133. Nous avons entendu ces peuples revendiquer la liquidation du colonialisme sur leur continent; mais, dans cette même Amérique libre, il reste aussi des vestiges de colonialisme, qui sont l'héritage d'autres époques et qu'il nous faut liquider. Dans les Antilles, dans les Guyanes, dans la partie du territoire du Guatemala indûment occupée par la Grande-Bretagne, à savoir notre territoire de Belize, le colonialisme paraît encore solidement installé. A ce propos, nous avons été encouragés par la déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni qui, dans ce débat [925ème séance], a déclaré que son pays partageait entièrement les sentiments et les objectifs des peuples africano-asiatiques visant l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples qui n'en jouissent pas encore. Ces sentiments sont aussi les nôtres; souhaitons donc que le Royaume-Uni, faisant honneur à sa parole, se décide à mettre un terme au différend séculaire qui le sépare du Guatemala à propos de notre territoire de Belize, et respecte ainsi l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays qui, en raison de sa faiblesse et de ses maigres ressources, n'a d'autre arme que la justesse de sa cause.

134. Je ne voudrais pas importuner l'Assemblée en m'étendant longuement sur un aspect particulier du colonialisme; aussi m'abstiendrai-je de traiter le fond du sujet. Je veux cependant déclarer que, conformément à l'article premier (numérotage provisoire) de notre constitution, Belize fait partie de notre territoire national et qu'il est pour nous d'un intérêt vital de la ramener dans le territoire national.

135. Si le colonialisme ne peut se justifier en aucun point du globe, il est incompréhensible qu'il subsiste encore des vestiges de ce système odieux en Amérique, qui fut précisément le premier continent à conquérir son indépendance et qui a donné au monde la plus remarquable leçon d'autodétermination et de liberté. Après environ 150 ans d'indépendance, nous avons appris à aimer la liberté. En dépit de nos erreurs politiques, nous conservons jalousement l'héritage de nos libérateurs et nous avons contribué, par notre enthousiasme et par nos efforts, à la libération de beaucoup d'autres pays. Espérons donc que les revendications américaines seront entendues. Ce souffle de liberté, devenu aujourd'hui un vent puissant et universel, doit à nouveau atteindre l'Amérique, d'où il est parti, pour y balayer une fois pour toutes les vestiges du colonialisme. Nous ne doutons pas que les peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique ne répondent avec le même esprit de générosité dont nous avons nous-mêmes fait preuve en faveur de l'indépendance de ces pays lointains.

136. Mon pays est fermement convaincu que, pour donner leur plein effet aux dispositions de l'Article premier de la Charte des Nations Unies, qui a pour but essentiel de maintenir la paix et la sécurité internationales, il est nécessaire et opportun d'abolir le colonialisme. L'asservissement d'un peuple par un autre a toujours pour conséquence logique d'entretenir l'irritation entre l'opresseur et l'opprimé. Cette irritation se traduit par des luttes et des frictions, et parfois par des guerres cruelles et prolongées, laissant des séquelles de haine qu'il est très difficile d'effacer. Il ne pourra davantage y avoir de véritable coopération internationale fondée sur l'asservissement d'un peuple par un autre ou sur la violation de l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays. C'est pour ces raisons fondamentales que le colonialisme est anachronique; si on veut en effet respecter les buts et principes de la Charte, ces formes de domination ne sont en aucune façon admissibles. Le prétexte bien connu du retard des peuples colonisés est dépourvu de justification. Nous avons vu en effet comment des peuples que l'on considérait comme arriérés renaissent, se joignent au concert des nations et s'adaptent aux techniques modernes. La lutte contre la domination économique et politique et contre toute forme de discrimination raciale est un signe des temps. Rien ne pourra arrêter la marche des pays insuffisamment développés vers le progrès économique, politique et social.

137. Il n'est pas moins évident que le colonialisme est totalement incompatible avec une saine conception juridique et philosophique des droits de l'homme. Comment peut-on concilier ces prétextes fragiles sur lesquels se fonde le colonialisme avec les belles déclarations sur les droits de l'homme, qui ont été proclamées devant cette assemblée il y a 12 ans? Quelles philosophies, quelles conceptions juridiques peuvent s'opposer à un précepte qui n'est rien d'autre que la reconnaissance d'une vérité immanente, à savoir: les hommes naissent libres et égaux en droit et en dignité? La Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme proclame que personne ne devra être soumis à l'esclavage, que personne ne pourra être mis en servitude. Or, sur quoi se fonde le colonialisme, si ce n'est sur l'esclavage et la servitude? C'est pourquoi, en condamnant toutes les formes de colonialisme, ma délégation condamne également toutes ses formes camouflées, qui sont des formes d'assujettissement collectif imposé à des pays qui ont été indépendants et qu'on ne peut même pas accuser d'avoir été mal préparés à la vie libre, à des pays où le respect de la dignité et de la liberté de la personne individuelle et de ses grandes valeurs spirituelles a cessé d'exister. C'est pourquoi nous avons été surpris de voir l'Union soviétique proposer l'inscription à l'ordre du jour de la question de l'abolition du colonialisme, alors qu'elle s'oppose obstinément aux aspirations des peuples opprimés par le néo-colonialisme moscovite.

138. Ainsi, c'est avec le sentiment d'accomplir un devoir et sans intention démagogique ni récriminations stériles que nous voulons contribuer à cet effort en faveur de la liberté. Ma délégation se réjouit de penser que, dans un proche avenir, nombre de nouveaux pays pourront siéger au sein de l'Organisation après avoir acquis leur indépendance pleine et entière, réalisant ainsi l'idéal universaliste qui anime l'Organisation et qui permettra à l'humanité de trouver son unité dans la liberté. Aujourd'hui en effet, grâce aux découvertes prodigieuses de la technique, l'homme doit faire un choix entre sa propre destruction et la découverte de mondes nouveaux; que ce soit là un signe montrant que l'homme saura choisir la voie de la raison et de la justice.

139. Nous avons pris connaissance avec satisfaction du projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5 parrainé par de nombreux pays, d'Afrique et d'Asie en particulier, et qui réunit un grand nombre des postulats qui conduiront à l'abolition du colonialisme. Il nous est donc agréable de déclarer que nous considérons ce projet de résolution comme constructif et, dans l'ensemble, conforme à notre point de vue. De même, nous avons favorablement accueilli le projet de résolution présenté hier par la délégation du Honduras [A/L.324], qui proclame l'abolition du colonialisme et prévoit la création d'une commission chargée de visiter les territoires non encore indépendants et de faire des recommandations lors de la prochaine Assemblée générale sur la façon la plus rapide et la plus efficace de mettre fin au colonialisme. Nous étudierons avec la plus grande attention ces projets de résolution et nous réservons le droit d'intervenir à nouveau lorsqu'ils viendront en discussion.

M. Boland (Irlande), reprend la présidence.

140. M. BENITES VINUEZA (Equateur) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Les représentants de 99 Etats se trouvant réunis ici, on pourrait dire que notre assemblée est bien celle de l'humanité, et c'est d'ailleurs ainsi qu'on l'a appelée. Nous sommes les représentants des populations des Nations Unies, comme le proclame la Charte, c'est-à-dire des peuples du monde entier. Pourtant, nous constatons ici une absence qui équivaut à une présence, une présence accusatrice. Je veux parler de l'absence de ceux qui subissent le joug colonial, des peuples de la terre qui sont asservis.

141. Cette absence constitue une accusation très grave pour notre conscience d'hommes libres, car elle nous place devant un dilemme inéluctable: ou bien ces peuples ne sont pas présents ici parce qu'on ne leur a pas donné la liberté qu'ils méritent; ou bien ils ne le sont pas parce qu'il existe dans le monde des territoires où le développement culturel ne permet pas encore à leurs populations de se gouverner elles-mêmes. D'une façon ou de l'autre, leur absence signifie que nous acceptons cette injustice évidente.

142. Bien que j'aie entendu le représentant d'une grande puissance déclarer qu'il écouterait avec respect et avec attention tout ce que diraient — sur le problème colonial — les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, je pense que — sur ce point — les pays d'Amérique latine ont eux aussi leur mot à dire. Le représentant auquel je fais allusion sait assurément combien la Grande-Bretagne a apporté de secours en hommes et en argent aux pays de l'Amérique latine, il y a plus d'un siècle, pour leur émancipation politique; il saura également reconnaître qu'il existe encore en Amérique des territoires dépendants et que plus d'un Etat formule des revendications territoriales. Je ne pense pas, cependant, qu'il faille invoquer des titres particuliers pour mettre le système colonial en accusation.

143. La nation que je représente a vécu pendant trois siècles sous une domination étrangère qui, bien que spécifiquement féodale, est communément appelée coloniale. Pour s'émanciper, mon pays dut soutenir une lutte sanglante qui dura 20 ans. Cette lutte représenta d'immenses sacrifices, notamment d'ordre économique, qui par la suite pesèrent lourdement sur son développement. Nous ne voulons pas que les peuples qui s'efforcent d'obtenir leur liberté soient obligés de faire couler le sang, d'accepter des sacrifices, de compromettre, à longue échéance, leur avenir. Nous ne leur souhaitons pas de connaître à leur tour notre douloureuse expérience. Et c'est là un motif valable pour parler de cette tribune.

144. Je sens, en le faisant, peser sur moi une lourde responsabilité. En effet, le sujet que nous traitons, c'est celui de la douleur de l'homme; c'est quelque chose de simple et profond à la fois qu'expriment ces deux mots, il n'existe rien de plus sacré. C'est pourquoi ma délégation ne peut accepter que l'on fasse de cette question un thème de propagande ou un déplorable instrument de guerre froide. Nous n'admettons pas que l'on essaie de le transformer en un exercice de dialectique colonialiste; mais nous n'admettons pas davantage qu'il serve de tréteau aux camelots de la démocratie qui vendent, aux quatre coins du monde, des recettes de bonheur collectif.

145. Je dois, en premier lieu, exprimer, au nom du Gouvernement de l'Equateur, la profonde sympathie que nous éprouvons à l'égard des peuples opprimés par le régime colonial. Le colonialisme est, d'une façon générale, une forme de racisme; c'en est une, historiquement, et l'Etat que je représente, qui est fondé sur une société multiraciale, a connu le statut colonial. La société équatorienne autochtone, qui a subi le colonialisme des Incas pendant deux générations et qui a fini par secouer ce joug écrasant, était une société multiraciale. L'Espagne, qui nous domina trois siècles durant, était également multiraciale: elle était tout à la fois celtique, ibérique, grecque, phénicienne, romaine, gothique, hébraïque et enfin glorieusement arabe. Les Africains que la rapacité des hommes blancs entassa dans les bateaux des négriers étaient, eux aussi, les représentants de races multiples. Nous savons donc — depuis un passé qui remonte à la période préhispanique — ce que signifie la domination coloniale, et, après un siècle de régime républicain, nous savons de quel poids elle pèse sur notre passé.

146. J'ai hésité cependant à qualifier de colonisation la domination qu'a exercée l'Espagne pendant trois siècles en Amérique et, par conséquent, sur mon pays. Le phénomène de l'expansion espagnole outre-mer est en effet un phénomène original et unique au monde. Il ne ressembla pas à ce que firent les Phéniciens en établissant sur les ports de la Méditerranée une multitude de colonies à caractère commercial, ni aux villes-Etats bâties par la Grèce, centres d'une admirable culture cependant fondée sur un système de production esclavagiste. On ne peut pas davantage le comparer à la domination romaine, chef-d'œuvre d'une organisation juridique visant à l'exploitation par l'impôt. L'Espagne, quant à elle, a ardemment désiré créer une Amérique à son image. Elle a recherché l'âme de l'autochtone — objet même de son œuvre colonisatrice — pour la sauver et la faire entrer, conformément à sa conception chrétienne, dans le royaume de Dieu. La tendresse que l'Espagne a montrée à l'égard de ce nouvel être, appelé ingénuement et par erreur indien, fit que des juristes comme Suárez et Vitoria — avant Grotius — fondèrent le droit international sur le respect de la dignité de la personne humaine et sur la négation du droit de conquête. Ce fut cet élan qui fit créer par les juristes espagnols le code le plus humain qui ait jamais été établi par un peuple colonisateur: je veux parler des Leyes de Indias (Lois des Indes). L'Espagne n'a pas dressé de barrières entre les races, mais bien au contraire s'est unie à celles-ci pour produire notre société hétérogène actuelle. Qu'il y ait eu des injustices, c'est un fait certain; que des atrocités aient été commises, on ne peut le nier; mais, s'il y eut une domination inexorable, ce fut sans la responsabilité et contre la volonté de la métropole, qui ne cessa de considérer les pays d'Amérique comme des provinces d'outre-mer.

147. Le colonialisme, tel que nous le voyons dans le monde moderne, est fondé sur des principes opposés à ceux dont l'Espagne s'est toujours réclamée. Il se fonde, en premier lieu, sur l'hypothèse de l'inégalité humaine qui est à la base de l'exploitation de la terre. On retrouve dans sa doctrine, ou tout au moins dans ses fondements historiques, un racisme latent. Les hommes, à l'époque des premières découvertes, croyaient qu'en arrivant à l'Equateur leur peau deviendrait noire, comme celle des habitants de l'Afrique. Cette crainte de se transformer en noirs se transmet dans le subconscient des descendants de ces chasseurs d'esclaves qui — de toute évidence — ne furent jamais des Espagnols. Je ne voudrais tirer aucune conclusion désagréable, ni citer d'exemples concrets; mais tel est certainement l'état d'esprit des racistes d'aujourd'hui qui, dans les villes, dans les quartiers des villes, dans les services publics, dressent des barrières entre les blancs et les noirs.

148. Le racisme et le colonialisme sont inséparablement unis dès l'origine. A son origine, il y a la recherche des pays tropicaux producteurs d'épices. Pour trouver ces épices, les Portugais se lancèrent dans le mare tenebrum, doublèrent le cap de Bonne-Espérance, découvrirent Madagascar et atteignirent les Indes, alors que d'autres navigateurs, s'écartant de cette route, atteignirent les côtes du Brésil, appelées côtes du bois. Pour trouver les Indes, pays producteur d'épices, les navigateurs espagnols prirent la direction encore mystérieuse de l'Atlantique ouest; les pilotes espagnols Vicente Yáñez et Martín Alonso Pinzón, engagés par Christophe Colomb, découvrirent l'Amérique. La découverte des pays tropicaux créa, à son tour, des besoins nouveaux et fut à l'origine du commerce le plus inhumain: le trafic d'hommes. Le noir devint une marchandise; on alla le chasser sur les côtes d'Afrique, comme s'il se fût agi de bêtes sauvages. La doctrine esclavagiste fit son apparition pour justifier cette chasse atroce et l'esclavage devint ainsi le frère jumeau du colonialisme, qui n'est rien d'autre que la forme collective de l'esclavage. Telle est la genèse du colonialisme classique.

149. Les besoins de l'économie donnèrent une impulsion nouvelle à son développement et le peuplement des mondes lointains poussa à la capitalisation des entreprises industrielles. Les capitaux privés, qui s'étaient groupés pour servir aux grandes découvertes, ne suffirent plus. Alors apparut ce qui allait être l'outil par excellence du capitalisme moderne: la société par actions à responsabilité limitée. Il est intéressant de noter que la première de ces sociétés fut une entreprise coloniale, la Compagnie hollandaise des Indes. Le système colonial transforma l'économie des sociétés, éleva le mercantilisme au rang d'une doctrine d'Etat, et, à son tour, le mercantilisme développa le colonialisme. La lutte pour les marchés provoqua d'inévitables tensions internationales. Lorsqu'il ne fut plus possible de négocier les colonies comme des marchandises, on déclencha des guerres de conquête, ou on assista à de violentes luttes diplomatiques. Nous savons tous quelle a été l'histoire de l'Europe du XVIIème au XIXème siècle, et il est inutile d'en parler à nouveau.

150. C'est ainsi que le colonialisme revêtit ce que l'on appelle son aspect classique, celui que nous voulons liquider. Depuis lors, le colonialisme a pris son plein essor et est devenu un mode d'exploitation des pays sous-développés, capables de produire, grâce à une main-d'œuvre presque réduite à l'esclavage, des matières premières à bon marché, et capables aussi d'absorber les excédents industriels à des prix élevés. Cette forme de colonialisme fut la cause de luttes et de guerres. En effet, les Etats qui arrivèrent trop tard dans un monde partagé exigèrent leur part. C'est ainsi que presque toutes les guerres que cette période de l'histoire a connues — y compris la première guerre mondiale — ont eu pour origine la lutte pour les marchés coloniaux ou semi-coloniaux. Il n'est pas étonnant que, lors de la première tentative d'organisation mondiale née après la Grande Guerre, le système colonialiste ait été maintenu.

151. Je vous prie d'excuser cette digression historique. Je puis cependant vous assurer qu'il ne s'agissait pas là d'un exercice théorique. Au début de cette discussion, nous avons entendu distinguer — et avec raison — le colonialisme classique et le néo-colonialisme. Il était nécessaire en effet de jeter un coup d'œil rétrospectif sur ce colonialisme classique pour en expliquer la force et la persistance. J'en arrive maintenant à ce qui constitue la raison d'être de sa prochaine liquidation.

152. Ma délégation tient à demeurer parfaitement objective et à retrouver le fil d'Ariane qui pourra nous diriger dans le labyrinthe des opinions. C'est pourquoi je commencerai par examiner ce que stipule la Charte des Nations Unies sur ce point. Il convient de noter que la Charte, à la différence du Pacte de la Société des Nations, a complètement supprimé toute reconnaissance du régime colonial. Il était logique qu'il en fût ainsi, car la Charte énonce dans son préambule un ensemble de principes touchant l'égalité des hommes et les droits des peuples qui est incompatible avec la servitude coloniale. Mais, s'inclinant devant des réalités inéluctables, la Charte a créé un régime de tutelle des anciennes colonies qui est défini dans les Chapitres XI et XII.

153. Qu'il me soit permis de signaler qu'il n'existe pas de différences, quant au fond, entre ces deux chapitres. En réalité, les territoires non autonomes et les territoires sous tutelle sont les uns et les autres placés sous un régime juridique semblable; des dispositions analogues réglementent les rapports entre les territoires dépendants et la puissance administrante. Les différences qui apparaissent entre les deux chapitres ne correspondent qu'à des nécessités pratiques.

154. En effet, dans un cas comme dans l'autre, c'est l'Organisation qui confère le pouvoir d'administrer: L'Article 73 de la Charte stipule qu'en ce qui concerne les territoires non autonomes, l'acceptation de l'administration par la puissance administrante est une "mission sacrée", et les puissances intéressées sont tenues de se conformer aux modalités que prévoit la Charte.

55. L'article 75 de la Charte stipule nettement que: "L'Organisation des Nations Unies établira, sous son autorité, un régime international de tutelle pour l'administration et la surveillance des territoires qui pourront être placés sous ce régime ..." Dans un cas comme dans l'autre, la Charte prévoit que c'est l'Organisation qui exerce les fonctions de mandant, et la puissance administrante qui accepte celles de mandataire, créant ainsi un lien qui doit être soumis à ce rapport juridique.

156. Le rapport de mandant à mandataire que stipule la Charte entre l'Organisation et la puissance administrante crée un ensemble de liens juridiques. De même que, en matière civile, l'administrateur n'a pas l'exercice du droit de propriété sur les biens qu'il administre, de même — en droit international public — la Puissance administrante n'a pas l'exercice de la souveraineté sur les territoires placés sous son mandat. Elle ne possède sur eux ni droit de propriété, ni droit de souveraineté. La souveraineté implique la possession d'un ensemble de droits qui est incompatible avec le simple exercice des pouvoirs d'administration. La souveraineté, dans ce cas, est suspendue jusqu'à la réalisation d'une condition, qui est l'existence d'un gouvernement autonome. La souveraineté appartient au peuple dont le territoire est sous administration, même s'il n'en a pas l'exercice, tout comme les biens du pupille appartiennent à ce dernier, bien qu'il ne puisse exercer sur eux la plénitude de ses droits. La situation juridique des pays dépendants est celle d'Etats incomplets qui, des trois éléments constitutifs de l'Etat moderne, n'en détiennent que deux, à savoir la population et le territoire, et à qui il manque encore le troisième, c'est-à-dire l'indépendance politique.

157. Il est évident que la réalisation de cette condition ne doit pas être laissée à l'arbitraire de la puissance administrante; bien au contraire, c'est une obligation impérative que celle de conduire les peuples vers leur indépendance politique, cette obligation incombe à l'Etat administrateur, et l'Organisation — en tant que mandant — a la faculté d'exiger quelle soit remplie, sans qu'il soit possible d'invoquer l'exception prévue au paragraphe 7 de l'Article 2, puisque les puissances administrantes, en acceptant les mandats réglementés par la Charte, traité multilatéral, se sont volontairement placées sous la juridiction internationale.

158. Il y a sept ans, en 1953, j'ai eu l'honneur d'exposer cette interprétation des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte devant la Quatrième Commission, au nom de la délégation de l'Equateur^{1/}. Nous avons — et nous avons encore maintenant — le ferme espoir de voir se résoudre les problèmes du colonialisme par des moyens juridiques et en interprétant correctement les principes énoncés dans la Charte. Nombre de pays aujourd'hui souverains, dont les représentants honorent cette assemblée, étaient alors pétitionnaires. Nous avons écouté certains de ces représentants et leur seule présence parmi nous démontre clairement le déclin du colonialisme.

159. Nous devons reconnaître que la présence dans cette salle des représentants de territoires qui, à cette époque, étaient des territoires dépendants et qui, aujourd'hui, sont des Etats souverains est due — dans une large mesure — à leur courage, à leur constance, à leur esprit combatif et lucide, à leur amour de la liberté, à la ténacité dont ils ont fait preuve pour revendiquer leur indépendance. Une fois de plus, nous leur rendons hommage. Mais nous ne pouvons cependant pas ignorer que cette émancipation est due à l'influence des principes de la Charte, d'une part, et, d'autre part, à la compréhension de nombreuses puissances administrantes qui ont mené à bien leur tâche et les ont conduits à l'autonomie. La sagesse des représentants de ces anciennes colonies qui sont aujourd'hui des Etats indépendants démontre éloquemment que leurs anciens administrateurs se sont montrés soucieux de leur assurer, conformément aux dispositions de la Charte, un développement culturel bien équilibré.

160. Ma délégation trouve dans ces faits de nouveaux motifs d'avoir foi en la solution juridique des problèmes coloniaux au sein de notre organisation. Cette dernière est le mandant, et il entre dans les attributions du mandant de mettre fin à un mandat si la condition n'est pas observée ou si sa réalisation est retardée. De même, nous croyons que chaque cas doit être examiné en tenant compte des circonstances qui lui sont particulières, apprécié en tenant compte des antécédents, et après en avoir mesuré toutes les conséquences. L'émancipation en masse, pas plus que la condamnation en masse, ne semble être une bonne méthode.

161. Jusqu'à maintenant, je n'ai parlé que de ce que l'on appelle le colonialisme classique; nous ne pouvons cependant pas ne pas signaler que le colonialisme, à l'instar du Protée du mythe grec, est un phénomène multiforme, susceptible de mimétisme. Il existe des formes de néo-colonialisme, cela est certain, et il convient de les tuer dans l'œuf.

162. Je n'insisterai pas sur une nouvelle forme de colonialisme politique et économique, dans laquelle on laisse aux peuples asservis un semblant d'autonomie, jalousement surveillé par des forces armées promptes à étouffer dans le sang toute tentative de rébellion. Je ne parlerai pas davantage des pays qui vivent sous des régimes à parti unique et exclusif. Je ne mentionnerai pas non plus ces nouveaux "mitimées", vieux mot de la langue quechua qui désignait les populations transportées en masse pour le travail aux colonies sous le régime d'impérialisme totalitaire des Incas. On procédait alors à des lavages de cerveaux, pour justifier en quelque sorte ce que disait Salomon dans l'Ecclésiaste, à savoir qu'il n'y a rien de nouveau sous le soleil.

163. Ma délégation estime que, pour combattre ce néo-colonialisme de gauche et de droite, la Charte offre des moyens que l'Organisation doit développer et perfectionner. Ces moyens et ces méthodes ont trait au renforcement du principe de l'autodétermination des peuples. Tout ce qui tendrait à en assurer et en garantir l'exercice, tout ce qui contribuerait à sa mise en vigueur, contrariera le développement de ce néo-colonialisme. Mais ce principe doit être largement exercé, sans discrimination, sans accepter d'arguments fondés sur des sophismes et des exclusives, qu'ils soient le fait du colonialisme classique ou du néo-colonialisme, qu'ils viennent de gauche ou de droite.

164. Il y a enfin une forme de colonialisme insidieux contre lequel il faut être prévenu. Je veux parler de ce que l'on appelle le semi-colonialisme économique, qui s'est efforcé de maintenir dans un pays donné un état de sous-développement de manière à conserver des points de ravitaillement en matières premières à bas prix et des débouchés pour leur produits finis qui se vendent cher. Il convient donc, sur ce point, d'accroître la coopération internationale dans le cadre de l'aide économique.

165. J'en viens maintenant, sans m'y attarder, au projet de résolution distribué sous la cote A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5. L'esprit généreux qui l'anime, la sagacité avec laquelle on a su présenter le problème, les nobles sentiments d'humanité qui l'inspirent méritent que nous lui rendions hommage; ce texte, en effet, entend être une déclaration des droits des peuples coloniaux qui complète la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme.

166. S'il me faut juger ce document en conformité de la thèse que ma délégation vient d'exposer, j'y relèverai certaines discordances. Je ne m'étendrai pas sur les différences de caractère purement doctrinal — comme celle qui se trouve énoncée au cinquième alinéa du préambule, et qui traite du rôle de l'ONU en tant que moyen d'encourager les mouvements en faveur de l'indépendance des territoires non autonomes et des territoires sous tutelle. Il semblerait que ce paragraphe attribue à l'Organisation un rôle officiel de médiateur dans les affaires coloniales, en faisant l'intermédiaire entre les territoires dépendants et les puissances administrantes. Ma délégation a déjà soutenu que le rapport juridique qui existe entre l'Organisation et la puissance administrante est celui de mandant à mandataire.

167. Dans le dispositif du projet, qui revêt la forme d'une déclaration de principes, ma délégation éprouve certaines appréhensions à l'égard du paragraphe 3. Ces doutes sont à la fois d'ordre juridique et d'ordre pratique. Ma délégation estime en effet que la condition indispensable à l'obtention de l'indépendance politique consiste à amener les peuples dépendants à un développement culturel, social et économique dont le niveau devra être apprécié pour chaque cas particulier en tenant compte des circonstances. Le paragraphe 3 du dispositif semble viser une émancipation en masse, même là où les conditions de développement nécessaires à l'octroi de l'indépendance politique n'auraient pas été remplies. Les difficultés pratiques que connaîtrait un nouveau pays indépendant où ne régnerait pas le climat social, économique et culturel souhaitable seraient, en vérité, très graves.

168. Ma délégation éprouve également des doutes quant à l'utilité du paragraphe 4 du dispositif, non pas à cause des principes qui y sont exprimés, mais parce qu'il semble constituer une redite.

169. Malgré ces observations, ma délégation se plaît à féliciter les auteurs du projet, mais se réserve le droit d'exprimer plus tard à son sujet une appréciation définitive et un jugement décisif. Elle tient cependant à marquer son adhésion inconditionnelle à deux principes fondamentaux contenus dans la déclaration: le droit à l'autodétermination, en tant que fondement de l'indépendance des Etats, et la condamnation de toute tentative visant à saper, totalement ou partiellement, l'unité nationale ou l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays.

170. La libre détermination est la prémisse indispensable à toute considération de la personne humaine, individuelle ou collective, en tant qu'objet de la morale et de la science politique. Elle constitue, par là même, le fondement de l'existence de la démocratie. Le déterminisme, qui est la négation philosophique de la libre détermination, conduit les individus à l'automatisme et les peuples à l'esclavage. Tout ce qui, par conséquent, pourra contribuer à renforcer le principe du libre choix et en garantir l'exercice recevra l'appui chaleureux de ma délégation.

171. De même, nous condamnons toute tentative visant à porter atteinte à l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays, comme étant contraire aux principes de la Charte, aux fondements du droit et à la notion de coexistence pacifique. Faire des guerres de conquête, imposer par la force des traités qui démembreront le patrimoine territorial d'un Etat, occuper militairement des pays pour résoudre des différends juridiques pouvant surgir entre les peuples, tel est l'héritage malheureusement toujours présent de la mentalité colonialiste la plus arriérée.

172. Je rappellerai avec une certaine fierté qu'au cours de l'évolution juridique du continent américain, ce principe de la libre détermination se trouve consacré dans des documents internationaux comme fondement de la coexistence pacifique des Etats au sein de la communauté internationale. La doctrine de droit international uti possidetis juris est née en même temps que notre indépendance; notre libérateur, Simón Bolívar, voulut en effet en faire la base de l'existence des Etats. Les nationalités se sont constituées territorialement en se fondant sur ce principe, qui a constamment été respecté tout au long de notre évolution juridique. Le droit international américain, au cours de toute son histoire, a condamné le démembrement des territoires d'un Etat, à la suite d'audacieuses aventures militaires ou de guerres victorieuses. Nous ne pouvons permettre que résonne, dans un monde civilisé, le vae victis des anciens barbares.

173. C'est pourquoi nous appuyons avec enthousiasme la consécration de ce principe dans le projet de résolution.

174. Je dois parler du projet présenté par le Honduras [A/L.324], qui a déployé un remarquable effort en vue de trouver une solution à ce problème du colonialisme. La commission proposée se livrerait à des études détaillées et consciencieuses sur le terrain, et par là créerait les conditions d'un jugement objectif sur la situation, même si elle ne pouvait y porter remède par ses propres moyens. Ma délégation ne peut cependant donner son appui à ce projet de résolution, car il présente l'inconvénient technique de se référer à propos des colonies à un concept qui, juridiquement, n'est pas contenu dans la Charte. Il conviendrait donc de préciser si l'on fait uniquement allusion aux territoires non autonomes et aux territoires sous tutelle, ou si l'on veut également y inclure ces territoires d'outre-mer que certains Etats considèrent comme faisant partie du territoire métropolitain. Nous considérons, par conséquent, que les termes employés sont un peu vagues.

175. En matière de liquidation du colonialisme, je pense que, si nous sommes sur la bonne voie, nous n'avons pas atteint notre but. L'objectif est encore loin, le chemin hérissé de difficultés. Pour arriver à ce but, on peut avoir recours à cette étude qui nous est proposée; mais il y aurait une autre possibilité: celle d'étudier la façon dont l'ONU pourrait exiger la réalisation des mesures tendant à développer l'autonomie lorsque les puissances administrantes n'exécutent pas leurs obligations. Faute de quoi nous nous trouverions dans un cercle vicieux: on ne pourrait donner l'indépendance à certains pays parce que l'on considérerait qu'ils ne remplissent pas les conditions nécessaires pour pouvoir s'administrer eux-mêmes, et on ne pourrait pas davantage exiger des puissances administrantes qu'elles réalisent ces conditions, par un effort constructif. Ce serait alors la fin de tout espoir et la consécration définitive d'une injustice.

176. Je vous prie à nouveau de m'excuser si j'ai parlé plus longuement que de coutume, mais il s'agissait d'une cause sacrée: celle des peuples opprimés. Nous ne leur souhaitons pas d'endurer les souffrances que nous avons connues pour obtenir notre indépendance. Nous voulons pour eux une indépendance qui soit fondée sur le principe de la libre détermination, une liberté qui soit accordée sans subterfuge et sans limitations. Nous nous sentons responsables de leurs espérances et nous ne pouvons accepter que le désespoir les conduise, par une réaction logique, du Charybde de l'Etat colonial au Scylla de l'Etat totalitaire. L'indépendance des peuples actuellement dépendants, fondée sur le principe de l'autodétermination, devra les mener, en toute liberté de décision, et sans qu'ils subissent de pressions ou soient l'objet de flatteries de toute sorte, à des formes originales de gouvernement. Telle est, selon ma délégation, la grande responsabilité qui incombe aux peuples des Nations Unies.

177. M. SUMULONG (Philippines) [traduit de l'anglais]: Comme le savent toutes les délégations, le point de l'ordre du jour intitulé "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" a été proposé, à l'origine, par le Gouvernement de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques [A/4501] et approuvé à l'unanimité par l'Assemblée générale, aux fins d'insertion à l'ordre du jour de la présente session. Le 23 septembre 1960, le président Khrouchtchev a officiellement soumis le projet de déclaration figurant dans le document A/4502. Pendant le débat sur la recommandation de l'Assemblée générale visant à inscrire ce point à l'ordre du jour et à le renvoyer à la Première Commission, la délégation des Philippines a été parmi les premières à appuyer un amendement présenté par la délégation de l'Union soviétique [A/L.312/Rev.1] et tendant à mettre l'examen de la question au programme des séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale. Nous reconnaissons donc, avec le Gouvernement soviétique, que l'importance exceptionnelle de la question justifiait pleinement son examen en séance plénière. Nous avons précisé qu'à notre sens cette question avait une portée et une signification beaucoup plus vastes qu'il ne ressortait des termes du mémorandum explicatif et du projet de déclaration soumis par la délégation soviétique. C'est pourquoi nous nous sommes opposés à ce que l'Assemblée générale, en examinant cette question, fût liée par les termes tendancieux et restrictifs du projet de déclaration soviétique. Nous avons soutenu qu'une telle déclaration devait pouvoir s'appliquer à tous les pays et à tous les peuples restant soumis à une domination étrangère, quel que soit l'endroit où elle existe, qu'il s'agisse de victimes d'une domination impérialiste nouvelle ou ancienne, et aussi à toutes les formes, à toutes les manifestations possibles d'asservissement.

178. C'est dans ces conditions que la délégation des Philippines a participé, avec d'autres pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, à l'élaboration du projet de déclaration qui figure dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5. Conformément aux instructions reçues de son gouvernement, la délégation des Philippines s'est jointe aux auteurs de ce projet de déclaration, dont le nombre s'est rapidement élevé, pour atteindre sauf erreur 42 pays.

179. L'intérêt profond que mon pays attache à cette question s'explique aisément. Notre expérience de la domination coloniale, qui s'est poursuivie sans interruption pendant près de quatre siècles, est certainement l'une des plus longues de l'histoire. Nous avons bu jusqu'à la lie la coupe amère de la domination étrangère. Mais nous nous souvenons également avec soulagement et gratitude que la République des Philippines a été le premier Etat indépendant à naître au cours de notre ère révolutionnaire, celle de l'ONU, qui sera marquée à jamais dans les annales de la civilisation humaine par l'accession à la liberté et à l'indépendance d'une quarantaine de pays en l'espace de 15 ans seulement.

180. Dans le discours qu'il a prononcé devant l'Assemblée générale, le 29 novembre 1960 [927ème séance], M. Shukairy, représentant de l'Arabie Saoudite, a bien voulu rappeler que les Philippines étaient le seul pays d'Asie à avoir lutté, à San Francisco, pour que l'indépendance soit mentionnée dans la Charte des Nations Unies en tant qu'objectif juste et légitime des peuples des territoires qui ne s'administrent pas eux-mêmes. A cette époque, les puissances coloniales n'avaient concédé que le principe selon lequel, dans ces territoires, "elles développeraient l'autonomie de ces populations" et "tiendraient dûment compte de leurs aspirations politiques". Ces pays ont essayé de nous convaincre que le concept général de l'autonomie englobait l'objectif de l'indépendance. De cette confusion sémantique est née l'une des anomalies ou, dirions-nous, des curiosités politiques de la Charte, car, alors que l'Article 76 indique clairement que l'autonomie ou l'indépendance constituent l'objectif recherché pour les populations de ces territoires, l'Article 73 oblige simplement les puissances administrantes à développer la capacité des populations des territoires qui ne sont pas autonomes à s'administrer elles-mêmes.

181. La délégation des Philippines pensait à la Conférence de San Francisco, et elle le pense encore aujourd'hui, que l'indépendance devait être l'objectif commun à tous les peuples des territoires dépendants, qu'il s'agît de territoires sous tutelle ou de territoires non autonomes. A San Francisco, l'assurance nous fut donnée qu'il en était bien ainsi, dans l'esprit sinon dans la lettre de la Charte. Nous avons succombé sous le nombre, à San Francisco, et nous avons perdu la bataille menée en faveur de ce mot unique, de ce mot capital. Mais l'indépendance n'était pas simplement un mot que l'on pouvait faire disparaître par un tour de passe-passe ou par des incantations. C'était un mot tellement imprégné de vie, si cher et si proche au cœur et à l'esprit de tant de millions d'hommes encore asservis, un mot si étroitement lié à la texture du présent et de l'avenir, aux objectifs et aux principes des Nations Unies, qu'il ne pouvait demeurer longtemps méconnu ou oublié.

182. La marche en avant de l'histoire ne pouvait être arrêtée par un artifice verbal, si ingénieux soit-il. C'est ainsi qu'aujourd'hui nous sommes sur le point d'adopter une "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", comme la suite et l'éclaircissement nécessaires de la Déclaration qui figure au Chapitre XI de la Charte et qui intéresse les territoires non autonomes.

183. Certains pourront se demander si cette nouvelle déclaration, en précisant le concept de l'indépendance, ne constitue pas une révision de la Déclaration figurant actuellement dans la Charte. C'est là une préoccupation légitime, et il serait utile d'examiner cet aspect du problème. A cet égard, nous voudrions rappeler les assurances qui nous ont été données à San Francisco, selon lesquelles les termes d'autonomie et d'indépendance étaient pratiquement synonymes. C'est là une interprétation que le dictionnaire et les manuels de science politique tendent à confirmer.

184. En outre, l'Article 73, b, de la Charte fait obligation aux puissances coloniales de "tenir compte des aspirations politiques des populations", obligation que la plupart des puissances coloniales ont respectée pendant les 15 années qui nous séparent de la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, en donnant satisfaction à l'aspiration politique suprême de toute population, c'est-à-dire l'indépendance, volontairement et avec empressement dans certains cas, à regret et sous l'empire de la nécessité dans d'autres.

185. Puisque près de 40 pays ont accédé à l'indépendance depuis la promulgation de la Charte, ce sont donc les puissances coloniales elles-mêmes qui ont délibérément interprété dans le sens le plus large l'Article 73 de la Charte. Ce sont elles qui ont osé porter la lettre de cette disposition de la Charte jusqu'à sa conclusion logique; la nouvelle déclaration que nous proposons ne fait que confirmer la sagesse dont ces puissances ont fait preuve, face à une nécessité historique inéluctable.

186. La délégation des Philippines s'en tient strictement aux termes de la déclaration proposée par 42 Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5]. Si on objectait que cette déclaration est infiniment plus énergique, dans sa lettre et dans son esprit, que la déclaration correspondante qui figure dans la Charte, nous répondrons que cette différence est due au nouveau visage de l'ONU et à l'ambiance radicalement différente dans laquelle elle fonctionne aujourd'hui. A San Francisco, les grandes puissances qui avaient gagné la guerre ont influencé et déterminé la forme et la nature de la Charte; on comprend leur désir de préserver, aussi longtemps que possible, ce qu'elles possédaient alors, et leur répugnance à consentir des sacrifices volontaires et des actes de renonciation. L'influence déterminante qu'elles ont exercée sur la Conférence de San Francisco se reflète donc dans la rédaction timide, mais non dépourvue de générosité, de l'Article 73.

187. Mais 15 ans se sont écoulés depuis lors, et depuis que la Charte a été rédigée le nombre des Membres de l'ONU a doublé à la suite de l'admission d'Etats nouvellement sortis de la domination coloniale. Lorsque ces nouveaux Etats parlent, comme ils le font aujourd'hui dans la déclaration qui nous est proposée, le monde doit être disposé à entendre une voix qui évoque avec énergie les injustices et les torts subis, et qui vibre de sympathie pour les peuples attendant encore leur libération.

188. Certaines appréhensions se sont exprimées au sujet du paragraphe 5 du projet de déclaration, qui se lit comme suit:

"5. Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

189. A première vue, cette disposition pourrait paraître en contradiction avec la notion de progressivité qui est implicite dans l'Article 73 de la Charte et qui transparait dans les mots: "développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques, dans la mesure appropriée aux conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations et à leurs degrés variables de développement". Toutefois, il est clair que l'objet du paragraphe 5 de cette déclaration n'est pas le transfert immédiat de tous les pouvoirs aux populations de ces territoires, mais bien plutôt la prise de mesures immédiates aboutissant à un tel transfert de pouvoirs. Ce à quoi l'on entend porter remède, c'est à une politique délibérée de temporisation et d'entraves, qui ne se résout pas à lancer un peuple dépendant sur la voie menant à l'indépendance. Nous avons vu les résultats si tragiques de cette politique dans l'ancien Congo belge.

190. L'appui que nous donnons à ce paragraphe découle de l'expérience que nous avons vécue nous-mêmes en tant que territoire jadis dépendant des Etats-Unis. Lorsque les Etats-Unis eurent achevé la conquête de mon pays, au début de ce siècle, les dirigeants de mon peuple commencèrent une campagne de pétitions en faveur d'une liberté immédiate, complète et absolue, et ils demandèrent aux Etats-Unis des garanties répétées à cet égard. Le peuple et le gouvernement des Etats-Unis nous donnèrent les garanties que nous demandions et, bien que notre indépendance n'ait pas été reconnue aussitôt que nous présentâmes nos pétitions pour l'obtenir, il est encourageant de se rappeler qu'en raison des garanties ainsi obtenues il ne fit jamais de doute, dès le début, que des mesures seraient prises immédiatement pour nous rapprocher de l'indépendance.

191. En fait, à la date exacte qui nous avait été promise par les Etats-Unis, le 4 juillet 1946, l'indépendance des Philippines fut octroyée et reconnue, sans qu'il fût besoin de verser une seule goutte de sang.

192. Si l'ONU avait existé alors, mon pays aurait sûrement bénéficié de la pression morale exercée par l'Organisation et la période de préparation eût été beaucoup plus courte. Ce que le paragraphe 5 et, en fait, la déclaration signifient, c'est qu'il ne sera plus toléré de retard volontaire à l'octroi de l'indépendance, étant donné le rythme très accéléré de l'évolution du monde, les aspirations des peuples vers leur émancipation politique et économique, et le cours irréversible de l'histoire.

193. L'essentiel du projet de déclaration des 42 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] se trouve cependant dans les mots suivants:

"L'Assemblée générale,

"...

"Proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations;

"Et, à cette fin,

"Déclare ce qui suit:

"1. La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangère constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiale."

194. Par ces affirmations directes, nous marquons clairement notre volonté de voir cette déclaration s'appliquer à tous les peuples subjugués, dans toutes les parties du monde, qu'ils soient devant ou derrière le rideau de fer ou de bambou, qu'ils soient dominés et exploités ouvertement ou secrètement par les méthodes de l'impérialisme classique ou par celles du néo-impérialisme.

195. Nous n'allons pas nous apitoyer sur le sort de l'ancien impérialisme colonial agonisant; en vérité, nous pouvons dire: plus tôt il mourra, mieux cela vaudra pour l'humanité. Mais nous n'entendons pas non plus souhaiter la bienvenue au nouvel impérialisme colonial qui se dresse pour prendre sa place. Nous estimons utile de prévenir les peuples contre ce nouveau colonialisme qui cherche à s'imposer par la force à des peuples faibles, ou par surprise à des pays sans méfiance. Une vigilance constante est notre seule arme contre la réapparition de l'ancien colonialisme agonisant, aussi bien que contre le nouveau colonialisme.

196. En adoptant le projet de déclaration africano-asiatique, nous prouverons que nous sommes capables de déceler les faux-semblants et l'hypocrisie. Nous proclamerons l'intégrité de notre jugement, que ni la pitié ni la flatterie n'influencent. Nous signifierons aux néo-impérialistes et aux crypto-impérialistes que nous ne sommes pas disposés à accepter leurs leçons sur la façon de gagner notre liberté et notre indépendance. S'ils persistaient dans leur tentative, nous serions obligés de leur dire: Ce que vous faites maintenant pour détruire la liberté des êtres humains et l'indépendance des peuples cause un tel vacarme que nous ne pouvons plus vous entendre.

197. M. PALAMARTCHOUK (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) [traduit du russe]: L'Assemblée générale examine une déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Les immenses voûtes de cette salle ont semblé s'élargir encore quand a retenti cet appel passionné et bouleversant en faveur d'une suppression définitive du régime colonialiste, sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. C'est pour la première fois depuis la fondation de notre organisation que les Nations Unies déclarent de façon si résolue leurs convictions, leurs intentions et leurs revendications concernant l'aide à apporter aux peuples encore opprimés des colonies, pour qu'ils obtiennent la liberté et l'indépendance. Les paroles sages et vibrantes de la déclaration proposée par l'Union soviétique [A/4502 et Corr.1], qui postule que "les peuples qui en oppriment d'autres ne peuvent être des peuples libres", devraient figurer en lettres d'or sur le granit du portail de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

198. A cette tribune nous avons entendu, depuis plusieurs jours déjà, faire des exposés, tantôt irrités, tantôt fiers et pleins d'assurance, sur la rupture des chaînes colonialistes en Asie, sur le réveil grandiose de l'Afrique; nous avons appris que, maintenant, les phares de l'indépendance s'allument déjà sous le ciel bleu de l'Afrique; nous avons entendu parler de cet opprobre de notre siècle que sont les vestiges du système colonial subsistant encore sur le sol antique de l'Afrique et de l'Asie, sur les îles de l'Océanie ou sur les rivages de la mer des Caraïbes, où le colonialisme sévit encore. Des hommes — 100 millions d'êtres humains — et leur sol natal portent encore le joug de la servitude colonialiste!

199. Le ton mesuré des représentants de l'Afrique et de l'Asie recèle une force puissante, celle de la lutte, dont la devise a toujours été: indépendance et liberté! Mais les perfides et rusés commis de l'impérialisme et les colonialistes eux-mêmes, pour cacher leur jeu de propos délibéré, entonnent toujours le même refrain à propos de la déclaration soviétique et de ses objectifs: "Prenez garde, disent-ils, cette déclaration soviétique est un appel à la rébellion."

200. C'est à croire que les incendies de la révolte populaire ne se sont jamais reflétés sur l'Asie. C'est à croire que cette lutte n'est pas l'expression naturelle d'une protestation contre l'oppression nationale et sociale, mais un certain article d'exportation, qui a pris la forme d'une "dangereuse" déclaration.

201. A quoi bon ces feintes? Quand on accable de chaînes des hommes ou des peuples, on allume dans leurs cœurs le feu sacré de la lutte — de la lutte et non de la résignation. C'est la lutte et non plus la soumission au mal affreux qu'est le colonialisme. C'est cette lutte qui fait justement s'écarter les frontières de l'indépendance et de la liberté, en Asie, en Afrique et dans d'autres parties du monde.

202. Le devoir de tous les peuples libres, le devoir de l'ONU tout entière est d'aider les peuples opprimés à arracher les fils barbelés du colonialisme là où il en subsiste encore pour dresser une frontière entre le marasme et le progrès, entre l'esclavage et la liberté, entre les ténèbres et la lumière. Les Bastilles des vieux régimes ont été renversées chaque fois que le fardeau du passé est devenu insupportable, lorsque les vieilles détroques n'ont plus été à la taille d'une société humaine puissante et en progrès.

203. La grande révolution socialiste d'Octobre dans notre pays a été l'aboutissement d'une lutte séculaire de l'humanité pour la liberté et le progrès. Le sursaut révolutionnaire d'indignation des dizaines et dizaines de millions de sujets de l'ancien empire russe a été préparé par tout le cours du processus historique. L'ère nouvelle, l'ère de libération du travailleur de toutes les formes d'oppression — coloniale, nationale ou sociale — est apparue au monde comme un témoignage du fait que l'humanité était mûre pour accomplir les actes historiques les plus vastes.

204. L'acte constitutionnel le plus important adopté par la jeune République soviétique — "Déclaration des droits du travailleur exploité" — a proclamé la suppression de toute exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, tout en condamnant la politique pratiquée par de soi-disant nations élues, politique tendant à l'asservissement de centaines de millions de travailleurs en Asie, aux colonies et dans les petits pays en général. Cette déclaration a souligné avec force la nécessité qu'il y avait, dans les conditions politiques nouvelles, de résoudre d'une façon radicale la question coloniale en faveur des nations asservies. Le grand Lénine, fondateur de l'Etat soviétique, a exprimé, immédiatement après la victoire de la révolution socialiste d'Octobre, sa certitude que l'heure approche où appartiennent encore à des nations dépendantes, qui ne jouissent pas de la plénitude de leurs droits et qui n'existent, aux yeux de la culture et de la civilisation capitalistes, qu'en tant que matériel de fumure^{2/n}.

"les peuples de l'Orient se soulèveront et deviendront des participants indépendants, des créateurs d'une vie nouvelle, car ces centaines de millions d'hommes

205. Ces paroles prophétiques et pleines de clarté de Lénine sont aujourd'hui on ne peut plus remarquables. Elles peuvent servir de clef et permettre la compréhension des raisons qui font que les impérialistes pillent les colonies et s'efforcent de sauvegarder les régimes coloniaux, et de la peur dont souffrent, à l'Assemblée, les représentants des puissances coloniales. Vous vous souvenez avec quelle hâte, contraire au caractère anglais, si flegmatique, M. Ormsby-Gore s'est efforcé de chasser loin de lui — comme si c'était un fantôme — les impératifs de la déclaration proposée par l'Union soviétique. Il s'est même tellement hâté qu'il a manifesté sa sympathie — je ne sais si elle était chaude ou froide — envers les interventions des représentants d'Asie et d'Afrique, alors qu'à cet instant-là il n'avait pas encore pu les entendre, puisque ces représentants n'avaient pas encore pris la parole. Je ne le lui reproche pas; je me borne à constater un fait.

206. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, dans le style habituel aux Occidentaux, s'est laissé entraîner sur la voie glissante qui conduit à une opposition entre les idées et les buts des Africano-Asiatiques et le contenu de la déclaration soviétique, cela en cherchant à démontrer que les vues des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique désireux de supprimer entièrement et totalement le colonialisme s'opposent aux vues des pays socialistes soviétiques. C'est là une tactique favorite, mais à vrai dire quelque peu trop rigide, dont on a beaucoup usé au cours de la présente session. Bon! laissons le représentant du Royaume-Uni éprouver de la satisfaction, lorsqu'il lui semble que les Membres africano-asiatiques de l'Organisation des Nations Unies "ne considèrent point l'apport soviétique à nos délibérations comme étant particulièrement sérieux". Que Dieu lui accorde chaque jour une illusion sur ce point! Toutefois, la délégation ukrainienne est intimement persuadée que l'intervention du représentant du Royaume-Uni rappelle plutôt un fétu de paille emporté par le torrent des accusations portées contre ce qui subsiste encore du système colonial dont on exige les funérailles au plus vite. Tel est le sens de la discussion qui se déroule actuellement à l'Assemblée à la suite de la déclaration historique soumise par le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique en vue de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/4502 et Corr.1].

207. Revenons, toutefois, à l'essentiel. Les peuples de l'Asie et de l'Afrique se sont éveillés et œuvrent pratiquement dans l'intérêt du destin de l'humanité tout entière. C'est devenu maintenant une vérité incontestable. Tandis que le colonialisme contemporain, qui s'est élevé au comble du parasitisme, est pour les peuples une source de malheurs et de souffrances. Il pille les populations et les saigne à blanc, tout en leur barrant le chemin vers le progrès. Durant leur domination, les puissances coloniales ont tiré des richesses incalculables des pays qui leur étaient soumis. Par exemple, pendant la période allant de 1955 à 1958, la Belgique a vu sa balance commerciale avec le Congo accuser un actif de 373 millions de livres sterling. Sur cette somme, et pour la même période, 82 millions de livres sterling seulement sont revenues au Congo, ce qui veut dire que les bénéfices nets drainés de la colonie ont atteint en quatre ans la somme énorme de 291 millions de livres sterling.

208. Selon les calculs les plus modestes, les monopoles américains ont fait, rien qu'en Afrique, au cours des années 1946-1959, plus de 1 milliard et demi de dollars, c'est-à-dire une somme qui aurait permis de construire pour les Africains plus de 150 centrales électriques d'une puissance de 100.000 kW chacune.

209. Au cours de nombreux lustres — ou, plutôt, pendant toute l'histoire du colonialisme — l'économie des pays colonisés a connu un retard effrayant; les colonialistes font tout ce qu'ils peuvent pour maintenir au maximum ce retard. Dans toutes les colonies africaines et autres pays dépendants, il s'est constitué dans l'économie deux secteurs distincts tant sur le plan national que sur celui des relations sociales et économiques: d'une part, une économie capitaliste européenne hautement organisée et où règne le capital étranger et, d'autre part, la petite économie artisanale et misérable de la population autochtone. Les monopoles étrangers condamnent l'économie des pays exploités par eux à un développement informel et unilatéral; ils utilisent les colonies comme source de matières premières à bon marché et de main-d'œuvre qu'ils exploitent impitoyablement en créant un courant commercial où le taux d'échange est déséquilibré.

210. Mais le pillage des colonies — on l'a déjà dit à cette tribune — est un phénomène qui ne se traduit pas uniquement sur le plan du capital de production. En s'opposant à ce que les colonies et les pays sous-développés puissent avoir un accès sur le marché international, les colonialistes tendent à mettre la main sur la totalité du commerce extérieur et sur une grande partie du commerce intérieur de ces pays, levant ainsi un tribut considérable. On peut citer l'exemple du pétrole du Koweït: en 1951, le prix de revient d'une tonne était de 73 cents, tandis que le prix de vente sur le marché mondial était de 17 à 18 dollars des Etats-Unis par tonne. Autrement dit, chaque tonne rapportait aux monopoles un bénéfice de l'ordre de 2.000 pour 100.

211. Les colonialistes récoltent donc une moisson d'amples profits, tandis que les peuples coloniaux s'appauvrissent et restent de plus en plus au-dessous du niveau de vie des pays hautement développés.

212. Je voudrais attirer l'attention sur un document intéressant: le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Ce rapport [A/4371], rédigé conformément à la résolution 1461 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, s'est fixé pour but de présenter des observations et des conclusions quant aux progrès réalisés au sein de la population des territoires dits non autonomes au cours des 15 dernières années. Objectivement, le sens du rapport de la Commission est que les territoires dits non autonomes se trouvent, en fait, dans la situation de colonies, avec toutes les conséquences qui en découlent. Le Comité est arrivé à la conclusion que même à l'heure actuelle dans les territoires non autonomes "la structure de base de l'économie est restée, en général, peu développée, car l'économie a continué à reposer surtout sur l'agriculture de subsistance et la production de quelques produits primaires pour l'exportation" [A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 45]. L'économie de ces territoires est condamnée à végéter, car "la production de biens d'équipement en est encore à ses débuts" (ibid., par. 46). Vous trouverez dans ce rapport des faits frappants; ainsi, il y est dit que "le revenu individuel de la population autochtone dans les territoires d'Afrique pour lesquels on disposait de tels renseignements était, en 1956 ou 1957, parmi les plus bas du monde" (ibid., par. 53) et que les revenus de la population autochtone étaient de plusieurs dizaines de fois différents de ceux des colons; bien entendu, cette différence n'étant pas en faveur des Africains autochtones. Le rapport reconnaît encore nombre d'autres faits, non moins éloquentes: désagrégation de la vie de famille chez les autochtones, augmentation de la délinquance juvénile, chômage total ou partiel, développement de maladies effrayantes, analphabétisme souvent total, illégalité, enfin discrimination raciale.

213. Peut-on continuer à tolérer cet état de choses? Non, cela n'est pas possible, si l'on a à cœur les intérêts de la paix, de l'humanité et du progrès.

214. Chaque année, l'Organisation des Nations Unies reçoit des milliers de pétitions en provenance des territoires se trouvant soi-disant sous tutelle; de telles pétitions restent pour ces populations l'unique moyen d'appeler à l'aide l'opinion publique universelle. Vingt mille de ces pétitions sont enfouies dans la poussière des archives de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, alors qu'elles devraient être publiées à des millions d'exemplaires.

215. Dans l'une de ces pétitions il est dit:

"Dans le Sud-Ouest africain existe une organisation connue sous le nom d'Association indigène du travail du Sud-Ouest africain... Cette association est habilitée à vendre (je souligne le mot "vendre") des Africains des réserves extra-territoriales."

216. Maintenant, je cite un extrait d'une autre pétition:

"Au moment même où l'Assemblée générale de l'Organisation des Nations Unies examine en détail les questions coloniales et délibère sur la gestion coloniale dans les territoires non autonomes d'outre-mer, nous, les représentants de la Guyane britannique, colonie de la Couronne britannique, désirons attirer l'attention des honorables délégués sur notre pénible situation... Nous, peuple déshérité de la Guyane britannique, nous profitons de la possibilité que nous offre la présente pétition pour soumettre notre cas à cette assemblée mondiale. Nous voulons l'indépendance politique. Nous voulons conduire nos affaires nationales — tant politiques que sociales et économiques — conformément aux désirs et aux aspirations de notre population vers une Guyane meilleure. Nous ne présentons pas aux honorables délégués un acte d'accusation, car il n'est pas dans nos intentions d'accuser l'impérialisme britannique des crimes commis par lui. Nous essayons seulement de montrer nos plaies nationales, celles que la botte du colonialiste a faites sur notre corps. Notre appel est un terrible cri d'agonie et ce que nous réclamons c'est que l'honorable Assemblée demande à la Grande-Bretagne d'être assez magnanime pour soulever sa botte, car là où cette botte est posée se trouvent plus d'un demi-million de faibles gorges guyanaises écrasées."

217. Il existe encore d'autres documents, ce sont les documents de la Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique qui a eu lieu à Accra. Cette conférence a entendu des "communications déchirantes des délégués qui ont pris part à la conférence, au sujet des atrocités commises sur le continent africain par les colonialistes et les impérialistes". Suivant ces délégués, "les Africains — par suite de l'activité des impérialistes — sont privés des droits essentiels de l'homme: liberté de parole, liberté de réunion, liberté de déplacement, possibilité de vivre dans l'abondance". Partout où subsistent des vestiges du système colonial règne une pauvreté effrayante, les peuples opprimés sont privés de leurs droits et soumis à la violence des ignares; les hommes y meurent comme de l'herbe brûlée. Seuls ceux qui ont des cœurs de pierre ne veulent pas entendre parler de tout cela et continuent de défendre le colonialisme.

218. Dans le document qui a été distribué à l'Assemblée sous la cote A/AC.73/3, on trouve un certain nombre de déclarations qui, à notre avis, devraient également être reproduites à un grand nombre d'exemplaires, pour que le monde entier puisse voir l'affreux visage des champions du système colonialiste. Dans l'un de ces documents on tente de "prouver que "l'"apartheid" représente pour les noirs un système parfaitement logique et qu'ils utilisent parmi eux" [A/AC.73/3, pétition No 10]. Un autre document, non moins infâme, affirme carrément que "lorsque les indigènes se gouverneront eux-mêmes, nous sommes convaincus que cela signifiera pour l'histoire de l'Afrique un recul d'un ou deux siècles" (ibid., pétition No 20).

219. On commet donc des crimes pour que l'histoire ne recule pas! La conscience de l'humanité est bouleversée par ces crimes — qu'il s'agisse de l'Algérie, du Sud-Ouest africain ou de la République du Congo. C'est cette dernière qui — d'après le caractère des événements qui s'y déroulent — a été choisie par les colonialistes comme terrain d'essai où pourrait grandir l'arbre du néo-colonialisme, non moins pernicieux que ne le fut le colonialisme ancien. Ce terrain d'essai est labouré, avec des armes, par des renégats du type Mobutu. L'exemple de la République du Congo montre à tout le monde que le fascisme colonial et le néo-colonialisme sont des frères jumeaux qui tentent d'étouffer tout ce qui est vivant, indépendant, national dans les pays coloniaux.

220. Jadis, sur le sol américain libéré des colonialistes anglais, on planta un "Arbre de la liberté" et Thomas Jefferson dit que, pour que cet arbre pût pousser, il fallait l'arroser du sang des tyrans. C'est encore d'Amérique que nous arrivaient les paroles enflammées de Walt Whitman, qui affirmait qu'"un monde dans lequel existent des maîtres et des serfs est devenu caduc", et qui croyait passionnément qu'"une race nouvelle d'hommes puissants, à l'allure décidée" fera disparaître de notre planète jusqu'aux traces d'oppression de l'homme par l'homme.

221. Mais, aujourd'hui, des voix différentes nous arrivent d'Amérique. On fait savoir que le Congrès des Etats-Unis d'Amérique entend dépenser au cours de l'exercice financier 1960-1961, plusieurs millions de dollars pour la propagande en Afrique. Dans un certain nombre de pays africains, plusieurs milliers de missionnaires américains ont déjà pris leurs quartiers; une kyrielle de messagers d'innombrables "sociétés de bienfaisance" patronnées par Ford et Rockefeller les suivent de près. Le sénateur Cross a, ouvertement et sans pudeur aucune, déclaré du haut de la tribune du Congrès qu'il était nécessaire d'élaborer un programme de propagande destinée au continent africain "pour ouvrir l'accès à ces vastes espaces nouveaux où se trouvent et se cachent des dollars". Quant au Secrétaire d'Etat adjoint aux affaires africaines, il s'est exprimé encore plus clairement: "Bientôt, a-t-il dit, les Etats-Unis seront à même de compenser les échecs relatifs de notre politique en Asie et au Moyen-Orient; l'Afrique nous fournit le moyen de prendre une revanche." Il s'agit donc d'efforts des Etats-Unis qui tendent à établir leur domination politique, économique et militaire en Afrique. L'ancien colonialisme, à jamais compromis, serait ainsi remplacé par l'implantation d'un néo-colonialisme, poudré à l'impérialisme.

222. L'expression "prendre une revanche" dépeint on ne peut mieux la politique et, au-delà de cette politique, le comportement pratique des Etats-Unis au sein et en dehors de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Bien entendu, la vie a enseigné aux colonialistes — bien que tous n'aient peut-être pas profité de cette leçon — à atteindre leurs buts par des moyens de plus en plus subtils. Ils ne disent plus de nos jours que le colonialisme est un bien et qu'on ne peut oser réclamer son élimination de la vie des peuples. Mais, dans leur nouveau vocabulaire, le mot "indépendance" comme le mot "autonomie" ne s'emploient que pour désigner des intentions et encore des intentions pour un avenir éloigné. L'un des précédents orateurs a indiqué d'ailleurs clairement qu'entre les puissances colonialistes et les pays de l'Asie et de l'Afrique il n'y a pas de divergences quant aux intentions; il n'y a que des divergences concernant les méthodes et, quelquefois, concernant la date de l'octroi de l'indépendance et de la liberté.

223. Oui, mais, si l'on a composé et récité depuis longtemps déjà des odes en l'honneur de bonnes intentions encore dans les limbes, la suppression réelle du régime colonialiste est retardée sous divers prétextes ridicules et, je dirai même, démagogiques. Là est l'essentiel de nos divergences de principe: d'un côté il y a les pays colonialistes avec leurs intentions tout à fait à l'opposé des pays qui exigent une suppression immédiate du régime colonial. La déclaration des pays africano-asiatiques [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5], de même que celle de l'Union soviétique, proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre fin, immédiatement et sans aucune réserve, à toutes les formes du colonialisme, sous toutes leurs manifestations. Alors à quoi bon ce projet de résolution du Honduras [A/L.324]? Ce projet était nécessaire à ceux qui poussent le Honduras et dont l'identité est facile à deviner. Son but est d'empêcher, si possible, l'adoption de la déclaration et de prolonger ainsi l'existence du régime colonial. Notre délégation — je le dis avec tout le respect que je dois aux pays de l'Amérique latine — serait bouleversée d'apprendre que la résolution du Honduras puisse refléter l'opinion de tous ces pays.

224. Ce projet de résolution répète, en fait, les calomnies démagogiques qui insinuent que les colonies ne sont pas mûres pour l'indépendance, qu'il leur manque les institutions politiques et sociales indispensables pour pouvoir prendre les leviers de commande.

225. Bien sûr, ce projet de résolution proclame également que le colonialisme doit être supprimé dans le monde, mais on n'y voit rien qui puisse indiquer quand on extirpera cet opprobre du XXème siècle. Il n'est pas difficile de comprendre que là encore il ne s'agit que d'intentions et, pour camoufler cela, on propose de créer une commission. Or, de quoi s'occupera-t-elle? Elle devra se rendre dans les possessions coloniales et présenter des recommandations à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa seizième session. Des recommandations sur quoi? Sur les moyens les plus adéquats, les plus rapides et les plus efficaces de rendre possible la disparition absolue du colonialisme. Tout cela n'est qu'un fatras de mots, vides de sens. Tel est l'usage qui s'est établi à l'ONU: lorsqu'on veut faire sombrer une mesure saine et progressiste que l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'apprête à adopter, on élabore, pour faire contrepoids, une résolution semblable à celle du Honduras. Peut-être que, pour certaines délégations, un tel projet constituerait même une sorte d'échappatoire ou de coin d'ombre permettant de se dissimuler. En tout cas l'Ukraine, elle, tient à déclarer clairement que la résolution proposée par le Honduras est inacceptable, en gros comme en détail. Nous ne saurions apporter un appui à un projet de résolution qui aurait pour but non pas de liquider le colonialisme, mais uniquement d'établir si les colonies sont préparées à l'indépendance.

226. Les peuples qui luttent pour leur libération et pour l'affermissement d'une indépendance réelle disposent d'une grande force, qui leur permet de s'opposer victorieusement aux perfides machinations des colonialistes et des néo-colonialistes. Cette force — c'est l'union et la solidarité. C'est à Bandoung que les Etats asiatiques et africains ont formulé les principes de base de la solidarité africano-asiatique, solidarité qui repose sur une haine commune du colonialisme, quelle que soit sa forme, sur une haine commune du racisme et, enfin, sur une aspiration commune à conserver et à consolider la paix sur la terre. D'autres conférences analogues de pays en lutte ont eu lieu depuis à Accra, à Tunis, à Conakry. Et voici que par le monde retentit comme un écho puissant la voix de l'Amérique latine incarnée dans les appels ardents de la Déclaration de La Havane.

227. Ces jours-ci, près de 100 Etats représentés à l'ONU examinent et discutent avec émotion et chaleur la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, proposée par l'Union soviétique, pays de la paix, pays d'une fraternité véritable et de l'amitié des peuples, pays qui a (suivant l'expression de l'un des principaux chefs de l'Asie contemporaine) posé les fondements de la civilisation nouvelle où la paix peut se développer. La libération des pays et des peuples de la domination coloniale aboutira à l'assainissement des relations internationales et à la consolidation de la paix. Il n'est plus possible d'arrêter la lutte des peuples colonisés pour leur libération. "C'est un important processus historique qui s'effectue avec une force croissante et irréversible", indiquait, dans une de ses interventions au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, M. N. S. Khrouchtchev. Nous le disons et nous répétons: il faut accorder la liberté et l'indépendance totales aux peuples coloniaux et aux territoires sous tutelle ou non autonomes et cela non pas à l'avenir, mais aujourd'hui même et sans délai.

228. Le peuple libre de l'Ukraine indépendante ainsi que son gouvernement restent aux côtés de tous les peuples libres et accordent leur appui total et inconditionnel aux nobles idéaux et buts de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

229. M. CHAMPASSAK (Laos): Si ma délégation croit devoir prendre part à la discussion du problème sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux, c'est parce qu'elle estime que le problème du colonialisme revêt une importance exceptionnelle. Certains des orateurs qui m'ont précédé ont stigmatisé la persistance du fléau colonialiste. D'autres ont souligné la disparition progressive du colonialisme et aussi la naissance d'une nouvelle forme de ce fléau destiné à perpétuer la domination d'un pays par un autre et l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme. Ils ont tous amplement démontré le danger que représentent pour la paix et la sécurité internationales toutes les formes du colonialisme.

230. Après la seconde guerre mondiale, les vagues du nationalisme ont soufflé sur le continent asiatique, bousculant les positions coloniales traditionnellement les plus solides. Près de 1 milliard d'hommes ont recouvré leur dignité et leur liberté outragées. La Charte de San Francisco, proclamée dans l'euphorie de la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, a incontestablement, par ses mobiles moraux, accéléré le processus de décolonisation. La politique des pays traditionnellement anticolonialistes, les progrès techniques rapides, les échanges de plus en plus grands des courants d'idées ont rendu intenable les positions des puissances colonialistes. C'est sous l'influence combinée de ces divers facteurs que la liquidation des empires s'est accélérée.

231. La Conférence de Bandoung de 1955, qui marque une étape historique dans les relations des peuples des continents africain et asiatique, a provoqué un essor nouveau dans le mouvement de la libération de l'Afrique.

232. Après l'Asie, le continent africain, avec ses richesses et son potentiel humain, s'éveille à la vie internationale et tous les orateurs ont souligné ici, avec justesse, que l'année 1960 est l'année de l'Afrique. Celle-ci, par son dynamisme, a déjà apporté à nos travaux une contribution importante.

233. A part quelques flots où les colonialistes établissent leur domination et font encore la loi, on peut dire que l'ère du colonialisme est close. Si ces quelques flots subsistent encore, le mouvement d'émancipation, qui a des racines profondes, ne tardera pas à les balayer. Car, dans l'ère de l'interdépendance et de l'indivisibilité de la paix, le colonialisme moribond a du mal à survivre.

234. Appartenant à un pays bouddhiste, le peuple lao a toujours manifesté une répugnance à toutes les formes de domination, qu'elles soient idéologiques ou matérialistes. Nous estimons que l'humiliation est pire que la misère, car l'homme peut s'accoutumer à la faim, mais ne s'habitue jamais à l'humiliation. Instruits dans des principes de tolérance et d'humanisme, nous nous refusons cependant à regarder ce problème seulement dans son aspect négatif.

235. Nous soutenons énergiquement les efforts des peuples qui luttent pour leur indépendance et leur liberté. L'autodétermination, à notre avis, est la seule voie susceptible non seulement de changer la conscience politique des peuples opprimés, mais aussi de rétablir la concorde. Nous considérons que le mouvement d'émancipation est irrésistible et irréversible, mais nous sommes contre ceux qui entretiennent le ferment de haine, ceux qui utilisent des slogans explosifs pour des motifs sociaux ou raciaux, ou tout simplement pour détourner les difficultés politiques, car nous estimons que ce sont là des formes d'avilissement de la pensée humaine incompatibles avec les principes moraux.

236. Gardons-nous cependant de nous laisser entraîner à des manifestations d'hystérie raciale par haine du colonialisme. Il ne suffit pas de condamner le colonialisme par un feu d'artifice verbal, il faut lui ôter surtout les raisons de survie pour empêcher son retour. Le racisme et la xénophobie sont, à notre avis, les deux sources principales où les tenants du colonialisme jouent pour s'efforcer de ressusciter leur grandeur passée et leur supériorité. Bannir ces sentiments, c'est condamner les puissances coloniales à un isolement progressif, c'est liquider les germes du colonialisme. Il ne faut pas que l'indépendance nouvellement acquise se transforme en dépendance aveugle, car il n'y a pas "d'alternative à la liberté". Nous estimons que la lutte contre le colonialisme doit être menée de pair avec le combat pour le bien-être social et pour le progrès économique, car combattre le colonialisme sur un seul front en négligeant le problème de la faim et de l'ignorance serait une négation pire qu'un crime.

237. L'anticolonialisme ne doit pas nous masquer les visées politiques de tel ou tel bloc idéologique qui cherche à capturer les Etats nouveau-nés, désarmés et faibles, soit pour les placer directement dans leur orbite, soit pour en faire une clientèle commode. En tombant dans les pièges du nouvel impérialisme, on risque d'être ravalé au rang d'un simple rouage participant au fonctionnement du mouvement d'une horloge. Dans ce cas, l'indépendance pour laquelle on lutte ne serait qu'une indépendance de seconde classe.

238. De l'avis de ma délégation, il serait vain de se livrer à des controverses si l'on n'a pas la même notion de la liberté et de la dignité humaine. Si le langage de la liberté et de l'égalité des peuples n'a pas le même sens, la même signification partout, et n'est seulement qu'un article d'exportation à l'usage des masses pauvres et ignorantes, pour servir la cause que chacun défend, alors la passion dont nous faisons preuve ici pour combattre ce vieux fléau qu'est le colonialisme n'a pas de sens.

239. Ainsi, le chemin de la paix et de la concorde sur lequel nous nous engageons restera toujours plein d'obstacles tant qu'il existera des nations qui, tout en parlant constamment de paix, de liberté et d'émancipation, ne rêvent en fait qu'à étendre leur orgueilleuse puissance au-delà de leurs frontières, soit par les armées, soit par la subversion dont l'action sournoise est pire que les maux colonialistes. Ces nations, trop sûres de leur philosophie, persuadées de détenir la clef de l'avenir et convaincues de leur vocation missionnaire, emploient tous les moyens, fussent-ils les plus brutaux, pour imposer leur domination. Il faut que ces puissances, qui tentent de rééditer l'aventure coloniale, sachent que la dissolution des empires coloniaux a pris désormais de telles proportions que seul le libéralisme le plus conciliant et le plus imaginatif pourrait remplacer leurs obligations passées par des liens volontairement acceptés. Il faut opérer les ajustements nécessaires par l'évaluation sans passion des relations contemporaines de puissances, par la redéfinition de l'intérêt, dégagée des conceptions vulgaires de la grandeur nationale, pour rétablir la confiance, l'amitié et la paix.

240. Ma délégation est une de celles qui ont parrainé le projet de déclaration des 42 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] soumis à l'examen de cette assemblée. Elle pense que le cadre et les idées contenues dans ce projet reflètent fidèlement les principes sacrés de la Charte des Nations Unies et espère qu'il sera adopté par la plus large majorité.

La séance est levée à 19 h 25.

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. TSATSOS (Grèce): L'ère coloniale est une étape récente de l'histoire universelle, dont les derniers vestiges sont en voie de disparaître rapidement de ce monde. Il s'agit là d'un phénomène dont personne ne doute aujourd'hui. De ce fait surgissent certains problèmes. Mais avant de les aborder, et pour écarter bien des malentendus — d'ailleurs absolument superflus dans cette atmosphère déjà surchargée de suspicions où nous vivons —, il serait peut-être utile de définir le concept historique de la colonie et du colonialisme.

2. Le concept moderne de la colonie est bien différent de celui des anciens. Une colonie, c'est la domination, par la force, qu'exerce un peuple organisé disposant de son propre territoire — disons donc un Etat — sur un peuple habitant un autre territoire, et ceci quelle que soit la forme juridique de cette domination et de l'organisation qu'elle implique. Le colonialisme, c'est l'ensemble des faits qui se rapportent à la création et au maintien des colonies des temps modernes. Cette définition des colonies et du colonialisme est peut-être plus restreinte que d'autres ne le veulent accepter, mais elle présente l'avantage de ne pas donner lieu à de graves controverses. Il faut ajouter que le colonialisme n'est pas la seule forme que revête la domination d'un peuple sur un autre. Aussi, qui ne condamne pas toutes les formes de cette domination manque, selon toute évidence, de conséquence logique et morale.

3. Au moment de la disparition du colonialisme, nous connaissons déjà — chose rare — le verdict moral de l'histoire en ce qui le concerne. Pour autant qu'il a entravé l'évolution des peuples au lieu de la faciliter, ce fut l'une des pires formes de la domination de l'homme sur l'homme. Dans ce sens, il fut la prolongation de l'esclavagisme. Par contre, dans la mesure où il a permis aux peuples colonisés d'accéder à un niveau culturel et social supérieur, le colonialisme fut un facteur positif de l'évolution mondiale. Quoi qu'il en soit, il est maintenant destiné à disparaître et, sur cette constatation, l'opinion mondiale est unanime; je ne pense pas qu'il existe une seule nation, dans notre grande famille mondiale, qui veuille ou qui puisse soutenir qu'il existe ou qu'il pourrait exister encore une raison d'être du colonialisme.

4. La disparition d'une ère historique pose toujours un problème identique: que faut-il oublier? de quoi doit-on se souvenir? Les souvenirs du colonialisme, pour une très grande part, comportent pour tous les peuples, mais surtout pour les peuples colonisés, une profonde amertume dont personne ne conteste le bien-fondé. Cette amertume trouble l'image de l'unanimité dans la condamnation que la conscience du monde entier prononce à l'égard du colonialisme. Savoir oublier le mal qu'on a subi est parfois une nécessité. Cette nécessité est d'autant plus impérative dans le cadre de l'activité politique. C'est d'autant plus vrai de nos jours, du moins pour ceux qui, sans complexes psychologiques obscurcissant leurs vues et déviant leur action, désirent vraiment le renforcement de la cohésion nécessaire au maintien de la communauté internationale et de la paix dans le monde.

5. Nul ne doute et ne saurait douter que le principe de la liberté des hommes et des peuples ne peut pas être considéré comme effectivement réalisé par son application dans une seule partie du monde. Ce n'est que par sa consécration mondiale, ce n'est qu'en couvrant de sa pourpre royale le monde tout entier, que la liberté des hommes et des peuples se réalisera. Nul ne le conteste et nul ne pourrait oser le contester. C'est à travers cette dernière constatation qu'on entrevoit l'une des plus belles victoires en perspective de l'humanité. Cette victoire sera d'autant plus grande qu'elle se complètera et étendra son apothéose finale sous le seul poids moral de l'idée de liberté.

6. On se rappellera qu'aux Amériques, celle du Nord aussi bien que celle du Sud, le colonialisme s'est plié devant la bravoure et le courage des patriotes et la force des armes. Plus tard, en Asie, il a dû battre en retraite, surtout grâce à la superbe résistance morale dont les peuples asiatiques ont su faire preuve. En Afrique, enfin, l'accès à l'indépendance de tant de peuples, dont nous nous réjouissons de voir parmi nous aujourd'hui les dignes représentants, fut d'une part, bien entendu, le fruit de la détermination de ces peuples de conquérir leur place parmi les peuples libres, mais fut, d'autre part, le fruit du mûrissement en Europe de cette vaste conscience libérale et pacifique se trouvant à la base de changements politiques qui déterminent la fin de l'ère coloniale. Il serait à la fois injuste et dangereux de vouloir oublier cette réalité qui, admettons-le, constitue de plus la seule, la vraie garantie de la victoire finale et définitive de la liberté dans un monde sans guerre.

7. La disparition du colonialisme en Afrique et partout ailleurs où il continue à s'accrocher encore n'est plus qu'une question de temps. Personne n'en doute, mais il serait naïf de croire que cette disparition puisse être instantanée. Défaire le mal tout en prenant soin de conserver ce qu'il y a de bien, défaire ce qui fut accumulé au cours de plusieurs dizaines d'années est une opération de très grande envergure qui, pour réussir, doit être réalisée sans lenteurs, mais aussi avec prudence et avec un sens profond des responsabilités qu'elle comporte. Chaque cas présente des particularités qui lui sont propres. La Charte elle-même prévoit plusieurs voies d'évolution. L'essentiel est de garantir que, dans chaque cas, la volonté librement exprimée des peuples sera le facteur déterminant; c'est là le dénominateur commun dans cette vaste opération contre les vestiges du colonialisme. Ceux qui prétendent qu'une opération éclair est possible, en l'occurrence, sur une échelle mondiale se proposent un but impossible. Nous voulons espérer que l'évolution de nos débats prouvera qu'en définitive on ne veut pas compromettre ce qui est possible en demandant l'impossible.

8. Mais, si la disparition de ce qui reste du colonialisme ne peut être instantanée, elle peut — et, puisqu'elle peut, elle doit — être rapide. De plus, il faut reconnaître que, pour autant que le processus de cette disparition ne suit pas le rythme accéléré que l'on aurait souhaité, le blâme doit en être porté surtout par certaines puissances coloniales qui ont appliqué une politique en contradiction avec le courant de l'histoire et aussi avec les intérêts réels de ces mêmes puissances dans le cadre de la perspective de leur propre avenir. Il s'ensuit que toute puissance coloniale a le devoir impératif d'accélérer la libération des peuples qui vivent encore sous sa domination, et ce conformément à un plan, un plan détaillé prévoyant des étapes. Et, comme je l'ai souligné tout à l'heure, les puissances coloniales n'ont pas seulement le devoir impératif d'agir ainsi; elles ont aussi tout intérêt à le faire, car ce n'est qu'en agissant de la sorte qu'elles donneront une preuve péremptoire de leur bonne foi, une preuve qu'elles agissent de telle sorte, non pas par la force des choses, mais parce que leur propre conscience leur indique la nécessité morale de mettre fin au colonialisme aussi rapidement que possible.

9. Si les puissances coloniales, pour parvenir à ce but, ont besoin qu'on leur fasse confiance, accordons-leur cette confiance. Et ce n'est pas un geste que je propose. Ma pensée a ses raisons. Si la victoire africaine avait été gagnée uniquement sur le sol africain, si cette victoire n'était pas devenue un élément constitutif de la conscience européenne elle-même, la confiance que je propose pourrait, avec raison, être refusée. Mais la victoire africaine a été gagnée, comme j'ai cru devoir le dire, non seulement en Afrique, mais aussi en Europe. J'estime que cette dernière constatation est d'une importance capitale. Elle nous permet d'entrevoir la vraie perspective du problème dans sa projection future, la seule, par ailleurs, qui puisse préoccuper d'une façon constructive notre pensée au moment où nous nous penchons sur la question de la liquidation du colonialisme. Le fait que celui-ci a été combattu sur son propre terrain, que l'opinion publique des puissances coloniales se lève presque unanime contre la prolongation injustifiée de ce régime que les données historiques ont condamné, nous garantit non seulement sa disparition, mais sa disparition rapide et définitive. Aucun gouvernement, aucune puissance sur terre ne pourra s'opposer à cette force morale qui jaillit du fond de la conscience des peuples, libérale de par sa nature.

10. La maturité politique et la formation historique et sociologique dont ont fait preuve les représentants des nouveaux Etats africains constituent une preuve de l'évolution de l'élite des peuples africains. Elles démontrent la possibilité d'une évolution générale de ces peuples. Mais il nous faut constater qu'il existe une différence de niveau dans le développement politique déjà acquis et le développement économique d'un certain nombre des anciennes colonies. De ce fait, un problème très difficile à résoudre est posé. Ce qu'il faut dire — et dire avec emphase — c'est qu'il est exclu de retarder l'indépendance politique pour attendre que l'évolution économique atteigne un degré correspondant. Il s'ensuit une obligation morale des peuples dont le développement économique dépasse la moyenne, obligation qui, pour être d'ordre moral, n'en est pas moins urgente. C'est l'obligation d'aider, sans aucune ingérence politique et sans aucun bénéfice direct, le monde africain à développer son économie. A considérer les choses de loin, agir ainsi c'est accomplir une double fonction, c'est agir avec justice et, en même temps, dans son propre intérêt; car ce n'est qu'en ajoutant, sur un pied d'égalité, le monde africain comme facteur actif à l'économie mondiale qu'on pourra aller vers un équilibre plus stable et un niveau plus élevé de cette économie.

11. Tout en étant Athénien, et fier de l'être, j'honore Sparte et son laconisme. J'ai tâché d'être bref; je n'ajouterai que quelques mots. Je sais qu'il fut un temps, d'ailleurs assez proche, où le mot "jamais" était le seul qu'on eût opposé, peut-être même assaisonné d'un certain dédain, aux idéalistes qui auraient entrepris la campagne anticolonialiste et qui auraient soutenu tout ce qu'à présent nous considérons tous comme une simple évidence. Mais quand on est facteur actif de l'histoire du monde, il faut savoir que c'est une grave erreur que d'employer le mot "jamais".

12. La Grèce antique a créé l'idée de la liberté et l'idéal de la démocratie. Nous en sommes fiers. Mais nous sommes bien plus fiers de l'exemple que, depuis sa renaissance, au commencement du siècle passé, jusqu'à nos jours, la Grèce moderne a donné au monde par ses sacrifices et son attachement à l'idée de la liberté et de la dignité humaines. La nation grecque salue la fin du colonialisme comme une conquête humaine d'importance universelle, à la réalisation de laquelle elle a contribué par toutes les forces dont elle dispose.

13. M. PETER (Hongrie) [traduit de l'anglais]: En guise d'introduction, je citerai un vieux proverbe africain: "Lorsque les hommes se rejoignent par l'esprit, ce qui était éloigné n'est plus loin de venir." Ce proverbe appartient à une antique tradition des peuples de l'Afrique orientale. Il est toujours vivant dans la langue swahili et nous apporte un enseignement dans le présent débat.

14. Je tiens en le citant à rendre un hommage au moins symbolique à la tradition ancestrale de pensée toujours vivante chez les peuples qui sortent peu à peu des ténèbres de l'ère coloniale. Si longs et si destructeurs qu'aient été les siècles d'esclavage dans de nombreux territoires coloniaux, d'antiques traditions survivent partout sous forme de légendes, de chants, de proverbes, de paroles écrites ou gravées, de coutumes et de monuments populaires, invariablement imprégnés de valeurs culturelles. Ces peuples n'ont pas oublié leur propre histoire. Celle-ci se transmet oralement de génération en génération. Nous voyons déjà, et nous verrons toujours davantage, revivre la vie nationale, renaître les anciennes valeurs culturelles à l'aube de l'indépendance et s'éveiller la conscience de tous les peuples; ce mouvement aidera à façonner efficacement la vie économique et politique dans l'ère nouvelle qui commence pour eux. Leur renaissance viendra enrichir le patrimoine de toutes les nations.

15. Le proverbe que je viens de citer contient une vérité essentielle, qui touche directement à l'effondrement actuel du système colonial. On aurait difficilement pu imaginer, il y a quelques années, cette rapide évolution vers la liberté et l'indépendance des peuples des anciens territoires coloniaux. Parmi les nombreux éléments qui ont facilité cette heureuse évolution, l'un des plus frappants est l'effort commun de ceux qui luttent depuis des générations contre le système colonial. L'esprit des populations et celui de leurs chefs nationaux se sont peu à peu identifiés, et c'est ainsi que ce qui était éloigné s'est peu à peu réalisé.

17. Si nous pouvions tous interpréter le système colonial comme le font les peuples qui y furent soumis pendant des générations, il nous serait plus aisé de parvenir à une unité de vues. Car, outre toutes ses significations accessoires, la notion de colonialisme a deux acceptions essentielles. Celles-ci s'affrontent dans les présents débats dès que le ton tourne à la controverse. Le mot n'a pas le même sens pour les puissances coloniales et leurs successeurs que pour les peuples soumis au régime colonial. Pour les premiers, le colonialisme n'a rien de malhonnête. Naguère, en Europe, l'un des principaux critères de l'autorité internationale et mondiale de certains Etats était la possession de colonies aussi nombreuses que possible. J'ai pu voir dans mon enfance, à la fin de l'Empire austro-hongrois, qu'outre l'assujettissement d'un grand nombre de nationalités, l'un des objectifs principaux était de chercher à obtenir ou à conquérir des territoires aussi riches que possible en Asie ou en Afrique, pour les administrer en tant que colonies. L'attaque de l'Empire éthiopien par l'Italie mussolinienne en 1935 a été l'une des dernières manifestations de cet appétit colonial. Malheureusement, ces temps ne sont pas entièrement révolus. Il existe encore des gouvernements qui n'estiment pas malhonnête d'avoir un ministère des colonies ou des affaires coloniales, et de former des fonctionnaires qui se sentent honorés d'être nommés à des fonctions d'administration coloniale.

18. L'autre aspect du colonialisme est totalement, essentiellement différent; en fait, il est entièrement à l'opposé. Aux yeux des peuples qui ont subi le régime colonial, le colonialisme est le mal le plus haïssable qui soit sur terre. Il ne serait pas superflu de répéter les déclarations faites par des délégations de pays d'Asie et d'Afrique au sujet des drames de l'ère coloniale, car il est utile, pour préparer un avenir meilleur, de ne pas oublier le passé et ses survivances. Je m'abstiendrai cependant de le faire. Je me bornerai à résumer les impressions générales que j'ai retirées de leurs déclarations.

19. Si les souffrances humaines pouvaient être mesurées et comparées, on pourrait affirmer que les siècles d'esclavage colonial ont apporté aux sociétés humaines plus encore de souffrances, de pertes, de destructions et d'appauvrissement que toutes les guerres qui ont eu lieu dans l'histoire de l'humanité; ajoutons que la plupart des guerres ont été dirigées contre des peuples soumis au régime colonial, et à leur détriment. Mais, même si les souffrances humaines échappent à toute comparaison, le rapprochement a son intérêt et il indique la signification du colonialisme pour ceux qui en connaissent à fond la véritable histoire.

20. Toute résolution adoptée en conclusion des présents débats ne peut avoir de valeur et d'efficacité réelles pour les peuples soumis au régime colonial que si elle est fondée sur l'interprétation exacte du mot "colonialisme" qui a cours chez ceux dont le destin a été, ou est encore, de se trouver sous la domination coloniale. La déclaration présentée par le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique [A/4502] et le projet de résolution dû à un certain nombre d'Etats [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] sont fondés sur cette interprétation. Il y aurait lieu de rapprocher le second de la première pour ce qui est des conditions de mise en œuvre. Plus nombreuses seront les délégations qui comprennent le sens véritable que les peuples coloniaux attachent au mot "colonialisme", plus il sera facile d'exprimer les résultats des présents débats sous une forme qui apporte une aide concrète à la lutte contre la domination coloniale.

21. Avant d'essayer d'énoncer les principales caractéristiques d'une résolution possédant des chances normales de se révéler efficace, je voudrais, avec la permission du Président, dire quelques mots des principes fondamentaux dont s'inspire ma délégation lorsqu'elle s'associe aux efforts conjugués tendant à tirer le meilleur parti de ces échanges de vues. Aux yeux de ceux pour qui tout ce débat a été engagé, il n'existe qu'une seule justification: ce ne peut être que la conscience de la solidarité humaine. Toutes les délégations qui, lors des débats en cours, ont exigé l'immédiate liquidation de tout ce qui reste du passé colonial ont fait preuve d'une profonde solidarité humaine. Le plus sûr garant de l'utilité de nos travaux est la solidarité sans réserve avec les peuples au bénéfice desquels la question a été inscrite à l'ordre du jour. Toute tentative pour éluder ou retarder une résolution efficace ou faire dévier le débat montrerait que le sentiment sincère de solidarité humaine a cessé de jouer son rôle véritable et que d'autres intérêts ont pris sa place — des intérêts étrangers à la cause de l'élimination du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes. Le Secrétaire général a bien voulu fournir un exemple excellent à cet égard en distribuant un prétendu rapport établi par un représentant spécial extrêmement distingué; je ne m'attarderai pas sur ce point. Pour prendre une position efficace sur les problèmes qui se posent aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, en se fondant sur la solidarité humaine, l'Assemblée générale devra établir un document réellement efficace et significatif; elle devra se garder de toute tendance à y peindre le colonialisme sous des couleurs agréables; elle devra y condamner sans équivoque et sans réserve l'ère du colonialisme et y préciser que l'ONU ne tolère plus de régime colonial.

22. Il n'y a aucune raison, juste ou injuste, d'embellir l'image, ce qui ne servirait même pas les intérêts des puissances colonialistes. Il est inutile de vouloir faire un tableau flatteur. Les peuples qui connaissent à fond le colonialisme ne se laisseront pas duper par une image déformée. Il se peut que certaines personnes d'origine coloniale, qui ont perdu tout contact étroit avec leur peuple, s'y laissent prendre, mais il est impossible de tromper les peuples eux-mêmes. Au contraire, en essayant d'embellir, on n'arrive qu'à aggraver la situation à tous les points de vue, dans les territoires coloniaux aussi bien qu'au sein de notre organisation. Un exemple me permettra d'illustrer cela.

23. Dans un rapport sur la situation en Afrique rédigé il y a peu de temps par un écrivain noir américain, à la suite d'un voyage qu'il y a fait l'été dernier, l'auteur rapporte une surprenante conversation qu'il a eue avec un colon de race blanche au Kenya, personnalité politique assez importante qui a participé à la conférence de Lancaster House. S'adressant à cet écrivain noir américain, le colon a dit:

"J'estime que le Kenya devrait être indépendant. Il faudra bien que les Africains gouvernent un jour le pays. Mais je pense que le Gouvernement britannique doit, au préalable, nous donner 10 millions de livres pour mettre en œuvre un programme complet d'éducation destiné à ces Africains. Cela prendra de 10 à 20 ans. C'est la seule façon de procéder. Je l'ai dit à la tribune du Parlement et je l'ai dit au Ministre des colonies. Mais je m'aperçois maintenant que ce projet n'aboutira pas. Aussi ai-je demandé à M. Mboya et à ses amis africains de nous donner, à nous Européens, les assurances ci-après: la promesse que la terre et les biens ne seront pas confisqués lorsque les Africains seront au pouvoir et la promesse que nous serons libres d'envoyer nos enfants dans les écoles de notre choix. J'ai demandé au Gouvernement britannique de bloquer certains fonds appartenant au Kenya afin que les Africains respectent leurs engagements une fois l'accord conclu."

A mon avis, il serait assez instructif de citer d'autres parties de cette conversation, mais je ne me propose pas de le faire, car elles sont d'une nature encore plus explosive.

24. Pour bien comprendre les aspects dangereux, voir dramatiques, d'une attitude aussi tristement humoristique, il nous faut nous souvenir que la conversation dont il est question a eu lieu à Nairobi (Kenya) au moment précis où éclatait la crise à Léopoldville. L'attitude de certaines personnalités dans les territoires coloniaux reflète dans une grande mesure celle des puissances coloniales et de leurs alliés qui font des déclarations officielles ou semi-officielles en vue de corriger le tableau de la situation coloniale dans le passé et le présent. Toutes ces tentatives pour retoucher le tableau ne feront que créer des occasions de nouvelles tragédies. La marche de l'histoire frappe impitoyablement ceux qui essaient de faire dévier les forces véritables de l'évolution.

25. Voici un autre exemple, qui se rapporte à une expérience qui nous est commune à tous.

26. Au cours des deux ou trois dernières semaines, nous avons constaté que, pour certaines questions donnant lieu à controverse, telles que celles qui sont liées à la situation au Congo, les puissances occidentales ont réussi, avec l'aide de leurs alliés militaires et malgré l'opposition de la majorité des délégations d'Asie et d'Afrique, à obtenir la majorité. On respirait les senteurs de la victoire, et quelles senteurs! Mais ceux qui aiment à peindre un tableau flatteur de la situation ne voient pas que de tels actes, qui vont à l'encontre de la volonté commune de la majorité des Etats asiatiques et africains, ne feront qu'aider à élargir le fossé entre les pays africano-asiatiques et les puissances occidentales et à rendre plus aiguës les contradictions. Si, nous plaçant du point de vue des pays socialistes, nous examinons ces événements sous l'angle de la guerre froide, nous sentirions satisfaits de constater que les puissances occidentales minent leurs propres relations avec les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique. Mais nous ne sommes pas animés par un esprit de guerre froide. Nous ne nous réjouissons pas lorsque nous constatons le mécontentement que suscite chez de nombreuses délégations d'Asie et d'Afrique la politique de puissances animées par l'esprit de la guerre froide. Telle n'est pas notre attitude. Nous sommes tellement attachés à la coexistence pacifique que nous voudrions que les anciennes colonies entretiennent avec leurs anciens maîtres des relations amicales fondées sur l'égalité et le respect réciproque. Nous souhaitons la coexistence pacifique de Cuba et des Etats-Unis, des deux Etats du Congo avec la France et la Belgique, et ainsi de suite. C'est ainsi que les illusions nées d'une peinture flattée du colonialisme compromettent les intérêts des puissances occidentales elles-mêmes. Bref, dans l'intérêt de la paix, de la sécurité et de la coexistence pacifique des anciennes colonies et des anciennes puissances coloniales, le document élaboré, pour être positif, utile et efficace, devrait condamner les systèmes coloniaux et viser à éliminer tout ce qui en subsiste.

27. La seconde caractéristique essentielle d'un document positif, utile et efficace résulte logiquement de la condamnation du régime colonial: un tel document doit souligner combien il est urgent de liquider immédiatement tous les systèmes coloniaux existants. Tout retard ne ferait qu'aggraver la situation. A cet égard, M. Janos Kádár, premier secrétaire du parti des travailleurs socialistes de Hongrie, a prononcé ici même, en sa qualité de Président de ma délégation, les paroles suivantes au cours du débat général:

"Les bases du système colonial ont été tellement ébranlées que toute tentative en vue d'entraver le progrès de la libération, loin de l'arrêter, ne fera que l'accélérer." [883ème séance, par. 30.]

Oui, l'accélérer; toute tentative pour arrêter ou faire dévier le processus engendrera des actes de violence chez les peuples soumis au régime colonial. Dans la situation actuelle du monde, il existe des conditions permettant de résoudre immédiatement et pacifiquement ces problèmes. Ce n'est pas par simple coïncidence que notre organisation mondiale traite presque simultanément de questions ayant trait au désarmement général et total, et de l'élimination du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes. Les deux questions sont interdépendantes et la possibilité de les régler résulte de la situation internationale actuelle où le nouvel équilibre des forces est favorable tant au désarmement qu'à la liquidation du système colonial. Les imposantes forces politiques, morales et matérielles de l'Union soviétique et de l'ensemble des pays socialistes ne promettent rien de bon aux puissances coloniales dans le déroulement des relations internationales actuelles si ces puissances s'obstinent à faire échec aux mouvements d'indépendance des peuples colonisés. Les forces de ces peuples, jointes à celles des nations récemment libérées d'Asie et d'Afrique, sont si considérables qu'elles suffiraient à faire aboutir les revendications par la violence; et c'est ainsi que cela se passera certainement si la solution se fait attendre. Il est déjà presque trop tard, comme nous le montrent les événements récents au Congo. Les peuples des anciennes colonies et des colonies existantes ainsi que leurs chefs souhaiteraient éviter le recours à la violence et agir de manière pacifique. Si, à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, nous savons entendre le message de notre temps, nous aurons aidé ces peuples à témoigner de leur bonne volonté. En conclusion: dans l'intérêt d'une solution pacifique, un document positif, utile et efficace devra souligner l'urgence de trouver une solution aux problèmes des territoires coloniaux.

28. De nombreux orateurs ont déjà dit combien il importait que l'Organisation s'attache à l'étude de la proposition soviétique sur le problème du colonialisme dans son ensemble. En signalant à l'attention de l'Assemblée générale le problème des peuples colonisés, le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique a rendu service non seulement à ceux-ci, mais aussi à l'Organisation et même aux puissances coloniales — oui, même à elles. L'Organisation s'est vu offrir une excellente occasion de proclamer le message attendu qui ouvrira une ère nouvelle à toute l'humanité, et les puissances coloniales se sont vu offrir une aide sincère en vue de liquider décemment, honnêtement et dans la paix, l'héritage malhonnête du passé.

29. Rendre l'indépendance à tous les pays coloniaux ne peut avoir que des conséquences bienfaisantes, non seulement pour ces pays, mais pour chacun de nous, et ce pour deux raisons. Cette évolution contribuera à faire disparaître les tensions et à faire régner une situation plus favorable à une détente internationale dont tous les pays, grands ou petits, bénéficieront sans exception. En même temps, la famille des nations s'enrichira de la participation à l'œuvre commune de nations ayant récemment acquis leur indépendance. Les peuples et leurs représentants, fortifiés par leur lutte pour l'indépendance, pour la paix et pour des conditions de vie humaines, apportent généralement aux organisations internationales des qualités de puissance et de bonne volonté qui faciliteront la solution juste de problèmes aussi controversés que la paix, la sécurité et le progrès social. Permettez-moi d'exprimer le vœu que les présents débats puissent se révéler utiles à cette fin.

30. Le PRESIDENT [traduit de l'anglais]: Avant de donner la parole à l'orateur suivant, je voudrais dire que, d'après les renseignements dont je dispose, je crois qu'il serait possible d'épuiser la liste des orateurs inscrits pour aujourd'hui et ainsi de ne pas siéger cet après-midi, si les délégués sont prêts à prolonger la séance jusqu'après 14 heures, au plus tard jusqu'à 14 h 30. Avec votre assentiment, je vous propose de faire ainsi.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

31. M. GARIN (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation suit avec la plus grande attention la discussion de l'importante question examinée en ce moment, notamment parce que l'interprétation que lui donnent de nombreuses délégations exige quelques éclaircissements; telle est la raison de mon intervention. De nombreux orateurs qui sont montés à la tribune au cours de ces débats ont tenté, directement ou indirectement, d'impliquer le Portugal dans le problème de l'élimination du colonialisme dans le monde. Cependant, plus j'entends parler du colonialisme en tant que système économique et politique, de ses caractères fondamentaux et des différents aspects qu'il présente, plus je vois clairement que la pratique du colonialisme est tout à fait étrangère à la nation portugaise. Quels que soient les erreurs, les malentendus, les allusions et les insinuations que des orateurs de bonne ou de mauvaise foi ont énoncés en ce qui concerne la structure morale, politique et juridique de mon pays, il n'en est pas moins vrai que le colonialisme n'est pratiqué sous aucune de ses formes au sein de la nation portugaise.

32. Depuis des siècles, le Portugal est une nation unitaire, ce qu'a toujours reconnu la communauté des nations. C'est, comme beaucoup d'autres, un pays à races multiples; nos territoires et notre population sont répartis sur plusieurs continents, comme le sont aussi ceux d'autres nations. Mais nous ne formons qu'une unité, entièrement indépendante et massive — qu'il s'agisse de notre structure politique, juridique et sociale — et qu'un seul pays animé d'une même et vigoureux sentiment national. Nulle part dans mon pays il n'existe de peuples asservis à une domination étrangère, car tous nos peuples, où qu'ils habitent, forment le corps et l'âme de la nation. Quant aux initiatives économiques, aucune section de la nation ne détient de droits ou d'avantages spéciaux s'appliquant à d'autres parties ou à l'ensemble de la nation: tous les ressortissants portugais, de quelque race, origine ou religion qu'ils soient, jouissent, où qu'ils se trouvent, des mêmes privilèges économiques et vivent dans des conditions de stricte égalité.

33. Du point de vue juridique, il n'y a pas de différence entre les Portugais des différentes parties de la nation: ils possèdent tous la nationalité portugaise et peuvent se prévaloir des droits et possibilités qui lui sont attachés. Quelles que soient leur origine, leur race ou leur religion, les Portugais, de par la loi, ont toujours bénéficié des mêmes droits et possibilités et ont eu accès aux emplois les plus élevés, qu'ils soient publics ou privés; il en est de même de leurs droits dans le cadre de la vie publique ou sociale. Une nation qui a eu pour Président de la Cour suprême de justice, à Lisbonne, un ressortissant portugais de race non européenne, né dans une province d'outre-mer — caractéristique qu'il partageait avec des membres du Cabinet et de nombreux autres hauts fonctionnaires d'Etat —, n'est certes pas un pays qui applique des doctrines colonialistes. La tradition est ancienne et enracinée; elle n'a pas été improvisée en une nuit pour faire plaisir à certains membres de cette assemblée. Nous n'avons jamais failli à cette tradition d'égalité. Tous les ressortissants sont assurés des mêmes droits fondamentaux et nous nous enorgueillons à juste titre d'être depuis cinq siècles les pionniers de l'antiracisme aux quatre coins du monde. A cet égard, nous n'avons certes à recevoir de leçons ou de conseils de personne, si édifiants soient ces conseils et ces leçons. Nous récusons, en particulier, ceux qui semblent n'avoir découvert que tout dernièrement que le racisme offense Dieu.

34. Les provinces portugaises d'outre-mer, tant politiquement que juridiquement, font et ont toujours fait partie intégrante de la nation, jouissent en cette qualité de l'autonomie administrative et financière et dépensent en totalité leurs propres revenus. Depuis 1821, date à laquelle se réunit notre premier parlement au lendemain des guerres napoléoniennes, ces provinces participent activement, par l'entremise de leurs représentants à notre assemblée nationale élus au suffrage direct, à la formation et au fonctionnement des organes centraux de la souveraineté dans des conditions de stricte égalité. Cette situation, qui est l'aboutissement d'une longue évolution historique, est particulièrement remarquable, car elle ne correspond pas aux idées préconçues de l'étranger, pour qui les mobiles économiques tout-puissants et les sentiments d'orgueil racial sont des éléments inséparables des relations entre peuples de différents continents. L'observateur impartial parcourant les territoires portugais ne peut manquer de constater cette identité absolue des populations portugaises, dont la race et la religion peuvent être différentes, mais qui ont le même idéal national. Le climat moral noté par l'observateur impartial correspond à la réalité profonde, à savoir qu'il n'existe qu'une seule nation dans l'esprit de la population, dans ses institutions et dans son mode de vie. Il faut reconnaître que la nation portugaise est un exemple unique, que l'on ne peut apprécier avec des normes étrangères — pour ne rien dire du fait que de telles normes seraient appliquées non pas dans l'intérêt de notre peuple, mais aux fins égoïstes et hypocrites de certains peuples étrangers. Mais, ici non plus, nos particularités n'ont pas été conçues en une nuit pour les besoins de la cause; elles ont leurs racines dans notre caractère national, elles ont été forgées par les événements de l'histoire et consolidées par des siècles de communion et de fraternité entre nos populations.

36. Le Président du Conseil des ministres du Portugal, dans un discours qu'il a récemment prononcé devant l'Assemblée nationale à Lisbonne, a déclaré ceci:

"La notion de supériorité raciale nous est étrangère, mais la notion de fraternité humaine est bien de chez nous. Il en est de même de la notion d'égalité devant la loi, fondée sur le principe du mérite égal et qu'acceptent toutes les sociétés éprises de progrès.

"Dans tous ces territoires, le mélange des populations devait faciliter le processus de formation d'une société multiraciale. Toutefois, l'élément le plus important, l'élément véritablement essentiel, a été la volonté d'établir des contacts familiers avec la population locale, de donner à tous les mêmes possibilités de progrès économique et social, le souci de faire progresser la culture et de faire régner, même loin de la mère patrie, un code moral plus exigeant dans la vie publique et dans la vie privée. De tels moyens ont nécessairement produit leurs effets avec lenteur, mais, si ces méthodes ont édifié une collectivité dotée d'une certaine cohésion, nous pouvons affirmer que nous avons réussi dans notre tâche: nous sommes parvenus à assurer l'indépendance et l'égalité des peuples qui ont formé, avec leurs territoires, une entité nationale.

"Nous inspirant du même idéal, nous avons travaillé pendant plus de trois siècles au Brésil, et ce que l'on constate dans ce pays est véritablement extraordinaire. Le Brésil ouvre ses portes à presque tous les peuples du monde, et ces peuples se fondent dans la diversité de sa population. Il les absorbe, les assimile et cependant ne perd rien de son originalité. Il n'est pas de pays, formé d'un grand nombre de races différentes, qui puisse se comparer au Brésil quant à l'absence totale de préjugés raciaux en matière de législation, d'organisation politique et de comportement social. Le Brésil est la plus importante expérience de société multiraciale des temps modernes, et en même temps un exemple magnifique des résultats que peut produire la transposition de la civilisation occidentale dans les régions tropicales et sur le continent américain. Pacifique, stable, dynamique et épris de progrès, le Brésil, même lorsqu'il améliore ses propres créations, n'a pas à renier ses origines ou sa mère-patrie.

"Une société multiraciale est donc une possibilité, qu'elle soit du type luso-américain comme au Brésil, luso-asiatique comme à Goa, ou luso-africain comme en Angola ou en Mozambique.

"Il n'y a rien, il n'y a jamais rien eu qui permette d'accepter une opinion contraire. Il y a tout simplement ceci, qu'une telle société ne peut connaître aucune manifestation de racisme, qu'il soit blanc, noir ou jaune, et qu'elle exige une longue évolution et des siècles de labeur continu dans le cadre des principes sur lesquels se fonde la communauté portugaise."

37. Dans le discours qu'il a prononcé devant l'Assemblée nationale portugaise, le Président du Conseil des ministres, M. Oliveira Salazar, déclara encore ceci:

"Sans doute pourra-t-on découvrir dans notre travail de nombreux défauts, et nous sommes les premiers à déplorer que nos ressources limitées ne nous aient pas permis d'aller plus avant. Il nous reste beaucoup à faire, tout d'abord en ce qui concerne les communications, le développement des moyens d'éducation, l'organisation sanitaire. Mais même dans ces domaines, comme dans de nombreux autres, lorsqu'on nous compare aux autres pays, nous n'avons pas lieu de rougir. Nos villes, nos villages, nos chemins de fer, nos ports, les projets hydro-électriques, la préparation des terres irriguées et sa distribution à la population quelle que soit sa couleur, l'exploitation des richesses du sous-sol, l'installation de nos services publics, tout cela compte, certes. Mais il importe encore bien plus d'avoir créé un climat de sécurité, de paix et de relations fraternelles entre les éléments très divers de la population, qui représente dans l'Afrique d'aujourd'hui quelque chose d'exceptionnel; en effet, tous ceux qui disposent des fonds nécessaires peuvent réaliser des progrès matériels, mais ils ne peuvent créer la même œuvre que nous."

38. Ces éléments dont je viens de parler, qui ont fait l'unité de la nation dans la pluralité de ses territoires, exigent aussi une unité d'orientation politique réalisable avec l'aide de tous ses éléments, mais ce principe est sans influence sur certains problèmes d'organisation administrative, ou sur la détermination d'un degré plus ou moins élevé de décentralisation et d'autonomie. A ce sujet, le Président du Conseil des ministres du Portugal a déclaré, il y a quelques jours, ce qui suit:

"Depuis quelques dizaines d'années, le développement économique des provinces d'outre-mer, notamment de Goa, de l'Angola et du Mozambique, a été très poussé et, parallèlement aux progrès de l'économie et de l'éducation, on a vu apparaître un nombre toujours plus grand d'individus capables d'administrer les territoires. Il y a là un phénomène naturel, la tendance à l'élargissement des attributions à mesure que les besoins croissent et que les moyens disponibles augmentent. Par ailleurs, la vaste superficie des territoires et même les distances qui les séparent, ainsi que le caractère particulier de certaines difficultés qui se posent à eux, rendront inévitable la remise à des organismes locaux de secteurs d'administration plus étendus. Il pourra en résulter un gain de temps et même, en théorie du moins, une appréciation plus juste des conditions locales; mais les compétences d'une élite nombreuse demeurent indispensables si l'on veut enrichir les services de l'Etat. A mon avis, la seule atteinte concevable à l'esprit d'unité serait d'imaginer une sorte d'exclusivité ou de privilège en vertu desquels un Portugais serait privé du droit de travailler ou de servir suivant ses capacités dans une partie quelconque de notre territoire. N'avons-nous pas à Lisbonne des gens de Goa ou du Mozambique, en Guinée des Européens et des gens du Cap-Vert, au Mozambique des habitants de l'Angola ou de Guinée, et à Timor des gens du Mozambique? Il doit continuer à en être ainsi.

"Le gouvernement ne rejette l'idée d'aucune modification de la structure administrative. Il ne s'opposera qu'à celles qui pourraient compromettre l'unité de la nation et l'intérêt général."

39. Il est assurément déplorable que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, créée pour défendre la paix et l'harmonie entre les nations, ait été utilisée par certaines délégations comme un théâtre où lancer des attaques calomnieuses et de fausses accusations contre un pays qui, plus qu'aucun autre peut-être dans l'histoire du monde, a eu l'intuition de construire dans la foi, la fraternité raciale et la tolérance religieuse une entité politique et humaine qui, dans notre monde agité, vit et travaille en paix dans quatre continents sans que sa population manifeste le moindre malaise. Nous ne permettrons à aucun étranger de venir troubler cet état de paix. Certains de ceux qui se sont eux-mêmes institués les défenseurs de l'anticolonialisme soutiennent que les colonies ne peuvent être intégrées en un organisme politique unitaire par un simple trait de plume ou par une fiction juridique — ce sont là, je crois, les expressions utilisées par certaines délégations — et que le Portugal s'était borné à apposer une étiquette sur ses territoires d'outre-mer, expédient commode pour faire face à la vague anticolonialiste. Ceux qui ont fait de bonne foi une telle déclaration — et je tiens à souligner que ce ne fut pas le cas de toutes les délégations — témoignent d'une méconnaissance totale de l'idéal et des méthodes selon lesquels la nation portugaise s'est formée, selon lesquels aussi ses textes constitutionnels sont nés au cours de l'histoire.

40. Certains de nos détracteurs tentent de convaincre l'Assemblée que nous avons converti en toute hâte des "colonies" en "provinces". Cet argument a déjà été réfuté. Mais, si c'est d'une désignation technique qu'il s'agit, je répondrai sans peine à nos accusateurs de bonne foi, mais mal informés: il n'est absolument pas vrai que le Portugal n'ait donné que récemment à ses territoires hors d'Europe le qualificatif de "provinces". Celui qui prendrait la peine de jeter un coup d'œil sur l'histoire constitutionnelle du Portugal avant de nous attaquer en s'appuyant sur des faits inexacts découvrirait aisément ce qui suit.

41. Le concept politique et administratif de la "province" est une tradition du "common law" portugais ainsi que de son droit coutumier. Le grand historien portugais João de Barros, au XVIème siècle, ainsi que les autres chroniqueurs de l'époque, lorsqu'ils parlent des territoires au-delà des mers, les nomment "provinces". Dans les documents publics du siècle suivant, le XVIIème siècle, on utilise la même désignation. Des lois promulguées en 1663 donnent valeur officielle à l'expression "provinces d'outre-mer". Le terme a depuis été adopté dans les lois constitutionnelles du Portugal. J'aimerais souligner, au bénéfice de mes auditeurs, que les Cortès (Parlement) portugais de 1820, qui ont fourni la base de la première Constitution écrite, ont adopté l'expression "provinces d'outre-mer" comme étant la plus exacte et la plus conforme aux principes de l'unité nationale. Il est évident que les législateurs portugais de 1820 — il y a de cela 140 ans — ne pensaient pas à l'Organisation des Nations Unies ni à aucun autre organisme international lorsqu'ils parlaient en ces termes de nos provinces d'outre-mer.

42. Dans son article 132, la première Constitution, celle de 1821, disait: "L'administration des provinces restera en l'état pour le moment tant qu'elle ne sera pas modifiée par la loi." Le titre X de la Constitution de 1832 porte: "Provinces d'outre-mer". La même expression est adoptée dans le titre X de la Constitution du 2 mai 1842 ainsi que dans l'amendement à la Constitution de 1852 et encore dans la législation de 1867 sur les provinces d'outre-mer. La république n'a pas modifié la tradition. Le titre V de la Constitution de 1911 portait: "Administration des provinces d'outre-mer". La Constitution de 1933, actuellement en vigueur, parle dans son article 135 des "provinces d'outre-mer". En outre, depuis 1612, les provinces d'outre-mer sont considérées comme faisant partie intégrante de la nation portugaise. Le droit public portugais a toujours suivi cette ligne traditionnelle, qui se retrouve de même dans les actes administratifs. L'article 135 de la Constitution actuelle dit: "Les provinces d'outre-mer, en leur qualité de partie intégrante de l'Etat portugais, sont unies entre elles et au Portugal métropolitain." Ce qui est évident aussi, c'est que l'attitude des Portugais depuis le début de leur communion avec les peuples d'outre-mer a été en avance sur leur époque; quant à ce qu'on appelle "le vent de changements" il y a longtemps qu'il a soufflé sur nous. A ceux qui prétendent ne pas comprendre le point de vue portugais, nous devons répondre que nous ne pouvons sacrifier à leur vœux ou à leurs sentiments les intérêts sacrés des populations portugaises rangées dans la communauté nationale.

43. La nation portugaise unitaire est une réalisation historique unique qui a toujours été internationalement reconnue. C'est précisément cet Etat, organisé politiquement et socialement en un Etat unitaire, avec ses provinces d'outre-mer intégrées dans la nation, qui a été accepté à l'unanimité en qualité de Membre de l'ONU. La personnalité d'un Etat est inaliénable et indivisible. Cette personnalité est formée des valeurs spirituelles communes aux populations, ainsi que des valeurs matérielles, c'est-à-dire les territoires qui constituent la personnalité physique de l'Etat. Ainsi, l'indivisibilité de l'Etat signifie l'unité de ses valeurs spirituelles aussi bien que les composantes physiques de l'ensemble. C'est donc l'intégrité et l'unité de l'Etat portugais, au même titre que celles de tout autre Etat admis au sein de l'Organisation, que les Membres de l'ONU se sont engagés à respecter et à protéger. Telle a été la position qu'a toujours prise cette organisation et qui a été réaffirmée tout récemment dans des résolutions du Conseil de sécurité et de cette assemblée. Il est certain qu'aucun Etat unitaire ou fédéral Membre de notre organisation ne tolérerait une démarche visant à le désintégrer. Aucune délégation, si obsédée qu'elle soit par la propagande, n'est fondée en droit ou en éthique à aller aussi loin, et nous protestons solennellement contre ceux qui présentent ici des propositions aussi inadmissibles.

44. Certaines délégations ont lancé ici contre mon pays des attaques calomnieuses, prenant prétexte d'un prétendu colonialisme. Mais leurs véritables intentions nous sont parfaitement claires. Elles veulent semer la discorde où règne la paix, encourager la subversion où existe une parfaite harmonie et faire surgir artificiellement des difficultés nouvelles de manière à rendre encore plus difficile la solution des problèmes complexes qui se posent déjà au monde et dont les pays auxquels je pense sont principalement responsables. Je ne m'adresserai pas à ces délégations malveillantes dont les interventions ne sont visiblement que partisans. Je les ai écoutées avec le mépris qu'elles méritent, ma délégation sachant parfaitement que de tels détracteurs ne s'intéressent pas à la vérité. Je suis convaincu également qu'une ou deux autres délégations, animées comme d'habitude de sentiments hostiles à l'égard du Portugal, ne prendront pas la peine de m'écouter. Mais je regrette tout spécialement les observations formulées par ceux qui se sont laissés emporter par des sentiments inspirés de concepts politiques qui n'ont rien de commun avec le cas du Portugal et ne peuvent être invoqués en l'espèce. Je pense en particulier aux allégations d'une ou deux délégations d'Etats africains.

45. J'aimerais tout d'abord m'adresser à ces délégations africaines et leur exprimer notre vœu et notre intention très sincères de maintenir les relations les plus cordiales avec tous les Etats africains, conformément aux principes de la coexistence pacifique et du bon voisinage qui sont de tradition dans notre politique.

Mon gouvernement est fermement convaincu que les modifications profondes qui se sont produites dans les territoires voisins de mon pays en Afrique — provenant de l'heureuse accession à l'indépendance de ces nouveaux Etats — ne devraient gêner en aucune manière les rapports de confiance et d'amitié réciproques qui existaient auparavant entre nos peuples respectifs; de tels rapports ne pourront qu'influencer les contacts et les échanges commerciaux et culturels nécessaires entre voisins. Dans nos relations avec les nouveaux Etats africains, nous serons toujours guidés par l'application scrupuleuse des principes de la Charte des Nations Unies.

46. De même que les nouveaux Etats africains, nous sommes fortement attachés au retour d'une situation normale sur tout le continent africain; nous aspirons à l'harmonie et aux efforts positifs qui permettront à tous de résoudre les problèmes existants dans une atmosphère de paix et de bonne volonté et d'aménager un avenir de travail et de prospérité profitable à tous. L'intérêt avec lequel mon pays suit la solution des problèmes africains n'est assurément pas moindre que celui des parties les plus directement en cause. Les accusations portées par tel ou tel des Etats africains contre mon pays sont dénuées de tout fondement. Préférant penser que ces délégations se refuseraient à agir de mauvaise foi ou par simple caprice, je suis convaincu que leurs accusations s'expliquent par les informations déformées ou mensongères auxquelles elles ont pu avoir accès.

47. Mon gouvernement a toujours respecté scrupuleusement ses obligations internationales. Nous avons entretenu des relations ininterrompues avec d'autres pays et d'autres gouvernements depuis des siècles et, en ce qui concerne le respect de la loi et des règles de conduite internationale, notre réputation est sans tache. Il n'est pas question pour nous de modifier notre attitude d'Etat responsable et souverain, Membre de l'ONU, uniquement parce que les délégations qui nous attaquent semblent oublier les principes de la maturité parlementaire. Dans le domaine des accusations gratuites, nous pourrions être aussi éloquents que le représentant du Libéria, par exemple. Bien entendu, sous le couvert de l'immunité de l'Assemblée, il est extrêmement aisé de proférer des accusations qu'il n'est pas besoin de prouver. Mais nous ne nous engagerons pas sur la voie de la facilité, car nous ne voulons pas déchoir à nos propres yeux, et nous continuons à croire que l'esprit qui anime l'ONU mérite plus d'égards.

48. Il faut reconnaître qu'au cours des dernières semaines les accusations non fondées ou malveillantes lancées contre le Portugal au sein de l'Organisation, et en particulier lors de débats récents à la Quatrième Commission, ont déjà eu dans mon pays des répercussions marquées, qui n'étaient certainement pas celles que souhaitaient nos détracteurs. Toute personne parcourant ces derniers temps le Portugal, dans ses provinces d'Europe ou d'outre-mer, ou lisant les journaux portugais, aura compris qu'une immense vague d'indignation soulève le pays. Il y a eu des manifestations massives, aussi fortes et intenses dans les provinces d'outre-mer que dans celles d'Europe, contre les tentatives de dénigrement et les attaques verbales dirigées par différentes délégations contre le Portugal. Ces manifestations significatives qui se sont produites quotidiennement, tant dans les grandes que dans les petites villes de la métropole, en Angola, en Mozambique et dans d'autres provinces portugaises d'outre-mer, sont la marque naturelle d'un vif ressentiment devant l'insulte. La presse portugaise d'Europe et d'outre-mer a reproduit pour ce qu'il vaut le texte intégral des accusations portées au sein de l'Organisation. Il en est résulté une réaction immédiate d'indignation et de colère dans la population, dans la nation tout entière, contre ces attaques et contre les pays qui en sont les auteurs, et le patriotisme et la fraternité profondément enracinés qui unissent tous les Portugais, quelles que soient leur origine, leur race, leur couleur ou leur croyance, y ont trouvé l'occasion de se réaffirmer. D'un bout à l'autre du Portugal, des fles du Cap-Vert dans l'Atlantique aux rives éloignées de Timor, dans chaque parcelle du territoire national où des Portugais de toutes races vivent et travaillent dans la paix, s'est élevée une protestation simultanée contre ces accusations calomnieuses, qui ont été repoussées sans nuances, et l'unité et la détermination de la nation portugaise tout entière ne se sont jamais plus fortement exprimées.

49. M. KISSELEV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) [traduit du russe]: Nous sommes en train d'examiner un document historique: la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" [A/4502], soumis à notre examen par la délégation soviétique. Il y est dit que la suppression immédiate du régime colonial et la transformation des colonies actuelles en Etats indépendants créeront les conditions nécessaires pour que se substituent, aux rapports de domination et de sujétion, des rapports basés sur l'égalité des droits, l'amitié et le respect mutuel.

50. Toutefois, ceci ne peut être réalisé tant que le régime colonial existe et, avec lui, la discrimination à l'encontre de pays et de peuples entiers. Les représentants de l'Union soviétique, du Ghana, de la Guinée, de la République arabe unie, de l'Arabie Saoudite, de Ceylan et d'autres pays, qui ont pris la parole avant moi, ont fort justement souligné qu'une suppression immédiate du colonialisme serait une grande victoire des forces de paix, de progrès, de liberté et d'indépendance dans la lutte contre les forces de réaction.

51. Prenant la parole lors de la discussion générale à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, le 23 septembre dernier, le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, a dit notamment que:

"... rien ne peut arrêter la lutte des peuples pour leur libération, car c'est là un grand processus historique et irréversible qui se manifeste avec une force toujours croissante. On peut prolonger d'un an ou deux la domination qu'un Etat exerce sur un autre, mais, de même que la féodalité a jadis été remplacée par la bourgeoisie, de même que le socialisme remplace aujourd'hui le capitalisme, ainsi la servitude coloniale cède le pas à liberté. Telles sont les lois de l'évolution humaine et seuls les aventuriers peuvent croire que des monceaux de cadavres et des millions de victimes empêcheront l'avènement d'un avenir radieux." [869ème séance, par. 172.]

52. Ces brèves paroles décrivent l'évolution historique régulière de notre temps. Il faut le dire: aucune tentative des colonialistes pour maintenir leur domination aux colonies ne saurait être couronnée de succès. Il est donc naturel de penser que la suppression du colonialisme serait une contribution importante au maintien de la paix et de la sécurité dans le monde entier; elle serait même l'une des mesures essentielles en vue de la détente internationale. Le devoir de l'Organisation des Nations Unies consiste à en finir immédiatement avec ce mal.

53. Nous vivons des temps remarquables. Sous nos yeux s'opère impétueusement la libération des pays et des peuples du joug colonial. Nombre de délégués présents dans cette salle, après avoir levé l'étendard de la liberté et de l'indépendance dans leur pays, participent activement à la lutte pour la libération de centaines de millions d'autres hommes du joug de l'esclavage colonial. Permettez-moi, au nom du peuple de la Biélorussie, de vous féliciter de cette glorieuse victoire. Au cours des 15 années d'après guerre sont nés et ont évolué avec succès 40 nouveaux Etats comptant au-delà d'un milliard et demi d'hommes, soit plus de la moitié de la population du globe.

54. L'Asie, dont les peuples ont obtenu de grands succès dans leur lutte pour la libération nationale, est devenue particulièrement méconnaissable. Au cours de la période d'après guerre, 16 nouveaux Etats y sont apparus, parmi lesquels d'aussi grands Etats que l'Inde, l'Indonésie et la Birmanie, pays qui appliquent une politique neutraliste indépendante et consolident avec succès leur indépendance et leur souveraineté.

55. De grands événements se déroulent de nos jours sur le continent africain. La lutte héroïque des peuples d'Afrique pour leur liberté et leur indépendance a été remarquablement fructueuse. Alors qu'au début de l'existence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, l'Afrique était représentée par quatre Etats seulement, à l'heure actuelle nous en comptons 30, avec une population de 100 millions d'âmes. Rien qu'au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, nous avons eu la possibilité d'admettre comme Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies 16 nouveaux Etats africains [résolutions 1476 (XV) à 1488 (XV) et 1490 (XV) à 1492 (XV)], réalisant les prévisions du grand Lénine, qui a dit: "Demain, l'histoire du monde enregistrera le réveil définitif des peuples opprimés par l'impérialisme et le début de leur lutte résolue, longue et pénible, pour leur libération."

56. L'histoire a condamné à mort le colonialisme; ses jours sont comptés. Le processus actuel de liquidation du système séculaire du colonialisme est une démonstration lumineuse de la justesse des prévisions de Lénine. La liquidation totale et immédiate du système colonial est inscrite à l'ordre du jour par le cours des événements, car toutes les conditions nécessaires pour la faillite du colonialisme — cette page sombre du grand calendrier de l'histoire — sont maintenant réalisées.

57. Il serait toutefois prématuré de conclure qu'on en a fini avec le système colonial de l'impérialisme. Les puissances coloniales occidentales conservent encore le pouvoir sur de vastes territoires, d'une grande importance pour la vie économique et la stratégie militaire.

58. A l'heure actuelle, plus de 100 millions d'hommes en Asie et en Afrique subissent encore directement l'oppression coloniale. En Asie, plus de 50 millions d'habitants souffrent sous le joug colonial. En Afrique, plus de 60 millions d'autochtones sont encore opprimés par les colonialistes. La liquidation du régime colonial n'est donc pas encore achevée. L'impérialisme et le colonialisme continuent à exister et, en essayant de remonter le cours de l'histoire, ils font tout leur possible pour maintenir leur domination sans reculer devant quelque procédé ou quelque méthode que ce soit. Ainsi que l'a dit le Président de l'Indonésie, M. Sukarno, "l'impérialisme n'est pas encore mort... l'impérialisme mourant est dangereux, aussi dangereux que le tigre blessé dans la jungle tropicale" [880ème séance, par. 63]. L'effondrement du système colonial s'accompagne non seulement d'un phénomène positif de formation de nouveaux Etats indépendants — dont nous avons chaudement et de tout cœur salué ici même l'admission à l'Organisation des Nations Unies — mais également de tentatives opiniâtres des colonialistes pour conserver leur domination coloniale sous des formes nouvelles. Ces tentatives sont la cause d'une situation très tendue en Asie et en Afrique et rendent possibles de nouveaux conflits armés qui peuvent avoir de graves conséquences.

59. Mais l'élan des peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique vers une indépendance immédiate est impétueux et irrésistible.

"Les derniers bastions du système colonial périmé s'écroulent totalement, et c'est là l'un des faits particulièrement importants de notre époque. Si l'on jette un coup d'œil sur la carte de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, on constate que des centaines de millions d'êtres humains se sont affranchis du joug séculaire de l'étranger et de l'exploitation par autrui^{2/}."

C'est ce qu'a dit M. Khrouchtchev en automne de l'année dernière du haut de la tribune de l'Assemblée générale.

60. Les grands événements qui se déroulent actuellement confirment la justesse des paroles de M. Khrouchtchev. Les temps du brigandage colonial sont disparus à jamais. Mais, pour que le terme même de "colonialisme" devienne une notion purement historique, l'Organisation des Nations Unies — conformément à l'esprit même de sa Charte — doit aider les peuples et les nations qui languissent encore sous le joug du colonialisme à acquérir leur indépendance le plus rapidement possible. Il est important, toutefois, que la libération ne se fasse pas dans le fracas des armes et parmi les gémissements des hommes, car trop de sang a déjà été versé, trop de vies humaines ont été sacrifiées pour libérer, dans le passé, un grand nombre de peuples du joug du colonialisme. Nous devons arriver à créer une situation telle que disparaissent une fois pour toutes les conditions qui permettent aux colonialistes de maintenir illégalement leur domination dans des pays étrangers, sous prétexte que les peuples colonisés manquent de maturité politique et ne sont pas préparés à l'indépendance politique. Nous considérons que n'importe quel peuple est capable de se gouverner lui-même: il ne s'agit que de lui en offrir la possibilité en liquidant l'oppression et la domination coloniales.

61. Les représentants du Royaume-Uni, du Portugal et d'autres pays se sont longuement étendus ici sur la "mission civilisatrice" qu'ils auraient accomplie, parait-il, et qu'ils continueraient à accomplir dans leurs colonies et dans les pays sous leur dépendance. Ils ont fait état d'un développement industriel et agricole dans leurs colonies, des progrès réalisés dans les domaines de la santé publique, de l'enseignement et des transports, cela pour essayer de nous convaincre qu'ils auraient apporté une "grande" contribution à l'épanouissement et à la culture des peuples intéressés. Voyons, néanmoins, ce que les colonisateurs européens et américains ont en réalité apporté à ces peuples. Qu'il me soit permis de citer certains faits qui illustrent les résultats de la domination colonialiste.

62. J'ai lu, dernièrement, un livre très intéressant écrit par le Directeur général du Fonds spécial des Nations Unies, l'Américain Paul Hoffman. Ce livre, paru cette année à Washington^{3/}, est consacré aux problèmes de l'aide économique aux pays sous-développés d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine. D'après les données réunies par l'auteur, le nombre de ces pays est supérieur à 100 et 1.250 millions d'hommes y habitent. Ainsi que l'indique Paul Hoffman, le revenu annuel moyen par habitant s'élève actuellement à 100 dollars, alors qu'aux Etats-Unis et dans la plupart des pays de l'Europe occidentale il est de 1.000 à 2.000 dollars, soit de 10 à 20 fois supérieur. Ces chiffres donnent la preuve d'une exploitation impitoyable et du pillage de la population autochtone.

63. Dans le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes^{4/}, publié au mois d'avril de cette année pour la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, il est dit que le revenu individuel de la population autochtone, pour 1957, dans les territoires africains pour lesquels on disposait de tels renseignements, était parmi les plus bas du monde. Il était dans la Nigéria de 67 dollars, dans l'Ouganda de 43,34 dollars, dans l'ancien Congo belge de 42,20 dollars, au Kenya de 33,55 dollars. Cela signifie que le revenu par habitant est, au Royaume-Uni, plusieurs dizaines de fois supérieur à celui de la Nigéria, de l'Ouganda et du Kenya. Ces chiffres sont éloquentes et il est difficile de les contester.

64. Nous constatons que l'essence même du colonialisme est un horrible mélange d'exploitation inouïe, de discrimination sous toutes ses formes et d'absence des libertés les plus élémentaires pour l'homme. Le sang et la sueur de la population autochtone permettent aux colonialistes d'acquérir des richesses énormes, tandis qu'ils ne laissent aux populations exploitées que de pitoyables miettes. Le drainage des richesses, l'obtention de bénéfices fabuleux, la faim, la misère et l'absence de droits pour les autochtones — voilà ce qu'apportent avec eux les colonialistes.

65. Permettez-moi de citer des chiffres qui caractérisent le frappant contraste entre les revenus de la population autochtone et ceux des colons européens. Dans le rapport cité plus haut, il est dit qu'en 1957, au Congo ex-belge, le revenu individuel par habitant autochtone était de 42,2 dollars, tandis qu'un Européen recevait en moyenne 2.973 dollars, c'est-à-dire 80 fois plus; dans la Fédération de Rhodésie et Nyassaland 43 fois plus; au Kenya 30 fois plus. Et voilà les fruits de la "civilisation" occidentale en Afrique!

66. Prenant la parole devant l'Assemblée générale, les représentants des puissances coloniales ne soufflent mot des bénéfices qu'ils réalisent à la suite des "bienfaits" qu'ils apportent. Ils passent délibérément sous silence des faits aussi effrayants qu'un analphabétisme quasi total, un taux de mortalité très élevé, une durée de vie qui est, aux colonies, la plus faible au monde. Alors que la durée moyenne de vie au Royaume-Uni est de 60 ans, dans la Nigéria, qui vient seulement de se libérer de la domination colonialiste, elle est sensiblement inférieure à 30 ans. Dans ce pays, il y a actuellement 60 fois moins de médecins par habitant qu'au Royaume-Uni et il n'y a qu'un dentiste pour 2 millions d'habitants. Le salaire des travailleurs noirs, dans cette ancienne colonie britannique, est de 12 fois inférieur au salaire moyen d'un travailleur anglais. Aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique, il y a en moyenne 1,1 médecin pour 1.000 habitants, en Afrique 0,11, c'est-à-dire qu'il n'y a là que 36 médecins pour 1 million d'habitants. Les analphabètes représentent en Afrique 70 à 90 pour 100 de la population. En Algérie, il y a 90 pour 100 d'analphabètes parmi la population musulmane, tandis qu'en 1830, lorsque la France conquiert l'Algérie, il y avait plus d'analphabètes en France qu'en Algérie. Voilà les "réalisations" des "civilisateurs" français dans ce pays. La faim et les maladies, une exploitation impitoyable, les travaux forcés, la répression et une politique de génocide aux colonies — tout cela a abouti à la disparition de populations entières. En un demi-siècle de domination belge, la population du Congo a diminué presque de moitié, tandis que la population de Madagascar, au cours des 60 années de la domination française, a diminué de plus de la moitié. J'ai extrait ces renseignements du livre du journaliste américain John Gunther, intitulé L'Autre Afrique^{5/}, livre paru à New York en 1955. Gunther, porte-parole et théoricien du néo-colonialisme américain, a été obligé de reconnaître — photographies à l'appui — que ce qu'il y avait de plus terrible, c'était la pratique des mutilations qui consistait à couper une main ou un pied à un noir coupable d'avoir mal travaillé dans la plantation ou dans la mine. Cette invention européenne ne diffère guère des atrocités commises par les nazis lors de la seconde guerre mondiale.

67. Les efforts des puissances coloniales tendant à conserver leurs positions ébranlées en Afrique s'expliquent par le fait que le continent africain dispose de ressources naturelles extrêmement riches et représente de ce fait, pour les pays capitalistes, une source importante de matières premières et un marché pour l'écoulement de leurs produits. D'après les données américaines, la part de l'Afrique dans la production mondiale représente 98 pour 100 pour les diamants, 81 pour 100 pour le cobalt, 59 pour 100 pour l'or, 42 pour 100 pour l'antimoine, 36 pour 100 pour le manganèse, 40 pour 100 pour la chromite, 27 pour 100 pour le cuivre. L'Afrique fournit plus des quatre cinquièmes des minerais d'uranium pour le monde capitaliste. Au Sahara, on a trouvé des gisements de pétrole qui se chiffrent par milliards de tonnes. En Afrique sont concentrées plus de 40 pour 100 de toutes les ressources hydro-énergétiques du monde. Dans un grand nombre de territoires africains, il y a de richissimes gisements de bauxite, de manganèse, de fer, de nickel, de zinc, de plomb, de phosphates, etc. C'est à cause de cela que, du point de vue économique, l'Afrique a une grande importance tant pour les Etats-Unis d'Amérique que pour l'Europe occidentale: cette région est l'une des sources principales de certaines matières premières qui manquent ailleurs.

68. Mais les intérêts des colonialistes diffèrent des intérêts des autochtones africains. Les représentants des milieux des monopoles considèrent l'Afrique comme une source de main-d'œuvre à bon marché que l'on peut exploiter sans merci. Les prétendus plans d'industrialisation des territoires africains visent en réalité le développement des branches d'industrie qui sont avantageuses pour les colonialistes et, avant tout, l'industrie minière. Mais, dans ces plans des puissances coloniales, il n'est pas question de créer une grande industrie, gage d'une indépendance véritable pour les nouveaux Etats.

69. L'Afrique est en même temps un élément composant des préparatifs militaires et stratégiques en vue de l'utilisation du territoire africain comme base puissante et comme repli pour le bloc nord-atlantique. Dans son livre intitulé L'Eurafrrique, notre dernière chance, l'écrivain français Pierre Nord écrivait:

"Stratégiquement, personne ne s'attaquerait à l'espace géomilitaire eurafricain, refuge humain plus vaste que la Sibérie, refuge industriel plus sûr que l'Oural, et où l'on peut fabriquer dans quelques années des bombes atomiques sur les gisements du minerai^{6/}..."

71. Voilà les paroles et les actes des colonisateurs contemporains. Aussi l'appel du Premier Ministre du Royaume-Uni, M. Macmillan, lancé du haut de cette tribune lors de la séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale en date du 29 septembre dernier, apparaît-il injustifié. D'après cet appel, il aurait fallu se "libérer ... des mots d'ordre vieillis et usés", parmi lesquels il compte les mots "colonialisme" et "impérialisme" [877ème séance, par. 98].

72. Non, M. Macmillan, ce ne sont pas des mots d'ordre vieillis et usés, mais de véritables cris de guerre de notre époque: il faut en finir immédiatement avec les restes de ce honteux héritage qu'est le colonialisme. Le feu sacré de la lutte pour la liberté brûle dans le cœur de tous les peuples des colonies et des autres territoires dépendants. C'est dans ce feu que fondront les chaînes de l'esclavage et que se forgera une indépendance véritable. Tout le monde connaît la lutte héroïque du peuple du Kenya pour sa liberté et son indépendance. Son soulèvement, commencé en 1952, fut féroce réprimé par les colonialistes à l'issue d'une guerre coloniale de quatre ans qui a coûté au peuple du Kenya 10.000 tués et 150.000 incarcérés. Mais la lutte continue au Kenya. Ce pays compte 6 millions d'Africains et 63.000 colons britanniques, mais ce sont ces derniers qui possèdent les terres les plus fertiles, car la population autochtone de ces régions avait été chassée et ses terres avaient été distribuées à 12.000 fermiers britanniques. Chacun de ces fermiers a pu ainsi obtenir en moyenne

^{5/} J. Gunther, Inside Africa. New York, Harper and Brothers.

^{6/} Paris, Arthème Fayard, 1955, p. 11.

2,5 kilomètres carrés de terres, tandis que les autochtones ont été parqués dans des réserves où la densité de population atteint 400 personnes au kilomètre carré. Il n'est donc point étonnant que le revenu annuel moyen d'un autochtone du Kenya soit 30 fois inférieur à celui d'un Anglais. Demandez donc à n'importe quel autochtone du Kenya si le slogan de la suppression immédiate du colonialisme est tombé en désuétude! Je pense qu'il répondra que ce slogan, loin d'être périmé, est au contraire très vivace et d'une actualité brûlante.

73. M. Macmillan, en exaltant son action dans les colonies anglaises, a déclaré du haut de cette tribune:

"... notre but demeure clair et constant: créer des sociétés — ou aider les peuples de ces pays à se constituer en sociétés — dont tous les membres, quelles que soient leur race, leur tribu, leurs croyances religieuses, puissent vivre et travailler de concert. Telle est la mission que nous nous sommes assignée et pour laquelle nous continuerons notre œuvre." [Ibid., par. 106.]

74. C'est ce que répétait, en d'autres termes, le représentant du Royaume-Uni, M. Ormsby-Gore, qui prit la parole ici le 28 novembre [925^{ème} séance]. MM. Macmillan et Ormsby-Gore ont essayé de faire figure à nos yeux de "bons pères de famille", les peuples colonisés étant des enfants qui doivent être éduqués, instruits et préparés à entrer dans le monde, à aller à l'école. Ce n'est donc pas par hasard qu'ils n'ont rien dit des atrocités, de la répression, de la détresse, du besoin, de l'arbitraire, de l'exploitation brutale et d'autres actes commis par les colonisateurs britanniques dans leurs colonies. MM. Macmillan et Ormsby-Gore n'ont pas dit un mot du fracas des canons sur la terre antique d'Oman — dont les représentants se trouvent parmi nous — au Nyassaland et en Rhodésie. Chacun voit clairement aujourd'hui que l'indépendance acquise par les peuples des anciennes colonies anglaises, loin d'être le fruit d'une noble politique du Royaume-Uni, est en fait le résultat d'une lutte sanglante menée par les peuples de ces pays. Affirmer que leur indépendance est le résultat du souci que les colonisateurs prenaient du "progrès" de ces pays, c'est falsifier l'histoire. La libération des peuples coloniaux de leur joug et l'effondrement du système colonial sont des processus historiques qu'aucune répression, aucun canon, aucune mitrailleuse ne saurait arrêter. Les colonialistes tentent de freiner ce processus historique normal, et même de l'inverser. Mais ils n'y réussiront pas.

75. Vous savez que la déclaration qui vous est proposée [A/4502] exige l'octroi immédiat à tous les peuples asservis d'une indépendance et d'une liberté totales. Ce n'est que dans les conditions d'une indépendance réelle qu'il devient possible de résoudre tous les problèmes politiques, économiques, sociaux et culturels; cela est prouvé d'une façon convaincante par le développement harmonieux des jeunes Etats africains, en particulier de la République de Guinée, de la République du Ghana et d'autres Etats. Nous sommes témoins du fait que les milieux des monopoles des puissances occidentales et des Etats-Unis d'Amérique tentent de compenser au détriment de l'Afrique les échecs subis par eux en Asie. Dès la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, ces monopoles se sont orientés vers l'accroissement de leur expansion en Afrique. Actuellement, les groupes Rockefeller, Morgan et Mellon ont d'énormes investissements sur ce continent.

76. Les investissements privés directs des sociétés américaines en Afrique atteignaient, à la fin de 1958, 789 millions de dollars, soit le triple des sommes investies en 1950. Vers la fin de 1959, en Afrique, près de 200 sociétés américaines étaient "intéressées" surtout à l'extraction de matières premières industrielles, en particulier stratégiques. La richesse des ressources naturelles de l'Afrique, jointe au niveau extrêmement bas du salaire des travailleurs africains, ouvre aux monopoles des Etats-Unis d'Amérique des perspectives d'enrichissement et de profit qui sont extraordinaires même dans les conditions caractéristiques des pays coloniaux. A ce sujet, des données très intéressantes sont contenues dans un rapport présenté par le Programme de recherches africaines de Northwestern University à la Commission des affaires étrangères du Sénat des Etats-Unis. De ce rapport, publié à Washington en 1959, il ressort que, tandis que le rendement moyen de la totalité des investissements américains à l'extérieur du pays est de 26 pour 100, en Afrique, ces investissements rapportent 30 pour 100. On le voit, les monopoles des Etats-Unis, de même que ceux des puissances de l'Europe occidentale, participent directement à l'exploitation des peuples de l'Afrique et au drainage des richesses de ce pays. Ainsi, d'après des données américaines, les Etats-Unis importent annuellement du Congo, par exemple, 60 pour 100 de la totalité du cobalt extrait, 64 pour 100 du manganèse, 79 pour 100 du tantale, 87 pour 100 de la production diamantifère, tandis que près de 100 pour 100 des minerais d'uranium et du lithium sont enlevés par les Etats-Unis. De plus, une partie des ressources naturelles du Congo est dirigée vers l'industrie de guerre de l'Allemagne occidentale, contrôlée par les Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Chacun peut se rendre compte que l'implantation du capital américain en Afrique constitue un néo-colonialisme non déguisé, amenant une forme nouvelle d'asservissement des peuples africains. Les industriels de l'Allemagne occidentale, qui ont récemment fait une tournée dans les pays d'Afrique, ne sont pas en retard sur les représentants des monopoles américains. Ainsi, dans le consortium international "Cons-Afrique", à côté des banques belges, anglaises et françaises, apparaît une banque allemande, la Deutsche Bank. Les monopoles allemands ont d'ailleurs une influence prépondérante au sein de ce consortium. Ce dernier s'intéresse particulièrement aux gisements de minerai de fer, de manganèse, d'aluminium et d'autres minerais que l'on trouve tant au Congo que dans d'autres territoires africains. Si l'on tient compte du fait que les ressources minérales les plus importantes sont actuellement exploitées surtout au Katanga, on comprendra que tous les discours tendant à faire reconnaître le Katanga comme un Etat indépendant ne sont que des manœuvres des colonialistes belges et américains, qui cherchent à conserver la source des bénéfices énormes qu'ils retirent de l'exploitation des ressources naturelles du Katanga. Le peuple de Biélorussie, comme tous les peuples soviétiques et toute l'humanité progressiste, est persuadé que le jour est proche où les ressources naturelles de la République du Congo permettront à son peuple d'être en première ligne dans la lutte pour le progrès de l'Afrique et de l'humanité tout entière.

77. La lutte pour la liberté et l'indépendance nationales continue et même s'accroît en Oman, dans l'Ouganda, au Tanganyika, à Zanzibar, dans les colonies portugaises — Angola, Mozambique et Guinée portugaise — dans le Territoire sous tutelle belge du Ruanda-Urundi, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, à Porto Rico — colonie américaine — et ailleurs encore.

78. Les colonialistes s'efforcent de maintenir à tout prix leur domination sur les pays qu'ils ont réduits en esclavage et ils ont recours pour cela aux méthodes les plus variées. Ainsi que l'indique à juste titre la déclaration soviétique [A/4502], "ils forcent les peuples des colonies à entretenir entemps de paix des forces armées et une administration étrangères, c'est-à-dire à payer le coût des chafnes dont ils sont chargés". Ils pratiquent largement la vieille maxime divide ut imperes en excitant les tribus les unes contre les autres, ainsi qu'on le constate actuellement au Congo. Ils recourent également à des méthodes plus subtiles et vont jusqu'à faire des concessions en accordant, par exemple, un droit de vote plus étendu aux Africains, tout en subornant les chefs africains qui tireront pour eux les marrons du feu. Parlant du haut de cette tribune des méthodes nouvelles auxquelles on a recours pour conserver la domination coloniale, le Président de la République arabe unie, M. Nasser, a dit à juste titre: "L'agression de Suez a marqué la fin de l'impérialisme déclaré et l'a précipité dans sa tombe. Aujourd'hui, les événements du Congo nous montrent un impérialisme camouflé, qui n'hésite pas à se servir des Nations Unies elles-mêmes pour parvenir à ses fins cachées." [873ème séance, par. 120.] Nous sommes entièrement d'accord sur ce point avec le Président de la République arabe unie.

79. A l'heure actuelle, les colonisateurs vont même jusqu'à accorder à leurs colonies l'indépendance politique, tout en se réservant les positions clefs dans les domaines de l'économie, de la finance, de l'administration, ainsi que dans l'armée, et en plaçant souvent au pouvoir des fantoches, traîtres à leur peuple. Il n'y a pas de différence de principe entre toutes ces méthodes, car leur sens reste toujours le même: conserver ou, pour le moins, faire durer la domination coloniale et le pillage des peuples colonisés.

80. L'opinion publique mondiale est bouleversée par le communiqué relatant la capture, par la force, du Premier Ministre de la République du Congo, Patrice Lumumba, par les bandes armées de Mobutu. Un acte arbitraire de violence grossière à l'égard du chef légitime du Gouvernement de la République du Congo a été commis bien qu'au Congo se trouvent des forces armées de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, qui y ont été envoyées par le Conseil de sécurité à la demande du premier ministre Lumumba. L'Organisation des Nations Unies est appelée pour mettre en œuvre les décisions du Conseil de sécurité; or, en fait, on applique une politique de conciliation à l'égard du régime dictatorial illégal de Mobutu, créature des colonialistes belges, américains et français.

81. La délégation de la République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie élève, du haut de cette tribune, une protestation catégorique contre l'acte de pur arbitraire que constitue l'arrestation illégale du premier ministre Lumumba; elle exige que ce dernier soit immédiatement libéré. Nous estimons que des conditions propres au rétablissement de l'activité du Parlement de la République doivent être créées au Congo.

82. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je regrette d'interrompre l'orateur. J'espère toutefois qu'il ne profitera pas de son intervention dans ce débat de caractère essentiellement général sur la question du colonialisme pour discuter de la situation actuelle au Congo, puisque l'Assemblée générale a décidé d'ajourner la discussion sur cette question. Tout exposé détaillé d'opinions sur la situation au Congo sortirait du cadre du présent débat. Je demande donc à l'orateur de bien vouloir poursuivre son intervention en tenant compte de ce que je viens de dire.

83. M. KISSELEV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) [traduit du russe]: J'ai déjà dit ce que je voulais dire. Je continue.

84. La suppression du système colonial comporte également la liquidation de l'une des formes de ce système, à savoir la tutelle. Lorsque le régime de tutelle fut créé conformément à la Charte de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, il fut entendu que les puissances chargées d'une tutelle seraient tenues de favoriser l'évolution progressive des territoires placés sous tutelle vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes ou l'indépendance. Or, depuis que la Charte a été adoptée, il s'est écoulé 15 ans et quatre seulement des 11 territoires placés alors sous tutelle ont accédé à l'indépendance. Pour les autres territoires sous tutelle, aucune date précise n'a été fixée en ce qui concerne l'octroi de leur indépendance; par ailleurs, les plus importants sont le Tanganyika, le Ruanda-Urundi et la Nouvelle-Guinée; un vaste territoire africain, le Sud-Ouest africain, a été annexé par les racistes de l'Union sud-africaine. Les puissances coloniales qui ont été chargées d'une "tutelle" continuent, au mépris de la Charte, à exercer, de fait, une domination coloniale en exploitant d'une façon éhontée la population locale. Elles pillent les richesses naturelles du pays au profit de leurs monopoles, s'opposent au développement économique et politique de ces territoires, recourent à des mesures sauvages de représailles contre ceux qui réclament l'indépendance et, en particulier, contre ceux qui adressent des pétitions à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Notre organisation reçoit des milliers de pétitions en provenance des territoires sous tutelle. Ces pétitions, examinées par la Quatrième Commission, sont le fait de millions d'êtres humains vivant dans ces territoires: elles sont souvent écrites avec du sang et sont un acte d'accusation contre la politique des autorités chargées de l'administration de ces territoires. Quant aux faits cités dans ces pétitions, ils provoquent la colère et l'indignation de l'opinion publique mondiale.

85. Ainsi qu'il est dit, à juste titre, dans la déclaration soviétique: "Le régime de tutelle ne s'est justifié nulle part; il faut donc l'enterrer en même temps que tout l'anachronique système colonial." [A/4502.]

86. L'orateur qui m'a précédé à cette tribune, M. Garin, représentant du Portugal, a affirmé — en dépit des faits et de la vérité — que son pays ne connaît pas de colonialisme. Je pense que ce sont là des contes calculés pour induire en erreur les personnes naïves et tromper ainsi l'opinion publique mondiale. Qui donc ignore que dans les colonies portugaises d'Afrique — l'Angola, le Mozambique et la Guinée portugaise, dont la superficie représente plus de la moitié de celle qu'occupe l'Europe occidentale, et qui comptent 11 millions d'habitants — il n'y a aucun établissement d'enseignement supérieur et les enseignements secondaires et primaires font presque entièrement défaut? La politique d'oppression et de discrimination raciale des colonialistes portugais est camouflée par une prétendue politique "d'assimilation". Ils affirment que, petit à petit, les Africains reçoivent des droits civiques et même la citoyenneté portugaise.

87. Mais pour cela il faut connaître la langue portugaise, avoir une bonne instruction et posséder des biens importants. Aussi, depuis cinq siècles, les colonisateurs ont-ils assimilé moins de 0,3 pour 100 de la population alors que le restant, c'est-à-dire 99,7 pour 100 de la population autochtone, n'a aucun droit et est exploité par les colons portugais, qui ont le droit de les chasser de leurs terres si celles-ci conviennent aux colonisateurs. Si la population ne se montre pas d'accord et proteste, les autorités portugaises ont recours à des mesures de représailles extrêmement cruelles. Les choses sont allées si loin que le Gouvernement portugais a été obligé, en 1959, d'envoyer en Guinée portugaise des avions et des navires de guerre pour user de répressions contre la population locale. C'est là une chose que ni M. Garin ni l'opinion publique mondiale ne peuvent ignorer.

88. Permettez-moi de m'arrêter un moment sur ce qui se passe dans le Territoire du Ruanda-Urundi placé sous tutelle de l'ONU et administré par la Belgique, territoire peuplé de 5 millions de personnes parmi lesquelles 6.000 Européens seulement. A l'égard de ce territoire sous tutelle, l'Assemblée générale a adopté des recommandations [résolutions 1413 (XIV) et 1419 (XIV)] en vertu desquelles la Belgique était obligée de fixer les délais dans lesquels ce territoire serait préparé à son indépendance politique. Mais le Gouvernement belge n'a pas donné effet à ces recommandations.

89. Ce territoire est le théâtre de mesures monstrueuses de discrimination raciale de toute sorte, tant dans le domaine politique que dans les domaines juridique et social. On y inflige, encore à notre époque, des châtiments corporels, sur décision des tribunaux. D'après les renseignements fournis par l'UNESCO, il y a au Ruanda-Urundi 600.000 enfants dont 400.000 ne vont pas à l'école. La domination belge, qui dure depuis plus de 40 ans, a abouti à un appauvrissement général de la population locale. Les masses populaires, poussées au désespoir par l'exploitation belge, se sont soulevées en novembre 1959. Cette rébellion a été réprimée par des troupes de parachutistes. A la suite de représailles sanglantes, des centaines d'autochtones ont été tués et des dizaines de villages incendiés. Ces faits furent relatés dans la presse américaine. On pourrait citer d'autres faits, mais ceux-là suffisent pour prouver que la nature du colonialisme n'a pas changé. En Afrique vivent plus de 200 millions d'êtres humains, dont 5 millions seulement d'Européens, c'est-à-dire 2 pour 100.

90. La flambée de liberté s'étend sur le continent africain et, très vite, cette flambée consumera les vestiges du colonialisme. Les colonialistes luttent avec acharnement et, par leurs manœuvres, ils tentent de réprimer, par le fer et par le feu, la pression des mouvements de libération nationale. Mais la lutte des peuples pour leur liberté et leur indépendance se développe de plus en plus largement et de plus en plus profondément. Il n'y a plus à l'heure actuelle en Afrique un seul coin de terre où les colonisateurs ne sentent le sol brûler sous leurs pieds. Les répressions exercées par les colonisateurs ne peuvent arrêter la marche de l'histoire et nous sommes persuadés que, très rapidement, toute l'Afrique sera libre.

91. L'expérience de la solution donnée à la question nationale en Union soviétique et dans les autres pays socialistes montre que seuls l'octroi d'une égalité de droits totale à l'ensemble de la population et la possibilité de développer librement leur économie garantissent une coopération étroite entre toutes les populations.

92. L'Organisation des Nations Unies aurait pu contribuer efficacement à la liquidation du colonialisme et du racisme. L'Organisation doit apporter sa contribution à la liquidation du système colonialiste, conformément aux dispositions de la Charte qui affirment le droit des nations à leur autonomie. La meilleure forme que pourrait revêtir cette contribution serait l'adoption de la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", soumis à notre examen par l'Union soviétique. Cette déclaration prévoit que tous les Etats Membres de l'ONU proclament solennellement les exigences suivantes:

"1. — Accorder sans délai à tous les pays coloniaux, territoires sous tutelle et autres territoires non autonomes, l'indépendance complète et la liberté d'édifier leurs propres Etats nationaux conformément à la volonté et aux aspirations librement exprimées de leurs peuples. Le régime colonial et l'administration coloniale sous toutes ses formes doivent être entièrement supprimés afin de permettre aux peuples de ces territoires de décider eux-mêmes de leur sort et de leur régime politique.

"2. — Eliminer également tous les points d'appui du colonialisme sous la forme de possessions et de zones cédées à bail en territoire étranger.

"3. — Les gouvernements de tous les pays sont invités à observer rigoureusement et constamment, dans les relations entre Etats, les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la présente Déclaration concernant l'égalité et le respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les Etats sans exception, et à n'admettre aucune manifestation du colonialisme, aucun droit ou privilège exclusif de certains Etats au détriment d'autres." [A/4502.]

Il est prévu également que les puissances qui ont des possessions coloniales doivent entamer des pourparlers, sur un pied d'égalité, avec les représentants de ces possessions pour s'entendre sur l'établissement de la liberté et de l'indépendance de ces pays, en fixant des dates précises et rapprochées, afin d'exclure toute possibilité de pression ou d'agression de la part des puissances coloniales.

93. De l'avis de la délégation de la Biélorussie, la déclaration proposée par l'Union soviétique représente le programme de ce que l'Organisation des Nations Unies peut et doit, dans les conditions actuelles, faire pour liquider le régime colonial. Les principes généraux dont doivent s'inspirer tous les pays Membres de l'ONU dans la solution de ce problème sont contenus dans cette déclaration. Bien entendu, nous ne nous attendons pas à ce que les puissances coloniales occidentales appuient le projet de déclaration soviétique. Elles auront recours à n'importe quels "arguments" pour essayer de déformer le sens et les motifs de la déclaration soviétique.

94. Je voudrais m'attarder un instant sur ces "arguments". On prétend notamment — et c'est là un "argument" déjà usé — qu'il ne s'agit là simplement que de "propagande soviétique". Nous sommes habitués au fait que, chaque fois que l'Union soviétique présente une proposition ayant pour but de diminuer la tension internationale, les Etats-Unis d'Amérique et leurs alliés au sein de blocs militaires affirment qu'il s'agit de "propagande". J'ai, au cours de nombreuses années consécutives, entendu ici de telles accusations. Mais qui empêche les puissances occidentales de mener une "propagande" analogue? Il semblerait qu'elles ne disposent d'aucun argument à opposer aux propositions soviétiques et il ne saurait en être autrement, car c'est du côté soviétique que se trouve la vérité et la vérité ne saurait être qu'une. En affirmant que la proposition soviétique n'est que "propagande", les puissances occidentales se démasquent par là même. Elles n'ont rien à opposer à cette déclaration, car, en réalité, elles se refusent à liquider le système colonial; elles sont en faveur de la continuation du pillage colonial et aucune acrobatie verbale, ici, ne leur facilitera les choses.

95. On dit également que la déclaration soviétique a un caractère trop général, que la question de la liquidation du colonialisme est "très complexe", qu'il faut tenir compte des "services" rendus par les puissances coloniales à leurs colonies, des liens qui se sont établis entre ces dernières et les métropoles, etc. C'est ce qu'a dit notamment M. Ormsby-Gore lorsqu'il a pris la parole au moment de l'examen de la procédure à appliquer à la proposition soviétique, c'est-à-dire aux séances plénières des 12 octobre [902ème séance] et 28 novembre [925ème séance]. En ce qui concerne les services rendus par les colons à leurs colonies, j'en ai déjà parlé surabondamment et ne me répéterai pas.

96. On dit aussi que l'adoption de la déclaration soviétique aurait pour résultat une modification de la Charte des Nations Unies, spécialement en ce qui concerne le régime de tutelle. C'est ce qu'a dit notamment le représentant de la Nouvelle-Zélande, M. Shanahan, qui a pris la parole en séance plénière le 12 octobre [902ème séance] et le 2 décembre [932ème séance], en affirmant que c'était là un "argument" contre l'adoption de la déclaration. Mais est-ce là un argument? Nous avons tous adopté la Charte des Nations Unies, nous l'avons signée et nous sommes en droit de modifier cette Charte en fonction des modifications radicales intervenues dans la situation internationale. Il n'y a rien d'éternel dans le monde. Les gouvernements changent, ainsi que l'ordre social et même la vie du monde en général. A plus forte raison peut-on modifier la Charte des Nations Unies.

97. De nombreux hommes d'Etat occidentaux, y compris ceux des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, ont affirmé ici que la déclaration est un "appel à la rébellion" dans les colonies. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, M. Ormsby-Gore, prenant la parole le 28 novembre, n'a reculé ni devant une grossière déformation des faits, ni devant une calomnie visant l'Union soviétique, lorsqu'il a affirmé:

"Le seul but de l'Union soviétique semble être d'engendrer la haine plutôt que l'amitié, la violence plutôt que la paix et le chaos plutôt que l'ordre."
[925ème séance, par. 18.]

98. De telles assertions démasquent leurs auteurs. C'est donc qu'ils craignent le mouvement des colonies vers leur indépendance, qu'ils s'opposent à son octroi rapide et s'efforcent de faire durer la domination coloniale. C'est précisément leur politique et leur pratique aux colonies qui provoquent les rébellions. Ces "mutineries", ces "actes de violence" et ce "chaos", comme ils disent, se sont produits bien longtemps avant le dépôt de la déclaration soviétique. Cela s'est produit, se produit actuellement et continuera de se produire si les peuples opprimés des colonies ne se voient pas accorder l'indépendance et si les colonisateurs ne décampent pas des territoires colonisés pour regagner leurs pénates.

99. Le sens historique de la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" est incontestable, car elle traite une question venue à maturité depuis longtemps, à savoir la liquidation du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Cette déclaration a trouvé dans le monde entier un vaste écho au sein des peuples épris de liberté, au sein des pays qui ont été ou qui sont encore sous la domination colonialiste.

100. Si l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne veut pas rester à l'écart du grand processus historique de liquidation du régime colonial, elle doit adopter les propositions qui tendent à cette liquidation, comme l'a dit le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, dans son discours du 12 octobre:

"Les peuples des pays colonisés n'auront d'autre solution que de prendre les armes. Si on leur refuse le droit d'exister de manière indépendante, de choisir le système politique et social qui leur plaît, d'organiser leur vie sur leur propre sol comme ils l'entendent, ils conquerront ce droit par les armes."
[902ème séance, par. 13.]

101. Le devoir de tous les peuples qui ont pris position en faveur de la liquidation du régime colonialiste est d'aider par tous les moyens en leur pouvoir ceux qui luttent contre le joug colonialiste et contre l'impérialisme colonial; il faut apporter à ces peuples une aide morale, matérielle et de toute sorte, afin de leur permettre de mener à bonne fin la lutte juste et sacrée qu'ils mènent pour leur indépendance.

102. De son côté, la délégation de la République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie — ainsi que toutes les autres républiques de la grande Union soviétique — fidèle à la politique de paix et de soutien de ceux qui luttent en faveur de l'indépendance nationale dont le principe fut proclamé par le fondateur de l'Etat soviétique, V. I. Lénine, la RSS de Biélorussie, disons-nous, est restée, reste et restera aux côtés des peuples qui luttent pour la libération du joug colonial, pour la liberté et l'indépendance nationales. Nous tendons la main à ces peuples pour leur fournir aide et assistance. Rien ne saurait prévenir l'effondrement du régime colonialiste.

103. La délégation de la RSS de Biélorussie appuie chaleureusement la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", soumise par le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique à l'examen de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale. Nous lançons un appel à tous les Etats Membres de l'Organisation pour qu'ils appuient cette déclaration. Nous nous adressons aux représentants des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique qui se sont libérés récemment du joug colonial, ainsi qu'aux pays de l'Amérique latine, en les adjurant de voter en faveur de la déclaration.

104. Je terminerai en citant le poème d'un poète africain originaire de la Côte-d'Ivoire, Bernard Dadié, qui parle justement du grand processus qui s'accomplit actuellement en Afrique:

*La vieille Afrique, dans le chaos du siècle se [réveille.
Hommes, ne soyez pas faibles. Aux croisées des [chemins, sous les baobabs,
Dans les prisons, dans les baraquements des con-[fins ouvriers,
Je crie à chacun, à tous les pauvres gens de ma [patrie:
Tu es le roi des usines, tu es le roi des champs,
Tu es le peuple et donc le maître 7/.*

105. M. KAKA (Niger): Qu'il me soit permis, au moment où je dois prendre la parole, d'adresser — bien que tardivement — toutes mes félicitations au Président.

106. Comme l'a souligné avec une remarquable lucidité le représentant de l'Argentine, "la primauté des questions coloniales dans les débats des Nations Unies n'est pas due au hasard, ni uniquement à des initiatives capricieuses ou arbitraires. C'est le reflet de la réalité actuelle" [927ème séance, par.1]. La réalité a fait de cette quinzième session de l'Organisation des Nations Unies la session de l'Afrique et celle de tous les problèmes nés du fait du sous-développement et des incidences qui lui sont inhérentes.

107. Ma voix — qui est celle d'un pays sorti, il y a à peine quelques mois, de l'ombre de la colonisation — ne sera pas timide. Je désire tout de suite affirmer solennellement que mon pays, qui a lutté durant des années pour que se brise le carcan du colonialisme, est fier d'ajouter son nom à la longue liste des nations qui proposent à cette assemblée l'adoption du projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples colonisés. J'ai dit que ma voix ne sera pas timide. Elle ne sera pas haineuse non plus. Je ne voudrai la rendre passionnée que lorsqu'il s'agira du droit à la liberté, du droit à la dignité, droits fermement reconnus par la Charte, qu'il faut de toute urgence accorder aux peuples vivant sous la domination étrangère.

108. L'histoire nous a appris le processus par lequel certaines nations, à certaines époques, ne pouvant plus être contenues dans l'étroitesse de leurs frontières, guidées tantôt par l'aventure tantôt par l'intérêt, ont été amenées à se persuader de l'utilité d'imposer aux autres peuples leur science, leur culture, leur civilisation. Seules maîtresses du monde à cette époque, elles surent user du droit du plus fort. Un besoin de survie, par-delà les mers, sous forme d'influences de toutes sortes, un besoin de débouchés pour développer leurs économies et, par là, leurs techniques, et aussi la recherche de ressources susceptibles d'améliorer le niveau de vie de leurs nationaux, sont les seules pièces de justification contenues dans ce lourd dossier. Je n'abuserai pas de mon droit d'ex-colonisé pour les accabler. La colonisation est un fait de l'histoire, chaque peuple représenté ici a connu des périodes de grandeur et d'humiliation. Certains ont été chassés de leurs terres, d'autres ont connu la domination odieuse du bourreau assoiffé de sang et de grandeur, d'autres encore ont été non seulement dominés, mais "digérés". Nul n'a été épargné par ces bouleversements plus ou moins tragiques qui jalonnent l'histoire des hommes depuis des temps immémoriaux.

109. Au moment où la colonisation prenait pied, le droit international était circonscrit aux seules nations solides du vieux continent. Certaine réunion, à la fin du siècle dernier, dont l'objet était de s'approprier l'Afrique en la morcelant, constitue une manifestation patente de l'esprit et de la conception de ce droit. Ce droit est fondé sur l'injuste "droit du plus fort" que tout le monde condamne ici, depuis son essence jusqu'à ses moindres manifestations. Mais le cercle réduit du monde, à cette époque, pouvait se créer des droits à la mesure de ses intérêts. Aujourd'hui que la planète a retrouvé ses dimensions, aujourd'hui que les distances sont réduites, au point que l'opinion de chaque homme d'un point du monde à l'autre pèse sur la balance des relations humaines, il n'est plus possible de justifier la colonisation.

110. Les nations administrantes qui ont ajusté, ou qui sont en train d'ajuster, leurs conceptions à la vie moderne ne méritent pas, à mes yeux, l'accusation systématique et passionnelle dont elles sont l'objet. Il leur reste certainement beaucoup à faire et le mieux qu'elles puissent faire est de hâter la libération de tous les peuples encore maintenus sous leur domination. Il n'est pas de mon propos de justifier la domination sous quelque forme qu'elle se présente. Nous nous trouvons devant un fait de l'histoire: mon intention est de le replacer dans son contexte afin de le juger avec une tranquille objectivité. Je sais que, si l'on prenait tous les cas modernes de colonisation, invariablement leur bilan serait sombre. La domination, directe ou indirecte, l'impérialisme, sous toutes ses couleurs, sont odieux par essence. Je n'ai pas besoin de recenser les faits qui les condamnent; les chantres de l'anticolonialisme sont nombreux dans cette assemblée et, depuis l'ouverture de ces débats, la plupart des délégations des Etats anciennement colonisés ont eu à peindre, avec une froide maîtrise, les méfaits du colonialisme. J'aimerais cependant insister sur un seul point.

111. On rencontre dans certaines méthodes coloniales cet esprit cynique qui consiste à inoculer à l'être dépendant le virus du complexe: complexe de la race, complexe d'infériorité, complexe d'imperfectibilité, maintien dans une sous-alimentation culturelle calculée, transformation de la personne en défroque humaine, incapacité d'initiative, incapacité de réaction saine et logique, bref, amoindrissement moral de l'homme en qui toute dignité a été éteinte. Certaines nations administrantes se sont laissées aller à ce génocide moral afin d'assurer la pérennité de leur domination. Enfermées dans leur tour d'ivoire, elles s'imaginent qu'aucun regard indiscret ne peut entrevoir l'art consommé avec lequel elles s'ingénient à façonner des esprits serviles. Contre ces nations qui continuent en cachette à piller par esprit de folie les valeurs humaines, l'humanité entière saura se dresser pour leur dire non.

112. Nous voulons, oui, nous exigeons la libération des peuples et celle des individus. Les attardés, qui croient échapper aux réalités de la seconde moitié du XXème siècle par des faux-fuyants, porteront de lourdes responsabilités devant l'histoire. Ce mépris de la dignité humaine porte des germes lourds de conflits. Plus le temps passe, plus ce mépris insensé paraîtra intolérable. Les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies sur le droit à la liberté sont clairs et ne souffrent aucune interprétation tendancieuse. Il est inadmissible que des nations, au demeurant courageuses, respectables, et dont l'histoire n'a pas manqué de grandeur humaine, perpétuent plus longtemps la malhonnêteté qui consiste à pratiquer une autre politique que celle qu'exprime la Charte des Nations Unies, acceptée solennellement devant le monde. Cette attitude est indécente. Le droit du plus fort n'est plus de saison, il ne peut plus servir de fondement à aucune action moderne dans les relations entre les peuples.

113. En arrivant au terme de mon intervention, j'adresse, au nom de ma délégation, un pressant appel aux grandes puissances qui se partagent l'influence dans le monde. La fin du colonialisme que tout le monde appelle de tous ses vœux est certainement un des problèmes les plus importants et les plus humains que notre génération ait été amenée à traiter. Par égard pour les souffrances des hommes privés de leurs droits élémentaires et maintenus dans l'asservissement, par égard pour le dénuement de ceux qui viennent de faire surface et dont les premiers pas sont encore chancelants, nous vous demandons de nous préserver, au moins pendant quelque temps, de vos querelles de guerre froide. La décolonisation ne peut être un cheval de bataille pour justifier les avantages quelconques d'un système social. Les jeunes peuples libérés auront besoin de se retrouver et, selon les données appropriées, ils construiront patiemment leur pays.

114. Nous savons qu'il existe des nostalgiques de la décolonisation qui se croient assez malins et assez forts pour reprendre de la main gauche ce qu'ils ont donné de la main droite. Nous savons également qu'il y a ceux qui piétinent d'impatience pour remplacer les administrants d'hier. Ces luttes d'influence entre frères amis et frères ennemis manquent de réalisme. Nous ne sommes plus mineurs à partir du moment où nous pouvons disposer de notre liberté. Il n'existe pas de peuples mineurs dans l'exercice de la liberté. Nous condamnons fermement le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes.

115. Est-il besoin de dire que les peuples qui aspirent à la liberté, à l'indépendance, attendent beaucoup de notre assemblée? Peut-on, je vous le demande au nom de la dignité humaine, répondre non à cette aspiration naturelle et légitime?

116. Je reste persuadé que toutes les nations éprises de paix, de justice et de liberté se joindront à nous pour que le projet de résolution soit adopté à l'unanimité.

117. M. DE FREITAS-VALLE (Brésil) [traduit de l'anglais]: Avant d'entrer dans le vif du sujet, il me semble indispensable de suivre une ancienne pratique et de définir l'objet de la discussion, qui est la notion de colonialisme. On rencontre immédiatement une première difficulté, puisque les notions acceptées tirent leur origine de philosophies politiques différentes.

118. On trouve d'une part ce que l'on pourrait appeler la définition expansionniste du colonialisme, celle de Hobson par exemple:

"Au mieux, le colonialisme est un déversement naturel de la nationalité; il se juge au pouvoir des colons de transplanter la civilisation qu'ils repré-sentent dans le milieu naturel et social nouveau où ils se trouvent ^{8/}."

On pourrait d'autre part rappeler l'ancienne définition pangermaniste du colonialisme, ressuscité il y a quelque temps seulement par le fascisme nazi. Nous avons ici la théorie du "Lebensraum": le pouvoir des peuples qui se considèrent supérieurs d'occuper les espaces qui leur sont nécessaires pour atteindre leurs objectifs politiques. Nous pourrions aussi évoquer l'interprétation du colonialisme donnée par Lénine, à savoir qu'il est la conséquence inévitable du développement du capitalisme et de l'impérialisme. Il y a également ceux qui considèrent le colonialisme comme le "fardeau de l'homme blanc": la mission humanitaire, qui incombe à certaines puissances, d'apporter aux peuples peu avancés progrès, connaissances techniques, éducation et bien-être matériel. Dans la plupart des cas, cette définition a servi d'écran à l'impérialisme pur. On ne saurait passer sous silence la forme la plus récente (et particulièrement agressive) du colonialisme: le colonialisme idéologique qui correspond, nous le savons tous, à la domination d'un peuple par un autre, lequel impose au peuple dominé une idéologie étrangère.

119. Ce que nous étudions dans le présent débat sous le nom de colonialisme — pour nous en tenir rigoureusement au cadre de notre ordre du jour — concerne le statut politique et juridique des territoires qui, suivant l'expression de la Charte, "ne s'administrent pas encore complètement" eux-mêmes [Art. 73].

120. Le cycle historique des formes classiques du colonialisme — nées de la révolution industrielle, du capitalisme, de l'esprit d'aventure, du bescin d'expansion et aussi de l'avidité, souvent sans scrupules — est déjà refermé. A ce point de vue, je ne crois pas qu'il y ait exagération à affirmer que ce sont les auteurs de la Charte des Nations Unies qui ont donné le coup de grâce au colonialisme. La Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes — qui ne figurait pas dans les propositions de Dumbarton Oaks mais qui a très sagement été incluse dans le texte même de la Charte [Chap. XI] — traite de la situation juridique de l'héritage colonialiste et fixe les conditions de son élimination progressive. Du fait, notamment, des principes de la Charte, de ses mécanismes pratiques et politiques et de la force morale de ses décisions, l'Organisation des Nations Unies devient peu à peu le véritable instrument de la grande révolution de notre époque: l'affranchissement des peuples coloniaux, non seulement de l'esclavage politique mais aussi de l'esclavage économique. Ce n'est pas le moment de dresser le bilan des réalisations de l'ONU dans ce domaine. Mais le spectateur même le moins attentif sait que l'ONU a contribué sensiblement à multiplier ces drapeaux colorés qui honorent notre organisation.

121. Afin d'examiner la question coloniale à la lumière de la Charte, on devrait s'efforcer de l'aborder sans parti pris et dans la perspective des réalités politiques de l'époque. On devrait se souvenir que nous vivons dans un monde divisé en deux blocs politiques opposés et paralysé par la crainte d'une guerre thermonucléaire. En conséquence, la question coloniale tend malheureusement à être examinée en tant qu'élément d'une lutte idéologique et d'une politique de puissance. C'est là une grave et dangereuse erreur. Elargir les zones de tension politique, multiplier les points de friction, renforcer les barrières dressées par des malentendus, cela revient non seulement à porter préjudice aux intérêts immédiats et futurs des peuples coloniaux, mais aussi à affaiblir les chances de voir régler pacifiquement les problèmes qui séparent les blocs rivaux. En outre, on ferait ainsi de l'Organisation des Nations Unies non pas l'instrument de cette révolution de l'espoir pour laquelle nous combattons, nous les soldats de la paix, mais l'instrument d'une révolution de la colère.

^{8/} J. A. Hobson, Imperialism, Londres, George Allen and Unwin Ltd., édit., 1948, p. 7.

122. Si l'on doit distinguer la question coloniale de celle de la guerre froide, on ne peut toutefois la séparer des problèmes politiques fondamentaux de notre temps. La question coloniale accélère, par exemple, le mouvement nationaliste qui submerge l'Asie et l'Afrique. Ce mouvement est synchronisé avec l'offensive idéologique du communisme à travers le monde. Nombreux sont ceux qui redoutent que cette simultanéité puisse vicier l'indépendance de peuples nouvellement libres. D'autres craignent que les anciennes puissances coloniales n'essaient d'accorder aux pays récemment parvenus à l'indépendance une indépendance simplement nominale, continuant de les tenir sous une domination politique déguisée par la mainmise qu'ils exercent sur leur économie.

123. D'autre part, la révolution scientifique de notre époque donne au mouvement nationaliste dans les pays coloniaux une importance nouvelle. Ces pays prennent conscience de leur misère au moment même où les pays hautement industrialisés tirent le plus grand parti possible des ressources de la technique moderne. Au lieu d'être à la disposition de l'humanité entière, la technologie nouvelle creuse davantage le fossé déjà si large qui sépare les nantis des misérables. A titre d'exemple, je voudrais rappeler qu'aujourd'hui l'exploitation de l'énergie nucléaire ne profite qu'à un très petit nombre de pays, mais que ses dangers menacent l'humanité entière. Les Etats qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance s'associent à la communauté internationale, qui redoute que la guerre froide ne retarde la solution de leurs problèmes essentiels. Par désespoir, et dans l'illusion d'accélérer leur développement économique et social et de calmer le malaise de leur population, beaucoup d'Etats pourraient bien chercher des solutions politiques qui compromettraient leur indépendance récemment acquise.

124. Je sais qu'il est extrêmement difficile de raisonner dans l'abstrait lorsque des problèmes aussi graves pèsent sur le cœur de millions d'hommes, et aussi sur le mien. Mais je suis convaincu qu'à l'ONU nous avons l'obligation de tenir la question coloniale à l'écart des combats et des incidents de la guerre froide.

125. Dans son chapitre XI, la Charte nous montre la voie sage et prudente que nous devons suivre. Je pense en principe à l'Article 73. Il nous appartient d'appliquer ses dispositions avec fermeté et surtout avec sincérité. Pour ce faire, il faut que les puissances coloniales se rendent à l'évidence: la légitimité d'une situation juridique ne peut pas empêcher une explosion nationaliste issue moins de la distance matérielle qui sépare les puissances métropolitaines et les colonies que de différences sociologiques et culturelles et d'aspirations irrésistibles. Elles doivent aussi se convaincre de l'inutilité de tout effort tendant à remplacer le colonialisme classique par une domination indirecte. Il faut que les anciennes puissances coloniales et les peuples qui ont obtenu d'elles leur indépendance s'associent dans la lutte nouvelle pour le progrès social et économique de ces derniers. Il faut que les deux blocs rivaux s'abstiennent de considérer les Etats parvenant à l'indépendance comme un "no man's land" sur lequel ils pourraient exercer leur influence en vue de faire pencher en leur faveur l'équilibre de la puissance. Enfin, les peuples qui sont encore soumis à un régime colonial doivent se convaincre que l'indépendance n'est pas seulement un mot magique suivi d'un drapeau, d'un hymne national et d'une représentation diplomatique, mais qu'elle représente, sur les plans politique, économique et culturel, la maîtrise de la richesse et du patrimoine d'un pays, l'utilisation de ces ressources au bénéfice de la population tout entière et la pratique de la liberté au moyen d'institutions politiques fondées sur un régime représentatif qui exprime la pleine liberté d'opinion.

126. La tâche qui s'impose à l'ONU, à nous-mêmes, c'est de préparer à l'indépendance, le plus rapidement possible, les peuples encore soumis à des régimes coloniaux. Nous faillirions à notre tâche en retardant leur complète émancipation. Et nous nous en acquitterions mal si, au nom d'une indépendance qui serait fictive, nous allions oublier les dispositions de la Charte en exposant sans discrimination et sans précautions convenables ces peuples aux risques et aux dangers de deux colonialismes nouveaux: le colonialisme des idéologies totalitaires qui supprime la liberté des peuples, et la forme de colonialisme qui consiste, pour les anciennes puissances coloniales, à vouloir maintenir sous des formes nouvelles leur domination économique et politique.

127. Les hommes d'Etat qui ont rédigé la Charte des Nations Unies suivaient une politique clairvoyante et faisaient preuve de fermeté lorsqu'ils ont indiqué la voie à suivre. Compte tenu des principes de la Charte et guidée par les observations que je viens de formuler, la délégation brésilienne réserve un accueil favorable au projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] et l'examinera en tenant compte des propositions et observations formulées au cours des présents débats.

128. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Mexique pour exercer son droit de réponse.

129. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Dans son brillant discours d'hier [933ème séance], le représentant du Guatemala a parlé de l'avenir du territoire de Belize. C'est pour cette raison que je viens occuper, pendant quelques instants, la tribune de l'Assemblée.

130. Mon pays possède sur Belize des droits et des positions établis depuis longtemps, que je me dois de rappeler ici. Depuis que le peuple du Mexique a obtenu son indépendance, son gouvernement n'a cessé de lutter pour l'élimination complète du système colonial. Nous le considérons en effet comme un élément archaïque qui n'a plus aucune raison de subsister dans le monde d'aujourd'hui. Nous suivons ainsi notre voie, cette voie américaine qui mène à la liberté et à la justice pour tous. C'est là un idéal auquel se rattache le principe de non-intervention. Notre pays estime que chaque peuple doit se développer librement, suivant les normes qu'il s'est lui-même fixées, conformément à sa tradition historique. Il estime également que chaque pays doit s'édifier conformément à l'idéal qu'il a conçu lui-même et indépendamment de celui que d'autres nations peuvent lui proposer.

131. Les importantes mesures que notre organisation a prises en vue de mettre définitivement fin au colonialisme atteignent aujourd'hui leur apogée. Nous voyons ainsi s'épanouir un désir dont l'histoire américaine fournit de multiples précédents. C'est de cet ardent espoir qu'il a été question aux diverses conférences interaméricaines qui se sont tenues et, à ce propos, je pourrais rappeler plus particulièrement la résolution 96, adoptée à la dixième Conférence interaméricaine tenue à Caracas en mars 1954. Les nations américaines y ont réaffirmé leur conviction que le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes ne peut souffrir aucune atteinte; elles y ont déclaré leur volonté d'éliminer, dans les pays d'Amérique, le colonialisme qui est maintenu contre le gré des peuples, et de mettre fin à l'occupation de certains territoires.

132. La résolution 97, adoptée par cette même conférence interaméricaine, souligne la nécessité, pour les pays extra-continentaux possédant des colonies sur le continent américain, de prendre enfin les mesures prévues par la Charte en vue de permettre aux peuples d'Amérique qui ne l'ont pas encore fait d'exercer pleinement leur droit à l'autodétermination.

133. C'est sur ces deux documents que se fonde essentiellement la position du Gouvernement mexicain en ce qui concerne Belize. Le premier principe repose sur le passé du territoire, considéré à la fois du point de vue de l'histoire et du droit. Les origines de la domination exercée par la Grande-Bretagne sur cette partie du continent américain sont assez humbles: un permis concédé par l'autorité espagnole pour l'exploitation du bois de teinture, permis qui se transforma, au fil des ans, en un droit évidemment illusoire. Il ne fut tenu aucun compte des demandes répétées que formula le Gouvernement mexicain en faveur de la reconnaissance de sa souveraineté au cours du XIX^{ème} siècle. La grande puissance coloniale attendit des moments difficiles pour imposer au Mexique, au mépris de ses droits, un traité rigoureux que mon peuple a néanmoins scrupuleusement respecté. Mais cela ne lui interdit pas de répéter sans cesse que, si le statut de Belize venait à être modifié, le Mexique possède des droits juridiquement fondés qu'il pourra alors faire valoir.

134. L'autre ligne de conduite essentielle adoptée par mon pays en la matière se fonde sur l'Article 73 de la Charte. Comme l'a dit très justement hier le représentant du Guatemala, les intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes doivent l'emporter. Dans le cas de Belize, mon gouvernement estime que l'accès à l'autonomie et la venue à la maturité politique des habitants de ce territoire représentent une mission que la communauté internationale ne peut éviter de remplir.

135. Je résume donc la position du Mexique en ce qui concerne Belize. Mon gouvernement a déclaré, et répète ici, que, si le statut actuel de Belize venait à être modifié, le Mexique, usant des procédés pacifiques et amicaux qui ont toujours caractérisé son attitude dans ses relations internationales, ferait valoir des droits qui découlent d'antécédents historiques et de situations juridiques bien connus. De même, mon gouvernement reconnaît que les intérêts des habitants du territoire de Belize sont primordiaux et estime en conséquence que, dans l'évolution qui achemine le territoire de Belize vers l'autonomie, on ne peut méconnaître les aspirations politiques librement et officiellement exprimées par sa population.

136. C'est pourquoi, comme l'a déclaré devant cette assemblée, le 6 octobre 1958^{2/}, le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Mexique, mon gouvernement ne manquera pas de favoriser le moment venu toute solution relative à l'avenir de Belize qui assure la liberté et l'indépendance de la population de ce territoire.

137. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de la Belgique, qui souhaite exercer son droit de réponse.

138. M. PARISIS (Belgique): Parmi les erreurs flagrantes énoncées à cette tribune à l'égard de la Belgique, je n'en relèverai qu'une aujourd'hui.

139. On s'est complu à écrire et à dire que, pendant un demi-siècle de domination coloniale belge, la population du Congo avait diminué de plus de moitié en raison des expéditions punitives, de la famine et des maladies. Il est absurde de vouloir comparer les chiffres de population actuels avec des estimations couvrant une époque où le territoire était inconnu et impénétrable en beaucoup d'endroits. Il a fallu le parcourir en tous sens, pendant des dizaines d'années, avant de pouvoir faire un recensement. Le caractère flagrant d'une telle erreur d'appréciation apparaît lorsqu'on analyse la baisse du taux moyen de mortalité, la hausse du taux moyen de natalité et lorsque l'on constate, comme résultat, qu'en une vingtaine d'années, de 1935 à 1957 par exemple, le taux de la population a quadruplé. A la veille de l'indépendance, la population du Congo était composée pour moitié de jeunes de moins de 15 ans, signe extraordinaire de dynamisme — surtout lorsqu'on se souvient qu'au siècle dernier, hélas! sur deux enfants naissant au Congo, un mourait en bas âge.

140. L'erreur que je viens de relever n'est qu'un exemple de la mauvaise foi exprimée dans certaines interventions, mais cela n'empêche pas la Belgique d'être fière de l'œuvre accomplie en collaboration avec les Congolais.

La séance est levée à 14 h 15.

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

16. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Avant d'en venir à la liste des orateurs inscrits aujourd'hui sur la question, je donne la parole au représentant du Guatemala qui souhaite exercer son droit de réponse.

17. M. HERRARTE (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation du Guatemala, au cours de son intervention dans la discussion générale sur la question de la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", a cité incidemment le cas du territoire guatémalien de Belize, que le Royaume-Uni occupe indûment; elle n'a pas cru devoir s'y attarder longuement, étant donné le caractère général de la question en cours de discussion. Le représentant du Mexique a jugé bon cependant, lors de la 934^{ème} séance, tenue le 3 décembre 1960, de faire allusion à la situation de Belize en se référant à mes déclarations et en plaçant le problème sur un terrain qui risque de prêter à équivoque et de donner lieu à de fausses interprétations.

18. Ma délégation est néanmoins reconnaissante au représentant du Mexique de lui offrir l'occasion d'examiner la question de Belize d'une façon plus détaillée. Une fois de plus, et comme elle l'a constamment soutenu, ma délégation déclare que, si le statut du territoire de Belize venait à être modifié à la suite des réclamations présentées par le Guatemala, les récentes prétentions mexicaines faisant état de réserves éventuelles ne pourront en aucun cas et sous aucun motif être considérées comme l'expression d'une action solidaire et conjointe avec mon pays qui, depuis plus de 100 ans, a constamment revendiqué l'exercice de droits exclusifs sur ce territoire.

19. Qu'on veuille bien me permettre de présenter quelques réflexions sur cette affaire de Belize, cas d'usurpation pure et simple exercé par une grande puissance à l'encontre d'un pays faible qui ne disposait pas de ressources suffisantes pour faire respecter ses droits. Certes, comme l'a dit le représentant du Mexique, l'occupation du territoire trouve ses origines dans les permis concédés à la Grande-Bretagne par l'Espagne pour l'exploitation de bois, dans le traité de 1773 qui visait l'abattage forestier entre le rio Hondo et le rio Belize, et dans celui de 1776 qui étendait ces accords à la région située entre le rio Hondo et le rio Sibún. Aux termes de ces deux traités, l'Espagne se réservait expressément la souveraineté de ce territoire, dont elle concédait l'usufruit à titre gracieux, et par ailleurs imposait aux Anglais des restrictions bien précises, mais leur permettait de bâtir des fortifications. Ces concessions furent accordées à l'intérieur du territoire relevant de la Capitainerie générale de Guatemala, plus précisément dans la province de Petén, le rio Hondo séparant la Capitainerie générale de Guatemala de celle de Yucatan.

20. Lors de la déclaration d'indépendance de la Capitainerie générale de Guatemala, le 15 septembre 1821, la République fédérale d'Amérique centrale hérita de tous les droits de souveraineté dont l'Espagne jouissait sur l'ensemble des territoires qui la constituaient. L'usufruit que la Grande-Bretagne exerçait à titre précaire sur la zone de Belize prit fin à cette date conformément au droit des gens, étant donné que les Etats nouveaux accèdent à l'indépendance libres de tout engagement pris par la nation antérieurement souveraine.

21. La vie indépendante de la République fédérale d'Amérique centrale a connu toutes sortes de tribulations, elle a souffert de divisions, que cette grande puissance a encouragées pour pouvoir s'assurer la maîtrise des grandes voies maritimes. La République fédérale d'Amérique centrale n'a pas pu être reconnue par le Royaume-Uni, qui exigeait pour prix de la reconnaissance de ce pays la cession du territoire de Belize. En s'étendant jusqu'à la Mosquitia et aux îles de la Baie, cette grande puissance touchait au Honduras et au Nicaragua.

22. Après la dissolution de la République fédérale d'Amérique centrale, le territoire se divisa en cinq républiques indépendantes, à savoir le Guatemala, le Salvador, le Honduras, le Nicaragua et le Costa Rica, dont les juridictions s'étendent sur ce qui, antérieurement, appartenait à l'Espagne. Le Guatemala revendiqua alors le territoire de Belize, en vertu de la règle uti possidetis.

23. Le traité Clayton-Bulwer de 1850, aux termes duquel l'Angleterre et les Etats-Unis s'engageaient à n'occuper aucune partie de l'Amérique centrale, mit fin à la menace qui pesait sur l'existence de ces Etats.

24. Par suite de raisons qu'il n'est pas utile d'exposer ici, et sous la pression des circonstances, le Gouvernement du Guatemala s'est trouvé dans l'obligation de signer avec la Grande-Bretagne la Convention de 1859, véritable traité de cession territoriale qui porta les limites du territoire de 6.000 à plus de 22.000 kilomètres carrés. En contrepartie de cette cession, ce traité contenait une clause que l'Angleterre n'a jamais respectée; c'est pourquoi le Guatemala a déclaré caducs les termes de l'accord intervenu, sans que la Grande-Bretagne ait restitué le territoire indûment détenu.

25. En 1893, le Gouvernement du Mexique signa avec le Gouvernement britannique un traité définissant les limites entre le territoire de Belize et la province du Yucatan et reconnaissant comme frontière le rio Hondo qui, nous l'avons déjà dit, séparait la Capitainerie du Yucatan de la Capitainerie générale de Guatemala à l'époque de la domination espagnole. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Mexique reconnut, en cette circonstance, que la convention de 1859 conclue entre la Grande-Bretagne et le Guatemala avait été un traité de cession territoriale et que, pour le Mexique, le problème se limitait à une simple question de frontière qui n'impliquait pour ce pays aucun sacrifice territorial.

26. Je voudrais rappeler à ce propos au représentant du Mexique ce que d'illustres hommes d'Etat mexicains ont déclaré au sujet du problème guatémalien de Belize. En 1939, le Ministre des affaires étrangères du Mexique, M. Eduardo Hay, dans une note très cordiale adressée au Ministère des affaires étrangères du Guatemala, a reconnu les droits de notre pays sur Belize "conformément" — je cite — "aux antécédents historiques, géographiques et juridiques de la question". Le Président du Mexique lui-même, le général Lázaro Cárdenas, a dit ceci dans un discours prononcé en 1940:

"Puisque le Mexique se sent soutenu par ces preuves de solidarité, il est de son devoir d'y répondre soit en formulant des propositions de paix ou de neutralité, soit en appuyant les revendications territoriales des nations sœurs qui, comme le Guatemala dans l'affaire de Belize, demandent avec juste raison que soient réglés des conflits anciens et réparées des usurpations territoriales opérées par la force et en violation des règles du droit international."

27. C'est ce même esprit de solidarité qu'on su montrer en plusieurs circonstances les républiques d'Amérique centrale, plus particulièrement dans la Déclaration des principes de coexistence des Etats d'Amérique centrale (Déclaration de Guatemala Antigua) où il est dit ce qui suit:

"La première Réunion des ministres des affaires étrangères des pays d'Amérique centrale, au nom des Etats qu'ils représentent, déclare: ... septièmement, qu'elle rejette la survivance du colonialisme en Amérique, qu'elle affirme expressément que le territoire de Belize fait partie intégrante du territoire du Guatemala et par conséquent de l'Amérique centrale, que les actions entreprises pour le revendiquer intéressent tous les Etats signataires de cette déclaration."

28. Il serait trop long de rappeler ici ce qu'est et a été cette lutte constante, héroïque, digne du peuple guatémalien, pour faire triompher sa juste cause; nous avons pu entendre les juristes et les personnalités politiques les plus éminents de l'Amérique nous prodiguer leurs encouragements et appuyer nos revendications. C'est pourquoi nous regrettons profondément de constater qu'au cours des dernières années la délégation du Mexique a fait valoir, au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, des prétentions qu'elle n'avait jamais exprimées auparavant, des prétentions qui, de surcroît, sont présentées sous la forme d'une "éventualité" et qui situent le problème de Belize sur un plan très éloigné de la réalité historique. Je voudrais également rappeler au représentant du Mexique ce que son pays représente pour nous; nous sommes fiers des liens historiques et culturels qui nous unissent à lui, car il est en quelque sorte le frère aîné des petits pays d'Amérique centrale. Nous admirons sa noblesse, son sens profond de la solidarité continentale, les sacrifices dont témoigne son histoire; nos deux pays ont toujours entretenu les rapports les plus cordiaux. C'est pourquoi nous sommes en droit d'attendre de ce grand pays ce que l'un de ses plus grands hommes, Benito Juárez, a éloquentement formulé en disant "le respect du droit d'autrui, c'est la paix".

29. M. OBEID (Soudan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais que mes premières paroles dans cette brève intervention soient un hommage rendu à l'Union soviétique, pour la féliciter d'avoir pris, sous la conduite de M. Khrouchtchev, l'initiative très opportune de faire inscrire la question à l'ordre du jour de la session et d'avoir insisté avec succès pour qu'elle soit débattue en séance plénière.

30. La suite des débats a montré avec beaucoup de force combien sont profondes les convictions qui inspirent les peuples du monde épris de liberté dans cette lutte acharnée pour éliminer le phénomène sinistre que l'humanité n'a que trop longtemps supporté, et qui a considérablement envenimé les relations entre les hommes.

31. Tout ce qui devait être dit l'a déjà été par les éminents orateurs qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune, et je ne prolongerai pas ces débats en revenant sur les mêmes questions. Je ne me propose pas de refaire en détail l'histoire du colonialisme, mais je tâcherai de traiter d'un sujet moins triste: celui de la lutte contre le colonialisme, qui a conduit à la liberté et à l'indépendance.

32. Au cours des années, les puissances coloniales ont exposé deux conceptions pour justifier leur domination sur d'autres peuples. Elles nous disent tout d'abord qu'en assujettissant les peuples coloniaux elles ont à accomplir une mission de civilisation. Ensuite, elles déclarent que cette mission leur a été confiée parce qu'elles sont supérieures. Cette seconde conception a grisé certaines puissances coloniales au point d'aboutir à une politique aussi sinistre et diabolique que le colonialisme lui-même et que nous nommons aujourd'hui le "racisme". Il n'est pas besoin d'être grand clerc pour apercevoir la fragilité, l'absurdité même, de telles théories. Le mot "civilisation" est l'un de ces grands mots que l'on n'est pas encore arrivé à définir. Les théories de supériorité raciale n'ont amené leurs propagateurs qu'à des désastres inévitables et généralisés, et l'histoire parfois se répète. On peut, sans être naïf, affirmer que ces théories servent à masquer l'exploitation des peuples et à justifier la jouissance des produits matériels de leur sol et de leur travail. Mais la nature même de l'homme lui interdit d'accepter ou de tolérer la domination étrangère et l'injustice, l'humiliation et l'abaissement qui l'accompagnent obligatoirement. Il était donc tout naturel que les peuples se soulèvent pour résister et lutter, en vue de recouvrer un droit qui leur appartenait de naissance. Dans les premiers temps du colonialisme, ces mouvements de résistance étaient assez rares. Les risques étaient grands, les conditions défavorables, le coût incalculable et de nombreuses vies étaient perdues ou sacrifiées; les prisons étaient pleines de prétendus "agitateurs", en fait des hommes épris de liberté. Mais la volonté de Dieu et la résolution dont ses créatures ont fait preuve pour recouvrer ce qui leur avait été attribué l'ont emporté sur l'injustice et l'inégalité.

