais au cours de l'année 1962.

42. La délégation de Guinée est heureuse d'apporter son appui total aux recommandations formulées par le Comité de décolonisation concernant les 20 territoires sur lesquels ont porté ses investigations au cours de l'année écoulée. Elle regrette que la méthode utilisée n'ait pas permis au Comité — en dépit d'un travail intensif et très méritoire — de formuler des recommandations d'ensemble susceptibles de fournir les éléments d'une résolution qui soit la suite logique des résolutions 1514 (XV), 1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale. Néanmoins, des diverses recommandations formulées sur chaque territoire individuellement, il est aisé d'extraire les éléments d'une résolution d'ensemble à laquelle la délégation guinéenne, comme par le passé, apportera tout son concours.

43. D'ailleurs, certaines des recommandations parmi les plus importantes, spécialement celles qui ont trait au Sud-Ouest africain, à la Rhodésie du Sud et aux territoires sous domination portugaise, ont déjà fait devant les organismes appropriés de l'Assemblée générale l'objet de discussions complètes et de décisions définitives à l'élaboration desquelles notre délégation a été étroitement associée. Notre espoir est que les recommandations qui n'ont fait l'objet d'aucun examen particulier soient adoptées à la très grande majorité des membres de l'Assemblée générale.

44. Il convient, concernant les territoires coloniaux où la situation constitue une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales, d'exposer clairement notre position.

45. Si le Conseil de sécurité a le devoir, à l'égard de ces territoires, de veiller, en les gardant à son ordre du jour, à prévenir toute aggravation de situation, l'Assemblée générale et, par voie de conséquence, le Comité de la décolonisation doivent, de leur côté, conserver toute liberté d'assumer les responsabilités qui sont les leurs à l'égard de ces territoires et de leurs populations. Mieux, le Comité de la décolonisation devrait être associé très étroitement, pensons-nous, au travail que doit effectuer le Conseil de sécurité dans ce domaine. La meilleure solution consisterait, pour le Conseil, à doter le Comité de la décolonisation d'un mandat d'investigation permanent, avec pouvoirs élargis.

46. La délégation de la Guinée se prononce clairement pour le maintien du Comité de la décolonisation, pour un renforcement substantiel de son mandat, pour une adaptation judicieuse de ses méthodes de travail, le tout en vue d'une accélération très marquée du processus de la décolonisation.

47. Ce sont là les propositions concrètes que nous avons cru devoir formuler aux seules fins de conférer, au cours de l'année 1964, une efficacité plus grande au travail du Comité de la décolonisation, qui est chargé d'une des missions les plus décisives des Nations Unies: celle d'assurer l'indépendance effective à tous les peuples encore asservis.

48. La dix-huitième session a soulevé partout dans le monde, et en particulier en Afrique, d'immenses espoirs. Session de détente entre l'Est et l'Ouest; session de l'année de l'unité africaine. Nous sommes néanmoins de ceux qui se posent la grave question de savoir ce qui restera de tout cela. Autrement dit: quel sera le bilan effectif de la dix-huitième session? Nous l'avons déjà dit — et c'est par là que nous voulons conclure: c'est dans le domaine capital de la décolonisation que ce bilan pourra le mieux être apprécié.

49. Il est malheureusement acquis d'ores et déjà que la dix-huitième session ne passera pas dans les annales des Nations Unies comme une grande session de décolonisation. La responsabilité de cette situation regrettable incombe entièrement aux puissances coloniales et à leurs alliés. Cependant, il n'est peut-être pas trop tard pour espérer que, dans un dernier sursaut de conscience, de foi et d'énergie, chaque représentant aura à cœur de faire tout ce qui dépend de lui pour ne point décevoir les immenses espoirs que la dix-huitième session avait suscités de par le monde, et plus particulièrement parmi les peuples colonisés d'Afrique, d'Asie et d'ailleurs. C'est en tout cas le vœu le plus cher de la délégation guinéenne.

50. M. BAYONA (Colombie) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Un des buts fondamentaux des Nations Unies est de favoriser des relations d'amitié entre toutes les nations, fondées sur deux des grands principes qui régissent l'ordre international actuel: l'égalité des droits et le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. Il faut reconnaître que les efforts tendant à consolider et à maintenir la paix et la sécurité internationales doivent s'inspirer de ces deux principes. On peut affirmer que, sans eux, les réalisations des Nations Unies ne sauraient être efficaces, stables et durables.

51. Si l'on est de cet avis, on doit admettre que, dans l'ensemble, les résultats obtenus par les Nations Unies montrent que l'Organisation s'est engagée dans la bonne voie pour atteindre les fins qu'elle s'est proposées. Il est certain qu'elle exécute d'excellents programmes concernant les aspects les plus variés de la vie internationale. Elle accomplit un travail efficace de coopération en faveur du développement économique, social et culturel de tous les Etats Membres. On ne saurait nier que plus d'une fois les Nations Unies ont réussi à écarter le péril d'une nouvelle conflagration mondiale. Tous ces résultats justifieraient à eux seuls l'œuvre de la Conférence de San Francisco.

52. Mais il y a encore autre chose qui a plus de valeur et une portée plus grande. Il s'agit précisément du zèle extraordinaire dont les Nations Unies ont fait preuve en tout ce qui concerne les droits fondamentaux de l'homme ainsi que la liberté et l'indépendance des peuples. C'est là une tâche d'une portée supérieure, parce qu'elle va au cœur même de tous les problèmes, puisque de la reconnaissance et du respect de ces droits et principes dépend l'avenir du genre humain. Tout cela confirme la théorie selon laquelle l'Organisation internationale, comme l'Etat même, est au service de la personne humaine. On a dit avec juste raison que la compétence de l'Etat et celle de la société internationale s'harmonisent du fait même que l'une et l'autre ont en dernière analyse pour fin et pour principe le bien de la personne humaine.

53. Les Nations Unies étaient appelées à devenir la plus grande puissance anticolonialiste, répondant en cela aux exigences imposées par les profondes transformations que la communauté internationale devait subir à la suite de la seconde guerre mondiale. Le nouvel ordre ne pouvait s'édifier sur des structures caduques considérées dans bien des cas, non sans raison, comme des symboles d'oppression et d'exploitation.

54. Le point soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale se rapporte à ces questions. Le rapport détaillé présenté par le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/5446/Rev.1] est un document d'une importance manifeste. La haute qualité de ce travail a pu être appréciée durant les délibérations du Conseil de sécurité ainsi qu'au cours des débats qui ont lieu à la Quatrième Commission.

55. Sur le plan positif, le rapport annonce l'apparition de nouveaux Etats. Le Kenya et Zanzibar deviendront libres et indépendants cette année même, tandis que Malte accédera à l'indépendance au début de 1964. Au contraire, l'impasse où se trouvent les négociations en ce qui concerne par exemple la Rhodésie du Sud, le Sud-Ouest africain et les territoires sous administration portugaise est une circonstance que la Colombie déplore vivement et pour laquelle elle ne peut admettre aucune justification. A la Quatrième Commission, au cours du débat portant sur chacun de ces territoires, la Colombie a exposé en détail son point de vue, affirmant de nouveau sa ferme intention d'appuyer les efforts visant à étendre à tous les peuples le bénéfice de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)]. Pour cette raison, ma délégation n'a pas hésité à voter pour les projets de résolution présentés; elle le fera encore à l'avenir, dans la mesure où les circonstances et les principes de la Charte le conseillent et le permettent.

56. La délégation colombienne a toujours manifesté le désir le plus vif de voir la liquidation du système colonial s'accomplir par des moyens pacifiques. De plus, c'est avec un optimisme croissant et persuadé qu'il est bon que tous les peuples des Nations Unies soient résolus à "vivre en paix l'un avec l'autre dans un esprit de bon voisinage" que la Colombie a plaidé pour que le passage de l'état de dépendance à celui d'indépendance se réalise sans détruire les liens d'amitié qui ont pu exister entre la puissance administrante et les peuples qui se trouvaient sous son contrôle ou sa domination.

57. Sans penser à des pratiques que l'on pourrait qualifier de néo-colonialistes, il est tout naturel que les relations les meilleures et les plus étroites s'établissent entre l'ancienne métropole et les nouveaux Etats, du moment qu'elles s'inspirent du respect sincère et total des droits qui reviennent aux nouveaux membres de la collectivité en tant que sujets de droit international. Cependant, malgré les enseignements de l'histoire, certaines puissances méconnaissent des faits irréfutables et prétendent en vain maintenir des situations incompatibles avec l'évolution récente de la communauté internationale en raison des défauts et des erreurs qu'elles comportent. Cette façon d'agir, éminemment négative, non seulement affecte les intérêts des peuples sur le point d'accéder à l'indépendance, mais nuit aussi à ceux mêmes des puissances administrantes et risque en définitive de créer des foyers de trouble et de désordre dans le monde.

58. La délégation colombienne ne peut dissimuler l'inquiétude que lui cause le manque de coopération de certaines puissances administrantes à l'égard des programmes que les Nations Unies poursuivent avec un si noble zèle. Il n'y a rien de bon à attendre de cette attitude négative. Elle ne sert qu'à différer la fin inexorable du système colonialiste. Ce sont là de vains attermolements, car, au lieu d'apaiser ou d'affaiblir les aspirations à l'indépendance, ils les renforcent et les subliment au point de précipiter les peuples dans des aventures héroïques, lourdes de sacrifices et de souffrances, qui ne cesseront qu'avec la victoire finale.

59. Pourquoi cette attitude inflexible, pourquoi cette méconnaissance permanente du droit inaliénable de tous les peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et à l'indépendance? Le mépris des principes fondamentaux de la Charte et des résolutions pertinentes des organes des Nations Unies impose l'adoption de mesures extrêmes dont l'application n'est à souhaiter pour aucun Etat Membre. Sous cette forme, la concorde internationale s'affaiblit et le prestige de l'Organisation entre en jeu, tout cela sans avantages réels ni apparents pour les Etats récalcitrants, puisque l'expérience démontre qu'en définitive les causes justes finissent toujours par s'imposer.

60. Lorsque la délégation colombienne est intervenue à la Quatrième Commission dans les débats relatifs aux territoires sous administration portugaise, elle a défendu, comme elle l'a fait en d'autres occasions, le caractère universel du processus de décolonisation et, par conséquent, la reconnaissance à tous les peuples du globe de leur droit à disposer librement d'eux-mêmes. L'idéal d'un monde meilleur ne commencera vraiment à se réaliser que lorsque disparaîtront tous les systèmes impliquant la subordination d'un peuple à un autre. En aucun cas ni pour aucune raison ne doivent subsister des pratiques et des institutions qui portent atteinte au caractère et à la dignité des peuples et qui entravent leur libre développement.