33. Des rivalités entre puissances coloniales ont aidé ce mouvement de libération. Souvent, et notamment au cours des deux dernières guerres, ces puissances ont essayé de se concilier les peuples coloniaux et leur ont fait des promesses merveilleuses qui devaient bien vite être oubliées une fois passée l'heure d'infortune. Mais les peuples coloniaux, eux, n'ont pas oublié; ils ont redoublé leurs efforts, intensifié leur combat de sorte qu'en définitive les puissances coloniales ont été obligées de leur concéder ce qui leur appartenait: leur indépendance.

34. Le meilleur exemple de promesses non tenues est la célèbre révolte arabe. Lors de la déclaration de la première guerre mondiale et lorsque la Turquie se fut jointe à l'Allemagne, les Alliés poussèrent à la révolte les Arabes, à l'époque sous domination turque. Ils leur promirent une indépendance totale après la victoire. Les Arabes soulevés combattirent courageusement aux côtés des Alliés et, en deux ou trois ans, les Turcs étaient chassés d'Arabie, de Syrie, de Palestine et du Liban. A la consternation des Arabes, on découvrit bientôt que les Alliés avaient conclu un traité secret, l'arrangement Sykes-Picot, par lequel ils se partageaient le monde arabe. De plus, dans la déclaration Balfour, la Grande-Bretagne promettait la création d'un foyer national pour les Juifs de Palestine en opposition au vœu nettement exprimé de l'immense majorité des Palestiniens. On connaît bien les tragiques conséquences de cette malheureuse décision puisqu'elles nous préoccupent ici à l'ONU depuis 13 ans.

35. Mais les Arabes n'ont pas succombé. Ils ont poursuivi leur lutte acharnée même après que les Alliés eurent remporté la victoire et imposé leur autorité au monde arabe. Ici encore, les vœux du peuple et la résolution indomptable d'en assurer le succès ont prévalu, et la plupart des pays arabes du Moyen-Orient sont parvenus à l'indépendance totale. Il est regrettable qu'un pays arabe de cette région combatte encore pour son indépendance, mais nous espérons qu'avant longtemps la Palestine se joindra aux nations libres du monde malgré les tentatives faites pour maintenir ses habitants en résidence forcée dans des camps du désert.

36. Les sacrifices et l'endurance des peuples coloniaux pendant leur lutte n'ont pas été vains; après la seconde guerre mondiale, de nombreux pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, menés par les grands peuples de la péninsule indienne, la Birmanie, Ceylan et l'Indonésie, ont acquis leur indépendance.

37. C'est ainsi que nous sommes arrivés à l'ère nouvelle et pleine de promesses du soulèvement collectif contre le colonialisme. Les chefs des pays indépendants d'Asie et d'Afrique ont pris conscience de l'identité du sort des pays coloniaux de ces deux continents, et ont compris que les efforts communs seraient plus efficaces que les mesures individuelles. Ce fut la raison d'être de la Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie réunie à Bandoung, en 1955, qui marque une date historique, véritable jalon le long de la voie où, inlassablement et conscient de son but, l'homme avance vers la liberté et l'indépendance. Les principes élevés adoptés à la Conférence serviront à tout jamais d'inspiration et resteront un symbole de liberté. Puis vint la première Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, tenue à Accra en 1958. L'Afrique entière écoutait et retenait son souffle. D'énergiques résolutions relatives notamment à la liberté et à l'avenir des territoires non autonomes d'Afrique en sont issues. La résolution II commence comme suit:

"La Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique,

"Reconnaissant que l'existence du colonialisme sous quelque forme que ce soit est une menace à la sécurité et à l'indépendance des Etats africains et à la paix du monde,

"Considérant que les problèmes et l'avenir des territoires dépendants d'Afrique ne relèvent pas uniquement des puissances coloniales mais sont la responsabilité de tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et, en particulier, de celle des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, "Condamnant catégoriquement tous les systèmes coloniaux encore vivants dans notre continent, et qui imposent aux peuples d'Afrique un régime et une répression arbitraires;

"Convaincue qu'il y a lieu de fixer une date précise pour l'obtention par chaque territoire colonial de son indépendance, conformément à la volonté des peuples de ces territoires et aux dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies;

"1. Invite les puissances administrantes à respecter la Charte des Nations Unies à cet égard, à prendre rapidement des mesures pour en exécuter les dispositions et à répondre aux aspirations politiques des peuples, à savoir la libre détermination et l'indépendance, conformément aux vœux des peuples;

"2. Invite les puissances administrantes à s'abstenir de toute répression et de tout régime arbitraire dans ces territoires et à respecter tous les droits de l'homme prévus dans la Charte des Nations Unies et dans la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme;

"3. Invite les puissances administrantes à mettre immédiatement fin à toute discrimination quelle qu'elle soit dans ces territoires;

"4. Recommande à tous les gouvernements participants de donner toute l'assistance possible aux peuples dépendants dans leur lutte pour parvenir à la libre détermination et à l'indépendance;

"5. Recommande aux Etats indépendants d'Afrique réunis ici d'offrir des moyens en vue de la formation et de l'éducation des peuples des territoires dépendants;

"6. Décide de célébrer tous les ans le 15 avril le jour de la liberté de l'Afrique."

En citant intégralement la résolution, je me propose de la faire consigner dans les comptes rendus de l'ONU.

38. C'est dans ces conditions que le mouvement actuel de libération en Afrique a pris de l'ampleur et a déterminé la modification radicale du continent. Au cours de l'année 1960, 16 pays d'Afrique ont obtenu leur indépendance et d'autres sont en voie de l'acquiescer. C'est la volonté et l'attitude communes de toute l'Afrique, en matière de liberté et d'indépendance, qui ont amené la modification et détruit le colonialisme et le racisme sur le sol de l'Afrique. L'Afrique, continent si longtemps violé par le fléau du colonialisme et ses séquelles, a brisé ses chaînes. Elle ne se laissera plus enchaîner.

39. Nous, peuples africains, qui avons tant souffert et qui sommes aujourd'hui parvenus à l'indépendance, grâce à nos propres efforts et à l'aide des peuples épris de liberté, sommes conscients de la différence entre notre passé de détresse, notre présent lumineux et notre avenir plus lumineux encore. Il a été prouvé sans conteste que, dans tous les domaines, les progrès sont plus rapides une fois l'indépendance obtenue.

40. Comme l'indique le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes [A/4371, 1ère partie, par. 23], les représentants de l'Inde et de l'Irak ont déclaré devant le Comité que, bien que les Etats Membres administrants aient soutenu par le passé que l'autonomie devait être l'aboutissement d'un long processus de développement économique et social, l'expérience avait montré que les territoires progressaient plus rapidement après être devenus autonomes ou indépendants. Le représentant de l'Inde a souligné en outre qu'il convenait de considérer non seulement les progrès réalisés, mais ce qui devait et pouvait encore être fait. D'autre part, les progrès ne devaient pas être jugés seulement d'après des statistiques et des pourcentages, mais aussi d'après la mesure dans laquelle les besoins et aspirations des populations se trouvaient satisfaits. Il n'était plus possible d'accepter que l'on fasse dépendre l'émancipation politique des populations des territoires non autonomes d'un certain degré de développement atteint dans d'autres domaines.

41. Notre expérience nous confirme dans cette opinion. Il a été établi avec certitude que le colonialisme est stérile et ne peut contribuer au progrès. Les Etats indépendants d'Afrique ont suivi les épisodes de la lutte pour libérer le reste du continent. Trois conférences — à Accra, Monrovia et Addis-Abéba — ont intensifié la poussée contre le colonialisme. Mais, malgré cette avance dans la voie de la liberté, nous voyons aujourd'hui certaines puissances coloniales se cacher la tête dans le sable. Le Portugal applique dans ses colonies africaines du Mozambique, de l'Angola, de la Guinée et autres la politique d'oppression la plus avilissante. Celle-ci peut se comparer à la politique raciste sud-africaine, également appliquée dans le territoire du Sud-Ouest africain. Nous aimerions que ces deux pays se mettent au rythme de l'époque et agissent conformément aux obligations du temps dans lequel ils vivent, aussi bien que nous. Ces peuples ne seront ni abandonnés ni oubliés. Ils recevront l'assistance de toute l'Afrique et des pays épris de liberté, jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient gagné leur indépendance. Nous invitons les puissances chargées de l'administration de la Rhodésie, du Nyassaland, du Kenya, de l'Ouganda, de Malte, du Sahara occidental, de la Somalie sous l'autorité de la France, de l'Irian occidental à répondre à la volonté, aux vœux et aux aspirations des peuples de ces territoires.

42. Quant à l'Algérie, le plus grand drame de notre époque, on en a beaucoup parlé, mais on n'a pas fait grand-chose pour mettre fin à une guerre sanglante, aujourd'hui dans sa septième année. Chaque jour qui passe rend la guerre de plus en plus acharnée. Les pertes, tant françaises qu'algériennes, augmentent d'heure en heure. Plus du quart de la population est en prison ou internée dans des camps où elle est soumise aux traitements les plus cruels et les plus humiliants. Ce dernier aspect de la guerre meurtrière a été brutalement révélé par un rapport du Comité international de la Croix-Rouge et a fait l'objet d'une énergique protestation adressée au Secrétaire général au mois de février de la présente année par 20 Etats Membres d'Afrique et d'Asie.

43. Cette tragique situation résulte de ce que le Gouvernement français ne s'en est pas tenu à la reconnaissance par le général de Gaulle du droit des Algériens à l'autodétermination. Le comportement des membres du Gouvernement provisoire de la République algérienne [GPRA], depuis la déclaration faite par le général de Gaulle le 16 septembre 1959, a été constamment caractérisé par le souci de leurs responsabilités, leur maturité politique, leurs qualités d'hommes d'Etat et leurs intentions pacifiques.

44. Dans sa déclaration du 28 septembre 1959, répondant à celle du général de Gaulle, le GPRA a admis la position française, à savoir que le droit à l'autodétermination devrait être le fondement d'une solution du problème algérien. Il a aussi admis, avec le gouvernement français, qu'on ne saurait recourir au suffrage universel pour déterminer l'avenir de l'Algérie tant que la paix ne serait pas revenue. Il n'a demandé que la possibilité de discuter avec la France les conditions politiques et militaires du cessez-le-feu, ainsi que les conditions et garanties de l'application du principe de l'autodétermination. Ces exigences étaient naturelles. Mais, d'après ce que l'on a appris au cours de l'année qui a suivi la déclaration du président de Gaulle, la France semble vouloir à tout prix que toutes les discussions relatives au cessez-le-feu ou aux conditions et modalités de rencontre entre les représentants de la France et du GPRA soient unilatéralement décidées par la France. Ce qui s'est passé du 25 au 29 juin de cette année à Melun nous en fournit des preuves nombreuses. Les conditions imposées par la France lors de ces entretiens, ces conditions et modalités d'une rencontre entre les délégations française et algérienne, ont été qualifiées par un ancien Président du Conseil français, M. Mendès-France, que je cite ici, de "conditions si humiliantes qu'elles constituaient en fait une exigence de capitulation".

45. Mais le vaillant peuple algérien, qui a combattu si longtemps et si courageusement pour une cause honorable, ne capitulera pas devant le poids des armes françaises, car il a le droit pour lui et le droit finira par triompher.

46. Nous sommes convaincus que l'Algérie sera indépendante et que ses représentants seront bientôt parmi nous. Nous sommes heureux qu'aujourd'hui l'ONU ait décidé d'accorder son appui moral à la lutte contre le colonialisme et pour l'indépendance des peuples asservis. Elle a sensiblement contribué au mouvement pour le progrès et l'indépendance des territoires sous tutelle et non autonomes. Elle agit conformément à la volonté des peuples du monde exprimée dans la Charte des Nations Unies en vue de:

"... proclamer à nouveau notre foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites,

"... favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande".

47. A nos yeux, le projet de résolution, dont ma délégation s'honore d'être l'un des auteurs [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5], marque l'apogée de la lutte et la dénonciation formelle du colonialisme sous tous ses aspects. Nous sommes convaincus que la survivance du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération internationale, ainsi que le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples dépendants, et qu'elle s'oppose à l'idéal de paix universelle qui est celui des Nations Unies. Nous sommes persuadés que le désir d'indépendance des peuples est un phénomène naturel et rationnel, que le processus de libération est irrésistible et irréversible et que, pour éviter des crises graves, il est urgent de mettre fin au colonialisme et à toutes les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination qui l'accompagnent. Les Nations Unies s'enrichissent et se fortifient à chaque apparition d'un nouvel Etat indépendant, et nous devons veiller à ce que tous les peuples du monde soient des Membres libres et loyaux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

48. La politique de mon gouvernement à l'égard du mouvement de liberté en Afrique est bien définie et clairement exprimée. Elle ne laisse aucune place à l'incertitude. Nous apporterons notre appui moral et matériel aux peuples d'Afrique en lutte pour la liberté, l'indépendance et l'égalité. Dans un communiqué récent, le Président de la République arabe unie et le Président de la République du Soudan ont condamné les politiques destinées à asservir les peuples et à miner la dignité humaine pour des raisons de couleur, de race ou de croyance. Ils ont également affirmé qu'ils continueraient à appuyer la cause de la libération nationale des pays africains qui ont encore à obtenir leur indépendance. Ils ont blâmé toutes les tentatives criminelles faites pour désorganiser cette lutte et donné leur appui à tous les efforts visant à extirper le colonialisme et le racisme du sol de l'Afrique.

49. Nous ne nous taisons pas devant l'injustice, et nous ne manquerons pas de critiquer tout ce qui est manifestement mauvais. Nous exprimerons toujours nos opinions en toute franchise et sans crainte, et nous aiderons toujours, dans la mesure de nos moyens, les combattants de la liberté dans le monde entier tant que la liberté et la justice n'y seront pas assurées à tous les peuples.

50. Pour conclure, nous espérons que le projet de résolution sera adopté à l'unanimité et mis en œuvre dès son adoption. C'est avec espoir que nous demandons aux puissances administrantes de faire preuve de bonne volonté et de coopération dans cette tâche. Nous attendons d'elles qu'elles s'efforcent d'oublier les théories grâce auxquelles elles ont cherché à justifier le colonialisme. De notre côté, nous nous attacherons, nous aussi, à oublier et, ce que nous ne pouvons oublier, nous tâcherons de le pardonner.

51. M. SHAHA (Nepal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation se félicite de l'initiative, prise par la délégation de l'URSS, de faire inscrire à l'ordre du jour la discussion de la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". Nous pensons que le moment est venu pour l'ONU de se prononcer nettement et sans équivoque sur la nécessité et l'urgence de mettre fin sans condition au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

52. Au milieu du XXème siècle, la pensée évoluée et la conscience éclairée de l'homme ont nettement dépassé les concepts même les plus hardis et les plus modernes du colonialisme, quelle que soit la justification que se donnent les puissances coloniales pour fonder leur politique et les mesures qu'elles prennent dans ce domaine. Il est vrai que certains pays se sont mieux acquittés que d'autres de leurs tâches coloniales, mais ce mérite relatif ne leur donne pas le droit de vouloir justifier la poursuite de leur politique coloniale dans les conditions nouvelles du monde d'aujourd'hui.

53. Nous aurions sans doute quelques réserves à faire au sujet de la forme de la déclaration soviétique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux [A/4502 et Corr.1], mais il est indéniable qu'elle met clairement en lumière l'idée qu'il importe de mettre fin au colonialisme. Chaque Etat Membre devrait comprendre l'importance et la gravité de la question qui fait l'objet des débats actuels, et devrait consacrer tous ses efforts et son attention à permettre aux peuples encore soumis à la domination coloniale de réaliser leurs aspirations de liberté et d'indépendance dans un avenir immédiat.

54. Ce que nous redoutons, c'est que ce problème, comme d'autres, puisse être utilisé par certains comme un moyen de propagande dans la guerre froide. Mais, pour nous, en Asie et en Afrique, qui avons subi la domination coloniale dans le passé, et qui voyons encore aujourd'hui l'image véritable du colonialisme, avec ses conséquences néfastes pour les peuples soumis à son joug, la question ne saurait être traitée à la légère et il ne faut pas que, dans ces débats, elle soit considérée comme un élément de la guerre froide. Pour nous, il y a là un élément capital de l'évolution d'un monde nouveau fondé sur la liberté, la justice et l'égalité pour tous, sans distinction de couleur ou de région d'origine. A notre avis, c'est un ordre mondial de cette sorte qui est prévu dans la Charte des Nations Unies elle-même.

55. Nous avons été encouragés et heureux d'entendre ce qu'a déjà dit M. David Ormsby-Gore, ministre d'Etat aux affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni, au cours de son intervention sur la question:

"Qu'il me soit permis de déclarer dès maintenant que la délégation du Royaume-Uni souscrit totalement à ce que je sais être ... l'objectif principal de ces délégations" — il s'agissait des délégations asiatiques et africaines — "la réalisation aussi rapide que possible d'une autonomie et d'une indépendance complètes pour les peuples qui n'en jouissent pas encore." [925ème séance plénière, par. 32.]

Le Ministre d'Etat aux affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni a rappelé, et, selon moi, à juste titre, les obligations que les puissances coloniales ont assumées au titre de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies. Mais la question est de savoir combien de puissances coloniales, à ce jour, ont respecté leurs obligations dans leur politique coloniale.

56. Cependant, à un autre point de vue, la vitesse à laquelle le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni lui-même a pu faire progresser la cause de l'autonomie dans différentes colonies — territoires sous tutelle et non autonomes relevant de son administration — pouvait, pour citer les paroles de M. David Ormsby-Gore, "être remarquable compte tenu des espérances du monde en 1946" [ibid., par. 35], mais la vraie question est de savoir si la rapidité des progrès de l'autonomie dans ces territoires répond aux exigences croissantes de l'opinion publique mondiale en 1960.

57. Ainsi que nous l'avons déjà dit, si l'ONU veut éviter de se laisser distancer par les événements mondiaux, et marcher de pair avec la conscience des peuples, le moment est venu pour elle de faire connaître clairement et sans ambiguïté sa position sur ce problème. Nous savons que les buts et principes indiqués dans la Charte des Nations Unies et les chapitres traitant de la coopération économique et sociale internationale et du régime international de tutelle visent l'élimination future du colonialisme. Mais cette orientation ne semble pas, à elle seule, répondre à l'attente de plus en plus impatiente des peuples encore soumis à une domination coloniale. Telle est la raison principale qui nous a conduits, avec tant d'autres délégations d'Asie et d'Afrique, à présenter le projet de résolution.

58. Pour des raisons très compréhensibles, ma délégation ne souhaite pas maintenant approfondir les origines du colonialisme, ni analyser ses causes et ses mobiles. A notre avis, le colonialisme, en tant que force agissant dans la politique internationale, doit être étudié en tenant compte de ses répercussions sur les relations internationales. Jugé de ce point de vue, il s'est révélé être un mal absolu qui a non seulement vicié les relations entre les peuples coloniaux, mais a aussi causé des guerres entre les puissances coloniales elles-mêmes.

59. L'histoire de la ruée pour l'Afrique, au siècle dernier et encore au début de celui-ci, en est un exemple. La fin de la seconde guerre mondiale a donné un nouvel essor au mouvement de liberté en Asie et en Afrique et, par suite du réveil général qui s'est produit alors, un bon nombre de pays d'Asie et d'Afrique ont conquis leur indépendance et ont pris la place qui leur revenait de droit dans le concert des nations.

60. S'il est une question pour laquelle les nations d'Asie et d'Afrique ont pu présenter au monde un front uni, c'est bien celle du colonialisme. La Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie tenue à Bandoung en avril 1955 a répondu à la question de savoir quelle était la position prise à ce sujet par les peuples d'Asie.

61. Nous sommes intimement convaincus que le colonialisme n'est plus soutenable, qu'il est effectivement moribond, et qu'il faut déployer ici même, aujourd'hui, un dernier effort pour achever de le détruire. L'initiative de l'URSS nous a donné l'occasion d'affirmer une fois de plus notre foi dans les principes élevés de la Charte pour ce qui touche au colonialisme, et de déclarer que nous lui sommes opposés définitivement et sans ambiguïté. De l'avis de ma délégation, une déclaration solennelle précisant que le colonialisme doit disparaître contribuerait sensiblement à donner espoir et confiance aux peuples du monde, et notamment à ceux de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, qui ont été et continuent d'être les principales victimes du colonialisme.

62. Comme je l'ai déjà dit, ma délégation sait parfaitement que les différentes puissances coloniales ne se sont pas toutes acquittées de leur tâche de la même manière et qu'elles tentent d'expliquer, à l'aide d'arguments variés, la réussite ou l'échec du système colonial. Des théoriciens exagérément optimistes du colonialisme ont même tendu à le considérer comme un bienfait sans mélange. Pour eux, le colonialisme n'est que le prolongement de la grande tradition libérale européenne des XVIIIème et XIXème siècles, une étape de la civilisation même. En soutenant cette conception du colonialisme, un grand nombre de puissances coloniales ont été conduites à invoquer des arguments dénués de sérieux dans un effort pour justifier la possession de leurs territoires d'outre-mer. C'est ainsi, par exemple, que l'on entend parfois soutenir qu'une puissance coloniale forte a instauré l'unité là où régnait auparavant le chaos. En outre, il est fourni des statistiques en vue de prouver que les progrès sociaux et économiques dans les colonies ont été continus.

63. Tout en reconnaissant que le bilan du colonialisme est loin d'être uniforme, selon ce que fut la conduite des diverses puissances coloniales, ma délégation estime que le colonialisme est mauvais en tant que système de relations entre nations. Il est vrai que le libéralisme européen a des résultats excellents à son actif, mais le colonialisme est loin d'être l'un d'eux. Devant la misère et l'état retardataire si généralement rencontrés dans les colonies et anciennes colonies d'Asie et d'Afrique, devant les troubles fréquents qui se sont produits dans de nombreux territoires avant et après leur accession à l'indépendance, et enfin, devant la "balkanisation" de continents tout entiers, telle que celle à laquelle nous assistons actuellement en Afrique, il paraît excessif de prétendre avoir réalisé dans les colonies l'unité, l'ordre et le progrès.

64. Nous reconnaissons que des résultats considérables ont été obtenus depuis la dernière guerre en matière d'émancipation des peuples coloniaux. Le nombre des peuples libres est beaucoup plus élevé que ceux qui restent à libérer. Mais, depuis que tant de peuples sont devenus libres, le maintien d'un statut de dépendance pour le petit nombre qui reste à libérer est devenu de moins en moins acceptable et de plus en plus choquant. Si nous en jugeons par l'intense amertume qu'engendre la persistance du colonialisme, non seulement dans l'esprit des peuples dépendants, mais aussi dans celui des peuples récemment libérés, nous sommes convaincus que le maintien du colonialisme, même dans les territoires de faible superficie, n'est pas souhaitable. L'ampleur et la profondeur des rancunes semblent à elles seules l'emporter sur toutes les considérations, pratiques ou autres, que l'on pourrait invoquer pour le maintien du statu quo dans un territoire donné.

65. Dans ces conditions, il eût été particulièrement opportun que les puissances coloniales elles-mêmes prennent l'initiative de persuader l'ONU de faire une déclaration sans équivoque contre le colonialisme. Tel qu'on le concevait au XIX^{ème} siècle et tel qu'on le comprend à ce jour, celui-ci est assurément moribond et les puissances coloniales le savent. Nous espérons donc que tous les Etats Membres de notre organisation se trouveront en mesure d'appuyer le projet de résolution des 42 pays présenté à l'Assemblée générale au nom du groupe asiatique et africain. De l'avis des auteurs du projet, la question du colonialisme est extrêmement grave, et ils ont pris soin, en rédigeant le texte, de la rendre acceptable pour tous.

66. Je voudrais expliquer le projet de résolution auquel nous nous sommes associés, conjointement avec 41 autres puissances. Je ne parlerai pas en détail du préambule de ce projet, car il ne contient rien qui ne figure déjà dans la Charte des Nations Unies et qui n'ait de ce fait été accepté par les Membres de cette organisation. Si des propositions visant à améliorer la rédaction de ces paragraphes étaient formulées, les auteurs les prendraient volontiers en considération, mais je n'ai guère besoin d'ajouter que la méthode suivie pour rédiger et préparer les résolutions à l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'est pas toujours favorable à l'élaboration du meilleur texte.

67. Le premier alinéa du préambule traite de la résolution proclamée par les peuples du monde dans les termes mêmes où on la trouve exprimée dans le préambule de la Charte des Nations Unies. Le deuxième alinéa est visiblement fondé sur l'Article 55 du Chapitre IX de la Charte, qui traite de la coopération économique et sociale internationale, et les autres alinéas ne font qu'énoncer des faits ou des principes de coopération et de conduite internationales qui ont été acceptés par tous. Nous ne pensons pas qu'aucune délégation siégeant ici puisse élever d'objection sérieuse à l'encontre du préambule.

68. Le communiqué final de la Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie tenue à Bandoung montre que la Conférence était notamment convenue de ce qui suit: en premier lieu, déclarer que le colonialisme, avec toutes ses manifestations, est un mal auquel il doit être mis fin rapidement; en second lieu, affirmer que l'assujettissement des peuples à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies, et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération dans le monde; en troisième lieu, formuler son appui à la cause de la liberté et de l'indépendance pour tous ces peuples; enfin, inviter les puissances intéressées à accorder la liberté et l'indépendance à ces peuples.

69. Le dispositif du projet de résolution des 42 puissances commence ainsi:

"Proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations;

"Et, à cette fin,

"Déclare ce qui suit:

"1. La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales."

Comme on le voit, ces paragraphes sont fondés sur le texte du communiqué final de la Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie de Bandoung. On remarquera également que la deuxième Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique qui s'est réunie à Addis-Abéba du 14 au 26 juin 1960 a exprimé les mêmes sentiments et les mêmes aspirations dans ses résolutions sur l'élimination du régime colonial en Afrique.

70. Le deuxième principe énoncé dans le dispositif du projet de résolution concerne le droit de libre détermination et est fondé sur l'article premier du projet de pacte relatif aux droits de l'homme, traitant du droit de libre détermination, et que la plupart des membres de cette assemblée ont accepté.

71. Le troisième principe se passe de commentaires. Il expose simplement que le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit pas être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance.

72. Le quatrième principe signifie que les peuples des pays encore soumis à la domination coloniale ne doivent pas être l'objet de mesures militaires ou de répression qui les empêcheraient d'exercer librement leur droit à l'indépendance ni subir de pression d'aucune sorte de la part d'autorités administrantes. Il dit en outre que l'intégrité territoriale sera respectée. Les dispositions contenues dans le quatrième principe reposent sur l'expérience pratique acquise par les pays au cours de leur lutte pour la liberté contre les puissances coloniales. Ce principe présente donc pour les peuples encore sous le joug colonial une signification et une importance considérables.

73. A notre avis, le cinquième principe est le plus important; il est le passage essentiel de tout le texte; seule sa mise en œuvre peut rendre la résolution efficace. On a soutenu que ce paragraphe manquait d'un fondement sérieux, car il ne tient pas compte des circonstances particulières qui règnent dans chaque territoire administré comme colonie ou sous tutelle, et que son adoption peut créer des difficultés inutiles dans l'exercice de ses tâches pour la puissance administrante. Toutefois, les auteurs l'ont proposé uniquement dans l'espoir et la conviction que son adoption incitera plus vivement encore les puissances coloniales à établir et à proclamer des dates limites acceptables pour octroyer dès que possible l'indépendance aux pays sous régime colonial, compte tenu aussi bien des nouvelles espérances et des revendications des peuples que des conditions particulières existant dans chaque territoire dépendant, sous tutelle ou colonial.

74. Le sixième principe est une mise en garde, inspirée par l'expérience vécue dans les territoires coloniaux, contre toute tentative des puissances coloniales pour détruire totalement ou en partie l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale du pays colonisé, et déclare que ces tentatives seraient incompatibles avec la Charte des Nations Unies.

75. L'alinéa 7 se borne à répéter et à réaffirmer que tous les Etats doivent observer les dispositions de la déclaration, ainsi que celles de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme en respectant notamment l'égalité, en observant la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats, et en respectant les droits souverains et l'intégrité territoriale de tous les peuples. Les principes sur lesquels les auteurs du projet de résolution invitent les puissances à se fonder pour respecter les positions de la Charte et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme indiquées plus haut sont, de toute évidence, ceux qui sont solennellement énoncés dans la Charte des Nations Unies elle-même et généralement acceptés par tous les Etats Membres de cette organisation.

76. Nous espérons que ce projet de résolution sera unanimement adopté par les membres de cette assemblée.

77. M. PAZHAWAK (Afghanistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Les peuples du monde et les Nations Unies attachent une grande importance à la nécessité de mettre immédiatement fin au système de domination sur les peuples et les nations, ainsi qu'en fait foi l'intérêt que suscite l'examen de la question aujourd'hui soulevée devant l'Assemblée générale. Je ne crois pas utile de rappeler avec quelle fermeté mon pays a suivi sa politique traditionnelle et donné son complet appui à l'élimination radicale du système de domination sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Notre attitude en la matière a été non seulement nette, mais énergique.

78. Dans mon intervention du 12 octobre 1960 devant l'Assemblée générale [902ème séance], j'ai souligné qu'une déclaration sur l'abolition du colonialisme aurait dû être la première tâche des Nations Unies lors de la création de l'Organisation, et j'ai regretté qu'elle ait été retardée. J'ai demandé à être entendu dès maintenant sur la question pour expliquer pourquoi nous avons participé activement à la rédaction d'une des déclarations dont nous avons été, en définitive, l'un des auteurs, et pour rappeler ce que cette déclaration signifie pour nous.

79. Nous avons écouté avec la plus grande attention toutes les interventions. Nous nous sommes sentis associés à tous les arguments puissants avancés en faveur de l'abolition urgente du système de domination et de colonialisme par les orateurs qui nous ont précédés. Cependant, de notre côté, nous sommes fiers de déclarer que nous n'avons pas à nous plaindre des puissances coloniales si, de leur côté, les puissances coloniales qui ont tenté de nous attaquer n'ont pas à se plaindre de nous. Elles nous ont attaqués, nous avons défendu nos droits, voilà tout. C'est un fait qui appartient à l'histoire et nous ne voulons pas qu'il se répète. C'est pourquoi je n'ai pas l'intention de reparler de l'histoire dramatique des politiques de domination ni de leurs conséquences malheureuses, estimant que nous sommes ici, non pas pour nous pencher sur les fautes du passé, mais pour éviter qu'elles ne se perpétuent et pour empêcher toute possibilité de retour. L'histoire, ici, ne doit pas recommencer.

80. Je ne me propose pas non plus de tenter une définition du colonialisme, ou de faire l'historique de la domination des peuples et des nations, en particulier lorsque je prends la parole devant une assemblée où la majorité des membres ont été les témoins visuels de souffrances émanant des formes diverses de la domination. Sans vouloir, par conséquent, reprendre ce qui a déjà été dit, je me bornerai à formuler quelques observations générales, nos opinions précises figurant dans le projet de résolution à l'étude, dont nous sommes l'un des auteurs.

81. En premier lieu, le système que nous voudrions voir immédiatement aboli est la domination de tout peuple par un peuple étranger, sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. En second lieu, l'indépendance ne devrait pas seulement s'appliquer aux territoires habituellement qualifiés de colonies, mais à tous les peuples dépendants. En troisième lieu, l'abolition de la domination par l'octroi de l'indépendance devrait être totale; elle ne peut l'être que si elle a pour objectif d'arrêter à jamais toute tentative de renaissance d'une influence étrangère sur les peuples et les nations lorsqu'ils auront acquis leur indépendance. En quatrième lieu, l'indépendance ne devrait pas signifier uniquement l'indépendance politique, mais être aussi une indépendance économique et culturelle, libérée de toute influence directe ou indirecte ou de toutes pressions, quelles qu'elles soient, exercées sur les peuples et les nations sous quelque forme et quelque prétexte que ce soit. En cinquième lieu, l'application des dispositions de la déclaration devrait être universelle et s'étendre à tous les peuples et territoires, non seulement pour la réalisation, mais aussi pour la protection de leur pleine et absolue indépendance, qui ne devrait résulter que de la libre volonté et de la résolution des peuples eux-mêmes, et être soustraite à toute autre influence.

82. Le projet de résolution reprend tous ces principes dans le sens véritable et dans l'esprit de ses dispositions. Aucune autre interprétation ne serait considérée comme conforme à la signification que nous donnons à cette déclaration. En particulier, tout ce qui pourrait faire naître la moindre incertitude au sujet de ces principes eux-mêmes et de leur acceptation incontestable par tous les peuples du monde serait pour nous inadmissible.

83. Deux paragraphes ont été insérés dans ce projet de résolution en raison de l'intérêt particulier que ma délégation porte à leur contenu. Il s'agit du paragraphe 2, ainsi conçu:

"Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination; en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel"

et du huitième alinéa du préambule, qui affirme:

"que les peuples peuvent, pour leurs propres fins, disposer librement de leurs richesses et ressources naturelles sans préjudice des obligations qui découleraient de la coopération économique internationale, fondée sur le principe de l'avantage mutuel et du droit international".

84. Je ne mentionne tout cela que pour souligner l'importance de ces dispositions, parmi d'autres dispositions de la déclaration tendant à l'abolition de la dépendance et du colonialisme, que nous avons toutes approuvées avec une entière conviction.

85. Nous espérons fermement que les Nations Unies ne failliront pas à leur devoir et adopteront les mesures les plus efficaces lorsqu'elles auront terminé l'étude du problème dont elles sont saisies. Ma délégation donnera son appui à toutes autres mesures utiles qui renforceraient la position de l'ONU en faveur du droit naturel et incontestable des peuples et des nations, et qui amèneraient la suppression de toutes les formes de domination de l'homme par l'homme.

86. Avant de conclure, je tiens à dire combien nous nous félicitons de l'un des changements positifs qui différencient notre temps du passé. Le monde est partagé entre deux principaux systèmes idéologiques, et c'est pour nous une source de satisfaction de constater que, dans chacun d'eux, les puissances qui pourraient le plus aisément dominer ne sont pas des puissances coloniales. Je fais évidemment allusion à l'Union soviétique et aux Etats-Unis. Les lourdes responsabilités de ces grandes puissances dans la mise en oeuvre de la déclaration ne peuvent ni ne doivent être passées sous silence.

87. Nous attachons une importance particulière au fait que c'est à l'Union soviétique que revient l'initiative d'une déclaration relative à l'abolition de la domination et du colonialisme, dont l'application pratique incombera à l'ONU. Je souhaite rendre au gouvernement et au peuple de l'URSS un hommage chaleureux pour son action dans ce domaine. Nous espérons que toutes les autres puissances, y compris les puissances coloniales, suivront la même politique pour faire aboutir et protéger le droit de toutes les nations et de tous les peuples à la liberté et le droit de l'homme à la dignité.

88. Le vote sur la déclaration relative à l'abolition du colonialisme et de la domination sera un moment historique mettant à l'épreuve la position réelle et les intentions sincères de tous les pays, grands ou petits. Ce vote, s'il était négatif, ne laisserait aucune place à une explication rationnelle qui puisse satisfaire l'esprit de l'homme.

89. Nous exprimons donc le ferme espoir qu'aucune nation appartenant à cette organisation ne faillira à son rôle dans cette grande épreuve historique.

90. M. AIKEN (Irlande) [traduit de l'anglais]: En lisant l'exposé introduisant le projet de "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" [A/4502 et Corr.1], ma délégation a craint d'être sur le point d'assister, une fois de plus, à un violent assaut de propagande. Nous avons craint que la plus grande partie des débats ne soit consacrée non pas à l'étude des moyens permettant aux peuples actuellement dépendants d'acquérir le plus sûrement leur indépendance, mais à l'anéantissement de leurs aspirations légitimes et de leurs intérêts vitaux, dans une tentative pour les utiliser comme "chair à canon" de la guerre froide.

91. Nous sommes donc très heureux de saluer les efforts positifs des rédacteurs du projet de résolution [A/L.323] et de tous ceux qui ont pris part aux présents débats dans la seule intention d'obtenir des résultats utiles; au lieu de semer haine et confusion, ils se sont efforcés d'encourager l'amitié, la coopération et la liberté. Nous nous félicitons également d'avoir entendu affirmer avec énergie et à maintes reprises les droits inaliénables des peuples à jouir pleinement de l'indépendance sur leur territoire national. Bien des peuples sont aujourd'hui privés de ce droit. Certains d'entre eux ne sont jamais parvenus à former un Etat indépendant. D'autres — et leur sort n'est pas moins tragique — ont connu l'indépendance et l'ont perdue.

92. En sa qualité de représentant d'une nation qui a lutté pendant des siècles pour faire respecter le droit des hommes et des nations à vivre libres — droit aujourd'hui inscrit dans notre charte — la délégation irlandaise, comme beaucoup d'autres, a une préoccupation, et une seule, dans le présent débat: faire en sorte que l'Assemblée vote une résolution qui servira au mieux les intérêts lointains de toutes les nations, et donnera un nouvel essor à la mise en oeuvre rapide et méthodique des principes de notre charte. C'est ainsi que nous pourrions aider à construire les fondations d'une paix véritable et d'un vaste effort commun pour lutter contre la pauvreté, l'analphabétisme et la maladie dans le monde.

93. Je crois que la plupart d'entre nous souhaitent assurer à notre résolution une portée aussi large que la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. Il est essentiel qu'elle ne soit pas limitative et qu'elle ne s'applique pas uniquement à certains cas ou à certaines parties du monde; nous estimons indispensable que les droits qui y sont proclamés au bénéfice des peuples ne jouissant pas aujourd'hui d'une pleine indépendance s'étendent à tous les peuples de toutes les parties du monde, à l'est comme à l'ouest, au nord comme au sud; que le droit à une complète indépendance nationale soit reconnu comme appartenant légitimement à tous les peuples, que les oppresseurs et les opprimés appartiennent ou non à la même race, qu'ils aient ou non la même croyance et soient ou non de la même couleur; que les peuples opprimés aient été soumis ou non à la domination d'une puissance étrangère pendant plusieurs siècles, comme mon propre pays, ou n'y aient été assujettis qu'au cours du siècle dernier, comme de nombreux pays d'Afrique, ou encore dans les années récentes, comme le Tibet. En outre, au cas où un petit pays, où qu'il soit situé, passerait dans l'avenir sous la domination d'un autre, nous tenons à ce que notre résolution affirme son droit à reconquérir la liberté.

94. Le projet de résolution présenté par l'Afghanistan et 41 autres pays pose nettement ce principe essentiel d'universalité en rappelant que la Charte des Nations Unies réaffirme notre "foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme" et "dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes ainsi que des nations grandes et petites".

95. Le projet de résolution souligne la nécessité d'observer "le respect des principes de l'égalité de droits et de la libre détermination de tous les peuples, et d'assurer le respect universel et effectif des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion".

96. Il reconnaît en outre "le désir passionné de liberté de tous les peuples dépendants" et le fait que "les peuples du monde souhaitent ardemment la fin du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations".

97. Il exprime notre conviction que "le maintien du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération ... internationale ... et va à l'encontre de l'idéal de paix universelle des Nations Unies".

98. Il affirme le droit des peuples à disposer librement de leurs richesses nationales, conformément au principe de l'avantage mutuel et du droit international.

99. Il rappelle le principe "que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national".

100. Il proclame solennellement "la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations".

101. Le projet de résolution soutient fermement le principe de l'universalité lorsqu'il déclare que "la sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangère constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales".

102. Le même principe d'universalité est nettement formulé dans l'assertion selon laquelle "tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination".

103. Il a également inspiré les déclarations ci-après:

"Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance."

"Il sera mis fin à toute action armée et à toutes mesures de répression de quelque sorte qu'elles soient, dirigées contre les peuples dépendants, pour permettre à ces peuples d'exercer pacifiquement et librement leur droit à l'indépendance complète, et l'intégrité de leur territoire national sera respectée."

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

"Tous les Etats doivent observer fidèlement et strictement les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la présente Déclaration sur la base de l'égalité, de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats et du respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les peuples."

104. On notera, j'en suis certain, que toutes les citations que j'ai extraites des différents paragraphes du projet de résolution sont rédigées en termes clairs et dépourvus d'ambiguïté, et se prêtent à une application universelle. Ces paragraphes énoncent des principes précis, qui ne sont assortis d'aucune limitation de temps ou de lieu, de race, de croyance ou de couleur; les droits s'appliquent universellement à tous les peuples, de même que les devoirs.

105. Dans le projet de résolution, ainsi que le montrent les citations que j'en ai faites, il est question des "droits fondamentaux de l'homme", de "l'égalité de droits ... des nations", des droits de libre détermination de "tous les peuples", de la liberté de "tous" les peuples dépendants, de la fin du colonialisme "dans toutes ses manifestations", du droit des peuples à disposer de leurs richesses nationales, et de la fin de "toutes les pratiques" de ségrégation, du droit inaliénable de "tous les peuples" à la pleine liberté, à l'indépendance et à l'unité territoriale, de la fin du colonialisme "sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations", du principe que l'indépendance ne doit "jamais" être retardée sous le prétexte de manque de préparation, du devoir de "tous les Etats" d'observer la Charte des Nations Unies et de respecter les droits souverains et l'intégrité territoriale de "tous les peuples", de la vérité selon laquelle les droits de l'homme et les libertés fondamentales appartiennent à "tous les peuples" sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion.

106. Tous les droits ainsi réaffirmés que je viens de rappeler me semblent être d'application générale et universelle. Cependant, le début du paragraphe 5 paraît être de portée plus restreinte. Il a trait aux territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, sans mentionner expressément les peuples qui ont joui de l'indépendance et l'ont perdue.

107. Pour des raisons de clarté et pour introduire l'uniformité nécessaire entre ce paragraphe et les autres parties du projet de résolution, ma délégation préférerait donc que le début du paragraphe 5 soit rédigé comme suit:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes, et dans tous les cas où les droits souverains proclamés dans la présente Déclaration sont déniés à un peuple, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples intéressés sans aucune condition ni réserve ..."

108. Nous savons cependant que, dans les quelques jours dont nous disposons encore pour ces débats, il pourra se révéler difficile de modifier la rédaction d'un projet déjà approuvé par 42 Etats Membres au bout de plusieurs semaines de discussion. Par conséquent, au cas où les auteurs ne seraient pas en mesure de modifier le texte dans le sens que j'ai indiqué, nous sommes disposés à accepter le projet dans son ensemble comme signifiant que, dans toutes les parties du monde, tous les peuples actuellement assujettis ou qui, dans l'avenir, pourraient être assujettis partiellement ou totalement à une puissance étrangère ont droit à la pleine indépendance internationale pour tous leurs territoires, et que des mesures immédiates seront prises pour leur appliquer, rapidement et méthodiquement, les droits fondamentaux proclamés pour tous les peuples dans la présente déclaration.

109. M'adressant à cette assemblée qui comprend tant de représentants des nations nouvelles et des puissances qui autrefois les avaient sous leur domination, je tiens à dire combien nous sommes frappés par l'extension qu'a prise la liberté à notre époque, et qui est due aux efforts des peuples autrefois assujettis, et souvent aussi à l'administration sage et bien comprise des puissances coloniales. L'ONU peut à juste titre s'enorgueillir de l'aide qu'elle a apportée, au cours des 15 dernières années, à l'accession pacifique et méthodique de nombreux États à l'indépendance. Le résultat a été remarquable.

110. Quel Irlandais, il y a 40 ans, aurait pensé qu'il vivrait assez longtemps pour entendre un jour un homme d'État britannique prononcer, au sujet des territoires restant sous l'administration du Royaume-Uni, les paroles de M. Ormsby-Gore, représentant de ce pays, entendues ici même il y a quelques jours: "Dans ces territoires, la question du droit des peuples à l'indépendance ne se pose pas; la question ne se pose pas de savoir si les peuples seront ou non indépendants. Ils le seront certainement" [925ème séance, par. 50]. Qui d'entre nous, il y a 40 ans, aurait pensé qu'il vivrait assez longtemps pour voir 100 nations participer dans des conditions d'égalité à une organisation internationale reposant sur un texte fondamental tel que la Charte des Nations Unies? Je suis heureux de rendre hommage au rôle joué non seulement par les hommes et les femmes si courageux des pays assujettis qui ont combattu pendant des siècles pour la liberté, mais aussi par les hommes d'État éclairés et les citoyens à l'esprit libéral des puissances coloniales.

111. Le projet de résolution que nous étudions fait ressortir que, si de grands progrès ont été accomplis vers l'extension de la liberté, il reste encore beaucoup à faire.

112. En Irlande, nous n'avons pas encore recouvré l'unité historique de notre territoire national. Nous prenons donc note avec une satisfaction particulière du principe énoncé au paragraphe 6 du projet:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

113. La bonne volonté toujours plus manifeste et la compréhension toujours plus grande nous laissent le ferme espoir de recouvrer assez rapidement, dans la paix et dans l'ordre, l'unité de notre territoire, conformément à l'intérêt de la nation irlandaise tout entière et du Royaume-Uni.

114. Il existe encore, dans de nombreuses régions du monde, des millions d'hommes qui ne jouissent pas des droits affirmés dans le projet de résolution. Nous sommes convaincus que la grande œuvre de libération se poursuivra jusqu'à la libération de tous les peuples du monde, et jusqu'au moment où les ressources et les techniques dont l'humanité dispose seront pleinement mises en valeur, grâce à une coopération pacifique et généreuse qui apportera à toutes les régions du monde la paix, la prospérité et l'espoir du bonheur.

115. Dato' KAMIL (Fédération de Malaisie) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation de la Fédération de Malaisie s'honore et s'enorgueillit grandement de se trouver associée à plus de 40 autres délégations de pays d'Asie et d'Afrique pour élaborer un projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5].

116. Si la déclaration semble être avant tout une initiative des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, en raison de l'origine de ses auteurs, il ne s'ensuit nullement que l'abolition du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes soit exclusivement une préoccupation de ces pays. La répugnance et l'horreur qu'inspirent l'institution et la pratique de la sujétion de l'homme par l'homme et de la domination des nations par d'autres nations sont universellement partagées par les hommes qui pensent, car la soif de liberté et la volonté de la défendre sont des sentiments communs à toute l'humanité.

117. Je crois pouvoir dire que les buts élevés énoncés dans la déclaration, faisant écho aux grands principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et les réaffirmant, auront la valeur d'une magnifique inspiration pour tous les peuples, non seulement en Asie et en Afrique, où subsistent encore des vestiges de colonialisme sous une forme ou une autre, mais aussi dans d'autres parties du monde, où des millions de personnes se voient empêchées par la force de jouir pleinement de la liberté et de l'indépendance de leur pays. La liberté est universelle, et toute déclaration en faveur de celle-ci doit nécessairement être considérée comme universelle dans son application et dans sa portée.

118. Les circonstances historiques expliquent aisément pourquoi les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique manifestent un intérêt si particulier et si pressant à l'égard de l'élimination rapide du colonialisme. Depuis de nombreux siècles, l'histoire a été déterminée par le fait que des peuples plus faibles ont été assujettis et dominés par des nations plus fortes. Dans cette suite d'événements, les victimes ont invariablement été les peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique. Depuis des siècles, l'Asie et l'Afrique ont peiné et végété sous un joug étranger d'une espèce ou d'une autre. Bien qu'un nationalisme ardent et un profond désir de liberté aient agité le cœur et l'âme des hommes, ce n'est qu'au cours de ce siècle que cette force a pris de l'impulsion et a pu se donner libre cours. Ainsi, on a pu voir, au cours de ces dernières décennies et notamment depuis la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, un grand nombre de pays accéder à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté totales, d'abord en Asie, puis en Afrique; ces pays représentaient plus de 500 millions d'hommes. Dans la seule année 1960, 18 États, presque tous situés dans le vaste continent africain, sont devenus indépendants.

119. L'admission à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, en qualité de Membres, d'un si grand nombre de nouveaux États pendant la présente session de l'Assemblée générale nous a rappelé, sous une forme particulièrement émouvante, que l'histoire suit un cours irréversible vers la liberté et l'émancipation des peuples si longtemps soumis à la domination étrangère. Ce phénomène se poursuit, prenant toujours plus de vitesse et de puissance avec le temps. La tragédie de notre époque est qu'il subsiste des cas où les autorités au pouvoir se montrent incapables de prendre pleinement conscience de cette force historique, et préfèrent au contraire réprimer les aspirations des peuples qu'ils dominent.

120. Dans ces conditions, ma délégation est heureuse de prendre acte des assurances fournies par certaines puissances coloniales qui s'engagent à préparer les peuples et territoires coloniaux sous leur dépendance à l'exercice de la pleine souveraineté dans des délais normaux. Ce n'est que lorsque les puissances intéressées apprécient exactement les aspirations à l'indépendance des peuples qu'elles dominent, et lorsqu'elles prennent, en conséquence, les mesures nécessaires pour favoriser la réalisation rapide de ces aspirations, qu'elles peuvent éliminer les risques de haine et de violence et que l'indépendance peut se réaliser dans un climat d'amitié et d'harmonie. Tout refus de la part des autorités administrantes de reconnaître la tendance irrésistible à l'émancipation des peuples assujettis ou de lui laisser le champ libre ferait inévitablement éclater des troubles qui, en définitive, pourraient engendrer à leur tour des conséquences lointaines, nuisibles aux relations entre nations et à la paix et à l'harmonie internationales.

121. Au contraire, une solution raisonnable et concrète de ce problème apportée par les autorités administrantes, comme on a pu le constater dans de nombreux cas, ne peut amener qu'un transfert cordial et harmonieux des pouvoirs et, loin de rompre brutalement les liens entre le maître et l'administré dans une atmosphère de haine et de vengeance, offrir une perspective nouvelle de relations mutuelles et de coopération favorable entre associés égaux appartenant à la communauté des nations souveraines du monde.

122. Heureusement, mon pays est l'un de ceux qui ont accédé à la pleine souveraineté dans une atmosphère paisible et amicale et suivant des voies constitutionnelles. Aujourd'hui, nous entretenons avec le Royaume-Uni, en notre qualité de nation indépendante, des relations extrêmement chaleureuses et amicales. Cependant, le chemin que nous avons suivi pour parvenir à la libération nationale a été rude. Nous avons rencontré nombre de difficultés et surmonté bien des obstacles. Mais tout le temps qu'a duré cette évolution, nos dirigeants, nos peuples, et l'Autorité administrante ont tous fait preuve de tant de sagesse et de compréhension que nous avons obtenu notre indépendance plus tôt qu'il n'était prévu, et sans traces de haine ou de ressentiment. Le transfert des pouvoirs, qui s'est fait harmonieusement, et a marqué la fin du régime colonial, a également permis à notre œuvre de mise en valeur et de consolidation nationale de débiter sous d'heureux auspices et a rendu possible l'établissement de relations nouvelles avec le Royaume-Uni, en qualité d'associés égaux dans le Commonwealth des nations.

123. C'est pourquoi ma délégation comprend la joie et la satisfaction des nombreuses nations nouvelles qui ont reconquis leur indépendance dans des conditions analogues. Nous savons cependant que toutes n'ont pas été aussi favorisées. Bien des nations sœurs n'ont conquis leur liberté qu'au prix de sacrifices considérables en vies et en ressources matérielles, au point que leur mise en valeur nationale a été rendue extrêmement malaisée par la nécessité de tout redresser et de tout reconstruire. Ma délégation s'inquiète vivement de voir qu'une guerre inutile et insensée se livre aujourd'hui dans certaines parties du monde contre des peuples assujettis qui combattent pour leur droit juste et légitime de libre détermination.

124. En sa qualité de nation qui vient d'être libérée du régime colonial, quelque bienfaisant que ce régime ait pu être, la Fédération de Malaisie s'est consacrée et se consacre encore à la juste cause des peuples et des nations, à quelque partie du monde qu'ils appartiennent, qui revendiquent leur droit de libre détermination et veulent se libérer du joug étranger, sous toutes ses formes, dans toutes ses manifestations et sous tous ses aspects. Ce dévouement à la cause de la liberté est devenu l'une des pierres angulaires sur lesquelles repose la politique étrangère de mon gouvernement.

125. C'est pourquoi ma délégation s'honore et s'enorgueillit de se joindre aux autres délégations de pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, dont la plupart ont été comme mon pays, des colonies, pour proposer l'adoption du projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il serait exagérément optimiste de dire que la déclaration va donner un nouveau départ à l'histoire. Son but est plutôt d'aider et d'accélérer la marche de l'histoire, déclenchée par le désir irrésistible des peuples assujettis de s'émanciper de leurs liens et d'obtenir leur liberté.

126. Lorsque cette déclaration aura été adoptée par les membres de notre assemblée, et je suis certain qu'elle le sera, à l'unanimité je l'espère, elle deviendra un document important et vivant, et une source d'inspiration, comme l'est la Charte des Nations Unies. Ses objectifs sont nobles et élevés, et ils ne manqueront pas de toucher le cœur et l'âme de tous les peuples épris de liberté. Pour ma délégation, sa portée est universelle: elle postule la liberté pour tous les peuples vivant encore sous une domination coloniale, pour tous ceux qui, d'une manière ou d'une autre, se voient refuser, par la force, la pleine jouissance de leur souveraineté et de leur indépendance. Ainsi, le paragraphe 2 de cette déclaration proclame:

"Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination; en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel."

127. En insistant sur la nécessité d'éliminer totalement la domination étrangère, la déclaration tient compte aussi du danger auquel les nations nouvelles pourraient se trouver exposées dans leurs premières années d'existence. C'est ainsi que, pour garantir la sécurité d'une indépendance nouvellement acquise, le paragraphe 7 de la déclaration souligne:

"Tous les Etats doivent observer fidèlement et strictement les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la présente Déclaration sur la base de l'égalité, de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats et du respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les peuples."

128. Se fondant sur l'expérience de notre propre pays, ma délégation est pleinement consciente du danger de voir apparaître de nouvelles formes de domination survenant sous des apparences difficiles à déceler, telles que la domination économique et, la plus dangereuse de toutes, la domination idéologique. Si elle n'était pas contenue, celle-ci pourrait entraîner l'échec total de l'indépendance politique et économique et ramener une sujétion étrangère. Avant même d'avoir accédé à l'indépendance — de même qu'au cours de nos années d'existence comme nation souveraine — notre population a toujours combattu pour soustraire la nation à tout assujettissement à toute idéologie étrangère. Nous sommes décidés à rester vigilants pour nous protéger contre cette forme nouvelle et plus dangereuse de servitude.

129. De l'avis de ma délégation, la déclaration présentée par les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique aborde le problème du colonialisme de façon réaliste. Elle ne cherche pas à condamner les puissances coloniales, car une condamnation, si justifiée qu'elle soit dans certains cas, ne saurait servir les intérêts des peuples coloniaux. Elle insiste avec raison, cependant, sur les maux et les dangers inhérents au régime et à la pratique du colonialisme. Elle met en lumière l'anachronisme du colonialisme dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, où l'idéal d'égalité et de liberté est devenu un moteur puissant de l'évolution historique. Elle montre que le maintien d'une domination coloniale est non seulement contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies, mais compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales.

130. Ainsi, la déclaration prévoit la fin du colonialisme dans toutes ses formes et ses manifestations, réclame que des mesures immédiates soient prises dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance en vue de transférer tous les pouvoirs aux peuples intéressés. De l'avis de ma délégation, les auteurs de la déclaration n'envisagent pas, dans cette demande, un transfert immédiat de tous les pouvoirs. Ce qui y est visé, ce sont des mesures immédiates en vue de préparer les populations, comme il se doit, au transfert définitif des pouvoirs. Trop souvent les puissances coloniales ont retardé l'accession à l'indépendance en arguant de la préparation prétendument insuffisante des populations, alors qu'elles ne faisaient rien pour les y préparer; encore faudrait-il démontrer que le territoire intéressé n'est pas encore réellement prêt. Ainsi le prétexte d'un manque de préparation politique, économique ou sociale ou en matière d'enseignement a trop souvent été invoqué pour retarder l'indépendance. C'est là une attitude déplorable de la part des puissances coloniales; est contraire aux obligations prévues dans la Charte, qui stipule que les autorités administrantes ont pour tâche et pour devoir de préparer les peuples assujettis à assumer dans les plus brefs délais les responsabilités de l'indépendance.

131. Ma délégation estime essentiel que toutes les autorités chargées de l'administration des territoires sous tutelle, des territoires non autonomes et de tous autres territoires coloniaux observent fidèlement les obligations prévues dans la Charte, afin d'éviter qu'en manquant à leurs devoirs elle ne retardent indéfiniment et de façon déplorable la réalisation des aspirations des peuples assujettis. En outre, les conséquences de ces manquements devraient être étudiées avec attention et en toute conscience, car leur importance a été démontrée à l'évidence lors de la crise congolaise.

132. Pour conclure, j'aimerais rappeler que le problème dont l'Assemblée est saisie est grave et difficile et qu'il intéresse la vie, le sort et les aspirations de millions de nos frères encore soumis à une forme ou à une autre de domination étrangère. Ces peuples ne peuvent se faire entendre ici; leur voix ne peut jamais retentir hors de leur propre foyer. Ils comptent sur nous pour soutenir leur cause, avec le très vif espoir que ce débat important et historique ouvrira la voie à l'abolition prochaine des injustices et des humiliations dont ils sont depuis trop longtemps les victimes. Dans l'intérêt de ces peuples encore assujettis ainsi que de l'harmonie et de la coopération internationale futures, ma délégation exprime le vœu sincère que les présents débats, après avoir préparé la liquidation du colonialisme, ne laisseront pas dans leur sillage des traces de ressentiment et d'amertume qui pourraient assombrir la paix et la coopération internationales. La disparition du colonialisme devrait être une date heureuse dans l'histoire de l'humanité, et nous devons tous nous y consacrer.

M. Illueca (Panama), vice-président, prend la présidence.

133. M. TSIANG (Chine) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au cours des 15 dernières années, l'ONU a fréquemment examiné des questions coloniales particulières se posant dans différentes parties du monde. L'Assemblée générale, le Conseil de sécurité, et, naturellement, le Conseil de tutelle ont inscrit des questions coloniales à leur ordre du jour. Jusqu'à présent, toutes les questions de ce genre étudiées par l'ONU ont été des cas d'espèce, s'appliquant à un pays ou à une région donnés. Aujourd'hui, pour la première fois, l'ONU examine le colonialisme en général.

134. Si ma délégation n'a pas encore pris la parole dans le présent débat, c'est qu'elle n'est pas sûre qu'une discussion de cette sorte ait une utilité pratique. Si le but du présent débat est de nous aider à obtenir une approbation générale des principes relatifs au colonialisme, il ne nous semble pas particulièrement nécessaire, étant donné que cette approbation est acquise depuis 15 ans déjà. Les principes relatifs au colonialisme ont tous été solennellement inscrits dans la Charte des Nations Unies, que nous sommes juridiquement et moralement tenus de respecter. Si, au contraire, les échanges de vues actuels ont pour objet de favoriser l'application de ces principes aux questions coloniales encore pendantes, il serait préférable, à mon sens, que les débats traitent de points particuliers et non d'aspects généraux. Il n'existe pas deux problèmes coloniaux semblables, chaque région, chaque pays colonial a son histoire, chacun a des caractéristiques actuelles qui lui sont propres. Ce qui convient à une région ne convient pas nécessairement à une autre. Seule l'étude systématique de chaque question considérée en elle-même nous permettra de progresser. J'espère que les présents débats démontreront leur utilité en hâtant partout la fin du colonialisme. Toutefois, je suis certain qu'ils ne remplaceront pas, qu'ils ne pourront pas remplacer, une étude systématique des questions coloniales concrètes.

135. Parmi les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, mon pays a été l'un des premiers à faire profession de nationalisme moderne et à lutter pour s'émanciper du colonialisme ou de l'impérialisme européen. Sun Yat-sen, père de la République chinoise, mieux, père du nationalisme chinois moderne, a commencé vers la fin du XIX^{ème} siècle à guider le peuple chinois dans sa double tâche: débarrasser la Chine de l'exploitation européenne et édifier en Chine un Etat moderne, prêt et apte à exercer ses droits de pleine souveraineté nationale et à apporter le bien-être au peuple chinois. Au cours de sa lutte, Sun Yat-sen découvrit que de nombreux peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique vivaient dans des conditions aussi déplorables qu'en Chine, même pires encore. Dans son testament, Sun Yat-sen sou-

lignait que la Chine nouvelle, la Chine nationaliste, ne manquerait jamais d'offrir sa sympathie et son appui aux peuples opprimés du monde et leur fournirait, dans leur lutte pour la liberté, toute l'assistance que le peuple chinois est capable de réunir.

136. Ma délégation et mon gouvernement sont toujours restés fidèles aux préceptes de Sun Yat-sen. Lorsque je suis venu ici représenter mon pays pour la première fois, l'un des plus graves problèmes posés à l'ONU à l'époque était la lutte menée pour son indépendance par le peuple indonésien. Au cours des longs débats que le Conseil de sécurité consacra à cette question, ma délégation fut l'une des premières à appuyer chaleureusement la cause de la liberté de l'Indonésie. Depuis lors, ma délégation a toujours suivi la même ligne de conduite.

137. On admet généralement que le problème du colonialisme intéresse certains peuples européens, d'une part, et certains peuples africano-asiatiques, de l'autre. On admet généralement aussi qu'il a trait aux relations entre les nations industrialisées et les nations insuffisamment développées du monde. Ma délégation estime que ces deux hypothèses sont le plus souvent exactes, mais aussi qu'elles simplifient exagérément le problème du colonialisme. Il existe à ces hypothèses des exceptions et des variantes qu'il convient d'examiner afin de dégager toute la vérité. Je voudrais par conséquent dire quelques mots des exceptions et des variantes à la règle générale.

138. Il n'est pas vrai que le problème du colonialisme ne se pose que lorsque des nations plus développées essaient d'en dominer de moins développées. On trouve dans l'histoire de nombreux exemples de peuples moins évolués qui ont essayé d'exercer une domination sur des peuples plus avancés. Je citerai, à titre d'illustration, un cas qui a l'avantage de ne pas prêter à controverse aujourd'hui, celui de l'Empire mongol aux XIIIème et XIVème siècles. Menés par Gengis khan, les Mongols étaient avant tout des nomades. Leur économie était très primitive et se bornait à peu près à l'élevage des moutons. Leur organisation politique reposait principalement sur la tribu. Cependant les Mongols ont conquis la Chine et l'ont tenue asservie pendant près d'un siècle. Ils ont conquis aussi et asservi de larges régions de l'Asie occidentale et de l'Europe orientale qui étaient, pour la plupart, comme la Chine, beaucoup plus avancées que la Mongolie ne l'était aux XIIIème et XIVème siècles.

139. Les Mongols, commandés par Gengis khan, ne cherchaient ni débouchés pour leur commerce d'exportation, car ils n'avaient presque rien à exporter, ni territoires étrangers où investir des capitaux, car ils n'avaient de capitaux à investir ni dans leur propre pays ni encore moins à l'étranger. Ils ne recherchaient pas de matières premières, car ils n'auraient su que faire du charbon, du fer, du caoutchouc, du pétrole, de la noix de coco ou de l'étain. Ce qu'ils voulaient, c'était exercer leur puissance et lever un tribut. Et néanmoins, ce peuple relativement sous-développé, poussé par le désir primitif du pouvoir et du pillage, a construit un des empires les plus étendus qu'ait jamais connus l'humanité.

140. L'exemple de l'Empire mongol démontre de manière concluante que le colonialisme ou l'impérialisme n'est pas le monopole d'un système économique, politique ou social donné. En effet, si nous étudions attentivement l'histoire, nous constatons que dans toutes les parties du monde, à tous les moments de l'évolution, de l'âge de pierre à l'industrie mécanique et au capitalisme, en passant par le nomadisme, l'agriculture et le commerce, les peuples ont toujours tenté de coloniser et de bâtir des empires. Le problème du colonialisme est aussi ancien et aussi complexe que l'histoire de l'homme elle-même.

141. Il n'est pas vrai non plus que les peuples européens aient seuls pratiqué le colonialisme et l'impérialisme, et qu'ils ne les aient pratiqués qu'à l'encontre de peuples non européens. Mon exemple de l'Empire mongol montre un peuple asiatique pratiquant le colonialisme et l'impérialisme contre d'autres peuples asiatiques et aussi contre l'Europe. Au Moyen Age, l'Empire arabe s'étendait au Portugal et à l'Espagne et a même menacé pendant un certain temps de coloniser la France. Au début des temps modernes, l'Empire ottoman comprenait des parties de l'Asie, de l'Afrique et de l'Europe du Sud-Est. L'Europe elle-même a fait du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme contre des peuples européens et non européens. Il n'est besoin que de citer le cas de l'Empire de Napoléon; on pourrait aussi parler de l'Empire austro-hongrois.

142. A propos de l'Empire austro-hongrois, je voudrais rappeler aux membres de l'Assemblée la Conférence de la paix tenue à Paris au milieu du XIXème siècle, à l'issue de la guerre de Crimée. Parmi les mouvements nationalistes de l'époque il y avait un mouvement italien. Sous l'impulsion de Cavour et d'autres hommes d'Etat et prophètes italiens, le peuple italien s'efforçait d'obtenir l'émancipation de la Lombardie-Vénétie sous domination austro-hongroise, ainsi que l'unité de l'Italie. A la Conférence de Paris, la France montra de la sympathie au nationalisme italien et souhaita donner à Cavour la possibilité de plaider la cause de la liberté et de l'unité de l'Italie et d'exposer la question de Lombardie-Vénétie. La délégation austro-hongroise à la Conférence de Paris protesta en déclarant que la question de Lombardie-Vénétie était un problème intérieur autrichien, que les droits autrichiens sur la Lombardie-Vénétie avaient été confirmés dans un traité et ratifiés par la tradition, et qu'il y aurait donc ingérence injustifiée de la part des membres de la Conférence de Paris s'ils intervenaient au sujet de problèmes intéressant l'Italie septentrionale.

143. Comme on le sait, le comte Walewski, président de la Conférence, passa outre aux objections de la délégation austro-hongroise et le comte Cavour eut la possibilité de prendre la parole au nom de la liberté et de l'unité italiennes. Je rappelle l'épisode parce que, bien qu'il se soit produit il y a 100 ans, il comporte encore un enseignement valable, et aussi parce qu'il démontre fort bien que les nations européennes ont pratiqué le colonialisme et l'impérialisme à l'encontre d'autres peuples européens.

144. Le colonialisme varie avec le temps. Il est aussi divers que la société humaine elle-même. Il serait chimérique et vain de borner notre étude à un type donné de colonialisme et de négliger les dangers et les menaces des autres types.

145. Dans l'histoire moderne, c'est-à-dire au cours des quatre ou cinq derniers siècles, le colonialisme s'est caractérisé avant tout par l'expansion européenne vers d'autres continents. Il a été constitué notamment par les luttes des Etats d'Europe économiquement et politiquement mieux organisés contre les peuples politiquement et économiquement moins développés d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique. Au long de ces siècles, le monde entier a été, au moins jusqu'à un certain point, européanisé. S'il y a dans l'histoire moderne un fait qui domine toute cette période, on peut dire que c'est l'européanisation du monde. Ce fut à la fois un mal et un bien. Je ne m'attarderai pas à analyser, à dégager ou à départager les responsabilités. Le mal fait par l'Europe à l'Asie et à l'Afrique n'a pas toujours été intentionnel. Il en est de même du bien: une partie en a été fortuite et accidentelle; en revanche l'autre en a été intentionnelle et voulue. Le phénomène de l'européanisation ou de la colonisation dans son ensemble est en réalité très humain, c'est un mélange de bien et de mal.

146. Lorsque l'Europe a entrepris son vaste mouvement d'expansion hors de ses propres limites, ce mouvement s'est partagé en deux courants. Les nations de l'Europe occidentale se sont tournées vers les pays d'outre-mer d'Amérique, d'Asie et d'Afrique. La Russie, c'est-à-dire la Russie des tsars, s'est étendue sans franchir les océans. Les Russes ont traversé l'Oural pour conquérir et coloniser la Sibérie et l'Asie centrale. En outre, la Russie a pris la Crimée, le Caucase et certaines parties de l'Europe orientale. C'est par suite d'un accident géographique que la plupart des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique n'ont été atteints que par l'expansion maritime de l'Europe occidentale et n'ont pas été touchés par l'expansion terrestre de la Russie des tsars. La conséquence de cette circonstance géographique est que, dans la plupart des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, mais non la totalité, les esprits ont reçu l'empreinte indélébile du colonialisme de l'Europe occidentale, et n'ont pratiquement pas eu conscience du colonialisme terrestre de la Russie. C'est la raison pour laquelle l'opinion qui prévaut à l'heure actuelle dans de nombreux pays africains-asiatiques au sujet du colonialisme européen est inexacte, déformée et, dans une certaine mesure, insuffisamment objective.

147. Les deux courants d'expansion européenne, c'est-à-dire l'expansion de l'Europe occidentale par mer et l'expansion de la Russie par terre, ne se sont heurtés qu'à une opposition relativement faible de la part des peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique. Ont participé à l'une et à l'autre un mélange d'aventuriers, de hors-la-loi, de patriotes, de zéloteurs religieux et d'hommes qui cherchaient la fortune. En ce qui concerne la Russie, le premier expansionniste fut Yermak, qui prit la tête d'une bande de 840 hommes et leur fit traverser les monts Oural en 1579. En 60 ans environ, des aventuriers russes se succédèrent et parvinrent à atteindre la côte du Pacifique dans la région d'Okhotsk. Dans cet espace de 60 ans, la Sibérie tout entière, d'une superficie totale de plus de 6 millions de kilomètres carrés, soit plus de deux fois la superficie de la Russie d'Europe, est devenue une partie de l'Empire des tsars.

148. Dans cette longue marche vers le Pacifique à travers la Sibérie, la première opposition organisée rencontrée par les Russes fut celle du khanat de Kuchum, sur le cours supérieur de l'Ob. Le khanat était l'un des vestiges de l'Empire mongol. En 1583, Yermak prit Sibir, capitale du khanat, d'où le nom de Sibérie. Lorsque les Russes atteignirent l'Extrême-Orient, ils se heurtèrent à la résistance de la Chine. Là, dans la région arrosée par les affluents supérieurs du fleuve Amour, la Chine et la Russie se livrèrent des combats indécis, que nul résultat militaire ne vint couronner. L'impasse militaire aboutit au traité de Nertchinsk, signé le 27 août 1689. Aux termes de ce traité, la vallée du fleuve Amour et de ses affluents était reconnue à la Chine.

149. Au XIX^{ème} siècle, les Russes renouvelèrent leur agression le long du fleuve Amour. Combinant une action militaire et diplomatique, la Russie des tsars prit à la Chine la rive nord du fleuve Amour et la rive est de l'Oussouri. Aujourd'hui ces deux régions constituent la province de l'Amour et la province maritime de l'Extrême-Orient russe. Jusqu'en 1860, la ville de Vladivostok était une colonie chinoise nommée "Haï-chen-wei"; les Russes ont changé ce nom en "Vladivostok", ce qui signifie "dominatrice de l'Orient". Ces régions de l'Amour et de l'Oussouri que la Russie tsariste a prises à la Chine en 1860 et que la Russie soviétique détient toujours ont une superficie totale de plus de 600.000 kilomètres carrés.

150. Je ne parlerai pas de l'histoire de l'expansion russe en Asie centrale. Ce que l'on nomme aujourd'hui Républiques du Kazakhstan, de l'Ouzbékistan, du Kirghizistan, du Turkménistan et du Tadjikistan étaient des pays indépendants avant d'être annexés par la Russie tsariste. Je ne rappellerai pas non plus l'histoire de l'expansion russe en Europe même. D'autres personnes ici présentes la connaissent mieux que moi.

151. Dans le long discours qu'il prononça devant l'Assemblée générale, le 23 septembre, et par lequel s'ouvrit le présent débat sur le colonialisme, M. Khrouchtchev, président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, fit quelques déclarations très importantes et très intéressantes sur le colonialisme de la Russie tsariste:

"Le Gouvernement tsariste a appliqué dans les marches de Russie une politique essentiellement coloniale qui ne différait guère de ce que l'on peut voir à l'heure actuelle dans les pays coloniaux. Ouzbeks, Kazakhs, Tadjiks et autres nationalités non russes étaient dédaigneusement catalogués comme "étrangers". Ils n'étaient pas considérés comme des hommes et étaient impitoyablement exploités. On fomentait parmi ces peuples la discorde, la haine et les guerres intestines, et l'Empire tsariste ne se maintenait que par la force des baïonnettes et par l'oppression." [869^{ème} séance plénière, par. 207.]

152. Invoquant l'autorité de M. Khrouchtchev, nous pouvons conclure que la Russie, au moins jusqu'à la révolution de 1917, avait un empire colonial ne différant guère des autres empires coloniaux du monde. Ce qu'il a appelé "marches" qui n'étaient maintenues "que par la force des baïonnettes et par l'oppression" comprenait la Finlande, l'Estonie, la Lettonie, la Lituanie, la Pologne, la Bessarabie, l'Ukraine, le Caucase, l'Asie centrale, la Sibérie orientale et certaines parties de la Mandchourie. Ces territoires avaient une superficie de 15 millions de kilomètres carrés, soit environ 70 pour 100 de la superficie totale de l'Empire russe. Tel est le patrimoine laissé par la Russie tsariste à l'Union soviétique. La question qui importe est la suivante: qu'a fait l'Union soviétique de ce legs des tsars?

153. Au moment de la révolution de 1917, toutes les anciennes possessions coloniales de la Russie se sont soulevées et ont proclamé leur indépendance. Certaines réussirent, d'autres échouèrent. La Finlande, sous le commandement du maréchal Mannerheim, gagna la guerre d'indépendance qui se termina par le traité du 14 octobre 1920; il en fut de même de la Pologne, sous le commandement du maréchal Pilsudski, qui vit son indépendance confirmée par un traité signé le 18 mars 1921; de l'Estonie, de la Lettonie et de la Lituanie, qui signèrent des traités les 22 février, 11 août et 12 juillet 1920 respectivement. Mais ce ne fut pas ainsi que les choses se passèrent dans les autres régions coloniales. L'indépendance de l'Ukraine fut supprimée en août 1920, celle de la Géorgie en février 1921, celle de l'Asie centrale à l'issue d'une longue campagne qui eut lieu de 1922 à 1924. Au cours des années récentes, l'Union soviétique a repris l'Estonie, la Lettonie et la Lituanie et a de plus étendu la domination soviétique à d'autres pays européens. Aujourd'hui, l'Empire soviétique est plus vaste que celui des tsars. L'exemple de la Hongrie nous a montré le traitement qu'appliquerait l'Union soviétique à l'un de ses peuples assujettis s'il devait lutter pour sa liberté.

154. Le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique a peint un tableau coloré de la mise en valeur des républiques de l'Asie centrale au sein de l'Union soviétique, d'une part, et un tableau très noir des colonies des nations d'Europe occidentale, de l'autre. Certaines délégations siégeant dans cet amphithéâtre pourront scruter avec plus de compétence que moi son compte rendu des conditions dans les colonies des pays occidentaux. Pour le moment, je voudrais signaler à l'attention des représentants à l'Assemblée la situation en Asie centrale. M. Khrouchtchev a reconnu que:

"La situation dans les marches de l'empire tsariste ne se distinguait pour ainsi dire pas de celles des colonies car les populations y étaient cruellement exploitées par l'autocratie, par le capitalisme." [Ibid., par. 192.]

Il poursuivait en déclarant que le tableau s'était considérablement modifié depuis la révolution d'Octobre 1917:

"Aujourd'hui, le Kazakhstan, l'Ouzbékistan, le Kirghizistan, le Turkménistan et le Tadjikistan toutes ces républiques sœurs d'Asie centrale, de colonies arriérées qu'elles étaient dans la Russie tsariste sont devenues des républiques d'avant-garde, des républiques socialistes industrialisées." [Ibid., par. 193.]

155. Il est vrai, en effet, que le développement industriel de l'Asie centrale soviétique a été intense, mais un développement industriel analogue s'est produit dans de nombreuses colonies des pays occidentaux. Le fait n'en demeure pas moins que dans l'immense Empire soviétique l'industrialisation a été très inégale. Prenons l'exemple de l'industrie textile. D'après M. Baransky, membre de l'Académie des sciences de l'Union soviétique, dans son livre sur la géographie économique de l'Union soviétique, 80 pour 100 de l'industrie textile de l'URSS sont situés dans les trois régions purement russes de Moscou, Yaroslavl et Ivanovo, et 20 pour 100 seulement dans les régions productrices de coton de l'Asie centrale.

156. Les ressources naturelles de l'Union soviétique sont inégalement réparties. Les républiques non russes du Turkestan, du Caucase et de l'Ukraine et certaines régions historiquement non russes de Sibérie sont les provinces les plus riches de l'Empire soviétique. Près de 100 pour 100 des ressources en pétrole se trouvent dans les républiques musulmanes. Les principaux gisements de fer, de charbon, de manganèse, de métaux non ferreux, la betterave sucrière, le coton, les céréales, l'élevage des bovins sont également situés, pour la plus grande partie, dans des territoires non russes, alors que les régions ethniquement russes sont en général pauvres en ressources naturelles. Malgré cela, le développement industriel a été beaucoup plus intense en Russie proprement dite, et beaucoup plus lent dans les territoires non russes. Selon des statistiques officielles, la Russie proprement dite fabrique 75 pour 100 de tous les produits mécaniques et métalliques de l'Union, 92 pour 100 des automobiles, 87 pour 100 de tous les produits finis du coton et 82 pour 100 des produits de la laine.

157. Outre la situation privilégiée de la Russie proprement dite dans l'immense Empire soviétique, les Russes ont émigré dans de nombreuses républiques dites "sœurs". D'après la grande encyclopédie soviétique, la population du Kazakhstan, la plus grande des républiques non russes, était composée en 1933 de 57 pour 100 d'autochtones et 19,7 pour 100 de Russes avec un certain pourcentage de groupes secondaires. Le recensement soviétique de 1959 donne les chiffres suivants: Kazakhs, 30 pour 100 seulement, Russes, 42,7 pour 100, Ukrainiens, 9,2 pour 100, le reste étant formé de groupes ethniques secondaires.

158. M. Khrouchtchev s'est également montré éloquent au sujet du développement culturel des républiques non russes de l'Union soviétique. Il a dit:

"On sait par exemple qu'avant la révolution les populations du Kazakhstan et des républiques d'Asie centrale étaient pratiquement analphabètes. Personne ou presque n'y avait fait des études secondaires ou supérieures. Le régime soviétique a permis à toutes ces populations d'accéder largement à l'éducation et à la culture." [Ibid., par. 199.]

Nous manquons malheureusement de renseignements sur la situation culturelle de l'Asie centrale dans le passé, ou du moins j'en manque personnellement. Néanmoins, il semble que l'épithète de "pratiquement analphabètes" appliquée par M. Khrouchtchev à ces peuples soit caricaturale. Selon le géographe russe Khanykov qui a exploré la région de Boukhara vers 1840, et qui était, incidemment, très antimusulman, les écoles étaient réparties sur tout le territoire de l'émirat de Boukhara, dans les villes aussi bien que dans les villages. Les villes comptaient une école primaire dans chaque rue ou presque, et, d'après une estimation, un quart environ de la population de l'émirat savait lire et écrire. Pour la première moitié du XIXème siècle, ce pourcentage était élevé, même pour les pays occidentaux.

159. Mais, sans parler de la situation culturelle en Asie centrale avant l'arrivée des Russes, nous savons de source sûre que le développement culturel de l'Union soviétique est inégal lui aussi. Ainsi l'Ouzbékistan: la population de cette république est 14 fois et demie moins nombreuse que celle de la Russie proprement dite, mais le nombre d'étudiants est 18 fois moindre, le nombre de livres et de périodiques publiés par an, 44 fois moindre et le nombre des exemplaires de journaux publiés par an, 40 fois moindre.

160. Au Kazakhstan, la population du pays est 12 fois plus faible que celle de la Russie proprement dite, mais le nombre de ses étudiants est 24 fois et demie inférieur, les livres et périodiques publiés par an, 66 fois moins nombreux et il y paraît 35 fois moins d'exemplaires de journaux.

161. Nous pourrions aussi citer l'Ukraine. D'après des statistiques soviétiques officielles, la population de la République ukrainienne est 2,8 fois plus faible que celle de la République russe, mais le nombre des étudiants de l'enseignement supérieur est 3,6 fois inférieur, le nombre de livres et de périodiques publiés par an, 10 fois plus faible et le nombre des exemplaires de journaux publiés par an, 7 fois inférieur. Il fut un temps où le rayonnement culturel de l'Ukraine dépassait celui de la Russie. Il est donc impossible de soutenir que la situation actuelle de la culture en Ukraine soit due à l'état arriéré où se serait trouvé le pays auparavant.

162. M. Khrouchtchev nous a fait une magnifique description de la liberté nationale en Union soviétique lorsqu'il a déclaré:

"Conformément à la Constitution, chacune des 15 républiques fédérées a le droit de faire partie de l'Union ou d'en sortir si elle le désire. L'existence des 19 républiques autonomes, des 9 régions autonomes et des 10 arrondissements nationaux permet de conserver les particularités nationales, la culture et les caractères originaux de chaque peuple, de chaque nationalité." [Ibid., par. 209.]

163. Il est exact qu'aux termes de l'article 17 de la Constitution, toute république soviétique a le droit de se retirer de l'Union. Mais M. Khrouchtchev a oublié de nous indiquer deux autres articles de la même Constitution, à savoir les articles 21 et 133. D'après l'article 21, "il est créé, pour tous les citoyens de l'URSS, un seul droit de citoyenneté de l'Union". L'article 133 se lit comme suit: "Tout citoyen de l'URSS a le devoir sacré de défendre le pays. La trahison envers la patrie — violation du serment d'allégeance, désertion devant l'ennemi, atteinte au pouvoir militaire de l'Etat, espionnage — est très sévèrement punie par la loi, car elle constitue le plus odieux des crimes." En fait, toute personne qui tenterait de se prévaloir de l'article 17 de la Constitution commettrait automatiquement un crime grave aux termes des articles 21 et 133.

164. Il ne faut pas oublier que, si, nominalement, l'Union soviétique possède une structure politique fédérale, c'est le parti communiste russe qui centralise le pouvoir politique réel. Les partis communistes des républiques de l'Union sont traités comme des comités locaux du parti communiste russe.

165. Dès lors, on peut se demander pourquoi les Soviets, qui refusent à leurs propres peuples en captivité le droit de se séparer de l'Union et de se constituer en Etats indépendants, propagent des mots d'ordre de libération des peuples coloniaux en Asie et en

Afrique. Lénine a répondu à cette question comme suit:

"En notre qualité de communistes, nous devons soutenir et nous soutiendrons les mouvements bourgeois d'émancipation dans les pays coloniaux lorsque ces mouvements auront un caractère véritablement révolutionnaire, et lorsque les représentants de ces mouvements ne nous empêcheront pas d'instruire et d'organiser les paysans et les masses exploitées dans l'esprit révolutionnaire."

J'ai extrait cette citation des œuvres de Lénine, 4ème édition, volume XXXI, page 217.

166. Plus tard, Staline a également répondu à la question:

"Mais ce mot d'ordre [de libre détermination des nations], dans le moment actuel, alors que le mouvement de libération se déclenche dans les colonies, est pour nous un mot d'ordre révolutionnaire. Pour autant que les Etats soviétiques se groupent en une fédération sur la base d'une adhésion librement consentie, le droit de se séparer reste inutilisé de par la volonté même des peuples qui composent [la Fédération socialiste soviétique]. Mais, pour autant qu'il s'agit de colonies étranglées par l'Angleterre, la France, l'Amérique, le Japon, pour autant qu'il s'agit de pays assujettis comme l'Arabie, la Mésopotamie, la Turquie, l'Hindoustan, c'est-à-dire de pays qui sont des colonies ou des semi-colonies, le mot d'ordre du droit des peuples à se séparer est révolutionnaire; y renoncer, c'est faire le jeu des impérialistes."

J'extrait cette citation des œuvres de Staline, tome 5, page 43.

167. Pour parler clairement, l'idée de Staline était la suivante: l'Union soviétique appuie les mouvements de libération dans les colonies des pays occidentaux, car une telle aide permet à l'Union soviétique d'étendre sa puissance et favorise ses intérêts dans le monde entier. A l'intérieur des frontières de l'Union soviétique, les Soviets sont évidemment opposés à tout mouvement de libération et à toute forme de fédération de nations libres. Tel est le nœud de la question. Ne nous méprenons pas sur l'initiative soviétique prise à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale.

168. Il y a longtemps, Lénine a déclaré:

"Le marxisme ne saurait aller de pair avec le nationalisme, même si celui-ci est juste, sans reproche et civilisé. La poussée du marxisme dépasse tous les nationalismes en vue de faire aboutir un concept international de fusion de toutes les nations en un tout plus élevé. La culture nationale est en général la culture des propriétaires fonciers, du clergé et de la bourgeoisie."

Cette citation est extraite des œuvres de Lénine, volume XX, page 8.

169. Nous nous élevons contre le colonialisme quels qu'en soient le type, la forme ou l'origine. Une colonie est une colonie, qu'elle soit due à l'expansion par mer ou à l'expansion par terre. Nous n'avons rien à dire en faveur du colonialisme. Nous souhaitons qu'il y soit mis fin le plus tôt possible et, pour cette raison, ma délégation appuiera le projet de résolution des 42 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5]. Les Chinois prêteront assistance aux peuples qui luttent contre le colonialisme, en Asie, en Afrique, en Europe et en Amérique, en quelque lieu que le combat se déroule.

170. Le monde, en son évolution, se trouve placé devant une contradiction colossale: d'une part, les colonies des pays de l'Europe occidentale se transforment en pays indépendants qui sont très nombreux à être représentés ici aujourd'hui; d'autre part, l'Empire soviétique ne cesse de s'étendre. Je ne crois pas me tromper ou manquer de modération en disant que les nations de l'Europe occidentale s'efforcent, quoique avec lenteur, un peu trop de lenteur sans doute, de respecter les principes de la Charte et les aspirations fondamentales de l'humanité. L'Empire soviétique poursuit son avance à l'encontre de l'idéal de la Charte des Nations Unies et du désir fondamental de liberté des peuples dans le monde entier. Tel est le vrai problème du colonialisme qui se pose aujourd'hui à l'ONU.

La séance est levée à 18 heures.

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1215

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. THORS (Islande) [traduit de l'anglais]: Depuis huit jours nous examinons ici, en séance plénière, une déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/4502]. Il s'agit là d'une grande cause, d'une tâche énorme, et, si bien des choses ont été dites par un grand nombre de délégations, beaucoup d'autres délégations doivent encore exposer leurs vues. La délégation islandaise tient à manifester le grand intérêt qu'elle porte à cette question en exprimant quelques opinions à son propos.

2. Depuis le début de l'histoire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, depuis qu'elle a été créée à San Francisco en 1945, la question du colonialisme, sous toutes ses formes, a constamment été l'une de ses principales préoccupations. C'est pourquoi le Conseil de tutelle devait devenir l'un des principaux organes de l'Organisation et c'est pourquoi aussi l'une des six commissions permanentes prévues à l'origine, la Quatrième Commission, devait consacrer son temps et ses réflexions aux questions de tutelle et à celles qui se rapportent aux territoires non autonomes.

3. A la fin du Moyen Age, le colonialisme commença à apposer son empreinte sur les différents continents et devint bientôt un élément important dans l'évolution historique de l'humanité. Il a eu quelques aspects favorables, mais plus souvent il a exercé des influences destructrices sur les peuples colonisés, qu'il a soumis à l'exploitation et maintenus dans la stagnation, et qu'il a même souvent conduits à la misère. Le colonialisme est le fruit de l'esprit d'exploration et d'expansion qui animait les explorateurs européens courageux et aventureux lorsqu'ils conduisirent leurs navires vers les points les plus éloignés du globe et découvrirent de nouveaux continents. Ces terres nouvelles sont devenues les colonies des puissances qui dominaient alors l'Europe, et le régime colonial a connu son apogée aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles.

4. De nos jours, la situation est tout à fait différente et nous voici occupés à mettre un terme à la domination coloniale avec le sentiment que notre entreprise est pleinement justifiée par la réalité. Cette évolution a été marquée par des luttes farouches, tant à l'intérieur qu'à l'extérieur de toutes les régions colonisées. Elle a causé des effusions de sang dans bien des continents et a imposé des sacrifices et des souffrances considérables aux peuples asservis du monde entier.

5. Le peuple islandais a toujours pris fait et cause pour les peuples asservis et a toujours fidèlement servi l'idéal selon lequel tous les peuples devraient pouvoir devenir maîtres de leur destin et de leur avenir en exerçant le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes. C'est pourquoi, toujours et dans tous les cas — par exemple, pour les questions de Chypre et d'Algérie — nous avons ici, au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, voté en faveur du droit des petits pays à disposer d'eux-mêmes, quelle que soit la grande puissance qui jugeait bon de faire obstacle à cette évolution vers la liberté et l'indépendance. Le peuple d'Islande ne pouvait pas agir autrement puisqu'il a connu lui-même une période de domination étrangère et peut donc apprécier les bienfaits et les avantages dont jouit un peuple qui est maître chez lui et en mesure d'utiliser, à son profit, les ressources naturelles de sa terre et de l'océan pour apporter à sa population les bienfaits du progrès et accroître son bien-être.

6. Certes l'Islande a été indépendante pendant trois siècles, du IX^e au XIII^e siècle, mais ce n'est qu'en 1918 que nous avons reconquis notre pleine souveraineté et depuis lors, c'est-à-dire depuis un peu plus de 40 ans, nous avons acquis une expérience nouvelle de la souveraineté, bien que la renaissance de notre république ne date que de 1944. Notre histoire est différente de celle d'un grand nombre de pays puisque c'est par voie de négociation que nous nous sommes séparés de notre ancien associé politique, le Danemark, avec lequel nous n'avons pas cessé d'entretenir des liens d'amitié qui sont devenus encore plus étroits et plus intimes lorsque notre séparation a été consommée.

7. On peut dire que le colonialisme est en régression et perd régulièrement du terrain depuis deux siècles. Le coup le plus dur qui lui ait jamais été porté est peut-être la révolution américaine qui se fit sous l'égide de la Déclaration d'indépendance de 1776 où l'on peut notamment lire ce qui suit:

"En conséquence, nous, les représentants des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, assemblés en Congrès général, prenant à témoin le Juge suprême de l'Univers de la droiture de nos intentions, publions et déclarons solennellement, au nom et par l'autorité du bon peuple de ces colonies, que ces colonies unies sont et ont le droit d'être des Etats libres et indépendants."

Environ deux ans plus tard, après une lutte vigoureuse et victorieuse poursuivie pour le maintien de l'indépendance dans des conditions particulièrement dures, George Washington écrivait à un ami ces paroles empreintes de courage et de sagesse:

"Rien, si ce n'est l'indépendance, ne me paraît acceptable. Une paix stipulant toute autre condition équivaudrait, si je puis me permettre cette expression, à une paix de guerre."

8. La révolution en Amérique du Nord et les paroles et les actes d'hommes tels que George Washington ont inspiré les chefs des pays d'Amérique latine tels que Simón Bolívar ou José Martí, et d'autres hommes de même envergure, qui se sont mis à la tête du vaste mouvement révolutionnaire anticolonialiste dressé contre les chefs colonialistes britanniques et espagnols dans les Amériques. La vie et les actes de ces hommes et de leurs amis ou compagnons ont été une source d'inspiration pour les générations ultérieures et pour leurs chefs, qui, depuis lors et jusqu'à nos jours, ont repris le flambeau afin d'éclairer les nations sur la voie de la liberté et de l'indépendance. Les peuples du monde ont toujours été dominés ou dirigés, selon le cas, par des despotes qui prennent plus qu'ils ne donnent ou par de vrais chefs qui donnent plus qu'ils ne prennent. Il est apparu clairement, au cours des relations entre les puissances coloniales et les pays colonisés, que charité bien ordonnée commence par soi-même. Les intérêts de la métropole l'emportaient et, le plus souvent, les chefs colonialistes exploitaient les ressources de régions lointaines du monde et s'enrichissaient, tandis que la population des colonies était maintenue à l'arrière-plan, dans la pauvreté, l'analphabétisme, et même dans la misère.

9. L'expérience acquise au cours des deux conflits les plus horribles qu'ait connus l'histoire de l'humanité, la première et la seconde guerre mondiale, a ouvert les yeux de tous sur les relations entre les nations et sur le fait que les peuples de toutes les régions du monde qui étaient contraints, ou pouvaient être contraints, de supporter de lourds fardeaux et de consentir des sacrifices pour le reste de l'humanité pouvaient, eux aussi, prétendre jouir des mêmes droits et être les maîtres de leur destin.

10. Telle a été la tendance de l'époque et tel était le point auquel avait abouti l'évolution de la pensée humaine, ainsi que le désir d'entendre proclamer des droits de l'homme de valeur universelle, lorsque la Charte des Nations Unies fut élaborée à San Francisco en 1945. Ces idées hardies se retrouvent d'ailleurs en divers endroits de la Charte.

11. L'Article premier affirme, en son paragraphe 2, que l'un des buts principaux des Nations Unies est le suivant:

"Développer entre les nations des relations amicales fondées sur le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes, et prendre toutes autres mesures propres à consolider la paix du monde."

Au paragraphe suivant du même article, nous avons tous affirmé notre adhésion à l'idéal élevé qui nous impose de développer et d'encourager

"le respect des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion".

Des encouragements semblables sont répétés à l'Article 55. N'oublions pas que trois chapitres entiers de la Charte sont consacrés à ce que nous appelons les questions coloniales: les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII. Il est bon de se souvenir de certains des prin-cipes de la Déclaration qui figure à l'Article 73, et aux termes de laquelle:

"Les Membres des Nations Unies qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes, reconnaissent le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires. Ils acceptent comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser dans toute la mesure du possible leur prospérité, dans le cadre du système de paix et de sécurité internationales établi par la présente Charte ..."

L'Article 76 prévoit en outre que l'une des fins essentielles du régime de tutelle est de

"Favoriser le progrès politique, économique et social des populations des territoires sous tutelle ainsi que le développement de leur instruction; favoriser également leur évolution progressive vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes ou l'indépendance, compte tenu des conditions particulières à chaque territoire et à ses populations, des aspirations librement exprimées des populations intéressées ..."

12. J'ai jugé à propos de citer ces diverses déclarations formelles de la Charte pour que nous n'oublions pas qu'il s'agit là d'engagements fermes auxquels chaque Membre de l'ONU sans exception a souscrit lorsqu'il a signé la Charte. On pourrait donc se demander s'il est nécessaire ou indispensable de renouveler notre adhésion à ces principes élevés. La délégation islandaise estime que ce débat approfondi, auquel participe le monde entier, doit se conclure par l'adoption d'une résolution. N'oublions pas non plus que ces idéaux de liberté et d'indépendance ont été proclamés à la Conférence africano-asiatique de Bandoung en 1955, bien qu'ils aient alors été exprimés sous la forme suivante: "Le colonialisme est dans ses manifestations un mal auquel il convient de mettre promptement un terme." Les mêmes sentiments ont été affirmés de nouveau dans des résolutions adoptées à diverses conférences réunissant des Etats africains.

13. Examinons maintenant pendant quelques instants ce qui s'est passé dans le monde depuis qu'ont été énoncés en 1945 les immenses engagements contenus dans la Charte. Tous ceux qui ont foi dans les principes de liberté et d'indépendance doivent éprouver un sentiment d'orgueil et de satisfaction à la pensée que, depuis 1945, plus de 45 Etats ont accédé à l'indépendance, notamment des pays comme l'Inde, le Pakistan, Ceylan et la Birmanie qui comptent au total plus de 450 millions d'habitants. En outre, plus de 175 millions de personnes qui vivaient dans des colonies, des territoires sous tutelle ou des territoires non autonomes ont maintenant obtenu leur pleine liberté. Tels sont les progrès considérables réalisés depuis 15 ans. Au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, nous avons vu apparaître 17 nations nouvelles qui sont devenues Membres à part entière et indépendants de notre organisation, ce qui est pour nous tous un motif de vive satisfaction en même temps qu'une raison d'espérer en l'avenir. N'oublions pas en citant ces chiffres qu'il ne s'agit pas de statistiques, mais bien d'êtres humains, chacun doué d'une âme et d'un esprit, auxquels vient d'être fait le don de la liberté et dont la vie s'annonce plus rayonnante que jamais.

14. Cependant il existe encore, dans divers continents, une centaine de millions d'individus qui continuent à vivre sous la domination d'une puissance étrangère lointaine. C'est de la situation actuelle de ces peuples, ainsi que de leur sort et de leur avenir, que nous nous préoccupons directement en ce moment, tandis que nous examinons le point de l'ordre du jour qui porte ce titre imposant: "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". L'inscription de cette question à l'ordre du jour a été proposée par le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, lorsqu'il s'est présenté devant cette assemblée [859ème séance], et il faut se féliciter que cette initiative ait été prise dans l'état actuel des choses. Toutefois, la délégation islandaise regrette de ne pouvoir considérer comme pertinentes en l'occurrence — ou comme utiles à la cause de la libération de tous les peuples opprimés — toutes les affirmations et toutes les assertions que l'on relève dans la déclaration présentée par l'Union soviétique; en outre, ce texte contient maintes allégations auxquelles nous ne saurions souscrire. En conséquence, nous ne serions pas en mesure de voter pour l'ensemble de cette déclaration si l'Union soviétique voulait la faire mettre aux voix au sein de l'Assemblée.

15. Je tiens à dire notre reconnaissance aux 45 pays du groupe africano-asiatique qui ont collaboré à la rédaction d'une autre déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5], dont les coauteurs sont déjà au nombre de 42. C'est avec optimisme, et animée d'un sentiment de vive satisfaction, que la délégation islandaise votera pour chacun des éléments contenus dans la déclaration africano-asiatique, et aussi pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

16. Qu'il me soit permis d'exprimer quelques considérations touchant ledit projet de résolution.

17. Dans le sixième paragraphe du préambule, on lit que l'Assemblée reconnaît "que les peuples du monde souhaitent ardemment la fin du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations". Nous sommes convaincus que ces termes énoncent bien la situation telle qu'elle se présente. La même remarque s'applique aussi à l'affirmation, figurant dans le neuvième paragraphe, selon laquelle l'Assemblée générale est "persuadée que le processus de libération est irrésistible et irréversible et que, pour éviter de graves crises, il faut mettre fin au colonialisme et à toutes les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination dont il s'accompagne".

18. Nous sommes heureux de noter cette répudiation de la ségrégation et de la discrimination fondées sur des motifs de race, et une déclaration de cette nature est parfaitement conforme à tout ce que la délégation islandaise a affirmé et soutenu de ses votes pendant toutes les sessions de l'Assemblée générale. Les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination doivent être répudiées, non seulement dans les pays colonisés, mais partout dans le monde, dans tous les pays, anciens ou nouveaux. En outre, la déclaration "proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations". Nous pensons qu'il est opportun et avisé de se servir ici du mot "rapidement", et non du mot "immédiatement", car la réalité nous montre que la liquidation complète du colonialisme dans les diverses parties du monde ne pourra se faire que progressivement, par étapes, et le plus rapidement possible, étant donné la situation réelle qui y règne et le niveau de développement des populations. C'est pourquoi nous estimons nécessaire, à cet égard, d'insister sur l'importance du rôle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, qui peut puissamment aider les mouvements d'indépendance surgissant dans les territoires sous tutelle et dans les territoires non autonomes, comme le dit le cinquième paragraphe du préambule.

19. Il est évident que les populations encore soumises au régime colonial auront besoin d'une assistance technique qui devrait de préférence leur être fournie par le truchement de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Cette assistance prendra notamment une forme financière et il va de soi que, dans une large mesure, cette assistance financière devra être fournie, comme c'est toujours le cas, par les pays les plus grands et les plus riches; je dois reconnaître, en toute humilité, qu'un petit pays comme l'Islande ne pourra apporter qu'un faible concours à cet égard. Si chaque pays acceptait spontanément de renoncer à une partie de ses dépenses d'ordre militaire et de consacrer chaque année, ne fût-ce que 1 pour 100, ou un peu plus de 1 pour 100, de l'économie ainsi réalisée à accroître la prospérité et les ressources industrielles des pays insuffisamment développés du monde, ou à aider les peuples coloniaux dans les efforts qu'ils déploient pour accéder à l'indépendance financière et économique, il est incontestable que l'ensemble de l'humanité en tirerait un avantage considérable.

20. Il n'est pas moins évident qu'il faudrait de toute urgence accroître largement l'assistance technique fournie dans tous les domaines, qu'il s'agisse de l'industrie, du réseau des communications ou encore de la formation d'un personnel suffisant de ressortissants de ces pays, qui leur permette d'acquérir toute la compétence qu'exige l'administration rationnelle et autonome de leurs propres affaires. Le paragraphe 3 du projet de déclaration est ainsi conçu:

"Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance."

Nous reconnaissons que des prétextes de ce genre ne devraient jamais être invoqués, mais il est évident aussi qu'un pays ne peut devenir indépendant soudainement, sans aucune préparation; cela doit se faire progressivement, étape par étape, lorsque la nécessité exige qu'il en soit ainsi. A cet égard, nous pouvons aussi nous rallier aux dispositions du paragraphe 5, ainsi conçu:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

21. La délégation de l'Islande tient à souligner l'importance des mots "mesures immédiates" qui montrent que l'indépendance ne peut pas être donnée avec la rapidité de l'éclair traversant le ciel, mais qu'elle doit être l'aboutissement d'un processus d'évolution et d'un développement progressif. Selon nous, ces mots signifient que l'évolution doit commencer immédiatement et que les premières mesures doivent être prises sans retard. La route qui conduit à l'indépendance peut être rapidement parcourue par certains, mais elle peut aussi être plus longue pour d'autres peuples. Il est toutefois d'une extrême importance de donner immédiatement à tous les peuples du monde l'assurance qu'ils recevront l'indépendance et la liberté afin qu'ils puissent, en pleine confiance et avec certitude, progresser dans la voie de la liberté totale.

22. La délégation islandaise accueille avec satisfaction cette déclaration de liberté; elle est reconnaissante aux pays africains-asiatiques d'avoir pris la tête de ce mouvement sincère et idéaliste et d'avoir fait rayonner aux yeux de tous les peuples opprimés et mécontents une vie heureuse et un avenir meilleur. Nous espérons que cette déclaration de liberté recevra l'appui effectif et chaleureux de tous les pays du monde et que tous les pays la mettront en pratique, en particulier ceux qui exercent encore leur domination sur d'autres peuples, où que ce soit dans le monde. Nous estimons que cette déclaration de liberté n'intéresse pas seulement les populations qui, à l'heure actuelle, sont gouvernées par d'autres pays, mais que toutes les nations d'aujourd'hui et de demain doivent pouvoir jouir de leur pleine liberté sans que s'exerce l'influence inadmissible et indésirable d'une autre nation quelle qu'elle soit.

23. Puisse le flambeau de la liberté briller dans tous les pays et dans toutes les régions de notre globe. Pourtant, n'oublions pas que ni les idéaux élevés, ni les grands mots, ni les grandes promesses ne sont utiles s'ils ne sont suivis d'actes francs et sincères. N'oublions pas non plus que, si aucune nation n'a le droit d'en gouverner une autre, en revanche chaque nation a le devoir primordial de se gouverner elle-même et d'orienter fermement et judicieusement son évolution vers une forme d'indépendance qui lui soit propre, tout en guidant sa population dans la voie du progrès, de l'éducation et de la prospérité.

24. Chaque nation, en particulier les plus petites, doit avoir effectivement conscience du fait que l'indépendance n'est pas définitivement acquise le jour où elle est officiellement proclamée et où les festivités destinées à la célébrer prennent fin. Au contraire, c'est alors que commence la lutte pour l'indépendance véritable. C'est à ce moment que la nation établit sa voilure et gouverne pour son propre compte sur l'océan immense des affaires du monde. Il faut qu'elle ait alors le commandement de son propre navire et qu'elle affronte les lames puissantes de la lutte et des intrigues internationales, et c'est seulement grâce aux efforts habiles et coordonnés de l'équipage tout entier qu'elle pourra atteindre la destination qu'elle s'est fixée. Si l'équipage n'est pas uni, le navire de l'Etat pourra sombrer. Il faudra nécessairement faire preuve de vigilance, de prudence et de persévérance.

25. Lorsqu'elle votera pour la déclaration d'indépendance pour tous les peuples, la délégation islandaise le fera sans colère et sans reproche à l'égard de quelque nation que ce soit, mais elle souhaitera bonne chance à tous les pays, qu'ils soient grands ou petits.

26. M. WIRJOPRANOTO (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: C'est la première fois que l'Organisation des Nations Unies examine la question du colonialisme dans son ensemble. Pour parler en termes concrets, c'est la première fois que l'ONU est invitée à proclamer "la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations" [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5, dernier paragraphe du préambule]. Si elle avait pris cette mesure il y a 10 ans, la décision aurait certainement été saluée comme un acte historique et audacieux de diplomatie internationale. Si elle l'avait fait en 1955, après la grande conférence des nations africaines et asiatiques qui s'est tenue à Bandoung, ou même en 1958 après la première conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, réunie à Accra, ce geste aurait encore été reconnu comme un acte éclairé et généreux. Pourtant, il a fallu attendre 1960 pour que cette question urgente fasse l'objet d'un débat complet et public.

27. Certains pourront donc penser que nos discussions sont quelque peu tardives. Au lieu de s'être mise à l'avant-garde de la marche vers la liberté, l'ONU semble à l'arrière-garde et à la traîne d'événements qui évoluent rapidement. Pourtant, bien que nous approchions de la tombée du jour, nous pensons qu'il n'est pas encore trop tard pour agir. La tombe du colonialisme est creusée. Il faut que l'ONU se prépare maintenant à enterrer celui-ci définitivement.

28. Dans la vie des nations, les négociations pour la liberté font suite à la lutte active et souvent violente menée pour la libération nationale. Quelquefois, comme ce fut le cas pour mon pays, les négociations peuvent être interrompues par une reprise du conflit armé provoquée par la résistance têtue et réactionnaire que l'esprit colonialiste oppose encore aux forces d'évolution. Cependant, malgré quelques échecs épisodiques, la victoire des peuples dépendants reste imminente.

29. C'est cette phase que nous avons maintenant atteinte au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. La première grande bataille est gagnée. On ne conteste plus guère que le colonialisme doive disparaître de la face du monde. Nous participons aujourd'hui à un débat de caractère international qui a pour objet la liquidation complète du colonialisme et l'acceptation de la tendance nouvelle et des forces nouvelles du nationalisme dans le monde.

30. Considéré dans cette perspective, notre combat n'a pas été vain. Non seulement nos voix sont entendues, non seulement notre lutte a confirmé la disparition inexorable du colonialisme, mais elle a fait naître l'espoir que le colonialisme va promptement disparaître grâce à nos efforts concertés et conformément aux dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies. Faisons en sorte que cet espoir ne soit pas éphémère.

31. Aux termes du préambule de la Charte, nous, peuples des Nations Unies, sommes résolus "à proclamer à nouveau notre foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites" et "à favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande". Nous demandons maintenant à l'Assemblée d'affirmer la conviction "que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national" [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5, onzième paragraphe du préambule]. Nous demandons à l'Assemblée de proclamer solennellement la nécessité de mettre fin au colonialisme, rapidement et sans conditions. Car le colonialisme existe encore dans le monde. Quelques puissances coloniales demeurent prisonnières du passé. Elles ont même des amis qui leur apportent leur sympathie dans l'affliction qui les frappe. Nous pourrions peut-être éprouver quelque pitié à leur égard si toute notre pitié, toute notre tristesse, toutes nos pensées ne se tournaient vers les populations qu'elles condamnent, par leur aveuglement, à mener une vie d'asservissement vide de sens. Ce sont les souffrances de ces populations qui nous accablent. C'est leur peine qui emplit nos cœurs et nos esprits d'angoisse et d'anxiété.

32. D'ailleurs, l'anxiété que nous éprouvons devrait être partagée par tous ceux qui sont ici rassemblés. Je suis certain que quiconque a vécu l'histoire troublée de ces 10 dernières années ne peut demeurer indifférent à la persistance de l'une des formes les plus virulentes du colonialisme, qui vise à faire d'un peuple ou d'une nation la propriété privée d'une autre. Cette attitude d'esprit périmée est actuellement la cause de la guerre d'Algérie, des troubles au Congo, des mouvements qui se produisent en Afrique du Sud, au Sud-Ouest africain, au Mozambique, en Angola et dans d'autres régions de l'Afrique, de l'Asie et même de l'Amérique. Elle est la cause du mécontentement qui couve dangereusement en Irian occidental. Partout où elle continue à se manifester, elle engendre le désespoir, et il est inévitable qu'elle donne lieu à des conflits armés. Je ne veux pas jeter ici de l'huile sur le feu, j'énonce simplement un fait; je formule un avertissement précis. Instruits par notre expérience tragique, nous en appelons aux puissances coloniales et à ceux qui partagent leurs vues pour qu'ils ouvrent les yeux et lisent l'avertissement écrit sur le mur. Nous en appelons à eux pour qu'ils suivent l'exemple de ceux qui marchent vers la lumière.

33. En parcourant des yeux cette assemblée, on ne peut qu'être frappé par l'image qu'elle nous donne d'un monde en pleine évolution. Cette évolution trouve ici, pourrait-on dire, son incarnation physique. Certes, nous sommes reconnaissants à certaines puissances coloniales du réalisme sain dont elles font preuve devant ce mouvement en faveur de la liberté des peuples. Cependant, nous n'oublions pas pour autant les lourds sacrifices consentis par les peuples dépendants pour conquérir leur indépendance. Si le sang, la sueur et les larmes ont permis aux démocraties de vaincre le totalitarisme, s'ils ont rendu possible la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, on peut dire aussi que le sang, la sueur et les larmes des peuples dépendants ont permis à leur tour aux démocraties de triompher sur le colonialisme, ont rendu possible l'Organisation des Nations Unies sous sa forme nouvelle, et aussi ce monde nouveau qui est le nôtre. Le désir ardent de liberté qui anime ces peuples leur a permis de réaliser de grandes choses. Songez qu'il y a 30 ans environ le chef nationaliste indonésien Sukarno a été emprisonné pour avoir simplement prophétisé la fin du colonialisme et la liberté de l'Indonésie. Aujourd'hui l'Indonésie est libre, de même que d'autres nations africanoasiatiques, et le président Sukarno a pu proclamer devant cette assemblée [880ème séance], sans crainte d'être contredit, que le colonialisme agonise.

34. S'agit-il donc seulement de savoir quand toutes les colonies seront libérées, plutôt que de savoir si elles doivent l'être? S'agit-il simplement de patience ou d'impatience? Non. Ce n'est là qu'un aspect d'une question fondamentale bien plus vaste. En fait, la question fondamentale à l'heure actuelle est posée par les divergences d'opinions persistantes sur la nature du colonialisme, sur son caractère véritable. Ces divergences d'opinions continuent d'être une cause de discorde, voire de conflit. Là est actuellement le véritable danger.

35. Les nations de l'Asie et de l'Afrique nouvelle rejettent le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, parce que le colonialisme est un mal. A l'opposé, on trouve ceux qui, tout en reconnaissant que le colonialisme est un mal, cherchent à le justifier au nom d'un idéal quelconque. Pourtant ceux qui choisissent cette attitude ne devraient pas oublier que, si les innocentes victimes de l'emprisonnement peuvent, pour prendre leur mal en patience, trouver quelques rares raisons de consolation dans leur état de prisonniers, le geôlier doit bien se garder de prêcher que la prison est un bien et non un mal. Il est dangereux et faux de penser qu'un mal peut se justifier si la victime trouve des raisons de s'en consoler. Néanmoins, les puissances coloniales et celles qui les appuient essaient de justifier par des considérations d'ordre humanitaire, économique, social et culturel l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme et les mesures de discrimination fondées sur des raisons de race, de couleur ou de religion. Que prétend-on, et quelle est la vérité? Qu'il me soit permis de rappeler brièvement le passé.

36. On prétend que le colonialisme a apporté aux colonies le progrès et la prospérité. De vastes terres incultes auraient été transformées en plantations; les richesses du sous-sol auraient été exploitées; les moyens de transport auraient été organisés de telle manière qu'un courant continu de produits de base particulièrement recherchés, notamment les minéraux et les pétroles, se trouvaient mis à la disposition du monde. Peu à peu, convaincues d'avoir transformé des pays pauvres et stériles en territoires fertiles et productifs, les puissances colonisatrices ont découvert un argument d'ordre économique pour justifier la domination qu'elles exerçaient sur des populations étrangères. Elles accordaient une telle force à ce genre de raisonnement que la voix de leur conscience s'est tue. En outre, lorsque enfin une certaine instruction a été donnée aux nations colonisées, des affirmations plus hardies se sont fait jour. Ces affirmations ont donné naissance à la théorie bien connue du "fardeau de l'homme blanc" d'après laquelle une noble mission de caractère humanitaire, culturel et économique était en cours d'accomplissement. En fait, cependant, lorsque les colonisateurs sont arrivés sur nos rives, nous n'étions ni pauvres, ni privés de civilisation. En réalité, c'est même la richesse de nos terres qui pendant des siècles avait retenu leur attention. A cette époque, notre économie était développée. Elle était diversifiée. En Indonésie, par exemple, nous fabriquions un grand nombre de produits maintenant dénommés produits de petite industrie, nous construisions des bateaux et nous produisions aussi du poivre, des clous de girofle et d'autres épices qui exerçaient un attrait particulier sur les Portugais et les Hollandais. Nous étions disposés à échanger nos produits contre ceux de l'Occident. Nos produits étaient de bonne qualité, très convoités par ceux qui venaient vers nous — malheureusement, si convoités que ceux-ci n'ont pas pu se contenter de les obtenir par voie d'échanges commerciaux mutuellement profitables. Nos Etats — je dis bien nos Etats, car à l'époque nous étions des nations organisées en Etats — se sont effondrés, victimes de la puissance militaire de l'Ouest.

37. C'est alors qu'a commencé pour nous une longue et déchirante période de ténèbres qui a pris fin maintenant dans certaines régions du monde, mais non dans toutes. Une grande partie de notre capacité de production a été sottement détruite par les colonisateurs pour maintenir des prix élevés sur le marché mondial. L'Indonésie a connu les fameux raids auxquels se sont livrés les Hollandais, qui ont détruit les plantations d'épices de notre population pour maintenir des prix élevés sur le marché mondial. A une époque plus récente, des restrictions à la production ont été imposées sur les plantations de caoutchouc de la population, et non sur les grands domaines étrangers. Il est certain que l'intérêt de nos pays n'était pas le facteur dominant dans l'organisation de notre capacité de production. Du fait que nous n'étions plus les maîtres de notre propre destin, notre économie jadis diversifiée a peu à peu cessé de l'être. Notre pays est devenu exclusivement agricole et notre flotte, qui ne transportait plus nos propres produits, a cessé d'exister en tant que flotte. Les plantations qui ont été créées ont été cultivées par la population locale, travaillant sous un régime de contrat imposé, et ont produit les récoltes qu'exigeaient les marchés de nos maîtres.

38. Il serait intéressant de se demander ici ce que la situation économique de nos pays aurait pu être si nous n'avions pas été colonisés, si nous avions pu suivre le cours normal de notre existence nationale, si nous avions pu organiser notre production après avoir pris contact avec les marchés nouveaux de l'Occident. On peut se demander, par exemple, quelle influence aurait exercé sur nous la technologie toujours plus achevée de l'Occident si nous y avions eu accès par des contacts pacifiques. En fait, nous n'y avons jamais eu accès. Je ne puis évidemment démontrer avec une rigueur mathématique que, sous un régime de liberté, nos pays n'auraient pas manqué de développer leur économie, puisque ce régime de liberté ne nous a pas été accordé. A l'heure actuelle, nous avons cependant l'exemple du Japon, de la Chine, de l'Inde et d'autres pays d'Asie, y compris mon propre pays, des pays d'Amérique latine, du Moyen-Orient et de l'Afrique qui sont tous en voie de développer leur économie en dehors du régime colonial. Je suis certain que nous y réussirons.

39. Affirmer que le colonialisme a apporté à nos pays une richesse qui n'aurait pas pu être créée sans le régime colonial, c'est donc interpréter faussement les faits. Bien sûr, nous avons hérité de nos anciens maîtres, mais en la payant très cher, une certaine capacité de production. Mais, si on vole une maison et si on la meuble ensuite, on ne peut pas prétendre que le propriétaire avait une maison misérable qu'il ne pouvait pas meubler lui-même. Le propriétaire a dû payer de sa liberté l'ameublement de sa maison. En outre, même en laissant de côté la question de savoir si nous aurions pu créer notre propre richesse, comme nous l'avons fait dans le passé — question qui pique la curiosité — on peut se demander quelle part est revenue à nos populations lorsque sont apparues sur leur territoire les mines et les plantations exploitées grâce à leur labeur.

40. Je n'importunerai pas l'Assemblée en citant une masse de chiffres. Qu'il me soit cependant permis de mentionner ce qui suit. En 1936 environ 97,5 pour 100 de la population totale de mon pays était composée d'Indonésiens; on estimait à environ 20 pour 100 leur part du revenu national. Les étrangers d'origine asiatique représentaient environ 2 pour 100 de la population totale; leur part du revenu national total représentait aussi 20 pour 100 de ce revenu. Quant aux étrangers d'origine non asiatique, ils représentaient seulement 0,5 pour 100 de la population totale, mais leur part du revenu correspondait aux 60 pour 100 qui restaient; 0,5 pour 100 de la population totale, 60 pour 100 du revenu national total. Ce sont là des chiffres calculés par les Hollandais, et qui illustrent la prospérité de mon pays — ou qui montrent plutôt comment la population de mon pays était privée de sa prospérité — sous le régime colonial. La paradoxe de l'Indonésie était le suivant: un pays riche — c'était, comme l'a dit un Hollandais, "une guirlande d'émeraude autour de l'équateur" — mais une population désespérément pauvre. Comme l'a dit un autre Hollandais, l'Indonésie était une nation de coolies, et un coolie parmi les nations.

41. En face de ces faits et de ces chiffres, la théorie du "fardeau de l'homme blanc" et la mission de civilisation et de développement que l'homme blanc s'est assignée lui-même rendent un son assez creux. Je n'ai parlé que de la stagnation économique, sans aborder la question de la stagnation sociale et culturelle, sans mentionner la destruction de la dignité de la personne humaine dont s'accompagne le régime colonialiste. En fait, si le colonialisme est si débonnaire et si bienveillant, pourquoi les Américains, du Nord et du Sud, se seraient-ils révoltés? Pourquoi de nos jours le même phénomène se serait-il produit en Asie, en Afrique et au Moyen-Orient? Parce que le colonialisme est mauvais, parce qu'il se fonde sur la convoitise, parce qu'il implique la domination de l'homme par l'homme. Aucune légende dorée de mission à accomplir, de tâche à réaliser ou de responsabilité à assumer ne peut imposer silence à l'homme qui brûle du désir d'être libre, d'être son propre maître, de prendre la responsabilité de son propre destin. Néanmoins, non seulement les puissances coloniales et ceux qui les appuient s'accrochent désespérément à leur théorie du "fardeau de l'homme blanc", mais, ce qui est pire, ils essaient maintenant de substituer aux raisonnements par lesquels ils justifiaient le colonialisme des raisonnements leur permettant de justifier le maintien, direct ou indirect, de l'autorité coloniale dans les territoires qu'ils tenaient autrefois en dépendance. Sur les justifications du passé, ils essaient de construire un nouvel édifice de l'autorité coloniale. Convaincus — et peut-être, hélas! de bonne foi — qu'ils ont plus d'expérience que les autres, ils espèrent maintenir leur emprise économique, stratégique, sociale et culturelle, tout en reconnaissant l'indépendance politique. Je parle ici sans exagération et d'après notre propre expérience récente.

42. Lorsque les Hollandais ont quitté l'Indonésie, nous nous sommes retrouvés chargés d'une dette énorme, y compris les dettes contractées par les Hollandais lors de leurs deux premières agressions armées contre nous. Nous devons faire face à ces charges financières injustes avec un trésor vide. Nous ne disposons plus que d'une poignée d'administrateurs et de techniciens qualifiés. Plus de 95 pour 100 de nos exportations, de nos importations, de nos établissements bancaires, de nos transports maritimes et de nos industries restaient aux mains des Hollandais. Les Hollandais gardaient leur emprise économique, tandis que nous devons continuer à mener une vie de galériens dans notre propre pays. Nous avons la liberté politique, mais non la liberté économique, c'est-à-dire qu'en fait nous n'avons pas de liberté du tout. Nous étions donc résolus à faire disparaître cette injustice et nous l'avons fait disparaître. En dépit des plus terribles menaces d'effondrement économique imminent, nous avons repris en main les moyens de production et les établissements financiers et nous avons survécu. Aujourd'hui, à la place des Hollandais et des autres étrangers, ce sont les Indonésiens qui jouent le rôle le plus important dans la vie économique de notre pays. Il est certain que nous nous heurtons à des difficultés économiques, il n'est pas douteux que nous commettons des erreurs. Mais ce sont nos difficultés et nos erreurs à nous; nous sommes maintenant maîtres chez nous, et c'est ce qui importe.

43. Les Hollandais ont bien essayé aussi de conserver la mainmise politique et militaire sur l'Indonésie. Nous avons triomphé du plan, d'inspiration hollandaise, tendant à fragmenter notre unité et à transformer notre Etat en de multiples Etats qui, par leur faiblesse, auraient alors permis aux Hollandais de diviser pour régner et ainsi de nous dominer. Nous sommes venus à bout des troubles militaires fomentés par l'aventurier hollandais Westerling. Nous avons neutralisé les mouvements séparatistes inspirés ou encouragés par des groupes coloniaux hollandais, tels que la prétendue République des Moluques. Nous avons neutralisé les encouragements au séparatisme qu'ils prodiguaient récemment à Java, à Sumatra, à Célèbes et à d'autres îles de l'Indonésie. Nous avons éliminé tous ces actes de subversion politique, économique et militaire, fomentés et encouragés par certains intérêts hollandais qui cherchaient encore à se maintenir dans notre territoire et à profiter d'une situation troublée et agitée.

44. Cependant, un acte de subversion demeure, une question reste à régler — la question de l'Irian occidental. Il n'entre pas dans mes intentions d'exposer ici en détail ce différend qui découle uniquement et directement de l'attitude des Pays-Bas. Ceux-ci refusent en effet de respecter les engagements explicitement pris, de remplir la promesse solennelle qu'ils avaient faite, savoir: que le transfert complet, inconditionnel et irrévocable de la souveraineté aux autorités indépendantes de la République d'Indonésie devait s'appliquer à l'ensemble du territoire des anciennes Indes néerlandaises. Toutefois, alors que j'examine les prétextes invoqués par les puissances occidentales pour maintenir le colonialisme, je voudrais montrer comment ces puissances déforment ce droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes. En Irian occidental, les Hollandais corrompent ce droit en l'invoquant pour justifier une amputation du territoire auquel doit s'étendre la souveraineté de l'Indonésie. Là encore, on utilise le prétexte du "fardeau de l'homme blanc" pour masquer le maintien de la domination coloniale, l'annexion unilatéralement admise d'une partie d'une nation souveraine.

45. Les Hollandais soutiennent qu'ils doivent former et préparer la population de l'Irian occidental afin qu'elle puisse exercer son droit à disposer d'elle-même. Les Hollandais, qui même après 350 ans de domination coloniale et, qui plus est, même après avoir signé la Charte des Nations Unies ont cherché par la subversion et par un conflit armé à priver la population indonésienne de son droit à disposer d'elle-même, en viennent maintenant à invoquer si soudainement, si religieusement et si exclusivement ce noble droit que leur attitude devient ridicule et certainement suspecte. Désirent-ils vraiment préparer les Indonésiens de l'Irian occidental à l'autodétermination — j'insiste sur ce mot? Non, ce qu'ils cherchent aujourd'hui comme hier, ce n'est pas à donner à cette population la possibilité de disposer d'elle-même, mais bien à lui faire prendre en la matière une décision préparée, dictée par la Hollande. Sinon, pourquoi interdiraient-ils l'emploi de la langue indonésienne en Irian occidental? Pourquoi interdiraient-ils aux populations de l'Irian occidental d'écouter les émissions radiophoniques de la République d'Indonésie? Pourquoi détruiraient-ils toutes les organisations qui préconisent le rattachement de l'Irian occidental à l'Indonésie? Pourquoi emprisonneraient-ils tout habitant de l'Irian occidental qui manifeste la moindre sympathie à l'égard de la République d'Indonésie? Pourquoi vouloir ainsi soumettre à un lavage de cerveau les populations de l'Irian occidental dont les chefs et les organisations politiques ont combattu, comme les chefs et les organisations politiques du reste de l'Indonésie, pour la liberté de tout notre pays? N'oubliez pas que les populations de l'Irian occidental ont exercé, il y a longtemps, leur droit à l'autodétermination. Elles l'ont fait de la même manière, avec la même ferveur, en même temps que toutes les autres populations d'Indonésie. En outre, le massacre de nos compatriotes — dans la vallée de Baliem en Irian occidental — fait-il partie du programme hollandais d'autodétermination? Cet incident s'est produit récemment sous le prétexte périmé de pacification.

46. Toutes ces questions sont des questions concrètes auxquelles les Hollandais n'ont jamais daigné répondre parce qu'ils ne peuvent pas répondre. En fait, au lieu de réponses sur lesquelles il ne faut pas compter, nous voulons des solutions à ces problèmes et à ces différends coloniaux.

47. Ne vous y trompez pas: nous sommes maintenant parvenus à un nouveau tournant. Le colonialisme agonise et, à sa place, le nationalisme de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, des populations qui dans le monde entier se trouvaient en dépendance, déferle et vient occuper le centre de la scène. Cela laisse-t-il présager la paix, ou de nouvelles frictions? Les forces positives qui sont en jeu dans le réveil et la renaissance de certaines nations du monde trouveront-elles audience, ou bien un nouveau colonialisme, cherchant à justifier le passé, renaîtra-t-il des cendres de l'ancien pour croiser le fer avec le nationalisme jailli du sol de l'Asie, de l'Afrique et de l'Amérique latine? Tel est le choix qui nous est proposé aujourd'hui, telle est l'épreuve à laquelle nous devons faire face.

48. Renoncez au colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations et vous mettrez un terme aux conflits toujours prêts à renaître. Renoncez à votre attitude coloniale et vous pourrez alors considérer notre nationalisme comme une force positive au service de la paix. Comprenez que notre nationalisme n'a aucun caractère chauvin ni agressif. Né dans le creuset de la domination étrangère, il cherche de nouveaux horizons, non pas que nous voulions conquérir et piller des terres étrangères, mais seulement développer nos propres ressources matérielles, redécouvrir les ressources créatrices qui sont les nôtres, offrir à nos populations de plus grandes possibilités. Notre nationalisme est essentiellement une affirmation de notre droit à vivre comme nous l'entendons, à modeler nos institutions politiques, économiques, sociales et culturelles conformément à nos besoins et selon les circonstances. Ce droit, nous le savons, s'accompagne de responsabilités.

49. Nous en sommes encore à la phase passionnante qui consiste à redécouvrir et à parfaire notre personnalité nationale. Ne cherchez donc pas à nous ranger sous une étiquette plutôt que sous une autre, à nous qualifier de champions de la droite ou de la gauche, de rejetons du capitalisme ou du communisme. Vous ne nous comprendrez que si vous nous considérez comme des pionniers à la recherche de notre propre mode de vie. Au cours de cette recherche, nous commettrons inévitablement des erreurs. Nous ne nous vantons pas d'être parfaits. Mais le droit de commettre des erreurs, de les corriger soi-même, n'est-il pas un des attributs essentiels de la liberté? Reportez-vous aux lourdes erreurs commises, ne serait-ce que pendant ce siècle, par les nations anciennes et bien établies, et demandez-vous ensuite si ce n'est pas faire preuve d'arrogance que de vouloir adopter une attitude paternaliste. Dieu nous préserve de commettre nous-mêmes de telles erreurs! A la recherche de notre personnalité particulière, nous nous imprégnons profondément des connaissances et des idées que le monde met à notre disposition, mais nous entendons aussi apporter notre contribution. Nous croyons pouvoir apporter quelques idées nouvelles au fonds mondial des connaissances.

50. Enfin, nous avons besoin d'une certaine aide — et nous la demandons — afin de retrouver notre condition de nation, car nous nous sommes lancés dans une guerre sans merci contre la pauvreté et la maladie. Nous faisons la guerre aux causes mêmes de la guerre. Nous luttons contre le temps pour répondre non pas aux aspirations, mais aux exigences croissantes de notre peuple. Tout en demandant une aide dans cette lutte qui intéresse l'humanité tout entière, nous insistons toutefois sur le fait que cette aide doit être accordée sur un pied d'égalité, dans un esprit d'intérêt commun et de respect mutuel. En fait, nous ne sommes pas les seuls à recevoir. Nous savons que nous avons aussi quelque chose à donner dans la recherche de la paix et de la stabilité internationales. Que l'on ait aussi besoin de nous a été largement prouvé, par exemple, dans le fonctionnement de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Nous n'avons jamais manqué à nos obligations sur ce point.

51. Il faut en vérité qu'il existe des liens de coopération entre les nations. Le mode de vie indonésien se fonde sur le principe de l'entraide plutôt que sur celui de la survivance du plus apte. Cette manière de voir est également conforme à l'esprit et aux objectifs reconnus de l'Organisation des Nations Unies: réaliser la coopération internationale en résolvant les problèmes internationaux d'ordre économique, social, intellectuel ou humanitaire. Telle est la base même, la raison d'être du projet de déclaration des 42 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] concernant l'indépendance des pays et peuples coloniaux, dont mon pays est un des auteurs. Plusieurs représentants des pays coauteurs de ce projet de déclaration l'ont déjà présenté à l'Assemblée et dûment commenté. Je me bornerai donc à souligner ce que nous considérons comme les éléments essentiels de ce texte.

52. Les bases fondamentales de ce projet de résolution sont les trois principes essentiels qui ont inspiré les déclarations de Bandoung, d'Accra et d'Addis-Abéba. Ces principes sont les suivants: réaffirmation par l'ONU de sa foi dans l'égalité de droits des nations, grandes ou petites; réaffirmation par l'ONU d'un des buts qu'elle s'est fixés et qui consiste à développer entre les nations des relations amicales fondées sur le respect du principe de l'égalité de droits des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes; enfin, réaffirmation de ce droit de l'homme qui a été adopté et consacré dans les projets de pactes relatifs aux droits de l'homme, et selon lequel tous les peuples ont le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes.

53. Au cœur du projet de déclaration des 42 puissances, il y a naturellement la proclamation solennelle aux termes de laquelle il sera mis fin rapidement et inconditionnellement au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Précisons donc ce que nous entendons par colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Ce point ne doit prêter à aucune confusion. Nous ne décrivons pas ici des situations qui existent dans le monde et qui reflètent le conflit idéologique actuel, sous ses aspects politiques ou militaires. Nous n'avons pas non plus rédigé une déclaration à l'intention de l'une ou l'autre des parties pour lui permettre d'atteindre plus facilement les objectifs idéologiques particuliers qu'elle s'est fixés. Ce projet de déclaration n'a pas trait aux Etats dits satellites, ni aux bases militaires, mais exclusivement aux populations et aux territoires qui sont encore en situation de dépendance et dont le sort préoccupait déjà ceux qui ont rédigé la Charte des Nations Unies. Pour éviter tout malentendu possible sur ce point, nous avons défini clairement, au paragraphe 5 de notre projet de déclaration, ces peuples et territoires dépendants par l'expression "les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance". Pour exprimer de façon pertinente l'engagement solennel de mettre fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, nous déclarons que des mesures immédiates seront prises pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires. Si l'on veut que des engagements solennels soient pris sur d'autres questions, nous demandons instamment qu'ils le soient de cette même manière exclusive.

54. Il est un autre point sur lequel je voudrais donner quelques éclaircissements afin d'éviter tout malentendu à l'avenir. Notre déclaration relative à l'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux est en même temps l'affirmation du fait que les rapports entre les puissances coloniales et les populations placées sous leur dépendance sont une question qui intéresse l'Organisation des Nations Unies et appelle de sa part certaines mesures. En conséquence, les dispositions du paragraphe 7 relatives à la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un autre Etat ne peuvent être interprétées que dans le sens de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'un Etat souverain et, en particulier, la non-ingérence des puissances coloniales dans les affaires intérieures des territoires qu'ils avaient autrefois sous leur dépendance. En fait, toute notre déclaration vise à obtenir, par l'intermédiaire de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, une action concertée pour l'indépendance des peuples et territoires encore dépendants, sans condition ni réserve d'aucune sorte, sans qu'il soit porté atteinte au droit qu'ils ont d'organiser librement leurs institutions politiques, économiques, sociales et culturelles.

55. En outre, il nous paraît tout spécialement important que cette déclaration vise à prévenir toute tentative pour provoquer un démembrement total ou partiel de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays. Aux paragraphes 4, 6 et 7, il est déclaré expressément que l'intégrité du territoire national des peuples qui ont accédé à l'indépendance sera respectée. Ainsi, par ce texte, on rejette toutes les activités coloniales d'où naissent des différends tels que celui de l'Irian occidental, qui oppose l'Indonésie aux Pays-Bas. Ce texte rejette donc catégoriquement la politique coloniale des Pays-Bas qui invoque abusivement, comme je l'ai déjà souligné, le droit sacré des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes afin de maintenir le colonialisme en Irian occidental, c'est-à-dire dans une région qui est partie intégrante de notre territoire national.

56. En nous rangeant au nombre des 42 puissances qui sont les auteurs de ce projet de déclaration, nous exprimons le ferme espoir que ce texte contribuera de façon essentielle et décisive à faire de notre organisation un instrument de paix viable, capable de faire face aux besoins particulièrement urgents de notre temps, et prêt à le faire.

58. Comment les choses ont-elles commencé? Avant que ne s'ouvre en Afrique la période coloniale, les peuples de l'Afrique vivaient heureux. Ils avaient des fruits plein leurs bois, leurs champs étaient pleins de cultures, ils avaient du gibier plein leurs forêts. Tout cela était à eux. Le soleil les inondait de ses rayons, leur donnant la santé et les tonifiant; ils chantaient, dansaient et riaient, le cœur dilaté. La nuit, le ciel d'Afrique se remplissait de leurs rires, du bruit de leurs tam-tams et de leurs chansons. Ils avaient dans chaque village leur chef, leur cour et rendaient la justice selon leurs lois. Ils avaient leur civilisation à eux, civilisation qui, comme toute civilisation, suivait son cours normal, obéissant elle aussi à l'inexorable loi de l'évolution.

59. Les colonialistes qui s'introduisaient en Afrique auprès de ces hommes savaient le caractère honteux de leurs desseins, et leur œuvre de colonisation débutait presque toujours par un mensonge. Ils venaient, disaient-ils presque toujours, apporter à ces hommes le salut, l'amitié, la protection de leurs grands chefs blancs qui se trouvaient loin, très loin, au-delà des mers, et ils demandaient à rester chez eux pour faire du commerce avec eux. L'Africain, hospitalier et généreux de nature, acceptait souvent sans difficulté et accueillait ses visiteurs, ne se doutant point que ceux-ci n'avaient apporté dans leurs malles que les fers avec lesquels ils allaient l'enchaîner au nom du colonialisme.

60. Le colonialisme ainsi installé en Afrique depuis près de 500 ans a modifié la physionomie de l'Afrique, le cours des choses, le caractère des hommes, en arrêtant la civilisation propre à ce continent. Depuis presque 500 ans, le régime colonial règne en Afrique et consiste en l'exploitation à outrance de l'homme par l'homme, entraînant la perte complète de la liberté, de la dignité, des droits et de la personnalité du colonisé. Dans les territoires sous domination étrangère, malgré le travail sans cesse accru, la misère va sans cesse grandissant parmi les populations colonisées. Et que de choses peut-être la civilisation des peuples tenus sous le joug colonial depuis des siècles aurait-elle réalisées si elle n'avait pas été arrêtée dans son évolution! Mais je ne voudrais pas m'étendre sur ce qu'est le colonialisme; j'ai dit que d'autres orateurs l'ont déjà dépeint sous tous ses aspects.

61. Dès la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, le réveil contre le colonialisme s'est produit partout, principalement dans les territoires où ce phénomène de domination existe. Toutes les consciences honnêtes se sont révoltées contre la domination des peuples et savent que la paix et la sécurité du monde dans lequel nous vivons sont fonction de la suppression complète de toute injustice et du rétablissement de la liberté et des droits des peuples, grands ou petits.

62. Les Etats qui s'étaient réunis à San Francisco, désirant bâtir un monde nouveau sur des bases solides de liberté et d'égalité des droits des peuples quels qu'ils soient, s'étaient inquiétés de l'exploitation à laquelle étaient soumis les peuples colonisés et qui était à leurs yeux un crime honteux. Ils préconisèrent la suppression de cette injustice. La Charte des Nations Unies, née de leur conférence, avait la première en date, dès la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, fait une obligation aux puissances coloniales de libérer les pays colonisés. L'Article 73 qui concerne les territoires non autonomes stipule:

"Les Membres des Nations Unies qui ont ou qui assument la responsabilité d'administrer des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes reconnaissent le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants de ces territoires. Ils acceptent comme une mission sacrée l'obligation de favoriser dans toute la mesure du possible leur prospérité, dans le cadre du système de paix et de sécurité internationales établi par la présente Charte et, à cette fin:

" ...

"b. De développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes ..."

Pour les territoires sous tutelle, l'Article 76 dit:

"b. Favoriser le progrès politique, économique et social des populations des territoires sous tutelle ainsi que le développement de leur instruction; favoriser également leur évolution progressive vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes ou l'indépendance ..."

Ce sont là des engagements que nous avons contractés en acceptant d'être Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

63. L'un des buts essentiels de la Conférence de Bandoung, à laquelle se trouvaient réunis en 1955 les Etats asiatiques et africains représentant les aspirations des pays colonisés, a été la condamnation du colonialisme. Le communiqué célèbre, devenu historique, sorti de cette conférence, soulignait l'accord des membres:

"a) Pour déclarer que le colonialisme, dans toutes ses manifestations, est un fléau qui doit cesser rapidement;

"b) Pour affirmer que la sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination ou à une exploitation étrangère, constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et empêche la promotion de la paix et de la coopération dans le monde".

Ils ont exprimé à Bandoung les aspirations de millions et de millions d'hommes, principalement de ceux qui sont encore dominés et qui désirent en terminer le plus rapidement possible avec le régime colonial avilissant. Le mouvement anticolonialiste soulevant une masse d'hommes toujours croissante, il y a eu récemment à Accra, à Monrovia et à Addis-Abéba d'autres conférences sur le colonialisme qui continue à salir notre siècle, le colonialisme qui doit absolument être aboli.

64. Le réveil des Africains et des Asiatiques et leur aspiration à la liberté ne peuvent plus être arrêtés sans créer des troubles graves pouvant menacer la paix et la sécurité du monde. Toutes les consciences expriment la nécessité de terminer rapidement le colonialisme et de restaurer la liberté et la dignité aux Africains, aux Asiatiques, à tous ceux que le régime d'exploitation a privés de la jouissance de leurs droits naturels. Les peuples colonisés ne veulent plus porter la chafne de l'esclavage. Ils ne veulent plus du travail forcé pour des maîtres. Ils ne veulent plus voir leurs continents soumis au pillage. Ils ne veulent plus être victimes de la discrimination de race. Ils ne veulent plus des emprisonnements arbitraires, des camps de concentration, des souffrances inutiles. Ils ne veulent plus de la famine et de l'ignorance. Ils veulent leur indépendance, leur liberté, leurs droits, leur dignité d'hommes. La force de leurs aspirations est si prodigieuse que toutes les mesures de répression viendront se briser contre elle.

65. L'octroi de l'indépendance, pour le plus grand bien de l'humanité, est une question urgente. Il ne s'agit pas ici de condamner purement et simplement le colonialisme, d'adopter le principe de l'octroi de l'indépendance. Il est de la plus haute importance de fixer aussi dès maintenant un calendrier de dates auxquelles l'indépendance sera donnée aux territoires colonisés; sans cela, les pays encore dans les fers auront à lutter encore très longtemps contre la puissance coloniale. Pour ne donner qu'un exemple, le Togo, mon pays, était, vous le savez, un territoire sous tutelle dont la date d'indépendance n'avait pas été fixée; le peuple togolais a dû lutter pendant 12 ans pour arracher cette indépendance tandis que dans le cas de la Somalie italienne, également ancien territoire sous tutelle, mais dont la date de libération avait été fixée, le peuple somali a attendu tranquillement que vienne son indépendance. Cette nécessité n'a pas échappé à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba. Permettez-moi de citer à ce sujet un paragraphe du dispositif de la résolution adoptée à cette conférence:

"Prie instamment les puissances coloniales de fixer des dates conformes à la volonté des peuples pour l'obtention immédiate de l'indépendance par tous les pays non indépendants et de communiquer ces dates aux populations intéressées."

66. Le mouvement de libération du joug colonial, qui a débuté dès la fin de la seconde guerre mondiale, a à son actif des victoires sensationnelles. La libération, d'abord, de l'Inde, du Ghana, de la Tunisie, du Maroc, de l'Indonésie, du Cambodge, de Ceylan, de la Guinée, de la Birmanie, etc.; ensuite, en cette année 1960, celle du Cameroun, du Togo, du Congo (Léopoldville), de la Somalie, du Dahomey, du Niger, de la Haute-Volta, de la Côte-d'Ivoire, du Congo (Brazzaville), du Gabon, du Tchad, de la République centrafricaine, de Chypre, de la Nigéria, du Sénégal, du Mali, de Madagascar, ont rendu à la liberté des millions et des millions d'hommes.

67. Mais le colonialisme, malgré ces coups mortels, n'est pas totalement abattu. Chancelant, il essaie à certains endroits de résister encore. C'est ainsi qu'en Afrique du Nord le sang coule depuis plus de six ans; en Afrique centrale, les populations sont soumises à des repréailles inhumaines; en Afrique du Sud, à la discrimination raciale. En d'autres endroits, le colonialisme cherche à se camoufler, à changer de nom. Forcé de lâcher sa proie, il essaie des subterfuges. C'est ainsi que certaines puissances, comme l'a souligné la délégation togolaise à la Quatrième Commission^{1/}, déclarent que les territoires non autonomes qui sont sous leur domination, bien qu'ethniquement, culturellement, économiquement et politiquement différents de leur métropole, en font cependant partie intégrante par le seul fait que le Parlement métropolitain a voté une loi en ce sens, remplaçant tout simplement le mot "colonie" par le mot "province", sans tenir compte de la volonté et des aspirations profondes des populations. D'autres puissances ont créé toute une série d'appellations pour leurs empires, pour calmer les agitations des peuples asservis, pour masquer les réalités que contient l'administration de leurs colonies.

68. Il faut en finir réellement une bonne fois pour toutes, pour l'amour de la paix, d'une paix durable. Il faut accorder l'indépendance réelle à tous les peuples. Nombreux sont encore les peuples qui réclament leur liberté. L'Afrique et l'Asie en sont les principaux réservoirs. Pour le seul continent africain, il faut liquider le colonialisme en Algérie, en Ouganda, au Kenya, en Rhodésie du Nord, en Rhodésie du Sud, au Nyassaland, dans le Sud-Ouest africain, au Ruanda-Urundi, en Angola, au Mozambique, en Guinée portugaise, en Guinée espagnole, etc. — pour n'en citer que quelques-uns.

69. C'est pour tous ces peuples souffrant dans toutes les parties du monde que nous allons à l'unanimité, dans cette salle de l'Assemblée générale, liquider le régime colonial. Déjà la délégation de l'Espagne a déclaré à la Quatrième Commission^{2/} que son pays est anticolonialiste et a toujours condamné et condamne toujours comme un phénomène anachronique le colonialisme et l'exploitation de tous les peuples. J'ai l'espoir de trouver, au moment du vote sur le projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] dont mon pays est coauteur, l'Espagne à côté des pays anticolonialistes pour abattre le colonialisme.

70. Nous, représentants de 99 nations, nous trouvons, à un moment historique, en face d'un problème humanitaire des plus touchants, sur lequel nous allons prendre une décision qui sera de la plus haute importance pour l'évolution des peuples du monde entier, présents et à venir, pour la sécurité et la paix sur notre planète. Le vote que nous allons émettre sera connu de la postérité qui nous remerciera d'avoir débarrassé le monde d'un fléau. Quant à nous, la conscience tranquille, nous aurons la satisfaction d'avoir contribué au triomphe de la justice, au relèvement de la dignité de l'homme, au rétablissement de l'égalité de droits entre tous les hommes, au maintien de la paix et de la grandeur de nos pays respectifs.

La séance est levée à 22 h 40.

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1227

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Avant d'appeler le premier orateur inscrit pour la séance de cet après-midi, je donne la parole au représentant du Honduras pour lui permettre d'exercer son droit de réponse.

2. M. MILLA BERMUDEZ (Honduras) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Je voudrais mettre à profit l'occasion qui m'est offerte d'exercer mon droit de réponse pour fournir des précisions qui m'ont été demandées sur certains aspects du projet de résolution du Honduras [A/L.324].

3. En premier lieu, je tiens à souligner que la proposition du Honduras ne saurait en aucune manière se substituer au projet de résolution africano-asiatique. Elle en est, au contraire, un complément que nous considérons comme nécessaire pour assurer l'application des dispositions du projet de résolution africano-asiatique [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5]; d'ailleurs, ma délégation votera pour ce projet de résolution. Dans ces conditions, la proposition du Honduras a pour unique objet de contribuer à la mise en œuvre et à l'application du projet africano-asiatique. En d'autres termes, nous nous proposons d'établir un lien légitime entre ces questions. Je tiens aussi à établir de façon parfaitement claire que la position du Honduras à cet égard est, comme toujours, au-dessus de tout soupçon et que nous ne nous prêterons jamais à des manœuvres, de quelque côté qu'elles viennent.

4. En second lieu, on m'a fait observer que dans la composition de la commission, telle qu'elle est envisagée, la participation d'un pays de l'Europe de l'Est n'est pas prévue. Je ne suis pas de cet avis. La proposition mentionne que deux représentants de puissances administrantes pourront faire partie de la commission. Dans ces conditions, il est inexact de dire que la proposition du Honduras est inacceptable parce qu'elle exclut la participation d'une région, car personne ne s'oppose à ce que l'Union soviétique fasse partie de la commission en tant que puissance administrante.

5. En troisième lieu, on m'a demandé de définir ce que j'entendais par "colonies" ou de quelles colonies je voulais parler. C'est là une question très délicate, car il existe des différends et controverses dont l'Assemblée est saisie en ce moment et qui n'ont pu être réglés au cours des années précédentes — sur l'Algérie, par exemple. Nous savons tous quelles sont les colonies qui existent encore dans le monde. Pourtant si, en raison des artifices de la dialectique ou des interprétations de la jurisprudence internationale, ou encore de la lutte qui oppose deux mondes et de la guerre froide, on n'a pas encore pu parvenir à un accord sur ces questions, la délégation du Honduras serait malvenue d'offrir la panacée, la solution définitive ou la définition idéale des territoires qui sont des colonies. On n'a pas non plus réussi à définir ici de façon concrète ce qu'est l'agression. Cependant, si l'on insiste beaucoup sur ce point, nous proposerions la définition suivante: on entend par colonies toutes les communautés ou populations qui ne se gouvernent pas elles-mêmes ou qui ne sont pas en mesure d'élire leurs dirigeants par des moyens démocratiques.

6. En quatrième lieu, on nous a dit que la commission proposée par le Honduras ne résoudrait rien et ne ferait que retarder le règlement de la question. Ce n'est pas notre avis. La commission peut accomplir du bon travail; elle peut tracer la carte et l'itinéraire des pays qui aspirent encore à l'indépendance. En outre, l'argument selon lequel les missions de visite ne seraient pas admises à pénétrer dans certains territoires n'est pas suffisant pour qu'on rejette le projet, car ce n'est pas là un fait nouveau dans l'Organisation. Il y a déjà quatre ans qu'a été créé le Comité spécial pour la question de Hongrie et sir Leslie Munro, ancien président de l'Assemblée, vient de nous présenter un nouveau rapport [A/4606] sans pourtant s'être jamais rendu en Hongrie.

7. En résumé, je répète que le projet présenté par le Honduras complète le projet africano-asiatique et lui donne les moyens de mener à terme le processus d'émancipation.

8. M. WADSWORTH (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Depuis sa création, l'Organisation des Nations Unies s'est beaucoup occupée des progrès des peuples non autonomes dans la voie de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance. Près de 800 millions de personnes ont bénéficié de ce progrès qui est devenu le plus puissant courant de libération politique que l'histoire ait connu.

9. Cette année, marquée par l'admission au sein de notre assemblée de 17 nations nouvellement créées, le mouvement d'indépendance a atteint son ampleur maximum. Il est bon, par conséquent, qu'en présence d'un si grand nombre de nations ayant accédé à l'indépendance récemment, l'Assemblée examine au cours de cette session l'avenir de ce mouvement colossal. Le mouvement lui-même est naturel, juste et irrésistible. Il est déterminé par des forces historiques irréversibles plus que par ce que nous pouvons dire ici. Pourtant, il semble raisonnable d'espérer que nos délibérations pourront contribuer à l'accélérer et à le rendre en même temps plus ordonné, plus pacifique et plus équitable dans l'intérêt des dizaines de millions de personnes dont l'avenir est lié à ce mouvement.

10. Aucun peuple n'appuie avec plus de vigueur et plus de fierté que le peuple des Etats-Unis les notions de liberté et d'indépendance nationale. Toutes les délégations présentes ici connaissent les antécédents historiques qui ont incité les créateurs de mon pays à préparer et à appliquer la célèbre Déclaration d'indépendance que nous commémorons le 4 juillet de chaque année. Après 150 ans de régime colonial, lorsque le développement économique et social des premières colonies eut atteint un degré tel qu'elles pouvaient subvenir à leurs propres besoins et que les mesures de répression eurent pris un caractère qui les rendaient intolérables, nos chefs proclamèrent cette déclaration immortelle. Par cette déclaration, ils donnaient naissance à une nation nouvelle, fondée sur certaines vérités qu'ils tenaient pour évidentes par elles-mêmes, à savoir que "tous les hommes sont créés égaux; ils sont doués par le Créateur de certains droits inaliénables; parmi ces droits se trouvent la vie, la liberté et la recherche du bonheur. Les gouvernements sont établis par les hommes pour garantir ces droits, et leur juste pouvoir émane du consentement des gouvernés".

11. Ceux qui ont créé notre pays ont déclaré, et nous continuons à considérer cette affirmation comme valable, que ces vérités n'étaient pas l'apanage d'une race ou d'une nation particulière, mais celui de tous les hommes. Les faits ont montré qu'il en est effectivement ainsi, car l'influence de cette déclaration s'est manifestée dans le monde entier et s'y manifeste encore de nos jours.

12. Le peuple américain a donc toujours éprouvé le sentiment que la liberté et l'indépendance figurent parmi les droits fondamentaux naturels de tous les peuples et de toutes les nations. L'opinion publique dans mon pays n'a manifesté aucun désir de domination des autres nations et ne s'est guère passionnée pour les aventures coloniales, qu'il s'agisse de notre pays ou de pays étrangers. Lorsqu'une ancienne colonie devient une nation nouvelle, nous nous rappelons instinctivement nos origines et notre réaction est celle d'une joie sincère.

13. Dans ce débat, consacré à un sujet qu'un si grand nombre de nations connaissent bien mieux que nous, il serait vain que les Etats-Unis sermonnent l'une ou l'autre. Nous ne chercherons pas non plus à exacerber les passions par des accusations sordides. L'avenir nous intéresse plus que le passé. Nous sommes convaincus que le progrès rapide du mouvement d'indépendance est essentiel au maintien de la paix, et nous nous efforcerons, dans notre déclaration, de présenter certains des principes généraux qui doivent régir ce progrès.

14. Dès sa fondation même, l'Organisation des Nations Unies a considéré les gouvernements coloniaux, qui existaient alors de longue date et dont l'autorité s'étendait sur une grande partie du globe, non comme une source de bénéfice pour la puissance gouvernante mais bien plutôt comme une "mission sacrée" et comme un moyen d'assurer le progrès des peuples non autonomes. Ceci est énoncé sans ambiguïté dans l'Article 73 de la Charte qui figure au Chapitre XI, intitulé "Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes". Cet article ne laisse aucun doute sur le fait que les puissances administrantes ont assumé une responsabilité à l'égard de la communauté des nations; que les intérêts des populations autochtones viennent au premier rang et que parmi ces intérêts figure notamment l'évolution vers l'autonomie et la mise en place d'institutions libres ainsi que la réalisation de leurs "aspirations politiques", ce qui, dans la plupart des cas, signifie l'indépendance. Le même article affirme aussi sans ambiguïté que le rythme de ce progrès ainsi que les méthodes à employer doivent tenir compte des "conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations" et de "leurs degrés variables de développement".

15. Depuis 15 ans que l'Organisation des Nations Unies existe, l'Article 73 a été appliqué plus rapidement et sur une plus grande échelle que toute autre disposition de la Charte. Depuis 1946, environ 34 pays, représentant plus de 775 millions d'habitants, ont accédé à l'indépendance. Presque tous sont Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et ont des représentants dans cette salle. Pour l'Afrique seule, on ne compte pas moins de 21 Etats qui ont connu cette transition et les deux tiers de l'Afrique sont maintenant libres et indépendants. En outre, comme le représentant du Royaume-Uni nous l'a rappelé dans la déclaration qu'il a faite au début de ce débat [925^{ème} séance], d'autres Etats encore accèderont à l'indépendance dans les années qui viennent.

16. Ce succès a donné une impulsion puissante à la campagne en faveur de l'indépendance et de la pleine autonomie dans d'autres pays qui, à l'heure actuelle, sont encore des pays non autonomes et qui ont conscience d'appartenir au même grand courant de l'histoire. Il est naturel et normal qu'il en soit ainsi. La présence même, parmi nous, d'un nombre sensiblement plus grand de nations nouvelles, toutes libres d'exprimer leurs opinions comme elles l'entendent, donne à cette question un caractère d'urgence nouveau.

17. Il est juste aussi que, dans le cadre des dispositions de la Charte dont je viens de parler, nous nous efforcions de formuler l'opinion de l'ensemble des membres de l'Assemblée générale dans une déclaration nouvelle, conforme à la situation qui existe en 1960. Nul d'entre nous n'est mieux qualifié pour cette tâche que les nations d'Afrique et d'Asie qui connaissent cette question par expérience directe et qui sont les auteurs du projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] dont l'Assemblée est saisie. Les Etats-Unis souhaitent être en mesure de donner leur appui à cette déclaration. Nous espérons que toute question de libellé qui se pose encore pourra être réglée. Nous applaudissons à l'initiative de ces nations ainsi qu'à l'esprit qui les anime.

18. Au cours de mon exposé, au lieu d'analyser en détail le projet de résolution, je m'efforcerai de définir dans ses grandes lignes le point de vue des Etats-Unis.

19. Qu'il me soit permis d'expliquer d'abord ce que nous entendons par "colonialisme". Il n'est pas nécessaire de donner de ce terme une définition officielle. Toutefois, l'histoire nous a appris certaines des caractéristiques du colonialisme. C'est le fait pour un peuple de se voir imposer une puissance étrangère, en général de vive force et sans le consentement officiel et librement accordé des populations gouvernées. C'est la perpétuation de cette puissance. C'est le fait de dénier le droit à l'autodétermination, soit en supprimant la liberté d'expression, soit en refusant les possibilités de développement de l'instruction et de progrès économique et social. Il est évident que tous les régimes coloniaux n'ont pas été identiques. Certains ont été bienveillants et ont dépensé des sommes considérables à l'intention de la population autochtone; d'autres ont été caractérisés par leur brutalité et leurs méthodes répressives. Certains ont compris que le progrès des populations autochtones vers l'autonomie complète et l'autodétermination était juste et inévitable et ils ont modelé leur politique en conséquence; d'autres ne l'ont pas fait. Toutefois, si importantes que soient ces différences, il n'en demeure pas moins que le colonialisme, quelque forme qu'il revête, n'est pas souhaitable. Ni le paternalisme le plus bienveillant dont puisse faire preuve la puissance dominatrice, ni l'acceptation la plus reconnaissante des avantages de ce paternalisme par les chefs autochtones ne peuvent répondre aux critères de la Charte ou satisfaire à l'esprit de notre époque. En réalité, le seul régime colonial qui puisse satisfaire à ces critères est celui qui s'emploie avec énergie à remettre le plein exercice du pouvoir à la population autochtone et qui, donc, cherche à consacrer le plus rapidement possible sa propre disparition. Ce critère a été satisfait à maintes reprises. Les vastes régions qui, du temps des générations passées, constituaient les possessions d'outre-mer des nations occidentales, ont été transformées grâce aux efforts conjugués des puissances administrantes et des populations administrées, et, de nos jours, l'achèvement de cette ère du colonialisme traditionnel est devenu chose certaine. En dépit de certaines frictions inévitables et de quelques exemples tragiques de recours à la violence, cette transformation historique s'est faite dans une large mesure par des moyens pacifiques; c'est aux hommes d'Etat et aux chefs de l'une et l'autre partie qu'il faut être reconnaissants de cette heureuse issue.

20. Les Etats-Unis espèrent avec ferveur que la disparition complète de l'ère colonialiste se fera dans des conditions encore plus pacifiques et plus harmonieuses. Il est manifestement de l'intérêt futur de tous qu'il en soit ainsi. Nous ne pouvons nous empêcher de faire observer que certains orateurs qui ont joué dans ce débat un rôle de premier plan, qui affirment être tous libres et indépendants et n'avoir aucune colonie, ont dépassé de loin tous les autres orateurs par la violence de leurs propos. Ils donnent l'impression qu'ils préféreraient, pour des raisons qu'eux seuls connaissent, voir les régimes coloniaux dont ils parlent disparaître dans la violence en suscitant de part et d'autre le maximum de haine et de rancœur.

21. Nous pourrions maintenant décrire à ce stade — si, ce faisant, nous pouvions alléger la souffrance de certains peuples — un nouveau régime colonial qui ne s'étend pas sur les océans, mais qui, autant que tout autre régime colonial antérieur, constitue une parfaite violation des droits de l'homme. Ce régime colonial a été imposé par la force à de nombreux peuples appartenant à des races différentes et qui souvent, pendant des siècles, avaient constitué des Etats libres et indépendants et avaient été membres de la Société des Nations. Certains d'entre eux ont perdu leur indépendance même officiellement, tous l'ont perdu en fait. Ce régime tout entier est protégé par la censure, par un contrôle impitoyable de la pensée et par un emploi abusif, poussé à l'extrême, de termes tels que "démocratie" et "autonome".

Pourtant, la tragique réalité de son existence est attestée par les millions de personnes qui l'ont fui et par les dizaines de milliers qui ont donné leur vie en cherchant vainement à se libérer de son emprise.

22. Tel est le colonialisme nouveau. Au cours des années mêmes pendant lesquelles le colonialisme ancien était transformé par le mouvement d'indépendance, ce colonialisme nouveau s'étendait à d'autres nations. A l'heure actuelle, il constitue le plus vaste empire colonial du monde et, pourtant, il cherche à s'étendre encore sous de faux prétextes de "libération". Heureusement, sa propagation a été tenue en échec par la faculté de plus en plus développée des peuples libres de distinguer la réalité à travers les apparences. Nous sommes convaincus que ce nouveau régime colonial s'éteindra lui aussi; nous espérons qu'il disparaîtra dans la paix et nous prions pour qu'il en soit ainsi. Son heure n'est peut-être pas encore venue, mais elle viendra. Entre-temps, lorsque nous entendons les adeptes de ce nouveau colonialisme lancer leurs foudres contre le régime colonialiste ancien, nous sommes tentés de leur rappeler que "les actes parlent plus haut que les discours".

23. Les ardents zélateurs de cette forme nouvelle et mortelle du colonialisme nous ont révélé, dimanche dernier, les caractères véritables de leur nature cynique et hypocrite qu'ils dissimulent sous une fausse croisade en faveur d'un mouvement de libération et sous des flots de paroles et de slogans dans lesquels il proclament la fin de l'oppression coloniale et l'indépendance pour tous les peuples du monde. Je sais qu'il n'est pas nécessaire de vous rappeler que c'est l'Union soviétique qui, dimanche matin au Conseil de sécurité^{1/}, a opposé son veto à l'adoption d'un projet de résolution proposant l'admission au sein de l'Organisation de la République islamique de Mauritanie devenue récemment libre et indépendante. Ce veto, qui n'était en fait qu'une tentative flagrante de chantage auprès du Conseil de sécurité afin qu'il accepte un marchandage, a effectivement empêché la Mauritanie de devenir Membre de plein droit et d'exercer ses droits au sein de la communauté des nations. Je vous demande de bien vouloir méditer les conséquences de cette décision prise dimanche matin par l'Union soviétique. Réfléchissez plus particulièrement à ce veto opposé à l'admission d'un Etat souverain à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, alors que le représentant de l'Union soviétique prend ensuite la parole avec une éloquence creuse pour se faire le champion de l'indépendance et de l'égalité des droits pour tous les peuples.

24. Je me suis permis de faire cette petite digression pour décrire le "nouveau régime colonial" afin que nous n'ayons garde d'oublier les nombreux millions d'êtres humains qui souffrent sous le joug de ce "nouveau colonialisme" et dont le sort ne sera pas examiné pour l'instant — selon la décision prise, à tort ou à raison, par la plupart des membres de l'Assemblée générale. En même temps, il convient, je crois, de rappeler — et nous ne saurions trop le souligner — que le projet de résolution dont nous sommes saisis dénonce à juste titre le colonialisme "dans toutes ses manifestations", comme l'avait déjà fait la déclaration historique qui a suivi la Conférence de Bandoung. Mais j'en reviens maintenant à l'ancien régime colonial. De l'avis de la délégation des Etats-Unis, certains points sont clairs.

25. Premièrement, la fin de l'ère coloniale est déjà bien avancée et sa disparition complète est certaine. Le sentiment de nationalisme est l'une des forces les plus puissantes et les plus irrésistibles des temps modernes. Il ne doit pas être étouffé ou supprimé — en fait, il ne saurait l'être. L'histoire moderne offre de nombreux exemples de nations qui ont fait l'objet de partages ou d'anéantissement complet et qui sont réapparues comme membres de la communauté des nations. Les représentants de certaines d'entre elles siègent aujourd'hui parmi nous, d'autres seront peut-être des nôtres demain. De toute façon, ceux qui, en vertu des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies, sont chargés d'administrer des territoires non autonomes doivent comprendre que leur tutelle ne peut tout au plus qu'être temporaire. En s'efforçant de la prolonger par des retards inutiles et en négligeant de se préparer avec toute la célérité possible à cette situation, on ne fera que contrecarrer ce qui est inévitable et faire naître une amertume qui subsistera bien longtemps après l'accession à l'indépendance.

26. En deuxième lieu, il ne suffit pas de liquider purement et simplement ce qui est périmé, il faut aussi prévoir judicieusement ce qu'on doit y substituer, et sur ce point les vœux des populations autochtones doivent avant tout être pris en considération. L'expérience montre que le choix du peuple se porte en général — mais ce n'est assurément pas toujours le cas — sur l'indépendance en tant qu'Etat distinct. C'est ainsi que, contrairement à l'impression laissée par la déclaration dont M. Zorine nous a donné lecture ici [925^{ème} séance], il y a quelques semaines, la population du Commonwealth de Porto Rico ne souhaite pas être indépendante à l'heure actuelle. Elle s'administre complètement elle-même et a librement choisi de s'associer aux Etats-Unis en tant qu'Etat libre associé autonome. Cette décision a été motivée par de puissantes raisons économiques, financières et autres. Le 8 novembre dernier, par voie d'élections librement organisées, elle a réélu au poste de gouverneur, à une majorité nette de 58 pour 100 des suffrages, M. Muñoz Marín qui est un fervent partisan de cette association et qui en est, en fait, l'un des principaux promoteurs. Il est peut-être tout aussi intéressant de signaler que 32 pour 100 des autres électeurs se sont prononcés pour la solution qui aurait fait de leur pays un Etat faisant intégralement partie des Etats-Unis; en d'autres termes, cela signifie que plus de 90 pour 100 des électeurs de Porto Rico sont partisans d'un statut d'Etat libre associé ou de liens permanents plus étroits avec les Etats-Unis. Il existe d'autres exemples de pays qui, au sortir de la domination coloniale, ont librement choisi de s'unir à un Etat voisin en une souveraineté unique. Des solutions de ce genre peuvent également paraître préférables à d'autres populations, en particulier à celles qui habitent de petites îles extrêmement dispersées. L'indépendance n'est donc que la solution la plus évidente entre bien d'autres possibles. L'essentiel est que ce soient les populations qui choisissent.

27. Le troisième point dont je veux parler concerne ce principe du choix laissé aux populations. L'épreuve déterminante pour l'autorité chargée de l'administration de tout territoire qui n'a pas encore accédé à l'indépendance consiste à consulter librement la population, par voie d'élections librement organisées ou par tout autre moyen également valable d'autodétermination. Cela implique bien autre chose qu'une cérémonie au cours de laquelle les populations sont autorisées à ratifier une décision unique, déterminée à l'avance. C'est en effet un choix réel entre diverses solutions possibles. Telle est l'essence du principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, qui est l'un des buts des Nations Unies. Il est oiseux de prétendre que les populations peuvent prendre une mauvaise décision, ou une décision qui peut se révéler néfaste pour elles. Un jour ou l'autre, et le plus tôt sera le mieux, l'autorité chargée de l'administration devra se fier à la sagesse des populations et leur laisser le choix de leur destinée. Cela s'est fait avec succès si souvent qu'on ne saurait nier la validité de ce procédé dans la pratique. Il faut donc recourir plus largement aux consultations électorales libres afin que partout les populations soient libres de choisir leur propre destinée.

28. J'en viens maintenant à la question du choix du moment favorable. Dans quels délais les populations encore non autonomes accèderont-elles à l'indépendance ou se verront-elles offrir la possibilité de décider de leur avenir? Les Etats-Unis pensent qu'il faut prendre immédiatement des mesures pour assurer l'autonomie ou l'indépendance. Dans bien des cas, le processus a atteint déjà un stade très avancé. Lorsque ce n'est pas le cas, il n'y a pas de temps à perdre. Il est incontestable qu'aucune autorité administrante ne devrait continuer à imposer un statut ou des relations coloniales un jour de plus qu'il n'est nécessaire pour permettre à chaque territoire de se diriger lui-même dans les conditions si difficiles que traverse le monde moderne. En outre, l'élaboration d'un programme d'accession à l'indépendance ne devrait pas être arbitraire, mais représenter le résultat de consultations constantes avec les populations autochtones et avec ses chefs. La Charte établit clairement, dans la Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes, que le développement progressif des libres institutions politiques doit s'effectuer dans la mesure appropriée "aux conditions particulières de chaque territoire et de ses populations et à leurs degrés variables de développement" [Art. 73, alin. b]. En souscrivant aux dispositions de la Charte, tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont accepté ce principe dont l'expérience a pleinement démontré le bien-fondé. Pour que l'indépendance soit réelle et non pas de pure forme, elle doit s'accompagner d'un certain développement et d'une certaine stabilité dans les domaines économique, social et politique. Même dans une seule et même région, il peut exister d'importantes différences à cet égard. C'est ainsi que le Territoire sous tutelle du Samoa-Occidental, qui décidera bientôt de son avenir par voie de plébiscite, a une population très évoluée lorsqu'on la compare à celle du Territoire sous tutelle de la Nouvelle-Guinée dont de vastes régions sont encore inexplorées et restent inconnues du monde extérieur. Ainsi donc, traiter ces deux territoires comme s'ils se trouvaient à des stades comparables de développement n'offrirait à aucun des deux ce que la Charte leur garantit, à savoir un traitement équitable et une protection contre les abus.

29. Nous pouvons résumer comme suit nos vues sur la question du moment à choisir pour l'accession à l'indépendance. Le bon sens, et les termes mêmes de la Charte, imposent inéluctablement une accession à l'indépendance — ou à tout autre statut définitif que la population peut choisir — obtenue par étapes progressives. Quelquefois, la route à parcourir est courte; dans d'autres cas, elle est encore longue et il est vain d'essayer de parcourir d'un seul bond une route encore longue. Faire passer une population du jour au lendemain de la domination coloniale à une indépendance de pure forme qu'elle n'est pas prête à défendre serait lui rendre un mauvais service. Il ne fait aucun doute que le résultat de cette transformation serait un effondrement dans le chaos et la violence qui permettrait peut-être à d'autres puissances plus fortes de placer ces populations sous un joug nouveau. Ce serait tomber de Charybde en Scylla.

30. Pourtant, aucune de ces raisons d'être prudent ne peut servir d'excuse pour retarder le travail urgent qui est à faire. Les autorités administrantes doivent consulter les populations pour établir des programmes d'évolution. Et chacune des mesures qui sont à prendre doivent l'être immédiatement. Les autorités administrantes et les populations doivent, les unes et les autres, se rendre compte qu'elles ont l'obligation urgente de hâter la venue du jour de la libération complète. Cette obligation nous est imposée par l'histoire et s'y dérober serait provoquer un conflit tragique et inutile.

31. Nous parlons ici d'un des grands mouvements de libération de l'histoire et de la création de nouvelles nations souveraines. Il est bon de rappeler quelle dette ce mouvement a déjà contractée envers les Nations Unies, dette qui ne fera que croître avec le temps. Non seulement l'Organisation des Nations Unies, dans le cadre de sa Charte, a porté un intérêt profond et positif au processus de libération lui-même, mais elle offre aussi — et, à la longue, cela pourrait se révéler un service plus grand encore — un lieu de réunion pour la communauté des nations. C'est en effet ici que les multiples nations indépendantes du monde, dans leur extrême variété et en dépit des nombreuses divergences qui les séparent, peuvent trouver le cadre robuste et solide qui leur permettra de coexister dans la paix.

32. L'intérêt inestimable que les Nations Unies présentent pour les nations nouvelles a été reconnu par le président Eisenhower lorsqu'il a proposé un programme des Nations Unies pour l'Afrique dans le discours qu'il a prononcé devant l'Assemblée générale le 22 septembre [868ème séance]. Dans le cadre de ce programme, on envisageait entre autres d'accroître l'importance du Programme élargi d'assistance technique et du Fonds spécial des Nations Unies; d'intensifier et de rendre permanent le programme des Nations Unies visant à mettre à la disposition des pays encore peu avancés dans leur développement un personnel d'exécution et de direction; d'obtenir de la Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement et du Fonds monétaire international qu'ils accordent à l'Afrique une attention particulière, et de mettre au point un nouveau programme d'enseignement relatif aux Nations Unies, afin que les peuples d'Afrique puissent acquérir plus rapidement les outils intellectuels qui leur permettront de sauvegarder et de développer leur liberté.

33. Nous développerons davantage ces propositions lorsque l'Assemblée examinera le point de l'ordre du jour proposé par la délégation des Etats-Unis, intitulé "Afrique: programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance et le développement" [point 88]. Nous serons particulièrement heureux de connaître le point de vue des Etats africains en ce qui concerne ce programme. Déjà c'est avec un intérêt tout particulier que nous avons entendu, au cours de la présente discussion, un certain nombre d'orateurs de pays africains exprimer le désir que l'aide destinée à l'Afrique soit fournie dans toute la mesure du possible par l'intermédiaire des Nations Unies. Nous approuvons sans réserve ce point de vue.

34. En prenant des mesures de ce genre, nous nous engagerons dans la voie qui correspond le mieux aux exigences du gouvernement des Etats, c'est-à-dire dans la voie qui raffermirait l'indépendance des nations et en même temps renforce les institutions internationales qui nous unissent les uns aux autres dans la paix. C'est seulement à partir de cette unité dans la diversité que peut s'organiser une communauté universelle pacifique. Et c'est seulement au sein d'une communauté semblable que la liberté peut s'établir et se maintenir solidement dans l'intérêt de tous les peuples du monde. Dans le discours qu'il a adressé à l'Assemblée générale, il y a quelque temps, le Président des Etats-Unis a décrit cet idéal en ces termes:

"Cette conception de l'unité dans la liberté, qui nous vient de la diversité de nombreuses races et de nombreuses cultures, nous aimerions la voir devenir une réalité pour toute l'humanité. Nous voudrions la voir appliquée à l'intérieur de chaque nation aussi bien qu'entre les nations. Nous croyons que le droit qu'a tout être humain de participer par son vote au gouvernement de son pays est aussi précieux que le droit de chaque nation représentée ici à voter en cette Assemblée selon ses propres convictions. J'aimerais voir un plébiscite universel dans lequel tous les hommes du monde auraient la possibilité de répondre librement et dans le secret à la question suivante: "Voulez-vous jouir de ce droit?" A l'opposé de l'idée de deux mondes hostiles, dressés l'un contre l'autre dans un conflit perpétuel, nous envisageons une unique communauté mondiale, qui n'existe pas encore, mais vers la réalisation de laquelle nous tendons sans trêve par nos plans, nos efforts et nos idées.

"Nous voyons ainsi comme notre but, non pas un super-Etat au-dessus des nations, mais une communauté mondiale les englobant toutes, fondée sur le droit et la justice et donnant pleine valeur à ce que chaque peuple peut réaliser et aux objectifs que tous les peuples visent ensemble." [868ème séance, par. 84 et 85].

35. Pénétrés de ces idéaux, nous nous réjouissons de voir l'ère colonialiste reculer dans l'histoire et une multitude de nations nouvelles prendre place dans la communauté libre. Que cette communauté se développe sans faiblir dans toute sa plénitude, qu'elle surmonte toutes les divisions fanatiques et toutes les vaines ambitions jusqu'au moment où elle s'étendra — comme elle ne peut manquer de le faire — à tous les membres de la famille de l'homme.

36. M. AMMOUN (Liban): Les Nations Unies écrivent, en ces jours mémorables, une grande page d'histoire, non point de l'histoire — que nous apprenions il n'y a pas longtemps — d'une nation, de ses rois, de ses guerres, mais de l'histoire universelle telle qu'elle doit être désormais enseignée: l'histoire de l'humanité, de son progrès, de ses réalisations. L'histoire de l'humanité est celle d'une libération continue: libération de la domination de l'homme par l'homme — qu'il s'agisse des individus, ou des collectivités et des peuples — c'est-à-dire de l'esclavage et du colonialisme.

37. Mais avant d'arriver à l'étape actuelle, que de maux infligés, que de sang et de larmes! Et aussi que de chutes et de reculs, et de durs recommencements! A chaque tournant de cette route douloureuse, un sommet lumineux émerge comme un mont Sinaï. Jadis, la grande invention phénicienne de l'alphabet, puis, plus près de nous, le papier importé de Chine en Europe par les Arabes; l'imprimerie, œuvre de Gutenberg; enfin, le journal, sont autant d'étapes de l'extension de la connaissance et de la libération de la pensée et, partant, de la libération de l'homme. L'éclosion de la démocratie en Grande-Bretagne et sa propagation dans le monde devaient être une des principales conséquences de cette libération, libération que consacrent aujourd'hui les principes démocratiques de la Charte des Nations Unies.

38. Aujourd'hui, l'asservissement de l'individu par l'esclavage touche à sa fin. Il n'a cependant pas complètement disparu. Des vestiges en subsistent dans la discrimination raciale, le servage, le travail forcé.

39. Jusqu'au début de l'ère chrétienne, ce n'était qu'une lutte sporadique contre ce mal endémique et des soulèvements vite réprimés. Un Spartacus était aux yeux de ses contemporains un révolté digne de châtiement, un révolté dressé contre ce qui fut une véritable institution, un détracteur de l'un des fondements de la civilisation de ce temps.

40. Avec l'avènement du christianisme, la légitimité de l'esclavage fut mise en doute. Aboli en Europe, il se maintint dans la Russie tsariste sous la forme atténuée du servage, en dépit de tentatives renouvelées de libération, à savoir les deux grandes révolutions aux Etats-Unis et en France et les déclarations des droits de l'homme qu'elles ont enfantées dans la douleur. Il fallut cependant un Abraham Lincoln et une guerre civile pour que l'esclavage fut déraciné d'Amérique, et l'Acte général de la Conférence anti-esclavagiste réunie à Bruxelles en 1890^{2/} pour qu'il fût également condamné en Asie et en Afrique. Les puissances qui avaient officiellement protégé la traite dans l'océan Atlantique se firent un devoir de la combattre dans les mers orientales. C'était une réparation due aux peuples qu'elles avaient opprimés. L'action des marines de guerre européennes contre les esclavagistes africains ne fut pas sans effet pour s'opposer enfin à cet atroce commerce auquel mit définitivement un terme la Convention relative à l'esclavage adoptée par la Société des Nations et signée à Genève le 25 septembre 1926^{3/}.

41. Mais, comme il a été rappelé, les vestiges de l'esclavage subsistent avec la discrimination raciale. Celle-ci sévit dans deux pays au moins: l'Union sud-africaine et Israël.

42. Il est temps, grand temps, que cessent ces pratiques inhumaines. Si la lutte contre la discrimination raciale aux Etats-Unis se poursuit avec succès quoique à pas lents, et bien plus dans les textes législatifs et les décisions des tribunaux que dans les mœurs et les réactions populaires, elle s'est révélée peu efficace jusqu'ici en Afrique du Sud, malgré l'intervention répétée des Nations Unies. La politique de l'"apartheid", plus d'une fois condamnée par cette organisation, demeure comme une plaie ouverte dans le flanc de l'humanité. Jusqu'à quand les Nations Unies admettront-elles cette offense à leurs principes les plus nobles et les plus élevés? Le projet de résolution qui nous est soumis [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] et sur lequel nous sommes appelés à voter condamne une fois pour toutes cette politique qui viole à la fois la loi morale et les enseignements de la religion, de toutes les religions. Le Gouvernement de l'Union sud-africaine refusera-t-il son vote à ce projet de résolution? L'occasion lui est donnée de reconsidérer cette politique aussi néfaste pour la collectivité qu'il défend que pour celle qui en est la pitoyable victime.

43. Quant à Israël, on a dénoncé plus d'une fois sa politique — politique d'Etat — dont la discrimination raciale est un des fondements essentiels. La constitution même d'Israël, Etat théocratique, est basée sur cette considération que seul le Juif est un véritable citoyen, le non-Juif n'étant qu'un sujet de seconde zone. La discrimination raciale est la conséquence de l'existence d'un Etat raciste. Elle y apparaît comme une institution même de l'Etat. Que ce soit sous la forme de la ségrégation imposée aux Arabes sous prétexte de sécurité nationale, ou d'inégalité devant l'Etat et les pouvoirs publics, elle constitue une des lois fondamentales de l'Etat. La réprobation qu'a encourue l'Union sud-africaine est encore plus méritée par Israël. Jusqu'à quand fermera-t-on les yeux sur cette anomalie, sur cette monstruosité: la politique raciste de cet Etat anachronique et celle du sionisme qui l'alimente?

44. L'esclavage sous toutes ses formes (comme le disait déjà la Société des Nations), sous ses visages les plus divers et avec ses vestiges hideux, doit céder définitivement devant l'égalité réelle entre les hommes de toutes races et de toutes couleurs et le respect, en la personne de chacun, de la dignité de l'homme.

45. Mais avant même de voter pour le projet de résolution qui condamne la discrimination raciale, nous voulons nous persuader que ce texte ne restera pas lettre morte comme tant d'autres résolutions des Nations Unies. Le peuple qui viole par ses agissements les principes de la Charte ainsi que les dispositions de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, qu'il s'agisse d'Israël ou de tout autre pays, doit désormais encourir, non seulement la sanction morale qu'est la réprobation des Nations Unies, mais les sanctions légales attachées à la violation des règles de vie des peuples et des hommes. Le monde, qui a vu l'avènement de tant de peuples à l'indépendance, verra dans un avenir que nous voulons proche l'avènement de la loi et de la justice universelles s'imposant à tous.

46. Un dernier mot avant de passer de la discrimination raciale, qui affecte l'individu, au colonialisme qui subjugue les peuples. Nous voulons espérer, pour le bien commun, que la discrimination raciale ne resuscitera pas dans le comportement des peuples nouvellement émancipés, ou qui le seront bientôt, envers leurs anciens maîtres. Nous conjurons ces peuples qui ont souffert de s'élever au-dessus de la rancune et de la vengeance. Il y va de leur propre intérêt, que peut seule réaliser une coopération d'égal à égal, dans une atmosphère de confiance mutuelle, entre tous les peuples et tous les hommes.

47. L'émancipation des peuples, dit le projet de résolution qui nous est soumis, est un mouvement irréversible de l'humanité. La morale internationale, quoi qu'on ait dit, triomphe. Ce sera une des plus grandes réalisations de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, sinon la plus grande, que d'avoir participé à cette rénovation du monde en aidant tous les peuples encore subjugués dans la lutte pour l'indépendance. Ce que la Société des Nations a fait pour libérer l'individu de l'esclavage, les Nations Unies sont en voie de le réaliser dans le dessein de dégager tous les peuples des liens de la servitude.

48. Nous ne voulons pas dénier aux puissances coloniales, du moins à certaines d'entre elles, le mérite d'avoir compris ce mouvement, de s'être élevées au niveau de cette morale, cédant à la pression des peuples épris de liberté. Le Royaume-Uni, la France et l'Italie ont déjà, pendant les deux dernières décennies, tranché les liens de sujétion imposés à plus de 30 nations comptant plus d'un milliard d'âmes. Cette Organisation et ces puissances sont aujourd'hui instamment sollicitées d'étendre à tous les peuples de la terre — en quelque continent qu'ils se trouvent, qu'ils soient noirs ou blancs — les bienfaits de la liberté et de la dignité. Qu'elles mettent fin sans tarder à l'effusion de sang dans les pays où la lutte se poursuit. Que les territoires enlevés à des nations souveraines leur soient restitués. Car il reste des lambeaux de leurs corps, en Asie et en Afrique, aux mains des puissances ou des forces occupantes.

49. Mention spéciale doit être faite d'une terre, saine entre toutes, qu'un colonialisme rapace, le sionisme, a usurpé et occupe, déflant les lois humaines et, j'ajoute, les lois divines, puisqu'il s'agit des Lieux saints et de la Ville sainte. Alors que le monde entier reconnaît que l'ère des conquêtes et du colonialisme est révolue, et que des dizaines de nations lèvent la tête et s'avancent vers la liberté et la lumière, le sionisme colonialiste s'attache éperdument aux prétendus droits de la conquête pour déposséder un peuple de sa patrie ancestrale et la coloniser. La Palestine, ou pays de Chanaan, n'était pas un Sahara, un désert inhabité. C'était, aux termes de la Bible, une terre où coulaient le lait et le miel. Les grappes de raisins étonnaient les nomades israéliens. Conquête au temps d'un Josué; conquête 3.000 ans après avec des procédés non moins cruels, sous les yeux de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, en dépit et en violation de ses principes et de ses résolutions les plus solennelles. Si Israël, au mépris de la logique et de l'honnêteté, couvre ce colonialisme nouveau du voile des principes de liberté, les Nations Unies doivent être conséquentes avec elles-mêmes et déceler l'imposture, en démasquant et en pourchassant le colonialisme partout où il cherche à se maintenir ou à se réinstaller. En occupant une partie de la Palestine arabe, le sionisme a violé à la fois la souveraineté d'un peuple rejeté hors de ses foyers et l'intégrité de son territoire national. En prétendant revendiquer un droit, il viole impunément la simple bonne foi.

50. Les puissances coloniales ont sans aucun doute étendu leur culture aux pays colonisés dans une mesure plus ou moins large. Cette expansion culturelle a parfois été accompagnée de violence. Culture plus ou moins imposée plutôt qu'acceptée. Peut-être que, sans cette culture et sans ces violences, les pays colonisés ne se seraient pas si vite éveillés à l'indépendance et à la liberté. Il en a été ainsi aux différentes époques de l'histoire. Dans l'Antiquité, comme au Moyen Age, comme dans les temps modernes, les courants de culture traversant le monde — tantôt d'Orient en Occident, et tantôt d'Occident en Orient — n'ont pas toujours été des courants pacifiques. Bien loin de là. Mais il n'en est plus de même de nos jours. Le livre peut se passer de l'épée ou du fusil. Le développement économique ne doit plus, non plus, être une exploitation, comme il l'a souvent été dans les temps passés, à toutes les époques et sous tous les cieux: exploitation des ressources naturelles aussi bien que des hommes.

51. Notre époque est celle de la coopération entre des peuples et des hommes libres et égaux. Bien plus, c'est celle de la solidarité humaine, de l'association et de l'entraide. Cette entraide s'impose d'autant plus que la justice — justice économique et sociale — n'a pas toujours présidé, dans le passé, aux relations entre les nations. Le développement économique et technique des uns a eu lieu parfois au détriment des autres.

52. Le projet d'aide aux pays africains ayant accédé à l'indépendance, présenté par les Etats-Unis [868ème séance], vient à son heure. Il procède de cet esprit nouveau. Il sera le bienvenu comme le sera aussi toute assistance que les pays de l'Europe occidentale se proposent d'accorder aux Etats qu'ils administrent. Il en sera de même de la détermination de l'Union soviétique, exprimée à la Deuxième Commission^{4/}, d'augmenter sa contribution au programme d'assistance aux Etats nouvellement indépendants.

53. Cette aide a déjà fait l'objet de deux projets de résolution importants de la Deuxième Commission: le projet concernant l'assistance aux nouveaux pays indépendants [A/4649, projet de résolution I] et le projet relatif à l'action concertée en vue du développement économique de tous les peuples [A/4648, projet de résolution I]. Ces deux projets de résolution soulignent le devoir des Nations Unies de favoriser le progrès économique et social de tous les peuples insuffisamment développés. Elles complètent le projet de résolution qui vous est soumis. Elles constituent la charte économique d'un monde nouveau où tous les peuples doivent collaborer.

54. Si cette assistance est conditionnée par le respect de l'indépendance et de la souveraineté des jeunes Etats, comme l'exige le projet de résolution relatif à l'action concertée en vue du développement économique, si les Etats qui en bénéficient sont laissés en dehors des conflits et des compétitions des grandes puissances, afin qu'ils achèvent leur développement dans la paix et la tranquillité, une contribution efficace aura été apportée au progrès humain et à l'harmonie universelle du monde. N'y voyons pas une vision ou une spéculation de l'esprit. Ce sera la réalité de notre temps et des années à venir, imposée par la succession des événements et le cours de l'histoire. Les Nations Unies y mettront le sceau en adoptant le projet de résolution présenté par 42 Etats [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5]. Cette résolution sera la charte nouvelle de la liberté des peuples et de la dignité de l'homme.

^{4/} Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Deuxième Commission, 698ème séance.

M. Nesbitt (Canada), vice-président, prend la présidence.

55. M. VELASQUEZ (Uruguay) [traduit de l'espagnol]: En participant à ce débat, la délégation de l'Uruguay est parfaitement consciente de l'importance de la question dont l'Assemblée est saisie.

56. Il existe encore en Asie, en Afrique, et même dans notre Amérique, bien des millions d'êtres humains pour lesquels les paroles que nous prononçons ici ont une signification toute spéciale. Il existe bien des millions d'êtres humains qui, à l'heure actuelle, tournent leurs regards vers les Nations Unies et qui attendent de nous une parole d'encouragement dans leur lutte, une parole qui leur permette de mieux supporter leurs épreuves incessantes, une parole d'espérance dans leurs moments de désespoir.

57. Ces circonstances confèrent à ce débat un caractère particulier de gravité et nous font un devoir d'aborder la question avec l'intention sincère de ne nous préoccuper que des objectifs que nous avons en vue. Nous ne voulons pas que ce débat serve d'arme dans une guerre froide et encore moins d'instrument de propagande en faveur d'une idéologie qui s'est révélée comme n'étant elle-même qu'une version moderne du colonialisme, d'un colonialisme implacable, strict et inhumain. C'est pourquoi ma délégation se plaît à reconnaître la mesure et la pondération qui ont caractérisé les interventions d'un grand nombre de représentants de pays qui, ces derniers temps, ont combattu si ardemment le régime colonial. Les peuples d'Asie et d'Afrique, plus directement touchés que nous par ce qui se dit et se fait au sein de cette assemblée, ont su faire preuve d'une sagesse admirable. Nous accueillons ce fait comme un présage de bon augure pour l'avenir des Nations Unies.

58. L'Uruguay, comme ses peuples frères de l'Amérique espagnole et de l'Amérique latine, peut à un titre tout à fait spécial intervenir dans ce débat. En effet, nous avons, comme nos frères, acquis notre indépendance au prix de lourds sacrifices. En Amérique du Sud, la guerre d'indépendance a duré 14 ans et même après la bataille d'Ayacucho qui scella définitivement la destinée de l'Amérique, nous avons dû poursuivre le combat pendant encore cinq années. Il faut dire qu'à cette époque l'Organisation des Nations Unies n'existait pas; il n'était question ni de Chapitre XI de la Charte, ni de régime de tutelle. La seule chose qui existait, c'était la volonté indomptable de parvenir à l'indépendance. Pour nous, l'indépendance n'a pas été un don; elle n'a pas été non plus la conséquence d'un acte de justice accompli par un tiers. L'indépendance a été l'exercice d'un droit, mais ce résultat n'a pu être atteint que dans le sacrifice et dans la douleur.

59. Il est vrai que les circonstances de cette époque n'avaient rien de commun avec celles qui devaient régner par la suite dans les pays exploités par le colonialisme caractéristique du XIX^e siècle. Ce serait faire preuve d'injustice et simplifier la réalité historique jusqu'à la déformer que de ne pas établir de distinction entre ce colonialisme contre lequel nous nous sommes insurgés et celui des temps récents, en particulier sous les aspects inhumains qui l'ont caractérisé, du moins jusqu'à la fin de la première guerre mondiale.

60. En ce qui nous concerne — et d'autres représentants de l'Amérique latine l'ont déjà souligné —, nous devons reconnaître que l'entreprise coloniale espagnole a eu lieu à une époque où l'on reconnaissait encore que certaines valeurs et certaines normes primaient la volonté capricieuse des hommes, à une époque où, avec toute la retenue qu'impliquait la tradition chrétienne, on se refusait à dissocier l'action politique de l'action morale et où l'homme conservait la responsabilité pleine et entière de chacun de ses actes.

61. Il se peut que l'Espagne ait commis bien des erreurs dans son empire d'Amérique. En effet, sa conception même de l'entreprise coloniale, considérée comme un effort gigantesque pour élever les pays conquis au niveau de ce qu'elle considérait comme une forme supérieure de morale et de vie, était peut-être erronée. Tout était peut-être erroné; néanmoins, en dépit de l'ardeur et de la passion que nous avons apporté à notre lutte pour l'indépendance, ces erreurs ne nous ont pas aveuglés au point de nous empêcher de comprendre la noblesse, la transcendance que comportait cette idée. En dépit de tous ses défauts et de toutes ses cruautés — cruautés qui paraissent aujourd'hui bien innocentes en comparaison des méthodes d'extermination collective qui ont été appliquées à notre siècle —, cette entreprise coloniale était imprégnée de l'esprit de civilisation. Ce furent les moralistes, les juristes et les théologiens espagnols qui proclamèrent à la face du monde que la justice était la source de tout droit et que, au-dessus de la volonté absolue du monarque, prédominaient la raison et la règle morale. Ce furent eux qui rédigèrent les pages admirables de ce code des Indes qui devait, durant trois siècles, régir la vie des communautés américaines.

62. C'est l'œuvre accomplie par l'Espagne en Amérique que vous avez aujourd'hui ici devant vous; nous sommes nous-mêmes la personnification de cette œuvre, nous-mêmes qui depuis un siècle et demi entretenons des relations avec la mère patrie sur un pied d'égalité, sans méfiance, sans suspicion, ni crainte. Même si notre présence n'était pas un témoignage suffisant de la pérennité de l'œuvre civilisatrice généreuse de l'Espagne, il resterait encore sur la terre d'Amérique et dans les veines de ses populations des témoignages abondants de cette œuvre civilisatrice à laquelle on pourrait à juste titre appliquer les vers suivants tirés d'un émouvant sonnet de Quevedo: "Ils abandonneront leur corps, mais jamais leurs soins; ils deviendront cendre, mais cette cendre aura un sens. Ils redeviendront poussière, mais une tendre poussière."

63. J'ai dit qu'il serait injuste de simplifier à l'excès la réalité historique en englobant sous une seule rubrique les divers aspects du colonialisme ou en leur appliquant une seule et même mesure. Pour être justes, nous devons maintenant reconnaître que c'est ce même Occident qui, en cette ère moderne, a de son propre choix tragiquement quitté la bonne voie. C'est en effet la pensée occidentale qui a mis en doute l'existence de ces valeurs supérieures et objectives de justice et de moralité qui pouvaient donner — et qui ont donné — un sens à l'entreprise colonisatrice espagnole. Ce scepticisme, dont l'origine historique est ancienne, portait en soi une force explosive redoutable. S'il n'existait pas d'autre droit que celui que le monarque imposait à la communauté; si c'était la volonté et non la raison qui était à la base de toute norme juridique; si, dans l'activité créatrice, cette volonté n'était pas inspirée par l'entendement de la nature objective des choses; si la force n'était pas mesurée et réglée par un droit supérieur — par ce droit qui, pour reprendre une expression admirable d'Antigone, l'héroïne de Sophocle, "n'est pas d'aujourd'hui ni d'hier, mais demeure éternellement et nul ne sait quand il est apparu" —, dès lors peut-il nous paraître étrange aujourd'hui que le crime soit récompensé et le délit glorifié? Si le bien et la justice ne sont pas en soi, par leur nature même, bons et justes mais s'ils en est ainsi parce qu'un gouvernement omniscient et omnipotent a voulu qu'il en soit ainsi, dès lors au nom de quelle logique incompréhensible notre conscience a-t-elle le droit de se révolter devant le spectacle quotidien de l'injustice et du désordre? Je ne sais s'il y eut alors beaucoup ou peu de personnes pour dénoncer le danger que cachait cette philosophie. Tout ce que je sais, c'est que nous avons aujourd'hui sous les yeux les fruits de cette philosophie: la fosse de Katyn, les chambres à gaz de Dachau, le nuage embrasé en forme de champignon au-dessus de Hiroshima, les millions d'êtres humains qui vivent encore dans la crainte, l'angoisse et l'esclavage.

64. C'est dans l'esprit de cette philosophie sceptique, et par là-même matérialiste, que fut engendré le colonialisme; celui-ci est né sous le signe de l'esprit de lucre; il est le fils légitime du capitalisme, lequel est responsable de la triste réalité des empires coloniaux, de l'exploitation des peuples, du mythe stupide de la supériorité raciale. C'est ce colonialisme calculateur, froid et insensible que nous allons condamner en cette assemblée, au nom de l'égalité essentielle des hommes et des peuples, au nom de la paternité commune du genre humain qui fait de celui-ci une seule communauté et une seule famille.

65. Il est évident que, pour être parfaitement justes — et, je le répète, nous avons entendu au cours de ce débat bien des discours empreints de bon sens et d'esprit de justice —, nous devons nous montrer extrêmement prudents lorsqu'il s'agit de juger ou de condamner telle ou telle situation coloniale concrète. Il n'est pas toujours facile de discerner exactement la responsabilité des puissances coloniales, il n'est pas non plus possible d'affirmer à priori que leurs gouvernements doivent, dans tous les cas, porter la responsabilité des actes de leurs ressortissants. Bien souvent, de nobles efforts entrepris pour orienter la politique sociale d'une façon plus rationnelle se heurtent à l'indifférence, aux préjugés et à l'égoïsme. En revanche — nous avons aussi le devoir de le dire —, tous les maux ne sont pas uniquement dus à l'oppression étrangère. Le colonialisme, pris au sens d'exploitation humaine, étant un état d'esprit, il existe aussi, à côté du colonialisme étranger, un colonialisme national. L'exploitation de nos peuples par certains ressortissants qui sont nos frères de race, par certains groupes qui sont insensibles aux exigences du bien commun, équivaut sur le plan moral à un recul aussi net que le colonialisme même; et — soit dit en passant — cette situation de privilège et d'injustice a toujours été l'alliée la plus efficace qu'aient pu trouver les intérêts étrangers pour asservir les peuples faibles et les petits pays.

66. Si donc l'indépendance et l'autonomie sont le premier objectif à atteindre dans ce processus de libération et de liquidation du colonialisme, elles ne constituent pas cependant une fin ultime en soi. Cette fin ultime, c'est l'indépendance prise au sens le plus large du terme, l'indépendance qui fait réellement de nous les maîtres de nos destinées, l'indépendance dans toutes les activités de la communauté politique à laquelle nous appartenons. Je suis prêt à reconnaître que l'indépendance politique est parfois la condition sine qua non pour conquérir toute autre indépendance, mais elle n'est pas suffisante à elle seule. Les peuples de l'Amérique latine le savent bien. Ils savent en effet — et l'expérience qu'ils ont acquise en la matière pourra peut-être avoir une certaine utilité dans ce débat — que l'indépendance politique et l'établissement de l'autonomie supposent une adaptation intelligente des formules juridiques aux réalités sociologiques qui caractérisent chaque pays. Parlant au nom d'un pays qui, comme les autres pays d'Amérique latine, a dû, par le passé, se débattre dans un conflit permanent entre des constitutions idéales et des constitutions réelles, entre des constitutions écrites et des constitutions inspirées de considérations sociologiques — conflit dont l'Uruguay est heureusement venu à bout depuis plus de 50 ans —, nous pouvons apprécier toute l'importance de cette question. Il est en effet indispensable que les formules selon lesquelles se développent les institutions libres s'adaptent non pas comme des costumes de confection mais comme des costumes sur mesure, aux réalités toujours complexes qu'il s'agira pour ces institutions de dominer. Chaque pays doit donc faire lui-même son expérience pour trouver les formules qui lui seront propres. Cependant, l'objectif doit rester le même, à savoir que ces institutions, à condition de respecter certains principes élémentaires tels que la souveraineté du peuple ou le respect des droits fondamentaux de l'homme qui sont toujours valables quelle que soit la situation considérée, devront s'adapter à la structure réelle de chaque pays. Autrement, l'indépendance conduit au chaos et du chaos on retourne au colonialisme ou à des formes bâtarde de gouvernement politique qui sont toujours, comme le montre l'expérience, utilisées par des intérêts totalement étrangers aux intérêts légitimes du pays.