61. Pour cette raison, il convient de rappeler, comme un impératif à observer, une phrase du dernier discours prononcé dans cette enceinte par celui qui est entré dans l'histoire comme le défenseur résolu de la liberté des peuples. Le président Kennedy s'est exprimé comme suit:

"... nous croyons que dans le monde entier, en Europe orientale comme en Europe occidentale, dans le sud comme dans le nord de l'Afrique, dans les pays anciens comme dans les pays neufs, les peuples doivent être libres de choisir leur propre avenir sans discrimination ni solution imposée, sans contrainte ni subversion" [1209ème séance, par. 45].

62. Cette déclaration permet de mesurer l'immensité de la tâche restant à accomplir par le Comité spécial. Si, pour des raisons bien connues et fort explicables, les efforts de cet organe se sont surtout portés jusqu'à présent sur le continent africain, il lui appartiendra à l'avenir d'examiner la situation de beaucoup d'autres peuples d'autres continents qui n'ont jamais joui du droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes ou qui, l'ayant eu, l'ont perdu par suite de l'intervention injustifiée de régimes despotiques et expansionnistes.

63. D'après les paragraphes 29 et 30 du chapitre I du rapport, le Comité spécial a l'intention de compléter la liste de tous les territoires auxquels doit s'appliquer la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance. Cette tâche présente un intérêt primordial, parce qu'elle permettra d'apprécier le problème dans son ensemble et d'établir un programme satisfaisant des activités que les Nations Unies devront mener à bien par l'intermédiaire de leurs organes compétents pour réaliser la collaboration indispensable qui assurera à tous les peuples les conditions nécessaires au plein exercice de leurs droits.

64. Dans l'esprit de collaboration le plus large, la délégation de la Colombie tient à rappeler que, en ce qui concerne le continent américain, l'organisation régionale a entrepris, il y a déjà un certain temps, l'examen des colonies et territoires dépendants qui existent en Amérique. La neuvième Conférence internationale américaine, qui s'est tenue à Bogota du 30 mars au 2 mai 1948, a créé la Commission américaine des territoires non autonomes. Cet organisme a présenté un rapport à la dixième Conférence interaméricaine qui s'est réunie à Caracas du 1er au 28 mars 1954; à cette conférence furent approuvées au moins trois résolutions dictées par l'intention de mettre fin au régime colonial sur le continent. Une de ces résolutions indiquait par exemple "que l'amour de la liberté commun à tous les peuples d'Amérique prend sa source dans l'acte émancipateur et que la solidarité interaméricaine n'atteindra point son ampleur et sa profondeur véritables tant que subsisteront sur le continent des territoires occupés par les pays extracontinentaux et des peuples privés du droit de se gouverner eux-mêmes" 2/.

65. Les Etats américains défenseurs résolus du recours aux moyens pacifiques pour résoudre les questions internationales et désireux de pouvoir compter sur l'aide et la collaboration des puissances extracontinentales intéressées ont instamment prié ces dernières d'adopter des mesures qui permettraient aux peuples d'exercer pleinement leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes et qui mettraient fin à l'occupation de territoires américains.

66. La dixième Conférence interaméricaine réunie à Caracas a décidé alors de transmettre aux Nations Unies les documents relatifs à cette question. Ces précédents, qui ont une valeur singulière en ce sens qu'ils reflètent la pensée de la communauté américaine, seront d'une grande utilité pour les travaux que devra accomplir le Comité spécial.

67. Ma délégation ne saurait donc manquer d'exprimer la satisfaction que lui causent les derniers résultats de l'action de décolonisation entreprise en Amérique et le vif espoir qu'elle conserve de voir cette tâche menée à bien de façon pacifique, méthodique et amicale. Lorsque les puissances engagées dans le processus de décolonisation collaborent résolument, on évite des ingérences extérieures parfois nuisibles du fait qu'elles ne s'inspirent pas toujours des nobles buts qu'elles prétendent servir.

68. Au cours du présent débat, plusieurs délégations, dont celle du Chili [1267ème séance], ont mentionné tout particulièrement le problème que pose l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV) aux petits territoires qui, du fait de leur superficie restreinte et de leur faible population, ne réunissent pas les conditions propres à leur faciliter une existence autonome en tant qu'Etats libres et indépendants. Ma délégation est également d'avis que le Comité spécial doit procéder à un examen attentif de ces situations afin d'assurer la stricte application du droit des intéressés à disposer d'eux-mêmes et à l'indépendance selon des formules qui respectent la personnalité propre et la volonté de ces populations.

2/ Résolution XCVI de l'Acte final de la dixième Conférence interaméricaine.

L'association ou la fédération des petites entités pourrait constituer un moyen de les faire bénéficier dans la liberté et l'indépendance, du droit à s'administrer elles-mêmes.

69. La Colombie comprend fort bien l'agitation, la désespérance et l'impatience des peuples qui entendent bien voir tous leurs droits justement reconnus. C'est une réaction naturelle dont nous avons aussi fait l'expérience en Amérique latine et qui, en l'absence d'une instance internationale comme les Nations Unies, nous a conduits à l'épopée de l'émancipation. Voilà pourquoi nous nous rangeons, dans cette enceinte, aux côtés des peuples qui luttent pour la liberté et l'indépendance.

70. M. CHAKRAVARTY (Inde) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous avons suivi avec un vif intérêt la discussion qui a eu lieu dans cette assemblée sur l'important rapport du Comité spécial [A/5446/Rev.1].

71. L'un des faits caractéristiques remarquables et d'une très grande portée de la période qui a suivi la seconde guerre mondiale est l'accession à l'indépendance et à la liberté d'un grand nombre de peuples et de territoires coloniaux. Presque immédiatement après la fin de cette guerre, un certain nombre de pays d'Asie, notamment l'Inde, ont obtenu leur liberté. La Charte des Nations Unies a encore stimulé la revendication de l'indépendance par de nombreux autres territoires coloniaux. Les principes du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et à s'administrer eux-mêmes qui sont inscrits dans la Charte ont donné de nouvelles forces aux combattants de la liberté dans de nombreux pays coloniaux. Le nombre des Membres de notre organisation a presque doublé et 32 Etats africains indépendants siègent aujourd'hui à cette assemblée. Cette modification remarquable de la composition des Nations Unies a contribué en elle-même à faciliter le processus de décolonisation. La délégation indienne peut être fière du rôle qu'elle a joué dans la lutte contre le colonialisme et la discrimination raciale. Ayant subi nous-mêmes la domination coloniale, nous n'aurions pu agir autrement. Conformément à sa politique anticolonialiste, l'Inde n'a cessé de donner tout l'appui possible, au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, à ceux qui voulaient se libérer du joug colonial ou de la discrimination raciale. Comme l'a déclaré le Premier Ministre de mon pays, M. Nehru, dans un discours prononcé en 1948 devant l'Assemblée générale:

"Nous qui, en Asie, avons connu tous ces maux du colonialisme et de la domination impérialiste, nous nous sommes engagés fatalement au service de la cause de la libération de tous les autres pays coloniaux 3/."

Dans le cas de l'Inde, la lutte pour l'indépendance avait été une révolte à la fois contre le racisme et contre le colonialisme. La sauvegarde de l'indépendance même de l'Inde et l'opposition aux principes du colonialisme et du racisme sont donc deux éléments d'une même politique.

72. Le colonialisme sous certaines de ses pires formes sévit encore dans plusieurs régions du monde, notamment dans certaines parties de l'Afrique. C'est là une question qui nous préoccupe gravement, et, si l'on devait laisser cette situation se perpétuer, elle risquerait de mettre en danger la paix et la sécurité de ces régions.

3/ Déclaration faite à la 154ème séance plénière; il n'existe qu'un compte rendu analytique des débats de cette séance.

73. Ma délégation a eu l'honneur d'être associée à la Déclaration, maintenant célèbre, sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux que l'Assemblée a adoptée en décembre 1960 [Résolution 1514 (XV)]. A la suite d'un discours fait devant l'Assemblée générale par M. Khrouchtchev, président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, un point intitulé "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" a été inscrit à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, et, le 14 décembre 1960, l'Assemblée adoptait cette résolution. Un comité de 17 membres était créé et se voyait confier la tâche de s'assurer que cette résolution était mise en œuvre, et mise en œuvre sans délai. Par la résolution 1810 (XVII) de l'Assemblée générale, le Comité des Dix-Sept a été élargi pour devenir le Comité des Vingt-Quatre, et il a été invité à continuer de rechercher les voies et les moyens les mieux appropriés en vue de l'application rapide et intégrale de la Déclaration à tous les territoires. L'Inde a eu l'honneur et le privilège de présider le Comité des Dix-Sept, et, cette année, nous avons fourni un rapporteur au Comité des Vingt-Quatre.

74. Ayant été partie au Rapport, ma délégation est naturellement d'accord sur les méthodes et procédures de travail adoptées par le Comité ainsi que sur les recommandations et conclusions contenues dans différents chapitres de ce rapport. Nous ne pouvons accepter l'argument invoqué par certaines puissances administrantes selon lequel l'envoi d'une mission de visite dans un territoire colonial équivaldrait à intervenir dans ses affaires intérieures ou le fait d'accepter une telle visite reviendrait pour la puissance administrante à partager sa responsabilité de l'administration interne du territoire. Nous aurions pensé que la fonction d'une mission de visite était de s'assurer des vues de la population sur l'avenir d'un territoire et que, pour cette raison, la mission de visite devait être bien accueillie des puissances administrantes dans la mesure où elle pourrait utiliser ses bons offices pour rapprocher les différents éléments politiques d'un territoire colonial, aidant ainsi la puissance administrante à s'acquitter de la tâche difficile consistant à éliminer les divergences de vues susceptibles de retarder l'accession du territoire à l'indépendance. Il ne saurait être question que la mission de visite intervienne en rien dans l'administration intérieure du territoire. Comme le dit le Rapport du Comité spécial:

"L'Organisation des Nations Unies a à l'égard des territoires non autonomes des responsabilités qui découlent des dispositions de la Charte concernant ces territoires, ainsi que de l'adoption, par l'Assemblée générale, de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux." [A/5446/Rev.1, chapitre I, par. 54.]

En refusant l'accès des territoires aux missions de visite, les puissances administrantes vont peut-être à l'encontre de l'esprit de la Charte et dressent des obstacles qui entravent la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration. C'est dans ce contexte que nous regrettons la décision du Royaume-Uni de ne pas permettre à des groupes de visite d'entrer en Guyane britannique et à Aden. Nous espérons sincèrement que, au cours de l'année qui vient, les puissances administrantes qui n'ont pas été en mesure de coopérer avec le Comité spécial à cet égard reconsidéreront leur attitude et aideront par là même à mettre fin au colonialisme sans plus de retard.