67. Mais, en outre, il serait naïf de croire que l'indépendance politique peut se maintenir si les liens du colonialisme économique ne sont pas rompus. Je ne veux pas dire — telle n'est pas mon intention — que ces liens peuvent être rompus dès le lendemain du jour de l'émancipation. Nous savons trop bien que l'enchevêtrement complexe des intérêts qui, en un certain sens, emprisonnent le monde ne peut se rompre aussi facilement. Il se peut qu'une rupture brusque ne soit pas non plus ce que recommande la prudence politique, étant donné que nous faisons partie du monde; que nous le voulions ou non, nous devons donc tenir compte des réalités qui nous entourent. Ce qui importe, c'est que la lutte se poursuive inébranlablement et avec un patriotisme irréprochable. Il faut mettre fin au paradoxe de l'indépendance politique et de la dépendance économique. Alors que la fin du colonialisme est déjà un fait, nous devrions peut-être avoir pour préoccupation essentielle non pas tant d'adopter une déclaration qui, en fin de compte, ne fait que vérifier ce fait, mais plutôt de proclamer que le colonialisme ne sera pas véritablement liquidé tant que les peuples ne seront pas vraiment en mesure de disposer, en toute liberté et à leur convenance, des richesses et des ressources naturelles de leur pays à leur propre profit, tant que nous devrons nous résigner à n'être que de simples fournisseurs de matières premières destinées aux puissances industrielles, tant que nous ne bénéficierons pas d'un minimum d'autarcie qui, compte tenu de l'interdépendance naturelle des nations, est le signe le plus certain d'une indépendance authentique et totale.

68. En faisant preuve de compréhension devant ces vérités et en se montrant généreux, ceux qui, jusqu'à hier, étaient les maîtres de la destinée et de la richesse de vastes régions du monde — à des titres dont nous ne voulons plus parler maintenant — non seulement adopteront une attitude dictée par la morale, mais feront encore le seul geste dont dépende peut-être en dernier ressort le sort du monde libre. Chaque fois que ce monde libre entre en contradiction avec lui-même, chaque fois que l'Occident trahit les grands principes, les principes impérissables qui ont cimenté la grandeur de sa culture, il perd une bataille et chaque bataille perdue par l'Occident est une bataille perdue par l'homme car les valeurs de l'Occident — la liberté que nous a léguée la Grèce, le sens du droit et de l'ordre que nous a inculqué le génie romain et la grâce par laquelle le christianisme a transformé le sens temporel de notre vie — sont d'une façon ou d'une autre les valeurs de l'homme aujourd'hui menacées par l'athéisme et le totalitarisme. Si l'Occident comprend cela, il n'aura rien à craindre, quels que puissent être les triomphes apparents de l'adversaire. S'il ne comprend pas, c'est cette incompréhension, et non la guerre nucléaire, qui sera le véritable suicide de l'humanité.

69. M. MARTINO (Italie): Le problème de l'indépendance des territoires non autonomes et des peuples coloniaux a déjà fait, autrefois, l'objet d'un débat vif et plein de contrastes. Cela est tout à fait logique et ce n'est pas sans raison que cette organisation compte parmi ses buts principaux, depuis sa constitution, celui d'inciter et d'aider les Etats Membres à conduire les territoires qu'ils administrent et qui n'ont pas encore conquis leur indépendance à la réalisation progressive de la suprême aspiration des hommes.

70. La liberté des peuples est au centre des préoccupations du genre humain. Nous vivons dans une époque caractérisée par des transformations continues dans les rapports entre les peuples. Ces transformations sont en partie l'effet du progrès extraordinaire de la technique, mais ce n'est pas seulement la technique qui unit les pensées et les intérêts des hommes et qui, aujourd'hui, ne permet à aucun homme de vivre séparé des autres. La technique est une création de l'esprit humain et les inventions de celui-ci sont le fruit des idéaux. La technique ne saurait donc manquer d'obéir à des exigences morales et spirituelles.

71. Quels que soient les mobiles qui ont poussé un membre de cette assemblée à solliciter cette discussion, nous pensons qu'ils constituent une initiative utile. C'est là un témoignage de plus de l'importance que ce problème a prise et de l'urgence que présente la recherche d'une solution. Le présent, qui a ses racines dans le passé, est dominé par une force puissante et unificatrice. Nous nous acheminons vers l'unité.

72. L'Italie est convaincue que, grâce à ses expériences récentes, à sa conscience des problèmes actuels et à l'approbation générale de l'action déployée dans les territoires qu'elle administrait auparavant, elle est à même de parler d'une façon objective et apaisante et de formuler une évaluation équitable des véritables aspects du problème, dénuée de toute tentative d'exaltation démagogique ou d'exploitation idéo-logique ou politique. Je ne crois pas me tromper en disant que la nation italienne a participé, à sa grande satisfaction, au processus d'évolution des pays dont les responsabilités de gouvernement et d'administration lui incombent. On en a un témoignage dans les relations d'amitié confiante et de collaboration qui se sont établies avec les Etats qui étaient auparavant sous la tutelle de l'Italie ou qui faisaient partie de ses colonies.

73. Nous sommes d'ailleurs convaincus que rien mieux qu'une collaboration technique et économique sincère ne peut conduire à des résultats utiles dans l'intérêt de tous les pays. Quelques-uns critiquent âprement cette collaboration entre les pays qui viennent de conquérir leur indépendance et leurs anciens administrateurs. Ils parlent de néo-colonialisme, qu'ils condamnent comme étant une séquelle ou un succédané de l'exploitation coloniale passée. Permettez-moi de dire que, même si quelquefois les raisons de cette condamnation peuvent être comprises et appréciées, ils nous faut résister à la tentation d'en généraliser la portée. Une telle généralisation serait absolument injustifiée et, en outre, dangereuse. Elle pourrait servir de prétexte à ceux qui, dans la réalité, ne déplorent aucunement que la collaboration puisse constituer un obstacle au développement pacifique de l'indépendance des pays ex-coloniaux, mais qui déplorent et craignent la barrière que cette collaboration peut constituer à l'asservissement de ces peuples, à leur domination idéologique; à ceux qui soufflent sur le feu du ressentiment et de l'orgueil, afin que l'action de renouvellement prenne la forme d'un mouvement antioccidental et s'attaque à certains modes de vie plutôt qu'à certains peuples de l'Occident.

74. On peut ainsi mesurer toute la délicatesse et toute l'importance de notre discussion d'aujourd'hui. La délégation italienne est fermement convaincue que tout effort doit être fait pour que cette discussion aboutisse à des décisions utiles et constructives. Evidemment, elle ne saurait avoir qu'un seul objectif, la cessation de toute forme de domination d'un peuple sur un autre, sur tous les continents; aucune autre fin, aucun autre objectif ne serait justifié. Mais pour atteindre cet objectif par les moyens les plus propres, il est nécessaire d'évaluer avec sérénité ce qui a été fait par le passé dans la même direction. Il est nécessaire de regarder vers l'avenir en partant d'une évaluation correcte et sensée du passé.

75. Selon nous, plusieurs facteurs ont contribué à déterminer et à accélérer le processus de l'émancipation des peuples coloniaux, mais il est certain, comme l'a dit le représentant du Liban, que ce processus a été aidé et favorisé par la politique des pays qui ont su comprendre la réalité historique de l'heure aussi bien que le véritable sens et les responsabilités de leur mission. Au sein même de cette Assemblée, la voix de plusieurs représentants de territoires naguère encore non autonomes s'est élevée pour reconnaître cette réalité et exprimer de façon ouverte leur satisfaction de l'œuvre accomplie par les administrateurs, avec lesquels, dans plusieurs cas, les pays nouveaux entretiennent des rapports d'étroite collaboration. Je viens de faire allusion, il y a quelques instants, à la préoccupation que peut susciter cette collaboration. Mais tout en reconnaissant la légitimité, dans des cas déterminés, d'une telle préoccupation, nous ne pouvons ne pas voir dans la tendance à combattre cette collaboration le plus grave danger pour le développement des peuples ex-coloniaux. Ces peuples sont agités par une profonde anxiété de renouvellement. Cette anxiété même, bien loin d'être une cause de séparation et de contraste fatal, devrait être généralement à la source d'une entente plus intime et d'une collaboration plus féconde et plus durable; et pour que cette entente ait lieu, il est indispensable de se libérer rapidement, aussi bien d'un côté que de l'autre, de toutes les scories du ressentiment et du regret.

76. Quand on parle de colonisation, il serait nécessaire d'en souligner, outre les aspects exécutifs, les valeurs spirituelles et les mobiles qu'en dernier lieu elle a réussi à mettre en mouvement. C'est justement ce qu'a fait, il y a quelques instants, le représentant de l'Uruguay. Un écrivain indien, K. M. Panikkar, auteur d'un livre qui est considéré comme l'acte d'accusation le plus implacable contre l'Occident colonisateur — Asia and Western Dominance — a mis en lumière au cours d'une conférence, en des termes qui s'adaptent peut-être à tous les peuples ex-coloniaux, la dette de l'Inde envers l'Occident:

"La réforme sociale dans la société hindoue, l'élévation des intouchables, la purification profondément significative de l'hindouisme, toutes ces choses plus grandes et plus durables que l'indépendance même de l'Inde, sont le reflet de notre héritage occidental. L'organisation de l'Etat démocratique, son caractère laïque, la structure de ses institutions et les principes politiques qui le constituent sont essentiellement européens dans leur inspiration."

77. Comme dans toute histoire humaine, le bien est inséparable du mal et il a toujours besoin de lutter contre celui-ci. Il est souhaitable que les pays qui ont conquis leur indépendance trouvent en eux-mêmes la force de résister aussi bien aux sujétions d'un passé encore récent, et qui n'est pas tout à fait libéré des germes de la méfiance et du ressentiment, qu'aux instigations renouvelées et brillantes de ceux qui ont intérêt à les isoler afin de les avoir plus aisément à leur merci. Mais il est aussi souhaitable que les peuples de l'Occident comprennent que leur mission ne s'arrête pas là où commence l'indépendance des pays coloniaux. L'assistance aux pays insuffisamment développés, qui doit être octroyée par les pays plus développés, n'offre pas à elle seule une solution sur le plan moral et politique. Il est nécessaire que les peuples de l'Occident soient présents dans le labour fécond des nouveaux pays autonomes, non seulement dans la mesure de leur force mais avec la ferme résolution d'en comprendre la portée et d'enseconder la réalisation graduelle en vue d'un progrès commun.

78. Dans l'analyse de notre problème, il n'est pas possible de négliger la participation de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, grâce à ses organes, à ce processus d'émancipation, surtout au moment de l'accession à l'indépendance. Le Conseil de tutelle a certainement accompli un travail méritoire à tous les points de vue. De même, le travail du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes a facilité la compréhension de beaucoup de situations, spécialement dans les secteurs économique, social et culturel et en ce qui concerne le rythme de l'évolution vers l'indépendance politique. Qu'il nous soit aussi permis d'observer à cet égard que si l'on prend en considération les divers domaines de collaboration internationale prévus par la Charte des Nations Unies, on doit constater que, durant les quinze années de vie de notre Organisation, ces différents secteurs n'ont pas tous enregistré les mêmes résultats ni les mêmes progrès. Mais justement, dans le domaine qui concerne les territoires non autonomes et le régime de tutelle, on a pu enregistrer des progrès remarquables, peut-être même supérieurs à ceux auxquels on s'attendait au début. Je ne m'arrêterai pas à répéter ici l'énumération des résultats certes extraordinaires que nous a faite le premier jour de notre débat le représentant du Royaume-Uni [925ème séance]. Il s'agit là d'ailleurs de chiffres et de faits bien connus de tous les Membres des Nations Unies. Le nombre des territoires non autonomes et le chiffre de leurs populations ne représentent aujourd'hui qu'une fraction très réduite de ce qu'ils étaient en 1945. Les progrès réalisés dans les territoires sous tutelle ont été aussi rapides et décisifs. Il paraît hors de doute, après ce que je viens de dire, qu'un long et important chemin a été parcouru durant ces dernières quinze années par les territoires non autonomes. Et c'est aux Nations Unies qu'il faut attribuer le mérite de cette évolution, et surtout le fait qu'elle a pu s'effectuer d'une façon graduelle et ordonnée. Les principes énoncés aux Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte ont prouvé, à la lumière de l'expérience, qu'ils étaient inspirés de critères de grande sagesse et d'équilibre. Ce sont eux qui ont guidé nos actions, et il nous semble que c'est d'eux que nous devons encore nous inspirer pour les décisions à prendre dans ce débat.

79. D'autre part, nous jugeons que notre tâche la plus importante est de regarder au-delà de la question pure et simple de l'indépendance. La conquête de l'indépendance politique des nouveaux pays doit être, plus qu'un but, une étape, encore qu'elle soit évidemment importante. L'indépendance ne doit pas être une cause de désordre et de chaos. Elle ne doit pas représenter un isolement politique et économique. Elle ne doit pas donner lieu à des déséquilibres soudains et, surtout, elle ne doit pas être la cause occasionnelle de frictions ou de controverses. J'ai dit que l'émancipation des peuples encore soumis à la domination ou à la tutelle d'un autre pays est le but principal que nous devons nous proposer. Mais l'action des Nations Unies ne doit pas s'épuiser dans cette seule tâche, si difficile et si grandiose qu'elle soit. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a pour mission essentielle de défendre la paix et d'éliminer la guerre comme moyen de solution des conflits entre les peuples. A cette fin, il est essentiel d'en combattre les causes qui sont la misère, l'esclavage et l'ignorance. Il est essentiel de créer les conditions de vie qui, de par leur nature, sont pacifiques et facteurs de paix. Il est donc indispensable de créer des conditions plus propices à l'entente et à la collaboration, dans la structure sociale même des différents peuples, de réaffirmer la foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et dans la valeur de la personne humaine, de promouvoir le progrès social et un niveau de vie plus élevé, dans le cadre d'une plus grande liberté.

80. Les conditions des peuples sont différentes et, par conséquent, la capacité qu'a chacun d'eux de participer à l'effort commun nécessaire pour instaurer la paix en tant que facteur de civilisation sera différente. Mais tous ont le devoir d'y participer dans les limites de leurs propres capacités. Voilà pourquoi la nouvelle notion de solidarité collective qui est reflétée dans la Charte et qui remplace l'antagonisme passé — lorsque les pays plus développés avaient pris la direction des pays moins développés — représente un des éléments essentiels de l'activité de notre Organisation et l'un des instruments les plus valides pour le maintien de la paix dans le monde.

81. Il n'est pas nécessaire de rappeler les principes énoncés dans les Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte. Il me paraît pourtant utile de souligner que ces principes assignent deux tâches essentielles aux Nations Unies.

82. La première consiste à favoriser et promouvoir de la façon la meilleure l'évolution ultérieure des territoires non autonomes ou sous tutelle qui n'ont pas encore atteint le dernier stade de leur évolution politique. Cela ne signifie pas, toutefois, que ce but doit être représenté nécessairement par la création de nouvelles unités nationales. Certains territoires, du fait de leur étendue limitée ou de la faible densité de leurs populations, n'ont pas les ressources nécessaires pour se transformer en Etats indépendants. Cela est vrai. Mais, dans ce cas particulier, il faut prévoir du moins des formes spéciales de gouvernement autonome, en association avec le pays métropolitain ou avec d'autres pays limitrophes. Ces formes de gouvernement sont conformes à la Charte des Nations Unies qui les prévoient comme un aboutissement naturel du processus d'évolution des territoires non autonomes.

83. La seconde tâche qui, aujourd'hui, incombe aux Nations Unies est de choisir les moyens les meilleurs pour venir en aide aux pays dont l'indépendance est récente, car l'indépendance politique n'est, comme je viens de le dire, qu'une étape du complexe processus actuel d'évolution. Des formes de collaboration économique en faveur de ces pays seront de plus en plus nécessaires, conjointement avec des formes de collaboration politique qui pourront être souvent utiles sur le plan régional. Une confiante collaboration entre les pays très développés et industrialisés et ceux qui sont peu développés pourra présenter le moyen le plus propre à favoriser une évolution dans le domaine politique. Cette collaboration peut être effectuée sur les bases de l'assistance technique, d'intérêts commerciaux et de la coopération économique. Non seulement les rapports économiques, mais aussi les rapports culturels pourront contribuer considérablement à une ultérieure évolution vers des formes plus achevées d'autonomie politique.

84. Nous avons entendu parler, dans cette salle, d'asservissement culturel des peuples coloniaux. Je voudrais me permettre de rappeler que la culture est une fin et non pas un moyen. Les institutions politiques appartiennent — comme le dit le poète T. S. Eliot — aux choses qui se construisent, mais la culture appartient aux choses qui grandissent. Il n'est pas possible de la construire, comme il n'est pas possible de construire un arbre. Il ne peut donc pas exister de véritable asservissement culturel. Seuls les peuples privés de leur liberté peuvent considérer comme culture ce que l'on a coutume d'appeler un enseignement unilatéral. La vie de l'esprit est une synthèse perpétuelle qui accueille et élabore des motifs divers et le régime de la liberté est nécessaire à cette synthèse. S'il n'existe pas, c'est alors qu'on peut parler d'asservissement; mais on ne peut pas parler de culture.

85. Les facteurs qui ont favorisé le processus d'évolution qui s'est déjà vérifié dans un grand nombre de pays (comme je l'ai mentionné au début de mon intervention), et qui sont les mêmes qui fatalement détermineront les évolutions futures, n'ont pas joué de façon égale dans toutes les zones géographiques. Dans certaines zones, ces phénomènes de développement dont nous nous enorgueillons et qui ont abouti à la formation de nouveaux Etats aujourd'hui Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, ne se sont pas vérifiés. Dans certains cas même, nous avons assisté à des phénomènes contraires, c'est-à-dire à l'asservissement, à la domination étrangère de peuples autrefois libres. Il est certain qu'un phénomène d'expansion historique qui a eu lieu surtout durant les XVIIIème et XIXème siècles, et qui est connu sous le nom de colonialisme, n'a pas été limité aux seuls pays de l'Europe occidentale. D'autres pays aussi y ont participé, parmi lesquels la Russie des Tsars qui étendit son pouvoir au-delà de l'Oural jusqu'aux frontières de la Chine, au cœur même de territoires et de populations profondément différents. Aujourd'hui encore, nous pouvons enregistrer des phénomènes d'expansion — avec toutes leurs douloureuses conséquences d'oppression et de répression — au centre de l'Asie, au mépris des libertés traditionnelles du peuple tibétain. D'autres Etats de l'Europe orientale et septentrionale aussi, qui hier encore étaient libres, ont perdu aujourd'hui cette liberté.

86. Nous ne pouvons pas rester indifférents au sort de ces peuples. Toute déclaration que nous approuverons, toute résolution que nous adopterons, ne peut donc concerner tel ou tel autre continent, mais doit être considérée comme ayant la même valeur partout où vivent des peuples encore assujettis à des formes d'oppression extérieure, même si elles sont masquées ou si elles prennent la forme de limitation de leur indépendance.

87. La délégation italienne exprime le vœu que de ce débat puisse naître un accord qui soit le résultat de considérations éclairées et objectives, et non pas d'acrimonieuses tentatives pour troubler l'atmosphère des relations internationales. Il est impossible de considérer sans méfiance les propositions de l'Union soviétique, car il est clair qu'elles visent à susciter la haine et le ressentiment des pays ex-coloniaux envers les anciens dominateurs, à exciter leurs passions afin de mobiliser leurs énergies à son avantage. L'initiative soviétique obéit d'une façon trop évidente à ses fins de propagande pour pouvoir obtenir la faveur de cette assemblée. Elle n'est qu'une gauche tentative pour rendre plus virulents les germes de la méfiance afin de séparer de l'Occident les peuples qui, depuis peu, sont nés à l'indépendance et les assujettir à sa propre domination idéologique et politique.

88. Ma délégation voit au contraire avec faveur l'initiative d'un groupe de pays africano-asiatiques qui a proposé à notre méditation un projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] sérieux et constructif. Nous apprécions sincèrement les intentions qui l'ont inspiré, même si nous éprouvons quelque hésitation quant à la manière dont sont formulés certains points de la déclaration. La délégation italienne souhaiterait vivement que dans le texte final, quel qu'il soit, que l'Assemblée adoptera, il soit fait mention de la réalité du chemin parcouru jusqu'à présent et de notre reconnaissance à l'égard des organes des Nations Unies qui ont travaillé efficacement, avec des résultats qui nous remplissent d'une légitime satisfaction.

89. Ce qui importe le plus, si nous voulons regarder vers l'avenir, c'est que l'évolution des territoires encore non autonomes puisse s'accélérer, mais que cela s'accomplisse dans l'ordre, la paix et la collaboration internationale. C'est de cet objectif que nos délibérations devraient s'inspirer.

90. M. ROA (Cuba) [traduit de l'espagnol]: On peut affirmer non sans raison que cette année est l'année de l'Afrique. Au cours de cette période, en effet, 16 pays africains ont accédé à l'indépendance et partagent déjà les obligations et les devoirs qui incombent aux Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Ce devrait être également l'année de la proclamation de l'indépendance de tous les pays et peuples coloniaux. La majorité de ces pays et peuples qui sont encore sous le joug du colonialisme se trouvent en Afrique. Cependant il y a, en Asie et en Océanie, des pays et des peuples qui ont encore un statut colonial. Diverses puissances européennes conservent en Amérique latine des établissements coloniaux. Les Etats-Unis détiennent en Amérique latine des possessions, des dépendances et des territoires qui leur sont soumis, ainsi qu'un canal qui relie les deux océans; leur politique économique à l'égard des nations latino-américaines est, de par sa nature, sa structure et ses objectifs, typiquement colonialiste. Si l'on proclamait l'abolition des relations de vassalité sur tous les continents où cet état subsiste encore sous une forme ou une autre, l'année de l'Afrique pourrait se transformer radicalement en une "année de la libération de l'humanité". Il ne s'agit pas là d'une fantaisie. Cette proclamation est un acte volontaire qui dépend exclusivement des représentants des pays Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

91. Le colonialisme est la survivance la plus odieuse d'un régime d'expansion mercantile et du déplacement géographique du pouvoir politique, stimulé essentiellement par l'attrait du lucrum infinitum. Ce régime et ses vestiges sont déjà essentiellement en contradiction avec les besoins de développement et de progrès qui caractérisent la société contemporaine. Son déclin est visible, sa disparition inexorable. Cependant, bien que mortellement blessé, le monstre du colonialisme possède suffisamment de moyens et d'expédients pour prolonger son agonie et ses derniers sursauts. Il a aussi la possibilité de renoncer dans la paix à une domination humiliante et profitable qu'il lui faudra de toute façon abandonner finalement, selon le jeu inéluctable des lois de l'histoire. Cette possibilité, l'Assemblée générale la lui a déjà offerte lorsqu'elle a approuvé par acclamation [903ème séance] l'inscription à l'ordre du jour de ses séances plénières de la question intitulée "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", proposée par la délégation de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques. Devant cette possibilité, il ne peut être question de recourir à des moyens termes ou à des demi-mesures. Le moment est venu de donner des définitions et non d'user de circonlocutions. Le moment est venu de couronner le processus d'émancipation des peuples et non de le retarder. Cuba se dissocie radicalement de ceux qui, coiffant démagogiquement le bonnet phrygien, ont voulu allumer un cierge brillant au dieu du colonialisme et une chandelle vacillante au diable de l'anticolonialisme. Comme il n'est pas possible de servir à la fois Dieu et le diable, ce qu'ils servent objectivement, c'est le colonialisme et ce qu'ils sapent subjectivement, c'est l'anticolonialisme. A force de vouloir être subtils, ils en deviennent stupides. Que les promoteurs et les bénéficiaires du système colonial appellent au subterfuge, à la légende ou à la dissimulation, cela s'explique.

Ce qui ne s'explique pas, en revanche, c'est que ceux qui ont subi autrefois les effets les plus funestes de ce système, et qui en souffrent encore aujourd'hui, agissent de même.

92. Ce que réclame Cuba dans ce débat historique, c'est l'abolition inconditionnelle et immédiate du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Quelle autre attitude pourrait adopter Cuba sans se trahir soi-même, sans trahir la tradition léguée par Bolívar, sans trahir les peuples qui luttent héroïquement pour conquérir le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes, l'indépendance, la souveraineté et la dignité? Quelle autre attitude pourrait adopter un peuple qui a souffert dans sa chair et dans son esprit, tant du régime colonial espagnol que de la domination impérialiste des Etats-Unis qui lui a fait suite?

93. Il convient de remarquer qu'il y a trois ans, Cuba n'aurait pas pu parler avec la netteté et la fermeté dont elle fait preuve aujourd'hui. Il y a trois ans, la voix authentique de Cuba était absente de cette tribune des nations. Les discours dociles, obscurs et obséquieux de ses représentants officiels décrivaient avec de pompeux éclats de voix la situation d'asservissement international que masquaient l'indépendance et la souveraineté fictives de l'Etat cubain. Officiellement, par sa structure politique et juridique, Cuba était une république et possédait les attributs officiels de l'indépendance et de la souveraineté: drapeau, armes, hymne, couleur distincte sur la carte et siège dans les organisations internationales. Mais au sein de ces organisations, sa voix n'était qu'un reflet, un simple écho des intérêts politiques, économiques, militaires et diplomatiques d'une puissance étrangère; sa voix sonnait faux, ce n'était pas Cuba qui parlait, c'était l'impérialisme. Lorsque des colonies sont officiellement reconnues comme telles, elles n'ont pas voix au chapitre; si elles sont camouflées, leur voix n'est pas authentique. Et parce que Cuba a cessé à tout jamais d'être une colonie et que ce pays exerce effectivement son droit à disposer de lui-même et jouit de la souveraineté, la voix de ses représentants officiels est devenue la voix claire, authentique et profonde de son peuple et de son gouvernement, intimement confondus, pour la première fois de son histoire, en une communauté dynamique de pensée et d'action. Depuis la quatorzième session de l'Assemblée générale, qui a coïncidé avec l'année glorieuse de sa libération, Cuba, devenu un nouveau pays, a prouvé clairement et résolument l'indépendance de sa politique internationale. Cuba, précisons-le dès maintenant, approuve entièrement le texte intégral du projet de déclaration présenté par l'Union soviétique [A/4502].

94. Au point où en est parvenu le débat, il est inutile de revenir sur l'histoire du colonialisme et de rappeler les déprédations, les perfidies, les outrages et les profits qui l'ont accompagné. D'autres se sont déjà chargés de rafraîchir la mémoire de ceux qui jugent bon d'affecter une candeur de séraphin, en faisant l'exposé dramatique des outrages commis et en fournissant des chiffres à l'appui; ce sont les représentants des peuples qui portent encore dans leur chair la trace de l'exploitation coloniale évoquant encore le sang, la souffrance et la colère. Mais ce que l'on ne saurait trop souligner, c'est la vraie nature, les mobiles réels et les fins toutes particulières du régime colonial. Cuba a vécu "dans les entrailles du monstre", et se sent moralement obligée d'en faire le tableau.

95. Le colonialisme est le fils légitime des vastes et profondes transformations qu'a subies la structure économique de la société européenne au cours des XV^{ème}, XVI^{ème} et XVII^{ème} siècles et des répercussions qu'elles ont pu avoir sur la vie politique, juridique, sociale, religieuse et culturelle. La Renaissance et son humanisme — qui était une invocation à l'uomo singolare dans une société intérieurement divisée — est la fleur privilégiée qui a marqué l'avènement tourmenté du capitalisme moderne en même temps que la première ébauche de sociétés idéales, dont l'Utopie de Thomas Morus était la source; elle apparaît comme une condamnation anticipée des misères, des inégalités, des destructions, des abus, des conflits, des guerres et des révolutions. Cette société nouvelle qui sort victorieusement des cendres encore chaudes de la féodalité s'organise sous l'autorité toujours plus marquée des marchands, des usuriers, des banquiers, des chefs d'entreprises et des armateurs. Elle a pour enseigne la hiérarchie des classes, pour instrument la culture gréco-latine, pour oracle la nature, pour technique le levier d'Archimède, pour caprice la chimère de l'or, pour cri de ralliement la liberté, pour fétiche le commerce et pour critère de vérité la valeur qu'elle attache au quantitatif.

96. Cette constellation nouvelle et dynamique d'intérêts économiques, de relations sociales, de formes politiques et d'échelles de valeurs morales, qui apportait avec elle de si profonds bouleversements, avait besoin pour s'affirmer et s'imposer de la liberté du travail, du commerce et de l'expansion; il lui fallait aussi, pour maintenir son rythme de développement et satisfaire sa soif d'hégémonie, le concours illimité de la science et de la technique. La curiosité réfrénée depuis 10 siècles par la scolastique se déchaîne dans tous les domaines, élargissant les horizons de la connaissance scientifique. La montre conquiert le temps, le télescope l'espace, la méthode expérimentale la nature, la boussole la mer, la machine la production, la philosophie rationaliste la conscience humaine. La convoitise et la soif d'expansion stimulées par cette aventure extraordinaire de la pensée et galvanisées par le miroitement tentant des métaux précieux se traduisirent bientôt par l'apparition de fabriques, d'entreprises commerciales et d'agences d'exploitation sur cette terra incognita incorporée aux grandes puissances maritimes de l'époque — notamment l'Espagne, l'Angleterre, la Hollande, le Portugal et la France — tandis que, parallèlement à ce processus, le revenu de la terre devenait une source de richesses en espèces.

97. Le pouvoir politique et la puissance économique de la classe mercantile en plein essor étaient essentiellement alimentés par les gras profits tirés du pillage colonial, de l'esclavage pratiqué à grande échelle et du drainage systématique des ressources du sol et du sous-sol des territoires découverts, conquis et soumis. "Nous nous sommes enrichis, a dit Werner Sombart, parce que des races et des peuples entiers sont morts pour nous; pour nous, des continents entiers ont été dépeuplés." Telle est, décrite en peu de mots, l'essence réelle du colonialisme qui a eu — et qui a encore — ses théoriciens et ses apologistes, passés maîtres dans l'art d'harmoniser avec subtilité les "valeurs de l'esprit" et les nécessités les plus lucratives. La langue et la religion, l'éducation et la culture furent les instruments employés dans le processus de déformation de la conscience des peuples assujettis, les moyens psychologiques réduisant à néant les manifestations de l'esprit de séparatisme; de même, la construction de routes et d'hôpitaux, de voies ferrées et d'usines avait — et a toujours — pour but d'augmenter la productivité du travail forcé et la valeur des bénéfices réalisés. Voilà à quoi s'est réduit — et se réduit encore — très exactement la "mission civilisatrice" des puissances coloniales et administrantes. Elles instruisent et endoctrinent en vue de l'esclavage et non de la liberté; elles exploitent les ressources et les richesses des autres pour elles-mêmes et non pour les peuples qui les ont amassées à force de travail, d'efforts et de privations.

98. A cet égard, Cuba colonie espagnole et Cuba colonie nord-américaine possède une expérience longue et amèrement acquise. Cependant, elle a toujours su discerner la racine sociale du mal et le substratum historique de l'oppression, établir une distinction entre ces maux et le peuple au nom duquel ils étaient commis; c'est pour cette raison qu'en se révoltant contre la domination coloniale de l'Espagne, elle a précisé clairement que c'était contre cette domination qu'elle faisait la guerre et non contre le peuple espagnol, de même qu'elle a montré tout aussi clairement que sa lutte pour l'émancipation par rapport à la domination coloniale des États-Unis était dirigée contre les promoteurs, les profiteurs et les agents de cette domination et non contre le peuple des États-Unis, bien que la richesse, la puissance et le niveau de vie de celui-ci soient en grande partie le fruit de l'exploitation coloniale et impérialiste. En dernier ressort, les peuples sont absous des responsabilités assumées par leurs gouvernements grâce à la justice immanente de l'histoire. C'est pourquoi il reste une marge suffisante pour que puisse s'établir ultérieurement une coopération fructueuse, fondée sur le respect mutuel, les avantages réciproques et l'égalité absolue, entre les anciens colonisés et les anciens colonisateurs. Un jour viendra où les uns et les autres — voyant leurs intérêts, leurs besoins, leurs valeurs et leurs aspirations confondus en un monde où le libre développement de chacun sera la condition du libre développement des autres — jugeront le colonialisme, l'impérialisme et la guerre thermonucléaire comme les formes les plus odieuses et les plus primitives de la préhistoire de la coexistence humaine.

99. Une mise au point s'impose. Ces peuples assujettis et spoliés au nom de la civilisation étaient aussi civilisés, au sens sociologique du mot et, sur bien des points importants, ils l'étaient beaucoup plus que leurs prétendus tuteurs. Certains pays comme la Chine et l'Inde étaient des centres de haute culture ancienne. Alors que les ancêtres des Anglais grimpaient encore aux arbres — comme le rapporte Jules César dans ses Commentaires sur la guerre des Gaules —, les Chinois vivaient déjà dans des villes, ils étaient politiquement organisés en un empire, ils avaient découvert la poudre et imprimaient les écrits de leurs philosophes, de leurs poètes et de leurs hommes d'Etat. C'est à cette Chine qui a imposé au monde certains principes et qui aujourd'hui réapparaît avec des forces nouvelles, après avoir dû conquérir de haute lutte son droit à disposer d'elle-même, son indépendance et son unité, que l'on refuse cependant, sous la pression des puissances coloniales qui en d'autres temps ont pillé ses richesses, la représentation légitime qui lui revient au sein de cette assemblée.

100. Dans l'Inde, la religion et la culture avaient atteint des niveaux très élevés bien des siècles avant que Socrate ne prêchât sa doctrine empreinte d'une sagesse pénétrante sur les places publiques d'Athènes et que Jésus et ses disciples n'aient établi le christianisme au milieu des persécutions et dans la pauvreté. Ceylan, l'Indonésie et la Birmanie, comme tant d'autres pays asiatiques, occupent une place importante dans l'histoire de la culture. L'Egypte millénaire, berceau d'une civilisation complexe et parvenue à la maturité, a contribué de façon décisive par son influence sur la culture minoenne à l'avènement de ce prodige impérissable de l'esprit humain que fut le miracle grec. Les Arabes, créateurs d'une civilisation originale et dépositaires du savoir gréco-latin, ont vivifié et enrichi par l'abondante contribution qu'ils lui ont apportée les courants monotones et exsangues de la pensée occidentale. L'empreinte qu'ils ont laissée sur la culture espagnole et leur influence sur l'esprit de la Renaissance rayonnent encore aujourd'hui avec un éclat resplendissant. L'Afrique noire garde enfouies dans le sol de ses forêts les traces de cultures anciennes et développées, mystérieusement perdues ou évaporées; elle peut s'enorgueillir d'un brillant folklore, d'un riche patrimoine de formes esthétiques, de la contribution précieuse qu'elle a apportée à la culture universelle et, surtout, de son ardente passion pour la liberté qui est la forme la plus élevée de la culture dans un mode de vie caractérisé par l'esclavage. Cuba, bien que géographiquement située dans l'hémisphère occidental et pays de langue espagnole, est fière de la sève africaine qui a su donner de la force et de la couleur à son folklore, à son art, à sa culture, à sa religion et à son développement national.

101. Les jalons qui, sur le plan international, ont marqué la "mission civilisatrice" du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme, étape suprême d'un même processus d'exploitation économique et de domination politique, portent des noms tristement célèbres: provinces d'outre-mer, Sainte-Alliance, doctrine de Monroe, prédestination manifeste, amendement Platt, zones d'influence, traités de réciprocité, politique de la porte ouverte, diplomatie du dollar, dettes de guerre, protectorats, systèmes de contingentement, privilèges douaniers, mandats, investissements privés, Etats libres associés, dumping, base navale de Guantánamo, tutelle, Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord, Organisation du Traité de l'Asie du Sud-Est, et Central Intelligence Agency. Ces diverses étapes ont donné lieu à des frictions, à des violences, à des pillages et à des guerres entre Etats impérialistes. Ce sont là actuellement les principaux obstacles au développement indépendant des peuples émancipés, qui constituent l'avant-garde du néo-colonialisme et les pires ennemis de la paix et de la sécurité internationales. Je n'en veux pour preuve que la politique de vexation, d'intrigues, de coercition, de menaces, de subversion et d'agression déchaînée à laquelle se livrent le Département d'Etat, le Pentagone et les monopoles des Etats-Unis, avec le vain espoir de soumettre par la force et d'asservir par la faim le peuple cubain. Et si cette preuve n'était pas suffisante, nous n'aurions qu'à tourner nos regards vers le Congo libéré des Belges pendant un moment, qui est aujourd'hui une proie convoitée que se disputent, en dépit d'une alliance temporaire, ses anciens colonisateurs et le néo-colonialisme dont le principal promoteur est l'impérialisme américain.

102. Le complot ourdi contre l'autodétermination, l'indépendance et la souveraineté du Congo — complot auquel cette organisation n'est malheureusement pas tout à fait étrangère — est un indice évident de l'obstination du colonialisme à maintenir, par d'autres moyens, l'exploitation économique et la domination politique des territoires et des peuples auxquels ils accordent une liberté apparente. Le colonialisme se meurt, mais, comme Protée, il peut revêtir de nouvelles formes, reconquérir sournoisement ou ouvertement ses anciens privilèges et recommencer ses exactions. Sous nos propres yeux, les néo-colonialistes et les impérialistes ont détruit l'organisation constitutionnelle du Congo, déposé Lumumba, confié à Mobutu des pouvoirs autocratiques, reconnu la sécession de Tshombé et accordé leur appui total à Kasa-Vubu, après que celui-ci se fut prêté à leurs sombres desseins. Le néo-colonialisme et l'impérialisme ont de nouveau pris pied au Congo. A l'heure actuelle, ce pays fait l'objet d'une intervention. Le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, l'indépendance, la souveraineté, l'unité, la sécurité et la paix de l'Afrique sont en danger, et il en va de même de la paix et de la sécurité internationales. L'arrestation de Lumumba, les railleries et les outrages dont il a fait l'objet de la part de la garde prétorienne de Mobutu et son exécution probable sur l'ordre du néo-colonialisme et de l'impérialisme, constituent une violation flagrante du droit des peuples et sont le présage de jours tragiques. La vie de Lumumba, premier ministre légitime du Congo et chef indomptable du peuple congolais, tient à un fil et c'est aux Nations Unies qu'incombe la responsabilité de son salut. Le Gouvernement révolutionnaire de Cuba m'a expressément chargé d'insister pour que des mesures rapides, énergiques et efficaces soient prises avant qu'il ne soit trop tard.

103. Certains représentants ont déploré le peu d'attention accordé, au cours de ce débat, aux vestiges du colonialisme et aux formes qu'il revêt en Amérique latine; mais j'ai constaté avec surprise que, dans leur réquisitoire, la plupart d'entre eux se sont bornés à réclamer l'abolition du colonialisme européen et ont omis de parler des dépendances coloniales des Etats-Unis et de sa politique colonialiste dans notre hémisphère. Ils ont également oublié de mentionner le canal de Panama, la base navale de Guantánamo et les fies du Cygne. Je voudrais donner à cette question toute l'attention qu'elle mérite.

M. Boland (Irlande) reprend la présidence.

104. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je regrette d'interrompre le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba, mais une motion d'ordre a été soulevée par le représentant du Honduras à qui je donne la parole.

105. M. MILLA BERMUDEZ (Honduras) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Je proteste parce que l'on a voulu dire que les fies du Cygne sont une colonie des Etats-Unis. En réalité, ces fies font partie du territoire du Honduras. Elles sont illégalement et arbitrairement occupées par les Etats-Unis, mais jamais nous ne tolérerons que l'on dise qu'elles sont une colonie des Etats-Unis.

106. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je prie les membres de l'Assemblée de ne demander la parole sur une motion d'ordre que dans les cas où il s'agit vraiment d'une motion de ce genre. Pour tous les autres points, ils peuvent faire usage de leur droit de réponse, mais ils ne peuvent déposer une motion d'ordre que s'il s'agit réellement d'une telle motion.

107. Je demande au Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba de reprendre la parole.

108. M. ROA (Cuba) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Je tiens à préciser au représentant du Honduras que je partage entièrement son point de vue, étant donné que nous comprenons bien que les îles du Cygne appartiennent au Honduras; mais elle sont en effet occupées arbitrairement par les Etats-Unis qui les considèrent comme une colonie leur appartenant, ce qui est tout différent.

109. Définir les Etats-Unis comme une puissance impérialiste serait une véritable tautologie étant donné que, dans ce cas, l'objet de cette définition en est la définition même. L'histoire des Etats-Unis est, en grande partie, l'histoire de l'expansion territoriale de ce pays aux dépens de l'Espagne et de l'Amérique latine et celle de son exploitation des ressources naturelles des peuples qui se trouvent entre le rio Grande et la Patagonie. Cette ambitieuse entreprise d'expansion et d'hégémonie fut conçue à l'aube même de l'indépendance des treize colonies. Ce furent Jefferson, Madison et John Quincy Adams qui, les premiers, la préconisèrent. C'est à Adams que l'on doit la théorie du fruit mûr en vertu de laquelle, selon la loi de la gravitation universelle appliquée au domaine politique, Cuba devait tomber irrévocablement dans le sein de l'Union; de même c'est d'Adams, qui imita la politique de l'Anglais Canning tout en la dépouillant de ses raffinements subtils, que découle la doctrine de Monroe, laquelle, dans la pratique, peut se résumer par cette formule: "Que le reste du monde se tienne à l'écart de l'Amérique, mais liberté d'action pour les Etats-Unis." Cette doctrine unilatérale, officiellement dirigée contre toutes reconquêtes hypothétiques de la Sainte-Alliance, mais visant en fait à empêcher Cuba de se libérer de l'Espagne si elle n'était pas annexée ou acquise par les Etats-Unis, a transformé toute l'Amérique latine, sans son consentement et au préjudice de son unité, de son développement et de son émancipation, en une zone d'influence nord-américaine; les armes politiques de cette prédestination manifeste ont été la diplomatie du dollar, l'isolement de cet hémisphère et l'intimidation sur le plan international. Sous le couvert de cette doctrine colonialiste et de ses corollaires impérialistes, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, avec l'étroite coopération des dictateurs des oligarchies de l'Amérique latine, a facilité à ses commerçants, à ses banquiers et à ses sociétés l'exploitation économique de nos pays sous-développés, désarmés et désunis.

110. Parmi ces corollaires, il faut signaler, en ce qui concerne Cuba, l'amendement Platt, le traité déterminant les relations entre les Etats-Unis et Cuba, le bail obligatoire de la base navale de Guantánamo, les traités de réciprocité, la loi sur le sucre, les monopoles des services publics et les concessions minières et, en ce qui touche l'Amérique latine, l'occupation de Porto Rico, la domination de la zone du canal de Panama, l'exploitation de ses ressources naturelles, le contrôle des marchés, les prêts léonins et les investissements de caractère colonial.

111. Au sujet de Cuba, le premier ministre Fidel Castro a déjà fait ici une analyse pénétrante et détaillée des effets dévastateurs de la domination politique et de l'exploitation économique nord-américaines jusqu'au triomphe de la révolution. Il n'y a rien à y ajouter: je voudrais, toutefois, donner encore quelques précisions sur la base navale de Guantánamo. Il est certain que le territoire où se trouve enclavé cette base a été loué à bail aux Etats-Unis pour la somme invraisemblable de 2.000 dollars par an, en vertu des dispositions de l'article VIII de l'amendement Platt, du traité sur les relations, et des conventions signées en 1903. Mais il est non moins certain qu'aucun contrat civil ou traité international n'est valable s'il n'implique entre les parties une égalité absolue et s'il ne découle de leur volonté librement exprimée. L'amendement Platt a été approuvé par le Congrès des Etats-Unis et imposé à la Convention constituante de Cuba sur un territoire occupé militairement. Le bail découlant de l'article VIII dudit amendement est donc, en droit international, entaché de nullité. La location de cette base navale, impudemment imposée par la contrainte, porte atteinte à l'intégrité territoriale de l'Etat cubain et constitue une menace pour la sécurité de l'île ainsi mise à la merci des conflits et des entreprises belliqueuses des Etats-Unis. En outre, c'est aujourd'hui un foyer actif de conspiration, de provocation et de subversion contre le gouvernement et le peuple de Cuba.

112. On ne doit pas s'étonner que le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis considère comme sa chose un territoire qu'il a usurpé par des voies détournées et qui ne lui appartient donc pas. Les pays impérialistes ont tendance à croire que les territoires où ils ont mis le pied leur appartiennent. Ils croient de même pouvoir disposer de l'espace aérien de ces territoires comme s'il s'agissait d'une propriété privée, au risque d'exposer leurs habitants aux dangers et aux destructions pouvant résulter de l'éclatement, au-dessus d'un territoire étranger, de leurs fusées erratiques, comme cela vient de se produire dans la partie orientale de Cuba. On ne doit pas s'étonner non plus que le président Eisenhower, se discréditant définitivement devant l'opinion publique mondiale, ait attribué sur les fonds secrets dont dispose le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis pour lutter contre la démocratie, l'anticolonialisme et le socialisme, un crédit de un million de dollars pour subventionner les activités subversives des criminels de guerre et des contre-révolutionnaires cubains, au mépris total de la Charte des Nations Unies et des principes de droit international régissant le continent américain.

113. Le Gouvernement révolutionnaire de Cuba répète solennellement devant l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies qu'il n'a jamais eu l'intention et qu'il ne se propose pas de revendiquer par la force la partie de son territoire national occupée par la base navale de Guantánamo; mais il répète aussi solennellement qu'il a l'intention de réclamer le retour de ce territoire lorsqu'il le jugera opportun, conformément aux principes du droit international. Pour l'instant, et en vertu de ce même droit, nous considérons que les termes de la déclaration proposée par l'Union soviétique [A/4502] et du projet de résolution présenté par plusieurs pays africains-asiatiques [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] s'appliquent à cette revendication.

114. Pendant quatre siècles, Porto Rico a été soumise au joug espagnol; depuis plus de 50 ans, elle est placée sous la domination des Etats-Unis. De toutes les îles de l'archipel des Antilles, la plus petite, Porto Rico — territoire stable, doté d'une tradition culturelle, d'une histoire et d'une personnalité qui lui sont propres, et consciente de constituer une entité nationale — n'a jamais jusqu'ici pu prendre sa place parmi les nations indépendantes d'Amérique. Doué des attributs d'une nation, le peuple que José Martí a aidé à s'émanciper comme le nôtre est le seul peuple américain de souche espagnole qui, malgré sa volonté inflexible d'indépendance, n'ait jamais été libre. Voilà le drame qui le déchire. Ce drame est le même dans toutes les nations d'Amérique et en particulier dans celles qui constituent la région des Antilles. La chute brutale de José Martí et l'intervention des Etats-Unis dans la guerre hispano-cubaine, au moment où déjà les libérateurs de mon pays apparaissaient aux portes de la capitale de la colonie et où l'armée espagnole était pratiquement en déroute, ont disjoint les destins de Cuba et de Porto Rico. Le 25 juillet 1898, les éléments avancés de l'armée d'occupation ont débarqué à Guánica. "Le peuple des Etats-Unis — a déclaré solennellement le général Nelson A. Miles, commandant en chef des forces expéditionnaires — vient à Porto Rico au nom de l'humanité et de la justice, portant l'étendard de la liberté et inspiré par de nobles intentions." La résolution commune des deux chambres du Congrès des Etats-Unis affirmait: "Le peuple de Cuba est, et doit être de droit, libre et indépendant." Malgré cette déclaration solennelle et l'engagement non moins solennel contenu dans la résolution commune, Cuba a continué à faire l'objet d'une intervention provisoire et s'est vu imposer l'amendement Platt tandis que Porto Rico passait, à titre de butin de guerre, sous l'autorité du Gouvernement des Etats-Unis et était soumise à un régime rigoureux qui en faisait un avant-poste militaire et une zone contestée.

115. Le masque de la "mission civilisatrice" prétendait donc recouvrir les objectifs véritables de ce nouvel impérialisme nord-américain. Les Porto-Riciens, comme à d'autres moments les Indiens, les Chinois, les Egyptiens, les Arabes, les Soudanais, les Nigériens, les Ghanéens, les Birmans, les Ceylanais, les Indonésiens, les Guinéens et les Congolais, n'étaient pas encore prêts à se gouverner eux-mêmes et à exercer leur souveraineté. Ils avaient besoin d'une éducation paternaliste prolongée et il leur fallait oublier leur passé, renier leur culture, abâtardir leur langue et accepter avec joie, comme un bienfait pour l'avenir, la tutelle puritaine de leurs généreux rédempteurs. Beveridge l'avait déjà annoncé lorsqu'il proclamait que la guerre des Etats-Unis contre l'Espagne était "le grand dessein de Dieu se manifestant dans les instincts de la race anglo-saxonne et qui, dans sa phase actuelle, permet de satisfaire des intérêts personnels, mais dont l'objectif lointain est la christianisation de l'humanité". Il ne pouvait en être autrement puisqu'il s'agissait d'un peuple "de race inférieure", de culture différente, offrant une main-d'œuvre bon marché et pouvant produire du sucre en abondance et à bas prix. Sans doute "la prédestination évidente" de Porto Rico était-elle de devenir une colonie de plantations et un marché noir de l'impérialisme. Il sautait aux yeux que le peuple porto-ricien n'avait fait que changer de maître et son nouveau maître était plus odieux encore parce qu'il apportait l'esclavage au nom de la liberté. Et, comme il était logique, on ne devait pas tarder à passer de l'ignorance à l'incertitude, de l'incertitude à la confusion, de la confusion au scepticisme, du scepticisme au désespoir, du désespoir à la rébellion et de la rébellion à l'organisation d'un mouvement d'indépendance déjà consacré par le sang des héros et des martyrs.

116. Depuis 72 ans qu'est en vigueur l'obligation contractée aux termes de l'article IX du Traité de paix entre l'Espagne et les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, signé à Paris le 10 décembre 1898, selon lequel le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis s'engageait à régler le problème de la souveraineté de Porto Rico, ce pays, Etat libre associé sur le papier, est toujours demeuré un territoire non autonome échappant à la juridiction des Nations Unies, grâce à un stratagème habile. En 1953, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis a adressé une note [A/AC.35/L.121] au Secrétaire général pour lui faire connaître que, désormais, il ne transmettrait plus de renseignements sur le territoire non autonome de Porto Rico, ce territoire ayant cessé d'être considéré comme tel en vertu des dispositions de la Constitution de l'Etat libre associé de Porto Rico, approuvée par le Congrès des Etats-Unis. Après avoir examiné la question, la Quatrième Commission décida, par 22 voix contre 18, avec 19 abstentions, de la soumettre à l'Assemblée générale^{5/}. Lorsque ce point de l'ordre du jour fut examiné par l'Assemblée, le représentant des Etats-Unis présenta une déclaration officielle^{6/} garantissant que le pouvoir exécutif de son pays recommanderait immédiatement au Congrès l'octroi de l'indépendance à Porto Rico si l'Assemblée législative de ce pays adoptait à un moment quelconque une résolution en faveur de l'indépendance. L'Assemblée générale, favorablement impressionnée par cette déclaration, accepta [résolution 748 (VIII)] de délier les Etats-Unis de l'obligation de transmettre des renseignements annuels conformément aux dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Cet engagement a été violé par l'Assemblée législative de Porto Rico, de connivence avec le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, et la plus petite des grandes Antilles reste encore aujourd'hui, contre la volonté souveraine de sa population, un territoire dépendant.

117. Comme c'est le cas pour tous les peuples coloniaux, le peuple porto-ricien ne peut pas faire entendre sa voix devant les instances internationales. Ceux qui parlent pour lui ne le représentent pas et ne peuvent pas le représenter. La délégation de Cuba, renouvelant le pacte de José Martí, se fait le porte-parole de ce pays. Epousant les vues de Porto Rico, elle demande à l'Assemblée générale, au nom de ce pays, de lui accorder sans réserve le droit de disposer de lui-même, l'indépendance et la souveraineté, proclamant ainsi le droit auquel peut prétendre ce pays en tant que nation constituée.

118. En cette époque décisive de l'histoire de l'ONU, Cuba réaffirme catégoriquement sa position anticolonialiste. Ma délégation votera sans réserve pour la déclaration mémorable proposée par l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques et examinera avec un soin particulier le projet de résolution présenté par plusieurs pays africano-asiatiques; elle se réserve également le droit d'exprimer, le moment venu, tout le bien qu'elle pense de ce texte.

119. Se faisant l'interprète des peuples et des pays qui n'ont pu encore conquérir leur liberté, mais qui veulent l'obtenir — et, en particulier, des intrépides guerriers algériens, courageux et invincibles, frères par le courage et l'idéal des partisans cubains de la sierra Maestra — la délégation de Cuba propose que nous ne mettions pas fin à ce débat avant d'avoir brisé les derniers maillons des chaînes du colonialisme.

120. M. JAWAD (Irak) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous vivons certes des heures historiques et lourdes de conséquences. Enfin, l'Assemblée générale a l'occasion d'examiner l'un des problèmes les plus importants de notre époque — celui de la libération de la domination coloniale — et de donner clairement et sans équivoque son opinion sur cette question. Le présent débat sur le colonialisme est donc l'un des plus importants débats historiques et de grande portée qui se soient déroulés devant l'Assemblée générale ou devant tout autre organisme international. C'est pourquoi nous sommes particulièrement reconnaissants à l'Union soviétique d'avoir pris l'initiative de soumettre cet urgent et important problème à l'attention des Nations Unies à un moment où l'avenir de la civilisation est en danger et où le colonialisme tient encore sous le joug des millions d'êtres humains dans le monde entier. Le projet de déclaration présenté par l'Union soviétique [A/4502] nous permet d'apprécier exactement l'opinion mondiale à l'égard du colonialisme et son adoption donnerait au monde le point de départ d'une action positive dans ce domaine.

121. La lutte contre le colonialisme est devenue l'un des facteurs décisifs dans l'orientation de l'ère actuelle. Après des siècles de domination étrangère, les peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine ont atteint un stade très avancé dans leur lutte héroïque contre l'oppression et l'exploitation de l'étranger. Poussés par un ardent désir de vivre librement, ils ont suivi l'exemple de tant d'autres qui, en Amérique et en Europe même, ont pu, au cours des deux derniers siècles, secouer le joug de la domination étrangère. Les mouvements de libération nationale se sont étendus à l'ensemble de l'Asie, de l'Afrique et du Moyen-Orient et la lutte contre l'impérialisme sous ses différentes formes est devenue un élément capital du développement de ces pays, ainsi que de l'établissement de leur statut national et international.

122. La lutte pour la liberté est aussi vieille que la civilisation elle-même et, en fait, elle a toujours été à l'origine du progrès et du développement de la société humaine. Dès que celle-ci a commencé à s'organiser, l'homme a essayé de s'assurer plus de liberté et plus de justice afin de se libérer du despotisme de ses congénères et de se rendre maître des forces sociales et naturelles.

123. L'homme a connu bien des formes de despotisme, mais l'une des pires et des plus honteuses dont il ait fait l'expérience a été le régime colonial sous sa forme moderne, avec ce qu'il implique d'asservissement à l'étranger, d'oppression, d'exploitation des ressources humaines et matérielles au bénéfice d'autrui, d'atteinte au droit des peuples de mener une existence libre et décente.

124. Lorsque l'Europe a étendu sa domination à de vastes régions de l'Asie et de l'Afrique, un fléau supplémentaire est venu s'ajouter aux nombreux maux du colonialisme: celui de la discrimination raciale, qui subsiste encore, dans une large mesure, à l'encontre de certaines populations d'Afrique. Point n'est besoin de rappeler en détail les maux du régime colonial, les misères et les épreuves indescriptibles qui en ont résulté pour les populations qui étaient tombées sous une telle domination. Il n'est pas nécessaire non plus d'expliquer comment le régime colonial a limité les possibilités de développement des peuples colonisés. Tous ces maux sont bien connus, encore qu'ils soient trop nombreux pour qu'on puisse les énumérer. Toutefois, il me faut citer certains exemples de ce que le monde arabe a dû supporter.

125. Je ne crois pas exagérer en affirmant que peu de nations ont autant souffert que le monde arabe de la domination coloniale. La première expérience que nous ayons faite de l'impérialisme européen aux temps modernes a été la conquête de l'Algérie par la France en 1830. Celle-ci fut suivie de l'occupation française de la Tunisie en 1881, de l'occupation de l'Egypte par les Anglais en 1882 et du Soudan en 1898; de la conquête de la Libye par les Italiens en 1911 et de l'occupation du Maroc par les Français en 1912. Puis vint le tour de la Syrie, du Liban, de la Palestine, de la Jordanie et de l'Irak qui tombèrent sous la domination française ou britannique pendant et après la première guerre mondiale. Ajoutons à cela l'extension progressive de l'influence et de la domination britanniques dans de vastes régions de l'Arabie du Sud et du Sud-Est et nous aurons un tableau complet du système colonial dans le monde arabe. A quelques exceptions près, presque tous les territoires arabes furent donc occupés par des envahisseurs étrangers pendant le XIX^{ème} siècle et la première partie du XX^{ème} siècle. Cette situation a imposé à nos populations le devoir de lutter sans merci pour retrouver la liberté et l'indépendance. Il fallut à l'Egypte plus de 70 ans pour se libérer de l'occupation britannique; peu de temps après, d'ailleurs, ce pays se trouvait de nouveau soumis à l'invasion et à la guerre, certaines puissances coloniales s'efforçant d'imposer à nouveau leur domination. La lutte de la Libye contre ses envahisseurs italiens dura plus de trente ans et fut marquée par des rébellions répétées et de sévères répressions. Ce n'est que récemment que le Maroc et la Tunisie ont pu recouvrer leur liberté et leur indépendance, au prix de lourds sacrifices et d'épreuves sans nombre.

126. Dans notre région du Moyen-Orient, la domination européenne s'est longtemps perpétuée sous le masque du régime des mandats, imposé à des peuples contre leur gré par les puissances coloniales après la conquête de leur pays pendant la première guerre mondiale. Les peuples de l'Irak, de la Syrie, du Liban, de la Palestine et de la Jordanie n'ont jamais accepté ce régime des mandats et ils ont mené une lutte sans merci contre cette nouvelle forme de colonialisme. En Irak, le mandat qui a officiellement pris fin en 1932 a été remplacé par un nouveau système de relations qui conservait à l'ancienne puissance mandataire une grande influence dans les affaires du pays. Il fallut encore 26 ans et notre grande révolution de juillet 1958 pour que le peuple de l'Irak puisse finalement débarrasser le pays des derniers vestiges de domination et d'influence étrangères.

127. L'expérience que nous avons faite du mandat — aussi amère qu'elle ait pu être — ne peut se comparer à la tragédie qu'a vécue le peuple de Palestine. Celui-ci a été victime du colonialisme sous sa forme la plus exécrable, forme à laquelle on ne peut trouver rien de comparable dans les annales de l'histoire moderne. Le mandat avait pour objectif avoué d'aider les populations libérées de la domination des puissances vaincues après la première guerre mondiale à subsister par elles-mêmes. Au début, le principe de base du système des mandats était que les intérêts et le bien-être des populations elles-mêmes représentaient une mission sacrée pour la communauté mondiale. Comment cette mission sacrée fut-elle remplie dans le cas du peuple de Palestine? Les Arabes, qui formaient plus de 90 pour 100 de la population du pays au début du Mandat en 1920, virent leurs intérêts subordonnés à ceux de la puissance mandataire et, sous la protection de celle-ci, à ceux des envahisseurs et immigrants sionistes. Dans aucun autre territoire sous mandat, dans aucune colonie on n'a aussi peu tenu compte des intérêts de toute une nation, nulle part ceux-ci n'ont été aussi systématiquement méconnus. Nulle part les aspirations légitimes de toute une population n'ont été aussi impitoyablement étouffées et ses droits fondamentaux aussi ouvertement violés. La mission sacrée s'est transformée en un cauchemar de perfidie, d'oppression et de fourberie. Lorsque la Grande-Bretagne renonça enfin à son mandat et abandonna sa mission sacrée, elle laissa derrière elle en Palestine les ruines d'une nation jadis fière, devenue une nation de réfugiés dans le dénuement, vivant de la charité de la communauté mondiale.

128. Si nous passons en revue le monde arabe d'aujourd'hui, nous voyons qu'en dehors de la Palestine, il existe encore des régions où l'impérialisme continue à lutter avec obstination pour endiguer les courants de libération nationale. Dans ces six dernières années, la France a mené contre le peuple algérien une guerre de meurtres et de dévastation afin de le maintenir dans l'esclavage et la servitude et de l'empêcher de se joindre à la communauté des nations libres et indépendantes. Ainsi la France essaie de refuser à d'autres nations les droits et les libertés dont jouit tout Français. Nous sommes persuadés que ces efforts de la France seront vains, car l'amère et l'héroïque lutte du peuple algérien finira par triompher. De même, sur le territoire d'Oman et en Arabie méridionale, la lutte contre l'autorité et la domination étrangères se poursuit sans répit. Alors que l'Assemblée générale réunie ici se prononce énergiquement contre le régime colonial et en faveur du droit des peuples à vivre dans la liberté, les forces armées de Grande-Bretagne se livrent à des opérations d'extermination dans l'Oman, en Arabie du Sud et dans la colonie d'Aden.

129. On a pu constater, d'après ce que je viens de dire, que le peuple arabe a connu le colonialisme dans ses manifestations et sous ses formes les plus exécrables. Il a fait directement l'expérience de son oppression, de sa perfidie; il en a souffert physiquement, matériellement et spirituellement comme peu d'autres peuples. C'est une des raisons pour lesquelles nous éprouvons une sympathie et une compréhension si profondes pour les autres nations qui luttent pour la liberté et l'indépendance et c'est pourquoi nous continuerons à donner notre appui aux aspirations des populations des colonies qui subsistent en Afrique et ailleurs.

130. Notre expérience du colonialisme est grande. Nous avons été témoins de l'exploitation économique et du pillage de nos ressources naturelles par les colonialistes. Nous avons connu l'amertume que fait naître la suppression des libertés par la force, nous avons pu observer par quelles méthodes une nation peut être maintenue à un niveau inférieur de développement culturel et politique. Il n'est peut-être pas nécessaire d'insister particulièrement sur ces faits, cependant il est une chose qu'il faut absolument rappeler ici, c'est l'utilisation des peuples coloniaux dans le processus d'anéantissement du mouvement de libération d'autres peuples placés sous la domination coloniale. La triste histoire des soldats indiens qui sont tombés dans les vallées de la Mésopotamie pendant la première guerre mondiale, des Marocains qui sont morts sur les champs de bataille d'Europe, ou celle de millions d'autres sujets coloniaux qui ont été menés au combat non pas sous leur propre drapeau, ni pour défendre leur propre cause, mais pour protéger les intérêts des colonialistes, resteront à jamais dans les annales tragiques de l'histoire. Cette pratique éhontée qui consistait à utiliser les peuples coloniaux comme de la chair à canon doit nous rappeler quelle valeur les colonialistes accordent à la vie des populations placées sous leur domination.

131. Etant donné la tragique expérience que nous avons faite du colonialisme et la conviction que nous avons du droit de toutes les nations de vivre librement et dans la paix, nous avons adopté une attitude très ferme sur toutes les questions d'ordre colonial, au sein des Nations Unies. A la Quatrième Commission, où ces questions ont été examinées, l'Irak n'a pas ménagé ses efforts pour servir la cause de la liberté en Afrique et ailleurs. Nous nous sommes efforcés, avec succès d'ailleurs, d'insuffler quelque vie dans la Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes qui figure au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Par nos efforts collectifs, nous avons pu faire jouer à l'Organisation des Nations Unies un rôle important et bienfaisant en ce qui concerne les progrès accomplis par certains territoires non autonomes dans la voie de la liberté et de l'indépendance; et nous avons ainsi contribué à donner une application pratique à l'un des plus importants principes de la Charte.

132. Quant au projet de déclaration [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 5] que ma délégation a l'honneur de présenter en commun avec de nombreux Etats africains et asiatiques, nous le soumettons à l'Assemblée avec l'espoir que ce texte deviendra une déclaration universelle semblable à la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, œuvre qui a fait date dans l'histoire des Nations Unies. Ce texte est une charte de la liberté à l'intention des peuples qui vivent encore dans la dépendance et l'oppression et, parmi les pays qui présentent ce texte, nombreux sont ceux qui se sont récemment libérés du colonialisme.

133. Dans ce projet, nous rappelons certains des principes essentiels de la Charte et nous soulignons les dangers que représente le colonialisme et les conflits qui peuvent en résulter entre nations par suite du refus d'accorder la liberté aux peuples encore non autonomes. La déclaration proclame certains faits et principes qui sont évidents en soi, à savoir que le colonialisme s'oppose au développement de la coopération économique internationale et entrave le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples non autonomes; que l'asservissement et l'exploitation par l'étranger sont la négation des droits fondamentaux de l'homme et sont contraires aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies. La déclaration repousse catégoriquement les arguments constamment invoqués par les colonialistes pour justifier le maintien de leur domination sur certains pays non autonomes; l'un de ces arguments est que les peuples des colonies ne sont pas encore prêts à s'administrer eux-mêmes, qu'ils n'ont pas encore atteint la maturité politique nécessaire et que, dans les domaines économique et social et dans celui de l'enseignement, ils ne sont pas suffisamment développés pour être parfaitement indépendants. Il est évident que ce genre d'argument est fallacieux et il a été discrédité même par certaines puissances coloniales qui admettent aujourd'hui que l'indépendance politique et l'émancipation ne sauraient être retardées sous le prétexte d'une préparation insuffisante dans les domaines politique, économique et social. Le monde en est venu à reconnaître aussi que la liberté et l'indépendance sont de puissants stimulants pour accélérer le rythme du progrès dans tous les domaines de l'activité humaine. Il serait inutile de rappeler les exemples de tant de pays — y compris celui que je représente — qui ont été en mesure de progresser à un rythme bien plus accéléré après s'être entièrement libérés de la domination étrangère.

134. L'un des articles les plus importants de ce projet de déclaration est celui qui traite de la nécessité de mettre fin à toute action armée et à toutes mesures de répression dirigées contre les peuples dépendants qui luttent pour obtenir que leurs aspirations légitimes à la liberté et à la dignité soient satisfaites. Les exemples d'intervention armée et d'agression de ce genre sont trop bien connus pour que je me permette d'insister, mais il ne faut pas que les nations soient obligées de payer le lourd tribut d'un partage de leur patrie pour pouvoir accéder à l'indépendance. Nous avons vu récemment de nombreux exemples de ce genre de solution et il y a là un danger contre lequel les Nations Unies doivent se prémunir. Il est donc indispensable que la déclaration comporte un paragraphe condamnant la destruction partielle ou totale de l'unité nationale et de l'intégrité territoriale des pays.

135. Le paragraphe 5 du projet de déclaration a une importance toute particulière. Il prévoit que des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans tous les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés. Il s'agit là d'un appel à toutes les puissances qui administrent à l'heure actuelle des territoires non autonomes afin qu'elles prennent immédiatement des mesures permettant aux peuples de ces territoires d'accéder sans délai à l'indépendance.

136. En adoptant cette déclaration à l'unanimité, l'Assemblée générale s'acquitterait d'une des plus hautes missions prévues dans la Charte et provoquerait un changement radical de la tendance dangereuse que prennent actuellement les rapports de puissance entre Etats. La liquidation définitive du régime colonial annoncerait l'avènement d'une nouvelle ère de l'histoire de la société humaine, une ère dans laquelle les relations entre nations se fonderaient sur des principes de droit et d'équité rendant impossible le recours à la violence et à la force. La tension internationale serait diminuée et une meilleure compréhension régnerait entre les pays évolués et les pays sous-développés.

137. Le devoir peut-être le plus important de l'Organisation des Nations Unies est de favoriser l'avènement de cette nouvelle communauté des nations en aidant les pays qui étaient, et qui sont encore, sous la domination coloniale à s'émanciper pour satisfaire aux exigences de l'ère actuelle de l'histoire. Comme l'a dit M. Khrouchtchev:

"Notre époque est celle de la rénovation rapide de la société, celle de l'établissement de modes de vie plus progressifs et plus justes, celle où la puissance de l'homme sur les forces de la nature prend un essor sans précédent. Le temps est venu de libérer entièrement et définitivement les peuples qui souffrent dans la servitude coloniale." [A/4502.]

Les Nations Unies ne sauraient rester indifférentes à la manière dont certaines puissances coloniales foulent aux pieds les droits des peuples qu'elles maintiennent sous leur joug par les méthodes les plus brutales. Elles ne sauraient fermer les yeux sur la manière dont ces puissances coloniales pillent les richesses des autres nations, les maintenant ainsi dans une extrême pauvreté et dans un état arriéré. La liquidation immédiate du colonialisme sera sans aucun doute dans l'intérêt de toutes les nations. L'expérience récente n'a montré que trop clairement à quel point les nations émancipées peuvent contribuer au progrès et à la prospérité dans le monde. La libération des pays coloniaux a, dans bien des domaines, profondément modifié la situation en favorisant le développement économique, politique et culturel normal de ces pays, et elle a permis de relever le niveau de vie dans tous les pays.

138. Seuls des peuples libres peuvent s'unir pour instaurer dans le monde le nouvel ordre envisagé par la Charte des Nations Unies, et le régime colonial, qui refuse d'accorder la liberté, est donc contraire aux principes de cette Charte ainsi qu'à l'esprit rénovateur de l'époque moderne.

139. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Panama qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

140. M. ILLUECA (Panama) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba a, tout à l'heure, fait allusion à la zone du canal de Panama en des termes que ma délégation se doit de relever.

141. La zone du canal de Panama, qui est une petite bande de terre d'environ 16 kilomètres de large et d'à peine 80 kilomètres de long, fait partie intégrante du territoire de la République de Panama, laquelle exerce son autorité sur ce territoire en toute souveraineté. Ce droit dont jouit le Panama a été reconnu par le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis et par le Président des Etats-Unis et le drapeau panaméen flotte sur la zone du canal.

142. Je regrette profondément que le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba ait cru bon de faire une telle allusion devant le représentant de la République de Panama. Si, comme l'a déclaré ici le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba, son pays est libre et ne se trouve sous la tutelle ni des Etats-Unis, ni de l'Union soviétique, il en est de même de la République de Panama qui est aussi un pays libre, digne et souverain, représenté à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Son peuple ne veut pas non plus se trouver sous la tutelle d'aucune autre puissance quelle qu'elle soit, grande ou petite, ni par conséquent sous la tutelle de Cuba ou de tout autre pays.

143. Je me permettrai de prier le Ministre des affaires étrangères de Cuba de bien vouloir, la prochaine fois qu'il prendra la parole devant cette assemblée sur une question quelconque de caractère international, respecter les droits légitimes des autres représentants qui font partie de cette auguste assemblée.

144. Ma délégation se réserve le droit de prendre à nouveau la parole sur cette question si les circonstances l'exigent.

La séance est levée à 18 h 15.

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

M. Illueca (Panama), vice-président, prend la présidence.

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant des Etats-Unis pour lui permettre d'exercer son droit de réponse.

2. M. PAYNE (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous ne sommes pas surpris que le représentant de Cuba ait jugé à propos de parler dans sa déclaration de l'Etat libre associé de Porto Rico et je ne puis vraiment pas dire que nous soyons déçus; en effet, les observations formulées par le représentant de Cuba nous offrent la possibilité de parler d'un sujet qui est pour les Etats-Unis un motif de grande fierté. Je dois dire pourtant qu'en mentionnant Porto Rico le représentant de Cuba — sans se proposer peut-être d'apporter plus d'ordre à nos débats — a sans doute fourni une contribution positive à nos discussions parce que des faits — je répète: des faits — seront mis en lumière.

3. Depuis qu'on a parlé de Porto Rico pour la dernière fois au cours de la discussion générale — c'était en septembre — une consultation électorale s'est déroulée dans le pays et les résultats de cette consultation, que M. Wadsworth a mentionnés dans sa déclaration de cet après-midi [937^eme séance], sont plus éloquents que je ne pourrais l'être moi-même. Quiconque a ces résultats présents à l'esprit pourra se demander à quelle fin cette question a été soulevée au cours du présent débat. Je suis certain que plus d'une personne ici présente doit trouver piquant qu'un Etat libre associé où existe un régime véritablement démocratique soit pris à partie par le Ministre des affaires étrangères d'un pays où la population n'a pas eu la possibilité d'exprimer ses désirs par des méthodes démocratiques.

4. Aux termes de la résolution 748 (VIII) du 27 novembre 1953, l'Assemblée générale a reconnu que le peuple de Porto Rico avait exprimé sa volonté librement et démocratiquement, qu'il avait effectivement exercé son droit de disposer de lui-même et qu'il était clair que Porto Rico était devenu une entité politique autonome. Le paragraphe 9 du dispositif de cette résolution était rédigé en ces termes:

"Exprime la conviction que, conformément à l'esprit de la présente résolution, aux idéaux exprimés dans la Charte des Nations Unies, aux traditions du peuple des Etats-Unis d'Amérique et au progrès politique accompli par le peuple de Porto Rico, il sera dûment tenu compte de la volonté du peuple porto-ricien et de celle du peuple des Etats-Unis d'Amérique dans la conduite de leurs relations conformément au statut juridique actuel, et aussi dans le cas où l'une ou l'autre des parties à l'association consentie d'un commun accord désirerait apporter une modification aux termes de cette association."

5. La population de Porto Rico et la population des Etats-Unis ont répondu à tous égards aux espoirs exprimés par l'ONU, et tous les Américains y trouvent une raison de fierté.

6. Si l'une quelconque des personnes assemblées ici avait quelque doute au sujet du statut actuel de Porto Rico, je lui proposerais de lire le texte intégral du message de M. Luis Muñoz Marín, gouverneur de l'Etat libre associé de Porto Rico, qui a été distribué en tant que document des Nations Unies. Je voudrais donner lecture d'une partie de ce message [A/4519]:

"Le peuple de Porto Rico est fermement partisan d'une société démocratique, fondée sur le respect des droits des minorités, la protection et l'affirmation des libertés individuelles et l'exercice effectif du droit de vote lors d'élections entourées de toutes les garanties de liberté. Il ne peut y avoir de véritable autodétermination que si toutes ces conditions sont remplies.

"Porto Rico, pour sa part, a effectivement et réellement rempli ces conditions, et c'est en toute liberté qu'elle a accepté les relations qu'elle entretient actuellement avec les Etats-Unis. Le peuple de Porto Rico est un peuple qui s'administre lui-même, qui s'est librement associé aux Etats-Unis d'Amérique sur la base du consentement et du respect mutuels. C'est le peuple de Porto Rico lui-même qui détermine, au mieux de ses intérêts, la politique qu'il entend suivre pour assurer son développement économique et culturel.

"Dans une résolution qu'elle a adoptée en novembre 1953, l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies a solennellement reconnu que le peuple de Porto Rico avait effectivement exercé son droit de disposer de lui-même en créant l'Etat libre associé, entité politique autonome dont l'association avec les Etats-Unis d'Amérique résulte d'un commun accord. J'ajouterai, en ce qui concerne le principe de l'autodétermination, que cette année même l'Assemblée législative de l'Etat libre associé a approuvé une loi autorisant l'organisation d'un nouveau vote sur le statut de Porto Rico dès que 10 pour 100 des électeurs le demanderont."

7. Telles sont les paroles du Gouverneur de Porto Rico. Et que dit le parti de l'opposition? Aujourd'hui même M. Wadsworth a reçu le télégramme suivant:

"En ma qualité de candidat au poste de Gouverneur, représentant le Statehood Republican Party of Puerto Rico (parti républicain de Porto Rico pour l'accession de Porto Rico au rang d'Etat de l'Union), parti qui a réuni plus de 250.000 voix, soit 32,4 pour 100 des suffrages exprimés lors de la consultation électorale de novembre dernier, ce qui, ajouté aux 58 pour 100 des suffrages obtenus par le parti au pouvoir — qui préconisait aussi l'union permanente de Porto Rico et des Etats-Unis — représente plus de 90 pour 100 du corps électoral, je considère comme inadmissible la démarche d'un petit groupe de chefs du parti de l'indépendance — celui-ci n'ayant réuni que 24.000 suffrages, soit moins de 3 pour 100 des suffrages du corps électoral — qui ont porté la question devant les Nations Unies et ont inexactement présenté la situation existant à Porto Rico, qui est une collectivité de citoyens américains de par sa propre volonté. Il s'agit là d'une tentative blâmable pour entraver le processus d'autodétermination auquel la communauté des citoyens de Porto Rico a eu librement recours.

"(Signé) Luis A. Ferre"

8. Si l'un des représentants qui siègent au sein de cette assemblée avait encore des doutes quant aux désirs de la population de Porto Rico après avoir entendu ces communications, je lui recommanderais de se rendre sur place pour juger lui-même. Il y sera accueilli avec la cordialité traditionnelle et la courtoisie innée de la population de Porto Rico — composée tout entière de citoyens américains — et il découvrira à Porto Rico une des îles les plus enchantées du globe et un séjour de détente qui serait particulièrement bien choisi lorsque sera terminée cette session assez pénible de l'Assemblée générale.

9. M. PARISIS (Belgique): La Belgique a spontanément mis un terme au régime colonial. L'indépendance qui a été proclamée le 3 juin 1960 à Léopoldville n'était pas le résultat de luttes séculaires ou la fin d'un régime d'oppression. Le transfert des pouvoirs était complet, sans réserve; il n'a jamais été question d'y revenir. Les Belges n'ont pas d'autres colonies.

10. La Belgique exerce actuellement encore la tutelle sur le Ruanda-Urundi. Elle l'exerce en vertu d'un accord de tutelle qui fait suite à un mandat de la Société des Nations. La Belgique, s'exprimant par son gouvernement, a déclaré le 9 septembre 1960 que, selon son vœu, ce régime de tutelle doit prendre fin au cours du premier semestre de 1962. Le représentant de la Belgique à la Quatrième Commission l'a confirmé le 25 novembre dernier ^{1/}.

11. Un peu plus de discernement, un peu plus de souci de la vérité, et nous verrons plus clair dans les problèmes qui s'offrent à nous. Et il me suffira de rappeler les sages paroles du président Fulbert Youlou qui a dit, le 18 novembre:

"Nous savons ce que le colonialisme a pu nous apporter parfois d'humiliations ou d'injustices, comme toute œuvre humaine, mais nous ne voulons pas renier ce qu'il a pu avoir aussi d'enrichissant, dans le domaine matériel et dans celui de l'esprit." [917ème séance, par. 8.]

12. En regard, je dois constater que le projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502] contient des erreurs de première grandeur. J'ai déjà fait justice de la calomnie selon laquelle la population du Congo aurait été décimée en 50^{ans}. J'ai montré qu'au contraire, au cours des 20 dernières années, le taux d'expansion de la population congolaise avait quadruplé. On a osé écrire, dans ce même document, qu'au moment de la proclamation de l'indépendance de la République du Congo "seuls quelques habitants savaient lire et écrire". Mais ne sait-on pas qu'en juillet 1960 le réseau de l'enseignement — tant normal que technique, moyen et primaire — était complet, groupant près de 2 millions d'enfants, soit un sixième de la population totale du Congo? Ce chiffre correspondait à 57 pour 100 de la population d'âge scolaire. Cinquante-sept pour cent! Il faut le comparer à celui de pays africains depuis longtemps indépendants où la fréquentation varie entre 5 et 25 pour 100 de la population d'âge scolaire. M. Khrouchtchev fait le silence sur l'existence des deux universités congolaises créées l'une en 1954 à Léopoldville, l'autre en 1956 à Elisabethville, où l'on ne connaît aucune discrimination raciale.

13. Peut-être ignore-t-il qu'après de l'Université Lovanium, à 20 kilomètres de Léopoldville, fonctionne le seul réacteur nucléaire qu'il y ait en Afrique.

14. Dans le même document encore, M. Khrouchtchev affirme: "Les principaux instruments agricoles [en Afrique] sont, comme il y a des milliers d'années, la houe ... et des bâtons pointus, et des façons culturales primitives y conduisent à l'épuisement et à l'érosion des sols." Il s'est malheureusement trompé de fiche. La description qu'il nous donne se rapporte à un passé qui remonte à 52 ans, lorsque l'Etat belge a entrepris son œuvre sur la terre africaine. Depuis lors, les Belges ont édifié une infrastructure économique et sociale se traduisant par des investissements de 3 milliards de dollars au cours des 10 dernières années. Le résultat en fut un investissement de 148 dollars par an et par habitant, alors qu'en d'autres pays africains et asiatiques indépendants cet investissement ne dépasse pas 30 dollars par an.

15. Est-il besoin aussi de rappeler le rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, qui parle, lui, du plan décennal de développement d'un coût de 48 milliards de francs ^{2/}, soit environ 1 milliard de dollars, plan entièrement réalisé par les Belges au Congo? Si nous étudions les pays d'Afrique en voie d'industrialisation, nous lisons dans le même rapport: "En 1956, le Congo belge, avec 152.758 salariés, soit 4,86 pour 100 de la population active, venait en tête des territoires d'Afrique ^{3/}..."

16. La Belgique vient d'assurer l'accession de la République du Congo à l'indépendance. Contrairement à ce qui a été affirmé, cette accession a été préparée. Des élections eurent lieu et furent suivies de la mise en place d'institutions locales en 1957 et en 1959. Un groupe de travail parlementaire a parcouru tout le Congo en 1958. Deux "tables rondes" portant, l'une sur les questions politiques, l'autre sur les problèmes économiques et financiers, se tinrent à Bruxelles en janvier et en mai 1960. Les leaders congolais s'y rencontrèrent avec des représentants de la Belgique pour élaborer les conditions dans lesquelles s'opérerait l'accession à l'indépendance. Enfin, des élections générales vinrent, en 1960, parfaire l'œuvre commune. Ce furent autant d'étapes pour la mise en place des institutions de la République du Congo.

17. Parallèlement, les Belges prévoyaient au profit du nouvel Etat, en même temps qu'une large assistance, le concours de leurs techniciens: 10.000 enseignants, magistrats et fonctionnaires, tous placés sous l'autorité exclusive du Gouvernement congolais.

18. On a déclaré à cette tribune que la Belgique avait fait preuve de libéralisme en acceptant de proclamer l'indépendance du Congo. Mais on a ajouté qu'elle avait saboté cette indépendance. Accusation aussi absurde qu'injuste et dénuée de fondement. La politique de la Belgique est essentiellement fondée sur le principe du respect de la souveraineté et de l'indépendance de la République du Congo, ainsi que sur la non-ingérence dans ses affaires intérieures. Les Belges estiment qu'il y a là un domaine qui relève exclusivement de l'appréciation des Congolais.

19. Si nous relisons l'histoire, nous constatons qu'un grand nombre de pays ici représentés ont été tour à tour, dans leur histoire, colonisés et colonisateurs. Pour sa part, la Belgique a connu bien des dominations avant d'être au cours de ce siècle, en l'espace de 25 ans, envahie à deux reprises — de 1914 à 1918 et de 1940 à 1945. Les abus du colonialisme, on les rencontre partout, hélas! tout au long du passé et dans toutes les régions du monde. Nous ne pouvons que les condamner partout, où qu'ils se situent, sans exclure l'URSS. Sans doute le représentant de l'Union soviétique a-t-il, à la 925ème séance de l'Assemblée, invoqué l'argument selon lequel il s'agit là de questions intérieures. Mais les questions coloniales sont, en principe, d'ordre intérieur puisqu'elles concernent des territoires relevant de la souveraineté d'un Etat. Cela n'empêche pas l'Union soviétique de mener une attaque de fond contre les pays ayant ou ayant eu des colonies. En me plaçant sur le même terrain que le représentant de l'Union soviétique, je ne fais qu'agir dans l'exercice du droit de réponse. On ne saurait avoir deux poids et deux mesures...

20. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je prie le représentant de la Belgique de quitter la tribune pour permettre au représentant de l'Union soviétique de présenter une motion d'ordre.

21. M. ROCHTCHINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Nous sommes en train d'examiner ici la question du colonialisme, inscrite à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale. Par conséquent, les allusions que le représentant de la Belgique fait ici à l'Union soviétique et à d'autres pays, n'ayant aucun rapport avec la question examinée, n'en ont pas davantage avec le problème que nous étudions. C'est pourquoi je prierais le Président de rappeler à l'ordre le représentant de la Belgique, puisque c'est précisément la question du colonialisme que nous étudions.

22. Le représentant de la Belgique a parlé du "travail considérable accompli au Congo". Nous sommes justement témoins de ce qui se passe à l'heure actuelle au Congo et c'est précisément la faute de la Belgique si l'Assemblée générale est amenée à examiner la situation créée maintenant dans la République du Congo. Je répète que la question abordée ici par le représentant de la Belgique n'a pas de rapport immédiat et direct avec la question coloniale que nous étudions. Aussi prierais-je le Président de rappeler à l'ordre le représentant de la Belgique et de l'inviter à s'en tenir rigoureusement au cadre des questions que nous étudions en ce moment.

23. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je tiens à interpréter aussi largement que possible le règlement intérieur de l'Assemblée, en vertu duquel tous les représentants peuvent exprimer le point de vue de leurs gouvernements respectifs. Néanmoins, je me permets de rappeler à tous les représentants — comme M. Boland, président en titre, l'a fait à différentes reprises — que l'Assemblée générale a décidé d'ajourner l'examen de la question du Congo. Dans ces conditions, j'invite les représentants, lorsqu'ils prendront la parole, à se limiter exclusivement au point de l'ordre du jour actuellement à l'étude.

24. Dans ces conditions, je prie le représentant de la Belgique de poursuivre son intervention.

25. M. PARISIS (Belgique): Mon pays, au cours de ces débats, a fait l'objet d'un grand nombre d'attaques. Nous n'avons jamais interrompu, nous avons invoqué le droit de réponse lorsqu'il le fallait, et nous pensions que nous pouvions compter sur la protection du Président.

26. Je reprends mon discours au point où je l'avais laissé. Je regrette que M. Rochtchine ait jugé nécessaire de m'interrompre, car la citation que j'allais précisément faire est celle d'un rapport, en date du 12 janvier 1957, de M. Gorkine, secrétaire du Présidium du Soviet suprême — et je suppose que le représentant de l'Union soviétique ne récusera pas cette autorité. Voici cette citation:

"Le XXème Congrès du parti communiste a noté des faits qui sont en violation flagrante avec les principes fondamentaux de la politique léniniste des nationalités de l'Etat soviétique. Ces violations se manifestèrent dans l'éviction injustifiée de peuples entiers et dans l'institution de restrictions à leur égard dans leur nouveau lieu de résidence. C'est ainsi qu'à la fin de 1943 et au début de 1944, les Balkars, les Tchetchènes, les Kalmouks et les Karatchaïs furent renvoyés du Caucase du Nord vers des régions du Kazakhstan et de l'Asie centrale..."

27. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je prie le représentant de la Belgique de bien vouloir céder la parole au représentant de l'Union soviétique qui désire présenter une motion d'ordre.

28. M. ROCHTCHINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Je voudrais attirer l'attention du Président sur le fait qu'il ne s'en tient pas, en l'occurrence, à une objectivité suffisante dans la conduite de cette séance plénière.

29. Le fait est que c'est la question coloniale que nous discutons. Cela est clairement stipulé dans notre ordre du jour et cela ressort du cadre même du débat. Le représentant de la Belgique, pour détourner l'attention de l'Assemblée de l'examen de la question posée, s'efforce d'amener cette assemblée à examiner des questions qui n'ont aucun rapport avec l'ordre du jour. S'il avait attiré plutôt l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur l'examen des questions coloniales et, en particulier, sur la situation née de l'état auquel l'Administration belge avait réduit le Congo, l'examen de cette question serait conforme à l'ordre du jour. Peut-être même cela serait-il une contribution à l'examen que nous faisons de la question posée. En effet, la situation dans les colonies — et en particulier (je dirais même surtout) dans les colonies belges — soulève vivement l'attention de l'opinion publique du monde entier et de tous les autres pays. La question du colonialisme a provoqué sur tous les continents un intérêt extrêmement grand et très profond. Les débats qui se sont déroulés ici montrent que toutes les délégations entendent intervenir dans cette question brûlante, vitale, qui est la plus importante actuellement.

30. Le représentant de la Belgique, pour affaiblir l'impression considérable que l'examen de cette question exerce sur l'opinion publique de tous les pays, s'efforce maintenant de détourner l'attention par des allusions diverses à des événements qui se sont produits dans différents pays, par suite de circonstances historiques déterminées résultant de la guerre, d'une guerre extrêmement dure qu'ont eu à supporter les peuples du monde entier et, en particulier, les peuples de l'Union soviétique. Cela étant, il veut détourner l'attention des problèmes que l'Assemblée générale examine actuellement et sur lesquels se trouve fixée l'attention du monde entier, et attirer l'attention sur des questions qui n'ont aucun rapport avec le point de notre ordre du jour.

31. Je voudrais prier le Président, tenant compte précisément de cette circonstance, de rappeler à l'ordre le représentant de la Belgique afin qu'il ne nous fasse pas perdre notre temps, étant donné que la question est d'une très grande importance. Nous pourrions, nous aussi, examiner beaucoup d'autres points en rapport avec les circonstances actuelles. Nous pourrions, s'il le fallait absolument, commencer dès maintenant un examen détaillé et circonstancié des activités de l'Administration belge au Congo. Mais cela fait l'objet d'une question particulière que nous discuterons demain à la séance du Conseil de sécurité convoquée pour le matin et, dans deux jours, l'Assemblée, en séance plénière, examinera la question de la situation au Congo et les actions manifestement illégales de l'Administration belge, du Gouvernement belge et des milieux dirigeants belges au Congo. Encore une fois, j'attire l'attention du Président sur la nécessité de rappeler à l'ordre le représentant de la Belgique.

32. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant de Ceylan qui a demandé à présenter une motion d'ordre.

33. M. PERERA (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé la parole pour appuyer la motion d'ordre du représentant de l'Union soviétique. En tant que co-auteur du projet de résolution...

34. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je me vois contraint de rappeler au représentant de Ceylan que la motion d'ordre soulevée par le représentant de l'Union soviétique doit être réglée par le Président lui-même. Les motions d'ordre ne font pas l'objet d'un débat. Dans ces conditions, je prie le représentant de Ceylan de me laisser me prononcer sur la motion d'ordre présentée par le représentant de l'Union soviétique; si, par la suite, le représentant de Ceylan juge nécessaire de présenter une autre motion d'ordre, je lui donnerai volontiers la parole. Pour le moment, toutefois, je ne puis le laisser poursuivre étant donné que c'est à la présidence qu'il appartient de se prononcer sur la motion d'ordre présentée par le représentant de l'Union soviétique.

35. M. PERERA (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'accepte la décision du Président, mais je voulais lui éviter de devoir prendre deux décisions. Il s'agit en effet de la même question. Peut-être pourrais-je préciser ma position comme suit: en ma qualité de co-auteur du projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add. 1 à 6] sur la liquidation du colonialisme, j'estime que le représentant du Gouvernement de la Belgique a formulé des allégations qui sont hors de propos et irrecevables.

36. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je voudrais revenir à la motion d'ordre présentée par le représentant de l'Union soviétique.

37. Je tiens à réitérer mon intention de permettre aux représentants qui ont la parole de présenter le point de vue de leur gouvernement. A cet égard, je leur demanderai instamment de faire preuve de discrétion, mais je ne peux pas retirer la parole à un représentant qui expose un point de vue. Je tiens à faire observer, en ma qualité de Président, que le représentant de la Belgique était en train de citer un texte et qu'en temps opportun le représentant de l'Union soviétique aurait eu la possibilité de faire usage du droit de réponse. Mais, je le répète, je ne puis retirer la parole au représentant de la Belgique, car celui-ci, en l'occurrence, ne fait qu'user de ce même droit qui est également garanti à chacun des membres de cette assemblée. Je prie donc le représentant de la Belgique de poursuivre son intervention.

38. M. PARISIS (Belgique): J'en ai terminé avec la citation du rapport de M. Gorkine, secrétaire du Présidium du Soviet suprême, et je n'ai rien à ajouter à cette citation, aucun commentaire à y apporter et je m'étonne de la susceptibilité de M. Rochtchine, qui n'a aucune commune mesure avec notre propre patience.

39. M. Rochtchine dit que le colonialisme a suscité l'intérêt le plus profond sur tous les continents. Enchaînant sur cette phrase, je dirai, au sujet du projet de résolution collectif, que la délégation belge ne peut que se déclarer favorable au principe fondamental dont procède cette proposition. Il s'agit, en effet, d'un principe dont la Belgique a récemment fait pleine application pour les raisons que je viens de formuler dans le cas du Congo et dont elle poursuit activement la mise en œuvre dans le cas du Ruanda-Urundi. Toutefois, ma délégation doit souligner que le projet de résolution comporte nombre d'inexactitudes, entre autres juridiques.

40. Nous réprouvons, comme les délégations qui se sont exprimées ici, les abus du colonialisme et autres sujétions. Nous croyons que la collaboration indispensable entre les peuples doit se développer dans un climat d'estime et de respect mutuels. Et, quoi que disent nos détracteurs, l'Assemblée générale peut être certaine que c'est cette honnête conviction qui nous a conduits à appeler nos frères congolais à l'indépendance.

41. M. LHEYET-GABOKA (Congo [Brazzaville]): En prenant la parole au sein de cette assemblée, je n'ai nullement la prétention d'apporter un remède, un appui, un apaisement au malaise éyqué au cours des multiples discours qui ont été prononcés ici au sujet du régime colonial. Bien au contraire. Les nombreux orateurs qui m'ont tour à tour précédé à cette tribune ont déjà tout diagnostiqué et ils ont, les uns comme les autres, mis le doigt sur l'incurable plaie du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et sous toutes ses aspirations. Ces orateurs ont dépouillé la vérité, une vérité chaude comme la chaleur, insipide, amère et difficile à digérer pour ceux qui sont passionnément attachés à la conquête des faibles et à leur soumission, aux colonies et à leurs richesses inépuisables, aux peuples dupes, éternels enfants voués à la servitude.

42. Les orateurs qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune ont donc mis le doigt sur la plaie purulente du colonialisme. Puisqu'il nous faut l'incinérer, ce colonialisme, puisqu'il nous faut l'acculer et le placer face à son image, puisqu'il nous faut débrider l'abcès dans l'arène de cette assemblée, puisque l'occasion nous est donnée de nous exprimer librement et franchement, on ne m'en voudra pas de déraciner à mon tour une touffe d'herbe sur la voie qui mène à la liberté, cette liberté qui est non pas une faveur que des peuples longtemps assujettis sollicitent de leurs prétendus maîtres, mais un droit inaltérable, un droit légitime, étant entendu que tous les hommes naissent libres et égaux, nonobstant la pigmentation de leur peau, leur niveau de civilisation, la grandeur ou la petitesse de leur nation, la position géographique de leur pays.

43. Aucune race ici-bas, qu'elle soit blanche, jaune ou noire, ne peut prétendre avoir un droit d'afresse vis-à-vis d'autres races afin de leur imposer sa volonté. Il n'y a que des gens accommodants, qui se targuent trop souvent de la limpidité de leur civilisation et qui, pour cela, se font passer pour les plus intelligents du monde, alors que l'intelligence n'a pas de baromètre. Naître dans un pays froid n'est pas une qualité qui vous donne droit à tout et naître dans un pays chaud n'est pas un atavisme qui vous prive de tout, même de la liberté.

44. Ne conviendrez-vous pas avec moi qu'un oiseau enfermé dans une cage s'en échappe pour reprendre librement son vol dans le ciel? Ne conviendrez-vous pas avec moi qu'un chien longtemps resté dans une niche aboie à gorge déployée pour réclamer sa liberté? Si des animaux, quelque instinctifs qu'ils soient, apprécient et comprennent la nécessité d'être libres et de disposer de leur existence comme ils l'entendent, comment des hommes ne connaîtraient-ils pas cette impérieuse nécessité, eux qui pensent?

45. Jeune, dépourvu d'expérience et d'initiative, tout enfant vit aux crochets de ses parents. Devenu grand, il quitte la demeure paternelle, s'élance dans le monde et va fonder son foyer loin de ceux qui l'ont élevé parce qu'il se sent libre de sa personne et de sa personnalité. Alors, est-ce au colonisé toujours colonisable que le colonisateur doit mesurer la liberté? Est-ce au pays des aveugles où les borgnes sont rois que rien ne commence et que rien ne finit? Est-ce en Afrique, en Asie, en Océanie, pour ne citer que ces trois parties du globe, que le colonialisme doit survivre éternellement? Est-ce vraiment en Afrique, en Asie, en Océanie qu'il faut continuer de nourrir et d'engraisser l'esclavagisme, l'impérialisme, le dogmatisme et tous leurs virus? Est-ce pour éviter la guerre froide, désarmer les nations et pacifier le monde entier qu'il faut soutenir le colonialisme? Je ne le pense pas. Tout, ici-bas, commence et finit et il n'y a que des naïfs pour espérer vivre plus longtemps que leur destin. Il n'y a que des aveugles pour ne pas voir où se lève et où se couche le soleil.

46. Naguère, on nous empoisonnait du venin sucré de la colonisation, la colonisation avec ses merveilles d'"Alice au pays des merveilles", ses seins dépourvus de lait, ses mandibules tranchantes qui coupent, lentement, mais plus sûrement qu'un bistouri. Naguère, nous regardions faire nos maîtres sans leur dire mot. Nos maîtres ont profité de notre mutisme pour se sucrer de nos richesses naturelles. Ils en ont profité pour piller nos villages et, en récompense — belle récompense! — ils nous ont appris à nager comme l'écrevisse et ils nous ont donné des outils, bon ou mauvais, sans nous montrer comment il fallait s'en servir.

47. Mais nous ne sommes plus au stade de la servitude, nous ne sommes plus de crédules enfants auxquels on fait éternellement croire à l'existence du père Noël; car ce temps-là est révolu et le colonialisme est partout dépassé. L'Afrique, l'Asie et l'Océanie ne sont plus le "sésame, ouvre-toi" des hommes qui, par leur propre malhonnêteté, leurs manières discourtoises et humiliantes, ont préparé des esprits aigris, des révolutionnaires pacifiques qui ne réclament que la libération de leur pays et de leur peuple du joug de l'occupation coloniale.

48. Hier, on nous a parlé en long et en large et avec emphase d'une nourrice qui s'appelait la colonisation. Aujourd'hui, cette nourrice est travestie sous le nom de "décolonisation". Il est beau, ce travestissement, ce néologisme qui est la suite de plusieurs événements fâcheux et regrettables. Qu'entendait-on hier par "coloniser"? Qu'entend-on aujourd'hui par "décoloniser"? Cette question-là trouvera sa réponse toute faite dans le cerveau de nos colonisateurs d'hier et de nos décolonisateurs d'aujourd'hui.

49. Je ne voudrais point m'attarder là-dessus, mais il convient de rappeler brièvement à nos rois soleils que coloniser, dans leur intention, cela voulait dire "diviser pour régner", cela voulait dire morceler les terres conquises et se les partager comme du gibier afin d'en tirer largement profit au détriment d'autres hommes qui, pourtant, leur sont égaux par la couleur de leur sang et par l'invisibilité de leur âme. Coloniser, cela voulait dire s'enraciner dans des pays qui ne leur appartenaient pas afin d'accaparer leurs richesses, d'opprimer leurs peuples jusqu'à les réduire à leur plus simple expression, à l'inexistence totale.

50. Bref, aujourd'hui enfin, on songe à décoloniser; et décoloniser, à mon humble avis de nègre — donc d'assujetti d'hier — c'est reconnaître ses erreurs passées, c'est faire son mea-culpa après avoir pillé et régné en maître, après avoir paralysé et immobilisé l'évolution des bêtes de somme. Décoloniser, c'est débarrasser l'Afrique, l'Asie et l'Océanie de la lourde et massive carapace du colonialisme. Décoloniser, c'est restituer la liberté aux peuples nés libres que l'on a, par pure présomption, longtemps condamnés à l'ignorance et à l'asservissement. Voilà enfin qui est grandeur et candeur!

51. Au moment où l'Organisation des Nations Unies aborde la question du colonialisme, nous devons nous dire qu'il existe, à travers le monde, des peuples colonisés, des peuples subjugués, dont les regards sont tournés vers nous. Ces peuples, africains ou européens, attendent de l'Organisation des Nations Unies une action positive qui les délivrera pour toujours du joug du colonialisme, système qui est une honte pour le XX^{ème} siècle, ce siècle où les armes nucléaires semblent une découverte surhumaine. J'entends dire que notre siècle est celui où l'homme a atteint la perfection. J'entends dire aussi que le moment est venu où les colonisateurs doivent comprendre le bien-fondé de nos cris, car la liberté des anciennes colonies ne doit pas être la cause d'effusions de sang et de deuils, en ce siècle où l'homme a conquis la science et rivalise d'invention avec le Créateur.

52. Convaincus que la décolonisation ouvrira largement les portes de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, la délégation de la République du Congo saisit cette occasion pour renouveler sa reconnaissance à la France et à son président, le général de Gaulle, qui a vite compris que maintenir en ce siècle les peuples dans un système périmé était contraire au principe qui veut que tout peuple doit disposer de lui-même.

53. La délégation de mon pays tient également à féliciter tous les Etats africano-asiatiques qui ont œuvré en 1955 à Bandoung et ont dénoncé tous les colonialismes. En conséquence, le peuple congolais exprime sa gratitude à ceux qui ont contribué et contribuent à la condamnation du régime colonialiste. Le peuple congolais est fier de pouvoir s'associer aujourd'hui librement aux combattants pour la liberté de tous les peuples. Il n'y a pas longtemps encore, mon pays était une colonie française. D'éminents orateurs ont stigmatisé à cette tribune, avec une vigoureuse éloquence, tout ce qu'est le colonialisme. L'Africain que je suis, le Congolais que je suis, a trop connu les affres d'un colonisé pour ne pas s'associer à tous ceux qui, épris de liberté, mènent une âpre lutte pour mettre un terme, et de façon définitive, au régime colonialiste.

54. Les événements politiques qui, depuis peu, se sont accélérés à une cadence heureuse, permettant à de nombreux Etats africains d'accéder à l'indépendance, ont donné lieu, pendant l'année 1960, à des actes d'autant plus mémorables que cette année sera l'année de la renaissance de l'histoire d'Afrique. Il convient, en la circonstance, de reconnaître qu'un grand pas a déjà été fait vers la liberté des pays et des peuples colonisés; mais il convient encore plus de souligner que, dans l'avenir, la décolonisation devra se faire sans masque et sans hypocrisie. Car nous avons également la ségrégation raciale à combattre sérieusement et à inhumer pour toujours.

55. Il y a un pays, le Cabinda, qui ne connaît pas la liberté. En effet, bien qu'on dise que le soleil luit pour tout le monde, le peuple du Cabinda végète encore sous le régime du colonialisme. Ses occupants étrangers, pour éblouir le monde, veulent qu'on le considère comme une portion de province portugaise, alors qu'en réalité une marge notable existe entre les colonisateurs et les colonisés de ce pays. Je ne veux pas entrer dans les détails, mais j'attire simplement l'attention de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sur une situation qui, certes, va nous coûter encore du sang et des deuils en Afrique. De 1946 à 1958, d'après une disposition de la Constitution française de 1946, nous, Congolais, étions citoyens français. Mais cela n'a pas empêché la France de nous donner l'indépendance. Ce qu'a fait la France, d'autres nations peuvent le réaliser, surtout que ces nations se réclament du christianisme.

56. Mais, si l'on trouve en Afrique des peuples qui subissent encore le joug du colonialisme, il ne faudrait pas oublier qu'il existe dans d'autres parties du monde des pays qui ne connaissent pas non plus la liberté. Même en Europe, qui se targue de sa fière civilisation, on recense des peuples qui certainement, à l'heure où nous parlons, envient le sort des Etats africains admis à l'indépendance. Nous ne devons pas oublier ces pays dont les cris sont étouffés et ne peuvent, par conséquent, nous parvenir. Qu'attendent donc leurs colonisateurs pour les décoloniser?

57. Je ne voudrais pas être le défenseur avisé de la France au sein de cette assemblée. Je sais que cette nation, comme toutes les autres nations civilisatrices, a certes commis de graves erreurs dans les pays qui étaient sous son occupation coloniale. Mais laissez-moi souligner en passant sa grandeur, du fait qu'elle a su en temps opportun libérer ses colonies d'Afrique après les avoir initiées à une maturité politique indéniabla, après leur avoir fait gravir les étapes de l'indigénat, de la loi-cadre d'où est née l'autonomie interne et enfin de l'indépendance.

58. La noblesse de cœur de la France est loin d'être égalée par d'autres nations civilisatrices qui s'accrochent jalousement à leurs colonies. La France n'a pas attendu une poussée extérieure pour reconnaître à ses anciennes colonies le droit à la liberté qui leur était dû par elle. La France — je le vois par l'opinion publique, mais sans vouloir l'affirmer ni placer la charrue avant les bœufs — n'attendra plus longtemps pour décoloniser l'Algérie; j'ai personnellement confiance en sa bonne foi et en sa grandeur, quoi qu'on en dise. La France n'attendra pas le moment le plus catastrophique, comme le Portugal qui s'entête à gouverner avec une baguette magique le Cabinda qu'il maintient sous le joug de ses préjugés. La France n'a pas attendu l'heure fatale comme la Belgique qui, par son obstination et sa grande envie de vouloir dominer jusqu'à l'éternité, a porté des monstres sur ses épaules et a fait du Congo (Léopoldville) un vaste champ de rixes, de massacres, de guerre fratricide et de violences insensées.

59. La liberté n'est pas une vile marchandise qui se vend sur tous les marchés du monde, au prix du sang devenu monnaie courante à notre époque. Elle représente un droit inné; nul, ici-bas, ne peut prétendre être son maître pour la retirer ou la donner à son gré. A bas le colonialisme! a bas le dogmatisme, a bas les impérialistes et les capitalistes qui pillèrent l'Afrique, ma terre natale, devenue la risée des autres nations!

60. J'en ai terminé, mais je dois déclarer, en concluant, que la délégation du Congo (Brazzaville) votera sans réserve pour le projet de résolution qui nous est soumis [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] et souhaite vivement que la décolonisation s'accélère pour permettre à tous les peuples de vivre libres et indépendants.

M. Liu (Chine), vice-président, prend la présidence.

61. M. N'GOUA (Gabon): Ma délégation, qui représente un Etat indépendant, ancien territoire colonial, ne saurait rester muette sur l'importante question du colonialisme qui est actuellement l'objet de nos débats. Je serai bref, d'une part pour éviter la répétition à laquelle se livrent certains orateurs et, d'autre part, parce que je ne veux pas abuser de la confiance de l'Assemblée. Mais je ne veux pas laisser passer l'occasion qui m'est offerte de faire connaître le point de vue de mon pays.

62. Dans son dernier rapport, le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes a constaté que:

"...les Etats Membres administrants, comme tous les autres Etats Membres, sont d'accord pour reconnaître que les populations des territoires non autonomes sont toutes en droit d'accéder, sur un pied d'absolue égalité et sans distinction de race, de couleur ou de religion, à une indépendance complète, ou, si elles le préfèrent, à une forme d'autonomie complète librement choisie et que c'est à elles-mêmes qu'il appartiendra de déterminer leur futur statut^{4/}."

63. Voici clairement défini le principe de base sur lequel, je veux l'espérer, tout le monde ici est d'accord. En donnant son approbation à ce principe, le représentant du Gabon n'a pas cependant l'impression d'enfoncer une porte ouverte, car il a pu constater au cours des discussions qui se sont déroulées en commission que des divergences de vues existaient sur différents points, notamment en ce qui concerne la forme qu'il convient de donner à cette évolution. Divergences parfois secondaires qui, en tenant compte des passions partisans, ont souvent obscurci le débat et fait perdre de vue l'essentiel, comme l'arbre peut, regardé sous un certain angle, cacher la forêt.

64. C'est pourquoi le Gabon tient à apporter sa contribution à l'apaisement des esprits en rappelant quelques vérités premières, vérités qui, cependant, ne sont pas inutiles à redire après tant de déclarations inspirées peut-être par des considérations politiques très élevées dans leurs principes, mais déformées bien souvent par ce que je pourrais appeler une certaine démagogie. Comme l'a si bien dit en commission, après tant d'autres, le représentant de l'Argentine, l'une des principales conditions à remplir pour que les territoires non autonomes évoluent d'une façon pacifique vers l'indépendance est l'existence de véritables cadres administratifs et techniques capables d'assurer le fonctionnement des services complexes que réclame la structure moderne de l'Etat. Il ne suffit pas à nos yeux, en effet, de réclamer à cor et à cri la libération immédiate de milliers d'êtres qui sont encore dépendants d'une façon ou d'une autre, il faut encore assurer les conditions de cette libération. On peut vouloir — et c'est un souci très louable — rapprocher plus ou moins la date de l'indépendance ou de l'autonomie, mais ce qui importe avant tout c'est de préparer les cadres de remplacement sans lesquels il n'existe pas d'indépendance valable et durable. Le régime colonial est dépassé et condamné, c'est un fait. Mais le problème qui se pose est de préparer les populations à assumer leurs nouvelles responsabilités. Ce n'est pas par la subversion, la haine et le déchaînement des passions politiques que cette tâche pourra s'accomplir.

65. J'ai cité, dans ma courte intervention en commission, l'exemple du Congo ex-belge. On peut discuter à perte de vue sur les causes du chaos actuel qui sévit dans ce malheureux pays. En tant qu'Africain, je souffre fraternellement en prenant chaque jour connaissance des nouveaux malheurs qui accablent cette jeune nation. Selon les options politiques de chacun, on peut insister plus ou moins sur les causes qui sont à la base de cette regrettable situation et rejeter sur l'influence de tel ou tel Etat, de telle ou telle idéologie politique, la responsabilité du désastre. Il n'en reste pas moins vrai — et je pense ne pas être le seul Africain à raisonner ainsi — que la cause principale de cet échec réside dans l'impréparation, disons mieux, dans l'improvisation de cette indépendance. Mon propos n'est pas ici d'insister sur les fautes qui ont pu être commises par la puissance responsable. Des observateurs impartiaux reconnaissent que des efforts louables avaient été accomplis par la Belgique. Mais il faut admettre, sans vouloir accabler celle-ci, que volontairement ou non la puissance coloniale n'avait pas suffisamment préparé le Congo à l'indépendance. La preuve de cette réalité a été malheureusement administrée par les douloureux événements que nous avons vécus. Mais il y a plus. Reportons-nous en effet au deuxième rapport d'activité de M. Dayal, représentant spécial du Secrétaire général au Congo. On y lit ce qui suit:

"Il existe des indices évidents d'un retour continu de Belges au Congo au cours des dernières semaines et, dans le cadre de ce retour, d'une participation croissante de Belges aux activités politiques et administratives, en qualité de consultants, de conseillers ou de fonctionnaires de l'exécutif." [A/4557, par. 39.]

M. Dayal poursuit en indiquant qu'une agence de recrutement existerait à Bruxelles, dont le but semble être d'aider à rétablir une administration civile de nationalité belge, principalement à l'échelon où sont prises les décisions importantes. L'exemple est donc ici frappant. On a voulu mettre les bouchées doubles et franchir au galop les étapes, monter trop vite l'échelle. Les échelons ont cassé et l'on se retrouve au même point, sinon beaucoup plus bas.

66. Ce sont ces graves inconvénients d'une indépendance accordée sans transition que les gouvernements de certaines puissances coloniales ont essayé d'éviter. Ainsi, la plupart des Etats africains récemment admis ont accédé à l'indépendance sans heurt et sans à-coup et, si tout n'est pas encore parfait chez nous, les conditions d'un progrès durable sont entre nos mains. Nos nouveaux Etats sont solides et notre accession à l'indépendance, pour graduelle qu'elle ait été, n'en est pas moins sérieuse et sans appel. Qu'il suffise de rappeler, par exemple, les étapes par lesquelles notre Gabon est passé. Du régime colonial, qui s'est appelé l'Empire français, aux constructions de l'Union française, puis à la loi-cadre plus libérale — transformant ce qui était une colonie en un territoire jouissant déjà d'une large autonomie, avec son parlement et son gouvernement — pour aboutir enfin à la proclamation de la République gabonaise, intervenue récemment, et à la consécration suprême que fut l'entrée de notre pays dans cette organisation.

67. On a pu ainsi parler d'une décolonisation parfaitement réussie. Je ne pense pas qu'on puisse sérieusement le contester sur les plans juridique et politique: notre liberté et notre indépendance sont réelles. Par contre, on a pu dire avec raison que, sur le plan économique, l'inégalité subsiste. Nous en sommes conscients. Nous savons qu'il nous faudra, dans un proche avenir, nous acheminer vers des structures économiques plus satisfaisantes, comportant un secteur industriel suffisant. Nous savons qu'il est souhaitable que nous nous éloignons des économies de monoproduction, particulièrement vulnérables, et que nous obtenions des termes de l'échange plus équitables afin de ne pas être lésés dans le commerce international. Nous savons tout cela.

68. Mais nous savons aussi que nos pays sont insuffisamment développés et que nos besoins en capital technique sont grands. Nous avons également, en attendant la formation des cadres nationaux, un grand besoin de l'assistance technique internationale, qu'elle soit bilatérale ou multilatérale, dans le cadre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Or, nous avons eu le sentiment, en écoutant certains représentants, que ces nécessités étaient parfois perdues de vue et que l'octroi d'aide à des pays sous-développés comme le nôtre était parfois considéré comme une manifestation de néo-colonialisme parce qu'il consacre l'inégalité entre le pays assistant et le pays assisté. Je tiens donc à dire, au nom de mon pays, que l'on ne saurait qualifier de néo-colonialisme une aide économique ou une assistance technique quelle qu'elle soit, si elle est accordée sans souci de domination, c'est-à-dire sur des bases équitables, dans le respect de notre liberté et de notre indépendance.

69. Mon pays a tenu à s'associer au dépôt du projet de résolution sur la décolonisation [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] et cette initiative est toute naturelle. Fier de son indépendance et pénétré des principes de liberté, il ne peut que souhaiter que tous les peuples, sans exception, bénéficient de ces biens suprêmes que sont la liberté et l'indépendance, non seulement en Afrique, mais sur tous les continents.

70. Mais il me paraissait aussi de mon devoir — et je pense que l'Assemblée partagera ce sentiment — de rappeler combien il est nécessaire que cette indépendance ne soit pas exposée aux fléaux qu'engendre l'improvisation. Nous nous méfions certes de ces adversaires de la liberté qui ont tendance à considérer qu'il est toujours trop tôt pour provoquer les évolutions nécessaires. Non, le mouvement d'émancipation est irréversible. Mais nous ne voudrions pas que nos frères d'Afrique ou d'ailleurs qui vivent encore sous une tutelle étrangère soient livrés sans préparation et sans moyens aux tâches redoutables qui s'imposent aux jeunes Etats. Cette sorte de politique du pire reviendrait, en fait, à les faire passer de la domination étrangère à la tyrannie de l'anarchie où périssent tout à la fois les libertés et les promesses de bien-être. Il faut donc accélérer le processus de libération mais, parallèlement, hâter la mise en place des cadres et des moyens sans lesquels la liberté accordée ne serait que nominale et sombrerait dans le chaos. Car nous savons bien que la confusion ainsi créée frustrerait les peuples à peine émancipés des biens qu'ils sont en droit d'attendre, tout en laissant le champ libre aux influences les moins avouables.

71. M. ILLUECA (Panama) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation du Panama a voté, tant au Bureau de l'Assemblée qu'en séance plénière, pour l'inscription à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée du point 87 relatif à l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Cette attitude correspond à une position politique à laquelle la République de Panama s'est invariablement tenue depuis la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, afin de donner tout son sens au principe du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, au respect de l'intégrité et de l'indépendance des pays, à l'exercice des droits et des libertés fondamentales de l'homme, en un mot afin d'obtenir, par des moyens pacifiques, l'élimination du colonialisme. A cet égard, qu'il me suffise de rappeler que le Panama a été le pays qui a eu l'honneur de présenter à la Conférence de San Francisco le premier projet de déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme que l'Organisation ait examiné.

72. L'un des faits saillants de l'histoire de l'Amérique latine est la lutte menée pour défendre un idéal fondamental, au nom duquel combattait le libérateur Simón Bolívar, savoir la garantie de l'indépendance politique et de l'intégrité territoriale des Etats américains, ce qui a eu pour conséquence la condamnation du prétendu droit de conquête. Il convient de signaler que, dans le Traité d'union, ligue et confédération perpétuelle qui avait été élaboré au Congrès de Panama réuni par Bolívar en 1826, la question de la garantie de l'intégrité territoriale et de l'indépendance politique des Etats américains s'était déjà posée. C'est là qu'ont été jetées les bases du système régional américain actuel, et c'est là qu'on peut trouver les antécédents de notre organisation mondiale.

73. La pensée des hommes d'élite de notre région se retrouve dans les conférences panaméricaines qui ont commencé à se réunir à la fin du siècle dernier. Je me permettrai de citer quelques exemples. Dans la résolution adoptée le 18 avril 1890 par la première conférence, tenue à Washington, il était indiqué que le principe de la conquête était définitivement éliminé du droit public américain et, en outre, que toute cession de territoire serait considérée comme nulle si elle s'était effectuée sous la menace de la guerre ou sous la pression des forces armées.

74. La septième conférence internationale américaine, qui s'est tenue à Montevideo en 1933, a consacré, dans l'article 11 de la Convention sur les droits et les devoirs des Etats, une doctrine fondamentale du droit public américain. Cet article contenait les dispositions suivantes:

"Les Etats contractants consacrent de façon définitive, comme norme de leur conduite, l'obligation précise de ne pas reconnaître les acquisitions de territoires ou d'avantages spéciaux obtenus par la force, qu'elle consiste en l'emploi des armes, en représentations diplomatiques comminatoires ou en tout autre moyen de coaction effective. Le territoire des Etats est inviolable et il ne peut pas faire l'objet d'occupations militaires, ni d'autres mesures de force imposées par un autre Etat, ni directement ni indirectement, ni pour un motif quelconque, ni même de manière temporaire."

75. A notre avis, la pensée de Bolívar se trouve correctement formulée dans la résolution 96 de la dixième conférence interaméricaine (Caracas, 1er-28 mars 1954), qui réaffirme le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et exprime la volonté des Etats américains de mettre définitivement un terme au colonialisme ainsi qu'à l'occupation de territoires par des puissances étrangères.

76. Conscient de ce passé historique, mon pays vient aujourd'hui, à cette tribune, réaffirmer sa foi dans la démocratie et exprimer, par mon intermédiaire, son intention de favoriser, dans la mesure de ses possibilités et avec les moyens offerts par l'Organisation des Nations Unies, la réalisation des intentions définies dans la Charte, afin que les pays et les peuples qui se trouvent encore sous la domination coloniale obtiennent leur indépendance. Nous croyons sincèrement que ces nouvelles entités politiques exerceraient une influence bienfaisante, car elles contribueraient à créer l'atmosphère de paix, d'harmonie, de cordialité et de confiance dont le monde d'aujourd'hui a besoin pour évoluer vers une paix vraiment créatrice qui mette la science au service du progrès, de la sécurité et du bien-être de l'être humain dans le monde entier.

77. En nous engageant dans cette voie, nous pourrions envisager un avenir plus prometteur d'où seraient exclues les menaces de guerre et de luttes intestines et où, en revanche, s'affirmerait l'indépendance des Etats, grands ou petits, qui, en se réclamant du principe de l'égalité souveraine, sont tout disposés à prendre part à une œuvre de coopération internationale saine et bien dirigée en vue de résoudre les graves et angoissants problèmes d'ordre économique et social qui affectent de vastes groupes de populations en diverses régions du monde.

78. En dépit des incidents et des polémiques auxquels il peut donner lieu, le présent débat aura un aspect constructif. Nul ne doute en effet que le colonialisme, en tant que régime de domination politique et économique, a perdu toute sa vigueur. Les plus grands historiens contemporains vont même jusqu'à affirmer que, dans un avenir assez rapproché, le nationalisme — c'est-à-dire la phase suivante — qui paraît solidement installé aujourd'hui, cédera à son tour le pas à un nouveau système de gouvernement mondial d'où disparaîtront toutes frontières et toutes lignes de démarcation politique.

79. Je n'ai pas l'intention de me lancer ici dans des digressions de caractère historique ou philosophique. Je me bornerai donc à faire quelques observations sur la question qui nous occupe. Le colonialisme, en tant que régime dont l'influence s'est fait sentir sur l'histoire de nombreux peuples, ne peut pas faire l'objet de généralisations. Par souci de justice, il convient d'examiner chaque cas séparément. Certaines puissances métropolitaines ont su appliquer une politique avisée qui, avec le temps, a permis de parvenir à des associations volontaires et d'établir des relations harmonieuses entre les anciennes colonies et la métropole. On ne peut méconnaître la contribution que ces puissances ont apportée à la cause de la communauté internationale. En revanche, d'autres puissances ont pratiqué au cours de l'histoire un colonialisme condamnable à tous égards, ont fait de ce régime un instrument de régression, de cruauté et d'exploitation et n'ont pas laissé un agréable souvenir dans la vie des populations intéressées. Néanmoins, la culture et la religion ont joué un rôle important dans le rétablissement de relations harmonieuses entre les peuples indépendants et leurs anciens oppresseurs.

80. Il est juste de reconnaître que l'Organisation des Nations Unies a accompli une œuvre d'une exceptionnelle importance en favorisant le progrès politique, économique, social et culturel des habitants des territoires assujettis et en les acheminant progressivement vers l'indépendance. Dans cette tâche, le régime de tutelle des Nations Unies, quelles qu'aient été ses limitations, a joué un rôle dont on ne saurait exagérer l'importance, et les résultats obtenus en font foi. Parmi les Etats indépendants qui sont aujourd'hui si honorablement et si dignement représentés à cette assemblée, nombreux sont ceux qui ont accédé à l'indépendance grâce au régime de tutelle des Nations Unies.

81. C'est pourquoi nous sommes extrêmement surpris de trouver dans le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux [A/4502], présenté à l'Assemblée générale par le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, la phrase suivante:

"Le régime de tutelle ne s'est justifié nulle part; il faut donc l'enterrer en même temps que tout l'anachronique système colonial."

82. Ma délégation ne croit pas qu'à l'égard du régime de tutelle, une affirmation si violente soit justifiée ni par les faits, ni par le raisonnement. Depuis 15 ans, l'Union soviétique est membre permanent du Conseil de tutelle. Elle connaît donc l'œuvre accomplie et menée à bonne fin par ce conseil; non seulement elle a participé à ses travaux, mais elle y a voté en chaque occasion, et y a travaillé en coopération avec les Etats-Unis, le Royaume-Uni, la France, la Chine et d'autres Etats Membres.

83. Le régime de tutelle ne peut être enterré d'une seule phrase, si sonore soit-elle. Enterrer signifie donner une sépulture à quelque chose qui est sans vie, ou encore anéantir quelque chose qui est en vie. Si ce que l'Union soviétique propose par ce projet de déclaration, c'est d'annuler, de liquider le régime international de tutelle pour le faire disparaître de la structure de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, elle devrait juridiquement avoir recours au Chapitre XVIII de la Charte, qui traite des amendements à la Charte. Mais nous nous trouverions alors devant une contradiction. En effet, jusqu'ici, il a été impossible de reviser la composition du Conseil de sécurité et du Conseil économique et social en raison de l'opposition faite par l'une des grandes puissances dont le vote contraire équivaut à un veto à l'encontre de toute intention de ce genre.

84. Le jour n'est pas loin où tous les pays et tous les peuples non autonomes auront accédé à l'indépendance. Alors, mais alors seulement, les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte cesseront d'être pertinents, le Conseil de tutelle n'aura plus de raison d'être et il disparaîtra en vertu des dispositions de cette même charte, puisqu'il n'y aura plus alors d'autorités chargées de l'administration de territoires sous tutelle, ni d'accords de tutelle. Néanmoins, tant que tous les peuples ne seront pas parvenus à cet idéal d'autonomie et d'indépendance, il faudra au contraire renforcer le système mis en œuvre par l'ONU afin d'atteindre les objectifs supérieurs de la Charte.

85. L'expérience acquise par le Conseil de tutelle montre qu'il faut plutôt renforcer qu'affaiblir le système des Nations Unies appliqué aux territoires non autonomes et le régime international de tutelle, dont traitent les Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte, afin de faciliter — comme le dit le projet de résolution présenté par les Etats africano-asiatiques

[A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] — dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, le transfert de tous les pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires pour leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes.

86. Il est certain que le Chapitre XI de la Charte a fait l'objet d'ardentes controverses depuis qu'il a été adopté à San Francisco. La déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes qui figure dans la Charte signifie que les puissances coloniales ont accepté des obligations générales très larges leur faisant un devoir de favoriser, dans toute la mesure possible, le bien-être des populations des territoires non autonomes qu'elles sont chargées d'administrer, ainsi que d'assurer le progrès de leurs libres institutions politiques. Toutefois, le texte des dispositions de la Charte tel qu'il a été rédigé est entaché d'une imperfection, non seulement parce qu'on a négligé d'établir d'une manière précise les moyens permettant de rendre effectives les obligations des puissances administrantes, mais encore parce qu'on n'a pas non plus défini les fonctions de l'Organisation des Nations Unies en ce qui concerne l'exécution des engagements contractés par les Etats Membres.

87. Il aurait peut-être été plus constructif de tenir compte, sur ce point, des recommandations de certains experts comme les professeurs Grenville Clark et Louis B. Sohn qui, dans la seconde édition de leur livre intitulé World Peace Through World Law, publié cette année même, en 1960, par Harvard University Press, recommandent de remanier l'Article 73, afin de préciser les obligations assumées par les Etats Membres à l'égard des territoires non autonomes qu'ils sont chargés d'administrer, et de reviser complètement l'Article 87, afin d'élargir la responsabilité et l'autorité de l'Assemblée générale et du Conseil de tutelle à l'égard des nombreux territoires non autonomes qui n'entrent pas dans la catégorie des territoires sous tutelle.

88. Je voudrais maintenant me référer au projet de résolution que le représentant du Honduras a soumis à notre examen [A/L.324]. Il se peut que le projet du Honduras, qui a été présenté à cette assemblée par un pays souverain animé de bonnes intentions, ait été inspiré par le souci de renforcer l'influence que peut exercer l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans le processus d'émancipation des territoires sous tutelle et non autonomes. Sans méconnaître les bonnes intentions qui animent notre collègue du Honduras, ma délégation se réserve le droit de formuler quelques observations au sujet de ce projet au cours d'une prochaine intervention, si les circonstances le justifient.

89. Le paragraphe 5 du projet de déclaration présenté par les pays africano-asiatiques [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] est ainsi conçu:

"5. Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance, ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

90. Ma délégation se demande quelles seraient ces mesures immédiates dont le projet de résolution des pays africano-asiatiques prévoit l'adoption. Le document ne le dit pas. Il est indiqué clairement que le transfert de tous les pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires doit se faire conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés. Quels instruments juridiques seront appliqués dans le processus de cette consultation populaire? Cette question relèverait-elle exclusivement de la juridiction intérieure de la puissance administrante, ou au contraire appartiendrait-il à l'ONU d'exercer une surveillance internationale sur le processus de consultation? Ce sont là des problèmes qui devront être examinés et qui ne peuvent naturellement pas être réglés instantanément, par une simple formule magique. L'objectivité et l'esprit d'analyse s'imposent pour appliquer des mesures pratiques qui permettent réellement à l'ONU de favoriser le mouvement en faveur de l'indépendance des territoires sous tutelle et des territoires non autonomes.

91. La complexité de la question dont nous sommes saisis n'échappe pas à ma délégation qui, d'autre part, comprend bien qu'une déclaration de cette nature ne saurait embrasser tous les détails pratiques des aspirations qu'elle consacre. Nous devons reconnaître que cette déclaration, à elle seule, ne sera pas suffisante et que, dans le cadre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, nous devons continuer à travailler pour la liberté des peuples assujettis, en suivant des méthodes pacifiques pour le plus grand bien de toute la communauté internationale.

92. Ma délégation ne peut appuyer le projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502] dans la forme où il a été présenté à notre assemblée, car il renferme des éléments qui ne sauraient nous rapprocher de solutions harmonieuses et pacifiques. Nous ne voulons pas qu'une question d'une importance aussi exceptionnelle soit imprégnée de l'esprit de polémique et d'hostilité si pernicieux qui caractérise la guerre froide.

93. J'ai déjà déclaré précédemment que les petites puissances doivent constituer une véritable force de médiation et d'entente entre les grands blocs antagonistes. Dans cet esprit, nous considérons avec la plus grande sympathie le projet de résolution commun présenté à l'Assemblée par les délégations des pays africano-asiatiques.

M. Illueca (Panama), vice-président, reprend la présidence.

94. M. NIMNANHEMINDA (Thaïlande) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai constaté avec grand plaisir que l'Assemblée générale avait accepté à l'unanimité [903ème séance] la proposition du représentant de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques visant à examiner en séance plénière la question irritante et lourde de conséquences du colonialisme, plutôt que de la renvoyer à la Première Commission. Sur ce point, je suis heureux de constater que, pour une fois, ma délégation est en parfait accord avec celle de l'Union soviétique. La question a maintenant assez mûri pour être portée devant l'Assemblée, qui devra l'examiner avec la plus grande attention.

95. Ma délégation tient à déclarer officiellement qu'elle appuie sans réserve le projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] présenté par l'Afghanistan, la Birmanie et d'autres Etats Membres, et qu'elle votera pour ce texte et tout ce qu'il représente.

96. Nous sommes l'une des rares nations d'Asie qui, on ne sait trop comment, ont réussi à échapper à l'emprise du colonialisme ou de l'impérialisme, aussi bien de l'Est que de l'Ouest, pendant les 700 dernières années de son existence de nation distincte et lorsque les Thaïs se furent finalement installés sur leur territoire actuel. Je suis certain que notre expérience passée, c'est-à-dire la façon dont nous avons appris à esquiver le mal ou à temporiser avec lui lorsqu'il devenait inévitable — et tout le monde, je crois, s'accorde à reconnaître que le colonialisme est un mal — peut présenter un intérêt pour certains d'entre nous ici aujourd'hui, qui ont, ou qui auront, peut-être à s'occuper de cet aspect néfaste du colonialisme.

97. Comme vous le savez, mon pays s'appelle en français Thaïlande. Dans notre langue, nous l'appelons "Pratate Thai" ou "Muong Thai", ce qui signifie "pays des hommes libres". Comme ce nom l'indique, l'idée de liberté et d'indépendance est toujours présente à l'esprit de notre population, et c'est toujours avec sympathie que nous considérons la masse de nos frères qui sont encore privés de leur droit naturel, le droit d'être libres et maîtres de leur propre destinée. Le fait que nous avons toujours été libres nous prépare d'autant mieux à comprendre les désirs et les aspirations de nos frères moins fortunés. Dans nos contacts avec de nombreux peuples étrangers, nous sommes souvent interrogés sur la date à laquelle nous fêtons notre indépendance et nous sommes toujours embarrassés pour répondre à cette question. Nous n'avons pas chez nous de fête de l'indépendance; pour nous, chaque jour est la fête de l'indépendance.

98. Vous penserez peut-être que je me laisse entraîner par mes sentiments; permettez-moi donc maintenant de définir clairement ma position. Les efforts que nous avons déployés dans le passé pour défendre notre indépendance et écarter ou éviter la domination étrangère ou le colonialisme nous ont contraints à subir des épreuves, des privations, des restrictions quasiment infinies, et à faire preuve de renoncement et de sacrifice personnel jusqu'à la limite de nos forces. Nous avons dû souvent faire preuve d'une patience inépuisable et faire taire notre fierté devant des provocations graves et irritantes.

99. J'estime cependant que, s'il n'est pas au-dessus des forces humaines d'accéder à la liberté et à l'indépendance, il est certainement plus difficile, après s'être complètement libéré de l'esclavage que constitue le colonialisme, de maintenir cette indépendance intacte et de la préserver pour les générations à venir. La circonspection, la prudence et un bon jugement sur soi-même sont constamment de mise, si on veut éviter de tomber dans d'autres maux beaucoup plus grands.

100. Permettez-moi de citer un exemple de la manière selon laquelle nous sommes parvenus à nous soustraire à l'expansionnisme et au mouvement impérialiste de notre puissant voisin du nord — qui n'est pas moins puissant aujourd'hui — puis à temporiser avec lui.

101. Vers le milieu du XIII^{ème} siècle de l'ère chrétienne, le grand empereur mongol qui régnait sur la Chine, Koubilaï khan, ordonna à son armée invincible d'attaquer les jeunes principautés thaïes de Nan Tchao, région maintenant connue sous le nom de province chinoise du Yun-nan. Au lieu de se soumettre servilement au joug chinois et d'accepter un colonialisme que nous abhorrons, les Thaïs de diverses branches préférèrent émigrer vers d'autres régions où ils pourraient respirer l'air de la liberté, aussi loin que possible de tout contact avec les Chinois. Certains allèrent se fixer dans ce qui est aujourd'hui l'Assam, en Inde; un groupe important s'installa dans les Etats chans de Birmanie et prit le nom de "grands Thaïs"; d'autres émigrèrent vers ce qui est aujourd'hui le Viet-Nam, tandis que le groupe le plus important parvenait jusqu'à des régions plus méridionales, dans ce qui est aujourd'hui la Thaïlande et le Laos.

102. Malgré toutes ces migrations massives, la soif de territoires du grand Koubilaï khan n'était pas encore assouvie. Il envoya plus tard des messagers dans ces colonies ou territoires pour exiger qu'ils paient tribut et reconnaissent sa suzeraineté. Des messagers analogues furent également envoyés à Sukhothai, alors capitale de la Thaïlande. Or, il est un proverbe thaï qui dit: "N'essaye pas de casser le manche de la cognée sur tes genoux", ce qui signifie évidemment qu'il ne faut pas tenter l'impossible en risquant par là même de se nuire. Le roi Ram Kamhaeng de Thaïlande mit donc alors en pratique pour la première fois ce que l'on appelle la diplomatie personnelle; il se rendit en personne à Pékin pour faire plus ample connaissance avec Koubilaïkhan et lui rendre l'hommage que devaient lui valoir son rang et son âge. Par ce geste gracieux, il gagna la faveur de l'empereur, qui, pour la première fois dans l'histoire, mit en œuvre un programme d'assistance technique lorsqu'il plaça à la disposition du roi Ram Kamhaeng un groupe d'experts en poterie qui l'accompagnèrent à son retour, enseignèrent à nos populations l'art du vernissage de la poterie et installèrent à Sangkaloke et à Sukhothai des fours où devait être fabriquée la poterie dite de Sangkaloke. Par la suite, cette fabrication prit une telle extension qu'on la retrouva sur des marchés aussi éloignés que Bornéo et la Perse.

103. Moins de deux siècles et demi après nous être installés dans le pays, nous avons commencé à attirer l'attention du monde extérieur: ce furent d'abord les premiers aventuriers portugais, des envoyés et des prêtres catholiques de cette nationalité. Ils furent toujours accueillis avec la cordialité et la tolérance conformes aux enseignements du bouddhisme. Des terres leur furent données où ils purent construire leurs camps et leurs églises, et un grand nombre d'entre eux entrèrent au service du roi en tant que canonnières.

104. L'arrivée des Hollandais, un peu plus tard, vint affaiblir l'emprise des Portugais et modérer leur arrogance. Après s'être solidement établis, les Hollandais commencèrent à faire pression sur nous. Par un traité signé en 1664, nous accordâmes aux Hollandais des monopoles pour divers produits de base et pour le transport maritime de nos produits vers d'autres pays. De leur côté, ils se chargèrent d'introduire en Thaïlande cette pratique si odieuse et dont on a fait par la suite un tel abus, l'exterritorialité.

105. Jugeant la présence des Hollandais et les pressions qu'ils exerçaient quasiment intolérables, les Thaïs cherchèrent alors du secours auprès des Français en établissant des relations diplomatiques avec Louis XIV qui, à plusieurs reprises, échangea des ambassadeurs avec notre roi Phra Narai. Toutefois, nous devions bientôt découvrir que les intentions des Français ne différaient guère de celles des Hollandais, à cette exception près que les troupes françaises stationnées dans notre pays y étaient beaucoup plus nombreuses. Ce n'est qu'en recourant opportunément à une version thaïe des fameuses Vêpres siciliennes que nous pûmes déjouer la première tentative faite pour établir un empire colonial français dans notre pays. A partir de ce moment et jusqu'à la chute d'Ayouthia en 1767, nos relations avec les pays occidentaux se limitèrent essentiellement à quelques échanges commerciaux avec des négociants de l'Occident agissant à titre privé.

106. En 1833, moins de 60 ans après que les Américains eurent rejeté le joug colonial et manifesté leur présence dans les échanges commerciaux de l'Asie, et 20 ans avant que le commodore Perry eût ouvert par la force le Japon au monde extérieur qui, à l'exception des Hollandais, en était jusque-là exclu, les Thaïs établirent des relations diplomatiques avec les Etats-Unis d'Amérique. A partir de 1855, des traités d'amitié et de commerce furent conclus avec le Royaume-Uni, la France et d'autres puissances occidentales.

107. Encore que nous ayons ouvert notre pays de notre plein gré avant d'avoir eu à subir aucune épreuve de force, nous ne sommes cependant pas sortis de l'épreuve coloniale indemnes et sans souillures. Afin d'éviter une extermination totale, nous avons dû conclure sous la contrainte d'innombrables traités arbitraires, injustes et inéquitables, sans clause d'expiration, perpétuant ainsi cette pratique odieuse de l'exterritorialité ainsi que les restrictions imposées à notre autonomie fiscale, qui nous interdisaient de percevoir sur les exportations et les importations un droit de plus de 3 pour 100 ad valorem. En outre, nos frontières subirent aussi, périodiquement, le contrecoup des rapacités voisines sous la forme dénommée par euphémisme "rectifications de frontières".

108. Pour le peuple thaï, l'exterritorialité était à la fois humiliante et injuste. Les restrictions fiscales ne nous permettaient pas de nous lancer dans les diverses réformes qui auraient été nécessaires, faute de revenus indispensables. Avant que la Thaïlande ne s'associe aux puissances coloniales, la superficie du pays dépassait 900.000 kilomètres carrés. Après 1907, cette superficie était réduite à un peu plus de 500.000 kilomètres carrés.

109. Pendant tout le XIX^{ème} siècle et encore longtemps après, la politique thaïe avait pour principe qu'il vaut mieux perdre une certaine partie du territoire que de perdre la totalité du pays: faute de grives, on mange des merles. Je crois qu'une histoire russe bien connue peut illustrer de façon pittoresque ce que fut notre politique de cette époque. Un certain gentilhomme russe avait entrepris un voyage d'affaires et se déplaçait dans une voiture tirée par quatre chevaux. Sur le chemin du retour, il fut poursuivi par une meute de loups affamés. Le gentilhomme pressait son attelage; cependant la meute se rapprochait. Pour se tirer d'embarras, il détacha l'un des chevaux afin de détourner, temporairement du moins, l'attention des loups. Le cheval fut vite dévoré et la meute hurlante reprit sa poursuite. Le gentilhomme détacha un autre cheval, puis le troisième, ce qui lui permit d'arriver en lieu sûr avec son dernier cheval. Point n'est besoin de tirer la morale de cette histoire, ni de vous importuner en vous révélant l'identité de ces méchants loups.

110. Nous pouvons maintenant respirer plus ou moins librement depuis que cet impudent pillage de terres, que ce colonialisme éhonté et sans fard est du domaine du passé. En Thaïlande, nous estimons que nous avons réussi de justesse à nous tirer de la gueule des tigres et des ours. Nous sommes fiers de la sagesse de nos ancêtres qui ont su choisir la meilleure part afin de préserver jusqu'à ce jour notre indépendance. En bouddhistes fidèles, nous restons attachés aux enseignements de notre maître, selon lequel "la haine ne cesse pas avec la haine, elle ne cesse qu'avec l'absence de haine, c'est une loi ancienne". Ainsi parlait Bouddha. Nous avons du monde une conception réaliste. Nous refusons de vivre dans le passé ou de nous tourner continuellement vers le passé. "A chose faite, point de remède", mais évitons à l'avenir de commettre des erreurs auxquelles nous aurions à remédier. Nous nous sommes fixé comme règle, et nous avons pris pour objectif d'instaurer pour notre population un régime où elle ne connaîtra ni la peur, ni la faim, ni la maladie, ni l'ignorance.

111. Le colonialisme d'autrefois est maintenant chose morte et, au sein de cette assemblée, nous sommes en train de clouer son cercueil. Pourtant, bien que le colonialisme avide de conquêtes territoriales ne soit plus de ce siècle, de ses cendres renaît un colonialisme nouveau comme dans l'histoire du phénix d'autrefois. Celui-ci est infiniment plus dangereux parce qu'il s'insinue avec cynisme; comme le royaume des cieux, il n'apparaît guère à nos regards. Il se présente comme une libération; il prêche un nouvel évangile de salut et annonce une ère nouvelle. Il veut se parer de la douceur de l'agneau, mais, pour ma délégation, il est infiniment plus dangereux que le colonialisme ancien en raison de son attrait idéologique trompeur. En entrant par une porte, il chasse la liberté par une autre. Je crois que le cas du Tibet moderne offre un exemple concret de ce que j'ai à l'esprit.

112. En conclusion, puis-je me permettre de poser une question: que gagnera un pays à conquérir son indépendance complète s'il perd son âme?

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1261

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]. La discussion qui s'est déroulée en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale sur la question de l'abolition totale et immédiate du système colonialiste montre à quel point il était opportun de saisir l'Assemblée de ce problème et combien il est indispensable que l'Organisation des Nations Unies prenne des mesures immédiates afin d'assurer la liberté et l'indépendance de tous les pays et de tous les peuples qui vivent encore sous la domination coloniale. Lorsque le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. N. S. Khrouchtchev, a présenté à l'examen de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale [869^e séance] la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, pour la première fois dans l'histoire de son existence l'Organisation des Nations Unies a été amenée à examiner dans toute son ampleur à la tribune suprême de l'Organisation — l'Assemblée générale en séance plénière — la question de la suppression des régimes coloniaux et de la libération immédiate des peuples coloniaux.

2. Il faut bien dire que les puissances coloniales n'ont pas accepté ce débat de leur plein gré; ils y ont été contraints par la pression vigoureuse des forces anticolonialistes. Tout le monde sait parfaitement qu'au cours de la période précédente de l'activité de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, les puissances coloniales ont toujours élevé des objections contre toute discussion de questions se rapportant à l'évolution politique des territoires non autonomes. Des Etats comme l'Espagne et le Portugal, se retranchant derrière diverses fictions d'ordre juridique, feignent, en général, de ne pas avoir de colonies et affirment qu'en somme il n'existe pas de colonialisme espagnol et portugais. La décision prise par l'Assemblée générale d'examiner la question de la liquidation du système colonial est en elle-même une victoire considérable des pays et des forces qui luttent contre la domination coloniale.

3. La délégation soviétique exprime sa reconnaissance aux représentants qui ont relevé, d'une part, l'initiative prise par le Gouvernement soviétique — et par M. N. S. Khrouchtchev personnellement — pour poser devant l'Assemblée générale la question de la liquidation du colonialisme, et, d'autre part, la lutte énergique que, dès 1917, l'Union soviétique a menée de façon suivie pour la libération de tous les peuples des pays coloniaux et des pays dépendants. Le cours même des événements exige que ce problème, venu à maturité, fasse l'objet d'un large débat et d'une solution équitable.

4. Certains représentants des puissances coloniales — parmi lesquels le représentant du Royaume-Uni — ont tenté d'affirmer qu'en réclamant l'adoption par l'Assemblée générale de la déclaration sur l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, l'Union soviétique se laisserait guider par on ne sait quels "motifs étrangers à la question" et tenterait d'en utiliser l'examen pour des fins qui lui sont particulières et pour attiser la "guerre froide". Pourtant, tous les représentants peuvent témoigner du fait que ce sont justement les représentants du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis, de la Belgique et d'autres pays colonialistes qui ont tenté d'imposer à l'Assemblée générale une polémique dans l'esprit de la "guerre froide" et de la détourner d'un examen sérieux et pratique du problème capital qu'est celui de l'abolition immédiate et totale du système colonial.

5. Il est certain que les objectifs de la délégation soviétique sont absolument opposés à ceux des puissances coloniales. Le Gouvernement de l'Union soviétique, en soumettant à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, n'a qu'un seul objectif: en finir immédiatement et résolument avec le colonialisme en octroyant la liberté et l'indépendance à toutes les colonies. C'est justement pour cela que la délégation soviétique s'intéresse à voir examiner cette question sérieusement et prendre des mesures efficaces pour arriver à la résoudre. Quant aux délégations des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la Belgique, du Portugal et à celles des autres pays coloniaux, elles s'efforcent de faire maintenir le régime colonial. Elles cherchent donc à noyer le problème du colonialisme dans une polémique remplie du pire esprit de la "guerre froide". Ce qui aurait fait le mieux l'affaire des colonisateurs, c'eût été d'arriver à empêcher l'Assemblée générale d'examiner cette question de façon concrète et de la résoudre en quelque manière que ce soit. Aussi se sont-ils efforcés de chauffer à blanc l'atmosphère de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, en introduisant dans nos discussions des éléments de "guerre froide"...

[L'orateur est interrompu par des cris provenant de la galerie du public.]

6. Voilà précisément un témoignage de la façon dont les Etats-Unis organisent une discussion sérieuse du problème colonial. C'est la meilleure preuve que l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne peut travailler sereinement sur le territoire des Etats-Unis puisqu'on organise, au moment des discussions, des incidents de caractère nettement provocateur.

7. Les débats sur la question coloniale montrent que ces manœuvres des colonisateurs ont abouti à un échec. Ils n'ont pas réussi à détourner l'attention de l'Assemblée générale du fond même du problème du colonialisme et à l'aiguiller sur des questions qui n'ont rien de commun avec le problème du colonialisme. A une majorité écrasante, les participants à la présente session, traduisant les nécessités imposées par l'évolution objective de l'histoire et considérant l'existence du système colonial comme une honte pour l'humanité, ont soutenu la proposition qui vise à liquider au plus tôt le colonialisme.

8. Au cours de la discussion, les représentants des pays socialistes et ceux d'un grand nombre d'Etats africains et asiatiques sont intervenus pour présenter une critique aussi fondée que convaincante des régimes coloniaux. Citant des faits et des exemples concrets, ils ont montré que le régime colonial non seulement freine l'évolution économique, sociale et culturelle des peuples coloniaux, mais encore accable, écrase et broie des millions d'individus, les prive de leur dignité humaine, les humilie et inflige aux peuples coloniaux des souffrances innombrables.

9. La pression des forces anticolonialistes est si forte à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale que les colonisateurs eux-mêmes n'osent pas intervenir franchement pour défendre les régimes coloniaux. Ils tentent de le faire sous forme camouflée en recourant à toutes sortes de manœuvres et de truquages, destinés à justifier le maintien de leur domination coloniale et font leurs efforts pour continuer le plus longtemps possible à retenir les pays coloniaux en état de dépendance. L'un des prétendus arguments que les colonialistes ou leurs sympathisants avancent en faveur du colonialisme consiste à prétendre que le colonialisme a apporté la civilisation moderne aux peuples qui lui sont assujettis et a enrichi leur culture, ce qui indique — comme nous l'a dit ici un orateur — une expansion du "génie créateur" de l'homme. Il va sans dire que ces exercices de rhétorique ont pour but de déformer la réalité historique ainsi que les motifs de la mainmise sur des colonies et de l'asservissement de peuples entiers par des puissances étrangères. Les amateurs de ce genre d'arguments s'efforcent de blanchir par tous les moyens l'histoire du colonialisme et de présenter l'affaire de telle sorte que l'on puisse croire à la pureté de conscience des colonisateurs qui n'auraient apporté aux colonies et aux ex-colonies que des bienfaits sans jamais y amener le malheur.

10. Pourtant, les colonisateurs savent fort bien que la mainmise sur d'énormes territoires en Asie, en Afrique et en Amérique latine, ainsi que l'asservissement des populations autochtones, ont été réalisés dans un but de lucre et de pillage des ressources naturelles et humaines de ces pays. L'histoire des conquêtes coloniales dans les différentes parties du monde — et, en particulier, en Afrique — montre combien d'injustices et de crimes ont été perpétrés par les colonisateurs à l'encontre des populations autochtones de ces continents. Cela a été bien dit dès la première moitié du XIX^{ème} siècle dans le livre de William Howitt sur la colonisation et le christianisme. Je citerai une phrase de ce livre:

"La barbarie et les cruautés éhontées dont les races prétendues chrétiennes se rendirent coupables dans toutes les parties du monde, à l'égard de tous les peuples qu'ils réussissaient à subjuguier, dépassent toutes les horreurs perpétrées à n'importe quelle époque historique et par n'importe quelle autre race, sans en exclure les plus sauvages, les plus ignorantes, les plus impitoyables et les plus éhontées!."

Voilà ce qu'on écrivait déjà au XIX^{ème} siècle.

11. Les défenseurs du colonialisme ont l'habitude de nier l'existence d'une quelconque civilisation africaine antérieure à l'arrivée des Européens. Même en ce qui concerne des civilisations telles que l'éthiopienne et l'égyptienne, on affirme souvent qu'elles furent fondées par des représentants de la race blanche. Toutes ces théories n'ont qu'un seul but — justifier le colonialisme, convaincre les Africains qu'ils ne possédèrent jamais une culture développée, qu'ils n'ont rien donné à l'humanité qui ait la moindre valeur et que seule la colonisation leur a apporté la culture et la civilisation. Une telle négation du passé culturel des peuples africains sert d'arme idéologique non seulement pour pouvoir souligner les "mérites" inexistantes des colonisateurs dans la propagation de la civilisation sur le continent africain, mais aussi pour que les peuples d'Afrique renoncent à toute aspiration nationale et supportent docilement le joug du colonialisme, que ce soit sous forme ancienne, classique, ou sous des formes nouvelles, des formes camouflées.

12. Ces théories, entièrement mensongères, n'ont toutefois rien de commun avec la vérité historique. Ces derniers temps, il est paru nombre d'études historiques objectives, faites par des savants de différents pays, lesquelles prouvent que, longtemps avant l'apparition du premier blanc sur le continent africain, les peuples de l'Afrique vivaient d'une vie indépendante, créaient leurs propres Etats, développaient leur culture originale, faisaient du commerce. C'est à ce genre d'études qu'appartient indubitablement le livre, paru à Londres en 1960, de Basil Davidson: Old Africa Rediscovered (Redécouverte de l'Afrique ancienne). Utilisant les données archéologiques les plus récentes, l'auteur présente une histoire détaillée de certaines régions encore peu étudiées de l'Afrique; il décrit, par exemple, la civilisation de Kousch et des villes célèbres de Napata et Meroë, d'où, huit siècles avant notre ère, sortirent de nouveaux instruments de travail et de nouvelles méthodes pour traiter les métaux. L'auteur parle aussi des anciens Etats du Soudan occidental: le Mali, le Ghana et le Sonrhaf qui, à l'époque de leur épanouissement, ne le cédaient en rien à maints Etats européens du Moyen Age. L'or de ces pays contribua largement au développement de l'économie européenne avant le début des grandes découvertes géographiques. L'auteur décrit d'une façon détaillée les antiques cités-Etats du littoral oriental de l'Afrique: Kilvou, Gédi, Mogadiscio et quelques autres qui, d'après le témoignage des Portugais, ne le cédaient en rien aux villes les plus florissantes de l'Europe. L'auteur d'une autre étude, Cheikh Anta Diop, montre dans son livre Nations nègres et culture 2/que, même au XVème siècle, l'organisation politique et sociale des Etats africains était souvent égale ou même supérieure à celle d'Etats européens.

13. Les malheurs des peuples du continent africain commencèrent lors de l'arrivée des marchands d'esclaves européens. En 1441, Lisbonne, capitale du Portugal, vit arriver le premier navire ayant à bord des Africains capturés pour être vendus comme esclaves. Depuis lors et durant près de quatre siècles, on emmena hors d'Afrique des millions d'esclaves, tandis que des masses énormes d'hommes trouvaient la mort tant dans des guerres tribales causées par la traite des esclaves qu'à la suite de raids armés de marchands d'esclaves. Ce fut une calamité incommensurable: le continent africain se dépeupla. L'économie et la culture tombèrent dans un état de dégradation complète. Le Dr Du Bois, historien connu — dont un trisaïeul fut capturé par les trafiquants d'esclaves sur les côtes guinéennes d'Afrique et emmené en Amérique —, écrit ce qui suit:

"Il ne serait pas exagéré de dire que le trafic d'esclaves coûta à l'Afrique noire 100 millions d'âmes et, malgré cela, on trouve aujourd'hui encore des hommes qui cherchent les raisons de la stagnation de la culture sur ce continent!"

14. Le XIXème siècle — époque du partage territorial de l'Afrique par les puissances coloniales européennes — fut l'ère des guerres coloniales et de la mainmise par les armes sur les terres africaines. Autant que cela leur était possible, les Africains opposèrent une résistance opiniâtre aux usurpateurs européens, résistance à laquelle les colonisateurs répondirent par l'envoi en Afrique d'armées entières, pourvues de moyens techniques et d'équipement de premier ordre pour l'époque. Durant plusieurs dizaines d'années, la terre africaine fut abondamment arrosée du sang de ses populations. Des centaines de milliers d'Africains périrent dans une lutte inégale, en défendant leur liberté.

15. Cette résistance héroïque des peuples d'Afrique aux envahisseurs étrangers fournit la preuve de la fausseté des déclarations des colonisateurs lorsqu'ils parlent de leur pénétration pacifique en Afrique. C'est le cas de la lutte des Matabélés et des Machonas, qui peuplaient le territoire situé entre les rives du Zambèze et du Limpopo, contre la conquête de leur territoire par la compagnie anglaise de Cecil Rhodes. De 1880 à 1890, les colonisateurs anglais déployèrent une grande activité pour mettre la main sur des terres de l'Afrique méridionale, riches en diamants, en or et en autres minerais; ce territoire fut d'ailleurs appelé par la suite Rhodésie, du nom de son conquérant. A cette époque-là, le territoire en question était le champ d'opérations de l'un des plus puissants groupements capitalistes anglais, représenté par Rhodes qui, en 1888, imposa à Lobengoula, roi des Matabélés, un accord à très vastes objectifs. En échange d'une petite rente, les Anglais reçurent le droit exclusif d'exploiter les minerais qui se trouvaient sur les territoires dépendant des Matabélés. Cet accord était une véritable tromperie à l'égard des Africains, car le roi et sa suite, étant analphabètes, ne soupçonnaient pas le sens véritable du document sous lequel le roi apposa de sa propre main une croix en guise de signature. Néanmoins, l'accord de 1888 servit au Gouvernement britannique de point de départ pour annexer purement et simplement les territoires des Matabélés et des Machonas. Lors des batailles qui s'ensuivirent, les mitrailleuses Maxim qu'utilisaient les Britanniques transformèrent en massacres les combats des colonisateurs contre les Africains. Rhodes lui-même fixait le chiffre des pertes des Matabélés à 3.000 hommes. Les Matabélés, vaincus, furent contraints de capituler et leurs territoires se transformèrent en une colonie qui reçut le nom de Rhodésie du Sud.

16. Dans cette nouvelle possession, les autochtones furent soumis à une cruelle exploitation. Leurs meilleures terres furent expropriées. Par décision de la commission agraire (comprenant des représentants du Gouvernement britannique et de la compagnie Rhodes), les Africains furent relégués dans des réserves. Pour donner une idée de ce qu'étaient ces réserves, il suffit de savoir qu'une partie s'en trouvait dans la région où la maladie du sommeil est la plus répandue et l'autre partie dans les zones de sécheresse.

17. Voilà donc quelques points d'histoire. Il y a plus de 60 ans que dure l'oppression coloniale de ce pays désigné du nom de l'homme qui l'a noyé dans le sang. La marche des événements, au cours de cette période, montre que les héritiers de Cecil Rhodes continuent sa ténébreuse activité. Quelle est donc la situation en Rhodésie du Sud, 60 ans plus tard? Comment le Royaume-Uni a-t-il contribué au développement de ce pays dans "l'intérêt" de la population africaine autochtone? Nul ne peut mieux connaître la situation que les autochtones eux-mêmes; aussi me permettrai-je de citer quelques fragments d'une brochure éditée à Londres en 1960 par le parti démocratique national de la Rhodésie du Sud. Dans cette brochure, nous lisons:

"Le moyen inventé pour priver les Africains de la possibilité de participer au vote a permis d'obtenir, à partir de 1923, une représentation exclusivement blanche au Parlement de la Rhodésie du Sud.

"Le résultat est que, depuis 1923, on édicte des lois despotiques et discriminatoires, dirigées contre les Africains. C'est ainsi qu'il y a actuellement 70.000 électeurs blancs et moins de 2.000 électeurs africains.

"Depuis 1949, 82.500 familles africaines ont été expulsées des terres dont elles sont originaires et 21.500 ont été exilées du bassin du Zambèze dans des régions spéciales. On s'attend que, vers 1962, tous les Africains qui vivent sur les terres dont ils sont originaires ou dans des endroits où vivent des Européens soient transférés dans les mêmes régions.

"D'après la loi qui régit les rapports entre le propriétaire et le travailleur africain, ce dernier dépend de l'Européen et est entièrement à sa merci. La loi ne l'autorise pas à quitter son travail s'il considère que son patron ne le traite pas bien ou qu'il le fait suer sang et eau sans rémunération convenable. Si le travailleur se met en grève, il est passible des poursuites pénales comme un criminel.

"Le totalitarisme, l'oppression et l'intimidation ont remplacé la liberté et la démocratie que l'on suppose être les attributs traditionnels du peuple britannique.

"La barrière de couleur reste telle qu'elle était avant 1953. On trouve partout des pancartes: "Réservé aux autochtones" ou "Réservé aux Européens". Jusqu'à présent, les Africains ne sont admis ni dans les cinémas, ni dans les hôtels, ni dans certains magasins. L'Africain reste victime de la discrimination tout comme il l'était il y a 10 ans."

Tout cela, ce sont des citations du même livre; il ne s'agit pas là de propagande soviétique, ainsi que se plaisent à le dire les colonisateurs; c'est le témoignage d'un parti politique de la Rhodésie du Sud.

18. Le cours même des événements confirme la justesse des paroles de Karl Marx, lorsqu'il disait que la profonde hypocrisie et la barbarie caractéristiques de la civilisation bourgeoise se montrent à nu lorsque cette civilisation est observée non dans les pays métropolitains, où elle revêt des formes respectables, mais dans les colonies, où elle apparaît sans aucun voile. A la lumière des faits qui se rapportent tant à l'histoire passée qu'à l'époque présente, on perçoit tout particulièrement l'hypocrisie et la tartuferie de ceux qui s'efforcent de blanchir le colonialisme et de le représenter comme l'entreprise la plus généreuse de chrétiens civilisés, entreprise vouée maintenant, on ne sait pourquoi, à la mort, et cela alors qu'elle est au comble de sa gloire, selon l'opinion de certains représentants.

19. S'efforçant de nous présenter la politique du Royaume-Uni sous un jour favorable, M. Ormsby-Gore a tenté de nous expliquer la situation de façon à faire ressortir que, du moins dans le siècle écoulé, le Royaume-Uni ne cherchait qu'à donner l'indépendance à ses colonies ou tout au moins, sans épargner aucun effort, à les préparer à l'indépendance. Mais la vérité historique, c'est que les colonisateurs n'ont jamais accordé et n'accordent jamais de plein gré l'indépendance aux peuples des colonies. Est-ce que les peuples de l'Inde, de la Birmanie, du Pakistan, du Ghana et d'autres Etats qui ont accédé à l'indépendance n'ont pas eu à conquérir cette indépendance dans une lutte opiniâtre avec les colonisateurs? Est-ce que les chefs des mouvements de libération nationale de ces pays n'ont pas passé de longues années dans les prisons anglaises et n'ont jamais subi de représailles? Les colonisateurs français n'ont-ils pas réprimé de la façon la plus féroce, la plus impitoyable, la lutte pour la libération des peuples de Madagascar et du Cameroun, de même qu'ils tentent de noyer dans le sang la lutte que mène, avec un courage à toute épreuve, le peuple algérien pour son indépendance et pour sa liberté?

20. Les colonisateurs ne se voient dans l'obligation de concéder l'indépendance aux colonies que lorsque le mouvement national pour la libération prend un élan tel que les puissances coloniales ne peuvent plus le maîtriser. C'est donc la lutte des peuples opprimés pour leur liberté et leur indépendance nationale et aussi le soutien de cette juste lutte par toutes les forces du progrès qui représentent les éléments les plus importants dans la libération des colonies.

21. Lorsqu'on entend des interventions comme celle de M. Ormsby-Gore, on ne peut que s'étonner. Toute l'histoire de la puissance coloniale britannique en Afrique, en Asie et dans toutes les régions du monde est remplie d'exemples de guerres coloniales, d'actes effroyables de justice sommaire dirigés contre la population autochtone. M. Ormsby-Gore aurait-il oublié qu'au cours de ces dernières années, l'armée et la police britanniques ont exterminé des milliers d'Africains, jeté des dizaines de milliers d'individus dans les prisons et dans les camps de concentration, au Kenya, au Nyassaland, en Rhodésie du Nord et du Sud et ailleurs? On sait que de 1952 à 1955 ont eu lieu au Kenya des répressions effroyables, au cours desquelles nombre d'habitants africains furent battus et fusillés. Utilisant comme prétexte le mythe (inventé par les colons britanniques) de l'activité terroriste de la société secrète des Mau-Mau, les colonisateurs britanniques ont voulu détruire le mouvement national pour la libération du Kenya et en terminer une fois pour toutes avec les forces patriotiques de ce pays. A la suite d'expéditions punitives, de rafles générales et d'une véritable chasse à l'homme, en 1955, plus de 11.000 Africains autochtones ont été tués et 62.000 — dont 14.000 femmes et 2.000 enfants — enfermés dans des camps de concentration. De nombreux habitants, des tribus entières, ont été expulsés et parqués dans des réserves stériles de régions éloignées. Les partis politiques africains au Kenya et, plus tard, au Nyassaland et en Rhodésie du Sud et du Nord, déclarés organisations "subversives", ont été interdits.

22. Les colonisateurs tiennent pour subversive toute lutte pour la liberté et l'indépendance, mais en même temps, ils déclarent hypocritement qu'ils favorisent — prétendent-ils — la libération des colonies. Il faut réellement avoir perdu tout sens moral pour parler ainsi au sein de l'Assemblée générale, en présence d'un grand nombre de personnes qui furent les victimes ou les spectateurs directs des crimes des colonisateurs, qui ont connu l'oppression, les répressions, les prisons et les camps de concentration installés dans leur propre pays.

23. L'arbitraire des colonialistes britanniques ne se limite point au territoire du continent africain. D'autres parties du monde conservent encore des restes de l'Empire colonial britannique, jadis si étendu, où les mouvements pour l'indépendance sont encore étouffés brutalement par la force. Il en est ainsi de la Guyane britannique, en Amérique du Sud. Le président du People's Progressive Party de la Guyane britannique, Cheddi Jagan, dans sa pétition à l'Assemblée générale de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, en date du 11 novembre 1960, cite un grand nombre de faits concernant l'oppression de la population locale par les colonisateurs britanniques. Ce document a été distribué à l'ONU. Tout en réfutant les affirmations des colonisateurs sur leur "noble mission civilisatrice", Jagan écrit:

"Les Guyanais sont excédés d'entendre dire que les métropoles ne conservent les colonies que dans l'intérêt même de leurs sujets coloniaux et que leur politique tend à amener toutes les colonies, pas à pas, à l'indépendance. Pots-de-vin, corruption, intrigues, duperie et la constante menace d'employer la force sont des phénomènes habituels. Les Guyanais peuvent-ils croire que ce sont là des moyens pour amener la liberté, la démocratie et créer une nouvelle nation?"

Le parti populaire progressiste de la Guyane britannique, présidé par M. Jagan, a milité inlassablement — dès sa création en 1950 — en faveur de l'octroi de l'indépendance politique. Lors des élections à l'Assemblée, en 1953, ce parti obtint 18 sièges sur 24.

Mais quelques mois plus tard, le parti était dissous par un coup de force. Et, dit la pétition, au lieu d'urnes électorales, arrivèrent des vaisseaux de guerre britanniques et des soldats qui menaçaient le peuple de justice sommaire. Pendant quatre ans, de 1953 à 1957, le peuple guyanais languit sous l'autorité policière d'un régime totalitaire. Lors des élections de 1957, le Gouvernement britannique et l'autorité britannique s'ingénierent à découper les circonscriptions électorales de façon à infliger une défaite au parti qui défendait les intérêts du peuple guyanais. Malgré tout, le parti populaire progressiste a été vainqueur, obtenant 9 sièges sur 14. Mais le chef du parti, M. Jagan, déclare plus loin dans sa pétition que, bien que son parti soit à la tête du gouvernement actuel de la Guyane britannique, il a les mains liées par les chaînes des colonialistes. Pour terminer, la pétition lance un appel à l'Assemblée générale de l'ONU, les priant d'aider le peuple de la Guyane britannique afin qu'il puisse se libérer du joug de la domination étrangère, car la liberté et l'indépendance politique, tout comme la paix, sont indivisibles.

24. Les colonisateurs ont recours également à d'autres méthodes, dont le but est, d'ailleurs, toujours le même: maintenir leur domination aux colonies en ne permettant point que le pouvoir réel soit remis à la population autochtone. Cette politique se pratique sous le couvert de slogans mensongers tels que garantir "l'harmonie raciale", ou garantir "la paix et l'ordre public" aux colonies. Ces slogans ont été évoqués ici avec une certaine prolixité par le représentant du Royaume-Uni. Voyons ce que signifie, en réalité, cette prétendue politique de "l'harmonie raciale".

25. Dans le cas de l'Afrique orientale, dont a parlé ici M. Ormsby-Gore, la politique du Gouvernement britannique dans cette région a clairement pour but la création d'Etats ou d'unions du type Union sud-africaine, c'est-à-dire d'Etats prétendument indépendants dans lesquels toute l'autorité et toutes les fonctions de contrôle appartiendraient aux colons européens, qui ne représentent qu'une minorité insignifiante de la population. En effet, au lieu de donner satisfaction aux réclamations légitimes des peuples de la Rhodésie du Nord, de la Rhodésie du Sud et du Nyassaland, les colonisateurs britanniques ont créé — contrairement à la volonté de ces peuples — la Fédération centre-africaine, étendant ainsi la domination d'un groupe de colons blancs de la Rhodésie du Sud sur le Nyassaland et la Rhodésie du Nord. En agissant ainsi, ils tentent de réaliser leur plan qui consisterait à créer en Afrique centrale un autre Etat raciste du type Union sud-africaine. Ce sont des buts analogues que vise la création de ce que l'on appelle l'Union administrative, qui réunit dans son cadre le Territoire sous tutelle du Tanganyika aux colonies du Kenya et de l'Ouganda. Le Gouvernement britannique s'efforce de toute façon d'écraser et de réprimer le mouvement national de libération au Kenya et en Ouganda, de consolider la position des colons blancs au Kenya, pour ensuite rattacher à ce dernier pays le Tanganyika et l'Ouganda, les plaçant ainsi dans une position subordonnée par rapport au Kenya dans le cadre de l'union de ces trois pays. Dans ses territoires de l'Afrique orientale, le Royaume-Uni a mis en œuvre des mesures qui remettent la totalité du pouvoir politique et du contrôle entre les mains de la minorité européenne. De sorte qu'en Afrique, où 97 pour 100 des habitants sont Africains et 3 pour 100 seulement ne le sont pas, les colonisateurs s'efforcent d'assurer une "harmonie raciale" grâce à quoi les 3 pour 100 d'Européens et autres étrangers domineraient les 97 pour 100 d'Africains autochtones dans le cadre d'Etats dits indépendants.

26. Les colons européens prennent en main non seulement le contrôle de la vie politique des colonies, mais également celui de la vie économique. Avec l'aide des autorités coloniales, on pratique en grand l'aliénation des terres qui appartiennent à la population autochtone en faveur des colons européens et des compagnies étrangères. Tout le monde connaît la triste histoire des "White Highlands" (plateau des blancs), au Kenya, où les terres arables les meilleures et les plus fertiles furent dévolues aux Européens qui en ont la propriété et le monopole exclusifs. En Rhodésie du Sud, centre de la fédération coloniale dénommée Fédération centre-africaine, l'affaire est allée si loin que les Européens, qui ne forment que 9 pour 100 de la population totale de la Rhodésie du Sud, possèdent maintenant plus de la moitié des terres du pays, tandis que les Africains, qui représentent 90 pour 100 de la population totale, sont obligés de s'entasser sur 22 pour 100 du territoire. On ne peut non plus passer sous silence que les Européens ne cultivent eux-mêmes que 2,5 pour 100 des terres dont ils se sont emparés. Voilà qui vous fournit un exemple concret de la façon dont les colonisateurs "prennent soin" des intérêts de la population autochtone et développent l'économie des colonies dans l'intérêt de cette population. Au Tanganyika, l'aliénation des terres qui appartenaient à la population autochtone s'est poursuivie pendant de longues années et a fini par atteindre des proportions telles qu'à l'heure actuelle plus d'un million d'hectares ont été enlevés à la population autochtone et remis aux Européens. Il faut encore tenir compte que, d'après le rapport de la Commission de la Couronne britannique, les terres expropriées convenant le mieux aux cultures diversifiées sont situées dans les régions où les précipitations sont les plus abondantes et qui jouissent du climat le plus favorable.

27. Et ici, en séance plénière, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a parlé de "l'harmonie raciale" et de la "coopération" entre Européens et Africains au Tanganyika. Ce n'est pas pour rien que l'on dit maintenant en Afrique: "Lorsque les blancs sont arrivés chez nous, ils avaient en main une Bible, et nous, nous avions la terre. Maintenant, la terre est entre les mains des blancs, et nous, nous avons la Bible." Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a fait, dans sa déclaration, une mention particulière concernant le Tanganyika où règne de façon exemplaire l'"harmonie raciale". Qu'est-ce donc qui réjouit tant le représentant du Royaume-Uni, et qu'il exalte ainsi comme représentant la fameuse "harmonie raciale"? Les colonisateurs britanniques ont inventé ce slogan pour garder la suprématie de la minorité européenne sur les Africains et retarder d'autant la nécessité de concéder l'indépendance au Tanganyika. Au début, les autorités britanniques essayèrent d'établir au Tanganyika le principe de ce que l'on appelle "la représentation paritaire" des trois principaux groupes raciaux: Africains, Asiatiques et Européens. Cela signifiait que, bien qu'il y ait au Tanganyika 9 millions d'Africains et 20.000 Européens seulement, leur représentation, au sein des organes législatifs ou administratifs devait reposer sur le principe "paritaire". Les efforts des autorités britanniques pour imposer aux Africains du Tanganyika le système dit de représentation "paritaire" ont été un fiasco. Toutefois, le Royaume-Uni n'a pas abandonné son plan. Sous couleur de réforme, on a établi dans ce territoire sous tutelle un système selon lequel les Africains ont au Conseil législatif un représentant pour 180.000 hommes et les Européens un représentant pour 2.000 hommes. La voilà, l'égalité de droits! C'est cela l'"harmonie raciale" et la "représentation raciale équitable", que prônent avec tant de chaleur les représentants du Royaume-Uni!

28. L'Autorité administrante fait tout son possible pour retarder la proclamation de l'indépendance du Tanganyika. Ce qui est caractéristique, c'est que récemment encore, au cours de la vingt-troisième session du Conseil de tutelle, tenue en 1959, les représentants de l'Autorité administrante n'ont même pas voulu entendre parler d'accorder l'indépendance au Tanganyika dans un proche avenir. Ils déclaraient que le Tanganyika deviendrait indépendant aussitôt que possible, mais qu'un long chemin restait encore à faire avant qu'il puisse atteindre à l'autonomie. L'Autorité administrante a, jusqu'à ce jour, refusé l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance au Tanganyika, ce qu'exigeaient les principaux partis politiques de ce territoire sous tutelle: Tanganyika African National Union et Tanganyika African National Congress. Dans son mémoire, présenté à la mission de visite de l'Organisation des Nations Unies qui s'est rendue dans le territoire sous tutelle en 1960, l'Union nationale africaine du Tanganyika (TANU) écrit ce qui suit:

"Les événements qui se déroulent en Afrique, dans d'autres territoires sous tutelle et dans le monde entier, ainsi que dans le Territoire, sont tels que le Tanganyika doit accéder à l'indépendance immédiatement ... Nous sommes convaincus que le développement économique et social ne peut être accéléré et réalisé pour l'essentiel que s'il y a indépendance politique^{3/}."

En dépit de la netteté des revendications concrètes des principaux partis politiques du Tanganyika concernant l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à ce territoire, le Royaume-Uni essaie, comme par le passé, de retarder encore ce qui doit quand même se produire inévitablement; il essaie de prolonger le plus longtemps possible sa domination sur le Tanganyika. Dans son intervention à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a passé sous silence cette question primordiale, fondamentale pour ce territoire sous tutelle. Au lieu de fixer une date précise pour la proclamation de l'indépendance du Tanganyika, il s'est borné à faire une vague déclaration, disant que le Royaume-Uni se propose de présenter, au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, une proposition relative à la cessation des accords de tutelle sur le Tanganyika, après la proclamation de l'indépendance de ce territoire sous tutelle. Personne ne doute que les accords de tutelle perdront leur effet après la proclamation de l'indépendance du territoire en question. Mais la question se pose justement de savoir quand l'indépendance sera proclamée au Tanganyika. Nous sommes convaincus que le peuple du Tanganyika obtiendra son indépendance dans un avenir très proche, malgré toutes les barrières élevées sur son chemin par l'Autorité administrante.

29. Le colonialisme laisse un très lourd héritage, tant au Tanganyika que dans les autres colonies et territoires sous tutelle. Une absence presque totale d'industries de transformation, une agriculture de subsistance très arriérée, une situation peu satisfaisante des transports, des finances désorganisées avec un budget constamment déficitaire, une organisation insuffisante des services de santé et de l'instruction publique, un niveau de vie très bas dans la population autochtone — voilà ce que l'Autorité administrante laisse en héritage au peuple du Tanganyika après quarante années de domination. Si, à titre d'exemple, nous prenons l'un des territoires de l'Afrique occidentale sous administration britannique, nous verrions, là aussi, le triste bilan de cette longue oppression coloniale.

30. Ainsi, dans le Territoire sous tutelle du Cameroun sous administration britannique, d'après les données officielles, figurant dans le rapport de la puissance administrante pour 1958 (p. 298), 90 pour 100 de la population est illettrée dans la partie sud du territoire et 96 pour 100 dans la partie nord. D'après les données fournies par l'UNESCO, on comptait en Afrique en 1957 environ 100 millions d'analphabètes, ce qui représente de 80 à 85 pour 100 de la population adulte. L'enseignement primaire ne touchait que 4,7 pour 100 de la population africaine, voire 1,7 pour 100 dans des colonies comme l'Angola. Ces chiffres constituent un véritable acte d'accusation contre le colonialisme qui, sous le couvert de la tutelle, a pendant des lustres et des lustres condamné la population à l'ignorance et à l'obscurantisme.

31. Tout cela veut dire que les colonisateurs n'ont jamais eu pour but le développement des colonies dans l'intérêt de la population autochtone et, en particulier, le développement de l'instruction publique. De propos délibéré, ils ont maintenu et s'efforcent encore de maintenir les peuples coloniaux dans l'ignorance, les privant de la possibilité de s'instruire et de créer des cadres nationaux — tout cela afin de pouvoir tenir ces peuples en esclavage sous prétexte d'une insuffisance de cadres, faute de personnes instruites ayant reçu une formation adéquate. Telle a été la position prise par le représentant de la Belgique qui tentait ici de justifier la domination coloniale belge au Congo; or, les résultats de cette domination se font sentir actuellement d'une façon aiguë au cours des événements qui se produisent dans ce pays.

32. Si, dans les colonies importantes du point de vue superficie et nombre d'habitants — colonies qui possèdent un fort mouvement de libération nationale —, les colonisateurs anglais essaient de différer l'octroi de l'indépendance politique et de garantir, dans ces pays, une position prépondérante aux minorités européennes, dans les territoires de moindre importance ils adoptent une ligne de conduite différente: ils y maintiennent des bases ou points d'appui du colonialisme ou bien ils cherchent à les "réunir", à les fondre avec la métropole. Telle est la ligne de conduite commune à tous les colonisateurs — qu'il s'agisse des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, du Royaume-Uni, de la France, de l'Espagne, du Portugal, des Pays-Bas. Chacun de ces pays s'efforce de conserver ses propres points d'appui, tels que le canal de Panama, Gibraltar, Singapour, Goa, Macao, l'Irian occidental,

^{3/} Documents officiels du Conseil de tutelle, vingt-sixième session, Supplément No 2 (T/1532 et Add.1), annexe II.

Belize, les îles Falkland, les Açores, les Canaries, Fernando Poo, le Río Muni, Ifni et tant d'autres, qu'ils considèrent comme bases stratégiques et points d'appui pour réprimer les mouvements de libération nationale des peuples coloniaux ou pour exercer une pression sur les Etats indépendants voisins.

33. Voilà pourquoi le second point du projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502] — qui traite de la liquidation des bases d'appui et des points stratégiques — est d'une grande importance pour la solution de tout le problème de la liquidation du colonialisme.

34. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, M. Ormsby-Gore, dans sa déclaration en date du 28 novembre [925ème séance], a pris, en fait, position contre l'existence — en tant qu'Etats indépendants — des petits territoires qui se trouvent être à l'heure actuelle sous la domination coloniale. A cette occasion, il mentionna qu'il s'agissait de territoires dont la population est inférieure à un million d'habitants. Il est d'avis que les populations de ces territoires ne devraient pas sacrifier le "progrès économique et social" pour "prendre la responsabilité de maintenir l'appareil, si coûteux, d'un Etat moderne indépendant". Voyez donc quelle sollicitude envers les petits territoires! A ce propos, on pourrait poser une question au représentant du Royaume-Uni et, par la même occasion, au représentant des Etats-Unis d'Amérique qui soutient un point de vue analogue: quelle est leur attitude envers l'existence, en tant qu'Etats indépendants, des pays comme le Luxembourg, avec ses 300.000 habitants, ou l'Islande, avec ses 164.000 habitants? Peut-être MM. Ormsby-Gore et Wadsworth ont-ils deux poids et deux mesures: les uns pour les pays occidentaux et les autres pour les pays africains et asiatiques qui se trouvent être actuellement sous le joug colonial?

35. Notre position à nous est différente. Nous considérons que tous les peuples coloniaux doivent être libérés.

36. Il nous semble que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a invoqué à bon droit les douze principes qui ont été approuvés par la Quatrième Commission [voir A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1] et, plus particulièrement, les dispositions de ces principes qui traitent de l'union ou de la fusion des colonies avec des Etats indépendants. Apparemment, la fusion ou l'union des colonies avec leur métropole ferait mieux l'affaire des colonisateurs. Après avoir proclamé que le but recherché, celui de l'indépendance ou de l'autonomie de ces colonies, était ainsi atteint, ils auraient voulu, de cette façon, et garder leurs positions dans ces territoires, et faire formellement semblant d'observer certains principes. Toutefois, il convient de noter, à ce propos, un fait qui n'est pas sans importance. Lors de la discussion des principes auxquels s'est référé le représentant du Royaume-Uni, plusieurs délégations africano-asiatiques au sein de la Quatrième Commission ont souligné la nécessité de garantir à la population des colonies la pleine et entière liberté d'exprimer sa volonté d'une façon démocratique, sans se heurter à des entraves ou à des menaces. Les délégations du Togo et de la Tunisie ont proposé devant la Quatrième Commission [1043ème séance] que l'Organisation des Nations Unies — afin de garantir une libre expression de la volonté des populations — soit entre autres habilitée à organiser, lorsqu'elle le jugera utile, une surveillance quant à l'exercice effectif du droit à la libre détermination par la population des colonies. L'Union soviétique, d'autres pays socialistes et la majeure partie des pays africano-asiatiques ont soutenu cette proposition. Quant aux représentants des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, du Royaume-Uni, de la France et d'autres pays coloniaux, qui interviennent hypocritement ici en partisans de la libre détermination des peuples, ils sont intervenus et ont voté contre cette proposition au sein de la Quatrième Commission.

37. Dans sa déclaration, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a fait une place importante à des ratiocinations sur la nécessité de se préoccuper tout particulièrement des petits territoires. Voyons donc comment les colonisateurs se préoccupent, en réalité, des petits territoires et de leurs peuples. Prenons comme exemple le plus petit parmi les territoires sous tutelle: l'île de Nauru qui ne compte que quelques milliers d'habitants. On sait que la tutelle sur cette petite île est exercée par trois Etats: le Royaume-Uni, l'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande. On pourrait se demander pourquoi il a fallu de si grandes puissances pour administrer une si petite île. La réponse est très simple: la presque totalité de l'île de Nauru est constituée par des gisements de phosphates; aussi, dès 1919, les Gouvernements du Royaume-Uni, de l'Australie et de la Nouvelle-Zélande ont-ils conclu un accord sur l'exploitation de ces gisements. Cet accord peut, à juste titre, être appelé un accord colonial sur le partage et le pillage des richesses naturelles de Nauru. On y prévoit la part de chaque Etat participant: le Royaume-Uni reçoit 42 pour 100, l'Australie 42 pour 100 et la Nouvelle-Zélande 16 pour 100, ainsi qu'il est de règle pour le plus faible des trois participants — cela figure à l'article 14 de l'accord du 2 juillet 1919. Ainsi, même après avoir formellement inclus l'île de Nauru dans l'organisation internationale de tutelle, le Royaume-Uni, l'Australie et la Nouvelle-Zélande continuent à piller comme devant les ressources naturelles de cette île, la transformant graduellement en un désert stérile. Il a été calculé que les réserves existantes de phosphates suffiront encore pour 30 ou 40 ans, après quoi la population de Nauru devra quitter sa terre qui ne pourra plus nourrir ses habitants. C'est pourquoi l'Autorité administrante déclare — en paroles — qu'elle prépare la population de Nauru à atteindre le but prévu lors de la création même du régime de tutelle, c'est-à-dire l'autonomie ou l'indépendance, mais en même temps, par sa conduite même, elle prépare pratiquement l'expulsion pure et simple des habitants de Nauru, afin qu'ils ne puissent gêner la suite du pillage des richesses naturelles. Le document que l'Autorité administrante a remis au Conseil de tutelle déclare nettement que l'unique possibilité qu'ont réellement les Nauruans consiste à accepter d'être transférés en qualité d'immigrants dans un autre pays quelconque de la région de l'Océan Pacifique. Et c'est cette déclaration que les autorités administrantes essaient de présenter non seulement comme étant le désir librement exprimé par les habitants de ce territoire sous tutelle, mais encore comme une manifestation du souci que ces autorités se font du bien-être d'un petit peuple sous leur tutelle.

38. Voilà le résultat du colonialisme ancien ou "classique" si vous voulez. Mais, actuellement, cette forme du colonialisme n'est ni la seule, ni même la principale forme existante. Maintenant, l'Etat colonial le plus puissant, ce n'est plus ni le Royaume-Uni ou la France affaiblie, ni le caduc Portugal, ni l'Espagne arriérée, mais la plus grande puissance impérialiste du monde: les Etats-Unis d'Amérique.

39. Le représentant des Etats-Unis d'Amérique qui, on ne sait pourquoi, a préféré prendre la parole à la fin du présent débat, a essayé de raviver les éléments de guerre froide que le représentant du Royaume-Uni avait vainement tenté d'introduire dans nos débats. Toutefois, les déclarations des orateurs suivants ont démontré que les efforts de M. Wadsworth étaient aussi vains que ceux de M. Ormsby-Gore. Ces représentants des deux types existants de l'oppression des peuples: le colonialisme "classique" et le néo-colonialisme, ont reçu de la part de plusieurs orateurs la réponse qu'ils méritaient. Même les représentants de pays comme le Honduras ou le Panama ont dû reconnaître publiquement qu'un certain nombre de territoires dont les Etats-Unis se sont emparés (cela sonnerait mieux de dire: qu'ils ont pris à bail) font effectivement partie de ces pays. L'intervention du représentant de Cuba a fait entièrement justice des affirmations hypocrites des représentants des Etats-Unis tendant à faire accroire qu'ils ont octroyé la "liberté" à Porto Rico et qu'ils ne portent pas atteinte à la liberté et à l'indépendance d'autres pays et, en particulier, des pays de l'Amérique latine.

40. A entendre M. Wadsworth, le représentant des Etats-Unis, un brave type naïf pouvait avoir l'impression que les amis les meilleurs et les plus désintéressés des peuples coloniaux sont les Etats-Unis, principale puissance impérialiste et colonialiste du monde. Ce bon naïf aurait pu croire que les Etats-Unis font tout ce qu'ils peuvent pour que les peuples coloniaux accèdent à la liberté et qu'ils ressentent une joie intense chaque fois qu'un nouvel Etat indépendant voit le jour. En réalité, l'intervention de M. Wadsworth était un mélange d'hypocrisie et d'affirmations directes en faveur du maintien du régime colonial pour une période indéfinie sous le couvert de considérations sur la nécessité de prévenir "le chaos" et "les violences" et de préparer les colonies à pouvoir "voler de leurs propres ailes". Il est caractéristique que le représentant des Etats-Unis n'ait pas dit un mot sur l'époque où ils accorderont l'indépendance à leurs propres colonies: aux îles sous tutelle du Pacifique, à Guam, aux îles Vierges, aux Samoa, à Porto Rico. Pourquoi les Etats-Unis s'accrochent-ils opiniâtement à leur colonie des Samoa et veulent-ils tenir ces îles dans un état d'asservissement colonial, alors que la Nouvelle-Zélande a consenti à mettre fin, en 1961, à sa tutelle sur le Samoa-Occidental? Pourquoi les Etats-Unis refusent-ils obstinément d'octroyer l'indépendance à Porto Rico, se contentant d'affirmer, aussi cyniquement que mensongèrement, que le peuple de Porto Rico ne veut pas d'indépendance à l'heure actuelle?

41. Le représentant des Etats-Unis a longuement discouru hier sur l'importance d'une manifestation libre et démocratique de la volonté des peuples encore dépendants. On se demande donc pourquoi le représentant des Etats-Unis, à la Quatrième Commission de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, a voté contre la proposition des Etats africains tendant à garantir, grâce à une surveillance organisée par l'ONU, cette libre manifestation de la volonté des peuples coloniaux et à empêcher les menées auxquelles se plaisent les colonisateurs. Ce fait à lui seul montre déjà le caractère affecté du "souci" que les Etats-Unis auraient de l'avenir des peuples coloniaux et dévoile leur politique colonialiste réelle.

42. Le colonialisme des Etats-Unis ressemble, à bien des égards, à celui des vieilles puissances européennes, mais il présente des aspects encore plus dangereux et de plus mauvais augure. L'histoire du colonialisme des Etats-Unis est également chargée de guerres et d'expéditions armées, dont le but consistait en une mainmise sur les terres d'autrui, en l'oppression d'autres peuples, en des actes de répression à l'encontre de la population autochtone "indocile". La guerre hispano-américaine de 1898 fut la première guerre impérialiste dont l'objet fût un nouveau partage d'un monde qu'on s'était déjà partagé. A l'issue de cette guerre, les Etats-Unis s'emparèrent des Philippines et de Porto Rico et firent de Cuba leur subordonné. Ils continuent d'ailleurs à conserver certains de ces territoires comme colonies directes. Pourtant, les habitants de ces colonies américaines, tout comme les autres peuples coloniaux, réclament légitimement leur liberté et leur indépendance, considérant qu'il est temps de faire cesser également le colonialisme américain.

43. A titre d'exemple, on peut citer la déclaration faite par deux habitants des îles Marshall: M. Bolkain, président de la municipalité de l'atoll de Kwajalein, et M. Amata Kabua, ancien président du Congrès des îles Marshall. Ces pétitionnaires qui prirent la parole lors de la vingt-sixième session du Conseil de tutelle déclarèrent ce qui suit (je cite d'après leur déclaration):

"Nos plaintes sont simples. Pendant la période d'administration américaine, notre niveau de vie a baissé. Depuis plus de 16 ans, nous sommes privés de nos terres et aucun paiement de nous a été offert en compensation pendant 13 ans. Notre île natale a été transformée en un polygone atomique; nos habitants souffrent de maladies causées par des radiations, des brûlures et d'autres lésions sérieuses ... Nos coutumes ancestrales s'écroulent et nous éprouvons de vives craintes quant à l'avenir de la population des îles Marshall ...

"Il y a de cela de nombreuses années, nous nous défendions sans l'aide d'aucune autre nation. Puis, les Espagnols sont venus nous défendre, et nous sommes devenus une colonie. Ensuite les Allemands sont venus nous défendre et nous sommes restés une colonie. Maintenant, ce sont les Etats-Unis qui nous défendent et nous sommes toujours un peuple colonial. Nous estimons que nous pouvons mieux nous défendre tout seuls et à meilleur compte. Nous sommes disposés à faire la connaissance de la démocratie. Nous pensons qu'elle est un bon moyen. Mais nous ne croyons pas que les moyens qu'on nous applique soient de bons exemples de ce qu'est la démocratie.

"... Peut-être vaudrait-il mieux qu'on nous rende notre antique liberté. Les peuples de l'Afrique et de l'Asie obtiennent leur liberté. Nous considérons que nous pouvons nous gouverner tout aussi bien que ces pays nouveaux^{4/}."

Voilà ce que déclareraient ces pétitionnaires. C'est la voix de la population autochtone des colonies améri-caines et, malgré toutes leurs tentatives, les Etats-Unis ne réussiront évidemment pas à l'étouffer.

44. Toutefois, lorsque l'on parle du colonialisme américain, il ne faut pas oublier que ce type de colonialisme ne prend pas seulement la forme d'une prise de possession sans ambage sur les territoires d'autrui, mais aussi une forme camouflée — et, par conséquent, plus dangereuse — de subordination et de contrôle exercés sur des territoires et des pays qui comptent, officiellement, parmi les pays indépendants. La pénétration économique des monopoles américains dans les pays de l'Amérique latine, de l'Asie et de l'Afrique aboutit à la création d'un empire colonial des Etats-Unis d'Amérique extérieurement "invisible".

45. Les particularités du colonialisme américain ainsi créé ont été éloquemment décrites jadis par M. Nehru dans une lettre qu'il écrivait à sa fille le 3 janvier 1933; bien entendu, à cette époque, M. Nehru n'était pas encore premier ministre. M. Nehru écrivait donc à sa fille ce qui suit:

"Ne crois pas que l'empire des Etats-Unis soit limité aux îles Philippines. C'est la seule colonie qu'ils aient, en apparence, mais, tenant compte de l'expérience et des difficultés des autres puissances impérialistes, les Etats-Unis ont perfectionné les méthodes anciennes. Ils ne prennent pas la peine d'annexer certains pays, comme la Grande-Bretagne a annexé l'Inde. Ce qui les intéresse, c'est le profit seul; c'est pourquoi ils essaient de placer sous leur contrôle les richesses de tel ou tel pays. Cela fait, il est facile de soumettre à son contrôle toute la population de ce pays et, à proprement parler, le pays tout entier. Ainsi, sans grands soucis et sans conflits avec les nationalistes locaux, les Etats-Unis contrôlent tout le pays et prennent une part de ses richesses. Cette méthode astucieuse s'appelle "impérialisme économique". Rien n'en paraît sur les cartes géographiques. Le pays semble libre, à en juger d'après un manuel de géographie ou un atlas. Mais, en regardant plus au fond des choses, on constate qu'en réalité, il est dans les serres d'une autre puissance ou, plus précisément, qu'il est la proie des grands banquiers et des hommes d'affaires de cette puissance. C'est cet empire invisible que détiennent les Etats-Unis d'Amérique^{5/}."

46. Les événements ultérieurs n'ont fait que démontrer la justesse de ces lignes. Au cours de la période qui a suivi la seconde guerre mondiale, le colonialisme des Etats-Unis s'est caractérisé par la tendance à une entière domination dans le domaine de l'économie des pays coloniaux et des pays sous-développés. Il tend également à évincer de leurs positions ses concurrents — sous prétexte de lutte contre le "communisme mondial" —, à organiser la mainmise sur leurs anciennes possessions coloniales et à réprimer tout mouvement de libération nationale dans les pays d'Asie, d'Amérique latine et d'Afrique. Au cours de ces dernières années, les Etats-Unis ont fait des tentatives particulièrement actives pour pénétrer en Afrique. Bien que, jusqu'à présent, les positions clefs de l'économie africaine soient encore tenues par le Royaume-Uni et la France, ces pays sont de plus en plus refoulés par le colonialisme américain. On peut s'en rendre compte en considérant déjà que la somme totale des investissements américains en Afrique, investissements tant privés que publics, s'élevait en 1959 à plus de 2 milliards de dollars, c'est-à-dire qu'ils ont augmenté de 20 fois par rapport à l'avant-guerre. Pendant cette même période, les investissements américains privés ont augmenté de quelque 1.100 pour 100, ce qui veut dire qu'ils ont dépassé de plus de deux fois l'augmentation générale des investissements américains privés à l'étranger. Ainsi, les tentacules des monopoles américains sont déjà plaqués sur un grand nombre de pays africains.

47. Les Etats-Unis ne sont pas le moins du monde intéressés à l'octroi d'une indépendance entière et effective aux peuples coloniaux car, en ce cas, les monopoles américains se verraient privés des privilèges dont ils jouissent dans ces colonies et perdraient des sources d'enrichissement. Les Etats-Unis ne peuvent prendre rang avec ceux qui luttent pour la libération des colonies et pour la suppression du colonialisme, puisqu'ils prennent une part directe et active au pillage de ces colonies. L'impérialisme américain est devenu le système international d'exploitation le plus énorme et le principal rempart du colonialisme moderne.

48. Les impérialistes — Etats-Unis en tête — font des efforts désespérés pour conserver par des formes et des méthodes nouvelles l'exploitation des peuples des anciennes colonies. Les monopoles tentent de conserver les leviers de contrôle économique et d'influence politique dans les pays d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine. Ces efforts ont pour but de maintenir les positions acquises dans l'économie des pays qui viennent de se libérer, de s'emparer de positions nouvelles sous prétexte d'"assistance" économique, d'entraîner les pays libérés dans des blocs militaires et d'y implanter des régimes militaires dictatoriaux; enfin, de créer des bases militaires. Les impérialistes s'efforcent d'affaiblir les pays qui viennent de se libérer, de saper leur souveraineté nationale, de dénaturer le sens même du principe de la libre détermination des nations, d'imposer — sous le couvert d'une prétendue "interdépendance" — des formes nouvelles de domination coloniale, de placer au pouvoir dans ces pays des fantoches à leur solde, de corrompre une partie de la bourgeoisie nationale; d'utiliser l'arme empoisonnée de la discorde tribale pour affaiblir les forces des jeunes Etats encore non affermis. C'est dans ce but que l'on utilise activement les blocs militaires et ententes militaires bilatérales d'agression.

49. L'OTAN est le plus important des blocs créés par les colonisateurs. Un de ses objectifs principaux consiste à instaurer un colonialisme collectif, à organiser aux colonies la répression collective des mouvements de libération nationale. La preuve directe en est qu'au sein de l'OTAN se trouvent des puissances colonialistes telles que le Royaume-Uni, la France, la Belgique, les Pays-Bas, le Portugal. Ceci indique que, lorsqu'ils se sont heurtés à l'élément exceptionnel du mouvement de libération nationale, les colonialistes, se sentant impuissants à y faire face en ordre dispersé, se sont efforcés de trouver dans l'union la force nécessaire. Les Etats-Unis ont à plusieurs reprises constitué un front unique avec les anciennes puissances coloniales dans leur lutte contre le mouvement de libération nationale; ils se sont immiscés de façon brutale dans les affaires intérieures de maints pays, en s'efforçant de convertir lesdits pays en un tremplin d'agression contre d'autres pays.

50. Pour illustrer de façon concrète que ce sont bien les Etats-Unis qui jouent maintenant le rôle de rempart du système colonial, il suffit d'examiner ce que l'on nomme "la doctrine Eisenhower", qui a un caractère nettement impérialiste et se base sur une "politique de force". Si le rôle de gendarme dans le Proche-Orient était autrefois tenu par les impérialistes anglais et français, maintenant ce sont les Etats-Unis qui tentent d'assumer ce rôle. L'intervention anglo-américaine de 1958 au Liban et en Jordanie a bien fait voir au monde entier ce que représente en réalité la "doctrine Eisenhower".

51. L'attitude des Etats-Unis d'Amérique crée de sérieuses difficultés à l'Indonésie dans sa lutte pour l'Irian occidental. Les Etats-Unis préfèrent que l'Irian occidental reste aux mains des Pays-Bas qui, avec le temps, pourront être éliminés de cette région, comme ce fut le cas de la France au Viet-Nam du Sud.

52. Les Etats-Unis ont déclaré que l'Amérique latine, en vertu de la "doctrine de Monroe" devait être une réserve à eux et rester dans leur sphère d'influence. Toutefois, l'époque de la domination tranquille et placide des Etats-Unis en Amérique latine est révolue et appartient dorénavant au passé. Une ère nouvelle est là, ère où la conscience nationale des pays du continent américain s'éveille, où les peuples se libèrent du pillage américain.

53. Etant la puissance colonialiste la plus importante, les Etats-Unis apportent une aide active à leurs partenaires caducs et séniles pour maintenir leur domination sur les peuples qui luttent pour leur liberté et leur indépendance. Les Etats-Unis avaient aidé les colonialistes français dans leur guerre répugnante contre le peuple du Viet-Nam. Maintenant, ils livrent des armes et apportent une aide financière et économique à la clique militaire française pour réprimer la lutte du peuple d'Algérie pour sa liberté. Il faut le dire carrément: la guerre coloniale d'Algérie aurait été rendue impossible et le peuple algérien aurait obtenu sa liberté et son indépendance si les impérialistes et les colonialistes américains n'avaient soutenu les colonialistes français par tous les moyens en leur pouvoir. Et l'agression collective des Etats membres de l'OTAN au Congo ne se fait-elle pas avec l'aide et le concours directs des Etats-Unis? Bien entendu, nous n'allons pas analyser de façon détaillée la situation congolaise. Elle fera l'objet d'un examen particulier. Nous croyons néanmoins indispensable d'indiquer ici la thèse qui reste liée à tout le problème colonial.