75. L'Assemblée a pleinement conscience de l'œuvre méritoire accomplie par le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni en menant à l'indépendance et à la liberté de nombreux territoires coloniaux. Ma délégation n'a jamais manqué d'exprimer publiquement notre profonde estime pour la politique coloniale du Royaume-Uni. C'est pour nous une grande satisfaction de penser que la sagesse combinée de l'Autorité administrante et des hommes d'Etat du Kenya et de Zanzibar a permis de trouver une solution au problème qui, en un temps, paraissait insoluble dans cette partie du monde. Nous adressons nos félicitations les plus chaleureuses aux vaillants combattants de la liberté du Kenya et de Zanzibar et nous nous félicitons de ce qu'ils vont se joindre à nous dans quelques jours au sein de cette assemblée. Lorsque M. Kenyatta a pris la tête du Gouvernement du Kenya, il y a quelques mois, le Premier Ministre de l'Inde lui a adressé le message suivant:

"Je suis heureux de vous adresser, en mon nom et au nom de mes collègues du Gouvernement de l'Inde, nos félicitations les plus chaleureuses et nos souhaits les plus sincères au moment où, le premier, vous assumez les fonctions de Premier Ministre du Kenya autonome. C'est là, en vérité, un événement historique, et c'est un pas important dans la marche pacifique du Kenya vers la pleine souveraineté et l'indépendance. Nous avons observé avec grand intérêt et sympathie les progrès du Kenya sur la route de son destin et nous sommes convaincus que, sous votre direction sage et éclairée, le peuple du Kenya, quelles que soient sa race et ses croyances, prospérera et progressera, et que le Kenya deviendra une force de paix et d'entente en Afrique et dans le monde."

76. Les événements qui se sont déroulés en Rhodésie du Nord et au Nyassaland ont également pris un tour positif et encourageant et, sous la direction de M. Banda et de M. Kaunda, le Nyassaland et la Rhodésie du Nord doivent également accéder à l'indépendance dans un avenir très proche. Lorsque le Comité des Dix-Sept s'est rendu en Afrique, l'année dernière, il a consacré un temps considérable à étudier les problèmes de la Rhodésie du Nord, du Nyassaland, du Kenya et de Zanzibar et il a essayé d'élaborer des méthodes rapides et convenables qui permettraient de leur appliquer les dispositions contenues dans la résolution 1514 (XV). Nous sommes donc très heureux, nous qui sommes membres du Comité des Vingt-Quatre, que la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland soient maintenant eux aussi très avancés sur la voie de l'indépendance.

77. La situation dans les trois territoires de la Haute Commission, le Betchouanaland, le Bassoutoland et le Souaziland, continue, toutefois, à être peu satisfaisante et à susciter des inquiétudes. Jusqu'à présent, les résolutions de la Commission et de l'Assemblée n'ont pas produit le résultat désiré. Nous n'ignorons pas les problèmes qui se posent au gouvernement du Royaume-Uni dans les territoires coloniaux qui lui restent dans différentes parties du monde, encore qu'à certains moments on se demande si quelques-uns de ces problèmes ne sont pas créés par ce gouvernement lui-même, comme cela semble être le cas en Rhodésie du Sud, où le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a adopté une attitude qui est juridiquement indéfendable et politiquement mal avisée.

78. Dans le discours prononcé le 1er octobre 1963 au cours de la discussion générale, le Premier Ministre du Royaume-Uni, sir Alec Douglas-Home, qui était alors ministre des affaires étrangères, avait dit:

"Nous avons accepté que la majorité gouverne. Nous insistons, dans la mesure où nous pouvons le faire avant l'indépendance, pour que les minorités soient protégées. Je ne pense pas qu'aucun d'entre vous puisse nous critiquer sur ce point. Néanmoins, si, après avoir établi le gouvernement de la majorité et après avoir pris grand soin de sauvegarder l'intérêt des minorités, ce qui est, après tout, le principe essentiel de la démocratie, on devait nous accuser, alors moi-même ou le représentant de mon gouvernement garderions la tête haute au banc des accusés." [1222ème séance, par. 82.]

79. Le drame de la politique britannique en Rhodésie du Sud semble résulter de l'inobservation du principe selon lequel la règle de la majorité est instaurée une fois que les intérêts de la minorité sont sauvegardés. Nous espérons que le Kenya pourra peut-être servir de modèle aux autorités britanniques pour résoudre les problèmes similaires qui se présentent en Rhodésie du Sud. Alors que le Royaume-Uni s'est montré disposé et prêt à adopter une position ferme au Kenya afin de pouvoir maîtriser les forces centrifuges et favoriser l'éveil d'un sentiment national, il n'a pas montré la même hardiesse et les mêmes qualités politiques dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud. Dans ce cas également, la règle de la majorité devrait être instituée après que les intérêts des minorités auraient été scrupuleusement sauvegardés.

80. Nous trouvons une autre contradiction en Guyane britannique, où un gouvernement majoritaire, élu au suffrage universel des adultes, s'est vu refuser le droit à l'indépendance. Jusqu'à présent, la puissance administrante a refusé de fixer une date pour l'accession à l'indépendance, bien que tous les partis politiques de ce territoire l'aient demandé.

81. Tandis qu'un progrès peut être noté en ce qui concerne les colonies britanniques — même si, dans certains cas, ce progrès est assez lent —, le tableau est plus sombre que jamais lorsque nous nous tournons vers le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain ou vers les colonies portugaises. Le Conseil de sécurité s'est déjà occupé des territoires coloniaux du Portugal et la question a été également discutée de façon très détaillée à la Quatrième Commission. Les Etats africains, réunis à la Conférence tenue cette année à Addis-Abéba^{4/}, ont déclaré très nettement que les Portugais doivent accorder l'indépendance à l'Angola, au Mozambique, à la Guinée portugaise et aux autres territoires portugais sans nouveau retard ou accepter les conséquences de leur refus. Si la voie de l'évolution pacifique est fermée et si l'on s'oppose absolument à des négociations pacifiques, il semble inévitable que le changement s'opère à la suite d'un conflit et du recours à la violence. Il y va de l'intérêt bien compris du Portugal qu'il accepte de transférer le pouvoir aux populations de ses territoires coloniaux sans retard et par des méthodes pacifiques.

82. Le Secrétaire général a établi un rapport^{5/} conformément à la résolution adoptée par le Conseil de sécurité le 21 juillet 1963. La délégation indienne trouve peu ou pas de satisfaction à la lecture de ce rapport. Les représentants des délégations africaines, qui ont discuté la question avec les représentants du Gouvernement portugais, ont déclaré que "le groupe africain regrette profondément qu'il n'y ait, de la part du Portugal, aucun élément nouveau dans les principes fondamentaux qui guident sa politique coloniale" [A/C.4/620 du 13 novembre 1963].

83. La situation dans le Sud-Ouest africain continue de nous inquiéter et le Comité spécial a attiré l'attention du Conseil de sécurité sur ce point. La Quatrième Commission, à la suite de ses discussions des dernières semaines, a également adopté un projet de résolution. A la suite de cette résolution [1899 (XVII)], le Secrétaire général est entré en rapport avec le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud. La réponse de ce gouvernement, en date du 2 décembre 1963, est maintenant parvenue [A/5634]. Cette réponse est toujours aussi négative. Le Gouvernement sud-africain a déclaré qu'il n'était pas disposé à demander l'avis d'experts de l'extérieur, du moins pour le moment.

84. Les représentants du Chili et de Ceylan, dans leurs interventions à l'Assemblée, le 29 novembre 1963 [1267ème séance], ont attiré l'attention des délégations sur une question importante qui mérite que nous l'examinions tous très attentivement. Il s'agit de l'avenir des petits Etats ou de petits territoires que la nature a isolés et qui ne disposent pas de ressources naturelles suffisantes pour se suffire économiquement. Ce sont des territoires non autonomes, et nous avons le devoir de rechercher comment les résolutions 1514 (XV), 1654 (XVI) et 1810 (XVII) peuvent être efficacement et rapidement appliquées à ces territoires. Nous estimons que l'Assemblée devrait inviter le Comité spécial à étudier la mise en œuvre de la résolution 1514 (XV) et des résolutions ultérieures à ces territoires coloniaux qui sont peu peuplés et isolés. Le Comité spécial devrait également examiner comment l'aide des Nations Unies pourrait leur être fournie afin que leur indépendance soit politiquement et économiquement viable. Le Comité spécial devrait s'assurer de l'opinion de la population de ces territoires et faire connaître les résultats de son enquête à la dix-neuvième session de l'Assemblée générale. Nous estimons que, si une telle étude n'est pas entreprise rapidement, ces petits territoires coloniaux pourraient se trouver perpétuellement menacés d'effondrement économique après leur accession à l'indépendance.

85. Pour terminer, je tiens à exprimer notre profonde satisfaction du travail du Comité spécial des Vingt-Quatre et de son président, M. Coulibaly. Le Comité a accompli un travail précieux, digne d'éloges, et il a acquis une expérience très utile qui sera d'une immense valeur pour ses travaux futurs.

M. Nur Elmi (Somalie), vice-président, prend la présidence.

86. M. OKEKE (Nigéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation tient à remercier le Comité spécial chargé d'étudier la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux pour son rapport très complet [A/5446/Rev.1] et son analyse détaillée des multiples problèmes qui se posent dans les territoires dont il a examiné la situation. Le caractère détaillé et complet du rapport du Comité reflète l'importance que l'Assemblée continue d'accorder au problème de la décolonisation malgré les progrès substantiels réalisés dans l'affranchissement des peuples coloniaux depuis la fin de la guerre. Il est, en effet, hors de doute que des progrès ont été accomplis au cours de ces dernières années; néanmoins, le fait que quelque 50 millions d'hommes de par le monde continuent de subir les humiliations du joug colonial nous met en garde contre la suffisance.