54. Les événements survenus au Congo montrent que le bloc de l'Atlantique Nord — à la tête duquel se trouvent les Etats-Unis d'Amérique — s'est dressé ouvertement contre le peuple congolais rassemblé autour du gouvernement de Patrice Lumumba et du Parlement congolais. Le but de cette agression est de détruire l'indépendance, obtenue par le peuple du Congo à l'issue d'une lutte opiniâtre. On assiste au Congo à un nouveau partage d'influence entre les puissances coloniales: les Etats-Unis, la Belgique, le Royaume-Uni et la France. Ce nouveau partage — comme les remaniements d'influence qui eurent lieu auparavant — se réalise en tenant compte de la modification du rapport des forces en présence et aussi des changements survenus dans les appétits des colonialistes pour des richesses appartenant à d'autres peuples ...

55. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): J'espère que l'orateur s'en tiendra à la déclaration qu'il vient de faire lui-même sur son intention de s'abstenir de parler en détail de la situation au Congo. Comme il le sait, cette question est en cours de discussion ailleurs; en outre, elle figure à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée qui a décidé d'en ajourner le débat. J'espère donc que le représentant de l'URSS ne cherchera pas à entrer dans le détail de la question. D'autres orateurs qui avaient essayé de le faire ont été priés de s'en abstenir. Je demande au représentant de l'Union soviétique d'agir de même.

56. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Je n'avais pas l'intention — et je l'avais dit dès le début — d'entrer dans l'examen détaillé du problème congolais en tant que tel. J'avais l'intention d'en dire quelques mots en liaison avec le problème du colonialisme et uniquement en liaison avec lui. Je l'ai d'ailleurs fait en grande partie. Car c'est également en se servant de l'exemple du Congo que les forces unies des colonialistes tentent de donner une "leçon" aux peuples de l'Afrique en confirmant une théorie, qu'ils ont inventée aux-mêmes, selon laquelle les jeunes Etats africains ne peuvent vivre et se développer sans ceux-là mêmes qui, pendant de nombreux lustres et même des siècles, ont réprimé toutes les tentatives des peuples africains pour obtenir leur liberté et leur indépendance. Nous sommes néanmoins persuadés que les peuples de l'Afrique, de l'Asie et du monde entier tireront d'autres leçons du pénible exemple du Congo.

57. Il est à peine besoin de prouver qu'un pays aussi arriéré et aussi faible que le Portugal n'aurait jamais été capable de soutenir sa domination sur 11 millions d'Africains sans l'aide des Etats-Unis et de ses autres partenaires du bloc de l'OTAN. C'est seulement parce qu'il se sent épaulé par les autres puissances coloniales que le Portugal a osé lancer un défi à tous les peuples et pays africains et refusé d'octroyer l'indépendance à l'Angola, au Mozambique et à ses autres colonies. Nous sommes entièrement d'accord avec le Président du Ghana, M. Nkrumah, qui, dans son intervention à la séance du 23 septembre dernier, déclara devant l'Assemblée générale:

"En ce qui concerne le Portugal, je suis d'avis qu'une responsabilité particulière incombe aux membres de l'OTAN qui sont également Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ..." [869^e séance, par. 47.]

58. En fait, comment les Etats-Unis n'aideraient-ils point leurs amis portugais alors que dans les colonies portugaises des sociétés et compagnies américaines telles que la Standard Oil Company, la Chase National Bank, la National City Bank of New York, la Gulf Oil Corporation of America brassent les affaires en maîtres et contrôlent la plupart des sociétés portugaises, qu'il s'agisse d'extraction de diamants, de pétrole, de la production du caoutchouc, etc. Il existe donc une sorte de caution solidaire des colonialistes, qui reflète leurs affinités morales. Comme dit la sagesse populaire: les loups ne se mangent pas entre eux. Bien entendu, les Etats-Unis ne peuvent pas intervenir à l'ONU et déclarer au monde entier qu'ils soutiennent le Portugal et qu'ils n'ont aucune divergence de vues avec ce pays, comme ils l'ont fait lors des conversations bilatérales entre les Etats-Unis et le Portugal. A la présente session, les représentants des Etats-Unis d'Amérique préfèrent garder le silence à ce sujet. Il faut néanmoins noter que la question des colonies portugaises et espagnoles a été examinée d'une façon assez détaillée au cours de la présente session par la Quatrième Commission et cette discussion a montré que le Portugal est presque entièrement isolé.

59. Un grand nombre de délégations d'Etats africains, asiatiques, socialistes et autres ont soumis à une violente critique le cruel régime colonial que le Portugal a établi dans ses colonies. Elles ont cité de nombreux faits et apporté de multiples preuves que le représentant du Portugal a été incapable de réfuter. Lorsqu'il prit la parole ici en séance plénière [934ème séance], le représentant du Portugal ne trouva rien de mieux que de nier en bloc tous les faits et tous les arguments présentés par les autres délégations. Or, n'est-ce point un fait que, dans les colonies portugaises, il existe un régime brutal de discrimination raciale et de travail forcé? Ni à la Quatrième Commission, ni en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale, le représentant du Portugal n'a tenté de nier que les habitants des colonies portugaises sont divisés en "civilisés" (assimilés) et en "non-civilisés". Et cela se passe au XXème siècle! Théoriquement, les Africains des colonies portugaises peuvent se hausser jusqu'au statut d'"assimilés", mais pour cela ils doivent prouver qu'ils connaissent la langue portugaise, qu'ils sont catholiques, qu'ils possèdent un certain capital, qu'ils sont prêts à renoncer aux usages locaux ainsi qu'à leur culture et à leurs traditions, et qu'ils sont disposés, dorénavant, à vivre à la manière des Européens. En fait, après 500 ans d'occupation portugaise, 3 pour 1.000 seulement des Africains ont pu devenir des "assimilés", tandis que les autres continuent à être traités d'indigènes et ne possèdent aucun droit politique ou civil. Ils ne sont représentés dans aucun des organes administratifs ni dans les organes législatifs de la métropole; ils ne bénéficient d'aucune protection légale. Ils peuvent être arbitrairement chassés de leurs terres ancestrales; les pouvoirs publics peuvent, pour n'importe quel délit et sans jugement, leur faire subir la peine du fouet ou les envoyer aux travaux forcés. Dans les colonies portugaises, seule est interdite la transformation pure et simple d'un autochtone en serf. Toutes les autres formes d'esclavage, loin d'être interdites, sont, en fait, consacrées par l'usage.

60. C'est ainsi que, sous le couvert d'un système de contrat, on assiste au Mozambique, par exemple, à un commerce systématique d'Africains. Aux termes de la Convention du Mozambique de 1928, constamment reconduite depuis, chaque année 100.000 nègres du Mozambique sont expédiés en Union sud-africaine, et environ le même nombre en Rhodésie et au Nyassaland. De plus, il existe un organisme gouvernemental spécial qui s'occupe de recruter la main-d'œuvre pour les mines d'or et de charbon du Transvaal. La plupart de ces travailleurs sous contrat, lorsqu'ils ne meurent pas en route de faim, de maladie ou d'épidémie, périssent à leur lieu de travail, ainsi qu'en témoignent des observateurs bourgeois eux-mêmes.

61. On peut citer le témoignage du quotidien anglais The Guardian qui, dans son numéro du 8 avril 1960, écrivait qu'au cours des 20 dernières années, l'utilisation, dans les colonies portugaises, de la maind'œuvre forcée augmente sans cesse et qu'à présent cette main-d'œuvre est devenue prépondérante, tant au Mozambique qu'en Angola. Et voici ce qu'indique le mémorandum présenté par l'Union du peuple d'Angola aux représentants à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale:

"La caractéristique essentielle du colonialisme portugais est qu'il représente la pire forme du fascisme, marquée du sceau du racisme le plus inhumain. La politique raciale est mise en pratique... avec une rare férocité, tant dans le domaine culturel, que dans le domaine économique ou des relations sociales." Il est encore dit plus loin dans ce document:

"Dès le début de 1959 on pratique ici une politique d'intimidation sanglante: les assassinats en série en Guinée portugaise, l'arrivée de renforts militaires en Angola, suivie d'arrestations, de tortures et de déportations de patriotes locaux; enfin, la distribution d'armes aux colons qui forment maintenant une milice qui a l'autorisation de supprimer tous les suspects. Nos compatriotes subissent toutes sortes de punitions et sont soumis à des tortures inimaginables. On peut citer l'exemple du patriote Alfred Bengé, devenu muet et frappé de paralysie, ainsi que celui de Ramos Lundila qui perdit la raison à la suite de tortures par courant électrique et se trouve actuellement dans un hôpital psychiatrique. Les patriotes José Manuel Martins, Domingo João et Manuel Francisco ont été exécutés à Ramal de Bengo."

62. Le représentant du Portugal peut-il réfuter ces témoignages au sujet des cas de répressions et de tortures ainsi que sur les pénibles conditions de vie de la population autochtone? N'est-ce pas un fait qu'au Mozambique à peu près la moitié des enfants nouveau-nés meurent au bout de quelques jours? N'est-ce pas un fait que 99 pour 100 de la population autochtone de l'Angola, du Mozambique et des autres possessions portugaises sont encore analphabètes après cinq siècles d'administration "éclairée" et de propagation de la "civilisation"?

63. Le représentant du Portugal préfère passer tout cela sous silence et affirmer gratuitement que certains délégués font de la "propagande" et s'en prennent, sans fondement, à son pays. Il va même jusqu'à affirmer que les délégations qui cherchent à obtenir la suppression du système colonialiste dans les colonies portugaises s'ingéreraient dans les affaires intérieures portugaises, car ce pays ne possède pas de colonies, mais seulement des provinces d'outre-mer. L'inconsistance de pareilles affirmations est parfaitement évidente. Car le simple fait que, le 11 juin 1951, un amendement à la Constitution portugaise a proclamé que les colonies constituaient dorénavant des provinces portugaises d'outre-mer, n'a en rien modifié le statut de ces territoires et le régime colonial y a conservé toute sa force. Tous ces artifices et subterfuges juridiques ne trompent naturellement personne et la revendication de tous les peuples épris de liberté concernant l'abolition définitive de l'infâme phénomène du colonialisme, s'applique entièrement et totalement aux colonies portugaises. Et si les colonialistes portugais n'entendent pas la voix de la raison et ne comprennent pas que l'effondrement du système colonial est historiquement inéluctable, ils finiront par être balayés du sol africain et asiatique par le flot puissant du mouvement de libération nationale.

64. Nous ne citons pas tous ces faits afin de critiquer tout simplement les puissances coloniales; ce n'est point de la critique pour le plaisir de critiquer. L'Union soviétique — aux côtés d'autres puissances éprises de paix et de liberté — s'élève sans relâche contre le système colonial, car c'est là un phénomène infâme, c'est la privation des droits et des libertés les plus élémentaires pour des peuples entiers, c'est une insulte à la dignité humaine, c'est l'humiliation, c'est la souffrance pour des millions d'êtres humains vivant aux colonies.

65. L'effondrement total du système d'esclavage colonial sous la poussée du mouvement de libération nationale est imminent; il s'agit là d'un processus irrésistible et irréversible. La brusque accentuation de la lutte des peuples coloniaux pour leur liberté a été le résultat de la grande révolution socialiste d'Octobre qui a réveillé l'Orient et entraîné les peuples coloniaux dans le torrent commun d'un mouvement révolutionnaire mondial de libération. On voit se vérifier la prévision du grand Lénine qui disait:

"Après la période qui sera marquée par l'éveil de l'Orient, la révolution contemporaine verra arriver la période de participation de tous les peuples d'Orient aux décisions concernant le sort du monde entier. Ces peuples, cessant d'être des objectifs d'enrichissement, s'éveillent à une activité pratique dans laquelle chaque peuple aura à participer à la solution des problèmes relatifs au sort de l'humanité tout entière."

La victoire de l'Union soviétique dans la seconde guerre mondiale, l'instauration d'un régime de démocratie populaire dans plusieurs pays d'Europe et d'Asie, le triomphe de la révolution socialiste en Chine et la création d'un système socialiste mondial ont accéléré dans une grande mesure le développement de ce processus.

66. La lutte héroïque des peuples coloniaux et le soutien qu'elle reçoit de la part des pays socialistes et d'autres pays épris de liberté — voilà les facteurs essentiels de l'effondrement du système colonial. Faute d'un système socialiste mondial, les efforts réunis des impérialistes auraient écrasé le mouvement de libération nationale dans les colonies et dans les pays dépendants. Or, à l'heure actuelle, le rapport des forces en présence dans l'arène internationale est tel que les colonialistes ne sont plus capables, même par la force des armes, de conjurer la désagrégation du système colonial. La particularité de la situation actuelle réside dans le fait que, sous la forte pression des peuples et compte tenu de l'existence d'un camp puissant de la paix et du socialisme, dans bien des cas les impérialistes se sont vus contraints d'évacuer "pacifiquement" leurs colonies, tout en essayant de les entortiller avec divers contrats léonins. C'est en pensant aux représentants des puissances coloniales que le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. N. S. Khrouchtchev, prenant la parole à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, a dit:

"Bien entendu, on ne saurait espérer que nos propositions sur l'abolition du régime colonial, qui répondent aux intérêts vitaux de l'humanité, soient favorablement accueillies par ceux qui se cramponnent encore à l'ordre colonial. J'entends d'avance les critiques des défenseurs du régime colonial; mais à ceux qui se sont accoutumés à prospérer aux dépens des peuples coloniaux asservis, nous disons: réfléchissez, observez ce qui se passe autour de vous; si ce n'est aujourd'hui, ce sera demain, ce sera très bientôt que les systèmes coloniaux s'effondreront définitivement et, si vous ne vous retirez pas à temps, on vous chassera quand même. Ni les conspirations ni même la force des armes n'arriveront à insuffler vie au régime colonial condamné." [869ème séance, par. 221.]

67. L'Union soviétique s'est faite, par principe, le champion logique de l'abolition immédiate de l'infâme système colonial. C'est ouvertement que nous critiquons les puissances coloniales et nous n'avons peur ni de leurs calomnies ni de leurs insinuations, car nous défendons une cause juste: la liberté et l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux. Notre présente déclaration est une réponse non seulement aux représentants des puissances coloniales qui sont intervenus ici au cours de la discussion, mais également aux représentants de la France, de l'Espagne et des Pays-Bas qui ont préféré se taire. Nous considérons cela comme un stratagème des colonisateurs, qui font la guerre en Algérie et qui continuent à occuper militairement de nombreux territoires en Afrique et en Asie. Aux représentants des puissances coloniales, nous déclarons sans ambages: tâchez de comprendre la nécessité historique et l'inéluctabilité de l'abolition du système colonial; décampez sans demander votre reste, sinon les peuples des colonies vous jetteront dehors. On vous propose maintenant à l'ONU de choisir la voie de l'octroi pacifique de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux. Mais si les colonisateurs ne veulent pas prendre cette voie et obligent les peuples opprimés à prendre les armes pour chasser les oppresseurs malvenus, alors le devoir de tous les pays épris de paix sera d'aider par tous les moyens la juste cause de la libération nationale des peuples coloniaux.

68. L'examen de la question coloniale à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale constitue une rude épreuve pour l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Le colonialisme sera en tout cas supprimé — avec ou sans l'aide de l'ONU — car l'écroulement du système colonial rentre dans le cadre objectif de la marche de l'histoire que personne ne peut arrêter. Mais, en ce qui concerne l'ONU, voici comment se pose la question: ou bien cette Organisation accélère le progrès, ou bien, en restant indifférente au destin de millions d'êtres humains opprimés et en se laissant brider par les colonisateurs, elle restera à l'écart du progrès; il se peut même qu'elle devienne, ce qui serait pis encore, un obstacle à une abolition très rapide du colonialisme.

69. Un large examen du projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux montre que l'opinion publique mondiale est en faveur d'une abolition immédiate et totale du colonialisme; les puissances coloniales ne peuvent ignorer cette opinion. Le débat a montré que la plupart des délégations sont intervenues dans le sens d'une lutte réelle contre le colonialisme. La délégation soviétique a écouté avec intérêt et une grande attention les représentants de Ceylan, de l'Arabie Saoudite, du Ghana, de la Guinée, du Mali, de la République arabe unie, de l'Inde, de l'Indonésie, du Maroc, de l'Irak et d'autres pays de l'Afrique et de l'Asie; elle note avec satisfaction cette communauté de buts et d'aspirations dans la cause de la lutte contre le colonialisme.

70. On ne peut, toutefois, omettre de noter le fait que certaines délégations, sous prétexte d'anticolonialisme, sont en réalité intervenues pour défendre les intérêts des colonialistes, en essayant de retarder la fin inévitable du système colonial. Certains parmi ces délégués ont montré que leur façon d'interpréter ce projet de déclaration ainsi que leurs buts et leurs aspirations, n'ont rien de commun avec la majorité des coauteurs du projet. C'est ainsi que le représentant des Philippines [933ème séance] (qui a même fini à la dernière minute par s'associer aux coauteurs du projet de résolution africano-asiatique) [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] avait interprété d'une façon tout à fait erronée le paragraphe 5 de ce projet en affirmant qu'on n'y prévoyait nullement le transfert immédiat de la plénitude des pouvoirs aux peuples coloniaux. Apparemment, et par complaisance envers les colonisateurs, le représentant des Philippines se proposait de saper la signification même du projet africano-asiatique et d'en édulcorer le contenu. En somme, le représentant de l'Argentine, M. Amadeo [927ème séance], a pris la même attitude puisqu'il s'est, en fait, opposé à la libération immédiate des colonies. En invitant l'Assemblée à ne point pousser artificiellement (selon sa propre expression) le processus de décolonisation qui, d'après lui, avance à pas de géant, il s'est opposé à ce que l'on fixe une date limite pour l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples colonisés. Il est évident que de telles interventions ne font qu'encourager les puissances coloniales dans leur refus d'octroyer la liberté et l'indépendance aux colonies. Le représentant du Honduras est allé encore plus loin. Il a présenté un projet de résolution [A/L.324/Rev.1] qui, en fait, est celui des colonisateurs. On ne peut voir dans le projet du Honduras qu'une diversion pour contrecarrer les aspirations de l'énorme majorité des membres de l'ONU qui veulent mettre fin au colonialisme. Bien entendu, la délégation soviétique votera contre la proposition du Honduras qui, se targuant de lutter contre le système colonial, préconise en somme d'en proroger l'existence. Nous sommes persuadés que l'Assemblée générale ne permettra pas qu'on l'amène à s'écarter de la solution de problèmes historiques majeurs quels que puissent être les manœuvres et les trucs employés par les représentants des puissances colonialistes et leurs acolytes.

71. Les débats en séance plénière ont également démontré qu'un certain nombre de délégations, ne voulant pas, ou ne pouvant pas, pour différentes raisons, poser la question de l'abolition du colonialisme d'une façon ferme et résolue, essaient d'aboutir à un "compromis" avec les puissances coloniales. Visiblement, ces délégations ne se rendent pas compte que, dans une question de principe aussi vitale pour des millions d'êtres humains que l'abolition du colonialisme, tenter un compromis avec les colonialistes ne peut que nuire à la lutte avec ces derniers et faire le jeu des oppresseurs étrangers. Toute concession faite aux colonialistes ne pourra que prolonger les souffrances des peuples coloniaux. N'en avons-nous pas la preuve dans la vaine recherche (pendant 14 ans) d'un compromis avec le Gouvernement de l'Union sud-africaine dans la question du Sud-Ouest africain? Les concessions faites aux colonisateurs sud-africains n'ont eu pour résultat que le maintien de l'esclavage colonial dans le Sud-Ouest africain et une annexion de facto de ce territoire. La tragédie que vit actuellement le peuple congolais elle aussi est un témoignage des conséquences funestes de concessions faites aux colonialistes et de la recherche de compromis avec eux.

72. C'est pour cette raison que la délégation de l'Union soviétique intervient en faveur d'un examen conséquent et décisif du problème de l'abolition du colonialisme et d'une solution radicale de ce problème dans le cadre de l'ONU. Il s'agirait pour l'Assemblée générale, au cours de la présente session, de se prononcer nettement en faveur d'une abolition immédiate et définitive du colonialisme, sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. La délégation soviétique estime que le projet de déclaration soumis à la présente session par l'URSS [A/4502] est celui qui tient compte le plus complètement des revendications des peuples coloniaux, puisqu'il prévoit leur libération immédiate et totale de la domination étrangère. C'est la vie elle-même qui l'exige. Cette décision aura une signification historique et pratique énorme. Elle avancera l'heure de la libération de tous les peuples du joug étranger et permettra d'en terminer une fois pour toutes avec le phénomène infâme du colonialisme. Nous sommes persuadés que tous les pays sincèrement intéressés à ce que la liberté et l'indépendance soient octroyées à toutes les colonies et à tous les territoires dépendants ou placés sous tutelle, soutiendront le projet de déclaration présenté par l'Union soviétique.

73. Conformément à l'article 93 du règlement intérieur de l'Assemblée générale, le projet de déclaration soviétique doit être mis aux voix en premier lieu, puisqu'il a été présenté le premier. La délégation soviétique demande formellement que l'on s'en tienne à cet ordre de vote, ainsi que le prévoit le règlement intérieur.

74. En ce qui concerne le projet de résolution présenté par les Etats africains et asiatiques [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6], la délégation de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques apprécie avec faveur le désir de la majorité écrasante des délégations africaines et asiatiques de voir l'Assemblée générale prendre à sa quinzième session des mesures qui aideraient à remplir la noble mission que constitue la libération totale des peuples de toutes les colonies et de tous les pays dépendants. Nous nous souvenons que, dès 1955, les représentants de 29 Etats asiatiques et africains proclamèrent à Bandoung que le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et sous toutes ses manifestations est un mal auquel il faut mettre fin immédiatement. Nous nous souvenons également qu'en 1960, à Addis-Abéba, les représentants de 10 Etats indépendants d'Afrique et de certains territoires africains n'ayant pas encore accédé à l'indépendance ont adressé un appel pressant aux puissances coloniales pour qu'elles fixent, conformément aux vœux des peuples, des dates pour l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance à tous les pays dépendants et en informent les peuples intéressés.

75. La délégation soviétique se réserve le droit d'intervenir plus tard et d'exposer sa position concernant des points précis du projet de résolution présenté par les Etats africains et asiatiques.

M. Hasan (Pakistan), vice-président, prend la présidence.

76. M. SOSA RODRIGUEZ (Venezuela) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La discussion, au sein de cette assemblée, du point 87 intitulé "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" marque, sans aucun doute, une étape d'une importance décisive dans l'histoire de l'humanité. Le simple fait qu'a été inscrite à l'ordre du jour de cette Assemblée, sans restriction ni obstacle, une question devant aboutir à une déclaration solennelle aux termes de laquelle le colonialisme doit définitivement être considéré comme appartenant au passé, ce simple fait révèle l'immense progrès qui est en train de s'accomplir au cours de la seconde moitié du XX^{ème} siècle pour amener tous les hommes à prendre conscience de la dignité de la personne humaine.

77. L'histoire du colonialisme est presque aussi vieille que l'histoire du monde. C'est l'histoire du plus fort s'efforçant de dominer le plus faible. C'est l'histoire des faibles exploités par les forts. Cette exploitation a pu essayer de se dissimuler sous des noms et des prétextes divers, mais elle a toujours été une exploitation. A l'origine de tout système colonial, de tout temps et sous toutes les latitudes, se trouve toujours un acte de force: l'imposition, par la force, d'un régime contraire aux aspirations humaines les plus légitimes et les plus naturelles. Il ne faut donc pas s'étonner que, de tout temps et sous toutes les latitudes, ce régime ait toujours provoqué de violentes réactions. L'histoire abonde en exemples de guerres dites coloniales, faites pour conquérir, puis pour maintenir des conquêtes antérieures.

78. A la base de tout système colonial — et je ne crains pas de généraliser trop hardiment en le disant —, on retrouve toujours deux mobiles: la croyance en la supériorité raciale, culturelle ou intellectuelle de certains peuples par rapport à d'autres, et le désir manifesté par certains peuples d'exploiter les richesses naturelles appartenant à d'autres. Il est arrivé aussi qu'un mobile soit fourni par le désir d'expansion territoriale où l'on voyait une solution aux problèmes démographiques des pays surpeuplés.

79. Etant donné la complexité des relations humaines, d'autres mobiles ont également apparu, et ils ont représenté le seul côté positif des régimes coloniaux. Sous l'influence du pays colonisateur, de nombreux peuples ont atteint un niveau culturel plus élevé et ont accompli des progrès matériels plus considérables; cela ne constitue cependant pas une justification qui suffise à laver tous les régimes colonialistes du péché originel. A l'exception des missionnaires qui, répudiant tout mobile intéressé, s'en vont dans des contrées étrangères pour prêcher leur foi et gagner des âmes à Dieu, je doute que l'on puisse dire d'aucune entreprise coloniale qu'elle ait été désintéressée.

80. Cependant, ce facteur spirituel, qui apparaît dans l'œuvre colonisatrice de l'Espagne aux XVI^{ème} et XVII^{ème} siècles, a suffi à doter son entreprise de caractéristiques qui lui sont propres et que nous ne retrouvons pas dans les procédés qu'ont employés les colonisateurs du XX^{ème} siècle. Alors que l'Amérique se trouvait sous le régime colonial espagnol, aux XVI^{ème}, XVII^{ème} et XVIII^{ème} siècles, l'Espagne et ses colonies d'Amérique s'identifièrent graduellement. Les fils des conquérants devinrent les fils de l'Amérique, et les terres américaines furent un prolongement de l'Espagne. C'est pourquoi nous, peuples d'Amérique qui, lorsque nous avons pris conscience de notre propre individualité, avons lutté durant de longues années contre l'Espagne jusqu'à ce que nous obtenions notre indépendance, conservons cependant pour elle ce même amour que les enfants portent à leur mère — nous appelons l'Espagne notre mère patrie — car dans nos veines coule du sang espagnol, et c'est aussi d'Espagne que nous viennent notre langue et notre religion.

81. En Amérique latine, nous ne connaissons pas la discrimination raciale, et le concept de race ou de peuple supérieur nous est totalement étranger. Aussi, en dépit des avantages dont ont pu, en certains cas, bénéficier les pays colonisés, les méthodes de colonisation employées en Asie et surtout en Afrique ont toujours répugné à notre conscience et heurté notre sensibilité.

82. Dans l'histoire de l'émancipation de l'Amérique, le Venezuela joua un rôle prépondérant, et c'est au génie et à la ténacité de Simón Bolívar que six nations de notre continent doivent leur indépendance. Il faut voir là l'explication du profond sentiment anticolonialiste qui règne dans mon pays, et aussi de la vive sympathie que nous inspirent les peuples qui luttent encore pour leur indépendance.

83. La Charte des Nations Unies a indiscutablement représenté un grand pas en avant vers la solution du problème colonial et a fait naître l'espoir chez les peuples encore soumis à ce régime. Il est évident que nombre des principes énoncés dans notre Charte sont incompatibles avec l'existence d'un régime colonial, et les dispositions des Chapitres XI et XII ne peuvent être considérés, dans l'esprit de la Charte, que comme l'ultime recherche d'un compromis entre les intérêts des puissances coloniales et l'irrésistible courant qu'ont fait naître les principes sacrés de la libre détermination des peuples et de l'égalité absolue entre les hommes.

84. Le système établi par la Charte a porté des fruits magnifiques, et l'application de ses principes directeurs, ancrés toujours plus profondément dans la conscience des peuples, nous a donné la satisfaction, dès 1945, d'assister à la naissance d'un grand nombre de nouveaux Etats indépendants qui sont aujourd'hui devenus Membres de notre Organisation. Cependant, il reste encore des millions d'êtres humains qui vivent sous le régime colonial et c'est dans leur intérêt qu'il faut accélérer le processus. La déclaration sur l'indépendance de ces pays et de ces peuples, que nous discutons en cette année 1960, doit mener à l'accomplissement de ce devoir et à la satisfaction de cette juste aspiration. Cette déclaration devra constituer l'instrument qui permettra d'adopter des mesures visant à éliminer définitivement le colonialisme. Dans ce processus, les Nations Unies devront jouer un rôle primordial en accordant aux jeunes nations indépendantes l'aide technique dont elles ont besoin et en les protégeant contre toute tentative faite par l'ancienne puissance coloniale ou toute autre puissance pour y installer sa prépondérance économique.

85. L'indépendance politique à elle seule n'est pas une indépendance réelle; elle doit s'accompagner de l'indépendance économique. C'est pourquoi le principe du droit des peuples à disposer de leurs richesses naturelles est tout aussi important que leur droit à la libre détermination — il vaudrait même mieux dire qu'il en est partie intégrante. Ces richesses naturelles doivent être exploitées au bénéfice du pays qui les possède sans porter tort, évidemment, aux obligations qui découlent de la coopération économique entre nations et du droit international.

86. Il en est, en effet, des nations comme des individus. Pour que l'homme puisse pleinement développer ses facultés et être réellement libre, il ne lui suffit pas d'être en possession de tous ses droits civiques et politiques; il lui faut, de plus, bénéficier d'une certaine aisance économique qui lui permette de rendre effective cette liberté. Dans le domaine du droit interne, nous avons pu suivre les étapes de ce processus de libération, qui se poursuit depuis la Révolution française. Celle-ci consacra l'égalité juridique et abolit les privilèges de caste; il devait ensuite appartenir au siècle précédent et surtout au siècle actuel de consacrer la naissance du droit social, qui tend précisément à protéger les travailleurs et les classes économiquement faibles. Cette évolution du droit interne, qui a exercé ses effets sur l'individu, se poursuit actuellement en droit international, et ce sont les nations qui en sont l'objet. L'existence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies a, sans aucun doute, été un élément décisif de cette évolution. La déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, que cette assemblée va adopter, marquera une étape extrêmement importante de ce processus.

87. La déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux concerne spécifiquement les pays que la Charte définit comme territoires non autonomes ou territoires sous tutelle; mais, en réalité, il convient de lui donner un sens bien plus large, car elle confirme, une fois de plus, le principe de la libre détermination des peuples, qui comporte le droit de tout peuple à se donner la forme de gouvernement qu'il désire, à jouir librement du patrimoine spirituel et matériel qui lui appartient en propre, à vivre librement selon ses traditions les plus chères, à n'être assujéti, sous quelque forme que ce soit, à aucune autre nation ou à aucun autre peuple plus puissant.

88. Cette considération nous invite à réfléchir sur une caractéristique indispensable à une déclaration sur l'abolition du colonialisme: je veux parler de son universalité. Une telle déclaration se fonde, en effet, sur des principes universels qui ne peuvent être limités ni dans le temps ni dans l'espace. Sur ces principes reposent la dignité même de l'homme et le droit indiscutable des peuples à vivre librement; ceux-ci doivent être libres de s'organiser en nations indépendantes; libres de choisir le système politique qui convient le mieux à leurs traditions et à leur idéal; tout peuple a droit à la liberté de l'enseignement, à la liberté du culte; en un mot, à la liberté de vivre comme il le désire, sous réserve de reconnaître les mêmes droits à tous les autres peuples et de respecter ces droits. La déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux doit, par conséquent, viser tous les peuples et tous les pays qui, sur tous les continents, vivent encore sous le régime colonial ou ne jouissent pas de leur indépendance; de même, cette déclaration ne doit pas porter seulement sur le passé et le présent, mais aussi sur l'avenir, afin d'empêcher que des peuples indépendants ne retombent sous la domination colonialiste.

89. C'est en lui donnant ainsi son sens le plus large que ma délégation interprète toute déclaration sur l'anticolonialisme, et c'est selon ce critère qu'elle se prononcera sur les projets soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée. En votant en faveur d'une déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, la délégation du Venezuela ne fera que demeurer fidèle à la position qu'elle n'a jamais cessé d'adopter et qu'elle a confirmée ses votes et ses déclarations au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et elle se prononcera une fois de plus pour l'indépendance des peuples et l'application, sur tous les continents, des buts et des principes définis par la Charte des Nations Unies.

La séance est levée à 17 h 30.

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1309

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

En l'absence du Président, M. Hasan (Pakistan), vice-président, prend la présidence.

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Dépendance sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. Le PRÉSIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Portugal, premier orateur inscrit sur la liste de ce matin, afin qu'il use de son droit de réponse.

2. M. GARIN (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Lors de la 939^{ème} séance, le représentant de l'Union soviétique, s'exprimant dans des termes les plus offensants, dont je ne puis deviner la bassesse qu'à travers l'interprétation anglaise, s'est servi de cette tribune pour insulter sans aucune retenue le Portugal et le peuple portugais. Fidèle à la tactique bien connue de son gouvernement, qui consiste à tout falsifier et à tout déformer, le représentant de l'Union soviétique s'est lancé l'autre jour dans une attaque effrénée et malveillante contre de nombreux pays, dont le mien. Il a proféré contre nous des accusations que rien n'avait provoquées, des accusations injustifiées, sans fondement, gratuites et parfaitement malveillantes. Les insultes proférées par la délégation soviétique à l'égard d'un membre de l'Organisation et d'un peuple qui se respecte nous oblige à répondre.

3. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a introduit ses fausses allégations en prétendant que dans les provinces portugaises d'outre-mer "... des sociétés et compagnies américaines telles que la Standard Oil Company, la Chase National Bank, la National City Bank of New York et la Gulf Oil Corporation of America ... contrôlent la plupart des sociétés portugaises, qu'il s'agisse d'extraction de diamants, de pétrole, de la production du caoutchouc, etc." [939^{ème} séance, par. 58]. Or, aucune de ces allégations n'est vraie. Ni la National City Bank, ni la Standard Oil Company, ni la Chase National Bank n'ont la haute main sur quoi que ce soit en territoire portugais; elles n'y ont même pas de succursales. Toute personne de bonne foi qui connaît l'économie portugaise sait fort bien qu'aucune entreprise ou société portugaise ne relève d'une autorité américaine ou étrangère, et que les intérêts que les Américains peuvent y détenir sont insignifiants. En outre, en vertu de la législation portugaise, l'administration de toute société ou entreprise, même de celles qui comptent une participation de capitaux étrangers, demeure toujours aux mains de Portugais. Aux termes de la législation actuellement en vigueur au Portugal, les intérêts étrangers ne peuvent représenter plus de 40 pour 100 de l'ensemble du capital social. Il y a donc contrevérité flagrante et déformation patente des faits.

4. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a également soulevé devant l'Assemblée la question de savoir s'il existe ou non dans le territoire portugais "... un régime brutal de discrimination raciale et de travail forcé ..." [ibid., par. 59]. Ma réponse est négative. Il ne s'agit là que d'une autre contrevérité que nous rejetons fermement et entièrement. Je n'ai pas l'intention d'accabler l'Assemblée de détails et je me bornerai à déclarer qu'il y a liberté absolue du travail et libre choix absolu de l'emploi. De plus, mon gouvernement a ratifié la Convention de 1930 concernant le travail forcé ou obligatoire^{1/}, ainsi que la Convention de 1957 concernant l'abolition du travail forcé^{2/}, de l'Organisation internationale du Travail. D'autre part, la Constitution portugaise et la législation du travail interdisent explicitement le travail forcé, ou toute autre forme de travail obligatoire, que nous considérons comme un crime. Quiconque le désire peut consulter nos lois.

5. Quant aux allégations concernant la discrimination raciale, je doute qu'aucune imagination, si fertile qu'elle soit, pourrait jamais concevoir une accusation plus injuste et moins fondée, ni une accusation qui, si elle émanait d'une source plus sérieuse, aurait pu nous blesser plus profondément. Permettez-moi de me référer à un auteur qui fait autorité, l'historien bien connu, Arnold Toynbee, qui a écrit dans un article récent publié dans le supplément illustré du New York Times du 7 août 1960:

"Il existe de vastes groupes humains dans lesquels les préjugés raciaux sont inconnus: je pense particulièrement aux musulmans et aux peuples de langue espagnole et de langue portugaise."

Dans le même article, ce même historien écrit encore:

"De toute manière, et quelle que soit l'origine historique de ce fait, il est incontestable que les Espagnols et les peuples de langues espagnole et portugaise sont exempts de ce sentiment de race."

6. Je pourrais citer encore de nombreux auteurs bien connus pour leur impartialité et leur sérieux, mais je doute fort que ce soient là des qualités dont le représentant de l'Union soviétique se préoccupe beaucoup.

7. La délégation soviétique a lancé une autre accusation:

^{1/} Conférence internationale du Travail, Conventions et Recommandations, 1919-1949 (Genève, Bureau international du Travail, 1949), Convention No 29.

^{2/} Bureau international du Travail, Bulletin officiel, vol. XL (1957), No 1, Convention No 105.

"Ni à la Quatrième Commission, ni en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale le représentant du Portugal n'a tenté de nier que les habitants des colonies portugaises sont divisés en "civilisés", (assimilés) et "non civilisés". [939ème séance, par. 59.]

La délégation portugaise a fait plus que de simplement tenter de nier ce fait: elle l'a réfuté, et, qui plus est, elle a montré dans le détail que de telles accusations ne pouvaient être étayées ni sur la loi ni sur la pratique portugaises. Il est indéniable que la loi portugaise ignore toute distinction entre "civilisés" et "non civilisés" et si d'aucuns, telle la délégation soviétique, ont forgé cette élucubration pour les besoins de leur propagande ou de leurs intérêts politiques, nous n'en sommes pas responsables et nous rejetons tout blâme de ce genre.

8. Quant aux personnes qui désireraient obtenir des indications plus détaillées à ce sujet, je les prie de se reporter aux débats de la Quatrième Commission qui, lors de l'examen de cette question, a entièrement élucidé ce point.

9. Ensuite, la délégation soviétique a déclaré que, dans un territoire portugais, est pratiquée "une politique d'intimidation sanglante" et d' "assassinats en série" [ibid., par. 61]. Tels sont les termes exacts employés. C'est une accusation des plus insultantes et s'il ne s'agissait pas de la délégation soviétique qui a l'habitude de prendre à la légère ce genre de questions, ma délégation n'aurait pu imaginer qu'il y eût un membre de cette assemblée, conscient de ses responsabilités, capable de faire des déclarations aussi fantaisistes sans pouvoir se fonder sur quoi que ce soit, ni avancer la moindre preuve.

10. Je proteste vigoureusement contre les accusations insultantes de la délégation soviétique. Du reste, il me faut encore signaler un autre mensonge. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a dit que les habitants de nos territoires d'outre-mer "ne sont représentés dans aucun des organes administratifs ni dans les organes législatifs de la métropole" [ibid., par. 59]. Ceci n'est pas vrai. Ils sont représentés au sein de ces organes. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a dit que les habitants "peuvent être arbitrairement expulsés de leurs terres ancestrales" [ibid.]. Ceci n'est pas vrai. Ils ne peuvent être expulsés.

11. Dois-je poursuivre? Je ne désire pas abuser de la patience de l'Assemblée. Je crois que l'on pourrait crier au miracle si le gouvernement soviétique, qui n'a cessé de fouler la liberté aux pieds en recourant à la brutalité et à la violence et qui en matière d'oppression ne le cède à personne, s'intéressait sincèrement à ce qu'il appelle la liberté des peuples colonisés. En réalité, nous assistons aux mêmes manœuvres auxquelles la délégation soviétique a accoutumé cette assemblée. La délégation soviétique est prête à utiliser tout — sauf la vérité — et chacun, pour semer la haine et le chaos dans le monde et préparer ainsi le terrain pour la conquête et l'exploitation communiste, en s'immisçant en Afrique et d'autres régions du monde afin de réaliser "la prévision du grand Lénine" à laquelle s'est référé le représentant de l'Union soviétique à la même séance [ibid., par. 65].

12. L'asservissement de peuples et de territoires, l'esclavage physique et moral renforcé par la répression politique, la déportation en masse de populations, l'immigration forcée, l'absence totale de liberté politique et intellectuelle, les menaces constantes contre d'autres nations et d'autres peuples, l'exploitation du faible, dont le représentant soviétique a parlé longuement dans son discours diffamatoire, sont les caractéristiques bien connues du nouveau type de colonialisme que le monde affronte aujourd'hui: le colonialisme soviétique. L'insolence du représentant de l'Union soviétique, qui est allé jusqu'à accuser la nation portugaise d'activités meurtrières, est à la fois comique et tragique: qui donc nous accuse? Le représentant de l'Empire soviétique, ni plus ni moins.

13. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Argentine qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

14. M. AMADEO (Argentine) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Dans son intervention du 7 décembre dernier [939ème séance], le représentant de l'Union soviétique a fait allusion à la position que la délégation argentine a adoptée dans ce débat.

15. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a manifestement déformé le point de vue argentin lorsqu'il a affirmé que, dans la mesure où ma déclaration indiquait, selon lui, que nous sommes opposés à l'accélération forcée du processus de décolonisation, elle encourageait les puissances coloniales à maintenir leur domination sur leurs territoires coloniaux.

16. La position de la délégation argentine sur la liquidation du système colonial a été si clairement exposée, qu'il est inutile d'y revenir. J'ai dit dans ma déclaration:

"Ce qui importe, c'est d'enregistrer le fait que, quel que soit le jugement actuellement formulé ou qui sera formulé un jour par les historiens de l'avenir, le régime colonial n'est plus conforme aux structures politiques de notre temps ... Peu important aujourd'hui les explications ou les justifications qui ont pu s'accorder autrefois à ces systèmes. Ce qui importe, c'est que notre temps n'admet plus leur survie." [927ème séance, par. 17.]

17. Ce point de vue est suffisamment net pour que nous puissions nous dispenser de le préciser. Si nous croyons que le transfert du pouvoir aux nouveaux Etats doit s'effectuer, autant que possible, dans des conditions pacifiques, d'accord avec les anciennes puissances métropolitaines et dans les délais qu'impose l'intérêt même des pays émancipés, cela ne signifie en aucune manière que nous allions changer la déclaration de principe affirmant notre opposition à l'existence du régime colonial.

18. C'est ainsi que le vote favorable que nous avons émis sur le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] procède précisément de la conviction que les mesures immédiates dont il est question au paragraphe 5 de la déclaration appellent la création sans délai des conditions nécessaires à l'indépendance. En revanche, nous ne croyons pas que de telles conditions impliquent l'obligation de transformer le régime juridique en vigueur.

19. Nous estimons que les pays les plus directement intéressés à cette question ont adopté une attitude beaucoup plus réaliste, et, sans doute, plus propre à servir les intérêts des peuples non autonomes, que ne l'ont fait ceux qui ont utilisé le thème colonial à des fins de propagande.

20. En ce qui concerne notre position, nous ne permettrons à personne de l'interpréter d'une manière contraire à l'esprit et à la lettre de nos propres paroles. Nous admettons que l'on critique nos opinions, mais nous rejetons toute interprétation qui, pour des motifs avoués ou non, chercherait à les modifier.

21. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Espagne pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

22. M. DE LEQUERICA (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La semaine dernière, au cours de la 939ème séance du mercredi 7 décembre, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a prononcé un discours que les membres de la délégation espagnole et moi-même avons suivi dans son interprétation espagnole. Nous n'avons pas entendu la moindre allusion aux îles Canaries. De même, on ne trouve dans le texte espagnol du discours soviétique tel qu'il apparaît dans le compte rendu provisoire aucune mention de cette province espagnole. Mais en nous reportant aux textes anglais et français, nous avons trouvé la liste que le représentant de l'Union soviétique a donnée des divers territoires — dont certains territoires espagnols que l'on a coutume de citer en pareil cas — qui pourraient servir de base au colonialisme dans des régions séparées de la métropole, et, dans cette liste nous avons relevé les îles Canaries.

23. Je ne voudrais pas insulter les membres de cette assemblée en leur rappelant que les Canaries constituent une très ancienne province espagnole, plus ancienne encore, dans le cadre de l'unité nationale, que certaines des provinces de la Péninsule. C'est aux Canaries que Christophe Colomb fit escale lorsqu'il partit à la découverte de l'Amérique, et les Canaries furent le véritable foyer de rayonnement de l'œuvre créatrice de l'Espagne dans le Nouveau Monde. En Amérique, à l'époque où le continent était rattaché à la Couronne d'Espagne, on distinguait couramment les "Espagnols péninsulaires" et les "Espagnols canariens". Beaucoup d'Américains du Centre et du Sud, qui sont de notre langue et de notre race, sont originaires des Canaries. C'est aux Canaries qu'est né Galdós, le plus grand écrivain espagnol du XIXème siècle. L'assertion du porte-parole de la délégation soviétique est donc une monstruosité historique, indigne de la culture des membres de cette délégation. Elle montre que l'orateur en sait moins long que n'importe quel écolier qui a quelques rudiments de la géographie de l'Europe.

24. Un ministre du Gouvernement espagnol, M. Carrero Blanco, a bien défini le caractère historico-géographique de l'Espagne lorsqu'il a dit que la nation espagnole est géographiquement une péninsule unie par un fil ténu au continent européen avec, dans l'Atlantique et dans la Méditerranée, des îles et des territoires qui sont terre espagnole. La Péninsule, poursuit le ministre, ressemble beaucoup à une île. C'est la mer seule qui fait l'unité de notre nation. Et M. Carrero Blanco de conclure: nous sommes un immense archipel.

25. Mais, surtout, par ses assertions le représentant de l'Union soviétique a porté atteinte à la souveraineté et à l'intégrité de l'Espagne, qui sont garanties par la Charte des Nations Unies. Nous élevons la protestation la plus énergique contre une telle attaque et déplorons profondément que ces débats aient pu y donner lieu.

26. Lorsque le représentant du Royaume-Uni fit allusion [925ème séance] aux déportations en masse de populations entières de l'Union soviétique et à la suppression de la nationalité qui a accompagné ces déportations — en précisant que ces faits s'étaient produits pour les Tartares de Crimée, les Kalmouks et autres collectivités moins importantes — le représentant de l'Union soviétique a protesté énergiquement et il est monté à la tribune, suffoquant d'indignation, pour dire qu'il y avait là une infraction aux principes généralement admis dans les travaux de notre Assemblée et demander au Président de protéger la délégation soviétique et les autres délégations contre cette immixtion dans les affaires intérieures d'un pays. J'accepte que sa protestation constitue un précédent, et dans ces conditions, j'adopte maintenant la même attitude et je demande, conformément à l'esprit et la lettre de la Charte, que l'Assemblée relève l'attaque inqualifiable de la délégation de l'Union soviétique, qui manifestement ne respecte ni le droit, ni le texte pourtant si clairs que nous connaissons tous! Le représentant de l'Union soviétique use de deux poids et deux mesures. Si l'on fait état ici de l'impérialisme et du colonialisme manifestement appliqué par l'Union soviétique, elle proteste immédiatement; mais, d'un autre côté, elle n'hésite pas — comme le prouve toute l'histoire du régime soviétique — à s'immiscer dans les affaires intérieures des autres pays et à s'en prendre à l'intégrité territoriale de mon pays, comme elle l'a fait mercredi dernier.

27. Comme les problèmes coloniaux nous touchent à peine directement, nous pouvons en parler avec impartialité et désintéressement. Je tiens à saisir cette occasion — je ne pensais d'ailleurs pas intervenir dans ce débat — pour relever la probité avec laquelle les représentants des pays africains et asiatiques, en dépit de l'intérêt primordial qu'ils portent à ce problème, ont pris part à la discussion. A la différence de l'Union soviétique, ces délégations ont maintenu le débat au niveau intellectuel et politique qui convenait et se sont abstenues des acrobaties caractéristiques de ceux qui ne cherchent pas, ici à servir le progrès de l'humanité, mais à trouver des prétextes pour créer des difficultés.

28. Puisque je suis venu à cette tribune, je ne peux m'empêcher de prendre acte du fait que les représentants des peuples de l'Amérique du Centre et du Sud ont rendu un hommage émouvant — dont nous leur sommes reconnaissants — à l'œuvre passée de l'Espagne; ils ont fait preuve, eux aussi, d'une élévation d'esprit et d'un sens critique remarquables. Ces peuples ont maintenu leurs liens avec la vieille péninsule européenne et avec ses provinces insulaires, y compris les Canaries et les Baléares.

29. Avant de conclure, je prie le ciel de ne pas me laisser suivre le mauvais exemple soviétique, ce qui ne pourrait qu'interrompre nos débats, d'un intérêt essentiel, je l'ai déjà dit, pour le progrès social du monde entier. Dieu me garde aussi de céder à la tentation de vous lire un article du New York Times du 24 septembre 1960, qui nous donnerait matière à discussion à propos du colonialisme soviétique pendant beaucoup d'autres séances. Cet article énumère tous les pays que la Russie soviétique a "colonisés" par la force. Je n'entends pas mentionner de nations qui ont ici le statut de nations indépendantes, car sur ce point nos scrupules nous imposent le silence. C'est ainsi que, lorsque la question du Tibet a été discutée à cette Assemblée, nous nous sommes abstendus de voter, parce que nous n'étions pas certains que ce pays échappât en fait à la souveraineté chinoise. Telle est la position que nous avons alors adoptée pour respecter la Charte, bien qu'il fût évident qu'une agression ait été commise. Pour revenir à cet article du New York Times, j'y relève les noms, parmi les pays colonisés par l'Union soviétique, de la Lituanie, de la Lettonie, de l'Estonie, de l'Arménie, de la Géorgie, de l'Azerbaïdjan, de l'Ouzbékistan, du Turkménistan, du Kirghizistan, du Tadjikistan, du Kazakhstan, de la Tartarie et des territoires des Yakoutes et des Bouriates. Combien d'heures pourrions-nous passer à examiner le cas de chacun de ces pays, et à présenter des projets visant à adoucir le sort de tous ces peuples? Mais, je le répète, il ne nous viendrait jamais à l'esprit de le faire.

30. Sans aller si loin et sans nous engager si avant dans les complexités de la géographie humaine, nous pourrions citer le cas de la Hongrie en nous référant au rapport de sir Leslie Munro^{3/}. En jetant un coup d'œil à la carte, nous pourrions aussi citer l'Allemagne orientale. Mais nous préférons ne pas troubler cette session de l'Assemblée avec ces allusions superflues qui ne font guère honneur à ceux qui y ont recours; agir de la sorte ne serait guère plus sérieux que de présenter une pétition pour libérer par exemple Odessa ou Léninegrad du colonialisme soviétique.

31. M. RAKOTOMALALA (Madagascar): Les orateurs qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune ont défini en termes d'une très haute élévation de pensée, l'objet et les buts du débat qui est présentement engagé devant l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies et que le monde entier suit avec attention. Les peuples qui aspirent à leur libération se tournent avec espoir vers nous et attendent que, de nos travaux, sortent des solutions rapides et positives.

32. Je vais maintenant entrer brièvement dans le vif du sujet.

33. Avec le XVIII^{ème} siècle et la Révolution française ont disparu les régimes despotiques et se sont affirmés les droits de l'homme.

34. L'esclavage s'est éteint avec le XIX^{ème} siècle.

35. Le XX^{ème} siècle doit être le triomphe de l'égalité entre tous les peuples. La folie des hommes durant la première moitié de ce siècle les a amenés à s'entretuer au cours de deux terribles guerres. Avec la deuxième moitié du siècle, les peuples, enfin à l'âge de raison, ne chercheront plus, du moins nous l'espérons, à s'asservir les uns les autres.

36. Un immense espoir a rempli le cœur de tous ceux qui aspiraient à l'indépendance lorsque, il y a 15 ans, la Charte des Nations Unies rédigée à San Francisco a proclamé solennellement que les puissances qui avaient sous leur domination des peuples non autonomes avaient la charge de les conduire à s'administrer eux-mêmes et à gérer démocratiquement leurs propres affaires. Un chapitre nouveau, dès lors, a été ouvert dans le livre de la vie des nations, et nous avons le privilège d'écrire maintenant les dernières pages qui prépareront la clôture de ce chapitre.

37. Le projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] dont Madagascar est cosignataire a pour objet de rappeler avec fermeté aux puissances qui administrent encore des territoires non autonomes qu'il est maintenant temps que les stipulations de la Charte soient appliquées partout dans le monde et que les Nations Unies poursuivent avec fermeté une ligne de conduite qui est inscrite dans la Charte et qui doit aboutir à l'éradication du colonialisme.

38. Ma patrie a recouvré sa souveraineté internationale après une interruption de 64 ans. Résolue à sauvegarder cette indépendance dont elle mesure tout le prix, elle est entrée dans la grande famille des Nations Unies avec la ferme volonté d'apporter une contribution sans réserve au maintien de la paix et de l'intégrité territoriale des Etats, mais aussi et surtout à la poursuite du haut idéal de fraternité et d'égalité qui est le fondement même de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

39. Ma délégation espère fermement que le projet de résolution qu'elle vous présente avec tous les autres Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie sera voté à l'unanimité, ou, tout au moins, à une majorité si large qu'il devra être considéré comme la manifestation de la volonté des peuples du monde de ne plus accepter de nouveaux, inutiles et interminables délais. Elle est persuadée que les puissances qui administrent encore des territoires non autonomes se plieront loyalement à cette volonté et prendront sans retard des mesures en vue de permettre aux populations intéressées d'exprimer librement leur sentiment. Elle estime que le devoir de ces puissances est, dans tous les cas, de préparer tous les peuples à s'administrer démocratiquement. Il faut que, d'ores et déjà, des étapes soient aménagées afin que les modifications de statut s'effectuent en ordre, que les organes indispensables d'une administration moderne soient mis le plus tôt possible en place et que les élites nationales s'habituent immédiatement à l'exercice du pouvoir.

40. Ce processus pacifique que, pour sa part, Madagascar a eu le bonheur de connaître lorsque, dès 1957, la France lui a octroyé l'autonomie interne et, en 1960, l'indépendance, pourra seul éviter les luttes et les désordres qui engendrent des souffrances pour les populations et laissent dans les cœurs des germes de haine et de xénophobie.

41. C'est donc un très large appel à la conscience des puissances administrantes que ma délégation voudrait faire afin qu'elles se plient non pas uniquement à la lettre mais aussi à l'esprit de notre projet de résolution.

42. Elle forme aussi le vœu que les peuples qui seront appelés à choisir leur destin prennent conscience des devoirs que leur imposera leur accession à la liberté. Qu'ils suscitent et fortifient leur sentiment national, leur patriotisme, mais qu'ils s'attachent aussi à éviter que leur accession à la souveraineté internationale ne s'accompagne de désordres, car cette accession à la souveraineté doit être non un facteur de haine, mais une importante contribution à l'amitié et à la concorde entre les hommes et les nations.

43. C'est dans cette perspective que la délégation malgache, après avoir apporté son soutien au projet de résolution des 43 nations, repoussera tout amendement qui en modifierait le sens et la portée, et le votera avec ferveur, consciente d'aider ainsi la poursuite de l'idéal de justice et de paix dans le monde.

44. M. WACHUKU (Nigéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je remercie le Président de m'accorder la possibilité de dire quelques mots sur la question qui est actuellement soumise à l'examen de l'Assemblée, à savoir la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples colonisés.

45. En premier lieu, je voudrais exprimer la reconnaissance de ma délégation à l'égard de la délégation de l'Union soviétique, qui a pris l'initiative de faire inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour des séances plénières de l'Assemblée générale. Je désire également remercier les délégations du Royaume-Uni, des Etats-Unis et de tous les pays non africains que les circonstances n'engagent pas aussi complètement que nous sur le sujet, et qui se sont néanmoins prononcés en faveur de l'abolition du régime funeste sous lequel l'Afrique, en particulier, se trouve encore réduite en esclavage.

46. Je suis de ceux que la question touche de plus près. La plus vaste région colonisée du monde est actuellement l'Afrique. C'est pourquoi un débat sur le colonialisme intéresse les Etats africains plus que tous les autres. D'autres pays pourraient s'abstenir d'y participer, voire quitter la séance. Ils peuvent dire: "Ceci, après tout, ne nous concerne pas." Et ils seraient en droit de le faire. Mais aucun Etat africain ne peut adopter cette attitude. Pour ma délégation et pour la Nigéria, il importe au plus haut point que les territoires africains soient entièrement libérés de la domination et de l'impérialisme étrangers. C'est là en effet l'un des fondements et l'un des principes essentiels de notre politique future. Et celui qui n'appuie pas notre cause à ce sujet doit être considéré comme notre ennemi.

47. Comme je l'ai dit précédemment, outre le colonialisme, il se pose un autre problème: l'humiliation que les peuples d'origine africaine subissent partout dans le monde. Il s'agit en d'autres termes de la discrimination raciale pratiquée contre les gens d'origine africaine.

48. La Nigéria estime que le moment est venu où cette question ne peut plus être considérée comme relevant de la compétence interne de tel ou tel Etat, mais comme étroitement liée à notre politique étrangère. Ceux qui ne sont pas disposés à faire disparaître l'humiliation qui a été infligée aux personnes d'origine africaine et à notre race en général ne peuvent se prétendre nos amis.

49. Colonialisme et impérialisme vont de pair et, pour la Nigéria, l'indépendance n'est pas une fin en soi, mais un moyen d'atteindre une fin. La Nigéria est prête à servir de cobaye et de bouc émissaire pour la libération totale du continent africain. Il y a aujourd'hui encore des millions et des millions d'Africains qui subissent la domination étrangère. Aussi, lorsque vous verrez que la Nigéria est l'un des auteurs du projet de résolution présenté par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] vous pourrez comprendre aisément pour quels motifs nous appuyons sincèrement ce texte.

50. C'est à la Conférence de Berlin, en 1884-1885, que les puissances européennes ont morcelé l'Afrique. Aucun Africain n'était présent. Ceux qui y participèrent prirent un couteau à découper pour se partager le continent entier. Et chacun prit son quartier comme s'il s'était agi d'une dinde de Noël.

51. Mais aujourd'hui l'Afrique retrouve sa vraie place, et il est juste que la Nigéria, qui est le pays indépendant le plus vaste et le plus peuplé d'Afrique, et l'un des mieux pourvus par la nature, précise bien sa position en la matière, dès les premiers moments de son indépendance. La position de la Nigéria ne doit laisser place à aucun doute.

52. Je saisis à nouveau l'occasion qui m'est offerte de m'adresser une fois encore à certaines puissances coloniales qui croient encore en d'étranges idéologies, et en particulier au Portugal. Je voudrais demander au Portugal de cesser de se leurrer en affirmant que l'Angola, le Mozambique et d'autres territoires africains font partie du territoire métropolitain du Portugal. La Nigéria n'acceptera jamais cette thèse fallacieuse. Le Portugal s'est toujours comporté comme s'il ignorait les transformations que le monde subit à l'heure actuelle. Nous ne nourrissons point de haine à l'égard du Portugal, mais nous aimons plus encore nos frères Africains. Je saisis donc cette occasion pour avertir le Portugal que, bien que la Nigéria n'ait point de haine contre lui, elle ne pourra jamais partager ses vues et admettre que les Africains d'Angola soient maintenus en esclavage et que l'on ne fasse rien pour leur permettre de vivre d'une vie plus riche.

53. Le Portugal devrait tirer une leçon des événements du Congo. C'est parce que Léopold II a considéré le Congo comme sa propriété personnelle, et que les Belges, lorsqu'ils prirent en charge le pays, l'ont considéré comme une ferme et se sont bornés à ne former que des ouvriers agricoles pour enrichir la Belgique, que celle-ci, au moment où le nationalisme l'a emporté, n'a pu résoudre le problème qui se posait. Et où en sommes-nous maintenant au Congo? Le chaos y règne.

54. Si nous avons abordé ce sujet aujourd'hui, c'est parce que nous désirons éviter que l'anarchie et le chaos s'instaurent ailleurs en Afrique. Que ceux qui ont des oreilles nous écoutent. Mais que ceux qui n'en ont point ou qui veulent faire les sourds ne s'étonnent pas si l'histoire se répète.

55. Depuis que nous sommes venus à cette assemblée, nous avons lu toutes sortes de choses. Nous avons même reçu une lettre circulaire émanant d'une étrange organisation de ce grand pays, et c'est d'ailleurs ce genre d'événements qui nous incite à agir sans la moindre hésitation lorsque nous exigeons la liquidation totale de toutes les colonies. Je crois qu'il serait bon de vous donner lecture de ce document afin que tous vous en connaissiez le contenu. Je n'ignore pas que cette lettre émane de certains individus qui ne comptent guère, mais le fait qu'une société démocratique, régie par le droit, puisse tolérer l'existence d'éléments et d'organisations de ce type, qui veulent la destruction et l'humiliation d'hommes différents d'eux parce qu'ils les considèrent comme des indigènes, ne fait que nous inciter à agir. De tels incidents n'engendrent pas la haine dans nos cœurs; au contraire, ils ne nous incitent que plus vivement à exiger que chaque mètre carré du territoire de l'Afrique, chaque mètre carré du territoire de l'Asie, et chaque mètre carré de n'importe quel territoire colonial, soit libéré de la domination étrangère.

56. Ce faisant, nous contribuerons à l'établissement de la paix et de la tranquillité dans le monde. Il ne peut y avoir de paix dans le monde aussi longtemps que tous les territoires coloniaux n'aient pas été libérés du joug du colonialisme. Cessons de nous leurrer: la paix ne régnera pas tant qu'un Etat, quel qu'il soit, croira possible d'asservir un autre Etat et d'exploiter ses ressources dans son propre intérêt et non pas dans l'intérêt du peuple de ce pays; en espérant édifier sa propre économie aux dépens de l'économie et du bien-être d'autrui. Que nul ne s'y trompe, ces hommes veulent leur part des biens de ce monde, ils désirent développer leur culture, leurs traditions et leurs institutions, leurs qualités spirituelles, intellectuelles et morales. Il suffit qu'une seule nation asservisse, réprime, détruise et domine une autre nation pour qu'elle sème le germe d'une catastrophe mondiale.

57. Ce qu'il y a de plus imprévisible au monde, c'est le comportement de l'homme lui-même. On peut prévoir quel temps il fera les prochains jours, mais on ne peut jamais dire exactement ce qu'un homme va faire tant qu'il a sa liberté d'action. En d'autres termes, la chose la plus incertaine du monde, c'est l'homme; et aussi longtemps qu'il n'aura en lui l'étincelle divine et un élément divin, il sera capable de faire le bien ou le mal.

58. Il vient un moment où un peuple trop longtemps opprimé ne se préoccupe plus de ce que peut lui coûter sa rébellion et où il est prêt à mourir pour la cause qui lui tient à cœur. C'est à l'Afrique du Sud que je pense en disant cela. Le colonialisme à l'heure actuelle n'est plus le seul fait de l'Europe. L'Union sud-africaine est l'un de ces Etats impérialistes où une minorité de 3 millions d'hommes a décidé d'asservir, d'humilier et de détruire virtuellement l'âme de 11 millions d'autres hommes.

59. Je déclare maintenant, comme je l'ai dit tout à l'heure à l'intention du Portugal, et j'adresse le même avertissement à l'Espagne et à d'autres pays d'Europe qui ont des visées en Afrique, que la minorité en Afrique du Sud qui avait la possibilité de faire le bien a choisi de continuer à faire le mal. La délégation de la Nigéria saisit l'occasion de prévenir les éléments minoritaires que la Nigéria ne tolérera pas indéfiniment la situation actuelle. Cependant, nous avons l'esprit assez large pour comprendre les forces de l'histoire. Nous ne désirons pas traiter les éléments de la minorité comme des étrangers en Afrique du Sud que l'on doit rejeter vers la mer, anéantir ou exproprier.

60. Je désire répéter devant cette auguste assemblée ce que j'ai déjà dit précédemment: tout ce que nous demandons aujourd'hui aux dirigeants d'Afrique du Sud, c'est de respecter aujourd'hui la primauté du droit. Il ne doit y avoir qu'un seul droit pour tous les habitants d'Afrique du Sud. Ceux qui détiennent le pouvoir dans ce pays doivent comprendre que s'ils veulent encore survivre dans un proche avenir, il leur faudra reconnaître la primauté du droit et utiliser le pouvoir et les ressources dont ils disposent pour permettre à la majorité de se rétablir dans ses droits. Ils n'ont d'autre issue s'ils veulent regagner la confiance qu'ils ont perdue au cours de longues années d'oppression et de répression. Ce n'est pas la Nigéria qui interviendra, même s'ils ne veulent pas le comprendre, mais le moment viendra, tôt ou tard, où la majorité se révoltera, et nous avons déjà entendu parler d'un certain nombre d'incidents qui se sont produits en Afrique du Sud. Le moment viendra où la majorité se révoltera, et si ceux qui détiennent le pouvoir devaient manquer de jugement au point de permettre qu'un tel incident se produise, je ne puis dire ni imaginer quant à moi ce qu'en seraient les conséquences. Pour être modéré, je dirai simplement qu'elles seront désastreuses.

61. C'est pour éviter ces sacrifices inutiles que la délégation de la Nigéria saisit l'occasion qui lui est offerte ici de demander aux dirigeants de la minorité sud-africaine d'extirper le colonialisme et l'impérialisme qui règnent dans ce territoire depuis si longtemps, et de faire cesser l'humiliation qui a été le lot du peuple africain.

62. Rien ne sert de nous dire qu'il s'agit là d'une affaire interne. Nous n'admettrons jamais qu'il s'agit d'une affaire interne de l'Union sud-africaine. Aussi longtemps que les hommes d'origine africaine seront en butte à la discrimination raciale sur le territoire africain ou dans n'importe quelle région du monde, la Nigéria n'admettra jamais qu'il s'agit là d'une question relevant de la compétence interne d'un pays quel qu'il soit. Plus tôt on le comprendra, mieux cela vaudra. C'est l'un des principes fondamentaux de notre politique à l'égard de tous les pays. Plus tôt les Nations Unies arriveront à mettre fin au colonialisme, à l'impérialisme et à toutes leurs séquelles, qui sont si pénibles, choquantes et intolérables dans une société civilisée, et plus elles contribueront à l'établissement de la paix dans le monde et à la compréhension entre les hommes.

63. J'ai dit que j'allais donner lecture d'un document. Il s'agit d'une lettre circulaire qui a été envoyée aux nouveaux Etats Membres d'Afrique et d'Asie. Cette lettre a été envoyée à mon bureau et je crois que son texte devrait figurer au compte rendu. Elle est intitulée: "L'Amérique blanche ne veut pas de Nations Unies abâtardies."

"L'East River dégage des miasmes putrides sous lesquels New York étouffe. C'est cette odeur de suint que dégagent les noirs d'Afrique et les jaunes d'Asie qui ont envahi l'ONU. Il y a de quoi faire vomir tous les protestants blancs d'Amérique.

"Ces êtres inférieurs sont descendus tout droit des cocotiers et sortis de la vase de leurs marécages pour faire la loi aux blancs. Vont-ils réussir leur sale coup?

"Les Français dégénérés, les nations latines dominées par le pape de Rome et les slaves enjuivés ont déjà cédé, mais nous, nous disons: l'Amérique est blanche et nous ferons en sorte qu'elle reste blanche. Peu importe que le reste du monde s'abâtardisse, nous garderons notre Amérique pure.

"Le Ku-Klux-Klan veille contre le péril noir et le péril jaune qui déferlent sur nous à travers les océans.

"Les races inférieures font la loi à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies. Ces noirs et leurs frères bruns et jaunes se sont réunis pour jeter bas l'Amérique protestante blanche.

"Quelle insulte pour les fondateurs de notre République que Nkrumah le noir, Nehru le brun, Nasser le beige, Sukarno le jaune et Tito, athée, traître à Dieu et à la race blanche, voulant forcer le président Eisenhower à rencontrer "au sommet" l'antéchrist Khrouchtchev. Ces singes auraient dû être enduits de goudron et roulés dans les plumes.

"Le Seigneur, dans sa sagesse infinie, a créé la race blanche pour qu'elle dicte sa loi au règne animal et aux races inférieures. Notre Sauveur Jésus-Christ nous a enseigné à aimer et à chérir même les esclaves, mais il n'a pas prêché la domination de l'esclave sur le maître.

"Le Ku-Klux-Klan entend que les délégués noirs et jaunes restent à proximité des bâtiments de l'ONU et des maisons closes de Harlem et qu'ils s'abstiennent de souiller les hôtels et les restaurants de notre ville blanche. Notre police ne relâchera pas sa vigilance contre les dérèglements d'Africains, tels que le délégué du Cameroun et autres sales nègres, et, si tout cela ne vous plaît pas, filez. L'Amérique ne veut pas d'une Organisation des Nations Unies noire et jaune. Les croix de feu brûleront."

64. Je n'ai pas lu ce document pour semer la discorde, mais pour indiquer à l'Assemblée quelle est la raison supérieure qui nous pousse à lutter avec détermination pour que le colonialisme sous toutes ses formes disparaisse de la surface de notre planète.

65. Je sais que l'organisation en question n'est composée que de quelques individus qui ne représentent rien et qui ne sauraient être considérés comme exprimant les sentiments du peuple de ce grand pays. Je sais qu'elle se compose de quelques individus dont le jugement est si perverti qu'ils ne peuvent discerner le cours de l'histoire, et qui peut-être n'ont pas lu l'histoire et n'ont pas eu la possibilité d'en dégager les enseignements. Ils oublient que même la richesse du pays dont ils sont fiers d'être les citoyens loyaux est le fruit de la sueur, du sang et des larmes de ces noirs eux-mêmes. Sans eux, l'économie, la grandeur et même la création de leur grand pays n'aurait pas été possible et le pays ne pourrait être ce qu'il est aujourd'hui. C'est ce que l'histoire nous enseigne. Je suis prêt à reconnaître que cette attitude tient surtout à l'ignorance, car l'Europe a déterminé le cours de l'histoire pendant de nombreux siècles alors que les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique n'ont commencé à jouer un rôle qu'à une époque toute récente, au cours du XXème siècle. Ces êtres à l'intelligence déformée en sont venus à croire qu'ils étaient seuls au monde.

66. Cependant, l'ONU est un miroir qui refléchit les diverses parties du monde. Elle s'efforce de créer un certain équilibre et c'est à cause de la résistance que ces individus opposent aux vérités élémentaires, dont témoigne la présence ici de diverses nations et de diverses races travaillant dans l'harmonie pour le bien commun de l'humanité, que les éléments réactionnaires craignent la vérité et sont prêts à mourir dans l'ignorance. J'ai donné lecture de ce document afin de permettre aux représentants du grand pays qui nous accueille de mesurer combien de telles organisations peuvent nuire à ses relations avec d'autres nations. Ils pourront ainsi s'adresser à leur nation pour lui demander d'extirper cette tumeur qui ronge leur vie politique. Ce n'est pas l'amertume qui m'a fait vous lire cette lettre. Je prends très calmement ce genre de chose, car j'en ai lu de pires, dues à des savants, à des professeurs qui ont prostitué leurs connaissances pour servir les intérêts des impérialistes. Nous avons lu et analysé tous ces écrits, mais ils ne nous ont pas fait dévier de la voie que nous nous étions tracée.

67. C'est lorsque des incidents de ce genre se produisent, c'est en présence de ces théories et de ces concepts fallacieux, que nous comprenons que ce ne sont ni la haine ni l'amertume qui prouveraient de façon concluante que ces théories sont erronées, mais que seul un effort en vue d'éliminer les causes mêmes de tels préjugés peut y parvenir. Un des moyens d'y arriver consisterait en la liquidation totale de toutes les formes de colonialisme qui subsistent dans toutes les régions encore sous domination étrangère. Je suis certain que, lorsque on y sera parvenu, l'homme se laissera aller à sa bonté naturelle, l'humanité apparaîtra sous son jour le meilleur, et le monde entier bénéficiera de la diversité de chacune de ses régions qui enrichiront le patrimoine culturel commun. Les hommes se respecteront mutuellement et chaque peuple saura apprécier les autres et reconnaître l'effort des autres civilisations et la contribution apportée par d'autres peuples dans d'autres domaines. Le monde connaîtra l'équilibre, la paix et l'harmonie entre les Etats et entre les hommes.

68. La délégation de la Nigéria envisage l'avenir avec confiance. On a dit que le monde avait les yeux fixés sur nous et s'attendait à nous voir jouer un rôle important en Afrique et dans le monde. Nous avons l'intention de jouer ce rôle — s'il nous est dévolu, — avec honnêteté, sincérité, courage et en prenant la vérité pour guide. Lorsqu'il se produit une situation de ce genre, il faut la regarder en face et avec courage. C'est dans cet esprit que j'ai donné lecture de ce document afin que ceux qui ont des oreilles pour entendre puissent entendre, que ceux qui sont capables de penser pensent, réfléchissent et trouvent une solution au problème avant qu'il soit trop tard.

69. Les autres races exigent le droit de vivre sur leur territoire, d'utiliser, organiser et exploiter les richesses qui s'y trouvent, d'édifier leurs institutions, de perpétuer leur race, leur culture et leurs traditions, et de participer aux travaux d'une Assemblée comme celle-ci pour améliorer le sort du monde. Elles ne pourront pas le faire si une nation, quelle qu'elle soit, exprimant des doctrines fallacieuses et des moyens douteux, continue à prétendre qu'elle tient de Dieu, le droit d'en dominer une autre. Nous savons que c'est faux. Nous savons que telle a été la cause de la grandeur et de la décadence des empires tout au long de l'histoire. On dit que l'histoire se répète. Non, elle ne se répète pas nécessairement. Aussi longtemps que l'homme se refuse à tirer profit des leçons de l'histoire, l'histoire se répète, justement parce que l'homme se refuse à cet effort. C'est parce que l'homme est inférieur à sa tâche que l'histoire se répète, et l'expérience lui coûte cher.

70. Les signataires du projet de résolution présenté par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie croient et espèrent qu'étant donné le cours des débats, l'Assemblée adoptera le projet à l'unanimité et sans laisser place à aucune équivoque, afin de rendre l'espoir aux pays qui ont été assujettis, ces pays qui ont été privés de tout ce qu'ils possédaient, ces pays qui ont été maintenus en esclavage, qui ont été foulés aux pieds et qui n'ont pu exercer le droit à la vie, à la liberté et à la poursuite du bonheur qu'ils tenaient de Dieu lui-même. J'espère sincèrement que les grandes puissances qui font profession de démocratie et d'un idéal élevé et qui désirent que la paix règne dans le monde comprendront qu'en supprimant le colonialisme et en s'opposant à l'impérialisme, sous toutes leurs formes, nous atteindrons l'un des objectifs dont dépend la paix mondiale.

71. Le colonialisme et l'impérialisme entraînent dans leur sillage la guerre et la destruction. Il est impossible de maintenir l'impérialisme par des moyens pacifiques. C'est toujours par la force brutale qu'on le maintient. Or, la force brutale, ce n'est pas autre chose que la guerre. Puisqu'il en est ainsi, je saisis cette occasion pour demander aux grands et aux petits pays, aux pays peu puissants et aux pays qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance, de s'unir pour voter en faveur de ce projet de résolution. Ainsi l'Assemblée pourra se rappeler cette session avec le sentiment réconfortant d'avoir accompli quelque chose.

72. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant des Etats-Unis qui désire faire une brève déclaration relative à la lettre qu'a lue le représentant de la Nigéria.

73. M. MORSE (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au nom de ma délégation et de mon gouvernement, j'ai demandé qu'il me soit permis de répondre très brièvement au représentant de la Nigéria, S. E. M. Jaja Wachuku. Je tiens à ce qu'il sache que c'est la grande sympathie personnelle et le profond respect que je lui porte qui m'incitent à prendre la parole.

74. Le représentant de la Nigéria nous a donné lecture d'une lettre fort regrettable qui a été envoyée à certaines délégations. Je suis très heureux qu'il l'ait fait, car ainsi nous pouvons jouer cartes sur table, pour ainsi dire, et pouvons y répondre.

75. Je tiens à dire que nous en pensons exactement la même chose que lui. Nous estimons qu'il s'agit d'un document choquant. Il s'agit à nos yeux d'une insulte non seulement pour les représentants des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie et pour les autres pays qui y sont attaqués, mais également pour le peuple américain. Je voudrais donner l'assurance au représentant de la Nigéria que cette lettre ne reflète pas l'opinion du peuple américain, mais exprime apparemment les préjugés, le fanatisme et l'étroitesse d'esprit d'un groupe infime de notre population, si toutefois elle a bien été écrite par une minorité américaine.

76. La délégation des Etats-Unis à l'ONU est dirigée par un grand Américain qui croit en la dignité de l'homme, en l'égalité des hommes, et qui a toujours fait preuve de ses grandes qualités dans ses fonctions de chef de délégation. Le jour où cette lettre choquante et stupide a été adressée à certains délégués, M. Wadsworth a publié, le 28 novembre, une déclaration dont je vais vous donner lecture. Je crois que nous devons à ce grand Américain, chef de notre délégation, de lire sa réponse à la lettre pour qu'elle figure au procès-verbal étant donné que le représentant de la Nigéria a rendu cette lettre publique, et j'ajouterai qu'il a eu tout à fait raison de le faire. M. Wadsworth a déclaré, le 28 novembre:

"J'ai appris qu'un certain nombre de délégués ont reçu par courrier, aujourd'hui, une lettre injurieuse, dont les auteurs se réclament du Ku-Klux-Klan, et qui contient une violente attaque raciste. Il se peut que l'auteur de cette lettre soit un déséquilibré. Toutes les sociétés ont leurs déséquilibrés et les Etats-Unis ont des lois qui protègent tous les membres de la société contre les méfaits et les menaces de ces esprits malades.

"Je ne sais si cette lettre est le fait d'un déséquilibré ou d'autres éléments qui cherchent à mettre les Etats-Unis dans l'embarras. Il n'est pas encore possible de le dire. Mais je voudrais demander à tous ceux qui ont reçu cette lettre choquante de bien vouloir me remettre l'enveloppe, la lettre et me donner toute autre information pertinente. J'ai déjà demandé au Bureau fédéral des recherches d'entreprendre une enquête immédiate, et il nous faut absolument réunir le plus grand nombre d'éléments de preuves possible, pour pouvoir remonter à la source, afin que les autorités des Etats-Unis puissent prendre les mesures qui s'imposent."

Je pense que cette réponse de M. Wadsworth est suffisamment éloquente.

77. Je voudrais cependant ajouter que le libellé de la lettre est assez curieux. Par exemple, je relève dans le texte anglais l'expression: "tan and feather". Or, si cette lettre avait été écrite par un groupe de fanatiques, tels que le Ku-Klux-Klan, on aurait écrit "tar and feather" — expression qui signifie quelque chose pour le Ku-Klux-Klan, plutôt que "tan and feather", qui ne signifie rien. Cette faute de langue semble bien appuyer notre thèse, à savoir que la lettre émane d'un individu à l'esprit nettement dérangé.

78. Puis-je ajouter, en ma qualité de sénateur des Etats-Unis, qui suis depuis de nombreuses années à l'avant-garde du combat mené pour faire disparaître de mon pays toute discrimination de race, de couleur ou de croyance, que la lettre citée par le représentant de la Nigéria n'exprime pas le point de vue du peuple américain. J'en donne l'assurance à l'Assemblée.

79. Je voudrais également vous dire quelques mots au nom de l'un des membres éminents de notre délégation, l'une des femmes noires les plus remarquables d'Amérique, Mme George. Sa présence témoigne devant cette assemblée que notre peuple et notre gouvernement croient à l'élimination de toute discrimination fondée sur la race, la couleur ou la croyance. Et je sais que je me fais l'interprète de Mme George elle-même lorsque je vous affirme également que cette lettre n'exprime pas non plus les opinions des dirigeants de la population noire de notre pays.

80. Il est très difficile de s'excuser au nom de personnes que l'on ne connaît pas. Mais si cette lettre a réellement été écrite par un déséquilibré américain, il n'est que juste et indiqué que je saisisse, au nom de ma délégation et de mon gouvernement, cette occasion d'exprimer à l'Assemblée générale le regret qu'il ait pu se trouver quelqu'un dans notre pays pour juger bon de diffuser de telles sottises.

81. Je ne regrette pas, je le répète, que le représentant de la Nigéria ait donné lecture de cette lettre. Il est bon que le texte en figure dans le compte rendu de nos débats. Je veux lui donner l'assurance, cependant, que la délégation et le gouvernement des Etats-Unis feront toujours tout ce qui est en leur pouvoir pour que le séjour de chaque délégation dans notre pays soit agréable. Nous sommes à leur disposition et nous voulons qu'ils sachent que cette lettre n'exprime en aucune façon le sentiment d'un citoyen des Etats-Unis conscient de ses responsabilités.

82. M. Krishna MENON (Inde) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous approchons du terme d'un important débat qui a pris plusieurs jours de travail à l'Assemblée, à laquelle quelque 70 orateurs ont participé et qui nous a valu plus de 50 heures de discours. Il est facile de dire que les mots ne sont pas réellement efficaces, mais le fait même que l'Assemblée ait consacré une telle partie de son temps si précieux à l'examen de cette question, et qu'un grand nombre de nations y ait participé, aussi bien celles qui siègent ici depuis longtemps que celles qui viennent d'adhérer à l'Organisation et pour lesquelles la question que nous examinons a des répercussions plus récentes que pour d'autres, parle de lui-même. On ne doit cependant pas oublier que quelques-unes des nations les plus puissantes d'aujourd'hui, représentées ici, ont également connu la domination coloniale. Il est tout à leur honneur, et aussi dans l'intérêt du monde entier, qu'elles s'en souviennent encore, qu'elles n'aient pas oublié leurs propres efforts pour s'en dégager, et qu'elles reconnaissent les conséquences que le colonialisme a eues sur l'histoire du monde.

83. Or, si la question est examinée en ce moment précis, c'est grâce à l'initiative de l'Union soviétique, qui a proposé son inscription à l'ordre du jour. Mais ce n'est pas une question nouvelle pour les Nations Unies, puisqu'elle figure dans la Charte elle-même. Je ne vous donnerai pas lecture de dispositions que vous connaissez tous. Non seulement cette question figure dans la Charte, mais tout un chapitre de la Charte traite du problème des territoires non autonomes, d'une façon toutefois qui ne répond pas aussi bien à la réalité du monde de 1960 qu'à celle du monde de 1945.

84. Ceci nous rappellera que même la Charte, si bien faite qu'elle soit, n'est pas intangible comme la loi proverbiale des Mèdes et des Perses, mais qu'elle doit être vivifiée, qu'elle doit être rendue plus utile en correspondant mieux à l'évolution de la situation mondiale.

85. Le colonialisme, comme on appelle l'expansion de pays qui débordent de leurs frontières pour conquérir ou occuper des terres généralement très éloignées, et comme on appelle aussi le gouvernement à distance — c'était l'expression en usage au XIX^{ème} siècle — n'est pas un phénomène nouveau, du moins en ce qui nous concerne. Je ne désire pas en retracer tout l'historique; il remonte peut-être aux époques éloignées de l'ère préchrétienne, lorsque Alexandre le Grand entreprit ses expéditions qui le menèrent jusqu'aux frontières de notre pays, où il fut victorieux, mais d'où il repartit sans avoir pour cela fondé un empire. Ensuite, nous avons eu toute la période du développement de l'Europe où les nations européennes, aux prises avec leurs propres troubles intérieurs, se coalisaient ou s'asservissaient l'une l'autre. Ainsi, une très longue période s'écoula pendant laquelle les pays coloniaux actuels d'Asie et d'Afrique ne retinrent pas leur attention, si ce n'est du point de vue des liens créés par le commerce entre les pays qui s'y livraient.

86. Nous en arrivons à la période contemporaine, la plus importante. Je le dis parce que je ne voudrais pas qu'on croie qu'avec la civilisation industrielle, une idée nouvelle a soudain germé dans l'esprit de l'homme, car on risquerait de penser qu'on n'aura plus jamais à se protéger contre des maux de ce genre. Ainsi, en des temps plus récents, une expansion s'est produite. Cette expansion a résulté, en partie de l'exploration, en partie de tentatives pour acquérir des richesses, en partie aussi de la recherche de terres nouvelles où se fixer; il y a eu d'autres causes encore: la vocation du marchand, de l'explorateur, du créateur d'entreprises, du mis-sionnaire; l'attitude des dirigeants politiques de certains pays, la puissance croissante des armées; le rôle toujours plus grand que l'ingénieur — surtout depuis la révolution industrielle — et aussi, parfois, les efforts de l'expansionniste nationaliste, patriote, qui voyait dans la conquête d'autres territoires la gloire de son propre pays. Tout cela est représenté par ce que je me garderai d'appeler le nouvel éveil du nationalisme.

87. Je voudrais dire quelques mots de ce concept du nationalisme, car s'il est la cause et l'âme de la domination impérialiste, il est aussi le ressort de la résistance à la domination. Somme toute, le colonialisme tel que nous le concevons consiste à vouloir étendre le pouvoir du territoire national à d'autres régions. L'Europe, en particulier, qui dans le courant du XVI^{ème} siècle, ou peut-être un peu plus tôt, a vu de petits Etats tribaux se transformer en nations, a constaté que cette unification lui permettait de s'unifier plus encore. Maintenant comme alors, ce souci d'unité a souvent été empreint d'idéalisme: il s'accompagnait d'idées panchrétiennes, de la diffusion de certaines doctrines universelles, d'évangélisme, ou d'un autre idéal. En fait, dans l'expansion de toutes ces régions, on constate que les autorités tiraient leur pouvoir de chartes ou d'autres instruments qui donnaient aux explorateurs des droits souverains de vie et de mort sur les peuples non chrétiens. C'est le cas, en ce qui concerne l'Inde, des dispositions de la Charte de la Compagnie des Indes orientales, par laquelle la reine Elisabeth donnait à ces marchands, qui n'étaient que des sujets de son royaume, des droits souverains de vie et de mort sur les peuples non chrétiens. C'est ainsi que son empire commença. Mais c'est une grande erreur de croire qu'un motif ou un autre peut expliquer cette situation.

88. Et ainsi nous constatons que des moments de l'histoire se succédèrent où les explorateurs à la recherche de richesses voyageaient partout, parfois sans rien trouver, parfois comme dans le cas de Christophe Colomb, en abordant sans s'y attendre dans une terre très riche, et ainsi de suite. Si l'on saute la période des premières explorations, dite phénicienne, on en arrive aux découvertes à la suite desquelles l'Amérique reçut son nom d'un explorateur italien, à ce qu'on dit, puis à la période d'expansion vers les quatre grands territoires — l'Asie, l'Afrique, les Antilles et le continent américain — qui devait aboutir à la situation d'aujourd'hui ou plutôt à la situation d'hier, devrais-je dire, où la population peu nombreuse de chacun de ces pays métropolitains dominait le peuple très nombreux d'autres régions. Mais heureusement, c'est un phénomène qui, à un ou deux pays, ou groupe de pays, près, est en voie de disparition. J'espère qu'on me comprendra bien si je dis que l'une des résistances les plus fortes, l'un des obstacles les plus grands au progrès, consiste précisément à ne pas reconnaître l'existence du progrès, car si l'on ne reconnaît pas l'existence du progrès, on risque de réagir de la même façon que précédemment et d'utiliser les mêmes mesures, alors que la situation a changé. On risque de voir notre orientation et toutes nos politiques mal interprétées, mal comprises et mal appliquées. De même, si on ne reconnaît pas l'existence du progrès, il est très probable que ceux qui ont été forcés de s'engager dans la voie du progrès soit pour céder à l'agitation des peuples coloniaux, soit sous la pression des éléments libéraux de leur propre pays seront encouragés à revenir en arrière et à dire à leurs concitoyens: "Nous vous l'avions bien dit." Nous sommes donc forcés de reconnaître que certains progrès ont été accomplis.

89. Aux temps modernes, depuis la chute de Constantinople, les peuples de l'Europe qui ne savaient comment conserver la viande, durent avoir recours aux épices et c'est à peu près à cette époque qu'ils apprirent l'art culinaire. A l'époque où Constantinople sortit de l'orbite chrétienne, les grandes routes maritimes s'ouvrirent et tous les peuples européens, à commencer par les Portugais et les Espagnols, suivis des Hollandais et des Français, enfin des Anglais, vinrent dans ces régions. Ils se rendirent partout, en Amérique, en Asie et plus tard, beaucoup plus tard, dans certaines régions de l'Afrique. Il s'agissait donc au début de personnes qui désiraient connaître ces pays, des grands marins de l'époque, d'hommes qui désiraient explorer pour le plaisir d'explorer. Mais ces explorateurs nous rappellent parfois les compétitions sportives modernes, où l'homme qui veut s'imposer dans un sport et aller à l'étranger pour participer à des tournois se fait aider par un fabricant qui produit tel ou tel article dont on se sert pour pratiquer ce sport. De même, les explorateurs ont été soutenus par ceux qui pouvaient tirer avantage de ces explorations. C'est ainsi que les intérêts économiques ont été liés à cet esprit d'aventure. Mais ici encore il ne faut pas perdre de vue que ce qui poussait surtout ces explorateurs: c'était le nationalisme. L'éveil du nationalisme dans les nations européennes, l'honneur du drapeau, la rivalité avec d'autres nations, la crainte que d'autres nations s'établissent dans d'autres régions à leur propre détriment — toutes ces forces ont poussé les peuples à aller constamment de l'avant.

90. Tout d'abord, nous avons l'époque — et lorsqu'on parle d'époque, il faut tracer des lignes de démarcation claires et nettes — des empires de peuplement, qui ont été constitués soit en application d'une politique d'émigration délibérée, soit encore, et ici je ne citerai pas de noms, parce que certains grands empires utilisaient ces contrées lointaines pour y déporter des personnes dont les idées libérales n'étaient pas de mise dans la métropole. Ainsi, les colonies pénitenciaires, comme on les appelait à l'époque, se composaient de mécréants et d'éléments que l'on appellerait actuellement antisociaux. Mais ils étaient probablement les pionniers des révolutions, ceux qui se révoltaient contre l'ordre établi dans la métropole, si bien qu'ils furent expulsés à l'étranger dans les colonies de peuplement. Dans ces pays, la population autochtone — et nous tirerons le rideau sur son histoire — a presque complètement disparu et ne se compose plus que de groupes isolés. Ces colonies de peuplement sont désormais des nations de plein droit, qui ont contribué de diverses façons au progrès et à la régression de ce régime colonial.

91. Pendant la troisième époque, qui commence avec le XIX^{ème} siècle, sous l'effet de la deuxième révolution industrielle, du progrès technologique et surtout du développement des échanges commerciaux, certains pays commencent à rechercher à la fois des débouchés et des matières premières. Les machines produisent des marchandises en grandes quantités. Pendant quelque temps les industries purent utiliser une main-d'œuvre honteusement exploitée dans la métropole même, mais bientôt cette source se tarit car les ouvriers qui venaient de la campagne dans des pays tels que le Royaume-Uni, par exemple, subirent l'attraction de la ville. Ils furent attirés par l'industrie qui leur offrait la possibilité de vivre mieux, et ils commencèrent à faire pression sur les propriétaires des machines pour être mieux payés.

92. Il y avait outre-mer une mine de main-d'œuvre à bon marché, que l'on pouvait recruter sans trop de difficulté. La plupart de ces territoires ne vivaient pas en régime démocratique. Evidemment, il y a toujours l'opinion publique, mais les chefs locaux conclurent des accords isolés qui étaient à l'avantage des nations colonisatrices.

93. Nous avons donc une période pendant laquelle une main-d'œuvre exploitée produit des matières premières, alors qu'il existe de vastes débouchés constitués par des populations mal payées dont le pouvoir d'achat est faible mais le nombre élevé. On peut donc dire qu'il s'agit d'empires mercantiles. C'était autrefois leur caractéristique commune, et il est très improbable que la plupart des expéditions coloniales auraient eu lieu si elles n'avaient ouvert des perspectives et des chances de profits.

94. Puis se produisit la rupture avec l'impérialisme, qui elle aussi eut ses pionniers depuis les temps les plus reculés. La première rupture date de la révolte de certaines de ces colonies. Dans d'autres cas, les colonies — j'ai déjà dit qu'il s'agissait de colonies de peuplement — entreprirent de s'organiser en collectivités, et arrachèrent des concessions d'autant plus facilement que d'autres avaient déjà fait sécession. Je ne rappellerai pas les controverses que leur attitude souleva dans la mère patrie. Un des exemples les plus frappants est la rupture des 13 colonies américaines, qui se produisit dans des conditions que nous connaissons bien et qui, si je ne me trompe, eut des répercussions sur la vie choisie par les Etats-Unis pour leur expansion ultérieure. En effet, tout au long de l'histoire, on constate que l'unification du territoire des Etats-Unis tel que nous le connaissons à l'heure actuelle, a été réalisée non par la conquête, mais par des méthodes qui seraient peut-être décriées aujourd'hui, mais passaient pour très libérales à l'époque: l'achat de la Floride, de l'Alaska, de la Louisiane ou de Rhode Island diffère beaucoup, en effet, de l'expansion coloniale de certains autres empires.

95. A l'époque moderne, l'exemple le plus typique de renonciation au colonialisme fut donné peu après la Révolution russe de 1917, lorsque les Russes renoncèrent d'eux-mêmes aux possessions impériales. Je n'entrerai pas dans le détail, je n'entends pas donner ici un cours d'histoire moderne mais présenter seulement l'aperçu historique d'une situation. D'autres événements s'étaient cependant produits dans l'interval. A une époque plus moderne, la domination des peuples colonisateurs a été la domination d'une race par une autre race, d'où, à côté du mobile économique, l'importance prise par l'élément racial et le développement d'une doctrine raciale qui est appliquée maintenant en Union sud-africaine et dans d'autres pays: "Certains peuples sont nés pour gouverner, d'autres pour être asservis, et l'on ne peut préparer les peuples appartenant à certaines races à se gouverner eux-mêmes." Mais les pays métropolitains aussi bien que les pays ainsi asservis se révoltèrent contre ces doctrines. Ainsi, la doctrine raciale souleva de l'opposition, et en même temps servit la cause de l'esclavage. Mais l'abolition de l'esclavage d'une part, et le progrès des doctrines libérales dans le pays métropolitain d'autre part, changèrent cet état de choses.

96. Cependant, l'exemple le plus frappant de notre manière de penser fut le coup porté à la doctrine de la suprématie raciale par la victoire des Japonais sur les Russes en 1905, bien qu'il ne semble pas aujourd'hui avoir un rapport direct avec la question. A cette époque, les questions économiques, idéologiques et autres n'avaient pas l'importance qu'elles revêtent à l'heure actuelle. Toute l'Asie y vit cependant la défaite d'un empire européen par un peuple d'Asiatiques de petite taille. Je n'entends pas rechercher qui avait raison dans ce conflit, ni examiner les droits des belligérants sur Port Arthur, mais seulement considérer les aspects psychologiques du problème.

97. Pendant toute cette période, qui fut celle de notre enfance, l'idée — sans doute mal formulée — qu'il n'y avait plus de supériorité raciale gagna du terrain. Puis, la première guerre mondiale donna le signal d'une nouvelle expansion. Je ne suggère pas qu'il faille susciter ou livrer des guerres afin de libérer les colonies. Mais le fait est qu'au moment de la première guerre mondiale, la plus grande partie du monde — je ne puis préciser son étendue, mais je dirai la plus grande partie du monde — se trouvait sous domination coloniale ou sous un régime analogue. Une colonie reste une colonie, non selon la définition mais selon la description que j'en ai donnée plus haut, quelque soit le nom qu'on lui donne. Dans le système britannique, que je connais mieux, il y a divers types de colonies: colonies de la Couronne, qui étaient biens privés de la Couronne; dépendances (l'Inde était une dépendance et non pas une colonie); protectorats; Etats protégés. Il y a aussi le cas de Malte que l'on appelait encore, il y a une trentaine d'années, un "cuirassé britannique". Il y a encore d'autres régions, mais, du point de vue politique, social et économique, tous ces pays font effectivement partie de l'empire colonial.

98. De toutes les nations coloniales de l'époque moderne, le Royaume-Uni, la France, les Pays-Bas, le Portugal et l'Espagne, il est intéressant de noter que ce sont les plus puissantes qui ont jeté du lest les premières, et cela en raison de circonstances très diverses; et, en l'occurrence, le rôle des organisations internationales, en particulier du Bureau international du Travail, qui a survécu à la Société des Nations, et même à la seconde guerre mondiale, n'est pas négligeable. Il était difficile aux pays soucieux de respecter les conventions internationales de maintenir dans les territoires non autonomes des normes de travail différentes de celles de la métropole, et il leur était impossible de le faire officiellement.

99. Ensuite, il y eut l'expansion des mouvements d'émancipation et d'élévation des classes ouvrières, qui lui aussi freina le colonialisme. Dans certains de ces cas, mais non pas dans tous, on a constaté que les empires coloniaux cessaient d'être rentables. Je ne prétends pas que certains individus ou certains pays n'aient pas tiré des avantages considérables du pouvoir politique. Mais on oublie souvent que les forces militaires entretenues par ces grandes puissances, jointes aux obligations financières qu'il leur fallait assumer pour leur empire, ajoutent au coût de la domination impériale. Ainsi, lorsqu'on nous dit en toute vérité, que tel ou tel pays a dépensé telles et telles sommes dans un territoire et que sa balance commerciale est favorable ou défavorable, on ne nous présente qu'un aspect de la situation. Mais en tout cas, il ne fait guère de doute que telle a été l'une des considérations qui ont été retenues en l'espèce.

100. Ensuite, lorsque les grandes puissances commencèrent à se partager le monde — un de ces phénomènes dont nous devons éviter le retour à l'avenir — une autre catégorie d'empires fit son apparition sous le nom de "sphères d'influence", et l'expression moderne "remplir un vide" vient de ces "sphères d'influence". Ainsi, lorsque la France, l'Allemagne et la Grande-Bretagne revendiquaient des sphères d'influence dans différentes régions, les territoires en question, quoique souverains, ne jouissaient pas réellement de leur indépendance.

101. Or, des phénomènes semblables se répètent de nos jours. Comme je l'ai dit, il existe des "vides", en ce sens que, dans certains pays, les ambassadeurs ne sont pas des vice-rois, mais agissent comme s'ils l'étaient. Il y a aussi les tentatives de pénétration psychologique ou de conquêtes de l'esprit — ou du corps, selon le cas. Ces phénomènes réapparaissent sous différentes formes.

102. Pourquoi donc aborder ce sujet? Parce que, si nous examinons les chiffres, nous constatons qu'un vaste processus de liquidation est en cours — je vous donnerai les chiffres dans un moment — et que ces grands, ces énormes empires ont beaucoup rétréci. Quant à l'indépendance des anciennes colonies, il s'agit de voir si elle est bien réelle, et dans l'affirmative, si elle a des chances de durer. A cet égard, il faut dire que, tandis que nos débats se prolongent ici jour après jour — 70 orateurs y ont déjà participé —, une atmosphère d'irréalité enveloppe toute cette affaire, si on considère ce qui s'est passé en Algérie il y a à peine deux jours, et alors que des pays comme la France et le Portugal prétendent aujourd'hui encore que les peuples de ces régions possèdent la nationalité de la métropole. Comme je l'ai dit et redit à cette assemblée, les Anglais ne nous ont pas insultés en nous appelant des Anglais; les Portugais et les Français font de même.

103. En ce qui concerne la guerre qui fait rage en Algérie depuis sept ou huit ans déjà, on peut la considérer comme une révolte musulmane, une révolte arabe, ou la révolte de qui que ce soit; c'est en fait une guerre d'indépendance coloniale, du même type que celle qui a eu lieu dans le pays où nous sommes, ou en Chine. Ceci ne s'est pas produit dans notre pays parce que nous avons obtenu notre indépendance par d'autres méthodes, quoique l'on puisse également considérer que ce fut une autre forme de combat. Il s'agit ici de la résistance du peuple contre la force armée, contre la puissance armée des grands empires.

104. Ceci nous conduit à examiner plusieurs autres problèmes relatifs à la politique mondiale. Je ne désire pas passer le peu de temps dont je dispose à établir le bilan des empires en livres et en pence, ou en dollars et en cents, ni à vous parler du coût de ceci ou de cela. Je crois que nous devons être réalistes. Nous devons comprendre que les empires ne peuvent prospérer que d'une seule manière, c'est-à-dire en suivant les méthodes impérialistes. Qui veut la fin veut les moyens. Il nous faut donc en tenir compte dans notre effort et voir comment le monde moderne va contribuer à la persistance ou à la liquidation de l'impérialisme.

105. D'une part, après la première guerre mondiale, qui eut pour conséquence la désintégration de l'Empire ottoman, la plus grande partie de l'Asie occidentale commença à accéder à l'indépendance, quelque soit l'évolution démocratique interne qui aurait pu la précéder. En d'autres temps, l'Empire ottoman vaincu eût vu ses territoires annexés; mais à la suite de la révolution en Russie tsariste, l'une des puissances alliées de la guerre cessa de compter parmi les impérialistes. Lorsque les Etats-Unis s'associèrent aux puissances alliées, et acquirent par là le droit de parler haut et fort lors de l'élaboration des traités de paix, leur Président reprit une fois de plus la conception du colonialisme, mais la baptisa du nom de "dépôt sacré" — et je ne parle pas de tutelle en ce moment. Cependant, cette conception n'était celle d'aucun autre peuple du monde. Il en résulta, un peu plus tard une nouvelle théorie de la souveraineté, c'est-à-dire une souveraineté qui est imposée aux peuples mais qui ne leur est pas conférée. L'empire ne fait que les opprimer; c'est un fait latent et légal. Puis l'empire disparaît et le peuple acquiert sa propre souveraineté. Telle devrait en fait être la théorie moderne de la souveraineté, qui ne devrait plus dépendre de la volonté d'un souverain, à notre époque en tout cas.

106. Nous étions donc d'abord en présence de cette conception selon laquelle il n'y aurait pas d'annexion de territoire, et quoique les pourparlers de Versailles et de Genève n'aient pas eu les résultats qu'ils auraient dû avoir, l'impérialisme devint une chose du passé. Nous abordons ainsi une troisième époque, au cours de laquelle on tenta — du moins théoriquement — d'élargir ou de transformer les empires en ce que nous pourrions appeler des "communautés".

107. Ceci constitue l'aspect positif de cette époque. Mais la médaille a son revers. En effet, il y a l'Algérie, il y a l'Afrique du Sud, où la situation a un caractère différent — je ne fais pas allusion à l'Union elle-même — et où la Puissance administrante s'est emparée du Territoire sous tutelle et le considère comme une partie de l'empire; il y a la situation dans les territoires portugais, où l'on impose aujourd'hui encore des travaux forcés frisant l'esclavage; il y a, en outre, la tentative faite par la France pour subjuguier par la force des armes un peuple qui est aussi capable, et a autant le droit, d'accéder à la liberté que tous ceux qui siègent ici, et quia, de plus, prouvé au monde que ses sacrifices, ses capacités, en dépit de ses limitations, peuvent être aussi grands que ses aspirations à l'indépendance.

108. Mais, en l'occurrence, nous ne devons pas oublier — et c'est ici peut-être que les peuples en cause devraient faire leur examen de conscience — que les grandes alliances militaires du monde aident ces empires. Il se trouve que ces grandes puissances coloniales comme la France et le Portugal dépendent de ces alliances. Prenons pour exemple le Portugal. Le Portugal est membre de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord et cette organisation, l'OTAN, déclare explicitement que ces alliances s'étendent non seulement aux territoires métropolitains mais à tout le territoire souverain. Or, il est extrêmement difficile pour un pays comme les Etats-Unis, qui n'a d'autres colonies que quelques territoires dans la zone du Pacifique appartenant à cette catégorie, de dire qu'ils vont conclure une alliance dont ces territoires seront exclus. Quant à savoir s'il y aura ou non une telle alliance, c'est une question que je ne désire pas aborder. Mais en fait il y a alliance avec un empire. C'est comme si un homme libre contractait avec un propriétaire d'esclaves un accord amical qui porte aussi bien sur ce qu'il possède lui-même en tant qu'homme libre, que sur les possessions du marchand d'esclaves.

109. Ainsi, ces grandes alliances militaires, dans le Nord, en Europe ou ailleurs, deviennent un élément d'un accord avec des colonialistes de la pire espèce. Ceci n'est pas mauvais en théorie seulement — et l'on pourrait dès maintenant faire quelques réserves à ce sujet. Nous croyons que les ressources que la France et le Portugal métropolitains consacrent à l'oppression de leurs colonies, les forces morales qu'il leur faut pour s'y maintenir, l'ampleur de l'opposition à laquelle le peuple qui se révolte doit faire face, tout cela doit subir l'influence de ce facteur. Le Portugal a déjà proclamé que sa présence à l'OTAN le rapprochait de son plus ancien allié, le Royaume-Uni. L'un des plus anciens traités actuellement en vigueur est celui qui existe entre le Royaume-Uni et le Portugal.

110. Quoique le Royaume-Uni ait beaucoup fait pour l'indépendance de certaines de ses possessions — parfois tardivement, parfois sous l'empire de la nécessité, parfois dans d'autres circonstances, comme ce fut le cas pour notre propre pays, ou, dans le cas des Etats-Unis, à la suite d'une révolte suivie d'un accord —, il lui reste de vastes territoires. Or ceux-ci aussi doivent devenir des pays libres.

111. Il nous faut ici examiner certaines questions. D'abord qu'advierait-il de petites régions de 50.000, 100.000, 200.000 habitants, qui sont aussi conscientes du problème national que n'importe quel grand pays? Il ne serait ni conforme à la Charte ni propre à assouvir leur désir de liberté de dire à leurs habitants que leur territoire est tout petit, et qu'ils ne peuvent donc pas accéder à l'indépendance. C'est là l'un des problèmes que doivent examiner les Nations Unies et les pays métropolitains. Je dirai que toute tentative pour tenir sous silence leur désir d'indépendance nationale, ou pour leur dire qu'ils seront libres dans la maison de leurs maîtres, n'apportera pas de solution durable au problème. L'Assemblée n'aura pas oublié l'exemple récent de Chypre. Chypre, soit dit en passant, a amené la Grèce dans le camp anticolonialiste et j'espère qu'elle y restera. En effet, nous avons vu alors un des pays de l'OTAN se déclarer, en fin de compte, partisan de l'indépendance des territoires coloniaux, alors qu'au début, afin de détourner l'attention de l'agitation qui régnait dans la colonie, déclarait qu'il s'agissait d'un problème de sécurité et de défense, ou de l'enjeu d'un marché entre divers Etats.

112. Mon gouvernement estima alors qu'il s'agissait purement et simplement d'une question coloniale. Chypre, en vertu du droit et des circonstances, de certains facteurs économiques, politiques et sociologiques, n'était rien d'autre qu'une colonie, et, par conséquent, devait être traitée comme un pays colonial ayant droit à la pleine indépendance. Bien qu'il lui eût fallu mener une dure bataille à l'ONU — à laquelle tous les intéressés n'ont pas toujours participé — Chypre obtint en fin de compte son indépendance, encore que celle-ci soit viciée par les circonstances. Ce que je veux faire remarquer, c'est qu'en essayant d'élever des arguments contre les peuples qui désirent leur liberté, on fait souvent état de circonstances étrangères à la question, qui peuvent être de quelque utilité pendant quelque temps. Mais en fin de compte le peuple réclame ce à quoi il a droit. Tout ce qui reste, ce sont du mauvais vouloir, de nouvelles difficultés, de nouvelles complications qui, si les peuples assujettis n'y veillent pas, risquent de mener à ce que l'on peut appeler un impérialisme mixte.

113. Je pense pouvoir dire à juste titre qu'un mandat ou une tutelle représentent sans aucun doute l'idée de la mission sacrée, et soustraient en fait aux pays métropolitains leurs territoires coloniaux. Mais si les Nations Unies ne veillent pas au respect des principes de la Charte et de l'esprit qui les a inspirés, nous assisterons sans aucun doute à la domination combinée d'un peuple sans défense par des peuples plus puissants. C'est toujours là ce que craignent les peuples colonisés.

114. Je voudrais ajouter ensuite, avant d'en venir à des questions précises, qu'aux environs de 1939 les territoires coloniaux des grandes puissances étaient les suivants: le Royaume-Uni, à lui seul, possédait environ 33 millions de kilomètres carrés; la France avait un énorme empire d'environ 10 millions de kilomètres carrés, égal à 80 fois celui de la Belgique; les Pays-Bas avaient leurs propres colonies. Tout ceci a maintenant disparu, mais il y a encore de par le monde environ 75 millions d'hommes qui vivent sous le joug colonial. Sur ces 75 millions d'hommes, 20 millions environ sont sous l'hégémonie britannique et se dirigent déjà vers l'autonomie et l'indépendance. Par conséquent, il reste en fait quelque 50 millions d'hommes à libérer et, si nous songeons que, sur ces 50 millions, 14.871.195 appartiennent à l'empire du Portugal, nous arrivons à la constatation que le Portugal est la plus grande puissance impériale du monde. Ce n'est pas répondre que de dire que ces gens ne sont pas colonisés, mais qu'ils sont des citoyens portugais. Cet argument a déjà été réfuté. Ainsi, la plus grande partie de ces 50 millions d'hommes sont les 14 ou 15 millions de l'empire portugais et les 11 ou 12 millions de l'Algérie. En conséquence, la France et le Portugal se partagent des possessions coloniales qui, pour n'être plus dispersées aux quatre coins du monde, sont cependant encore les plus vastes.

115. Etant donné la place que ces territoires occupent en Afrique, certains problèmes nouveaux se posent. Si le colonialisme n'est pas entièrement aboli sur le continent africain, celui-ci risque de devenir la scène d'ambitions rivales, réelles ou soupçonnées, qui menaceront gravement le sort et le progrès des peuples africains. Par conséquent, il est indispensable que le colonialisme s'efface complètement de ces territoires et, comme c'est le cas lorsqu'il s'agit de paix ou de guerre, il n'y a pas de demi-mesure: ou bien vous avez un empire, ou bien vous n'en avez pas. C'est pourquoi nous ne pensons pas qu'il soit possible de procéder par étapes au point où en est l'évolution du monde.

116. Il n'est pas au monde un seul pays qui ne soit capable de se gouverner lui-même. Nous n'avons pas oublié qu'au moment même où ils allaient partir, ceux qui nous dominaient nous disaient encore: "Qui commandera vos armées? Qui commandera votre aviation et votre flotte? Qui vous administrera? Qui dirigera vos finances? etc." En fait, aucun d'entre nous n'a éprouvé de sérieuses difficultés en la matière, et ces difficultés n'ont pas été plus sérieuses que dans n'importe quel autre pays; ce sont là des problèmes que connaissent aussi tous les pays libres. Mais on nous dit qu'il y a en Asie des pays tels que le Pakistan, l'Inde et Ceylan, dont la civilisation est ancienne et qui, par conséquent, ont vécu pendant de longues périodes sous leurs propres lois. Or nous prétendons que la civilisation n'est le monopole d'aucune partie du monde. Tout ce que nous voulons dire, en faisant cette distinction, c'est que ceux d'entre nous qui la font ne comprennent probablement pas les civilisations des autres peuples; nous devons donc renoncer à ces distinctions aussi, et prendre nettement position en disant que le monde doit être réellement libre. Il ne doit y avoir aucun territoire soumis à l'autorité de l'étranger; le territoire d'aucun pays ne doit pouvoir être utilisé par quiconque à des fins qui ne servent nullement l'intérêt ou le bien de ses populations. C'est pourquoi nous devons manifester une opposition particulière contre l'ère actuelle des grandes alliances militaires, où les idées surannées de points stratégiques, artères vitales des empires, etc, sont remplacées par la nécessité de tenir des zones stratégiques à des fins qui ne sont pas strictement conformes aux intérêts du pays.

117. En conclusion du présent débat, et quelle que puisse être la vraie nature des faits avancés, le monde que nous représentons ici a les yeux fixés sur ce problème. Il faut également admettre que les ressources mondiales retiennent davantage l'attention du monde et, s'il s'agit du progrès de toutes les nations, plus nous amenons de peuples à la liberté dynamique, plus il y aura d'hommes qui lutteront pour édifier le monde.

118. Prenons le cas de l'Afrique. Les plus vastes ressources non recensées du monde se trouvent en Afrique. Je n'entends point par là inviter les autres peuples à aller les exploiter. Dans une région d'environ 11 millions de milles carrés, qui comprend une population d'environ 222 millions d'hommes, on trouve 98 pour 100 de tous les diamants du monde, 94 pour 100 de toute la colombe, 84 pour 100 du cuivre, 55 pour 100 de l'or, 45 pour 100 du radium, 33 pour 100 du manganèse, etc. Tous ces produits ne servent pas nécessairement à la fabrication des armements; ils peuvent aussi amener le monde à un plus haut degré de civilisation. Par conséquent, même si on se préoccupe de mettre en valeur les ressources du monde, et cela sans les effusions de sang et sans la violence — caractéristiques de toute guerre coloniale — on aurait avantage à respecter sur ce point aussi l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies. Les dispositions de la Charte sont ici plus ou moins explicites, mais il nous faut les traduire dans les faits en nous consacrant à la libération totale de ces territoires.

119. Il n'est pas question ici de fixer des objectifs et des dates. Le seul délai que nous admettions, c'est celui qui est nécessaire au transfert des pouvoirs et, si je puis m'exprimer ainsi, ceux qui ont à accomplir cette tâche ne doivent pas présenter leur don dans une main gantée de fer. Par exemple, dans le cas du Congo, on a ostensiblement accordé la liberté, puis on est revenu par la fenêtre parce qu'on n'avait pas préparé ce pays à sa liberté. Je pense que le Congo belge, sous l'ancien régime, représentait le type le plus navrant du colonialisme des temps modernes. Après 70 ou 80 ans de régime colonial, rien ne reste de l'appareil politique, administratif ou autre et, qui plus est, la puissance coloniale revient après s'être retirée. C'est là une des choses auxquelles nous devons nous opposer.

120. D'autre part, il ne faut pas octroyer l'indépendance à un territoire sous tutelle sur la simple affirmation par l'autorité coloniale qu'il est prêt pour l'indépendance et sans que nous en ayons des preuves; les Nations Unies doivent s'assurer que le transfert de pouvoirs se fera de façon à rendre impossible tout retour de la puissance coloniale. Nous allons bientôt discuter à la Quatrième Commission du problème du Ruanda-Urundi, et mon gouvernement y porte un vif intérêt. J'ai fait savoir au Conseil de sécurité, il y a deux jours, qu'à notre connaissance des troupes étaient concentrées en deux points du Ruanda dans le dessein d'entrer en opérations contre le Congo. Mais, surtout, on nous a dit que le Ruanda-Urundi est mûr pour l'indépendance et qu'en conséquence des élections vont s'y dérouler sous peu. Je ne veux pas en discuter ici dans le détail, car la Quatrième Commission va en être saisie, mais, tout en ne le cédant à personne dans le désir de limiter la période de transition, nous voulons éviter que l'indépendance soit une indépendance fictive, c'est-à-dire que les choses ne changent que pour rester les mêmes ou empirer. Une telle situation ne doit pas pouvoir se produire.

121. En troisième lieu, je voudrais dire que nous qui sommes d'anciens colonisés, nous devons tenir compte de l'expérience des empires d'autrefois et nous intéresser au sort des pays qui ne sont pas encore libérés; et, pour cette raison, l'Assemblée, et tout spécialement les nations qui ont des points de vue différents des nôtres sur les questions coloniales, devraient nous comprendre quand nous nous émouvons, quand ils voient que nous nous intéressons à des événements qui ne se passent pas sur notre propre territoire. La place de toute nation libérée — je ne veux pas parler des autres — doit être aux côtés des peuples colonisés qui luttent pour l'indépendance. Si le Gouvernement de l'Inde se fait une règle absolue de ne pas participer à des opérations extérieures militaires ou autres, s'il n'entend susciter de troubles dans aucun pays, parce qu'il ne croit pas que les révolutions soient des articles d'exportation, ses sympathies et sa solidarité n'en vont pas moins vers ceux qui luttent pour l'indépendance. Un pays qui a obtenu sa propre indépendance se doit de mener une campagne générale pour la liberté humaine, pour la liberté des peuples colonisés, faute de quoi il n'est pas allé au bout de sa tâche.

122. Là encore, il faut que les pays comme les nôtres, qui se sont libérés du joug des empires, comprennent que notre fonction dans la politique mondiale est de lutter non pas pour la régression mais pour le progrès. En d'autres termes, si nous sommes indépendants, nous ne devons pas nous servir de cette indépendance, ou laisser d'autres s'en servir, en faveur de l'agression ou pour imposer une tutelle à d'autres peuples. Il serait infiniment triste que certains pays libérés se rangent aux côtés de ceux qui s'opposent à l'indépendance ou à la libération des autres peuples. En pareil cas, l'indépendance ne serait pas véritable, même si elle avait toutes les apparences extérieures, tous les attributs trompeurs qui s'attachent à ce mot. La réalité de l'indépendance doit venir des peuples eux-mêmes. Et cette réalité doit être non seulement politique, mais aussi économique.

123. Nous ne contestons pas, en fait nous pensons, qu'il serait bon que les territoires libérés s'unissent entre eux ou avec leurs anciens maîtres dans le respect de la liberté réciproque. Mais il ne saurait être question d'utiliser simplement un autre nom pour qualifier un empire — que vous l'appeliez "commonwealth" ou "coopération" — car cela ne résoudrait pas le problème. Donc, ceux d'entre nous qui sont déjà libérés doivent faire un bon usage de leur liberté. Nous ne devons pas rester des sujets sous un autre vocable.

124. Pour faire avancer la cause de l'indépendance, nous devons traduire en termes économiques le progrès de nos peuples, en les nourrissant mieux, en les logeant, en améliorant l'hygiène et l'enseignement, en leur permettant de jouir pleinement de leur liberté.

125. Nous ne cessons de dire dans mon pays qu'à la date du 15 août 1947 nous n'avons pas acquis l'indépendance, nous nous sommes contentés de renverser le principal obstacle à l'indépendance, c'est-à-dire la domination étrangère. C'est plus tard que nous avons accédé à l'indépendance, quand notre peuple a pu se nourrir, se loger, se soigner, vivre dans la dignité et exercer effectivement ses droits. Voilà ce qu'est l'indépendance.

126. Aucun pays ne devrait, en aucun cas, se prêter à une sorte d'alliance ou consentir à un alignement qui risquerait de provoquer la guerre ou la domination de ce pays. Loin de moi la pensée que les pays souverains qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance sont incapables d'élaborer leur propre politique. Nous sommes en droit d'espérer, cependant, que les pays qui ont subi les conséquences des guerres les plus désastreuses de l'histoire — car les grandes guerres ont été des guerres impérialistes — sous quelque forme que ce soit, mettront leur puissance, leur idéal et leur autorité morale au service de la paix.

127. Voilà pourquoi, malgré les grands conflits mondiaux, les pays ou les territoires colonisés tendent de plus en plus à demander qu'on les laisse en paix, même si d'un point de vue formel ils appartiennent à une alliance; les Etats-Unis en sont un exemple frappant et se sont, pendant 150 ans, tenus à l'écart des querelles étrangères, de toute association, de toute alliance, et ont voulu réaliser en paix leur développement économique.

128. Il faut que les nations puissantes qui ont d'autres intérêts — et non pas nécessairement des intérêts égoïstes — mais qui voient les choses sous un autre angle, laissent ces pays se consacrer à leur développement comme ils l'entendent. Les peuples libérés doivent servir la cause de la paix du monde par leur enthousiasme et par la preuve qu'ils donnent que l'effort et la coopération des hommes peuvent conduire au progrès.

129. On ne doit pas oublier que, ces dernières années, indépendamment des alliances, indépendamment des dispositions de la Charte, la situation qui régnait dans les territoires libérés et qui retentissait sur l'économie d'autres pays a conduit à l'emploi de méthodes de coopération. Il n'y a plus aujourd'hui dans le monde aucun pays qui ait refusé ou refuse de recevoir ou de donner une assistance à d'autres pays sous quelque forme que ce soit. C'est ainsi que s'établit une forme de coopération mondiale. Encore faut-il que cette coopération ne s'accompagne d'aucune restriction; il ne faut pas donner d'une main et reprendre de l'autre. Voilà pourquoi un jeune pays comme le mien s'oppose fermement à tous les accords concernant des droits politiques, territoriaux ou autres, qui seraient conclus entre les puissances coloniales et leurs territoires coloniaux avant que l'indépendance ne soit établie. En d'autres termes, si ces pays qui sont sous tutelle avant d'être libérés concèdent des bases ou signent des accords commerciaux ou militaires au prix de la liberté, ils ne jouiront pas d'une véritable liberté.

130. Qui plus est, la liberté ainsi acquise par ces territoires est grevée d'hypothèques trop lourdes. Je pense que les grandes nations du monde devraient accepter le risque et admettre qu'une fois leur liberté acquise, ces peuples agiront avec bon sens et s'engageront dans la voie du progrès; en conséquence, elles ne devraient pas sacrifier un idéal à long terme à des avantages immédiats.

131. Il est un fait caractéristique: c'est qu'il y a 40 ou 50 ans, 1.200 millions, ou même 1.600 millions de personnes se trouvaient sous la domination étrangère — et si nous excluons la Chine qui n'était pas une colonie au sens littéral du terme, mais qui l'était sur le plan économique et social, il restait près d'un milliard de personnes vivant sous le joug colonial. Il n'en reste plus que 75 millions, mais ils sont disséminés sur toute la surface du globe. Il y a là un cancer politique. Aussi longtemps qu'il restera un endroit au monde à n'avoir pas été libéré, aussi longtemps que des hommes lutteront pour la liberté, les tentatives que l'on fera pour travestir la domination coloniale, les démonstrations de force, les alliances militaires, seront vouées à l'échec.

132. Nous avons accompli quelque progrès en la matière au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée. Ces progrès sont dus non seulement au fait que nous avons discuté ces questions ici, mais aussi au fait que l'ONU a demandé au Portugal de lui fournir des renseignements. Le Portugal est le dernier bastion du colonialisme; ce bastion n'est pas complètement démantelé, mais il est investi. L'Espagne a accepté les dispositions de la Charte, mais le Portugal n'en a pas voulu et se trouve isolé. Si ce dernier bastion vient à tomber, nous aurons accompli un nouveau pas en avant.

133. Mais nous ne devons pas oublier que notre véritable objectif est d'abolir dans le monde toute domination d'un peuple sur un autre peuple, surtout si elle se fonde sur la discrimination raciale ou des préjugés analogues. Après tout, les intérêts économiques d'un peuple l'emportent pour lui sur les intérêts économiques d'un autre peuple.

134. L'Assemblée a été saisie de plusieurs projets en la matière. Le premier, contenu dans le document A/4502, a été présenté par l'Union soviétique. Nous l'avons lu et nous n'avons pas d'objections à présenter. En d'autres termes, nous sommes favorables à la libération des pays colonisés, qui doit se faire conformément aux vœux librement exprimés de la population. Nous sommes contre l'exterritorialité sous quelque forme que ce soit; et nous sommes en faveur de l'application des principes de la Charte.

135. Le second projet de résolution, contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6, a été présenté par ma délégation conjointement avec d'autres. Il aurait sans doute pu être plus court; peut-être y a-t-il un certain nombre de répétitions dans le texte. Mais, dans son ensemble, il exprime cependant ce que j'ai essayé d'exposer à l'Assemblée. Il n'est pas question de récrimination, il n'est pas question de reporter la responsabilité sur qui que ce soit, sinon sur les Nations Unies dans leur ensemble.

136. Je voudrais terminer en disant que l'accession d'un aussi grand nombre de pays à la liberté doit être inscrite au crédit de l'ONU. Bien que nous ne puissions pas toujours l'exprimer — et ceci n'est pas valable pour tous les pays — nous devons exprimer notre reconnaissance aux pays qui, quel que soit leur passé, ont accompli des progrès ces temps derniers. Nous devons reconnaître, en effet, que la situation s'améliore, mais trop lentement à notre avis. Le fait que des progrès s'accomplissent ne doit pas nous arrêter dans nos efforts. Il faut que d'ici un ou deux ans aient disparu tous les territoires dépendants et colonisés. Tous ces pays — qu'ils soient petits, comme l'île de Malte, ou vastes, comme l'Algérie — devraient accéder au statut d'Etat de plein droit et devenir Membres de l'Organisation, à moins qu'ils n'en décident eux-mêmes autrement. Nous serions les derniers à dire qu'un Etat qui accède à l'indépendance doit refuser de s'allier aux pays frères. En fait, tel est notre espoir et tel est le but du présent débat.

137. J'espère que les projets concernant la suppression du colonialisme seront adoptés à l'unanimité. Vous vous souviendrez que, lorsque l'Assemblée a décidé d'examiner cette question, ma délégation a dit qu'il importait peu que l'on en discute ici ou ailleurs; en décidant à l'unanimité de l'examiner en séance plénière, l'Assemblée s'est rendue aux arguments avancés: cela témoigne de notre souci de conciliation et du désir de tous les membres de l'Assemblée de voir disparaître les territoires coloniaux afin que le monde devienne réellement libre, pour qu'y règnent la paix et la coopération.

La séance est levée à 13 h 15.

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1325

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Union sud-africaine qui a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

2. M. FOURIE (Union sud-africaine) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous avons suivi avec la plus grande attention un débat qui a duré plusieurs jours et nous avons été déçus de constater que la plupart de ceux qui sont intervenus dans le débat n'ont fait mention que d'un seul genre de colonialisme. Nous espérons que les orateurs accorderaient plus d'attention à l'asservissement par voie de conquête d'autres peuples, appartenant à d'autres continents.

3. Il vaut la peine de remarquer que certains de ceux qui ont critiqué si fortement l'ancien type de colonialisme, et qui, disons-le en passant, ont, en violation du règlement intérieur, fait allusion à mon pays, omettent de regarder ce qui se dissimule chez eux, où l'exemple frappant d'un nouveau genre de colonialisme leur aurait sauté aux yeux. De plus, certains des orateurs qui ont manifesté un intérêt si vif pour les affaires de mon pays n'ont eu que des éloges pour l'attitude d'une puissance impérialiste contemporaine. Tout ce que je puis en déduire, c'est qu'ils ne se préoccupent aucunement de ceux qui vivent sous le joug du nouveau type de colonialisme ou d'impérialisme.

4. Ma délégation peut souscrire à de nombreux passages du projet de résolution des 43 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6], car certains d'entre eux sont tirés mot à mot de la Charte. Il en est d'autres que nous ne pouvons malheureusement accepter. Aussi ma délégation ne pourra-t-elle pas appuyer ce projet de résolution dans son ensemble. Je crois devoir ajouter que ce projet de résolution doit, à notre sens, être considéré comme un tout. Il doit être adopté ou rejeté dans son ensemble. La même observation s'applique aux deux autres projets présentés à l'Assemblée [A/4502, A/L.324/Rev.2]. Par conséquent, ma délégation n'a pas l'intention de voter sur les paragraphes s'ils sont mis aux voix séparément. Elle estime qu'elle ne peut séparer l'une quelconque de ces parties de l'ensemble du texte.

5. Etant donné que j'étais à la tribune, j'ai pensé pouvoir en profiter pour expliquer le vote de ma délégation.

6. Le hadji FARAH ALI OMAR (Somalie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais tout d'abord déclarer que ma délégation est heureuse d'accorder son plein appui au projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6 dont elle est l'un des auteurs, de même qu'elle appuiera toute autre projet de résolution demandant que le colonialisme disparaisse de la surface du globe. Sur ce point, ma délégation parle au nom d'un peuple qui, comme tant d'autres représentés ici, peut, en toute connaissance de cause, parler des effets du colonialisme. Nous autres Somalis pouvons malheureusement tirer de notre propre expérience un témoignage sur les souffrances dont s'accompagne toujours la domination coloniale. Jusqu'à une date très récente, aucune mesure n'a été prise dans notre pays pour favoriser le progrès en ces matières essentielles que sont l'enseignement, la santé publique, les transports, les communications, l'agriculture et le commerce; tel est l'héritage classique du colonialisme, qui a légué à tant de nos compatriotes la pauvreté et la misère. Nous savons aussi que c'est à la décision arbitraire du colonialisme que nous devons cette regrettable division du peuple somali en cinq territoires séparés, division artificielle qui n'a fait qu'aggraver les problèmes sociaux et économiques auxquels notre peuple doit maintenant faire face.

7. Ma délégation serait donc la première non seulement à demander la fin du colonialisme sous tous ses aspects, mais aussi à appuyer quiconque propose de le supprimer. Pour cette raison, l'Union soviétique mérite nos félicitations et notre gratitude pour avoir pris l'initiative de faire inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée.

8. Ainsi que l'a déclaré Arnold Toynbee, nous sommes arrivés à un moment de l'histoire où tout permet d'assurer "une ère de bien-être pour tous"; mais cela n'est absolument vrai que parce que nous vivons aussi à une époque où tous les hommes peuvent être libres. Le progrès technique, intellectuel et politique qui s'est poursuivi au cours des siècles a permis à l'humanité de se libérer de la servitude économique aussi bien que politique. Dans son aspect économique, la servitude était autrefois imposée à l'homme, non seulement par l'inhumanité de ses semblables, mais aussi parce qu'il n'était pas encore question de ces progrès techniques qui depuis lors ont fait naître une économie d'abondance, libérant l'homme du labeur incessant qui a été si longtemps son inévitable destin.

9. Je n'ai pas besoin d'insister sur le fait, bien connu de tous, qu'en maîtrisant les forces de la nature en cette ère atomique, les hommes ont aussi acquis le pouvoir de s'annihiler les uns les autres. Cette force de destruction incalculable dont nous disposons ne nous a pas permis de faire le choix que nous pourrions souhaiter dans le contexte de la politique mondiale. L'histoire et l'ère atomique dictent nos réponses à de nombreuses questions, y compris celle du colonialisme. Nous ne pouvons laisser s'aggraver ou se prolonger le trouble et les conflits dans une partie quelconque du monde d'aujourd'hui. Cet état de choses ne peut manifestement avoir pour résultat que d'intensifier les rivalités qui divisent aujourd'hui les grandes puissances, et de faire surgir des exigences et des attitudes rivales vis-à-vis d'autres nations qui pourront être tentées de chercher dans ces régions troublées une occasion de faire prévaloir leurs propres vues, sinon leurs propres intérêts. Il est indispensable d'apporter un règlement rapide et ordonné aux revendications des peuples coloniaux, si nous voulons éviter une répétition des événements tragiques qui se déroulent aujourd'hui au Congo et qui, jusqu'à ce jour, n'ont pu être résolus malgré les efforts de toutes les nations réunies ici. Et cependant, ce qui se passe au Congo pourrait bien n'être qu'une catastrophe mineure en comparaison de ce qui pourrait survenir dans d'autres régions du monde.

10. L'Afrique du Sud invoque toujours l'argument de la souveraineté nationale pour empêcher tout examen d'une situation qui ne cesse de s'aggraver dans ce pays et qui met en jeu le sort de millions d'individus opprimés. Il serait déjà assez tragique que ceux qui prétendent former la "race des seigneurs" soient seuls les folles victimes de leur propre politique, ou que l'on ne compte parmi ces victimes que les millions d'innocents qui vivent encore sous leur domination immédiate; mais il ressort à l'évidence que l'explosion qui a lieu en Union sud-africaine, si nous ne sommes pas en mesure de l'étouffer, peut ébranler non seulement ce pays, mais le monde entier. L'Occident, dans son ensemble, porte la responsabilité morale des pratiques inhumaines suivies par cet Etat, spirituellement le plus arriéré de tous, par ceux qui ont décidé de se tenir "à l'écart" des tendances de tout le reste de l'humanité!

11. Il n'est pas inutile, croyons-nous, de répéter que le colonialisme est et continue d'être une période de ténèbres dans l'histoire humaine. A nos yeux, il importe beaucoup plus de constater que les conditions historiques qui ont rendu possible cette période d'exploitation ont disparu depuis longtemps, et que la survivance du colonialisme est un anachronisme que nous ne pouvons plus tolérer.

12. Quoi qu'il en soit j'ai mentionné le cas de l'Afrique du Sud et je parlerai brièvement de la situation en Afrique portugaise, afin que nous puissions tous constater qu'il ne s'agit pas d'une question purement théorique. Je me bornerai à citer ici un observateur autorisé et modéré, Anthony Sampson, qui s'exprime ainsi dans son ouvrage Common Sense About Africa:

"La première grande enquête a été menée en 1905 par le journaliste britannique H. W. Nevinson, qui avait été chargé par le Harper's Magazine de s'informer sur les accusations d'esclavage. Son ouvrage A Modern Slavery et les rapports d'autres enquêteurs venus ultérieurement ont montré que le travail forcé était assez répandu et s'exerçait dans des conditions ne différant guère de celles de l'esclavage. Cinquante ans plus tard, le Harper's chargea un autre journaliste britannique, Basil Davidson, de procéder à une même enquête. Son ouvrage The African Awakening, joint aux rapports de la Société anti-esclavagiste et du Bureau international du Travail, montre que les abus dont souffrent les "travailleurs sous contrat" ("contratados") sont encore très répandus. Près de la moitié de la main-d'œuvre de l'Angola, selon Davidson, est encore constituée par les "contratados", par opposition aux "voluntarios" (379.000 contre 420.000). Les "contratados" sont fournis par le chef de poste local, qui les choisit parmi ceux qui n'ont pas acquitté l'impôt, ou en exerçant une pression sur le chef local. On dit qu'en de nombreux cas les fonctionnaires portugais ont touché des pots-de-vin considérables pour fournir des travailleurs sous contrat. Les travailleurs des plantations de cacao de l'île Saint-Thomas sont encore, comme du temps de Nevinson, recrutés dans une large mesure parmi des Africains déportés astreints au travail forcé^{1/}."

Ces citations suffisent à montrer que les Africains, dans les possessions portugaises d'Afrique, vivent encore dans des conditions indignes de l'humanité.

13. Ma délégation ne peut s'empêcher de faire brièvement mention d'une des manifestations les plus tragiques du fléau colonial. Nous voulons parler de la déplorable situation en Algérie, où la guerre contre le peuple algérien est entrée dans sa septième année. Tout a été mis en œuvre pour présenter le cas de l'Algérie comme différant de toute autre manifestation de colonialisme, pour considérer l'Algérie et son peuple comme une partie intégrante de la France métropolitaine, pour ménager un démembrement de l'Algérie, qui à nos yeux est une et indivisible, pour dénier à son peuple le droit de disposer librement de son sort; tous ces efforts sont voués à l'échec, et ne peuvent que prolonger une tragédie qui n'a déjà que trop duré.

14. Nous autres Africains ne pouvons admettre cette idée qu'un pays africain — que ce soit l'Algérie ou cette partie trop souvent oubliée de la Somalie, connue, dans la terminologie coloniale, sous le nom de Côte française des Somalis — puisse devenir partie de la France.

15. Le problème de l'Algérie ne diffère pas essentiellement de celui de toute autre colonie; il ne peut être réglé avec succès que par la liquidation inconditionnelle du colonialisme. Nous formulons ces brèves remarques parce qu'à nos yeux le problème de l'Algérie résume tout le problème colonial. Il va de soi que nous en parlerons plus longuement, le moment venu, devant les organes compétents de l'Organisation.

16. Certains représentants nous ont dit que le colonialisme, aujourd'hui, était en train de mourir de sa belle mort. Comme preuve, on fait état de l'admission à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, cette année, de 17 nations nouvelles. Ceux qui parlent ainsi négligent plusieurs faits. Le processus d'émancipation dans le passé n'a nullement été automatique. Il n'a été réalisé qu'au prix de sacrifices et de luttes héroïques consentis par des millions d'hommes, dans les empires coloniaux. Au surplus, les pays qui demeurent sous le joug colonial représentent un grave problème de survivance qui ne pourra disparaître qu'au prix d'efforts encore plus énergiques que précédemment. Pour faire aboutir ces efforts, il faudra que se réalise la coopération des nations qui ont accepté les principes de la démocratie et de l'ONU elle-même, laquelle représente la volonté collective et l'opinion publique de tous les peuples du monde.

^{1/} Anthony Sampson, Common Sense About Africa, New York, The Macmillan Company, édit., 1960, p. 136 et 137.

17. On oppose parfois aux mesures de l'Organisation des Nations Unies l'argument de la compétence intérieure. On nous dit qu'elle n'a aucun droit d'intervenir dans les pays coloniaux, même en exerçant une pression morale. Ma délégation estime qu'on ne peut attendre de l'ONU, gardienne et symbole des espoirs de toutes les nations, qu'elle renonce à user de son prestige et de son autorité morale pour franchir avec le minimum de dangers et le maximum d'avantages l'étape finale de la liquidation du colonialisme. Si notre analyse est bien fondée, la survivance de l'humanité dépend de l'élimination de toutes les zones éventuelles de friction et de toutes les menaces à la paix; aussi n'avons-nous pas d'autre choix que d'invoquer l'autorité pleine et entière de l'Organisation internationale pour réclamer que le colonialisme soit promptement liquidé et qu'une aide soit apportée aux nouvelles nations indépendantes dans leurs efforts en vue d'instituer des gouvernements efficaces.

18. Le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] parle de la nécessité de sauvegarder l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale. Nous lisons au paragraphe 6 du projet de déclaration:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

19. Dans le même esprit, le paragraphe 7 est ainsi rédigé:

"Tous les Etats doivent observer fidèlement et strictement les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la présente Déclaration sur la base de l'égalité, de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats et du respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les peuples."

20. Si ma délégation appuie entièrement le contenu de ces deux paragraphes, elle voudrait répéter que des expressions telles que "intégrité territoriale" et "non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats" ne doivent pas être utilisées pour masquer le maintien de la domination d'une puissance sur les peuples non autonomes et dénier à ces peuples le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes. Lorsque nous parlons de peuples non autonomes, nous voulons parler de ceux qui vivent sous la domination non seulement de puissances métropolitaines d'outre-mer, mais aussi de puissances coloniales d'un même continent. A ce propos, j'espère que le représentant de l'Irlande me permettra de citer quelques mots de son excellente intervention du 5 décembre dernier.

21. Parlant du projet de résolution proposé par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, le représentant de l'Irlande a dit notamment:

"... Il importe que les droits proclamés dans cette résolution s'appliquent à tous les peuples de toutes les parties du monde sans se préoccuper du lieu; il importe que le droit à l'indépendance nationale et son plein exercice soient reconnus en faveur de tous les peuples, que les oppresseurs et les opprimés soient de la même race, de la même croyance ou de la même couleur, ou qu'ils soient de race, de croyance ou de couleur différente." [935ème séance, par. 93.]

22. A mon avis, ces paroles vont au cœur même de la question dont l'Assemblée est maintenant saisie. Afin de bien préciser la valeur que prennent ces mots dans le projet de résolution, le représentant de l'Irlande a indiqué que sa délégation préférerait que le début du paragraphe 5 soit ainsi rédigé:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et dans tous les cas où les droits souverains proclamés dans cette déclaration sont refusés à un peuple quelconque, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve..." [Ibid., par. 107.]

Ma délégation sera très heureuse d'appuyer cette proposition.

23. L'Assemblée, j'en suis sûr, voudra unanimement souligner qu'il faut tenir compte de tous les éléments qui constituent une nation et un territoire national lorsqu'on parle de l'intégrité territoriale et de l'unité nationale. Les frontières vagues ou les délimitations arbitraires doivent être rectifiées selon le critère dominant et généralement accepté de l'unification des groupes ethniques qui constituent également des entités économiques indivisibles. Ceci est particulièrement vrai lorsque des frontières artificielles divisent des groupes de population homogènes et engendrent des malaises économiques et sociaux. Nous devons nous laisser guider par le principe essentiel exprimé dans la Charte des Nations Unies, à savoir que les intérêts des habitants des régions intéressées constituent le critère le plus important. Nous ne pouvons pas admettre que des lignes frontières arbitraires l'emportent sur le bien-être et l'exercice des droits historiques des peuples ou entrent en conflit avec les nécessités évidentes de la contiguïté géographique des régions en cause et les vœux des habitants. Le mépris de ces principes pourrait mener à des formes déguisées de colonialisme, tout comme un loup, sous la peau d'un mouton, peut parfois se glisser dans le bercail.

24. A notre avis, le pire héritage du colonialisme en Afrique est le nombre illimité de problèmes territoriaux que causent les divisions artificielles d'entités nationales homogènes.

25. Le colonialisme a pris soin de nous laisser face à face avec ces différends territoriaux, en sorte que les Africains restent divisés entre eux pendant longtemps et que les puissances coloniales de jadis puissent exploiter cette division à leur profit. Il nous appartient à nous, Africains, de mesurer l'importance de cette situation et de rechercher une solution amiable à nos différends, afin que cette doctrine machiavélique de diviser pour régner ne réapparaisse plus sous une forme différente et plus subtile encore que par le passé.

26. Pour conclure, si une très grande majorité des nations représentées à la présente session générale voté en faveur d'une déclaration fortement exprimée, la présente session entrera peut-être dans l'histoire sous le nom d'"Assemblée de la liberté" et notre déclaration, avec le nom de "Déclaration de la liberté", prendra rang parmi les grandes chartes de l'humanité: la Grande Charte, la Déclaration de l'indépendance, la Déclaration des droits de l'homme et la Charte des Nations Unies.

27. En agissant de la sorte, il est vrai que nous ne ferons que reconnaître la marche de l'histoire au lieu de créer l'histoire, car la marche vers l'indépendance est déjà inscrite si nettement à l'ordre du jour de l'humanité que rien ne saurait l'arrêter; mais, dans un sens tout au moins, nous aurons fait de l'histoire.

28. M. BOUCETTA (Maroc): Les orateurs qui m'ont précédé à cette tribune ont, avec un talent que je ne saurais égaler, exposé l'origine, l'histoire et les conséquences de ce triste fléau qui s'appelle le colonialisme. Certains, parmi les plus brillants, ont cherché à lui donner une définition et à dévoiler au monde tout ce qu'il cache de misère, de souffrances, d'intrigues et aussi de discrimination raciale et de ségrégation pour aboutir enfin, par des moyens honteux et inhumains, à l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, alors que les hommes sont nés libres, alors que les hommes et les peuples sont égaux et doivent se traiter comme tels.

29. Je n'ajouterai rien à ce qui a été dit — et bien dit — pour définir ce phénomène qu'est le colonialisme et qui restera encore, malheureusement, longtemps gravé dans les cœurs et dans les âmes de ceux qui l'ont subi. D'une manière pratique et pour le connaître sans dictionnaires et sans encyclopédies, demandez à un homme, à une femme, à un vieillard, à un enfant, à une famille, à un peuple, à une nation qui ont été colonisés de vous dire, eux qui l'ont subi ou qui le subissent encore, ce qu'est le colonialisme. Peut-être ne vous répondront-ils rien; mais combien leur silence sera significatif et éloquent! Combien de générations, depuis des siècles, en ont souffert et en souffrent encore depuis les comptoirs jusqu'à l'occupation brutale, par la force des armes, qui a duré tout le siècle dernier et tout le début de notre siècle!

30. Les temps ont changé et nous voyons, aujourd'hui, ce même phénomène apparaître, sous des formes nouvelles, avec une idéologie nouvelle et une doctrine nouvelle. C'est pourquoi l'œuvre que nous poursuivons aujourd'hui et pour laquelle nos aînés ont sacrifié leur vie et leur bonheur est une œuvre noble et grande. Elle doit aussi être complète et définitive; elle doit démasquer le colonialisme dans ses formes anciennes et dans ses formes nouvelles.

31. L'effritement et la liquidation des empires coloniaux est certainement l'un des faits les plus marquants de l'histoire contemporaine. Après de longues souffrances et une lutte héroïque, des millions d'êtres humains sont parvenus à secouer le joug de l'oppression et un nombre considérable de nations ont retrouvé leur liberté et leur dignité. Cependant, quelque anachroniques que puissent paraître dans le monde de 1960 les expéditions, les complots et les coups de force qui jalonnent l'édification des vastes zones de domination d'un passé encore récent, l'ère du colonialisme est loin d'être entièrement révolue. Non seulement il survit sous ses formes classiques les plus brutales, non seulement il continue de mener d'absurdes guerres coloniales, mais encore — et c'est également là un fait caractéristique de notre époque — nous le voyons épouser de nouvelles formes de domination qui ne sont pas moins virulentes.

32. Ce problème doit retenir toute notre attention et toute notre vigilance. C'est pour cela que le Maroc, pays qui a connu l'occupation étrangère et son amère expérience, pays attaché à la liberté et à la dignité des individus et des nations, se félicite de voir l'Assemblée générale se pencher sur l'importante question de l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples colonisés. Il est tout naturel que l'Organisation des Nations Unies se saisisse de ce problème, à nos yeux, essentiel. Des dispositions précises de la Charte montrent assez l'importance attachée au développement des pays encore dépendants et à leur promotion économique et sociale, en vue de leur capacité de s'administrer eux-mêmes, en vue de leur libération. Bien plus, les principes fondamentaux de l'Organisation, les buts qui constituent sa raison d'être, l'amènent à traiter dans les meilleurs délais des graves problèmes que posent le phénomène colonial et ses séquelles; car, avec le phénomène colonial, tous les principes qui sont à la base de cette haute instance et qui doivent régir toute société internationale digne de ce nom se trouvent violés, qu'il s'agisse du respect des droits de l'homme et de sa dignité, qu'il s'agisse de l'égalité des individus et des nations ou du droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

33. Nous ne comprenons pas, pour notre part, qu'on songe encore à rappeler ici certains thèmes périmés, à vanter les mérites d'un colonialisme "éclairé", à le parer de hautes vertus, à lui accorder une quelconque mission humanitaire ou civilisatrice. L'histoire de la conquête des empires coloniaux, loin d'aboutir à un fait, nous met en face d'autres réalités. Elle n'est qu'une succession tumultueuse de guerres et d'expéditions livrées par des puissances grisées par leur potentiel économique et militaire, en quête de positions stratégiques et avides de lucre ou de prestige. Les luttes d'influence qui ont opposé ces puissances, leurs collusions et leurs intrigues en vue de se partager des continents entiers, ne sont pas reluisantes et ne constituent certainement pas une page de gloire dans l'histoire de l'humanité.

34. Il ne saurait d'ailleurs en être autrement, car le colonialisme a ses lois et ses dogmes. Il a sa dialectique et sa logique propres, et tout d'abord il bat en brèche le principe de l'égalité des individus et méconnaît leurs droits les plus élémentaires. Il signifie avant tout: domination, asservissement et exploitation de l'individu. Or, toute occupation entraine, de prime abord, le heurt de deux tempéraments, de deux personnalités, la discrimination entre le colonisateur et le colonisé. L'infériorité de celui-ci par rapport à celui-là devient un principe sacro-saint du colonialisme.

35. Il est à remarquer que les pays occupants, s'ils se sont souvent plu à considérer les territoires occupés comme faisant partie intégrante de leurs propres territoires, et si certains même, pensant faire preuve de générosité, ont accordé leur nationalité aux populations conquises, n'ont jamais été jusqu'à tirer les conséquences de leur fiction et à accorder l'égalité complète des droits.

36. L'histoire récente de l'Algérie est très instructive à cet égard et nous montre les mille et une péripéties par lesquelles est passée la condition juridique de l'Algérien, au gré du colonisateur, et toutes les catégories dans lesquelles elle a été tour à tour enfermée pour les besoins de la cause.

37. Par son essence même, le colonialisme exclut toute égalité des droits qui risque de se retourner contre lui et d'ébranler sa férule. Il reste avant tout orienté vers l'exploitation des richesses, alors même qu'il se pare de vertus civilisatrices et d'un certain idéal humain, et il considère volontiers l'autochtone comme un simple moyen, un moyen de production à bon marché. Cette logique impitoyable a conduit et conduit encore le colonialisme à adopter les formes les plus extrêmes de l'inégalité des droits et à ériger en système la ségrégation raciale.

38. L'opinion mondiale ressent toujours cruellement les procédés d'un autre âge encore en vigueur dans certaines régions du monde, en Afrique notamment, et qui constituent un déni des valeurs fondamentales de la civilisation et une grave atteinte à la dignité humaine.

39. Les voix des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie les plus directement touchés par la discrimination raciale se sont souvent fait entendre pour la condamner et la flétrir. Ces honteux procédés, qui dénotent une grave déchéance humaine, ont été tour à tour dénoncés avec force à la Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie tenue à Bandoung, en 1955, aux conférences des Etats indépendants d'Afrique tenues à Accra, Monrovia et, tout récemment encore, à la Conférence d'Addis-Abéba.

40. Ces voix africaines et asiatiques ont rencontré un écho profond dans l'opinion mondiale. Le problème de la ségrégation raciale reste l'un des plus graves et des plus pénibles que notre organisation se doit de résoudre. Mettant souvent en avant des intentions humanitaires, les colonialistes foulent aux pieds les droits les plus élémentaires de l'individu. De même n'hésitent-ils pas, sous prétexte que les habitants des régions occupées sont incapables d'exploiter leurs richesses, et sous prétexte de les aider à développer leur économie, à procéder à une exploitation systématique de ces richesses.

41. L'individu n'est même pas autorisé à faire la preuve de ses capacités. Il voit son énergie étouffée et asservie. L'indépendance de nombreux pays d'Afrique et d'Asie nous permet de constater combien la libération et l'épanouissement de ces énergies bâillonnées sont salutaires pour le progrès et le bien-être des populations et que c'est l'occupation qui les maintient à un niveau reculé de l'économie, du commerce et de l'agriculture.

42. Longtemps considérés comme une réserve de matières premières et de main-d'œuvre abondante et à bon marché, les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie ont pris conscience d'eux-mêmes et ont compris que l'indépendance, en libérant leur énergie, leur ouvre la porte à l'épanouissement économique et au progrès social et culturel. Plusieurs exemples ont été cités à ce sujet. J'ajouterai volontiers celui de mon pays, le Maroc où, en quatre années d'indépendance, nous avons scolarisé plus d'un million d'enfants, c'est-à-dire plus de 10 fois le nombre de ceux qui ont été scolarisés en 44 années d'occupation. Notre économie, qui était une économie complémentaire et assujettie, tend de plus en plus à devenir une économie nationale pour le progrès et le bien-être du peuple. La sécurité sociale est assurée à tous et les mesures d'ordre social adoptées depuis notre indépendance sont de loin, et de très loin, supérieures à celles qui existaient auparavant. Elles ont aboli à jamais les discriminations et les différenciations de tous ordres et nous poursuivons le combat contre le chômage et pour le bonheur, la prospérité et le bien-être de notre peuple.

43. Ainsi s'évanouit le mythe de cette incapacité congénitale à laquelle les colonialistes se complaisent à condamner les peuples qu'ils oppriment. Mais l'un des aspects les plus inquiétants du colonialisme, à un moment surtout où tous les efforts sont orientés vers le maintien de la paix, est la menace permanente qu'il constitue pour la sécurité et la stabilité dans le monde.

44. La raison en est tout d'abord que l'installation coloniale s'accompagne souvent de démembrements de territoires et suscite des divisions, quand elle n'exploite pas les différends qui, à un moment donné de l'histoire, peuvent exister entre certains peuples.

45. Les démembrements de territoires qui ont résulté du partage de continents entiers en zones d'influence, les intrigues et les menées auxquelles le colonialisme a dû se livrer pour arriver à ses fins n'ont jamais manqué d'exaspérer les peuples qui en étaient victimes. Ces démembrements et ces démantèlements de territoires sont en contradiction formelle avec les principes mêmes de notre charte et portent atteinte — une atteinte grave — à l'unité et à l'intégrité territoriales des Etats.

46. C'est ainsi — nous avons eu l'occasion de le dire et de le répéter — que notre pays a été démembré, déchiré, mutilé, divisé parce que des puissances coloniales ont voulu, au début de ce siècle, se le partager sans tenir aucun compte ni de la volonté de ses populations, ni des données historiques naturelles ou géographiques. C'est ainsi que le Maroc, uni et formant une seule et même entité, s'est vu amputé de ce que l'on vous présente aujourd'hui comme un Etat indépendant de Mauritanie, de territoires dont les populations souffrent encore l'occupation coloniale: Ifni, Seguiet-el-Hamra, Rio de Oro, Tindouf, Tidikelt, Ceuta et Melilla. Chacun de ces territoires se trouve sous une occupation dont le nom varie: territoire d'outre-mer, établissement d'outre-mer, préside ou place de souveraineté; mais la forme est partout et toujours la même, elle n'a d'autre nom que l'occupation coloniale.

47. Notre œuvre aujourd'hui, ici même, constitue l'assaut contre ces manœuvres de division et de désunion. Elle constitue aussi la meilleure résistance aux visées colonialistes fondées sur le principe: "Diviser pour régner" et "Désunir pour se maintenir".

48. Nous refusons la "balkanisation", la "katanguisation" et la "mauritanisation". Nous ne pouvons ici qu'enregistrer avec regret et avec amertume que ce sont les mêmes puissances coloniales qui, à la fin du siècle dernier et au début de ce siècle, ont procédé au partage et à la division de l'Afrique en zones d'influence, qui, aujourd'hui, s'opposent à la réunification et au regroupement. C'est ainsi qu'en cherchant à faire admettre la Mauritanie à l'Organisation des Nations Unies, la France et ses alliés voulaient faire du partage et de la division du Maroc un fait accompli, cautionné et entériné par l'Organisation des Nations Unies. L'Union soviétique, en s'opposant à son admission, et les 56 délégations qui, par leur vote positif ou leur abstention en Première Commission^{2/}, ont manifesté leur intention n'ont fait que respecter le principe de la Charte qui exige le respect de l'intégrité territoriale des Etats Membres.

^{2/} Voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Première Commission, 1118ème séance, par. 51.

49. Nous regrettons profondément que certains représentants de grandes puissances aient passé outre non seulement au respect de ce principe, mais aussi à leurs propres engagements, comme puissances signataires d'actes internationaux tels que l'Acte général de la Conférence internationale d'Algésiras, de 1906.

50. Ils continuent à s'enfermer dans leur erreur et, au sein même de cette assemblée, reprochent à ceux qui ont vu juste d'avoir agi en conséquence. Nous voulons alors apporter toute la clarté possible à cette question et nous disons: l'Union soviétique, par son veto, s'est opposée, au nom de la Charte des Nations Unies, à la reconnaissance de la violation du territoire d'un Etat Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies par un autre Etat Membre. Le Gouvernement soviétique a voulu ainsi respecter ses engagements particuliers à l'égard du Maroc dont il a reconnu l'indépendance en 1956. Que n'était-ce là la position de toutes les délégations et de tous les membres du Conseil de sécurité! Nous ne pouvons que le regretter, mais nous devons dénoncer l'action coloniale qui divise notre pays, qui déchire notre peuple et mutilé notre Etat. En tout état de cause, notre combat continue pour arriver à la libération totale et pour la sauvegarde de notre intégrité territoriale. Ce combat est fondé sur le droit et la justice. Il est aussi la continuation d'un complot depuis longtemps engagé contre le colonialisme, car la résistance à l'oppression s'est inscrite dans l'histoire des peuples et en constitue une donnée essentielle. Il n'y a pas d'exemple de domination coloniale qui, à la longue, n'ait dû capituler devant cette résistance. Certes, cela implique bien des misères, bien des souffrances; mais la lutte d'un peuple pour sa liberté trempe ses énergies et forge sa gloire. Ce qui est plus grave, c'est que les foyers d'intrigues et de troubles, d'où le colonialisme lance ses assauts pour la conquête de places fortes, constituent une sérieuse menace pour la paix et la stabilité dans certaines régions très sensibles.

51. La situation qui règne en Oman, en Irian occidental, ne peut nous laisser indifférents, car la sécurité et la paix sont, dans les circonstances que nous connaissons aujourd'hui, indivisibles. La notion de conflit local tend à disparaître; l'extension et la généralisation sont toujours à craindre. Un des exemples les plus frappants des menaces que le colonialisme fait peser sur la paix du monde est l'inquiétante situation qui règne en Palestine. Dans ce pays, la cruauté et l'arbitraire ont atteint leur comble. Une nation tout entière a été déplacée, frustrée de son sol et de ses richesses et se trouve condamnée, depuis 14 ans, à vivre dans l'exil. Cette situation en Palestine, qui soulève l'indignation et la révolte de toutes les consciences, doit retenir notre attention vigilante car elle est des plus explosives. Elle a déjà causé une guerre locale en 1948; elle a failli déclencher une conflagration généralisée en 1956; et elle constitue une cause permanente de troubles et d'instabilité dans une région des plus névralgiques. D'une façon générale, la conquête de bastions stratégiques, qui demeure le souci majeur du colonialisme, est toujours génératrice de troubles et entraîne de graves menaces pour la paix et la sécurité mondiales. On connaît l'enchaînement des faits et le processus qu'elle entraîne inmanquablement, constitution de bases militaires, course aux armements, organisation de blocs agressifs.

52. La présence militaire, autrefois motivée essentiellement par la volonté de consolider la domination politique et de préserver de puissants intérêts économiques, devient ainsi une fin en soi, dictée par des considérations d'ordre stratégique et s'insère dans une politique de blocs et d'alliances. Nous dénonçons avec force les menaces qui, de ce fait, pèsent en particulier sur l'Afrique où certaines puissances, tournant le dos à la politique de désarmement que les nations éprises de paix se proposent de poursuivre, restent animées par des visées agressives et, sous prétexte de défense commune, installent des bases et procèdent à des expériences nucléaires, en dépit de la réprobation générale, en dépit de la volonté des peuples d'Afrique.

53. Nous dénonçons avec plus de force encore la coalition d'intérêts puissants, les ligues de blocs agressifs contre les peuples qui luttent pour recouvrer leur indépendance et nous touchons là à l'aspect le plus révoltant de la domination colonialiste. Ce n'est pas sans heurts, ni sans tumulte, que se sont édifiés les territoires d'outre-mer. Ce n'est pas dans la paix et la sérénité que se sont échafaudés les empires où le soleil ne se couche jamais. La conquête colonialiste reste jalonnée d'expéditions meurtrières dans ses diverses phases, et surtout dans celle de son déclin. La libération des peuples colonisés a été presque toujours marquée par des guerres sans merci, car ni le déploiement d'un formidable potentiel militaire, ni la coalition d'intérêts si puissants soient-ils ne sauraient empêcher les peuples opprimés de poursuivre jusqu'à son terme leur lutte légitime pour la reconnaissance de leurs droits sacrés et imprescriptibles.

54. Il ne faut pas remonter très loin dans le passé pour rencontrer des exemples classiques du conflit colonialiste. Certaines puissances se sont installées dans la guerre depuis de longues années. L'Indochine était, hier encore, le théâtre d'opérations d'envergure qui ont eu un profond retentissement sur la sécurité et la stabilité dans le monde. La guerre d'Algérie, qui se poursuit implacablement depuis plus de six ans, avec son cortège de malheurs et de souffrances, reste aujourd'hui le vestige d'un passé que nous voulons voir à jamais révolu. Elle reste la manifestation du colonialisme dans sa forme la plus brutale. L'endurance et la ténacité du peuple algérien suscitent notre admiration et notre sympathie. Les étapes de sa lutte héroïque sont trop connues pour qu'il soit nécessaire de les détailler ou de les rappeler ici.

55. Notre organisation s'est déjà penchée, à plusieurs reprises, sur ce drame qui affecte dangereusement la paix internationale, et doit de nouveau cette année marquer sa volonté de le résoudre, par l'accession à l'indépendance de nombreux Etats africains. Nous tenons simplement à mettre l'accent, une fois de plus, sur les graves risques d'extension et d'internationalisation du conflit, surtout du fait de l'assistance que certaines nations persistent à prêter à l'agresseur colonialiste. En butte à une volonté de domination, qui méconnaît l'évolution de l'histoire et la poussée irrésistible des nationalismes, le peuple algérien bénéficie de l'appui et de la solidarité d'un milliard et demi d'êtres humains qui vivaient dans l'esclavage colonialiste dans un passé récent et qui sont parvenus, après de longues décades de souffrances, à reconquérir leur liberté et leur dignité.

56. L'Asie et l'Afrique présentent aujourd'hui un nouveau visage et nous sommes persuadés que les derniers bastions derrière lesquels le colonialisme s'est retranché ne tarderont pas à s'effondrer à leur tour. La grande famille des nations récemment parvenues à l'indépendance ne cessera ainsi de s'élargir, pour le plus grand bien de tous, car elle est appelée à jouer un rôle déterminant dans le maintien de la paix, l'amélioration des relations internationales et le développement du progrès, de la prospérité et du bien-être des peuples. Mais, en même temps qu'elles accomplissent cette tâche noble, mais combien difficile, elles doivent consolider leur indépendance chèrement acquise, promouvoir leur économie sur des bases saines et rester plus que jamais vigilantes. Car les puissances coloniales ont recours à d'autres moyens pour perpétuer leur domination et leur influence.

57. C'est pourquoi nous tenons à remercier la délégation soviétique d'avoir demandé l'inscription de cette question à l'ordre du jour et d'avoir insisté pour qu'elle soit traitée avec toute la solennité désirable au sein de notre organisation. Nous appuierons sa résolution, de même que ma délégation appuiera toute résolution et toute déclaration solennelle qui proclament la fin immédiate du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et le respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les Etats sans exception. Il est entendu que, pour mon pays, ces résolutions ou ces déclarations visent l'ensemble des territoires coloniaux, quel que soit le subterfuge ou l'artifice qui veut en faire des territoires ou des départements d'outre-mer, des présides ou des places de souveraineté, des colonies ou des protectorats, des territoires sous mandat ou sous tutelle. Nous avons vu que, si l'appellation diffère, le système et les méthodes restent les mêmes et le but unique: exploiter l'homme, exploiter les richesses naturelles pour soi et en dehors de toute autre considération.

58. Nous le disons tout haut et clairement: nous ne voulons pas d'indépendance au rabais; nous n'accepterons jamais la dépendance ou la servilité et, en conséquence, nous dénoncerons toujours et partout le "fantocheisme", la balkanisation, la domination politique, économique, militaire et culturelle. Nous sommes pour l'indépendance réelle et vraie qui permet l'épanouissement de l'individu et assure aux peuples le progrès et le bien-être. Tel est le sens de notre combat pour l'avenir. Il ne souffre ni courtisanerie, ni tergiversation, ni hésitation d'aucune sorte. C'est pourquoi l'indépendance qui doit être reconnue aux peuples coloniaux doit être une indépendance qui sauvegarde leur intégrité territoriale et ne les assujettit à aucune nouvelle forme de domination. Mon pays est attaché autant que tout autre à voir le colonialisme agonisant mort et définitivement liquidé. Mais il veut que cette indépendance corresponde à quelque chose de réel, tant du point de vue territorial que du point de vue de la population.

59. Nous connaissons le prétexte selon lequel les pays coloniaux ne sont pas encore à même de diriger leurs propres affaires. C'est un prétexte fallacieux et sans fondement. Nous le rejetons catégoriquement. Nous considérons qu'il faut d'abord libérer les peuples de la domination coloniale. C'est là un préalable indispensable à leur évolution rapide. Tant qu'ils restent dépendants, les peuples ne peuvent organiser leur pays, politiquement, économiquement et socialement d'une façon efficace et dans leur propre intérêt.

60. De ce qui précède, nous pourrions peut-être tirer quelques conclusions.

61. En premier lieu, l'éradication du colonialisme à l'échelle universelle est le désir de tout honnête homme partout dans le monde. La liquidation et l'enterrement de ce fléau parasitaire étaient depuis longtemps attendus. Le colonialisme est partout condamné; aujourd'hui, les puissances coloniales elles-mêmes en ont honte. Elles se couvrent le visage quand on en parle, mais avec un voile qui n'est pas différent du colonialisme classique et qu'on nomme de nos jours le néo-colonialisme.

62. En second lieu, la conscience humaine réprouve le colonialisme comme une atteinte portée à la notion de liberté en faveur de l'esprit de domination basé sur un phénomène de parasitisme où l'homme se conduit comme un loup pour l'homme. La conscience morale se révolte; cette révolte conduit fatalement à l'instabilité qui, à son tour, entrave la marche du progrès.

63. En troisième lieu, la conscience morale présentait la constitution des empires comme une mission civilisatrice. Cette conscience morale présente l'impérialisme néo-colonialiste d'aujourd'hui comme un système de défense de la liberté. Pendant que cet impérialisme lutte contre la liberté en Algérie, pendant qu'il provoque des mouvements de sécession au Katanga et en Mauritanie, après avoir constitué des gouvernements fantoches et nullement représentatifs, la volonté de puissance, l'esprit de lucre, de domination et d'exploitation se couvrent le visage du voile mensonger de la liberté et se retranchent derrière un système militaire imposé à un grand nombre de pays faibles.

64. Avant 1960, la lutte pour la liberté était dirigée contre l'administration coloniale directe. Ce colonialisme classique cherchait dans les pays placés sous sa domination le monopole de matières premières, la main-d'œuvre à bon marché et le travail forcé, l'accaparement des marchés, le contrôle de points stratégiques, la surveillance de la concurrence étrangère et enfin ce que l'on appelait la chair à canon qu'on trouve encore sur les champs de bataille en Algérie. Ce colonialisme classique se caractérise par la domination de tous les secteurs de la vie, domination administrative, politique, militaire, économique, culturelle, sociale et diplomatique.

65. Après 1960, la lutte pour la liberté entre dans une phase qui ne diffère qu'en apparence de la première. Après l'émancipation et la libération de l'administration directe, les peuples bientôt se rendront compte que l'indépendance politique les conduit à une période d'assainissement caractérisée par la lutte contre la balkanisation et le partage des nations, contre le retour de la féodalité capitaliste, contre la mainmise économique de l'étranger et contre la domination militaire; bref, le néo-colonialisme place les pays participant à la Conférence de Bandoung devant un avenir de lutte contre le maintien des peuples jeunes dans un état de dépendance. Dans les perspectives de cet avenir sombre le néo-colonialisme s'efforce, pour se maintenir, de créer et d'aggraver les divisions entre les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie ainsi qu'ailleurs; il déploie et continuera à déployer tous les moyens pour briser le bloc de Bandoung. Il tâche de séparer l'Asie de l'Afrique. En Afrique, il cherche à séparer l'Afrique du Nord de l'Afrique du Centre et de l'Afrique du Sud. Le néo-colonialisme lutte contre l'indépendance arrachée et authentique, celle des luttes et des souffrances. Il redouble d'efforts pour ne voir en Afrique et ailleurs que des indépendances perverties ou même imposées, comme dans le sud du Maroc, en Mauritanie.

66. Au sein des Nations Unies, le colonialisme classique utilisait un certain nombre de mensonges comme la pacification, la mission civilisatrice, le respect des traditions, l'apprentissage de la démocratie, la défense de la religion, les interlocuteurs valables et l'influence étrangère, etc.

67. Aujourd'hui, pour maintenir sa domination économique et militaire, le néo-colonialisme se proclame comme étant le système de l'évolution ordonnée, le protecteur de la liberté. Il morcelle l'unité territoriale des nations et vient la présenter comme un nouvel apport de la liberté et de l'indépendance. Entre la notion d'évolution et la notion de révolution la ligne de démarcation est de plus en plus imperceptible.

68. Nous vivons dans un âge de révolution scientifique et technique. Parallèlement, notre époque est aussi l'âge des révolutions politiques et sociales. C'est pourquoi l'éradication inconditionnelle du colonialisme est un impératif catégorique.

69. Le courant de l'histoire s'oriente dans le sens de la liberté et de l'unité. La liberté est une notion concrète. Elle est économique, politique, sociale et spirituelle. L'unité est une notion concrète d'égalité, de regroupement et d'universalité des droits et des devoirs.

70. Quand ces deux notions sont respectées, le processus d'évolution suit une ligne simple d'émancipation et de reconstruction. Quand le néo-colonialisme intervient par les intrigues et les provocations, comme au Congo ou en Mauritanie, ce processus devient compliqué. Il passe du colonialisme classique à la balkanisation, à l'exploitation économique, aux révolutions populaires et ensuite au regroupement naturel et enfin à la reconstruction nationale dans tous les domaines.

71. C'est pourquoi la notion d'indépendance est toute relative si elle n'est pas placée dans le cadre de l'intégrité territoriale et du gouvernement représentatif.

72. L'initiative de l'Union soviétique marquera une date dans l'histoire. Grâce à l'anéantissement du colonialisme et du néo-colonialisme, le rapprochement entre les hommes sera de plus en plus possible et réalisable. Comme l'impérialisme et l'esprit de domination étaient la cause majeure des guerres mondiales, le problème du désarmement lui-même se trouvera facilité par la liquidation des derniers vestiges des vieux empires. La paix est une: elle est solidaire de la justice. L'extirpation d'un mal dont souffre l'humanité fera sentir ses effets salutaires dans toutes les directions de l'activité humaine.

M. Fekini (Libye), vice-président, prend la présidence.

73. M. ROSSIDES (Chypre) [traduit de l'anglais]: La question que nous discutons en ce moment à l'Assemblée, à savoir l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, est d'une importance particulière, par son contenu moral aussi bien que par sa portée entière. Il s'agit, en fait, du problème de la liberté dans le monde.

74. Le culte que le peuple de Chypre voue à l'idéal de la liberté et de l'indépendance des peuples a été amplement démontré par la lutte longue et difficile qu'il a menée pour sa libération. Notre peuple a longtemps souffert de la domination étrangère et a fait l'expérience des plus déplorables manifestations du colonialisme et de sa politique consistant à "diviser pour régner". Il doit encore en subir les effets. Aussi a-t-il une sympathie particulière pour tous les peuples asservis qui aspirent à la liberté et luttent pour l'obtenir. De tout notre cœur, nous embrassons leur cause, car elle est notre cause, la cause de tous les peuples spirituellement libres.

75. Nous sommes donc heureux de présenter pour notre part le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] et nous associer à ses énergiques déclarations. Nous le faisons, non seulement parce qu'il contient un message de liberté, mais encore parce qu'il renferme en lui le sens même de la paix.

76. Liberté et paix sont des concepts inséparables et des réalités indivisibles. Ceux qui cherchent la paix et refusent la liberté veulent concilier des inconciliables et détruisent d'une main ce qu'ils construisent de l'autre.

77. Le désarmement et la paix ne peuvent être obtenus que là où règne l'ordre mondial, et l'ordre mondial ne peut régner aussi longtemps que certaines nations s'efforcent d'en dominer d'autres. La domination est liée à la force et la force est l'ennemie de la paix.

78. Nous ne faisons pas de théorie, et c'est par expérience que nous parlons. Après une longue lutte pour la liberté dans le domaine politique, pendant des dizaines et des dizaines d'années, le peuple chypriote s'est tourné avec foi vers l'Organisation des Nations Unies, dans l'espoir que celle-ci apporterait une solution juste et pacifique. Lorsque les résultats négatifs eurent amené désillusions et déceptions, la violence et la résistance armée ont suivi, pendant quatre années de combat, d'exploits héroïques et d'abnégation, qui ont coûté fort cher en vies humaines et en souffrances.

79. Par ce rappel du passé, je ne cherche pas à critiquer. Je ne veux que mentionner notre expérience et la dure leçon que nous avons apprise, à savoir qu'il ne peut y avoir de paix durable là où la liberté est déniée et aussi que l'apathie et l'inaction de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, lorsque la liberté des peuples est en jeu, ne favorisent pas la cause de la paix. Lorsque cette simple vérité sera bien comprise, beaucoup de graves problèmes d'aujourd'hui trouveront leur solution naturelle. Si nous voulons vraiment aller vers la paix mondiale, nous devons faire régner la liberté dans le monde et, pour ce faire, éliminer la sujétion et la domination sous quelque forme qu'elles se présentent.

80. Le colonialisme est encore une survivance de cette domination, et il doit donc, en premier lieu, être rapidement aboli. Sa disparition entraînera la libération de tous les peuples asservis, où que ce soit et quels que soient les moyens par lesquels on leur a refusé la liberté.

81. La résolution qui, comme nous l'espérons, sera adoptée à l'issue de ce débat est d'une portée immense. Elle exprimera la condamnation collective et décisive du colonialisme par l'humanité et affirmera le droit de tous les peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

Dans son sens le plus large cette résolution marquera la fin prochaine d'une ère prolongée de l'histoire humaine, d'une ère caractérisée par les concepts de force et de domination. Elle nous ouvre l'espoir d'un monde nouveau fondé sur l'égalité et la fraternité de tous les hommes.

82. La conséquence directe et immédiate de cette résolution sera cependant la liquidation du colonialisme en tant que système mondial qui sanctionne encore ouvertement la domination d'un peuple par un autre.

83. Historiquement, le colonialisme, qui a commencé par l'installation de colons désireux de se livrer au commerce, n'a pas tardé à prendre la forme de l'asservissement et de la domination exercés sur des pays primitifs et insuffisamment développés d'Asie et d'Afrique, pour se transformer ensuite en un système politique et une institution juridique. Reconnu en droit international, commenté et classé en droit constitutionnel, le colonialisme en vint à se faire accepter comme un état de choses normal. La géographie du monde a été dessinée en fonction du colonialisme et la vie nationale et internationale, pendant plus de deux siècles, a été axée sur le colonialisme. En d'autres termes, la domination par la force et, comme corollaire, la privation du droit fondamental de l'homme à la liberté, à l'égalité et à la justice ont été — et, si triste que ce soit, sont encore — au nom du colonialisme, considérés comme la règle. Cependant, l'asservissement et l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, d'une nation par une autre nation, si longtemps tolérés et même admis dans la pratique, scandalisent aujourd'hui la conscience morale de l'humanité.

84. Au cours de l'histoire, l'humanité est passée par bien des situations et conditions différentes; mais, en dernière analyse, leur destin a été fixé par l'attitude de l'homme à leur égard. Elles se sont maintenues chaque fois que les principes de morale et de liberté ont prévalu; mais elles n'ont pas tardé à disparaître partout où elles heurtaient le respect du droit et de la justice inhérent dans le cœur de l'homme. L'humanité, lorsqu'elle n'a plus d'espoir en ces conditions et situations, les rejette. Même l'esclavage, depuis longtemps hors la loi, fut, pendant des siècles, admis en tant que pratique légale.

85. Ainsi, l'évolution humaine se poursuit, dans le cadre du progrès industriel et des découvertes techniques. Lente au début, elle s'est accélérée à notre époque au point de révolutionner toutes les idées préconçues qui ne reposaient pas sur une base morale.

86. Aujourd'hui le temps est venu où le colonialisme ou toute autre forme de domination imposée à un peuple par un autre sont universellement condamnés et abandonnés.

87. Nous lisons ce qui suit, aux paragraphes 1 et 2 de la déclaration du projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie:

"La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales.

"Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination; en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel."

Voilà ce que revendique l'humanité aujourd'hui; voilà quels sont les préceptes de la morale, que nous ne pouvons méconnaître. La domination imposée par la force est déjà une chose du passé. Tous les peuples ont le droit de vivre dans la liberté et de développer librement leur propre culture, leurs propres systèmes politiques ou économiques. Le principe de l'autodétermination a été appelé à juste titre la clef de voûte des Nations Unies et le maître mot de la Charte. Dans le monde entier, les peuples recherchent la liberté et l'autodétermination, non seulement parce qu'elles favorisent le développement de la dignité et l'affirmation de la personnalité humaines, mais aussi parce qu'elles sont un élément de paix et une condition nécessaire pour un progrès concret et pour la coopération internationale. En effet, plus l'autodétermination est répandue, plus vastes sont les bases de la paix sur lesquelles repose le monde. Les relations entre les peuples assujettis et les peuples qui les dominent doivent céder la place à des relations entre peuples libres, fondées sur l'égalité et la confiance. De cette façon, la coopération et la paix pourront remplacer l'antagonisme et la guerre.

88. Plus vite le comprendront les principaux intéressés, plus ils en bénéficieront, et mieux la paix du monde sera assurée. Si les hommes au pouvoir font preuve d'imagination, il ne peuvent choisir d'autre politique que celle-là. Qu'ils suivent l'évolution présente, et s'adaptent à l'esprit du siècle! Même du point de vue opportuniste, il serait de l'intérêt des puissances coloniales de choisir le bon droit maintenant, pendant qu'il en est temps encore, et avant que la suite rapide des événements les oblige à accepter l'inévitable. Sinon, elles perdraient presque tout le mérite de cette coopération.

89. Il y a 42 ans, Woodrow Wilson donnait au monde un avertissement prophétique. Dans son message au Congrès des Etats-Unis en date du 11 février 1918, il disait: "L'autodétermination n'est pas un vain mot. C'est un principe d'action impératif que désormais les hommes d'Etat ne méconnaîtront qu'à leurs dépens." La sagesse de cette déclaration devient chaque jour plus évidente.

90. J'ai été heureux de constater, en écoutant la déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni, M. Ormsby-Gore, à propos des petites colonies britanniques, que le gouvernement de son pays était prêt, comme il l'a dit, "conformément aux termes de l'Article 73, b, de la Charte, à rechercher avec les peuples intéressés la forme d'indépendance qui répond le mieux à leurs aspirations" [925ème séance, par. 41].

91. Ainsi, même dans le cas de toutes les petites colonies, le Royaume-Uni leur promet l'indépendance. Nous espérons sincèrement que cette promesse s'appliquera également au courageux peuple de Malte, dont les progrès vers l'autonomie semblent avoir subi un recul marqué dans la nouvelle constitution qui lui est offerte, et qui est sensiblement moins libérale que l'ancienne. C'est cette raison qui nous fait mentionner cette colonie en particulier.

92. Le paragraphe 6 de la déclaration du projet de résolution est également très important. Il est rédigé comme suit:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

93. Cela est essentiel pour contrebalancer les conséquences de la politique qui consiste à "diviser pour régner", qui est souvent le triste héritage du colonialisme et qui en prolonge les funestes effets jusque dans l'avenir.

94. L'abolition du colonialisme marquera une date historique dans le progrès moral de l'humanité. Il ne fait aucun doute qu'elle aura des répercussions immenses sur toutes les formes de domination et d'oppression.

95. Nous ne pouvons cependant espérer que le colonialisme va disparaître du jour au lendemain. Il se maintiendra nécessairement pendant un certain temps, mais pour disparaître petit à petit tout comme une affaire — pour risquer une comparaison fort approximative — continue d'exister pendant qu'elle est en liquidation. La résolution que nous examinons constituera, en un certain sens, l'ordonnance de mise sous séquestre émise par un jugement collectif des nations sur le colonialisme. L'Organisation des Nations Unies pourrait fort bien être le syndic de cette liquidation.

96. La Charte des Nations Unies, dans ses chapitres XI, XII et XIII, tout en reconnaissant l'existence du colonialisme, contient des dispositions relatives au progrès des peuples et des territoires coloniaux vers l'indépendance. Cependant, les progrès de ces 15 dernières années n'ont pas suivi le rythme toujours plus rapide de l'évolution internationale, qui semble avoir pris de vitesse les principaux intéressés. L'une des manifestations de cette évolution rapide est l'écroulement presque subit du colonialisme dont nous avons la preuve dans le présent débat. L'instinct de l'homme avide de liberté, devenu un mobile et une nécessité impérieuse, représente une force irrésistible. C'est cette force qui inspire nos débats et la résolution qui en résultera.

97. L'inscription à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale d'une question telle que celle-ci aurait paru vaine et chimérique il y a seulement quelques années. Telle était l'emprise de la vieille notion de colonialisme. Il n'était pas rare, alors, que les questions d'indépendance et d'autodétermination portées devant l'Organisation des Nations Unies soient rejetées, ou enterrées au moyen de résolutions dénuées de force, au lieu de conduire à l'adoption de résolutions constructives. Le prestige de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et la cause de la paix en ont souffert. En effet on ne sert pas la paix en faisant le silence sur des situations anormales qui découlent de la violation des principes même sur lesquels repose l'Organisation des Nations Unies. On ne fait ainsi que rendre la situation plus anormale encore, et nous constatons aujourd'hui les effets de cette politique.

98. Le respect des principes ne cesse de grandir au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. L'admission de nombreux Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique, qui longtemps ont lutté seuls pour la justice et la liberté de leur cause, apporte à l'Organisation des Nations Unies un dévouement grandissant aux principes de la Charte et particulièrement évident lorsqu'il s'agit de questions qui mettent en jeu la liberté et la dignité humaine.

99. Chacun sait que le colonialisme tel que nous le connaissons est un produit de la civilisation occidentale. Mais, en toute loyauté, il faut dire aussi que c'est cette civilisation qui a prononcé la condamnation morale la plus ferme du colonialisme et de l'exploitation, et qui a la première énoncé le principe de l'autodétermination. Tous les mouvements de libération se sont inspirés, d'une façon ou d'une autre, de la civilisation occidentale et se sont épanouis grâce à ses leçons. Certains adversaires déterminés du colonialisme, britannique ou autre, se rencontrent aujourd'hui dans le Royaume-Uni, et nous éprouvons de la reconnaissance à l'égard de ces esprits libéraux d'Angleterre et aussi d'autres nations, car ils ont été à nos côtés pendant les heures difficiles de notre lutte pour la liberté.

100. De même, on a voulu garantir une complète indépendance aux nouveaux Etats. Je citerai M. Walter Lippman: "Le colonialisme ne prend pas toujours fin avec l'octroi de l'indépendance politique." Bien qu'un territoire soit indépendant, il peut encore souffrir des séquelles du colonialisme, qui entravent sa complète indépendance.

101. Du point de vue économique, je voudrais rappeler ce qu'a dit le représentant de l'Iran: nous devons aider les nouveaux pays à reconstruire et à développer leur économie, et garantir leur liberté, afin "... que ces peuples ne soient jamais entraînés, par des considérations de défense, à allouer des fonds indispensables à leur développement national aux dépenses de caractère militaire" [926ème séance, par. 69].

102. Des problèmes économiques difficiles se posent aux nouveaux pays. Il faut y faire face. L'Organisation des Nations Unies a une obligation très nette à cet égard. Elle doit être prête à fournir à ces pays toute l'assistance nécessaire en matière économique et autre. Répondre à leurs besoins est pour l'ONU une nécessité et un devoir.

103. Nous appuyons donc la proposition des Etats-Unis en faveur d'un programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance et le développement des pays d'Afrique et nous espérons que ce programme sera étendu à Chypre.

104. Nous voudrions également que l'Organisation des Nations Unies participe plus activement à l'octroi d'assistance aux pays qui viennent d'accéder à l'indépendance, et à ceux qui sont sur le point d'y accéder. Un comité des Nations Unies devrait être créé pour fournir une aide en cas de divergence, en offrant ses bons offices, en agissant comme médiateur et en s'efforçant de rapprocher les intéressés, aidant ainsi les peuples non autonomes à accéder rapidement et sans heurts à l'indépendance.

105. Bien que le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie porte, avant tout, sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, rien ne restreint en fait sa portée. Celle-ci est très générale pour ce qui est de la liberté et de l'autodétermination. Il s'adresse à tous les peuples, où qu'ils soient, quelles que soient les circonstances de la domination qui s'exerce sur eux et quels que soient les moyens par lesquels on les prive de leur droit inaliénable à l'autodétermination et à la liberté.

106. Cette résolution constitue, en quelque sorte, la suite et la contrepartie de la Déclaration adoptée à la Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, tenue à Bandoung en 1955, dont l'importance ne pourra jamais être surestimée. Elle a fourni une expression dynamique de l'éveil du monde d'Afrique et d'Asie, unanime dans sa déclaration sur les principes moraux et politiques fondamentaux. Cette déclaration est également générale lorsqu'elle condamne l'impérialisme et le colonialisme dans toutes leurs manifestations et réaffirme le droit à l'autodétermination. Depuis cette conférence, toute une série d'événements ont eu lieu qui ne sauraient être dissociés de l'esprit de Bandoung. Ces événements ont créé un climat international plus sain, qui a conduit à la Conférence "au sommet" de Genève^{3/}. Mais des événements contraires survenus dans les relations internationales ont interrompu ce mouvement positif vers plus de compréhension et une plus étroite coopération. Nous voulons croire et espérer que, grâce à la résolution que nous allons maintenant adopter, le fil conducteur sera repris, et que nous pourrons faire un nouveau pas dans la bonne direction vers la liberté et la paix fondée sur la liberté.

107. Pour conclure, ma délégation voudrait déclarer que le projet de résolution, en se réclamant dans toutes ses parties de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, se présente sur des bases solides, et de plus insufflé une vie nouvelle à l'esprit de la Charte. Il redonne à ses dispositions sur l'autodétermination un peu de la force et de l'objet qu'elles avaient peut-être perdus pendant des années parce qu'on n'avait pas efficacement traité les questions concernant la liberté.

108. En outre, ce projet de résolution donne à la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme un accent nouveau de réalisme, et la rend plus valable. Ceci est important, car, juridiquement parlant, cette déclaration n'a pas force obligatoire, et l'on ne saurait espérer avant longtemps pouvoir élaborer et adopter les projets de pactes internationaux relatifs aux droits de l'homme, du moins à la cadence où vont les choses.

109. Cette résolution, apportera si elle est adoptée, une contribution juridique et politique des plus importantes à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Elle pourrait devenir un document historique ne le cédant en importance qu'à la Charte et à la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. Nous espérons que l'Assemblée pourra l'adopter à l'unanimité, comme elle le mérite.

110. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Monsieur le Président, Messieurs les délégués, la délégation soviétique a déjà eu l'occasion d'exposer en détail sa position sur tous les aspects du problème de l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme; ce faisant, elle a expliqué et motivé ses propositions. L'Union soviétique intervient en faveur d'une solution radicale et immédiate du problème du colonialisme dans son ensemble, à savoir: elle invite tous les États réellement intéressés à la libération la plus rapide des peuples coloniaux à adopter, à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, une déclaration sur l'octroi immédiat de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Un projet dans ce sens a été déposé par le Gouvernement soviétique dans le document A/4502.

111. Dans ses interventions précédentes, la délégation de l'URSS a fait valoir le fait que l'écrasante majorité des délégations africaines et asiatiques ont fait connaître leur sincère désir d'en terminer sans délai avec le système colonial et de prendre, au cours de la présente session de l'Assemblée générale, des mesures qui contribueraient à la réalisation de cette noble tâche. Nous désirons maintenant faire connaître notre position à l'égard du projet de résolution-déclaration présenté par 43 États d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6]. La délégation soviétique apprécie favorablement dans l'ensemble ce projet de résolution, tout en l'estimant insuffisant et incomplet. Ce projet de résolution-déclaration comporte nombre de dispositions de principe qui ont déjà été formulées dans le projet soviétique de déclaration déposé, on le sait, tout au début de la quinzième session. Il est possible d'affirmer qu'entre le projet soviétique de déclaration et le projet de résolution qui fut déposé par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, il existe un terrain commun et une unité de vues sur toute une série de questions fondamentales. C'est là un fait réjouissant, qui témoigne d'une communauté de buts et de direction essentielle dans la lutte pour l'abolition du colonialisme, lutte menée depuis longtemps par l'Union soviétique, par tous les pays socialistes, ainsi que par les pays et les peuples d'Afrique et d'Asie.

112. On ne saurait toutefois, passer sous silence les insuffisances dont souffre, à notre avis, le projet de résolution déposé par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie.

113. Tout d'abord, on pourrait souligner le manque de précision dans le libellé de certains points, ce qui en permet une interprétation différente, même entre auteurs de ce projet de résolution. Il suffira d'indiquer que le représentant des Philippines a affirmé que le paragraphe 5 du projet de déclaration ne prévoit pas, à son avis, le transfert immédiat de tous les pouvoirs aux peuples des colonies, mais qu'il propose seulement de prendre immédiatement toutes initiatives utiles pouvant mener, en fin de compte, à ce transfert des pouvoirs. Une interprétation à peu près semblable du même paragraphe a été donnée également par le délégué de la Malaisie, qui a déclaré que "la déclaration ne prévoit pas le transfert immédiat de tous les pouvoirs" [935ème séance, par. 130]. Nous sommes enclins à considérer qu'une telle interprétation ne répond pas aux aspirations de la très grande majorité des auteurs du projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Nous ne doutons point de la sincérité des aspirations et des motifs de la très grande majorité des délégations d'Afrique et d'Asie et nous estimons que ces délégations ne sont pas d'accord sur cette interprétation et qu'elles estiment indispensable de libérer sans délai les peuples des colonies. C'est précisément ainsi que la délégation de l'Union soviétique interprète, elle aussi, le paragraphe 5 du projet de résolution.

114. Certaines autres dispositions, étant donné leur libellé, peuvent également donner lieu à des interprétations contraires au sens fondamental du projet de résolution, tel que le comprend la plus grande partie des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, ainsi que l'ont montré leurs interventions en séance plénière. Laissant de côté l'opportunité d'améliorer la rédaction de certaines dispositions, ce qui pourrait, contrairement aux intentions de la délégation soviétique, compliquer l'examen du projet de résolution, la délégation de l'Union soviétique voudrait attirer l'attention sur deux éléments essentiels qui, à son avis, n'ont nullement été pris en considération par les auteurs du projet de résolution.

^{3/} Conférence des chefs de gouvernement des quatre puissances, tenue à Genève du 18 au 23 juillet 1955.

115. D'abord, le projet de résolution fait état de la nécessité d'une liquidation rapide du colonialisme. Il déclare que des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires. Cependant, aucune date limite précise n'est fixée pour l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays coloniaux. D'autre part, le projet de résolution ne contient aucune invitation précise à l'adresse des puissances qui sont responsables de la libération des colonies et des territoires sous tutelle. Il n'indique absolument pas ce que devront accomplir ces puissances ni dans quels délais.

116. Ensuite, une autre disposition importante fait défaut, à savoir que l'Assemblée générale, à sa plus prochaine session, devra examiner la question de la mise en application de cette déclaration, ce qui est absolument indispensable pour assurer l'exécution des revendications essentielles qu'elle contient.

117. Cela étant, la délégation soviétique a estimé indispensable de soumettre à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale des amendements au projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Ces amendements, sans modifier en rien le texte existant du projet de résolution, y introduisent des dispositions additionnelles qui confèrent un caractère efficace aux principes généraux qui sont exposés dans la déclaration et qui contribueront à la mise en application rapide de ces principes.

118. L'essentiel de ces amendements de caractère additionnel réside en ceci.

119. Premièrement, nous estimons indispensable de fixer une date limite à laquelle tous les pays et peuples coloniaux devront être libérés. La demande d'une libération immédiate des colonies a été soutenue par un grand nombre d'Etats. Chacun sait qu'aux conférences des Etats africains et asiatiques, des décisions relatives à la libération la plus rapide possible des peuples des colonies ont été adoptées à maintes reprises. C'est ainsi que, dès 1955, les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie représentés à la Conférence de Bandoung ont adopté une déclaration selon laquelle, je cite, "le colonialisme, dans toutes ses manifestations, est un mal auquel il doit être mis fin rapidement".

120. Cette revendication de la Conférence de Bandoung est reflétée dans le projet de résolution qui est soumis aujourd'hui à notre examen. Cependant, il y a lieu de tenir compte du fait que cette demande, adoptée en 1955, c'est-à-dire il y a cinq ans, a besoin aujourd'hui d'être développée. Si l'on tient compte du rythme très rapide de l'évolution du mouvement de libération nationale, il ne suffit plus de répéter des revendications énoncées il y a déjà cinq ans.

121. C'est précisément pour cette raison qu'en juin 1960, la deuxième Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, qui s'est tenue à Addis-Abéba, a adopté une résolution adressant aux puissances coloniales une invitation pressante à fixer, conformément aux aspirations des peuples, des dates pour la réalisation immédiate de l'indépendance pour tous les pays dépendants et à en informer tous les peuples intéressés. La délégation soviétique appuie pleinement cette demande, exprimée par les représentants des pays indépendants d'Afrique.

122. Ainsi, au cours des cinq dernières années, la revendication tendant à liquider le plus rapidement possible le système colonial s'est transformée tout naturellement en une revendication tendant à la liquidation immédiate du système colonial, à une libération immédiate de tous les peuples qui vivent encore sous le joug colonial. Conformément à la résolution adoptée à Addis-Abéba, le représentant du Togo, lorsqu'il a pris part ici à la discussion générale de cette question, a parlé de la nécessité de liquider le colonialisme comme d'un problème qui ne peut être remis à plus tard. Dans son intervention, il a souligné (je cite):

"Il ne s'agit pas ici de condamner purement et simplement le colonialisme, d'adopter le principe de l'octroi de l'indépendance. Il est de la plus haute importance de fixer dès maintenant un calendrier de dates auxquelles l'indépendance sera donnée aux territoires colonisés. Sans cela, les pays encore dans les fers auront à lutter encore très longtemps contre la puissance coloniale." [936ème séance, par. 65.]

123. Nous appuyons cette proposition de la délégation du Togo sur la fixation de délais pour l'octroi de l'indépendance et nous proposons de fixer comme date limite la fin de 1961. A cet effet, nous proposons de faire figurer dans le projet de résolution des Etats d'Afrique et d'Asie une disposition tendant à ce que tous les pays et tous les peuples coloniaux accèdent à l'indépendance à la fin de 1961 au plus tard. A notre sens, il est impossible de tolérer plus longtemps ce reste honteux du système colonialiste périmé.

124. En même temps, pour la mise en application des mesures pratiques indispensables pour le transfert des pouvoirs aux peuples des colonies, la délégation de l'Union soviétique propose que l'Assemblée générale adresse un appel aux puissances coloniales, les invitant à entamer des négociations avec les représentants de la population autochtone des pays coloniaux. Afin que ces représentants traduisent véritablement les aspirations et la volonté des peuples coloniaux, la délégation de l'Union soviétique estime qu'il est indispensable de procéder, dans toutes les colonies, à des élections au suffrage universel. Afin d'assurer la libre manifestation de la volonté des peuples coloniaux et pour empêcher un truquage et un camouflage éventuels du résultat des élections, nous estimons qu'il serait souhaitable que l'ONU surveille les élections si elle le juge nécessaire.

125. A ce propos, il convient de rappeler qu'au cours de la récente discussion au sein de la Quatrième Commission, la majorité a adopté une proposition du Togo et de la Tunisie tendant à ce que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, lorsqu'elle l'estimera indispensable, assume la surveillance de l'emploi des procédés démocratiques dans l'expression de la volonté des peuples coloniaux [voir A/4651, par. 5 à 8]. On sait quelle est l'importance que de nombreux pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, comme bien d'autres pays, attachent, par exemple, à un référendum en Algérie sous la surveillance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, afin d'assurer la liberté d'expression de la volonté populaire.

126. Deuxièmement, nous considérons que la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux se distingue d'une déclaration habituelle, telle, la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme. En effet, la déclaration concernant l'indépendance des colonies ne constitue pas un programme prévue pour une très longue période, mais bien un programme de mesures immédiates pour la mise en œuvre des principes élevés qu'elle proclame. C'est pourquoi, en ce qui concerne la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux colonies, le facteur temps joue un rôle prépondérant. L'Organisation des Nations Unies ne saurait se borner simplement à proclamer tels et tels principes, sans prendre les mesures nécessaires pour les appliquer et mettre en œuvre la déclaration adoptée. Aussi considérons-nous comme indispensable de prévoir, dans le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, une disposition tendant à ce que l'Assemblée générale, lors de sa seizième session de 1961, examine la question de la mise en œuvre de ladite déclaration.

127. Compte tenu des considérations qui précèdent, la délégation soviétique a déjà fait connaître et soumis officiellement à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale les modifications ci-après au projet de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] présenté par 43 pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Je prie d'ajouter après le paragraphe 7 de cette résolution les paragraphes suivants:

"8. Invite les puissances intéressées à assurer, dans tous les territoires dépendants, la transmission du pouvoir absolu et souverain au peuple, conformément aux principes énoncés ci-dessus et à entamer à cette fin des négociations avec les représentants des peuples coloniaux, élus au suffrage universel, au besoin sous la surveillance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de manière que tous les pays et peuples coloniaux accèdent à l'indépendance à la fin de 1961 au plus tard et occupent leur place légitime dans la communauté des nations,

"9. Décide d'examiner, à sa seizième session ordinaire, la question de l'application de la présente résolution 4/."

128. En ce qui concerne les amendements au projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, proposés par le Guatemala [A/L.325], la délégation soviétique ne peut les appuyer pour autant qu'il y est prévu une limitation du droit essentiel de tous les peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes, ce qui est, par conséquent, en contradiction avec le paragraphe 2 de la déclaration contenue dans le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie qui stipule, à juste titre, que "tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination". Si certains Etats ont des revendications territoriales ou des réserves à formuler au sujet d'un territoire déterminé, chaque cas d'espèce devra, selon nous, être réglé à part, d'une façon concrète. Il ne faut pas que les revendications et les réserves individuelles puissent être érigées en principes généraux qui limiteraient le droit inaliénable de chaque peuple à disposer de lui-même.

129. Pour ces raisons, la délégation de l'Union soviétique votera contre les amendements soumis par la délégation du Guatemala.

M. Sosa Rodríguez (Venezuela), vice-président, prend la présidence.

130. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant de la France, dans l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

131. M. BERARD (France): Je n'avais pas l'intention d'intervenir dans ce débat. Mais la France ayant été mise en cause par divers orateurs, je me permet d'user de mon droit de réponse envers les uns et envers les autres.

132. Aux uns d'abord je dirai que la délégation française s'est félicitée de l'inscription d'une telle question à notre ordre du jour. Je leur rappellerai qu'il n'est pas d'exemple, en effet, dans les annales de notre organisation, de ce qui s'est produit au cours même de cette session, à savoir l'admission aux Nations Unies de 17 Etats, anciennement territoires coloniaux. Or, 13 de ces 17 Etats étaient naguère sous administration française. En matière de décolonisation et pour ce qui concerne la France, les faits parlent donc d'eux-mêmes. Ces Etats ont été admis à l'unanimité; c'est-à-dire que les plus sourcilleux de nos censeurs ont, en l'occurrence, joint leur voix à celle de la France; et il n'a pas tenu à nous qu'un quatorzième Etat africain ne devînt, cette semaine, le centième Membre de notre organisation.

133. Cette évolution n'a pas été improvisée. Nous ne la regrettons pas. Nous n'avons cessé, au contraire, de l'encourager. Plusieurs orateurs ont bien voulu le reconnaître et reconnaître les mérites de cette action. Je les remercie de ce témoignage qui révèle chez eux autant d'honnêteté que de caractère.

134. Je définirai la position française, en cette matière, en rappelant les paroles prononcées par le général de Gaulle, le 5 septembre 1960:

"[Sur] l'ensemble du mouvement de décolonisation qui existe d'un bout à l'autre du monde, je n'ai jamais cessé depuis le jour même où la guerre mondiale m'a amené à parler, à agir au nom de la France, je n'ai jamais cessé de suivre la même direction, considérant que l'émancipation des peuples — car c'est de cela qu'il s'agit — est conforme tout à la fois au génie de notre pays ... et au mouvement irrésistible qui s'est déclenché dans le monde à l'occasion de la guerre mondiale et de ce qui s'en est suivi.