87. L'Assemblée devra se montrer encore plus vigilante et plus décidée au cours des années à venir en ce qui concerne la décolonisation de certaines parties du monde que l'intransigeance des puissances coloniales intéressées a transformées en volcans susceptibles d'entrer en éruption, quand la patience des peuples opprimés sera lassée. C'est le cas du Sud-Ouest africain, où le Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud applique toujours une politique brutale, honteuse et indigne d'apartheid. Il en est de même des territoires sous administration portugaise, où la puissance coloniale s'accroche avec ténacité à la théorie périmée des provinces d'outre-mer, c'est-à-dire à un expédient servant à perpétuer un régime d'oppression; c'est aussi le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud, où le Royaume-Uni envisage le transfert des pleins pouvoirs à un gouvernement représentant une minorité, suivant le principe antidémocratique de la discrimination raciale qui engendre l'injustice, aidant ainsi à créer une nouvelle Afrique du Sud; Aden et ses protectorats, où la population aspire à un gouvernement de son choix, se trouvent dans le même cas. Nous ne pouvons que demeurer vigilants tant que ces enclaves coloniales ne seront pas devenues vraiment libres.

88. Cette session s'est ouverte dans une atmosphère plus favorable à la paix créée par la signature du Traité de Moscou sur l'interdiction partielle des essais nucléaires^{6/}. Nous avons espéré que l'attitude de toutes les puissances coloniales à l'égard des questions coloniales serait dictée par ce nouvel esprit, mais les événements qui se sont déroulés depuis le début des délibérations de cette assemblée et de ses commissions ont montré qu'il n'en était rien. Dans les territoires que je viens de citer la situation des peuples coloniaux s'est aggravée, et dans certaines régions la détérioration des conditions générales a été si sérieuse qu'elle est devenue une menace pour la paix et la sécurité internationales. Ma délégation tient à faire ressortir que nos efforts pour rechercher la paix par le désarmement échoueront si certains peuples du globe continuent d'être opprimés et humiliés, car il ne saurait y avoir de paix durable sans la justice.

89. La délégation nigérienne a constaté avec un profond regret et une vive indignation que les puissances de l'OTAN n'ont pas encore jugé bon de cesser de fournir des armes à l'Afrique du Sud et au Portugal, qui, tous deux, s'en servent pour opprimer brutalement des Africains sans défense. A la conférence historique d'Addis-Abéba qui s'est tenue au début de cette année, les Etats africains ont demandé aux puissances occidentales de choisir entre leur amitié avec l'Afrique et les forces d'oppression et d'avilissement. Les pays nordiques ont indiqué clairement qu'ils se rangeaient du côté de la justice et du fair play; mais, jusqu'à présent, les prises de position des principales puissances ont été très décevantes.

90. Après ces remarques préliminaires, ma délégation voudrait présenter des observations au sujet d'un certain nombre de territoires pris individuellement dont la situation a été examinée cette année par le Comité spécial.

91. Nous notons dans le rapport du Comité spécial que Malte a obtenu l'autonomie interne, mais nous sommes un peu préoccupés par les déclarations figurant au paragraphe 66 du chapitre VI, aux termes duquel les deux partis politiques les plus influents du pays, c'est-à-dire le Nationalist Party et le Labour Party, avaient estimé nécessaire de rejeter les recommandations de la Commission constitutionnelle qui ont inspiré la rédaction de la Constitution actuelle. Cependant, il est réconfortant de voir que les dirigeants nationalistes de Malte, faisant preuve d'un grand sens politique, se sont mis d'accord pour tenter d'appliquer cette constitution. Ce faisant, ils montrent nettement leur maturité et leur aptitude à l'indépendance. Nous espérons que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, tenant compte de l'opinion publique maltaise, élaborera une constitution acceptable qui aura pour résultat de faire entrer Malte dans la communauté des nations libres, conformément aux dispositions de la résolution 1514 (XV).

92. Nous remarquons que la situation particulière qui règne à Fidji du fait que les immigrants sont plus nombreux que les autochtones pose un problème spécial, mais nous sommes heureux de constater que, ainsi qu'il est précisé au chapitre VII, les immigrants "... reconnaissent le droit des Fidjiens d'être propriétaires de leurs terres et s'étaient déclarés prêts à satisfaire aux autres conditions principales proposées par les Fidjiens pour la sauvegarde de leurs intérêts" [A/5446/Rev.1, chap. VII, par. 107]. Le fait que les immigrants sont prêts à reconnaître les droits des Fidjiens sur leurs terres devrait permettre à tous les habitants de Fidji d'unir leurs efforts pour créer une nation viable et indépendante. Il incombe à la Puissance administrante de renforcer les institutions qui contribuent à unir la société fidjienne et de transformer l'enseignement de manière à permettre à chacun des différents groupes d'apprécier la culture des autres et de se rendre compte qu'ils ont tous besoin les uns des autres dans un Fidji uni, prospère et libre. Les forces du colonialisme n'ont que trop souvent tendance à exagérer les divisions superficielles des sociétés afin de perpétuer le régime colonial. Etant donné que les divers groupes de la population fidjienne sont prêts à travailler ensemble, il est clair qu'aucun doute ne saurait subsister quant à la nécessité d'accorder l'indépendance à ce territoire dès que la Puissance administrante et ces divers groupements fidjiens seront convenus d'une constitution démocratique et acceptable pour tous.

93. La délégation de la Nigéria constate avec un plaisir particulier que, à la suite de la pression exercée par l'opinion publique mondiale et de l'opposition soutenue manifestée par les nationalistes africains, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni a consenti à mettre fin à des abus dont les Africains ont souffert pendant 10 ans, c'est-à-dire à dissoudre la Fédération d'Afrique centrale. Ainsi, le Nyassaland et la Rhodésie du Nord deviendront des entités distinctes d'ici à la fin de ce mois, après règlement des problèmes pendants relatifs à la ventilation de l'actif et du passif de la défunte Fédération. Ma délégation tient à féliciter les dirigeants africains de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Nyassaland de la fermeté avec laquelle ils ont maintenu leurs revendications et l'opinion publique mondiale de l'appui qu'elle leur a apporté. Nous espérons que la ventilation de l'actif et du passif entre les Etats qui faisaient partie de la défunte Fédération s'opérera sans retard et sur une base équitable et que la Rhodésie du Nord et le Nyassaland deviendront sans nouveau délai pleinement indépendants.