"J'ai engagé dans cette voie-là, dans la voie de l'émancipation des peuples, la politique de la France. Naguère et depuis deux ans elle est orientée dans le même sens."

135. Nous nous sommes également réjouis que, dans ce débat, on ait beaucoup invoqué la liberté. Rien de ce qui touche la liberté ne nous est indifférent. Qu'on nous comprenne bien: la liberté dont je parle, ce n'est pas celle, pour une minorité, d'imposer sa loi ni, pour une majorité, de réduire au silence toute voix discordante. C'est la liberté du groupe et aussi celle de l'individu. C'est la libération de la faim, de la peur et de l'ignorance. C'est la liberté de s'exprimer, d'agir, de construire sans contrainte, sans angoisse et sans autre entrave que le respect de la liberté d'autrui. Tout cela, nous le voulons pour nous-mêmes, nous le voulons pour les autres; et je tiens, à ce sujet, à rendre hommage aux orateurs qui ont apporté, dans ce débat, des idées constructives.

136. D'autres ont prétendu critiquer mon pays et ont pris une attitude différente. On ne peut qu'être surpris et choqué qu'une puissance ici représentée ait essayé de jouer les premiers rôles alors qu'on a, jusqu'ici, attendu en vain de sa part la moindre ébauche d'un processus de décolonisation. Tant d'audace aurait pu impressionner les moins avertis d'entre nous. Après le veto qui est intervenu de 4 décembre au Conseil de sécurité, le masque est jeté; et nous serons plus nombreux, j'en suis sûr, à faire désormais la différence entre les bonnes paroles, les vertueuses indignations, les conseils, les admonestations de toutes sortes et les actes. Ainsi s'écroule assez lamentablement un décor factice.

137. Quand on nous parle d'indépendance, nous avons également à l'esprit autre chose que le comportement de ceux qui, pour notre déception et notre lassitude, ne font que répéter depuis tant d'années ce que leur a dicté le cerveau qui les dirige. Le jour où se manifestera dans leurs discours le moindre signe d'originalité, le souffle — si faible soit-il — d'une authentique liberté, ce jour-là sera un grand jour pour l'histoire de notre organisation.

138. Je veux maintenant répondre aux orateurs qui, évoquant le problème colonial en Amérique latine, ont fait allusion aux départements français des Antilles. Il s'agit d'une regrettable confusion qui procède d'une méconnaissance manifeste des données juridiques aussi bien que de la réalité politique. Mon pays n'administre plus de colonies en Amérique latine. Les départements qui s'y trouvent sont des départements français et leur seule particularité est d'être séparés du reste de la République par la mer, au même titre que la Corse. Ces terres sont françaises depuis plus de trois siècles et comptent parmi les plus anciennes provinces françaises. Est-il vraiment nécessaire de rappeler la présence des Antilles à l'Assemblée constituante de 1789? Peut-on ignorer que depuis la deuxième République et l'introduction du suffrage universel, c'est-à-dire depuis 1848, ces pays ont envoyé députés et sénateurs au Parlement? Les départements de la Guadeloupe, de la Martinique, de la Guyane sont des parties constructives de la République française au même titre que n'importe quel autre département. Les citoyens qui s'y trouvent ont un statut et des droits de citoyenneté égaux, sans distinction ni discrimination. Ils ont des possibilités égales de représentation et participent à tous les degrés à la vie politique et administrative de la nation. Les fils les plus éminents des Antilles ont donné et continuent de donner à la République française des penseurs, des hommes d'action, des hommes d'Etat qui sont la fierté commune de tous mes compatriotes.

139. Enfin, je voudrais m'adresser aux auteurs du projet de résolution contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6 puisque certains d'entre eux, aussi, ont cru devoir mettre en cause mon pays dans leurs commentaires.

140. On a prononcé beaucoup de paroles au cours de ce débat. Il y en avait de bonnes et de moins bonnes et ceci se reflète dans le projet de résolution qui nous est soumis. Je ne méconnais pas la bonne foi d'un grand nombre des auteurs de ce projet de résolution et je salue ici les efforts qui ont été faits pour conférer à ce document une certaine noblesse, pour en faire autre chose qu'un instrument de la guerre froide.

141. Nous applaudissons en particulier à plusieurs dispositions du préambule. Nous pensons, nous aussi, que tous les peuples ont droit de libre détermination, que l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale des Etats doivent être respectées. Mais, en certains de ces passages, ce document ne fait que reprendre des engagements qui figurent dans la Charte. Ces obligations, nous les reconnaissons et nous les respectons.

Nous nous demandons toutefois si ces répétitions ajoutent quoi que ce soit à ce qui fait le code de la morale internationale.

142. Mais surtout le projet qui nous est présenté n'est malheureusement pas dépouillé de considérations étrangères aux objectifs recherchés. Il reflète — inconsciemment peut-être — ces antagonismes auxquels je faisais allusion plus haut. A cet égard, la déclaration qui nous est soumise ne contribuera pas à favoriser l'esprit de compréhension internationale qui doit nous animer tous. Elle comporte aussi des contradictions. Par exemple, le paragraphe 7 du projet de déclaration rappelle avec quelque solennité le principe de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats, mais, en toute honnêteté, peut-on prétendre que le projet ne contient pas toute une série d'injonctions qui sont autant d'ingérences dans les affaires intérieures des Etats?

143. Je n'ignore pas que l'élaboration d'un texte de ce genre n'est pas sans présenter de graves difficultés à ses auteurs et je suis le premier à rendre hommage à la conscience de ceux qui en ont assumé la responsabilité. Ma délégation, néanmoins, n'estime pas, pour les raisons que j'ai indiquées, être en mesure d'apporter son appui au projet de résolution tel qu'il a été déposé devant l'Assemblée.

144. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Espagne, qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

145. M. DE LEQUERICA (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Ce débat sur le colonialisme est plein d'intérêt et, selon moi, profondément utile aux intérêts généraux de l'humanité, mais il présente, sans aucun doute, des surprises extraordinaires pour ceux qui l'écoutent avec attention et émotion. Par exemple — et je remercie le Président qui m'a accordé le droit d'intervenir pour exercer mon droit de réponse — j'écoutais cet après-midi le représentant du Maroc, dont j'ai eu l'occasion d'apprécier, en d'autres occasions, la vive intelligence et dont les doctrines m'intéressent toujours, d'autant plus qu'il représente un pays ami, quand, tout à coup, dans une liste de pays prétendument coloniaux, dont quelques-uns sont espagnols, liste que je ne discuterai pas pour le moment, bien que j'ai de fortes raisons pour le faire, je trouve le nom non pas de deux provinces espagnoles, comme je l'ai dit ce matin à une autre occasion [944ème séance], mais de deux villes espagnoles qui appartiennent à deux provinces différentes.

146. Je constate que l'on a cité Ceuta, ville qui compte 67.000 habitants de religion chrétienne et 13.000 habitants de religion musulmane, tous Espagnols, appartenant à la province de Cadix; on a cité aussi Melilla, ville de la province de Malaga, dont les 85.000 habitants, tous Espagnols de religion chrétienne, cohabitent avec 7.000 habitants de religion musulmane.

147. Je me rappelle, aux derniers temps de l'ancien Parlement espagnol de type électoral, avoir été assis à côté du député d'Algésiras, qui était aussi le député de Melilla; et maintenant, tout à coup, par une inversion incroyable des valeurs, je m'aperçois qu'il ne s'agit plus de deux provinces, mais de deux villes appartenant à deux provinces espagnoles différentes, habitées exclusivement depuis cinq ou six siècles par des Espagnols de religions différentes, mais dont la majorité écrasante est chrétienne, ce qui ne change pas leur caractère, que l'on considère, dans je ne sais quelle intention confuse, comme des terrains à explorer, à transformer et à soumettre à d'autres souverainetés.

148. Pour cette raison, invoquant, comme j'ai déjà dû le faire ce matin pour un autre motif, la théorie déjà établie ici avec une grande précision, en vérité, par la délégation soviétique selon laquelle on ne peut admettre, sans la protestation qui s'impose, que l'on porte atteinte à l'unité ou à la souveraineté des pays faisant partie de l'ONU qui sont protégés par la Charte, je me permet de protester respectueusement mais énergiquement contre cette apparition singulière de Ceuta et de Melilla dans l'intervention du représentant du Maroc.

149. Permettez-moi d'ajouter, bien que cela soit peu de chose — mais ce peu de chose est essentiel, et de toute façon j'avais ces quelques précisions sous la main — que Ceuta, sous le nom d'Abila, était déjà connue lorsque furent découvertes les fameuses colonnes d'Hercule; que les Grecs l'appelèrent Heptadelphe, en raison de ses sept collines; que les Romains l'appelèrent Septem Fratres — les sept frères — d'où sont dérivés les noms de Septa, puis de Ceuta; que la ville fit partie des possessions de Carthage et que, lorsque cette république fut rasée par Rome, Ceuta devint la capitale de la Mauritanie Tingitane, province romaine, et qu'au temps de l'empereur Othon elle releva de la Convention juridique de Cadix.

150. Dans ses environs débarquèrent les 80.000 Vandales qui, sous le commandement de Genséric, envahirent l'Afrique du Nord. Plus tard, de 531 à 548, elle fut conquise par le roi d'Espagne visigoth Théodisèle. Elle fut aussi conquise par l'empereur de Byzance Justinien, mais il ne semble pas qu'elle demeura très longtemps en son pouvoir. Elle était au pouvoir des Visigoths, c'est-à-dire du royaume d'Espagne, quand elle fut occupée par Muza avant qu'il envahisse l'Espagne, en l'an 710.

151. Après d'innombrables incidents historiques, les cinq frères d'Edouard Ier, roi de Portugal, débarquent à Ceuta en 1437 et cherchent à s'emparer de Tanger. Philippe II d'Espagne, héritier des possessions du royaume portugais, reçut entre autres Ceuta, ces possessions étant incorporées à l'Espagne à partir du XVIème siècle. En 1640, lorsque le Portugal se sépara de l'Espagne, les nobles de Ceuta se proclamèrent pour le roi d'Espagne Philippe IV. Aux termes du traité qui fut signé le 13 février 1663, les places et possessions situées en Afrique furent remises au Portugal, à l'exception de Ceuta, que l'Espagne se réserva. Cette possession fut confirmée dans l'article 2 du traité de 1678. Depuis lors, Ceuta a toujours appartenu à l'Espagne.

152. En outre, je lis dans un texte qui n'est pas espagnol, dans l'Enciclopedia Italiana (vol. IX, p. 903), que Ceuta, étant en relations continues avec l'Europe, est devenue une ville espagnole où la population musulmane est peu nombreuse, et présente de nombreux caractères communs avec les ports de la péninsule Ibérique qui lui font face.

153. Mais autrefois les sultans, maintenant les rois du Maroc, ont-ils réclamé Ceuta à un moment quelconque? Non; au contraire, aux termes de nombreux traités antérieurs au protectorat, alors que, selon les déclarations mêmes de la délégation marocaine, les sultans étaient libres, il a été question des territoires entourant Ceuta, mais il n'a jamais été question de Ceuta même.

154. Je ne voudrais pas vous accabler de dates, mais, dans l'article III du Traité de paix et amitié entre l'Espagne et le Maroc, signé à Tétouan le 26 avril 1860, il est indiqué qu'afin de mettre en vigueur ce qui est stipulé dans un article antérieur, S. M. le roi du Maroc cède à S. M. la reine d'Espagne, en pleine souveraineté, le territoire allant de la mer, en suivant les hauteurs de la sierra Bullones, jusqu'au ravin d'Anghera. Je ne veux pas lire ce texte en détail, mais j'indiquerai qu'il n'est nullement question de Ceuta dans ces dispositions, puisque la ville était de tout temps espagnole.

155. Voyons maintenant le cas de Melilla. Melilla, selon les renseignements que j'ai sous les yeux, "appartenait à une ancienne colonie fondée par les Phéniciens et que Ptolémée appela Ryssadiron. Elle tomba au pouvoir des Visigoths, puis fut, au Vème siècle, siège épiscopal. Elle passa ensuite aux mains des Maures, qui l'appelèrent Mlila, nom très commun en Afrique du Nord. Ses habitants se livraient à l'exploitation des mines, ainsi qu'ils le font encore aujourd'hui. Entre-temps, en 1496, don Juan Clarós de Guzmán, duc de Medina Sidonia, finança une expédition dirigée par don Pedro de Estupión, qui s'empara de cette place appartenant alors au roi de Tlemcen. Jusqu'en 1556, les ducs de Medina Sidonia la possédèrent, avec le titre de capitaine général. Elle fut attaquée à diverses reprises, sous la domination espagnole. Puis une convention fut signée en 1856, qui en étendit les limites. Et, comme dans le cas de Ceuta, tous les traités conclus avec les sultans du Maroc reconnaissent que Melilla était espagnole; par exemple, la Convention entre l'Espagne et le Maroc signée à Tétouan le 24 août 1859 parle "de céder à Sa majesté Catholique la possession et pleine souveraineté du territoire rapproché de la place espagnole de Melilla jusqu'aux points les plus propres à la défense et tranquillité de ce préside".

156. Un autre article revient sur cette même idée, mais jamais il n'est question d'une autorité marocaine sur Melilla. Dans ces conditions, pourquoi introduire dans ce débat sérieux, et qui offre à chacun de graves préoccupations et de solides motifs de nous livrer à un examen de conscience, des assertions aussi arbitraires et éloignées de toute vérité historique? Faut-il croire que, recourant à cette sorte de fantaisie que les historiens français du XVIIème siècle ont appelée ad usum Delphini, formule destinée aux princes héritiers désireux de voir leurs Etats s'étendre au-delà des limites réelles, et qui par la suite perdit son caractère dynastique pour traduire le désir de tous les puissants, nous voulions ici transformer arbitrairement la géographie, alors que celle-ci veut que ces deux villes africaines fassent partie intégrante de l'Espagne? Ou encore, ainsi que l'a relevé avec éloquence le représentant de la France, s'agit-il de tracer ici des lignes géographiques faisant fi de l'histoire humaine, de la coexistence qui a existé pendant des siècles et de l'existence des valeurs spirituelles permanentes?

157. Je ne dissimulerai pas à l'Assemblée — au contraire je m'en fais gloire — que l'Espagne est une puissance eurafricaine, et qu'elle l'est depuis bien des siècles. Elle a eu des possessions, je dirais même des établissements en Afrique qui étaient antérieurs aux propres établissements dont peuvent se prévaloir les rois musulmans, ainsi que je l'ai démontré. Je ne crois pas utile de vous apprendre que le nord de l'Afrique n'a pas été, comme le prétend une histoire préfabriquée, une entité solide à toutes les époques. Ceci est ressorti bien clairement du débat sur la Mauritanie. Je reconnais que nous autres, Espagnols, avons été une colonie. Ce n'était pas une colonie du Maroc — bien que la chose se soit partiellement produite — mais de la Mauritanie, à proprement parler. Il s'agissait, si je me souviens des dates données pendant cette discussion, de l'époque allant de 1094 à 1149. Les Maures de la Mauritanie, les Almoravides, probablement une de ces tribus, occupèrent une grande partie de l'Espagne, construisirent le château d'Alfajérfa et dominèrent la presque totalité de l'Espagne musulmane. L'Espagne a été une colonie africano-asiatique et pourquoi ne pas le dire? C'est à cela que nous devons l'Alhambra de Grenade et Cordoue, témoignages extrêmement importants d'une culture qui est venue s'ajouter à la nôtre. Peut-être, ainsi que nos frères de l'Amérique latine l'ont parfois relevé, notre communication avec la philosophie la plus avancée de l'Europe à cette époque doit-elle aussi quelque chose à ces antécédents culturels et spirituels.

158. Seuls des esprits confus pour lesquels l'histoire doit être arbitrairement simplifiée peuvent prétendre tracer aujourd'hui tel ou tel périmètre qui marquerait les limites d'une autorité exclusive. Nous récusons leurs prétentions au nom de l'histoire et au nom des vertus spirituelles de nos peuples. Et nous regrettons qu'un pays respectueux du droit comme le Maroc, avec lequel nous maintenons des relations cordiales, laisse les discussions de frontières qui sont en cours pour se lancer dans cette voie en se souciant fort peu des exigences de la Charte des Nations Unies, et encore moins des impératifs de la justice et du droit, allant jusqu'à mettre en question deux vieilles villes espagnoles qui s'honorent grandement d'appartenir à notre pays. Quand viendra-t-on, alors, réclamer Guadalajara, qui a un nom musulman, ou s'établir sur les rives du Guadalquivir, qui est aussi un nom musulman, ou en d'autres lieux encore? Allons-nous convertir l'histoire du monde en une véritable histoire de fous? Allons-nous transformer les historiens et les politiciens pour en faire de ces généalogistes sans conscience qui, pour de l'argent, trouvaient à de riches clients une parenté flatteuse, par exemple avec Napoléon Bonaparte ou avec les empereurs de Constantinople? Bien des membres de cette assemblée, qui appartiennent à des civilisations différentes, n'ont sans doute jamais entendu parler d'une chose pareille, mais tel n'est pas notre cas, à nous qui représentons de vieux pays. En vérité, il faut une limite à ce genre de débat.

159. Ma délégation regrette encore plus vivement que la question actuelle ait été soulevée par un pays comme le Maroc, qui nous avait donné tant de preuves d'amitié. Nous avons un passé commun et nous avons traversé ensemble bien des épreuves. Pour notre part, celles-ci n'ont fait qu'augmenter notre admiration pour l'héroïsme que les Marocains ont manifesté sur les champs de bataille. Le Maroc n'oubliait pas à quel point l'Espagne a facilité son rétablissement en qualité de puissance libre. On l'a entendu dire plus d'une fois par certains de ses représentants. Mais je n'en veux pour preuve que ces paroles du prince héritier Moulay Hassan, lors de sa visite à Tétouan, le 17 juin 1956:

"Le Maroc — a dit le prince — avec tous ses hommes et toutes ses femmes, ses vieillards et ses enfants, n'oubliera jamais l'œuvre accomplie par l'Espagne et les services si importants que ce pays a rendus à S. M. le sultan du Maroc dans les moments difficiles où la justice était foulée aux pieds et où la persécution se déchaînait.

"En reconnaissant cette œuvre, je ne fais rien de plus que porter témoignage à la noblesse et à la fidélité du peuple espagnol, et jeter les bases de l'attachement sincère et des sentiments d'amitié profonde qui ont toujours uni le Maroc et l'Espagne, pour le plus grand bien des deux pays."

Et pour terminer, le prince concluait: "Vive l'Espagne! Vive le Maroc!"

160. Je pourrais citer d'autres textes dans le même sens et j'ai moi-même entendu de dignes représentants de ce pays ami s'exprimer dans ces mêmes termes à propos de l'Espagne. De là ma stupeur et la protestation que je formule devant cette attitude si étrangère à l'usage habituellement suivi dans nos débats. Est-ce là une manifestation de la maladie "probolchevique" qui a pu frapper temporairement nos amis et, sous tant d'aspects, nos frères du Maroc? Cela se peut, et je ne me sens pas assez de force pour la critiquer. La tentation est facile et beaucoup de pays honnêtes y cèdent, mais ils risquent de s'en repentir plus tard. Ceci reste un des traits particuliers de ce mal appelé colonialisme. Je n'avais pas l'intention d'intervenir dans le cadre de ce débat sur le colonialisme; si je l'ai fait, c'est précisément parce que nous avons des intérêts extrêmement limités en Afrique. Nous sommes, en ce qui concerne l'aspect colonial, un infime pays. Nous pourrions dire, parodiant un vers français célèbre: "Au banquet de l'Afrique, infortuné convive".

161. Nous n'avons eu qu'une très minime et très lointaine participation à la grande entreprise coloniale du XIX^{ème} siècle, si discutée et si discutable. Mais cela ne nous empêche pas d'envisager ce problème avec émotion et désintéressement; cela ne nous empêche pas d'écouter les interventions soviétiques — telles que celle que nous venons d'entendre — qui dénotent sans aucun doute une réelle et profonde angoisse en ce qui concerne la liberté et les souffrances des peuples — et qui sait si cela n'est pas un commencement de réflexion, pour ne pas dire de repentir! Devant un spectacle aussi inconcevable, nous ne nous désintéressons pas du problème fondamental que l'on appelle le colonialisme.

162. On ne peut nier qu'il y ait eu fréquemment des sévices, des persécutions, des injustices au cours de nos relations. Nos frères de l'Amérique centrale et de l'Amérique du Sud ont exposé ici avec les réserves et les commentaires profondément intelligents inspirés par l'histoire, et bien faits pour soulever notre émotion, le problème colonial, ses difficultés et, en même temps, les réalisations splendides de l'Espagne. En Afrique, nous n'avons pas de passé colonial, nous sommes intervenus très rarement. Mais cela n'altère pas notre conviction profonde, et c'est ce désintéressement qui nous amène non seulement à divulguer ce que nous avons fait, mais à réfléchir et à voter sur les problèmes africains avec un profond respect pour ces pays, avec le désir de voir à tout moment leurs aspirations légitimes réalisées de plein droit.

163. Je me suis permis de citer, pendant la discussion générale [886ème séance], les textes de grands juristes espagnols du XVIème siècle qui, à l'heure de la découverte de l'Amérique, reconnurent les droits des peuples primitifs de ce continent et se refusèrent à accorder des droits de tutelle et d'asservissement qui n'étaient pas fondés sur le droit. M. Belaúnde, lui aussi, a fait allusion à ces textes au cours des débats. C'est donc dans le même esprit que nous avons suivi cette discussion. C'est dans cet esprit que nous voterons avec les réserves nécessaires sur les phrases qui ne sont peut-être pas tout à fait conformes à l'esprit de la Charte des Nations Unies; mais cette décision n'a rien à voir avec une atteinte à la souveraineté de l'Espagne, semblable à celle que nous avons le sentiment profond de dénoncer en ce moment.

164. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne la parole au représentant du Danemark pour une explication de vote.

165. M. CHRISTIANSEN (Danemark) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le peuple du Danemark a accueilli avec ferveur le mouvement de libération du colonialisme et l'accession à l'indépendance de nouveaux pays, faits qui sont caractéristiques de notre époque. C'est un bienfait sans réserve pour l'humanité que, dans les années qui ont suivi la seconde guerre mondiale, la tendance à la libération des peuples non autonomes se soit fortement accélérée.

166. Je voudrais dès maintenant complimenter en particulier le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni qui, dans les années qui ont suivi immédiatement la guerre, a donné le signal de ce nouveau progrès en accordant l'indépendance à l'Inde et à d'autres pays faisant partie de l'Empire britannique.

167. Nous avons été témoins, ces dernières années, de progrès rapides et importants à cet égard, tout spécialement en Afrique. Tous les amis du progrès et de la liberté accueillent la libération de l'Afrique comme une autre victoire de l'idéal élevé selon lequel tous les peuples ont le droit de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes. Nous avons essayé au Danemark de nous conformer à cet idéal que nous chérissons profondément.

168. A cet égard, j'aimerais souligner la façon dont les relations entre l'Islande et le Danemark ont été réglées, en plein accord entre les deux pays, tout d'abord en 1918 puis en 1944. Je n'ai qu'à me référer aux déclarations très cordiales faites ici, au cours de ce débat, par le représentant de l'Islande. Il existe entre le peuple de l'Islande et le peuple du Danemark une amitié très étroite, et les liens entre nos deux pays ne cessent de se resserrer.

169. Je voudrais en outre mentionner la réorganisation de nos liens avec le Groenland, qui a eu lieu en 1953 avec l'approbation de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Le 22 novembre 1954, l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies a adopté une résolution reconnaissant que la population du Groenland avait exprimé librement sa volonté et avait été mise sur un pied d'égalité avec les autres parties du royaume de Danemark [résolution 849 (IX)]. Puis-je ajouter que cette réorganisation s'est révélée heureuse, satisfaisante à la fois pour la population du Groenland et pour la population du Danemark dans son ensemble? Cela ne veut pas dire que tous les problèmes aient été résolus. Mais des progrès ont été accomplis et continuent de s'accomplir. La dernière mesure importante dans ce domaine mérite d'être mentionnée: lorsque le Gouvernement danois a été remanié après les élections générales de novembre dernier, un membre du Parlement élu par la population du Groenland a été appelé à faire partie du Cabinet.

170. Cela étant, on comprendra facilement que le Danemark appuie de tout cœur l'adoption par l'Organisation des Nations Unies d'une déclaration soulignant la nécessité de mettre fin rapidement au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

171. Nous appuyons le projet de résolution présenté par un grand nombre de pays d'Asie et d'Afrique [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6]. A notre avis, ce texte traite de la question beaucoup mieux que le projet de résolution du Honduras [A/L.324/Rev.2] et que celui de l'Union soviétique [A/4502].

172. Le projet de résolution des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique a certes sa valeur; mais nous aurions toutefois préféré une rédaction différente pour certains passages. Je prends par exemple le passage suivant:

"Convaincue que le maintien du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération économique internationale, entrave le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples dépendants et va à l'encontre de l'idéal de paix universelle des Nations Unies".

173. On ne saurait dire que cela constitue une analyse vraiment exacte du colonialisme. Il y a eu assurément des cas où le colonialisme n'a pas empêché le développement dont il est question. Mais, malheureusement, il y a eu d'autres cas où ce développement a été entravé par le colonialisme. Nous constatons que ce passage du projet de résolution n'est pas tout à fait exact, car il généralise trop.

174. Il y a d'autres points sur lesquels je voudrais attirer votre attention, notamment le paragraphe 3 où nous lisons ce qui suit:

"3. Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance."

Cette rédaction n'est pas tout à fait claire, bien qu'il ne puisse y avoir de doute, semble-t-il, quant au sens réel de ce texte. Mais ne serait-il pas correct de l'interpréter comme suit: les puissances coloniales ne devront pas pouvoir empêcher l'accession à l'indépendance en insistant sur le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement, manque de préparation dont elles seraient probablement elles-mêmes responsables?

175. Ceci concerne sans doute un problème qu'on ne saurait négliger; ce serait manquer du sens des réalités que de maintenir que le passage immédiat à l'indépendance sera toujours plus avantageux pour la population qu'une transition graduelle, quel que soit le degré de développement atteint par la population. C'est un problème extrêmement important et auquel il est très difficile de trouver une solution juste et équitable.

176. Si nous regardons ce qui s'est passé en Afrique, au cours de ces dernières années, nous constaterons que nombreux sont ceux qui diront, en ce qui concerne un certain territoire, que l'accession à l'indépendance s'est produite à un moment où elle n'avait pas été préparée comme elle aurait dû l'être. Beaucoup d'autres cependant pourront soutenir que, dans certains cas, des délais apportés à l'établissement de l'indépendance ont provoqué des difficultés majeures. Il y a lieu aussi de tenir compte du fait que les dirigeants d'un territoire — voire d'un groupe ethnique — pourront penser que les pays non autonomes n'ont pas encore atteint une maturité suffisante. Cependant, il est indiqué de façon explicite dans le projet de déclaration que cet argument ne doit pas être utilisé comme un prétexte, ce qui, à notre avis, signifie qu'il peut y avoir des cas où le manque de préparation peut justifier la remise à plus tard de l'indépendance, jusqu'à ce que les conditions se soient améliorées.

177. Pour conclure, puis-je dire qu'il ne serait que juste de présumer que les peuples qui veulent accéder à la liberté ont hâte d'y parvenir et qu'il ne devrait pas être possible de les en empêcher sous des prétextes plus ou moins artificiels? Voici la façon dont je poserais le problème: mieux vaut obtenir la liberté et l'indépendance trop tôt que trop tard. Mais en insistant très énergiquement sur cette volonté nous ne devons pas négliger le problème qui se pose à nous. Il y a lieu de tenir compte d'un aspect particulier. Si tous ceux qui préconisent la libération des peuples autrefois non autonomes invoquent les idéaux et les principes démocratiques pour atteindre cet objectif, il serait regrettable que certains groupes, dans les pays nouvellement indépendants, en viennent à exploiter le manque de préparation des populations, afin d'introduire non pas un régime démocratique, mais une dictature qui, en fait, retarderait et empêcherait le progrès économique, politique et social nécessaire à ces pays.

178. Les commentaires que je viens de faire sur le paragraphe 3 s'appliquent également au paragraphe 5, ainsi libellé:

"5. Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes."

D'après les déclarations faites par les auteurs de la résolution, il semble donc admis que le sens des mots "des mesures immédiates seront prises" est que nous poursuivrons notre marche vers l'objectif envisagé sans nous laisser arrêter par des obstacles inutiles, ce qui est conforme aux vues que je viens d'exprimer.

179. Les critiques que nous avons élevées à l'encontre de certains passages du projet de résolution ne nous empêcheront cependant pas de voter en faveur du texte dont nous sommes saisis, surtout parce qu'il contient l'expression de principes fort importants. A ce sujet, je pense par exemple au passage suivant:

"Convaincue que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national".

Peut-être pourrait-on trouver un libellé plus satisfaisant. Nous l'interprétons cependant comme une promesse faite à toutes les nations.

180. Dans des résolutions antérieures on avait mentionné les continents par leur nom, mais on avait omis de citer l'Europe, dont les peuples ont, bien entendu, le même droit à la liberté et à l'indépendance que les autres. Je considère que la rédaction est bonne dans la mesure où elle indique que tous les peuples ont droit à la liberté complète, et qu'il n'y a pas de limites à leur liberté et à leur souveraineté dans certaines parties du monde.

181. Nous savons qu'il existe des formes diverses, et nombreuses d'oppression exercée sur des peuples ou des groupes ethniques. Je sais qu'au cours de notre discussion sur cette question, de nombreux représentants, dans cette salle, ont été combattus par des représentants de diverses parties du monde qui sont venus se plaindre de l'absence de liberté dont souffrait leur pays. Le présent projet de résolution devrait encourager les forces démocratiques qui s'exercent en faveur de la libération des peuples opprimés, et cela par des moyens pacifiques. Nombre de nations qui sont maintenant opprimées peuvent aujourd'hui penser que l'horizon est sombre. Cependant, elles n'abandonneront pas tout espoir. Ce projet de résolution, sans aucun doute, justifiera et renforcera leur foi en l'avenir. Nous devons nous féliciter de l'existence de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. A mon avis, le rôle le plus important qu'ait joué l'Organisation a consisté à aider pacifiquement tant de peuples à atteindre la liberté et l'indépendance. Nous espérons que face à notre organisation toutes les nations, sans distinction de race, de couleur et de situation géographique, pourront accéder par des moyens pacifiques à l'indépendance et à la liberté auxquelles tous les peuples ont un droit absolu.

182. C'est dans cet esprit que le Danemark votera en faveur du projet de résolution présenté par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie.

183. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'espagnol): Je donne maintenant la parole au représentant de l'Autriche qui désire expliquer son vote.

184. M. MATSCH (Autriche) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je suis très reconnaissant au Président de m'avoir donné la parole afin d'expliquer brièvement la position de ma délégation.

185. Nous avons assisté à un débat des plus intéressants, institué à l'initiative de la délégation soviétique à qui vont tous nos remerciements. Ma délégation votera en faveur du projet de résolution déposé par 43 délégations d'Asie et d'Afrique [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6]. Ces délégations plaident leur propre cause; c'est une cause juste, que nous sommes heureux de pouvoir appuyer.

186. Mon pays n'a jamais été ce que l'on qualifie aujourd'hui de puissance coloniale. L'ancien Empire d'Autriche ne possédait pas non plus de colonies, c'est là un fait bien connu. Nous n'avons donc aucune connaissance directe de la situation existant dans les colonies et nous n'avons donc pas pris part aux débats. Mais le peuple autrichien, au nom duquel j'ai l'honneur de parler aujourd'hui, a toujours éprouvé de la sympathie pour les nations qui ne possédaient pas une liberté complète. Nous nous sommes donc réjouis de voir accéder à l'indépendance après la seconde guerre mondiale de nombreuses nations, grandes et petites, et nous avons toujours été heureux d'établir avec ces nations des rapports cordiaux et permanents. Nous connaissons d'expérience la valeur de la liberté, car nous en avons été privés pendant 17 longues années et je crois que l'on n'apprécie jamais tant une chose que lorsqu'on l'a perdue.

187. Qui plus est, nous croyons que la liberté, comme la paix, est indivisible. Nous pensons que, tant qu'il y aura des peuples et des pays qui n'auront pas obtenu leur liberté, nous craindrons pour la nôtre. Permettez-moi d'ajouter en passant que, dans mon pays, on estime que ce principe élevé ne s'applique pas seulement aux nations et aux peuples, mais qu'il s'applique aussi à l'individu. Aussi longtemps que la liberté de l'individu et la primauté du droit n'auront pas été solidement établies dans tous les pays, la liberté de l'homme, de la femme, de l'enfant, où que ce soit, sera en danger.

188. C'est la raison pour laquelle nous voterons en faveur du projet de résolution sous sa forme actuelle. Pour être tout à fait francs, nous devons cependant reconnaître que nous éprouvons certaines appréhensions quant à l'opportunité de quelques expressions employées dans la déclaration, à certaines revendications et à certaines procédures envisagées. Etant donné les idéaux élevés de liberté et d'égalité pour tous les hommes qui constituent le fondement de la déclaration, nous avons cependant estimé que ces considérations ne devaient pas nous empêcher d'appuyer pleinement le projet.

189. Je voudrais saisir cette occasion pour présenter une autre observation. En votant en faveur de cette déclaration, nous ne voulons pas simplement rendre un hommage du bout des lèvres à la cause de la liberté des peuples encore asservis au joug colonial; nous voulons leur affirmer que nous appuierons de toutes nos forces toutes les mesures destinées à affermir leur indépendance politique et économique, car nous croyons sincèrement que l'une ne peut aller sans l'autre. Les autorités autrichiennes étudient maintenant à fond les divers moyens d'établir une coopération économique active avec les nouveaux Etats indépendants. Nous comprenons l'urgence qu'il y a pour eux à établir des programmes économiques et nous estimons qu'ils ont raison de réclamer une haute priorité. Nous sommes convaincus qu'à leur tour ces pays contribueront activement à notre objectif commun, à savoir le maintien de la paix.

La séance est levée à 18 h 30.

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite) 1345

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant d'Israël, qui désire exercer son droit de réponse.

2. M. COMAY (Israël) [traduit de l'anglais]: Au début de ce débat, plusieurs orateurs arabes ont tenté de faire état des divergences qui, malheureusement, séparent encore Israël et les Etats arabes. Dans la déclaration qu'elle a faite devant l'Assemblée le 2 décembre [933^{ème} séance], ma délégation s'est délibérément abstenue de riposter à ces attaques, et elle n'y a même fait aucune allusion. Nous avons estimé que l'objet des présents débats constituait un si grave sujet de préoccupation pour le monde entier, et en particulier pour les nouveaux Etats et pour les peuples encore asservis, que nous devions ne tenir aucun compte des tentatives faites pour exploiter la question à des fins de propagande. Malheureusement, notre modération n'a pas trouvé de contrepartie. Je voudrais revenir en particulier sur la déclaration faite le 6 décembre [937^{ème} séance] par le représentant du Liban qui, en tentant de jeter le discrédit sur un autre Etat Membre de l'ONU, s'est livré à l'une des attaques les plus offensantes que l'on ait jamais entendues à cette tribune. Ma délégation se voit obligée d'exercer brièvement son droit de réponse. Nous le ferons à propos des trois points qui ont été soulevés, même si nous estimons qu'aucun d'entre eux ne relève véritablement de la question actuellement soumise à l'Assemblée.

3. Tout d'abord, nous dénonçons comme dénuée de tout fondement moral, et comme un non-sens historique, sa tentative pour ramener le sionisme à une entreprise colonialiste. Le sionisme est l'un des mouvements nationaux les plus nobles, les plus émouvants, les plus constructifs de l'histoire de l'humanité. Il est rattaché par des liens uniques et indissolubles à un passé vieux de plus de 4.000 ans qui rattache le peuple juif à la Palestine. Aucun Juif ne pourrait se sentir étranger en Israël, car il n'y a pas un mètre carré de ce pays qui ne soit sanctifié par les reliques de ses ancêtres des temps bibliques. C'est là que le génie moral et spirituel de notre peuple a donné naissance au judaïsme, qui a été également la source de la religion chrétienne. C'est là que notre peuple a connu l'indépendance nationale, qu'il l'a perdue, regagnée, puis reperdue dans sa lutte perpétuelle contre les grands empires coloniaux de l'époque. Le lien vital qui unit le peuple juif à la terre d'Israël est l'essence même de son histoire longue et souvent tragique.

4. A l'époque moderne, dispersé par les forces jumelles du nationalisme et de la persécution, notre peuple a rêvé de reconstruire son ancienne patrie, et c'est pour réaliser son idéal qu'il a organisé le mouvement sioniste, en tentant de lui gagner la compréhension des autres nations, en faisant œuvre de pionnier sur ce qui n'était plus qu'un coin arriéré de l'empire ottoman. Cette idée fut tout d'abord appuyée par le Royaume-Uni — et nous lui en sommes très reconnaissants — et la notion d'un Foyer national juif fut expressément inscrite dans les termes du Mandat de la Société des Nations sur la Palestine. Mais, en définitive, Israël a dû conquérir son indépendance au prix d'une lutte difficile contre la domination britannique, puis il a dû combattre à nouveau pour résister à l'invasion des armées arabes. Nous sommes prêts, aujourd'hui, comme nous l'avons toujours été, à vivre en paix avec nos voisins. Mais nous ne permettons pas que la nature du mouvement sioniste soit déformée pour servir des visées démagogiques.

5. On brandit cette étiquette de "colonialisme" dans le dessein d'influencer d'autres nouveaux Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique qui ont des rapports avec Israël. Dans la déclaration qu'elle a faite le 17 octobre, au cours de la discussion générale, Mme Meir, ministre des affaires étrangères d'Israël, a répondu sur ce point dans les termes suivants:

"Nous savons que cette accusation est absurde. Les Arabes le savent aussi et, ce qui est plus important, les Africains le savent. Les dirigeants des pays d'Afrique ne vont pas se laisser épouvanter par des slogans stupides. On peut être sûr qu'ils jugeront leurs relations avec les autres pays d'après l'attitude adoptée par ces pays vis-à-vis d'eux, et non d'après des discours de propagande prononcés à New York" [907^{ème} séance, par. 87.]

6. Ce n'est pas Israël, mais ce sont certains autres Etats se prétendant les frères des peuples d'Afrique, qui, en réalité, s'immiscent dans leurs affaires et se font le cheval de Troie d'impérialismes nouveaux en Afrique. Quant à savoir quels sont ces Etats, les populations d'Afrique en jugeront elles-mêmes, d'après l'expérience que leur continent est en train de faire.

7. En second lieu, le représentant du Liban a versé des larmes de crocodile sur le traitement réservé aux citoyens arabes en Israël — ils sont au nombre de 250.000 — tant musulmans que chrétiens. Ici encore, je voudrais me reporter à la déclaration que Mme Meir, ministre des affaires étrangères d'Israël, a faite le 17 octobre, au cours de laquelle elle a souligné une fois de plus que les Arabes d'Israël jouissent exactement des mêmes droits politiques que les Juifs d'Israël; que leur situation économique, sociale et culturelle s'est améliorée rapidement depuis la création de l'Etat d'Israël et que "aucun Etat arabe ne peut prétendre avoir fait accéder la masse de sa population à un niveau de vie qui soutienne la comparaison avec celui des Arabes d'Israël" [Ibid., par. 83.] Notre pays est ouvert au monde entier. Chacun est libre de s'y rendre et de vérifier ces faits de ses propres yeux. Des dizaines de milliers de visiteurs l'ont constaté; leurs impressions ont été enregistrées: elles réfutent les calomnies qui ont été répétées ici.

8. En troisième lieu, et pour terminer, le représentant du Liban a eu l'impudence d'insinuer qu'Israël était l'un des deux pays où subsistent des vestiges de l'esclavage. Cette accusation est trop sotte pour être prise au sérieux. La Constitution et le mode de vie d'Israël garantissent l'égalité et la liberté à tous les citoyens, sans distinction de race, de sexe ou de religion. Mais, si je représentais un pays arabe, j'hésiterais beaucoup à soulever la question de l'esclavage dans le cadre d'un débat sur le colonialisme. Le représentant du Liban pense-t-il que les peuples d'Afrique ont oublié les activités sinistres auxquelles les marchands d'esclaves arabes se sont livrés sur leur continent? Croit-ils qu'ils ignorent l'existence, au Moyen-Orient, de pays arabes où l'on achète et l'on vend encore des hommes, des femmes, des enfants africains, et en particulier des jeunes filles, comme s'ils étaient du bétail? S'il ignore lui-même ces faits, je lui conseille de lire les nombreux rapports qui ont été publiés ces dernières années sur la question, notamment ceux de la Société antiesclavagiste.

9. C'est à contrecœur que ma délégation est intervenue à nouveau dans ce débat; elle n'a nullement le désir d'engager une controverse sur ces questions. Mais il ne faut pas que l'on puisse croire que le représentant de n'importe quel Etat arabe peut impunément utiliser la tribune de l'ONU pour salir l'Etat d'Israël.

10. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Un certain nombre de délégations ont demandé la parole pour expliquer leur vote avant que nous ne procédions au scrutin. Je me propose de leur donner la parole dans l'ordre où elles se sont inscrites. Je donnerai la parole en premier lieu au représentant de la Suède.

11. Mme ROSSEL (Suède) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation suédoise votera en faveur du projet de déclaration présenté par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie qui figure dans les documents A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6. Nous estimons en effet que ce texte est parfaitement conforme à l'esprit des dispositions de la Charte qui ont trait à l'autodétermination, à l'autonomie et à l'indépendance nationale. Le gouvernement et le peuple suédois ont suivi avec un intérêt soutenu et avec la plus vive sympathie le processus historique grâce auquel la grande majorité des peuples autrefois non autonomes jouissent désormais de cet immense bienfait qu'est la liberté nationale. Si elle contribue à maintenir le désir de liberté vivace dans l'esprit des hommes du monde entier, la déclaration aura servi un but utile.

12. Bien qu'elle ait adopté cette attitude, ma délégation n'est pas absolument satisfaite des termes de certains passages du projet de résolution. En fait, plusieurs de ses paragraphes nous semblent laisser place à plusieurs interprétations, alors que d'autres, à notre avis, sont trop catégoriques ou trop rigides.

Permettez-moi de citer quelques exemples qui illustreront ma pensée.

13. Le dernier alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution dispose que "tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national". Dans la pratique, l'application de ce principe inattaquable pourrait prêter à controverse. Nous nous rappelons tous comment, au cours du récent débat que la Première Commission a consacré au problème de la Mauritanie, des divergences d'opinions se sont manifestées, même parmi les pays qui appuient le projet de déclaration actuel, sur la façon dont ce principe devait être mis en œuvre dans le cas particulier.

14. Le même principe est énoncé au paragraphe 2 du projet de déclaration, qui stipule que "tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination". Il est permis de se demander, par exemple, si en pratique les provinces de la République du Congo (Léopoldville) pourraient invoquer ce principe pour revendiquer le droit de se séparer d'autres parties de la République. Ou faudrait-il appliquer en l'occurrence un autre paragraphe du projet de déclaration, à savoir le paragraphe 6, qui condamne "toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays"?

15. Le texte du projet nous amène à formuler une autre observation. Dans certaines parties du monde, il y a des territoires non-autonomes qui sont trop petits et trop isolés pour pouvoir exister en tant qu'Etats indépendants. De même, il semble à ma délégation que nous ne devons pas oublier les graves difficultés auxquelles la population d'un territoire qui passerait trop rapidement du régime colonial à l'indépendance risquerait de se trouver exposée. Une période de transition peut être nécessaire.

16. Les observations que je viens de présenter ne nous empêchent pas d'appuyer le projet de déclaration. Nous estimons qu'il énonce des objectifs généraux et ne constitue pas un acte législatif qui imposerait aux Etats Membres des obligations juridiques immédiates et qui serait destiné à être appliqué à la lettre. L'Assemblée générale n'est pas habilitée à adopter des actes législatifs qui lient les Etats Membres. Du point de vue juridique, le projet de déclaration est donc, semble-t-il, de la même nature que la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme.

17. En comparant les deux déclarations, il convient peut-être de souligner que, si les buts de la première, qui sont d'assurer le respect des droits de l'homme dans le monde entier, sont encore bien loin d'être atteints, les objectifs de la déclaration que nous avons sous les yeux — qui sont de garantir le droit des peuples à l'indépendance nationale — ont déjà été largement atteints en ce qui concerne les anciens empires coloniaux. Sans vouloir diminuer l'importance de cette nouvelle déclaration, on ne peut manquer de conclure qu'elle n'aura un rôle ni aussi constructif ni aussi instructif que la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme qui, depuis son adoption en 1948, a incontestablement servi de modèle à de nombreux pays qui s'en sont utilement inspirés pour élaborer leur législation, en même temps qu'elle n'a cessé de leur rappeler certains nobles principes que l'on se pique plus souvent de violer que de respecter.

18. Compte tenu des observations que je viens de présenter, la délégation suédoise est disposée, je l'ai déjà dit, à voter en faveur de l'ensemble du projet de résolution présenté par les pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, tel qu'il se présente sous sa forme actuelle, et elle votera contre d'autres projets de résolution et amendements qui seraient éventuellement présentés.

19. M. AUGUSTE (Haïti): Le problème du colonialisme est le grand procès qui tient à cette session l'affiche internationale, avec une avalanche de littérature et une cascade de mots qui font souvent penser à la fièvre avec laquelle ont été discutées les non moins importantes questions du désarmement et du sous-développement. En principe, le colonialisme tel que nous l'avons connu dans le passé, essayant de se justifier par des théories fausses, erronées, sophistiques, pour légitimer la domination d'une puissance sur une autre et élever à la hauteur d'un dogme les privilèges et les prérogatives que s'étaient attribués certaines races réputées supérieures, a irrémédiablement et incontestablement vécu.

20. Il ne peut pas davantage continuer à s'instituer en système économique ou politique-économique, c'est-à-dire en espèce de zone réservée à la métropole et lui assurant un marché à l'abri de toute concurrence, de toute compétition pour la pleine expansion de son commerce extérieur. Les hommes et le temps se sont chargés de liquider cette forme de l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme, accompagnée par moments d'épisodes qui ne font pas honneur à ceux qui ont posé le problème absurde de l'inégalité des races.

21. Mais je m'en voudrais, quand on parle de cet épineux problème, de ne pas inclure les Nations Unies, ce grand carrefour qui se prête depuis 15 ans à d'heureuses rencontres entre les peuples, à cette espèce de brassage de l'humanité et qui a peut-être accéléré la roue de l'histoire dans l'autre sens.

22. Mais les idées en général, bonnes ou mauvaises, ont la vie dure. Ceux qui, au souvenir de leurs lectures, se rappellent les pages à caractère scientifique que leur ont consacrées de grands maîtres connaissent le long processus de leur développement, autant que leur autorité et leur puissance, quand elles se perdent dans notre subconscient. On pourrait comparer les idées à un arbre aux racines multiples et vivaces. Se contenter d'abattre le tronc sans le déraciner ne fait quelquefois que retarder son épanouissement.

23. Tous ceux qui, dans un passé lointain ou récent, ont pâti du colonialisme le savent. Il convient donc que l'on prenne des mesures pour prévenir son retour, non plus sous la forme impossible du passé, mais sous la forme empressée, éminemment dangereuse, oui dangereuse au possible, ajouterai-je, parce que plein de malice, d'astuce, de roueries, tel qu'il se présente dans le monde d'aujourd'hui, à la manière du loup devenu berger.

24. J'avoue que ce sont les réflexions que ce fils authentique de la République d'Haïti n'a pu s'empêcher de se faire en écoutant les charges de certains ministères publics d'occasion, démasquant dans ses cachettes le néo-colonialisme qui ferait dire à Alfred de Musset s'il était parmi nous — oui, Musset, le délicieux poète de ces Nuits immortelles que nous avons tous chantées jadis: "Mais tout cela vous ressemble comme un frère."

25. La lutte contre ce colonialisme d'un nouveau genre, d'une nouvelle forme ou structure, doit être notre constant souci et nous devons la mener quelque soit l'endroit où il s'installe.

26. Je confesse que je le redoute autant que son frère aîné qui a fait tant de mal à mes ancêtres et aux hommes de ma race. Mais plus pernicieux et plein d'astuce, parce que loup et berger à la fois, il gagne de nos jours les naïfs en leur offrant, non plus des présents d'or comme au temps jadis, mais quelque chose de plus subtil; et c'est la magie et la séduction des promesses de la nouvelle organisation du monde de demain, assurant le bien-être et la dignité à tous les hommes, pour que cessent les inégalités économiques dont ils ont été trop longtemps victimes.

27. Détruire le colonialisme pour voir s'y substituer un autre — convenons qu'il s'appelle néo-colonialisme — serait à désespérer des leçons de l'histoire, de l'expérience, de l'intelligence humaine, et même du besoin de liberté et d'indépendance de tous ceux qui en ont été si longtemps privés, tellement cela ressemble à un "ôte-toi de là que je m'y mette".

28. Ma délégation félicite tous ceux qui ont fait montre d'une si claire vision du danger que représente le néo-colonialisme sous toutes ses formes. Fidèle à l'anticolonialisme du grand Dessalines, qui fonda la nation haïtienne, fidèle aussi à la ligne politique du Père de la République dans mon pays, l'illustre Alexandre Petion qui, épris dès 1811 des mêmes grands sentiments et du haut idéal qui nous animent tous aujourd'hui, aida Bolívar dans sa lutte de libération contre la domination espagnole, ma délégation, héritière du testament politique de ces deux géants de l'histoire de mon pays, votera en faveur de tout projet de résolution qui condamne le colonialisme, réclame indépendance et liberté pour les uns en même temps qu'il vise aux moyens de protéger les autres, en prévenant l'instauration de par le monde de tout néo-colonialisme quel qu'il soit.

29. M. PAZHAK (Afghanistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé la parole pour expliquer mon vote sur les divers projets de résolution déposés devant l'Assemblée. Mon intervention d'aujourd'hui reflétera la déclaration que j'ai déjà faite au cours de la discussion générale [935ème séance], et dans laquelle j'ai exposé les vues de ma délégation sur les principes que nous respectons et qui inspirent notre attitude à l'égard de toute décision que l'Assemblée sera appelée à prendre sur ce point. Nous sommes parmi les auteurs de l'un des projets de résolution [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6], et nous avons expliqué pourquoi nous le présentons. Mes explications porteront donc sur les autres projets de résolution, auxquels nous n'avons pris aucune part.

30. Pour ce qui est du projet de résolution présenté par le Honduras [A/L.324/Rev.2], nous espérons que, consciente de la nature de ce projet, cette délégation n'insistera pas pour qu'il soit mis aux voix et le retirera. Si ce projet était mis aux voix, ma délégation se verrait dans l'obligation de voter contre lui. La raison pour laquelle nous sommes hostiles à ce projet est tout d'abord que sa présentation est absolument déplacée au point où en est actuellement l'Assemblée dans l'examen de la question de l'abolition aussi rapide que possible — qui devrait même, à notre avis, être immédiate — du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme sous toutes leurs formes. Nous ne pensons pas qu'il soit d'aucune utilité et nous ne croyons pas que l'As-semblée doit l'adopter. En conséquence, nous voterons contre ce projet de résolution.

31. En ce qui concerne les amendements [A/L.325] que la délégation du Guatemala propose d'apporter au projet de résolution qui figure dans les documents A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6, nous n'avons pas d'objection de principe à formuler, mais nous estimons que ces amendements font déjà l'objet du paragraphe 6 du projet de déclaration des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Nous croyons donc que ces amendements sont superflus, et nous nous abstiendrons lors du vote à leur sujet.

32. L'Union soviétique a soumis deux amendements [A/L.328] au projet de résolution que nous avons présenté conjointement avec d'autres pays. Ces amendements sont utiles et constructifs; aussi ma délégation votera-t-elle en leur faveur. Les propositions qui y figurent sont très simples, mais elles soulignent certains points qui s'imposent particulièrement à notre attention, et c'est la raison pour laquelle nous voterons en leur faveur. Le premier point, c'est qu'en substance le texte reconnaît le droit des représentants autorisés des peuples et des nations à engager des négociations sur la base de l'autodétermination, et c'est là un principe dont nous ne nous sommes jamais départis dans les affaires intéressant les peuples non autonomes. Ensuite, ces amendements fixent un délai, et en cela ils sont conformes au vœu que nous avons exprimé au cours de la discussion générale: que le colonialisme et l'impérialisme soient abolis immédiatement, sous toutes leurs formes et dans toutes leurs manifestations. Enfin, ils insistent sur la nécessité de mettre en œuvre la résolution sur l'abolition du colonialisme; or, tel est le but véritable, et le seul valable, que nous avons toujours eu présent à l'esprit en examinant l'abolition du système colonial.

33. J'en viens maintenant au projet de déclaration déposé par l'Union soviétique [A/4502], que nous avons étudié très soigneusement. Nous aurions préféré que fût mise aux voix la partie essentielle du document, plutôt que la déclaration dans son ensemble. Si la déclaration tout entière est mise aux voix, je voudrais demander au Président de diviser le texte en deux parties qui seront mises aux voix séparément. Nous proposons un vote séparé sur la partie qui commence par ces mots: "... les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies proclament solennellement les exigences suivantes" et se poursuit par les paragraphes 1, 2 et 3. Le reste du document devrait faire l'objet d'un vote distinct.

34. Lors du vote par division, ma délégation votera sans réserve aucune en faveur de la partie essentielle que je viens de mentionner. Lorsque le reste du document sera mis aux voix, ma délégation l'appuiera, car nous n'avons pas d'objection à formuler à l'égard des principes qui y sont contenus; nous devons cependant expliquer notre vote et préciser qu'en approuvant le reste du document, nous entendons simplement approuver les principes qui y sont énoncés, et encore seulement les principes de nature à contribuer à l'abolition immédiate de l'impérialisme ou du colonialisme.

35. En second lieu, nous tenons à déclarer que, lorsque nous donnons notre appui à cette partie du document, nous savons que la liste des territoires qui y sont expressément mentionnés ne comprend pas tous les territoires ou les peuples qui se trouvent sous une domination étrangère, et qu'elle ne doit pas être considérée comme complète. Nous entendons par là qu'il ne faudrait en aucun cas limiter l'application de cette déclaration aux territoires et aux peuples qui y ont été mentionnés à titre d'exemple, et que ses dispositions doivent s'appliquer à tous les territoires et à tous les peuples sous domination étrangère, dans quelque partie du monde qu'ils se trouvent, même s'ils ne sont pas mentionnés dans ce texte.

36. Ces deux réserves étant faites, nous tenons à préciser une fois de plus qu'en approuvant ce document nous nous prononçons exclusivement sur les principes qu'il énonce.

37. M. RIFA'I (Jordanie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je désire expliquer la position de ma délégation à l'égard du projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502], et des amendements au projet de résolution que nous avons présenté conjointement avec d'autres délégations d'Afrique et d'Asie.

38. Ce projet de résolution des 43 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] est le fruit d'une étude approfondie et de larges consultations. Il a été rédigé de façon à répondre aux aspirations de tous les peuples vers la liberté et l'indépendance, et à rallier le maximum de suffrages à l'Assemblée générale. Nous ne prétendons certes pas qu'il exprime toutes les opinions et tous les vœux correspondant aux désirs des peuples. Ma délégation estime que les amendements soviétiques [A/L.328] et les amendements du Guatemala [A/L.325] reprennent certaines de ces opinions. En acceptant ou en rejetant ces amendements, ma délégation, qui est l'un des auteurs du projet de résolution, désire éviter toute procédure qui risquerait de faire perdre certains appuis à cette résolution. Mais une question de principe se pose en l'occurrence. En ce qui concerne l'amendement soviétique et celui du Guatemala, ma délégation estime devoir faire passer les principes contenus dans chacun d'eux avant les aspects techniques dont j'ai parlé.

39. Les amendements soviétiques énoncent un principe que ma délégation appuie sans réserve; par conséquent, nous voterons en leur faveur. Les amendements du Guatemala établissent le principe du droit des nations à recouvrer leur intégrité territoriale. Ils disposent en outre que:

"Le principe de la libre détermination des peuples ne pourra affecter en aucun cas le droit d'aucun Etat à l'intégrité territoriale et aux revendications territoriales."

Nous connaissons de nombreux cas où l'on a porté atteinte à l'intégrité territoriale d'une nation. L'usurpation d'une partie du territoire arabe de Palestine du fait de l'agression conjointe du sionisme et du colonialisme pose un problème international qui n'a pas encore été résolu. Nous défendons le droit de tous les peuples à recouvrer leur intégrité territoriale et nous voterons donc en faveur des amendements du Guatemala.

40. Nous avons été informés que le projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502] serait mis aux voix dans son ensemble. Nous sommes disposés à en appuyer la majeure partie, mais nous ne pouvons entériner chacun de ses paragraphes. Dans l'un d'eux il est question de mon pays et dans un autre de la Chine; or, on sait que mon pays reconnaît la Chine nationaliste. Par conséquent, si le projet de déclaration est mis aux voix dans son ensemble, ma délégation ne pourra pas l'appuyer.

41. M. SUCAIR (Arabie Saoudite) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation votera en faveur du projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux contenus dans le document A/4502. En effet, nous estimons que cette déclaration est conforme aux principes de la Charte des Nations Unies et aux principes des droits de l'homme. Si donc nous votons en faveur de ce projet de déclaration, c'est parce que nous appuyons les principes fondamentaux qu'il consacre. Il ne s'ensuit pas, cependant, que nous souscrivions entièrement à certaines des conclusions ou à des expressions qu'il contient. Il convient de mentionner notamment à ce sujet la question du statut de la Chine nationaliste.

42. M. RAHNEMA (Iran): Ma délégation a déjà eu l'occasion d'exposer en détail sa position, sans équivoque, sur tous les aspects du problème de la liquidation inconditionnelle du régime colonial. Par conséquent, mon explication de vote portera uniquement sur les amendements soviétiques [A/L.328], les amendements du Guatemala [A/L.325] et le projet de résolution présenté par le Honduras [A/L.324/Rev.2]. Ce faisant, je m'efforcerai surtout de répondre à certaines objections que la délégation soviétique a présentées hier [945ème séance] à l'endroit du projet de résolution présenté par les 42 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6].

43. La délégation soviétique a considéré que ce projet de résolution manquait de clarté sur certains points et risquait d'être ambigu quant aux interprétations qui pouvaient y être données. Ma délégation, qui a participé assez activement aux travaux de rédaction de ce projet de résolution, estime que tel n'est pas le cas.

44. En effet, j'ai l'impression que les principes que nous avons voulu défendre sont assez clairement exposés. Je concède volontiers à M. Zorine que ces points peuvent prêter à des interprétations différentes. Mais, en toute honnêteté, quel est le texte qui, dans le contexte de ce que nous faisons au sein de cette assemblée, ne pourrait pas prêter à des interprétations différentes? Les interprétations que nous donnons d'un texte doivent toujours être dégagées par la majorité des Membres de cette assemblée et, surtout, par les auteurs du texte soumis. Or, l'interprétation de ce projet de résolution a déjà été amplement effectuée, surtout par les auteurs, qui se sont expliqués à ce sujet et qui, presque tous, l'ont fait assez clairement.

45. En effet, la presque totalité des membres du groupe de pays d'Afrique et d'Asie a interprété ce document comme devant proclamer solennellement la nécessité de mettre fin, rapidement et inconditionnellement, au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations, la nécessité de ne jamais différer l'indépendance, entre autres sous prétexte du manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique, social et autres, et enfin la nécessité que des mesures immédiates soient prises afin de transférer le pouvoir aux peuples des territoires sous tutelle, des territoires non autonomes et de tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ni de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes.

46. Nous avons essayé, dans le texte qui vous est soumis, d'exposer aussi clairement que possible les principes que nous voulions défendre. Mais je dois dire, à l'intention du représentant de l'Union soviétique, que nous n'avons pas voulu, pour des raisons aisément concevables et qui dérivent des conditions particulières à chaque Etat, préciser la nature de l'application de ces principes. Par exemple, la délégation soviétique relève qu'il aurait fallu indiquer une date précise — une date limite — pour l'accession des pays à l'indépendance. En préparant ce texte, nous avons pensé que nous ne devrions pas fixer une date d'une façon arbitraire, mais qu'il fallait simplement mentionner la nécessité de mettre fin rapidement et inconditionnellement au colonialisme. Nous avons estimé que, dans certains cas, il y aurait intérêt à ce que même le transfert du pouvoir ne soit pas effectué immédiatement; car il importait, au préalable, de s'assurer que ce transfert se fît aux représentants véritables des populations, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés. Il fallait aussi laisser une certaine latitude; en effet, certains pays demandent un transfert techniquement immédiat; d'autres demandent une période assez courte pour le transfert du pouvoir. Nous avons donc pensé que, dans une déclaration générale de ce genre, il était préférable de se borner à poser le principe; or, ce principe est clair: c'est le principe de l'indépendance inconditionnelle et rapide, quitte à laisser ensuite l'application de ce principe s'effectuer selon chaque cas particulier par les soins des différentes commissions. Par conséquent, si nous n'avons pas, dans notre projet de résolution, marqué de date, fixé un calendrier précis, cela ne signifie en aucune façon que nous étions opposés à la fixation de ce calendrier et de dates dans certains cas particuliers, ou que nous ayons eu l'intention de différer l'indépendance en quoi que ce soit; cela signifie simplement que nous avons estimé que la fixation d'une date rigide, de la même date pour tous les pays, revêtait un caractère artificiel, ne correspondait pas aux conditions différentes et individuelles de chaque cas particulier.

47. Du reste, il y avait à cet égard des divergences de vues entre nous. Il y avait une délégation, par exemple, qui pensait que cette date devait être immédiate, à savoir 1960 ou 1961; d'autres délégations considéraient qu'il devait s'agir de dates très proches. Comme je viens de l'indiquer, nous avons donc laissé aux diverses commissions qui traitaient les problèmes afférents à chaque cas particulier le soin de déterminer ces dates.

48. Une autre objection de la délégation soviétique portait sur le problème du suffrage universel et des élections. Sur ce point encore, nous avions pensé qu'il fallait éviter de poser un principe rigide, un principe qui, bien qu'incontestable en général, était de nature à soulever certains problèmes particuliers dans le contexte du caractère spécial du développement de chaque Etat luttant pour son indépendance. Certaines délégations pensaient même que, dans quelques cas, l'organisation d'élections au suffrage universel pourrait éventuellement servir de prétexte à différer l'indépendance: d'où la nécessité de poser le principe du transfert de pouvoirs comme nous l'avons indiqué, conformément à la volonté et aux vœux librement exprimés des peuples. Bien entendu, cette volonté peut et doit dans la plupart des cas — je souligne dans la plupart des cas — s'exprimer grâce à l'organisation d'un plébiscite ou d'élections au suffrage universel tenus en bonne et due forme et, de préférence et partout où cela est possible, garantis par la présence et la surveillance des Nations Unies. Néanmoins, ceci doit, comme je l'ai indiqué tout à l'heure, être fixé pour chaque Etat selon les conditions spéciales du développement de cet Etat.

49. C'est ainsi que, par exemple, nous avons à l'heure actuelle deux projets de résolution sur le Ruanda-Urundi [A/C.4/L.664] et sur le Samoa-Occidental [A/C.4/L.663] dans lesquels on propose d'appliquer ces principes en tenant compte des conditions locales et des conditions particulières à ces territoires. Les commissions intéressées s'en occuperont et feront en sorte que les principes généraux soient appliqués avec le maximum de flexibilité et en tenant compte de la situation particulière à chacun de ces territoires.

50. En ma qualité de membre du groupe qui a rédigé le projet de résolution des 43 puissances, je tiens à donner au représentant de l'Union soviétique l'assurance que nous avons longuement pesé le pour et le contre de chaque phrase, de chaque membre de phrase, de chaque mot. Nous l'avons fait parce que nous n'avons jamais oublié que nous devions élaborer un texte qui se rapproche autant que possible des aspirations générales des peuples des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie — aspirations qu'à notre grande joie le représentant de l'Union soviétique a assuré partager — ainsi que des conditions parfois complexes de la liquidation du régime colonial.

51. Je dois avouer que ce texte n'est pas parfait. Mais, dans un travail collectif de ce genre, lorsqu'il s'agit de tenir compte de la complexité des problèmes et des divergences de vues quant à leur solution, il est humainement très difficile d'arriver à un texte de portée générale qui exprimerait mieux les aspirations collectives des peuples des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie.

52. Quant au projet de résolution présenté par le Honduras [A/L.324/Rev.2] et les amendements du Guatemala [A/L.325] au projet de résolution des 43 puissances, je voudrais faire à leur égard une brève déclaration.

53. Le projet de résolution soumis par le Honduras, bien que se proposant des buts louables, nous semble à l'heure actuelle assez éloigné des objectifs immédiats que les puissances anticoloniales recherchent dans les circonstances actuelles; ce texte ne nous paraît pas répondre aux exigences présentes.

54. Quant aux amendements déposés par le Guatemala, j'avoue que nous sommes d'accord sur les intentions qui l'ont motivés. Cependant, je dois ajouter aussitôt que, dans la mesure où ces intentions se rapportent à l'objet de la présente déclaration, elles sont exposées et exprimées avec une clarté suffisante au paragraphe 6 de notre projet de déclaration qui est ainsi conçu:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

55. En conclusion, je voudrais ajouter encore une fois que ce texte a été le résultat de longues discussions et d'échanges de vues qui ont mis très longtemps à se matérialiser. Il représente un travail important et son équilibre particulièrement délicat a été obtenu grâce à cette volonté définie et arrêtée des puissances d'Afrique et d'Asie d'exprimer les aspirations de leurs peuples en un texte historique qui refléterait — cela est très important — le front uni de ces peuples et de tous les pays contre le colonialisme.

56. Dans ces circonstances, nous considérons que l'adoption ou même l'insertion des amendements présentés pourrait détruire cet équilibre difficile et particulièrement délicat que nous nous sommes efforcés de maintenir, et menacerait même de rompre l'unité des peuples des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie sur ce sujet.

57. Ma délégation serait particulièrement heureuse si les auteurs de ces projets de résolution et de ces amendements, tenant compte des explications que nous avons fournies, n'insistaient pas pour qu'ils soient mis aux voix. Cependant, si tel n'était pas le cas, ma délégation, pour les raisons énoncées plus haut et principalement dans un esprit de solidarité avec les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, ne serait pas en mesure d'appuyer ces amendements.

58. Je voudrais ajouter un dernier mot concernant le texte du paragraphe 9 présenté par la délégation soviétique dans le document A/L.328, tendant à décider d'examiner la question de l'application de cette résolution à la seizième session ordinaire de l'Assemblée.

59. Il est clair que ma délégation, non plus, je pense, qu'aucun des auteurs de ce projet de résolution, n'a pas d'objections de principe à soulever à l'encontre de ce paragraphe, mais, si nous n'avons pas jugé bon de l'incorporer, c'est parce qu'il nous semblait relever d'une question de procédure qui, à nos yeux, ne trouvait pas sa place dans une déclaration historique qui serait presque un texte classique devant être étudié dans les écoles et dans des organisations diverses, dans lequel une phrase présentant un caractère technique, comme celle qui est proposée, ne trouverait véritablement pas sa place.

60. A mon avis, cette proposition pourrait être formulée plus tard par une délégation, éventuellement dans un autre projet de résolution, mais nous pensons réellement qu'elle n'a pas sa place dans une déclaration aussi importante et présentant un caractère aussi solennel que celle dont nous discutons en ce moment.

61. Mais, étant donné que, sur ce point de procédure, nous n'avons à formuler aucune objection de principe, d'autant plus qu'il ne modifierait en rien l'équilibre du texte quant au fond, nous laissons son adoption ou son rejet, dans la forme présente, à la sagesse collective de l'Assemblée, en nous abstenant de voter sur ce point.

62. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La liste des orateurs est maintenant épuisée; en conséquence, l'Assemblée peut procéder au vote. Cependant, étant donné que le vote sur les divers projets soumis à l'Assemblée prendra passablement de temps et que nous sommes à quelques minutes de l'heure à laquelle nous levons habituellement la séance, je propose à l'Assemblée de lever la séance maintenant et de remettre le vote au début de la prochaine réunion.

La séance est levée à 12 h 55.

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux
pays et aux peuples coloniaux (fin) 1351

Président: M. Frederick H. BOLAND (Irlande).

POINT 87 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance
aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (fin)

1. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée va maintenant voter sur les diverses propositions dont elle est saisie à propos du point 87 de l'ordre du jour.

2. Je vais d'abord mettre aux voix le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, présenté par l'Union soviétique (A/4502).

3. Je mettrai ensuite aux voix les amendements du Guatemala [A/L.325] au projet de résolution présenté par 43 puissances d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6].

4. Puis viendront les amendements au projet de résolution des 43 puissances présentés par l'Union soviétique et contenus dans le document A/L.328.

5. Sera ensuite mis aux voix le projet de résolution proposé par les 43 puissances d'Asie et d'Afrique (A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6).

6. Il ne reste plus que le projet de résolution présenté par le Honduras dans le document A/L.324/Rev.2. A ce propos, je viens d'être avisé par le chef de la délégation du Honduras qu'il ne désirait pas que ce projet soit mis aux voix.

7. Je donne la parole au représentant de l'Indonésie pour une motion d'ordre.

8. M. PALAR (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation n'entendait pas expliquer son vote avant le scrutin, mais elle estime qu'une explication du paragraphe 6 du projet de résolution soumis par les 43 puissances pourra peut-être convaincre le représentant du Guatemala de retirer ses amendements à ce projet de résolution. En fait, ma délégation prie le représentant du Guatemala de bien vouloir retirer ses amendements pour les raisons suivantes. Avec votre permission, je vais donner lecture de ce paragraphe 6:

"Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies."

9. Lors de la rédaction de ce document, ma délégation a été l'un des auteurs du paragraphe 6, et, en insérant ce texte dans le projet de résolution, nous pensions au maintien du colonialisme néerlandais en Irian occidental (Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise), qui à notre avis constitue une atteinte à l'unité nationale et à l'intégrité territoriale de notre pays.

10. Ainsi que nous l'avons souvent expliqué ici, les Hollandais usent, et, en fait, abusent, du droit à l'autodétermination pour justifier la poursuite de leurs activités colonialistes en Irian occidental. Il ne nous semble pas nécessaire d'expliquer cela à nouveau, puisque nous l'avons déjà fait dans notre déclaration au cours de la discussion générale à ce sujet [936^{ème} séance]. Pour cette raison, nous pensons que l'idée contenue dans les amendements du Guatemala est déjà complètement exprimée au paragraphe 6 de notre projet de résolution, et c'est la raison pour laquelle nous estimons que la situation des territoires et des peuples auxquels songeait la délégation du Guatemala a déjà été prise en considération dans notre paragraphe 6.

11. Comme je suis à la tribune pour tenter de persuader le représentant du Guatemala de retirer ses amendements au projet de résolution, j'aimerais profiter de l'occasion qui m'est offerte pour expliquer notre vote sur le projet de résolution et sur l'amendement...

12. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): J'hésite vraiment beaucoup à interrompre le représentant de l'Indonésie. Je lui ai donné la parole pour une motion d'ordre et, comme je l'ai annoncé à la fin de la séance de ce matin, la liste des orateurs, y compris ceux qui désiraient expliquer leur vote, a été définitivement close ce matin. Je suis très désireux de donner toutes facilités au représentant de l'Indonésie mais je crains de ne plus pouvoir le faire, étant donné la méthode de travail que l'Assemblée a adoptée.

13. M. PALAR (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je vous prie de m'excuser. J'espère que mes efforts de persuasion à l'égard du représentant du Guatemala pourront être considérés comme une motion d'ordre.

14. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Guatemala pour une motion d'ordre.

15. M. HERRARTE (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: J'ai écouté la déclaration du représentant de l'Indonésie, qui demande à ma délégation de retirer ses amendements [A/L.325] au projet de résolution des 43 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6].

16. En fait, nous avons entendu ce matin plusieurs auteurs du projet de résolution donner leur interprétation du paragraphe 6. Nous acceptons volontiers leur interprétation et, encore que nous eussions espéré que le principe de l'intégrité territoriale fût exprimé plus clairement, comme il l'est par exemple dans le texte soumis par ma délégation, je n'ai pas d'objection à accepter la demande du représentant de l'Indonésie. Je prierai en conséquence le Président de ne pas mettre aux voix les amendements du Guatemala.

17. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant du Ghana pour une motion d'ordre.

18. M. QUAISON-SACKEY (Ghana) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je regrette de prendre le temps de l'Assemblée générale et de soulever une motion d'ordre. Si je le fais, c'est dans l'espoir que les délégations qui ont présenté des amendements à notre projet de résolution les retireront; c'est également parce que je voudrais demander à l'Union soviétique de retirer, elle aussi, ses amendements [A/L.328], notamment son paragraphe 8 tel qu'il est proposé.

19. En effet, si je compare ce paragraphe au paragraphe 5 de notre projet de déclaration [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6], je constate qu'ils ne s'accordent pas très bien. Dans notre paragraphe 5, nous parlons

"des mesures immédiates [qui] seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs..."

20. Dans le paragraphe 8 proposé par l'Union soviétique (A/L.328), il est dit que les puissances colonisatrices doivent "entamer des négociations". Nous retrouvons la même idée. L'un des projets parle de "transférer tous pouvoirs" et l'autre parle "d'entamer des négociations". Le seul point nouveau dans le paragraphe soviétique est la date fixée pour cette liquidation du colonialisme. Tous ceux d'entre nous qui ont participé à la rédaction du projet présenté par les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie connaissent bien les diverses opinions qui s'étaient fait jour avant que le paragraphe 5 y ait été incorporé. En conséquence, et étant donné que nous allons être appelés à voter sur le projet de déclaration de l'Union soviétique sans aucun amendement, nous estimons que tous les amendements à notre projet de résolution devraient être retirés.

21. C'est dans cet esprit que je voudrais demander au représentant de l'Union soviétique de bien vouloir retirer son amendement.

22. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: La délégation soviétique a déjà exposé les motifs pour lesquels elle a estimé indispensable de présenter les amendements dont l'honorable délégué du Ghana vient de parler. Dans notre déclaration, nous avons souligné que nous étions poussés par le désir de faciliter l'adoption, au cours de la présente session, d'une résolution qui réglerait, du moins quant au fond, le problème de la liquidation du colonialisme. C'est pour faciliter la solution positive du problème que nous n'avons soumis aucun amendement aux paragraphes mêmes du projet de résolution déposé par 43 pays d'Afrique et d'Asie.

23. En ce qui concerne les paragraphes supplémentaires que nous proposons et, en particulier, celui qui porte le No 8 et dont le représentant du Ghana vient de parler, nous estimons ce dernier absolument indispensable. En effet, à l'heure actuelle, le point essentiel consiste à savoir comment mettre en pratique la décision prise de liquider le colonialisme et de libérer les peuples coloniaux et dépendants. L'additif que nous proposons fournit une directive pour la décision et fixe un délai limite pour une solution positive de ce problème.

24. Nous savons, certes, que les points de vue sur cette question sont divergents, même au sein du groupe de pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Nous pensons, néanmoins, que l'absence de ce point de vue commun ne doit pas empêcher les pays qui estiment que la liquidation du colonialisme est un problème à la fois actuel et urgent de voter en faveur de la proposition contenue dans l'amendement que nous avons soumis. En fin de compte l'honorable représentant du Ghana, en exposant son point de vue, qui reflétait celui de son gouvernement, a bien indiqué qu'à l'avis de ce dernier la fin du processus de liquidation du système colonial devrait se situer vers le début de 1962.

25. Par conséquent, entre notre proposition et le point de vue que défend le Gouvernement du Ghana, il n'y a, au fond, pas de divergence sérieuse. Certes, d'autres points de vue existent; mais nous estimons que le vote permettra de dégager nettement la position des pays qui sont intéressés à une très prompt liquidation du système colonial. C'est pourquoi nous ne pourrions, à notre grand regret, accéder à la demande du représentant du Ghana et nous insisterons sur la mise aux voix de nos deux amendements.

26. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée va maintenant procéder au vote. Nous sommes saisis de trois textes que je mettrai aux voix dans l'ordre suivant: en premier lieu, le projet de déclaration proposé par l'Union soviétique et contenu dans le document A/4502; en second lieu les amendements proposés par l'Union soviétique [A/L.328] au projet de résolution des 43 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6];

27. En ce qui concerne notre premier scrutin, qui portera sur le projet de déclaration présenté par l'Union soviétique, il a été demandé ce matin [946ème séance] que ce projet fasse l'objet d'un vote par division. L'Assemblée voterait d'abord sur la partie de la déclaration qui commence par les mots: "... les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies proclament solennellement les exigences suivantes", et se poursuit par les paragraphes 1, 2 et 3. Nous voterons ensuite sur le reste du projet de déclaration. Enfin, l'Assemblée votera sur l'ensemble du projet de déclaration.

28. Je mets maintenant aux voix la partie du projet de déclaration de l'Union soviétique [A/4502] commençant par les mots "... les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies proclament solennellement les exigences suivantes" et se poursuivant par les paragraphes 1, 2 et 3.

29. Le vote par appel nominal a été demandé.

30. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je vais maintenant mettre aux voix le reste du projet de déclaration soviétique. Par 43 voix contre 25, avec 29 abstentions, le reste de la déclaration est rejeté.

31. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Aucune des parties du projet de déclaration n'ayant été approuvée par l'Assemblée, il est sans doute inutile que nous procédions à un vote sur l'ensemble.

32. Je vais maintenant inviter l'Assemblée à se prononcer sur les amendements proposés par la délégation soviétique (A/L.328) au projet de résolution des 43 puissances. Un vote par appel nominal a été demandé pour chacun des paragraphes du document A/L.328. Je vais donc mettre aux voix immédiatement le premier de ces deux paragraphes, à savoir le paragraphe 8.

34. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): L'Assemblée va maintenant se prononcer sur le projet de résolution des 43 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6].

Par 89 voix contre zéro, avec 9 abstentions, le projet de résolution est adopté^{1/}.

35. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Un certain nombre de représentants ont exprimé le désir d'expliquer leur vote. Je donne la parole au premier orateur inscrit, le représentant du Canada.

36. M. NESBITT (Canada) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je désire expliquer le vote de ma délégation sur le projet de résolution des 43 puissances sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux peuples coloniaux.

37. La délégation canadienne a favorablement accueilli l'initiative des auteurs de ce projet de résolution, en faveur duquel elle a été très heureuse de voter. Elle y voit l'occasion de féliciter l'Organisation des Nations Unies elle-même d'une réalisation qui doit avoir, pour les Nations Unies et tous les peuples, la valeur d'un encouragement bien mérité. C'est un événement digne d'être noté que 43 pays, n'ayant pas tous connu le colonialisme, se soient entendus pour soumettre une résolution de cette portée, concernant un sujet qui n'est nullement à l'abri des controverses.

38. Une résolution de cette longueur et de cette importance comprend inévitablement des passages qu'à première vue on eût préféré voir présenter sous une forme différente. Aussi sommes-nous reconnaissants à ceux de ses auteurs qui ont pris la peine d'en expliquer ou d'en interpréter divers passages. Nous nous réjouissons, par exemple, d'avoir entendu certains d'entre eux nous dire qu'il n'entraînait nullement dans leur intention de condamner tous les Etats qui ont possédé des colonies ou en possèdent encore. Le Canada démentirait tout un passé de colonisation s'il ne disait pas que l'association entre deux pays, même si elle n'a pas été fondée sur l'égalité dès le début, ne peut souvent que comporter des avantages pour l'un et l'autre pays. Une douzaine d'orateurs en ont porté témoignage au cours des présents débats.

39. Toutefois, lorsque cette harmonie disparaît, les avantages disparaissent également et l'ensemble du système colonial ancien est voué à disparaître, comme nous le voyons disparaître sous nos yeux.

40. Quoi qu'il en soit, l'histoire aussi a ses droits et ses prérogatives, dont aucune puissance ne peut la déposséder. Que l'on veuille interrompre son cours par une intervention trop imprudente ou précipitée, et elle prendra sa revanche. Nous n'avons pas besoin de chercher bien loin pour en voir des exemples.

41. Nous notons donc avec soin ce que dit la résolution. Elle dit: toutes les colonies doivent être libérées. Elle ne dit pas — et plusieurs de ses auteurs y ont bien insisté: toutes les colonies et tous les territoires doivent être libérés sans attendre, indépendamment des circonstances et de leur état d'évolution, indépendamment aussi de leurs préférences. La résolution ne cherche à forcer aucun peuple, contre son vœux et ses intérêts, à accepter une forme déterminée de gouvernement, ou de relations avec d'autres pays. Elle ne cherche pas non plus à priver un territoire de son droit à demeurer lié à un autre pays, si tel est son désir. Agir de la sorte serait contraire aux principes dont la Quatrième Commission a déjà recommandé l'adoption par l'Assemblée, après avoir examiné le rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte [A/4526].

42. En votant en faveur de ce projet de résolution, la délégation canadienne a été heureuse de se joindre aux auteurs de ce texte, aux nombreuses délégations qui lui ont donné leur appui, ainsi qu'à celles des puissances administrantes qui ont montré qu'elles adhéraient à ces principes.

43. Je voudrais maintenant expliquer brièvement pourquoi la délégation canadienne a voté contre le projet de déclaration présenté par la délégation soviétique dans le document A/4502. Les auteurs du projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] avaient bien précisé dans leurs déclarations à l'Assemblée qu'ils entendaient que la question de l'indépendance des colonies et territoires sous tutelle restât complètement à l'abri des rivalités des grandes puissances et demeurât soustraite à leurs visées politiques. Nous avions espéré que la délégation soviétique tiendrait compte du désir louable et évident des auteurs du projet, et s'abstiendrait d'exiger un vote sur sa déclaration conçue en termes incendiaires. A tout le moins avions-nous espéré que la délégation soviétique ne saisisait pas cette occasion pour se livrer à une opération de propagande.

44. Contrairement à cette attente raisonnable, la délégation soviétique, dans chacune de ses interventions, a attaqué les puissances administrantes de façon outrancière, parfois avec violence, presque toujours avec injustice. Nous croyons donc opportun de rappeler certaines paroles prononcées ici même, au début de la séance, par le Premier Ministre du Canada. M. Diefenbaker invitait le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'URSS, qui se pose en libérateur des peuples coloniaux, "... à donner aux nations qui sont sous sa domination le droit à des élections libres et la possibilité de choisir, de manière véritablement libre, la forme de gouvernement qu'elles désirent" [871ème séance, par. 197]. En agissant ainsi, M. Khrouchtchev ferait vraiment la preuve de son désir de voir "définitivement éliminé le régime colonial, sous toutes ses formes et manifestations". Telles sont quelques-unes des raisons qui ont incité ma délégation à voter contre le projet de déclaration soviétique.

M. Hasan (Pakistan), vice-président, prend la présidence.

45. M. ORMSBY-GORE (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation a suivi avec la plus grande attention le long débat qui s'est déroulé sur une question qui est pour nous d'importance essentielle. Une part considérable des obligations que nous avons à l'égard de la communauté internationale concerne les territoires d'outre-mer qui restent sous notre administration. Ces obligations relèvent de deux sections de la Charte des Nations Unies; elles sont de nature diverse, mais se proposent le même objectif. Il s'agit du Chapitre XI, relatif aux territoires non autonomes, et des Chapitres XII et XIII, relatifs aux territoires sous tutelle.

46. Le débat a prouvé que la manière dont nous nous acquittions de ces obligations rencontre à l'ONU une compréhension, voire une approbation, très générale. La mesure dans laquelle les peuples de ces territoires, avec notre aide, peuvent réussir à faire naître des nations nouvelles, non divisées, fortes et réellement indépendantes, nous paraît d'une importance essentielle tant pour le bonheur futur de ces peuples que pour le progrès et le bien-être de l'humanité entière. C'est dans cet esprit que nous avons abordé le débat.

47. Un grand nombre des auteurs du projet de résolution des 43 puissances qui vient d'être adopté par l'Assemblée ont bien précisé, dans leurs déclarations, que leurs objectifs fondamentaux étaient les mêmes que les nôtres. En fait, ce sont ceux qui figurent dans la Charte des Nations Unies. Pour cette raison, nous aurions voulu pouvoir voter en faveur de la déclaration, et notamment parce que, comme l'ont dit certains de ses auteurs, celle-ci doit recevoir une application universelle et doit viser toutes les formes — ce sont les termes mêmes de la résolution — de "subjugation, de domination et d'exploitation étrangères" dont ceux qui les pratiquent essaient d'éviter les critiques de l'opinion publique mondiale.

48. Mais, devant une question d'une aussi grande importance, nous avons cru nécessaire d'examiner de très près le libellé de la résolution. Or, nous avons dû conclure, non sans regret, qu'à certains égards sa rédaction ne nous permettait pas de l'appuyer. Pour une question qui nous intéresse si vivement, nous aurions été disposés à entamer des discussions avec les auteurs au sujet de cette rédaction. Nous croyons que, si cela avait été possible, nous aurions pu faire certaines suggestions, inspirées de notre propre expérience, qui n'auraient aucunement nui à l'objectif fondamental de la déclaration, et nous auraient permis de l'accepter.

49. La majorité des peuples auxquels s'appliquent les Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte vivent sur des territoires sous administration du Royaume-Uni. Nous sommes donc particulièrement intéressés à veiller que notre position sur les questions dont traite la déclaration ne soit pas mal comprise. C'est ainsi qu'à notre sens le paragraphe 1 de la déclaration n'est absolument pas applicable aux habitants des territoires que nous administrons puisqu'il s'agit d'une domination et d'une exploitation étrangères contraires à la Charte des Nations Unies, alors que l'administration britannique des territoires non autonomes respecte strictement les dispositions pertinentes de la Charte. J'aurais voulu que les auteurs eussent rendu plus explicite cette idée dans le paragraphe 1. Tel qu'il est, le texte peut se prêter, semble-t-il, à une fausse interprétation.

50. La déclaration contient également d'autres paragraphes qui ne peuvent en aucune façon s'appliquer à des territoires dont le Royaume-Uni est responsable. Il en est ainsi, par exemple, du septième paragraphe du préambule qui est ainsi conçu: "Convaincue que le maintien du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération économique internationale, entrave le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples dépendants ..." La politique du Royaume-Uni à l'égard des territoires relevant de son administration respecte strictement l'Article 73 de la Charte. En vertu de cet article, nous sommes tenus d'assurer le progrès politique, économique et social, ainsi que l'éducation des peuples non autonomes, et de favoriser la coopération avec les organismes internationaux afin d'atteindre ces objectifs dans la pratique. Nous le faisons, et la manière dont nous le faisons est bien connue. Divers organes des Nations Unies ont pu le constater à maintes reprises.

51. Toutes les délégations ici présentes savent, par exemple, quelle est la participation des territoires relevant de l'administration britannique aux travaux d'organes tels que la Commission économique pour l'Afrique. Le développement d'organes de coopération internationale aussi importants n'a pas été gêné par le fait que ces territoires ne sont pas encore pleinement indépendants. De même, le progrès social, culturel et économique se réalise régulièrement dans les territoires qui nous sont confiés, par l'effort conjugué de leurs populations et de la Puissance administrante.

52. Ma délégation regrette la critique implicite contenue dans ce paragraphe — et aussi dans d'autres — concernant la politique que nous poursuivons conformément à nos obligations découlant de la Charte. De même, nous pensons que la déclaration aurait pu, à divers endroits, insister davantage sur les responsabilités positives de ceux qui administrent encore des territoires non autonomes. Nous reconnaissons, par exemple, que l'insuffisance de préparation dans les divers domaines, mentionnée au paragraphe 3, ne devrait pas servir de prétexte — et lorsque je dis prétexte, j'entends ce que l'un des auteurs a dit, c'est-à-dire "l'absence délibérée de préparation" — pour retarder l'indépendance. Mais nous partageons aussi l'avis des auteurs de la résolution qui ont demandé que des mesures constructives soient prises en matière politique, économique, sociale et culturelle en vue de préparer l'indépendance et afin que celle-ci, lorsqu'elle sera acquise, ait un sens concret. Nous pensons que la déclaration aurait pu être améliorée si l'on y avait fait figurer ces points de vue positifs.

53. D'autre part, ma délégation estime que le paragraphe 2 de la déclaration n'est pas à sa place dans ce contexte. Le Royaume-Uni accepte naturellement sans réserve le principe de libre détermination énoncé par la Charte elle-même et nous croyons avoir fait, au cours des 15 dernières années, pour l'application de ce principe, autant que toute autre délégation présente à cette assemblée. Toutefois, l'Assemblée n'aura pas oublié les difficultés qui ont surgi à propos de la discussion du projet des pactes internationaux relatifs aux droits de l'homme et lorsqu'il s'est agi de trouver une définition universellement acceptable du droit de libre détermination. Ces difficultés n'ont pas encore été complètement résolues par l'Assemblée, et nous croyons qu'il aurait été préférable de ne pas tenter de le faire maintenant, dans un contexte assez différent.

54. Certains des auteurs de la déclaration ont dit, en parlant du paragraphe 5, qu'il s'agissait là d'un paragraphe clef; ils ont souligné qu'en vertu de ce paragraphe, des mesures immédiates doivent être prises en tant que préparatifs nécessaires en vue de transférer définitivement les pouvoirs aux habitants des territoires, et qu'il ne devrait y avoir, à cet égard, aucun retard volontairement imposé. La délégation du Royaume-Uni partage entièrement ce sentiment. Nous aurions cependant souhaité que ce paragraphe, lui aussi, fût rédigé avec plus de clarté. La méthode employée et la cadence à laquelle seront franchies les étapes qui mènent à l'indépendance sont des questions dont les peuples doivent décider eux-mêmes, en accord avec la puissance administrante. Les conditions particulières à chaque territoire sont différentes et aucun modèle ne peut être imposé de l'extérieur pour s'appliquer à tous. A cet égard, l'intervention du représentant de l'Australie, dans laquelle il a exposé les problèmes que connaît la Nouvelle-Guinée [933ème séance], mérite d'être étudiée de très près, notamment par ceux qui, comme le représentant de l'Union soviétique, ont profité du débat pour ressasser des slogans politiques usés, révélant par là même une ignorance stupéfiante de la question.

55. Pour toutes les raisons que je viens d'indiquer, ma délégation s'est abstenue lors du vote sur ce projet de résolution. Nous considérons néanmoins comme un grand succès que 43 délégations aient pu se mettre d'accord sur une question aussi controversée. Nous tenons à rendre hommage aux délégations qui, nous le savons, n'ont ménagé ni leur temps ni leur peine pour élaborer un texte capable de recueillir un aussi large appui. Nous tenons notamment à les féliciter d'avoir pu présenter un texte qui, en dépit des imperfections que nous y constatons encore, a réussi à dégager la question de l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les peuples et pays coloniaux du langage tendancieux et stérile employé dans le projet de déclaration de l'Union soviétique qui a été repoussé par l'Assemblée. Je ne pense pas que l'Assemblée s'attende que je me livre à des commentaires sur l'extraordinaire collection de contrevérités que contiennent les discours prononcés par le représentant de l'Union soviétique en diverses occasions, et en particulier le 7 décembre. Quiconque connaît la situation politique en Afrique orientale, par exemple, sait combien est mensongère la description qu'il en a faite. Les aspirations des peuples d'Afrique ne sont pas du tout celles qui nous ont été dépeintes par M. Zorine, qui n'a d'ailleurs aucune qualité pour être le porte-parole de ces peuples. Une fois de plus, les amendements soumis par sa délégation ont prouvé combien il était mal placé pour parler au nom de ces populations et combien il lui reste encore à apprendre des véritables problèmes en cause.

56. Nous sommes fiers du travail que nous accomplissons en coopération avec les habitants des territoires que nous administrons. Nous les aidons de toutes nos forces et par tous les moyens dont nous disposons à créer des nations nouvelles, prospères et libres. Nous nous tournons vers l'avenir et non vers le passé, vers cet avenir où des nations nouvelles et fortes prendront leur place dans la communauté mondiale, sans avoir à redouter ni les luttes intérieures ni les pressions extérieures.

57. Au cours du présent débat, l'un des auteurs du projet de résolution a cité un paragraphe du rapport du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes qui s'achève par la phrase suivante:

"Le Comité est convaincu que la certitude qu'elles pourront décider elles-mêmes de leur sort encouragera les populations des territoires non autonomes à redoubler d'efforts pour se préparer un avenir de plus grande prospérité par une période de transition aussi paisible et fructueuse que possible."
[A/4371, 2ème partie, par. 25.]

58. Nous partageons cette confiance et nous sommes reconnaissants à tous les membres de l'Assemblée qui éprouvent également ce sentiment et qui ont fait preuve de compréhension à l'égard de la politique que poursuit le Royaume-Uni en vue d'atteindre le plus rapidement possible cet avenir prospère.

59. M. SCHURMANN (Pays-Bas) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ma délégation a voté en faveur du projet de résolution présenté par 43 pays d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6]. Nous l'avons fait parce que nous approuvons entièrement les principes contenus dans ce projet. Ce sont eux qui nous guident dans l'administration du seul territoire non autonome dont nous ayons la charge.

60. Notre accord avec les principes énoncés dans le projet de résolution ne signifie pas que nous acceptons sans réserve sa rédaction; encore que nous soyons convaincus que l'indépendance favorisera l'évolution de la coopération économique internationale et le développement social, économique et culturel, nous ne croyons pas que le seul fait de la dépendance constitue nécessairement une entrave au progrès. En tant que Puissance administrante, nous essayons de tout mettre en œuvre pour favoriser ces diverses formes de développement en Nouvelle-Guinée néelandaise, car tel est, à nos yeux, la tâche qui nous incombe en fait aux termes de l'alinéa de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

61. Je pourrais citer d'autres exemples de passages dont la rédaction laisse un peu à désirer, mais le fait que nous ayons voté en faveur du projet de résolution dans son ensemble montre qu'ils n'avaient pas pour nous une importance décisive; je n'y reviendrai donc pas.

62. Toutefois, ce que nous ne pouvons accepter, c'est la déduction tirée par un des orateurs, au cours de la discussion, du paragraphe 6 de la déclaration. Dans ce paragraphe, nous voyons réaffirmer les termes de l'Article 2, paragraphe 4, de la Charte des Nations Unies. A ce titre, nous lui donnons naturellement notre entier appui et notre pleine approbation, mais nous ne pouvons concevoir par quel curieux raisonnement le représentant de l'Indonésie aurait pu déduire des termes du paragraphe 6 de la déclaration que le droit à la libre détermination devrait être accordé à tous les peuples du monde, à la seule exception des populations qui vivent dans la partie occidentale de l'île, c'est-à-dire en Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise. Une telle affirmation est contraire à la Charte et n'est assurément fondée sur aucun passage de la résolution.

63. M. HERRARTE (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: En appuyant le projet de résolution présenté par les puissances d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6], ma délégation avait soumis des amendements [A/L.325] tendant à ce que le principe de la libre détermination n'affecte en aucun cas le droit à l'intégrité et aux revendications territoriales d'un Etat quelconque. Cette réserve nous était apparue indispensable, parce qu'il y a beaucoup de territoires en litige ou réclamés par d'autres Etats comme partie intégrante de leur territoire national, et qui sont indûment possédés par des puissances coloniales; la solution à ces conflits ne peut être trouvée dans le principe de la libre détermination, parce que l'on attenterait alors à un principe aussi important que celui de l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays.

64. Il est vrai que le paragraphe 6 de la résolution contient une déclaration très nette ainsi conçue: "Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies." Cependant, ma délégation avait jugé opportun de préciser davantage son point de vue au moyen des amendements que nous avons présentés. Mais, étant donné les déclarations formulées par plusieurs des auteurs interprétant les termes du paragraphe 6, et compte tenu également de la demande formulée par le représentant de l'Indonésie, ma délégation ne s'est pas opposée au retrait de ses amendements, étant entendu que les droits qu'elle se propose de défendre sont dûment protégés par le paragraphe 6 de la résolution.

65. Nous sommes très satisfaits que le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie ait été approuvé à une majorité aussi écrasante. En tout état de cause, ma délégation tient cependant à déclarer que l'approbation de cette résolution n'affecte en rien les droits légitimes que le Guatemala a toujours revendiqués à l'encontre du Royaume-Uni concernant le territoire de Belize. L'occupation de ce territoire n'est rien de plus qu'une séquelle de la vieille piraterie britannique sur les côtes de l'Amérique centrale et représente simplement le triomphe de la force sur le droit.

66. A cette occasion, je tiens à rappeler que le Guatemala, à la Conférence de San Francisco, a formulé d'expresses réserves à l'égard de ses droits lorsque nous avons discuté de la question du régime international de tutelle^{2/} ou les rapports soumis par les puissances chargées de l'administration des territoires non autonomes. Ces réserves, nous les avons réaffirmées devant l'Assemblée générale, au Conseil de tutelle et dans les diverses commissions des Nations Unies chaque fois que cela est devenu nécessaire.

67. La République du Guatemala a observé la même attitude à l'occasion des diverses conférences panaméricaines qui ont traité de l'abolition du colonialisme, idée à laquelle nous avons apporté notre appui le plus chaleureux et le plus enthousiaste. A la Conférence de Chapultepec tenue en 1945, au cours de laquelle les Etats américains ont approuvé les principes de la Charte de l'Atlantique^{3/}, mon pays a formulé des réserves expresses^{4/} aux termes desquelles le principe de la libre détermination ne saurait en rien affecter le droit territorial du Guatemala à l'égard de Belize, territoire qui fait l'objet d'un différend.

68. En conséquence, ma délégation affirme que le projet de résolution que nous venons d'adopter ne saurait en rien affecter les territoires faisant l'objet de litiges ou de revendications.

69. M. PERERA (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Dans sa déclaration du 28 novembre dernier [926ème séance], la délégation de Ceylan a exposé sa position à l'égard des documents A/L.323 et A/4502. Aujourd'hui, la délégation de Ceylan a voté pour les deux parties du projet de déclaration soviétique relatives à l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples colonisés. Nous acceptons sans réserve chacun des mots contenus dans la déclaration de l'Union soviétique et figurant au document A/4502. La délégation de Ceylan s'est abstenue dans le vote sur le premier des amendements présentés par la délégation de l'Union soviétique dans le document A/L.328 au projet de résolution des 43 pays d'Asie et d'Afrique, et ce pour les raisons suivantes.

70. Tout d'abord, au paragraphe 5 du projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, nous avons, dans une certaine mesure, traité des questions évoquées dans le premier paragraphe proposé dans les amendements soviétiques. En second lieu, nous nous sommes abstenus parce que nous avons constaté que le premier paragraphe ne s'appliquait peut-être pas à toutes les questions qui pourraient se présenter à l'avenir. Je songe en particulier — ce qui est parfaitement conforme à l'intervention faite le 28 novembre par le représentant de Ceylan — au fait que nous devons non seulement nous garantir contre les puissances coloniales qui existent toujours dans le monde, mais encore sauvegarder la position des pays colonisés au cas où les puissances coloniales chercheraient à maintenir et à perpétuer le colonialisme.

^{3/} Voir Acte final de la Conférence interaméricaine sur les problèmes de la guerre et de la paix, Mexico, 21 février-8 mars 1945 (Union panaméricaine, Washington [D. C.], 1945), résolution XII, p. 64.

^{4/} Ibid., Déclaration du Guatemala, p. 124.

Selon le représentant de Ceylan, bien que le principe contenu au premier paragraphe de l'amendement soviétique puisse être bon, cet amendement en lui-même n'allait pas assez loin.

71. En un mot, le Gouvernement de Ceylan a adopté, quant au fond du premier amendement soviétique, une position plus révolutionnaire que les auteurs de cet amendement. En expliquant son vote, la délégation de Ceylan affirme que ce texte pourrait constituer une entrave à certains droits communs à tous les peuples colonisés.

72. Je ne veux pas évoquer maintenant de questions qui sont encore débattues par la Première Commission de l'Assemblée, mais je dirai que toute tentative faite par un groupe de puissances coloniales, ou par une seule de ces puissances, en vue de perpétuer le colonialisme signifierait également qu'à l'avenir le fait de la conquête donnerait aux peuples colonisés le droit à la rébellion. A cet égard, le Gouvernement de Ceylan va plus loin que le premier paragraphe proposé dans le document A/L.328.

73. C'est la raison pour laquelle la délégation de Ceylan s'est abstenue sur ce paragraphe. Permettez-moi néanmoins d'ajouter que nous sommes entièrement d'accord avec l'Union soviétique sur les principes qui y sont exprimés et que nous nous féliciterions si les peuples colonisés, par l'intermédiaire de leurs représentants élus, pouvaient négocier avec leurs maîtres coloniaux ou avec les puissances coloniales. Mais nous défendons aussi le principe: "Pacificquement si possible, par la force si c'est nécessaire". En un mot, nous affirmons que le droit de conquête donne aux peuples le droit de rébellion et non point simplement celui de négocier.

74. Pour ces diverses raisons, nous nous sommes abstenus sur le premier paragraphe des amendements soviétiques, mais nous avons voté en faveur du deuxième paragraphe, qui tend à inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour de la seizième session. En bref, nous l'avons fait parce que nous pensons qu'une telle attitude est conforme aux principes contenus dans le document A/4502. Qu'il me soit permis de répéter ici que la délégation de Ceylan accepte chaque mot du projet de déclaration soviétique parce qu'il faut "clouer au pilori" les puissances coloniales — si je puis m'exprimer ainsi.

75. C'est pourquoi nous avons voté comme nous l'avons fait et, tandis que j'explique mon vote, je saisis cette occasion pour dire que le Gouvernement de Ceylan, par l'intermédiaire de sa délégation, exprime à l'Union soviétique sa gratitude pour avoir pris l'initiative de faire inscrire cette question à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session.

76. M. ZORINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Plus de deux mois se sont écoulés depuis le jour où le chef du Gouvernement soviétique, M. Khrouchtchev, a soumis à l'examen de l'Assemblée générale une déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, et a invité tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à adopter une décision quant à l'abolition immédiate du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations [869^{ème} séance].

77. Une telle proposition constituait un moyen puissant de mobiliser toutes les forces de l'anticolonialisme. Une large discussion s'est instaurée autour de cette proposition; plus de 70 délégations y ont pris part. Il est extrêmement significatif, qu'à l'exception d'un groupe très insignifiant de puissances coloniales et de leurs acolytes, une écrasante majorité de représentants soit intervenue pour condamner le colonialisme et exiger sa liquidation complète et immédiate. Le débat au sein de l'Organisation des Nations Unies de la question de la libération de tous les peuples et pays coloniaux montre qu'à l'heure actuelle, dans le monde, se sont formées et groupées des forces considérables qui s'opposent au honteux régime colonial. A l'heure actuelle, l'équilibre des facteurs politiques, économiques et militaires est tel que les puissances coloniales ne peuvent plus conserver sous leur domination leurs possessions coloniales et ne sont plus en mesure d'empêcher la banqueroute du système colonial. Il s'est créé une situation qui permettrait la liquidation du régime colonial par des moyens pacifiques, si tous les Etats et toutes les forces qui sont en faveur de la liberté et de l'indépendance des peuples colonisés s'unissent et agissent en bonne harmonie contre les efforts des puissances coloniales, visant à maintenir leur domination sur des territoires et des peuples étrangers.

78. C'est en tenant compte de ce rapport réel des forces que l'Union soviétique a pris cette initiative à l'Organisation des Nations Unies et a sollicité tous les Etats de se prononcer pour la solution pacifique de la question et pour l'adoption, dans le cadre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de mesures susceptibles de favoriser la liquidation complète du régime colonial. La déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, que l'Assemblée vient d'adopter, est une grande victoire du front uni des forces de l'anticolonialisme représentées à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Il est intéressant de noter que seules huit puissances coloniales — le Portugal, l'Espagne, la Belgique, l'Union sud-africaine, l'Australie, le Royaume-Uni, la France et les Etats-Unis — n'ont pas approuvé cette déclaration, encore que ces pays n'aient pas osé, en face du puissant front anticolonialiste, s'opposer ouvertement à sa validation. Le monde entier voit maintenant qui, en réalité, est en faveur de la liquidation du honteux régime colonial et qui s'y oppose.

79. La délégation soviétique déclare sa satisfaction de voir que l'écrasante majorité des Etats Membres de l'ONU a appuyé les dispositions de principe essentielles contenues dans le projet soviétique de déclaration, et qui se sont trouvées également reflétées dans le texte de la déclaration que l'Assemblée générale vient d'adopter. Nous sommes heureux aussi du fait que 32 délégations aient appuyé par un vote positif tous les paragraphes du dispositif du projet de déclaration soviétique, tandis que 29 délégations ont voté en faveur de la proposition soviétique sur l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les pays et à tous les peuples coloniaux, au plus tard en 1961.

80. Le fait que 41 délégations aient jugé nécessaire de poser à la seizième session de l'Assemblée générale la question de la mise en œuvre de la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée montre que le problème se posera inévitablement à la seizième session. Tout le déroulement de la discussion sur cette question confirme que la façon dont l'Union soviétique a posé le problème de la liquidation du colonialisme à l'Assemblée générale se justifiait parfaitement. Le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, déposé par l'Union soviétique, a joué un rôle direct et positif dans la prise de position et dans la préparation de conditions permettant d'adopter la solennelle déclaration de l'Organisation des Nations Unies sur la liquidation du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations. Ce projet soviétique est un document d'importance historique et un programme d'action pour les peuples des pays coloniaux; il sera le symbole de l'appui que toutes les forces pacifiques donnent au mouvement de libération nationale des colonies et appellera tous les peuples à mettre fin sans délai au colonialisme, à effacer de la face du monde le monstrueux phénomène qui déshonore le XXème siècle.

81. M. NINCIC (Yougoslavie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je désire expliquer brièvement les votes exprimés par ma délégation sur les projets de résolution dont l'Assemblée générale était saisie.

82. Ma délégation a voté pour la partie du document A/4502 qui nous a semblé contenir la déclaration proprement dite. Nous nous sommes abstenus de voter sur le reste du document, qui à notre avis était purement explicatif, et parce qu'un vote affirmatif aurait pu créer un précédent. C'est pourquoi nous n'avons pas cru possible d'accepter chaque mot du texte ainsi rédigé, même si nous n'avons rien trouvé à redire à son contexte général. Si le document avait été mis aux voix dans son ensemble, notre vote aurait naturellement été affirmatif.

83. Ma délégation a également voté en faveur du projet de résolution des 43 puissances, qui, à notre avis, répondait aux exigences fondamentales de la situation, et dont l'adoption à une majorité écrasante constatée il y a quelques instants constitue à notre avis un événement aussi heureux qu'important.

84. Nous avons également voté pour les amendements soviétiques à ce projet de résolution, qui à notre avis l'auraient considérablement renforcée.

85. M. JHA (Inde) [traduit de l'anglais]: La déclaration qui vient d'être adoptée est un jalon de première importance dans l'histoire des réalisations de l'ONU. Je crois que, dans l'avenir, les historiens y verront une des plus nobles résolutions que l'Organisation ait adoptées et peut-être aussi le résultat le plus prometteur de la présente session de l'Assemblée. Elle sera une source d'inspiration pour chacun, et pour les peuples qui sont encore sous la domination coloniale, en leur donnant espoir et confiance non seulement en eux-mêmes, mais encore dans l'ONU. Nous sommes également convaincus qu'elle contribuera à accélérer de façon considérable le processus de libération des peuples non autonomes.

86. Je prends la parole pour quelques instants en vue d'expliquer le vote de ma délégation sur le projet de déclaration contenu dans le document A/4502, ainsi que sur les amendements présentés par l'Union soviétique dans le document A/L.328.

87. Ma délégation a voté en faveur des trois paragraphes portant les numéros 1, 2, 3 du projet de déclaration contenu dans le document A/4502. Ces paragraphes ne contenaient rien qui fût contraire aux opinions ou aux positions du Gouvernement de l'Inde. En fait, nous y avons trouvé tout ce que mon pays défend depuis la naissance de l'ONU, ainsi que les opinions exprimées par les dirigeants responsables du Gouvernement indien. Nous avons donc appuyé de tout cœur ces trois paragraphes.

88. En ce qui concerne le reste de ce document, nous tenons à dire que nous sommes entièrement d'accord sur une très grande partie du texte qu'il contient. On y trouve en effet des idées d'une grande noblesse et d'une parfaite élévation. Je n'en citerai que ces quelques lignes:

"Nous habitons tous la même planète. C'est sur elle que nous sommes nés, que nous travaillons, que nous élevons nos enfants et que nous leur transmettons ce que nous avons réalisé dans la vie... Tous les hommes naissent citoyens égaux en dignité."

Voilà une noble déclaration et nul — à tout le moins dans ma délégation — n'hésitera un instant à l'accepter et à voter pour elle.

89. Ainsi que je l'ai dit, nous sommes entièrement d'accord sur la plus grande partie de ce projet de déclaration. Mais voter pour un projet de déclaration de cette nature — que constitue un événement historique dans les annales de l'ONU — signifierait que l'on souscrit à chacun de ses mots, et il nous a paru un peu difficile de le faire parce que certains passages, certaines pensées ou certaines façons de les exprimer ne correspondaient pas entièrement à la position et à l'attitude traditionnelles du Gouvernement de l'Inde. Aussi nous a-t-il été impossible de voter en faveur de cette partie du texte et c'est la raison pour laquelle nous nous sommes abstenus.

90. Quant aux amendements contenus dans le document A/L.328, nous nous sommes abstenus lors du vote sur le premier amendement, qui aurait constitué le nouveau paragraphe 8 du projet de résolution présenté par les 43 puissances. Au nom de ma délégation, je tiens à préciser que nous sommes en faveur de la libération immédiate et de l'émancipation de tous les peuples non autonomes. Nul ne serait plus heureux que nous de voir s'achever le régime colonialiste sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations à la fin de 1961 au plus tard, afin que le monde devienne, à cette date, entièrement libre. Toutefois, au cours des discussions très longues et très approfondies qui ont précédé les votes et qui ont été menées avec un sens aigu des responsabilités et de l'importance du document à voter, il nous a paru nécessaire de suivre une voie un peu différente. Nous avons estimé en effet que la résolution devrait garder la forme d'une déclaration de principes qui constituerait une source d'inspiration éternelle susceptible d'être utilisée et citée en tout temps. Aussi, à notre sens, toute limitation de ces principes, par l'adjonction d'une date au paragraphe proposé, ne pourrait-elle qu'infirmier le principe fondamental qui a inspiré la résolution.

91. D'autre part, nous avons estimé qu'à certains égards le paragraphe 8 proposé — qui représente un progrès en ce sens qu'il fixait une date limite, la fin de 1961, à la réalisation de l'indépendance — constituait une certaine restriction au paragraphe clef, c'est-à-dire au paragraphe 5 du projet de déclaration présenté par les 43 puissances, lequel déclare sans ambiguïté:

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve..."

Il nous a semblé en effet que l'idée de négociations qui apparaît dans le paragraphe 8 proposé constituait, en quelque sorte, une limitation, puisque qui dit négociations dit conditions ou réserves possibles. Or, la pensée qui a inspiré le paragraphe 5 — du point de vue de ma délégation tout au moins — et qu'il n'y a rien à faire, qu'aucun prétexte n'est plus permis pour retarder l'accès à l'indépendance des peuples non autonomes. Il ne reste donc plus qu'à prendre des mesures immédiates, conformément aux principes démocratiques, cela va de soi. A cet égard, aucun retard n'est plus permis, et aucune négociation ne peut servir de prétexte pour éviter que de telles mesures ne soient prises. Celles-ci pourraient même signifier l'indépendance immédiate, autrement dit une indépendance qui pourrait même avoir lieu avant la fin de 1961. C'est pourquoi, tout en appréciant à sa juste valeur l'esprit qui animait le paragraphe 8 proposé, nous avons pensé qu'il était de notre devoir, en qualité d'auteur du projet de résolution des 43 puissances et compte tenu de l'idée qui inspirait le paragraphe 5 de ce texte, de nous abstenir au sujet du paragraphe 8 proposé dans le document A/L.328.

92. Nous n'avons éprouvé aucune hésitation à voter en faveur du deuxième amendement soviétique, car nous estimons que tout ce problème ne peut rester en suspens. Quant à la question de l'application de cette résolution, elle doit être examinée, sous une forme ou une autre, par l'Assemblée générale pendant la seizième session.

93. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Le représentant de l'Indonésie a demandé à exercer son droit de réponse.

94. M. PALAR (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ce n'est pas seulement pour user du droit de réponse que j'ai pris la parole. Ma délégation désire également expliquer son vote sur les amendements soumis par l'Union soviétique dans le document A/L.328.

95. Ma délégation a participé de façon très active à l'élaboration du projet de résolution des 43 puissances. Nous avons estimé que cette résolution constituait un heureux compromis entre des opinions fort éloignées les unes des autres. Il nous a fallu à peu près quatre semaines pour l'élaborer. On comprendra donc que ses auteurs aient éprouvé quelque difficulté à accepter des amendements. En fait, nous étions fort enclins à faire nôtres les amendements présentés par l'Union soviétique, mais, comme je l'ai déjà expliqué, nous avons estimé qu'il ne serait pas très utile d'accepter des amendements à notre résolution quels qu'ils soient. C'est aussi la raison pour laquelle nous avons essayé de convaincre le représentant du Guatemala de retirer ses propres amendements.

96. Je voudrais user maintenant de mon droit de réponse à l'égard du représentant des Pays-Bas.

97. Celui-ci s'est efforcé d'interpréter à sa façon le paragraphe 6 de notre déclaration. En fait, la délégation néerlandaise a essayé de nous prouver qu'elle savait mieux que les 43 auteurs du projet de résolution ce qu'ils souhaitaient en déposant cette résolution. Nous avons quelque expérience de l'habilité avec laquelle les Néerlandais interprètent les résolutions et les accords. J'aimerais attirer l'attention de l'Assemblée sur ce qui s'est passé entre les Pays-Bas et l'Indonésie il y a environ 15 ans, lorsque nous avons conclu un accord avec eux. Il s'agissait de l'Accord de Linggadati, dont une disposition stipulait que, si les parties n'étaient pas d'accord sur son interprétation, les divergences d'opinions devraient faire l'objet d'un arbitrage. A l'époque, j'étais membre du Parlement néerlandais et j'ai constaté avec stupeur que le Parlement et le Gouvernement hollandais réussissaient à se convaincre que la disposition relative à l'arbitrage ne signifiait nullement que l'on doit avoir recours à l'arbitrage. En fait, ils sont parvenus à se convaincre que, bien que l'Accord de Linggadati contînt une disposition sur l'arbitrage, ils n'étaient pas tenus d'accepter cette procédure.

98. C'est là une interprétation à laquelle les Pays-Bas nous ont habitués. Nous comprenons qu'ils se soient efforcés de tirer le meilleur parti possible de l'inexpérience de l'Indonésie, mais nous sommes surpris de voir, aujourd'hui, le représentant des Pays-Bas monter à cette tribune pour prétendre nous donner une interprétation du projet de résolution qu'ont présenté en commun 43 membres de cette assemblée. Il semble que le représentant des Pays-Bas sache mieux que nous-mêmes ce que nous voulons. Comment faut-il qualifier ce genre d'attitude? Disons simplement que c'est une attitude hollandaise.

99. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Avant de donner la parole au prochain orateur, je dois vous informer que le représentant du Dahomey m'a fait savoir qu'il ne lui avait pas été possible de prendre part au vote, mais désire qu'il soit mentionné au procès-verbal que, s'il avait été présent, il aurait voté pour le projet de résolution des 43 puissances [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6].

100. Je donne maintenant la parole au représentant du Portugal.

101. M. GARIN (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais expliquer brièvement le vote de la délégation portugaise. Nous avons suivi avec beaucoup d'attention le débat sur le colonialisme qui s'est déroulé au sein de l'Assemblée générale. Nous approuvons bien des opinions qui se sont exprimées en cette occasion. Ainsi que l'ont souligné nombre d'orateurs, l'aspect le plus déplorable du colonialisme est le complexe de supériorité raciale, de subjugation des peuples à des fins politiques ou idéologiques et d'exploitation économique. A l'exception de quelques rares délégations, nous sommes certains que personne, dans cette assemblée, ne défendrait cet aspect du colonialisme, et ma délégation moins encore que les autres. Nous nous associons donc à tous ceux qui désirent voir disparaître cette sorte de néo-colonialisme impitoyable qui s'exerce à l'intérieur d'un grand Etat ainsi qu'aux dépens de certaines nations qui ont perdu leur indépendance au cours de ces dernières années, ou qui ne jouissent que d'une indépendance toute symbolique.

102. Pour ce qui est des territoires sous tutelle et des autres territoires au sujet desquels des obligations internationales ont été souscrites, il est assurément souhaitable que les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies soient appliqués, compte tenu des circonstances propres à chaque cas et également des nécessités du moment, afin que les mesures prises ne puissent, en aucune manière, nuire aux intérêts bien compris de chacun.

103. Ma délégation a étudié avec soin le projet de résolution et les amendements déposés. Un débat prolongé et détaillé a eu lieu ici, mais nous estimons cependant que ces textes n'ont pas été suffisamment discutés et débattus, étant donné l'importance toute particulière de la question. C'est ainsi que le projet de résolution que vient d'approuver l'Assemblée ne nous paraît tenir compte ni de la complexité de tous les problèmes traités dans ce cadre, ni de leurs répercussions éventuelles. Bien des conséquences et bien des réalités pratiques n'ont été ni prises en considération, ni placées dans la perspective qui leur convient, et il n'a pas été tenu compte de certains aspects politiques, économiques ou autres qui peuvent surgir ultérieurement.

104. De même, nous avons entendu ici les dirigeants de quatre ou cinq pays nous parler d'un nouveau type de colonialisme, qui est le système politique et économique le plus détestable que le monde ait jamais connu et qui a entraîné la subjugation et l'oppression de nombreux pays qui ont été ainsi livrés à la tyrannie. Ma délégation aurait pensé que ce type de colonialisme aurait dû, lui aussi, être condamné dans le projet de résolution adopté par l'Assemblée, car un effort dans ce sens aurait servi l'intérêt de l'humanité entière. Toutefois, l'Assemblée en a jugé autrement et le texte qu'elle a adopté a ainsi perdu le sens et la portée universels qu'il aurait pu avoir.

105. Au cours du débat, enfin, des attaques dénuées de tout fondement et de toute justification ont été lancées contre mon pays, certaines délégations se donnant le plus grand mal pour lui reprocher des principes et des conceptions qui n'ont rien à voir avec ce débat et qui n'y avaient pas leur place. Nous rejetons catégoriquement ces accusations; mais le fait qu'elles aient été proférées a éveillé dans notre esprit des doutes qui n'ont pas été dissipés par la suite du débat.

106. Pour toutes ces raisons, et compte tenu de la déclaration que j'ai eu l'occasion de faire au cours des débats [934ème séance], ma délégation a jugé nécessaire de s'abstenir lors du vote.

107. M. SHAWARBI (Yémen) [traduit de l'anglais]: Le Gouvernement du Yémen est convaincu qu'il est nécessaire de prendre toutes les mesures propres à octroyer la pleine indépendance à tous les peuples du monde. Notre délégation a donc voté en faveur du projet de résolution contenu dans le document A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6 qui prévoit que des mesures immédiates soient prises pour transférer tous les pouvoirs aux peuples de tous les territoires non autonomes et pour garantir l'intégrité territoriale et les droits de tous les pays.

108. M. OWONO (Cameroun): La délégation de la République camerounaise n'a pas besoin d'expliquer le vote favorable qu'elle a apporté au projet de résolution présenté par les délégations d'Afrique et d'Asie [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6] puisqu'elle a parrainé cette résolution. La quasi-unanimité du vote est suffisante et souligne éloquentement l'importance de ce fait historique qui illustre la nécessité absolue d'une communauté de vues sur la recherche des solutions aux problèmes africains. S'il était encore besoin de le souligner ici, ce vote démontrerait que les besoins de l'Afrique et des pays africains ainsi que de tous les pays intéressés ne peuvent être bien analysés, recensés et étudiés que par les Africains et les intéressés eux-mêmes et que, malgré toute leur bonne volonté, tous les non-Africains ne peuvent avoir sur les problèmes qui nous concernent que des vues différentes des nôtres et ne peuvent qu'adopter des méthodes non applicables à notre continent et à notre population.

109. L'ovation qui a salué le vote se passe de commentaires.

110. Je voudrais ajouter quelques mots afin d'expliquer le vote de ma délégation sur le projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502] et les amendements soviétiques [A/L.328] au projet de résolution des puissances d'Afrique et d'Asie. Nous n'avons pas voulu demander que l'on procède de la façon qui me semblait le mieux permettre d'exprimer son opinion sur l'objet de ce projet de déclaration. Nous avons estimé en effet que les travaux de cette assemblée tiraient à leur fin, qu'il restait encore des décisions à prendre sur des problèmes importants, que les débats relatifs à cette déclaration avaient assez duré et qu'il ne fallait plus traîner sur des questions de procédure. S'il n'en avait pas été ainsi, nous aurions demandé que l'on considère séparément chacun des trois paragraphes numérotés de la déclaration soviétique. Ma délégation aurait eu de bonnes raisons de souhaiter la séparation du vote sur ces points particuliers.

111. Le premier des paragraphes numérotés est le suivant:

"1. Accorder sans délai à tous les pays coloniaux, territoires sous tutelle et autres territoires non autonomes, l'indépendance complète et la liberté d'édifier leurs propres Etats nationaux conformément à la volonté et aux aspirations librement exprimées de leur peuple. Le régime colonial et l'administration coloniale sous toutes ses formes doivent être entièrement supprimés afin de permettre aux peuples de ces territoires de décider eux-mêmes de leur sort et de leur régime politique."

Cette partie de la déclaration soviétique est conforme aux vues de la délégation camerounaise; c'est pourquoi nous aurions souhaité qu'un vote soit demandé à l'Assemblée sur ce point précis. Ma délégation aurait approuvé ce paragraphe, sauf en ce qui concerne les mots du début "sans délai" que nous aurions demandé de supprimer. Je m'expliquerai plus loin à ce sujet, à propos de l'amendement soviétique.

112. Le deuxième paragraphe numéroté se lit comme suit:

"2. Eliminer également tous les points d'appui du colonialisme sous la forme de possessions et de zones cédées à bail en territoire étranger."

Si un vote séparé avait été pris sur ce paragraphe, ma délégation se serait abstenue en raison des termes: "cédées à bail en territoire étranger". Ainsi que je l'ai déjà expliqué, ma délégation estime que ni les Nations Unies ni personne au monde ne peuvent apprécier un bail ou un contrat fait dans un pays étranger. Nous nous serions donc abstenus si un vote avait été pris sur ce point précis.

113. Ma délégation aurait voté en faveur du troisième paragraphe numéroté de la déclaration soviétique. Malheureusement, elle n'a pas été soumise à un vote séparé; c'est pourquoi, il ne nous a pas été possible d'exprimer les vues de notre gouvernement sur ce point.

114. Nous nous sommes abstenus au cours du vote sur le projet de déclaration soviétique, car nous estimions que le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie résumait, d'une façon générale, le point de vue soviétique et que, d'autre part, il n'était pas possible à un pays qui avait parrainé une résolution présentée par toutes les puissances intéressées de se dissocier des vues qu'il avait déjà exprimées.

115. En ce qui concerne les amendements de l'Union soviétique (A/L.328), ma délégation aurait demandé également que l'on supprime la deuxième partie du paragraphe 8, qui se lirait comme suit:

"Invite les puissances intéressées à assurer, dans tous les territoires dépendants, la transmission du pouvoir absolu et souverain au peuple, conformément aux principes énoncés ci-dessus, et à entamer à cette fin des négociations avec les représentants des peuples coloniaux."

Je me serais arrêté là et j'aurais demandé de soumettre au vote cette première partie du paragraphe 8. Ma délégation se serait prononcée en faveur de ce paragraphe, car, ainsi que je l'ai déjà dit à propos du paragraphe 1 du projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502], elle estime que les mots "sans délai" et le mot "négociations" ne peuvent aller ensemble.

116. De même que nous avons été obligés de nous abstenir dans le vote sur le projet de déclaration soviétique à cause des mots "sans délai" du paragraphe 1, nous avons été forcés de le faire dans le vote sur l'ensemble du paragraphe 8 des amendements soviétiques à cause de la deuxième partie du texte de ce paragraphe. En effet, nous n'avons pas réussi à demander qu'un vote séparé soit pris sur la première partie de ce paragraphe où il est demandé que soient entamées des négociations. Le Gouvernement camerounais est favorable aux négociations; il a applaudi à l'admission de 17 nouveaux Etats Membres africains et asiatiques au sein de cette organisation lors de cette session de l'Assemblée et l'accession à l'indépendance de ces Etats a été consécutive à des négociations. Ma délégation aurait voté en faveur des négociations parce que celles-ci auraient conduit inévitablement à l'indépendance et à la souveraineté des peuples africains.

117. Je voudrais maintenant expliquer pourquoi nous avons voté en faveur du paragraphe 9 des amendements soviétiques:

"Décide d'examiner à sa seizième session ordinaire la question de l'application de la présente résolution."

La délégation camerounaise a estimé que, quelle que soit la décision de l'Assemblée, cette question devra être examinée à l'avenir par notre organisation. Elle a appuyé cet amendement parce qu'elle a estimé que, même si un texte comme celui-ci n'avait pas été adopté dans notre projet, de toute façon cette question serait réinscrite à l'ordre du jour de la seizième session de l'Assemblée et qu'il était tout indiqué que notre projet de résolution contienne des dispositions permettant de porter des appréciations sur le texte que nous avons adopté presque à l'unanimité.

118. Telles sont les raisons qui ont conduit ma délégation à s'abstenir dans le vote sur le projet de déclaration et sur les amendements soviétiques, en déterminant simplement notre vote sur un point qui a été mis aux voix séparément.

119. Pour conclure, je dirai que le Gouvernement camerounais et moi-même sommes profondément convaincus que le résultat du vote sur le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie démontre d'une façon absolument irréfutable que tout ce qui pourra être fait en Afrique sera voué à l'échec si les Africains ne sont pas consultés et si la possibilité ne leur est pas offerte d'exprimer leurs vœux et d'indiquer de quelle manière ils entendent qu'ils soient réalisés.

120. M. ROSSIDES (Chypre) [traduit de l'anglais]: Nous estimons que le projet de résolution auquel nous nous sommes associés traitait de façon tout à fait satisfaisante le problème de la domination étrangère et du colonialisme, dont la population de Chypre a eu une longue expérience. Nous nous sommes donc abstenus de voter sur toute autre déclaration ou sur tout amendement à notre projet de résolution, sauf en ce qui concernait sa mise en œuvre.

121. Jusqu'ici, la présente session s'était surtout signalée par son inefficacité. En effet, aucun accord n'était intervenu sur aucune des questions examinées. Aucun résultat fructueux n'avait donc été obtenu. Cette inefficacité avait même donné lieu à des plaisanteries: ne parlait-on pas de la "Commission inactive" et de la "Commission spéciale inactive"? Mais le projet de résolution qui vient d'être adopté pour ainsi dire à l'unanimité compense largement d'autres carences. Il rachète la session et la place très haut dans les annales de l'ONU. Par cette résolution, des idéaux et des notions qui ont toujours vécu dans l'esprit et dans le cœur de l'homme, et au nom desquels on a livré des guerres, prennent une forme concrète et vont se réaliser pacifiquement. Il y a là un fait historique de première importance. Cette résolution a un retentissement immense. L'histoire inscrira cette session, par son importance, immédiatement après la première session fondant l'Organisation des Nations Unies, car le document qui vient d'être adopté peut être placé aussitôt après la Charte des Nations Unies et la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, qui lui servent de base et auxquelles il insuffle une vie nouvelle et bien nécessaire.

122. Cette résolution met fin à un long chapitre de l'histoire; celui de la domination par la force, la subjugation et l'exploitation. Une nouvelle étape commence, fondée sur l'égalité et la fraternité des hommes. Nous pouvons donc, avec modestie, être fiers de la résolution qui vient d'être adoptée à la quasi-unanimité.

123. M. AMMOUN (Liban): L'explication qui m'appelle à la tribune est relative au vote de ma délégation sur le projet de déclaration de l'Union soviétique. Nous avons voté les trois paragraphes numérotés dudit projet parce qu'ils condamnent le colonialisme en tous lieux et dans toutes ses manifestations. Nous y voyons, au premier chef, la condamnation d'une manifestation nouvelle et surnoise du colonialisme: le sionisme colonialiste.

124. Comment un certain délégué d'Israël ose-t-il le nier quand on voit une patrie enlevée à ses habitants par une violence brutale et occupée par des gens ramassés un peu partout et venant de tous les coins du monde? Tandis que ces étrangers occupent le pays qu'ils ont envahi, tout un peuple reste sans foyer et sans patrie. Le colonialisme en Asie...

125. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Le représentant d'Israël a la parole pour une motion d'ordre.

126. M. COMAY (Israël) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais demander au Président s'il est permis, au titre de l'article 90 du règlement intérieur — explication de vote — à une délégation expliquant son vote sur un projet de résolution de se livrer à des attaques renouvelées contre un autre Etat Membre. Je rappelle que cette attaque a déjà eu lieu et que, dans l'exercice de son droit de réponse, ma délégation y a brièvement répliqué, à la fin du débat sur ce point de l'ordre du jour et avant le moment du vote ou des explications de vote.

127. Il me semble donc que, conformément au règlement, et en vue de mettre un terme aux débats, il serait utile que le Président déclare irrecevable toute nouvelle attaque du genre de celle à laquelle j'ai déjà eu l'occasion de répondre aujourd'hui.

128. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je prie le représentant du Liban de bien vouloir se limiter à expliquer son vote.

129. M. AMMOUN (Liban): L'explication de vote que je donne concerne un texte auquel ma délégation n'a pas collaboré. Le Liban a présenté à l'Assemblée, avec d'autres pays de toutes les parties du monde, un projet de résolution qui a été adopté [A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6]. Mais mon explication porte sur un autre texte qui a été soumis par une autre délégation et qui se rattache à des points au sujet desquels je dois donner des explications étant donné que j'ai voté ce texte nouveau. Avec la permission du Président, je continue donc l'explication de ce vote de ma délégation en faveur du projet de déclaration soviétique [A/4502].

130. Je disais que le colonialisme en Asie et en Afrique entre bien, tout de même, dans le domaine du colonialisme. Ce colonialisme en Asie et en Afrique occupe ou a occupé des régions sans en déposséder les habitants, sans faire main basse sur tout ce qui leur appartenait. Ces habitants redeviennent aujourd'hui indépendants et maîtres de leur pays. Tel n'a pas été le cas dans un autre pays colonisé et c'est toujours le sujet qui m'occupe. Il s'agit de la Palestine, ce pays qui non seulement a été occupé, mais dépouillé, non pas uniquement de ses biens, mais même de ses habitants. Et le délégué que vous avez entendu a été assez effronté pour nier qu'il s'agit de colonialisme, alors que nous sommes en présence d'un colonialisme double, pour ainsi dire, puisqu'il enlève au pays et sa souveraineté et son territoire. Non seulement le délégué a nié les faits, mais il a démenti, sans s'en douter, un certain personnage que tout Juif respecte, qui a été le fondateur même du sionisme, il y a 100 ans, et qui, comme on le sait, suppliait la Grande-Bretagne de l'aider à constituer en Palestine un foyer national juif afin que ce pays — la Palestine — devienne, comme il disait, une tête de pont du colonialisme européen en Asie.

131. Malheureusement, si le colonialisme a disparu ou disparaît de l'Asie, la tête de pont est restée, et c'est là précisément ce qu'il faut expurger de la vie.

132. Deuxièmement, la condamnation du colonialisme par le texte soviétique, en faveur duquel ma délégation a voté, condamne la manifestation de ce mal endémique qu'est la discrimination raciale. Les dénégations effrontées du représentant d'Israël ou même des délégués qui l'ont précédé peuvent-elles cacher une réalité qui saute aux yeux? En effet, Israël est un Etat juif. Par conséquent, par une logique implacable, tout non-Juif est un ressortissant d'une autre qualité. N'est-il pas juif l'Etat dans lequel la question de savoir si les Juifs de l'Exode étaient 6.000, ou 60.000, ou 600.000 est l'objet d'un débat parlementaire et où le chef du gouvernement, M. Ben Gourion, qui a osé s'exprimer différemment de certains autres partis politiques en interprétant la Bible, se trouve en butte à une interpellation et même, dirai-je, peut-être à une question de confiance? Est-ce là un Parlement ou un temple juif? Il est parfaitement juste, en effet, de nous poser cette question.

133. L'Etat israélien juif étant ce qu'il est, tout non-Juif est, en effet, traité en citoyen de seconde zone, un gentil disaient autrefois les Juifs. Nous sommes à nouveau au temps de la gentilité. C'est cette manifestation nouvelle du colonialisme que condamne le texte soviétique que nous avons voulu voter.

134. Troisièmement, enfin, les délégués israéliens ont protesté avec véhémence quand on a expliqué comment l'invasion et la colonisation de la Palestine avaient eu lieu. Ils ont protesté, notamment, contre l'accusation d'avoir appliqué aux populations des Lieux saints des procédés dignes d'Hitler. Ce ne sont pas les Arabes qui ont comparé les procédés israéliens à ceux d'Hitler, il y a 10 ans. Cela s'est passé en 1948, au Conseil de sécurité, et celui qui parlait ainsi n'était pas un délégué arabe. Celui qui a été soulevé par les honteux procédés juifs et qui a dit que les Juifs, en Palestine, avaient été...

135. M. COMAY (Israël) [traduit de l'anglais] (parlant de sa place): Motion d'ordre.

136. M. AMMOUN (Liban): J'ai terminé, Monsieur le Président.

137. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Puisque le représentant du Liban a terminé, je donne la parole au représentant d'Israël pour une motion d'ordre.

138. M. COMAY (Israël) [traduit de l'anglais]: Ce que je peux faire de plus indulgent à l'égard de la déclaration qui vient d'être faite, c'est de la répudier entièrement et de rappeler les paroles que j'ai prononcées ce matin [946ème séance] en réponse à la déclaration faite antérieurement par la même délégation.

139. Ma délégation a pleinement appuyé le projet de résolution proposé par un groupe de pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. Nous nous félicitons de constater que ce projet de résolution a été adopté à une majorité écrasante. Ce résultat exprime bien le changement spectaculaire qui se produit à notre époque dans le monde. Nous croyons qu'il est de l'intérêt bien compris des peuples assujettis eux-mêmes que l'accession à l'indépendance et, autant que possible, le transfert de pouvoirs se fassent de manière concertée et dans l'ordre, et non pas dans des conditions de chaos et de conflit.

140. C'est pour cette raison que nous avons voté contre les propositions qui insistaient catégoriquement pour que tous les territoires non autonomes deviennent indépendants immédiatement, voire avant la fin de 1961. La rédaction plus souple, plus réaliste, du projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6 nous a semblé meilleure, notamment parce que ce texte constitue le terrain d'entente auquel sont parvenus les auteurs eux-mêmes dans leurs discussions.

141. Nous avons voté, d'autre part, contre une déclaration qui mêlait l'octroi de la liberté aux peuples colonisés aux controverses de la guerre froide. Tel n'est pas l'intérêt de ces peuples, et ce n'est pas ce qu'ils veulent.

142. M. WADSWORTH (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais expliquer l'attitude des Etats-Unis à l'égard du projet de résolution des 43 puissances, qui vient d'être adopté sans opposition, et exposer la raison pour laquelle nous nous sommes abstenus lors du vote. Les Etats-Unis, ainsi que je l'ai dit dans mon intervention précédente au cours de ce même débat [937ème séance], appuient chaleureusement l'intérêt et le sésir que manifestent les Nations Unies en vue d'assurer une liberté plus grande aux peuples du monde entier. L'appui que nous donnons à la liberté a sa source dans les convictions profondes du peuple américain. C'est pourquoi nous avons accueilli avec faveur la résolution présentée par 43 délégations qui nous semblaient avoir pour objectif la réalisation des libertés humaines au sens le plus large.

143. La motion de liberté humaine, ainsi que le précise bien la résolution, ne s'applique pas seulement aux peuples qui s'acheminent vers l'autonomie ou l'indépendance sous l'administration d'une autre puissance, mais également à ceux qui désirent vivre dans le cadre des institutions libres qu'ils ont choisies et qui voient ce désir brutalement réprimé. La liberté est vraiment indivisible.

144. La résolution présente des difficultés dans sa rédaction et dans sa conception, et j'en parlerai avec plus de précision dans un moment. Ces difficultés nous ont empêchés d'appuyer le texte, qui nous a paru démentir certaines dispositions évidentes de la Charte des Nations Unies. Nous regrettons profondément que ces questions de terminologie n'aient pu être mises au point, car les Etats-Unis, je l'ai déjà dit, approuvent l'appui que l'Organisation des Nations Unies, conformément à la Charte, accorde à la recherche par tous les peuples d'institutions politiques et de formules gouvernementales répondant à leur droit de vivre dans la dignité et la liberté.

145. Ce qui est clair, toutefois, c'est que cette résolution s'applique au même titre à toutes les régions du monde qui ne sont pas libres, qu'elles soient situées dans l'hémisphère occidental, en Afrique, en Asie ou en Europe. Elle évoque la liberté par contraste avec la subjugation, la domination et l'exploitation étrangères. Le texte proclame que tous les peuples ont le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes, et il condamne le colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations. Les Membres de l'ONU ne seraient pas fidèles à leur mandat et à leurs responsabilités selon la Charte s'ils n'examinaient pas le sort de certains peuples auxquels s'appliquent, de toute évidence, les dispositions de la Charte et celles de la nouvelle résolution. Je parle de façon précise des peuples qui vivent sous la domination coloniale soviétique et dont j'ai brièvement évoqué le sort dans ma précédente intervention.

146. Nous avons rencontré des difficultés, je l'ai dit, dans la rédaction et dans la conception de cette résolution. C'est ainsi qu'on comprend mal pourquoi une résolution portant sur un sujet aussi vaste doit garder un silence absolu sur le rôle important qu'ont joué les autorités administrantes — y compris mon propre gouvernement — dans l'évolution des peuples dépendants vers l'autonomie ou l'indépendance.

147. La résolution insiste également avec force sur l'indépendance complète comme seul but acceptable, méconnaissant ainsi les dispositions de la Charte qui prévoient l'autonomie de certaines régions dans un cadre politique plus large. Cette constatation résulte du titre de la résolution et de nombreux de ses paragraphes. C'est ainsi que l'avant-dernier paragraphe du préambule, par exemple, fait état du droit inaliénable de tous les peuples à une complète liberté, c'est-à-dire, semble-t-il, à une indépendance complète dans tous les cas.

148. Pour notre part, nous devons nous demander s'il est sage de souscrire à des principes qui, dans certains cas, donneraient lieu à une fragmentation politique inutile et iraient à l'encontre des réalités économiques et politiques dans de nombreuses régions du monde. Une autonomie démocratique complète, dans le cadre d'un système politique plus large et stable, constitue parfois un objectif immédiat plus intéressant qu'une pleine indépendance politique.

149. Après avoir examiné avec soin les principaux aspects de cette résolution, nous sommes parvenus à la conclusion que les paragraphes 3, 4 et 5 risquent de donner lieu à de graves erreurs d'interprétation, capables de provoquer des malentendus profonds quant à l'attitude des gouvernements ici représentés sur la nécessité de préparer dans l'ordre et efficacement l'autonomie ou l'indépendance, conformément aux dispositions de la Charte. Encore que nous soyons certains que telle n'était pas l'intention des auteurs, le libellé du paragraphe 3 permet de supposer que la préparation à l'indépendance n'a aucune importance. Or, préparer de façon appropriée un pays à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance est une affaire de prudence élémentaire et constitue une responsabilité qui doit être acceptée par ceux qui ont la charge des peuples non autonomes. Il est essentiel que les peuples naissants soient raisonnablement en mesure d'assumer les responsabilités auxquelles ils devront faire face. D'autre part, nous n'accepterons jamais que de fausses allégations portant sur la préparation politique, économique, sociale ou culturelle soient utilisées pour retarder le progrès politique.

150. Le paragraphe 4, rédigé sans nuances, semble même exclure toutes les mesures légitimes qui viseraient à maintenir l'ordre public, ce qui est incompatible, on le conçoit, avec les obligations qu'ont les puissances administrantes envers les peuples dont elles ont la charge.

151. Quant au paragraphe 5, on y trouve une déclaration extrêmement vigoureuse selon laquelle seules une indépendance et une liberté complètes constituent un objectif politique acceptable pour les peuples non autonomes. Ce paragraphe prévoit aussi des mesures immédiates pour le transfert de tous les pouvoirs aux peuples des territoires sous tutelle et des territoires non autonomes, sans conditions ni réserves.

152. L'œuvre accomplie par les Etats-Unis dans l'émancipation des peuples placés sous leur administration est connue de tous, et nous en sommes fiers. Nous avons déjà beaucoup agi, nous agissons encore et nous continuerons d'agir, conformément à nos responsabilités internationales découlant de la Charte et aux responsabilités que nous avons assumées envers les peuples placés sous notre administration. Comme beaucoup d'Etats Membres de l'ONU, nous considérons que les dispositions des Chapitres XI et XII de la Charte, qui traitent expressément des territoires non autonomes et des territoires sous tutelle, concernent également les territoires dont nous avons la responsabilité. Le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis continuera donc de faire progresser ces territoires et leurs populations vers l'autonomie ou l'indépendance, conformément aux dispositions de la Charte et aux obligations que nous avons assumées en vertu de l'Accord de tutelle pour le Territoire sous tutelle que nous administrons.

153. Je voudrais vous rappeler une déclaration empreinte d'une haute sagesse, faite à cette tribune, par le représentant de l'Inde. Exposant la position de sa délégation à propos d'une autre question, il a déclaré: "Nous ne pensons pas que nous pourrions donner à ce texte notre appui sans réserve, si nous ne pouvions en approuver chacun des termes." C'est la raison principale pour laquelle les Etats-Unis ont cru devoir s'abstenir dans ce scrutin. Je suis sûr néanmoins que le respect dont les Etats-Unis témoignent à l'égard des principes de liberté humaine et des progrès politiques sera jugé à leurs actes passés, présents et futurs, en faveur de la cause de la liberté. Je suis sûr que la valeur de notre adhésion à ces principes sera appréciée d'après nos actes eux-mêmes et non d'après l'image déformée que d'autres en présentent ou en présenteront.

154. Le projet de résolution soumis par la délégation soviétique, avec l'insistance que l'on sait, ne pouvait rien ajouter d'utile au texte des 43 pays, que nous savions devoir être adopté sans opposition. Nous regrettons que le représentant de l'URSS ait persisté à demander sa mise aux voix, de même que l'amendement soviétique au projet de résolution des 43 puissances. Etant donné l'impérialisme et le colonialisme dont l'URSS a donné des exemples notoires au cours de son histoire relativement brève, et notamment depuis la seconde guerre mondiale, ç'eût été une duperie que d'adopter la proposition soviétique sur cette question. En conséquence, nous avons voté contre elle.

155. M. BENABOUD (Maroc): Toutes les déclarations et résolutions relatives à l'éradication du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes suivent le courant normal de l'histoire et répondent toutes, sans exception, au vœu de l'humanité entière pour l'avènement et la consolidation du règne de la liberté concrète et réelle. C'est pourquoi nous avons voté en faveur du projet de déclaration proposé par l'Union soviétique [A/4502], surtout eu égard aux trois paragraphes numérotés. Bien entendu, l'essentiel des dispositions contenues dans cette déclaration se retrouvent à peu près dans le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie

[A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6]. Nous sommes heureux de l'adopter sans opposition aucune de ce dernier document.

156. Nous avons voté en faveur du projet de déclaration proposé par l'Union soviétique pour que notre action contribue à la disparition définitive de l'esclavage, ouvert ou camouflé, de l'homme par son semblable. Cependant, s'il ne convient pas, à cette heure tardive, de faire une longue énumération des raisons de notre vote, ils nous paraît important de dire une seule de ces raisons.

157. Les trois paragraphes numérotés de la déclaration de l'Union soviétique mentionnent l'indépendance réelle et non fictive, complète et sans ambages, l'élimination des points d'appui du colonialisme, qui troublent aujourd'hui la sérénité de l'atmosphère internationale, le respect de l'intégrité territoriale.

158. Les mêmes principes sont mentionnés dans le projet de résolution des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie. En particulier, le paragraphe 6 explique très bien ce que notre délégation entend par intégrité territoriale. Lorsque nous avons discuté ce document et accepté d'en être un des auteurs, nous avons présenté à la mémoire une longue liste d'exemples de partage et de démembrement de l'unité des territoires nationaux. Je me limiterai à mentionner trois de ces exemples.

159. Il y a, premièrement, la tentative, que nous espérons infructueuse et vaine, de démembrement du Congo, en particulier au Katanga.

160. Deuxièmement, je mentionnerai le triste démembrement de la Palestine et son occupation, que nous espérons temporaire et courte, par ce nouveau phénomène de colonialisme étranger appelé le sionisme international.

161. Troisièmement, il y a les efforts, suivant la méthode douce et silencieuse des vipères, du colonialisme français en vue du partage du Maroc et du démembrement de son unité territoriale nationale, par la création d'un Etat artificiel dans la région du Sud marocain, appelée Mauritanie par le colonialisme. La population de cette région ne connaît même pas ce vocable de Mauritanie. Dites à un Bédouin de la région, dite Mauritanie, que vous êtes en Mauritanie: il ne comprendra pas votre langage. Dans cette région, on a créé de toutes pièces une minuscule capitale qui, jusqu'à maintenant, n'avait pas encore un seul hôtel. Une école nouvellement créée a même été transformée en local d'habitation.

162. La déclaration soviétique pour laquelle nous avons voté suit donc une voie semblable à celle suivie par la déclaration des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie demandant l'élimination radicale et totale du colonialisme, soit européen, soit sioniste, et de la balkanisation telle qu'elle se pratique en Afrique, au Moyen-Orient et ailleurs.

163. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): La liste des délégués désireux de prendre la parole pour expliquer leur vote est épuisée, et la discussion sur la "Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" est close. L'Assemblée peut se féliciter de cette réussite.

La séance est levée à 18 h 15.

Conformément aux principes élevés proclamés dans la Charte, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit se prononcer pour l'élimination immédiate et complète du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations.

Cette action deviendra l'un des grands fondements du développement de relations véritablement amicales entre tous les Etats et tous les peuples et, partant, l'une des grandes contributions à l'accomplissement de la noble tâche qui consiste à assurer une paix solide et durable dans le monde.

Fermement attaché au principe que l'Organisation des Nations Unies est un centre où s'harmonisent les efforts des nations vers les fins communes énoncées dans la Charte, le Gouvernement soviétique saisit l'Assemblée générale d'un projet de déclaration où sont proclamées solennellement les demandes suivantes :

1. Accorder sans délai à tous les pays coloniaux, territoires sous tutelle et autres territoires non autonomes, l'indépendance complète et la liberté d'édifier leurs propres Etats nationaux conformément à la volonté et aux aspirations librement exprimées de leurs peuples. Le régime colonial et l'administration coloniale sous toutes ses formes doivent être entièrement supprimés afin de permettre aux peuples de ces territoires de décider eux-mêmes de leur sort et de leur régime politique.

2. Eliminer également tous les points d'appui du colonialisme, à savoir les domaines et les zones cédées à bail en territoire étranger.

3. Les gouvernements de tous les pays sont invités à observer rigoureusement, dans les relations entre Etats, les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la présente Déclaration concernant l'égalité et le respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les Etats sans exception, et à n'admettre aucune manifestation du colonialisme, aucun droit ou privilège exclusif de certains Etats au détriment d'autres Etats.

Le texte du projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux est joint au présent mémoire explicatif¹.

Projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, présenté par le Président du Conseil des ministres de l'Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques à la 869^e séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale

[Texte original en russe]
[23 septembre 1960]

Les Etats qui composent l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont fondé leur Charte sur les idéaux élevés et humains de l'égalité des droits des nations et des peuples et de leur droit à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

Née au moment où s'achevait dans la victoire la seconde guerre mondiale, l'Organisation des Nations Unies concrétisait l'espoir qu'avec la barbarie et les crimes du fascisme et du militarisme disparaîtraient l'inégalité et l'asservissement de certaines nations et certains peuples par d'autres. Mais les espoirs des peuples ne se sont pas tous réalisés. Jusqu'à présent, le problème actuel si vital qu'est la libération complète de l'humanité du honteux régime colonial, hérité du passé, n'a pas été résolu.

Notre époque est celle de la rénovation rapide de la société, celle de l'établissement de modes de vie plus progressifs et plus justes, celle où la puissance de l'homme sur les forces de la nature prend un essor sans précédent. Le temps est venu de libérer entièrement et définitivement les peuples qui souffrent dans la servitude coloniale. C'est pourquoi les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies proclament solennellement leurs convictions, leurs intentions et leurs exigences en ce qui concerne l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

Les peuples qui en oppriment d'autres ne peuvent être libres. Tout peuple libre doit aider ceux qui sont encore opprimés à conquérir leur liberté et leur indépendance.

La grande renaissance des peuples asservis

La libération rapide et l'émancipation des pays et des peuples sont un phénomène significatif de notre temps. La génération actuelle a encore vu les deux tiers de la population mondiale vivre sous le régime colonial. A la fin de la première guerre mondiale, les chaînes de l'oppression coloniale et nationale sont tombées dans un certain nombre de pays. L'étendard de l'indépendance nationale, flottant haut sur le monde, est devenu aujourd'hui celui de centaines et de centaines de millions d'individus sur tous les continents du globe. Le temps est venu de la libération et de la renaissance des nations, des peuples et des tribus qui récemment encore étaient opprimés et écrasés. Des dizaines de nouveaux Etats ont rejoint la famille des pays indépendants. Les concepts démocratiques de l'égalité des droits des nations et de leur autodétermination deviennent des réalités.

Le mythe de l'incapacité des peuples coloniaux à gouverner, à créer, à construire s'est évanoui.

Aujourd'hui personne ne peut dire que les peuples d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine sont incapables de se gouverner. Des forces titanesques se sont réveillées pour construire une nouvelle vie indépendante avec un courage nouveau. Aujourd'hui le règlement des problèmes internationaux ne peut non plus se concevoir sans la participation de la République populaire de Chine, sans la participation des peuples libérés de l'Inde, de l'Indonésie, de la Birmanie, de Ceylan, de la République arabe unie, de l'Irak, du Ghana, de la Guinée et d'autres Etats petits et grands.

Personne ne peut plus dire aujourd'hui que la libération des nations et des peuples qui subissent le joug du colonialisme élargira la zone des conflits et des heurts entre nations. Au contraire, la libération nationale a élargi la zone de paix tandis que l'oppression coloniale et la politique colonialiste ont mené et mèneront à la guerre.

Personne ne peut plus affirmer aujourd'hui que la libération des nations conduirait à un recul de l'économie, du commerce, de l'artisanat ou de l'agriculture. Au contraire, l'expérience montre que c'est précisément la libération politique des peuples coloniaux et la création de nouveaux Etats indépendants qui ouvrent la voie à un essor véritable de l'économie nationale.

Personne n'ose affirmer aujourd'hui que la libération des peuples coloniaux opprimés aboutirait à un déclin de la culture. La vie montre que la libération est immédiatement suivie de la renaissance, de l'essor et de l'épanouissement de cultures nationales originales, de l'extension de l'instruction publique, d'une meilleure protection de la santé, de la formation de cadres nationaux qualifiés et de meilleures possibilités d'enrichissement pour la culture mondiale.

La libération des nations précédemment opprimées profite non seulement aux peuples de l'Est, mais aussi à ceux de l'Ouest. La cause de la liberté des peuples, de leurs relations sur un pied d'égalité et du maintien de la paix dans le monde s'en trouve consolidée.

Mais la liquidation du régime colonial n'est pas encore achevée.

Les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne peuvent accepter passivement que sur les terres anciennes d'Afrique et d'Asie, dans les îles d'Océanie, dans la région des Caraïbes, et ailleurs, plus de 100 millions d'hommes continuent à souffrir sous le joug colonial. Les peuples de ces pays ont droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance nationale; or ils sont toujours sans droits, enchaînés. Dans ces pays, règnent, comme par le passé, la violence et l'illégalité, la loi majeure y étant celle du profit réalisé par les étrangers, dont les intérêts priment tout, alors que les droits imprescriptibles de l'homme et du peuple ne comptent pour rien. Le pays aux mains d'administrateurs étrangers qui méprisent et rançonnent la population locale, les tribus persécutées, les coutumes nationales tournées en dérision, l'absence d'égalité pour les autochtones, qui se voient privés de certains droits, le mépris honteux de leurs intérêts vitaux, les atteintes à leur fierté nationale et à leur dignité d'êtres humains provoquent chez tout honnête homme une profonde indignation.

Dans ces pays, on entend siffler le fouet du garde-chiourne, et les têtes tombent sous la hache du bourreau.

Les peuples coloniaux ne veulent pas vivre dans l'esclavage et la dépendance; ils luttent pour leurs droits et leur indépendance, pour tout ce dont jouissent les autres peuples. Cependant, sur leur chemin se dressent les intérêts égoïstes des milieux impérialistes de l'Ouest, qui s'opposent aux justes aspirations des peuples. Les guerres coloniales, les expéditions punitives, le pillage auquel les monopoles se livrent ouvertement, les tribunaux militaires et les procès secrets, les réserves, les barrières de couleur, les prisons et les camps de concentration, telles sont quelques-unes des méthodes grâce auxquelles les colonialistes, officiels ou non, essaient d'étouffer tout ce qu'il y a de vivant, d'indépendant et de national dans les pays coloniaux.

La Conférence des Etats indépendants d'Afrique, réunie à Accra, a justement flétri tout cela, qu'elle a qualifié de fascisme colonial.

Ceux qui défendent l'ancien régime colonial espèrent encore en des mesures féroces de répression dans les colonies. Certes, ces mesures retardent la libération, mais la vie ne suit-elle pas son cours? La cruelle répression exercée pendant des dizaines d'années a-t-elle arrêté la libération de l'Indonésie; les massacres de dizaines et de centaines de milliers de personnes en Indochine y ont-ils sauvé la domination coloniale? Les crimes commis aujourd'hui contre les peuples d'Afrique peuvent-ils arrêter le processus irrésistible de libération des peuples africains?

Aucune force d'oppression et de despotisme ne peut maintenir un régime colonial qui a vécu. Quant aux victimes tombées sur le chemin de la liberté, on ne peut dire qu'elles soient mortes; non, elles vivent dans la mémoire des peuples, elles vivront éternellement en tant que héros de la lutte pour la libération nationale.

Le colonialisme est à l'agonie. Mais il peut, dans sa dernière heure, provoquer de nombreuses souffrances et faire maintes victimes, causer la perte de nombreuses vies humaines dans les colonies et dans les métropoles, détruire maintes richesses créées par le travail de plusieurs générations.

L'Organisation des Nations Unies s'adresse à tous les peuples de la terre et à tous les gouvernements leur demandant de ne pas rester passifs devant les souffrances des peuples coloniaux. Peut-on demeurer sourd aux gémissements du peuple du Kenya, où depuis huit ans se poursuit l'anéantissement de la population locale par les autorités coloniales, où cette population est enfermée dans des réserves, des prisons, des camps de concentration? Peut-on demeurer sourd aux souffrances du peuple d'Oman, victime d'une guerre d'invasion? Qui peut rester de sang-froid devant la répression incessante qui s'exerce sur les populations du Nyassaland, de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Rhodésie, du Ruanda-Urundi, du Sud-Ouest africain, du Tanganyika, de l'Ouganda, de l'Irian occidental?

Il est inadmissible qu'à notre époque, en un siècle de progrès et de très grandes découvertes dues à l'esprit scientifique, où le pouvoir de l'homme sur les forces de la nature s'est énormément développé, la France mène une guerre coloniale en Algérie, utilisant l'aviation, l'artillerie, les blindés, les bombes au napalm et autres moyens de destruction massive contre les Algériens, qui depuis près de six ans luttent avec un courage à toute épreuve pour la liberté et l'indépendance de leur patrie. Des centaines de milliers d'Algériens ont été exterminés de nombreuses villes et de nombreux villages ont été incendiés et détruits, un cinquième de la population du pays a été jeté dans des camps de concentration. De nombreux fils de la France meurent aussi pour une cause injuste.

Une telle situation peut-elle être tolérée plus longtemps? Non, elle ne peut l'être si l'on attache quelque prix à la noble cause de la paix et aux intérêts de l'humanité et du progrès.

Au nom de quoi mènent-ils des guerres meurtrières contre les peuples ceux qui ne veulent pas abandonner le régime colonial? Au nom de quoi réprime-t-on les aspirations des peuples asservis épris de liberté? On entend dire parfois que cela serait dans l'intérêt de la « civilisation » des pays peu développés, afin de les préparer à l'autonomie.

Mais c'est là un mensonge que l'on couvre des apparences de la vérité.

Quelle civilisation ont apporté cinq siècles de domination coloniale tyrannique aux pays africains de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée portugaise, dont la superficie est égale à plus de la moitié de celle de l'Europe occidentale et qui comptent 11 millions d'habitants? Ils leur ont apporté la misère et l'arbitraire, l'expropriation de terres arrosées par la sueur de nombreuses générations, l'expulsion des cultivateurs vers des régions stériles et arides.

L'arbitraire, la famine, l'ignorance et la maladie y sévissent, l'esclavage et le travail forcé y demeurent une réalité. Il n'y a pas un seul établissement d'enseignement supérieur et l'enseignement secondaire est presque inexistant.

Pourquoi le Portugal peut-il, de nos jours, maintenir ce régime d'arbitraire dans les colonies? Comment justifier cet état de choses?

Pendant un demi-siècle de domination coloniale belge, la population du Congo a diminué de plus de moitié en raison des expéditions punitives, de la famine et des maladies. Au moment de la proclamation de l'indépendance de la République du Congo, seuls quelques habitants savaient lire et écrire.

La situation n'est nullement meilleure dans d'autres colonies d'Afrique.

Certes, dans telle ou telle région de ces colonies, on a construit des routes, des aérodromes, des ports, des installations minières, quelques écoles. Mais tout cela sert à exploiter la population autochtone et à mettre les ressources naturelles des colonies au pillage.

Affirmer que le régime colonial est indispensable pour éviter les conflits et les guerres fratricides entre tribus et entre peuples, c'est mentir sciemment. Les événements du Congo montrent que le colonialisme vit par la discorde et les différends artificiellement suscités entre les tribus et les peuples. Il s'efforce d'affaiblir leur lutte commune pour la libération. La devise des puissances coloniales demeure « diviser pour régner ».

Que trouve-t-on sur l'étendard des pays d'Asie et d'Afrique qui luttent pour leur liberté nationale et leur indépendance ? On y trouve les principes de paix et d'unité de Bandoung et d'Accra.

Indifférents à la voix de la justice, les colonialistes s'efforcent de préserver des frontières arbitraires qui coupent en deux les peuples et les tribus et séparent des régions économiques d'Afrique qui aspirent à se réunir, ils s'efforcent de détruire l'unité et l'intégrité territoriale de nombreux pays.

L'indépendance des pays et des peuples coloniaux est un impératif de notre époque

L'Organisation des Nations Unies s'adresse aux peuples et aux gouvernements où que se trouvent leurs pays — à l'est ou à l'ouest, au nord ou au sud — pour poser une question que la vie elle-même soulève aujourd'hui : le régime colonial, en état de décomposition, répond-il aux idéaux des peuples et aux possibilités de notre temps ?

Il n'est que de comparer le développement au cours du siècle dernier des pays indépendants d'Europe ou d'Amérique du Nord et celui des pays coloniaux d'Afrique, pour voir clairement que la voie du colonialisme est celle de la régression, celle de la mort lente, de la destruction et de la dégradation des pays asservis par la force.

A l'époque où, dans les pays économiquement développés, l'industrie, les transports, l'agriculture, la science et la culture ont atteint un niveau élevé, où sont apparus les navires propulsés par l'énergie atomique, où des corps célestes artificiels ont été lancés dans l'espace extra-atmosphérique, l'Afrique, pays aux richesses fabuleuses, reste en arrière et devient un continent de la faim ; les principaux instruments agricoles y sont, comme il y a des milliers d'années, la houe, l'araire et des bâtons pointus, et des façons culturales primitives y conduisent à l'épuisement et à l'érosion des sols.

Un véritable abîme sépare aujourd'hui les Etats indépendants à l'industrie hautement développée et les pays coloniaux, et pourtant l'Asie et l'Afrique ont été le berceau de grandes civilisations qui ont enrichi la culture et la civilisation des autres peuples.

En réalité, l'objectif principal du régime colonial est de procurer d'énormes profits aux grands monopoles étrangers qui se sont emparés des positions économiques clefs dans les colonies, et d'extraire par tous les moyens des richesses et des valeurs matérielles. C'est pourquoi toute l'économie des colonies est une économie d'exploitation. Subordonnée avant tout aux intérêts étroits et aux besoins des marchés de divers pays plus développés industriellement, elle progresse lentement, de façon anormale et unilatérale.

Ce n'est qu'après la libération du Ghana que l'on a admis que son avenir ne dépendait pas de la seule production du cacao, mais de la création d'une industrie moderne, utilisant largement ses immenses ressources hydro-électriques et ses très riches dépôts de bauxite, et que c'était là surtout que résidait sa valeur du point de vue de l'économie mondiale.

Sous le régime colonial les énormes ressources hydro-électriques de la République du Congo n'avaient pas pu trouver non plus leur utilisation, alors que leur potentiel est presque égal à la production actuelle d'électricité de tous les pays d'Europe occidentale pris ensemble. L'utilisation de ces seules ressources permettrait non seulement d'entreprendre l'exploitation complète des colossales ressources minérales et d'élever le niveau de l'agriculture dans la République du Congo, mais aussi de transformer notablement toute la physionomie économique des pays d'Afrique centrale, et d'améliorer sensiblement le bien-être de leur population.

Il est scientifiquement prouvé que tous les pays du continent africain, ainsi que des autres continents, possèdent des richesses énormes et variées qui sont encore pour une large part inexploitées. Elles pourraient être mises au service des peuples de ces pays, et par là au service de l'humanité entière. Mais le régime colonial maintient sciemment et artificiellement les colonies dans un état économique arriéré et s'oppose à leur industrialisation et à l'utilisation rationnelle de leurs ressources. Il en résulte un incroyable gaspillage de fonds publics, d'immenses pertes de main-d'œuvre, un régime économique colonial fondé sur une monoculture parasitique dont l'objet est de satisfaire l'avidité de la métropole.

Le niveau actuel du développement industriel et technique, les derniers progrès de la science, de l'agriculture et de la culture permettent de mettre toutes ces immenses richesses au service des peuples en un temps relativement bref. Cependant, pour les utiliser, il faut avant tout accorder aux peuples le droit à une existence indépendante, supprimer le régime colonial et fournir une aide économique qui permette la mise en valeur de ces richesses. Cela permettra d'augmenter le bien-être de la population locale, d'élargir la capacité du marché intérieur, de mettre fin à l'analphabetisme actuel, au manque de cadres nationaux et au règne de la monoculture dans l'économie des colonies. Le régime colonial est incompatible avec la solution de tels problèmes, ainsi qu'avec les remarquables réalisations techniques qui font partie intégrante de la civilisation contemporaine.

Les bénéfices tirés de l'exploitation des colonies ne profitent nullement aux peuples, mais bien plutôt aux gros monopoles étrangers, aux milliardaires. Les peuples de l'Orient comme de l'Occident sont obligés de payer un tribut élevé au colonialisme. Le pétrole et le café, le caoutchouc et le coton, le cuivre et les bananes, diverses matières premières et denrées alimentaires de provenance coloniale se vendent des dizaines de fois plus cher qu'elles ne se paient sur place. Les monopoles volent les gens deux fois : en Orient quand ils achètent, et en Occident lorsqu'ils revendent les marchandises et produits coloniaux.

Qui plus est, ils forcent les peuples des colonies à entretenir en temps de paix des forces armées et une administration étrangère, c'est-à-dire à payer le coût des chaînes dont ils sont chargés. En même temps, les monopoles font payer aux contribuables de la métropole des impôts élevés pour financer leurs expéditions punitives et leurs guerres coloniales, obligeant ainsi les peuples métropolitains à supporter eux aussi le coût des fers par lesquels les colonialistes des monopoles enchaînent les autres peuples. En fait, ils enterrent dans des champs de dévastation la liberté de leurs propres peuples aussi bien que l'indépendance des autres nations. Cela constitue déjà un terrible verdict de culpabilité contre le système colonial.

Cependant, si les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, et bien sûr au premier chef ceux d'entre eux qui ont jadis imposé le joug colonial à de nombreux peuples, manifestaient la moindre compréhension à l'égard des besoins urgents de ces peuples, ils trouveraient le moyen de les satisfaire. Un de ces principaux moysens est de résoudre le problème du désarmement et de réduire les dépenses militaires des Etats.

On sait que les Etats qui font partie du bloc militaire et colonial de l'Atlantique nord consacrent à eux seuls 62 milliards de dollars par an à la course aux armements. Si l'on affectait au développement et au progrès des pays d'Afrique, par exemple, ne fût-ce que la moitié de cette somme, employée chaque année à des fins improductives et dangereuses pour la paix, on pourrait réaliser de grandioses travaux de génie civil, et notamment les plans relatifs à l'Inga, au Konkouré, au Zambèze et à la Volta qui prévoient la construction de grosses centrales électriques et de réseaux d'irrigation, ainsi que d'entreprises industrielles, et une transformation de l'agriculture. Les peuples d'Afrique, libérés, pourraient créer partout des écoles, des universités, des hôpitaux, des routes et prendre d'autres mesures en vue de moderniser aussi l'agriculture et d'en accroître le rendement.

En même temps, si les colonies africaines et autres étaient libérées des chaînes du colonialisme, cela faciliterait l'exploitation de leurs ressources naturelles, augmenterait dans ces pays la demande de matériel européen et américain ainsi que d'autres produits industriels, accroîtrait les expéditions de matières premières et de produits destinés à l'industrie européenne et américaine, élèverait le niveau de l'emploi et le taux d'utilisation de la capacité de production, assurerait un niveau de vie plus élevé dans les pays industriels.

Toute personne honnête et tout gouvernement réellement partisans de droits égaux pour les peuples et de la réalisation des nobles buts et principes proclamés dans la Charte des Nations Unies ne peuvent manquer de voir que le colonialisme est dans le monde contemporain un phénomène honteux et anachronique. La suppression complète et définitive du colonialisme serait le prélude non seulement au progrès social, mais encore à un très vif essor technique dans l'industrie et l'agriculture, de même que la cessation de la traite des esclaves a donné une vigoureuse impulsion aux forces productives de la société.

La liquidation du colonialisme serait l'une des principales mesures à prendre pour amener une détente internationale. C'est le désir de faire obstacle à la libération et au développement national des jeunes Etats d'Asie, d'Afrique ou d'Amérique latine qui est à l'origine des conflits armés et des guerres qui se sont succédés, depuis 1945, en Indonésie, en Indochine et en Algérie, de l'agression contre l'Egypte, de l'intervention étrangère au Liban et en Jordanie, des complots dirigés contre la Syrie, l'Irak et d'autres pays. Tout au long du siècle dernier, d'ailleurs, la majorité des guerres et des conflits armés ont été liés d'une façon ou d'une autre au colonialisme et à la lutte des grandes puissances pour le partage ou la redistribution des colonies.

Plus d'une fois, les peuples ont senti peser sur eux le redoutable danger de voir les guerres coloniales se transformer en une nouvelle guerre mondiale. Aujourd'hui encore, l'intervention dont la République du Congo est la victime a aggravé la situation internationale, menacé la paix en Afrique — en Afrique et ailleurs. Peut-on oublier qu'à l'âge des armes nucléaires et des fusées un foyer allumé sur un continent peut en un instant embraser le monde entier ?

Bon nombre des principaux centres de tension internationale d'aujourd'hui — au Proche-Orient ou en Extrême-Orient, en Afrique et en Amérique latine — sont aussi dans une large mesure le fruit de la politique coloniale. Les colonies et autres « territoires non autonomes » servent à des puissances étrangères de bases militaires ou de polygones d'essais atomiques. Une telle situation peut-elle vraiment inciter les populations à la sérénité, les libérer de la peur de la guerre, les délivrer de la misère, de la faim et de la maladie, que connaissent encore les peuples des pays qui sont toujours colonies ou territoires sous tutelle ?

Outre les colonies et territoire sous tutelle de grande étendue, plusieurs puissances gardent encore des points d'appui en diverses régions du monde, comme l'Irian occidental, Okinawa, Goa, Porto Rico, etc., pour ne pas parler de Taïwan, victime d'une agression de la part des Etats-Unis, qui ont occupé ce territoire de la République populaire de Chine. Pourquoi les puissances industrielles, hautement développées, ont-elles besoin de pareilles bases et « possessions » en territoire étranger ? N'est-ce pas là un vestige évident de l'époque révolue de la domination coloniale ? Que diraient les Européens et les Américains, si tel ou tel pays d'Asie ou d'Afrique réclamait des bases en Europe occidentale ou en Amérique du Nord ?

Il ne peut y avoir deux opinions sur ce point : ces bases servent à menacer l'indépendance nationale et la sécurité des peuples des régions avoisinantes. De même que les factoreries commerciales servaient, à l'aube du colonialisme, de base de départ pour l'instauration du régime d'oppression coloniale en Afrique, en Asie et en Amérique, de même, aujourd'hui, au moment où le colonialisme se désagrège, les impérialistes cherchent à utiliser les bases et les colonies qui leur restent pour faire brutalement pression sur les Etats indépendants d'Asie, d'Afrique et d'Amérique latine.

Il faut enterrer l'ignoble régime colonial

Les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies auteurs de la présente Déclaration, estiment que tout gouvernement qui est, non en paroles mais en actes, partisan de la paix et du progrès se doit de respecter les droits légitimes de tous les peuples sans exception qui réclament l'égalité, la justice et l'indépendance. Ou bien ces revendications seront reconnues par tous les Etats, ou bien les peuples opprimés, avec l'appui de leurs nombreux amis dans le monde entier, prendront eux-mêmes en main leur destinée et gagneront la liberté et l'indépendance, en balayant tous les obstacles artificiels que les colonialistes mettent sur leur chemin. Le premier devoir de tous les peuples est d'aider ces populations dans leur lutte sacrée pour l'indépendance et contre l'oppression colonialiste.

En même temps que tout l'ignoble système colonial, cette autre variante du colonialisme qu'est le régime de tutelle est aujourd'hui dépassée. Survivance directe du système des mandats de la Société des Nations, le régime de tutelle actuel devait, d'après la Charte des Nations Unies, favoriser l'évolution des territoires sous tutelle vers la capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes et l'indépendance. Or 15 ans sont passés depuis l'adoption de la Charte et l'indépendance n'a été octroyée qu'à quatre territoires sous tutelle sur 11.

Jusqu'ici, aucun délai précis n'a été établi pour l'octroi de l'indépendance aux territoires sous tutelle, et notamment aux plus vastes d'entre eux : le Tanganyika, le Ruanda-Urundi et la Nouvelle-Guinée.

Au mépris des principes de l'Organisation des Nations Unies les puissances qui exercent la « tutelle » maintiennent en fait un régime colonial ; ils exploitent sans pitié la population, pillent les ressources naturelles, recourent à la répression contre ceux qui adressent des pétitions à l'ONU, et entravent le développement économique et politique des territoires en question.

Le régime de tutelle ne s'est justifié nulle part ; il faut donc l'enterrer en même temps que tout l'anachronique système colonial.

Le régime d'oppression coloniale a laissé à l'homme un lourd héritage de problèmes nombreux et complexes. Les événements tragiques au Congo, et dans plusieurs autres régions du monde où les peuples mènent une juste lutte pour défendre leurs droits, montrent qu'il faut trouver une solution raisonnable au problème des rapports entre la population autochtone et les colons venus d'autres continents.

La discrimination raciale dans toutes ses manifestations détestables, la division des peuples et des nations en privilégiés et « inférieurs », tout cela, c'est du racisme, c'est la justification du génocide criminel, c'est la porte ouverte à de nouveaux forfaits qui viendraient s'ajouter aux anciens, de nouveaux crimes qui feraient suite aux précédents, c'est la porte ouverte à l'encouragement de la haine mutuelle, à d'interminables conflits sanglants entre les pays et les peuples.

La couleur de la peau peut différer, mais chez tous les peuples le sang n'a qu'une seule teinte. Aucun peuple ne peut prétendre à en dominer d'autres.

Les liens et les relations qui se sont créés entre les peuples à l'époque du colonialisme doivent faire place à des rapports nouveaux fondés sur le principe de l'égalité des droits, de l'amitié et du respect mutuel, quels que soient le régime politique et social des Etats, la conception du monde des individus, leurs opinions politiques ou la couleur de leur peau. Les peuples des colonies doivent obtenir une indépendance véritable, et non une indépendance fictive qui les maintiendrait sous quelque nouvelle forme de régime colonial. Ils ne se contentent plus de réclamer une plus grande liberté au sein du régime colonial; ils veulent la suppression pure et simple de ce régime, la liberté d'aller de l'avant, ainsi que le droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes, d'exploiter leurs ressources, de jouir des fruits de leur labeur. Toute forme d'asservissement, toute forme de « tutelle » ou de « charité » à l'égard des peuples offense gravement leur dignité.

La vie exige aujourd'hui que l'on choisisse : stagnation ou progrès, esclavage ou liberté, division ou unité des peuples, guerre ou paix.

L'Organisation des Nations Unies estime qu'il est de son devoir d'adresser un appel pressant aux puissances qui possèdent des territoires coloniaux pour qu'elles entrent en pourparlers, sur un pied d'égalité, avec les représentants des peuples qu'elles administrent et s'entendent avec eux sur l'établissement de la liberté et de l'indépendance de ces pays.

Il faut fixer des dates précises et rapprochées pour ces pourparlers, et exclure toute possibilité de pression et d'agression de la part des puissances coloniales. Si ces puissances restent sourdes à cet appel, si elles tardent à libérer leurs colonies, si elles écrasent les mouvements de libération des peuples coloniaux, alors, les peuples pacifiques devront tout mettre en œuvre pour fournir une aide morale et matérielle aux peuples qui combattent pour leur indépendance.

Les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies partent du principe que chaque pays et chaque peuple a un droit total et imprescriptible à une existence indépendante. Ils sont persuadés que la suppression du régime colonial n'aura pas pour effet d'éloigner les uns des autres les pays d'Afrique et d'Europe. Au contraire, elle entraînera une collaboration encore plus étroite entre eux. Mais cette unification, cette coopération entre les peuples ne peut être qu'un don libre et réciproque.

Plus les grands principes de la collaboration internationale — égalité des droits, souveraineté et intégrité territoriale, non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures d'autres pays, avantage mutuel, coexistence pacifique et collaboration économique — seront appliqués systématiquement et franchement, plus la compréhension mutuelle et l'unité de vues seront solidement établies entre Etats libres et égaux.

C'est là le seul moyen qui s'offre aux pays de l'est et de l'ouest, du nord et du sud, pour aller de l'avant vers le progrès, vers l'entente véritable des nations dans la paix en utilisant les magnifiques réalisations de la science et de la culture d'aujourd'hui. C'est là le seul moyen de mettre à exécution les nobles dispositions que la Charte des Nations Unies a consacrées au droit des nations et des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes.

Mus par le désir ardent de voir s'établir au plus tôt la bonne volonté réciproque et l'entente entre les Etats et les peuples, de même qu'entre les populations autochtones des territoires actuellement non autonomes et les personnes qui se sont fixées sur le même sol et souhaitent y vivre sur un pied d'égalité avec tous les autres citoyens du pays, les Etats Membres de l'ONU, signataires de la présente déclaration, adressent un appel à tous les peuples sans distinction de langue, de couleur, de religion ou de conviction politique.

Que tous les peuples de la terre entendent nos paroles

Nous habitons tous la même planète. C'est sur elle que nous sommes nés, que nous travaillons, que nous élevons nos enfants et que nous leur transmettons ce que nous avons réalisé dans la vie. Et, bien qu'il existe sur la terre des Etats différents, tous les hommes naissent citoyens égaux en dignité.

Tout le cours de l'évolution historique pose aujourd'hui la question de la suppression totale et définitive du régime colonial sous toutes ses formes et manifestations, et cela non pas dans un avenir indéterminé, mais immédiatement et sans réserve.

TEXTE DU PROJET DE DÉCLARATION

En conséquence, les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies proclament solennellement les exigences suivantes :

1. Accorder sans délai à tous les pays coloniaux, territoires sous tutelle et autres territoires non autonomes l'indépendance complète et la liberté d'édifier leurs propres Etats nationaux conformément à la volonté et aux aspirations librement exprimées de leur peuple. Le régime colonial et l'administration coloniale sous toutes ses formes doivent être entièrement supprimés afin de permettre aux peuples de ces territoires de décider eux-mêmes de leur sort et de leur régime politique.

2. Eliminer également tous les points d'appui du colonialisme sous la forme de possessions et de zones cédées à bail en territoire étranger.

3. Les gouvernements de tous les pays sont invités à observer rigoureusement et constamment, dans les relations entre Etats, les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies et de la présente Déclaration concernant l'égalité et le respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les Etats sans exception, et à n'admettre aucune manifestation du colonialisme, aucun droit ou privilège exclusif de certains Etats au détriment d'autres Etats.

Les Etats Membres de l'ONU, selon les nobles principes de la Charte de leur organisation, ne sauraient manquer de considérer la suppression du régime colonial comme une étape essentielle dans la vie internationale. Cette action sera déjà par elle-même l'une des principales bases du développement des relations amicales entre tous les Etats et tous les peuples, et contribuera donc ainsi à la grande tâche qui est d'établir une paix solide et durable dans le monde.

Le devoir sacré de tout Etat et de tout gouvernement est de contribuer à mettre en application intégralement et aussitôt que possible la présente Déclaration.

DECLARATION SUR L'OCTROI DE L'INDEPENDANCE AUX PAYS ET AUX PEUPLES COLONIAUX

Afghanistan, Arabie Saoudite, Birmanie, Cambodge, Ceylan, Ethiopie, Ghana, Guinée, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Jordanie, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Maroc, Népal, Nigéria, Pakistan, Soudan, Tchad, Togo, Tunisie et Turquie :
projet de résolution

L'Assemblée générale,

Consciente de ce que les peuples du monde se sont, dans la Charte des Nations Unies, déclarés résolus à proclamer à nouveau leur "foi dans les droits fondamentaux de l'homme, dans la dignité et la valeur de la personne humaine, dans l'égalité de droits des hommes et des femmes, ainsi que des nations, grandes et petites" et "à favoriser le progrès social et instaurer de meilleures conditions de vie dans une liberté plus grande",

Consciente de la nécessité de créer des conditions de stabilité et de bien-être et des relations pacifiques et amicales fondées sur le respect des principes de l'égalité de droits et de la libre détermination de tous les peuples, et d'assurer le respect universel et effectif des droits de l'homme et des libertés fondamentales pour tous sans distinction de race, de sexe, de langue ou de religion,

Reconnaissant le désir passionné de liberté de tous les peuples dépendants et le rôle décisif de ces peuples dans leur accession à l'indépendance,

Consciente des conflits croissants qu'entraîne le fait de refuser la liberté à ces peuples ou d'y faire obstacle, qui constitue une grave menace à la paix mondiale,

Considérant le rôle important de l'Organisation des Nations Unies comme moyen d'aider le mouvement vers l'indépendance dans les Territoires sous tutelle et les territoires non autonomes, Reconnaissant que les peuples du monde souhaitent ardemment la fin du colonialisme dans toutes ses manifestations,

/...

Convaincue que le maintien du colonialisme empêche le développement de la coopération économique internationale, entrave le développement social, culturel et économique des peuples dépendants et va à l'encontre de l'idéal de paix universelle des Nations Unies,

Affirmant que les peuples peuvent, pour leurs propres fins, disposer librement de leurs richesses et ressources naturelles, sans préjudice des obligations qui découleraient de la coopération économique internationale, fondée sur le principe de l'avantage mutuel, et du droit international,

Persuadée que le processus de libération est irrésistible et irréversible et que pour éviter de graves crises, il faut mettre fin au colonialisme et à toutes les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination dont il s'accompagne,

Se félicitant de ce qu'un grand nombre de territoires dépendants ont accédé à la liberté et à l'indépendance au cours des dernières années, et reconnaissant les tendances toujours plus fortes vers la liberté qui se manifestent dans les territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance,

Convaincue que tous les peuples ont un droit inaliénable à la pleine liberté, à l'exercice de leur souveraineté et à l'intégrité de leur territoire national,

Proclame solennellement la nécessité de mettre rapidement et inconditionnellement fin au colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations; et à cette fin

Déclare ce qui suit :

1. La sujétion des peuples à une subjugation, à une domination et à une exploitation étrangères constitue un déni des droits fondamentaux de l'homme, est contraire à la Charte des Nations Unies et compromet la cause de la paix et de la coopération mondiales.
2. Tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination; en vertu de ce droit, ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel.
3. Le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance.

4. Il sera mis fin à toute action armée et à toutes mesures de répression de quelque sorte qu'elles soient, dirigées contre les peuples dépendants, pour permettre à ces peuples d'exercer pacifiquement et librement leur droit à l'indépendance complète, et l'intégrité de leur territoire national sera respectée.

5. Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les Territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes.

6. Toute tentative visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les Buts et Principes de la Charte des Nations Unies.

7. Tous les Etats doivent observer fidèlement et strictement les dispositions de la Charte des Nations Unies, de la Déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme et de la présente Déclaration sur la base de l'égalité, de la non-ingérence dans les affaires intérieures des Etats et du respect des droits souverains et de l'intégrité territoriale de tous les peuples.

DECLARATION SUR L'OCTROI DE L'INTERDEPENDANCE AUX PAYS ET AUX
PEUPLES COLONIAUX

Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques : amendement au projet de résolution A/L.323 et Add.1 à 6

Après le paragraphe 7 du dispositif, ajouter les paragraphes suivants :

"8. Invite les puissances intéressées à assurer, dans tous les territoires dépendants, la transmission du pouvoir absolu et souverain au peuple, conformément aux principes énoncés ci-dessus, et à entamer à cette fin des négociations avec les représentants des peuples coloniaux, élus au suffrage universel, au besoin sous la surveillance de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, de manière que tous les pays et peuples coloniaux accèdent à l'indépendance à la fin de 1961 au plus tard et occupent leur place légitime dans la communauté des nations;

"9. Décide d'examiner à sa seizième session ordinaire la question de l'application de la présente résolution."

Tenant compte de la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe à la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale, en date du 27 novembre 1953,

Ayant examiné le rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte¹² qui avait pour mission, aux termes de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale en date du 12 décembre 1959, d'étudier les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée, lors de sa quinzième session, sur les résultats de son étude,

1. Exprime sa satisfaction des travaux du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte;

2. Approuve les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport présenté par le Comité, sous leur forme amendée, tels qu'ils figurent dans l'annexe à la présente résolution;

3. Décide qu'il y a lieu d'appliquer ces principes, compte tenu dans chaque cas des faits et des circonstances, pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, est applicable ou non.

948ème séance plénière,
15 décembre 1960.

ANNEXE

PRINCIPES QUI DOIVENT GUIDER LES ETATS MEMBRES POUR DÉTERMINER SI L'OBLIGATION DE COMMUNIQUER DES RENSEIGNEMENT, PRÉVUE À L'ALINÉA e DE L'ARTICLE 73 DE LA CHARTE DES NATIONS UNIES, LEUR EST APPLICABLE OU NON

Principe premier

Les auteurs de la Charte des Nations Unies entendaient que le Chapitre XI soit applicable aux territoires qui étaient alors connus comme étant du type colonial. Il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements, aux termes de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, à l'égard de ces territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes.

Principe II

Tels que le Chapitre XI de la Charte les conçoit, les territoires non autonomes sont dans un état dynamique d'évolution et de progrès vers la pleine capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes. Dès qu'un territoire et ses populations ont atteint cette pleine autonomie, l'obligation cesse. Tant qu'ils ne l'ont pas atteinte, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, subsiste.

Principe III

L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte constitue une obligation internationale qui doit être exécutée en tenant dûment compte des exigences du droit international.

Principe IV

Il y a obligation, à première vue, de communiquer des renseignements à l'égard d'un territoire géographiquement séparé et ethniquement ou culturellement distinct du pays qui l'administre.

Principe V

Une fois établi qu'il s'agit à première vue d'un territoire géographiquement et ethniquement ou culturellement distinct,

1541 (XV). Principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non d'autres éléments peuvent entrer en ligne de compte. Ces éléments supplémentaires peuvent être notamment de nature administrative, politique, juridique, économique ou historique. S'ils affectent les relations entre le territoire métropolitain et le territoire considéré de telle façon qu'ils placent arbitrairement ce dernier dans une position ou un état de subordination, ils confirment la présomption qu'il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

L'Assemblée générale,

Considérant les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte des Nations Unies, ¹² Ibid., point 38 de l'ordre du jour, document A/4526.

Principe VI

On peut dire qu'un territoire non autonome a atteint la pleine autonomie :

- a) Quand il est devenu Etat indépendant et souverain;
 - b) Quand il s'est librement associé à un Etat indépendant;
- ou
- c) Quand il s'est intégré à un Etat indépendant.

Principe VII

a) La libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question, exprimé selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées. Elle doit respecter l'individualité et les caractéristiques culturelles du territoire et de ses populations, et conserver aux populations du territoire qui s'associe à un Etat indépendant la liberté de modifier le statut de ce territoire en exprimant leur volonté par des moyens démocratiques et selon des méthodes constitutionnelles.

b) Le territoire associé doit avoir le droit de déterminer sa constitution intérieure, sans ingérence extérieure, conformément aux méthodes constitutionnelles régulières et aux vœux librement exprimés de ses populations. Cela n'exclut pas les consultations que pourraient appeler ou exiger les clauses de la libre association.

Principe VIII

L'intégration à un Etat indépendant doit se faire sur la base de l'égalité complète entre le peuple du territoire antérieurement non autonome et celui de l'Etat indépendant auquel il s'intègre. Les deux peuples doivent avoir, sans distinction ni discrimination, un statut et des droits de citoyenneté égaux ainsi que des garanties égales pour ce qui est des libertés et droits fondamentaux; ils doivent tous deux avoir des droits égaux et des possibilités égales de représentation et de participation effective, à tous les échelons, dans les organes exécutifs, législatifs et judiciaires de l'Etat.

Principe IX

L'intégration devra s'être faite dans les conditions suivantes :

a) Le territoire intégré devra avoir atteint un stade avancé d'autonomie, avec des institutions politiques libres, de telle sorte que ses populations aient la capacité de choisir en pleine connaissance de cause, selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées;

b) L'intégration doit résulter du désir librement exprimé des populations du territoire, pleinement conscientes du changement de leur statut, la consultation se faisant selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées, impartialement appliquées et fondées sur le suffrage universel des adultes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies pourra, quand elle le jugera nécessaire, contrôler l'application de ces méthodes.

Principe X

La communication de renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes, au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, est sujette aux limitations que peuvent exiger des considérations constitutionnelles et de sécurité. Cela signifie que la portée des renseignements peut être limitée dans certaines circonstances, mais la limitation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ne peut pas libérer un Etat Membre des obligations que lui impose le Chapitre XI. La "limitation" ne peut porter que sur le volume des renseignements à transmettre dans les domaines économique et social et dans celui de l'enseignement.

Principe XI

Les seules considérations constitutionnelles auxquelles l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte se réfère sont celles qui résultent des relations constitutionnelles entre le territoire et l'Etat Membre administrant. Elles concernent une situation dans laquelle la constitution du territoire lui donne l'autonomie dans les questions économiques et sociales et en matière d'enseignement, au moyen d'institutions librement élues. Cependant, la responsabilité de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 subsiste, à moins que ces relations constitutionnelles n'empêchent le gouvernement ou le parlement de l'Etat Membre administrant de recevoir des statistiques ou autres renseignements de nature technique concernant la situation du territoire dans les domaines économique et social et dans celui de l'enseignement.

Principe XII

Les exigences de la sécurité n'ont pas été invoquées dans le passé. Ce n'est que dans des circonstances tout à fait exceptionnelles que des renseignements d'ordre économique ou social ou concernant l'enseignement peuvent mettre en cause la sécurité. Dans d'autres circonstances, par conséquent, il n'y a aucun besoin de limiter la communication des renseignements pour des raisons de sécurité.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale

RAPPORT DE LA QUATRIEME COMMISSION (A/4651)

46. M. BOEG (Danemark) [Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission] (traduit de l'anglais): En me présentant devant l'Assemblée générale en qualité de Rapporteur de la Quatrième Commission, je sais que l'Assemblée ne dispose que de peu de temps. C'est pourquoi je serai très bref et m'abstiendrai de faire des commentaires détaillés sur les rapports de la Commission. Pour la même raison, et avec l'approbation du Président, j'adopterai la procédure suivie par le Rapporteur de la Deuxième Commission et mes commentaires porteront en même temps sur les deux rapports de la Quatrième Commission.

47. Le premier des deux rapports présentés aujourd'hui à l'Assemblée par la Quatrième Commission [A/4650] a trait aux points 37, 39, 40 et 41 de l'ordre du jour, c'est-à-dire aux renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes et à diverses questions connexes. Ce rapport est un document de procédure où sont exposés dans leurs grandes lignes les débats auxquels ces divers points ont donné lieu à la Quatrième Commission. Celle-ci a présenté un rapport commun sur ces points parce qu'elle a décidé de les examiner en même temps, ces quatre points étant étroitement liés les uns aux autres.

48. A la suite de ses délibérations, la Commission présente à l'Assemblée générale sept projets de résolution. A propos de ces projets de résolution, il me faut mentionner un point qui n'apparaît pas immédiatement à la lecture du rapport et qui mérite cependant d'être cité. C'est le fait que, lors du vote de la Quatrième Commission sur chacun des sept projets de résolution pris dans leur ensemble, on n'a pas enregistré un seul vote négatif.

49. Il est un autre point sur lequel je voudrais attirer spécialement l'attention de l'Assemblée générale. Il s'agit du paragraphe 60 dans le document A/4650. Normalement, l'examen d'une question est terminé par l'Assemblée une fois qu'un rapport a été présenté par une Commission et que des résolutions ont été adoptées. Cependant, comme les membres de l'Assemblée le verront, la Quatrième Commission a décidé qu'en raison du lien qui existe entre ce sujet et la résolution sur le colonialisme que l'Assemblée a adoptée hier [résolution 1514 (XV)], ces questions devaient rester inscrites à l'ordre du jour, afin qu'elle puisse les examiner plus avant si elle le désire lors de la reprise de la Quinzième session.

50. Enfin, à propos de ce document [A/4650], je voudrais soulever une petite question technique. Une erreur s'est glissée au paragraphe 3 de ce rapport dans la phrase commençant par les mots "Le représentant du Mexique...". Je voudrais donner maintenant lecture du texte tel qu'il convient de le lire: "Le représentant du Mexique a réaffirmé la position de son gouvernement concernant tout changement du statut du Honduras britannique (Belize)."

51. Je passe maintenant à l'autre rapport dont nous sommes saisis, le document A/4651, qui porte sur le point 38 de l'ordre du jour et traite des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non. A la suite des débats que la Quatrième Commission a consacrés à cette question, deux projets de résolution ont été présentés à l'Assemblée

52. Le projet de résolution I traite des principes qui doivent guider les Etats en la matière, et vous trouverez en annexe la liste des 12 principes énoncés à ce sujet. Sauf en ce qui concerne une modification apportée à l'alinéa b du principe IX, il faut noter que ces 12 principes sont exactement les mêmes que les 12 principes qui avaient été proposés à la Quatrième Commission par le Comité spécial des Six, créé l'an dernier par l'Assemblée en vertu de la résolution 1467 (XIV).

53. Le projet de résolution II a trait à l'application concrète de ces principes.

54. Après ces brèves remarques, j'ai l'honneur de soumettre à l'examen et à l'approbation de l'Assemblée générale ces deux rapports ainsi que les projets de résolution qui y sont joints.

55. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne maintenant la parole au représentant de l'Indonésie qui désire expliquer son vote avant le scrutin.

56. M. PADMADISASTRA (Indonésie) [traduit de l'anglais]: Avant que l'Assemblée passe au vote sur les projets de résolutions contenus dans les documents A/4650 et A/4651, ayant trait aux territoires non autonomes qui tombent sous le coup de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, permettez-moi, en exécution de mes instructions, de vous exposer la position de mon gouvernement en ce qui concerne la partie du territoire de mon pays sur laquelle le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a soumis des renseignements, en arguant faussement qu'il exerçait la souveraineté sur ce territoire.

57. Par égard pour le progrès de nos délibérations, je m'abstiendrai d'entamer ici un examen complet de cette question. Vous vous souviendrez des débats approfondis qui ont eu lieu sur cette question lors des sessions précédentes de l'Assemblée générale, et vous êtes parfaitement informés du différend non résolu qui oppose depuis longtemps deux Membres de cette organisation. De plus — vous vous souviendrez des déclarations faites devant cette Assemblée par le président Sukarno [880ème séance], par notre Ministre des affaires étrangères [888ème séance] et par M. Luns, ministre des affaires étrangères des Pays-Bas [886ème séance] —, les relations entre nos deux pays se sont dernièrement aggravées, à la suite de l'envoi de renforts dans ce territoire par les Pays-Bas.

58. Je m'en tiendrai aux points suivants qui ont un rapport avec nos documents.

59. Le premier point est la question de la transmission de renseignements sur l'Irian occidental par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, sous prétexte que ce territoire tombe sous le coup de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

60. L'alinéa e de l'Article 73, en tant qu'alinéa de l'Article 73 de la Charte, a trait aux territoires non autonomes. L'Irian occidental n'est pas un territoire autonome. C'était une résidence, c'est-à-dire une partie d'une province de l'ancienne colonie des Indes néerlandaises que les Pays-Bas ont rebaptisée Indonésie par une loi du 3 septembre 1948 portant modification de la Constitution; par conséquent, l'Irian occidental n'est rien d'autre qu'une résidence de l'Indonésie. Le Gouvernement néerlandais a reconnu l'Indonésie en tant qu'Etat indépendant, le 28 décembre 1949, après quatre années de guerre, et, le 28 septembre 1950 [289ème séance], la République indépendante d'Indonésie était admise à l'unanimité comme soixantième Membre de l'ONU.

61. L'Irian occidental, en tant que résidence de l'Indonésie, n'est donc pas autre chose qu'une partie d'une des provinces d'un Etat Membre de l'ONU et n'est en aucune façon un territoire non autonome. Si les habitants de ce territoire continuent à ne pas jouir des mêmes droits et des mêmes privilèges que ceux des autres provinces de l'Indonésie, c'est uniquement parce que les Pays-Bas y entretiennent une occupation militaire.

62. Au nom du gouvernement et du peuple de l'Indonésie, je désire protester vivement ici contre la présence des forces d'occupation néerlandaises dans l'Irian occidental, et aussi contre la désignation de territoire non autonome donnée à cette partie de l'Indonésie.

63. Le second point est au sujet de l'affirmation du Gouvernement néerlandais selon laquelle il exerce la souveraineté sur l'Irian occidental.

64. Ainsi que je l'ai déjà montré, il n'existe aucun argument juridique ou autre qui permette de donner à l'Irian occidental la désignation de territoire non autonome, et le Gouvernement néerlandais est encore moins fondé à se déclarer responsable de ce territoire en vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte. En sa qualité de Membre de l'ONU le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas a, en application de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, soumis au Secrétaire général, au cours des années 1947, 1948 et 1949, des renseignements sur le territoire non autonome des Indes néerlandaises. Ainsi que je l'ai dit précédemment, le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas en 1948 a remplacé, dans tous les règlements et lois, le nom d'Indes néerlandaises par celui d'Indonésie. A la suite de la reconnaissance de l'Indonésie comme république indépendante par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, le 28 décembre 1948, et de son admission à l'ONU le 28 septembre 1950, les Pays-Bas ont cessé d'avoir une obligation quelconque découlant de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte à l'égard de tout le territoire de l'Indonésie. Le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas le sait fort bien, et il a, de ce fait, cessé de transmettre des renseignements sur l'Indonésie. Il n'y a donc aucune raison pour que les Pays-Bas recommencent à soumettre des rapports sur une partie de leur ancienne colonie qu'ils ont reconnue, sans réserve, en tant que république indépendante, en 1949, et dont ils ont appuyé la candidature à l'Organisation des Nations Unies en septembre 1950.

65. Ne pourrait-on interpréter le geste du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas soumettant des renseignements sur l'Irian occidental comme le signe que les Pays-Bas ont conquis un nouveau territoire dans cette partie du monde? En outre, en soumettant des renseignements sur l'Irian occidental, le Gouvernement néerlandais ne donne-t-il pas à penser que les Nations Unies acceptent cette conquête?

66. Ma délégation tient à déclarer que l'occupation continue, par les Pays-Bas, d'une partie du territoire indonésien est également une violation flagrante d'accords antérieurs selon lesquels le statut politique de l'Irian occidental devait être déterminé par des négociations entre les représentants des Gouvernements de l'Indonésie et des Pays-Bas.

67. La décision du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas de continuer à occuper l'Irian occidental après le 27 décembre 1950 a été une solution unilatérale d'un différend, et ne peut être considérée par l'Indonésie que comme un acte illégal des Pays-Bas. Mon gouvernement, comme l'Assemblée le sait bien, a demandé à l'Assemblée générale de rechercher une solution pacifique à cette situation, par la voie de négociations, conformément, non seulement aux dispositions d'accords précédents conclus entre les deux parties, mais aussi aux principes et objectifs de la Charte des Nations Unies auxquels les Pays-Bas et l'Indonésie ont adhéré en tant que Membres. Comme aucune solution pacifique n'a pu être trouvée à cause du refus des Pays-Bas de négocier, mon gouvernement ne peut, aujourd'hui, que protester de la façon la plus énergique contre cette action illégale et unilatérale des Pays-Bas, qui continuent à occuper une partie du territoire indonésien.

68. Ma troisième observation porte sur le fait que les Pays-Bas désignent le territoire de la Nouvelle-Guinée occidentale sous le nom de Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise. C'est seulement le 10 septembre 1956 que les Pays-Bas ont consacré ce nouveau nom dans les modifications de la Constitution. Le gouvernement et le peuple de l'Indonésie ont constaté que même les documents des Nations Unies relatifs à la Nouvelle-Guinée occidentale portent ce titre de Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise. En raison des observations que je viens de présenter, cette désignation est, bien entendu, absolument inacceptable et ne peut provoquer que des sentiments d'amertume, de mécontentement et d'inquiétude parmi la population indonésienne aussi bien que dans les nations amies de l'Indonésie.

69. Ma délégation ne peut naturellement parler qu'au nom de l'Indonésie et elle proteste contre cette désignation unilatérale du territoire. Nous espérons que les documents des Nations Unies, pour le moins, n'emploieront pas cette désignation, qui porte à croire qu'un parti pris existe en la matière.

70. La désignation objective et neutre du territoire de l'Irian occidental employée depuis 1949 — c'est-à-dire la première fois que l'ONU a établi des documents en la matière — était résidence de la Nouvelle-Guinée (Irian). Tel est le titre qui a été accepté par les deux parties intéressées et qui n'implique aucun jugement préconçu. Les Membres de l'Organisation connaissent le problème du statut politique de ce territoire, qui oppose les Gouvernements des Pays-Bas et de l'Indonésie et qui jusqu'ici n'a pas encore reçu de solution. Faute de solution, ma délégation estime qu'il n'y a pas lieu de modifier la désignation qui avait été acceptée, d'autant moins que le changement s'est heurté à une forte opposition et à la protestation de l'une des parties intéressées. Une modification unilatérale adoptée en 1956, au milieu même du conflit, sans le consentement de l'autre partie intéressée, va à l'encontre de la tradition d'objectivité des Nations Unies en matière politique et nuit au prestige de l'Organisation.

71. Enfin, je voudrais réaffirmer la position de mon gouvernement à l'égard d'un argument présenté par le Gouvernement des Pays-Bas, à propos de la fourniture de renseignements sur l'Irian occidental. Les Pays-Bas ont prétendu que, si l'Irian occidental était administrativement réuni au reste de l'Indonésie, l'ONU ne recevrait plus de renseignements sur ce territoire conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Indépendamment du fait qu'il s'agit, non pas d'un territoire non autonome, mais d'une partie d'un Etat indépendant Membre de l'ONU, l'argument du Gouvernement des Pays-Bas est évidemment sans valeur.

72. L'Irian occidental, lorsqu'il sera administrativement réuni à la libre Indonésie, sera ouvert au monde et accessible à tous les autres moyens d'information, y compris ceux des Nations Unies, comme le sont toutes les autres provinces ou parties de l'Indonésie. Telle n'est pas la situation sous le régime actuel d'occupation militaire de l'Irian occidental par les Pays-Bas. C'est à cause de la politique d'isolement des puissances coloniales que la Charte prévoit la transmission de renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes. Ces renseignements ne trouvent leur raison d'être que comme moyen de contrôler, dans une certaine mesure, la politique de certaines puissances coloniales. Ce n'est certainement pas une fin en soi, car aucun territoire ne serait jamais indépendant, si l'on pouvait prétendre que son accès à l'indépendance mettrait fin à la communication des renseignements à l'ONU conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. La faiblesse de cet argument, le travestissement qu'il constitue des principes et des objectifs mêmes de la Charte, caractérisent bien cette conception, ainsi que l'a souligné hier [947ème séance] le représentant de l'Indonésie à propos de la déclaration sur le colonialisme, et il est inutile que j'y insiste davantage.

73. Le fait que les Pays-Bas aient soulevé cet argument confirme qu'ils ont l'intention de prolonger indéfiniment leur présence en Irian occidental et de maintenir la population de ce territoire sous leur joug colonial. En revanche, lorsqu'il fera partie de la République indonésienne, la population de l'Irian occidental pourra travailler dans la liberté et mettre son pays en valeur en pleine collaboration avec les peuples des autres provinces indonésiennes.

74. En votant pour les projets de résolutions contenus dans les documents A/4650 et A/4651, ma délégation désire répéter que le territoire de l'Irian occidental n'est pas un territoire non autonome, mais qu'il fait partie de l'Indonésie. Les résolutions contenues dans ces documents, y compris les 12 principes mentionnés dans le document A/4651, sont toutes également inapplicables au territoire de l'Irian occidental.

75. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne la parole au représentant des Pays-Bas pour l'exercice de son droit de réponse.

76. M. SCHURMANN (Pays-Bas) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je suis certain qu'il doit devenir très ennuyeux, pour les membres de l'Assemblée générale, d'entendre la délégation indonésienne exprimer son opinion sur la Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise à tout propos et hors de propos. Pour ma part, je considère que c'est aujourd'hui hors de propos et, par conséquent, je ne répondrai pas aux observations du représentant de l'Indonésie.

77. Qu'il me suffise de dire que mon gouvernement soumet des rapports sur la Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise depuis maintenant 10 ans et que ces rapports ont toujours été reçus avec reconnaissance par l'Assemblée générale; ils ont été discutés à la Quatrième Commission et en séance plénière. Mon gouvernement a l'intention de continuer d'agir ainsi et de soumettre ces rapports jusqu'au moment où la population de la Nouvelle-Guinée néerlandaise aura décidé elle-même de son avenir.

78. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je voudrais rappeler aux membres de l'Assemblée générale que, lors de l'examen des rapports des commissions, les interventions sont limitées aux explications de vote, à moins que l'on ne recoure à la procédure prévue à l'article 68 du règlement intérieur. Dans une explication de vote, on ne peut aborder le fonds des questions traitées dans les rapports des diverses commissions, à moins qu'une motion en ce sens n'ait été présentée en application de l'article 68 du règlement intérieur. Les explications de vote doivent demeurer des explications de vote.

79. Si aucune autre délégation ne désire expliquer son vote avant le scrutin, je mettrai aux voix les sept projets de résolution dont l'adoption est recommandée par la Quatrième Commission dans le document (A/4650).

Par 81 voix contre zéro, avec 11 abstentions, le projet de résolution I est adopté.

Par 69 voix contre zéro, avec 20 abstentions, le projet de résolution II est adopté.

80. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Le projet de résolution III a trait à la discrimination raciale dans les territoires non autonomes. Il a été demandé un vote par appel nominal.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par l'Indonésie, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Irlande, Israël, Italie, Côte-d'Ivoire, Japon, Laos, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Mali, Mexique, Maroc, Népal, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigéria, Norvège, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Portugal, Roumanie, Sénégal, Somalie, Espagne, Soudan, Suède, Thaïlande, Togo, Tunisie, Turquie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, États-Unis d'Amérique, Haute-Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Argentine, Autriche, Belgique, Bolivie, Brésil, Bulgarie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Cambodge, Canada, République centrafricaine, Ceylan, Tchad, Chili, Chine, Colombie, Congo (Léopoldville), Costa Rica, Cuba, Chypre, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, République Dominicaine, Équateur, Salvador, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, France, Ghana, Grèce, Guatemala, Guinée, Haïti, Honduras, Hongrie, Inde.

Votent contre: néant.

S'abstiennent: Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie.

Par 88 voix contre zéro, avec 2 abstentions, le projet de résolution III est adopté.

Par 75 voix contre zéro, avec 11 abstentions, le projet de résolution IV est adopté.

Par 76 voix contre zéro, avec 11 abstentions, le projet de résolution V est adopté.

Par 79 voix contre zéro, avec 10 abstentions, le projet de résolution VI est adopté.

81. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Le projet de résolution VII, qui traite des moyens d'étude et de formation offerts par des États Membres aux habitants des territoires non autonomes, a été adopté à l'unanimité par la Quatrième Commission. S'il n'y a pas d'objection, je considérerai qu'il est également approuvé par l'Assemblée générale.

Le projet de résolution VII est adopté.

82. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je donne maintenant la parole au représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui a exprimé le désir d'expliquer son vote après le scrutin.

83. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais expliquer le vote de ma délégation sur la troisième des résolutions qui vient d'être adoptée — le projet de résolution III qui traite de la discrimination raciale dans les territoires non autonomes.

84. Ma délégation regrette vivement que la Quatrième Commission n'ait pas soumis à l'Assemblée générale sur cette question un projet de résolution que nous ayons pu appuyer de tout cœur. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni appuie entièrement l'esprit de cette résolution, et la plupart des idées qui y sont exprimées sont de celles auxquelles nous souscrivons sans aucune réserve. Cependant, ma délégation s'est trouvée contrainte de s'abstenir à cause du respect profond que nous avons pour l'esprit et la lettre des résolutions adoptées par l'ONU. Nous n'avons pas l'habitude de voter en faveur de résolutions que nous ne sommes pas convaincus de pouvoir mettre en œuvre complètement, tant dans l'esprit que dans la lettre.

85. Dans deux passages, cette résolution demande des mesures immédiates qui, si la résolution était appliquée à la lettre, ne produiraient pas nécessairement, à notre avis, l'effet souhaité. En particulier, le paragraphe 2 du dispositif ne contient aucune disposition prévoyant le maintien en vigueur de lois qui instituent une certaine différenciation, et qui sont encore nécessaires dans certains territoires pour protéger les intérêts des peuples indigènes. Le paragraphe 3 du dispositif demande non seulement la suppression de toute distinction entre les races en ce qui concerne le droit de vote, mais également l'octroi immédiat du suffrage universel. Ceci dépasse la simple question de la suppression de la discrimination raciale.

86. Dans certains des territoires que nous administrons, nous avons introduit un droit de vote qualitatif, qui s'élargit progressivement, et donne largement aux populations de ces territoires le moyen de s'exprimer; ce mode de suffrage ne tient pas compte de la race et n'est nullement discriminatoire. Nous croyons que c'est là la meilleure manière de procéder dans ces territoires et nous ne pouvons pas, dans ces conditions, voter en faveur de la résolution.

87. Enfin, je dois répéter, une fois de plus, que nous sommes absolument opposés à la discrimination raciale et que nous nous efforçons de la supprimer le plus rapidement possible par tous les moyens à notre disposition. Bien que nous eussions préféré voir cette résolution présentée dans une forme qui nous aurait permis de voter en sa faveur, nous continuerons à ne rien négliger, dans les territoires que nous administrons, pour supprimer la discrimination raciale et atteindre ainsi l'objectif principal de cette résolution.

88. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Le rapport de la Quatrième Commission sur le point 38 de l'ordre du jour [A/4651] a déjà été présenté à l'Assemblée générale par le Rapporteur. Aucun représentant n'a demandé à expliquer son vote avant la mise aux voix des deux projets de résolution de ce rapport, et je propose donc de passer au vote sur le projet de résolution I.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

Le vote commence par le Chili dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Chili, Colombie, Congo (Léopoldville), Costa Rica, Cuba, Chypre, Danemark, Equateur, Salvador, Ethiopie, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, Ghana, Grèce, Guatemala, Guinée, Haïti, Honduras, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Irlande, Israël, Côte-d'Ivoire, Japon, Laos, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mexique, Maroc, Népal, Nicaragua, Niger, Nigéria, Norvège, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Pérou, Philippines, Sénégal, Somalie, Soudan, Suède, Thaïlande, Togo, Tunisie, Turquie, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Argentine, Autriche, Bolivie, Brésil, Birmanie, Cambodge, Cameroun, Canada, République centrafricaine, Ceylan, Tchad.

Votent contre: Portugal, Union sud-africaine.

S'abstiennent: Chine, Tchécoslovaquie, République Dominicaine, France, Hongrie, Italie, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pologne, Roumanie, Espagne, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Albanie, Australie, Belgique, Bulgarie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie.

Par 69 voix contre 2, avec 21 abstentions, le projet de résolution I est adopté.

89. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): J'ai reçu une demande de vote par division sur le projet de résolution II. Il ne sera pas inutile, je crois, que les représentants qui ont présenté cette demande, viennent en expliquer les raisons.

90. M. IMAM (Pakistan) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé un vote séparé sur le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution II, figurant dans le document A/4651, car ce paragraphe comporte une énumération de territoires auxquels devra s'appliquer le texte du projet. Nous ne pouvons approuver la liste entière de ces territoires et c'est pourquoi nous avons demandé un vote sur la liste des territoires de "a) Archipel du Cap-Vert" à "f) Mozambique" et un second vote sur les autres territoires de la liste, de "g) Goa et dépendances (ou "Etat de l'Inde")" à "j) Timor et dépendances".

91. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Le représentant du Pakistan a demandé deux votes séparés sur la liste des territoires figurant au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution II [A/4651], l'un portant sur les alinéas de a à f de cette liste, l'autre sur les alinéas g à i. Je prie donc l'Assemblée de se prononcer d'abord sur les alinéas a à f inclus du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution II.

Par 57 voix contre 4, avec 22 abstentions, les alinéas a à f sont adoptés.

92. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je demande maintenant à l'Assemblée de procéder au second vote qui a été demandé, et qui traite des territoires énumérés de g à i dans le paragraphe 1 du dispositif.

Par 55 voix contre 5, avec 28 abstentions, les alinéas g à i sont adoptés.

93. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Je prie maintenant l'Assemblée de se prononcer sur le projet de résolution II dans son ensemble.

Il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Chili, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Votent pour: Congo (Brazzaville), Congo (Léopoldville), Cuba, Chypre, Tchécoslovaquie, Danemark, Equateur, Salvador, Ethiopie, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, Ghana, Grèce, Guatemala, Guinée, Haïti, Honduras, Hongrie, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Irlande, Israël, Côte-d'Ivoire, Laos, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Madagascar, Mali, Mexique, Maroc, Népal, Niger, Nigéria, Norvège, Paraguay, Pérou, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Somalie, Soudan, Suède, Thaïlande, Togo, Tunisie, Turquie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Haute-Volta, Venezuela, Yémen, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Argentine, Bolivie, Bulgarie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Cambodge, Cameroun, République centrafricaine, Ceylan, Tchad.

Votent contre: France, Portugal, Espagne, Union sud-africaine, Belgique, Brésil.

S'abstiennent: Chili, Chine, Colombie, République Dominicaine, Italie, Japon, Luxembourg, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Nicaragua, Pakistan, Panama, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Australie, Autriche, Canada.

Par 68 voix contre 6, avec 17 abstentions, le projet de résolution II est adopté.

94. Le PRESIDENT (traduit de l'anglais): Deux ou trois membres de l'Assemblée ont exprimé le désir d'expliquer leur vote après le scrutin. Je donne d'abord la parole au représentant de l'Espagne.

95. M. DE LEQUERICA (Espagne) [traduit de l'espagnol]: La délégation espagnole désire déclarer pour les procès-verbaux de l'Assemblée générale qu'elle s'est abstenue en ce qui concerne le projet de résolution I présenté par la Quatrième Commission dans le document A/4651 parce que, si les principes qui y sont énoncés contiennent des éléments très utiles, le projet nous paraît confus, imprécis, et se prête à des interprétations erronées.

96. Nous avons voté contre le projet de résolution II contenu dans le même rapport parce qu'à notre avis il n'est pas juste que, si l'on ne se conforme pas aux formalités élémentaires de publicité et de distribution du projet de résolution que vient d'adopter l'Assemblée générale (projet de résolution I dans le document A/4651), on puisse en tirer des conséquences contre tel ou tel pays.

97. Ma délégation voudrait cependant faire remarquer que, si ce texte avait fait l'objet d'un vote par division, nous aurions pu réaffirmer les arguments que nous avons déjà exposés devant la Quatrième Commission et, de ce fait, nous aurions voté pour le quatrième alinéa du préambule et pour le paragraphe 4 du dispositif.

98. M. GARIN (Portugal) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais expliquer brièvement le vote de ma délégation sur le projet de résolution II, contenu dans le document A/4651 et que l'Assemblée vient d'adopter.

99. Ma délégation estime que cette résolution oblige à interpréter le Chapitre XI de la Charte et plus particulièrement l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 avec une hardiesse excessive. Nous sommes fermement convaincus que, contrairement aux Chapitres IX et X d'une part, et au Chapitre XII d'autre part, le Chapitre XI n'impose pas, et ne peut être considéré comme imposant aux Etats Membres une obligation que ceux-ci ne sont pas disposés à assumer, ou que leurs propres lois constitutionnelles, qu'ils ont seuls la possibilité et le pouvoir d'interpréter et d'appliquer, n'autorisent pas à assumer.

100. Le texte de la résolution qui vient d'être adopté est le résultat d'une interprétation différente qui va à l'encontre des dispositions de la Charte, et qui constitue par conséquent, à notre avis, une violation très nette de la loi fondamentale de l'Organisation.

101. D'autre part, la résolution donne à l'Assemblée générale une compétence que celle-ci ne possède pas. En fait, jamais l'Assemblée n'a prétendu jusqu'ici avoir compétence pour déterminer le statut juridique et politique d'un territoire. Elle n'a jamais prétendu non plus avoir compétence pour imposer aux Etats Membres la communication de renseignements au sujet de territoires qui, ne possédant pas un statut soumis à une juridiction internationale, relèvent uniquement de la législation des Etats Membres et dont le statut politique dépend de ces seuls Etats Membres. L'Assemblée générale n'a pas le droit de mettre en doute les réponses des Etats Membres en ce qui concerne le statut des territoires dépendant de leur propre souveraineté nationale, et de telles réponses, faites en conformité avec les lois nationales et constitutionnelles, doivent être acceptées par l'Assemblée, que la Charte n'autorise pas à contester. La résolution en dispose autrement et par là même elle dépasse la compétence de l'Assemblée générale.

Or celle-ci n'a jamais agi de la sorte depuis la création de l'Organisation.

102. Si l'Assemblée prend maintenant une attitude différente, et ne le fait qu'envers un pays en particulier, on est en droit d'affirmer qu'elle s'engage dans une voie qui équivaut à une discrimination très nette à l'encontre de ce pays. Ce fait a été établi tout à fait clairement au cours des discussions de la Quatrième Commission sur le point 38 de l'ordre du jour, au moment où celle-ci a examiné le rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte [A/4526], sur les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer leurs obligations en vertu de cet article, ainsi que le projet de résolution dont je parle actuellement. En réalité, bien que de nombreuses délégations aient estimé que le rapport devrait recevoir une application très générale, il est de fait que ce document, qui constitue un guide pour les Etats Membres et non pour l'Assemblée en tant que telle, n'a été utilisé que pour mettre en doute et contester les réponses de deux Etats Membres, et notamment celles du Portugal. Il n'est jamais venu à l'idée des délégations que, s'il nous fallait évaluer à leur juste valeur les principes contenus dans le rapport, tous les Etats Membres auraient dû avoir la possibilité d'étudier celui-ci dans sa forme définitive, ce que la Quatrième Commission a simplement refusé de faire.

103. Nous sommes donc forcés de conclure à l'intention d'exercer une discrimination envers certains pays, ce qui constitue une violation du principe de l'égalité des Etats Membres énoncé dans la Charte.

104. Ma délégation croit devoir souligner que cette opinion n'est pas seulement celle du Portugal. En ce qui concerne l'interprétation correcte de l'Article 73, et du point de vue de son application, en ce qui concerne les obligations volontaires que les Etats peuvent assumer en vertu de ce texte, ainsi qu'au sujet de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale, de nombreuses autres délégations, tant à cette session qu'aux sessions antérieures, ont déjà exprimé une opinion analogue à celle que je viens d'énoncer. Je ne veux pas prolonger ce débat en citant des textes, mais j'attire l'attention des membres sur les déclarations faites par certaines délégations pendant la 1049^{ème} séance de la Quatrième Commission lors d'explications de vote au sujet de la résolution, à savoir notamment les déclarations faites par les délégations des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, du Royaume-Uni, de la France, de la Belgique et d'autres pays; toutes ces interventions affirmaient que la résolution que vous venez d'approuver est incompatible avec une interprétation correcte de l'Article 73 et que l'Assemblée générale n'est pas compétente en la matière.

105. Cette opinion a été également exprimée par d'autres délégations, notamment à la quatorzième session, mais leur attitude s'est modifiée à cette session pour des raisons dont elles sont seules juges et qui, malheureusement nous sont encore inconnues.

106. Enfin, ma délégation se voit dans l'obligation de mentionner un autre point. Quelle que soit l'interprétation que tel ou tel d'entre nous puisse donner de l'Article 73 de la Charte, quelles que soient les opinions que l'on peut avoir sur la compétence de l'Assemblée en la matière, il a été clairement indiqué, tant à la Quatrième Commission qu'au sien de l'As-semblée, que l'Article 73 ne s'applique pas au Portugal et qu'en conséquence aucune obligation ne peut être imposée à mon pays quant à la mise en œuvre de cette disposition. Tout effort dans l'autre sens constituerait une violation flagrante de l'Article 2, paragraphe 7, de la Charte.

107. Je ne ferai pas d'observations détaillées sur le texte de la résolution. Ma délégation estime que les raisons que je viens d'exposer sont suffisantes pour expliquer la position que nous avons adoptée; ce sont précisément les raisons qui nous ont incités à voter contre le projet de résolution.

108. Cependant, étant donné la décision qui vient d'être prise par l'Assemblée, je dois — comme je l'ai déjà fait devant la Quatrième Commission [1048ème séance] — exprimer les réserves les plus catégoriques de mon gouvernement quant à sa position à l'égard de cette résolution.

109. M. ORMSBY-GORE (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je voudrais expliquer le vote de ma délégation concernant le projet de résolution II qui vient d'être adopté. De l'avis de ma délégation, il n'appartient pas à l'Assemblée d'exprimer une opinion sur la question de savoir s'il existe ou non, dans un cas déterminé, une obligation de transmettre des renseignements par l'application de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73.

110. Lors de sa quatorzième session, l'Assemblée générale a adopté une résolution [1467 (XIV)] exprimant l'opinion qu'il serait souhaitable qu'elle énumérât les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres — je dis bien les Etats Membres — pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non. Pour cette raison, nous n'avons pas cru devoir voter pour ou contre cette résolution, car l'une ou l'autre attitude aurait pu être interprétée comme l'expression d'une opinion sur le fond de la question dont traite la résolution. Nous nous sommes donc abstenus.

111. Je voudrais cependant présenter deux observations relatives à cette résolution. On déclare, dans la dernière partie du troisième paragraphe du préambule, que le refus aux peuples dépendants du droit de disposer d'eux-mêmes constitue une menace pour la paix internationale. Aux yeux de ma délégation, cette rédaction manque un peu de mesure. De toute façon, nous n'en saisissons pas le sens exact. Les mots "menace... à la paix internationale" sont des termes qui, dans le sein de l'Organisation, devraient, nous semble-t-il, être utilisés avec beaucoup de prudence et seulement dans des circonstances où ils ont un sens très précis. Nous nous demandons si l'utilisation de ces mots était justifiée ou nécessaire dans ce projet de résolution, et nous regrettons qu'ils y aient été repris.

112. La seconde observation que je voudrais faire est la suivante. Cette résolution met à part le Portugal, parmi tous les Etats Membres de l'ONU. Le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni entretient depuis longtemps des liens d'amitié avec le Portugal, et ces liens sont aussi forts aujourd'hui qu'ils l'ont été dans le passé. Nos relations établies par traités remontent au XIVème siècle, et, au cours de ces 600 ans, nos pays ont entretenu les liens les plus étroits et ont toujours été en paix l'un avec l'autre. Une résolution qui vise tout particulièrement le sous son administration qui sont énumérés plus loin, au paragraphe 1, et n'a pas exprimé l'intention de le faire, et comme les renseignements que l'on peut avoir par ailleurs sur la situation de ces territoires sont un sujet d'inquiétude,

Portugal nous paraît donc déplorable. En outre, cette résolution traite d'une question qui, à notre avis, relève de la seule compétence du Gouvernement du Portugal plutôt que de l'Assemblée générale. Pour cette raison, nous n'avons pu l'appuyer.

1. Considère, à la lumière des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, de la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale, et des principes posés par le Comité spécial des Six et approuvés par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution, que les territoires suivants, administrés par le Portugal, sont des territoires non autonomes au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte :

Territoires administrés par le Portugal

- a) Archipel du Cap-Vert ;
- b) Guinée, dite Guinée portugaise ;
- c) Ile Saint-Thomas et ile du Prince et leurs dépendances ;
- d) Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Ouidah ;
- e) Cabinda ;
- f) Angola ;
- g) Mozambique ;
- h) Goa et dépendances, ou « Etat de l'Inde » ;

- i) Macao et dépendances ;
- j) Timor et dépendances.

2. Déclare que le Gouvernement portugais a l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur ces territoires au titre du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et qu'il devrait s'en acquitter sans autre délai ;

3. Prie le Gouvernement portugais de communiquer au Secrétaire général de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, des renseignements sur la situation qui règne dans les territoires placés sous son administration et énumérés au paragraphe 1 ci-dessus ;

4. Prie le Secrétaire général de prendre les mesures nécessaires à la suite de la déclaration du Gouvernement espagnol selon laquelle il est prêt à se conformer aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte ;

5. Invite le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais à participer aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, conformément au paragraphe 2 de la résolution 1332 (XIII), que l'Assemblée générale a adoptée le 12 décembre 1958.

Rapport de la Quatrième Commission

[Texte original en anglais]
[14 décembre 1960]

1. A sa 881^e séance plénière, le 1^{er} octobre 1960, l'Assemblée générale avait renvoyé à la Quatrième Commission le point suivant de son ordre du jour :

2. La Commission a examiné cette question de sa 1031^e à sa 1049^e séance, c'est-à-dire du 1^{er} au 14 novembre 1960.

3. La Commission était saisie du rapport (A/4526) du « Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte », comité que l'Assemblée générale avait créé par sa résolution 1467 (XIV), le 12 décembre 1959. Dans ce rapport, le Comité avait énoncé les considérations générales et les 12 principes qui, de l'avis unanime des membres du Comité spécial des Six, doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non.

4. A la suite de la discussion générale, la Commission a examiné, à sa 1042^e séance, un projet de résolution déposé conjointement par l'Irak, l'Irlande, la Nigéria et le Venezuela (A/C.4/L.648). La Bolivie s'est jointe par la suite aux auteurs de ce texte (A/C.4/L.648/Add.1). Aux termes de ce projet, l'Assemblée générale devait : exprimer sa satisfaction des travaux du Comité spécial des Six ; approuver les principes posés dans le rapport du Comité spécial et annexés au projet de résolution ; décider qu'il y a lieu d'appliquer ces principes, compte tenu dans chaque cas des faits et des circonstances pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, est applicable ou non.

5. De sa 1042^e à sa 1045^e séance, la Commission a examiné ce projet de résolution. A la 1043^e séance, le Togo et la Tunisie ont proposé, dans un amendement publié sous la cote A/C.4/L.650, de remplacer la dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX : « Il est admis que dans certains cas le contrôle de ces procédures par l'ONU peut être souhaitable » par : « Le contrôle de ces procédures par l'ONU est nécessaire ». Plusieurs membres ont rappelé que le Comité spécial, qui se composait d'un nombre égal de Membres administrants et de Membres non administrants, soucieux de réaliser l'unanimité dans ses travaux, s'était prononcé pour un texte qu'il considérait comme une solution de compromis ; ils ont donc prié les représentants du Togo et de la Tunisie de retirer leur amendement, pour que les principes puissent recueillir le plus grand nombre de voix possible. Répondant à ces appels, le représentant de la Tunisie a, lors de la 1044^e séance, proposé oralement, au nom de sa délégation et au nom de la délégation togolaise, de rédiger ainsi son amendement : « Les Nations Unies pourront, lorsqu'elles le jugeront nécessaire, contrôler ces procédures. »

6. A la 1045^e séance, le représentant de la Guinée a oralement proposé de reprendre l'amendement primitivement déposé par le Togo et la Tunisie, mais en remplaçant le mot « nécessaire » par « indispensable ». Au cours de la même séance, le représentant de la Guinée a retiré son amendement, à la demande des auteurs du premier amendement.

7. A la même séance, le représentant de l'Iran a proposé oralement d'ajouter, après le mot « approuve », au paragraphe 2, l'expression « les considérations générales de la partie A et ».

8. A la 1045^e séance, la Commission a voté sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, y compris le texte qui y était joint en annexe, et sur l'amendement A/C.4/L.650 présenté par le Togo et la Tunisie et modifié oralement à la 1044^e séance. Le représentant d'Haïti ayant formulé des réserves relativement au principe d'intégra-tion d'un territoire dépendant dans un Etat indépendant comme une méthode satisfaisante d'accession à l'indépendance, conforme aux buts de la Charte, a demandé que fussent mis aux voix séparément l'alinéa c du principe VI ainsi que les principes VIII et IX. La Commission a décidé de voter d'abord séparément sur les divers paragraphes de l'annexe. Au cours du vote, le représentant de l'Iran a retiré son amendement. Après l'adoption de l'amendement à l'alinéa b du principe IX et l'adoption de l'ensemble de l'annexe, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a proposé de donner la rédaction suivante au paragraphe 2 du projet : « Approuve les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six tels qu'ils figurent, sous une forme modifiée, dans l'annexe de la présente résolution ». La Commission a adopté cette proposition.

L'amendement déposé par le Togo et la Tunisie (A/C.4/L.650) et modifié oralement a été adopté, au vote par appel nominal, par 38 voix contre 24, avec 26 abstentions. Les voix se sont réparties ainsi :

9. Le texte approuvé par la Commission figure au paragraphe 19 ci-après, sous le titre de projet de résolution I.

10. A la 1040^e séance, l'Afghanistan, la Birmanie, Ceylan, le Ghana, la Guinée, l'Inde, le Népal et la Nigéria ont conjointement déposé un projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649) relatif à la communication des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Aux termes de ce projet, l'Assemblée générale était notamment chargée de prendre les mesures suivantes : énumérer les territoires administrés par l'Espagne et le Portugal qu'elle considère comme étant des territoires non autonomes au sens des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, de la résolution 742 (VIII) du 27 novembre 1953 de l'Assemblée générale et des principes énumérés par le Comité spécial des Six ; prier le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais de communiquer des renseignements sur la situation de ces territoires, au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte ; presser le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais d'assurer aux populations autochtones de ces territoires la pleine liberté d'exercer une activité politique démocratique qui hâterait leur accession à l'indépendance.

11. La Commission a examiné ce projet de résolution de sa 1046^e à sa 1049^e séance. A la 1046^e séance, les auteurs ont présenté un texte remanié (A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Corr.1) qui tenait compte de la déclaration que le représentant de l'Espagne avait faite à la 1038^e séance sur la communication de renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73⁴. Le texte remanié omettait d'autre part le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649). L'Irak, le Libéria, la Libye et le Sénégal se sont joints aux auteurs du projet (A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1/Add.1).

12. A la même séance, la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine a déposé les amendements suivants (A/C.4/L.651) :

« 1) Au quatrième alinéa du préambule, supprimer les mots « avec satisfaction » et ajouter, à la fin de l'alinéa, les mots « au sujet des territoires non autonomes suivants : Ifni, Sahara occidental, Fernando Poo, « Rio Muni, îles Canaries » ;

« 2) Insérer le texte suivant, qui sera le paragraphe 1 du dispositif :

« 1. Presse le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais d'accorder aux populations autochtones des territoires non autonomes placés sous leur administration la pleine liberté d'exercer une activité politique démocratique qui assurerait leur accession à l'indépendance » ;

« 3. Au paragraphe 2 du dispositif, ajouter, après les mots « au titre du Chapitre XI de la Charte », les mots « jusqu'au moment où la pleine indépendance leur aura été accordée » ;

« 4. Supprimer le paragraphe 4 du dispositif. »

13. A la 1048^e séance, le représentant de la Guinée a proposé oralement d'apporter une modification de forme à la liste des territoires considérés comme des territoires non autonomes sous administration portugaise : au lieu de faire l'objet d'une rubrique séparée, le Cabinda figurerait avec l'Angola — « Angola (y compris l'enclave de Cabinda) ». La Commission a accepté cette modification.

14. Le représentant de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine n'a pas insisté pour que son deuxième amendement soit mis aux voix, le représentant de la Guinée ayant déclaré au cours de la discussion qu'un projet de résolution serait ultérieurement présenté, touchant le fond de cet amendement.

15. A la même séance, précisant encore la position de son gouvernement, le représentant de l'Espagne a déclaré que le Gouvernement espagnol avait décidé de communiquer au Secrétaire général les renseignements relatifs aux territoires visés au Chapitre XI de la Charte. A la suite de cette déclaration, le représentant de la Bulgarie a proposé oralement d'ajouter l'expression « à la 1048^e séance de » au quatrième alinéa du préambule, qui traite de la déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Espagne.

16. Le projet de résolution relatif aux principes⁵ ayant déjà été adopté, la Commission a décidé, sur la proposition du Président, de supprimer, au paragraphe 1 du dispositif, l'expression « posés par le Comité spécial des Six et ».

La suppression de l'expression « avec satisfaction » au quatrième alinéa du préambule, proposée dans le premier amendement de l'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1), a été rejetée par 50 voix contre 11, avec 11 abstentions.

L'amendement verbal du représentant de la Bulgarie, qui tendait à ajouter au quatrième alinéa du préambule l'expression « à la 1048^e séance de », a été adopté par 57 voix contre zéro, avec 17 abstentions.

La modification proposée dans le premier amendement de l'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1), tendant à ajouter l'expression « au sujet des territoires non autonomes suivants » à la fin du quatrième alinéa du préambule, a été rejetée par 42 voix contre 15, avec 16 abstentions. En conséquence, la Commission n'a pas voté sur la partie restante du premier amendement de l'Ukraine.

L'ensemble du quatrième alinéa du préambule, tel qu'il a été amendé, a été adopté, au vote par appel nominal, par 54 voix contre 8, avec 13 abstentions. Les voix se sont réparties ainsi :

Ont voté pour : Afghanistan, Arabie Saoudite, Argentine, Australie, Autriche, Belgique, Birmanie, Bolivie, Cambodge, Canada, Chili, Chine, Chypre, Colombie, Cuba, Danemark, Equateur, Espagne, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Ethiopie, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, Ghana, Grèce, Guatemala, Guinée, Haïti, Inde, Indonésie, Irak, Iran, Irlande, Israël, Japon, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Mexique, Nigéria, Norvège, Nouvelle-Zélande, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Pays-Bas, Pérou, Philippines, République arabe unie, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Somalie, Suède, Thaïlande, Turquie, Venezuela ;

Le troisième alinéa du préambule a été adopté par 64 voix contre zéro, avec 11 abstentions.

Dans le paragraphe 1 du dispositif, la première partie de la liste des territoires administrés par le Portugal, depuis « Archipel du Cap-Vert » jusqu'à « Mozambique », modifiée par amendement oral du représentant de la Guinée, a été adoptée par 45 voix contre 6, avec 22 abstentions.

La dernière partie de la liste des territoires administrés par le Portugal a été adoptée par 44 voix contre 6, avec 24 abstentions.

ments en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte (A/4526) qui avait pour mission, aux termes de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale en date du 12 décembre 1959, d'étudier les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée, lors de sa quinzième session, sur les résultats de son étude,

ANNEXE

PRINCIPES QUI DOIVENT GUIDER LES ETATS MEMBRES POUR DÉTERMINER SI L'OBLIGATION DE COMMUNIQUER DES RENSEIGNEMENTS, PRÉVUE A L'ALINÉA e DE L'ARTICLE 73 DE LA CHARTE DES NATIONS UNIES, LEUR EST APPLICABLE OU NON

Principe premier

Les auteurs de la Charte des Nations Unies entendaient que le Chapitre XI soit applicable aux territoires qui étaient alors connus comme étant du type colonial. Il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements, aux termes de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, à l'égard de ces territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes.

Principe II

Tels que le Chapitre XI de la Charte les conçoit, les territoires non autonomes sont dans un état dynamique d'évolution et de progrès vers la pleine capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes. Dès qu'un territoire et ses populations ont atteint cette pleine autonomie, l'obligation cesse. Tant qu'ils ne l'ont pas atteinte, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, subsiste.

Principe III

L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte constitue une obligation internationale qui doit être exécutée en tenant dûment compte des exigences du droit international.

Principe IV

Il y a obligation, à première vue, de communiquer des renseignements à l'égard d'un territoire géographiquement séparé et ethniquement ou culturellement distinct du pays qui l'administre.

Principe V

Une fois établi qu'il s'agit à première vue d'un territoire géographiquement et ethniquement ou culturellement distinct, d'autres éléments peuvent entrer en ligne de compte. Ces éléments supplémentaires peuvent être notamment de nature administrative, politique, juridique, économique ou historique. S'ils affectent les relations entre le territoire métropolitain et le territoire considéré de telle façon qu'ils placent arbitrairement ce dernier dans une position ou un état de subordination, ils confirment la présomption qu'il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

Principe VI

On peut dire qu'un territoire non autonome a atteint la pleine autonomie :

- a) Quand il est devenu Etat indépendant et souverain ;
- b) Quand il s'est librement associé à un Etat indépendant ;
- ou
- c) Quand il s'est intégré à un Etat indépendant.

Principe VII

a) La libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question, exprimé selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées. Elle doit respecter l'individualité et les caractéristiques culturelles du territoire et de ses populations, et conserver aux populations du territoire qui s'associe à un Etat indépendant la liberté de modifier le statut de ce territoire en exprimant leur volonté par des moyens démocratiques et selon des méthodes constitutionnelles.

b) Le territoire associé doit avoir le droit de déterminer sa constitution intérieure, sans ingérence extérieure, conformément aux méthodes constitutionnelles régulières et aux vœux librement exprimés de ses populations. Cela n'exclut pas les consultations que pourraient appeler ou exiger les clauses de la libre association.

Principe VIII

L'intégration à un Etat indépendant doit se faire sur la base de l'égalité complète entre le peuple du territoire antérieurement non autonome et celui de l'Etat indépendant auquel il s'intègre. Les deux peuples doivent avoir, sans distinction ni discrimination, un statut et des droits de citoyenneté égaux ainsi que des garanties égales pour ce qui est des libertés et droits fondamentaux ; ils doivent tous deux avoir des droits égaux et des possibilités égales de représentation et de participation effective, à tous les échelons, dans les organes exécutifs, législatifs et judiciaires de l'Etat.

Principe IX

L'intégration devra s'être faite dans les conditions suivantes :

a) Le territoire intégré devra avoir atteint un stade avancé d'autonomie, avec des institutions politiques libres, de telle sorte que ses populations aient la capacité de choisir en pleine connaissance de cause, selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées ;

b) L'intégration doit résulter du désir librement exprimé des populations du territoire, pleinement conscientes du changement de leur statut, la consultation se faisant selon des méthodes démocratiquement et largement diffusées, impartialement appliquées et fondées sur le suffrage universel des adultes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies pourra, quand elle le jugera nécessaire, contrôler l'application de ces méthodes.

Principe X

La communication de renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes, au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, est sujette aux limitations que peuvent exiger des considérations constitutionnelles et de sécurité. Cela signifie que la portée des renseignements peut être limitée dans certaines circonstances, mais la limitation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ne peut pas libérer un Etat Membre des obligations que lui impose le Chapitre XI. La « limitation » ne peut porter que sur le volume des renseignements à transmettre dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement.

Principe XI

Les seules considérations constitutionnelles auxquelles l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte se réfère sont celles qui résultent des relations constitutionnelles entre le territoire et l'Etat Membre administrant. Elles concernent une situation dans laquelle la constitution du territoire lui donne l'autonomie dans les questions économiques, sociales et de l'enseignement, au moyen d'institutions librement élues. Cependant, la responsabilité de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 subsiste, à moins que ces relations constitutionnelles n'empêchent le gouvernement ou le parlement de l'Etat Membre administrant de recevoir des statistiques ou autres renseignements de nature technique concernant la situation du territoire dans les domaines économique, social et de l'enseignement.

Principe XII

Les exigences de la sécurité n'ont pas été invoquées dans le passé. Ce n'est que dans des circonstances tout à fait exceptionnelles que des renseignements d'ordre économique, social ou concernant l'enseignement peuvent mettre en cause la sécurité. Dans d'autres circonstances, par conséquent, il n'y a aucun besoin de limiter la communication des renseignements pour des raisons de sécurité.

1542 (XV). COMMUNICATION DE RENSEIGNEMENTS AU TITRE DE L'ALINÉA e DE L'ARTICLE 73 DE LA CHARTE

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant que, par sa résolution 742 (VIII) du 27 novembre 1953, elle a approuvé la liste des facteurs qui doivent servir de guide pour déterminer si un territoire est ou n'est plus visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte,

Rappelant également que des divergences de vues se sont produites entre des Etats Membres au sujet du statut de certains territoires administrés par l'Espagne et par le Portugal et dénommés par ces deux Etats « provinces d'outre-mer » de l'Etat métropolitain, et que, pour mettre fin à ces divergences, l'Assemblée générale a, par sa résolution 1467 (XIV) du 12 décembre 1959, confiée au Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte le soin d'étudier les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, leur est applicable ou non,

Reconnaissant que le désir d'indépendance est une aspiration légitime des peuples soumis à la domination coloniale, et que leur refuser le droit de libre détermination constitue une menace au bien-être de l'humanité et à la paix internationale,

Rappelant avec satisfaction qu'à la 1048^e séance de la Quatrième Commission le représentant de l'Espagne a déclaré que le Gouvernement espagnol accepte de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général, conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte,

Consciente des responsabilités que lui assigne l'Article 14 de la Charte,

Considérant que le Gouvernement portugais n'a pas communiqué de renseignements au sujet de ceux des territoires placés sous son administration qui sont énumérés au paragraphe 1 ci-dessous et n'a pas exprimé l'intention de le faire, et considérant que les renseignements que l'on peut avoir par ailleurs sur la situation de ces territoires sont un sujet d'inquiétude,

1. Considère, à la lumière des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, de la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale, et des principes approuvés par l'Assemblée dans sa résolution 1541 (XV) du 15 décembre 1960, que les territoires suivants, administrés par le Portugal, sont des territoires non autonomes au sens du Chapitre XI de la Charte :

- a) Archipel du Cap-Vert ;
- b) Guinée, ou « Guinée portugaise » ;
- c) Ile Saint-Thomas et ile du Prince et leurs dépendances ;
- d) Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Ouidah ;
- e) Angola, y compris l'enclave de Cabinda ;
- f) Mozambique ;
- g) Goa et dépendances, ou « Etat de l'Inde » ;
- h) Macao et dépendances ;
- i) Timor et dépendances ;

2. Déclare que le Gouvernement portugais a l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur ces territoires au titre du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et qu'il devrait s'en acquitter sans autre délai ;

3. Prie le Gouvernement portugais de communiquer au Secrétaire général, conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, des renseignements sur la situation qui règne dans les territoires placés sous son administration et énumérés au paragraphe 1 ci-dessus ;

4. Prie le Secrétaire général de prendre les mesures qu'appelle la déclaration du Gouvernement espagnol, selon laquelle il est prêt à se conformer aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte ;

5. Invite le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais à participer aux travaux du Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, conformément au paragraphe 2 de la résolution 1332 (XIII) de l'Assemblée générale, en date du 12 décembre 1958.

948^e séance plénière,
15 décembre 1960.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526)

DISCUSSION GENERALE

1. M. JHA (Inde), présentant le rapport du Comité spécial des Six sur la question de la communication des renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte (A/4526), exprime l'espoir que ce rapport aidera la Quatrième Commission à formuler et énumérer les principes universels sur lesquels les Etats Membres doivent se guider pour s'acquitter des obligations qui résultent du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Les conclusions du rapport ont été formulées en observant aussi rigoureusement que possible les termes du mandat du Comité spécial. La partie essentielle du rapport est la subdivision B de la section V, où sont énumérés 12 principes qui peuvent permettre à l'Assemblée générale de juger dans quelles conditions il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements relatifs à un territoire non autonome en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

2. Tous les membres du Comité spécial, qui se composait en nombre égal de Membres administrants et de Membres non administrants, ont fait des efforts sincères pour se mettre d'accord, ont manifesté de la compréhension mutuelle et fait preuve d'esprit de conciliation quand cela était possible sans sacrifier des principes essentiels. Ils se sont efforcés de parvenir à des conclusions unanimes, convaincus que l'Assemblée générale ne pourrait pas tirer grand parti de conclusions sur lesquelles ils auraient eu des opinions divergentes.

3. Il n'était pas possible de mieux représenter l'harmonie qui a régné au sein du Comité spécial que sous la forme qui a été donnée aux principes. Les Membres non administrants comme les Membres administrants auraient assurément voulu affirmer leur point de vue sur certains aspects particuliers des principes, mais ils ont compris que cela aurait rendu tout accord impossible et qu'il en serait résulté deux séries de principes contradictoires. Ils ont donc fait tous leurs efforts pour parvenir à des conclusions unanimes. Les réserves que certains ont exprimées figurent aux paragraphes 13, 14 et 15 du rapport. Pour tous les points qui ne sont pas traités explicitement dans le rapport et ont été soulevés pendant les discussions du Comité spécial, les membres de la Commission pourront se reporter aux comptes rendus analytiques des séances du Comité (A/AC.100/SR.1 à 14).

4. Le Comité spécial a décidé de se borner à énumérer des principes universels sans citer expressément tel ou tel territoire non autonome, bien qu'on ait parfois mentionné tel ou tel territoire au cours des débats afin de donner des exemples sur certains points. Toutes les discussions ont tenu compte de la situation actuelle et des problèmes relatifs aux territoires non autonomes qui ont fait l'objet des travaux de la Quatrième Commission et de l'Assemblée générale ces dernières années. Les travaux du Comité ne se sont pas seulement inspirés de l'idéal, désormais incontesté, d'un monde où aucun peuple ne serait dominé par un autre, mais ont tenu compte aussi de certains aspects pratiques comme la différence de dimensions des territoires non autonomes, leur situation géographique, etc., de même que de l'évolution et des événements enregistrés ces dernières années et des études diverses faites dans le passé sur ce sujet.

5. Le Comité spécial a pris pleinement en considération les vues communiquées par les Etats Membres en application de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, vues qui figurent dans le document A/AC.100/1 et Add.1 et qui ont été communiquées à la Quatrième Commission en même temps que le rapport. Le Comité a pris également en considération les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte pour décider si un territoire a atteint une complète autonomie et dont la liste est donnée dans la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale. La documentation préparée par le Secrétariat, et notamment les rapports contenus dans les documents A/AC.100/2 et Add.1 et 2, a aussi considérablement aidé le Comité.

6. En soumettant son rapport, le Comité spécial pense avoir formulé des principes à la lumière desquels l'Assemblée générale pourra déterminer dans chaque cas particulier si l'obligation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte existe ou non. Si, comme l'espère le Comité, la Quatrième Commission et l'Assemblée générale adoptent aussi à l'unanimité une série de principes, il sera possible de les appliquer effectivement dans chaque cas particulier. L'adoption des 12 principes proposés ferait disparaître toute incertitude quant à l'existence de l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte et quant aux circonstances dans lesquelles cette obligation s'applique et elle fournirait des éléments juridiques et constitutionnels pouvant servir de base à une action éventuelle de l'Assemblée dans ce domaine.

7. M. ALWAN (Irak) propose que la déclaration du représentant de l'Inde soit distribuée sous forme de document.

Il en est ainsi décidé^{1/}.

8. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) déclare que l'interprétation du Chapitre XI de la Charte, qui impose certaines obligations aux puissances administrant des territoires autres que le leur, a donné lieu au sein de l'Assemblée générale à de longues et vives controverses. On a fait de nombreux efforts pour éclaircir la signification et la portée de ce chapitre, et la Quatrième Commission a fait encore plus d'efforts pour déterminer où commencent et où finissent lesdites obligations. Les derniers efforts ont bénéficié des directives nettement énoncées par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, qui a créé le Comité spécial.

9. C'est avec enthousiasme que la délégation du Mexique a pris part aux travaux du Comité spécial, le Gouvernement mexicain ayant toujours considéré qu'il incombait à l'ONU de se préoccuper de l'avenir des territoires non autonomes. Etant donné que les propositions de Dumbarton Oaks passaient cette question sous silence, que le Gouvernement mexicain estimait qu'il fallait poursuivre l'œuvre entreprise par la Société des Nations, et que les populations des territoires non autonomes demandent l'autodétermination, le Mexique a toujours soutenu qu'il incombait à la collectivité internationale de surveiller l'évolution des populations qui ne sont pas encore libres d'administrer leurs propres affaires et il a affirmé qu'il appartenait à la communauté internationale de décider elle-même quels territoires devaient être placés sous sa protection.

10. On aurait tort d'aborder la question dont est saisie la Commission comme s'il s'agissait de l'adoption de quelque chose d'entièrement nouveau. Ce que la Commission cherche à faire, c'est d'exprimer les doutes et les hésitations dont s'est accompagné le mouvement de colonisation. La civilisation occidentale a toujours présenté au monde un double visage: son esprit agressif a donné naissance au colonialisme envahissant dont ont souffert tant de nations; son esprit constructif a toujours tâché de s'opposer à ce mouvement et à sa préoccupation malsaine pour des fins purement matérielles. Aujourd'hui, au moment où le système colonial commence à s'effondrer, ce système est condamné par ceux qui veulent que l'intérêt du monde prime l'intérêt particulier d'une puissance quelconque.

11. Dès l'origine, il s'est trouvé de grands penseurs européens pour s'élever contre le système colonial et pour penser qu'il fallait mettre un frein à l'usage de la force contre les nations étrangères faibles. Ce sont ces idées qui ont conduit l'Europe à mettre fin à l'esclavage. De même que le colonialisme et ses abus étaient venus d'Europe, c'est l'Europe qui a fourni l'antidote du colonialisme: l'idée d'une collec-tivité internationale, celle des droits de l'homme, celle de la prééminence de l'intérêt général sur l'intérêt particulier d'un seul Etat, quel qu'il soit.

12. L'ONU ne fait donc que marcher sur une voie frayée il y a des siècles. L'ONU a été fondée sur des principes conçus en Europe même afin d'éliminer les maux inhérents à sa grande vague d'expansion. Elle poursuit donc une tâche que le colonialisme lui-même a commencée et sa réussite constituera l'heureux aboutissement d'un processus qui a concrétisé les aspirations spirituelles les plus nobles de l'humanité.

13. La tâche du Comité spécial a été d'étudier les problèmes coloniaux tels qu'ils se sont présentés depuis la fondation de l'ONU. Cette idée trouve son expression dans le premier des principes adoptés par le Comité.

14. Les idées qui l'ont emporté à la Conférence de San Francisco ont changé au cours de 15 ans d'évolution coloniale. On a dit que le Comité spécial ne devrait pas interpréter la Charte, et pourtant le représentant du Mexique se demande si ce n'est pas là précisément ce que font l'Assemblée et tous les autres organes des Nations Unies chaque fois qu'ils agissent. L'ONU aurait tort de renoncer, par peur d'outrepasser ses pouvoirs, à l'un des objectifs essentiels visés par la Charte, à savoir la suppression du système colonial dans l'ensemble du monde.

15. On observe une évolution dans tous les domaines de par le monde, mais dans le domaine du colonialisme plus qu'en toute autre chose. Ce à quoi on osait à peine aspirer en 1945 est maintenant un fait qui s'accomplit. La raison en est que d'autres idées également fécondes se sont concrétisées, par exemple l'idée de la mission sacrée. On pouvait voir dans cette idée le désir des puissances administrantes de former les territoires non autonomes à leur propre image. Mais on ne peut la concevoir ainsi à l'époque actuelle, qui admet la coexistence de diverses civilisations dont l'évolution parallèle donnera un jour naissance à une civilisation universelle. On ne saurait donc voir dans la mission sacrée le désir d'imposer à autrui les valeurs occidentales; elle comporte au contraire, implicitement, un engagement de sauvegarder la culture propre aux peuples non autonomes. La délégation mexicaine juge essentiel de préserver la culture de chacun de ces peuples, culture qui constitue le point de départ nécessaire de leur progrès et sans laquelle ils auraient grand-peine à s'affirmer dans un monde en évolution. Les principes fondamentaux de justice et d'organisation politique de ces peuples ont d'ailleurs tout autant d'importance. L'Assemblée générale ferait bien de ne pas oublier combien il est nécessaire que chacun de ces peuples accède à l'autodétermination selon ses propres critères.

16. L'une des idées les plus destructrices parmi celles qui caractérisent le colonialisme est celle d'imposer de l'extérieur un régime juridique au pays colonisé. Le droit est le produit de la société et l'appliquer sans discernement à des populations ayant des antécédents psychologiques et politiques différents peut être extrêmement néfaste. Les problèmes qui se posent aux peuples non autonomes sont très différents de ceux des puissances administrantes. L'ONU doit donner à ces peuples l'assurance que leur accession à l'indépendance se fera dans le cadre de leurs propres conceptions juridiques.

^{1/} Voir A/C.4/450.

17. Le Comité spécial des Six a fait ressortir à plusieurs reprises l'importance de l'individualité culturelle des peuples non autonomes. Selon la Charte, toutes les civilisations ont leur valeur propre et aucune n'est suprême; les nouveaux Etats ont donc pu constater que le monde était prêt à accueillir leur contribution au fonds commun du droit et de la politique.

18. Depuis des siècles, il s'est trouvé dans les pays métropolitains, et en particulier en Espagne, des hommes d'Etat qui ont condamné le colonialisme en tant que système de gouvernement. Les arguments qu'ils ont fait valoir ont trouvé leur écho dans la Charte, dont l'objectif est de mettre un terme à ce système si désuet et si néfaste. La Charte vise à réaliser ces desseins en s'inspirant de deux principes essentiels: le premier est de veiller à ce que les revendications légitimes des peuples colonisés soient satisfaites sans que cela donne lieu à de lourdes pertes de vies humaines; le second est d'aider ces peuples à accéder à l'indépendance d'une manière qui assure leur bonheur. Plus heureux que les pays d'Amérique latine à l'époque de leur lutte pour l'indépendance, les nouveaux Etats peuvent compter trouver un climat favorable à leur émancipation.

19. Il existe un lien étroit entre les considérations qui ont conduit à la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale et les principes qui sont maintenant proposés à l'examen de la Commission. Lorsqu'elle aura approuvé ces principes, l'Assemblée générale aura posé des règles pour résoudre deux problèmes: celui des cas dans lesquels il y a lieu de communiquer à l'ONU des renseignements sur un territoire et celui des cas dans lesquels le Membre administrant est fondé à cesser de communiquer de tels renseignements — en d'autres termes, dans quelles conditions un territoire tombe sous le coup de la surveillance internationale et dans quelles conditions cette surveillance cesse d'être nécessaire. Comme l'ont montré les débats du Comité spécial, la première question est extrêmement importante, et il ressort clairement du principe IV qu'il y a à priori une obligation de communiquer des renseignements à l'égard d'un territoire qui est séparé géographiquement et distinct du point de vue ethnique et culturel du pays qui l'administre. En ce qui concerne le principe V, le représentant du Mexique se permet d'insister sur le passage visant le cas où un territoire est placé arbitrairement dans une position ou un statut diminué.

20. Les principes VI, VII, VIII et IX traitent de cas où l'on peut affirmer sans hésitation que la surveillance internationale n'a plus de raison d'être. L'idée maîtresse est celle dont s'est inspirée la résolution 742 (VII) de l'Assemblée générale; la seule différence concerne le moment précis de l'histoire où la transformation est chose accomplie.

21. La délégation mexicaine considère comme éminemment constructives les conclusions auxquelles est parvenu le Comité spécial des Six. Il est naturel de supposer que les auteurs de la Charte aient envisagé la possibilité de changements quant au volume et à la portée des renseignements à fournir, mais ils n'ont certainement pas envisagé de réduire ces renseignements à néant. Ce que la Charte vise à accomplir, c'est que les peuples des territoires non autonomes reçoivent toute l'assistance possible en vue de leur accession à l'indépendance; tout ce qui peut empêcher la réalisation de cet objectif est contraire à l'esprit de la Charte. Comme le fait ressortir le paragraphe 17 du rapport, la Charte représente un point culminant de l'évolution progressive de l'opinion publique internationale et la mise en œuvre de ses recommandations constitue un facteur important de la préservation de la paix et de la sécurité internationales.

22. La question primordiale est de savoir si les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte constituent une véritable obligation pour les Membres administrants. Le Gouvernement mexicain n'en a jamais douté. Sa conviction se fonde sur de nombreuses raisons: l'identité de vues quant à la nature du problème colonial dont se sont inspirés tant le Pacte de la Société des Nations que la Charte des Nations Unies; le fait qu'à San Francisco on se soit préoccupé tout autant des territoires non autonomes que des territoires sous tutelle; le fait qu'il est purement fortuit qu'on ait donné au Chapitre XI le titre de "Déclaration"; l'affirmation implicite dans les termes mêmes de ce chapitre de l'existence de l'obligation; enfin l'opinion du professeur Hans Kelsen, qui a exprimé l'avis que les dispositions du préambule, et davantage encore celles dudit Chapitre, comportaient une obligation. L'absence de toute affirmation bien tranchée sur ce problème dans le rapport du Comité spécial tient à ce que ses membres avaient à ce sujet des positions arrêtées par avance; des progrès substantiels ont néanmoins été accomplis en cette matière, grâce à l'esprit de compréhension dont ont fait preuve les membres du Comité.

23. Le principe III, qui reconnaît le caractère international des obligations résultant ipso facto de la possession de colonies, est d'une importance fondamentale. L'administration des colonies cesse, par là, d'être un simple instrument de politique nationale, et le droit des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes cesse d'être subordonné uniquement à la politique des puissances administrantes. Le droit international a pour objectif de veiller à ce que la justice règne entre les nations et à ce que chaque nation reçoive ce qui lui est dû, en dépit de toutes les pressions éventuelles. Le principe III établit en conséquence que l'application des dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 constitue une obligation internationale. Si l'on accepte cette obligation internationale de communiquer des renseignements, on se doit d'accepter aussi la surveillance de l'Assemblée générale, sans quoi il devient impossible d'appliquer les règles internationales.

24. La délégation mexicaine admet également l'existence d'une obligation morale et M. Cuevas Cancino désire à ce sujet souligner l'importance extrême qu'attache sa délégation à l'Article 74 de la Charte des Nations Unies. Le principe du bon voisinage, accepté comme un principe juridique par les Etats d'Amérique, a trouvé son expression à la fois dans le préambule de la Charte et dans son article 74; il s'agit là d'une forme moderne de la vieille idée de fraternité humaine. Ce principe signifie qu'on ne saurait fonder les relations internationales sur des intérêts nationaux égoïstes. Toute nation désireuse de se conduire en bonne voisine se voit obligée de prendre en considération le bien-être collectif et de veiller à concilier ses propres intérêts avec ceux du monde où elle vit. Les devoirs d'ordre social qui s'imposent à la propriété privée sont aujourd'hui admis par beaucoup et on pourrait en dire autant des responsabilités qui vont de pair avec la souveraineté nationale.

Les conséquences à tirer de l'Article 74 sont parfaitement claires: aucun pays n'est libre de gouverner ses colonies en ne tenant aucun compte de l'opinion de la communauté internationale. Le principe de bon voisinage dépasse de beaucoup des considérations de simple proximité géographique; il se fonde sur des obligations morales qui transcendent la géographie. Il signifie que les puissances administrantes se doivent, non seulement de guider leurs colonies vers l'indépendance, mais aussi de tenir compte de l'évolution qui s'opère dans les régions où sont situés ces territoires. Ces aspects de la question sont bien résumés au paragraphe 19 du rapport du Comité spécial (A/4526) et la délégation mexicaine est convaincue que l'observation de ce principe peut être très féconde.

25. Les principes formulés par le Comité spécial des Six ne rencontreront probablement pas l'approbation de ceux qui ont adopté des positions extrémistes. Ils ont cependant le grand mérite de définir clairement les conditions dans lesquelles s'appliquent les obligations imposées par l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. La délégation mexicaine considère ces principes comme entièrement satisfaisants et en recommande l'adoption à la Quatrième Commission.

26. M. DJERDJA (Yougoslavie) rend hommage au Comité spécial pour son rapport et pour les efforts qu'il a déployés. La délégation yougoslave approuve pratiquement toutes les observations et conclusions du Comité. Elle partage en particulier l'opinion exprimée au paragraphe 18 du rapport, selon laquelle "la Charte est un document vivant et l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits". Selon M. Djerdja, le fait que cette idée a été élaborée par un comité aux travaux duquel ont pris part des représentants des puissances administrantes lui confère une importance pratique et une valeur spéciale.

27. L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73 de la Charte et les autres obligations énoncées au Chapitre XI sont de nature juridique, au même titre que toutes les autres obligations qui découlent de la Charte. Aucun Etat Membre ne peut donc s'en défaire par une action unilatérale ou une interprétation arbitraire. L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements s'applique à tous les territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes et elle demeure en vigueur depuis le moment où la puissance administrante a été admise à l'ONU jusqu'à l'accession du territoire non autonome à une autonomie complète. Seule cette accession à une autonomie complète peut libérer les Membres administrants de l'obligation en question. Une autonomie limitée s'exerçant dans certains domaines, mentionnés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, ne peut permettre de cesser de communiquer des renseignements aux termes de cet article.

28. L'Assemblée générale a compétence pour déterminer si un territoire s'administre complètement lui-même ou s'il tombe sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI. Cette compétence de l'Assemblée générale ressort clairement des dispositions de la Charte et l'Assemblée l'a confirmée dans de nombreuses résolutions.

29. La question de la définition de certains principes à suivre n'a plus en fait la même importance pratique que naguère et elle est devenue, dans une certaine mesure, d'un intérêt théorique. La situation a, en effet, beaucoup changé depuis l'adoption de la Charte et même depuis la quatorzième session de l'Assemblée générale où le Comité spécial des Six a été créé. La question de la liquidation des relations coloniales désuètes et de l'octroi de la liberté et de l'indépendance à tous les peuples dépendants revêt maintenant, en revanche, la plus haute importance internationale, comme le prouve le fait qu'à la présente session l'attention se concentre sur les problèmes coloniaux. L'ONU ne peut permettre que ses décisions et ses actes soient dépassés par les événements en matière de problèmes coloniaux ou dans les autres domaines; ses décisions doivent être à l'unisson des temps présents et donner une forme concrète aux tendances et aspirations contemporaines. Les peuples asservis de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée dite portugaise et d'autres territoires, qui sont privés de la dignité humaine et des droits nationaux fondamentaux, attendent de l'Assemblée générale beaucoup plus que la simple confirmation de certains principes.

30. La délégation yougoslave, comme beaucoup d'autres, n'a jamais douté que les territoires sous administration portugaise et espagnole ont toujours été des colonies dans la pleine acception du terme et le demeureront jusqu'au jour où ils auront obtenu leur indépendance totale. Les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte leur sont manifestement applicables. Le fait que le Portugal ait remplacé le mot "colonies" par les mots "provinces d'outre-mer" pour qualifier ses territoires ne change rien à leur statut colonial.

31. Pendant la discussion générale sur les territoires non autonomes, la délégation yougoslave, de même que d'autres délégations, et notamment des délégations de pays d'Afrique, a donné certains détails sur la situation qui règne dans les territoires sous contrôle espagnol et portugais. Il est vain que les puissances administrantes essaient de nier ces faits.

32. La délégation yougoslave estime que la Quatrième Commission devrait moins s'attacher à définir des principes qu'à prendre les mesures qui s'imposent pour permettre à tous les territoires encore non autonomes d'accéder très prochainement à l'indépendance complète et pour éliminer rapidement les relations coloniales d'une manière générale.

33. La question des colonies espagnoles et portugaises fait partie du problème colonial et toute décision que l'Assemblée générale prendra au sujet de ce problème à la présente session doit s'appliquer à tous les territoires dépendants sans exception. M. Djerdja pense en particulier au projet de résolution concernant la participation des territoires non autonomes aux travaux de l'ONU et des institutions spécialisées que la Commission a adopté à sa 1022ème séance. La délégation yougoslave s'attend à ce qu'en vertu de cette résolution des représentants qualifiés des populations autochtones des possessions portugaises et espagnoles participent aux travaux des organes des Nations Unies, jusqu'à ce que ces territoires aient obtenu leur pleine indépendance.

34. La délégation yougoslave est prête à appuyer toute mesure visant à assurer l'émancipation rapide et complète de tous les territoires non autonomes.

35. M. SIDI BABA (Maroc) n'a pas beaucoup à ajouter à ce qui a été dit par les représentants de l'Inde et du Mexique. En raison de la composition paritaire du Comité spécial des Six, il est naturel que le rapport du Comité représente un compromis et ait été rédigé en termes sensiblement moins catégoriques que ne l'auraient désiré les délégations des Membres non administrants. Le Comité spécial a laissé à la Quatrième Commission le soin d'énumérer les territoires auxquels doit s'appliquer l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements et de déterminer quelles sont les puissances coloniales intéressées. De l'avis de la délégation du Maroc, l'énumération devrait comprendre tous les territoires dépendants sans exception et toutes les puissances coloniales devraient se conformer aux principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité et tenir compte de l'évolution récente des événements. L'Assemblée générale a décidé d'examiner en séance plénière le projet de déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux (A/4502 et Corr.1). Il s'est ainsi produit une évolution considérable depuis le moment où le rapport du Comité spécial a été rédigé.

36. M. Sidi Baba propose de distribuer comme document de la Commission la déclaration que vient de faire le représentant du Mexique.

37. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) dit qu'il ne fera pas de longue déclaration pour le moment, mais qu'il tient à formuler une ou deux observations d'ordre général.

38. La délégation du Royaume-Uni a accepté de participer aux travaux du Comité spécial des Six parce qu'elle estimait qu'il avait une tâche utile à accomplir. Tous ceux qui ont pris part aux travaux de la Quatrième Commission ces dernières années ont constaté que, malgré les relations étroites et amicales qui existent entre les membres, il y a eu des divergences de vues sur le sujet dont traite le rapport du Comité spécial. Ces divergences de vues étaient inévitables, car elles découlaient de conceptions nationales différentes, mais sir Andrew Cohen estime qu'elles ont été plus larges qu'elles n'auraient dû l'être. La délégation du Royaume-Uni avait toujours considéré que, si l'on pouvait étudier de près les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres à ce sujet et si chaque délégation pouvait mieux comprendre le point de vue des autres délégations, les divergences pourraient s'atténuer dans une large mesure. Avant que le Comité des Six ait commencé ses travaux, sir Andrew Cohen pensait, cependant, que les chances de voir le Comité rédiger un rapport sur lequel l'accord se serait fait étaient assez problématiques. La Quatrième Commission ne peut que se féliciter de constater que le Comité est parvenu à rédiger un tel rapport grâce à la bonne foi, à l'esprit de compréhension et de conciliation, à la patience et à la diligence dont ses membres ont fait preuve.

39. La délégation du Royaume-Uni s'est vue obligée de formuler des réserves au sujet de certaines parties du rapport, mais n'a pas élevé d'objections contre d'autres parties, bien qu'elle n'ait pas été entièrement satisfaite du texte. Comme l'a fait observer le représentant du Maroc, il a été parfois difficile d'aboutir à un accord complet et les deux parties ont dû faire de grands efforts pour y parvenir. Le fait que le Comité soit parvenu à un accord prouve que, lorsqu'il s'agit de questions importantes qui concernent les intérêts et l'avenir de millions de personnes, il est possible à un organe comme le Comité spécial des Six ou tout autre organe des Nations Unies de parvenir, par la négociation et des efforts de conciliation, à des formules qui soient très généralement, sinon tout à fait unanimement acceptées. C'est là un fait encourageant et sir Andrew Cohen espère que, s'agissant d'autres questions importantes qui ont un rapport avec le même sujet, il sera possible de parvenir au même résultat. La délégation du Royaume-Uni est heureuse que le Comité spécial ait pu se mettre d'accord sur les principes qui, selon les termes de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, "doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable ou non". La délégation du Royaume-Uni estime que l'Assemblée générale devrait recommander ces principes à l'attention des Etats Membres. Ils auraient toute l'autorité d'un texte sur lequel un comité aussi largement représentatif est parvenu à un accord.

40. Sir Andrew Cohen appuie la proposition du représentant du Maroc visant à distribuer comme document officiel la déclaration du représentant du Mexique.

41. Le PRESIDENT déclare que, s'il n'y a pas d'objections, le texte de la déclaration du représentant du Mexique sera distribué comme document de la Commission.

Il en est ainsi décidé 2/.

42. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) déclare que, pour le moment, elle ne fera pas de déclaration sur la question dont la Commission est saisie. Cependant, elle tient à rendre hommage à M. Espinosa y Prieto, de la délégation mexicaine, sur l'initiative de qui le projet de résolution visant à créer le Comité spécial a été présenté à la Quatrième Commission, à la quatorzième session. Elle le remercie, au nom des Etats d'Afrique représentés à la Commission, d'avoir défendu si courageusement les intérêts des peuples dépendants.

43. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) dit qu'il informera M. Espinosa y Prieto des observations faites par la représentante du Libéria.

La séance est levée à 12 h 20.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. M. DINGEMANS (Pays-Bas) dit que sa délégation, en qualité de membre du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, se félicite de ce que l'accord se soit fait sur le texte d'un rapport (A/4526) et tient à rendre hommage à l'esprit d'harmonie et de bonne volonté qui a régné au sein du Comité. Le résultat final montre naturellement que des concessions ont été faites, mais il demeure néanmoins un excellent exemple de ce que peuvent accomplir des Etats Membres œuvrant en commun avec bonne foi et persévérance. Le texte, et notamment celui des principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V, est rédigé logiquement et clairement, et la délégation néerlandaise ne doute pas que les principes n'aident utilement la Quatrième Commission à déterminer l'existence de l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

2. La délégation des Pays-Bas loue le rapport et espère qu'il sera approuvé à l'unanimité.

3. M. BRAIMAH (Ghana) félicite le Comité spécial, et notamment son président, du travail remarquable qui a été accompli. La délégation du Ghana est heureuse de noter l'existence d'un large terrain d'entente sur la manière d'aborder le problème et sur les principes fondamentaux qui sont en jeu, ce qui a permis au Comité de parvenir à des conclusions unanimes.

4. De l'avis de la délégation du Ghana, la tâche primordiale du Comité spécial était de déterminer s'il convenait de considérer les possessions non européennes de l'Espagne et du Portugal comme des provinces de ces pays ou comme des territoires non autonomes, et si, par suite, il convenait de considérer les deux pays européens en question comme des Membres administrants à qui s'applique l'obligation de communiquer les renseignements prévue par l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

5. Appelant l'attention sur le principe IV, M. Braimah rappelle qu'une loi du 11 juin 1951 a modifié le statut des possessions d'outre-mer du Portugal qui sont séparées géographiquement du Portugal et dont les populations sont distinctes au point de vue ethnique et au point de vue culturel de la population portugaise et, de colonies, en a fait des "provinces d'outre-mer". Ce changement de statut n'a pas été le résultat d'un choix libre et volontaire du peuple des territoires en question, qui se serait exprimé par des méthodes éclairées et démocratiques; la loi en question n'a ni donné à ces peuples le droit de décider de leur constitution intérieure ni tenu compte de leurs désirs et de leurs aspirations.

6. La délégation du Ghana a toujours pensé que le Portugal, comme les autres puissances coloniales d'Europe occidentale, était purement et simplement engagé en Afrique et en Asie dans une entreprise colonialiste et impérialiste du type traditionnel. L'expansion colonialiste portugaise dans ces régions ne diffère aucunement, dans ses résultats, des agissements de toute autre puissance coloniale: elle aussi aboutit à établir la domination d'un pays sur des populations étrangères. La délégation du Ghana ne saurait donc accepter qu'on permette au Portugal d'éluder, par une action unilatérale, l'obligation de rendre des comptes à l'opinion publique internationale que prévoit expressément l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Il s'agit au fond de savoir quelle opinion les Portugais eux-mêmes se font de leur empire. Or des porte-parole autorisés du Portugal conviennent sans réserve que ce pays, dans ses prétendues provinces d'outre-mer, se livre à une entreprise impérialiste de type aussi traditionnel que périmé. Dans une introduction qu'il a rédigée pour une publication officielle du Ministère portugais des provinces d'outre-mer intitulée Enquête sur l'anticolonialisme, parue en 1957, l'ancien Ministre portugais des provinces d'outre-mer s'est exprimé en ces termes (p. 11):

"On s'accorde à reconnaître qu'une grande partie de l'Europe occidentale est liée à l'Afrique par son histoire, son économie, sa population, sa vie même. Toute action de nature à provoquer une séparation aurait des répercussions directes sur l'indépendance économique de l'Europe et même, dans certains cas, sur l'indépendance politique de quelques pays.

"Les nations dites européennes, une fois privées de l'élément africain qui les complète, glisseraient inévitablement vers la ruine. L'Europe perdrait en conséquence la valeur qu'elle a pour l'alliance occidentale.

"...

"On ne saurait contester leurs droits souverains (c'est-à-dire ceux des puissances d'Europe occidentale) ni mettre en doute les bienfaits que les populations qui habitent ces territoires, quelle que soit leur origine ethnique, retirent d'un gouvernement et d'une administration fondés sur la structure organique de vieilles métropoles qui ont l'expérience, les moyens et la force de caractère voulus pour entreprendre la mission de progrès et de civilisation qu'elles poursuivent aujourd'hui dans l'assurance et l'enthousiasme. Essayer d'en interrompre le cours pour accorder l'indépendance à des groupes de populations non qualifiés, qui n'ont rien sur quoi fonder leurs demandes de privilèges et, pis encore, n'auraient jamais formulé ce genre de revendications si l'on ne les y avait incités et encouragés de l'extérieur — essayer d'agir ainsi serait rendre un mauvais service à l'Afrique et à tous ses habitants. Il est on ne peut plus clair que toutes ces populations ont tout à gagner à laisser se poursuivre leur mouvement ascendant grâce à l'assistance et aux conseils à la fois protecteurs et paternels de la vieille métropole."

7. Les principes qui s'expriment dans ce passage sont ceux du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme le plus nets et démontrent combien est dérisoire l'affirmation du Portugal selon laquelle l'Angola et le Mozambique sont des provinces exactement au même titre que le Minho et le Beira.

8. Dans le même volume, un autre auteur s'étend longuement sur ces mêmes doctrines désuètes et dangereuses. Il souhaite la création d'une organisation des puissances coloniales pour sauvegarder leurs intérêts en Afrique, "malgré les déviations, les faiblesses, l'imprudence, les erreurs et — tranchons le mot — la lâcheté de certains" (ouvr. cité, p. 253), faisant par là probablement allusion à certains des alliés du Portugal qui se sont vus forcés de libérer certaines de leurs possessions coloniales. D'après cet auteur, l'organisation en question devrait être cimentée par un accord entre les Etats européens possédant des territoires en Afrique et les Etats indépendants de longue date ou nouvellement créés de ce continent (ouvr. cité, p. 261). Les auteurs cités se rendent compte tous deux que les possessions portugaises d'Afrique sont tenues par la force et que les jours de la domination impérialiste sont comptés sur ce continent en pleine évolution. Plutôt que les formules procédurières mises en avant par le Gouvernement du Portugal, ce sont les postulats et le vocabulaire même de ces auteurs que la Quatrième Commission se doit de peser mûrement afin de décider si le Portugal est sujet à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur ses possessions conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

9. Un écrivain français, Christine Garnier, expose, dans son livre intitulé Vacances avec Salazar^{1/}, que le Premier Ministre, à qui l'on demandait quel régime avait adopté le Portugal pour gouverner ses territoires d'outre-mer, parlait de cette politique comme d'une politique d'intégration, ajoutant qu'il ne fallait voir dans le retour à l'ancien nom de "provinces d'outre-mer" aucun changement d'attitude de la part du Portugal, contrairement à ce qui s'était passé dans d'autres pays dont les colonies étaient devenues des "Etats d'outre-mer". Le Premier Ministre du Portugal est donc le premier à admettre que ce changement d'appellation ne correspond à aucune modification de l'attitude traditionnelle du Portugal envers ses colonies, et que le vieux régime de domination et d'exploitation se poursuit comme par le passé. C'est d'ailleurs cette persistance de l'attitude traditionnelle qui explique que des contradictions se soient manifestées en pratique lors de l'application aux territoires d'outre-mer du concept d'intégration. La loi régissant le statut des habitants de ces territoires établit une distinction entre les citoyens portugais et les Portugais "indigènes". Lord Hailey a écrit à ce sujet que les "citoyens" portugais comprennent naturellement les "civilizados" qui sont parvenus à la citoyenneté pleine et entière; les Portugais "indigènes" comprennent tous les habitants du territoire non encore parvenus à ce statut, les Portugais considérant les Portugais "indigènes" comme des mineurs destinés à ne devenir des citoyens portugais complets qu'après avoir atteint une maturité culturelle qui leur donne droit à ce titre^{2/}.

10. Il va sans dire que la délégation du Ghana s'oppose catégoriquement à l'attitude raciste qui a poussé le Portugal à adopter une méthode aussi inhumaine de classification d'êtres humains. Pour citer encore une fois lord Hailey, au regard du droit civil les affaires des Portugais "indigènes" sont régies par la coutume et par le droit coutumier, tandis que, du point de vue administratif, ils sont soumis au contrôle des autorités indigènes, elles-mêmes subordonnées à l'autorité des fonctionnaires du gouvernement. Les problèmes du travail sont soumis à un régime spécial défini par le code du travail. En matière de propriété foncière, leurs droits de possession et d'occupation sont régis par le droit coutumier et non point par le droit jurisprudentiel. L'"indigène" en tant que tel n'est pas représenté directement auprès des organismes législatifs du gouvernement; tant qu'il n'est pas parvenu à la citoyenneté pleine et entière, il est obligé de porter un livret d'identification et de le montrer sur demande, et il n'a pas le droit de se déplacer d'une localité à une autre sans une autorisation qui doit être inscrite dans son livret^{3/}.

11. Tout ce qui précède démontre bien qu'il n'y a pas d'égalité devant la loi entre les Portugais et les habitants de leurs possessions d'outre-mer. La classification en question contrevient au principe VIII du Comité spécial des Six. La délégation du Ghana soutient que les distinctions bien tranchées qui existent rendent dérisoires le concept portugais d'intégration et les prétendus droits d'égale citoyenneté qu'il confère aux Européens et aux Africains. Non seulement les populations autochtones se voient refuser le droit de prendre part à l'activité politique des territoires, mais une différence réelle sépare les deux catégories d'habitants quant à leur statut légal et administratif. Cette classification est fondée sur le mépris des droits et du respect humain de ces populations et n'a pour dessein que de détruire leur identité culturelle.

12. De ce que vient de dire le représentant du Ghana, il ressort clairement que la participation des habitants autochtones des possessions portugaises à la conduite de leurs propres affaires est strictement limitée ou même inexistante. Rien n'indique que de vastes secteurs de la population soient activement associés à l'élaboration ou à la mise en œuvre de programmes qui affectent pourtant leur progrès économique, social, éducatif et politique. Bien au contraire, comme l'a fait remarquer lord Hailey, il existe dans toutes ces possessions une centralisation très poussée du gouvernement et de l'administration dont l'effet est de donner à ces possessions un statut qui les assujettit au Portugal, puisqu'elle aboutit à l'intégration de l'économie des territoires à un système économique portugais. Le Portugal ne saurait donc éluder l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue par l'alinéa e de l'Article 73.

13. Ce qu'a dit le représentant du Ghana des territoires portugais vaut tout autant pour les territoires espagnols d'Afrique. Lord Hailey n'a guère décelé de différences entre la pratique administrative et coloniale de ces deux pays.

14. Le grand mouvement de liberté et d'indépendance qui entraine aujourd'hui l'Afrique ne peut pas être enrayé par des formules légales et juridiques. Un simple décret du Gouvernement portugais ou espagnol ne suffit pas à transformer des habitants autochtones de l'Afrique ou de l'Asie en Portugais ou en Espagnols. Il faudra que ces deux gouvernements se résignent à accepter les réalités du XXème siècle et à tenir pleinement compte des aspirations de ces peuples à la liberté et à l'indépendance. La délégation du Ghana ressent beaucoup d'inquiétude de ce que le Portugal semble résolu à résister activement au grand mouvement de libération de l'Afrique. Les prétendues provinces d'outre-mer ne peuvent pas rester indéfiniment à l'écart du grand "vent de changement" qui balaie l'Afrique. Les événements qui se sont récemment déroulés au Nyassaland et au Congo ont influencé ceux qui luttent pour leur liberté au Mozambique et dans l'Angola, et ce qui vient de se passer en Afrique française a eu son retentissement sur la Guinée dite portugaise. L'exode vers le Ghana d'un nombre croissant de réfugiés politiques de l'Angola indique que le mouvement nationaliste s'intensifie sur ce territoire. Les autorités portugaises, en continuant de réprimer ces mouvements nationalistes, ne peuvent que provoquer des explosions comme celles qui se sont déjà produites ailleurs, peut-être même des conflits qui mettraient directement en péril la sécurité et la paix internationales. Les pays indépendants d'Afrique sont résolus à empêcher qu'on invoque des artifices constitutionnels et procéduriers pour justifier des agissements qui sapent la liberté et l'indépendance des Africains vivant dans les provinces portugaises d'Afrique. A la deuxième Conférence des Etats africains indépendants, qui s'est récemment tenue à Addis-Abéba, ces Etats ont décidé de continuer d'agir d'un commun accord pour accomplir par tous les moyens possibles l'élimination complète de la domination coloniale en Afrique.

15. La délégation du Ghana accueille favorablement le rapport du Comité spécial; il appartient désormais à la Quatrième Commission d'en mettre les principes en œuvre. La première mesure urgente qui s'impose est que la Commission demande au Portugal et à l'Espagne de communiquer sans retard des renseignements conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, de libérer les chefs nationalistes incarcérés, de cesser de réprimer les mouvements de libération nationale dans les territoires sous leur autorité et de fixer définitivement la date de l'émancipation et de l'indépendance de ces territoires.

16. M. KENNEDY (Irlande), après avoir remercié le Comité spécial des Six du travail qu'il a effectué, dit que la délégation de l'Irlande approuve dans l'ensemble les principes fondamentaux précis que ce comité a élaborés. Son rapport aurait pu difficilement être publié à un moment plus opportun puisqu'il traite en effet d'un chapitre essentiel de la Charte se rapportant aux buts et aux espoirs de millions de personnes disséminées sur d'immenses régions géographiques. L'ancien système colonial s'effondre dans le monde entier et, de l'avis de la délégation de l'Irlande, l'importance considérable de l'action du Comité spécial repose sur le fait qu'il a exprimé le courant profond de liberté et d'égalité sociale qui se manifeste et qu'il a fait de la Charte un instrument vivant, dynamique, dont l'esprit doit s'adapter aux changements rapides du monde contemporain.

17. Il est encourageant pour la délégation de l'Irlande que les idées générales qui ont été celles du Comité spécial lorsqu'il a rédigé les 12 principes soient très proches des vues exprimées par le Gouvernement irlandais dans son mémoire (A/AC.100/1/Add.1, par. 3 à 7). Cette constatation s'applique notamment au principe IV, centre de toute la question, dont la délégation de l'Irlande prend note avec satisfaction et qui représente une façon raisonnable et réaliste d'envisager le problème.

18. La délégation de l'Irlande espère que les 12 principes figureront dans une résolution dont tous les Membres administrants s'inspireront pour déterminer les responsabilités qui leur incombent en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 et elle est persuadée que chaque Etat Membre tiendra pleinement compte des principes pour établir les obligations qu'il doit remplir à l'égard de l'ONU. Cela représente le seul espoir réel d'un développement régulier et rapide permettant d'atteindre les buts fixés par la Charte en coopération avec le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes et les autres organes des Nations Unies. A la présente session, la Quatrième Commission dont l'importance est si grande pour les petits pays est saisie d'une question profondément significative à laquelle se rattache directement la tâche confiée au Comité spécial. Il s'agit de savoir si l'évolution entreprise récemment doit se poursuivre au cours de ces prochaines années, dans des conditions de paix et de sécurité et dans le cadre de l'ONU, ou s'il faut abandonner les dispositions mêmes de la Charte et mettre fin à l'existence des organes des Nations Unies et aux importants travaux de la Quatrième Commission. Le Comité spécial a montré la voie qu'il fallait suivre pour réaliser à l'avenir une évolution pacifique et la délégation de l'Irlande espère que tous les membres souscriront aux principes établis par ce comité et qu'ils les appliqueront.

19. M. ZULOAGA (Venezuela) dit qu'avant de formuler un projet de résolution tendant à entériner les 12 principes que le Comité spécial des Six a approuvés à l'unanimité, la Quatrième Commission devrait réfléchir sur un trait remarquable mis à jour lors de sa récente approbation unanime de trois projets de résolution d'importance capitale. Vouloir un vote à l'unanimité est louable, mais cela ne devrait pas permettre de dissimuler les intentions subtiles visant à saper les résolutions, à les rendre inefficaces et impossibles à appliquer. Si l'on examine les choses de plus près on s'apercevra que les puissances coloniales ont utilisé avec habileté les tactiques de l'abstention: simple abstention qui passe inaperçue ou abstention avec une explication de vote dans laquelle les réserves émises sont quelquefois plus catégoriques qu'un vote franchement négatif ne l'aurait été. Une des puissances suit la méthode, à tout prendre plus franche, d'être absente. L'une des puissances qui s'abstiennent systématiquement au cours des votes ne reconnaît même pas l'existence du Comité des renseignements, tandis que deux autres réussissent, en utilisant certaines expressions et en se livrant à des tours de passe-passe juridiques, à s'exclure de la catégorie des Membres administrants. Toutes les délégations représentées au sein de la Commission peuvent voter comme bon leur semble, mais les autres délégations ont le droit d'analyser les votes et de tirer leurs propres conclusions pour savoir si les résolutions seront ou ne seront pas dûment mises en œuvre. La Quatrième Commission devrait donc s'efforcer de rédiger ses projets de résolution en termes précis et ne devrait pas être tentée de rechercher une unanimité qui ne signifie rien.

20. La délégation du Venezuela estime que, pour remédier à ces manœuvres parlementaires, il faudrait modifier le mandat du Comité des renseignements afin de tenir compte des trois projets de résolution très importants que la Commission a approuvés à l'unanimité.

21. En ce qui concerne le rapport du Comité spécial des Six (A/4526), la délégation du Venezuela estime que l'affirmation énoncée au paragraphe 18 — "la Charte est un document vivant et l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits" — est d'une importance telle qu'elle devrait figurer au préambule de toutes les résolutions approuvées par la Commission au cours de cette session. A cet égard, il n'est que juste de faire remarquer que certaines délégations qui, l'année dernière, s'étaient opposées avec énergie et habileté à tous les projets de résolution proposant la création d'un comité chargé d'examiner les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements leur est applicable ou non ont collaboré avec bonne volonté aux travaux du Comité spécial. Il y a donc des raisons d'être optimiste quant à "l'évolution actuelle des esprits".

22. En ce qui concerne le troisième principe, M. Zuloaga fait observer qu'en signant la Charte et en contractant, de ce fait, certaines obligations internationales, chaque Etat Membre a abandonné une partie de sa souveraineté et a acquis certains droits et l'avantage de la protection de l'Organisation internationale, ce qui est d'une importance particulière pour les petits pays.

23. M. Zuloaga présentera ultérieurement des observations relatives à la réserve faite par le Royaume-Uni au sujet du principe IX. La réserve que ce pays a apposée au principe X et qui est consignée au paragraphe 15 du rapport constitue un exemple du genre de réserves dont M. Zuloaga a déjà parlé et elle enlève toute valeur à l'approbation du principe.

24. M. Zuloaga félicite les six délégations de leur excellent travail qui, M. Zuloaga en est persuadé, permettra à la Quatrième Commission de mettre fin au refus de certains Etats de communiquer des renseignements, fait qui a discrédité l'ONU aux yeux du monde et en particulier auprès des Etats nouvellement indépendants et auprès des territoires qui dépendent encore d'Etats métropolitains.

25. M. LOIZOU (Chypre) rappelle que son pays, qui a récemment, par de grands sacrifices, gagné son indépendance, honore et soutient tous ceux qui, dans toutes les parties du monde, continuent à lutter pour leur libération. Il estime que les travaux de la Quatrième Commission, bien que leur envergure soit limitée par des considérations d'ordre juridique, présentent la plus grande importance en ce qui concerne l'accession rapide et pacifique à l'indépendance de tous les peuples qui ne jouissent pas encore de leur droit inaliénable à l'autonomie.

26. La délégation de Chypre prend acte avec satisfaction des 12 principes qui définissent et réglementent l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, obligation qui ne peut prendre fin que lorsqu'un territoire s'administre complètement lui-même. Un Membre administrant, quel qu'il soit, ne peut trouver de prétexte pour justifier son refus d'honorer cette obligation juridique. Les principes VI, VII, VIII et IX définissent de façon claire l'expression "pleine autonomie" et réfutent entièrement les arguments de ces puissances qui essaient de donner à ces mots une interprétation arbitraire et qui négligent, de façon persistante, l'importance de la volonté librement exprimée des peuples dépendants dans la détermination de leur avenir sur le plan politique et constitutionnel. La délégation de Chypre voit dans cette définition une expression du principe de libre choix, les mots "choix libre et volontaire ... exprimé par des méthodes démocratiques et éclairées" ne pouvant avoir d'autre sens.

27. Compte tenu de ces considérations, la délégation de Chypre prend note avec satisfaction du rapport et approuve ses principales conclusions et observations. M. Loizou espère que le rapport sera accepté par tous les Etats Membres, notamment par ceux qui jusqu'ici ont donné à la Charte une interprétation destinée à servir leurs propres intérêts et dont le but était de prolonger leur domination sur d'autres populations.

28. Chypre considère qu'en dehors de la libération immédiate et entière de toutes les populations, il ne peut y avoir qu'une forme d'apaisement provisoire dans des circonstances qui exigent une action énergique et rapide. Il est inconcevable qu'un peuple soit actuellement privé de liberté. M. Loizou espère sincèrement que, les aspirations de tous les peuples dépendants étant satisfaites, les travaux de la Quatrième Commission seront bientôt achevés.

La séance est levée à 11 h 55.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. M. MORSE (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) rappelle que la délégation des Etats-Unis a voté pour la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale. Elle a également participé aux travaux du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, créé en vertu de cette résolution, ainsi qu'à la rédaction du rapport de ce comité (A/4526).

2. Le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis a déjà appliqué dans les territoires qu'il administre les principes que pose le Comité des Six; il a communiqué régulièrement des renseignements détaillés; dans le cas de Porto Rico, de l'Alaska et d'Hawaï, il n'a cessé de le faire que quand la population de ces pays a déterminé elle-même son nouveau statut.

3. M. Morse espère que le rapport du Comité spécial des Six recevra un accueil favorable à l'Assemblée générale, non seulement parce que les principes qu'il énonce sont logiques, rationnels et pratiques, mais aussi parce qu'ils ont fait l'unanimité des membres du Comité, que l'on peut considérer comme représentant l'ensemble de l'Assemblée. Il déclare que la délégation des Etats-Unis approuve le rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

4. M. Morse se réserve le droit de reprendre la parole quand la Commission examinera des projets de résolution relatifs à ce rapport.

5. U TIN MAUNG (Birmanie) rappelle que, depuis bien des années, l'Assemblée générale a étudié la question de l'envoi de renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte; depuis bien des années, l'attitude du Portugal, qui se refuse obstinément à envoyer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'il administre, préoccupe vivement l'ONU. Les autres Membres administrants communiquent des renseignements plus ou moins complets sur leurs territoires non autonomes; le Portugal ne s'acquitte pas de l'obligation que lui fait l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, sous le fallacieux prétexte que ses possessions africaines font partie intégrante du territoire portugais. De l'avis de la délégation birmane, ces territoires sont bel et bien des colonies; on les a appelés à juste titre "la zone du silence". En refusant d'envoyer des renseignements, le Portugal cherche à se dérober à l'obligation, que lui fait l'Article 73 de la Charte, d'assurer dans toute la mesure possible la prospérité des habitants autochtones.

6. Avant de passer à l'étude des principes définis par le Comité spécial, U Tin Maung souligne qu'il ne suffira évidemment pas d'énoncer solennellement ces principes pour aider les populations colonisées à acquérir l'indépendance ou l'autonomie. Il faudra des mesures beaucoup plus radicales et la délégation birmane approuvera tout projet de résolution qui visera à contraindre les puissances colonialistes à modifier leur attitude à l'égard des territoires non autonomes.

7. Certains Membres administrants mettent en avant plusieurs arguments pour expliquer leur refus d'envoyer des renseignements. Ils soutiennent par exemple qu'un territoire peut tomber sous le coup des dispositions générales du Chapitre XI sans que l'obligation d'envoyer des renseignements soit pour autant applicable. L'Assemblée générale n'a jamais accepté cette façon de voir. La délégation birmane est pour sa part fermement persuadée que l'on ne peut pas isoler les dispositions de l'alinéa e du reste de l'Article 73 ni de la déclaration politique que constitue le Chapitre XI. Si l'on acceptait cet argument fallacieux, l'envoi des renseignements visés à l'alinéa e serait l'objectif ultime, alors qu'il n'est qu'un des moyens de réaliser les fins énoncées dans la Charte.

8. Les Membres administrants prétendent aussi qu'il leur est difficile de communiquer des renseignements sur des territoires dont, selon eux, le développement constitutionnel est fort avancé. Ces territoires, disent-ils, dirigent leurs propres affaires tant intérieures qu'extérieures, et c'est à leur gouvernement qu'il conviendrait de demander les renseignements visés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Mais cet argument est inadmissible pour deux raisons. D'une part ces gouvernements soi-disant autonomes ou responsables ne représentent pas des Etats souverains, ils ne siègent ni à l'Assemblée générale de l'ONU ni dans les autres organes de la communauté internationale. D'autre part, l'Article 73 est un contrat passé entre les Membres administrants et le reste des Nations Unies. C'est donc aux Membres administrants qu'il incombe de communiquer des renseignements, et non aux gouvernements prétendus autonomes de territoires dont l'ONU n'a pas encore reconnu qu'ils s'administrent pleinement eux-mêmes.

9. Il est indispensable que les Membres administrants envoient des renseignements pour que l'Assemblée générale puisse vérifier non seulement s'ils s'acquittent de leurs devoirs envers la population des territoires non autonomes, mais aussi pour qu'elle puisse mesurer de combien ces territoires se sont rapprochés de l'autonomie ou de l'indépendance complète. C'est uniquement en prenant connaissance des renseignements communiqués par les Membres administrants que l'Assemblée pourra vérifier s'ils se conforment aux obligations que leur font les alinéas a, b, c et d de l'Article 73. Il est donc regrettable que, malgré les encouragements donnés par l'Assemblée générale, bien peu de Membres administrants aient accepté d'envoyer volontairement des renseignements d'ordre politique sur les territoires qu'ils administrent. De même, on ne peut que déplorer que certains Membres administrants acceptent de communiquer des renseignements par déférence pour l'Assemblée générale, mais s'irritent de la surveillance discrète exercée par l'ONU en vertu de la Charte.

10. Les obligations assumées par les Etats Membres au titre du Chapitre XI ne se limitent pas à l'Article 73. Aux termes de l'Article 74, les Etats Membres s'engagent à respecter le principe du bon voisinage, non seulement pour leurs zones métropolitaines, mais aussi pour les territoires dont ils assument la responsabilité. A l'heure où les forces de libération nationale déferlent sur le continent africain et dans le monde entier, les Membres administrants ne peuvent plus rester muets et s'isoler dans une attitude négative, sous peine de compromettre la paix et la sécurité universelles.

11. U Tin Maung examine ensuite les principes énoncés par le Comité. Il regrette vivement que, bien que le Comité ait adopté ses conclusions à l'unanimité, certains membres aient fait des réserves à l'égard de plusieurs principes. Ce genre de réserves revient à dire en même temps oui et non. Celle qu'a faite le représentant du Royaume-Uni à l'égard du principe IX (A/4526, par. 13) est particulièrement grave. En effet, l'intégration est une mesure si importante que la population d'un territoire doit avoir la faculté de faire son choix en pleine connaissance de cause; elle ne l'aura que si elle peut exprimer librement ses aspirations par des procédés démocratiques, grâce à des élections impartiales sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes. Refuser aux habitants adultes des territoires le droit de décider de leur avenir par un vote au suffrage universel, c'est faire insulte à leur intelligence. Toujours à propos du principe IX, la délégation birmane reconnaît, comme la majorité du Comité spécial, que le contrôle de l'ONU peut être souhaitable dans certains cas, mais n'est pas indispensable.

12. En ce qui concerne le principe I, U Tin Maung tient seulement à souligner que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider s'il faut ou non communiquer des renseignements sur un territoire donné. Elle l'est également pour juger si un territoire a atteint la pleine capacité de s'administrer lui-même dont il est fait mention au principe II.

13. En vertu du principe IV, le Portugal ne peut plus se dispenser de communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'il administre, puisque ces territoires sont séparés géographiquement de la métropole et en sont ethniquement et culturellement distincts.

14. Pour conclure, U Tin Maung déclare que les peuples des territoires non autonomes réclament l'indépendance avec une véhémence de plus en plus grande. L'Afrique a proclamé récemment son désir de se libérer des derniers vestiges du colonialisme. Fidèle aux nobles principes dont s'inspire la Charte, l'ONU a le devoir de repousser les manœuvres des colonialistes et de favoriser la libération de tous les territoires non autonomes.

15. Mlle SAFFOURI (Jordanie) approuve sans réserve les principes énumérés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

16. La délégation jordanienne considère, comme les membres du Comité, que la Charte est un document vivant et que tous les Membres administrants doivent s'acquitter des obligations que leur fait le Chapitre XI. Ces obligations ne se limitent d'ailleurs pas à l'Article 73, et les Etats Membres administrants doivent également tenir compte des dispositions de l'Article 74.

17. Sans indépendance politique, il ne peut pas y avoir d'indépendance économique, sociale ou culturelle. Tant qu'un territoire n'a pas atteint l'indépendance politique, les obligations contractées par la puissance administrante demeurent donc valables. La délégation jordanienne estime que la thèse selon laquelle l'Espagne et le Portugal ne seraient pas obligés de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 n'est pas soutenable. L'intégration ou l'association de territoires comme le Mozambique et l'Angola n'ont pas été libres et le statut des territoires n'est pas identique à celui des pays métropolitains, ni juridiquement, ni en pratique. La politique coloniale du Portugal va donc nettement à l'encontre des principes IV, VII et VIII.

18. L'ONU a le devoir impérieux d'insister auprès du Gouvernement portugais et de ceux d'autres Etats Membres pour qu'ils communiquent des renseignements sur les territoires qu'ils administrent. Il convient à ce sujet de rappeler que l'Assemblée générale est seule compétente pour déterminer si un territoire est ou non autonome. La tâche de l'Organisation est de s'efforcer par tous les moyens d'aider les territoires non autonomes comme les territoires sous tutelle à atteindre l'indépendance le plus rapidement possible, en appliquant à cette fin les buts et principes que la Charte des Nations Unies énonce à leur sujet.

19. Enfin Mlle Saffouri tient à souligner que la délégation jordanienne considère les principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial non pas comme une fin, mais comme un moyen. Elle ne les approuve que dans la mesure où ils peuvent accélérer la marche des territoires vers l'indépendance. Parce que la Jordanie approuve ces principes, il ne faudrait pas croire qu'elle soit prête à accepter que l'on retarde l'accession des territoires non autonomes à l'indépendance. Cette indépendance est au contraire le but auquel doit tendre la Quatrième Commission.

20. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) se réserve le droit de répondre ultérieurement aux représentants qui l'ont précédé.

21. M. NEKLESSA (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine), déclare que la question examinée actuellement ne constitue pas un différend purement théorique. Il est dû au fait que deux puissances coloniales, l'Espagne et le Portugal, refusent de s'acquitter des obligations que leur fait le Chapitre XI de la Charte. Ces deux puissances prétendent, pour se justifier, que le Chapitre XI ne fait aucune obligation aux Etats Membres, car il se borne simplement à exprimer des vœux, et surtout qu'il n'existe pas de colonies espagnoles ou portugaises. La délégation ukrainienne, comme la majorité des membres de la Commission, ne peut accepter ni cette interprétation de la Charte ni cette fiction. Elle a souvent déclaré que les buts et principes proclamés dans la Charte doivent guider tous les Etats Membres qui administrent des territoires coloniaux; la Charte confère à ces Etats des obligations internationales, dont celles de veiller au bien-être des populations autochtones, de développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes, et de communiquer à l'ONU des renseignements sur la situation dans les colonies.

22. Le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, comme il ressort de l'examen des principes I, II, III et X, confirme le caractère international des obligations qui découlent du Chapitre XI; il indique aussi (principes I et IV) comment savoir quels sont les territoires auxquels s'appliquent les dispositions du Chapitre XI. Comme l'a fait remarquer le représentant du Maroc, le Comité n'a mentionné expressément aucun territoire; il est clair que, composé pour moitié de Membres administrants, il n'a pas voulu porter ombrage à l'Espagne et au Portugal. En fait, les territoires administrés par l'Espagne et le Portugal sont des colonies, et la Commission a perdu quatre années à démontrer l'évidence.

23. Profitant de la lenteur avec laquelle l'ONU a procédé en l'occurrence, le Gouvernement espagnol, qui avait décidé tout d'abord de donner des renseignements sur ses colonies, a par la suite changé d'attitude et a fait déclarer par ses organes législatifs qu'il s'agit désormais de "provinces d'outre-mer". Il importe peu, en vérité, que l'appellation change, si les méthodes coloniales et le régime colonial eux-mêmes ne disparaissent pas.

24. Quant aux dépendances du Portugal, dont la superficie égale celle de l'Europe et qui ont 11 millions d'habitants, elles comptent parmi les plus vieilles colonies du monde; sans doute les colonisateurs portugais n'ont-ils jamais cessé de proclamer leur "mission civilisatrice". Cette mission à l'époque où vivaient les ancêtres des colonisateurs portugais actuels s'appelait la traite des esclaves. Pendant deux siècles, 30.000 esclaves africains étaient envoyés chaque année en Amérique de l'Angola seulement. En 1939, le premier ministre Salazar lui-même déclarait que la politique portugaise, qu'il qualifiait d'audacieuse, avait pour but de défendre plus efficacement les "races inférieures"; dans un des numéros de Foreign Affairs de 1956, le premier ministre Salazar a exprimé l'opinion que, dans l'ensemble, l'Afrique devrait, pendant une période indéterminée, vivre sous la domination des peuples civilisés.

25. Mais quel a donc été l'apport de cette "mission civilisatrice" dans les colonies portugaises? Nul n'ignore plus le triste régime qui est celui de l'Angola et du Mozambique: absence de droits politiques, restrictions à la liberté de déplacement, manque de médecins (1 pour 80.000 habitants en Angola et 149 au Mozambique pour 6 millions d'habitants), analphabétisme presque total (99 pour 100 en Angola), travail forcé (le Portugal a longtemps refusé de signer la Convention de l'OIT concernant l'abolition du travail forcé), contrats inhumains (dislocation des familles), châtiments corporels, etc. Il n'y a eu que 30.000 Angolais qui aient pu remplir les conditions exigées par la loi de 1917 pour leur assimilation. A ce rythme, il faudra plus de 70.000 ans avant que tous les habitants du territoire soient assimilés. Par la politique dite d'assimilation, le Portugal dissimule sa politique d'oppression de 11 millions d'Africains. En outre, l'assimilation signifie en pratique l'application de la théorie raciale de la suprématie de l'homme blanc et de sa civilisation; elle signifie l'anéantissement de la culture africaine puisque pour s'assimiler et pour acquérir le droit de citoyenneté, les Africains doivent renoncer à leur propre culture, lire et écrire en portugais et adopter le mode de vie portugais. Dès lors, l'égalité qui devrait exister théoriquement depuis 1951 entre la métropole et ses "provinces d'outre-mer" n'est qu'un leurre. Les gouverneurs et gouverneurs généraux ont de très larges pouvoirs discrétionnaires et ne tiennent en fait aucun compte de l'avis des conseils législatifs qui sont composés pour moitié de membres élus et de membres nommés et dont ne font partie que quelques "assimilés". Le Gouvernement portugais lui-même reconnaît que le régime qu'il impose aux provinces d'outre-mer est une "dictature bienveillante".

26. En réponse au renforcement de l'oppression des colonisateurs portugais et de leurs alliés — les monopoles étrangers — les peuples de l'Angola et du Mozambique commencent ces derniers temps à exiger de plus en plus activement qu'on leur accorde immédiatement l'indépendance nationale; le Gouvernement portugais, pour freiner le mouvement, fait régner la terreur en arrêtant, en torturant et en déportant dans des camps de concentration les dirigeants des mouvements nationalistes; il envoie des renforts, dotés d'un armement puissant, et entreprend de construire des aérodrômes. La presse coloniale portugaise publie des articles au sujet de "l'immense puissance de feu dont on dispose dans les colonies pour anéantir les agents du communisme international". Les pays de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord apportent leur appui à l'Espagne et au Portugal pour des raisons bien compréhensibles: d'après le New York Times du 25 octobre, un ancien ministre des affaires étrangères du Portugal a demandé aux Etats-Unis de rester solidaires du Portugal à l'ONU, en leur rappelant fort à propos que son pays leur avait cédé des bases militaires aux Açores. Actuellement, les milieux militaires portugais cherchent à faire modifier la loi américaine d'aide militaire de façon à pouvoir utiliser en Afrique les armements américains. D'après un article paru dans la presse des Etats-Unis au moment de la visite du Président des Etats-Unis au Portugal, celui-ci a déclaré que les Etats-Unis et le Portugal ont coopéré sans la moindre divergence de vues.

27. Le PRESIDENT, intervenant sur une motion d'ordre de M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal), prie le repré-sentant de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine de s'en tenir au point en discussion.

28. M. NEKLESSA (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine), poursuivant son exposé, dit que les capitaux portugais, prédominants jusqu'à ces derniers temps, tendent à s'effacer devant les capitaux américains, britanniques et belges investis dans les principaux secteurs de l'agriculture et dans l'industrie extractive; c'est ainsi qu'une compagnie pétrolière au Mozambique a obtenu du Gouvernement portugais une énorme concession et des permis de prospection.

29. Le Gouverneur général de l'Angola a déclaré qu'il ne pouvait être question de donner l'autonomie ou l'indépendance au territoire, et que les autorités portugaises veilleraient à maintenir la situation actuelle. Mais les populations autochtones voient bien que cette situation ne peut pas durer. Il est certain que, si, de leur côté, le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais comprenaient, devant les événements qui se déroulent sur le continent africain, que l'abolition complète des colonies est inévitable, et s'ils prenaient des mesures en conséquence, ils éviteraient de grands malheurs. S'ils ne le font pas, les peuples des colonies secoueront eux-mêmes le joug colonial, arracheront les chaînes de l'esclavage comme l'ont déjà fait leurs frères dans les colonies voisines. La liquidation du colonialisme va être débattue en séance plénière par l'Assemblée générale: il importe que l'ONU se prononce pour l'indépendance immédiate de toutes les colonies, y compris celles du Portugal et de l'Espagne. Le problème n'est pas seulement théorique, et ne doit pas donner uniquement lieu à des joutes oratoires sur des arguments juridiques: il lui faut une conclusion pratique et immédiate, qui ne peut être que l'indépendance immédiate des colonies portugaises et espagnoles ainsi que des autres colonies, comme le propose le projet de déclaration (A/4502 et Corr.1) que la délégation de l'Union soviétique a présenté à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale.

30. M. DIALLO (Mali) adresse les félicitations de sa délégation aux membres du Comité spécial des Six, qui ont su dégager, dans un rapport clair, concis et rigoureux, les principes directeurs qui doivent permettre aux Etats Membres de déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa c de l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable ou non. L'Espagne et le Portugal, qui refusent de communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'ils administrent, doivent enfin comprendre que leur machiavélisme chauvin est une arme de désespoir qui ne peut résister plus longtemps. L'ONU a seulement demandé des renseignements pour se rendre compte des progrès réalisés dans les territoires non autonomes; en refusant de donner ces renseignements, l'Espagne et le Portugal montrent qu'ils ne sont pas d'accord avec leur conscience. Leur refus accroît encore et aggrave la responsabilité de l'ONU à l'égard des populations opprimées qui luttent pour la liberté et mettent leur confiance et leurs espoirs dans les buts et principes proclamés par la Charte.

31. Le Gouvernement portugais prétend ne pas avoir de colonies. Or, en 1957, il y avait en Angola 750.000 habitants soumis au travail forcé; en 1959, trois patriotes angolais ont été exécutés parce qu'ils demandaient simplement le respect des droits fondamentaux de l'homme. Le terme même de "colonies" a figuré dans la Constitution portugaise jusqu'au 11 juin 1951, date où il a été remplacé par celui de "provinces d'outre-mer". Le représentant du Ghana a fait état à la séance précédente des conditions politiques et sociales dans lesquelles se trouvent les Africains des colonies portugaises: les populations noires sont classées en "non civilisées" et "civilisées", ces dernières étant les plus proches des maîtres portugais. Aucun autochtone n'est éligible; s'il a le droit de voter, il ne peut en user que pour élire un citoyen portugais; les autorités emprisonnent, torturent, exilent ou tuent sans pitié les autochtones qui ont réussi à acquérir une certaine instruction. L'ONU a donc une lourde dette morale et humanitaire à l'égard des mouvements de libération qui sont nés depuis deux ans dans les territoires portugais et qui subissent l'assaut des troupes portugaises; mais il faut savoir que toutes les armées du monde réunies ne pourront jamais maintenir un peuple dans l'esclavage.

32. La délégation malienne souscrit entièrement aux principes et aux conclusions du rapport du Comité spécial; elle espère que le projet de résolution que la Commission va adopter condamnera les puissances qui refusent de fournir des renseignements sur des êtres humains dont le sort ne peut laisser indifférent le reste du monde. Le Portugal est bien conscient de ce risque, puisqu'une dépêche de presse signale que, depuis quelque temps, l'Administration de l'Angola soumet les prisonniers politiques à une forte pression pour les obliger à protester contre toute résolution qu'adopterait l'Assemblée générale. Le Portugal déclare qu'il ne quittera jamais l'Afrique, prétendant que son départ ouvrirait la porte à l'exploitation des noirs par les noirs. M. Diallo est convaincu pour sa part que le Portugal quittera l'Afrique, parce qu'il n'est pas possible qu'un être humain, qu'il soit noir ou blanc, exploite indéfiniment un autre être humain.

33. M. KIANG (Chine) note que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements pose deux problèmes que l'Assemblée générale s'est efforcée de résoudre depuis 1951. Le premier est de savoir ce qui constitue un territoire non autonome; le second, de savoir quand on peut dire qu'un tel territoire est devenu autonome ou indépendant. Abordant la question sous l'angle des facteurs qui permettraient de décider si un territoire est devenu pleinement autonome, l'Assemblée générale a admis, d'une façon générale, qu'une liste de facteurs, quelle qu'elle soit, ne peut être qu'une sorte de guide, et que chaque cas est un cas d'espèce. Mais qui décidera qu'il n'est plus besoin d'envoyer des renseignements? Sur ce point, l'accord ne s'est pas fait: la plupart des Membres administrants soutenaient qu'ils étaient seuls compétents, tandis que la grande majorité des Membres non administrants estimait qu'il appartient à l'Assemblée générale, seule ou avec le Membre administrant intéressé de juger si un territoire donné a cessé ou non de tomber sous le coup du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Malgré ces divergences, tous les pays admettent que le Chapitre XI comprend à la fois une déclaration de principe — qui fait à tous les Etats Membres le devoir de reconnaître la primauté des intérêts des habitants — et l'exposé des obligations des Etats Membres qui administrent des territoires non autonomes. C'est pour veiller au respect de ces obligations que les Membres administrants sont priés de communiquer des renseignements statistiques, sous réserve des exigences de la sécurité et de considérations d'ordre constitutionnel.

34. La délégation chinoise a toujours estimé qu'il appartient à l'Assemblée générale de déterminer collectivement l'interprétation à donner aux mots "territoires non autonomes" et "territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes". Elle fait donc siens les principes que pose le rapport du Comité spécial et qui devront guider l'Assemblée générale au moment de déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements est applicable ou non. Il serait dogmatique de prétendre qu'une définition de ces principes n'était pas nécessaire. Elle l'est dans la mesure où elle permettra de modifier certaines positions, apparemment irréductibles, adoptées depuis 1952 et 1953.

35. M. GUARDADO (Salvador) se joint aux représentants qui ont déjà félicité le Comité spécial des Six du rapport concis dont l'Assemblée devra s'inspirer pour faire appliquer les principes fondamentaux de la Charte. Les travaux de ce comité sont malheureusement venus trop tard pour empêcher certains faits regrettables qui vont à l'encontre des idées qui étaient celles de la Conférence de San Francisco. La délégation salvadorienne déplore cependant que le débat ne se soit pas limité à l'étude juridique des principes définis par le Comité spécial, mais ait porté sur l'application de ces principes à des cas particuliers, comme celui de l'Espagne ou du Portugal.

36. Puisque aucune délégation n'a critiqué le rapport du Comité spécial, M. Guardado propose de clore le débat, en application de l'article 118 du règlement intérieur.

37. M. KANAKARATNE (Ceylan) est très surpris de cette étrange proposition, qui intervient si tôt dans le débat. La Commission n'est saisie que depuis la 1031ème séance du rapport du Comité spécial des Six, auquel elle n'a même pas consacré trois séances complètes. Avant d'exposer son opinion, la délégation ceylanaise désire étudier attentivement non seulement le rapport, mais également les interventions auxquelles il a donné lieu jusqu'à présent. Ce serait attenter gravement à la liberté de discussion que de vouloir empêcher les délégations de prendre la parole sur une question aussi importante. Le représentant du Salvador estime que la Commission devrait s'en tenir à l'aspect juridique du problème. Tout en reconnaissant que la Commission doit s'intéresser aux principes posés par le Comité spécial des Six, M. Kanakaratne fait observer qu'il ne s'agit pas d'une discussion théorique, mais d'un grave problème qui retient l'attention de l'ONU depuis plusieurs années. Ces principes, il va falloir les appliquer. Sans se prononcer à l'avance sur le tableau que certains représentants ont fait de la situation de tel ou tel territoire, M. Kanakaratne indique que sa délégation se propose d'expliquer comment, quant et où, à son avis, il faudra appliquer ces principes. Il convient qu'elle ait l'occasion de se prononcer à ce sujet. C'est pourquoi le représentant de Ceylan s'élève vivement contre la motion de clôture.

38. M. Krishna MENON (Inde) souligne que la Commission n'est saisie du rapport du Comité spécial des Six que depuis la veille. Il lui faudra certainement, pour l'examiner, autant de temps que le Comité en a mis pour le composer. Si le débat était clos immédiatement, la Commission ne pourrait adopter aucun projet de résolution, puisque les délégations n'ont pas encore eu la possibilité de se consulter. Ce serait d'autant plus regrettable que ce point de l'ordre du jour préoccupe depuis longtemps les Nations Unies. La Commission devrait l'étudier depuis ses origines, c'est-à-dire depuis la rédaction de la Charte, qui a manifestement pour but d'imposer aux Membres administrants des territoires non autonomes des obligations semblables à celles qui incombent aux autorités chargées d'administrer les territoires sous tutelle. Puisque ces membres étaient chargés d'une mission sacrée, ils devaient rendre compte de leurs actes devant la communauté internationale. La Commission ne doit pas se borner à la discussion théorique des principes en cause, mais voir comment et dans quel cas il convient de les appliquer pour que nul ne contrevienne à la Charte. Le représentant de l'Inde espère donc que la Commission pourra poursuivre normalement ses travaux.

39. M. GUARDADO (Salvador) déclare qu'il désirait seulement attirer l'attention de la Commission sur la nécessité de faire porter les débats sur les principes énoncés dans le rapport parce qu'il craignait que la discussion prématurée de l'application de ces principes à tel ou tel pays ne compromette le résultat des efforts déployés à l'ONU depuis de nombreuses années. Pensant avoir atteint son but, le représentant du Salvador retire sa motion.

40. M. SALAMANCA (Bolivie) souligne la complexité du problème juridique et politique dont la Commission est saisie. En effet, comment définir en quoi consiste une nation? Certains pays naissent débiles et s'affaiblissent peu à peu, d'autres comptent longtemps des minorités ou des régions mal intégrées à la communauté nationale. La nation est une création continue; peut-être n'est-ce en définitive que la volonté d'un groupe de se constituer en nation. La Commission doit certes veiller à ce que la volonté de tels groupes ne soit pas méconnue, mais elle ne doit pas adopter un projet de résolution dont le seul effet serait de créer un climat de tension.

41. Les principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six soulèvent des problèmes très délicats, et l'on peut se demander par exemple combien il existe d'Etats indépendants où les populations s'administrent complètement elles-mêmes. Il ne s'agit pas de vouloir rendre indépendants tous les territoires, même s'ils ne comptent qu'un nombre infime d'habitants, mais de faire en sorte que partout les droits de l'homme soient respectés. En discutant un rapport d'une portée aussi vaste, les représentants peuvent manifestement citer tous les exemples et mentionner tous les territoires qu'ils désirent, mais ils ne devraient pas oublier qu'une déclaration générale ne doit pas servir d'arme contre un ou deux pays. La valeur de ce genre de texte réside dans son acceptation unanime. Ce n'est qu'après avoir adopté les principes du Comité spécial et avoir recherché comment les appliquer que la Commission pourra décider si tel ou tel pays a tort ou raison de refuser de communiquer des renseignements. Pour le moment, toute condamnation est prématurée.

La séance est levée à 17 h 30.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) dit que, depuis plusieurs années, la délégation du Libéria s'est efforcée, ainsi que d'autres délégations, d'appeler l'attention de l'Assemblée générale sur la nécessité de créer un comité qui énoncerait avec impartialité et objectivité les principes sur la base desquels on pourrait demander aux Membres qui administrent des territoires d'outre-mer de rendre compte de l'administration de ces territoires aux organes des Nations Unies conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Toutes les tentatives entreprises dans ce sens ont toujours été vaines jusqu'au moment où l'Assemblée générale, à sa quatorzième session, a décidé qu'une étude de cet ordre était souhaitable et nécessaire. En conséquence, à la suite de l'adoption de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, on a nommé un Comité dont la composition garantissait l'impartialité et dont le rapport (A/4526) représente les points de vue tant des Membres administrants que des Membres non administrants.

2. Plusieurs fois dans le passé, il a été demandé au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes, à la Quatrième Commission et à l'Assemblée générale, s'il y avait des Etats Membres responsables de l'administration qui ne transmettaient pas les renseignements qu'ils auraient dû communiquer en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte. La question n'a jamais reçu de réponse qui fasse autorité; certaines délégations ont donné une réponse affirmative alors que d'autres ont affirmé que l'Assemblée ne disposait pas d'instrument sur lequel elle puisse fonder une décision catégorique. Certains ont estimé que les facteurs définis dans la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale étaient inapplicables, puisqu'ils étaient censés se rapporter à la cessation de la communication des renseignements plutôt qu'à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. En outre, il a été soutenu que l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 contenait une clause limitative relative à la sécurité et à des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel et également qu'en vertu de l'Article 2, paragraphe 7, l'administration des territoires relevait de la compétence nationale des Etats et non de celle de l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

3. Les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte réfuteront de façon définitive ces arguments. Si la Quatrième Commission ou quelqu'un de ses membres estime qu'il est nécessaire qu'un instrument juridique définisse les responsabilités des Etats Membres en ce qui concerne l'administration des territoires dépendants, le rapport du Comité spécial des Six constitue un instrument juridique de cette nature. Bien que la délégation du Libéria n'approuve pas les controverses juridiques au sujet de questions qui ne sont pas nécessairement, par leur nature, d'ordre juridique, elle est heureuse de pouvoir disposer d'un instrument bien documenté appuyant ses vues relatives à une question qui comporte des conséquences et des dangers politiques.

4. Rien dans les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial ne peut porter la délégation du Libéria à avoir le moindre doute quant au fait que le Portugal est un Membre administrant dans le plein sens de l'expression et que les territoires administrés par le Gouvernement portugais sont des territoires au sujet desquels des renseignements devraient être communiqués sans délai en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Même si la position de la délégation du Libéria n'avait pas été renforcée et corroborée par l'existence de documents juridiques, elle n'aurait pas hésité à adresser au Gouvernement du Portugal un appel sincère pour qu'il remplisse ses obligations. La situation politique dans le monde et plus spécialement en Afrique est telle que la question de la responsabilité internationale en ce qui concerne l'administration des territoires portugais est devenue une question nettement urgente. Mlle Brooks estime que ce serait rendre un mauvais service non seulement à l'ONU, à l'Afrique et au monde entier, mais également au Portugal lui-même que de ne pas insister pour que ce pays tienne compte du danger que comporte la situation actuelle et abandonne son attitude intransigeante pour le bien de la paix mondiale.

5. La montée du nationalisme africain et le fait que les pays opprimés veulent être autonomes et diriger leurs propres affaires ne peuvent plus être considérés comme matière à finesses juridiques et à subtilités constitutionnelles. Il existe de nombreux documents provenant de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée dépendante au sujet de la situation des autochtones dans ces territoires; ces renseignements indiquent que les populations sont résolues à obtenir leur liberté par tous les moyens dont elles disposent. Mlle Brooks ne s'attardera pas sur les conditions régnant dans les territoires relevant de l'administration portugaise, car celles-ci sont bien connues et les faits se trouvent dans de nombreux livres, brochures et journaux. Le représentant du Portugal a, dans le passé, nié la situation réelle avec énergie, mais il n'a fourni aucune documentation pour appuyer ses démentis.

6. Dans la réponse qu'il a faite au Secrétaire général (A/AC.100/1, par. 137 à 156) en application de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, le Gouvernement portugais a donné une savante interprétation du mot "déclaration" qui figure dans le titre du Chapitre XI de la Charte; il a soutenu que la compétence de l'Etat intéressé s'opposait à celle de l'Assemblée générale et a établi une distinction subtile entre le statut politique des territoires et celui des populations. Le temps où l'on pouvait se livrer à ce genre de faux-fuyants juridiques est révolu. Si le Gouvernement portugais veut un document juridique, il y en a un, qui est le rapport du Comité spécial des Six. Quelle que soit la minutie avec laquelle on examine les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial, on est obligé d'en conclure que des renseignements doivent être communiqués au sujet des territoires sous administration portugaise. La réalité de la situation est plus forte que de subtils arguments juridiques. Le fait que le Chapitre XI de la Charte s'applique aux territoires portugais est confirmé par les 12 principes, quel que soit le statut de ces territoires dans le cadre de la Constitution du Portugal. Les territoires sont séparés géographiquement et distincts au point de vue ethnique et au point de vue culturel du pays qui les administre, selon les termes du principe IV. Ils ne sont pas librement associés à un Etat indépendant au sens du principe VII et ils ne sont pas intégrés à un Etat indépendant au sens des principes VIII et IX.

7. La question des réserves d'ordre constitutionnel a été soulevée deux fois par le représentant du Portugal, mais, si l'on en croit la réponse portugaise à la note du Secrétaire général, ces arguments sembleraient avoir été abandonnés par le Gouvernement portugais et Mlle Brooks ne s'y attardera donc pas. La question de la non-ingérence de l'ONU dans les affaires intérieures du Portugal est traitée beaucoup plus complètement dans cette réponse. La délégation du Libéria a cependant déjà démontré la nécessité d'une reddition de comptes sur le plan international. L'expérience de l'ancien Congo belge a contribué à augmenter les craintes justifiées du Libéria à cet égard et le Gouvernement du Portugal ferait bien de tenir compte de cette amère leçon.

8. La délégation du Libéria estime que l'Assemblée générale ne peut faire autrement que de demander au Gouvernement portugais de remplir les obligations qu'il a contractées en entrant à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. En outre, l'Assemblée générale devrait recommander au Gouvernement du Portugal d'aller de l'avant avec le courant de l'histoire et de faire en sorte que les territoires relevant de son administration et les populations qu'il gouverne en Afrique et en Asie soient libérés de l'administration portugaise et se joignent à la communauté des nations libres. Une telle recommandation serait conforme à la réalité de la situation telle qu'elle se présente actuellement et telle qu'elle évoluera dans l'avenir immédiat, qui sera peut-être plus proche que ce que l'on peut prévoir. Les prévisions établies il y a cinq ans, ou même plus récemment, en ce qui concerne la date de l'accession à l'indépendance des populations dépendantes ont révélé une étonnante imprévoyance de la part de certains gouvernements. De grands changements se sont produits si l'on considère l'esprit qui régnait il y a quelques années à la Quatrième Commission et au Comité des renseignements lorsque certains Membres administrants s'étaient prononcés pour le principe de non-ingérence de l'ONU dans les affaires intérieures des Etats. La délégation du Libéria est heureuse d'enregistrer cette évolution et elle apprécie la sagesse des Membres administrants qui ont, en fait et en pratique, accepté la responsabilité internationale de l'administration des territoires dépendants et ont adapté leur politique aux faits. Il faut espérer que le Gouvernement portugais modifiera de la même façon son attitude, mais plus rapidement.

9. En ce qui concerne l'application des principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six aux territoires administrés par l'Espagne, Mlle Brooks pense que les membres de la Quatrième Commission estimeront comme elle que, si la thèse du Gouvernement espagnol au sujet de la communication des renseignements relatifs aux territoires qu'il administre est quelque peu différente de celle du Portugal, le résultat final est le même. A la 670ème séance de la Quatrième Commission, durant la douzième session de l'Assemblée générale, le représentant de l'Espagne a déclaré que la réponse de son pays à la communication adressée aux nouveaux Etats Membres par le Secrétaire général au sujet des obligations prévues par l'Article 73 de la Charte serait reçue en temps voulu et qu'elle serait tout à fait conforme à l'esprit de la Charte. Par la suite, le Gouvernement espagnol, par l'intermédiaire de sa mission permanente, a confirmé cette déclaration^{1/} et a annoncé que la réponse de l'Espagne était en cours d'examen, qu'elle serait sous peu communiquée au Secrétaire général et qu'elle serait conforme à l'esprit de la Charte. En novembre 1958, cependant, le Gouvernement espagnol, par l'intermédiaire de sa mission permanente, a informé le Secrétaire général^{2/} que l'Espagne ne possédait pas de territoires non autonomes, puisque les territoires sur lesquels elle exerçait sa souveraineté en Afrique étaient classés parmi les provinces de l'Espagne et que par conséquent le Gouvernement espagnol ne se considérait pas comme visé par l'Article 73.

10. La délégation du Libéria n'acceptera jamais le principe suivant lequel un Etat Membre peut, par un acte législatif, priver les populations dépendantes qu'il administre de leurs droits tels qu'ils sont garantis par la Charte; une action de ce genre est en fait diamétralement opposée aux principes VI, VII, VIII et IX du Comité spécial des Six. L'Assemblée générale a donc le devoir de demander à l'Espagne de remplir les obligations qu'elle a contractées en vertu de la Charte en ce qui concerne les territoires qu'elle administre.

^{1/} Voir A/C.4/375.

^{2/} Voir A/C.4/385.

11. La délégation du Libéria se félicite du fait que beaucoup de territoires non autonomes au sujet desquels la France a autrefois communiqué des renseignements ont été admis à l'ONU en tant qu'Etats indépendants. La délégation du Libéria est cependant inquiète en ce qui concerne le territoire que l'on appelle couramment la Somalie française. Elle considère que la France devrait informer l'ONU de la situation exacte qui règne dans ce territoire et de son statut. Si, à la seizième session de l'Assemblée générale, la Somalie française n'est pas devenue un Etat indépendant, la délégation du Libéria estimerait que la France devrait être contrainte de communiquer des renseignements au sujet de ce territoire et de fixer de façon précise la date de son accession à l'indépendance.

12. Au nom des millions de populations dépendantes dans le monde entier, dont la plupart se trouvent sur le continent africain, Mlle Brooks lance un appel au Portugal, à l'Espagne et à toutes les puissances coloniales pour qu'elles s'efforcent tout spécialement d'appliquer les dispositions de la Charte en accélérant l'exécution de leurs plans afin que dans un avenir très proche tous les peuples dépendants soient libérés et prennent la place qui leur revient de droit parmi les nations libres du monde.

13. M. DIALLO (Mali), en réponse aux remarques du représentant de la Bolivie à la 1033ème séance, dit que la délégation malienne considère de son devoir, dans l'intérêt de la justice et de la paix, de dénoncer les agissements abominables de certaines puissances, ce non pas par malveillance, mais afin d'épargner à l'ONU d'être accusée de complicité dans les crimes commis par le Portugal et l'Espagne au mépris des principes de moralité proclamés par l'ONU.

14. M. Najmuddine RIFAI (République arabe unie) dit que la Commission ferait bien de s'attacher à l'examen des principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six; une fois ces principes adoptés, la Commission pourra s'occuper de leur application.

15. Dès les premiers temps de l'ONU, l'interprétation du Chapitre XI de la Charte a donné lieu à controverse. Avec le temps, la position juridique de certains Membres administrants a heureusement évolué, et l'écart a diminué entre les deux attitudes opposées. Le Comité spécial a fait du bon travail; la délégation de la République arabe unie s'associe sans réserve tant à ses conclusions qu'aux principes énoncés dans le rapport, qui confirment pleinement les opinions qu'elle-même a constamment défendues, et elle espère qu'on ne défendra plus la thèse insoutenable selon laquelle la communication de renseignements est une action purement volontaire dont l'Etat Membre administrant intéressé seul peut décider. Les principes présentent en outre l'avantage de fournir à l'Assemblée générale des critères lui permettant de déterminer si un territoire donné est ou non autonome. Les Membres administrants ne pourront donc plus soutenir qu'il leur appartient de décider cette question, argument qui se révèle aujourd'hui comme n'ayant aucun fondement en droit. On ne saurait non plus avancer que la responsabilité n'est pas collective et que l'Assemblée générale n'est pas compétente pour décider s'il y a ou non obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur un territoire donné.

16. A la lumière des événements, la discussion sur l'interprétation juridique du Chapitre XI prend un aspect de plus en plus irréal. M. Rifaï se demande ce que diraient les populations de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de nombreux autres territoires si elles apprenaient que l'ONU se livre sur cette question à une discussion théorique. Maintenant que beaucoup de territoires anciennement dépendants sont devenus des Etats souverains, il est décourageant de constater qu'il se trouve encore des puissances coloniales pour soutenir, soit sur la base de traités qui ont invariablement été non pas négociés mais imposés par la force, soit sur la base de certaines dispositions constitutionnelles au sujet desquelles les peuples coloniaux n'ont jamais été consultés, que certains territoires ne relèvent pas des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Cette attitude représente un danger pour la paix et ne peut que se retourner contre ceux mêmes qui la soutiennent.

17. Les événements qui se déroulent dans la partie centrale de l'Afrique du Nord fournissent l'exemple d'un processus qui se répétera inévitablement dans d'autres territoires coloniaux si l'on permet à des considérations d'un légalisme fictif de s'opposer à la marée montante de la liberté. Le représentant de la République arabe unie fait appel aux représentants de l'Espagne et du Portugal et aux autres Membres administrants, espérant qu'ils sauront comprendre les leçons de l'histoire et n'essaieront pas de prolonger la vie d'un régime agonisant; car ce n'est pas en multipliant les arguties ni en faussant le sens de la Charte qu'on pourra changer la réalité. Les peuples de l'Angola, du Mozambique et d'autres territoires dont on prétend qu'ils sont pleinement autonomes et font partie intégrante de la métropole semblent bien avoir des opinions qui ne concordent guère avec celles que soutiennent le Portugal et l'Espagne. Ceci tient à ce qu'ils n'ont ni le même passé ni les mêmes particularités ethniques et culturelles, faits que tous les arguments juridiques du monde seront impuissants à changer. Il est du devoir de la Commission d'agir sans retard, sous peine de se voir dépassée par les événements.

18. Mlle SHELTON (Cuba) dit qu'étant donné les nombreux débats qui se sont déroulés à la Quatrième Commission et les différentes opinions qui s'y sont fait jour sur l'interprétation du Chapitre XI de la Charte, le rapport aussi clair que précis du Comité spécial des Six est particulièrement bienvenu.

19. La délégation cubaine, qui a voté pour la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale créant le Comité spécial, s'associe à la déclaration figurant au paragraphe 17 du rapport selon laquelle l'indépendance est une des aspirations légitimes de chaque nation, dont la réalisation constitue un important facteur pour la préservation de la paix et de la sécurité internationales. Le vent de changements cité par certains représentants à la Commission, apporte avec lui l'écho des appels à l'indépendance. Il n'en faut pour preuve que la présence à la Commission de plusieurs représentants d'Etats récemment libérés du colonialisme; la délégation cubaine accueille avec grande joie leur libération, car Cuba a toujours plaidé la cause de l'égalité des droits pour tous les peuples et de leur droit à être représentés au sein de la collectivité internationale. Elle s'associe à la déclai-ration, contenue dans le paragraphe 18 du rapport du Comité spécial, selon laquelle la Charte est un document vivant et l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de l'évolution actuelle des esprits.

20. Le Comité spécial a fourni, dans les 12 principes formulés par lui, une interprétation claire et précise du Chapitre XI et notamment de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Mlle Shelton s'abstiendra de commenter ces principes, car il n'y aurait guère à ajouter à ce qu'en ont déjà dit les orateurs précédents et notamment les représentants de l'Inde et du Mexique dans les remarquables déclarations qu'ils ont faites à ce sujet.

21. Mlle Shelton se joint à la représentante du Libéria pour rendre hommage à M. Espinosa y Prieto, du Mexique, dont l'esprit de conciliation, la lucidité intellectuelle et les vastes connaissances ont beaucoup contribué au succès des travaux de la Quatrième Commission, notamment en ce qui touche la question dont elle est actuellement saisie.

22. M. THAPA (Népal) exprime la satisfaction qu'il éprouve à constater, en examinant le rapport du Comité spécial, l'existence d'un large terrain d'entente entre les différents groupes d'Etats Membres, et ce même à propos de questions apparemment controversées. Le rapport reflète l'esprit de compréhension et de compromis dont ont fait preuve les Membres administrants tout comme les Membres non administrants. Bien que certains passages se ressentent des tiraillements et des tensions inhérents à tout compromis, il s'agit là d'un excellent rapport, plein de sens pratique, et qui représente un bon point de départ pour les travaux de la Quatrième Commission.

23. La valeur de l'Article 73 de la Charte vient de ce qu'il contribue à la cause de la paix internationale. La montée du nationalisme parmi les colonies donne à penser que l'ONU ne peut fonder la paix qu'en se déclarant fermement en faveur de l'autonomie. Maintenir une large portion de la population mondiale dans un état de dépendance dont elle aspire à se libérer constituerait une menace à la paix internationale. C'est dans ce contexte qu'il convient d'interpréter l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Lorsqu'on l'interprète ainsi, il apparaît bien qu'il n'y a pas de limites à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au sujet d'un territoire non autonome, quel qu'il soit.

24. En outre, le Chapitre XI reflète l'attitude que la conscience de l'humanité, mûrie par les amères expériences de la seconde guerre mondiale, a adoptée à l'égard des peuples des territoires non autonomes. La conscience de la collectivité internationale, telle qu'elle s'exprime dans la Charte des Nations Unies, refuse de considérer un statut de subordination, quel qu'il soit, comme une solution permanente. L'ONU est donc chargée d'une mission sacrée et se doit de travailler toujours davantage à promouvoir l'autonomie dans tous les territoires non autonomes par le progrès politique, économique, social et culturel de leurs populations. Cette mission, elle ne saurait l'accomplir sans disposer de renseignements détaillés et dignes de foi sur l'état de choses existant dans les territoires.

25. Cependant, certains Etats Membres ne sont pas disposés à accepter de cet article une interprétation aussi libérale que pourrait le souhaiter la délégation du Népal. Aucun renseignement n'a par exemple été fourni sur Goa, sur l'Angola, sur le Mozambique et sur d'autres territoires. Dans certains cas, on a cité, pour justifier ce refus de communiquer des renseignements, des difficultés politiques et constitutionnelles. De l'avis de la délégation du Népal, là où ces difficultés existent, c'est la situation constitutionnelle qu'il convient d'ajuster conformément à l'esprit de la Charte, plutôt que de fausser l'esprit de la Charte pour l'adapter à une situation constitutionnelle qui ne s'accorde plus avec lui.

26. La délégation du Népal aurait préféré qu'il ne fût pas nécessaire de formuler de principes et que des renseignements eussent été communiqués sur tous les territoires non autonomes. Mais, en l'absence de ces renseignements, le mieux était encore que la Commission clarifie la situation en formulant ces principes.

27. Le premier principe affirme que le Chapitre XI est applicable à tous les territoires qui étaient de type colonial lors de la rédaction de la Charte. Il y a obligation absolue de communiquer des renseignements sur chacun de ces territoires jusqu'à ce qu'ils aient accédé à l'autonomie soit par voie d'association ou d'intégration, soit en devenant des Etats souverains et indépendants. Toute limitation éventuelle à cette obligation ne saurait avoir trait qu'à la nature des renseignements à communiquer et non point à l'obligation elle-même.

28. La délégation du Népal espère que les principes seront adoptés et que les Etats Membres qui ont refusé jusqu'à présent de communiquer des renseignements reconsidéreront leur attitude.

M. Ortiz de Rozas (Argentine), vice-président, prend la présidence.

29. M. KOUTCHAVA (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) fait remarquer que ce serait un vain exercice pour le Comité que de se lancer dans une discussion théorique sur le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, produit de l'inertie dont a fait preuve dans le passé la Quatrième Commission. Il est bien connu que l'Espagne et le Portugal, en violation de la Charte, ont refusé de fournir des renseignements sur leurs colonies et qu'avec l'appui d'autres puissances coloniales, ces deux pays ont à plusieurs reprises réussi à empêcher l'adoption d'une décision spécifiant qu'ils étaient liés par les obligations énoncées au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Finalement, et dans une large mesure sur l'initiative du représentant du Royaume-Uni, l'Assemblée générale a adopté la résolution 1467 (XIV) portant création du Comité spécial.

30. Pour la délégation soviétique, comme pour bien d'autres, il a toujours été parfaitement clair que toute recherche de caractère juridique est hors de propos, du moment que l'Angola, le Mozambique, la Guinée dite portugaise, les îles du Cap-Vert et les îles Saint-Thomas et du Prince sont des colonies portugaises et qu'Ifni, le prétendu Sahara espagnol, et les îles Canaries sont des colonies espagnoles, acquises toutes à la suite de conquêtes militaires ayant abouti à l'asservissement de leurs populations. Il n'est pas un écolier qui ignore ces faits; cependant, les représentants des puissances coloniales, quoique parvenus à l'âge adulte, essaient de prétendre que ces territoires sont partie intégrante des métropoles en question. Cette attitude ne trompe personne et c'est en pure perte que l'Espagne et le Portugal essaient d'absorber ces territoires en les appelant des provinces de la métropole. A une époque où le mouvement de libération nationale des peuples colonisés est parvenu à une étape décisive, la seule solution réaliste est la liquidation complète du colonialisme, et l'Assemblée générale examinera bientôt une déclaration faite dans ce sens. Le Portugal et l'Espagne sont-ils des exceptions? L'Assemblée générale doit-elle accepter tacitement la continuation du colonialisme dans leurs territoires? Il est évident que les affirmations de l'Espagne et du Portugal sont fallacieuses et la délégation soviétique regrette que l'ONU ait mis plusieurs années à le découvrir. A l'heure actuelle, l'objectif fondamental n'est pas de s'assurer si les territoires espagnols ou portugais sont des colonies, mais de mettre immédiatement fin à toute domination coloniale à la fois dans les territoires non autonomes et dans les territoires sous tutelle; cela est également vrai pour les colonies espagnoles et portugaises.

31. La Commission ne devrait pas perdre de temps à débattre des principes généraux, mais elle devrait essayer plutôt d'aller avec les événements. Elle devrait immédiatement prendre note du fait que, depuis 1955, année où l'Espagne et le Portugal sont devenus Etats Membres, ils étaient soumis, aux termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte, à l'obligation inconditionnelle de communiquer des renseignements sur leurs colonies. En second lieu, l'Assemblée générale devrait s'occuper de la question vitale de l'octroi de l'indépendance à tous les territoires non autonomes, y compris ceux de l'Espagne et du Portugal, où des millions d'autochtones sont privés de tout droit et sont victimes d'une oppression cruelle.

32. Les Espagnols et les Portugais ont souvent parlé de leur "mission civilisatrice", comme s'ils apportaient culture et civilisation à des races "inférieures", mais, si l'on considère leurs actes plutôt que leurs paroles, apparaît alors un tableau totalement différent. Où sont les renseignements qui montrent que des industries ont été créées en Angola ou au Mozambique, que des progrès économiques rapides ont été faits, ou que le niveau de vie ou le degré d'instruction ont été élevés? Au contraire, malgré une stricte censure de presse, des rapports indiquent que la population africaine a été privée de ses droits, que des organisations patriotiques ont été persécutées et que les autochtones vivent comme des esclaves.

33. En vertu d'un amendement à la Constitution portugaise du 11 juin 1951, les colonies portugaises sont devenues "provinces d'outre-mer" du Portugal, mais la situation est restée exactement la même. Les colonies pas plus que leurs habitants ne se sont vu accorder l'égalité des droits avec la métropole; à la vérité, la population autochtone est soumise à une cruelle discrimination raciale. Les autochtones sont répartis en groupes "assimilés" et groupes "non assimilés" et, d'après la loi, un Africain ne peut parvenir au statut d'assimilé que s'il connaît le portugais, se convertit au catholicisme, possède une certaine fortune et est disposé à abandonner les coutumes, la culture et les traditions locales et à vivre comme un Européen. Un Africain qui remplit ces conditions reçoit le droit à la citoyenneté portugaise ainsi qu'un passeport portugais, il peut voter et ses enfants peuvent recevoir une certaine instruction. Ainsi, la politique d'"assimilation" est un moyen commode pour les colonialistes portugais d'opprimer 11 millions d'Africains. Après cinq siècles d'occupation portugaise, 0,3 pour 100 seulement des Africains ont été assimilés; les autres n'ont aucun droit politique ou civil, et ne sont pas représentés aux organes administratifs ou législatifs de la métropole. Ils sont tenus d'avoir sur eux, à toute heure, leur carte d'identité, ils ne peuvent se déplacer sans autorisation spéciale et ne jouissent d'aucune protection légale. Ils peuvent être chassés de leurs terres et requis d'office pour des travaux qui leur sont imposés et sont en fait des travaux d'esclaves. Chaque année des autochtones du sexe masculin sont tenus de servir une période de six mois de travail obligatoire. Dans les colonies portugaises, n'est prohibé que l'esclavage manifeste: toutes les autres formes d'asservissement non seulement ne sont pas interdites, mais sont même légales. Au Mozambique, un commerce organisé d'autochtones se poursuit sous le couvert d'un travail sous contrat. Aux termes de la Convention du Mozambique de 1928, 100.000 Africains originaires de ce pays sont envoyés dans l'Union sud-africaine chaque année et environ 100.000 sont dirigés vers la Rhodésie et le Nyassaland. Il existe un organe gouvernemental spécial chargé de recruter de la main-d'œuvre pour les mines du Transvaal. La majorité des ouvriers recrutés meurent, soit pendant le voyage, de maladie, de sous-alimentation ou d'épidémie, soit en travaillant dans les mines. Dans son numéro du 8 avril 1960, le Manchester Guardian écrivait que depuis plus de 20 ans les travaux imposés ont tenu une place de plus en plus importante au Mozambique et en Angola.

34. Cette cruelle exploitation coloniale a réduit les populations autochtones des territoires espagnols et portugais à la famine et à la misère. En fait, le régime colonial ne leur a apporté que souffrances. Pourquoi, au Mozambique, environ un enfant nouveau-né sur deux meurt-il dans sa première année? Pourquoi 99 pour 100 des populations autochtones de l'Angola, du Mozambique et d'autres colonies portugaises sont-ils encore illettrés après cinq siècles d'administration "éclairée" et de "civilisation"? Assurément, il est inutile de prouver davantage que le régime colonial constitue un obstacle majeur aux progrès des populations des colonies portugaises, espagnoles et autres. Il faut éliminer immédiatement cet obstacle et créer les conditions indispensables au développement économique, social et de l'éducation de ces peuples. Les puissances coloniales ont souvent parlé du "fardeau de l'homme blanc"; l'heure est venue de les libérer de ce fardeau, mais surtout il est temps de libérer les peuples coloniaux de la tutelle blanche.

35. La délégation soviétique demande à la Quatrième Commission de décider officiellement que les colonies portugaises et espagnoles sont des territoires non autonomes, que le Portugal et l'Espagne doivent satisfaire entièrement aux obligations définies dans la Charte, et que les résolutions présentes et futures de l'Assemblée générale concernant la réalisation des objectifs et des principes de la Charte à propos des territoires non autonomes ainsi que la liquidation immédiate et complète du régime colonial dans ces territoires doivent être appliquées aux territoires espagnols et portugais.

36. La Quatrième Commission a déjà perdu beaucoup de temps à étudier des questions de procédure et de forme; il est temps qu'elle prenne sans retard une décision tendant à libérer les peuples coloniaux de l'odieux régime colonialiste.

La séance est levée à 12 h 35.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. M. HUSAIN (Pakistan) déclare qu'il se bornera pour le moment à parler des principes énoncés, dans la subdivision B de la section V de son rapport (A/4526), par le Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte; il aura plus tard l'occasion de parler de l'application de ces principes à des territoires donnés.

2. Pour obtenir que les territoires non autonomes s'administrent finalement eux-mêmes, but que les Nations Unies se sont courageusement proposé au Chapitre XI de la Charte, l'Organisation ne disposait que d'un moyen: demander aux Membres administrants de la tenir informée de l'évolution économique, sociale et scolaire des territoires. L'expérience a montré que c'était une arme puissante, qui lui a permis de suivre de près la situation et de la surveiller. Les progrès économiques, sociaux et scolaires ayant stimulé l'évolution politique, beaucoup de territoires sont devenus indépendants grâce à la vigilance des petites nations et aussi à la bonne volonté de plusieurs puissances administrantes.

3. Quelques Membres ont refusé ces renseignements. Ils ont pu soutenir que certains territoires n'étaient pas visés par le Chapitre XI ou que d'autres étaient désormais autonomes, parce que la Charte omet de préciser à quoi l'on reconnaît qu'un pays est un territoire non autonome. L'Assemblée générale a déjà décidé que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements ne cesse que lorsque le territoire en question s'administre complètement lui-même et elle a spécifié qu'il appartient à elle seule de déterminer, d'après certains critères définis dans sa résolution 742 (VIII), si un territoire donné a atteint ce stade. Reprenant les idées essentielles de la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale, mais en les précisant et en les mettant dans un ordre logique, le Comité spécial des Six vient maintenant de définir les principes qui doivent permettre à un pays de décider s'il doit ou non communiquer des renseignements.

4. Tout en se réservant le droit d'y proposer des modifications, la délégation pakistanaise approuve l'ensemble des recommandations du Comité spécial. Comme lui, elle estime que la Charte est un document vivant et qu'il faut considérer l'application du Chapitre XI à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits. Elle pense en outre que les principes doivent s'appliquer à chaque cas individuel à la lumière des faits et des circonstances particulières. Quand il y a séparation géographique et distinction ethnique, on peut certainement présumer a priori que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements existe. Il appartient alors au Membre administrant de prouver que cette présomption n'est pas nécessairement vraie et que des éléments constitutionnels et juridiques font que l'obligation n'existe pas, malgré cette séparation géographique et cette distinction ethnique. A en juger par leur façon d'interpréter le Chapitre XI, et en particulier l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, il semblerait que certains pays nient que la liberté est le suprême droit naturel de l'homme et non le produit d'un système politique donné, et que chaque nation a le droit d'être elle-même libre pour garantir la liberté et les droits de ses citoyens. C'est pourtant grâce à cette idée que beaucoup d'Etats africains ont pu arriver à l'indépendance et qu'ils peuvent maintenant travailler à faire que leur continent se développe, à l'abri de la guerre froide, pour et par les Africains, et à la lumière africaine. La plupart des populations d'Afrique voudront faire de même en dépit des raisonnements d'un impérialisme révolu.

5. M. ROHAL-ILKIV (Tchécoslovaquie) dit que sa délégation garde présente à l'esprit, dans l'examen de tous les points de l'ordre du jour de la Commission, la déclaration d'indépendance proposée par l'Union soviétique (A/4502 et Corr.1). Elle a la conviction qu'il faut liquider le colonialisme totalement et sans délai, et qu'il sera effectivement liquidé; mais cela ne signifie pas que la Commission doive s'en tenir là et se contenter d'attendre la fin du colonialisme. Au contraire, il faut agir partout à la fois, et le problème en discussion est lui aussi un élément de la lutte contre le colonialisme.

6. La délégation tchécoslovaque a toujours lutté pour une interprétation correcte de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Depuis la création même de l'Organisation, certaines puissances administrantes se sont montrées en effet réticentes sur les territoires qu'elles administrent, se dérochant ainsi à l'obligation que leur fait l'alinéa e et ont même cessé de communiquer ces renseignements. Les Membres non administrants ont lutté contre cette politique, avec un certain succès, comme en témoignent les résolutions 222 (II), 334 (IV), 742 (VIII) et 747 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale. Cette dernière résolution donne à l'Assemblée le droit de décider à quel moment il y a lieu de cesser d'envoyer des renseignements sur un territoire non autonome, et ce droit se trouve confirmé dans la résolution 748 (VIII), qui affirme la compétence de l'Assemblée pour décider si un territoire non autonome a atteint ou non l'autonomie complète visée au Chapitre XI de la Charte.

7. Le Portugal et l'Espagne refusent de donner des renseignements sur les territoires qu'ils administrent en prétendant qu'ils n'ont plus de "colonies" et que ces territoires sont désormais des "provinces d'outre-mer". Il serait certainement intéressant de demander à un autochtone de l'Angola si la vie a changé dans sa "province" depuis qu'elle n'est plus colonie: la réponse ne fait aucun doute puisque le monde entier sait que le régime portugais est le plus cruel des régimes coloniaux. D'après l'article que le Times de Londres a publié les 21 et 22 juin 1960, sous le titre "Portuguese way in Africa", la fiction juridique du changement d'appellation n'empêche pas que l'Angola est toujours une colonie; la densité de la population y est très faible malgré des conditions favorables, et les autochtones y sont soumis au travail forcé; pour le correspondant du Times, en appliquant dans l'Angola une politique d'assimilation on risquerait de créer une "Algérie portugaise".

8. Parce que certains Membres administrants refusaient de s'acquitter des obligations que leur impose le Chapitre XI de la Charte, l'Assemblée générale a créé, par la résolution 1467 (XIV), un comité spécial chargé d'élaborer certains principes qui doivent guider ces membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements leur est applicable ou non. Certaines conclusions du Comité spécial des Six pourront servir effectivement la cause de l'émancipation des peuples coloniaux: il est exact que la Charte est un document vivant et qu'il faut considérer l'application du Chapitre XI à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits, que les obligations assumées par les Etats Membres ne se limitent pas à l'Article 73, et que le Chapitre XI concrétise le concept des territoires non autonomes dans un état d'évolution dynamique et de progrès. Mais il aurait fallu formuler ces conclusions et ces principes en des termes plus rigoureux, et les accompagner de mesures d'application pratiques. La délégation tchécoslovaque ne s'attendait pas à ce que le Comité spécial des Six arrive à des résultats révolutionnaires, étant donné que la moitié de ses membres représentaient des puissances coloniales. Toutefois, l'Assemblée générale ne compte que quelques puissances coloniales et ce fait devrait exercer une influence sur les décisions adoptées.

9. Il importe avant tout d'en finir avec la thèse des puissances coloniales, suivant laquelle le Chapitre XI n'est qu'une déclaration d'intention qui n'implique aucune obligation; bien au contraire, il s'agit, comme pour la Charte dont il fait partie, d'un instrument international qui impose des obligations et accorde des droits à certains Etats. De l'avis de la délégation tchécoslovaque, tous les Etats Membres sans exception sont juridiquement tenus de donner des renseignements sur les territoires qu'ils administrent; dans la pratique, il appartient à l'Assemblée générale, et à elle seule, de juger si un territoire a atteint l'autonomie complète. D'un autre côté, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre du Chapitre XI signifie, non seulement que le Membre administrant n'a pas le droit de cesser de sa propre autorité de communiquer ces renseignements, mais aussi qu'il est tenu de communiquer ces renseignements dès que l'Assemblée générale l'exige. La résolution 747 (VIII) ne laisse aucun doute quant à la compétence de l'Assemblée à cet égard.

10. En décidant s'il y a lieu de continuer ou de cesser d'envoyer des renseignements sur un territoire non autonome donné, l'Assemblée devra se demander si le territoire en question a ou non atteint l'autonomie. De l'avis de la délégation tchécoslovaque, le critère essentiel ne peut être que l'accession à l'indépendance politique réelle, fondée sur la volonté librement exprimée des populations du territoire, et non pas l'accession à une indépendance fictive, ou affirmée dans une déclaration unilatérale de la puissance administrante.

11. De même, en ce qui concerne le volume des renseignements à communiquer, M. Rohál-Ilkiv est d'avis que l'Article 73 de la Charte doit être interprété comme un tout: si l'alinéa e de cet article ne mentionne que les renseignements "relatifs aux conditions économiques, sociales et de l'instruction dans les territoires", les alinéas a et b du même article parlent du "progrès politique" des territoires et du "développement progressif de leurs libres institutions politiques". De plus, il y a un rapport étroit entre les progrès réalisés dans chacun de ces domaines et ces progrès sont plus rapides quand le territoire a accédé à sa pleine indépendance. Il faut donc exiger des Membres administrants qu'ils communiquent des renseignements d'ordre politique, car il n'y a pas d'autre moyen de savoir exactement comment le principe de l'autonomie des populations est appliqué dans ces territoires et dans quelle mesure ils se rapprochent des buts prévus dans la Charte, c'est-à-dire de l'indépendance. Il est urgent d'agir, et l'ONU doit, pour commencer, faire admettre à l'Espagne et au Portugal que les territoires qu'ils administrent sont des territoires non autonomes et les obliger à communiquer immédiatement des renseignements à leur sujet. Mais ceci n'est que le premier pas. Il est nécessaire qu'une indépendance complète soit accordée sans délai à ces territoires.

12. Le moment est venu de se prononcer résolument à l'appui des peuples colonisés. La récente admission de nouveaux Etats comme Membres de l'ONU milite en faveur de cette décision. Depuis la deuxième session de l'ONU, l'Assemblée générale et la Commission discutent de l'interprétation à donner à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; les peuples colonisés, eux, n'attendent pas le résultat de leurs délibérations et l'Assemblée n'a pas le droit d'entraver la marche de l'histoire. La définition exacte des principes qui doivent gouverner l'interprétation de l'Article 73 n'est qu'un maillon de la chaîne des mesures qui aideront à cette évolution. La délégation tchécoslovaque est persuadée qu'en adoptant une résolution qui fasse respecter aux Membres administrants les obligations qui découlent de la Charte, l'Assemblée aura fait un grand pas en avant vers l'objectif final, la liquidation immédiate et complète du colonialisme.

13. M. KANAKARATNE (Ceylan) veut surtout étudier les principes posés par le Comité spécial des Six; c'est quand elle aura fait connaître son avis sur ces principes que la Commission en viendra à préciser quels Membres administrants doivent se considérer comme liés par eux et au sujet de quels territoires ces membres doivent communiquer des renseignements. En adoptant la résolution 1467 (XIV), l'Assemblée générale s'est déclarée compétente pour déterminer la portée du Chapitre XI de la Charte et en particulier de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; sur ce point, la délégation ceylanaise ne partage nullement les réserves de certaines délégations. Dès la 16ème séance de la Quatrième Commission, au cours de la seconde partie de la première session de l'Assemblée, M. John Foster Dulles, représentant les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, a déclaré que son pays, ayant un haut souci des responsabilités qui lui incombent conformément au Chapitre XI, avait fait parvenir au Secrétaire général des renseignements sur tous les territoires non autonomes placés sous son autorité. De son côté, le représentant de la Norvège a déclaré que le Chapitre XI pourrait devenir une Grande Charte de la liberté, susceptible de donner une espérance nouvelle à des millions d'hommes qui n'étaient pas représentés parmi les Nations Unies. C'est bien dans cet esprit qu'il faut comprendre le Chapitre XI, et l'appliquer à tous les peuples auxquels il est applicable.

14. Certains pays qui ont transformé des colonies en "provinces d'outre-mer" par un simple changement d'appellation et un amendement à leurs lois organiques invoquent cette fiction constitutionnelle pour refuser de communiquer des renseignements. Il convient cependant de noter qu'en 1946 tous les pays qui administraient alors des territoires non autonomes ont décidé d'envoyer des renseignements, et l'Assemblée générale a pris acte de ce fait dans sa résolution 66 (I), adoptée la même année. Le Portugal et l'Espagne peuvent-ils affirmer, en 1960, que, s'ils avaient été Membres de l'ONU en 1946, au lieu de le devenir par un simple accident de l'histoire en 1955, ils auraient eu alors la témérité de refuser ce que l'Australie, la Belgique, le Danemark, les Etats-Unis, la France, la Nouvelle-Zélande, les Pays-Bas et le Royaume-Uni acceptaient? Les obligations assumées par les Membres fondateurs de l'Organisation ne lient-elles pas les pays qui y accèdent par la suite?

15. Peut-être est-ce aussi par un accident de l'histoire que Ceylan n'est pas demeurée colonie portugaise et a donc pu devenir Membre de l'ONU. Si les Pays-Bas, puis le Royaume-Uni, se s'étaient pas emparés successivement de l'île, Ceylan aurait-elle été considérée, de même que l'Angola ou le Mozambique aujourd'hui, comme une "province d'outre-mer" du Portugal, à laquelle les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte ne seraient pas applicables? Tous les membres de la Commission, y compris les représentants de l'Espagne et du Portugal, reconnaîtront que cela serait absurde. On peut se demander en quoi la situation actuelle de l'Angola ou du Mozambique diffère de ce qu'aurait été dans cette hypothèse celle de Ceylan.

16. La délégation ceylanaise approuve totalement les principes définis par le Comité spécial des Six dans son rapport objectif. Elle note cependant que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a fait des réserves dans le paragraphe 15. Elle estime pour sa part que la limitation constitutionnelle dont il s'agit dans le principe X ne peut porter que sur l'étendue des renseignements, et qu'elle ne libère jamais un Etat Membre des obligations qui lui fait le Chapitre XI. Accepter la réserve du Royaume-Uni serait repartir à zéro, puisque c'est précisément parce que des Etats refusaient de communiquer des renseignements en prétextant des considérations constitutionnelles que l'Assemblée a créé le Comité spécial.

17. Le représentant de Ceylan souligne enfin que la Quatrième Commission ne doit pas se restreindre à une simple discussion abstraite des aspects juridiques de la question. L'interprétation de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 n'est pas un exercice de sémantique, mais le moyen de parvenir aux nobles buts exprimés en 1946 avec tant d'éloquence par le représentant de la Norvège. L'adoption des principes proposés par le Comité spécial ne marquera pas la fin, mais le début, des travaux de la Commission, qui n'est pas une assemblée de juristes, mais un organe politique chargé d'agir dans le cadre des réalités politiques actuelles. Si elle ne veille pas à faire appliquer ces principes en pratique, tous ses efforts auront été vains. La délégation ceylanaise tient à ce que ces principes ne restent pas lettre morte, parce qu'elle se soucie d'obtenir l'ajustement pacifique d'une situation dont le maintien lui semble de nature à nuire au bien général ou à compromettre les relations amicales entre nations. Il s'agit ici d'un devoir imposé à l'Assemblée générale par l'Article 14 de la Charte. Si la délégation de Ceylan ne réclamait pas cet ajustement pacifique de la situation des territoires fictivement incorporés à des métropoles, elle trahirait les engagements qu'elle a pris envers elle-même, son gouvernement et son peuple.

18. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal), usant de son droit de réponse, se déclare heureux que l'histoire de Ceylan ait voulu que cette ancienne colonie portugaise soit aujourd'hui Membre de l'ONU. Si l'ONU avait existé à l'époque où les Pays-Bas ont chassé les Portugais de Ceylan, le Portugal aurait peut-être fait appel à l'intervention de l'ONU, et Ceylan devrait à cette intervention de ne pas siéger aux côtés des autres membres de la Commission.

19. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) tient à rassurer les délégations qu'a inquiétées la réserve faite par le Royaume-Uni au sujet de l'application du principe X, et qui sont allées jusqu'à qualifier de "double-talk" les propos de la délégation du Royaume-Uni.

20. Le paragraphe 15 du rapport du Comité spécial n'est pas une réserve, mais une précision. En effet, les principes X et XI, qui doivent être considérés comme se complétant l'un l'autre pour éviter les erreurs d'interprétation, ne concernent que les territoires non autonomes pour lesquels des considérations constitutionnelles peuvent limiter la portée des renseignements communiqués. Les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel dont il est question à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ne peuvent résulter, pour reprendre les termes du principe XI, que des relations consti-tutionnelles entre le territoire et l'Etat Membre administrant. Le principe XI précise en outre que la responsabilité de communiquer des renseignements subsiste à moins que le gouvernement ou le parlement de l'Etat Membre administrant ne soit empêché de recevoir, au sujet du territoire en question, les renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Ces principes visent une situation qui pourrait exceptionnellement se présenter dans les relations constitutionnelles entre le Royaume-Uni et un territoire placé sous son administration. La limitation des renseignements ne peut s'appliquer que lorsque le territoire jouit de l'autonomie dans le domaine social, le domaine de l'économie et celui de l'enseignement.

21. M. ZULOAGA (Venezuela), usant de son droit de réponse, s'excuse d'avoir employé l'expression "double-talk" qui a porté ombrage à sir Andrew Cohen. Il serait en effet plus juste de dire, comme l'a fait le représentant de la Birmanie, qu'en faisant sa réserve à propos du principe X, le représentant du Royaume-Uni au Comité spécial des Six a dit à la fois oui et non. L'explication que vient de donner sir Andrew Cohen ne convainc pas M. Zuloaga. Si l'on accepte qu'il y ait des circonstances où certaines considérations constitutionnelles rendent nulle l'étendue des renseignements communicables, on accepte en fait qu'un Etat Membre puisse ne communiquer aucun renseignement, ce qui contredit le principe X, en vertu duquel certaines circonstances peuvent limiter la portée des renseignements, mais la limitation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ne peut pas libérer un Etat Membre des obligations que lui impose le Chapitre XI. Tous les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial se trouvent annulés par cette dangereuse réserve.

22. M. Zuloaga tient d'autre part à appeler l'attention des membres de la Commission sur l'importance des deux premières phrases du principe XI. Cette première partie aurait pu s'appliquer à Malte ou la Nigéria par exemple, avant leur indépendance, car leur constitution leur donnait l'autonomie économique, sociale et scolaire au moyen d'institutions librement élues; mais elle ne saurait en aucun cas s'appliquer aux colonies des deux pays — Espagne et Portugal — qui ne communiquent pas de renseignements. La réserve faite par le Royaume-Uni, à qui la dernière phrase du principe XI aurait cependant dû donner entière satisfaction, peut servir à l'Espagne et au Portugal de prétexte pour ne pas donner de renseignements sur leurs territoires.

23. M. SINGH (Inde), intervenant pour une question d'ordre, demande que le compte rendu in extenso de la déclaration de sir Andrew Cohen soit distribué à la Commission aussitôt que possible.

24. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni), usant de son droit de réponse, remercie le représentant du Venezuela de son aimable intervention. Le représentant du Venezuela n'a peut-être pas tort de considérer que le principe XI à lui seul aurait suffisamment tenu compte de la position du Royaume-Uni.

25. M. ZULOAGA (Venezuela) demande que le compte rendu in extenso qui sera distribué à la Commission comprenne également la deuxième déclaration du représentant du Royaume-Uni.

26. Le PRESIDENT dit que, s'il n'y a pas d'opposition, le compte rendu des deux interventions du représentant du Royaume-Uni sera distribué sous forme de document.

Il en est ainsi décidé ^{1/}.

27. M. BAMALLI (Nigéria) remercie les membres du Comité spécial des Six d'un travail qui, s'il avait été fait plus tôt, aurait pu empêcher qu'à l'heure actuelle certains Etats Membres ne violent délibérément la lettre et l'esprit de la Charte et ne se débarrassent aux obligations qu'ils ont acceptées au moment de leur entrée à l'Organisation.

28. Néanmoins, M. Bamalli craint que les principes X et XI énoncés dans le rapport du Comité ne fournissent une échappatoire aux Etats Membres qui refusent de donner des renseignements sur les territoires qu'ils administrent.

29. Il est difficile de concevoir une situation où des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel pourraient limiter la portée des renseignements communiqués sur un territoire donné. Les deux dernières phrases du principe X précisent cette situation; mais, de l'avis de la délégation nigérienne, quand un territoire jouit de l'autonomie économique, sociale et scolaire, tout en continuant à tomber sous le coup du Chapitre XI de la Charte, on peut dire simplement que la puissance administrante lui a délégué certains de ses pouvoirs; la responsabilité ultime n'en continue pas moins à incomber à l'Autorité administrante, et l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements reste valable. On ne voit pas très bien quelles difficultés une puissance administrante pourrait éprouver à se procurer des renseignements auprès du gouvernement d'un territoire semblable. Pourquoi la constitution d'un territoire non autonome disposerait-elle qu'il ne communiquera pas de renseignements au Membre administrant? Une disposition de ce genre impliquerait que ce gouvernement est absolument autonome. Pour éviter que le principe XI n'offre une échappatoire aux Membres administrants qui voudraient éviter de donner des renseignements, M. Bamalli propose de compléter les principes X et XI par la clause que la communication de renseignements ne pourrait être sujette aux limitations imposées par des considérations constitutionnelles que lorsque la constitution du territoire non autonome en question donne le droit de vote à tous ses habitants.

30. De l'avis de la délégation nigérienne, l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider si un territoire est visé ou non au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Cela implique qu'un Etat Membre qui serait tenté de déclarer qu'il n'administre pas de territoire non autonome devra se plier à l'opinion de l'Assemblée générale. On a prétendu que cette interprétation donnerait à l'Assemblée générale le droit de discuter la constitution d'un Etat Membre, qu'elle va donc à l'encontre du principe de la souveraineté nationale. Mais la Charte reconnaît déjà, précisément au Chapitre XI, qu'aux yeux de l'opinion mondiale l'administration des territoires non autonomes n'est plus du domaine de la souveraineté nationale.

31. M. Bamalli en vient à l'application pratique des principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six. Le Portugal persiste à refuser de donner des renseignements sur l'Angola et le Mozambique sous prétexte que ces colonies sont devenues partie intégrante du Portugal. Le principe VIII affirme que l'intégration à un Etat indépendant doit se faire sur la base de l'égalité complète entre le peuple du territoire antérieurement non autonome et celui de l'Etat indépendant auquel il est intégré. Or, outre que le Mozambique et l'Angola sont géographiquement et ethniquement distincts du Portugal, le peuple de ces territoires ne jouit pas de l'égalité avec le peuple portugais. Moins de 0,1 pour 100 des habitants de ces territoires sont citoyens portugais. Les autres, la loi les appelle "indígenas". On ne peut pas appliquer aux "indígenas" les lois applicables aux citoyens portugais. L'économie du Mozambique et de l'Angola repose sur le travail forcé; 99 pour 100 de la population autochtone sont illettrés; la population africaine ne participe pas à l'administration de ces territoires, et ne bénéficie même pas des garanties les plus élémentaires contre les atteintes aux personnes ou aux biens. Sans permission aucun "indígena" ne peut se déplacer ni exercer une profession; le gouvernement peut lui ordonner ou lui interdire de vendre son bétail et peut le forcer à s'adonner à certaines cultures. La brutalité des autorités à l'égard des autochtones révolte les consciences. Cependant le représentant du Portugal a eu le cynisme de voter en faveur du projet de résolution relatif à la discrimination raciale dans les territoires non autonomes (A/C.4/L.643 et Add.1 et 2) adopté à la 1028ème séance de la Commission.

^{1/} Voir A/C.4/452.

32. Pour se résumer, M. Bamalli soutient que les prétendues "provinces d'outre-mer", le Mozambique et l'Angola, ne font pas partie intégrante du Portugal: elles n'ont pas d'institutions politiques libres; les populations autochtones n'y jouissent pas des mêmes droits que les citoyens portugais; elles ne participent pas effectivement à l'administration; leur prétendue intégration n'est pas le résultat de leur volonté librement exprimée. Ce sont en fait deux territoires non autonomes, qui tombent sous le coup du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

La séance est levée à 17 h 10.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. M. ALWAN (Irak) rappelle que l'initiative pour la création d'un comité spécial chargé d'étudier les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non a été prise par sa délégation en 1955, après l'admission de plusieurs nouveaux Membres. Le Secrétaire général a adressé à ces nouveaux membres, notamment le Portugal et l'Espagne, des lettres appelant leur attention sur l'obligation que leur faisait le Chapitre XI et les invitant à lui faire connaître s'ils avaient sous leur administration des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. Ces deux gouvernements ont répondu négativement. La délégation irakienne a par suite estimé que l'Assemblée générale devait créer un comité chargé d'établir les critères permettant de déterminer les territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI. Ce n'est toutefois qu'à sa quatorzième session que l'Assemblée a créé ce comité.

2. Les Membres administrants, qui ont joué un rôle dominant dans la rédaction du Chapitre XI et dans l'introduction de l'idée d'une mission sacrée, se sont formellement opposés à la création d'un comité spécial. Ils ont été appuyés par d'autres Membres, pour des motifs d'opportunité. L'une des raisons avancées a été que toute proposition de ce genre met en doute la bonne foi des Membres. Cependant, au sens de la délégation irakienne, l'Espagne et le Portugal, par leurs réponses négatives, mettent en doute la bonne foi du Secrétaire général et de l'opinion publique mondiale. On a également soutenu qu'un examen des réponses des nouveaux Membres serait discriminatoire, puisque l'Assemblée n'a pas examiné les réponses reçues en 1946. Si, cependant, le Portugal était devenu Membre de l'ONU en 1945, l'Angola, le Mozambique et la Guinée portugaise auraient été immédiatement considérés comme des territoires non autonomes auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI. Une autre raison présentée se rapporte au principe de non-intervention dans des affaires qui relèvent essentiellement de la compétence nationale d'un Etat. On doit toutefois toujours se souvenir que la Charte est un traité multilatéral et que l'Assemblée générale est habilitée à demander aux Etats Membres de remplir les obligations qu'elle leur impose.

3. Un changement remarquable est intervenu à la quatorzième session, alors que de grands événements se produisaient en Afrique. L'opposition s'est beaucoup affaiblie et neuf Membres seulement ont voté contre l'adoption par la Quatrième Commission du projet de résolution qui est devenu la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale: succès remarquable et résultat de quatre années d'efforts incessants par les groupes anticoloniaux.

4. A ce propos, M. Alwan rend hommage à M. Espinosa y Prieto, représentant du Mexique, qui a joué un grand rôle en la matière. La résolution doit être mise à son actif comme elle est à l'honneur de la politique libérale adoptée par le Mexique pour les questions coloniales.

5. M. Alwan est certain que, guidés par les principes établis dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte (A/4526), les Etats Membres cesseront d'exprimer des opinions divergentes sur l'exécution de l'obligation créée par l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Il est encourageant de voir que les puissances administrantes et non administrantes représentées au Comité spécial sont parvenues à un accord unanime et que le Comité a interprété la Charte comme un instrument de progrès social et de liberté.

6. M. Alwan se propose d'examiner l'applicabilité des principes aux prétendues provinces portugaises, non à la lumière des déclarations de nationalistes africains de ces colonies, que le représentant du Portugal pourrait juger partiales, mais d'après le rapport du professeur Marvin Harris intitulé Portugal's African "Wards"^{1/}, étude effectuée sous les auspices de l'American Committee on Africa, qui porte sur les questions de travail et d'enseignement au Mozambique.

^{1/} Publié dans le magazine Africa Today, vol. V, No 6, novembre-décembre 1958.

7. Le principe premier concerne l'applicabilité du Chapitre XI aux territoires qui, au moment de la rédaction de la Charte, étaient alors connus comme étant de type colonial. Tel était le cas des territoires portugais, même au jugement du représentant de l'Union sud-africaine qui, en mai 1945, à la Conférence des Nations Unies sur l'Organisation internationale, déclarait que le Portugal avait de riches territoires coloniaux. De plus, avant 1951, le Portugal lui-même qualifiait de colonies ses prétendues provinces. Lors de la révision de la Constitution en 1951, le mot "colonies" a été remplacé par les mots "provinces d'outre-mer".

8. Aux termes du principe II, le Chapitre XI de la Charte concrétise le concept des territoires non autonomes dans un état d'évolution dynamique vers la pleine capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes. Toutefois, il ressort nettement de la déclaration du professeur Harris, selon laquelle bien des gens ont risqué leur sûreté personnelle pour lui faire part des conditions dans lesquelles ils étaient forcés de vivre, que, loin de préparer les habitants du Mozambique à une complète administration par eux-mêmes, le Portugal les maintenait sous un régime de terreur.

9. Le principe III fait de la communication des renseignements une obligation internationale et le Portugal ne peut l'éluder tant qu'il est Membre de l'ONU.

10. Le principe IV déclare que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements existe à l'égard d'un territoire qui est séparé géographiquement et distinct au point de vue ethnique et (ou) au point de vue culturel du pays qui l'administre. M. Alwan s'en remet aux membres de la Commission de décider si ce principe s'applique aux prétendues provinces portugaises.

11. Le principe V ajoute que, si des éléments supplémentaires d'une nature administrative, politique, juridique, économique et historique affectent les relations entre le territoire métropolitain et le territoire considéré de telle façon qu'ils placent arbitrairement ce dernier dans une position diminuée, il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements.

12. Avant de traiter de la subordination administrative de la population autochtone du Mozambique, M. Alwan pense utile de dire un mot du régime administratif des "provinces d'outre-mer". L'organe central de l'administration est le Ministère des provinces d'outre-mer, à Lisbonne. Aux termes de la loi fondamentale s'appliquant aux provinces d'outre-mer du Portugal, le Ministre a notamment pouvoir de nommer et de révoquer les fonctionnaires des provinces d'outre-mer, au Ministère comme dans les provinces; d'approuver, de modifier ou de rejeter les propositions sur les questions de sa compétence qui lui sont présentées par les gouvernements des provinces d'outre-mer. Dans chacune de ces provinces, un gouverneur détient l'autorité suprême, tandis que les provinces du Portugal métropolitain n'ont ni gouverneur, ni assemblée législative. De plus, la population autochtone des provinces d'outre-mer est soumise à un régime juridique et administratif appelé "indigenato". Selon le professeur Harris, ce régime se fonde sur la théorie selon laquelle la masse des Africains n'est pas prête, du point de vue culturel, linguistique, moral et intellectuel, à recevoir la citoyenneté portugaise. La présence du Portugal en Afrique est officiellement décrite comme une mission de civilisation destinée à transformer en citoyens portugais la masse des autochtones: méthode appelée officiellement assimilation, qui leur impose de parler correctement la langue et d'adopter les us et coutumes qui sont condition préalable à l'application du droit portugais. Depuis la première loi d'assimilation en 1917, 5.000 Africains du Mozambique seulement, soit moins de 0,1 pour 100 de la population africaine, ont reçu la citoyenneté.

13. L'"indigenato" donne à l'administration pouvoir de contrôler toutes les actions des masses africaines. Il autorise notamment les autorités portugaises à infliger des châtiments corporels aux inadaptés et aux contrevenants: il suffit d'une simple décision administrative. L'"indigenato" permet encore au Gouvernement portugais de contrôler les déplacements des autochtones au moyen d'un livret, que tous les Africains sont tenus de porter à tout moment et sans lequel ils ne peuvent voyager d'un district à l'autre, et du couvre-feu, dont l'inobservation est frappée de peines laissées à la discrétion de l'administrateur. Un troisième trait du régime, c'est la déportation: tout Africain considéré comme indésirable peut, à la discrétion des autorités, être déporté dans l'île Saint-Thomas, terreur des Africains. Un réfugié politique du Mozambique a récemment déclaré à la délégation irakienne que la plupart des indésirables, sinon tous, étaient jetés à la mer avant l'arrivée à Saint-Thomas.

14. Il est évident qu'outre leur subordination administrative au Portugal métropolitain, les territoires lui sont aussi subordonnés politiquement. Un des aspects de la question, c'est la discrimination raciale. Contrairement à la déclaration faite par le représentant du Portugal à la 1028^{ème} séance selon laquelle son pays rejette la discrimination raciale, le statut du 20 mai 1954 concernant les indigènes portugais des provinces de Guinée, d'Angola et du Mozambique porte que sont considérés comme indigènes les noirs qui n'ont pas l'éducation et le comportement individuel et social que demande pour son application intégrale le droit public et privé s'appliquant aux citoyens portugais. Le professeur Harris écrit que ce statut spécial a pour effet de refuser aux noirs, mais non aux blancs, les garanties les plus élémentaires pour leur personne et pour leurs biens. Il ajoute qu'il est étrange qu'un pays dans lequel existe une tradition d'antiracisme et qui l'a largement prouvé dans d'autres régions du monde se consacre, au Mozambique, à l'une des tentatives les plus systématiques et les plus complètes qui aient été faites pour opposer des barrières discriminatoires au bien-être et au progrès social de la grande masse de la population noire.

15. Un simple examen de la loi organique portugaise prouve que la subordination juridique existe aussi. Aux termes de cette loi, le Ministre des provinces d'outre-mer a le pouvoir d'annuler les mesures législatives des gouvernements des provinces d'outre-mer ou les décisions du gouverneur; le régime d'"indigenato" rend impossible la maturité civique à l'extérieur de l'Etat portugais; et l'on ne peut intenter d'actions civiles, commerciales ou criminelles contre le gouverneur ou l'administrateur d'une province que par-devant les tribunaux de Lisbonne.

16. L'existence d'une subordination économique est prouvée par le fait que la Constitution portugaise, la loi organique et le régime de l'agriculture et du travail dans les provinces d'outre-mer imposent aux autochtones des injustices économiques flagrantes. Pour n'en citer que quelques-unes, la Constitution interdit aux provinces d'outre-mer de négocier des emprunts dans les pays étrangers et stipule qu'il incombe à la métropole de déterminer un équilibre approprié entre les besoins de développement et le bien-être des populations des provinces d'outre-mer, d'une part, et les droits et avantages légitimes de la nation portugaise, d'autre part. La loi organique prévoit que les banques d'émission doivent maintenir leurs réserves, leur siège et leur administration centrale dans le Portugal métropolitain, et que le Ministre des provinces d'outre-mer doit autoriser la création, la réouverture et le changement de matériel, ou l'implantation des entreprises industrielles, et approuver les concessions de terrains publics, de voies ferrées jugées d'intérêt public et de travaux publics importants. Le Ministre dirige et contrôle aussi les budgets des provinces d'outre-mer et autorise les transferts budgétaires. Selon M. Marcello Gaetano, ancien ministre portugais des colonies, le Portugal n'a pas accepté sans réserve le principe de la primauté des intérêts des autochtones.

17. Quant aux conditions de travail dans les provinces d'outre-mer, le Code du travail de 1899 prescrit que tous les indigènes des provinces portugaises doivent chercher du travail et, s'ils ne se conforment pas à cette obligation, que les pouvoirs publics peuvent les y forcer. Aux termes de ce code, les hommes et les femmes africains sont obligés de travailler partout où on a besoin d'eux. Selon le professeur Harris, les travailleurs forcés reçoivent dans chaque région un salaire minimum légal allant de 5 dollars à moins de 2 dollars par mois. Les conditions hygiéniques dans lesquelles ils travaillent seraient telles que, pendant les premières années des opérations minières, le taux de mortalité des Africains était aussi élevé que celui des combattants de la seconde guerre mondiale. Dans d'autres parties des colonies portugaises, l'exploitation des Africains se fait en obligeant les paysans à pratiquer certaines cultures. Le professeur Harris dit que l'objet de cette politique est d'attacher le paysan à la terre et de le forcer à planter du coton, qu'il doit vendre à des compagnies concessionnaires — sociétés privées portugaises — à des prix fixés par le gouvernement bien au-dessous du cours international.

18. Etant donné la déclaration du représentant du Portugal à la 892ème séance de l'Assemblée générale, selon laquelle le Portugal a pu ratifier les deux Conventions de l'OIT concernant l'abolition du travail forcé sans modifier ses lois intérieures, M. Alwan voudrait que le représentant de l'Organisation internationale du Travail lui fasse savoir si l'OIT connaissait l'existence de régimes de travail forcé dans les territoires portugais et quelles mesures elle a prises pour y mettre fin.

19. L'alinéa a du principe VII stipule que la libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des peuples du territoire en question, exprimé par des méthodes démocratiques et éclairées. L'examen des systèmes juridique et judiciaire révèle que les autochtones des provinces n'ont aucune faculté d'exprimer leur opinion, parce qu'ils ne sont pas citoyens portugais. A ce sujet, il est bon de noter qu'aux termes de la Constitution, les fonctions législatives des gouvernements des provinces d'outre-mer sont exercées sous la surveillance des organes en qui réside la souveraineté, c'est-à-dire le chef de l'Etat, l'Assemblée nationale, le gouvernement et les cours de justice — qui sont tous à Lisbonne. Aux termes de l'article 151 de la Constitution, les mesures législatives des gouvernements des provinces d'outre-mer ne peuvent révoquer, suspendre ou contredire les dispositions de la Constitution ou de toute autre mesure approuvée par les organes législatifs de la métropole. En vertu de la loi organique, modifiée par la loi No 2076, si le gouverneur, qui a présidé les sessions des conseils législatifs, n'est pas d'accord avec le conseil, il soumet la question à la décision du Ministre des provinces d'outre-mer. Conformément à la loi organique, la majorité des conseils législatifs des provinces africaines se composent de membres élus tous les quatre ans parmi les citoyens portugais seulement.

20. De tout cela, il résulte clairement que la population africaine n'a aucune place dans le cadre juridique et constitutionnel. On ne saurait douter que la souveraineté portugaise a été imposée aux peuples des territoires africains et que la Constitution a été élaborée sans même qu'ils le sachent.

21. Le principe VIII détermine les critères de l'intégration d'un territoire non autonome à un Etat indépendant. L'application de ces critères aux peuples et territoires de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée portugaise mène à certaines conclusions. Premièrement, tous les habitants des provinces d'outre-mer ne sont pas citoyens portugais; la très grande majorité sont des autochtones ou "non civilisés"; dans le Mozambique, environ 1 pour 100 seulement de la population est portugais, dans l'Angola, environ 3 pour 100. Deuxièmement, aux termes de la Constitution et de la loi organique, l'Etat peut obliger les "indigènes" à travailler à des travaux publics présentant un intérêt général pour la communauté, en exécution de sentences judiciaires d'un caractère pénal ou pour régler des dettes fiscales. Troisièmement, le statut de mai 1954 réglemente l'acquisition de droits individuels de propriété foncière par les autochtones, et ces droits ne peuvent en aucun cas être perpétuels et libres. Quatrièmement, certaines cultures marchandes sont obligatoires dans les provinces d'outre-mer, afin de fournir des denrées à la métropole.

22. Selon le livre de James Duffy intitulé Portuguese Africa^{2/}, bien que le statut garantisse les terres indigènes, les limites réelles des terres africaines ne sont pas claires; dans le nord-est de l'Angola, les plantations européennes de café ont absorbé certaines terres africaines et dans le Mozambique des Africains ont été déplacés au profit de plantations de sucre. Le même ouvrage mentionne le statut et les droits inégaux des Européens et des autochtones et le fait que tout "indigène" mâle doit posséder une carte d'identité et un livret portant l'état de ses contributions et ses empreintes digitales.

23. Il est manifeste que le régime portugais de colonialisme a dépassé toute autre forme de colonialisme européen. Il ne se contente pas de rechercher les avantages économiques et politiques, mais s'efforce de détruire le concept même de nationalisme africain. Le régime d'assimilation enseigne à l'Africain à se juger portugais et non africain.

^{2/} Publié par Harvard University Press, Cambridge (Mass.), 1959.

24. Après la traite des esclaves, la conquête armée et la guerre coloniale, le Portugal a placé ces territoires africains sous la férule du colonialisme. La conquête, néanmoins, ne confère aucun droit. La Charte ne reconnaît pas aux Membres de l'ONU le droit de garder leurs possessions. Dans les colonies portugaises, un régime sans précédent d'humiliation et de servitude a été pratiqué avec l'approbation implicite du monde dit libre. Si le Portugal doit être considéré comme une partie du monde libre, il faut chercher une autre définition de la liberté. La délégation irakienne est convaincue que l'humanité est une et indivisible et le Gouvernement irakien considère avec la plus grande appréhension la terreur qui règne dans l'Angola, le Mozambique et la Guinée. Il espère ardemment que d'autres pays partagent cette appréhension, en particulier ceux qui se proclament partisans de la liberté.

25. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) rappelle que la question examinée a déjà fait l'objet de longs débats à la Quatrième Commission, mais que, par suite de la politique d'obstruction adoptée par les puissances coloniales, le Portugal en particulier, il a été impossible de formuler clairement des principes à incorporer dans un document que l'Assemblée générale aurait pu approuver. Mais, aujourd'hui, la lutte menée par les peuples opprimés porte ses fruits et le colonialisme en est partout à son déclin. Les puissances administrantes elles-mêmes ont donné leur accord aux principes qui figurent dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six. La délégation tunisienne se félicite de cette entente.

26. Pour la délégation tunisienne, comme pour toutes celles qui ont déjà exposé leurs vues, le rapport du Comité spécial est clair, concis et riche de substance. Il a sans doute donné lieu à quelques différences d'opinion et quelques réserves, mais elles n'en diminuent pas pour autant la valeur. Sans entrer dans une analyse détaillée du rapport, M. Bouziri désire appeler l'attention des membres de la Commission sur certains passages qui lui semblent particulièrement importants.

27. Il est tout particulièrement reconnaissant au Comité spécial d'avoir souligné la vérité importante formulée dans la dernière phrase du paragraphe 17. Il espère que les puissances coloniales en apprécieront la portée et mesureront la lourde responsabilité qui leur incombera si elles continuent de s'opposer au désir d'indépendance des nations placées sous leur joug.

28. La délégation tunisienne souscrit avec enthousiasme à l'idée exprimée au paragraphe 18, à savoir que la Charte est un document vivant et que l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits. La vérité de cette déclaration est confirmée par le mouvement qui s'est manifesté dans le monde entier en faveur de la liberté et de l'égalité. En essayant de l'arrêter ou de le freiner, on s'exposera non seulement à créer des troubles et des soulèvements dans une grande partie du monde, mais aussi à porter un coup sérieux aux principes de la Charte.

29. La délégation tunisienne a minutieusement étudié les principes énoncés dans le rapport. En fait, ils ne sont pas nouveaux, et leur réitération aurait pu présenter un intérêt purement théorique, n'eût été le fait que les puissances administrantes les ont cette fois-ci acceptés et que le destin de millions d'êtres humains dépend de leur mise en œuvre. Tous les principes sont fondés sur le bon sens, mais aussi sur la compréhension et l'interprétation précise de la Charte des Nations Unies et du droit international.

30. S'il reste encore quelque doute au sujet de l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'Article 73, les principes I et III suffiront à les dissiper; on ne prétendra plus, il faut l'espérer, que la communication de renseignements dépend de la seule bonne volonté des Membres administrants intéressés. Les principes suivants énoncent les critères qui permettent de définir les territoires non autonomes pour lesquels cette obligation existe.

31. Les principes devraient permettre de mettre un terme à toutes les fictions légales inventées par les puissances coloniales et que les territoires anciennement dépendants ne connaissent que trop bien. Ces inventions ne trompent personne et la pression des événements et de la réalité fera un sort au biais par lequel l'Espagne et le Portugal ont transformé leurs territoires en provinces d'outre-mer. Si l'on considère la politique de discrimination raciale pratiquée dans ces territoires, la séparation géographique, et les différences politiques, ethniques et culturelles, il est absolument évident que ces prétendues provinces sont en réalité des territoires non autonomes aux termes de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

32. La Tunisie aurait été heureuse de voir l'Espagne et le Portugal adopter une attitude plus raisonnable et plus conforme à leurs obligations de Membres de l'ONU. Cela n'a malheureusement pas été le cas. Il faut espérer que le rapport du Comité spécial et les principes qui y sont énoncés les amèneront à concevoir plus raisonnablement leurs rapports avec les territoires qui dépendent d'eux et à leur accorder l'indépendance, moyen pacifique de résoudre leurs problèmes coloniaux. Ces deux pays ne doivent pas oublier que l'ONU, qui a la compétence voulue pour trancher la question, ne tolérera plus que l'on néglige les décisions de l'Assemblée générale. Ils doivent reconnaître qu'en persistant dans leur entêtement, leur politique agressive aura de graves conséquences dont ils supporteront entièrement la responsabilité. Ils doivent reconnaître que tous les pays d'Afrique soutiennent les territoires colonisés dans leur lutte contre le colonialisme et qu'ils n'abandonneront la lutte que lorsque tous ces territoires, particulièrement ceux qu'occupent le Portugal et l'Espagne, auront acquis l'indépendance. Ils doivent enfin reconnaître que toutes les luttes des colonialistes contre les peuples opprimés se sont traduites par un échec; celles qu'ils mènent en ce moment sont perdues d'avance et entraînent non seulement des sacrifices énormes pour les peuples opprimés, mais aussi d'immenses pertes humaines, matérielles et spirituelles pour les pays colonisateurs.

33. La délégation tunisienne formulera dans quelques jours sa position sur l'issue inévitable du colonialisme. Elle espère en attendant que la Quatrième Commission adoptera les principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six et s'emploiera à trouver le moyen de mettre un terme au défi lancé à l'Organisation par certains de ses membres.

34. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) dit qu'avant d'exposer les vues de sa délégation concernant le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, il estime qu'il est de son devoir de rappeler la position prise par son gouvernement au sujet des mesures qui ont amené à la création de ce comité. A cet égard, M. Nogueira appelle l'attention sur le passage pertinent de la réponse adressée par le Gouvernement du Portugal au Secrétaire général (A/AC.100/1, par. 137), conformément à la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, qui précise l'opinion de la délégation du Portugal en ce qui concerne la résolution et toutes les mesures qui en découlent. La délégation du Portugal garde cependant toujours un esprit objectif et elle a étudié le rapport sans idées préconçues. Elle a également examiné avec toute l'attention et le respect voulus les réponses qu'ont envoyées d'autres gouvernements. M. Nogueira fait remarquer en passant que 26 gouvernements seulement ont pris la peine de répondre à l'invitation du Secrétaire général — ce qui semblerait indiquer que le sujet n'a pas éveillé l'intérêt de la plupart des gouvernements des Etats Membres. Enfin la délégation du Portugal a pris en considération le recueil d'avis juridiques et autres documents établis par le Secrétariat (A/AC.100/2/Add.2), le compte rendu des débats (A/AC.100/2) et les divers projets de rapport qui ont précédé la version définitive du rapport.

35. M. Nogueira pense que les membres du Comité spécial estimeront comme lui que la question qu'il leur est présentée porte une fois de plus sur l'interprétation de l'Article 73 de la Charte. En raison précisément du fait que l'Article 73 a été interprété de plusieurs façons contradictoires, le Comité spécial a essayé d'établir un ensemble de principes visant à mettre en œuvre cette disposition de la Charte sans l'interpréter. La délégation du Portugal considère cependant qu'aucune disposition de la Charte ou de tout autre document juridique ne peut être convenablement mise en œuvre si l'on n'a pas au préalable défini son sens et son champ d'application et qu'il ne saurait y avoir accord sur la mise en œuvre s'il n'y a pas accord sur le fond. La question de l'interprétation revêt donc une fois de plus une importance primordiale.

36. Beaucoup d'interprétations ont été proposées en ce qui concerne l'Article 73. Toutes les délégations ont le droit d'avoir leur avis; la délégation du Portugal demande que l'on respecte ses vues comme elle respecte régulièrement celles des autres. Quoi qu'il en soit, il n'en reste pas moins vrai que l'Article 73 est une disposition écrite de la Charte et que toute interprétation, pour être valable, doit être fondée sur celle-ci. Beaucoup de délégations sont tentées de voir dans l'Article 73 tout ce qu'elles souhaiteraient y trouver. La phrase suivante extraite du premier projet de rapport du Comité spécial des Six indique clairement l'attitude de quelques-unes des délégations: "Le Comité a envisagé le problème d'un point de vue pratique tenant compte des réalités politiques de la situation mondiale^{3/}." Un point de vue pratique ou la conception d'une situation politique donnée suppose cependant un jugement personnel et toutes les interprétations sincères sont également valables et dignes de respect. Néanmoins, elles ne fournissent pas une base juridique ou légale à une obligation quelle qu'elle soit. La délégation du Portugal estime donc qu'il n'y a pas là un point de départ satisfaisant pour l'interprétation de l'Article 73 de la Charte. La seule méthode consiste à se reporter à la lettre et à l'esprit de l'Article 73 et à essayer de préciser son sens sans laisser vagabonder l'imagination.

37. Quelles que soient les vues soutenues par certaines délégations, le Chapitre XI est intitulé "Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes". Certains pourront suggérer que le mot "Déclaration" ne doit pas être pris dans son sens littéral, mais dans le sens d'une obligation. Il est possible qu'une interprétation de ce genre soit valable, mais sa validité doit être mise à l'épreuve et à cette fin le Chapitre XI doit être replacé dans le contexte approprié. Après cela, il devient immédiatement évident que le mot "Déclaration" n'a en fait pas d'autre sens que celui de déclaration — action laissée entièrement à l'initiative et au jugement des Etats Membres. La question est donc de savoir dans quel contexte l'Article 73 et le Chapitre XI doivent être considérés et, de toute évidence, ils doivent être lus dans le contexte de la Charte. La Charte indique tout d'abord clairement qu'elle établit trois systèmes différents en vue de favoriser la prospérité des peuples et de réaliser la coopération internationale dans le domaine social, le domaine économique et dans le domaine de l'instruction. Le premier système est défini par les Chapitres IX et X de la Charte intitulés "Coopération économique et sociale internationale"; le second est indiqué au Chapitre XI intitulé "Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes"; le troisième fait l'objet du Chapitre XII intitulé "Régime international de tutelle". Ces systèmes sont nettement délimités et les auteurs de la Charte ont souligné les différences qu'ils présentent en prévoyant pour chacun d'eux différentes modalités d'application. Le premier et le troisième système sont appelés systèmes "internationaux"; en d'autres termes, les auteurs de la Charte, en les qualifiant ainsi, ont voulu que la communauté internationale ait son mot à dire dans leur mise en application par l'intermédiaire des organes appropriés de l'ONU. En ce qui concerne le second système cependant, le mot "international" n'est pas utilisé, ce qui indique que le problème est considéré comme étant d'ordre national plutôt qu'international. En outre, la Charte souligne les différences existant entre les divers systèmes en prévoyant un organe chargé de "la coopération économique et sociale internationale", qui est le Conseil économique et social, et un organe chargé de s'occuper du "régime international de tutelle", qui est le Conseil de tutelle, mais elle n'institue aucun organe devant veiller à la mise en œuvre du Chapitre XI. Il n'y a donc aucun doute que, dans la Charte, le Chapitre XI ne comporte ni le même champ d'application ni les mêmes obligations que les Chapitres IX et X, d'une part, et le Chapitre XII, d'autre part.

38. Cette conclusion est confirmée par l'historique des dispositions de la Charte en la matière. Le préambule et l'Article 23 du Pacte de la Société des Nations ont reconnu l'un et l'autre la nécessité d'une action coopérative dans le domaine économique, le domaine social et le domaine humanitaire. Après la seconde guerre mondiale, les auteurs de la Charte ont jugé que, de toute évidence, l'action entreprise par la Société des Nations à cet effet devrait être poursuivie et même intensifiée. Par conséquent, dans le préambule et aux Chapitres IX et X de la Charte, on a à nouveau exprimé l'idée que la paix et la sécurité internationales, d'une part, et la prospérité économique et sociale, de l'autre, étaient toujours liées. Pour développer la coopération internationale dans ce domaine, des organes appropriés ont été prévus dans le cadre de l'ONU. Le but et le sens du Chapitre XII, bien que très différents par nature, ont une origine dans une certaine mesure analogue: le système des mandats n'avait pas permis l'établissement des conditions indispensables qui auraient permis à tous les territoires sous mandat d'accéder à l'indépendance et il a donc été nécessaire d'établir pour ces territoires un nouveau type d'administration, sous surveillance internationale, et l'on a ainsi créé le régime international de tutelle. Là encore, il était nécessaire qu'il y ait un organe approprié et le Conseil de tutelle a été institué.

39. Cette thèse peut être également prouvée par une analyse des autres parties de la Charte; chaque fois que la Charte prévoit une action internationale de l'ONU ou une action qui doit être entreprise par des Etats Membres sous contrôle de l'ONU, elle prévoit la création d'organes compétents à cet effet. Lorsque la Charte n'a pas prévu un appareil et des organes, cette lacune provient clairement du fait que les auteurs de la Charte ont estimé que le sujet avait un caractère national plutôt qu'international. Cela est précisément le cas en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI.

40. Une étude attentive de la Charte confirme ces conclusions. L'Article 13, par exemple, indique que l'Assemblée générale "provoque des études et fait des recommandations" et cet article renvoie expressément aux Chapitres IX et X. Il n'est pas fait mention du Chapitre XI. L'Article 16 traite des fonctions de l'Assemblée générale et indique expressément les Chapitres XII et XIII; là encore, le Chapitre XI n'est pas mentionné. Le Chapitre IX fournit de nouvelles preuves: l'Article 55 mentionne l'ONU; l'Article 56 parle de collaboration avec l'Organisation; en vertu de l'Article 58, celle-ci a le droit d'émettre des recommandations; les Articles 59 et 60 confient à l'Organisation certaines fonctions et responsabilités. Le Chapitre XI ne contient rien d'analogue. En ce qui concerne les Chapitres XII et XIII, l'Article 75 confère des pouvoirs déterminés à l'ONU, l'Article 83 comme les Articles 85 et 87 mentionnent les fonctions dévolues à l'ONU. On peut seulement en conclure que la Charte confère à l'Assemblée générale certaines fonctions et responsabilités en ce qui concerne la mise en œuvre du système international de coopération économique et du régime international de tutelle, mais qu'elle n'en prévoit aucune se rapportant à la "Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes". Au contraire, si la Charte mentionne toujours l'ONU lorsqu'il s'agit de questions dont traitent les Chapitres IX et XII, au Chapitre XI il est question surtout des "Membres des Nations Unies"; il leur a donc ainsi conféré, et à eux seulement, les responsabilités et pouvoirs qui dans les deux autres systèmes appartenaient à l'Assemblée générale. Il n'existe même pas, comme aux Chapitres IX et XII, de clause invitant les Membres de l'ONU à coopérer avec l'Organisation en vue de mettre en application les Articles 73 et 74.