94. Par une ironie du sort, l'ancien détenu, le prétendu chef africain de l'ombre et de la mort, est maintenant devenu Premier Ministre du Gouvernement autonome du Kenya. Nous félicitons la population du Kenya et nous saluons son grand dirigeant, en qui l'on voit maintenant "le chef africain de la lumière et de l'espoir". Nous sommes impatients de le voir, à la tête de sa délégation, prendre sa place dans cette assemblée avant que ne s'achève la présente session. Nous tendrons également une main accueillante à nos frères de Zanzibar lorsqu'ils viendront, au même moment, occuper les places qui leur reviennent.

95. Nous tenons à féliciter les dirigeants du Tanganyika, de l'Ouganda et du Kenya pour les efforts qu'ils déploient en faveur de la création d'une fédération d'Afrique orientale. En étant une elle-même, la Nigéria a une expérience directe des problèmes que posent l'établissement et le maintien d'une fédération. Nous souhaitons aux dirigeants de l'Afrique orientale une réussite complète.

96. Ma délégation regrette profondément qu'aucun progrès appréciable n'ait été réalisé en ce qui concerne l'évolution économique et constitutionnelle des territoires du Bassoutoland, du Betchouanaland et du Souaziland. A l'encontre des vœux de la population, des constitutions antidémocratiques ont été imposées dans ces territoires afin de perpétuer la domination de la minorité. Il est indispensable d'octroyer à ces territoires l'indépendance immédiate, fondée sur des principes démocratiques, si l'on veut qu'ils ne soient pas absorbés par l'Afrique du Sud, dont l'effort d'armement ne peut pas ne pas être lié à un secret dessein d'annexion de ces territoires par la force. Je tiens à ce que soit consignée au procès-verbal l'indignation qu'éprouve ma délégation devant les actes cruels commis dans ces territoires par les autorités britanniques, qui livrent au Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud les réfugiés fuyant l'oppression qu'il fait régner.

97. En ce qui concerne la Guyane britannique, ma délégation adjure les deux principaux partis politiques guyanais de régler leur différend au sujet du système électoral que le pays devrait avoir, ce qui leur permettrait de guider pacifiquement la Guyane vers l'indépendance.

98. C'est avec grand intérêt que ma délégation a pris note du désir de la Gambie de s'associer au Sénégal après son accession à l'indépendance, ainsi que du fait qu'une mission constitutionnelle économique et financière des Nations Unies examine actuellement les problèmes posés par une telle association. C'est là, de la part des Africains, une nouvelle démonstration de leur désir d'éliminer les barrières artificielles créées entre eux par des frontières dont l'origine remonte au Congrès de Berlin de 1884. Les problèmes liés à l'association de la Gambie avec le Sénégal ne devraient pas retarder l'octroi de l'indépendance à ce pays. C'est une Gambie indépendante et un Sénégal indépendant qui sont le mieux placés pour les résoudre.

99. En ce qui concerne Aden et ses protectorats, les renseignements dont nous disposons montrent que les habitants de ces régions ne voient dans la Fédération de l'Arabie du Sud qu'une supercherie imposée pour perpétuer le régime colonial. Ma délégation regrette profondément que, comme dans le cas de la Guyane britannique, le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'ait pas autorisé la mission d'enquête du Comité spécial à se rendre à Aden. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni, loin de s'en tenir là, est allé jusqu'à autoriser son contrôleur de l'immigration à donner des instructions visant à interdire à la mission l'accès du territoire d'Aden. Une telle mesure malencontreuse ne peut que rendre suspects les mobiles et les intentions du Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni. Une telle décision est regrettable et malavisée de la part d'un pays qui a libéré tant de peuples coloniaux au cours de la dernière décennie et se proclame très désireux de se débarrasser le plus tôt possible de ceux dont il a encore la responsabilité. Par ses actes imprudents, par ses hésitations dans le cas de la Rhodésie du Sud et des territoires du Bassoutoland, du Souaziland et du Betchouanaland, par son assistance à l'Afrique du Sud et au Portugal, le Royaume-Uni s'écarte de la conduite qu'il a suivie dans le passé et suscite de vives craintes parmi les Etats membres du Commonwealth. En sa qualité de membre du Commonwealth, la Nigéria demande instamment au Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni de modifier sa ligne de conduite en ces matières.

100. Enfin, nous lançons un appel à toutes les puissances coloniales pour qu'elles collaborent avec l'Assemblée générale et le Comité spécial en mettant en œuvre les recommandations du Comité et en s'associant aux efforts qu'il sera amené à déployer à propos des territoires qui sont encore sous une domination étrangère.

101. M. HAJEK (Tchécoslovaquie): De nombreux orateurs qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune ont rappelé le fait que trois années se seront écoulées bientôt depuis le moment solennel où l'Assemblée générale, à sa quinzième session, a adopté, sur l'initiative de l'Union soviétique^{2/}, comme nous le savons bien, la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)].