41. Il est donc incontestable que les trois systèmes diffèrent complètement quant à leur nature et à leur champ d'application. Des opinions analogues, bien que se situant dans un autre contexte, ont été exprimées à plusieurs reprises au sein de la Quatrième Commission. Déjà en 1947, au cours de la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale, le représentant des Etats-Unis a dit qu'une distinction nette et fondamentale avait été faite à San Francisco entre le Chapitre XI, d'une part, et les Chapitres XII et XIII, d'autre part. Il a déclaré que, pour beaucoup de territoires non autonomes, la souveraineté ou le pouvoir de juridiction appartenait aux Etats administrants et que rien dans la Charte n'altérerait cette réalité fondamentale. Il a dit, d'autre part, que l'ONU était chargée de la surveillance des territoires sous tutelle. La délégation des Etats-Unis avait estimé extrêmement important que l'on maintienne la distinction nette établie par la Charte entre les territoires et les populations relevant de la souveraineté ou de la juridiction d'un Etat indépendant et les autres. Il avait conclu en disant que les Chapitres XII et XIII modifiaient matériellement le statut des territoires non autonomes auxquels ils s'appliquaient, mais qu'il n'en était pas de même du Chapitre XI et qu'il ne fallait pas s'efforcer d'effacer cette distinction.

42. Pour toutes ces raisons solidement fondées, il est très surprenant que certaines délégations aient déclaré qu'à leur avis les dispositions du régime international de tutelle devraient s'appliquer également au système prévu dans la déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes. Il est assez curieux que ces mêmes délégations rejettent les conséquences logiques de leur opinion et refusent d'accepter, en ce qui concerne le Chapitre XI, la disposition exigeant qu'il y ait majorité des deux tiers pour les décisions se rapportant aux questions de tutelle et également les dispositions de l'alinéa c de l'Article 77 prévoyant que des territoires pourraient être placés volontairement sous régime de tutelle.

43. Les Articles 73 et 74 sont entièrement adressés aux Etats Membres et eux seuls sont fondés à faire des déclarations en vertu desquelles ils pourraient accepter certaines obligations. Il n'est nulle part suggéré qu'une déclaration, se présentant sous forme de résolution ou autrement, puisse être établie par l'ONU elle-même. De plus, le texte parle des Membres qui ont ou qui assument des responsabilités déterminées. Bien que l'ONU puisse avoir connaissance des responsabilités existantes reconnues par un Etat Membre elle n'a aucun moyen d'apprendre quelles nouvelles responsabilités assume un Etat Membre si ce n'est grâce à une nouvelle déclaration émanant de cet Etat qui a toute liberté de faire connaître des responsabilités nouvelles de cet ordre lorsqu'il le juge bon. En outre, l'Article 73 mentionne les "territoires", mot qui, dans le droit international, n'a pas de signification juridique précise et dont le sens peut beaucoup varier dans un texte constitutionnel. Ce terme n'est nulle part défini dans la Charte et donc, de toute évidence, l'Assemblée générale n'a le pouvoir de préciser son sens qu'en ce qui concerne expressément l'Article 77; en fait, il n'appartient qu'aux Etats Membres de définir le statut d'un territoire, quel qu'il soit, exception faite de ceux qui sont énumérés à l'Article 77.

44. De l'avis de la délégation du Portugal, les travaux de la Commission s'adressent plutôt aux habitants d'un territoire qu'à la définition du statut d'un territoire. La Charte pose à l'Article 73 le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants; cela veut simplement dire que la Charte ne met pas en cause la définition du statut politique du territoire donné par le gouvernement Membre et qu'elle se préoccupe donc uniquement de la situation des habitants.

45. L'alinéa e de l'Article 73 se réfère à deux points importants: la question de la communication des renseignements et la question des réserves découlant des exigences de la sécurité et de considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. La délégation portugaise a étudié la question avec beaucoup d'attention et a tenu compte des opinions qui ont été exprimées tant au sein de la Commission qu'ailleurs, et cette étude n'a fait que la confirmer dans l'opinion qu'elle avait déjà. Il ne fait aucun doute que, ni dans sa lettre ni dans son esprit, l'Article 73 ne contient la moindre obligation précise, si ce n'est celle de faire une déclaration dont les termes et la portée sont entièrement laissés à la discrétion des Etats Membres. Il suit de là que les seules obligations incombant aux Etats Membres sont celles qui découlent de cette déclaration; s'il n'en était pas ainsi, les préceptes énumérés aux Articles 73 et 74 et intéressant exclusivement les Etats Membres ne seraient pas compréhensibles. De fait, en acceptant la pratique établie par le Secrétariat de l'ONU, l'Assemblée générale a toujours sanctionné cette interprétation, et elle n'aurait en vérité pu faire autrement; les gouvernements ont toujours été libres de répondre au Secrétaire général conformément à leur propre interprétation des obligations que leur impose leur propre système juridique et constitutionnel, dont ils sont les seuls juges.

46. Si les réserves d'ordre constitutionnel auxquelles l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 fait allusion résultaient des constitutions des territoires non autonomes eux-mêmes, ainsi que l'ont prétendu certaines délégations, les exigences de la sécurité mentionnées au même alinéa découleraient également de ces constitutions et la responsabilité en incomberait aux territoires non autonomes et non aux Etats Membres intéressés. Ce n'est certainement pas là l'intention de la Charte, puisque les Articles 73 et 74 s'adressent aux seuls Etats Membres, aucune autre entité n'étant reconnue par la Charte. Si, par leurs libres déclarations, les Etats Membres ont assumé certaines obligations en vertu de l'Article 73, il leur appartient et il n'appartient qu'à eux seuls de déterminer, conformément à leurs propres constitutions, les limitations qui peuvent exister. L'interprétation de la constitution d'un Etat Membre relève exclusivement de sa compétence propre et ne saurait faire l'objet d'une discussion par un organe international quelconque; toute autre façon de procéder créerait un précédent dangereux. Les réserves d'ordre constitutionnel s'appliquent de deux manières: elles peuvent limiter la nature ou la quantité des renseignements fournis, lorsqu'un gouvernement est autorisé à communiquer des renseignements, ou elles peuvent interdire à un Etat Membre de fournir des renseignements sur les territoires et les populations dont le statut politique ne peut être défini que par lui.

47. En résumé, la seule obligation découlant des Articles 73 et 74 est que les Etats Membres doivent faire une déclaration définissant l'obligation qu'ils peuvent avoir contractée. La portée de cette déclaration est laissée à la discrétion de chaque Etat, et des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel peuvent limiter ou empêcher la communication de renseignements. En fait, nombre d'autres délégations partagent ce point de vue, comme aussi du reste de nombreux experts du droit international. En revanche, certaines délégations estiment que la discussion des dispositions de la Charte est inutile et théorique. Le représentant de l'Iran, par exemple, a soutenu qu'après 15 ans, de nombreuses notions juridiques de la Charte sont devenues désuètes et ne correspondent plus à la réalité. Mais il n'est pas possible d'interpréter la Charte au gré d'idées ou de théories particulières: la Charte constitue la loi fondamentale de l'ONU. Il ne faut pas en conclure que la délégation portugaise n'estime pas, elle aussi, que certaines dispositions de la Charte ne répondent plus aux besoins actuels, mais on trouve aux Articles 108 et 109 les méthodes prévues pour apporter des modifications à la Charte. La délégation portugaise admet que la Charte est un document vivant qu'il importe de maintenir en vie; le meilleur moyen d'y arriver est de le respecter et non de le détruire en en déformant les intentions.

48. La délégation portugaise n'est pas seule à avoir cette opinion. Dans un avis consultatif consigné à la page 56 de son Annuaire 1947-1948, la Cour internationale de Justice a déclaré que la question de l'interprétation d'une disposition de la Charte est de caractère strictement juridique. Dans sa résolution 171 (II) l'Assemblée générale a elle aussi considéré qu'il était de la plus haute importance que l'interprétation de la Charte repose sur des principes consacrés de droit international. A la 113ème séance plénière, tenue au cours de la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale, le représentant de l'Union soviétique, M. Vychinsky, a déclaré que les principes contenus dans la Charte sont apparemment considérés comme une pierre d'achoppement par certaines délégations qui, sous le couvert de divers amendements et résolutions, cherchent à en infléchir l'esprit dans le sens qui leur paraît opportun.

49. M. Lachs, représentant de la Pologne à la Sixième Commission, a dit que le succès ou l'échec de l'ONU dépend de la façon dont elle s'adapte aux besoins de l'heure et que, pour réussir, elle doit refléter les changements qui se produisent dans le domaine du droit; l'ONU ne peut s'en tenir à une conception du monde tel qu'il était hier ou tel que certains voudraient qu'il fût, mais elle doit garder un contact étroit avec la réalité vivante.

50. La façon dont la délégation portugaise interprète la Charte a nécessairement influé sur son examen du rapport du Comité spécial des Six. Le principe premier se réfère aux territoires considérés, au moment de la rédaction de la Charte, comme étant de "type colonial". Ceci n'implique pas seulement que le terme "colonie" a été préalablement défini, mais donne également au rapport une portée beaucoup plus large. De l'avis de la délégation portugaise, il y a là un progrès. En outre, le principe premier semble considérer comme un fait acquis que l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte comporte en fait une obligation de communiquer des renseignements — opinion que rejette la délégation portugaise — alors qu'aux termes de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, le Comité spécial avait précisément reçu pour tâche de déterminer si cette obligation existe ou non.

51. Quant au principe II, la délégation portugaise renonce à comprendre ce que peut signifier, en termes juridiques, un "état dynamique d'évolution". Il faut supposer que le mot "dynamique" a été utilisé par opposition au mot "statique", mais, quelle que soit la signification de ces mots dans le jargon scientifique, ils sont entièrement dépourvus de sens dans le langage juridique. Peut-être ce membre de phrase veut-il indiquer que le concept d'un territoire non autonome constitue une réalité en évolution constante vers un certain objectif. Si telle en est l'intention, il confond deux notions entièrement distinctes: le concept théorique de territoire non autonome, d'une part, et la réalité physique à laquelle s'applique ce concept, de l'autre. L'un est immuable, alors que l'autre peut subir une transformation progressive pour aboutir à un concept différent, celui d'un territoire autonome. Toutefois, un territoire non autonome, avant de devenir autonome, et si proche soit-il de ce statut, n'en demeure pas moins non autonome. Supposons par exemple qu'un territoire non autonome doive remplir 50 conditions avant de devenir autonome et qu'il en ait rempli 49, il sera toujours un territoire non autonome. En conséquence, les mots "évolution dynamique" manquent totalement de sens et de pertinence.

52. Comme le principe premier, le principe III arrive à une conclusion en partant d'une hypothèse qui n'est pas discutée, alors que c'est la conclusion même qui fait l'objet de la controverse.

53. En ce qui concerne les principes IV et V, il n'est pas clairement indiqué s'il faut considérer séparément ou ensemble des caractéristiques géographiques, ethniques et culturelles distinctes. S'il faut les prendre séparément, cela signifierait qu'il pourrait y avoir un territoire non autonome voisin ou même situé à l'intérieur d'un Etat métropolitain, pour autant qu'existent des différences ethniques ou culturelles; si ces différences ethniques ou culturelles n'existent pas, un territoire pourrait être pleinement autonome même s'il est géographiquement séparé. Cela pourrait signifier aussi qu'un territoire est non autonome lorsque, malgré la proximité géographique et l'identité ethnique, il présente des caractéristiques culturelles différentes. La délégation portugaise estime que la philosophie sur laquelle repose cette hypothèse offre un contraste frappant avec les plus nobles idéaux de l'humanité. Elle postule en effet que tous les groupes ethniques, si petits soient-ils, devraient constituer des entités distinctes et autonomes dotées d'un pouvoir politique distinct et autonome, et que ces groupes devraient nécessairement être en conflit avec d'autres groupes. C'est nier le fait que les grandes nations progressives du monde doivent à une combinaison de nombreuses races et cultures d'avoir pu apporter leur contribution éclatante à la civilisation, alors qu'une société ne comptant qu'une race, qu'une culture ou qu'une langue peut paraître heureuse, mais est assurément stagnante.

54. La délégation portugaise ne rejette pas en principe les éléments d'une nature administrative, politique, juridique, économique et historique mentionnés dans le principe V; elle croit comprendre que, selon ce principe, si ces éléments n'affectent pas de manière arbitraire les relations entre le territoire métropolitain et un territoire donné et si ces relations ne placent pas ce territoire dans une position diminuée, ce dernier peut être considéré comme pleinement autonome.

55. Dans le principe VI, le Comité spécial semble considérer comme un fait admis que l'accession d'un Etat à la souveraineté et à l'indépendance est une évidence qui s'impose à tous. Or, ce n'est pas le cas; en droit international, la souveraineté est une question très controversée et il faut admettre que, dans la communauté internationale, il existe plusieurs degrés de souveraineté. Il est des Etats, comme Andorre ou Saint-Marin, qui, tout en étant indépendants, ne sont pas pleinement souverains. D'autre part, ces Etats n'entrent pas dans la catégorie mentionnée ensuite dans le rapport, celle de la libre association avec un Etat indépendant, car ils sont eux-mêmes indépendants. Ne seraient-ils donc pas autonomes? De plus, il y a des Etats qui ne sont pas reconnus par d'autres Etats; or, la reconnaissance est inévitablement liée à la souveraineté, car, en droit international, l'entrée d'un Etat dans l'existence légale est marquée par la reconnaissance. D'autre part, il y a des Etats qui ne sont pas reconnus par d'autres Etats, mais qui sont Membres de l'ONU, et des Etats qui, comme la Suisse, ont été reconnus par tous, mais qui ne sont pas membres de l'ONU. La phrase "Etat indépendant souverain" est donc malencontreuse et ambiguë puisque l'accession d'un pays à la souveraineté et à l'indépendance n'est pas un fait dont l'évidence s'impose immédiatement et qui puisse constituer un critère universellement admis.

56. Dans le principe VII, le Comité spécial des Six se contente de décrire une fédération ou une confédération d'Etats. M. Nogueira pense que la Commission est d'accord sur ces deux possibilités; toutefois, une importante omission a été commise: le principe n'envisage pas la sécession d'un Etat ou d'un territoire associé ou confédéré. De plus, le principe VII emploie l'expression "méthodes démocratiques". Ces mots sont difficiles à définir; il existe plus d'un type de démocratie; il existe même des dictatures impitoyables qui s'intitulent non seulement démocratiques, mais populaires. De l'avis de sa délégation, le respect des lois nationales fournit la seule base d'une définition acceptable d'une méthode démocratique qui permettrait aux vœux des populations de s'exprimer.

57. La délégation du Portugal n'a aucune observation à présenter au sujet du principe VIII et est généralement d'accord avec cette partie du rapport; mais, si le principe VIII doit être considéré en même temps que le principe IX, les observations déjà formulées s'appliquent de nouveau. La délégation portugaise s'oppose notamment à ce que le contrôle par l'ONU soit considéré souhaitable dans certains cas. Nulle part la Charte n'envisage un tel contrôle lorsqu'il s'agit des territoires non autonomes, et la délégation portugaise n'est prête à souscrire à aucune violation de la Charte ni à appuyer aucune tentative en vue de faire dire à la Charte ce qu'elle n'a pas voulu dire.

58. La délégation portugaise n'est pas d'accord avec les principes X, XI et XII. M. Nogueira ne répètera pas ce qu'il a déjà dit à propos de la communication des renseignements. Il note toutefois que le Comité spécial a admis que le volume des renseignements pouvait être soumis à des limitations. L'aboutissement logique d'un tel principe, c'est que les limitations imposées par des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel peuvent réduire à rien le volume des renseignements; M. Nogueira se demande pourquoi le Comité spécial n'a pas osé le reconnaître. D'autre part, si les opinions de ce comité viennent à être acceptées, la voie est ouverte à l'examen et à la critique des constitutions nationales par les divers organes des Nations Unies; en effet, l'ONU ne peut examiner la question des relations constitutionnelles d'un territoire avec un Membre administrant sans examiner également les constitutions des Etats Membres, ce qui, de l'avis de la délégation portugaise, est inadmissible.

59. Il semblerait que les points soulevés par les Articles 73 et 74 ainsi que par le rapport du Comité spécial ne soient que des points de détail; en réalité, la Commission se trouve en présence d'un problème beaucoup plus général et qui présente la plus haute importance pour tous les Etats Membres. La question dont il s'agit est des plus graves et l'activité future de l'ONU est en jeu. La Charte ne donne pas de définition d'un territoire autonome et il s'agit maintenant de décider s'il convient d'accepter une définition juridique ou d'élaborer une définition politique. La Charte fournit deux principes directeurs: celui de la responsabilité des Etats Membres touchant l'administration de tout territoire donné et celui du degré d'autonomie obtenu par ces territoires; en d'autres termes, il existe, d'une part, la constitution nationale d'un Etat Membre et, de l'autre, la situation politique d'un territoire et de ses habitants. Ces deux facteurs sont de nature entièrement différente et ne peuvent être combinés; une définition précise n'est possible que s'il n'y a pas divergence entre les deux critères de base. En somme, la Commission doit soit accepter, soit rejeter le droit national. Une fois que la communauté internationale a reconnu un Etat, elle n'a plus la possibilité de changer d'avis; le droit national — telle est la ferme conviction de la délégation portugaise — n'est pas sujet à discussion. Certaines délégations, lorsqu'elles définissent un territoire non autonome, ignorent complètement le concept du droit national et, selon toute apparence, se laissent exclusivement guider par des considérations politiques: pour ces délégations, les arguments juridiques et l'existence du droit national ne sont que des obstacles au progrès et au développement des sociétés et des populations. C'est là s'engager dans une voie dangereuse, car, si ces pays ne tiennent pas compte des lois nationales des autres pays, un temps viendra où leurs propres lois risquent d'être écartées. Cette attitude mise au service de buts politiques exige que l'on s'abrite derrière une majorité constituée au hasard et animée par des motifs qui, s'ils coïncident parfois, risquent un jour de s'opposer; les Etats intéressés seraient alors en minorité et leur propre système juridique aurait cessé d'être respecté. Il s'agit de savoir si la majorité de l'Assemblée générale a le pouvoir d'imposer ses décisions à un pays dans des questions relevant de la législation interne de ce pays. La délégation portugaise répond fermement par la négative; l'ONU n'est ni un parlement mondial ni un gouvernement mondial.

60. M. Nogueira souhaite appeler l'attention de la Commission sur une très grave omission qui s'est produite dans le rapport du Comité spécial. Comme on le sait, les questions intéressant les territoires non autonomes ont été examinées en même temps que les questions du colonialisme et de l'impérialisme. Pendant des années, la Quatrième Commission s'est intéressée à un type spécial et limité de colonialisme et d'impérialisme; en fait, la question est plus vaste et devrait englober l'impérialisme d'une nature politique et idéologique. Au cours de ces dernières décennies est apparue une forme de colonialisme nouvelle et plus dangereuse et le rapport a omis d'en tenir compte.

61. En conclusion, M. Nogueira tient à dire que son pays a fait l'objet d'attaques constantes et d'accusations calomnieuses de la part de certains membres de la Commission; M. Nogueira se réserve le droit de répondre et de prendre de nouveau la parole si cela est nécessaire.

62. M. KOUTCHAVA (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) fait remarquer que le représentant du Portugal, en essayant de convaincre la Commission que la Charte n'obligeait pas son pays à communiquer des renseignements sur les colonies portugaises, s'est efforcé de citer M. Vychinsky à l'appui de sa cause. Dans le passage mentionné par le représentant du Portugal, M. Vychinsky n'a pas parlé en faveur du colonialisme; il avait demandé que l'on observe strictement les termes de la Charte. C'est là précisément ce que la délégation de l'URSS demande au Portugal.

Expression de sympathie à l'occasion des catastrophes survenues au Pakistan

63. Le PRESIDENT exprime au représentant du Pakistan sa sympathie profonde ainsi que celle de la Commission à l'occasion des deux catastrophes qui sont survenues au Pakistan au cours de ces dernières semaines et des lourdes pertes en vies humaines causées par les cyclones. Le Président demande au représentant du Pakistan de bien vouloir assurer son gouvernement et le peuple pakistanais des sentiments de sympathie de la Commission.

64. M. HUSAIN (Pakistan) remercie le Président des sentiments qu'il vient d'exprimer et dont il fera part à son gouvernement.

La séance est levée à 13 h 20.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. LOOMES (Australie) associe la délégation australienne aux félicitations adressées aux membres du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte pour la bonne volonté constructive dont ils ont fait preuve dans l'examen d'une question très complexe. Car, si l'on s'accorde généralement sur les objectifs du Chapitre XI de la Charte et sur la primauté des intérêts des habitants, les avis diffèrent sur les moyens à employer.

2. La délégation australienne approuve dans l'ensemble les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial dans la subdivision B de la section V de son rapport (A/4526). Elle n'a de réserve à faire que sur le principe IX: elle se demande s'il est bien nécessaire d'insister sur le suffrage universel. L'application des principes, en revanche, pose des problèmes qu'il faudra examiner plus tard et au sujet desquels la délégation australienne se réserve le droit d'intervenir. Le Gouvernement australien a toujours communiqué les renseignements demandés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73; elle a même donné spontanément des renseignements d'ordre politique et constitutionnel sur le Papua.

3. M. Loomes note avec satisfaction que le principe VI, en reconnaissant pour un territoire non autonome divers moyens d'atteindre la pleine autonomie, tient compte de l'évolution du monde moderne, qui fait que certains petits Etats peuvent — on les comprend — se prononcer en faveur de l'association avec un Etat plus important, étant bien entendu que cette association, comme il est déclaré au principe VII, doit résulter du "choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question". Les dispositions du principe IX qui concernent l'intégration d'un territoire à un autre Etat indépendant sont importantes elles aussi. Mais les principes posés par le Comité spécial sont aussi l'expression de considérations plus générales, à savoir, notamment, que le développement progressif de la capacité des habitants des territoires non autonomes à s'administrer eux-mêmes doit tenir compte des conditions particulières à chaque territoire et des aspirations de ses populations. C'est en se fondant sur ces principes et ces considérations qu'il faut veiller à ce que les territoires passent sans heurt de l'état de dépendance à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance.

4. M. KOUDRYAVTSEV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) estime que le point en discussion n'est pas le thème d'un exercice théorique, mais un problème pratique dont l'importance immédiate est très grande. Cette importance ne tient pas tant aux principes eux-mêmes, qui ne sont pas une révélation, qu'à la violation par deux Etats Membres, l'Espagne et le Portugal, des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Ces deux pays qualifient de "provinces d'outre-mer" des territoires qui ne sont pas autre chose que des colonies. On pourrait s'étonner que l'ONU tolère cette infraction à la Charte, mais l'Espagne et le Portugal ont le soutien d'autres pays colonisateurs membres de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord, notamment des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni et de la Belgique. Aucun argument juridique, en tout cas, ne fera croire à la Commission que les territoires administrés par l'Espagne ou le Portugal ne sont pas des colonies, totalement dominées par la métropole.

5. Les colonies portugaises se caractérisent par leur retard économique. Les faits le prouvent: dans une conférence faite à Lisbonne en 1956 sur le Portugal en Afrique, un conférencier portugais a déclaré qu'il est permis, dans une certaine mesure, de s'inquiéter du retard industriel et économique du Mozambique; un article du Times de Londres du 22 juin 1960 constate que l'on a très peu industrialisé l'Angola pour ne pas faire concurrence à la métropole. Ainsi, depuis 500 ans, les colonialistes portugais maintiennent leurs colonies sous le joug pour en tirer les plus grands bénéfices; ils ont, sous le prétexte d'apporter en Afrique la civilisation européenne, sucé le sang des Africains. On sait le résultat de cette "mission civilisatrice" du Portugal: les esclaves, recrutés par des armées de mercenaires et trans-portés en Amérique, ont grossi les revenus de la bourgeoisie portugaise de la métropole. Cette politique, suivie aussi par les colonisateurs espagnols, anglais, français et autres, a transformé l'Afrique en réserve de chasse à l'homme et coûté la liberté et la vie à près de 100 millions d'Africains. L'humanité n'oubliera jamais les malheurs des peuples coloniaux. Toujours d'après le même article du Times, la traite et le travail forcé ont réduit l'Angola à une telle misère que la densité de la population est aujourd'hui la plus faible de tous les pays de l'Afrique noire. Le besoin d'une prétendue assimilation a conduit les autorités portugaises à instituer le système du contrat de travail selon lequel tout Africain âgé de plus de 18 ans est forcé de travailler au moins six mois par an.

6. Dans le domaine de l'enseignement, d'après les statistiques officielles citées par le Times, quatre Angolais seulement, sur 4.200.000, ont eu la possibilité de poursuivre leurs études au-delà de l'enseignement secondaire, et les rares écoles, d'ailleurs gérées par des missions, sont réservées aux enfants européens.

7. Or, à l'époque actuelle où le monde entier est las du colonialisme, où des Etats africains de plus en plus nombreux accèdent à l'indépendance, où la vie elle-même impose la nécessité de liquider totalement et immédiatement le système colonial, les colonisateurs portugais s'occupent d'étendre leurs possessions en délimitant les frontières. Ils continuent aussi à pratiquer à l'égard de la population africaine une politique de discrimination raciale fondée sur la théorie de la supériorité de la morale européenne. Cette politique de racisme est sanctionnée par l'article 3 du statut du 20 mai 1954, qui stipule que tout compromis avec les us et coutumes indigènes est limité par les exigences morales et humanitaires et par la primauté des intérêts du Portugal. C'est une atteinte à la dignité des Africains, et les paroles prononcées à la dernière séance par le représentant du Portugal paraissent bien ridicules à côté des souffrances des populations africaines. Sans doute le Portugal jouit-il du soutien des Etats-Unis et a-t-il sa place bien définie dans les blocs militaires occidentaux. Aujourd'hui, pourtant, les événements montrent que les peuples africains sont décidés à tout sacrifier pour gagner la liberté. Ils s'éveillent, prennent conscience de leur force, brisent les chaînes de l'esclavage et chassent les envahisseurs. Aujourd'hui, l'Afrique nouvelle prend naissance dans une lutte terrible, d'une immense portée historique. Les peuples "arriérés" se dressent contre ceux qui se prétendent civilisateurs; les uns luttent pour la liberté et la dignité de l'homme; les autres s'efforcent de leur barrer la route de la liberté. Mais aucun canon ne peut résister à la volonté des peuples.

8. L'ONU doit apporter immédiatement sa contribution à la grande cause de la libération des peuples coloniaux. Elle doit reconnaître que les possessions espagnoles et portugaises sont des colonies, soumises comme telles aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Elle doit adopter le projet de déclaration d'indépendance (A/4502 et Corr.1) dont la mise en œuvre marquera la fin de la domination coloniale et apportera la liberté à tous les peuples opprimés.

9. M. EILAN (Israël) estime que le rapport du Comité spécial est si important qu'il faudra certainement en tenir compte chaque fois qu'il sera question du statut colonial. Mais il présente aussi une importance historique immédiate, car il montre la responsabilité de la Commission dans ce domaine.

10. En votant en faveur de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, établissant le Comité spécial, la délégation israélienne avait deux motifs principaux. Elle se rendait compte de l'intérêt pratique des principes quand il s'agirait de déterminer si un territoire est parvenu à l'indépendance. Elle avait, d'autre part, le désir que tout soit fait pour accélérer le processus d'émancipation nationale, notamment en Afrique. Le Ministre des affaires étrangères d'Israël a fait valoir, au cours de la discussion générale à l'Assemblée (897ème séance plénière), que rien n'est aussi avilissant que la dépendance nationale et l'inégalité et rien n'est aussi enthousiasmant que l'indépendance nationale et l'égalité; aucune nation n'a reçu pour mission d'en dominer d'autres; aucune n'a été vouée à être dominée.

11. Le rapport du Comité spécial cherche à interpréter certaines dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte à la lumière de l'évolution actuelle. Il faut, s'il est adopté, qu'il fasse autorité en ce qui concerne les obligations des Etats Membres à l'égard des territoires dont ils sont responsables. Heureux de l'unanimité du Comité spécial, M. Eilan souligne que le rapport lie à juste titre la réalisation des aspirations légitimes des peuples dépendants et le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales; la coexistence en Afrique de territoires non autonomes et d'Etats libres et indépendants pourrait en effet provoquer une tension internationale.

12. D'autre part, le Comité spécial s'en est strictement tenu à son mandat. Malgré la diversité des territoires de "type colonial", il affirme dans le principe premier que tout Membre administrant a l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements et, dans le principe III, qu'il doit s'acquitter de cette obligation en tenant dûment compte de la loi internationale. Les principes IV et V définissent les territoires auxquels s'applique cette obligation. En supposant qu'un territoire peut atteindre la pleine autonomie soit par la libre association à un Etat indépendant, soit par l'intégration à un Etat indépendant, le Comité s'est laissé guider, de toute évidence, par certains cas précis, que la Commission connaît, et aussi par un problème qui se pose à elle à la présente session et qui concerne l'application pratique des principes.

13. Les représentants du Ghana, du Libéria et du Venezuela, entre autres, ont attiré l'attention de la Commission sur le cas particulier des possessions portugaises d'Afrique. Bien qu'il n'en soit pas fait mention dans le rapport, il n'est pas douteux qu'il s'agit d'éprouver les arguments du Gouvernement portugais, qui affirme que ces possessions ne sont pas des colonies, mais font partie intégrante du territoire métropolitain. Ces arguments se fondent sur l'amendement constitutionnel du 11 juin 1951, qui a transformé les territoires d'outre-mer en provinces d'outre-mer. Mais il faut tenir compte de la réalité politique actuelle: si l'on doit appliquer au Mozambique et à l'Angola les principes énoncés dans le rapport, on est obligé de conclure que le principe IV fait à priori obligation au Portugal de communiquer des renseignements sur ces deux territoires; de même, on est obligé de constater que l'intégration survenue en 1951 n'a pas satisfait aux conditions énoncées au principe IX et que la population des deux territoires n'a pas, comme le stipule le principe VIII, "un statut et des droits de citoyenneté égaux ainsi que des garanties égales". L'Angola et le Mozambique peuvent donc être considérés comme des territoires "de type colonial" aux termes du principe premier.

14. Il s'agit de savoir si le Portugal a ou non l'obligation — juridique ou morale — de communiquer des renseignements sur le progrès social, économique et scolaire de ces territoires. La situation actuelle est dangereuse, car, comme l'a noté le Comité spécial, les obligations assumées par les Etats Membres au titre du Chapitre XI ne se limitent pas à l'Article 73, et le principe du bon voisinage, mentionné à l'Article 74, renforce l'obligation de donner des renseignements. La délégation israélienne exprime donc l'espoir sincère que le Portugal consentira à s'acquiescer entièrement de ses obligations et de ses responsabilités comme l'ont fait, de leur propre chef, d'autres puissances occidentales aussi anciennes et aussi fameuses.

15. M. SALL (Sénégal) déclare que les obligations faites par la Charte aux Membres administrants résultent de la volonté inébranlable de la communauté internationale de conduire à l'autonomie ou à l'indépendance les peuples colonisés. Depuis 1946, plus de 100 millions d'habitants, dans près de 30 territoires non autonomes, ont atteint les objectifs du Chapitre XI; la volonté de décolonisation des 50 Membres fondateurs est donc devenue celle de près de 99 Etats. La Commission peut désormais interpréter plus facilement l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 dans le sens des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes, puisque beaucoup de ses membres ont fait l'expérience de la colonisation et savent que l'indépendance n'est plus une faveur de la puissance administrante, mais une obligation internationale née de la révolution politique des territoires. L'ONU a le devoir impérieux de bannir le système de domination politique, d'exploitation économique et d'humiliation de la personne humaine que représente le régime colonial. C'est pourquoi la délégation sénégalaise est en faveur des principes clairs et logiques énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, car ils pourront permettre de donner à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 une interprétation conforme à l'esprit et à la lettre de la Charte et aux enseignements de l'évolution politique des territoires non autonomes.

16. Le principe IV suffirait à prouver que les possessions du Portugal et de l'Espagne, particulièrement celles d'Afrique, sont des territoires non autonomes et qu'en ne donnant pas de renseignements sur ces territoires, ces deux Etats violent la Charte. La délégation sénégalaise demande solennellement à ces deux puissances d'abandonner leur attitude négative et d'aider les populations placées sous leur domination à progresser sur la voie de l'autonomie et de l'indépendance, dans l'ordre et la paix. Persuadées qu'elles possèdent une civilisation et une culture aussi valables que celles dont se réclament l'Espagne et le Portugal, ces populations obtiendront en effet inéluctablement l'indépendance qu'elles désirent, car le Portugal et l'Espagne ne pourront pas résister à la force extraordinaire du nationalisme africain. M. Sall peut confirmer la rigoureuse exactitude des renseignements fournis par le représentant de l'Irak à la séance précédente, car des réfugiés arrivent chaque jour au Sénégal de la Guinée portugaise et des îles du Cap-

Vert. Radio-Dakar a d'ailleurs organisé à leur intention des émissions spéciales en portugais. L'humiliant régime de servitude que subissent les habitants des possessions portugaises et espagnoles est une raison de plus de veiller à l'application de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 à ces territoires. La fiction avancée par le Portugal ne trompe personne. Comment un habitant de la Guinée portugaise pourrait-il s'identifier à un Portugais, dont le séparent la race, la langue, la culture, la religion et la philosophie? Toute la domination portugaise est fondée sur le principe de la supériorité du Portugais sur l'autochtone. En réalité, la métropole gouverne les prétendues provinces d'outre-mer sans tenir compte de la volonté de leurs habitants, qu'elle considère injustement comme Portugais, puisqu'elle ne les a jamais consultés sur l'opportunité d'intégrer leurs territoires au sien. Les explications du représentant du Portugal n'ont pas convaincu la délégation sénégalaise. Elle votera pour les principes du Comité spécial des Six et pour leur application aux possessions de l'Espagne et du Portugal.

17. M. DE SOUZA-BRAGA (Brésil) déclare que, lors des sessions antérieures de l'Assemblée, la délégation brésilienne n'a examiné que l'aspect juridique de l'interprétation à donner au Chapitre XI et en particulier à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. C'est qu'en raison de son histoire, et notamment parce que c'est l'arbitrage qui a défini ses frontières, la nation brésilienne croit à la loi et se méfie profondément des exégèses. Elle s'est donc toujours fait un devoir d'aborder avec prudence tous les problèmes juridiques internationaux au cours de la phase de la recherche des sources, celle qu'un célèbre juriste a appelée "une construction de droit". Quand la Commission aura approuvé le rapport dont elle est saisie, la délégation brésilienne se fera également un devoir de respecter cette décision. Il s'agira alors d'une "constatation de droit" et de la défense du texte juridique.

18. Certains trouvent peut-être la délégation brésilienne trop fidèle à ses amis. Mais les Africains sont aussi de ses amis — le Brésil n'est-il pas le pays d'Amérique le plus proche de l'Afrique? — et d'autre part le parti pris ne naît pas ordinairement de l'amitié, mais de la haine. Celui qui déplore un désaccord entre deux amis est souvent celui qui écoute la voix de la sagesse et ne songe qu'à apporter son aide.

19. La délégation brésilienne approuve les principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six et appuiera ce rapport. Elle espère que l'interprétation qui suivra sera irréprochable. C'est à l'ONU qu'il appartiendra de prononcer sans passion le jugement moral définitif. La délégation brésilienne juge techniquement prématuré de donner son avis sur les diverses thèses avancées au sujet de l'application des principes. Elle souhaite seulement que les projets de résolution dont la Commission sera saisie — et sur lesquels le Brésil réserve sa position — servent réellement à améliorer le sort des territoires non autonomes, et que la décision soit juste et humaine.

20. M. ABIKUSNO (Indonésie) a déjà souligné, à la quatorzième session, qu'en raison des différentes interprétations données à l'Article 73 et des récents événements d'Afrique, il était devenu urgent de rechercher les critères qui permettraient de décider si un territoire est ou non un territoire non autonome. Les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des

Six sont donc très utiles. Ils semblent confirmer la nature réelle des liens qui existent entre les puissances administrantes et leurs dépendances. Puisqu'ils sont issus de l'accord entre trois puissances coloniales et trois puissances non administrantes, ils devraient constituer un pas en avant vers la solution du conflit qui a opposé ces deux groupes d'Etats Membres. En effet, les puissances administrantes ne semblent plus mettre en doute leur obligation de rendre compte à l'ONU de la politique qu'elles suivent dans les territoires non autonomes. Certaines réserves regrettables permettent cependant de se demander si l'on a réellement réussi à convaincre les puissances administrantes que leur position passée était insoutenable. Seule l'application des principes permettra de juger des progrès réels.

21. Le principe premier montre que la pensée coloniale a considérablement évolué. Il fait en effet ressortir le caractère multilatéral du Chapitre XI, surtout quand on relie ce principe au principe III. Il montre que c'est l'ONU qui doit décider si des territoires de type colonial existent encore et s'il y a lieu de donner des renseignements sur la situation de ces territoires. La délégation indonésienne a d'ailleurs toujours interprété de la sorte le Chapitre XI.

22. Malgré cela, la Commission risque de se retrouver devant les mêmes difficultés qu'auparavant. Le principe X admet en effet que l'autorité de l'ONU est limitée par des considérations constitutionnelles et des considérations de sécurité que les puissances coloniales définiront unilatéralement. Ce principe est donc en contradiction avec le principe III. Alors que le principe III déclare que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements doit être conforme à la loi internationale, selon le principe X les éléments mêmes de cette loi, tels que l'évolution politique et constitutionnelle, qui ont des répercussions sur la future conduite des territoires dépendants envers l'étranger demeureront de la seule compétence des puissances coloniales. La Quatrième Commission a reconnu au contraire dans de nombreuses résolutions que les progrès accomplis sur les divers plans sont liés. En outre, l'évolution même des territoires non autonomes devenus aujourd'hui indépendants montre combien il est souhaitable que l'ONU soit tenue au courant de l'évolution politique et constitutionnelle des territoires. C'est à elle qu'il devrait incomber de décider dans quel cas il faudra tenir compte des considérations constitutionnelles et des considérations de sécurité. Sinon, à un stade donné de l'évolution des territoires, l'ONU risquerait de se trouver privée de tout renseignement. La délégation indonésienne espère que les principes définis par le Comité spécial des Six contribueront à l'accession pacifique des territoires non autonomes à l'indépendance. Elle a tenu néanmoins à souligner les difficultés auxquelles leur application risque de donner lieu, d'autant plus que ce sont des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel que le Portugal et l'Espagne ont avancées pour maintenir leur attitude intransigeante.

23. M. KABBANI (Arabie Saoudite) rappelle que la Commission a pendant des années consacré de longs débats, où certains opposaient des arguties juridiques aux réalités géographiques et historiques, à l'obligation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, avant que l'Assemblée générale décide de créer, par la résolution 1467 (XIV), le Comité spécial des Six. M. Kabbani félicite ce comité du travail accompli et approuve sans réserve les 12 principes énoncés dans son rapport (A/4526).

24. Les principes I, IV, VII, VIII et IX, ces deux derniers principes étant du reste complémentaires et n'en constituant qu'un seul pour la délégation saoudienne, sont en contradiction avec la thèse de certaines puissances administrantes. Mais il ne suffit pas d'appeler des territoires "provinces d'outre-mer" pour se soustraire à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements. A cet égard, M. Kabbani s'associe aux observations du représentant de Ceylan (1035^e séance) et de celui du Venezuela (1032^e séance).

25. Les 12 principes énoncés ne se suffisant toutefois pas à eux-mêmes, ils ne prendront toute leur signification que si la Commission veille à les faire appliquer de façon concrète, en définissant clairement et en énumérant les territoires non autonomes sur lesquels les Membres administrants seront tenus de communiquer des renseignements. La délégation saoudienne serait disposée à figurer parmi les auteurs d'un projet de résolution dont tel serait le but.

26. M. MAGHERU (Roumanie) fait observer que le Comité spécial des Six, en définissant ce qu'il faut entendre par "pleine autonomie", établit les critères d'application du Chapitre XI et rend ainsi un précieux service à l'Assemblée générale, mais il ne fait que préciser certaines résolutions déjà adoptées sur cette question de principe. Ce travail était indispensable puisque, depuis 1955, malgré les efforts de la majorité des délégations représentées à la Quatrième Commission, l'Espagne et le Portugal refusent de s'acquitter des obligations qui découlent du Chapitre XI. Les normes établies par le Comité spécial des Six confirment que des territoires comme l'Angola, le Mozambique, la Guinée portugaise et le Sahara espagnol ne s'administrent pas encore eux-mêmes et ne satisfont pas aux conditions énoncées aux principes VI et suivants du rapport du Comité spécial; l'Espagne et le Portugal administrent donc des territoires coloniaux; ils sont donc tenus de se soumettre aux dispositions du Chapitre XI.

27. Que ces deux Etats persistent à nier ces obligations devient d'autant plus grave que le mouvement de libération nationale des pays coloniaux, tout particulièrement des pays d'Afrique, prend une force sans précédent, et qu'à l'ordre du jour de l'Assemblée générale figure l'étude du projet de déclaration d'indépendance. Or les mesures prises dans les colonies portugaises, par exemple, ne vont pas dans le sens de l'indépendance, mais visent à réprimer les aspirations à l'indépendance; on a pu faire état, devant la Chambre des représentants des Etats-Unis, de faits alarmants: déportation et exécution des chefs du mouvement de libération nationale, encouragements officiels à la colonisation en Angola et au Mozambique, exploitation des travailleurs autochtones, châtiments corporels, et discrimination raciale légalement admise. La délégation roumaine est persuadée que la population des territoires portugais et espagnols a droit à l'indépendance au même titre que tout autre peuple soumis à l'administration coloniale, et toute décision que l'Assemblée générale prendra pour proclamer l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux sera applicable à ces territoires.

28. M. ZIKRIA (Afghanistan) déclare que la Charte est un ensemble de règles sagement coordonnées, qui doivent faciliter l'évolution de la communauté internationale, dans la paix et la sécurité, vers un monde prospère et libre. C'est donc un document vivant, dont tous les chapitres se tiennent et ne sauraient être divisés arbitrairement en entités totalement distinctes. Défendant cette conception réaliste et dynamique, la délégation afghane a toujours souhaité que le Chapitre XI soit interprété conformément au bien-être de tous les peuples soumis à la domination des puissances administrantes, et non dans l'intérêt particulier de celles-ci. Elle a aussi soutenu que l'Assemblée générale elle-même est compétente pour décider des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 leur est applicable ou non. Elle a également voté en faveur de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale portant création du Comité spécial des Six.

29. Le rapport que présente ce comité spécial est d'une clarté et d'une précision dignes d'éloges. Les principes qui y sont énoncés énumèrent en effet tous les éléments qui permettent de conclure que tous les territoires connus comme étant de type colonial sont bien des territoires non autonomes au sens de la Charte. Ces principes marquent une étape décisive dans l'histoire de l'évolution des droits des peuples à disposer d'eux-mêmes et permettront de réfuter tous les arguments prétendument juridiques que certaines puissances coloniales désireuses de sauvegarder leurs intérêts particuliers n'ont pas hésité à alléguer contre l'opinion de la grande majorité des Etats Membres.

30. Cependant, la délégation afghane n'approuve pas intégralement tous les principes dans leur forme actuelle. Elle fait notamment des réserves sur l'alinéa b du principe IX, où la possibilité que l'ONU contrôle la procédure d'intégration d'un territoire non autonome à un Etat indépendant n'est considérée que comme une éventualité souhaitable dans certains cas. Elle ne saurait admettre en effet que les peuples auxquels s'appliquent les dispositions du Chapitre XI ne reçoivent pas le même traitement que les peuples sous tutelle et a toujours demandé un contrôle efficace de l'ONU dans les territoires non autonomes. Elle rejette catégoriquement l'idée de l'association sans contrôle d'un territoire colonial à un Etat indépendant ou de son intégration à cet Etat, car l'association et l'intégration se sont souvent faites contre la volonté des habitants, c'est-à-dire contrairement aux principes de l'autodétermination et aux dispositions du Chapitre XI.

31. La délégation afghane fait également des réserves à l'égard du principe II, qui ne mentionne comme objectif que la pleine autonomie des territoires et non leur indépendance, malgré la définition de la pleine autonomie énoncée au principe VI. La délégation afghane demande instamment que le terme "indépendance" figure dans toutes les parties de tous les documents qui traitent du sort des populations des territoires non autonomes.

32. Son approbation générale des principes formulés par le Comité spécial ne signifie pas qu'elle veuille prolonger l'existence du régime colonial. Les jours de ce régime sont comptés. Rien n'empêchera les peuples encore soumis de devenir indépendants. Les Membres administrants devraient exécuter consciencieusement les obligations que leur impose la Charte à l'égard des populations dépendantes, avant d'avoir à s'incliner devant un destin inéluctable.

33. M. DARMAN (Somalie) déclare que, si elle n'a pas participé au débat qui a présidé à la création du Comité spécial des Six, la Somalie, Etat africain, ne peut que prendre intérêt aux principes énoncés dans le rapport de ce comité, étant donné que le sort de tant d'Africains dépend de l'issue du débat de la Quatrième Commission. On a laissé entendre aux nouveaux Etats Membres que le point en discussion est délicat et qu'ils doivent l'aborder avec prudence, voire s'abstenir de participer aux débats. Et pourtant, c'est précisément parce qu'elle est un Etat africain indépendant depuis peu que la Somalie a le devoir de bien montrer ce que l'indépendance signifie pour elle, et il n'est pas de meilleur moyen d'y parvenir que d'appuyer un ensemble de principes ou de résolutions dont le but est de hâter l'évolution de tous les Africains et des peuples encore dépendants vers la pleine autonomie. Abdiquer cette responsabilité reviendrait pour la Somalie à perdre son droit à l'indépendance.

34. La délégation somalie appuie sans réserve les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial, parce qu'ils sont équitables et justes, et respectent à la fois l'esprit et la lettre du Chapitre XI de la Charte. En outre, ils reconnaissent la responsabilité collective des Etats Membres en ce qui concerne l'autodétermination des peuples dépendants. C'est en vertu de cette responsabilité collective que l'Assemblée générale a, par sa résolution 289 (IV), placé la Somalie italienne sous un régime de tutelle qui devait durer 10 ans, avec un tel succès que la Somalie est devenue indépendante cinq mois avant la date prévue.

35. Le représentant de la Somalie s'associe notamment aux observations des représentants du Ghana (1032ème séance), du Mexique (1031ème séance), de la Nigéria et de Ceylan (1035ème séance). Certains orateurs ont indiqué que le Mozambique, l'Angola et les Canaries étaient des territoires auxquels devraient s'appliquer les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial; la délégation somalie pense à d'autres territoires aussi, et se réserve le droit de demander une plus large application des principes. Elle estime que l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour fixer les principes qui doivent permettre aux Membres administrants de déterminer à propos de quels territoires il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements. La délégation somalie votera donc pour l'approbation du rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

36. M. AZNAR (Espagne), prenant la parole sur une question d'ordre, fait observer au représentant de la Somalie qu'aucun orateur n'a prétendu faire figurer les Canaries parmi les territoires auxquels seraient applicables les dispositions de l'Article 73.

37. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) demande si, conformément à la pratique établie, le Secrétariat a déjà écrit aux nouveaux Etats Membres pour leur demander s'ils administrent des territoires auxquels s'appliqueraient les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et si, dans l'affirmative, les nouveaux Etats Membres ont déjà fait parvenir leur réponse.

38. M. KUNST (Secrétaire de la Commission) déclare que le Secrétariat n'a pas encore eu le temps d'envoyer cette demande aux nouveaux Etats Membres.

39. M. DIALLO (Mali), représentant d'un nouvel Etat Membre, estime peu courtois de la part du représen-tant du Portugal de laisser entendre que les 16 Etats qui viennent d'entrer à l'Organisation pourraient avoir des colonies. Ces Etats, en majorité africains, peuvent en effet s'enorgueillir de n'avoir jamais fait preuve de racisme.

40. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) a fait simplement usage de son droit le plus strict, dit-il, en demandant au Secrétariat s'il a suivi une pratique établie.

41. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) fait observer que le représentant du Portugal n'a sans doute pas voulu manquer de courtoisie, mais a posé sa question de manière tendancieuse, de sorte que les Etats africains ont pu à juste titre se sentir blessés, et c'est en ce sens que le représentant de la Tunisie s'élève avec le représentant du Mali contre ce qui peut jeter la suspicion sur les nouveaux Etats africains. La question posée par le représentant du Portugal est conforme à la politique colonialiste de son gouvernement.

Déclarations des représentants du Mali et du Libéria

42. M. DIALLO (Mali) demande au Président de la Commission de se faire l'interprète du Mali pour exprimer ses condoléances à la famille de M. Félix-Roland Moumié qui vient de mourir empoisonné à Genève.

43. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) s'associe à cet hommage rendu à la mémoire de M. Moumié, et tient aussi à rendre hommage à la mémoire de M. John Kale, qui a également beaucoup lutté pour la libération de l'Afrique.

44. La représentante du Libéria annonce que le Gouvernement éthiopien et le Gouvernement libérien ont intenté devant la Cour internationale de Justice une action contre l'Union sud-africaine.

45. Le PRESIDENT prend acte des déclarations des représentants du Mali et du Libéria.

La séance est levée à 17 h 35.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne) se demande pourquoi le représentant du Portugal a jugé nécessaire de faire un si long exposé juridique devant la Commission à la 1036^{ème} séance, puisque, à ses yeux, la question en discussion n'intéressait pas directement son pays. Serait-ce que le Portugal a non seulement une mission civilisatrice en Afrique, mais aussi une mission éducatrice à l'ONU? Penserait-il être le seul véritable défenseur du droit international et de la Charte? Cette défense serait plus convaincante si elle était plus désintéressée. Les arguments présentés ne sont pas nouveaux. Ils ont déjà été rejetés par la plupart des Membres de l'ONU et par la majorité des théoriciens du droit international et des commentateurs de la Charte. Ils sont en outre en contradiction évidente avec toute la pratique suivie par l'Assemblée générale.

2. Le représentant du Portugal a cité à l'appui de sa thèse diverses opinions juridiques, dont celle de M. Vychinsky. Or ces opinions tendent toutes, au contraire, à prouver que l'ONU ne peut exister que si ses membres se conforment aux dispositions de la Charte et à prouver que cette dernière, loin d'avoir été conçue comme un moyen de prolonger l'ordre colonial, vise notamment à la libération de tous les peuples colonisés, par l'exercice du droit à l'autodétermination. Elles tendent également à prouver que l'Organisation a pour tâche d'appliquer les règles du droit international dans l'intérêt de la paix et du progrès. Ni l'Organisation ni le droit international ne sont des fins en soi, mais résultent de l'évolution sociale et historique du monde, et doivent permettre d'apporter des solutions convenables aux problèmes internationaux.

3. Le titre abstrait de la question inscrite à l'ordre du jour ne doit pas faire illusion. Il ne s'agit pas de s'attacher à des discussions théoriques ni d'augmenter une documentation déjà volumineuse, mais il s'agit de résoudre les problèmes pratiques que pose le refus de deux Etats de se conformer aux obligations de la Charte et de communiquer des renseignements sur des territoires d'outre-mer qui présentent toutes les caractéristiques de colonies. C'est sans enthousiasme que la délégation polonaise avait voté pour la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale qui créait le Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, car elle était convaincue que le problème aurait dû être résolu depuis longtemps et que les conclusions du Comité ne feraient que confirmer ses propres opinions. Est-il besoin, en effet, de prouver que la Charte est un traité international multilatéral dont tous les chapitres sont une source de droits et d'obligations pour tous les Etats Membres de l'Organisation, quelle que soit la date de leur admission? Faut-il encore prouver que toutes les dispositions de la Charte ont un caractère obligatoire quel que soit le titre du chapitre dont elles relèvent? Est-il encore possible de nier que les problèmes coloniaux préoccupent la communauté internationale et ont donc cessé d'être de la compétence exclusive des puissances administrantes? Aucun artifice d'interprétation ne peut faire oublier que les principes de la mission sacrée des puissances administrantes et de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires seront lettre morte si l'on juge la politique de ces puissances d'après l'idée qu'elles se font du bonheur des peuples colonisés et non d'après les véritables aspirations de ces peuples. Des réformes constitutionnelles unilatérales ne suffisent pas à modifier le caractère d'une politique dont les fondements restent les mêmes puisque toutes les informations dont on dispose confirment la situation tragique des habitants des territoires espagnols et portugais. Ce n'est pas par de tels procédés que les Gouvernements de l'Espagne et du Portugal feront de ces habitants des Espagnols et des Portugais. De toute manière, même si cette politique pouvait réussir, ce qui est fort douteux, elle serait condamnable, car nul n'a le droit de s'arroger le pouvoir d'imposer à un autre peuple sa religion, sa culture et son mode de vie. La politique d'assimilation est une escroquerie: elle ne vise jamais à l'égalité entre colonisateur et colonisé, mais au maintien de la domination de l'un sur l'autre.

4. La délégation polonaise ne juge pas nécessaire d'examiner en détail les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six (A/4526), car il ne s'agit plus désormais de rechercher si tel ou tel pays doit ou non communiquer des renseignements sur ses colonies, mais de se prononcer solennellement en faveur de la suppression du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et de la libération immédiate de tous les peuples colonisés, y compris ceux qui l'ont été par l'Espagne et le Portugal.

M. Ortiz de Rozas (Argentine), vice-président, prend la présidence.

5. M. CABA (Guinée) note qu'à partir des facteurs approuvés par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 742 (VIII), le Comité spécial des Six a établi 12 principes qui arrêtent définitivement l'interprétation juridique qu'il faut donner à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte et qui s'appliquent à certains pays d'Afrique encore soumis à la domination portugaise, espagnole ou britannique.

6. Ceux qui continuent à défendre l'idée de l'intégration ou de l'assimilation de prétendues provinces d'outre-mer se heurteront au critère de la séparation géographique, qui figure au principe IV énoncé par le Comité spécial. Dans ces territoires, tous les pouvoirs, législatif, exécutif et judiciaire, sont détenus par la métropole. Devant l'essor d'un nationalisme africain irrésistible, certaines puissances ont voulu attribuer à leurs colonies le statut fictif de provinces d'outre-mer en leur octroyant unilatéralement des constitutions qui ne peuvent cependant engager les populations intéressées. Un référendum qui serait organisé sur la question de l'association, de l'assimilation ou de l'intégration, en Angola, au Mozambique, en Guinée portugaise, aux îles du Cap-Vert, au Rio de Oro, en Guinée espagnole, prouverait que, géographiquement, politiquement, économiquement, ces populations n'ont rien de commun avec le Portugal ou l'Espagne. A ce propos, M. Caba renvoie les membres de la Commission au principe VII du Comité spécial des Six.

7. La situation économique et sociale dans les territoires sous domination portugaise, espagnole et britannique est caractérisée par un sous-développement particulièrement accentué. Au fur et à mesure que s'accroît le progrès technique et industriel des métropoles, le déséquilibre économique s'aggrave dans leurs colonies. Sur ce point, M. Caba précise qu'en Angola, par exemple, les quatre cinquièmes des plantations de café appartiennent aux colons et que l'administration coloniale fixe à des niveaux très bas les prix des produits de l'agriculture indigène, supprime le commerce d'échange, n'apporte aucune assistance technique effective, expulse systématiquement les Africains des terres les plus fertiles, confisque les outils agricoles sous prétexte que les cultivateurs ne s'acquittent pas de l'impôt. La sous-alimentation est grave. Dans la plupart des territoires, on compte moins d'un médecin par 100.000 habitants. D'après les renseignements communiqués par l'OMS, par exemple, la mortalité infantile parmi les Angolais dépasse 40 pour 100. Dans l'île Saint-Thomas, le taux de mortalité est le plus élevé du monde. Les populations sont délibérément maintenues dans l'ignorance. On leur impose des langues étrangères de façon à entraver le développement des langues nationales, l'épanouissement des arts autochtones, la formation d'une conscience nationale. Le Gouvernement portugais donne aussi l'exemple le plus frappant d'une discrimination raciale érigée en loi constitutionnelle en distinguant en Angola cinq catégories d'habitants:

les Portugais nés au Portugal, les Portugais nés en Angola ou ailleurs en Afrique, les mulâtres, les noirs assimilés qui constituent une infime minorité, et les autres noirs, c'est-à-dire l'immense majorité. Ces conditions d'existence ainsi définies, M. Caba demande au représentant du Portugal combien d'Angolais siègent sur un pied d'égalité avec les Portugais au Parlement métropolitain, alors que dans les colonies portugaises seuls les citoyens portugais ont le droit de vote.

8. M. Caba signale en outre que, devant les revendications nationalistes des mouvements clandestins, le Gouvernement portugais a mobilisé tout un appareil militaire et répressif dans ses colonies et, à titre d'action préventive, multiplie les patrouilles, renforce l'installation de forces aériennes, fortifie les postes frontaliers importants et doit porter prochainement l'effectif des troupes portugaises en Angola à 60.000 hommes.

9. Les Africains continuent à lutter pour leur indépendance et les autorités portugaises prennent des mesures de répression souvent sanglantes, comme elles l'ont fait en février 1953 où des milliers d'Africains ont été massacrés, ou bien en août 1959 où une trentaine de personnes ont été tuées en Guinée dite portugaise. Des mouvements politiques se sont cependant constitués, dont le plus connu est le Mouvement populaire de libération de l'Angola, auquel appartiennent la plupart des 57 inculpés du procès de Luanda. Dans tous les pays sous domination portugaise, les patriotes réclament avec de plus en plus de force la reconnaissance immédiate du droit des peuples à l'indépendance nationale, l'amnistie totale et inconditionnelle ainsi que la libération immédiate de tous les prisonniers politiques, l'établissement des libertés publiques et de garanties de leur exercice, le retrait immédiat des forces armées portugaises et la liquidation des bases militaires existant sur les territoires, et enfin la convocation, d'ici à la fin de 1960, d'une conférence de la "table ronde" où seraient représentés tous les partis politiques des différents pays et le Gouvernement portugais, en vue de la recherche d'une solution pacifique du problème colonial dans les prétendues provinces d'outre-mer, et cela dans l'intérêt de toutes les parties en présence, et surtout dans l'intérêt du Gouvernement portugais.

10. Pour la délégation guinéenne, il ne fait donc aucun doute que les territoires administrés par le Portugal, l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni subissent une domination étrangère et que le principe V énoncé par le Comité spécial des Six s'applique à ces territoires. M. Caba constate que, malgré les faits, le Gouvernement espagnol, le Gouvernement français et le Gouvernement portugais ont, comme il sied à des puissances coloniales, exprimé des vues identiques sur l'obligation de communiquer les renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte et se déclarent seuls compétents pour tout ce qui touche à des territoires qui sont sous leur entière souveraineté. Ces trois puissances admettent que la Charte a pour souci principal le bien-être et le progrès des peuples, mais elles estiment que le statut juridique et politique d'un territoire n'entre en ligne de compte que dans la mesure où la situation de sa population est en cause. Ainsi, des faits patents comme le travail forcé, le trafic officiel de plus de 400.000 Africains envoyés chaque année dans les mines de Rhodésie et d'Afrique du Sud, le massacre de plus de 1.000 noirs dans l'île Saint-Thomas en février 1953, le douloureux drame algérien, le taux effrayant de la mortalité infantile dans les îles du Cap-Vert ne mettraient donc pas en cause la situation des populations intéressées.

11. M. MAX (France), prenant la parole sur une question d'ordre, rappelle que la Commission ne discute pas de la question de l'Algérie.

12. M. ALWAN (Irak) fait observer que le représentant de la Guinée a mentionné l'Algérie au cours d'observations d'ordre général sur le colonialisme, ce qui ne lui semble pas devoir donner lieu à un rappel à l'ordre.

13. Le PRESIDENT rappelle que les orateurs doivent limiter leurs observations à la question inscrite à l'ordre du jour, mais que le représentant de la Guinée n'a en effet pas invoqué l'Algérie à propos du fond de la discussion.

14. M. MAX (France), prenant la parole sur une question d'ordre, réitère son observation.

15. M. CABA (Guinée), poursuivant sa déclaration, constate que les puissances coloniales invoquent souvent les clauses restrictives qui figurent à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, en oubliant que ces clauses ne peuvent porter que sur le volume des renseignements sur les questions sociales, économiques et de l'enseignement qui doivent être communiquées et que l'obligation de communiquer ces renseignements subsiste. De même subsiste l'obligation qui incombe aux Membres administrants d'aider les populations dans leur évolution progressive vers l'autonomie.

16. Le représentant de la Guinée estime que la Quatrième Commission et l'Assemblée générale doivent adopter sans équivoque les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six, qui permettront d'établir que: premièrement, le Rio de Oro, le territoire d'Ifni, la Guinée espagnole, l'île de Fernando Poo et le Rio Muni sont des territoires non autonomes sous domination espagnole; deuxièmement, la Guinée dite portugaise, l'Angola, le Mozambique, l'archipel du Cap-Vert, l'enclave de Cabinda, les îles Saint-Thomas et du Prince, Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Ouidah, Goa et dépendances, Macao et dépendances, Timor et dépendances sont des territoires non autonomes sous domination portugaise; troisièmement, la Rhodésie du Sud, le Betchouanaland, le Bassoutoland, le Souaziland et l'île de Zanzibar sont des territoires non autonomes sous domination du Royaume-Uni. Le Portugal, l'Espagne, le Royaume-Uni, qui seraient donc tenus de communiquer des renseignements sur ces territoires, soutiennent que l'Assemblée générale n'est pas compétente pour exiger des Etats Membres qu'ils commencent à communiquer des renseignements; l'Assemblée générale a pourtant déclaré au dernier alinéa du préambule des résolutions 748 (VIII) et 849 (IX) qu'elle était compétente "pour décider si un territoire non autonome a atteint ou non l'autonomie complète visée au Chapitre XI de la Charte". L'Assemblée générale est donc de ce fait également compétente pour décider du moment où des Membres administrants devraient commencer à communiquer les renseignements en question. M. Caba rappelle également que l'Assemblée générale avait décidé de ne pas exiger la majorité des deux tiers pour les votes sur des questions portant sur les renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes et peut donc prendre une décision à la majorité simple des Etats Membres pour inviter le Portugal, l'Espagne et le Royaume-Uni à s'acquitter des obligations qui découlent de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

17. Le représentant de la Guinée souligne que cette décision est d'autant plus urgente que les peuples des pays colonisés sont plus que jamais résolus à briser le joug colonial et que seules doivent compter désormais la volonté des peuples intéressés et leurs aspirations légitimes à l'indépendance nationale. Le Portugal, l'Espagne, le Royaume-Uni et la France ne pourront de toute manière pas faire échec aux mouvements de libération nationale et, en ce sens, l'examen du rapport du Comité spécial des Six est déjà dépassé par les événements, puisque l'Assemblée générale est saisie d'un projet de déclaration réclamant l'indépendance des peuples des territoires coloniaux (A/4502 et Corr.1). Les puissances coloniales auraient grand intérêt à abandonner leurs positions coloniales en Afrique avant qu'il ne soit trop tard.

M. Pachachi (Irak) reprend la présidence.

18. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) se réserve le droit de répondre au représentant de la Guinée lorsqu'il aura pu étudier le texte de sa déclaration, mais il lui demande de préciser le numéro et la date de la loi portugaise qui, d'après lui, aurait créé en Angola cinq catégories d'habitants.

19. M. CABA (Guinée) assure au représentant du Portugal qu'il a étayé sa déclaration sur des archives, des documents officiels, des statistiques, qu'il tient à sa disposition. Il ajoute que l'institution de cinq catégories d'habitants en Angola n'est qu'une mesure discriminatoire parmi beaucoup d'autres.

20. M. AZNAR (Espagne) considère que le présent débat aurait dû lui offrir une occasion de prouver la ferme résolution de la délégation espagnole de prendre part aux travaux de l'ONU et de collaborer à la tâche commune prévue dans la Charte. Deux raisons ont dû le contraindre à changer de plan et à ne pas prononcer les paroles qu'il aurait voulu prononcer. D'une part, le représentant du Portugal a analysé en détail à la 1036ème séance, dans un discours remarquable, la portée et la signification de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, et il serait difficile de rivaliser avec son argumentation; il est regrettable cependant que les passions politiques qui dominent la discussion empêchent la Commission de se livrer à une étude approfondie du problème juridique exposé par le représentant du Portugal. D'autre part, l'attitude intransigeante de ceux qui se refusent à examiner le fond du problème pour n'en voir que les aspects superficiels peut entraîner de graves conséquences pour la coexistence, au sein de l'ONU, de délégations d'opinions divergentes et porter la guerre froide dans le cadre de la Commission elle-même. Derrière le paravent des citations, des chiffres et des statistiques, on se trouve en présence de ce qui n'est pas autre chose qu'une campagne politique acharnée et furieuse, là où l'on ne devrait trouver qu'équilibre et sérénité.

21. La Commission est saisie du rapport du Comité spécial des Six dont l'étude est, semble-t-il, inscrite à son ordre du jour. Dans une section capitale de ce rapport sont énoncés les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, leur est applicable ou non. La délégation espagnole, après avoir étudié avec soin le rapport et les principes, pensait en toute bonne foi que les membres de la Commission, faisant abstraction de leur position politique, examineraient ce code de conduite, cette brève charte fondamentale des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Or, jusqu'au stade actuel de la discussion, la Commission s'est divisée en trois groupes: d'un côté, les délégations qui estiment utile d'examiner les principes sans discuter encore de leurs applications pratiques; d'un autre côté, les délégations qui se sont bornées à ne vouloir examiner que l'application pratique des principes; enfin, les délégations qui maintiennent qu'il est vain d'engager un débat dont le résultat est connu d'avance. Pour ces dernières délégations, tout argument nouveau, toute déclaration nouvelle des représentants de l'Espagne ou du Portugal sont rejetés à l'avance sous prétexte que la Commission n'a pas à perdre son temps en arguties juridiques.

22. Mais, hormis quelques délégations, la Commission s'est-elle posé sérieusement la question de savoir si les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial sont conformes à la raison, s'ils répondent aux réalités historiques et juridiques du problème, s'ils correspondent aux principes fondamentaux du droit international? A-t-elle élucidé suffisamment la question de savoir si ces principes servent vraiment les principes inscrits dans la Charte? Absolument pas. Sans doute le représentant du Salvador, en proposant la clôture du débat à la 1033ème séance, a-t-il voulu seulement attirer l'attention de la Commission sur la nécessité de faire porter la discussion sur les principes énoncés; sans doute le représentant de la Bolivie a-t-il soulevé à la même séance des problèmes d'interprétation de droit constitutionnel; sans doute, dans sa déclaration à la 1035ème séance, le représentant de la Tchécoslovaquie a-t-il abordé la question de la façon souhaitée par la délégation espagnole et n'a-t-il cité d'exemples précis qu'en se préoccupant du fond du problème. Certes, en présentant le rapport du Comité spécial (1031ème séance), les représentants du Mexique et de l'Inde ont fait preuve, comme à l'accoutumée, d'un esprit élevé. Il n'en reste pas moins que le rapport du Comité spécial et la série des 12 principes ont été loués en termes très généraux, comme par courtoisie.

23. La délégation espagnole, pour sa part, tient à féliciter le Comité spécial dont divers membres ont dû renoncer à certaines idées et abandonner certaines convictions personnelles profondes; mais ce sacrifice a amené le Comité à s'abriter derrière toute une série d'expressions très vagues réparties dans un cadre imprécis et sujettes aux interprétations les plus diverses. Lorsque le représentant de la Bolivie a fait état des polémiques sur le concept de "nation", mentionné au paragraphe 17 du rapport, on lui a répliqué que c'était là un thème de divertissement rhétorique; de même, quand le Comité spécial déclare au paragraphe 18 de son rapport que "la Charte est un document vivant et l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits", on peut se demander à qui s'adresse cette découverte et s'il faut en conclure que la Commission peut modifier la Charte justement pour la rendre conforme à la "réalité politique". Quand on sait à quel point la constitution d'un pays est protégée contre toute violation, comment des modifications éventuelles sont prévues par une procédure soigneusement réglée, on ne peut que se demander ce qu'il adviendrait si un groupe majoritaire pouvait, sans obstacle, l'interpréter dans un sens favorable à ses intérêts. Qui, d'autre part, va définir "l'évolution actuelle des esprits"? En vérité, quand le Comité spécial estime, au paragraphe 20 de son rapport, que les principes doivent s'appliquer "à la lumière des faits et des circonstances particulières à chaque cas individuel", il ouvre la porte à toutes les interprétations possibles. Son rapport n'est donc, de toute évidence, que l'expression d'un idéal très élevé, mais très difficile à réaliser.

24. La Charte est catégorique. Si l'on admet que son texte est mal adapté à la pensée de ses auteurs, il faut alors l'amender et une procédure est prévue à cette fin; cette révision de la Charte est peut-être souhaitable, mais il ne peut être question d'en modifier l'esprit. Or le Comité spécial a jugé, au principe IV, qu'à priori, il y a une obligation de communiquer des renseignements à l'égard d'un territoire qui est séparé géographiquement et distinct au point de vue ethnique et au point de vue culturel du pays qui l'administre. Sur quoi repose donc ce critère de la séparation géographique? Pourquoi a-t-il été introduit dans ce principe? Quelle largeur doit avoir cette séparation: s'agit-il d'un canal ou d'un océan? On voit à quels dangers peut conduire une interprétation trop abusive de ce principe. Cependant, le Comité spécial a encore jugé bon d'ajouter aux distinctions géographiques, ethniques et culturelles d'autres éléments de nature "administrative, politique, juridique, économique et historique" (principe V). Qui donc va définir les divers éléments énoncés dans ces deux principes: la Commission, le Comité spécial, un tribunal, un organe suprême? Il y aurait tout lieu de craindre, si l'on devait prendre ces divers critères en considération, pour l'indépendance, la liberté et la souveraineté des Etats.

25. Une majorité d'Etats Membres pourra bien approuver les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial, pourtant, la Commission n'aura pas examiné le fond du problème, sans doute parce qu'une fois l'élément politique écarté, il ne subsiste du document que l'effort fait par les rédacteurs pour définir sur le papier une situation très délicate.

26. Peut-être convient-il de remercier de leur franchise les délégations qui estiment que la Commission perd son temps; si l'on ne désirait pas en effet ouvrir un long débat juridique sur les principes contenus dans le rapport, pourquoi avoir même posé la question de ces principes et avoir laissé la discussion se transformer très rapidement en une série d'attaques concrètes contre deux pays? La Commission n'a pas suivi les règles d'une véritable discussion sur des principes universels, applicables à tous les Etats Membres. En tenant l'Espagne pour un monstre nourri de la chair et du sang des peuples africains, et ses adversaires pour un groupe d'archanges défendant la liberté du monde, on en est arrivé, par une discrimination inqualifiable, à accuser et à condamner un pays en vertu d'une loi encore inexistante. Quand l'échelle des valeurs est renversée de cette manière, il n'y a plus qu'à espérer que les forces morales et spirituelles rétablissent la justice bafouée et réparent le mal.

27. En fait, de nombreuses délégations ont oublié la position de la délégation espagnole quant à l'interprétation du Chapitre XI de la Charte, ou n'ont pas encore eu le temps d'en prendre connaissance. M. Aznar s'estime donc obligé de répéter ce qu'il a dit à la session précédente, à savoir que l'Espagne ne sait pas ce qu'est un territoire non autonome et n'entend pas qu'on lui impose d'envoyer des renseignements sur des territoires prétendus tels qu'elle administrerait, mais qu'étant donné sa volonté de collaborer avec l'ONU elle est prête à communiquer, le moment venu, des renseignements sur ses provinces d'outre-mer, à la sélection desquels M. Aznar lui-même a collaboré. Certains ont jugé cette attitude discutable; du moins peut-on difficilement prétendre que le Gouvernement espagnol ne répond que par des refus. L'Espagne a toujours condamné et condamne toujours comme un phénomène anachronique le colonialisme et l'exploitation de tous les peuples. Il n'existe, dans les territoires sous sa juridiction, aucun problème qui ne puisse être résolu par des négociations bilatérales avec les pays qui estiment avoir droit à une réclamation. Le Gouvernement espagnol fonde son attitude sur l'honneur et la justice, et ne demande que la réciprocité.

28. M. Aznar se réserve le droit d'intervenir ultérieurement sur la question de l'application des principes contenus dans le rapport du Comité spécial.

29. M. GASSOU (Togo) note avec satisfaction que l'Espagne se considère comme un pays anticolonialiste et il espère qu'elle saura traduire, le moment venu, ses déclarations en actes.

30. La question à l'ordre du jour peut sembler juridique. Elle est en fait essentiellement politique. S'il est si important de mettre en lumière les idées qui sont à la base de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 et de replacer cet article dans son contexte historique, c'est en effet que certains Etats Membres ont systématiquement refusé de fournir le moindre renseignement sur les territoires qu'ils dominent, en alléguant que ces territoires, malgré leur éloignement et leurs différences économiques, ethniques et culturelles, font partie intégrante de la métropole du simple fait que le parlement métropolitain en a décidé ainsi sans consulter les populations autochtones. En invoquant ces fictions juridiques et constitutionnelles, le Portugal et l'Espagne ne font d'ailleurs que reprendre les arguments déjà invoqués par d'autres Etats colonialistes; les diverses appellations que ces derniers ont successivement données à leurs empires n'ont cependant pas empêché ces empires de s'écrouler. Le simple changement de noms décidé en 1951 par le Portugal n'a trompé personne, pas même les Portugais; il devait uniquement permettre au Portugal de contester, après son admission à l'ONU, le droit qu'a l'Organisation d'être informée des conditions dans lesquelles il administre ses colonies. La raison en est claire. Il n'aurait sans doute pas eu le courage de reconnaître ouvertement que les habitants des terri-toires sont soumis aux travaux forcés, à l'esclavage et à la discrimination raciale.

31. Le sens véritable de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte est déterminé par le préambule de cet article, où les mots "pas encore" montrent la nécessité pour ces populations de s'administrer un jour complètement elles-mêmes, et par les alinéas a et b qui font obligation aux Membres administrants d'assurer le progrès économique et social des populations en respectant leur culture, et de développer leur capacité de s'administrer elles-mêmes et d'élaborer progressivement leurs libres institutions politiques. L'obligation de l'alinéa e ne cesse que lorsque les territoires s'administrent complètement eux-mêmes, c'est-à-dire lorsque le peuple, librement consulté, a désigné un parlement et un gouvernement ou s'est prononcé en faveur du rattachement à un autre pays indépendant.

32. Dans son excellent rapport, le Comité spécial des Six a codifié clairement et logiquement les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres dans l'interprétation de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. La délégation togolaise pense comme lui que la Charte est un document vivant et que l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits. Depuis la rédaction de la Charte, la composition de l'ONU et la carte politique du monde ont en effet beaucoup changé et les concessions faites en 1945 aux puissances coloniales ne seraient sans doute plus possibles. Le principe V est l'un des plus importants et sera très utile lorsqu'il s'agira de décider si les territoires portugais sont des colonies ou non. Les réserves exprimées par le Royaume-Uni au sujet du principe X (A/4526, par. 15) ne sont pas encourageantes si elles signifient que les renseignements à fournir peuvent être réduits à zéro, même si le territoire considéré est toujours de type colonial. Elles ne sont acceptables que si les exigences de l'alinéa a du principe VI sont respectées, c'est-à-dire si le territoire devient indépendant; sinon, il faut tenir compte aussi des conditions stipulées dans les principes VII, VIII et IX. Les "relations constitutionnelles" évoquées dans le principe XI ne doivent être prises en considération que si elles résultent de la libre expression de la volonté des populations, au moyen du suffrage universel des adultes, dans un scrutin contrôlé par l'ONU. Ce contrôle devrait d'ailleurs être de règle, afin de garantir l'impartialité de la consultation et d'éviter ce qu'il est convenu d'appeler des "élections à l'algérienne".

33. La délégation togolaise souscrit donc pleinement aux 12 principes du Comité spécial des Six, mais se réserve le droit d'intervenir à nouveau lorsqu'il s'agira d'appliquer ces principes au cas des territoires portugais et espagnols.

La séance est levée à 13 heures.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) rappelle qu'à la 1036^{ème} séance, le représentant du Portugal a cité des passages de la déclaration faite devant la Commission par le représentant des Etats-Unis au cours de la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale. Elle tient à signaler que plusieurs de ces passages ont été cités en les isolant de leur contexte. D'après le représentant du Portugal, le représentant des Etats-Unis aurait dit que la souveraineté sur les territoires dépendants appartenait à la Puissance administrante. De l'avis de Mlle Brooks, que vient étayer l'opinion d'éminentes autorités en matière de droit international, il n'en est pas ainsi.

2. Le représentant du Portugal a cité des dispositions de la Charte qui lui semblaient pouvoir appuyer sa thèse; il n'a pu cependant la prouver ni convaincre la délégation libérienne que les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V de son rapport (A/4526) par le Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte ne s'appliquent pas aux territoires administrés par le Portugal.

3. Se reportant à la déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Espagne à la séance précédente, Mlle Brooks, bien qu'elle n'approuve pas l'interprétation que ce représentant a donnée du Chapitre XI de la Charte ou, à certains égards, des principes, est heureuse de l'avoir entendu assurer que son gouvernement avait l'intention de communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'il administre.

4. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) dit que, tout en appréciant l'esprit dans lequel la représentante du Libéria a fait son observation, il se voit tenu de protester contre l'assertion selon laquelle il aurait cité des passages en les isolant de leur contexte. Le passage en question était extrait d'un ouvrage de M. Hans Kelsen^{1/}, juriste des plus sérieux et qui est une grande autorité en matière de droit international.

5. M. FARAHMAND (Iran) déclare que sa délégation a été heureuse d'apprendre que le Comité spécial des Six était parvenu à un large accord sur les principes de base. Le rapport du Comité est un document d'une grande importance, puisqu'il s'efforce de concrétiser l'esprit de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

6. Le rapport, et en particulier le principe IV, montre que les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et notamment celle qui établit le principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires, sont incompatibles avec l'interprétation étroite que certaines puissances administrantes donnent du Chapitre XI afin de justifier une position inconciliable avec les buts et principes de la Charte. C'est du principe de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes, établi sans équivoque au premier paragraphe de l'Article 73, que découle tout le reste de l'Article, y compris l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, qui est formulée à l'alinéa e. Avant d'être admis à l'ONU, les Etats Membres acceptent les obligations imposées par la Charte et l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 stipule clairement que les Etats Membres administrant des territoires non autonomes ont l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur ces territoires. La seule question qui se pose est donc de savoir si un territoire est autonome ou non. Il faut pour cela tenir compte de certains éléments tels que les considérations d'ordre géographique, d'où résulte la notion de "territoires métropolitains" visée à l'Article 74 de la Charte, et d'autres considérations, telles les différences de race, de langue et de patrimoine culturel. Il existe aussi les facteurs énumérés dans la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale, mais ils ne doivent être considérés que comme servant de guide et la décision doit être prise dans chaque cas en fonction des circonstances qui lui sont propres.

7. L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements est une obligation d'ordre international et, étant donné le mouvement d'indépendance qui s'est dessiné dans tous les territoires non autonomes, de même que la conjoncture internationale, refuser de s'acquitter de cette obligation équivaut à rejeter la coopération internationale et à renier les principes et l'esprit de la Charte. Cette obligation continue à s'imposer jusqu'au moment où tous les territoires ont acquis une autonomie complète et un Membre administrant est tenu de s'y conformer jusqu'à ce que l'Assemblée générale ait examiné tous les renseignements ayant trait à un changement de statut du territoire. C'est l'application de ce principe qui donne leur sens réel aux dispositions de l'Article 73.

^{1/} Hans Kelsen, The Law of the United Nations (New York, Frederick A. Praeger Inc., 1950), p. 552 et 553, renvoi en bas de page.

8. La délégation iranienne souscrit entièrement aux principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six et elle espère que ces principes seront effectivement appliqués à toutes les colonies une fois qu'ils auront été adoptés par l'Assemblée générale.

9. M. KUKAN (Libye) déclare que, pour son gouvernement, comme pour le Comité spécial des Six, la Charte constitue un document vivant. Le Gouvernement libyen s'acquiesce de ses obligations internationales conformément aux principes qui y sont énoncés. Malheureusement, le Portugal et l'Espagne, qui ont pourtant donné leur adhésion à la Charte, ne se sont jamais pleinement acquittés des obligations qu'elle leur impose. Ils essaient de convaincre la Commission que l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ne leur impose aucune obligation. La délégation libyenne estime que seule l'Assemblée générale est compétente pour décider s'il y a ou non obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur un territoire et elle ne peut accepter aucune autre interprétation. La Libye a longtemps souffert du colonialisme et sa délégation est bien placée pour savoir ce que les habitants des territoires non autonomes doivent endurer et pour mesurer ce que représente leur lutte pour l'indépendance. Les Etats Membres ont le devoir de soutenir ces populations, qui ne peuvent se faire entendre, et de mettre fin à leurs humiliations. L'ONU doit prendre des mesures immédiates pour aider les populations de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée portugaise à acquérir l'autonomie et l'indépendance conformément aux fins de la Charte.

10. La délégation libyenne souscrit aux vues exprimées à la 1031^{ème} séance par les représentants du Mexique et de la Yougoslavie, à la 1032^{ème} séance par les représentants du Ghana et du Venezuela et à la 1036^{ème} séance par le représentant de l'Irak; elle s'associe aux hommages qui ont été rendus au Comité spécial des Six. Elle appuie vigoureusement les principes énoncés par le Comité et estime qu'ils mettront fin aux divergences d'opinion sur la question de savoir si un territoire est autonome ou non. La délégation libyenne prie instamment les membres administrants de ne pas les négliger.

11. M. EL AMIN (Soudan) déclare que l'Article 73 de la Charte impose des obligations précises aux Etats Membres responsables de l'administration de territoires non autonomes. La plupart de ces Etats s'en sont acquittés. La Charte ne peut être interprétée unilatéralement par un Etat Membre et son interprétation est une tâche que l'Assemblée générale est seule compétente pour entreprendre. La délégation soudanaise ne peut donc accepter l'argumentation avancée par le représentant du Portugal. Quant à la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne, si intéressante qu'elle soit, elle n'offre aucun élément positif ou constructif et, bien que ce représentant ait condamné le colonialisme, il n'en reste pas moins qu'il existe en Afrique des territoires sous la domination coloniale de l'Espagne. Il est regrettable que ni l'Espagne ni le Portugal ne se soient conformés à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur leurs territoires non autonomes. Le Portugal fait valoir à ce sujet — ce qui est une aberration politique — que les territoires qu'il administre font partie intégrante de la métropole. Ce n'est pourtant que depuis 1951 qu'il a adopté cette position, après avoir, pendant 500 ans, considéré ces territoires comme des colonies.

12. Le rapport du Comité spécial des Six revêt la plus grande importance. La délégation soudanaise approuve les principes qui y sont énoncés par ce comité et voit en eux une interprétation exacte de la Charte. L'une des raisons principales de la création du Comité spécial était d'établir si les colonies de l'Espagne et du Portugal devaient être considérées comme des provinces de la métropole ou comme des territoires non autonomes. Si le principe IV leur est appliqué, il est évident que ce sont des territoires distincts géographiquement, aux points de vue ethnique et culturel, et il s'ensuit que les deux puissances intéressées ont l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements à leur sujet, conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73.

13. La politique suivie par le Portugal dans ses territoires enfreint à la fois le Chapitre XI de la Charte et les principes énoncés dans le rapport, notamment les principes V, VI, VII, VIII et IX. La politique d'intégration appliquée par le Portugal est préjudiciable au progrès de ces territoires. Celle dite d'assimilation n'est pas conforme aux intérêts des autochtones et elle est poursuivie en violation de l'alinéa a de l'Article 73. Elle n'a, d'ailleurs, pas permis de faire beaucoup d'"assimilados": au Mozambique, par exemple, on n'en compte que 4.349 sur une population totale d'environ 5.650.000 personnes, les autres habitants étant considérés par les autorités portugaises comme "non civilisés", et la situation, dans les autres territoires portugais, n'est pas meilleure. Il est évident que cette politique ne sert que de paravent à une politique impitoyable d'exploitation, le but étant de maintenir les populations sous le joug dans leur propre pays et de les priver d'instruction de même que de fierté nationale. Plusieurs auteurs que cite M. El Amin ont signalé que, dans ces territoires, les adultes africains du sexe masculin sont astreints au travail forcé sur les routes. Si les hommes se soustraient à ce travail, on a alors recours aux femmes et aux enfants pour faire réparer les routes. Cette main-d'œuvre forcée doit se nourrir elle-même et souvent même fournir ses outils.

14. Dans un communiqué commun qu'ils ont récemment publié, l'Empereur d'Ethiopie et le Président de la République soudanaise ont réaffirmé leur volonté de défendre la cause de l'émancipation de tous les Africains et de l'abolition du colonialisme en Afrique. La délégation soudanaise et les autres délégations africaines sont affligées par le sort fait aux Africains dans les territoires dépendants. Cependant, l'endurance humaine a ses limites et les mouvements nationalistes des pays voisins ne seront pas sans échos dans ces territoires. La délégation soudanaise estime que la politique suivie dans ces territoires est un danger pour la paix. C'est une aberration politique analogue qui a été à l'origine de la situation actuelle en Algérie.

15. La délégation soudanaise espère que les principes seront adoptés à l'unanimité.

M. Pachachi (Irak) prend la présidence.

16. M. MAX (France) proteste contre l'allusion que le représentant du Soudan, vers la fin de son intervention, a faite à une question qui n'est pas à l'ordre du jour.

17. M. WESTERMAN (Panama) constate que le Comité spécial, qui s'est acquitté de sa tâche avec beaucoup de conscience, a abouti à un accord. Son rapport constitue un pas en avant notable pour la réalisation des buts énoncés à l'Article 73 de la Charte, en particulier à l'alinéa b.

18. La délégation panamienne estime que les principes formulés par le Comité spécial des Six, qui sont à la fois empreints de modération et précis, doivent être adoptés par la Quatrième Commission et par l'Assemblée générale. C'est là une affaire urgente, étant donné l'ombre que projette encore sur l'humanité un colonialisme anachronique qui n'a plus de raison d'être dans le monde actuel. Au sujet du principe III, qui est de la plus haute importance, la délégation panamienne partage entièrement les vues exprimées par le représentant du Mexique à la 1031ème séance, à savoir: que l'application des dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 constitue une obligation internationale, que le système inter-américain a affirmé que la guerre n'est plus un instrument de politique nationale, que, de la même façon, l'administration des colonies n'est plus un instrument de la politique d'un Etat Membre, quel qu'il soit, et que le droit des peuples à l'autodétermination cesse d'être uniquement régi par la politique de la puissance administrante.

19. Le représentant du Maroc au Comité spécial des Six a déclaré que son gouvernement posait comme principe que la consultation des populations devait être contrôlée par l'ONU. Telle est également l'opinion de la délégation panamienne, qui attache une grande importance aux consultations populaires. Le principe IX reconnaît simplement, à ce sujet, qu'un contrôle de l'ONU peut être souhaitable, mais M. Westerman sait que celibellé est dû au fait que, dans certains cas, le contrôle de l'ONU ne peut avoir lieu qu'avec le consentement de l'Etat qui administre le territoire.

20. La délégation panamienne considère que le contrôle international devrait s'exercer à la fois dans les cas b et c du principe VI. Il faudrait donc envisager le contrôle international non seulement dans le cas d'une intégration, comme il est prévu au principe IX, mais également pour l'application du principe VII, c'est-à-dire dans le cas d'une libre association avec un Etat indépendant. Lorsque surgit une situation qui menace les bonnes relations entre des peuples, le bon sens conseille d'organiser une consultation de la population sous le contrôle de l'ONU. Cela est encore plus nécessaire lorsque les hostilités ont provoqué des souffrances et des pertes de vies humaines non seulement parmi les forces armées, mais aussi parmi les populations civiles, lorsque les droits fondamentaux de l'homme doivent être protégés et la paix et la sécurité internationales sauvegardées. Si une consultation populaire du genre de celle qui a été proposée par le président de Gaulle avait lieu en Algérie, elle aurait un effet plus grand sur l'opinion internationale si elle se déroulait sous le contrôle de l'ONU.

21. De l'avis de la délégation panamienne, les principes IV et V répondent à la situation qui résulte de la création de prétendues "provinces d'outre-mer". Manifestement, un pays qui n'est pas parvenu à un degré avancé d'autonomie, qui n'a pas d'institutions politiques libres et dont les habitants ne sont pas à même de prendre des décisions avisées, ne peut être incorporé de cette façon à un autre Etat.

22. Les principes formulés par le Comité spécial des Six et que la délégation panamienne espère voir approuver par la Quatrième Commission serviront de guide aux Etats Membres pour déterminer s'ils sont soumis à l'obligation de communiquer les renseignements demandés à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. On arriverait ainsi à une solution honorable pour des cas comme ceux de l'Angola, du Mozambique et de la Guinée portugaise — qui, d'après les principes énoncés par le Comité, sont certainement parmi les territoires visés par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. La délégation panamienne espère que ces territoires et tous autres territoires dans une situation analogue bénéficieront de la décision que prendra l'Assemblée générale. Elle est persuadée que les puissances intéressées coopéreront avec l'Assemblée générale et communiqueront des renseignements au sujet de tous les territoires visés par le Chapitre XI de la Charte.

23. Le grand mérite des principes énoncés par le Comité est qu'ils prévoient une procédure pacifique grâce à laquelle les populations qui ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes auront la possibilité de progresser et, au moment voulu, d'exercer leur droit à disposer d'elles-mêmes. Ces principes renforcent en même temps l'idée que les relations entre les puissances administrantes et leurs territoires dépendants doivent être fondées sur le principe général du bon voisinage.

24. En terminant, M. Westerman s'associe à l'hommage rendu, à la 1031ème séance, au nom des Etats africains, par la représentante du Libéria, à l'œuvre que l'ancien représentant du Mexique, M. Espinosa y Prieto, a accomplie en faveur des peuples dépendants.

25. M. MAKKAWI (Liban) déclare qu'étant donné le caractère très complet des déclarations faites par les orateurs qui l'ont précédé, il se bornera à exposer la position de son gouvernement sur l'importante question dont la Commission est saisie et sur le rapport du Comité spécial des Six. Il est encourageant de constater que les deux groupes de délégations — les représentants des puissances administrantes et ceux des puissances non administrantes — sont parvenus à s'entendre sur les 12 principes formulés. La délégation libanaise approuve tous les termes de ces principes, qui, s'ils sont adoptés, constitueront les prémisses de tout jugement visant à déterminer si un territoire donné tombe sous le coup des dispositions de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

26. Les réponses (A/AC.100/1 et Add.1) que certains pays ont adressées au Secrétaire général comme suite à la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale font ressortir un certain nombre de facteurs fondamentaux. C'est ainsi que la réponse de l'Iran met l'accent sur les considérations géographiques qui sont à l'origine de la notion de "territoires métropolitains" visée à l'Article 74 de la Charte, et sur la différence de race, de langue, de religion ou de patrimoine culturel. Le Maroc estime que le Chapitre XI de la Charte s'applique à tout territoire dont la population présente des différences évidentes sur les plans ethnique, géographique, historique, culturel et social par rapport à la population de la puissance coloniale, et à tout territoire dont les rapports avec la puissance administrante placent les autochtones dans une position diminuée. Ces prémisses sont clairement énoncées dans les principes IV et V.

27. Toute étude approfondie de la situation des prétendues provinces d'outre-mer montre de façon concluante que les principes IV et V s'appliquent à ces territoires. On pourra demander sur quoi on se fonde pour les considérer comme des provinces d'outre-mer, si ce statut résulte d'un choix libre et volontaire et si des procédures démocratiques et largement diffusées y ont été appliquées. C'est pourquoi la délégation libanaise attache une grande importance aux principes VII, VIII et XI du rapport.

28. L'aspiration à l'indépendance nationale et le désir de la liberté sont plus grands que jamais partout dans le monde, notamment en Afrique. Il est grand temps que les puissances coloniales, et en particulier l'Espagne et le Portugal, changent d'attitude et se conforment aux exigences du monde actuel. Le Liban, qui a toujours eu de la sympathie pour les peuples qui luttent pour être libres, votera en faveur de toute résolution approuvant les principes contenus dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

29. M. LAMANI (Albanie) déclare que, bien que le Chapitre XI de la Charte définisse clairement les obligations assumées par les puissances administrantes au moment de leur admission à l'ONU, l'Assemblée générale — tant d'années après la signature de la Charte — marque encore le pas, à cause de l'attitude négative adoptée par les puissances coloniales, bien que des millions d'êtres humains, dans les colonies, réclament avec impatience une indépendance complète et immédiate. Alors que le Comité spécial des Six déclare, au paragraphe 18 de son rapport, que la Charte est un document vivant et que l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits, les puissances coloniales ne veulent pas tenir compte de la situation politique et des changements qui se produisent dans le monde moderne. Le Portugal et l'Espagne vont jusqu'à ne fournir aucun renseignement sur leurs colonies, sous prétexte qu'elles n'ont pas de colonies, mais des "provinces d'outre-mer", et qu'il n'existe donc pour elle aucune obligation de communiquer des renseignements.

30. La Quatrième Commission et l'Assemblée générale doivent faire preuve de fermeté et prendre les mesures nécessaires pour la libération des peuples coloniaux, dont l'indépendance totale ne peut plus être retardée. Les populations des territoires dépendants attendent que l'ONU leur apporte une aide efficace.

31. Tandis que les peuples colonisés luttent pour secouer leur joug, les représentants des puissances coloniales cherchent à défendre les "principes" du colonialisme, si le mot "principe" peut être employé en ce cas. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni, qui a obstinément soutenu, comme il est consigné au paragraphe 15 du rapport, qu' "il pouvait y avoir des circonstances dans lesquelles ... certaines considérations ... réduisaient à néant le volume des informations pouvant être transmises", s'est élevé contre la conclusion du représentant du Venezuela, selon laquelle cette réserve constituait une espèce de "double-talk". Il importe de souligner que le passage en question montre clairement les efforts déployés par le représentant du Royaume-Uni au Comité spécial des Six et à la Quatrième Commission en vue, tout d'abord, de limiter le volume des renseignements communiqués — à l'aide du principe X — et ensuite de réduire ces renseignements à néant par la réserve en question. Il est regrettable qu'en dépit des efforts qu'ont faits les représentants de l'Inde, du Maroc et du Mexique au Comité spécial pour servir la cause des peuples coloniaux, les représentants des puissances coloniales aient réussi à imposer, pour certains paragraphes, un libellé qui prête à une interprétation favorisant la prolongation du régime d'exploitation coloniale.

32. Les colonialistes ont essayé de cacher la situation qui règne dans leurs colonies. Le représentant du Portugal a essayé de nier des faits patents et irréfutables. La Commission ne pourra jamais oublier, à ce sujet, les exposés des représentants de l'Irak, du Ghana, de la Guinée et d'autres pays, qui ont décrit les méthodes inhumaines auxquelles ont recourus les colonialistes portugais. Dans un ouvrage intitulé Angola: Repression and Revolt in Portuguese Africa, l'American Committee on Africa a exposé comment la ségrégation raciale, le travail forcé, les châtiments corporels et la torture sont pratiqués dans ce territoire; il a indiqué comment des patrouilles militaires s'efforcent d'empêcher les habitants de se soustraire aux obligations du travail contractuel et quel tri soigneux était fait des étudiants africains avant qu'il leur soit permis de quitter l'Angola pour faire des études supérieures au Portugal.

33. En 1956, 1957 et 1958, l'Assemblée a essayé de résoudre la question des colonies portugaises et espagnoles d'une manière diplomatique, mais, à la suite de subtiles manœuvres des puissances colonialistes et impérialistes, même des projets de résolution qui n'envisageaient que la création d'un comité chargé d'étudier la question n'ont pas été adoptés. C'est seulement à la quatorzième session que le problème a été examiné plus franchement et que le Comité spécial des Six a été constitué.

34. L'humanité ne peut plus tolérer un état de choses où les hommes sont divisés en maîtres et en esclaves. Il incombe à l'ONU d'aider les peuples coloniaux dans leur lutte pour l'émancipation. La délégation albanaise s'associe sans réserve aux nombreuses délégations qui ont déclaré que les colonies portugaises et espagnoles devront être considérées comme des territoires non autonomes tant qu'elles n'auront pas accédé à une indépendance totale. L'ONU devrait inviter le Portugal et l'Espagne à s'acquitter des obligations que leur impose la Charte.

35. Bien que la délégation albanaise ne puisse entièrement approuver le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, elle tient à souligner une fois de plus qu'elle appuiera toutes mesures visant à favoriser la libération des peuples coloniaux.

36. M. CARPIO (Philippines) déclare que son pays, qui n'a jamais eu de colonies, pas plus qu'il n'a eu de territoires dépendants à administrer, peut aborder la question dont la Commission est saisie avec l'objectivité qui seule permet une solution de sagesse. Pour ce qui est des 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six, il s'agit pour la Quatrième Commission de déterminer s'ils sont avisés et s'ils sont conformes à la lettre et à l'esprit de la Charte. Malheureusement, trois tendances sont apparues: certains orateurs tiennent que la Commission traite là d'une question purement politique qu'il convient de trancher selon le climat politique et l'esprit de l'époque sans se soucier de savoir si la décision suit la lettre de la Charte; d'autres abordent le problème d'une façon purement juridique, négligeant complètement l'atmosphère de notre époque; le troisième groupe voit dans la question un mélange de considérations d'ordre à la fois politique et juridique.

37. La délégation philippine, qui a toujours adopté à l'ONU une attitude indépendante, pense que, pour aborder la question dont la Commission est saisie, il faut se rappeler l'atmosphère qui régnait à San Francisco en 1945. A cette époque, le souci dominant était d'assurer aux générations à venir une protection contre le fléau de la guerre. Il a fallu pour cela éliminer toutes les causes de mésentente. Cette fin, à son tour, a nécessité la création d'un appareil international qui faciliterait l'amélioration des conditions de vie et l'épanouissement de la liberté pour les peuples de la terre.

38. Le représentant des Philippines ne peut se ranger à l'avis des délégations qui prétendent que, le Chapitre XI de la Charte étant intitulé "Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes", les Etats Membres peuvent interpréter unilatéralement les dispositions de l'Article 73. Le titre d'un texte juridique peut évidemment aider à interpréter le texte, mais l'interprétation doit se fonder sur les termes mêmes du texte. L'Article 73 énonce que des Etats Membres qui administrent des territoires dépendants acceptent une obligation comme une mission sacrée. Il est bien clair que cette obligation les engage au même titre que toute autre partie de la Charte. C'est pourquoi la délégation philippine a toujours interprété très libéralement l'Article 73, allant à cet égard plus loin que la plupart des délégations. L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur les progrès politiques est impliquée dans la tâche exprimée aux alinéas a et b de l'Article 73.

39. Il est peut-être regrettable que la Charte ne définisse pas la nature d'un territoire non autonome, mais en fait le sens de cette expression est clair. Il peut y avoir des cas où, bien qu'une population ne s'administre pas encore complètement elle-même, aucune obligation n'a été créée dans le chef de la puissance administrante intéressée. La grande majorité des Membres administrants a spontanément communiqué des renseignements sur les territoires placés sous leur administration et ce faisant ils ont assumé la responsabilité qui leur était dévolue aux termes de l'Article 73; toutefois, il s'agit de savoir s'il est possible de démontrer que ceux qui n'ont pas communiqué les renseignements ont, en acceptant la Charte, assumé cette responsabilité. C'est pourquoi, après deux ou trois ans d'échecs, l'Assemblée générale a créé le Comité spécial des Six au cours de sa quatorzième session. Il s'agit, et c'est là le problème que doit examiner la Quatrième Commission, de déterminer quels sont les facteurs dont il convient de tenir compte et si oui ou non il existe une obligation de communiquer des renseignements. Le problème diffère de celui qui a été étudié par le Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes), qui traitait surtout des conditions qui doivent régir la cessation de la communication des renseignements. La question examinée actuellement est celle de savoir si — et quand — la communication des renseignements doit commencer. Cependant, au lieu d'examiner les principes proposés par le Comité spécial des Six d'une façon impartiale et rationnelle, et de gagner ainsi la coopération et la bonne volonté de chaque Membre de l'ONU, les délégations ont abordé le problème de trois façons différentes, que M. Carpio a déjà exposées.

40. L'ONU doit notamment constituer un ensemble harmonieux propre à résoudre les problèmes internationaux. Le représentant des Philippines ne peut s'empêcher de se demander dans quelle voie s'engage l'Organisation, lorsqu'il entend exposer des opinions extrêmes, fondées sur l'hypothèse que l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements est applicable, condamnant ceux qui ne tiendraient pas compte de cette obligation et accusant certains Etats Membres de commettre des crimes dans leur administration des territoires dépendants. De l'avis de sa délégation, la Commission devrait tout d'abord considérer les principes, et ensuite, si elle les approuve, s'efforcer d'assurer leur application. Il serait bon de raisonner avec les Membres administrants et d'essayer de les persuader d'agir comme il convient. C'est aller trop loin que de faire des déclarations dogmatiques d'où il ressort que chaque peuple est fondé à accéder sans retard à l'indépendance. La délégation philippine comprend parfaitement et partage le désir des nations africaines que tous les peuples dépendants acquièrent la liberté dans un avenir rapproché, mais la Charte prévoit que les relations entre Etats Membres doivent être régies par le droit international et se fonder sur la compréhension, l'amitié et le bon voisinage. Ce n'est pas agir en conformité avec la Charte que d'accuser de crime les autres Membres de l'ONU.

41. Passant aux principes, le représentant des Philippines fait observer que la première phrase du principe I pose certaines questions: en premier lieu, quels étaient les territoires réputés de type colonial à l'époque de la rédaction de la Charte et, en second lieu, pourquoi l'obligation de transmettre des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 doit-elle être limitée à ces territoires? Cette thèse semble s'accorder difficilement avec la déclaration du paragraphe 18 selon laquelle la Charte est un document vivant et les obligations portées au Chapitre XI doivent être considérées compte tenu de la mentalité de l'époque et de ses changements. Il peut exister des territoires qui, depuis 1945, sont devenus des territoires de type colonial; c'est là une question qu'il appartient à la Commission d'étudier. De l'avis du représentant des Philippines, les principes doivent être d'une application universelle.

42. Le Comité spécial a rédigé son rapport en conformité avec les termes de l'Article 73. Affirmer, comme le font certaines délégations, que l'indépendance est le seul but de tous les peuples dépendants et qu'il faut les libérer sans retard n'est pas conforme à la lettre ou à l'esprit de cet article.

43. Il semble qu'il n'y ait pas d'importantes divergences d'opinions à propos du libellé du principe III; les mots "obligation internationale" sont en accord avec le texte de l'Article 73.

44. La délégation philippine fait de sérieuses réserves à propos du principe IV. Les Philippines, par exemple, comprennent plus d'un millier d'îles habitées par un certain nombre de groupes ethniques et M. Carpio ne doute pas qu'il existe d'autres Etats Membres constitués de la même façon. De même, il y a des pays où différents groupes ethniques se sont fondus grâce aux mariages mixtes. De plus, la nature exacte de la séparation géographique mentionnée au principe IV n'est pas claire.

45. La délégation philippine accueille avec satisfaction les 12 principes présentés par le Comité spécial des Six et estime que leur adoption constituera un progrès pratique dans la bonne voie. Toutefois, elle tient à se dissocier de certaines des déclarations qui ont été faites blâmant des Etats Membres pour ne pas s'être soumis à des obligations dont il n'a pas été prouvé qu'elles leur étaient applicables.

46. M. GRINBERG (Bulgarie) fait observer qu'il existe deux manières de procéder pour évaluer l'œuvre du Comité spécial des Six. Si le rapport est examiné en fonction des années précédentes, il pourrait être une source de satisfaction profonde, car une bonne partie de sa teneur, si elle est prise au pied de la lettre, indiquerait une évolution appréciable de l'opinion de quelques-unes des puissances coloniales. A ce propos, M. Grinberg appelle l'attention sur la dernière phrase du paragraphe 17 et la première phrase du paragraphe 18.

47. De l'avis de sa délégation, cependant, le rapport doit être jugé entièrement à la lumière des conditions actuelles. La tendance générale peut se résumer en deux mots: indépendance immédiate. Cette idée prime tout le reste; son existence jette le doute sur les tentatives que font les puissances coloniales pour démontrer que leurs vues ont évolué.

48. Bien des délégations se souviendront des obstacles soulevés par les puissances coloniales ces dernières années pour empêcher toute action de l'Assemblée générale visant à appliquer les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte aux colonies du Portugal et de l'Espagne. Les auteurs des projets de résolution ont fait tout leur possible pour rédiger ceux-ci dans les termes les plus anodins. Tant dans les projets de résolution que dans la plupart des discours, on s'est soigneusement abstenu de mentionner le Portugal et l'Espagne. Néanmoins, les puissances coloniales se sont opposées à l'adoption de toute mesure, si bénigne qu'elle fût. A la quatorzième session de l'Assemblée générale, cependant, un brusque changement s'est opéré. Les puissances coloniales se sont probablement rendu compte que la marée montante de l'anticolonialisme dans le monde et la demande instante d'indépendance pour toutes les colonies nécessitaient l'adoption de positions moins précaires, et que l'augmentation imminente du nombre des pays anticolonialistes à l'ONU exigerait de meilleures tactiques. Ainsi, les 12 principes ont été élaborés et présentés à la Quatrième Commission, qui doit maintenant décider des mesures à prendre. Les puissances coloniales demanderont sans doute à la Commission d'approuver les principes sans prendre aucune mesure précise à l'égard des colonies du Portugal et de l'Espagne. Par ce moyen, les puissances coloniales auraient la possibilité de soutenir qu'elles ont contribué de façon positive à la solution du problème des colonies portugaises et espagnoles, alors qu'en fait cela ne représentera presque rien.

49. Les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial découlent du Chapitre XI de la Charte et ne font que réaffirmer les positions qu'ont maintenues les pays anticolonialistes depuis la création de l'ONU. Jusqu'à présent, le Portugal et l'Espagne n'ont tenu aucun compte du Chapitre XI et il semble peu probable que les pays colonialistes seront plus généreux au sujet des 12 principes. En fait, le Portugal ayant voté pour le projet de résolution qui recommande la suppression immédiate de la discrimination raciale (A/C.4/L.643 et Add.1 et 2) adopté à la 1028^{ème} séance de la Commission, il ne serait pas surprenant que la délégation portugaise vote pour l'adoption des principes et prétende, par la suite, qu'ils ne s'appliquent pas au Portugal. Dans le long discours qu'il a prononcé à la 1036^{ème} séance, le représentant du Portugal, tout en ne s'engageant pas à l'égard de l'ensemble des principes, a indiqué clairement que son gouvernement n'entendait pas exécuter ses obligations découlant du Chapitre XI. Il a analysé de nombreux articles et chapitres de la Charte, pour essayer d'insuffler une vie nouvelle à la thèse colonialiste moribonde selon laquelle il n'appartient qu'aux puissances coloniales de décider si elles doivent appliquer ou non les dispositions du Chapitre XI. Cependant, il a omis de mentionner l'Article 10, qui constitue la disposition clef de la Charte et justifie entièrement la compétence de l'Assemblée générale pour ce qui est des territoires non autonomes. Dans son livre intitulé The Law of the United Nations, M. Hans Kelsen, qui fait autorité en la matière, a écrit (p. 551): "Etant donné qu'aux termes de l'Article 10, l'Assemblée générale peut discuter toutes les questions rentrant dans le cadre de la Charte et formuler des recommandations aux Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ou au Conseil de sécurité, et que l'administration des territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI rentre certainement dans le cadre de la Charte, l'Assemblée peut discuter les questions mentionnées aux Articles 73 et 74 et formuler des recommandations à leur sujet." Dans un autre passage du même livre, M. Kelsen a écrit (p. 556): "Si l'Assemblée générale peut formuler des recommandations sur les questions régies par le Chapitre XI, et donc appliquer les dispositions de ce chapitre, elle peut — sous forme de recommandation — préciser de quels territoires il s'agit."

50. M. Grinberg n'insistera pas sur cette question, car, à l'exception du Portugal et de l'Espagne, aucune puissance coloniale ne semble souligner maintenant la prétendue incompétence de l'Assemblée générale.

51. Le représentant du Portugal a exposé longuement un certain nombre d'arguments juridiques et autres, mais il n'a essayé de réfuter aucun des faits que de nombreuses délégations ont présentés et qui prouvent, sans l'ombre d'un doute, que les prétendues provinces d'outre-mer du Portugal ne sont que des territoires coloniaux. La Commission ne doit pas se laisser entraîner dans une discussion futile, mais doit convenir du fait incontestable que le Portugal possède des territoires séparés géographiquement de la métropole et peuplés de plus de 12 millions d'habitants qui sont distincts, au point de vue ethnique et culturel, des Portugais et qui ont été placés arbitrairement dans une position diminuée. Dans sa déclaration, le représentant du Portugal a parlé de démocratie, mais la situation qui règne dans les colonies portugaises n'a pas de rapport avec la démocratie, car, comme le prouvent les faits, elle est voisine de l'esclavage.

52. Presque tout ce qu'a dit M. Grinberg s'applique également à l'Espagne, dont le représentant, à la séance précédente, s'est associé pleinement aux vues exprimées par le représentant du Portugal.

53. De l'avis de la délégation bulgare, l'ONU a atteint le stade où elle doit envisager la suppression immédiate du colonialisme. Cela doit manifestement influencer la façon dont les différents problèmes coloniaux seront résolus. Si la Quatrième Commission veut remplir ses obligations, elle doit approuver un projet de résolution qui préciserait sans équivoque qu'au moment de l'admission du Portugal et de l'Espagne à l'ONU, les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte sont devenues applicables à tous leurs territoires coloniaux, à savoir: Madère, les Açores, Saint-Thomas et l'île du Prince, Saint-Jean-Baptiste de Ouidah, le Cabinda, l'Angola, le Mozambique, Macao, Goa, Timor et d'autres dépendances sous administration portugaise; Ifni, le Sahara espagnol, Fernando Póo, le Rio Muni et les îles Canaries, sous administration espagnole. Naturellement, toute résolution que l'Assemblée générale pourrait adopter par la suite sur la libération immédiate de toutes les colonies s'appliquerait aussi aux colonies du Portugal et de l'Espagne.

La séance est levée à 17 h 25.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526, A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

DISCUSSION GÉNÉRALE (suite)

1. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) n'intervient pas au sujet du rapport du Comité spécial des Six (A/4526), chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, que la délégation haïtienne approuve dans son ensemble, sauf quelques observations qu'appellerait le principe dit "de l'intégration", mais pour user de son droit de réponse. Le représentant du Portugal, à propos de la définition du mot "territoire", a repris à la 1036^{ème} séance, en en respectant la lettre mais en en contredisant l'esprit, certains termes d'une déclaration que le représentant d'Haïti avait faite devant la Quatrième Commission le 31 janvier 1957 au cours de la onzième session (618^{ème} séance), au moment où la Commission examinait le document A/C.4/331 et Add.1.

2. M. Dorsinville, reprenant le texte de sa première déclaration, précise que le mot "territoire" n'a sans doute pas un sens juridique très précis en droit international et qu'il peut se rencontrer avec des sens très différents dans un texte constitutionnel. Par exemple, le Gouvernement australien a considéré le territoire du Papua comme un territoire non autonome, auquel s'appliquent les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, mais nul n'a jamais contesté que le territoire septentrional de l'Australie, qui fait partie du continent australien, échappe à ces mêmes dispositions. Il semble bien qu'à la Conférence de San Francisco on ait été unanime à exclure les territoires métropolitains du champ d'application du Chapitre XI, qui ne pourrait s'appliquer qu'aux régions non métropolitaines, nommées colonies, possessions, protectorats, dont les populations n'ont pas encore atteint la pleine autonomie. C'est la thèse que le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni soutenait encore à la huitième session à propos de l'examen de la question des facteurs par la Commission.

3. Quant à savoir — point délicat — si l'on peut invoquer la "souveraineté" à propos des territoires non autonomes, le représentant d'Haïti fait simplement observer qu'il n'est nullement fait mention de souveraineté au Chapitre XI de la Charte. Les obligations qu'il énonce incombent aux Etats Membres qui ont ... "la responsabilité d'administrer" ces territoires. Même quand il s'est agi de territoires intégrés à la métropole, la communication de renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 n'a posé aucun problème pour la Nouvelle-Zélande, par exemple, à propos des îles Cook ou des îles Tokelau.

4. On a dit que la liste des territoires énumérés dans la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale n'entérinait que la décision de quelques Etats Membres, que cette décision ne pouvait pas engager d'autres Etats Membres, et qu'à San Francisco il avait été décidé de ne pas discuter de tel ou tel territoire en particulier. M. Dorsinville rappelle cependant qu'à San Francisco, la délégation australienne, avait émis l'idée que l'on n'a malheureusement pas retenue, que l'Assemblée générale pourrait désigner les territoires sur lesquels les Membres administrants auraient à adresser des rapports annuels à l'ONU, et que l'Assemblée générale pourrait aussi, avant de désigner ces territoires, réunir en une ou plusieurs conférences les Etats qui administrent des territoires dont les populations ne peuvent pas encore faire seules aux difficultés du monde moderne et prendre en considération les recommandations qui en résulteraient. De telles mesures auraient permis de régler une fois pour toutes la question dont s'occupe encore la Commission. Il reste cependant que la décision prise à San Francisco n'était pas définitive, et que l'Assemblée générale s'est prononcée à diverses reprises sur l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes, notamment dans ses résolutions 66 (I), 334 (IV) et 648 (VII).

5. De son côté, le professeur Hans Kelsen, spécialiste de la Charte, a conclu, à propos du Chapitre XI, que les obligations de ce chapitre lient les Etats qui n'avaient pas participé à la conférence de San Francisco et qui sont, depuis, devenus Membres de l'ONU; que la violation répétée des obligations du Chapitre XI peut provoquer l'application de sanctions; que, par sa résolution 66 (I), l'Assemblée générale a laissé aux Etats Membres le soin de déterminer quels territoires entrent dans la catégorie visée au Chapitre XI; que l'Assemblée générale peut cependant désigner ces territoires par voie de recommandation; et que cette recommandation n'aura pas force obligatoire^{1/}.

^{1/} Voir Hans Kelsen, The Law of the United Nations (New York, Frederick A. Praeger Inc., 1950), p. 553, 556 et 557.

6. Il est indubitable, comme il découle de cette dernière conclusion, que les recommandations de l'Assemblée générale peuvent souvent ne pas être respectées; il n'en demeure pas moins qu'en devenant Membre de l'ONU, un Etat s'engage à respecter aussi bien l'esprit que la lettre de la Charte de sorte qu'un simple examen de la situation concrète de certains territoires peut, en dehors de toute argumentation juridique, amener à juste titre à se demander s'il ne conviendrait pas d'appliquer dans tel ou tel cas particulier les dispositions des Articles 73 et 74. Pour le représentant d'Haïti, il ne fait pas de doute que, dans les territoires sous administration portugaise, il n'y a pas égalité de droits entre administrés et administrants.

7. M. Krishna MENON (Inde) s'intéresse vivement aux débats sur les principes qui doivent régir l'application de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, car il s'agit d'une question fondamentale qui touche au sens même à donner à la Charte. Après avoir admis en 1955 l'Espagne et le Portugal, l'Assemblée générale a essayé sans succès, à ses dixième, onzième et douzième sessions, de préciser le sens du Chapitre XI. C'est pourquoi elle a décidé à sa quatorzième session de créer, par sa résolution 1467 (XIV), le Comité spécial des Six, composé de Membres administrants et de Membres non administrants. Ce comité a énoncé, dans la subdivision B de la section V de son rapport, d'excellents principes que la Quatrième Commission ne manquera sans doute pas d'adopter.

8. Sous des formes différentes, l'Espagne et le Portugal soutiennent qu'aucun des territoires qu'ils administrent ne tombe sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI, et qu'ils ne sont donc pas dans l'obligation de communiquer les renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. L'Espagne a cependant adopté une attitude plus conciliante, en ce sens que, tout en faisant des réserves juridiques, elle a communiqué des renseignements au Secrétaire général, à titre d'information. Le représentant de l'Inde s'en félicite, et espère pouvoir constater des progrès supplémentaires quand l'Assemblée générale aura fait clairement connaître son opinion.

9. Le Portugal estime au contraire n'avoir aucune obligation, comme si ses droits et ses devoirs étaient différents de ceux des autres Etats signataires de la Charte. Il est clair cependant qu'il serait de son intérêt de communiquer des renseignements; car, en faisant le silence sur ses territoires, il n'empêche nullement le monde, et la délégation indienne en particulier, d'avoir une idée du sort fait aux populations locales. En réalité, le problème n'est pas tant celui de l'envoi de renseignements que celui de l'application de la Charte. Les multiples propositions faites pendant et après la seconde guerre mondiale, certaines même par des puissances administrantes comme le Royaume-Uni et l'Australie, tendaient à reconnaître que les peuples dépendants étaient sous une sorte de "tutelle" morale, et qu'il fallait donc les préparer à l'indépendance. C'est sur cette idée que repose la Charte, en dépit des distinctions juridiques de forme qu'il y a entre territoires non autonomes et territoires sous tutelle. Le Portugal prétend être le seul à interpréter la Charte comme il convient — prétention singulière — et décline toute obligation. Cependant, l'ONU est un ensemble d'Etats qui ont tous accepté les dispositions de la Charte. La Charte est une; refuser une de ses dispositions équivaut à les refuser toutes. Ce n'est pas un simple manifeste, mais un texte multilatéral qui oblige chacun de ses signataires. A la différence des conventions ou traités, elle ne donne pas aux Membres de l'ONU la faculté de faire des réserves sur certaines de ses parties ou de dénoncer l'ensemble. Chaque Membre de l'ONU est lié par la Charte, à moins que, par une décision regrettable, il ne décide de ne plus faire partie de l'Organisation. Puisque le Portugal a demandé à être admis, il doit se considérer comme lié.

10. Les dispositions des Articles 73 et 74 s'appliquent à tous les Etats Membres, sans exception. Le Portugal prétend se dégager des obligations que lui font ces articles en jouant sur le sens du mot territoire. Il faut cependant noter que ce mot signifie uniquement étendue de terre ou région du monde; puisqu'il ne prend pas la majuscule, il n'a pas besoin de recevoir une définition ou interprétation spéciale. Le Portugal ne peut donc pas prétendre que ses colonies ne sont pas des "territoires", puisque ce mot n'a pas un sens particulier. Le seul moyen de savoir si les régions sont visées par les Articles 73 et 74 est de rechercher si leurs populations ne s'administrent pas encore complètement elles-mêmes. C'est bien le cas des possessions portugaises.

11. En acceptant la mission sacrée précisée à l'Article 73, les Etats signataires de la Charte reconnaissent qu'ils doivent rendre des comptes à l'Organisation. Si ces articles ne donnent pas à l'ONU, comme ceux qui ont trait au régime international de tutelle, le droit d'exercer une surveillance, ils font à l'Assemblée l'obligation de réclamer des informations aux Membres administrants, pour veiller à ce qu'elles s'acquittent de leur mission. Aucun Membre administrant n'avait fait la moindre difficulté avant le Portugal. Lui seul en fait une question d'interprétation. Or ce stade est dépassé depuis longtemps. De 1945 à 1955 les Etats Membres ont indiqué comment il fallait comprendre la Charte. Quand il est devenu Membre de l'ONU, le Portugal s'est trouvé lié non seulement par la Charte, mais aussi par l'interprétation que l'Assemblée lui avait donnée en 10 ans de pratique.

12. Le Portugal ne peut pas non plus se réfugier derrière l'argument de la suprématie de sa constitution nationale. Cette suprématie n'existe que dans une certaine mesure. Tous les Etats signataires de la Charte ont en effet renoncé au droit d'acquérir des territoires par la force. Le droit interne ne saurait avoir le pas sur le droit international. C'est ce qu'ont d'ailleurs affirmé les commentateurs de la Charte. Sur les 22 juristes cités dans le document A/AC.100/2/Add.2, mis à la disposition du Comité spécial des Six, quatre seulement font quelques réserves à cet égard, l'un d'entre eux étant d'ailleurs Portugais. M. Louis Delbez déclare en revanche, dans son Manuel de droit international public^{2/} (p. 139):

"Ce sont tous les Membres de l'ONU qui acceptent de limiter leur compétence immédiatement à l'égard de tous les territoires en leur possession, qu'on n'appelle plus maintenant colonies, mais "territoires dépendants".

"La nature juridique du territoire colonial en sort transformée. Certes, il fait toujours partie du territoire national, mais il se détache du territoire métropolitain, en ce sens qu'il n'est plus soumis au même régime juridique. Le territoire métropolitain continue à relever uniquement du droit interne, alors que le territoire colonial devient largement tributaire du droit international."

^{2/} Paris, Librairie générale de droit et de jurisprudence, 1951.

13. D'autre part, même si l'on admettait avec le Portugal que le Chapitre XI de la Charte n'est qu'une simple déclaration unilatérale, il faudrait ajouter que c'est aussi la déclaration unilatérale du Portugal, Membre de l'ONU. Mais le Chapitre XI n'est pas une déclaration unilatérale. L'emploi du mot "déclaration", en tête du chapitre, ne doit pas tromper. Si certains chapitres avaient force obligatoire tandis que d'autres ne seraient que de simples exposés d'opinions, ce serait l'anarchie. Il ne s'agit ni d'un préambule, ni d'une note explicative, ni d'une annexe. C'est une déclaration qui oblige autant qu'un concordat ou que la Déclaration de Paris de 1856. Penser autrement reviendrait à dire qu'une convention n'oblige pas autant qu'un traité, parce qu'elle porte un nom différent.

14. En réalité, le seul titre du Portugal est le droit de conquête. C'est d'abord pour rechercher les épices, puis pour répandre le christianisme, que les explorateurs portugais sont partis à la découverte du monde. Le seul motif que le Portugal invoque pour conserver ses possessions est qu'elles sont anciennes. Aucune conquête de ce genre ne serait plus acceptée aujourd'hui. Quoi qu'il en soit, il est le seul pays à vouloir faire des Portugais des habitants de ces colonies. Jamais le Royaume-Uni n'a prétendu que les Indiens étaient Anglais. La délégation indienne considère que la conquête ne rend pas souveraine la puissance conquérante. La souveraineté réside uniquement dans le peuple du territoire conquis, et elle lui revient quand le régime colonial prend fin.

15. Les possessions portugaises ne sont pas des territoires de peuplement comme l'Australie, mais des territoires conquis, où les lois promulguées sans leur consentement font aux populations un traitement différent de celui qui est fait à la population de la métropole. Les Portugais eux-mêmes considèrent ces territoires comme des colonies. Dans un article de la revue Foreign Affairs^{3/}, le premier ministre Salazar a écrit en 1956: "On peut dire que l'Afrique vit, et doit continuer à vivre pendant une période indéterminée sous l'autorité et la direction d'un Etat civilisé." La domination d'un Etat par un autre, n'est-ce pas le colonialisme? En affirmant la nécessité du colonialisme, le président Salazar ne répudie-t-il pas l'objectif même de la Charte? Il ajoute: "L'administration publique et la direction de la main-d'œuvre sont inévitablement aux mains d'une petite minorité d'Européens. Ceux-ci ne peuvent pas abandonner leur tâche ou la passer aux éléments autochtones aveuglément et tout d'un coup." Dans le même article, le Premier Ministre écrit: "Quand il est conscient de sa mission, le pays colonisateur assure la paix, est responsable du maintien de l'ordre, organise la vie, favorise le développement économique, ... on peut se demander s'il serait possible d'atteindre aussi rapidement le même objectif d'une autre manière." Ce qui revient à dire que le colonialisme est non seulement nécessaire, mais souhaitable.

16. Les informations publiées sur la situation de ces territoires — informations peut-être exagérées, mais il appartient au Portugal de le démontrer — ne sont guère encourageantes. Selon les renseignements donnés par M. Peter Ritner dans son livre The Death of Africa^{4/}, tous les habitants des territoires portugais d'Afrique, à l'exception des Européens et des quelque 10.000 "assimilés", sont soumis au travail forcé que les autorités ont institué à la fin du XIXème siècle pour faire croire à l'euphémisation des territoires. Le Portugal a signé en particulier avec l'Union sud-africaine des accords qui "facilitent" le recrutement de la main-d'œuvre africaine dans le Mozambique. Selon M. Marvin Harris, il est devenu immoral et illégal pour un Africain de ne pas travailler. Quand il ne peut pas prouver qu'il travaille, on l'emmène au poste de police; il doit alors ou bien trouver un employeur européen, ou bien accepter d'être embauché par un agent sud-africain, ou bien être recruté par le gouvernement pour faire partie d'un des groupes de conscrits qui exécutent les travaux de construction.

17. Au Mozambique, une compagnie créée par les mines a reçu des autorités portugaises le monopole de l'embauche de la main-d'œuvre autochtone; depuis sa création, la rémunération offerte est tombée à un niveau inférieur à celui de 1896. La suppression rigoureuse de toute agitation ouvrière n'y a pas peu contribué. Il n'existe en effet aucune convention collective ni aucune loi qui protège la main-d'œuvre autochtone. Si l'on en croit l'auteur d'un article publié à Lisbonne dans O Seculo, le 4 août 1956: "On a plus d'une fois démontré que le blanc ne peut pas s'acquitter de lourdes tâches en Afrique, car elles demandent un effort humain fatigant et épuisant ... On ne peut le charger que de diriger et de conseiller, administrativement ou techniquement. Les autres tâches sont naturellement réservées aux noirs qui sont les seuls capables de les exécuter." N'est-ce pas dire que l'esclavage est conçu pour le bien de l'esclave qui n'est pas bon à autre chose?

18. Sans vouloir s'étendre sur des pratiques discriminatoires qui sont bien connues, et qui ne sont d'ailleurs pas les pires qui soient au monde, le représentant de l'Inde tient à souligner combien la situation scolaire est déplorable. Il n'y avait dans les écoles angolaises, en 1954, que 58.000 enfants sur quatre millions d'habitants. Le pourcentage des illettrés africains était en 1950 de 99 pour 100, contre 23 pour les blancs. La plupart des écoles réservées aux Portugais leurs quelques places disponibles. En 1956, les écoles primaires publiques comprenaient 2.531 enfants de blancs nés en Europe, 3.382 enfants de blancs nés en Afrique, 3.210 enfants de mulâtres et seulement 737 enfants d'Africains. La proportion était un peu meilleure dans les écoles privées; mais, d'une manière générale, il semble que 5 pour 100 seulement des enfants d'âge scolaire puissent fréquenter l'école. Selon lord Hailey, les territoires portugais sont les seules grandes régions d'Afrique que n'ait pas touchées l'accélération de l'évolution économique et sociale qui a été ailleurs un des résultats les plus importants de la participation à la seconde guerre mondiale.

19. Enfin, les populations ne jouissent d'aucune liberté civique. A Goa en particulier, les réunions publiques sont interdites, et il faut une autorisation même pour des réunions de prière. En 1955, les troupes portugaises ont tiré sur les habitants qui prenaient part à des manifestations de résistance passive. Il y a eu beaucoup de tués. D'autres ont été condamnés à des peines de prison qui allaient jusqu'à 28 ans; d'autres ont été déportés en Afrique et au Portugal. De 1954 à 1959, plusieurs centaines de Goans ont été arrêtés, torturés et détenus pour avoir participé au mouvement de libération. Certains sont encore en prison, d'autres portent les marques des blessures ou mutilations causées par les Portugais. Malgré cela, l'Inde n'a pas placé de troupes à la frontière de Goa. Il ne faudrait cependant pas croire que son silence soit approubatif. C'est parce qu'elle est consciente de ses responsabilités internationales que l'Inde ne veut avoir aucune difficulté avec le Portugal ou la communauté internationale. Elle se réserve cependant le droit de réclamer la libération de Goa, qui fait autant partie intégrante du territoire indien que les anciens comptoirs français.

^{3/} Oliveira Salazar, "Goa and the Indian Union: The Portuguese view", Foreign Affairs, vol. 34, No 3 (avril 1956).

^{4/} New York, Macmillan, 1960.

20. Il ne faut pas se détourner des réalités du monde. Il est devenu impossible de parler des colonies d'un point de vue purement légal. La Charte prescrit en effet le respect des droits de l'homme et le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales. Elle fait tout au moins au Gouvernement portugais l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur la situation économique, sociale et scolaire des territoires qu'il administre, et l'Assemblée générale a le droit d'appliquer à ce sujet les dispositions de l'Article 10 de la Charte. C'est parce qu'elle en est convaincue que la délégation indienne a déposé, avec d'autres délégations, le projet de résolution qui a reçu la cote A/C.4/L.649. Elle espère que ce projet recevra l'appui unanime de la Commission, et en particulier celui du Portugal et de l'Espagne.

21. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) rejette catégoriquement ce que le représentant de l'Inde vient d'alléguer au sujet de la situation des territoires portugais; quant aux arguments juridiques, il se réserve le droit d'y revenir quand il aura étudié le texte de cette déclaration.

22. Rappelant que M. Krishna Menon lui-même a déclaré, le 21 novembre 1957, au Conseil de sécurité^{5/} que ce n'est pas parce qu'une majorité d'Etats partagent une opinion que cette opinion est nécessairement juste — d'où on pourrait déduire, a posteriori, que l'opinion de la minorité n'est pas nécessairement fausse — M. Nogueira ne comprend pas cependant que le représentant de l'Inde trouve maintenant singulier de ne pas voir l'avis de la délégation portugaise partagé par d'autres délégations ou même par la grande majorité des Membres de l'Assemblée.

23. M. ROHAL-ILKIV (Tchécoslovaquie) tient à dissiper tout malentendu au sujet d'une déclaration que le représentant de l'Espagne a faite à la 1038^{ème} séance, déclaration pour le moins inattendue, étant donné que l'Espagne et la Tchécoslovaquie ont à l'égard du colonialisme des positions diamétralement opposées. Si le représentant de l'Espagne considère que les idées de la délégation espagnole et celles de la délégation tchécoslovaque coïncident, c'est sans doute qu'il a mal compris la position de la délégation tchécoslovaque. Cette position est très claire: il est essentiel de liquider immédiatement le régime colonial; dans le cas particulier des colonies espagnoles et portugaises, l'Assemblée doit réclamer les renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73, et faire admettre à l'Espagne et au Portugal que les territoires qu'ils administrent ne sont pas de prétendues provinces d'outre-mer, mais bel et bien des colonies.

24. M. KRIGA (Tchad), après avoir adressé les félicitations de sa délégation au Président de la Commission à l'occasion de son élection et aux membres du Comité spécial pour leur rapport, constate que les 12 principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V de ce rapport traduisent avec précision et sans équivoque la volonté des Membres de l'ONU telle qu'elle s'exprime dans la Charte et plus particulièrement dans l'Article 73. Les principes définissent exactement les territoires non autonomes, et la délégation tchadienne est prête à adopter tout projet de résolution qui les approuverait pleinement.

25. Alors que l'on pourrait attendre des débats de la présente session l'abolition totale et prochaine du système colonial, l'Espagne et le Portugal maintiennent encore, en Afrique notamment, des colonies qu'ils appellent cyniquement "provinces" et où sévit le colonialisme le plus inhumain. En Angola, par exemple, il n'y a dans les écoles primaires que 47.000 enfants, sur une population totale de 4.500.000 habitants; 700.000 habitants sont soumis au travail forcé, et la population vit sous la menace de l'internement dans les camps de concentration, des tortures et même de la mort; les habitants sont classés en civilisés, assimilés et non-civilisés. Dans l'ensemble des possessions portugaises, il n'y a que 35.000 habitants, sur 11 millions, qui aient le droit de vote et le système administratif est différent de celui de la métropole. On comprend ainsi que le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais trouvent difficile de communiquer des renseignements sur leurs prétendues provinces d'outre-mer.

26. Depuis 1946, 100 millions d'hommes, dans près de 30 territoires non autonomes, ont accédé à l'indépendance; mais 150 millions, pour la plupart en Afrique, attendent toujours leur liberté et se tournent vers l'ONU. Or, si les puissances colonialistes n'avaient pas toujours fait obstacle aux décisions de l'Organisation internationale, celle-ci disposerait actuellement de moyens assez puissants pour imposer au besoin sa volonté aux quelques pays qui demeurent imbus de colonialisme. Les peuples non autonomes veulent l'autonomie et la liberté: l'ONU a le devoir impérieux de les arracher à la domination politique, économique, sociale et culturelle du régime colonial. Aucun amendement constitutionnel n'est une excuse pour continuer à exploiter les territoires coloniaux; au contraire, la domination d'un peuple par un autre dont le séparent la race, la langue, la culture, la religion et la philosophie est une affaire internationale qui intéresse tous les Membres de l'ONU. Or, jusqu'à présent l'adoption de motions imprécises a permis le maintien du colonialisme.

27. A ceux qui déclarent, dans une revue portugaise, qu'ils ne quitteront jamais l'Afrique, sinon par la force, et qu'ils ne consentiront pas à l'exploitation des noirs par des noirs, M. Kriga répond qu'il n'y a pas de parcelles de métropole en Afrique et que l'Afrique est africaine; il demande aux puissances coloniales et à tous ceux qui ont des visées sur l'Afrique d'écouter la voix de plus en plus forte des peuples africains, tous solidaires, qui réclament leur liberté; car rien ne pourra endiguer la vague de nationalisme qui déferle sur le continent africain. La délégation tchadienne estime par conséquent que la Commission doit adopter les 12 principes posés par le Comité; leur application sincère permettrait à l'ONU de suivre l'évolution politique, économique et sociale des territoires non autonomes conformément au mandat que lui donne la

Charte, dont le souci est de voir tous les hommes égaux, heureux et solidaires.

La séance est levée à 13 heures.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526, A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (suite)

1. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) déclare que, bien qu'il se pose de nombreuses questions extrêmement importantes et urgentes dont dépend la vie même de l'humanité, c'est celle du colonialisme qui a constamment été au premier plan des discussions en séance plénière, et dans toutes les commissions, à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale. Cela est particulièrement vrai des débats de la Quatrième Commission, et cependant il n'existe pas de définition de ce qui constitue le "colonialisme" ou une "colonie". Or, il importe que la Commission sache ce contre quoi elle se bat et il est également important qu'elle propose une solution positive pour remplacer le colonialisme et l'impérialisme, faute de quoi son attitude serait purement négative et destructive.

2. Plusieurs représentants ont défini les "colonies" comme des territoires géographiquement séparés de la métropole et habités par une population de race et de culture différentes se trouvant à un stade inférieur de développement social et économique. Cette définition est indéfendable. La question de l'éloignement dans l'espace n'est pas pertinente, car un certain nombre d'Etats indépendants forment des archipels ou constituent des ensembles groupant des régions géographiquement distinctes. L'insuffisance du critère de l'éloignement dans l'espace a été reconnue par le représentant de l'Irlande à la Commission et par le Mexique dans sa réponse au Secrétaire général (A/AC.100/1, par. 72 à 117). Se référant aux principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport (A/4526) du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignement prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, le représentant du Portugal constate que le Comité spécial a lui-même fait ressortir, dans le principe IV, que la séparation géographique constitue simplement une considération à priori.

3. La délégation portugaise repousse également le critère des différences raciales et culturelles, car elle est opposée à toute discrimination fondée sur la race ou la couleur. En réalité, selon le principe IV, les distinctions de race et de culture sont considérées uniquement comme un facteur à priori. Il y a une contradiction inhérente à l'argument lui-même, étant donné que la Quatrième Commission est — à juste titre — unanime dans son opposition à toute ségrégation ou discrimination raciale et dans ses efforts pour favoriser la coopération et la solidarité internationales. Affirmer que les distinctions raciales ou culturelles doivent nécessairement impliquer des différences d'ordre politique, c'est aller à l'encontre de ces desseins. De l'avis de la délégation portugaise, Américains, Africains, Européens ou Asiatiques sont avant et par-dessus tout des êtres humains qui doivent bénéficier de possibilités et de droits égaux. Se ranger à toute autre thèse, ce serait appauvrir l'humanité socialement et culturellement en empêchant la fusion des races et des cultures, qui est la seule source de progrès. On ne saurait nier qu'il existe beaucoup de pays indépendants habités par un certain nombre de races ayant une culture et des antécédents divers; en fait, on peut dire que tous les pays sont multiraciaux, car il n'existe pas de race pure et la tendance universelle est à la constitution de sociétés multiraciales. La délégation portugaise se range donc aux conclusions du rapport selon lesquelles les critères raciaux et culturels sont sans valeur lorsqu'il s'agit de définir une "colonie".

4. Enfin, on a soutenu qu'un territoire dont l'économie est peu développée par rapport à celle de tout autre territoire du même pays constitue une colonie. Mais le rapport du Comité spécial des Six n'évoque cette question que brièvement, dans le principe V, et avec cette réserve importante que cet élément économique doit affecter les relations entre territoires de telle façon qu'il place arbitrairement l'un des territoires dans une position diminuée par rapport à l'autre. La délégation portugaise se range à cet avis, car, s'il y a quoi que ce soit d'arbitraire dans ces relations, il y a exploitation économique, ce qui est un des éléments du colonialisme. Toutefois, s'il n'y a rien d'arbitraire, la question de la situation économique n'est pas pertinente; cela est encore établi par le fait que dans tous les pays indépendants, qu'ils soient géographiquement unis ou séparés, le développement économique n'atteint pas partout le même niveau. La conclusion est donc que la situation économique d'un territoire n'indique pas, par elle-même, si ce territoire est ou non une colonie.

5. Le représentant du Portugal ne désire pas s'étendre sur cette question; mais, à la lumière de toutes les considérations évoquées à la Quatrième Commission et à d'autres commissions, il est possible d'aboutir à certaines conclusions. Il y a "colonie" quand un peuple en domine un autre, quand le principe de l'égalité des droits et des possibilités n'est pas reconnu, quand il y a exploitation économique et financière, quand des territoires sont occupés pour des raisons militaires ou pour renforcer la puissance nationale, quand une religion, une croyance ou une culture particulière sont imposées à autrui et quand des doctrines politiques et idéologiques sont imposées à un peuple pour accroître la puissance et le prestige d'un pays ou d'un groupe de pays.

6. Tous ces aspects ont été évoqués par diverses délégations à propos du rapport du Comité spécial des Six; aussi aurait-on pu s'attendre que ce rapport soit examiné à la lumière de ces considérations, afin de permettre à la Quatrième Commission de passer à l'application générale des principes énoncés par le Comité spécial. La délégation portugaise a été surprise, et, à vrai dire, consternée, de la façon dont la Commission a procédé. Le rapport est utilisé non pas en vue d'une enquête générale et objective, mais simplement comme un instrument contre deux pays: l'Espagne et le Portugal. Apparemment, nombre de délégations ne se sont pas avisées que d'autres pourraient vouloir contester certaines des réponses adressées au Secrétaire général, en dehors de celles de l'Espagne et du Portugal. La délégation portugaise ne pense pas que les réponses des Etats Membres devraient faire l'objet d'une discussion; mais elle éprouve des doutes quant aux réponses de certains pays tels que, par exemple, l'Union soviétique ou l'Union indienne. A l'heure actuelle, toutefois, elle se bornera à définir la position du Portugal au sujet du rapport et à répondre à certains des arguments avancés par des délégations qui ont voulu appliquer le rapport au Portugal.

7. La nation portugaise est dispersée dans divers continents, mais on a montré que la géographie seule n'implique pas l'idée de colonialisme. De nombreux pays ont des territoires sur plus d'un continent, et l'indépendance des diverses parties constituantes n'a pas été mise en doute. La seule différence est que la nation portugaise existe sous sa forme actuelle depuis cinq siècles. M. James Duffy a écrit dans son livre intitulé Portuguese Africa^{1/}: "Sur la rive méridionale de l'un des grands fleuves du monde, la Couronne portugaise a tenté d'appliquer au XVI^e siècle, à une population primitive, un modeste programme de coopération et de mise en valeur, qui, si on considère la politique de nombreuses puissances européennes aux XIX^e et XX^e siècles, demeure, par certains de ses idéaux, un modèle de compréhension et de modération diplomatiques." Certes, il y a eu des guerres à divers moments, ce qui est regrettable, mais cela n'a rien à voir avec la question examinée. Le principe V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six fait état de l'élément historique comme étant l'un des éléments supplémentaires pouvant être pris en considération.

8. Une autre accusation qui a été formulée est que les diverses provinces du Portugal sont habitées par des races diverses. Il en est effectivement ainsi, mais cela est vrai également de nombreux pays; en fait, pratiquement, tous les pays sont habités par une multiplicité de races. La délégation portugaise ne peut rien voir de répréhensible à cet état de choses, et refuse de tenir compte de toute considération fondée sur la race ou la couleur. Une fois encore, le principe IV fait la part de cette situation.

9. On a dit que les provinces portugaises d'outre-mer ne se trouvaient pas au même niveau économique que le territoire européen. Cela est en partie vrai et en partie faux, étant donné qu'il y a certains territoires d'outre-mer où le développement économique est plus rapide qu'en Europe. Mais cela aussi est dépourvu de sens lorsqu'on parle de colonialisme ou d'autonomie, et le développement économique est mentionné dans le principe V comme un élément supplémentaire. Dans de nombreux pays, même les plus développés, il y a des régions qui sont moins évoluées; et, si l'on admet, comme il se doit, que la géographie, la race et la culture ne sont pas des éléments pertinents lorsqu'on parle de colonialisme, l'élément économique n'est certainement pas décisif.

10. De nombreuses délégations ont souligné que les territoires d'outre-mer s'étaient appelés colonies jusqu'en 1951 et que ce nom n'avait été abandonné pour celui de "provinces" qu'à partir de cette date, laissant entendre ainsi que ce changement était dû à des raisons d'opportunité. Aucune des délégations en question, néanmoins, n'a fait mention du fait que le mot "provinces" avait été employé pendant des siècles; dans la législation générale et dans le droit coutumier portugais, le terme "province" a été appliqué pour la première fois aux territoires d'outre-mer vers 1576; depuis lors, il a été utilisé à maintes reprises dans diverses lois et ordonnances, dans les constitutions de 1820, de 1842 et de 1911, ainsi que dans celle de 1933, qui est encore en vigueur. Si le terme "colonie" a été utilisé pendant une courte période, c'est parce qu'en 1935, lorsque des réformes administratives ont été introduites, les auteurs de ces réformes ont estimé que l'expression "colonie" avait une acception plus élevée, en rapport avec celle du droit romain. Toutefois, l'opinion publique, en particulier outre-mer, a peu à peu réagi et, lorsque la Constitution a été modifiée en 1951, le Parlement portugais est revenu à la désignation ancienne. Ainsi, cet argument que l'on oppose au Portugal ne prouve rien.

11. Les accusations se fondent encore sur le fait que, puisque le siège du gouvernement et du Parlement national est en territoire européen, les territoires d'outre-mer sont gouvernés de l'extérieur. M. Nogueira s'étonne que l'on ait avancé un tel argument. Il est exact, bien entendu, que le chef de l'Etat, l'Assemblée nationale et le gouvernement ont leur siège à Lisbonne, de même que la Cour suprême de justice, le Tribunal administratif supérieur et le Conseil d'Etat. Comme M. Nogueira l'a souligné maintes fois devant la Quatrième Commission, le Portugal n'est ni une fédération ni une confédération; c'est un Etat unitaire et la souveraineté, par conséquent, n'est pas divisée et ne s'exerce pas par degrés. Dans ces conditions, et comme les mêmes organes de la souveraineté sont compétents dans la totalité du territoire national, il y a une unité politique; la nation est une, et, là où est la nation, il y a aussi, nécessairement, l'Etat. Pour cette raison, précisément, la Constitution portugaise n'introduit aucune discrimination entre les divers territoires; il est impossible d'appliquer un statut politique à un territoire sur le plan international et un statut politique différent à un autre territoire. Il en résulte que l'Article 73 ne s'applique pas au Portugal, lequel ne peut être tenu de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général. L'attitude du Portugal à cet égard est extrêmement ferme.

12. Un certain nombre de délégations ont soulevé la question de la prétendue division de la population portugaise dans les territoires d'outre-mer en éléments "civilisés" et "non civilisés". En fait, les deux catégories d'habitants, "civilisés" et "non civilisés", n'existent pas en droit portugais; le mot portugais a été traduit de façon erronée par divers auteurs étrangers et a reçu une large publicité. Dans un autre ordre d'idées, le représentant de la Guinée, à la 1038ème séance, a déclaré, ce qui ne repose sur aucun fondement, qu'il existe une loi portugaise établissant cinq catégories de population en Angola — affirmation qui a été recueillie dans une brochure diffusée par l'American Committee on Africa. Il n'existe pas, il faut le répéter, de division de la population en "civilisés" et "non civilisés". Mais il y a un deuxième fait que l'on a voulu négliger pour plus de commodité; dans cinq des huit provinces portugaises d'outre-mer, toute la population jouit de la plénitude des droits dans tous les domaines, y compris le droit de vote et d'être élu. Etant donné que ces cinq territoires sont habités par des races nombreuses, le représentant du Portugal n'arrive pas à comprendre comment certaines délégations osent affirmer que le système est fondé sur des considérations raciales. En ce qui concerne les trois autres territoires, il y a encore, au Portugal, comme dans tous les pays, certaines fractions de la population qui n'ont pas atteint un stade avancé dans leur progrès. La délégation portugaise ne nie pas que cette situation existe, mais elle ne pense pas que le Portugal puisse être blâmé pour cela, d'autant plus que tous les efforts possibles sont déployés pour y remédier. Au cours du débat, les représentants du Mali et de l'Inde ont reconnu que certaines des populations de ces territoires étaient bien en possession de tous leurs droits, y compris les droits politiques. M. Nogueira se rend parfaitement compte que, si l'on prouvait — et on peut le faire — que la population jouit de tous les droits politiques et des autres droits dans les cinq territoires qu'il a mentionnés, que le processus de l'intégration y a depuis longtemps été mené à bon terme, que les habitants votent et sont élus, qu'ils jouissent d'une pleine représentation et se trouvent dans des conditions d'égalité absolue, la Commission ne serait toujours pas disposée à accepter ces faits parce que ce sont des faits qui ne conviendraient pas à certaines délégations.

13. A cet égard, le représentant du Portugal rappelle que certains représentants ont cité des chiffres relatifs à 1950. Dix ans se sont écoulés, de nombreux événements sont intervenus et les chiffres en question ne sont plus valables.

14. Au cours des débats, M. Nogueira s'est demandé, par moments, si sa réponse, en réalité, s'adresserait aux délégations ou à une brochure, rédigée par le professeur Marvin Harris et intitulée Portugal's African "Wards"^{2/}, qui est la source principale à laquelle les délégations ont puisé leurs conclusions. A la 1036ème séance, le représentant de l'Irak a franchement déclaré qu'il citait cette brochure, mais un grand nombre d'autres délégations l'ont citée sans mentionner ce fait. L'auteur lui-même a reconnu dans la brochure que son ouvrage n'avait pas été écrit avec le souci de l'impartialité et du sang-froid. En d'autres termes, l'ouvrage considéré est tendancieux et partial, et il s'inspire d'idées préconçues. En tant que personne privée, M. Harris a le droit d'écrire ce qu'il veut; mais des délégations parlant au nom de leurs gouvernements n'ont pas le droit d'étayer sur cette seule brochure des accusations sans fondement contre une autre délégation et un autre pays. Il existe un grand nombre de livres sur ce sujet, écrits par des auteurs qui sont également des savants et des hommes intègres, mais tous ces ouvrages ont été laissés de côté. On a fait d'autres citations qui étaient pour le moins approximatives. Le représentant du Ghana, par exemple, en citant à la 1032ème séance un article écrit par M. Sarmento Rodrigues, ancien ministre portugais des provinces d'outre-mer, comme introduction à un ouvrage intitulé Enquête sur l'anti-colonialisme publié en 1957 par le Ministère des provinces d'outre-mer, a lu des passages empruntés à différents paragraphes comme s'ils formaient un seul texte continu. De même, il a cité des passages choisis du même ouvrage empruntés à un écrivain portugais, le professeur da Silva Cunha, de manière à donner l'impression que l'auteur préconisait une vaste conspiration internationale contre l'Afrique, alors qu'en fait celui-ci a suggéré que l'on établisse une sorte de coopération régionale afin de protéger les intérêts de l'Afrique. On s'est aussi beaucoup servi d'un article écrit par le Premier Ministre du Portugal pour la revue Foreign Affairs^{3/}. Cet article a été mentionné maintes fois devant la Commission; M. Nogueira ne s'attachera pas longuement à cette question, mais il tient simplement à déclarer, une fois de plus, que le Premier Ministre avait deux objectifs en écrivant cet article: il voulait essayer de définir l'essentiel du colonialisme, et montrer que le colonialisme n'était pas pratiqué par le Gouvernement portugais.

15. Puisqu'il est question d'erreurs de citation, M. Nogueira voudrait rappeler une déclaration du représentant de la République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie relative à un échange de télégrammes entre l'ancien chef de l'Etat portugais et le chef d'un autre Etat dont ce représentant a conclu que des modifications de frontières avaient été effectuées "autour" du lac Nyassa et que de larges portions de territoire et des populations avaient été échangées. La vérité, c'est que la frontière, non pas autour du lac mais sur le lac Nyassa lui-même — qui est une vaste étendue d'eau de 200 à 250 milles de long et de près de 50 milles de large — n'avait jamais été délimitée et que divers problèmes s'étaient posés en ce qui concerne la juridiction, les pêches, etc. C'est pourquoi il avait été nécessaire de partager ces eaux par une ligne idéale. Lorsque ce travail fut achevé, et l'accord signé, l'échange de télégrammes dont il a été fait mention a eu lieu, comme il est d'usage dans des cas de ce genre. Ni territoires ni populations n'ont été transférés. M. Nogueira est surpris que le représentant de la RSS de Biélorussie ait formulé cette accusation sans fondement et il se demande si ce représen-tant a oublié les remaniements de frontières considérables et les transferts de population très étendus qui ont été exécutés de force après la seconde guerre mondiale, sans contrôle de l'ONU, au profit exclusif d'un puissant pays.

16. Le représentant de l'Irak a soutenu que le Ministre des provinces portugaises d'outre-mer avait des prérogatives spéciales, qu'il existait des différences d'organisation administrative et financière entre les provinces européennes et les provinces d'outre-mer, ces dernières étant les seules à avoir des gouverneurs, et que les provinces d'outre-mer ne faisaient pas vraiment partie intégrante de la nation. En fait, le Ministre des provinces d'outre-mer n'a dans le gouvernement ni position ni pouvoirs spéciaux d'aucune sorte; comme tout autre ministre, il relève du Premier Ministre. Les provinces européennes ont aussi des gouverneurs à leur tête. Quant aux différences d'organisation administrative et financière, elles sont définies par la Constitution. On en trouve du même genre dans toutes les constitutions et elles n'impliquent pas une division ou fragmentation de la souveraineté. Les différences d'organisation financière consistent en ce que les deniers d'une province ne peuvent être dépensés ou transférés ailleurs. Il est donc impossible d'employer les recettes d'un territoire au profit d'un autre — en d'autres termes, de pratiquer ce qu'on appelle, à la Quatrième Commission, l'exploitation économique.

17. Le représentant de l'Irak a cité des passages de la Constitution du Portugal. Il a cependant omis de mentionner certains articles qui stipulent que la souveraineté appartient à la nation, constituée par tous les citoyens portugais, qu'on entend par citoyen portugais toute personne née en territoire portugais au sens de l'article premier de la Constitution, et que l'Etat portugais est un Etat unitaire. De plus, l'article 72 de la Constitution précise que toute la nation participe à la vie politique de l'Etat.

18. Comme plusieurs délégations ont exprimé l'avis que le rapport du Comité spécial des Six vise exclusivement l'Espagne et le Portugal, la délégation portugaise tient à déclarer, premièrement, que les principes énoncés dans le rapport ne s'appliquent pas à son pays et, deuxièmement, qu'elle rejette le rapport dans son ensemble. Une contradiction fondamentale a marqué les travaux du Comité: alors que la Quatrième Commission est opposée au colonialisme où qu'il se trouve, le rapport du Comité spécial ne peut faire l'objet que d'une application discriminatoire, car, les territoires espagnols et portugais mis à part, on ne voit pas à quels autres territoires il pourrait s'appliquer. S'applique-t-il aussi à des pays autrefois indépendants et qui étaient reconnus comme tels par la communauté internationale, mais qui ont été intégrés par la suite sans que l'ONU ait eu droit de regard sur l'opération? D'autres contradictions sont aussi à relever: certaines délégations qui avaient déclaré ne pas pouvoir voter pour certains projets de résolution, à cause de la déclaration anticolonialiste qui doit être discutée en séance plénière, ont fait savoir qu'elles voteraient pour tout projet de résolution dirigé contre l'Espagne et le Portugal. De même, il a été dit que le rapport constituait un guide universel et que chaque cas de territoire serait examiné, mais personne ne semble avoir eu l'idée de parler d'autres pays que l'Espagne et le Portugal. Parce que les territoires portugais d'outre-mer avaient été appelés colonies pendant quelques années, sans que leur structure soit différente, on en a conclu que c'étaient des territoires coloniaux. D'une part, on accuse le Portugal de ne pas respecter l'individualité de ses territoires d'outre-mer et les caractéristiques culturelles de leur population et, d'autre part, on lui reproche de n'avoir pas achevé l'intégration dans certaines provinces. On a dit que le colonialisme existait dans le monde entier et qu'il fallait l'abolir partout, mais personne n'a laissé entendre jusqu'à présent que le rapport devrait également s'appliquer à ce que de nombreuses délégations ont décrit, en séance plénière, comme la pire espèce de colonialisme.

19. M. Nogueira réserve le droit de sa délégation de faire toutes autres observations ou mises au point qui pourraient être nécessaires. Il tient à souligner pour terminer que certaines délégations n'ont pas hésité à diffamier son pays de la manière la plus grave. De toute évidence, les décisions de la Commission sont prises avant que tout débat ait eu lieu; on profère des menaces et les accusateurs sont aussi les juges. Bien que la Commission semble vouloir procéder de façon que toutes les voix de ceux qui ne sont pas de son avis soient étouffées, puis définitivement réduites au silence, la délégation portugaise ne permettra pas que sa voix soit étouffée ou réduite au silence.

20. M. MORSE (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) déclare que la décision que prendra sa délégation sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649 dépendra beaucoup du libellé qui lui sera finalement donné.

21. A son avis, la Commission fait, à tort, tout un monde de l'interprétation juridique des Articles 73 et 74 de la Charte. Puisque ces articles figuraient dans la Charte lorsque l'Espagne et le Portugal ont été admis à l'Organisation, il s'ensuit que ces deux Etats ont par là même assumé les obligations correspondant à la portée juridique des termes employés dans ces articles, et que ces obligations les lient dans la mesure où ces articles ne contiennent pas de clauses limitatives. Dans ces deux articles, le mot "territoires" n'est pas employé dans un sens restreint. Quel que soit le terme employé par un pays pour qualifier ses territoires d'outre-mer, ces territoires peuvent devenir une cause de tension internationale. Or, une des raisons d'être de l'ONU est précisément de permettre de discuter ouvertement des causes des tensions internationales. C'est pourquoi il faut faire un effort pour résoudre à l'amiable le problème des territoires d'outre-mer de l'Espagne et du Portugal.

22. Les auteurs de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte avaient manifestement en vue deux catégories différentes de territoires en parlant des "territoires ... autres que ceux auxquels s'appliquent les Chapitres XII et XIII", et faisaient une distinction entre les territoires sous tutelle et les territoires d'un Etat situés au-delà de ses frontières. Etant donné ce libellé et vu que l'Espagne et le Portugal n'ont exprimé aucune réserve au moment où ils ont été admis à l'Organisation, leur argumentation juridique n'est pas très convaincante lorsqu'ils prétendent que c'est à eux seuls de décider à quels territoires s'applique l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. M. Morse ne conteste pas le droit d'un Etat d'émettre une telle prétention, mais l'ONU a le devoir, en l'occurrence, de porter un jugement sur sa décision. Il est difficile de croire que le Comité spécial des Six ait pu penser qu'un territoire d'outre-mer quel qu'il soit, où un pays exerce sa domination sur la population autochtone, puisse être exclu du champ d'application de son rapport. On ne peut prétendre que le rapport est dirigé exclusivement contre l'Espagne et le Portugal; il se trouve simplement que ces deux pays ne sont pas disposés à communiquer spontanément des renseignements.

23. La délégation des Etats-Unis aimerait que l'on apporte quelques modifications au libellé du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649 pour lui donner un ton plus conciliant. On a déjà fait des progrès dans ce sens, le libellé employé étant loin d'être dictatorial, et il convient en fait de complimenter les auteurs pour les termes modérés et prudents qu'ils ont employés et leur désir évident de rédiger la proposition de façon à obtenir un appui aussi général que possible. Peut-être aussi pourrait-on reconsidérer la liste des territoires. Quelles que soient les modifications effectuées, il faut faire comprendre aux populations assujetties que l'ONU entendra leur voix. La Commission doit mettre au point le moyen qui permettra à tous les gouvernements de trouver à l'ONU les renseignements visés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six. La difficulté est de savoir si les Etats Membres seront disposés à appliquer les principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial à certaines régions du monde.

24. M. WEEKS (Libéria) déclare que sa délégation a eu recours à la procédure diplomatique et à la persuasion pour essayer de convaincre le Portugal de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Le représentant du Portugal essaye d'étayer la position de son gouvernement par des arguties juridiques. De l'avis de la délégation libérienne, les territoires portugais d'Afrique et d'ailleurs sont en fait des colonies dans la pleine acception du terme. Des changements ont été apportés à la Constitution portugaise à seule fin de tourner la Charte.

25. La notion de séparation géographique, évoquée au principe IV du rapport du Comité spécial, s'explique d'elle-même, bien que le représentant du Portugal la mette en doute. Des territoires situés en Afrique ne peuvent être décrits comme une partie de l'Etat portugais.

26. La Quatrième Commission a raison de concentrer son attention sur l'impérialisme et le colonialisme, malgré l'existence d'autres problèmes importants dans le monde, car c'est la seule commission qui se préoccupe d'êtres humains, sans lesquels il n'y aurait aucune collectivité au monde. On n'a donné aucune définition du mot "impérialisme", car il en existe différents types — social, politique, religieux ou commercial — qui détruisent tous les groupes ethniques et sociaux dans les territoires où ils se pratiquent.

27. Le représentant du Portugal a fait allusion à l'exploitation économique comme critère permettant de décider si un territoire est une colonie ou non. La preuve de l'existence d'une telle exploitation est fournie dans une étude intitulée Portugal's African "Wards" qui mentionne notamment les travaux d'une commission envoyée à Lourenço Marques en 1893. On a dit à cette commission que rien ne pouvait être accompli sans un nouveau code du travail, car le travail des indigènes était nécessaire à l'économie de l'Europe et au progrès de l'Afrique, et que les noirs constituaient une race qui n'avait jamais atteint même un rudiment de civilisation par son propre effort spontané.

28. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) demande le nom de l'auteur de cette étude.

29. M. WEEKS (Libéria) répond que le professeur Marvin Harris en est l'auteur.

30. Cette étude contient aussi des données concernant un autre critère du statut colonial, critère admis par le représentant du Portugal, à savoir l'imposition d'une croyance ou d'une idéologie étrangères. En mai 1954, on a adopté, pour les habitants du Mozambique, de l'Angola et de la Guinée portugaise, un statut fixant les conditions d'instruction exigées des individus de race noire ou de leurs descendants, nés et résidant habituellement dans ces provinces. Le processus d'assimilation que sanctionne ce statut constitue une conversion de force à des principes étrangers aux coutumes des autochtones, puisqu'ils sont ainsi requis d'adopter les habitudes et les coutumes relevant du droit commun portugais. Le fait que cette législation ne s'applique pas aux Européens illettrés de ces territoires prouve que tel est vraiment son objectif.

31. M. Weeks sait, pour l'avoir observé, que les territoires africains du Portugal comptent différentes classes de citoyens qui habitent des zones séparées. Le représentant du Portugal ne peut le nier.

32. La souveraineté est une notion absolue. Elle appartient, dans un territoire, à sa population et le droit de cette population de posséder les richesses naturelles de son territoire ne fait, non plus, l'objet d'aucun doute.

33. M. NIKOI (Ghana) déclare ne pas trouver très convaincants les arguments du représentant du Portugal. Si la délégation ghanéenne a cité, au cours de la 1032ème séance, les chiffres de population indiqués dans l'édition révisée de 1956 du livre An African Survey^{4/} de lord Hailey et que ces chiffres ne sont pas à jour, c'est parce que le Portugal a refusé de fournir des chiffres plus récents.

34. Une accusation plus grave, bien qu'indirecte, du représentant du Portugal a concerné des citations d'un livre intitulé Enquête sur l'anticolonialisme, publié en 1957 par le Ministère des provinces d'outre-mer du Gouvernement portugais. Le titre de cet ouvrage officiel est, à vrai dire, assez curieux et, si l'on en ignorait le contenu, on serait tenté de croire que le Portugal est devenu anticolonialiste. En fait, le Gouvernement portugais cherchait à convaincre ses alliés, notamment les Etats-Unis, des dangers inhérents à la révolution anticolonialiste qui déferle sur l'Afrique. Il est vrai qu'en faisant des citations de ce livre, la délégation ghanéenne a laissé de côté certains passages, mais, comme la Commission s'en rendra compte, ces omissions n'ont pas déformé la pensée de l'auteur. Après avoir exposé très clairement, au paragraphe 3 de l'introduction, le but de cet ouvrage, l'auteur, au paragraphe 5, qualifie l'Union sud-africaine de pays indépendant le plus important du continent, étroitement lié à l'Europe; dans le même passage, il dit que le Libéria a des liens étroits avec les Etats-Unis, que l'attitude des pays d'Afrique du Nord n'est pas très nette et que celle du Ghana ne semble guère favorable au maintien de la présence des Européens en Afrique.

^{4/} Oxford University Press, 1957.

35. En citant ce livre, M. Nikoi voulait indiquer un état d'esprit et une manière d'aborder le problème. A son avis, les territoires africains du Portugal constituent des possessions de caractère intégralement impérialiste et colonialiste. Il aurait pu être utile pour la Commission que le représentant du Portugal commente les vues exprimées dans ce livre et dise si elles constituent toujours la politique officielle du Portugal. L'auteur d'une des études du livre, le professeur da Silva Cunha, soutient que, face au mouvement d'indépendance qui soulève l'Afrique, les puissances coloniales devraient collaborer, non seulement afin d'harmoniser leur politique à ce sujet, mais aussi pour mettre au point leur politique intérieure, en ce qui concerne notamment l'attitude et les méthodes d'action adoptées à l'égard des autochtones. Une organisation régionale, qui serait le complément de l'Organisation du Traité de l'Atlantique nord, pourrait servir de base pour une défense commune en Afrique et aiderait à neutraliser l'anticolonialisme qui existe toujours aux Etats-Unis. A la page 263, le professeur da Silva Cunha suggère que le Portugal, qui est membre de l'OTAN et qui, en même temps, est lié à l'Espagne par des traités bilatéraux, prenne l'initiative de la création de cette organisation régionale; la collaboration de l'Espagne, qui jouit d'un grand prestige dans le monde arabe, pourrait contrebalancer les forces de désintégration qui opèrent en Afrique du Nord.

36. Comme on le voit, la délégation ghanéenne ne peut être accusée d'avoir déformé la pensée du professeur da Silva Cunha, qui a préconisé la création d'une organisation régionale afin d'endiguer la marée du nationalisme en Afrique. La délégation portugaise est libre de le nier, mais ce sont les faits et les déclarations des porte-parole officiels du Gouvernement portugais qui ont forcé la délégation ghanéenne à conclure qu'en refusant de coopérer avec l'ONU concernant la communication de renseignements et en réclamant la création d'une organisation régionale d'où seraient exclus les nouveaux Etats indépendants d'Afrique, le Portugal n'a laissé d'autre choix aux pays directement intéressés au bien-être des habitants de l'Afrique que d'envisager les mesures qu'ils doivent prendre dans l'intérêt de tous les Etats africains.

37. M. Nikoi se réserve le droit de revenir sur cette question lorsqu'il aura eu le temps d'étudier plus en détail la déclaration du représentant du Portugal.

38. M. CARPIO (Philippines) propose l'ajournement de la séance conformément à l'article 119 du règlement intérieur.

Par 42 voix contre une, avec 18 abstentions, la proposition est adoptée.

La séance est levée à 18 h 30.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526, A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

DISCUSSION GENERALE (fin)

1. M. NEKIESSA (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) veut, pour répondre à une déclaration faite par le représentant du Portugal, dire pourquoi la délégation ukrainienne avait rappelé que le Portugal tient certains territoires d'Afrique et d'Asie sous sa domination depuis plus de cinq siècles. C'est que la prétendue mission civilisatrice de cet Etat n'a donné que des résultats insignifiants et qu'il n'a rien fait pour améliorer les conditions d'existence des autochtones. En critiquant la déclaration de l'Ukraine, le représentant du Portugal n'a pas pu réfuter les faits certains qu'elle avait avancés: un médecin pour 80.000 habitants et 99 pour 100 d'illettrés en Angola, un seul autochtone sorti de l'Université au Mozambique, sur une population de 6 millions d'habitants, la pratique du travail forcé et des châtiments corporels dans l'ensemble des territoires portugais, etc.

2. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) intervient pour une question d'ordre. Il regrette que le représentant de l'Ukraine répète des arguments que la délégation portugaise n'a pas discutés. Elle a simplement répondu, en usant de son droit le plus strict, aux accusations calomnieuses dont le Portugal avait été l'objet; si certaines délégations persistent à "répondre" à sa défense, il lui faudra alors user d'un "droit de réplique".

3. M. ALWAN (Irak), intervenant pour une question d'ordre, estime que le représentant de l'Ukraine a le droit de répondre à toute allégation du représentant du Portugal.

4. Le PRESIDENT précise qu'il convient, pour le bon ordre des travaux de la Commission, de se limiter à répondre aux arguments avancés par l'une ou l'autre partie, et il prie les membres de la Commission qui désirent user de leur droit de réponse de se borner à préciser la position de leur délégation sur un point particulier.

5. M. NEKIESSA (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) constate que le représentant du Portugal vient de dire qu'il n'a pas discuté les données de l'Ukraine. Lui-même ne conteste pas à la délégation portugaise le droit de répondre. Mais il eut été plus simple, au lieu de jeter le doute sur les sources ou les auteurs des renseignements cités par la délégation ukrainienne, de réfuter ces renseignements s'ils ne sont pas exacts. La manœuvre qui consiste à jeter un doute sur la source des renseignements donnés n'est pas le fait du hasard: elle vise à détourner l'attention de la Commission du problème principal; mais la Commission ne se laissera pas distraire. M. Nekiessa est convaincu en effet qu'au moment où les empires coloniaux s'écroulent dans le monde entier le Portugal ne peut pas être le seul pays à maintenir sa position, et que toutes les colonies qu'il occupe accèderont finalement à l'indépendance.

6. M. ALWAN (Irak) pense, comme le représentant des Etats-Unis, que certains territoires sont une cause de tension internationale. Le représentant du Portugal s'est plaint des accusations et des attaques de diverses délégations contre son pays; si la délégation irakienne a critiqué le Portugal, ce n'est pas par hostilité, mais pour indiquer ce que le Gouvernement irakien pense des prétendues provinces d'outremer du Portugal, en employant comme critères les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport (A/4526) du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Il pense qu'il faut accorder tout le soutien possible aux peuples africains qui ont perdu leur liberté à la suite de conquêtes étrangères, et, conformément aux buts et principes de la Charte, assurer à ces peuples la liberté politique qui les mènera plus rapidement à l'indépendance. Le représentant du Portugal peut critiquer cette politique, mais le Gouvernement irakien, pour sa part, est résolu à ne jamais s'en écarter.

7. M. Nogueira s'est efforcé de démentir que les habitants africains des territoires portugais soient classés en "civilisés" et "non civilisés". Or, on peut lire à l'article 2 du statut du 20 mai 1954 s'appliquant aux autochtones portugais des provinces de Guinée, d'Angola et du Mozambique que les personnes de race noire ou leurs descendants qui sont nés ou résident habituellement dans lesdites provinces et qui ne possèdent pas encore l'instruction et les habitudes sociales et individuelles requises pour l'application intégrale du droit public et privé applicable aux citoyens portugais sont considérés comme étant "indigènes".

8. Au cours du débat général à l'Assemblée plénière, le représentant du Portugal a affirmé que la politique de son pays s'inspirait des idéaux de la chrétienté, des sentiments de fraternité, du concept de l'égalité des droits, de la supériorité des valeurs morales et de la dignité de l'homme. Les autorités portugaises puisent-elles leurs inspirations à ces sources pour pratiquer la torture, restreindre la liberté de déplacement, organiser le travail forcé, élever des barrières discriminatoires contre la population noire de leurs colonies, et jeter à la mer des multitudes d'êtres humains pour la simple raison qu'elles les jugent indésirables? En vérité, ni le Portugal, ni aucune autre puissance coloniale n'a besoin d'expliquer son action "civilisatrice" en Afrique: les atrocités commises, notamment par les colonisateurs portugais, parlent d'elles-mêmes.

9. La délégation irakienne n'est pas mue par la haine, ni par le désir de supplanter le Portugal en Afrique, mais par l'amour de la liberté et le respect de la personne humaine. Bien plus, elle ne condamne pas le Portugal, mais désire seulement l'aider à suivre une voie juste et humaine, digne d'un pays européen, pour consolider la paix et la sécurité internationales et éviter une nouvelle Algérie. Car il faut sans tarder résoudre les problèmes des peuples dépendants dans le cadre de l'ONU. Le représentant du Portugal a critiqué l'attitude de la délégation irakienne; cette attitude n'a pourtant rien de comparable à celle de la délégation portugaise, qui n'a cessé de refuser, de défier et de rejeter avec mépris toute action de l'Assemblée générale et de manifester son intention de ne tenir aucun compte de ses résolutions, en violation flagrante de la Charte des Nations Unies. Le représentant du Portugal a essayé de réfuter des faits irréfutables, mais il n'a jamais nié les tortures arbitraires infligées aux Africains, la législation du travail forcé, les restrictions apportées à la liberté des populations autochtones et la discrimination scolaire. Ces pratiques inhumaines, qui ont reçu force de loi, ont pour but de réduire au silence les populations autochtones et de perpétuer la domination portugaise. Il est temps que la Commission mette en œuvre les principes de la Charte, par simple solidarité humaine.

10. Mlle SAFFOURI (Jordanie) estime que le représentant du Portugal à la Quatrième Commission, ne pouvant pas être le porte-parole de la population autochtone des colonies portugaises, a certainement le droit, en qualité de représentant du seul territoire métropolitain, de soutenir comme il l'entend, et avec l'énergie du désespoir, que le Portugal et ses provinces d'outre-mer ne constituent qu'une seule et même nation et que le Portugal n'a donc pas à communiquer de renseignements sur ses territoires. Mais l'opinion du monde entier lui répondra que cette thèse est sans valeur. Un référendum prouverait que ces colonies n'ont rien de commun avec le Portugal.

11. Les territoires sous administration portugaise remplissent les conditions énoncées au principe IV du rapport du Comité spécial des Six, et sont donc bien des colonies; en refusant de communiquer les renseignements prévus à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, le Portugal enfreint donc purement et simple-ment les principes que les Nations Unies sont unanimement tenues de respecter. Quoi que dise le représentant du Portugal, la délégation jordanienne estime que le maintien du régime colonial ne peut que mettre la paix en danger. Devant le fait irréfutable que le Portugal ne cherche, en critiquant les conclusions auxquelles ont abouti de nombreuses délégations, qu'à justifier à tout prix un régime voué à l'échec, l'ONU doit convaincre le Portugal de ne plus s'opposer à la marche de l'histoire, et de faire face, comme toutes les puissances administrantes, à l'obligation qui lui incombe de communiquer les renseignements prévus au Chapitre XI de la Charte.

12. M. KOUDRYAVTSEV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) constate que le représentant du Portugal s'est efforcé de nier ou de contester les données les plus convaincantes que l'on ait citées au cours de la discussion, données qui témoignent de la situation terrible dans laquelle se trouvent les autochtones des colonies portugaises, exploités sans merci et soumis à la discrimination raciale et à la haine. Mais on ne peut nier l'indéniable; c'est pourquoi le représentant du Portugal, tout en démentant purement et simplement les faits indiqués par certaines délégations, a admis ceux que citaient d'autres, mais pour leur enlever toute valeur. Cette manœuvre, nouveau "baiser de Judas", est vouée à l'échec. C'est ainsi que le représentant du Portugal a tenté d'"expliquer" certains faits cités par la délégation biélorussienne, comme pour en minimiser l'importance. Il a expliqué une rectification de frontière dans la région du lac Nyassa par le désir que les Portugais avaient de bénéficier des ressources de la pêche dans ce lac, et il a dit que la délégation biélorussienne se trompait en croyant qu'il s'agissait d'une expansion territoriale. Mais les faits parlent d'eux-mêmes: on ne peut pas nier le télégramme adressé au premier ministre Salazar par le Président de la République portugaise pendant le survol des régions nouvellement acquises. Certes, cette expansion territoriale est limitée, mais elle existe, et au moment même où les peuples coloniaux d'Afrique brisent les chaînes des colonisateurs.

13. M. CABA (Guinée) regrette que le représentant du Portugal n'ait pas pu, et pour cause, indiquer combien d'Angolais siègent, au même titre que les députés portugais, au Parlement de Lisbonne. Mais cela ne veut pas dire que les prétendues provinces portugaises soient toujours isolées: des voix de plus en plus autorisées suivent de très près l'évolution politique des masses de l'Angola, du Mozambique, de la Guinée et d'ailleurs; elles étudient avec attention les documents de la police portugaise et de l'Assemblée nationale de Lisbonne. S'il est bien vrai, comme l'a déclaré son gouverneur, que l'Angola fait partie du territoire national portugais, qu'il est régi par la même constitution et par les mêmes lois que la métropole, le représentant du Portugal peut, au lieu de lancer un défi à l'ONU, donner des preuves irréfutables de l'égalité absolue de la population des territoires africains avec celle de la métropole. Mais, même dans la métropole, la politique du Gouvernement portugais est condamnée: M. Miguel Bastos, député portugais, déclarant à l'Assemblée nationale, le 6 avril 1951, que le Portugal n'a pas de colonies et qu'il forme avec l'outre-mer une seule et même nation, invite le gouvernement à avoir une politique réaliste et demande au nom de quels principes il reste attaché à une appellation devenue trompeuse.

14. Aucun changement d'appellation ne peut suffire à cacher la réalité. En 1958, l'écrivain américain John Gunther a dénoncé le régime du travail forcé, qui n'est qu'une nouvelle forme d'esclavage et rabaisse l'homme au rang de bétail; à l'iniquité du système s'ajoute d'ailleurs la vénalité des fonctionnaires chargés d'embaucher les travailleurs. Chaque année, les autorités portugaises envoient, en contrepartie d'un milliard de francs or, 100.000 travailleurs volontaires dans les mines d'or du Transvaal et 40.000 en Rhodésie; mais depuis quand ces travailleurs sont-ils "volontaires"?

15. Le représentant du Portugal a demandé qu'on lui cite les documents qui classent la population en cinq catégories. Ces documents existent, et sont connus de ceux qui s'inquiètent de l'avenir des territoires portugais d'Afrique. Dans un reportage publié dans le Soir de Bruxelles du 29 août 1957 et dans le Figaro du 22 septembre 1957, P. et R. Gosset expliquent que, dans les territoires portugais, les "assimilados" ont rang de citoyens, c'est-à-dire qu'ils ont droit à l'instruction, paient l'impôt, peuvent envoyer leurs enfants dans les mêmes écoles que les enfants blancs et sortir dans la rue après 21 heures; mais il n'y a que 5.000 "assimilados" en Angola, soit un sur 1.000, après cinq siècles de domination portugaise. L'article 2 du statut du 20 mai 1954 — cité par le représentant de l'Irak — les nombreuses lois spéciales et le code du travail indigène sanctionnent, ne serait-ce que par leur titre, la notion de discrimination raciale. D'après les rapports annuels des autorités portugaises d'Afrique, il y a au Mozambique 87.605 blancs, jaunes, Indiens ou métis, qui sont tous "civilisés", et 5.651.306 noirs, dont 4.349 seulement sont "civilisés". D'après les statistiques de l'enseignement pour les années scolaires 1956-1957 et 1957-1958, il y avait 13.642 élèves blancs, 5.148 mulâtres et 6.835 noirs seulement dans les écoles primaires de l'Angola: 178 noirs seulement fréquentaient les établissements d'enseignement secondaire, tant publics que privés, du territoire. Le représentant du Portugal prétend encore que son pays poursuit une politique pacifique; or le Gouverneur de l'Angola a déclaré, le 26 avril 1959, que la paix n'est actuellement possible que si les Etats ont des armées qui leur permettent de lutter contre les menées des agitateurs communistes — ce qui signifierait que tous les chefs nationalistes sont des agitateurs communistes — que, pour se défendre, le Portugal doit avoir une armature militaire solide, et que ses troupes doivent être moralement fortes pour résister aux diverses propagandes, ce qui implique que le Gouverneur reconnaît la puissance d'expansion des forces de progrès qui luttent pour l'indépendance.

16. Ces faits et ces chiffres démontrent que les arguments portugais sont inventés de toutes pièces et ne trompent personne. Il est inutile d'en citer d'autres au moment où la Commission est prête à adopter les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six et à les faire appliquer, aux termes du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649, dans les territoires non autonomes du Portugal. M. Caba est certain que ce projet sera adopté à l'unanimité, mais également certain que le Portugal ne voudra pas le mettre en application. La délégation guinéenne prend note de ce défi, mais elle tient à assurer le Gouvernement portugais qu'il est de son intérêt de desserrer les chaînes et de libérer ses colonies, qui accèderont à l'indépendance tôt ou tard, malgré même l'armée portugaise. M. Caba demande à la délégation portugaise et aux délégations des puissances colonialistes d'entendre son appel: il faut que les responsables de la politique portugaise cessent de s'obstiner et participent à la liquidation du colonialisme, fait majeur de la deuxième moitié du XXème siècle.

M. Pachachi (Irak) prend la présidence.

17. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) souligne que ce sont des délégations qui ont pris l'initiative des accusations qui se servent du droit de réponse. Ce droit revient à juste titre à la délégation portugaise, qui a fait l'objet d'attaques féroces et calomnieuses. Les délégations accusatrices ont actuellement recours au droit de contre-réponse pour répéter les mêmes attaques. La délégation portugaise se réserve donc le droit de revenir sur ces déclarations autant de fois qu'il le faudra pour les réfuter toutes. D'autre part, la délégation portugaise ne croit pas avoir abusé de la parole, surtout si l'on considère le grand nombre et la longueur des interventions faites par les délégations accusatrices. Certains prétendent que les discours de M. Nogueira n'ont trompé ni convaincu personne. On peut alors se demander pourquoi tant de représentants ont tenu à y répondre. La vérité est peut-être que ses paroles ont si bien persuadé les délégations de bonne foi que de nouvelles attaques ont paru nécessaires.

18. A la séance précédente, le représentant du Ghana a jugé bon de relever des remarques que M. Nogueira aurait faites après une intervention antérieure du Ghana. M. Nogueira ne voit pas pourquoi le représentant du Ghana a jugé nécessaire de répondre. M. Nogueira n'avait nullement contesté les citations de l'ouvrage de lord Hailey, car elles étaient exactes. Ce qu'il avait contesté, c'était l'exactitude des citations de l'article de M. Sarmiento Rodrigues: en effet, ces citations avaient été présentées comme si elles constituaient un texte unique d'un seul tenant, ce qui n'était pas le cas. Ce point n'a pas été réfuté par le représentant du Ghana. De même, les citations du professeur da Silva Cunha avaient été présentées comme si elles constituaient un seul texte, alors que les deux citations en question étaient à plusieurs pages de distance. M. Nogueira ne conteste pas le droit du représentant du Ghana d'interpréter ces citations comme il le juge bon, mais la délégation portugaise a également le droit de faire observer de quelle manière ces citations ont été présentées.

19. Le représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine a admis que le Portugal est présent outre-mer depuis cinq siècles. M. Nogueira a constaté ce fait sans en tirer aucune conclusion, de sorte que le représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine n'avait aucune raison de répéter ses dénigrements et ses accusations erronées tirées d'une brochure que l'on a prouvé être un écrit partial et passionné. On a accusé la délégation portugaise de recourir à des manœuvres et à des ruses et d'obscurcir le débat. La délégation portugaise rejette cette allégation et tient à demander si les délégations accusatrices — qui semblent sacrées — ne recourent pas à toutes sortes de ruses et de manœuvres. La délégation portugaise n'a certainement pas l'habitude de se permettre des affirmations de pure propagande.

20. Le représentant de l'Irak a répété que la population était divisée en "civilisés" et "non civilisés" comme si la délégation portugaise n'avait rien dit sur ce point. M. Nogueira est donc obligé de réaffirmer que la loi portugaise ne fait aucune distinction de ce genre; la répétition d'une telle allégation n'est rien d'autre que de la propagande. Quant à l'accusation ridicule selon laquelle les autorités portugaises auraient jeté à la mer des multitudes d'êtres humains, M. Nogueira traite par le mépris des affirmations aussi absurdes. Il tient, d'autre part, à souligner qu'il n'a jamais dit que la politique de son pays s'inspire des idéaux de la chrétienté, des sentiments de fraternité ou de la supériorité des valeurs morales. Il ne nie pas ces idéaux. Mais il n'en a jamais parlé. Pourquoi dire alors le contraire? Il n'a jamais déclaré non plus, ni même donné à entendre, que son pays ne tiendrait aucun compte des résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. C'est là une accusation que nul ne devrait porter à la légère.

21. D'autres représentants se sont étonnés de l'émotion avec laquelle M. Nogueira avait parlé. Pouvait-il en être autrement lorsque le Portugal se voyait attaqué si féroce? La remarque de la représentante de la Jordanie, selon laquelle il luttait avec l'énergie du désespoir, était déplacée. Il n'a peut-être pas présenté ses arguments aussi bien qu'il le désirait, mais il n'éprouvait aucun sentiment de désespoir. Il s'étonne aussi d'entendre parler de l'opinion publique dans une commission: il pensait que seuls siégeaient à la Commission des représentants de gouvernements, qui n'exprimaient que l'avis officiel de leur gouvernement. Il s'étonne en outre que la représentante de la Jordanie ait répété qu'elle ne changerait pas d'opinion "quoique puisse dire le représentant du Portugal". M. Nogueira n'a-t-il pas alors le droit de penser et de dire que la délégation jordanienne avait arrêté son opinion avant même d'avoir entendu la délégation portugaise?

22. Quant au représentant de la RSS de Biélorussie, qui n'a d'ailleurs pas qualité, semble-t-il, pour parler au nom des délégations que la délégation portugaise aurait selon lui attaquées, s'il juge que les méthodes et la procédure suivies par la délégation portugaise sont inutiles, pourquoi est-il revenu sur les explications fournies par elle au sujet de la fixation de la frontière sur le lac Nyassa? Il a d'ailleurs reconnu que la délimitation concernait le lac même et n'a donc entraîné ni modification de la frontière terrestre, ni déplacement de population. Il est naturel que des parties qui utilisent une masse d'eau non délimitée juridiquement ou techniquement conviennent d'éviter les conflits locaux en décidant de la ligne où s'arrêtent les droits de l'une et ceux de l'autre. De toute manière, et en admettant l'optique du représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine, cette prétendue expansion colonialiste ne se serait faite qu'aux dépens d'une autre puissance coloniale.

23. M. Nogueira constate d'autre part que le représentant de la Guinée n'a pas encore précisé le titre et le numéro de la loi qui distinguerait dans la population cinq catégories de personnes; il semble d'ailleurs ne s'agir plus d'une loi, mais d'un document. Sans doute faudrait-il croire sur parole toutes les affirmations de ce représentant et admettre en particulier la présence en Angola d'une armée de 60.000 hommes, chiffre qui dépasse celui de l'ensemble des forces militaires de la nation portugaise. Il est également assez étrange de prouver l'existence de pratiques discriminatoires en disant que les jaunes, les Indiens et les métis ont tous les droits ou que les écoles accueillent des élèves blancs et des élèves noirs. Le représentant de la Guinée, et donc le Gouvernement guinéen, affirment ne rien ignorer de ce qui se passe dans l'administration, la police ou le Parlement portugais; le Gouvernement portugais ne manquera pas de tirer les conséquences de cette affirmation. Pour ce qui est du travail forcé, le représentant du Portugal en nie énergiquement l'existence dans aucun des territoires portugais, et se réserve le droit de répondre plus tard sur ce point de façon plus détaillée. Il remarque pour l'instant qu'un gouvernement qui a déclaré à la Conférence internationale du travail, qui s'est tenue à Genève en 1959, que, dans la jeune République de Guinée, le travail libre est obligatoire pour les citoyens, n'a pas l'autorité morale qu'il faudrait pour porter d'aussi graves accusations contre le Gouvernement portugais.

24. M. CABA (Guinée) n'est nullement convaincu par les arguments du représentant du Portugal. Ignorant la loi ouvrière de la Guinée, M. Nogueira n'a pas compris le sens du mot "obligatoire" dans la phrase qu'il a citée après l'avoir détachée de son contexte. Le Gouvernement guinéen s'honore en effet d'être l'un de ceux qui s'efforcent de bâtir une nation africaine sur des bases démocratiques et selon les vœux de sa population. Le représentant du Portugal, qui parle d'égalité absolue mais dont le paternalisme ne trompe personne, serait plus persuasif s'il répondait par des chiffres aux deux questions précises que M. Caba lui a posées sur le nombre des autochtones de l'Angola et du Mozambique qui siègent au Parlement de Lisbonne ou qui font partie de la délégation portugaise à l'ONU.

25. M. KANAKARATNE (Ceylan) aimerait également connaître la réponse à ces deux questions.

26. Le PRESIDENT fait observer que chaque représentant est libre de répondre ou de ne pas répondre aux questions qui lui sont posées.

27. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) ajoute que sa délégation est libre non seulement de répondre ou non, mais aussi de choisir pour répondre le moment qu'elle jugera le meilleur.

28. Le PRESIDENT prononce la clôture de la discussion générale sur le point 38 de l'ordre du jour.

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (A/C.4/L.648 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.649)

Projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1

29. M. ALWAN (Irak) présente le projet de résolution publié sous la cote A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, lequel, en facilitant l'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte, permettrait de mettre un terme à une controverse qui dure depuis des années.

30. Le Comité spécial des Six où étaient représentés trois Membres administrants et trois Membres non administrants, ne pouvait, de par sa composition même, faire preuve que d'une parfaite objectivité; il a énoncé avec clarté les 12 principes auxquels il avait abouti; l'Assemblée générale peut donc exprimer sans réserve sa satisfaction des travaux du Comité spécial. Les deux derniers paragraphes du dispositif du projet de résolution ne prêtant à aucune controverse, M. Alwan espère que ce projet fera l'unanimité.

31. M. ZULOAGA (Venezuela) estime que le projet de résolution que la Commission examine ne concerne à peu près que le Portugal, puisque la délégation espagnole a laissé entendre à la 1038ème séance qu'elle serait, dans certaines conditions, disposée à communiquer les renseignements prévus. Le représentant du Portugal est donc parfaitement fondé à faire des déclarations aussi détaillées qu'il voudra pour réfuter les conclusions du Comité spécial des Six et celles des délégations qui les ont approuvées. Quand le représentant du Portugal reproche au représentant du Ghana, comme il l'a fait à la 1041ème séance, de fausser le sens d'une citation en retranchant 14 lignes du texte, M. Zuloaga ne pense pas que l'argument intéresse vraiment le fond de la question. Mais le représentant du Portugal, qui a longuement critiqué à la 1036ème séance l'interprétation que le Comité spécial des Six donne du Chapitre XI de la Charte, répond lui-même au Comité spécial en faisant l'exégèse de la Charte tout entière, exégèse qui ne peut, sans que le représentant du Portugal l'ait cherché de propos délibéré, que rendre plus confuse encore l'interprétation du texte. M. Zuloaga sait que, dans le cas d'une convention ordinaire dont l'analyse soulève des difficultés, on peut souvent faire appel à ses auteurs eux-mêmes. Mais la Charte a pour auteurs des Etats et non des particuliers, ce qui rend ce recours impossible, d'autant que le sens que certains Etats donnent aux dispositions de la Charte a pu changer depuis la Conférence de San Francisco. C'est ainsi que la délégation australienne et la délégation philippine, par exemple, donnent actuellement du Chapitre XI une interprétation légèrement différente, moins libérale peut-être, que celle qu'elles en donnaient à San Francisco. Devant cette évolution constante, l'Assemblée générale a bien fait de décider, à sa quatorzième session, de charger un comité d'éclaircir une fois pour toutes le sens de ces dispositions. M. Zuloaga rappelle à ce propos que la délégation du Royaume-Uni s'était longtemps opposée à la création d'un comité de cet ordre, avant d'adopter à cet égard l'attitude inverse.

32. Pour la délégation vénézuélienne, les conclusions du rapport du Comité spécial sont toutes constructives, sauf les réserves du Royaume-Uni. Sur ce point, le représentant du Venezuela reprend à son compte l'argumentation présentée par le représentant de la Nigéria à la 1035ème séance, selon laquelle il est difficile de concevoir une situation où des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel pourraient limiter la portée des renseignements communiqués par un territoire donné. On ne voit en effet pas très bien quelles difficultés une puissance administrante pourrait éprouver à se procurer des renseignements auprès du gouvernement d'un territoire. Le représentant du Venezuela espère donc que la délégation du Royaume-Uni ne maintiendra pas ses réserves.

33. M. Zuloaga estime donc que la Commission n'a plus à se perdre en discussions juridiques — ces discussions qui n'empêchent jamais une situation de s'aggraver — mais que les principes du Comité spécial des Six doivent permettre à l'ONU d'amener sans conflit à la pleine autonomie les territoires non autonomes.

34. M. KENNEDY (Irlande) pense que la Commission devrait pouvoir sans difficulté adopter à l'unanimité un projet de résolution qui, souligne-t-il, ne vise directement aucun de ses membres, et ne fait aucune allusion à la politique que suivent les divers Etats Membres. Il s'agit simplement d'approuver les 12 principes énoncés avec clarté et concision dans le document A/4526, et déjà approuvés par les six membres du Comité spécial. Il ne s'agit pas encore d'aborder le problème de l'application de ces principes; à cet égard, les auteurs du projet de résolution

A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1 s'en remettent d'ailleurs, comme l'indique le paragraphe 3 du dispositif, à la décision des Etats Membres, "compte tenu, dans chaque cas, des faits et des circonstances".

35. Les principes énoncés sont d'autant plus importants que les six membres du Comité spécial ont dû se heurter à maintes difficultés avant de s'entendre à l'unanimité sur cette question épineuse, et M. Kennedy exprime ses remerciements à chacune des délégations intéressées, qu'il aurait du reste souhaité voir se joindre aux auteurs du projet de résolution.

36. M. Kennedy regrette qu'au cours de la discussion générale, la Commission ne se soit pas attardée davantage aux principes proprement dits, ce qui aurait mieux fait ressortir comme ils montrent bien combien a évolué la façon d'envisager les dispositions de la Charte. M. Kennedy estime que le principe IV est sans doute le plus important, puisqu'il détermine où il existe à priori l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements; ce principe a pour compléments les principes VII, VIII et IX.

37. La délégation irlandaise a tenu à figurer parmi les auteurs du projet de résolution, d'autant plus que ces principes correspondent dans leurs grandes lignes aux thèses que le Gouvernement irlandais avait soutenues dans sa réponse au Secrétaire général (A/AC.100/1/Add.1, par. 3 à 7).

38. La délégation irlandaise attend beaucoup du rôle que l'Organisation doit jouer à l'égard des peuples dépendants, pour lesquels elle a encore beaucoup à faire; en adoptant ces 12 principes, la Quatrième Commission pourra aider considérablement à la réalisation des fins du Chapitre XI.

39. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) estime que les "considérations générales" dont le Comité spécial des Six fait état aux paragraphes 16 à 20 de son rapport sont tout aussi importantes que les principes qu'il énonce ensuite; il ressort de cette partie du rapport que l'indépendance est une des aspirations légitimes de chaque nation et que la Charte est un document vivant; or c'est ce que la délégation iranienne a toujours soutenu. Il conviendrait donc peut-être de dire, au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1: "Approuve les considérations générales de la subdivision A et les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six".

40. Quant aux principes eux-mêmes, les principes IV et V sont particulièrement importants, puisqu'ils suffisent à dissiper tous les doutes sur la nécessité de recevoir de tous les pays administrants des renseignements sur les territoires ainsi définis. Du fait que ces principes, une fois adoptés, ne seront plus ceux du Comité spécial des Six, mais ceux de l'Assemblée générale tout entière, il s'impose d'étudier avec un soin particulier les paragraphes du rapport du Comité spécial où sont mentionnées des réserves. La délégation iranienne juge spécialement pertinentes les réserves faites au paragraphe 14 par le représentant du Maroc. Il faut naturellement éviter que la "libre association" ou "l'intégration" puissent jamais servir de prétexte à l'annexion d'un Etat par un autre. Il convient également, dans le cas de l'intégration, d'être sûr qu'il y aura, entre les deux populations, "l'égalité complète" dont il est question au principe VIII. Le Comité spécial a justement prévu un certain nombre de garanties qui ont l'entière approbation de la délé-gation iranienne, mais M. Rahnema croit qu'il faudrait donner plus de poids à l'éventualité du contrôle de l'ONU et remplacer peut-être la dernière phrase de l'énoncé du principe IX par la phrase suivante: "Il est souhaitable que, dans certains cas, ces procédures se déroulent sous le contrôle de l'ONU." On garantirait alors le libre choix de populations parfaitement au courant de leur statut. M. Rahnema ajoute que le rôle de l'ONU revêt la même importance dans le cas d'une "libre association" et qu'il faudrait peut-être dire, à la première phrase du principe VII: "La libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question, exprimé par des méthodes démocratiques et éclairées, et, là où il le faudrait, sous le contrôle de l'ONU."

41. Il ne s'agit pas d'amendements officiels, mais M. Rahnema aimerait entendre l'avis de la Commission sur les idées qu'il vient d'émettre.

La séance est levée à 13 h 10.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526, A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION
 (A/C.4/L.648 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

Projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1 (suite)

1. M. SALAMANCA (Bolivie) rappelle que, lors de la discussion générale, il a déjà exposé les raisons pour lesquelles sa délégation approuve le rapport du Comité spécial des Six (A/4526) chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Les principes figurant dans la subdivision B de la section V de ce rapport sont pleinement conformes à l'Article 73 de la Charte, qui est applicable à la fois aux Etats qui se considèrent comme responsables de l'administration de territoires non autonomes et à ceux qui ne se considèrent pas comme tels.

2. Le représentant du Portugal a fait valoir que certains des critères mentionnés dans les principes, et notamment celui de la séparation géographique et des différences ethniques ou culturelles, ne peuvent pas avoir de validité universelle. Mais il n'a pas parlé des éléments de caractère économique ou historique dont il est question au principe V. Au début de l'expansion coloniale, les puissances coloniales ont été animées par des motifs économiques et non pas philanthropiques. Que la conquête portugaise remonte à environ 500 ans ne change rien à ce fait.

3. Le simple fait que le Portugal outoute autre puissance qualifie ses territoires de provinces ne les soustrait pas à la compétence de l'ONU et il ne s'ensuit pas non plus que l'ONU peut être considérée comme intervenant dans les affaires relevant de la compétence nationale. Tout ce que désire la Quatrième Commission, c'est qu'on lui fournisse des renseignements. La Charte n'envisage pas de coercition. C'est le fait que le Portugal ne soit pas disposé à communiquer des renseignements qui met ce pays dans une situation embarrassante.

4. Le Comité spécial des Six, qui était composé de Membres administrants et de Membres non administrants, a mené à bien une tâche difficile en élaborant le texte des 12 principes et toute modification qui leur serait apportée détruirait l'équilibre réalisé. La délégation de la Bolivie n'est donc pas favorable à des propositions de modification de ces principes; elle pense que tout amendement ne ferait que rendre leur adoption plus difficile. A son avis, la Commission doit, tout d'abord, établir la règle qui doit la guider, puis s'occuper des cas auxquels cette règle s'applique. Il est très important que les principes rencontrent une approbation unanime et il est nécessaire également que la Commission puisse compter sur la bonne volonté des Membres administrants.

5. L'amendement présenté par le Togo et la Tunisie (A/C.4/L.650) au sujet du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1 procède de bonnes intentions, mais le représentant de la Bolivie serait heureux de savoir si, d'après le Secrétariat, la procédure préconisée par cet amendement peut être pratiquement mise en œuvre et si elle serait coûteuse. Il serait également utile de connaître l'avis du Comité spécial des Six sur cette proposition.

6. Le PRESIDENT déclare que l'amendement en question est de caractère général. La question des dépenses serait étudiée au moment où l'Assemblée générale examinerait chaque cas.

7. U TIN MAUNG (Birmanie) déclare qu'à l'heure actuelle l'Assemblée générale ne peut se permettre d'être indécise sur la question de savoir si l'Organisation a le pouvoir de déterminer quels sont les territoires visés par l'Article 73.

8. Sa délégation appuie le projet de résolution, qui reflète nettement l'opinion générale de la Commission. Il est vrai que le représentant du Royaume-Uni a formulé, au sujet des principes IX, X et XI, des réserves qui ont eu malheureusement pour effet d'affaiblir les principes. Mais, comme ce représentant a annoncé qu'il acceptait les principes, la délégation de la Birmanie présume que celle du Royaume-Uni ne sera pas la dernière à désirer que ces principes soient immédiatement suivis en ce qui concerne certains territoires, afin de déterminer si l'obligation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable ou non.

9. Le projet de résolution est clair et simple; son but essentiel est que l'Assemblée générale donne une approbation officielle aux principes énoncés par le Comité spécial qui seraient appliqués ensuite compte tenu dans chaque cas des circonstances. La mention, au deuxième alinéa du préambule, de la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe à la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale a une importance particulière. Les 12 principes serviront de guide et devraient permettre à l'ONU d'aider les territoires non autonomes à atteindre les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte, la seule garantie contre les manquements étant une vigilance incessante. Tous les Etats Membres conscients de leurs obligations doivent prendre leur part de la responsabilité collective qu'ont les Nations Unies dans le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité et relever franchement le défi qui vient de certains Membres.

10. L'amendement du Togo et de la Tunisie n'améliorerait pas le projet de résolution; la délégation de la Birmanie ne peut donc lui accorder son appui et elle votera pour le projet de résolution tel qu'il est rédigé.

11. M. DIALLO (Mali) déclare qu'il comprend fort bien que certaines délégations craignent que la Commission ne soit saisie d'une série d'amendements qui déformeraient les 12 principes énoncés. Mais l'amendement présenté par le Togo et la Tunisie est d'un grand intérêt parce que son seul but est de renforcer une disposition que le Comité spécial des Six a lui-même prévue. Il est en fait hautement souhaitable qu'il y ait un contrôle de l'ONU pour une question aussi importante que l'intégration d'un pays à un autre. Le cas des territoires dits provinces d'outre-mer est un cas d'intégration arbitraire que la délégation du Mali considère comme illégal. Si l'ONU contrôle un processus d'intégration afin de s'assurer qu'il repose sur le suffrage universel des adultes, elle saura à quoi s'en tenir s'il y a par la suite des protestations. C'est là un point très important et la délégation du Mali appuiera l'amendement présenté par le Togo et la Tunisie.

12. Bien que, dans sa déclaration à la 1033^{ème} séance, M. Diallo ait rendu hommage au Comité spécial pour la clarté et la précision de son rapport, il ne peut appuyer sans réserve le projet de résolution examiné et il estime devoir expliquer cette apparente contradiction.

13. La plupart des délégations, y compris la délégation du Portugal, ont déclaré que le rapport du Comité spécial était, pour le moins, acceptable. La seule question qui se pose est, par conséquent, celle de l'application des principes figurant dans le rapport. La délégation du Mali est en faveur de l'adoption d'une résolution unique dont le dispositif, après avoir approuvé les 12 principes, indiquerait des solutions concrètes et utiles. Mais cette méthode n'est pas du goût de certains amis des colonialistes portugais et espagnols, qui n'ont pas hésité à user de pressions pour que deux projets de résolution distincts soient présentés, ce qui leur permettrait d'appuyer un texte vague et sans valeur pratique et de ne pas avoir à trahir le Portugal et l'Espagne en votant pour un projet de résolution condamnant ces Etats en termes clairs et vigoureux.

14. La délégation du Mali s'abstiendra sur le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, afin de montrer qu'elle ne veut pas être associée à de belles déclarations de principes dont le seul mérite est d'être inoffensives et qu'elle a vu clair dans les manœuvres des puissances qui soutiennent les ennemis des peuples d'Afrique. L'Afrique reconnaîtra ses amis et ses ennemis. Les nationalistes des colonies portugaises sont pleinement conscients de la futilité de résolutions unanimes qui n'apportent aucun soulagement concret aux habitants de ces colonies.

15. Lorsqu'il a dit à la Commission que son pays ne fournirait pas les renseignements requis, le représentant du Portugal se sentait assuré de pouvoir compter sur la sollicitude amicale des puissances qui manœuvrent sans cesse pour protéger l'Espagne et le Portugal, discréditant ainsi toute l'Organisation des Nations Unies. La délégation du Mali se réserve de dénoncer ces puissances le moment venu.

16. M. CARPIO (Philippines) indique qu'il votera pour le projet de résolution qui a été rédigé très soigneusement et dont le texte est sobre et dépourvu du caractère passionné qui a caractérisé certaines des déclarations faites à la Commission. La délégation philippine approuve les principes reproduits à l'annexe du projet de résolution parce qu'elle estime qu'ils constituent un pas dans la bonne voie et aideront à résoudre un problème très controversé qui se pose depuis longtemps.

17. Cependant, certaines observations s'imposent. Les mots "qui étaient alors connus comme étant de type colonial", au principe I, réduisent la portée de la première phrase du principe II et ôtent de la souplesse à la qualification de "document vivant" appliquée à la Charte au paragraphe 18 du rapport du Comité spécial. La délégation philippine votera pour le principe I, mais étant bien entendu que les territoires de type colonial comprennent, non seulement ceux qui existaient au moment où la Charte a été rédigée, mais aussi tous ceux qui ont pu, depuis lors, entrer dans cette catégorie parce que leurs populations ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes.

18. Pour ce qui est du principe IV, la délégation philippine l'approuvera étant bien entendu que ses dispositions ne s'appliquent pas à un pays — tel que les Philippines — qui consiste en un archipel habité par des populations d'origine ethnique différente mais qui jouissent de droits égaux.

19. La Commission devrait prêter attention à certaines contradictions qui existent dans le libellé des principes. Par exemple, alors que le principe IV contient les mots "au point de vue ethnique et (ou) au point de vue culturel", le principe V dit "ethniques et culturelles", et non "et (ou)". Deuxièmement, alors que les principes VI et VII parlent d'une "libre association", l'adjectif "libre" n'a pas été employé pour qualifier le mot "intégration" à l'alinéa c du principe VI. Troisièmement, alors qu'aux principes VII et IX, le texte anglais utilise indifféremment les termes "peoples" et "people", pour désigner les habitants d'un seul et même territoire, le pluriel "peoples", qui est celui qui convient, est employé au principe VIII. Il faut, dans tous ces cas, que la Commission sache si ces contradictions sont volontaires et, s'il en est ainsi, quelle en est la raison.

20. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) tient à présenter quelques observations au sujet de l'amendement, présenté par les délégations tunisienne et togolaise, qui vise à modifier la dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX. Pendant la discussion générale, la délégation tunisienne a déclaré approuver le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, dont la phrase en question fait partie. Cependant, le rapport est rédigé en termes généraux et les délégations tunisienne et togolaise estiment qu'un texte plus positif est souhaitable. Manifestement, lorsqu'un territoire prend une mesure aussi importante que son intégration à un Etat indépendant, toutes les garanties doivent exister pour assurer que les intérêts des habitants de ce territoire sont protégés. L'objet de l'amendement proposé est d'assurer que les procédures définies à l'alinéa b du principe IX se dérouleront d'une façon vraiment libre. Ce ne sont pas les auteurs de l'amendement qui ont introduit la notion d'un contrôle par l'ONU; ils ne font qu'énoncer en termes plus précis l'idée qu'exprime déjà l'alinéa b du principe IX.

21. Les délégations qui sont les auteurs de l'amendement n'ont pas été convaincues par aucune des critiques qui en ont été faites jusqu'à présent, car ces critiques n'ont pas touché au fond de la question. Elles seront heureuses d'entendre les observations que d'autres délégations pourraient formuler.

22. M. GASSOU (Togo) fait observer que, bien que l'unanimité soit évidemment souhaitable, il est préférable d'y renoncer si elle ne peut être obtenue que par l'adoption de textes prêtant à diverses interprétations. Lorsqu'on analyse la portée pratique des principes établis par le Comité spécial des Six, on se rend compte qu'il ne sera pas facile de déterminer quels territoires devront être considérés comme non autonomes. Le principe VI énonce les diverses façons dont un territoire non autonome peut atteindre la pleine autonomie. C'est: a) par sa constitution en un Etat indépendant souverain — ce qui se passe de commentaires; b) par sa libre association avec un autre Etat indépendant — ce qui n'a pas besoin non plus d'être commenté, car cela implique que le territoire a déjà accédé à l'indépendance; enfin, c) par son intégration avec un autre Etat indépendant — ce qui peut entraîner un conflit entre la puissance administrante, qui dispose de la force, et la population sans défense du territoire. C'est pourquoi le principe IX, qui vise à sauvegarder les intérêts de la population, introduit l'idée d'un contrôle par l'ONU. Cependant, la façon dont cette idée est exprimée prête à de sérieuses critiques. Il est très bien de dire que le contrôle de l'ONU "peut être souhaitable", mais la question se pose de savoir qui décidera s'il est souhaitable ou non. Si la puissance administrante intéressée n'estime pas que ce contrôle est souhaitable, l'ONU ne pourra l'imposer ou empêcher l'intégration. De plus, l'ONU serait placée dans une situation difficile si la puissance administrante informait l'Assemblée générale qu'elle ne communiquerait plus d'autres renseignements sur un territoire donné, parce que les objectifs de la Charte auraient été atteints et l'intégration effectuée. Si la population de ce territoire avait été intégrée contre sa volonté à un Etat indépendant, elle ne manquerait pas de protester; elle pourrait même faire davantage, ce qui risquerait de créer une situation très grave.

23. Pour toutes ces raisons, M. Gassou espère que les auteurs du projet de résolution acceptent l'amendement et qu'il sera adopté à l'unanimité.

24. M. WEEKS (Libéria) fait observer que toutes les délégations, à l'exception de celles du Portugal et de l'Espagne, ont approuvé les principes élaborés par le Comité spécial des Six, bien qu'il y ait eu quelques réserves au sujet de leur libellé.

25. Ces principes proclament le droit des populations à s'administrer elles-mêmes et réaffirment l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. Le principe IV indique les caractéristiques d'un territoire à l'égard duquel il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements.

26. La plus grande difficulté a été soulevée par la question de l'intégration. Certains gouvernements, qui refusent d'observer les dispositions de l'Article 73, soutiennent que leurs territoires d'outre-mer font partie intégrante de la métropole. La Quatrième Commission ne peut, manifestement, souscrire à ce point de vue. La façon dont un territoire peut être intégré à un Etat indépendant est exposée au principe IX. En outre, le principe VIII stipule que l'intégration doit se faire sur la base de l'égalité complète.

27. La dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX a soulevé certaines difficultés, parce qu'elle peut donner lieu à diverses interprétations. La délégation libérienne appuiera donc l'amendement proposé par les délégations du Togo et de la Tunisie, qui exprime en fait la même idée en termes différents.

28. M. ZIKRIA (Afghanistan) rappelle qu'il a déjà exprimé la satisfaction qu'éprouve sa délégation au sujet de l'œuvre qu'a accomplie le Comité spécial des Six, mais qu'il a déclaré aussi ne pas pouvoir appuyer sans réserve les principes dans leur forme originale. La délégation afghane se conformera à la position qui a été toujours la sienne au sujet du contrôle par l'ONU des territoires sous domination étrangère. Elle appuiera donc l'amendement proposé par les délégations togolaise et tunisienne, qu'elle estime plus conforme que le texte original aux vues de la majorité des membres de la Commission. M. Zikria espère que les auteurs du projet de résolution pourront accepter cet amendement.

29. M. SHARIF (Indonésie) indique que sa délégation approuve les principes généraux du rapport du Comité spécial des Six, avec quelques réserves qui résultent du fait que, bien que ce comité soit apparemment parvenu à un accord sur le caractère multilatéral plutôt qu'unilatéral du Chapitre XI, certaines puissances coloniales restent attachées à une interprétation unilatérale des principes qui concernent les exigences de la sécurité et les considérations d'ordre constitutionnel. Tant qu'elles maintiendront cette position, on ne pourra enregistrer de progrès réel, malgré l'énoncé des 12 principes par le Comité spécial des Six.

30. Il s'ensuit du caractère multilatéral du Chapitre XI que l'Assemblée générale est pleinement compétente pour décider s'il y a ou non obligation de communiquer des renseignements ou si, dans certaines circonstances, une puissance coloniale est fondée à se retrancher derrière des considérations d'ordre constitutionnel ou les exigences de la sécurité.

31. La délégation indonésienne constate avec plaisir que le Comité spécial est parvenu à l'unanimité. Elle approuve le paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution. Pour ce qui est du paragraphe 2 du dispositif, elle a plusieurs observations à faire. Premièrement, elle ne peut appuyer le principe VI et désirerait que ses alinéas b et c soient supprimés. Les procédures définies aux principes VII et IX ne sont pas une garantie suffisante que l'acte d'association ou la demande d'intégration à un autre pays seront véritablement fondés sur la volonté des représentants du peuple. Une élection ou un référendum qui se déroulent dans un territoire occupé et dépendant ne peuvent être soustraits à l'influence et à la domination de la puissance administrante. Si l'on suit les procédures énoncées aux principes VII et IX, la délégation indonésienne craint que, dans quelques années, les puissances administrantes n'annoncent que tous les territoires non autonomes placés sous leur administration sont devenus associés ou se sont intégrés aux territoires métropolitains conformément au "choix volontaire des populations du territoire en question". La délégation indonésienne préférerait donc donner aux territoires non autonomes la possibilité de devenir tout d'abord indépendants et puis de décider, par des procédures démocratiques et largement diffusées, de devenir associés ou de s'intégrer à d'autres Etats indépendants.

32. Deuxièmement, la délégation indonésienne n'élèverait pas de grandes objections contre le principe VI si l'on pouvait ajouter à la première phrase de l'alinéa a du principe VII les mots "et, si possible, sous le contrôle des Nations Unies". Bien qu'il se rende compte que les élections relèvent de la compétence nationale, le représentant de l'Indonésie fait appel aux puissances administrantes pour qu'elles acceptent le contrôle de l'ONU dans une affaire d'une telle importance.

33. Troisièmement, la délégation indonésienne s'associe aux réserves exprimées par la délégation marocaine (A/4526, par. 14) à propos des mots "peut-être" à l'alinéa b du principe IX et estime que le texte devrait dire: "le contrôle de ces procédures par l'ONU est souhaitable". Elle préférerait ce texte à celui qui est proposé dans l'amendement présenté par les délégations du Togo et de la Tunisie.

34. Quatrièmement, si l'on pouvait supprimer les alinéas b et c du principe VI, on pourrait également supprimer les principes VII, VIII et IX.

35. M. CABA (Guinée) indique que sa délégation votera pour le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, qui fournit les moyens d'atteindre les objectifs essentiels du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Malgré la force juridique des 12 principes énoncés, la Quatrième Commission n'en devrait pas moins mettre les choses bien au point, de façon à éviter à l'avenir tout risque de malentendu.

36. L'amendement togolais et tunisien rend plus précise la dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX. Il ne fait nul doute que les puissances administrantes seront disposées à organiser des plébiscites sur la question de l'intégration, mais elles veilleraient à ce que les résultats soient conformes à leurs plans en installant, dans les territoires en question, des gouvernements fantoches qui accepteraient l'intégration sans se soucier des vœux de la population. Ainsi seraient absorbées, petit à petit, toutes les possessions coloniales. C'est pourquoi la délégation guinéenne appuie l'amendement proposé par le Togo et par la Tunisie. Elle considère même cet amendement comme trop modéré et préférerait remplacer le mot "nécessaire" par "indispensable".

37. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) fait observer que la Quatrième Commission, au cours de nombreux débats, s'est efforcée d'établir une série de principes qui lui permettraient de régler le difficile problème des Etats Membres qui refusent de communiquer des renseignements sur leurs territoires d'outre-mer. Tel ou tel des principes énoncés dans le rapport peut prêter à des critiques. A la vérité, la délégation mexicaine n'est pas, pour sa part, entièrement satisfaite du rapport. Le représentant du Mexique attire, à ce sujet, l'attention de la Commission sur la réponse de son gouvernement à la communication du Secrétaire général (A/AC.100/1, par. 72 à 117). Si sa délégation, ainsi que les autres Membres non administrants du Comité spécial des Six, a cependant accepté les principes énoncés dans le rapport, c'est parce qu'elle estime que, pour la lutte menée par la Quatrième Commission au sujet des obligations incombant aux Membres administrants, il est indispensable de disposer d'une solide base juridique. M. Cuevas Cancino espère donc que le rapport du Comité spécial, qui mérite le plus large appui, sera approuvé à l'unanimité.

38. M. Cuevas Cancino demande aux délégations du Togo et de la Tunisie de retirer leur amendement. Il est convaincu que tous les problèmes qui les préoccupent peuvent être résolus conformément au principe IX tel qu'il est rédigé. Une fois les principes adoptés, il sera possible de les appliquer aux cas qui se présenteront. Leur adoption est donc dans l'intérêt des peuples soumis à une domination étrangère.

39. M. SRDANOV (Yougoslavie) déclare que les principes proposés par le Comité spécial des Six sont en général acceptables pour sa délégation, vu qu'ils découlent de la Charte. Ils ont été élaborés en raison de débats sur les colonies portugaises et espagnoles, mais ils sont valables pour toutes les colonies et leur application devrait — et doit en fait — s'étendre à tous les territoires coloniaux du monde. De plus, ils devraient être appliqués dans l'esprit de la déclaration, figurant au paragraphe 18 du rapport du Comité spécial, selon laquelle la Charte est un document vivant et les obligations assumées au titre du Chapitre XI doivent être considérées à la lumière de l'évolution actuelle des esprits.

40. La délégation yougoslave votera pour le projet de résolution, de même que pour l'amendement proposé par le Togo et la Tunisie, qui améliorerait grandement, à son avis, le libellé du principe XI.

41. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) précise, en réponse au représentant du Mexique, que sa délégation et celle du Togo n'ont fait que proposer un libellé plus explicite pour exprimer une idée déjà contenue dans le texte original. Les deux délégations accepteraient de retirer leur amendement si la majorité de la Commission s'y déclarait opposée, mais ils n'ont jusqu'à présent entendu aucun argument qui les incite à le faire.

42. Mme SKOTTSBERG-AHMAN (Suède) déclare qu'étant donné sa composition, il est évident que le Comité spécial des Six n'a pu rédiger un rapport unanime que parce que des concessions ont été faites de part et d'autre. De nombreuses délégations à la Quatrième Commission auraient certainement préféré un texte différent, mais toute modification apportée au compromis délicat qui a été réalisé risque de le détruire et de réduire à néant toute l'œuvre du Comité spécial. La délégation suédoise appuie les principes. Le fait qu'ils ont été acceptés à la fois par les Membres administrants et par les Membres non administrants constitue un important pas en avant. Mme Skottsberg-Ahman demande donc instamment aux membres de la Commission de laisser inchangé le texte des principes.

43. M. LAMANI (Albanie) rappelle que sa délégation a déjà déclaré qu'elle ne peut appuyer le rapport du Comité spécial des Six dans son ensemble. L'amendement proposé par la Tunisie et le Togo vise à réduire un danger qui pourrait surgir au moment de l'application du principe IX et les observations faites par le représentant de la Tunisie ont été très pertinentes. Les puissances colonialistes, qui ont une grande expérience en la matière, pourraient exploiter à leur avantage la situation créée par l'imprécision du texte actuel. Va-t-on leur laisser le soin de décider dans quelles circonstances un contrôle de l'ONU est souhaitable? La position adoptée par certaines puissances colonialistes incite la délégation albanaise à penser qu'elles ne sont pas prêtes à faire un geste pour aider les peuples coloniaux à obtenir leur liberté. L'amendement constitue une amélioration du texte original et c'est pourquoi la délégation albanaise votera en sa faveur.

M. Ortiz de Rozas (Argentine), vice-président, prend la présidence.

44. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) fait observer que sa délégation était toute prête à participer à une discussion sérieuse et objective des principes, sans préjudice de sa position à l'égard de l'interprétation de la Charte. Cependant, il se trouve que ces principes ne sont utilisés en fait que comme un moyen d'attaquer les délégations de deux Etats Membres. Dans ces conditions, et étant donné que la Commission n'entend pas assurer aux principes une application générale, sa délégation ne peut les appuyer. Au lieu de s'occuper de la question dont il était chargé aux termes de son mandat, le Comité spécial des Six a rédigé les principes en posant comme prémisse que l'obligation en question existait déjà. Pour ces raisons, et aussi parce que le texte du projet de résolution ne tient pas compte des faits, la délégation portugaise se verra obligée de voter contre ce projet.

45. M. KENNEDY (Irlande) déclare que, bien que sa délégation comprenne les motifs qui ont inspiré les auteurs de l'amendement A/C.4/L.650, elle pense qu'il serait peu judicieux de l'incorporer au texte du projet de résolution. Il est, certes, des cas où il serait souhaitable que l'ONU contrôle les procédures dont il est question au principe IX, mais il ne semble pas qu'il convienne de stipuler que tel devrait toujours être le cas. La question se pose différemment pour les territoires sous tutelle, mais, s'agissant des territoires non autonomes, une certaine souplesse est souhaitable. Il est concevable, par exemple, que les puissances administrantes ajournent la consultation si elles se savent obligées de faire appel au lourd système de contrôle de l'ONU et elles trouveraient ainsi une excuse aux attermolements. Il est de la plus haute importance d'obtenir l'appui le plus large possible, y compris celui des puissances administrantes, lorsque la Commission prend une mesure historique comme l'adoption des principes. Pour cette raison, M. Kennedy fait appel aux auteurs de l'amendement pour qu'ils n'insistent pas sur sa mise aux voix.

46. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) dit que sa délégation est disposée à voter en faveur du projet de résolution, mais qu'il désire réserver formellement sa position relativement aux principes VIII et IX qui traitent de l'intégration d'un territoire non autonome dans un Etat indépendant.

47. En ce qui concerne cette question d'intégration, il suffit pour le moment de rappeler l'attitude très ferme de la délégation d'Haïti lors des débats qui ont porté sur deux territoires sous tutelle: l'ancien territoire du Togo sous administration du Royaume-Uni et le territoire du Cameroun sous administration du Royaume-Uni.

48. M. DORSINVILLE ne pense pas que l'amendement proposé par les délégations du Togo et de la Tunisie change quoi que ce soit au fond de la question. A la lumière de ce qui a été dit par les membres du Comité spécial des Six et par les auteurs du projet de résolution, il semble bien que la dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX, dans sa rédaction actuelle, est la meilleure possible compte tenu des circonstances.

49. La délégation d'Haïti s'abstiendra sur l'amendement s'il est mis aux voix. Elle sait mieux que personne quelles garanties peut apporter la présence de l'ONU en un cas donné, mais elle croit qu'il est préférable de prendre la décision nécessaire dans chaque cas d'espèce.

50. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) note que les membres du Comité spécial des Six ont montré qu'il est possible de réaliser un accord grâce à la discussion et au compromis. Il est très juste de dire, comme le fait le paragraphe 18 du rapport, que la Charte est un document vivant. Elle n'est pas uniquement un document juridique; elle a un lien intime avec la vie de l'humanité et ses aspirations. Sir Andrew Cohen reconnaît qu'il faut envisager la Charte dans le cadre de l'évolution actuelle des esprits, bien qu'il ne s'en suive pas pour cela qu'il soit nécessaire de modifier la Charte elle-même.

51. L'allusion qui est faite, au principe II, à un état d'évolution dynamique et de progrès est importante et s'inspire directement de l'Article 73 de la Charte. C'est dans cette esprit que le Chapitre XI considère les territoires non autonomes et c'est ainsi que le Royaume-Uni interprète ses obligations.

52. Sir Andrew Cohen déclare qu'il aurait été très désireux de pouvoir voter en faveur du projet de résolution, mais l'amendement que l'on propose d'y apporter crée de grandes difficultés pour sa délégation. A son avis, le libellé de la dernière phrase du principe IX est clair et précis. Dire que le contrôle par l'ONU est nécessaire dans tous les cas d'intégration, comme le souhaitent les auteurs de l'amendement, signifierait qu'un référendum organisé sous le contrôle de l'ONU aurait dû avoir lieu à Hawaï et en Alaska avant que ces territoires soient intégrés aux Etats-Unis. La chose n'est pas mauvaise en soi, mais le fait est qu'il n'était aucunement nécessaire que l'ONU surveille le plébiscite qui a amené l'intégration. Il n'est pas souhaitable d'énoncer en termes absolus la procédure à suivre.

53. Sir Andrew Cohen proteste contre l'assertion de certaines délégations, dont celle de la Guinée, selon laquelle des élections organisées par une puissance administrante ne sauraient être satisfaisantes. S'agissant du Royaume-Uni, plusieurs membres de la Commission peuvent témoigner du contraire, comme pourraient le faire la plupart des populations dont le Royaume-Uni avait la responsabilité.

54. Sir Andrew Cohen ne pense pas que le Gouvernement, le Parlement ou l'opinion britannique pourraient accepter ce qui est proposé dans l'amendement. Si l'amendement était adopté, sa délégation ne pourrait, à son grand regret, voter pour le projet de résolution qu'elle souhaiterait voir adopter à une large majorité afin d'en augmenter l'autorité.

55. Les Etats Membres de l'ONU doivent croire à la bonne foi des autres Membres. Pour son application, une résolution dépend des mesures que prendront des Membres et douter de leur bonne foi n'est certainement pas le meilleur moyen d'y parvenir. Sir Andrew Cohen fait donc appel aux membres de la Commission pour qu'ils laissent le projet de résolution inchangé; la Commission obtiendra ainsi des résultats plus rapides que si elle adoptait un texte inacceptable pour de nombreuses délégations et attendait ensuite de ces délégations qu'elles s'y conforment.

M. Pachachi (Irak) reprend la présidence.

56. M. KOUTCHAVA (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) rappelle que sa délégation a déjà exposé à la 1034^{ème} séance son attitude à l'égard du rapport du Comité spécial des Six. La discussion a montré que le texte des principes est trop général, est inadéquat et prête à des interprétations arbitraires. L'attitude de l'Espagne, du Portugal et des autres puissances coloniales, qui ont déformé les principes en cherchant à justifier leur politique indéfendable, montre qu'il en est bien ainsi. On ne pouvait, certes, guère attendre qu'un comité composé comme l'était le Comité spécial des Six puisse arriver à d'autres résultats. Si les Membres non administrants qui faisaient partie de ce comité n'ont pas pu faire plus qu'ils n'ont fait, c'est notamment parce que le Comité s'est fixé pour tâche, dès le début, d'énoncer des principes qui auraient recueilli l'unanimité. Mais un compromis était impossible entre les deux conceptions diamétralement opposées, à savoir l'opposition au colonialisme et sa défense. Les réserves exprimées par le représentant du Royaume-Uni réduisent les principes à néant et montrent que leur interprétation par le Royaume-Uni est complètement différente de celle des puissances non coloniales.

57. Pour ces raisons, la délégation de l'URSS ne peut appuyer le projet de résolution et elle s'abstiendra lorsqu'il sera mis aux voix. Elle votera cependant pour l'amendement présenté par le Togo et la Tunisie, qu'elle juge parfaitement justifié et même indispensable, les objections élevées contre cet amendement n'ayant pas réussi à la convaincre du contraire.

58. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) se déclare satisfait de constater que ses observations précédentes, notamment celles qui portaient sur le rôle de l'ONU dans l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires non autonomes et dans les procédures relatives à leur intégration ou à leur association, ont été généralement approuvées par les membres de la Commission. Même les délégations qui ont critiqué ses suggestions n'en ont contesté le fond, mais ont simplement fait valoir d'autres arguments, en particulier le fait que le Chapitre XI de la Charte impose certaines limitations. Etant donné que, comme le dit le paragraphe 18 du rapport du Comité spécial des Six, la Charte est un document vivant, M. Rahnema espère que les limitations en question seront à leur tour réduites.

59. On a avancé au cours de la discussion un autre argument, qui est de plus de poids: c'est la nécessité de réaliser l'unanimité sur les principes et de conserver à leur texte son équilibre et l'esprit dans lequel il a été rédigé. Ce texte présente une telle importance qu'il serait peut-être judicieux de sacrifier certaines préoccupations et de le laisser tel qu'il est afin, notamment, de réaliser l'unanimité ou la plus large majorité possible. Si l'on y parvenait, les parties dont dépend l'application de la résolution prendraient des mesures à cet effet.

60. M. Rahnema regrette que certaines puissances coloniales aient tendance à interpréter toute demande de plus grand contrôle ou de plus grande intervention de la part de l'ONU comme des critiques de la bonne foi des puissances administrantes. Sa délégation est convaincue de la bonne foi de ces puissances, mais cela ne l'empêche pas de désirer des garanties plus nombreuses et un contrôle accru.

61. La délégation iranienne est favorable à l'idée qui inspire l'amendement présenté par le Togo et la Tunisie, mais elle pense que le libellé a peut-être une portée qui dépasse les intentions des auteurs. Demander que l'ONU exerce son contrôle dans chaque cas est peut-être aller trop loin. L'existence d'une telle disposition aurait peut-être, par exemple, empêché Hawaï de devenir un Etat des Etats-Unis d'Amérique. Pour ces raisons, la délégation iranienne serait heureuse que le Togo et la Tunisie retirent leur amendement. La question pourrait être, à vrai dire, étudiée d'une façon plus approfondie.

62. La délégation iranienne n'insistera pas pour l'adoption des amendements qu'elle avait suggéré d'apporter au projet de résolution à la séance précédente, bien qu'elle pense qu'ils en précisent le texte.

63. Dans son intervention à la 1036^{ème} séance de la Commission, le représentant du Portugal a prétendu que l'Iran avait dit qu'après 15 ans, de nombreuses notions juridiques de la Charte sont devenues désuètes et ne correspondent plus à la réalité. M. Rahnema n'a jamais exprimé une telle opinion: ce qu'il a dit, c'est que la Commission s'est souvent trouvée réduite à l'impuissance et à l'inaction par les efforts qu'ont faits certaines puissances administrantes pour opposer la lettre de la Charte, telle que leurs distingués juristes voulaient la révéler, à l'esprit de la Charte. M. Rahnema n'avait fait, en somme, que paraphraser ce que le Comité spécial des Six a déclaré au paragraphe 18 de son rapport et avait insisté sur le fait que la Charte doit être interprétée d'une façon dynamique.

La séance est levée à 18 h 35.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526, A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION
(A/C.4/L.648 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

Projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1 (suite)

1. M. HONG HOEUNG DOEUNG (Cambodge), qui prend la parole pour la première fois à la Commission, est heureux de travailler sous la direction d'un Bureau particulièrement compétent.

2. Le représentant du Cambodge rend hommage aux nombreuses délégations qui ont manifesté leur volonté de parvenir à une conclusion unanime sur la question du colonialisme. La délégation cambodgienne est profondément satisfaite du rapport (A/4526) du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, et estime que les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V interprètent de façon adéquate l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Ces 12 principes sont rigoureusement complémentaires et ne sauraient être appliqués indépendamment.

3. Les conditions de l'accession à la pleine autonomie ont un caractère d'obligation: le principe VI ne doit être compris et appliqué que dans les conditions prévues aux principes VII, VIII et IX. Une modification du statut de territoires non autonomes n'est possible qu'à la suite d'une consultation libre, effectuée sous le contrôle de l'ONU, si l'Assemblée générale en décide ainsi.

4. Quant à l'amendement A/C.4/L.650 que le Togo et la Tunisie proposent d'apporter au projet de résolution

A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, le représentant du Cambodge, étant donné les diverses observations faites à la Commission par certaines délégations quant à l'opportunité politique, et à la nécessité de ménager une certaine souplesse dans de pareilles décisions, se range à l'avis de la délégation irlandaise: il se peut en effet que certains Etats veuillent retarder délibérément une consultation populaire si elle doit se faire sous le contrôle de l'ONU. Il serait également souhaitable de préserver la solution de compromis qui a déjà coûté beaucoup d'efforts au Comité spécial des Six, de façon que le projet de résolution puisse être adopté à la plus large majorité possible. Sans donner à sa proposition le caractère d'un amendement officiel, le représentant du Cambodge pense qu'il suffirait peut-être, pour préserver ce compromis, de remplacer, dans la dernière phrase de l'énoncé du principe IX, le mot "souhaitable" par le mot "nécessaire". Si le Togo et la Tunisie maintiennent leur amendement, la délégation cambodgienne s'abstiendra; mais elle votera pour le projet de résolution s'il garde son libellé actuel. Elle est consciente de l'insuffisance de précision quant à la clause du contrôle de l'ONU, mais elle estime, avec la délégation birmane, qu'il appartient à tous les Etats Membres de faire preuve de vigilance pour assurer l'application des résolutions, et, le cas échéant, pour obtenir de certaines délégations qu'elles changent d'attitude.

5. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) répond à certaines des observations auxquelles a donné lieu l'amendement déposé par le Togo et la Tunisie. Personne ne conteste qu'en certains cas le contrôle de l'ONU ne soit rigoureusement nécessaire et qu'il ne faille donc le dire; mais on reproche à la nouvelle formule proposée de l'alinéa b du principe IX d'être trop rigide et de laisser entendre que ce contrôle serait absolument automatique; le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré à la séance précédente que les garanties prévues au principe IX ayant bien existé dans le cas d'Hawaï et de l'Alaska, par exemple, il aurait été inutile alors — et il serait inutile dans un cas analogue — d'imposer ce contrôle. Le représentant de la Tunisie l'admet volontiers, et précise que les seuls cas qui le préoccupent sont ceux où la consultation n'est pas réellement démocratique.

6. Le représentant de l'Irlande craint que, devant la nécessité d'un contrôle, certaines puissances administrantes ne diffèrent les consultations populaires. M. Bouziri pense que du débat même de la Quatrième Commission se dégage l'idée que l'indépendance de tous les peuples est inéluctable, et qu'on peut la retarder, mais non pas l'empêcher. Cet argument ne résiste donc pas à l'analyse.

7. On a surtout reproché à la nouvelle formule proposée de remettre en cause le compromis précieux que le Comité spécial des Six avait éprouvé beaucoup de difficulté à trouver. La Tunisie sait par expérience combien il importe de sauvegarder certaines solutions de compromis; elle a su en accepter tant qu'elles ne touchaient pas au principe même de l'indépendance. Seulement il s'agit ici d'un compromis intervenu sans doute entre Membres administrants et Membres non administrants, mais qui intéresse un tiers, le territoire non autonome, lequel n'a pas eu voix au chapitre; il faut donc prendre garde au tort immense que la Commission pourrait causer aux territoires non autonomes si elle admettait que l'ONU n'a pas droit de regard sur des élections truquées qui consacrerait définitivement une "intégration" que la population du territoire non autonome intéressé n'aurait pas vraiment voulue. Si, comme le souhaite le représentant de l'Iran, la Commission sacrifie la phrase en question au souci de faire adopter à l'unanimité le projet de résolution, M. Bouziri pense qu'elle sacrifierait en fait toute la portée de la résolution, car cette seule phrase pourrait entraîner la négation même de tout le rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

8. Toutefois, pour donner au contrôle de l'ONU la souplesse qui semble indispensable à plusieurs délégations, tout en permettant de garantir cette liberté de choix qui demeure fondamentale pour les représentants du Togo et de la Tunisie, ces deux délégations se sont entendues pour remplacer la formule de l'amendement publié sous la cote A/C.4/L.650 par la phrase suivante: "L'Organisation des Nations Unies pourra, lorsqu'elle le jugera nécessaire, contrôler ces procédures." M. Bouziri pense que, sous ce nouveau libellé, l'amendement atténue suffisamment le caractère obligatoire du contrôle de l'ONU, puisque l'Assemblée générale aura à décider à la majorité de ses membres si elle juge nécessaire d'intervenir dans tel ou tel cas particulier. M. Bouziri pense être allé au bout des concessions possibles.

9. M. LANZA (Uruguay) estime que les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six permettraient de progresser considérablement vers la solution du problème du colonialisme. Pour l'application de ces principes, M. Lanza pense que l'Assemblée pourra, par des résolutions précises, fixer des normes claires, que chaque pays pourra incorporer dans sa propre constitution. Il importe peu qu'il subsiste quelques faiblesses ou que certaines dispositions paraissent excessives à quelques délégations, car ces problèmes pourront être résolus à propos de cas particuliers. La délégation uruguayenne votera pour le projet de résolution, ainsi que pour l'amendement du Togo et de la Tunisie, sous sa nouvelle forme. Elle l'aurait d'ailleurs voté sous sa forme primitive, qui aurait, en rendant obligatoire l'intervention de l'ONU, rehaussé le prestige de l'Organisation.

10. M. KANAKARATNE (Ceylan) déclare que sa délégation approuve pleinement l'esprit qui a guidé le Comité spécial dans ses travaux et souscrit pleinement au projet de résolution et à chacun des principes qui lui sont joints en annexe. Cependant, il aurait hésité à voter pour l'amendement original déposé par le Togo et la Tunisie qui lui paraît trop catégorique et trop rigide. D'un autre côté, il comprend les raisons qui ont amené les représentants de la Tunisie et du Togo à changer leur amendement primitif et il apprécie l'esprit dont ils ont fait preuve en modifiant ainsi leur position. Toutefois, il ne lui apparaît pas qu'il y ait une différence entre cette façon de poser le principe essentiel — celui de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale — et la façon dont ce principe est déjà posé dans la dernière phrase du principe IX énoncé par le Comité spécial des Six, d'autant que cette compétence est très précisément exprimée au paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution.

11. La délégation ceylanaise, qui a toujours reconnu la compétence de l'ONU en vertu de l'Article 14 de la Charte, ne conçoit pas que cette compétence n'existerait plus si elle n'était pas expressément indiquée dans les principes. Dans le cas présent, il ne fait pas de doute que l'Assemblée générale, et elle seule, peut décider si les circonstances exigent que l'ONU contrôle le processus d'intégration d'un territoire non autonome à un Etat indépendant. Aussi, tout en voyant bien pourquoi les délégations togolaise et tunisienne éprouvaient des difficultés à accepter le texte original du principe IX, et tout en louant les efforts qu'elles ont faits pour le modifier de façon à aplanir ces difficultés, la délégation ceylanaise ne voit pas la nécessité d'introduire cet amendement. La délégation ceylanaise ne peut accepter cet amendement non pas parce qu'elle désire obtenir l'unanimité à tout prix, mais uniquement parce qu'elle est convaincue que la dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX est assez claire pour qu'il ne soit pas besoin de la modifier: c'est l'ONU seule qui est à même de décider dans quel cas il y a lieu de contrôler la procédure d'intégration. L'amendement en question est donc inutile; M. Kanakarathne exprime l'espoir que ses auteurs le retireront.

12. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) n'est pas insensible aux efforts que les représentants de la Tunisie et du Togo ont déployés pour faire droit à certaines de ses observations de la séance précédente, et il les en remercie. Mais, en essayant d'améliorer le texte, ils l'ont en fait aggravé. M. Kanakarathne a souligné fort justement que le nouvel amendement soulevait la question de la compétence de l'Organisation, question qu'il ne faut pas soulever explicitement si l'on ne veut pas se heurter à des difficultés. Le principe IX a été rédigé avec le plus grand soin, et il résulte d'un compromis réalisé au sein du Comité spécial en ce qui concerne la position du représentant du Maroc (A/4526, par. 14). La phrase sur laquelle les membres du Comité spécial sont parvenus à se mettre d'accord n'exclut pas la compétence de l'ONU, mais elle ne dit pas non plus que l'ONU doive automatiquement décider de contrôler la procédure d'intégration. Les membres de la Commission connaissent bien le sentiment de toutes les délégations sur la compétence de l'ONU; comme l'a dit le représentant de Ceylan, il n'était pas nécessaire d'indiquer expressément au principe IX que cette compétence existe.

13. La délégation du Royaume-Uni ne veut pas s'opposer à la conception de la délégation tunisienne; elle voudrait seulement que la Commission approuve intégralement le rapport du Comité spécial des Six et les principes qu'il pose. Si l'amendement de la Tunisie et du Togo était mis aux voix, sir Andrew Cohen serait contraint de voter contre; si cet amendement était adopté, il serait contraint de s'abstenir sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

14. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) interprète la dernière phrase du principe IX autrement que la délégation ceylanaise, et il en conçoit des inquiétudes que la délégation ceylanaise ne paraît pas avoir eues. D'autres pourtant ont partagé ces inquiétudes; c'est le cas notamment du représentant du Togo et de celui de l'Iran, qui a souligné que la phrase en question ne donne pas à l'intervention éventuelle de l'ONU le caractère d'une obligation ou d'une certitude. Le représentant de Ceylan ne doute pas que l'ONU ne puisse intervenir si elle le juge nécessaire. Mais alors, s'il ne voit pas de différence entre le texte primitif du principe et l'amendement de la Tunisie et du Togo, il peut sans difficulté adopter cet amendement, qui a le mérite d'apaiser les craintes de certaines délégations. Le texte primitif, en exprimant un souhait dont la réalisation ne dépend peut-être pas de la volonté de l'ONU, jette le trouble dans les esprits; en fait, certains pourraient contester le principe de la compétence de l'Organisation internationale, qui paraît évident à la délégation ceylanaise, et c'est pour éviter cela que les délégations tunisienne et togolaise ont recherché une formule plus satisfaisante.

15. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a fait valoir que l'amendement soulevait une question de principe qui pourrait être de nature à créer des difficultés. Mais c'est justement par souci de clarté et pour empêcher qu'on ne puisse éventuellement contester l'intégration d'un territoire non autonome à un autre Etat que les délégations tunisienne et togolaise ont jugé nécessaire de donner au principe IX une expression plus précise. Pour enlever toute rigidité à l'amendement primitif, elles ont déposé un nouvel amendement et fait une concession; mais elles ne peuvent pas aller plus loin et accepter de retirer cet amendement; car, quand il s'agit du sort de millions d'hommes, il n'est pas permis de laisser planer un doute sur l'application d'un principe.

16. Contrairement à ce que pense sir Andrew Cohen, la Tunisie ne met pas en doute la bonne foi des autres Membres de l'ONU et elle leur fait confiance sur la plupart des questions. Mais, en ce qui concerne le problème colonial, à une époque où il existe encore des colonies et où l'on fait encore des guerres coloniales, des cas peuvent se présenter où la bonne foi de certains Etats Membres pourrait être mise à rude épreuve; il n'est pas permis, dans une question aussi grave, de présumer la bonne foi de tous. La Tunisie doit se montrer prudente quand il s'agit, non de son sort, mais du sort de tous les peuples encore colonisés.

17. M. KENNEDY (Irlande) est reconnaissant aux représentants du Togo et de la Tunisie pour la manière dont ils ont tenu compte de ses observations de la séance précédente. La présente discussion est extrêmement constructive, mais elle place les auteurs du projet de résolution dans une situation difficile, car ils sont eux aussi responsables des principes joints en annexe au projet et dont ils ont hérité. Ces principes constituent un instrument délicat, soigneusement façonné à la suite d'un compromis difficile. Si, en modifiant ces principes, on perd le bénéfice du compromis, on émousse l'instrument. Or, l'ONU n'a pas seulement à adopter les principes: il lui faut encore les mettre en œuvre dans certains cas particuliers, comme il ressort du paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution. Si la Commission détruit l'équilibre si difficilement réalisé, elle compromettra l'application des principes. Sans doute, certaines délégations souhaiteraient ce résultat; mais il est de l'intérêt de la Commission de rechercher l'unité des Membres administrants et des Membres non administrants.

18. M. DIALLO (Mali) se félicite que la Tunisie et le Togo aient, par esprit de conciliation et pour tenir compte des observations pertinentes de plusieurs délégations, modifié leur amendement. Il n'est pas question de faire des concessions au détriment des grands principes; mais il serait bon que, dans la mesure où l'on veut un texte utile, qui engage le plus grand nombre possible d'Etats, les concessions ne soient pas toujours à sens unique. Il ne s'agit pas de discuter sur le fond des principes — il rallie l'unanimité — mais sur la forme à leur donner. Il est évident que, dans le cas extrême d'Hawaï et de l'Alaska, par exemple, il n'était pas nécessaire de contrôler le désir d'intégration des populations; mais comment croire que le peuple angolais ait décidé, par référendum, son intégration au Portugal, si l'ONU n'a pas pu contrôler la régularité de ce référendum? On voit donc le danger de maintenir, sans la modifier, la dernière phrase du principe IX, qui n'oblige pas l'Organisation internationale à intervenir dans tous les cas. La différence entre ce texte et le texte proposé par le Togo et la Tunisie est essentielle, puisque, comme l'a fait remarquer le représentant du Royaume-Uni, elle porte sur la question de la compétence de l'ONU: il ne faut pas que, faute d'une formule précise, un Membre administrant reste seul juge de l'intégration d'un territoire non autonome; il ne faut pas qu'on puisse venir dire à l'Organisation que 99 pour 100 de la population d'un territoire non autonome se sont prononcés, dans un référendum, pour l'intégration à la métropole, comme cela s'est produit effectivement en 1958.

19. La délégation malienne ne doute pas de la bonne foi des auteurs du rapport du Comité spécial, mais elle craint que cette bonne foi ne puisse être surprise un jour. Elle ne peut pas se faire complice d'une équivoque; elle demande à tous les membres de la Commission de comprendre que le cas de conscience qui se pose aux Etats d'Afrique ne leur permet pas d'accepter, par souci d'unanimité, un texte que l'on pourrait retourner ensuite contre les peuples africains.

20. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) félicite le représentant de la Tunisie de s'être efforcé de trouver une formule de compromis tout en continuant à défendre ardemment les principes qu'il juge importants. M. Rahnema a déjà dit à la séance précédente pourquoi il soutient l'idée qui est à la base de l'amendement. Il importe en effet que l'intégration se fasse dans des conditions d'égalité absolue entre toutes les parties, ce que garantirait un contrôle de l'ONU. L'Organisation doit veiller à ce que l'intégration réponde aux intérêts de la population du territoire considéré.

21. Comme le représentant de Ceylan, M. Rahnema estime qu'il ne doit jamais être question de sacrifier des principes. Cependant, il peut être préférable parfois de faire certaines concessions tactiques, tout en maintenant les concepts généraux qu'il importe de préserver. Aussi le représentant de l'Iran demande-t-il s'il ne serait pas possible de remplacer la dernière phrase, trop vague, du principe IX par la formule suivante: "Il est souhaitable, dans certains cas, que ces procédures soient contrôlées par l'Organisation des Nations Unies." Un tel libellé répondrait aux préoccupations de la Tunisie et du Togo sans compromettre l'équilibre du texte, de sorte que l'ensemble des principes ne risquerait pas d'être rejeté ou de ne pas être appliqué efficacement. Comme l'a fait observer le représentant de Ceylan, il ne fait aucun doute qu'en vertu de l'Article 14 de la Charte, l'ONU est seule compétente pour décider des cas où son contrôle est souhaitable. La délégation du Royaume-Uni ne partage peut-être pas sur ce point la conviction de la délégation iranienne, mais la formule que propose M. Rahnema permettrait de leur donner satisfaction à toutes deux. Sans sacrifier les grands principes en cause ni les objectifs que vise le représentant de la Tunisie, elle permettrait peut-être d'obtenir pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution l'appui massif de la Commission. M. Rahnama serait prêt à déposer officiellement un amendement si le Togo et la Tunisie acceptaient de retirer de leur.

22. M. EDMONDS (Nouvelle-Zélande) votera pour le projet de résolution sous sa forme actuelle; ayant l'assentiment des Membres administrants et des Membres non administrants qui faisaient partie du Comité spécial des Six, ce texte permettra de faire de grands progrès. M. Edmonds remercie le représentant de la Tunisie et celui du Togo d'avoir accepté de modifier leur premier amendement de manière à en atténuer la rigidité. Il ne peut cependant pas accepter leur deuxième proposition, dont l'adoption risquerait de provoquer certaines abstentions regrettables. Si les principes ne peuvent pas être acceptés dans leur ensemble par ceux des Membres administrants dont la bonne foi et l'esprit de progrès sont généralement reconnus, il y aura moins de chances de voir appliquer ces principes par tous les pays. L'important est de ne pas oublier la nécessité d'user de saines méthodes de tactique et de diplomatie et de faire en sorte que la pression s'exerce là où elle s'impose. Les principes formulés par le Comité spécial des Six n'entraînent pour personne un sacrifice de convictions; toutefois, ils porteront peut-être un préjudice plus grand à la position des puissances administrantes qu'à celle des puissances non administrantes. L'essentiel maintenant est que toute résolution adoptée soit aussi efficace que possible; son succès dépendra du caractère autant que de l'ampleur de l'appui qu'elle recevra. M. Edmonds espère que la Commission ne touchera pas aux principes du Comité spécial des Six.

23. M. SALAMANCA (Bolivie) pense que le débat a assez duré pour permettre aux délégations de se faire une opinion sur l'amendement déposé par la Tunisie et le Togo. Puisque le projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649) intéresse davantage les délégations que le projet actuellement examiné, dont le caractère est très général, M. Salamanca, conformément à l'article 118 du règlement intérieur, demande la clôture du débat.

24. M. CABA (Guinée) s'oppose à la motion, car il juge préférable que la Commission étudie à fond ce problème fondamental. La délégation guinéenne, qui lutte depuis plusieurs années pour démontrer que les colonies qui sont sous la domination du Portugal, de l'Espagne et d'autres puissances ne sont pas de simples prolongements de la métropole, déplore que le débat soit clos au moment même où la Commission aborde le problème de l'intégration des territoires.

25. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) souligne que le débat a montré la gravité du choix que la Commission devra faire. La délégation tunisienne, comme sans doute la délégation togolaise, aimerait pouvoir répondre aux objections de certains représentants. D'autres représentants ont certainement encore d'utiles observations à présenter. Il serait regrettable que la Commission ne puisse étudier jusqu'au bout et jusqu'au fond cette importante question.

Par 31 voix contre 5, avec 42 abstentions, la motion de clôture est rejetée.

26. M. SKALLI (Maroc) rappelle que sa délégation est sans doute à l'origine du débat, puisqu'elle a soutenu au Comité spécial des Six que le contrôle de l'ONU est indispensable. La phrase qu'elle proposait, à savoir que l'organisation et le contrôle par les Nations Unies des élections tendant à l'intégration sont nécessaires, allait beaucoup plus loin que les formules proposées à l'heure actuelle. Cependant, devant les nombreuses objections auxquelles elle s'est heurtée, la délégation marocaine s'est finalement ralliée à la formule du principe IX. Elle tient cependant à faire des réserves au sujet de ce principe, pour que la Quatrième Commission voie bien, avant de l'adopter, qu'il pose un problème extrêmement grave.

27. L'intégration est en effet un mariage indissoluble, une procédure irréversible. Si une puissance coloniale procédait dans l'avenir à l'intégration d'un territoire après avoir organisé à sa manière des élections ou un référendum afin d'en obtenir des résultats favorables à ses désirs, l'ONU n'aurait aucun recours. Un nombre croissant de pays n'ignorent plus d'ailleurs que nombre d'élections de ce genre n'ont jamais été véritablement authentiques. Avant de se prononcer, la Quatrième Commission doit avoir conscience de ses responsabilités pour n'avoir pas à se reprocher plus tard d'avoir accepté que des populations aient été soumises pour l'éternité au joug d'une puissance coloniale.

28. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne) n'est pas intervenu plus tôt parce que le moment n'est plus de poser des principes au sujet de l'envoi de renseignements sur les territoires non autonomes, mais que l'heure est venue de passer à l'action et de donner l'indépendance à ces territoires. Il n'est pas non plus absolument satisfait des principes mêmes, et notamment des principes VIII et IX, relatifs à l'intégration de territoires non autonomes, car l'intégration recommandée ou déjà effectuée par certaines puissances coloniales va à l'encontre des idées qui sont à la base de la Charte. M. Blusztajn partage donc les préoccupations des représentants du Togo et de la Tunisie qui souhaitent préciser la dernière phrase, trop vague, du principe IX en spécifiant que l'intégration doit ou peut se faire sous le contrôle des Nations Unies. En effet, le débat qui vient d'avoir lieu a fait apparaître des divergences d'interprétation qui sont fondamentales. Ainsi, pour le représentant de Ceylan, la seconde proposition tunisienne et togolaise a le même sens que la dernière phrase du principe IX, alors qu'elle la contredit aux yeux du représentant du Royaume-Uni. Certaines délégations jugent que l'Assemblée générale doit décider dans quels cas le contrôle de l'ONU est souhaitable, tandis que d'autres ne croient pas qu'il appartienne à l'Assemblée générale d'en décider. La Commission ne devrait pas être appelée à se prononcer sur un texte que, de toute évidence, les diverses délégations interpréteront de manières totalement différentes. Le représentant de la Pologne pense, comme le représentant de la Tunisie, qu'il est impossible de faire des concessions au nom d'un tiers, c'est-à-dire, en l'occurrence, au nom de la population des territoires non autonomes, qui a droit à la protection de l'ONU.

La séance est levée à 13 heures.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Etude des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non: rapport du Comité spécial créé par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale (A/4526, A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION
(A/C.4/L.648 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.649) [suite]

Projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1 (suite)

1. M. GASSOU (Togo) déclare que les arguments avancés contre l'amendement présenté à l'origine par le Togo et la Tunisie sous la cote A/C.4/L.650 et amendé verbalement par ses auteurs à la séance précédente n'ont pas convaincu sa délégation. On a dit, par exemple, que cet amendement impliquait un manque de confiance dans la bonne foi de certains Etats Membres. Tel n'est pas le cas; la délégation togolaise estime simplement qu'elle serait plus tranquille si un contrôle était assuré. Jusqu'à présent, le régime colonial était censé avoir pour objectif l'autonomie ou l'indépendance, mais le Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa b de l'Article 73 de la Charte a traité assez longuement d'une autre possibilité: l'intégration. Il y a lieu de craindre que les procédures menant à choisir cette éventualité ne soient pas appliquées dans la liberté et l'impartialité complètes. Le principe IX qui figure à l'annexe du projet de résolution est ambigu sur ce point; il ne précise pas qui déterminera chaque fois si l'on est en présence d'un des "certains cas". Si l'on entend que l'ONU le fasse, il vaut mieux le dire.

2. La délégation togolaise a écouté attentivement les suggestions qui ont été formulées et en a tenu compte, mais la recherche d'un compromis ne devrait pas mener à l'abandon des principes, surtout lorsqu'il s'agit de tierces parties qui ne sont pas présentes à la Commission. La délégation togolaise ne veut pas qu'il soit dit qu'elle a souscrit à une proposition qui livrerait des populations aux puissances expansionnistes.

3. M. CABA (Guinée) fait observer que, malgré l'opposition des puissances colonialistes, la Commission a réussi à établir que les prétendues provinces d'outre-mer de l'Espagne et du Portugal sont en fait des territoires non autonomes, et qu'elle tient à hâter l'accession de ces territoires à l'indépendance complète. A cette fin, la Commission est censée adopter les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six dans la subdivision B de la section V de son rapport (A/4526). Seul le principe IX est controversé car, sous sa forme actuelle, il peut permettre à un Membre administrant, au moyen d'une parodie d'élections, de maintenir sa domination et d'informer ensuite l'ONU que l'intégration a eu lieu par des méthodes démocratiques. Les puissances colonialistes se rendent compte maintenant que l'on n'empêchera pas de vive force les peuples assujettis d'obtenir leur indépendance, et elles sont donc à la recherche d'autres méthodes, par lesquelles elles recevraient l'aide de personnes qui sont prêtes à sacrifier les intérêts de la population à leur propre ambition. La délégation guinéenne ne peut absolument pas avoir confiance dans les puissances colonialistes.

4. La délégation guinéenne a appuyé le texte primitif de l'amendement, bien qu'elle l'ait trouvé assez faible, mais elle ne peut appuyer le texte révisé. Il est indispensable que le contrôle par l'ONU soit rendu obligatoire, ce qui empêcherait les puissances colonialistes de se servir de l'Organisation dans leur intérêt égoïste. La Guinée n'aime pas les compromis; quand le sort de peuples qui souffrent est en jeu, quand tant d'Africains sont en prison ou dans des camps de concentration, ce n'est pas le moment de parler de compromis. Ceux qui se rangent à l'opinion des puissances colonialistes sur le principe IX devront en répondre devant les peuples africains.

5. Par conséquent, la délégation guinéenne propose de représenter l'amendement primitif du Togo et de la Tunisie, mais d'y remplacer "nécessaire" par "indispensable".

6. M. HUSAIN (Pakistan), estime qu'il n'y a pas de raison de ne pas apporter les modifications nécessaires au texte du rapport du Comité spécial des Six. Le texte du principe IX présente une lacune qui peut provoquer des controverses sans fin. La Commission sait par expérience comment certains Etats Membres, lorsqu'ils en ont eu la latitude, ont défié le contrôle de l'ONU. Bien que la délégation pakistanaise n'ait pu appuyer l'amendement sous sa forme primitive, étant donné que des règles rigides risquent de paralyser l'action, elle estime que l'amendement révisé éclaircit la situation et elle y souscrit sans réserve. Aux termes de l'amendement, l'ONU pourra, lorsqu'elle le jugera nécessaire, contrôler les procédures. La délégation pakistanaise a confiance dans les Etats Membres qui administrent des territoires non autonomes, mais il n'y a pas de raison de ne pas avoir aussi confiance dans l'ONU.

7. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) explique que l'amendement primitif a été déposé parce que ses auteurs craignaient que l'intégration n'ait lieu sans une véritable liberté de choix: une fois l'intégration accomplie, il ne serait plus possible d'en discuter à l'ONU. Par conséquent, la délégation tunisienne a estimé que des sauvegardes étaient nécessaires pour l'application du principe IX.

8. En présentant l'amendement sous sa forme révisée, les auteurs, loin d'abandonner ce principe fondamental, l'ont renforcé et ont permis à d'autres d'appuyer ses objectifs. Ils s'en remettent à l'ONU pour qu'elle intervienne lorsqu'elle le juge nécessaire. Ils conviennent qu'il peut y avoir des cas où pareille intervention ne serait pas nécessaire. L'objet de l'amendement est de protéger les populations des territoires non autonomes. L'amendement a été modifié pour réaliser l'unité, et M. Bouziri fait appel à la Commission pour qu'elle appuie ce texte révisé.

9. La délégation tunisienne est fermement opposée à l'amendement de la Guinée, qui est encore plus rigide que le texte primitif, et elle demande instamment à la délégation guinéenne de le retirer.

10. M. CAMARA Maurice (Guinée) répond que, bien qu'il ait écouté attentivement la déclaration du représentant de la Tunisie, il n'a entendu aucune critique quant au fond de l'amendement de la délégation guinéenne. Si ce texte peut paraître catégorique, c'est que la Guinée n'a pas confiance dans les puissances administrantes. Elle estime que toutes les délégations qui ont à cœur le bien-être des peuples africains devraient s'élever contre le caractère illégitime du régime colonial. L'amendement guinéen cherche à éliminer une échappatoire qui permettrait aux colonialistes d'imposer l'intégration. La délégation guinéenne, qui ne recherche pas l'unité à tout prix ou par principe, et qui croit que certaines amitiés sont en fait embarrassantes, ne retirera pas son amendement.

11. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) regrette que des divergences d'opinions aient surgi entre des délégations qui, manifestement, poursuivent les mêmes objectifs, car le but des deux amendements dont la Commission est saisie est de remédier à une faiblesse du texte primitif du principe IX. Les auteurs des amendements pourraient tomber d'accord s'il y avait une brève suspension de séance.

12. M. ADAM (Somalie) appuie la proposition tendant à suspendre la séance.

La séance est suspendue à 16 h 30; elle est reprise à 16 h 50.

13. M. CAMARA Maurice (Guinée) annonce que sa délégation retire son amendement en faveur de l'amendement révisé du Togo et de la Tunisie. M. Camara tient cependant à avertir les puissances administrantes que, si elles veulent se réclamer du principe IX pour imposer l'intégration à des autochtones contre leur gré, elles trouveront tous les pays d'Afrique et d'Asie unis et prêts à s'opposer à cette manœuvre.

14. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) indique que sa délégation, qui maintient ses réserves sur les principes VIII et IX, s'abstiendra lors du vote sur ces principes et sur la version révisée de l'amendement du Togo et de la Tunisie. Il demande un vote par division sur l'alinéa c du principe VI et sur les principes VIII et IX.

15. M. KIANG (Chine) explique qu'au cours de la discussion générale sa délégation s'est prononcée en faveur des principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six. Malgré certaines opinions exprimées à la Quatrième Commission, le Comité spécial a été créé par l'Assemblée générale pour élaborer des principes d'application universelle et non particulière. Ce comité a réussi à établir une série de principes positifs qui, si la Commission les accepte, auront pour effet de changer heureusement les attitudes intransigeantes que bien des Etats Membres ont adoptées en 1952 et 1953. Les conclusions du Comité spécial des Six consacrent le fait que la déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes qui figure au Chapitre XI de la Charte intéresse l'ONU à juste titre.

16. Si la Quatrième Commission a des réserves à faire sur tout ou partie d'un principe quelconque, elle peut faire l'une des trois choses suivantes: refuser d'approuver le rapport du Comité spécial des Six; élargir le mandat du Comité pour lui permettre d'étudier à nouveau les principes en tenant compte des observations formulées à la Quatrième Commission; réviser les principes et les adopter comme si elle les avait établis elle-même. Ce que la Quatrième Commission ne peut pas faire, c'est réviser les principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six et ensuite les adopter comme s'ils étaient le fait de ce comité.

17. La délégation chinoise appuie les 12 principes élaborés par le Comité spécial des Six; tout amendement ou suppression la placerait dans une situation difficile, car elle ne pourrait exécuter son engagement d'appuyer les 12 principes.

18. M. KENNEDY (Irlande) convient que, si l'un quelconque des principes était modifié, l'ensemble ne pourrait plus être considéré comme l'œuvre du Comité spécial des Six.

19. M. CALOGERAS (Grèce) est heureux de constater que les 12 principes ont obtenu des éloges presque unanimes, car ils répondent sans aucun doute, et de la manière la plus constructive, aux buts de la Charte, apporteront un nouvel espoir à des millions de gens et rehausseront le prestige de l'ONU. Rien ne doit empêcher l'approbation unanime d'une résolution où les principes figureraient sous leur forme primitive. Les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale n'ayant pas force obligatoire, la délégation grecque attache une grande importance au principe d'unanimité, car une résolution adoptée à l'unanimité a plus de poids moral.

20. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) espère que, l'unanimité ayant manifestement fait défaut sur le texte primitif, l'adoption de l'amendement révisé provoquera cette unanimité, pour le bien des populations intéressées.

21. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) exprime des doutes sur la possibilité d'apporter des amendements aux principes. Ceux-ci ont été convenus au Comité spécial des Six, qui, étant un organisme paritaire, avec une représentation égale des Membres administrants et non administrants, ne reflète pas la composition de l'Assemblée générale. Ayant ainsi délégué ses pouvoirs, l'Assemblée devrait soit approuver le rapport du Comité dans son ensemble, soit le rejeter tout entier. Avant d'examiner tout amendement ou suggestion, la Quatrième Commission devrait voter sur l'ensemble des principes et, si elle les juge insuffisants, les renvoyer au Comité spécial pour plus ample examen.

22. M. SALAMANCA (Bolivie) estime que la proposition du représentant du Mexique est parfaitement légitime et se fonde sur des précédents.

23. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) et M. GEBRE-EGZY (Ethiopie) sont d'avis que la Commission a le droit de modifier les principes conformément aux vœux de la majorité.

24. M. IMAM (Pakistan) souligne, en réponse à l'argument du représentant du Mexique, que la Commission n'étudie pas pour le moment le rapport du Comité spécial des Six, mais un projet de résolution auquel sont joints en annexe les principes proposés par ce comité. Puisque ces principes font partie du projet de résolution, la Commission peut les modifier par un amendement qui, aux termes du règlement intérieur, devrait être mis aux voix en premier lieu. Au besoin, on pourrait modifier à cette fin le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution de manière qu'il n'y soit plus fait mention du rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

25. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) demande un vote séparé sur l'alinéa b du principe IX.

M. Pachachi (Irak) prend la présidence.

26. M. GRINBERG (Bulgarie) ne peut accéder à la proposition mexicaine. Selon les termes du paragraphe 1 du rapport du Comité spécial, qui déclare que "l'Assemblée générale a considéré qu'il serait souhaitable qu'elle énumère les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres ... et a décidé de créer un comité spécial de six membres chargé d'étudier ces principes", il est clair qu'il appartient à l'Assemblée générale d'énumérer les principes. Si l'Assemblée était obligée d'accepter ou de rejeter les principes tels quels, la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale l'aurait précisé. Le représentant du Mexique a fondé son argument sur la composition paritaire du Comité spécial des Six, mais d'autres organes ont une composition semblable, par exemple le Conseil de tutelle et le Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. La conclusion logique de l'argument du représentant du Mexique serait que les propositions formulées par l'un ou l'autre de ces organes doivent être acceptées ou rejetées sans modification. La Quatrième Commission dispose elle-même de son règlement et peut décider d'approuver les principes tels quels ou de les modifier.

27. M. CUEVAS CANCINO (Mexique) retire sa proposition.

28. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement révisé du Togo et de la Tunisie tendant à remplacer la dernière phrase de l'alinéa b du principe IX par les mots "Les Nations Unies pourront, lorsqu'elles le jugeront nécessaire, contrôler ces procédures".

31. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) invite la Commission à examiner la proposition qu'il a faite à la 1042ème séance, tendant à ajouter les mots "les considérations générales exposées dans la partie A et" après le mot "Approuve" au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1.

32. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) suggère que le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution soit ainsi modifié: "Approuve les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport présenté par le Comité spécial des Six tels qu'ils figurent, sous leur forme amendée, dans l'annexe à la présente résolution".

33. M. KOUTCHAVA (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) déclare que, si l'amendement iranien est mis aux voix, sa délégation demandera un vote séparé sur la dernière phrase du paragraphe 17 du rapport du Comité spécial: "On reconnaît aujourd'hui d'une façon générale que l'indépendance est une des aspirations légitimes de chaque nation dont la réalisation constitue un important facteur pour la préservation de la paix et de la sécurité internationales." Sa délégation votera pour cette phrase et s'abstiendra lors du vote sur l'ensemble du rapport.

34. M. CARPIO (Philippines) s'élève contre cette proposition en vertu de l'article 130 du règlement intérieur.

35. Le PRESIDENT fait remarquer qu'aux termes de l'article 130 l'autorisation de prendre la parole est accordée à deux orateurs pour et deux orateurs contre.

36. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne) appuie la motion. Il estime que l'adoption pure et simple des considérations générales renforcerait la résolution; puisque les opinions diffèrent, les membres de la Commission ont le droit de les exprimer par leur vote.

37. M. KOUdryAVTSEV (République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie) appuie la motion. Sa délégation votera pour la dernière phrase du paragraphe 17 et s'abstiendra sur le reste du rapport.

38. M. KANAKARATNE (Ceylan) adresse un appel au représentant de l'Iran pour qu'il retire son amendement au paragraphe 2 du dispositif, dont l'adoption pourrait donner lieu à des votes séparés sur le rapport du Comité spécial des Six.

39. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) retire son amendement.

40. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix le projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649 et Add.1, le paragraphe 2 du dispositif étant ainsi modifié: "Approuve les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport présenté par le Comité spécial des Six tels qu'ils figurent, sous leur forme amendée, dans l'annexe à la présente résolution".

A la demande du représentant du Libéria, il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par le Luxembourg, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (A/C.4/L.648 ET ADD.1, A/C.4/L.649/REV.1 ET REV.1/CORR.1 [suite])

Projet de résolution A/C.4/L.648 et Add.1 (fin)

1. M. AZNAR (Espagne) explique pourquoi il a voté contre le projet de résolution adopté à la séance précédente. La délégation espagnole a sévèrement critiqué, à plusieurs reprises, les principes posés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, parce qu'ils lui paraissent confus et susceptibles d'interprétations diverses. Plusieurs cas pourraient se présenter en effet dans lesquels la Commission aurait peine à décider, en prenant ces principes pour critères, si un territoire est autonome ou non. Que la délégation espagnole ait voté contre le projet de résolution ne change d'ailleurs rien à sa décision de communiquer spontanément des renseignements sur les territoires espagnols d'Afrique; cela ne change rien non plus à la position du Gouvernement espagnol, qui continue à condamner le colonialisme et l'exploitation de l'homme par l'homme; cela enfin n'empêche pas que certains des principes joints en annexe au projet ne soient excellents, par exemple le principe VIII, qui, mis aux voix séparément, a reçu l'appui de la délégation espagnole. La Commission doit donc bien voir que la position de la délégation espagnole est beaucoup moins éloignée de celle de la majorité qu'il ne peut paraître. Son vote à la séance précédente n'empêche pas que le Gouvernement espagnol soit bien décidé à continuer à collaborer avec l'ONU conformément aux principes inscrits dans la Charte.

2. M. ANSTENSEN (Canada) a voté à la séance précédente contre l'amendement remanié du Togo et de la Tunisie et s'est abstenu lors du vote sur l'alinéa h du principe IX et sur l'ensemble de ce principe. Il a cependant voté pour tous les autres principes mis aux voix séparément et pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution. Le Canada, coauteur du projet qui est devenu depuis la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, était partisan de la création du Comité spécial des Six; il pensait que ce comité poserait des principes qui guideraient les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements leur est applicable ou non. C'est bien ce que le Comité spécial a fait; mais tout le débat qui vient de se dérouler pourrait laisser croire que la Quatrième Commission est l'organe législatif d'un gouvernement mondial, et qu'elle est en train d'élaborer les lois ou même le code pénal de ce gouvernement. Il faut bien reconnaître que l'on n'en est pas encore là, même en considérant, comme l'a exprimé le Comité spécial (A/4526, par. 18), que la Charte est un "document vivant" qui doit permettre l'avènement d'un monde meilleur. Les Nations Unies ne sont encore que des Etats, librement associés sur un pied d'égalité absolue, qui s'engagent à s'acquitter des obligations que leur impose la Charte.

3. Le rapport du Comité spécial des Six (A/4526) était un remarquable compromis entre ceux qui auraient préféré des principes plus généraux et ceux qui auraient voulu des principes plus catégoriques; tous s'étaient finalement ralliés à ce texte unique parce qu'il était meilleur que deux séries de principes présentées côte à côte. La délégation canadienne, tout en éprouvant quelques doutes sur certains principes, a toujours été en faveur du projet de résolution qui reprenait les conclusions du Comité spécial; ce compromis n'impliquait en effet l'abandon d'aucun grand principe, mais était au contraire une preuve de sagesse et de courage moral. D'ailleurs, la stricte adhésion à des principes sacrés — bien qu'on en fasse volontiers l'éloge — se réduit trop souvent à une obstination à courte vue. Tout en appréciant la courtoisie dont le Togo et la Tunisie ont fait preuve en remaniant leur amendement original (A/C.4/L.650), la délégation canadienne a voté contre cet amendement remanié, car elle craignait que les principes ne puissent plus ensuite recevoir le large appui qu'il leur faut. Ce n'est pas en adoptant des textes que la Quatrième Commission peut obtenir de bons résultats, mais en témoignant de sa confiance envers la bonne foi des Etats Membres, qui auront alors à cœur d'appliquer ses résolutions. M. Anstensen regrette que, par son action, la Quatrième Commission ait empêché le Royaume-Uni, qui a fait maintes fois la preuve de sa bonne foi et d'une bonne volonté, de voter pour un texte qu'il avait dit accueillir avec sympathie.

4. M. DINGEMANS (Pays-Bas) précise que sa délégation, qui a fait tous ses efforts au Comité spécial des Six pour essayer de réaliser la synthèse des vues des représentants des puissances administrantes et des puissances non administrantes, aurait voté pour le texte primitif du projet de résolution. Les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial étaient en effet le résultat de longues discussions et de nombreux compromis. Mais l'amendement du Togo et de la Tunisie a porté atteinte au délicat équilibre qui avait été réalisé en introduisant une idée prêtant à controverse dans un texte qui avait eu l'approbation de tous les membres du Comité spécial. La délégation néerlandaise acceptait le texte primitif du principe IX, car il n'impliquait pas pour les Membres administrants l'obligation d'accepter ou de demander chaque fois le contrôle de l'ONU. Bien que ce contrôle puisse souvent être hautement souhaitable, l'amendement implique, de l'avis de sa délégation, que l'ONU peut dans toutes les circonstances décider s'il est nécessaire. Comme cela n'est pas conforme aux vues de sa délégation sur la question, il a voté contre cet amendement et s'est abstenu sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution.

5. M. VANDERBORGHT (Belgique) dit qu'en s'abstenant sur le projet de résolution, la Belgique ne prétendait pas émettre un jugement sur la manière dont le Comité spécial des Six s'est acquitté de sa tâche ou sur la valeur des principes que ce comité a énoncés. Elle a voulu simplement signifier qu'elle pense toujours, comme lorsqu'elle était responsable de l'administration d'un territoire non autonome — sur lequel elle fournissait d'ailleurs des renseignements — que les critères d'appréciation ne sont pas de la compétence de l'Assemblée générale, car nulle disposition de la Charte n'autorise l'Assemblée à intervenir dans un domaine qui relève de la compétence exclusive d'Etats souverains. La Belgique avait cependant été heureuse de pouvoir s'associer aux félicitations qui ont été adressées au Comité spécial des Six, notamment pour l'esprit de conciliation dont ses membres ont fait preuve, ce qui est toujours un spectacle réconfortant, même lorsqu'on ne peut marquer son accord sur le principe mis en œuvre.

6. M. ACLY (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) était en faveur du rapport du Comité spécial des Six et aurait appuyé le projet de résolution sous sa forme primitive. Si sa délégation s'est cependant abstenue, à son grand regret, c'est uniquement par suite de l'adoption de l'amendement du Togo et de la Tunisie. Mais le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis n'a pas changé d'avis: il continue à approuver le rapport, tant pour sa tendance générale que pour les principes qu'il pose, y compris l'alinéa b du principe IX, qui stipule qu'il peut être souhaitable, dans certains cas, que l'ONU contrôle la procédure d'intégration.

7. M. SINGH (Inde) s'est abstenu sur l'amendement du Togo et de la Tunisie, non faute de sympathiser avec ses auteurs, mais parce qu'il éprouvait des doutes graves sur ses modalités d'application et sur les problèmes de compétence qu'il soulevait.

*Projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1
et Rev.1/Corr.1*

8. M. SINGH (Inde) annonce que les auteurs du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649, auxquels se sont maintenant joints l'Irak, la Libye et le Sénégal, présentent une version remaniée de leur texte (A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1, et Rev.1/Corr.1), car, au cours de conversations, le représentant de l'Espagne leur a confirmé l'intention de son gouvernement de respecter les obligations que la Charte lui impose à l'égard des territoires qu'il administre et de communiquer des renseignements sur la situation de ces territoires, y compris leur situation politique. Ce représentant a d'ailleurs fait plusieurs déclarations en ce sens devant la Quatrième Commission et est prêt, leur a-t-il dit, à approuver les termes du projet de résolution. Il n'est donc plus besoin d'énumérer les territoires non autonomes administrés en Afrique par l'Espagne, ce qui risquerait d'ailleurs de soulever des difficultés dans la mesure où certains de ces territoires sont contestés. Le paragraphe 5 du dispositif du nouveau texte indique que les renseignements communiqués par l'Espagne recevront le même traitement que ceux qu'envoient les autres Membres administrants. Les auteurs du projet de résolution constatent avec satisfaction l'attitude conciliante de l'Espagne et déplorent que le Portugal ne semble malheureusement pas avoir changé d'attitude. Le représentant de l'Inde demande à la Commission d'adopter ce projet de résolution, qui permettra de sauvegarder les intérêts de la population des territoires sous administration portugaise.

9. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) tient à répondre brièvement et objectivement à certaines allégations. Les délégations qui ont accusé la délégation portugaise et son gouvernement l'ont fait en des termes que l'on n'avait jamais encore entendus à la Quatrième Commission. Elles n'ont pas hésité à parler de cruauté, d'hypocrisie, de machiavélisme, de cynisme, de lâcheté ou d'arrogance. L'une d'entre elles a déclaré que les amis du Portugal seraient les ennemis de son pays; une autre a évoqué la possibilité d'exclure le Portugal de l'Organisation. Tout cela donne à réfléchir sur la nature et la tenue des débats. La délégation portugaise ne se laissera pas ému par la démagogie verbale ou la violence du mensonge.

10. Sans preuve aucune — car il leur aurait fallu forger des preuves s'ils avaient été obligés de les fournir — certains ont affirmé que le Gouvernement portugais pratique le travail forcé. M. Nogueira rejette catégoriquement cette calomnie de basse propagande. Est-il besoin de rappeler qu'après avoir adopté, il y a longtemps, des lois qui garantissent la liberté du travail et le libre choix de l'employeur, le Portugal a ratifié la première Convention concernant le travail forcé ou obligatoire, élaborée en 1930 par l'OIT, et la Convention concernant l'abolition du travail forcé, adoptée en 1957? La première session de la commission consultative africaine de l'OIT, qui s'est tenue à Saint-Paul de Luanda en 1959, sur l'invitation du Gouvernement portugais, a d'ailleurs permis à de nombreux spécialistes et délégués des gouvernements et des organisations syndicales de se rendre compte sur place de la situation locale et de faire ensuite des déclarations bien différentes de celles qu'a entendues la Quatrième Commission.

11. On a également parlé d'esclavage. C'est là une affirmation dont la gratuité dépasse les limites du concevable. Faut-il préciser que le Gouvernement portugais respecte les valeurs morales et a ratifié la Convention supplémentaire relative à l'abolition de l'esclavage et des institutions et pratiques analogues à l'esclavage, élaborée à Genève en 1956?

12. D'autres encore ont dit que l'oppression et la terreur règnent dans les provinces portugaises d'outre-mer et que le secret de la paix sociale dans ces territoires vient de la présence de milliers de soldats. Peut-être certains ont-ils en effet peine à concevoir que l'on puisse faire régner la paix sans user de la force brutale. C'est peut-être que, déçus du peu de résultats de leur propagande mensongère, ils prétendent, puisqu'ils ne peuvent pas alléguer des troubles et qu'il leur faut critiquer coûte que coûte, que la paix vient de l'oppression. Quiconque veut bien considérer les faits reconnaîtra que le Portugal n'entretient pas d'armée, car il n'a pas l'intention d'attaquer qui que ce soit et ne s'attend pas non plus à être attaqué. Les quelques troupes postées à la frontière d'un pays où se déroulaient de regrettables événements étaient uniquement destinées à faire respecter la stricte neutralité du Portugal. Tels sont les faits. La Commission jugera de l'état d'esprit de ceux qui n'hésitent pas à déclarer que le représentant du Portugal a peut-être raison, mais qui considèrent comme vrai tout ce qui sert leur thèse.

13. Par respect pour la Commission et par courtoisie envers les représentants qui lui ont posé des questions — auxquelles il ne pouvait pas répondre immédiatement faute de données suffisantes — M. Nogueira précise, bien qu'il n'y soit nullement obligé, qu'à l'Assemblée nationale portugaise siègent trois représentants de l'Angola, trois représentants du Mozambique, deux représentants de l'Etat de l'Inde et un représentant de chacune des autres provinces. Le nombre des représentants des districts électoraux d'outre-mer s'élèvera à 23 quand les 10 représentants supplémentaires attribués à ces districts par décision d'août 1959 auront été élus en octobre 1961. Bien que les membres de la délégation portugaise à l'ONU ne représentent pas telle ou telle partie du territoire, mais toute la nation portugaise, M. Nogueira peut indiquer qu'au cours des cinq dernières années, cette délégation a compris deux représentants nés à Goa, deux représentants nés en Angola et quatre représentants nés respectivement en Guinée portugaise, dans les îles du Cap-Vert, au Mozambique et à Macao.

14. M. Nogueira estime qu'il n'est que juste que le représentant de la Guinée réponde à son tour à deux questions précises. Il aimerait en effet savoir quels sont le nom, la date et le texte de la loi portugaise qui distinguerait cinq catégories de personnes dans la population et sur quoi le représentant de la Guinée se fonde pour affirmer que le Gouvernement portugais a ou a l'intention d'avoir 60.000 soldats en Angola.

15. M. ZIKRIA (Afghanistan) précise une fois de plus qu'en soutenant la cause des peuples dépendants, et en tenant à figurer parmi les auteurs du projet de résolution remanié, la délégation afghane ne veut nullement manifester du parti pris contre un Etat ou plusieurs. En adoptant les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six, la Commission vient enfin de sortir de l'impasse où elle se trouvait depuis longtemps. Il est logique qu'elle cherche désormais à faire appliquer à des cas particuliers des dispositions qui répondent aux vœux de la quasi-totalité de la Commission. Pour la délégation afghane, l'expression: "peuples soumis à la domination coloniale", au troisième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution remanié désigne tous les peuples encore soumis contre leur volonté à une domination étrangère. Ce projet de résolution permettrait donc l'exercice effectif du droit d'autodétermination. M. Zikria espère donc que la Commission adoptera ce projet à une forte majorité.

16. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne), prenant la parole sur une question d'ordre, demande au représentant de l'Inde de bien vouloir préciser quelle déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne autorise les auteurs à écrire sans hésitation au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution remanié: "Le Gouvernement espagnol accepte de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte".

17. M. NEKLESSA (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) présente, sous la cote A/C.4/L.651, quatre amendements au projet de résolution remanié. La Commission, qui ne procède plus à un débat théorique, doit maintenant prendre des mesures concrètes à l'endroit de deux Membres de l'ONU qui, depuis cinq ans, refusent de se soumettre aux obligations que leur impose le Chapitre XI de la Charte sous prétexte, d'une part, que les dispositions de ce chapitre XI ne sont pas obligatoires et, d'autre part, qu'ils n'administrent pas des colonies, mais des provinces d'outre-mer. Les débats de la Quatrième Commission ayant fait clairement ressortir que ces provinces d'outre-mer sont en fait des territoires non autonomes, et les représentants du Portugal et de l'Espagne n'ayant pas pu réfuter les faits que de nombreuses délégations ont cités à l'appui de cette thèse, il était naturel d'attendre de l'Assemblée générale qu'elle prenne, à sa présente session, des mesures pratiques pour mettre un terme aux manœuvres du Portugal et de l'Espagne. Or le texte primitif du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649) avait déjà un caractère assez modéré, tout en comprenant un certain nombre de dispositions justifiées. Le projet de résolution révisé est édulcoré. Il diffère complètement du texte primitif. On a supprimé notamment le paragraphe 1 du dispositif original qui soulignait la nécessité d'assurer aux populations autochtones des colonies de l'Espagne et du Portugal la pleine liberté d'exercer une activité politique démocratique. En d'autres termes, on a supprimé du texte primitif ce qui intéresse au premier chef la population autochtone. La délégation ukrainienne ne comprend pas pourquoi ce paragraphe n'apparaît plus dans la nouvelle version du projet de résolution; il demande à la Commission de le rétablir dans ses grandes lignes; le paragraphe 1 du dispositif se lirait ainsi:

"1. Presse le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais d'accorder aux populations autochtones des territoires non autonomes placés sous leur administration la pleine liberté d'exercer une activité politique démocratique qui assurerait leur accession à l'indépendance".

18. Les représentants du Ghana, de la Guinée, de l'Inde et d'autres pays ont mentionné dans leurs interventions au cours de la discussion générale les mesures de répression prises par le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais contre les dirigeants du mouvement de libération nationale. Selon le représentant du Ghana, il faut inviter le Portugal et l'Espagne à libérer les dirigeants du mouvement de libération nationale qui se trouvent en prison ou dans des camps de concentration. La délégation ukrainienne pense que l'adoption du paragraphe qu'elle propose influencera le Portugal et l'Espagne et les contraindra notamment à libérer les leaders démocratiques qui sont en prison ou dans des camps de concentration.

19. La délégation ukrainienne s'élève ensuite contre l'emploi de l'expression "avec satisfaction" au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution révisé; elle estime qu'il faut blâmer l'Espagne d'avoir refusé pendant cinq ans d'assumer ses obligations, et non la féliciter. Si la délégation espagnole a fait à plusieurs reprises savoir qu'elle était disposée à communiquer des renseignements sur ses territoires non autonomes, elle n'en a encore jamais rien fait. Les déclarations que le représentant de l'Espagne a faites à la présente session de l'Assemblée générale sont contradictoires et n'autorisent nullement la Commission à exprimer à cet égard sa satisfaction.

20. La délégation ukrainienne propose, afin d'éviter tout malentendu, d'énumérer au paragraphe 1 de son amendement A/C.4/L.651 les territoires non autonomes sur lesquels l'Espagne est tenue de communiquer des renseignements: Ifni, Sahara occidental, Fernando Poo, Rio Muni et îles Canaries. Cette liste figurait dans le texte primitif du projet de résolution. L'amendement de la délégation ukrainienne comprend en outre les îles Canaries, qui ne figuraient pas dans la liste primitive. Ces îles ont en effet le même statut que les autres territoires non autonomes administrés par l'Espagne. De l'avis de la délégation ukrainienne, l'énumération des territoires non autonomes sur lesquels l'Espagne doit communiquer des renseignements serait indispensable même si le Gouvernement espagnol se déclarait prêt à communiquer ces renseignements, mais elle l'est encore plus étant donné les déclarations contradictoires du représentant de l'Espagne et son refus de nommer les territoires administrés par l'Espagne.

21. La délégation ukrainienne propose aussi de supprimer le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution révisé, tendant à ce que l'Assemblée générale prie le Secrétaire général de prendre les mesures nécessaires à la suite de la déclaration du Gouvernement espagnol selon laquelle il est prêt à se conformer aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. La délégation ukrainienne estime que dès 1955, c'est-à-dire à l'époque où le Portugal et l'Espagne sont devenus Membres de l'ONU, le Secrétaire général aurait dû prendre des mesures pour que ces Etats appliquent la Charte. On ne sait pas quelles mesures il s'agit de prendre à présent. Si la Commission énumère les territoires sur lesquels l'Espagne est tenue de communiquer des renseignements, le Secrétaire général devra recevoir ces renseignements conformément à la procédure établie.

22. Au paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution examiné, la délégation ukrainienne propose d'ajouter après les mots "au titre du Chapitre XI de la Charte" les mots "jusqu'au moment où la pleine indépendance leur aura été accordée", afin d'indiquer clairement le but vers lequel tendent les territoires en question. A son avis, cet amendement ne doit pas rencontrer d'objections, car il répond à l'esprit de la Charte et à celui du projet de Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays coloniaux, présenté par la délégation soviétique pour examen en séance plénière de l'Assemblée générale à la quinzième session (A/4502 et Corr.1).

23. M. CABA (Guinée) juge qu'au début de la séance, le représentant du Portugal, loin de convaincre la Commission, n'a fait que préciser davantage la politique discriminatoire appliquée par le Portugal. Se réservant le droit de répondre plus tard à cette dé-claration, M. Caba indique toutefois que le représentant du Portugal n'a pas vraiment répondu aux deux questions qu'il lui avait posées; il compte pour sa part fournir, lui, des réponses précises aux deux questions du représentant du Portugal.

24. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) estime que le projet de résolution examiné est la conséquence logique du projet de résolution adopté par la Commission à la séance précédente. La délégation iranienne approuve les changements apportés au texte primitif du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649, et surtout la suppression du paragraphe 1, qui préjugait de l'issue même de la résolution. La Commission doit attendre que le Portugal réponde à sa demande de renseignements avant de lui demander autre chose.

25. Le représentant de l'Iran fera ultérieurement des observations sur les amendements déposés par la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine.

26. M. WEEKS (Libéria), usant de son droit de réponse, déclare qu'il a participé à la conférence citée par le représentant du Portugal, et que les renseignements qu'il y a recoltés de première main contredisent ceux que vient de donner le représentant du Portugal. M. Nogueira n'a pas non plus vraiment dit à la Commission si les députés dont il parlait représentent véritablement la population des territoires non autonomes ou les intérêts de ces populations.

27. Passant au texte en discussion, le représentant du Libéria déclare qu'il aurait voté sans objection le projet de résolution sous sa forme primitive. Mais les changements apportés par les auteurs dans le texte révisé prêtent à confusion. Comme l'indiquent les amendements présentés par la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, il n'y a pas lieu de traiter différemment le Portugal et l'Espagne; et, si l'on énumère les territoires sous administration portugaise, il faut aussi énumérer les territoires sous administration espagnole. Sur ce point, la délégation libérienne appuiera les amendements ukrainiens, qui permettront de savoir si vraiment l'Espagne est décidée à communiquer des renseignements sur ses territoires. La Commission pourrait toutefois retenir l'alinéa où elle se déclare satisfaite d'apprendre que le Gouvernement espagnol a accepté de communiquer des renseignements, si cette déclaration est bien exacte.

28. M. SINGH (Inde) indique, pour répondre à la question du représentant de la Pologne, qu'il n'a plus aucun doute sur les intentions du Gouvernement espagnol à la suite des déclarations que le représentant de l'Espagne a faites au cours de la séance même, ainsi qu'à la 1038^{ème} séance. Sur cette dernière déclaration, M. Singh tient à citer textuellement le représentant de l'Espagne:

"Néanmoins, ai-je dit l'an dernier — et je l'ai dit en me référant à ce que j'avais déjà dit deux ans plus tôt — nous répétons et nous le maintiendrons toujours que, désireux de collaborer avec tous les Etats Membres de l'ONU, nous sommes obligés de tenir compte constamment, non seulement de l'Article 11, mais encore de l'esprit de la Charte en général, dans son intégralité et dans sa réalité. Et, puisque l'on nous fait l'honneur de s'intéresser à la vie de nos provinces ibériques et de nos provinces d'outre-mer, nous ne refuserons pas de fournir des renseignements; au contraire, puisque nous n'avons rien à cacher, nous nous efforcerons d'envoyer au Secrétaire général des renseignements complets, pour son information. Et, si certains représentants éprouvent encore une curiosité plus vive, je me ferai moi-même un plaisir, à titre personnel, de les satisfaire."

29. Pour la délégation indienne, le Gouvernement espagnol a catégoriquement pris position.

30. M. BRAIMAH (Ghana) a tenu à figurer parmi les auteurs du projet de résolution révisé, par lequel la Commission s'attaque à l'essentiel de sa tâche. Il faut souhaiter que la délégation portugaise consente à apporter sa coopération à cette tâche, en acceptant, comme l'Espagne, d'assumer l'obligation prévue à l'Article 73 et que consacrent les 12 principes que la Commission a adoptés à sa séance précédente. Il faut que le Portugal comprenne que l'objectif ultime des dispositions de l'Article 73 de la Charte est de permettre aux peuples dépendants d'accéder le plus rapidement possible à l'indépendance. C'est du reste bien ce que le Comité spécial des Six a reconnu dans son rapport (A/4526).

31. Le représentant du Ghana se réserve le droit de faire plus tard des observations sur les amendements de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine.

32. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne) remercie le représentant de l'Inde des précisions qu'il vient d'apporter. Mais ses doutes ne sont pas encore dissipés, car il ne semble pas que, dans la déclaration qu'il vient de faire, le représentant de l'Espagne soit allé au-delà de ce qu'il avait dit le 7 novembre à la 1038ème séance; il a en effet déclaré que de nombreuses délégations ont oublié la position de la délégation espagnole quant à l'interprétation du Chapitre XI de la Charte, ou n'ont pas encore eu le temps d'en prendre connaissance. Or, cette interprétation ressort clairement de la réponse envoyée par le Gouvernement espagnol au Secrétaire général conformément à la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, à savoir que l'Espagne ne possède pas de territoires qui pourraient créer pour elle l'obligation énoncée à l'Article 73 (A/AC.100/1, par. 10). M. Aznar l'a répété à la 1038ème séance, en ajoutant toutefois qu'étant donné sa volonté de collaborer avec l'ONU, son pays est prêt à communiquer, le moment venu, des renseignements sur ses provinces d'outre-mer. Rien dans les déclarations du représentant de l'Espagne ne permet donc de dire, comme l'ont fait les auteurs du texte remanié du projet de résolution, que le Gouvernement espagnol accepte de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Ce qui intéresse la Commission, ce n'est pas tant de recevoir des renseignements sur les territoires espagnols (on pourrait tout aussi bien se les procurer en librairie) que de voir l'Espagne s'acquitter des obligations qu'elle a contractées du fait de son admission à l'ONU, au titre du Chapitre XI de la Charte. M. Blusztajn redemande donc au représentant de l'Inde s'il estime que la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne correspond bien au texte du projet de résolution.

33. M. ORTIZ DE ROZAS (Argentine) estime que le projet de résolution dont la Commission est saisie est l'aboutissement du long processus qui a amené la Commission à adopter finalement une série de principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable ou non. La délégation argentine, qui a toujours interprété le Chapitre XI de la Charte comme obligeant les Membres administrants à communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'ils administrent, a voté pour ces principes et pour le projet de résolution auquel ils sont joints en annexe. Franchissant une nouvelle étape, l'Assemblée générale demande maintenant à la délégation d'un Etat Membre de communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'il administre.

34. Le Gouvernement espagnol a décidé d'agir conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, et M. Ortiz de Rozas s'en félicite. La déclaration catégorique du représentant de l'Espagne ne laisse plus l'ombre d'un doute à ce sujet, d'autant qu'il a même mis au point les renseignements de toute nature — renseignements politiques compris — que son gouvernement va communiquer. L'Argentine a toujours cru à la parole de l'Espagne, à qui l'unissent tant de liens. Elle se félicite que le texte remanié rende justice à une nouvelle attitude du Gouvernement espagnol et considère qu'il correspond fidèlement à ce que le représentant de l'Espagne a affirmé à maintes reprises. A cet égard, la délégation argentine attache la plus grande importance à ce que M. Aznar a dit des négociations bilatérales que son gouvernement est disposé à entamer au sujet de ses possessions d'Afrique du Nord, et elle est certaine que ces négociations porteront bientôt des fruits.

35. Les auteurs du nouveau projet ont bien fait de supprimer le paragraphe 1 du dispositif de l'ancien texte (A/C.4/L.649). On ne pouvait pas en effet, avant d'avoir reçu les renseignements demandés, présumer que le Gouvernement espagnol et le Gouvernement portugais n'assurent pas aux populations autochtones des territoires placés sous leur administration la pleine liberté d'exercer une activité politique démocratique qui hâterait leur accession à l'indépendance. Ce serait en quelque sorte condamner le prévenu avant d'avoir les preuves de sa culpabilité. Le représentant de l'Ukraine a jugé bon de rétablir ce paragraphe par un amendement: cette proposition n'est pas logique, car pourquoi parler dès maintenant de l'indépendance d'un territoire, alors que l'Assemblée générale doit d'abord — il l'a affirmé à maintes reprises — examiner le projet de déclaration d'indépendance? Dans ces conditions, la délégation argentine votera contre l'amendement ukrainien et pour le projet remanié, si l'amendement est rejeté.

36. M. SKALLI (Maroc) rappelle que le rapport du Comité spécial et les principes qu'il pose sont une œuvre de compromis, qui ne peut donc pas refléter les convictions profondes des membres non administrants du Comité, mais qui n'en constitue pas moins une contribution appréciable, car elle doit guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements leur est applicable ou non. Il s'agit maintenant de donner à ces principes un contenu concret et une portée pratique, c'est-à-dire de les appliquer à l'Espagne et au Portugal, qui, seules de toutes les puissances coloniales, ont répondu qu'ils ne géraient pas de territoires non autonomes. Mais peut-on soutenir que des territoires entiers, différents de la métropole à tous les points de vue, sont des "provinces d'outre-mer"? Cet artifice, dont la généralisation entraînerait le chaos dans les relations internationales, ne trompe personne. Et, en admettant même qu'il y ait eu un changement dans les relations entre les territoires et la métropole, ce changement n'aurait pas pu s'opérer au moment de l'admission de l'Espagne et du Portugal à l'ONU, car les dispositions de la Charte doivent avoir le pas sur toutes les législations nationales. Le représentant du Portugal a attaqué, à la 1041^{ème} séance, ce qu'il appelle le caractère tendancieux des principes, mais son accusation n'a convaincu personne, tant il est vrai qu'une argutie juridique ne peut être opposée à la réalité des faits: la Commission n'est pas une cour de justice, mais un organe politique qui se préoccupe de situations réelles. Le Portugal est libre de s'attacher au sens littéral des mots inscrits dans la Charte; mais, pour les autres membres de la Commission, "la Charte est un document vivant" et qui s'applique à des êtres vivants et notamment, aux yeux de la délégation marocaine, à ceux qui vivent à Ifni, dans le Sahara occidental, à Ceuta et à Melilla. Le représentant de l'Espagne a comparé les pays anticolonialistes à un groupe d'archanges, défenseurs de la liberté du monde, qui tiennent l'Espagne pour un monstre nourri de la chair et du sang des peuples africains.

37. M. AZNAR (Espagne), intervenant pour une question d'ordre, se défend d'avoir jamais prononcé cette phrase.

38. M. SKALLI (Maroc) a lui-même noté cette phrase au moment où elle était prononcée, et elle figure d'ailleurs dans le compte rendu de la 1038^{ème} séance. Quoi qu'il en soit, la Commission se trouve saisie du cas de deux Etats qui ont eu un passé colonial et qui, maintenant à cet égard une attitude intransigeante, demeurent isolés. Le représentant du Portugal prétend que la question de l'envoi de renseignements n'a pas éveillé un grand intérêt chez les Etats Membres, puisque 26 gouvernements seulement ont jugé utile d'envoyer une réponse au Secrétaire général en application de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale. C'est vrai et faux tout à la fois. C'est vrai parce que de nombreux pays considèrent que la question est secondaire et qu'elle a perdu de son actualité au moment où le seul problème réel est celui de la liquidation pure et simple du colonialisme; c'est vrai aussi parce que les renseignements transmis par les Membres administrants ne peuvent jamais être tout à fait sincères ni objectifs et que, grâce à l'émancipation de l'Afrique, des voix plus authentiques peuvent se faire entendre et éclairer l'ONU sur la véritable situation économique, sociale ou politique réelle des territoires non autonomes. Mais, d'un autre côté, ce qu'affirme le représentant du Portugal est faux, car toutes les délégations ont désapprouvé en termes non équivoques l'attitude de l'Espagne et du Portugal; le silence même des pays qui se sont tus pour n'avoir pas à condamner un pays ami est tout aussi significatif. On peut donc dire que pas un membre de la Commission n'approuve l'attitude de l'Espagne et du Portugal, et que la condamnation de l'opinion mondiale marque davantage encore l'isolement de ces deux pays.

39. Il fut un temps où le colonialisme jouissait de l'impunité et où il était considéré comme chose normale. Mais actuellement, les peuples opprimés ont retrouvé leur voix, égale à celle de leurs anciens maîtres, et le fait colonial est devenu internationalement immoral. C'est pourquoi la délégation marocaine approuve le projet de résolution remanié. Mais elle y fait cette réserve expresse que son gouvernement considère comme parties intégrantes du territoire marocain Ceuta et Melilla, ainsi que le territoire d'Ifni et celui du Sahara occidental. Si le projet remanié ne mentionne pas ces villes et ces territoires, cela n'implique pas que la Commission les reconnaisse comme des provinces espagnoles. Il reste entendu que ce sont des colonies. La délégation marocaine regrette de devoir faire ce procès à l'Espagne, qui a aligné son attitude sur celle du Portugal, mais constate néanmoins avec satisfaction que son représentant a déclaré que le Gouvernement espagnol est disposé à fournir les renseignements prévus à l'Article 73 de la Charte. Certes, l'Espagne ne possède pas, dans ses territoires d'Afrique, des intérêts considérables, mais elle aurait tout avantage à libérer Ifni, le Sahara occidental, Ceuta et Melilla qui sont marocains et à permettre enfin leur réunion au Royaume du Maroc; le droit, la justice et l'honneur rendent souhaitables des négociations bilatérales, que l'on peut espérer fructueuses, sur les territoires litigieux.

40. Le représentant de l'Espagne a déclaré ici-même que certains pays ont un droit vis-à-vis de l'Espagne, et il a ajouté que les droits de l'Espagne s'arrêtent là où commencent les droits des autres. M. Skalli pense que c'est à son pays que le représentant de l'Espagne fait allusion et voudrait, s'il se trompe, que celui-ci le lui dise.

41. Si son interprétation est juste, si l'Espagne résout ainsi le problème de ses possessions d'outre-mer, le Portugal restera désespérément solitaire. S'il ne change pas de politique, il risque de se trouver distancé par la caravane de l'humanité, en marche vers une liberté et des progrès toujours plus grands. Le projet en discussion est sa dernière chance; il ne doit pas la laisser passer.

42. M. AZNAR (Espagne) précise que la phrase citée par le représentant du Maroc et reprise dans le compte rendu d'une séance précédente n'est pas une affirmation catégorique, mais une manière dialectique de présenter un argument à des fins polémiques.

43. M. SKALLI (Maroc) concède qu'il s'agit là d'un point de détail, mais que le représentant de l'Espagne est pleinement responsable de ses paroles et de leur sens.

La séance est levée à 13 h 15.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

 EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION
 (A/C.4/L.649/REV.1 ET REV.1/CORR.1) [suite]

1. M. AZNAR (Espagne) remercie les représentants de l'Argentine et de l'Inde des observations qu'ils ont faites à la séance précédente au sujet de l'attitude adoptée par l'Espagne à propos de la communication de renseignements sur ses territoires d'outre-mer; il partage entièrement leur point de vue.

2. La délégation espagnole votera en faveur des paragraphes du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Corr.1 qui se rapportent à l'Espagne. Toutefois, M. Aznar tient à souligner que le libellé du quatrième paragraphe du préambule n'est pas conforme à la déclaration qu'il a faite à la 1046^{ème} séance et par laquelle il a informé la Commission que le Gouvernement espagnol avait décidé de communiquer spontanément des renseignements au Secrétaire général conformément au Chapitre XI de la Charte. D'autre part, M. Aznar ne voit pas l'utilité du paragraphe 4 du dispositif. Cependant, le paragraphe 5 du dispositif est acceptable pour la délégation espagnole.

3. M. Aznar souligne que, pour le moment, il ne fait évidemment qu'exprimer son opinion personnelle sur le projet de résolution; cependant, il est convaincu que le Gouvernement espagnol l'étudiera avec la plus grande attention.

4. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) exprime l'espoir que la délégation espagnole transmettra à la Commission une liste des territoires au sujet desquels le Gouvernement espagnol a décidé de communiquer des renseignements conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

5. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) rappelle qu'à la séance précédente le représentant du Maroc a affirmé que les déclarations de la délégation du Portugal n'avaient pas convaincu les membres de la Commission. A son avis, la délégation du Maroc n'est pas habilitée à parler au nom de l'ensemble de la Commission. Le représentant du Maroc a également fait observer que la Quatrième Commission n'était pas un tribunal. La délégation du Portugal partage entièrement cet avis, mais M. Nogueira tient à souligner que toute l'intervention du représentant du Maroc avait le caractère d'un jugement moral.

6. M. Nogueira se réserve de répondre ultérieurement à la déclaration du représentant du Maroc selon laquelle, au cours de leurs débats, les membres du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte n'ont eu à l'esprit que le Portugal et l'Espagne.

7. M. CARPIO (Philippines) désirerait que les auteurs du projet de résolution donnent des précisions sur certains points.

8. Tout d'abord, en ce qui concerne le troisième alinéa du préambule, où il est question d'une menace à la paix internationale, M. Carpio se demande si les auteurs du projet ont voulu parler des effets que pourrait avoir la situation actuelle sur la paix et la sécurité internationales — question qui est essentiellement du ressort du Conseil de sécurité — et si, en ce cas, ils ont tenu compte des dispositions de l'Article 18 de la Charte, en vertu duquel les décisions sur des questions relatives à la paix et à la sécurité internationales doivent être prises à la majorité des deux tiers.

9. Deuxièmement, M. Carpio se demande si la Commission a suffisamment examiné tous les faits et circonstances de la cause pour pouvoir conclure que les principes annexés au projet de résolution qu'elle a adopté à sa 1045^{ème} séance sont applicables.

10. La délégation des Philippines se propose de voter pour le projet de résolution amendé, mais voudrait être certaine que la Commission se conforme aux dispositions du projet de résolution remanié qu'elle a adopté à sa 1045^{ème} séance et ne prenne pas de décision avant d'avoir examiné tous les aspects de la question.

11. M. ROHAL-ILKIV (Tchécoslovaquie) ne comprend pas pourquoi les auteurs du projet de résolution remanié ont résolu de modifier et d'affaiblir leur texte original (A/C.4/L.649). Ils n'ont pu y être amenés par le cours du débat, puisque la discussion a montré que les délégations portugaise et espagnole se trouvaient presque complètement isolées sur la question dont il s'agit. De l'avis de la délégation tchécoslovaque, il faut faire savoir sans équivoque aux colonialistes espagnols et portugais, comme à tous les autres colonialistes, que l'ONU souhaite et même exige qu'ils libèrent toutes leurs colonies. Dans ses diverses déclarations, le représentant du Portugal n'a présenté aucun fait concret pour réfuter les arguments des autres délégations. Il a certes donné quelques chiffres sur le nombre de députés originaires de l'Angola et du Mozambique qui siègent au Parlement, à Lisbonne. Mais il ne suffit pas de savoir que ces personnes sont nées dans les colonies portugaises; si elles descendent de colonialistes portugais, elles ne peuvent représenter les intérêts véritables de la population autochtone.

12. La Commission a le devoir de faire en sorte que les colonialistes soient obligés non seulement de communiquer des renseignements sur leurs colonies, mais aussi de leur accorder une indépendance immédiate et complète.

13. La délégation tchécoslovaque approuve sans réserve les amendements proposés par la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651), dont l'adoption ferait que le projet de résolution refléterait avec plus d'exactitude les vues de l'ensemble de la Commission.

14. M. LOIZOU (Chypre) déclare qu'au début de la discussion générale sur les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six, la délégation de Chypre s'est volontairement abstenue de critiquer nommément certains Etats Membres administrants, pour ne pas les juger sur leurs actes passés et leur laisser la possibilité d'expliquer quelle serait leur attitude future. L'optimisme de la délégation chypriote a été justifié dans le cas de l'Espagne et M. Loizou félicite le Gouvernement espagnol d'avoir modifié son attitude.

15. En revanche, M. Loizou a été déçu par la position prise par la délégation du Portugal. Il est regrettable que le Gouvernement portugais n'ait pas compris l'esprit de l'époque actuelle et les changements fondamentaux qui se sont produits dans le monde. La politique qu'il suit est à courte vue et aura des effets opposés à ceux qu'il souhaite.

16. La délégation de Chypre votera en faveur du projet de résolution, qui est la conséquence naturelle de l'adoption des 12 principes. La mention expresse du Portugal et de ses territoires dépendants montre que l'ONU est sur la voie qui mènera à l'application effective de ces principes. Le projet de résolution aborde sans détour des problèmes aussi fondamentaux que ceux des progrès et de l'émancipation des peuples dépendants. Cette attitude a été rendue possible par le déplacement de la majorité des voix qui a marqué la quinzième session.

17. La délégation de Chypre n'a pas encore eu le temps d'étudier les amendements proposés par la délégation de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine et M. Loizou se réserve le droit de reprendre la parole, s'il y a lieu, après que les auteurs du projet de résolution révisé auront fait connaître leurs vues sur ces amendements.

18. M. SIDI BABA (Maroc), en réponse au représentant du Portugal, affirme que la délégation marocaine n'a jamais prétendu parler au nom de l'ensemble de la Commission. Mais elle est en droit d'exprimer ce qui lui paraît être l'avis général de la Commission. En affirmant que la grande majorité des membres de la Commission n'était pas favorable à la position portugaise, la délégation marocaine n'a fait que tirer la conclusion logique de ce qui avait été dit au cours du débat.

19. En ce qui concerne l'idée que la Quatrième Commission n'est pas un tribunal, M. Sidi Baba souligne que le problème dont il s'agit est essentiellement d'ordre politique et que la Quatrième Commission est compétente pour examiner les problèmes politiques relevant du domaine du colonialisme.

20. M. DIALLO (Mali) déclare que la délégation malienne était en faveur du texte original du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649), mais éprouve moins d'enthousiasme pour le texte révisé. Elle approuvera donc les amendements proposés par la délégation de la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine. Elle attache une importance toute particulière au paragraphe 1 du dispositif envisagé dans le deuxième amendement (A/C.4/L.651, par. 2).

21. Comme le représentant de la Tunisie, M. Diallo estime qu'il serait bon que la délégation espagnole fournisse à la Commission une liste des territoires sur lesquels le Gouvernement espagnol se propose de communiquer des renseignements, afin d'éviter toute équivoque ou tout malentendu à ce sujet.

22. M. KOUTCHAVA (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) regrette que le texte original du projet de résolution, où l'on trouvait des recommandations positives qui auraient contribué à une accession rapide des colonies portugaises et espagnoles à l'indépendance, et auraient aidé à mettre fin à l'oppression policière dans ces territoires, ait été affaibli sur l'insistance des puissances colonialistes. La délégation de l'Union soviétique ne peut approuver le projet de résolution dans sa forme révisée et édulcorée.

23. L'omission du paragraphe 1 du dispositif du texte original dans le projet de résolution révisé est regrettable. La délégation de l'Union soviétique estime que son interprétation de cette importante disposition, qu'elle approuvait, était la même que celle des auteurs du projet. Elle pensait que le texte original du paragraphe 1 du dispositif, qui condamnait le régime raciste de violence et d'arbitraire imposé par l'administration coloniale dans les colonies portugaises et espagnoles, exercerait une pression sur le Portugal et l'Espagne et les contraindrait à libérer les autochtones emprisonnés pour leurs activités démocratiques et à atténuer les restrictions policières. Dans leurs déclarations au cours de la discussion générale, les représentants du Ghana, de la Guinée et de l'Inde ont exposé ce qu'est l'état de choses qui règne dans les colonies portugaises et espagnoles. Après le débat qui s'est déroulé à la Commission et au cours duquel aucun représentant des puissances colonialistes n'a osé défendre le Portugal et l'Espagne, il était naturel que la Commission soit saisie d'un projet de résolution condamnant le Portugal et l'Espagne pour leur refus de mettre fin dans leurs colonies à un odieux régime colonial. Depuis cinq ans, le Portugal et l'Espagne se refusent obstinément à remplir leurs obligations, ce qui mérite d'être condamné de la façon la plus catégorique par la Commission. Au lieu d'une condamnation, M. Koutchava est donc surpris de trouver dans le projet de résolution examiné, qu'il juge tout à fait insuffisant, une expression de "satisfaction". Il pense qu'en supprimant du projet de résolution la liste des territoires administrés par l'Espagne, on accorde peut-être trop de confiance aux colonialistes. La délégation de l'Union soviétique estime que, pour éviter toute chicanerie possible, le paragraphe du projet de résolution qui prend acte du fait que l'Espagne a accepté de communiquer des renseignements conformément au Chapitre XI de la Charte devrait contenir une liste des territoires auxquels ces renseignements se rapportent. Tel est précisément l'objet du premier amendement ukrainien (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1), que la délégation de l'URSS approuve sans réserve.

24. Ce n'est qu'en adoptant les amendements ukrainiens que la Commission rendra le projet de résolution satisfaisant et efficace. Si ces amendements sont adoptés, la délégation de l'Union soviétique votera en faveur du projet de résolution remanié; dans le cas contraire, il lui sera évidemment impossible de le faire.

25. La délégation de l'URSS désire également qu'il soit pris acte des réserves qu'elle a faites à l'égard de la liste des territoires administrés par le Portugal qui se trouve au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution remanié. A son avis, Goa, Macao, Timor et leurs dépendances sont des parties du territoire de l'Inde, de la République populaire de Chine et de l'Indonésie et devraient être restitués à leurs possesseurs légitimes. Macao et les îles qui en dépendent, où la population chinoise prédomine, furent loués par la Chine au Portugal, qui désirait y créer un comptoir, en 1557. La souveraineté de la Chine y a été reconnue jusqu'en 1849, date à laquelle le Portugal a refusé de payer son dû et a transformé illégalement ce territoire en une colonie. Cet emploi de la force armée ne prive pas la République populaire de Chine de ses droits et de sa souveraineté sur le territoire. La délégation de l'Union soviétique regrette que les auteurs du projet de résolution aient accepté, probablement sous la pression des puissances colonialistes, d'y apporter des modifications qui en réduisent l'efficacité. Dans les circonstances actuelles, à une époque où le mouvement anticolonialiste est beaucoup plus puissant que jamais, le trop grand souci de transiger avec les colonialistes qu'ont manifesté certaines délégations desservent les intérêts des populations qui sont encore sous le joug colonial. On ne peut transiger sur le principe de l'abolition du système colonial. Il n'est pas certain que l'envoi par le Portugal et l'Espagne de renseignements sur leurs territoires non autonomes fera progresser la libération des populations de ces territoires. En outre, comme le représentant du Portugal a nié, sans fournir aucune preuve, tous les faits concernant les colonies portugaises cités au cours du débat, tout renseignement que le Portugal pourrait éventuellement communiquer serait sujet à caution.

26. La délégation de l'URSS est convaincue qu'au lieu de chercher à assurer la communication de renseignements douteux, l'ONU devrait exiger la libération complète et immédiate des colonies portugaises et espagnoles. Au milieu du XXème siècle, la conscience humaine ne peut accepter que des peuples soient asservis par d'autres peuples. Le Portugal, l'Espagne et les autres puissances coloniales devraient se rendre compte que l'ère du colonialisme est révolue. Le moment est venu de leur dire qu'elles devraient comprendre les impératifs de l'histoire et se retirer pacifiquement de leurs colonies. On devrait leur dire que, si elles s'y refusent, les peuples des colonies balayeront tous les vestiges des anciens empires coloniaux et que toutes les nations éprises de paix les aideront dans cette noble entreprise.

27. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) regrette que son pays ait à nouveau fait l'objet des mêmes accusations erronées. Il se réserve le droit de répondre à la déclaration du représentant de l'URSS.

28. M. KANAKARATNE (Ceylan) lance un appel aux membres de la Commission pour qu'ils s'abstiennent de toute polémique et ne fassent porter leurs interventions que sur le projet de résolution et les amendements proposés.

29. A la Quatrième Commission comme ailleurs, la délégation ceylanaise a condamné, avec autant de vigueur que n'importe quelle autre délégation, les méthodes et arguments auxquels certains Etats Membres recourent depuis quelques années pour justifier ce que rien ne pourra jamais justifier — le droit que s'attribuent certains peuples de dominer d'autres peuples. Pour l'instant, cependant, la Commission ne discute pas du colonialisme dans l'abstrait, mais d'un projet de résolution dont la délégation ceylanaise est l'un des auteurs. Le Comité spécial des Six, créé en vertu de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, a présenté un rapport (A/4526) qui, après des débats assez prolongés, a finalement été adopté à une majorité écrasante par la Quatrième Commission. Tout ce à quoi vise le présent projet de résolution, c'est d'appliquer les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six à ceux des Etats Membres qui, de l'avis des auteurs de ce projet, ne se sont pas acquittés des obligations que leur impose l'Article 73 de la Charte à l'égard des territoires non autonomes auxquels s'appliquent ces 12 principes. Il n'est donc pas à propos, pour le moment, de parler en détail des conditions régnant dans certains territoires non autonomes, si effroyables, si tragiques et si condamnables ces conditions soient-elles.

30. M. Kanakarathne tient à faire part au Gouvernement espagnol de la satisfaction qu'a éprouvée son gouvernement en apprenant que, comme la délégation espagnole l'a annoncé, il y a quelques jours, le Gouvernement espagnol avait décidé de communiquer des renseignements concernant ses territoires d'outre-mer.

31. La délégation ceylanaise regrette que la délégation ukrainienne propose (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1) de supprimer les mots "avec satisfaction" au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution révisé et il espère que cette proposition sera retirée. Les mots en question, de l'avis de sa délégation, sont parfaitement justifiés et il faut espérer que le Portugal suivra l'exemple donné par l'Espagne. Lorsqu'un gouvernement répond à un appel, tel que celui qui lui a été adressé par presque toutes les délégations ayant participé aux débats, on peut y voir assurément une victoire pour l'ONU et un motif de satisfaction pour toute la Commission.

32. Les territoires énumérés au paragraphe 1 du dispositif sont des territoires auxquels s'appliquent le Chapitre XI de la Charte et les principes approuvés par la Commission à sa 1045ème séance, et tout ce que fait le projet de résolution, c'est de spécifier quel Etat se refuse encore à communiquer des renseignements sur ces territoires.

33. Les amendements ukrainiens visent également à rétablir ce qui constituait le paragraphe 1 du dispositif dans le projet de résolution primitif (A/C.4/L.649). M. Kanakarathne ne peut croire que le représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine cherche à insinuer que les auteurs du projet — dont les pays se sont tous trouvés, à un moment ou à un autre, sous une domination étrangère — ne désirent pas que les habitants autochtones des territoires non autonomes qui existent encore aient le droit de jouir d'une liberté pleine et entière. Un projet de résolution n'est pas présenté dans l'abstrait, mais a un objet précis. Dans le cas actuel, le projet de résolution se rapporte à l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte et les auteurs sont parvenus à la conclusion qu'en conservant le paragraphe original, on déséquilibrerait la structure du texte proposé. Le préambule mentionne le Chapitre XI de la Charte où sont énumérés tous les droits qui doivent revenir aux habitants des territoires, et la Commission lutte depuis des années pour faire appliquer ce chapitre de la Charte et les obligations qu'il impose. Il est donc superflu de faire figurer dans le projet de résolution un paragraphe qui tendrait uniquement à rappeler au Portugal que certains territoires dont il est responsable entrent dans le cadre des principes adoptés par la Commission et des dispositions de la Charte, particulièrement celles du Chapitre XI. M. Kanakarathne espère par conséquent que le représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine se rendra compte que la modification proposée est inutile.

34. Les amendements ukrainiens proposent aussi de supprimer le paragraphe 4 du dispositif. Or, on sait que la procédure de communication des renseignements auxquels les Etats doivent se conformer est bien établie et tout ce que prévoit le paragraphe 4 du dispositif est que le Secrétaire général prenne les mesures habituelles, à la suite de la déclaration du Gouvernement espagnol, au sujet des renseignements que communiquera vraisemblablement l'Espagne. La délégation ceylanaise ne voit donc pas pourquoi on voudrait supprimer ce paragraphe.

35. Les seules sanctions efficaces dont l'ONU dispose en fait sont d'ordre moral et reflètent l'opinion publique mondiale. Une écrasante majorité des délégations a voté en faveur des principes et l'on peut encore espérer que le Portugal voudra bien reconsidérer sa position. Les territoires portugais d'Afrique se trouvent dans des régions où des peuples voisins ont déjà acquis leur indépendance, et il serait vain de croire que ce mouvement ne s'étendra pas.

36. M. Kanakarathne prie instamment tous les membres de la Commission de voter en faveur du projet de résolution révisé et de ne pas s'abstenir. On voit mal comment un Etat pourrait tout à la fois approuver les principes et hésiter à prendre les mesures nécessaires pour les faire appliquer.

M. Ortiz de Rozas (Argentine), vice-président, prend la présidence.

37. M. EMILIANI (Colombie) déclare que sa délégation votera contre les amendements que la délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine propose d'apporter au projet de résolution remanié. Tout d'abord, cette proposition tend à rétablir dans le texte révisé le premier paragraphe du dispositif qui figurait dans le texte original, mais le caractère discriminatoire de cette proposition la rend inacceptable. Après avoir demandé des renseignements — et reconnu par là qu'elle ignore la situation qui règne dans les territoires en question — l'ONU ne peut, sans se contredire, déclarer que les libertés politiques n'y existent pas. Deuxièmement, en incorporant ce paragraphe, la Commission pécherait contre la correction juridique, car elle outrepasserait le cadre de la question examinée. La délégation colombienne reconnaît que chacun a le droit d'exercer ses droits politiques et démocratiques et que ces droits ne sont peut-être pas exercés partout, mais la clause en question n'est pas pertinente dans la question dont il s'agit et pourrait être insérée dans n'importe quelle résolution de la Quatrième Commission.

38. M. Emiliani ne comprend pas pourquoi, après avoir entendu le représentant de l'Espagne déclarer solennellement que son pays communiquerait des renseignements, la Commission exprimerait des doutes quant à la sincérité de cette déclaration. L'Espagne est un grand pays qu'on ne peut accuser d'avoir manqué à sa parole.

39. Dans la liste des territoires, énumérés dans ses amendements, au sujet desquels l'Espagne devrait communiquer des renseignements, la délégation ukrainienne a fait figurer les îles Canaries. Or, comme le sait tout écolier, loin d'avoir jamais été des colonies, les îles Canaries sont le dernier port espagnol où Christophe Colomb ait fait escale avant de se diriger vers l'Amérique. Des listes de territoires ainsi improvisées sont fort dangereuses. En approuvant à la 1045ème séance un projet de résolution sur les 12 principes, la Commission a voulu contribuer à améliorer la situation dans les territoires non autonomes. La résolution ne doit pas servir à semer la dissension dans les files des puissances continentales et à saper leur unité en faisant de la séparation géographique un prétexte pour des mouvements séditionnels destinés à provoquer de l'agitation.

40. Au nom du bon sens et par souci de l'efficacité des travaux de la Commission, M. Emiliani se permet de demander au représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine de retirer ses amendements.

41. Il espère que, suivant l'exemple de l'Espagne, le Portugal acceptera de communiquer les renseignements demandés par la Commission.

42. Mlle SAFFOURI (Jordanie) explique que son pays n'avait pu se joindre aux auteurs du projet de résolution primitif A/C.4/L.649, parce que ce texte, notamment, demandait la communication de renseignements sur l'Irak et le Sahara occidental, qui font partie intégrante du Maroc bien qu'ils se trouvent actuellement sous la domination coloniale de l'Espagne. Pour la même raison, la délégation jordanienne ne peut accepter le premier amendement ukrainien (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1). Elle estime, en outre, qu'à la suite de la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne, la Commission devrait donner à ce pays la possibilité de prouver ses bonnes intentions. Les deuxième et troisième amendements (A/C.4/L.651, par. 2 et 3) sont superflus, puisque la question dont ils traitent sera l'objet de débats à l'Assemblée générale.

43. Le fait que la délégation jordanienne votera en faveur du projet de résolution remanié ne signifie pas que la Jordanie reconnaisse la souveraineté de l'Espagne sur l'Irak et le Sahara occidental.

44. Mlle Saffouri est heureuse d'avoir entendu le représentant de l'Espagne déclarer que son gouvernement était disposé à communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général et elle regrette de n'avoir pas entendu le représentant du Portugal faire de même.

45. M. RAHNEMA (Iran) se félicite du changement survenu dans l'attitude du Gouvernement espagnol, changement qu'il trouve très encourageant. Il espère que le Portugal suivra l'exemple donné par l'Espagne.

46. La délégation iranienne peut difficilement accepter les amendements proposés par la RSS d'Ukraine. En ce qui concerne le premier de ces amendements, elle ne voit pas pourquoi une expression de satisfaction au quatrième paragraphe du préambule porterait tort en quoi que ce soit à la cause anticolonialiste et il est tout naturel que la Commission exprime sa satisfaction de voir l'Espagne changer d'attitude après tant d'années. Le deuxième amendement ukrainien préjuge le problème et la préoccupation qui l'inspire est déjà exprimée dans le préambule du texte révisé du projet de résolution. Le troisième amendement, tendant à insérer les mots "jusqu'au moment où la pleine indépendance leur aura été accordée", est en contradiction avec le principe VI de l'annexe au projet de résolution adopté à la 1045ème séance, qui énumère plusieurs moyens d'atteindre la pleine autonomie.

47. Il y a tout lieu de faire confiance aux auteurs du projet de résolution, qui ont joué un grand rôle dans les efforts qui y ont conduit, et il est très injuste de les accuser d'avoir cédé à la pression de colonialistes. Le représentant de l'Union soviétique a insisté sur la nécessité de mettre fin au régime colonial, mais aucun désaccord ne le sépare, sur ce point, des représentants des Etats africano-asiatiques ou des auteurs du projet: le communiqué final de la Conférence des pays d'Afrique et d'Asie, tenue à Bandoung en 1955, a demandé qu'il soit mis fin au colonialisme et tous ces Etats ne cesseront de lutter à cette fin. C'est là, cependant, une autre question, qui doit être traitée en son temps; la Commission doit, en attendant, continuer de s'efforcer de favoriser le progrès à tous les échelons. Le projet de résolution traite d'un problème précis et c'est dans le contexte de ce problème qu'il faut le considérer.

48. M. Rahnema prie lui aussi le représentant de la RSS d'Ukraine de ne pas insister pour que ses amendements soient mis aux voix; dans le cas contraire, la délégation iranienne se verrait dans l'obligation de voter contre ces amendements. Elle appuie sans réserve le projet de résolution remanié.

49. M. NEJEDLY (Tchécoslovaquie) fait observer que la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne a été imprécise et que la Commission ne peut donc faire reposer sa décision sur cette déclaration. Il demande au représentant de l'Espagne d'énumérer nommément les territoires au sujet desquels le Gouvernement espagnol communiquera des renseignements et de dire à quel moment ces renseignements commenceront à être communiqués.

50. M. GRINBERG (Bulgarie) estime que la Commission se trouve dans une situation embarrassante: pour certains de ses membres, la déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Espagne est sans équivoque, pour d'autres elle ne l'est pas. D'autre part, il ne ressort pas clairement de cette déclaration que, si l'Espagne vote en faveur des paragraphes du projet de résolution auxquels le représentant de l'Espagne s'est référé, la Commission peut avoir la certitude que le Gouvernement espagnol acceptera les obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de la Charte. Il est donc indispensable que la Commission dispose du texte in extenso de cette déclaration. M. Grinberg propose donc que le texte de la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne soit distribué sous forme de document.

Il en est ainsi décidé^{1/}.

51. M. ZULOAGA (Venezuela) rappelle que le représentant de l'Espagne s'est référé, au début de la séance, à la déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Argentine au cours de la 1046ème séance. Il sera donc plus facile pour la Commission de prendre une décision si la déclaration du représentant de l'Argentine est également distribuée sous forme de document.

52. M. OBEREMKO (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) déclare qu'il est évident que la Commission a besoin du texte exact de la déclaration qu'a faite le représentant de l'Espagne sur une question aussi importante. A la 1038ème séance, le représentant de l'Espagne a dit que l'Espagne ne savait pas ce qu'était un territoire non autonome, mais qu'elle était prête à communiquer en temps voulu des renseignements sur ses provinces d'outre-mer. M. Oberemko tient à insister sur ces mots "provinces d'outre-mer". Les deux déclarations de la délégation espagnole sont manifestement contradictoires et, avant de voter, il faut que la Commission connaisse la position exacte de l'Espagne et sache si ce pays communiquera, conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, des renseignements sur les territoires sous administration espagnole. Le représentant de l'Espagne devrait également donner une liste des territoires dont il s'agit.

53. M. AZNAR (Espagne) ne voit pas pourquoi certaines délégations peuvent concevoir des doutes. Dans son intervention au début de la séance, il a dit qu'il approuvait entièrement les observations faites par les représentants de l'Inde et de l'Argentine au sujet de l'Espagne et il a ajouté qu'il voterait en faveur des paragraphes du projet de résolution qui se rapportent à l'Espagne. Le Gouvernement espagnol avait décidé, par avance et de son propre gré, de communiquer des renseignements.

54. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) estime que la situation est encore loin d'être claire. Il serait plus simple que le représentant de l'Espagne déclare formellement que le Gouvernement espagnol accepte de respecter les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73 de la Charte.

55. Le PRESIDENT déclare que le représentant de l'Espagne sera peut-être disposé à faire une brève déclaration à la séance suivante, en s'abstenant de se référer aux déclarations d'autres orateurs.

La séance est levée à 18 h 30.

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (A/C.4/L.649/REV.1, REV.1/CORR.1 ET REV.1/ADD.1) [suite]

1. M. DE LEQUERICA (Espagne) désire une fois de plus préciser la position de sa délégation et demande aux représentants de bien vouloir prendre note de la déclaration suivante: le Gouvernement espagnol a décidé de communiquer au Secrétaire général des renseignements touchant les territoires dont il est question au Chapitre XI de la Charte. C'est là l'interprétation correcte donnée par le représentant de l'Inde de la déclaration faite antérieurement par la délégation espagnole. Celle-ci se déclare d'accord avec cette interprétation et le représentant de l'Espagne n'ajoute rien pour éviter toute confusion ou interprétation erronée.

2. M. MAGHERU (Roumanie) rappelle que sa délégation a déjà fait connaître sa position quant au rapport (A/4526) du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte. En ce qui concerne l'application pratique des principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport, elle estime difficile de se borner à considérer le cas du Portugal, en remettant à plus tard l'examen de celui de l'Espagne. Il est malaisé de tirer toutes les conclusions qui s'imposent au sujet de la déclaration de ce dernier pays. Les débats des deux séances précédentes se sont terminés sur une note de confusion. C'est qu'en effet il y a eu plusieurs déclarations successives: le 7 novembre, à la 1038^{ème} séance, le représentant de l'Espagne a déclaré en substance que son pays ne savait pas ce qu'était un territoire non autonome et n'entendait pas qu'on lui impose d'envoyer des renseignements sur des territoires de ce genre qu'il administrerait, mais qu'étant donné sa volonté de collaborer avec l'ONU, il était prêt à communiquer, le moment venu, des renseignements sur ses provinces d'outre-mer. D'autre part, l'Espagne a déclaré ultérieurement qu'elle serait prête à donner des renseignements sur ses territoires d'outre-mer, assimilés par elle à ses territoires métropolitains. C'est à cette dernière déclaration que se réfère le projet de résolution examiné (A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Corr.1). La première confusion tient au fait que la déclaration de l'Espagne n'était pas identifiée, que l'on avait des doutes sur son contenu exact. Il est donc heureux que l'Ukraine ait proposé un premier amendement qui clarifie la situation (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1).

3. Par la suite, l'Espagne a fait deux déclarations qui se réfèrent à celles de l'Argentine, de l'Inde et de Ceylan. Mais il y a une question à laquelle la délégation espagnole n'a pas répondu, à savoir: quels sont les territoires au sujet desquels l'Espagne a l'intention de communiquer des renseignements? Au début de la séance en cours, son représentant a mentionné les territoires dont il est question au Chapitre XI de la Charte, en se référant d'autre part à la déclaration de l'Inde. Mais il reste à éclaircir deux points: premièrement, le Gouvernement espagnol n'a pas reconnu, jusqu'ici, qu'il possède des territoires tels que ceux qui sont visés dans le Chapitre XI et, deuxièmement, si jamais il reconnaît posséder de tels territoires, il faudrait savoir lesquels. A première vue, la dernière déclaration de la délégation espagnole est plus claire, mais elle laisse subsister en fait la même confusion quant au fond.

4. Le représentant de la Roumanie passe ensuite à l'examen des amendements proposés par la République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651). En ce qui concerne le premier de ces amendements, sa délégation estime qu'en effet il est difficile à la Commission d'exprimer sa "satisfaction" au sujet de l'attitude de l'Espagne, étant donné que ce pays ne ferait que s'acquitter de ses obligations normales en communiquant des renseignements conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI. Quant au paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution, la délégation de la Roumanie le juge inutile dans le cas où les amendements de l'Ukraine seraient adoptés, car il serait alors superflu de remettre au Secrétaire général le soin de préciser la portée du quatrième alinéa du préambule. Enfin, pour ce qui est des deuxième et troisième amendements de l'Ukraine, la délégation roumaine rappelle qu'elle a souligné à plusieurs reprises l'importance du problème de l'indépendance des territoires non autonomes. Etant donné l'essor actuel du mouvement vers l'indépendance, il faut mentionner expressément le droit à l'indépendance et non pas se contenter d'exprimer un pieux espoir.

Les professions de foi des membres de la Commission doivent trouver un écho dans la résolution. Lorsqu'il s'agit de puissances coloniales, il est préférable de ne pas se fier aux sous-entendus, mais d'être aussi précis que possible. La référence directe à l'indépendance qui se trouvait dans le texte primitif du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649) a maintenant disparu et les amendements présentés par l'Ukraine permettaient de la rétablir.

5. En ce qui concerne un autre aspect du projet de résolution, le représentant de la Roumanie déclare que Timor, Goa et Macao font partie du territoire de pays souverains et doivent leur être restitués. Il formule notamment des réserves au sujet de Macao, étant donné que la République populaire de Chine n'a pas pu se faire entendre sur ce point.

6. M. ABIKUSNO (Indonésie) déclare que son pays s'est toujours préoccupé de l'application de l'Article 73 de la Charte étant donné les profondes répercussions de cet article et de l'ensemble du Chapitre XI en ce qui concerne le statut des territoires non autonomes. C'est pourquoi la délégation indonésienne a approuvé les principes du Comité spécial des Six. Elle estime que l'adoption de ces principes permettra d'éviter que certains faits indésirables ne se produisent dans les territoires non autonomes.

7. Mais il est regrettable que certaines puissances coloniales, notamment le Portugal et l'Espagne, poursuivent leur politique de discrimination raciale et de répression dans leurs colonies. Non seulement cela est contraire à l'opinion qui prédomine dans le monde sur le colonialisme mais aussi cela entrave les progrès matériels et spirituels des peuples sous dépendance. L'exemple de nombreux territoires non autonomes prouve que cette situation pourrait avoir de dangereuses répercussions pour le monde entier. La délégation indonésienne est en faveur du troisième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution, parce qu'il y est dit expressément que le refus d'accorder le droit de libre détermination constitue une menace au bien-être de l'humanité et à la paix internationale. Il est évident que la situation qui est celle des territoires portugais et espagnols a pour origine les rapports de type colonial qui existent entre ces territoires et les puissances coloniales qui les gouvernent. Ce sont ces rapports qui font l'objet des travaux de la Commission depuis des années et qui ont abouti à l'élaboration des 12 principes. Le projet de résolution dont la Commission est saisie constitue, aux yeux de la délégation indonésienne, un moyen de mettre en œuvre ces principes, compte tenu de la situation qui règne dans les colonies portugaises et espagnoles et qui justifie une application rapide.

8. La déclaration de l'Espagne a été interprétée de façons très diverses. Quoi qu'il en soit, la Commission se doit d'exprimer à ce pays sa satisfaction de voir qu'il est prêt à se conformer aux recommandations du projet de résolution en ce qui concerne les territoires qu'il administre.

9. Si l'on considère cette attitude conciliante de l'Espagne, celle du Portugal est d'autant plus regrettable. Étant donné ses effets possibles, elle cause de graves inquiétudes à la communauté internationale. C'est pourquoi la délégation indonésienne appuie le projet de résolution qui vise manifestement à éviter l'asservissement et l'oppression.

10. La délégation de l'Indonésie réserve sa position quant au premier amendement de l'Ukraine, étant donné qu'il mentionne certaines régions qui font actuellement l'objet de différends entre divers pays et pour lesquelles des négociations sont en cours. Les deuxième et troisième amendements partent d'une bonne intention, mais leur portée semble dépasser quelque peu celle de l'application pratique, telle qu'elle est proposée dans le projet de résolution, de procédures devant permettre à tous les territoires non autonomes d'accéder à l'indépendance, procédures formulées dans le texte des principes adopté par la Commission. Au sujet du quatrième amendement de l'Ukraine, enfin, on peut se demander comment la procédure proposée dans le projet de résolution peut être appliquée sans passer par l'intermédiaire du Secrétaire général.

11. M. LAMANI (Albanie) déclare que, lorsque l'on étudie la question des peuples en lutte pour leur indépendance, on voit d'un côté les peuples asservis et de l'autre les puissances coloniales qui, par la répression et par des manœuvres, s'efforcent de prolonger la vie du régime colonial. La délégation albanaise a toujours adopté la même attitude vis-à-vis de la libération des peuples coloniaux. Avec l'Espagne et le Portugal, son attitude est encore plus ferme, étant donné que ces pays se sont refusés à reconnaître qu'ils ont des colonies et à reconnaître les obligations qui leur incombent aux termes de l'Article 73. Même leurs plus proches amis ne trouvent pas d'arguments pour les défendre.

12. La délégation albanaise a déjà dit qu'elle ne pouvait avoir confiance dans les renseignements communiqués par ces deux pays et s'appuyer sur ces renseignements pour savoir quelle est la situation réelle dans leurs colonies. Elle est encore plus méfiante après ce qui s'est passé récemment.

13. En ce qui concerne la dernière déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne, la délégation albanaise se réserve le droit d'en parler, si cela est nécessaire, après l'avoir étudiée. Mais la Commission a la possibilité de préparer une résolution qui lui donne plus de garanties que de simples paroles. À cet égard, il est regrettable que le texte original ait été tronqué. La délégation albanaise ignore les raisons de cette amputation, mais, si les puissances coloniales sont sincères, on ne voit pas en quoi le texte original pouvait les toucher.

14. Les amendements proposés par l'Ukraine donneraient au projet de résolution la force nécessaire pour qu'il puisse contribuer aux progrès des populations des colonies portugaises et espagnoles et hâter une indépendance qui, du reste, ne saurait tarder étant donné que le régime colonial vit actuellement ses derniers moments. La délégation albanaise appuie donc les amendements présentés par l'Ukraine et se prononcera en faveur de l'ensemble du projet de résolution si ces amendements y sont incorporés.

15. Au sujet de Macao et de ses dépendances, elle s'associe entièrement aux réserves formulées par le représentant de l'URSS au cours de la séance précédente.

16. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) précise qu'il parlera uniquement du projet de résolution en général.

17. Lorsque la réponse du Portugal à la lettre du Secrétaire général a été examinée pour la première fois à la onzième session de l'Assemblée générale, la délégation portugaise a souligné que cet examen avait un caractère discriminatoire. En effet, plusieurs gouvernements n'ont même pas répondu à cette lettre. A l'heure actuelle, certaines délégations déclarent qu'il ne s'agit pas de discrimination, mais c'est un fait que le projet de résolution examiné mentionne expressément deux pays, et que les débats ont été consacrés jusqu'ici exclusivement aux réponses de l'Espagne et du Portugal. C'est précisément pour éviter toute discrimination que le Comité spécial des Six a été créé et chargé d'examiner toutes les réponses sans exception. Mais il est évident que les représentants qui ont proposé la constitution de ce comité avaient à l'esprit deux pays en particulier.

18. Lors de la douzième session, la représentante de l'Inde a déclaré, à la 692ème séance de la Commission, que le comité dont la création était proposée alors se consacrerait à l'étude des principes plutôt qu'à celle des décisions des Etats Membres et qu'il était clair que le projet de résolution proposant la constitution de ce comité n'était dirigé contre aucun membre en particulier. La représentante de l'Inde a également déclaré que la mention des îles Andaman et Nicobar faite par le représentant de la Belgique à la 691ème séance était entièrement en dehors du débat, qui portait sur un projet de résolution. Le projet de résolution, a-t-elle ajouté, n'était pas discriminatoire et, à un certain stade de ses travaux, le comité dont la création était envisagée examinerait les réponses de tous les Membres. A la 693ème séance, au cours de la même session, l'Inde a de nouveau déclaré que la réponse du Gouvernement indien serait soumise au même examen que celles des autres gouvernements. Autrement dit, les conclusions auxquelles le comité serait parvenu devaient servir de guide universel.

19. Le représentant du Portugal pense donc que l'on serait en droit de demander que la Commission suive la procédure prévue à ce moment-là, c'est-à-dire que l'on soumette à un examen toute réponse reçue. Il désire savoir, en particulier, si l'Inde maintient la position qu'elle avait adoptée à la douzième session. D'autre part, M. Nogueira rappelle les termes du paragraphe 3 du projet de résolution adopté par la Commission à la 1045ème séance, à savoir que les principes qui figurent dans l'annexe à cette résolution devraient être appliqués en tenant compte dans chaque cas des faits et des circonstances. Cela même implique que les réponses de tous les gouvernements, sans exception, devraient être examinées.

20. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne) examinera la question sous son double aspect: le problème posé par la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne, d'une part, le problème des colonies portugaises, d'autre part.

21. La déclaration de l'Espagne laisse subsister de nombreux doutes. Tout d'abord, négligeant de répondre à la question précise posée par le représentant de la Tunisie à la séance précédente, elle n'énonce pas en termes précis les territoires auxquels s'appliquerait l'engagement de communiquer des renseignements. D'autre part, la nature de l'engagement pris n'est toujours pas clair. Le seul engagement acceptable serait que le Gouvernement de l'Espagne se considère engagé par la Déclaration relative aux territoires non autonomes, et qu'il se déclare prêt à s'acquitter de toutes les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73 de la Charte. Or, pour l'instant, la seule conclusion à laquelle on puisse parvenir — et encore, en lui laissant le bénéfice du doute — c'est que l'Espagne s'est engagée à transmettre volontairement certains renseignements conformément à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73. Rien ne permet de croire que le Gouvernement espagnol soit prêt à s'acquitter de toutes les obligations énoncées à l'Article 73.

22. D'autre part, le représentant de l'Espagne a précisé que, quand la résolution de l'Assemblée générale sera adoptée, l'Espagne lui donnera l'attention qu'elle mérite; mais elle réserve pour l'instant sa position sur les conséquences du texte qui sera approuvé.

23. Cette position de l'Espagne est certes logique, mais non satisfaisante. La délégation polonaise estime qu'il est indispensable de mentionner les territoires visés par le projet de résolution. Elle appuiera donc le premier amendement ukrainien (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1).

24. La délégation polonaise appuie également le quatrième amendement de l'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651, par. 4), étant donné que le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution a une portée plus grande qu'un simple énoncé des modalités d'application de la décision de l'Assemblée générale. Pourquoi donner tant de latitude au Secrétaire général alors qu'il suffirait d'énumérer avec précision les obligations auxquelles le Gouvernement de l'Espagne devra se soumettre? Le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution est donc superflu.

25. Passant ensuite au problème des colonies portugaises, M. Blusztajn déclare que le projet de résolution va bien plus loin que la simple question de la transmission de renseignements au titre de l'Article 73 de la Charte, comme en témoignent les paragraphes 3 et 5 des considérants de ce projet de résolution. La délégation polonaise croit que ces deux paragraphes ajoutent à la portée de cette résolution. Pour les mêmes raisons un paragraphe sur le rétablissement des libertés politiques dans les territoires sous administration espagnole et portugaise a sa place dans une telle résolution. C'est pourquoi il faudrait que la Commission, conformément à la proposition ukrainienne, rétablisse dans le projet de résolution le paragraphe 1 du dispositif qui est énoncé dans le deuxième amendement de l'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651, par. 2).

26. La délégation polonaise votera donc en faveur des amendements proposés par la délégation de l'Ukraine. Le vote sur l'énumération des territoires sous administration espagnole ne signifie pas une prise de position sur les problèmes soulevés par la délégation marocaine. La délégation polonaise s'associe d'autre part aux réserves formulées par l'Union soviétique au sujet de certains territoires sous administration portugaise, savoir: Goa, Macao et Timor.

27. M. JUNG (Inde), après avoir remarqué que les débats de la Commission n'ont pas échappé à l'atmosphère de soupçon qui entoure généralement les débats sur le colonialisme, déplore que certaines délégations aient cru bon d'insinuer que l'Inde se laisse influencer par les pays colonialistes. La délégation indienne s'estime offensée par cette accusation aussi injuste que dénuée de fondement. Il faut espérer que c'est par erreur que ces paroles malheureuses ont été lancées contre un pays qui a fait la pénible expérience du colonialisme et l'a combattu. L'Inde n'a pas de leçons à recevoir sur l'anticolonialisme.

28. Passant aux amendements présentés par la délégation ukrainienne, M. Jung tient à assurer la Commission qu'il comprend parfaitement l'esprit dans lequel ils ont été formulés. L'Inde favorise sans réserve le processus d'indépendance et de libération des territoires non autonomes. Cependant, après mûre réflexion, il se trouve dans l'impossibilité de donner son accord à la majeure partie des amendements.

29. Le premier propose notamment de supprimer l'expression "avec satisfaction" au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution amendé. Mais l'Espagne a fait connaître ses bonnes intentions: toutes limitées qu'elles soient, elles n'en constituent pas moins un progrès dont il convient de se féliciter. Le représentant de l'Espagne a déclaré qu'il voterait pour les paragraphes du projet qui concernent l'Espagne; étant donné que l'un de ces paragraphes mentionne les obligations prévues au Chapitre XI de la Charte, la délégation indienne s'estime satisfaite. Le projet ne mentionne plus les territoires espagnols en Afrique, certaines délégations s'étant élevées contre leur énumération en raison de différends concernant la souveraineté.

30. Quant au texte dont la réinsertion est proposée dans le deuxième amendement ukrainien, c'est pour rester dans les limites de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte que les auteurs du texte révisé l'ont supprimé de leur projet de résolution amendé. Si ce paragraphe faisait l'objet d'un texte séparé, l'Inde l'appuierait le cas échéant. Dans les circonstances présentes, cependant, elle estime qu'il n'a pas sa place dans le projet de résolution.

31. Le paragraphe 2 du dispositif du projet de résolution se suffisant à lui-même, il est superflu de lui ajouter le membre de phrase proposé dans le troisième amendement ukrainien.

32. La délégation indienne ne peut enfin approuver le quatrième amendement ukrainien qui viendrait tronquer le texte du projet de résolution. Les mesures à prendre sont bien définies dans des règles rigides qui ont donné toute satisfaction jusqu'à présent, et le projet de résolution ne peut être mis en œuvre que si l'on prie le Secrétaire général de prendre les mesures appropriées.

33. Passant à la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne, M. Jung y voit que le Gouvernement espagnol respectera et appliquera les obligations qui lui incombent aux termes du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Même si la Constitution espagnole ne permet pas d'employer pour les territoires la même expression que celle qui figure dans la Charte, ce ne sont pas des questions de vocabulaire qui empêcheront l'Espagne de se conformer à ses obligations. Les auteurs ont donc exclu l'Espagne de l'application de certaines parties de la résolution.

34. D'autre part, l'Espagne a déclaré qu'elle voterait en faveur des parties de la résolution relatives à l'Espagne; puisque le Gouvernement espagnol accepte de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général, la délégation indienne s'estime satisfaite, et juge qu'elle doit faire confiance à un pays qui manifeste ainsi ses bonnes intentions.

35. On ne peut en dire autant, par contre, de la déclaration de la délégation portugaise. L'Inde regrette que le Portugal s'en tienne à sa position première. Il y a peu d'espoir que l'appel de Ceylan soit entendu, car le Portugal vit à une autre époque, mais la force des circonstances et de l'évolution produira sûrement son effet.

36. M. CABA (Guinée) était prêt, après avoir appris de la bouche du représentant de l'Inde que le Gouvernement espagnol acceptait les obligations que lui impose le Chapitre XI, à prier la délégation ukrainienne de retirer ses amendements. Malheureusement, l'Espagne a adopté une attitude qui ne fait qu'engendrer la confusion. Elle n'a en effet pas précisé dans une déclaration claire qu'elle accepte effectivement ces obligations et qu'elle est prête à nommer les territoires auxquels s'applique le Chapitre XI. Cette attitude prouve à la Guinée qu'il est impossible de faire confiance aux puissances coloniales, dont les intérêts sont opposés à ceux des territoires qu'elles administrent.

37. La Guinée ne comprend pas pourquoi la délégation espagnole éprouve le besoin de se référer à la déclaration du représentant de l'Inde. Si l'Espagne voulait vraiment faire preuve de courage et de bonne volonté, elle citerait ses territoires.

38. Il est regrettable que l'Espagne ait recours à des manœuvres pour définir sa position sans s'engager. En citant l'intervention du représentant de l'Inde, le représentant de l'Espagne n'a d'ailleurs pas répété l'expression "territoires d'Afrique". En tout état de cause, on voit mal en quoi les déclarations du représentant de l'Inde pourraient engager le Gouvernement espagnol.

39. La Guinée appuie donc fortement le premier amendement ukrainien. Elle invite à se joindre à elle toutes les délégations qui désirent donner un effet juridique à la résolution.

40. Quant au deuxième amendement, M. Caba estime, avec la délégation indienne, qu'il vaudrait mieux en faire l'objet d'un texte séparé qui pourrait par la suite être adopté à l'unanimité par la Commission.

41. La délégation guinéenne ne voit aucun inconvénient à voter pour le troisième amendement ukrainien, qui vise en effet à accélérer le processus d'indépendance des colonies.

42. Le Portugal, quant à lui, se refuse à répondre à tout appel. Mais il devra finir par céder et il le fera alors dans des conditions moins favorables.

43. M. Caba tient encore à signaler une erreur qui s'est glissée, au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution, dans l'énumération des territoires administrés par le Portugal: Cabinda n'est, en effet, pas un territoire à proprement parler, mais une enclave qui a la même administration que l'Angola.

44. Le PRESIDENT remercie le représentant de la Guinée. La liste figurant au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution amendé sera donc modifiée comme suit: Angola, y compris l'enclave de Cabinda.

45. M. NEKLESSA (République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine) voudrait apporter quelques précisions sur les amendements présentés par sa délégation (A/C.4/L.651). Le nombre des délégations qui ont appuyé ces amendements en totalité ou en partie témoigne de l'importance des questions qu'ils soulèvent. Pour ce qui est du premier amendement, le représentant de l'Ukraine ne voit pas de raison de ne pas inclure dans le projet de résolution une liste des territoires non autonomes administrés par l'Espagne. Certains représentants ont jugé que le fait que l'Espagne acceptait de communiquer des renseignements conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte rendait une telle liste inutile. Cependant, dans sa résolution 66 (I), qui est l'un des textes de base de la Commission, l'Assemblée générale a justement pris soin de donner une liste des territoires sur lesquels les puissances coloniales acceptaient de communiquer des renseignements. A l'heure actuelle, on se trouve en présence d'un cas analogue. Si l'Espagne consent à communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires qu'elle administre, il est particulièrement indiqué de préciser, dans la résolution, de quels territoires il s'agit, d'autant plus que l'Espagne ne veut pas les désigner nommément. D'ailleurs, l'Espagne a fait, entre 1956 et 1959, maintes déclarations dans lesquelles elle promettait de fournir des renseignements, mais ces promesses sont restées lettre morte. Dans ces conditions, il est difficile de se déclarer satisfait des déclarations du représentant de l'Espagne et c'est la raison pour laquelle la délégation ukrainienne a proposé de supprimer les mots "avec satisfaction" au quatrième alinéa du préambule.

46. Certaines délégations ont exprimé des réserves au sujet de l'insertion dans le projet de résolution d'une liste des territoires non autonomes administrés par le Portugal et l'Espagne en faisant valoir que certains de ces territoires avaient été arrachés par les puissances coloniales à d'autres Etats auxquels ils doivent être restitués. La délégation ukrainienne comprend un tel point de vue et elle est d'accord avec les représentants qui ont formulé des réserves touchant la nécessité de restituer ces territoires à leur propriétaire légitime, mais elle estime que, puisque ces territoires sont en ce moment administrés par ces deux pays, on aurait tout de même intérêt à les énumérer. D'autre part, l'exactitude de l'énumération proposée par l'amendement ukrainien ayant été contestée, notamment par le représentant de la Colombie, il serait bon que l'Espagne fournisse des précisions pour éclairer ce point.

47. Il existe un lien étroit entre le paragraphe 4 du projet de résolution et le premier amendement ukrainien. En effet, si l'on inclut dans le projet de résolution la liste des territoires que contient le premier amendement, toute démarche ultérieure du Secrétaire général en vertu du paragraphe 4 du dispositif devient inutile. Le représentant de l'Ukraine regrette de ne pas partager à cet égard l'opinion du représentant de l'Inde qui a estimé qu'en supprimant le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution on amputerait gravement ce texte. De l'avis de la délégation ukrainienne, en maintenant ce paragraphe, qui peut donner lieu à diverses interprétations, on créerait des difficultés. Il convient également de noter que la résolution 66 (I) de l'Assemblée générale ne comprenait pas de paragraphe de ce genre.

48. Les représentants de l'Argentine et de la Colombie ont dit, à propos du deuxième amendement ukrainien, qu'il est difficile de se faire une idée sur ce qui se passe dans les territoires administrés par le Portugal et l'Espagne en raison de l'absence de renseignements. Pareille thèse semble insoutenable puisque la Commission sait de source autorisée que les droits politiques et les libertés démocratiques sont constamment bafoués dans ces territoires. La recommandation contenue dans le deuxième amendement ukrainien paraît d'autant plus nécessaire à la lumière de cette situation.

49. Cependant, un certain nombre de délégations amies, telles que les délégations de la Guinée et de l'Inde, qui ont souscrit en principe à cet amendement, ont demandé à l'Ukraine de ne pas insister pour qu'il soit mis aux voix. La délégation de la RSS d'Ukraine n'insiste donc pas pour que son deuxième amendement (A/C.4/L.651, par. 2) soit mis aux voix. Elle prend note par ailleurs de l'assurance donnée par la Guinée selon laquelle cette question fera l'objet d'un projet de résolution distinct.

50. Répondant à une remarque de la délégation ceylanaise, la délégation ukrainienne signale que c'est précisément parce qu'elle souhaite l'indépendance des peuples coloniaux qu'elle a déposé ces amendements.

51. En ce qui concerne le troisième amendement de sa délégation, M. Neklessa pense que l'on aurait intérêt à indiquer nettement le but auquel aspirent les peuples des territoires non autonomes, à savoir l'indépendance. Une telle précision est conforme à l'esprit de la Charte de même qu'à la déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et peuples coloniaux que la délégation de l'URSS a présentée à l'Assemblée générale (A/4502 et Corr.1). C'est à cet objectif que tous les travaux de l'ONU dans le domaine des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes doivent être subordonnés.

52. Pour conclure, le représentant de l'Ukraine souligne que, s'il n'insiste pas pour que le deuxième amendement de l'Ukraine soit mis aux voix, il demande un vote sur ses autres amendements.

53. M. HOLLIST (Nigéria), coauteur du projet de résolution, rappelle brièvement sur quels documents se fonde la position actuelle du Portugal — la loi de 1930 sur les colonies, œuvre de M. Salazar, dont les opinions colonialistes sont bien connues et qui voulait conserver au Portugal sa place de grande puissance coloniale, et la Constitution de 1951, qui incorpore la loi sur les colonies et fait des "provinces d'outre-mer" des parties intégrantes de l'Etat portugais. On y cherche en vain le désir d'assurer le bien-être des populations, et tout ce qu'on peut y trouver, c'est un désir de puissance répondant à une mystique impérialiste.

54. M. Hollist pense que l'on pourrait, à cet égard, tracer un parallèle entre le Portugal et certain gouvernement d'Afrique du sud.

55. M. WILJOEN (Union sud-africaine), prenant la parole pour une motion d'ordre, proteste contre l'allusion déplacée dont son pays vient de faire l'objet.

56. M. CABA (Guinée) juge cette motion irrecevable. Le représentant de la Nigéria a parfaitement raison de stigmatiser l'Union sud-africaine tant que celle-ci n'aura pas mis fin au régime d'"apartheid".

57. M. HOLLIST (Nigéria) précise qu'il pensait simplement à certain gouvernement d'Afrique du Sud dont les rapports avec le Portugal dépassent nettement le cadre des relations économiques.

58. M. Hollist espère que les membres de la Commission qui, à la 1045ème séance, ont voté en faveur du rapport du Comité spécial des Six voteront également pour le projet de résolution amendé que la Commission examine actuellement.

59. Passant à l'examen des amendements ukrainiens, M. Hollist demande à l'auteur de retirer son premier amendement: puisque l'Espagne s'est engagée, quoique en termes peu précis, il n'y a pas de raison de ne pas lui faire confiance. Le texte proposé dans le deuxième amendement, même présenté sous forme de projet de résolution séparé, ferait encore double emploi. Le texte que le troisième amendement propose d'ajouter ne semble pas très nécessaire, puisque le principe VI annexé au projet de résolution adopté à la 1045ème séance stipule que l'acquisition de l'indépendance souveraine n'est pas la seule circonstance qui justifie la cessation de la communication de renseignements. Enfin, la délégation nigérienne ne comprend pas pourquoi l'on voudrait supprimer le paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution, qui ne fait que traduire la pratique habituelle de l'ONU.

60. Pour terminer, M. Hollist tient à récuser les insinuations selon lesquelles sa délégation aurait cédé à des pressions colonialistes. Les Africains connaissent leurs intérêts et ceux-là mêmes qui les accusent d'être infidèles à leurs idéaux nuisent plus à leur cause qu'ils ne la servent.

61. La délégation nigérienne prie la délégation ukrainienne de retirer tous ses amendements.

62. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) demande que sa délégation figure parmi les auteurs du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1 et Rev.1/Corr.1.

63. M. RASGOTRA (Inde) remercie la représentante du Libéria au nom des auteurs du projet.

64. M. GRINBERG (Bulgarie) propose d'apporter un amendement au quatrième alinéa du projet de résolution amendé. Etant donné que c'est à la séance en cours que l'Espagne a fait sa déclaration la plus nette, il conviendrait de préciser la portée de cet alinéa en ajoutant les mots "à sa 1048ème séance".

65. M. NOGUEIRA (Portugal) tient à préciser une dernière fois sa position. Premièrement, les représentants de l'Union soviétique, de la Roumanie, de la Pologne et de l'Albanie ont fait des déclarations à l'égard de certains territoires portugais contre lesquelles le Portugal protestait de manière catégorique, le Gouvernement portugais n'ayant pas de doutes sur sa souveraineté. D'autre part, rappelant que le représentant de la Nigéria a soulevé une nouvelle controverse, le représentant du Portugal répète qu'il a déjà déclaré que la désignation des territoires en cause remonte à l'année 1633. Il rappelle qu'il a posé la question de savoir s'il serait légitime d'exiger un examen de toutes les réponses. Aucun représentant n'a répondu à cette question, sauf celui de l'Inde, qui a déclaré qu'il ne pouvait modifier sa position. Cela signifie donc que l'Inde accepterait un examen de sa propre réponse. Mais, si le Portugal demandait cet examen, sa proposition ne serait pas acceptée, car il est incontestable que la Commission fait preuve de discrimination.

66. C'est là d'ailleurs une des raisons pour lesquelles la délégation portugaise se prononcera contre le projet de résolution remanié. L'autre raison est que le projet préjuge la compétence de l'Assemblée générale que la délégation portugaise ne reconnaît pas pour ce qui est d'adopter des résolutions visant à obliger les Etats Membres à communiquer des renseignements. Or, les Etats Membres n'ont pas toujours adopté la même attitude sur ce point, et il est incontestable que de nombreuses délégations soutenaient l'opinion que l'Assemblée n'avait pas de compétence en la matière. Il semble que les Etats Membres aient changé d'avis et c'est leur droit, mais c'est aussi le droit de la délégation portugaise de s'en tenir à sa position. Ce qui devait servir de guide est maintenant considéré comme liant obligatoirement les Etats Membres. Par ailleurs, le projet de résolution signifie une atteinte à la souveraineté des Etats Membres. Dans ces conditions, le représentant du Portugal n'a rien à ajouter, sinon qu'il votera contre le projet de résolution.

67. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) voudrait savoir si le représentant de l'Espagne est disposé à fournir quelques précisions supplémentaires en réponse à la demande que la délégation tunisienne a faite à la séance précédente. De telles précisions permettraient à la délégation tunisienne de prendre position lors du vote.

68. M. AZNAR (Espagne) répond que, devant l'attitude courtoise de la délégation tunisienne, il est prêt à donner quelques précisions supplémentaires sur la position de sa délégation. L'Espagne estime qu'aucune disposition de la Charte ne l'oblige à communiquer une liste des territoires qu'elle administre. Elle maintient que certaines particularités de la liste proposée constituent une offense personnelle pour tout Espagnol, quelles que soient ses convictions. Enfin, cette liste mentionne des territoires qui font l'objet de controverses juridiques de la part de pays amis pour lesquelles la porte est ouverte à des négociations bilatérales.

69. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix la première partie du premier amendement ukrainien (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1) qui consiste à supprimer les mots "avec satisfaction" au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution (A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1, Rev.1/Corr.1 et Rev.1/Add.1).

Par 50 voix contre 11, avec 11 abstentions, cette partie du premier amendement ukrainien est rejetée.

70. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'amendement proposé verbalement par le représentant de la Bulgarie et visant à insérer au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution entre les mots "la" et "Quatrième Commission" les mots "1048ème séance de la".

Par 57 voix contre zéro, avec 17 abstentions, l'amendement de la Bulgarie est adopté.

71. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) fait observer que, compte tenu des remarques du représentant de l'Espagne, notamment celles qui visaient les îles Canaries, il serait difficile à la délégation tunisienne de voter pour l'ensemble de la liste des territoires qui figure dans le premier amendement ukrainien. Il demande donc que chacun de ces territoires soit mis aux voix séparément.

72. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) propose que seules les îles Canaries fassent l'objet d'un vote séparé.

73. M. BOUZIRI (Tunisie) accepte cette proposition.

74. M. RASGOTRA (Inde) propose que l'on vote séparément sur les mots "au sujet des territoires non autonomes suivants".

75. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix les mots "au sujet des territoires non autonomes suivants" qui figurent dans la deuxième partie du premier amendement de l'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1).

Par 42 voix contre 15, avec 16 abstentions, ces mots sont rejetés.

76. M. BLUSZTAJN (Pologne) estime que, dans ces conditions, il est inutile de voter sur le reste de cet amendement.

77. Le PRESIDENT propose de ne pas poursuivre plus avant le vote sur le reste du premier amendement ukrainien.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

78. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) demande que le quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution, ainsi amendé, soit mis aux voix séparément.

A la demande du représentant de l'Ethiopie, il est procédé au vote par appel nominal sur le quatrième alinéa du préambule, ainsi amendé.

79. M. GRINBERG (Bulgarie) demande que le troisième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution fasse l'objet d'un vote séparé.

Par 64 voix contre zéro, avec 11 abstentions, le troisième alinéa du préambule est adopté.

80. Le PRESIDENT propose de supprimer les mots "posés par le Comité spécial des Six et" au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

M. HUSAIN (Pakistan) demande qu'au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution, la première partie de la liste de territoires sous administration portugaise, commençant par les mots "archipel du Cap-Vert" et finissant par le mot "Mozambique", ainsi qu'elle a été précédemment amendée au cours de la séance conformément à la proposition du représentant de la Guinée, soit mise aux voix séparément.

Par 45 voix contre 6, avec 22 abstentions, cette partie de la liste est adoptée.

83. Le PRESIDENT met aux voix l'autre partie de la liste de territoires figurant au paragraphe 1 du dispositif, commençant par les mots "Goa et dépendances" et finissant par les mots "Timor et dépendances".

POINT 38 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

EXAMEN DES PROJETS DE RESOLUTION (A/C.4/L.649/REV.1, REV.1/CORR.1 ET REV.1/ADD.1) [fin]

1. Le PRESIDENT invite les délégations qui dési-reraient expliquer leur vote de la séance précédente au sujet du projet de résolution A/C.4/L.649/Rev.1, Rev.1/Corr.1 et Rev.1/Add.1 à prendre la parole.

2. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria), expliquant le vote de sa délégation, rappelle qu'au cours du débat sur les amendements de la RSS d'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651), la délégation libérienne s'était déclarée en faveur de l'insertion de la liste des territoires sous administration espagnole dans le projet de résolution. Cependant, elle s'est abstenue lors du vote sur les mots: "au sujet des territoires non autonomes suivants", dans le premier amendement ukrainien (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1), tout en se rendant compte que le rejet de ces mots entraînerait la suppression de la liste des territoires; la raison de son abstention a été que le représentant de l'Espagne avait déclaré que son gouvernement communiquerait au Secrétaire général les renseignements prévus au Chapitre XI de la Charte et qu'elle a cru devoir compter sur la bonne foi d'un Etat Membre souverain, tout en continuant à estimer que l'Espagne aurait dû énumérer les territoires au sujet desquels elle se propose de communiquer des renseignements. La délégation libérienne se réserve le droit de revenir sur cette question à la session suivante de l'Assemblée générale, au cas où l'Espagne n'aurait pas tenu sa promesse.

3. Si la délégation du Libéria a voté contre la partie de l'amendement de la RSS d'Ukraine qui demandait la suppression du paragraphe 4 du dispositif du projet de résolution, c'est parce qu'elle estime qu'à la suite de la déclaration du représentant de l'Espagne, le Secrétaire général doit prendre les mesures nécessaires afin que les renseignements en question parviennent à la Quatrième Commission lors de la seizième session.

4. M. SOUZA-BRAGA (Brésil) explique que la délégation brésilienne a voté contre le projet de résolution parce qu'elle estime que l'énumération de territoires figurant dans cette résolution va plus loin que les principes approuvés par la Commission et crée un précédent dangereux. La délégation du Brésil a voté en revanche pour le projet de résolution, adopté à la 1045ème séance, qui contenait ces principes en annexe et elle l'avait fait malgré l'adoption de l'amendement de la Tunisie et du Togo, parce qu'elle trouvait ces principes justes et équitables. M. Souza-Braga espère que la position prise par la délégation brésilienne ne sera mal interprétée ni par les jeunes nations d'Afrique ni par le Portugal, tous pays avec lesquels le Brésil a des liens étroits d'amitié.

5. M. KOSCZIUSKO-MORIZET (France) explique que la délégation française a voté contre le projet de résolution adopté à la séance précédente parce qu'elle a estimé que ses termes allaient à l'encontre des principes inscrits dans la Charte, que la France a toujours défendus. L'Article 73 de la Charte parle d'une acceptation et non d'une obligation. Il ressort des débats de la Conférence de San Francisco et des différences indéniables qui existent entre les dispositions du Chapitre XI et celles des Chapitres XII et XIII que la Charte n'a pas conféré à l'ONU un droit de surveillance sur les territoires non autonomes. Elle n'énumère pas les territoires auxquels l'Article 73 pourrait s'appliquer et n'autorise pas l'Assemblée générale à en dresser une liste. Elle n'invite pas davantage les Etats Membres administrants à fournir une liste de ces territoires. Telle que la Charte est conçue, l'Assemblée générale n'est pas habilitée à décider si un territoire est ou n'est pas un territoire autonome. C'est pourquoi elle s'était abstenue de dresser de telles listes et n'avait pris en considération que les renseignements communiqués spontanément par les Etats Membres administrants. La France est en droit de rappeler les termes de la Charte, car elle s'y est conformée. Le respect d'une règle commune pour tous, si imparfaite qu'elle puisse paraître, est la meilleure garantie que les objectifs de l'ONU pourront être atteints.

6. M. LOOMES (Australie) déclare que, si la délégation australienne s'est abstenue de voter sur le projet de résolution, tout en approuvant d'une manière générale les principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, c'est parce qu'elle a estimé que ce projet de résolution allait beaucoup plus loin que la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, qui avait prévu que les principes en question devraient guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable ou non. La délégation australienne fait des réserves sur la compétence de l'Assemblée générale pour désigner nommément certains territoires, ainsi que l'a fait le projet de résolution. En outre, elle ne pense pas que l'on puisse raisonnablement attendre de l'ONU qu'elle décide de façon précise quels territoires portugais devraient figurer ou ne pas figurer dans la liste, car il existe toute une série de facteurs complexes qui risqueraient de rendre sa décision peu judicieuse ou même arbitraire.

7. Mme SKOTTSBERG-AHMAN (Suède) déclare que, bien que sa délégation ait voté pour le projet de résolution, elle a des réserves à faire sur un point particulier. Quoique le projet soit présenté comme étant à lire à la lumière du projet de résolution adopté à la 1045ème séance, dont le paragraphe 3 du dispositif prévoit que les principes devront être appliqués en tenant compte dans chaque cas des faits et des circonstances, on ne peut pas dire que la Commission ait vraiment examiné les faits et circonstances à propos de chacun des territoires énumérés au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution adopté à la séance précédente. Aussi la délégation suédoise s'est-elle abstenue lorsque la liste de ces territoires a été mise aux voix.

8. M. KENNEDY (Irlande) s'abstiendra d'indiquer pourquoi sa délégation a voté pour le projet de résolution, car beaucoup de ses motifs sont ceux-là mêmes qui ont été exposés par la délégation indienne à la 1048ème séance.

9. La délégation irlandaise a voté contre les amendements de la RSS d'Ukraine pour trois raisons principales. Tout d'abord, elle a été embarrassée par la mention de certains territoires qui font l'objet de pourparlers bilatéraux entre l'Espagne et un autre Etat Membre. Ensuite, elle s'est étonnée de voir les Iles Canaries figurer dans une liste de territoires non autonomes, car il est impossible de prétendre que les Iles Canaries sont distinctes de l'Espagne du point de vue ethnique ou culturel, et, comme elle a foi dans les principes annexés au projet de résolution adopté à la 1045ème séance, la délégation irlandaise désire les voir appliquer correctement. Enfin, la délégation irlandaise a confiance dans la promesse donnée solennellement par le Gouvernement espagnol et adopter l'amendement de la RSS d'Ukraine eût signifié que l'on rejetait l'engagement donné par ce gouvernement et que l'on niait sa bonne foi.

10. Sir Andrew COHEN (Royaume-Uni) déclare que sa délégation continue à estimer qu'il n'appartient pas à l'Assemblée générale de se prononcer sur la question de savoir si des renseignements doivent être communiqués dans un cas particulier quelconque. Par sa résolution 1467 (XIV), l'Assemblée générale a exprimé l'avis qu'il serait souhaitable qu'elle énumère les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies leur est applicable ou non. La délégation du Royaume-Uni s'est donc abstenue parce que, si elle avait voté ou pour ou contre le projet de résolution adopté à la séance précédente, son vote aurait pu être considéré comme une prise de position sur le fond du problème évoqué dans le projet de résolution.

11. De l'avis de la délégation du Royaume-Uni, les mots employés à la fin du troisième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution sont outranciers et n'ont pas de sens clair. A l'ONU on ne devrait employer des mots comme "une menace à la paix internationale" qu'avec la plus grande prudence et lorsqu'ils ont une signification plus précise. La délégation du Royaume-Uni doute que l'emploi de ces mots soit justifié ou nécessaire dans la résolution et elle regrette qu'on les ait employés.

12. M. ACLY (Etats-Unis d'Amérique) explique que sa délégation s'est abstenue, lors du vote sur le projet de résolution, parce qu'elle ne pense pas que l'Assemblée générale soit habilitée à rappeler à un pays donné les obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, ni qu'il appartienne à l'ONU de déterminer quels sont les territoires visés à l'Article 73. Il est manifeste que, par son esprit, la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale ne permet pas à l'Assemblée d'essayer de déterminer par elle-même si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements est applicable ou non dans un cas donné. Sa décision à ce sujet doit être prise par les Etats Membres administrants, à la lumière de leurs dispositions constitutionnelles. C'est aux Etats Membres administrants qu'il appartiendra également de décider de l'application des principes figurant en annexe au projet de résolution adopté à la 1045ème séance et, si l'Assemblée générale invite un pays à fournir des renseignements sur des territoires dont le statut est contesté, on ne voit pas pourquoi elle n'inviterait pas d'autres pays à faire de même.

13. Ces considérations n'empêchent pas le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis d'interpréter l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte de la manière la plus large possible. C'est ainsi qu'il a fourni des renseignements sur des territoires qui étaient incorporés aux Etats-Unis et dont deux sont récemment devenus, de leur propre gré, des Etats de l'Union.

14. M. MIYAZAKI (Japon) déclare que sa délégation avait espéré que les 12 principes énoncés par le Comité spécial des Six seraient adoptés sans modification, tels qu'ils figuraient dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport de ce comité (A/4526). L'alinéa b du principe IX ayant été modifié, elle s'est vue contrainte de s'abstenir lorsqu'il a été mis aux voix à la 1045ème séance. Cependant, en raison de la très grande portée de la question, elle a voté pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution adopté à cette séance. La délégation japonaise regrette que le représentant du Portugal ait catégoriquement rejeté tous les principes en déclarant qu'ils ne pouvaient s'appliquer aux territoires portugais et elle espère que le Portugal reviendra sur cette décision. Elle doute toutefois qu'il convienne de mettre ces principes en application immédiatement après leur approbation par la Commission et elle pense qu'il vaudrait mieux donner au Portugal un peu de temps pour réétudier la question et revoir sa position.

15. La délégation japonaise n'a pu accepter l'énumération des territoires figurant au paragraphe 1 du dispositif du projet de résolution adopté à la séance précédente; c'est pourquoi, après avoir demandé un vote séparé sur ce paragraphe, elle s'est abstenue. Etant donné l'importance que présente ce paragraphe dans le projet de résolution, elle s'est également abstenue sur l'ensemble du projet.

16. M. KIANG (Chine) rappelle que sa délégation a voté pour les troisième et quatrième alinéas du préambule du projet de résolution et s'est abstenue lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet. Outre qu'elle faisait des réserves sur la mention de Macao dans la liste des territoires énumérés, elle a estimé que le projet de résolution aurait dû être rédigé en termes généraux de manière à ne pas empêcher que les 12 principes soient appliqués à d'autres territoires et populations non autonomes dont le caractère est dissimulé par des étiquettes énigmatiques qui sont des inventions d'un néo-colonialisme. La délégation chinoise a apprécié la bonne foi avec laquelle le représentant de l'Espagne a répondu aux vœux de la Commission et elle s'associe à l'appel lancé par le représentant de la Colombie à l'adresse du Portugal pour qu'il fasse de même.

M. Pachachi (Irak) prend la présidence.

17. U TIN MAUNG (Birmanie) regrette qu'au cours du débat certaines délégations aient mis en doute les motifs qui ont amené les auteurs du projet de résolution à modifier le texte primitif de leur projet (A/C.4/L.649). Tout amendement à un projet a pour but d'en améliorer le texte et le texte définitif du projet de résolution a été l'aboutissement d'un processus démocratique. Les amendements de la RSS d'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651), cependant, créaient certaines difficultés que les auteurs ne pouvaient surmonter sans sacrifier la structure et le fond mêmes de leur texte. La Commission examinait un problème déterminé, qui était celui de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte et non pas la question plus générale de l'abolition du colonialisme, qui est cependant au premier plan des préoccupations des auteurs du projet. L'objet précis du projet de résolution était d'inviter les pays cités à communiquer des renseignements en vertu du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

18. Comme la délégation de la Birmanie l'avait espéré et même escompté, le Gouvernement espagnol a accepté de communiquer des renseignements au Secrétaire général conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. U Tin Maung espère que cet engagement sera exécuté.

19. La délégation birmane ne fait de discrimination contre personne, mais elle tient à ce que sa position soit bien connue sur une question comme celle du colonialisme, qui est un véritable anachronisme dans le monde moderne. Elle estime qu'en conséquence la façon dont elle a voté sur le projet de résolution résistera à l'épreuve de l'histoire. Elle a voté pour le projet de résolution, mais contre les amendements de la RSS d'Ukraine. Si elle a voté contre la suppression des mots "avec satisfaction" au quatrième alinéa du préambule du projet de résolution, c'est parce qu'elle considère que l'ONU se doit d'exprimer sa satisfaction quand le représentant d'un Etat Membre déclare que son gouvernement accepte de communiquer des renseignements conformément aux dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Si elle a voté pour les amendements au quatrième alinéa du préambule proposés par la délégation bulgare, c'est parce qu'ils dissipaient des doutes qu'éprouvait sa délégation, de même que beaucoup d'autres.

20. La délégation birmane pourrait rappeler des déclarations antérieures faites par le représentant de l'Espagne au sujet de l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements sur les territoires espagnols d'outre-mer, mais elle est convaincue que l'Espagne est maintenant disposée à coopérer plus étroitement avec l'ONU. La déclaration faite par le représentant de l'Espagne à la 1048ème séance ne pourrait être désavouée sans que cela ait de graves répercussions sur les relations de l'Espagne avec le reste du monde.

21. M. VANDERBORGHT (Belgique) déclare que sa délégation a voté contre le projet de résolution pour des raisons qui ne sont pas d'ordre politique ou colonial, mais ont un caractère purement juridique. Aucune disposition de la Charte ne justifie une telle recommandation; vu ce qu'est l'Article 73, elle constitue un empiètement sur les prérogatives des Etats Membres. La délégation belge a, par le passé, exprimé ses vues sur les catégories de territoires au sujet desquels des renseignements devraient être communiqués en vertu de la Charte, mais son attitude a été régie par le respect des droits souverains des Etats. C'est à eux, et à eux seuls, qu'il appartient de décider s'il convient ou non de communiquer au Secrétaire général les renseignements statistiques et autres dont il est question à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73.

22. De l'avis de la délégation belge, il existe un certain nombre de territoires sur lesquels aucun renseignement n'a jamais été communiqué, mais qui devraient être considérés comme relevant du Chapitre XI. Cependant, si l'Assemblée générale avait décidé d'énumérer ces territoires, elle aurait outrepassé ses droits et porté atteinte aux engagements contractuels sur lesquels reposent les dispositions de la Charte.

23. Pour ces raisons, la délégation belge n'a pas pu voter pour le paragraphe 1 du dispositif ni pour le projet de résolution dans son ensemble. La position de la délégation belge peut se résumer en une formule simple: toute la Charte, mais rien que la Charte.

24. M. ANSTENSEN (Canada) rappelle que sa délégation a voté pour un certain nombre de paragraphes du projet de résolution sous sa forme révisée. Elle a été particulièrement heureuse de voter notamment pour le quatrième alinéa du préambule, qui prend note avec satisfaction des assurances données par le représentant de l'Espagne touchant la communication de renseignements sur les territoires espagnols d'outre-mer.

25. Le projet de résolution traite de la communication des renseignements en appliquant à un cas particulier les principes approuvés dans le projet de résolution adopté à la 1045ème séance. Ces principes ne font que présumer l'existence de certains territoires non autonomes qui relèvent donc du Chapitre XI de la Charte. En conséquence et étant donné qu'aucun renseignement détaillé n'a été communiqué sur les territoires énumérés dans le projet de résolution, il eût mieux valu, de l'avis de la délégation canadienne, qu'aucune liste n'en soit dressée. La liste comprend des territoires sur lesquels la Commission ne dispose pas des connaissances précises dont elle a besoin pour se prononcer. En outre, quelle que soit l'idée que l'on se fasse de la politique suivie par un gouvernement donné, il n'en reste pas moins que le Gouvernement visé n'aura pas eu le temps de modifier son attitude et sa politique, même si l'adoption des principes par l'Assemblée lui en fait comprendre la nécessité. La résolution approuvant les principes n'aura donc pas pu produire tout l'effet qu'on pouvait en attendre.

26. La délégation canadienne a éprouvé des doutes sur le sens à donner au troisième alinéa du préambule. Elle espère qu'on n'a pas voulu dire que tous les peuples coloniaux sont des peuples subjugués, que les puissances coloniales leur refusent habituellement le droit de libre détermination, ou que l'indépendance et la libre détermination sont nécessairement une seule et même chose.

27. Pour toutes ces raisons, la délégation canadienne s'est abstenue lors du vote sur l'ensemble du projet de résolution. M. Anstensen regrette que le projet ait été rédigé en des termes tels qu'il a été impossible à sa délégation de l'accepter dans son ensemble.

28. M. VITELLI (Italie) rappelle que sa délégation s'est abstenue lors du vote sur le projet de résolution. Elle a éprouvé des doutes quant à l'opportunité de certaines parties de ce projet en constatant que la Commission se trouvait devant une façon toute nouvelle de procéder en une matière où la délégation italienne considérait qu'il existait des pratiques bien établies et communément admises.

29. Les résolutions de l'Assemblée générale, telles que, par exemple, les résolutions 66 (I), 146 (II), 218 (III) et 334 (IV), ont toutes souligné que les recommandations ne doivent s'adresser à aucun territoire en particulier et que l'énumération des territoires doit être faite d'accord avec les Membres administrants. Ces pratiques ont été appliquées depuis des années et ont été même confirmées l'année précédente par la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale qui exprimait l'avis "qu'il serait souhaitable que l'Assemblée générale énumère les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer les renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies leur est applicable ou non". C'est pourquoi, tout en reconnaissant la contribution que les auteurs du projet de résolution auront apportée à une solution équitable du problème, la délégation italienne n'a pas été en mesure de voter pour ce texte.

30. M. LANZA (Uruguay) regrette qu'en raison de circonstances particulières, sa délégation n'ait pu assister à la 1048ème séance, au cours de laquelle le projet de résolution a été mis aux voix. Si elle avait été présente, elle aurait voté pour ce projet qui, à son avis, renforcera le prestige de l'ONU. Le vote de sa délégation aurait été conforme à la déclaration qu'elle avait faite au cours du débat, lorsqu'elle a exprimé l'espoir que le projet de résolution recevrait l'appui de toutes les délégations, y compris même celles des pays qui faisaient des réserves sur l'aspect juridique de la question, mais n'en respectent pas moins les principes de la Charte.

31. M. ORTIZ DE ROZAS (Argentine) rappelle que sa délégation a exposé à la 1046ème séance les raisons qu'elle avait pour voter en faveur du projet de résolution. Si elle a voté contre le premier amendement de la RSS d'Ukraine (A/C.4/L.651, par. 1), proposant d'ajouter, à la fin du quatrième alinéa du préambule, une liste des territoires administrés par l'Espagne, c'est parce que cette liste comprenait un territoire sur lequel l'Espagne estime avoir des droits souverains et qui fait l'objet de négociations bilatérales et comprenait également les îles Canaries, sans aucune justification d'ordre historique, géographique, juridique, racial ou autre. De l'avis de la délégation argentine, il ne peut y avoir aucun doute sur la souveraineté de l'Espagne en ce qui concerne les îles Canaries.

32. M. Ortiz de Rozas rend hommage au représentant du Portugal pour la façon remarquable dont il a défendu la position de son gouvernement.

33. M. DORSINVILLE (Haïti) déclare qu'il a voté contre la première partie du premier amendement de la RSS d'Ukraine parce qu'à son avis il est tout naturel que la Commission exprime sa satisfaction de savoir que le Gouvernement espagnol a décidé de communiquer des renseignements sur ses territoires en application du Chapitre XI de la Charte.

34. Si la liste des territoires espagnols avait été mise aux voix, sa délégation aurait voté contre l'inclusion des îles Canaries, car elle ne considère pas que ces îles entrent dans la catégorie des territoires non autonomes.

35. En ce qui concerne l'amendement de l'Ukraine portant sur le paragraphe 2 du dispositif (A/C.4/L.651, par. 3), encore qu'en principe la délégation d'Haïti n'aurait pu qu'appuyer l'objectif d'indépendance, dans le contexte du projet de résolution, cependant, l'amendement pouvait être interprété comme méconnaissant le principe VI accepté par la Commission à la 1045ème séance. La délégation d'Haïti est d'autant plus à l'aise pour le dire qu'on connaît sa position invariable au sujet de l'accession à l'indépendance des territoires dépendants et qu'elle a fait enregistrer ses réserves formelles à l'égard de l'alinéa c dudit principe VI et des principes VIII et IX qui ont trait à l'intégration d'un territoire non autonome dans un Etat indépendant.

36. M. Dorsinville a voté contre la proposition de suppression du paragraphe 4 du dispositif parce que le Secrétaire général a un rôle important à jouer à propos de la communication des renseignements.

37. Il a voté pour l'ensemble du projet de résolution, mais avec des sentiments mitigés: il l'a fait avec satisfaction à cause de la nouvelle attitude adoptée par le Gouvernement espagnol, mais avec regret parce que le Portugal n'a pas été en mesure d'adopter une attitude analogue.

38. M. SKALLI (Maroc) saisit cette occasion pour répéter que le Maroc considère que les villes de Ceuta et Melilla et les territoires du Sahara occidental et d'Ifni sont parties intégrantes de son territoire.

POINT 43 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

Question du Sud-Ouest africain (A/4464)

QUESTION DE PROCEDURE SOULEVEE PAR LE REPRESENTANT DE L'UNION SUD-AFRICAINE

39. M. LOUW (Union sud-africaine) rappelle que, les années passées, la question du Sud-Ouest africain a fait l'objet de très larges débats et que tous ses aspects ont été traités. A la présente session la discussion aurait normalement suivi le même cours que les années précédentes, mais, depuis l'inscription de la question à l'ordre du jour de la session, il s'est produit un événement qui a considérablement modifié la situation. Les Gouvernements de l'Éthiopie et du Libéria ont, en effet, présenté à la Cour internationale de Justice une requête tendant à la saisir d'un différend qui les opposerait au Gouvernement de l'Union sud-africaine^{1/}. C'est la raison pour laquelle M. Louw est revenu à New York.

40. Il ressort de la lecture de la requête adressée à la Cour que, si la Commission décidait d'examiner la question, elle examinerait, comme elle l'a fait par le passé, l'ensemble des problèmes maintenant posés dans la requête. En conséquence, M. Louw soulève la question préjudicielle suivante: puisque l'affaire est en instance au fond, elle ne peut être examinée par la Commission.

41. Conformément à la règle sub judice, un tribunal ne devrait pas être entravé en quoi que ce soit dans l'exercice de ses fonctions à propos d'une affaire en instance. Dans la plupart des systèmes juridiques, tout acte et tout commentaire — qu'il émane d'organismes publics, figure dans des journaux ou soit mentionné dans des discours publics — qui pourrait tendre à intimider, embarrasser, influencer ou entraver un tribunal dans l'administration de la justice est considéré comme un délit et est sévèrement puni.

42. Cette règle est strictement respectée en Union sud-africaine et elle est appliquée dans la plupart des autres pays civilisés. Par exemple, elle a été appliquée à propos de plusieurs affaires aux États-Unis d'Amérique, où elle a fait l'objet d'un arrêt de la Cour d'appel des États-Unis il y a deux ans seulement. Elle est appliquée également dans la pratique judiciaire britannique, dont s'inspirent dans une large mesure celles des États-Unis et du Commonwealth.

43. On prétendra peut-être que cette règle, qui est reconnue par les systèmes juridiques de différents pays, ne s'applique pas nécessairement en droit international. M. Louw attire donc l'attention sur l'alinéa c du paragraphe 1 de l'Article 38 du Statut de la Cour internationale de Justice, qui prévoit que la Cour, en réglant conformément au droit international les différends qui lui sont soumis, applique "les principes généraux de droit reconnus par les nations civilisées". Dans l'affaire de la Compagnie d'électricité de Sofia et de Bulgarie^{2/}, la Cour permanente de Justice internationale avait invoqué le principe universellement reconnu par les tribunaux internationaux selon lequel les parties à une affaire doivent s'abstenir de toute mesure qui puisse gêner l'exécution de la décision à prendre et doivent, d'une manière générale, empêcher toute mesure qui pourrait aggraver ou étendre le différend. M. Manley O. Hudson, juge à la Cour permanente de Justice internationale, a évoqué le même principe dans son livre intitulé The Permanent Court of International Justice, 1920-1942^{3/}, ouvrage qui fait autorité.

44. Un autre organe des Nations Unies a respecté cette règle. Au cours de la discussion de l'affaire de l'Anglo-Iranian Oil Company au Conseil de sécurité en octobre 1951, sir Benegal Rau, devenu ensuite juge à la Cour internationale de Justice, a dit: "Il se pourrait donc qu'il ne soit ni sage ni correct de notre part de nous prononcer sur cette question, alors qu'une question qui est essentiellement la même est pendante devant la Cour internationale de Justice^{4/}." A la 565ème séance du Conseil de sécurité, tenue le 19 octobre 1951^{5/}, on a proposé d'ajourner la discussion jusqu'à ce que la Cour internationale de Justice se soit prononcée sur la question de la compétence. Sir Benegal Rau a alors fait observer que le point essentiel était de savoir si l'affaire était sub judice. La proposition d'ajournement a été adoptée par 8 voix contre une — celle de l'URSS. M. Louw pense que la Quatrième Commission devrait suivre cet important précédent.

45. Indépendamment de la question de savoir si l'affaire est sub judice, il est un autre aspect de la question, évoqué par une autorité en matière de droit international dans le British Yearbook of International Law (1958)^{6/}, et qui y est considéré comme étant à éviter: c'est "la dualité de juridiction". Dans l'affaire Ambatielos de 1952, le juge Spiropoulos à la Cour internationale de Justice a déclaré que le tribunal qui rend une sentence avant la Cour doit également se prononcer sur l'objection de compétence, parce qu'une décision sur la compétence d'un tribunal, quand un autre tribunal doit connaître de l'affaire au fond, risque de préjuger ou, en tout cas, de modifier la position de l'une ou l'autre partie. Dans son jugement sur l'objection préalable soulevée dans la même affaire, le juge Klaestad a également évoqué le caractère indésirable de la "double juridiction".

46. Un principe analogue fait partie de la doctrine dite de la "litispendance" et a été invoqué dans l'affaire des intérêts allemands en Haute-Silésie polonaise, dont a été saisie la Cour permanente de Justice internationale^{7/}. En vertu des décisions prises, un tribunal doit refuser de connaître d'une affaire en instance devant un autre tribunal du même Etat.

47. Ceux qui nient que la règle s'applique également à une affaire en instance devant la Cour internationale de Justice font valoir que, conformément à l'Article 10 de la Charte, l'Assemblée générale peut discuter toutes questions rentrant dans le cadre de la Charte. Mais cet argument est fallacieux et ceux qui l'invoquent oublient que l'Article 10 est subordonné à certaines autres dispositions, par exemple l'Article 12 de la Charte qui prévoit que, tant que le Conseil de sécurité remplit, à l'égard d'un différend, les fonctions qui lui sont attribuées par la Charte, l'Assemblée générale ne doit faire aucune recommandation sur ce différend à moins que le Conseil de sécurité ne le lui demande. Il est évident que, dans l'intention et l'esprit général de la Charte, le même principe doit s'appliquer à une affaire soumise à la Cour internationale de Justice, laquelle, comme l'indique l'Article 7 de la Charte, est un organe principal des Nations Unies.

48. Il ressort des autorités que M. Louw a citées et des arguments qu'il a avancés qu'en examinant en ce moment la question du Sud-Ouest africain, les membres de la Commission exprimeraient des avis — ou même se prononceraient par un projet de résolution — sur une affaire qui est actuellement soumise à la Cour internationale de Justice, qu'ils transgresseraient la règle sub judice et que les débats de la Commission et les résolutions qui pourraient être adoptées pourraient être interprétés comme une tentative d'usurpation des fonctions de la Cour.

49. En engageant la discussion, la Commission créerait un précédent que certains gouvernements membres pourraient avoir à regretter lorsqu'ils se trouveraient dans des cas qui pourraient donner lieu à une action devant la Cour internationale de Justice. Au cours de la présente session, la Commission politique spéciale a examiné la situation au Tyrol, mais, si, après l'inscription de cette question à l'ordre du jour, et immédiatement avant son examen, l'une des parties avait décidé de porter l'affaire devant la Cour internationale de Justice, M. Louw est persuadé que l'autre partie se serait vigoureusement opposée à l'examen de cette question par la Commission politique spéciale et la Commission en aurait interrompu la discussion. Il y a d'autres situations analogues — celle des relations entre les Etats-Unis d'Amérique et Cuba, par exemple — qui pourraient faire l'objet de débats devant la Première Commission ou la Commission politique spéciale et donner ensuite lieu à une action devant la Cour internationale de Justice.

50. M. Louw croit devoir prévenir les représentants des Etats Membres qui voteraient pour la poursuite du débat qu'ils pourront être eux-mêmes les victimes d'un précédent qu'ils auraient contribué à créer. Ils ne pourront plus, en ce cas, élever d'objection si l'Assemblée générale ou l'une de ses commissions veulent poursuivre l'examen d'une question soumise à la Cour internationale de Justice et dans laquelle ils sont défendeurs. Ils devraient par conséquent étudier avec soin un problème si important avant d'engager leurs gouvernements pour l'avenir. A la connaissance de la délégation sud-africaine, c'est la première fois que la règle sub judice se trouve invoquée à l'Assemblée générale ou dans une de ses commissions, mais, lorsqu'elle a été invoquée au Conseil de sécurité à propos du différend anglo-iranien, le Conseil en a admis la validité.

51. La délégation de l'Union sud-africaine est persuadée qu'il ne convient pas que la Commission entreprenne l'examen de la question du Sud-Ouest africain tant que l'affaire est en instance devant la Cour internationale de Justice et se trouve ainsi sub judice. Telle est la raison pour laquelle M. Louw est intervenu pour une motion d'ordre.

52. Le PRESIDENT fait remarquer qu'aux termes de l'article 117 du règlement intérieur, deux représentants peuvent prendre la parole en faveur de la motion, et deux contre.

53. M. CAMARA Maurice (Guinée) déclare que l'argumentation du représentant de l'Union sud-africaine n'a nullement réussi à convaincre sa délégation et est irrecevable si l'on pense aux souffrances endurées par le peuple du Sud-Ouest africain. La Cour internationale de Justice a déjà fait certaines recomman-dations que le Gouvernement de l'Union a négligées. Le représentant de l'Union sud-africaine a invoqué la Charte, mais il n'y a rien dans la Charte qui soit favorable à l'"apartheid" et la seule défense que le représentant de l'Union sud-africaine pourrait trouver dans la Charte consisterait à saisir le Conseil de sécurité.

54. La vraie signification de la déclaration du représentant de l'Union sud-africaine est que son pays craint la discussion. Au moment de la présente session, la vague anticolonialiste balaie tout devant elle. Les Etats africains ont saisi la Cour internationale de Justice de la question du Sud-Ouest africain, car ils tiennent à user de tous les moyens qui puissent obliger l'Union sud-africaine à respecter ses obligations. La délégation guinéenne s'oppose énergiquement à la motion du représentant de l'Union sud-africaine.

55. M. GEBRE-EGZY (Ethiopie) déclare que son pays, de concert avec le Libéria, a soumis une requête à la Cour internationale de Justice, aux termes de l'article 7 du Mandat, en se fondant sur l'étude effectuée par l'ONU sur les aspects juridiques de la question. Sa délégation a l'intention d'en parler à une prochaine séance de la Commission et elle s'oppose donc à l'ajournement du débat.

56. M. CARPIO (Philippines), intervenant sur une question d'ordre, déclare qu'on devrait donner aux membres de la Commission la possibilité d'examiner la question soulevée par le représentant de l'Union sud-africaine. Il propose donc l'ajournement de la séance conformément à l'article 120 du règlement intérieur.

57. Le PRESIDENT dit que, comme la Commission s'apprête à voter, il ne peut pas retenir la proposition du représentant des Philippines.

A la demande du représentant de la Libye, il est procédé au vote par appel nominal.

L'appel commence par la République centrafricaine, dont le nom est tiré au sort par le Président.

Vote pour: Union sud-africaine.

Votent contre: République centrafricaine, Ceylan, Chili, Colombie, Costa Rica, Cuba, Chypre, Tchecoslovaquie, Dahomey, Danemark, Equateur, Salvador, Ethiopie, Fédération de Malaisie, Finlande, Ghana, Grèce, Guatemala, Guinée, Haïti, Hongrie, Inde, Indonésie, Iran, Irak, Irlande, Côte-d'Ivoire, Japon, Jordanie, Liban, Libéria, Libye, Mali, Mexique, Maroc, Népal, Nigéria, Norvège, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Pologne, Roumanie, Arabie Saoudite, Soudan, Suède, Thaïlande, Togo, Tunisie, Turquie, République socialiste soviétique d'Ukraine, Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques, République arabe unie, Etats-Unis d'Amérique, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yougoslavie, Afghanistan, Albanie, Argentine, Autriche, Brésil, Bulgarie, Birmanie, République socialiste soviétique de Biélorussie, Cambodge.

S'abstiennent: Chine, France, Italie, Pays-Bas, Nouvelle-Zélande, Portugal, Espagne, Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord, Australie, Belgique, Canada.

Par 67 voix contre une, avec 11 abstentions, la motion est rejetée.

58. M. SMITHERS (Royaume-Uni), expliquant son vote, déclare que, comme elle l'a indiqué pendant la discussion sur l'audition des pétitionnaires (1004ème séance), sa délégation se rend pleinement compte de l'importance que la Commission attache à la discussion de la question dont elle est maintenant saisie.

59. La requête présentée à la Cour internationale de Justice par les Gouvernements éthiopien et libérien consiste à la saisir d'un différend auquel l'Union sud-africaine est partie. Comme les décisions de la Cour seront de la plus haute importance, non seulement pour les habitants du Sud-Ouest africain, mais pour toute l'Afrique et pour l'ONU, il est assurément souhaitable qu'elles aient le plus de poids possible. Il convient donc que la Commission ne fasse rien qui puisse porter le moindre tort à l'autorité dont jouit la Cour ou faire dire qu'elle a subi des influences malencontreuses ou des pressions d'ordre politique. L'affaire dont la Cour est saisie comprend toute une série de questions dont traite le rapport du Comité du Sud-Ouest africain (A/4464) et dont les pétitionnaires voudront sans doute parler. On s'expose donc au danger de voir deux organes distincts des Nations Unies se prononcer sur la même question au même moment, ce qui ne manquerait pas de diminuer l'autorité de la Cour et de déconsidérer les débats de l'ONU et de ses organes. La Commission ne devrait donc pas aller de l'avant sans avoir pesé soigneusement les conséquences qui résulteront de son débat et qui s'étendront bien au-delà de la question dont il s'agit.

60. A sa 565ème séance, à propos de l'affaire de l'Anglo-Iranian Oil Company et à un moment où la Cour internationale de Justice ne s'était pas encore prononcée sur la question de sa compétence, le Conseil de sécurité a décidé de surseoir à la discussion de la question. La Quatrième Commission vient de décider ne pas suivre ce précédent pour la question qui l'occupe.

61. Cependant, comme il importe de déterminer ce qui nuira ou ne nuira pas aux débats de la Cour, la Commission voudra peut-être, comme le prévoit l'alinéa d de la recommandation 1 de la première partie de l'annexe II du règlement intérieur de l'Assemblée générale, recourir à l'aide que la Sixième Commission pourrait lui apporter en l'occurrence. Selon M. Smithers, si la Commission entamait la discussion et entendait des témoins sur une question dont la Cour internationale de Justice est saisie, une partie en cause pourrait prétendre que les débats de la Cour ont été influencés par des actes de la Commission et qu'elle n'est donc pas tenue de respecter la décision de la Cour.

62. La règle sub judice, appliquée au Royaume-Uni et dans beaucoup de pays, est destinée à défendre les intérêts des parties devant les tribunaux et à sauvegarder la réputation d'impartialité de ces derniers. En vertu de la règle, le tribunal peut punir ou détenir quiconque publie des textes qui sont, ou paraissent, de nature à porter préjudice à un jugement équitable. Au Royaume-Uni, la Chambre des communes, bien qu'elle jouisse, pour ses débats, d'un statut privilégié et que les tribunaux n'aient, de ce fait, aucun pouvoir de restriction sur ses membres, s'est imposée volontairement une discipline à ce sujet: une affaire qui est en instance devant un tribunal ne peut pas y être discutée. Il est vrai, bien entendu, que la Cour internationale de Justice n'est pas la même chose que des tribunaux nationaux et l'on pourrait soutenir que, puisque la Cour internationale ne peut pas imposer l'application de la doctrine sub judice à un individu dans tel ou tel pays, cette règle ne s'applique pas.

Cependant, si l'on considère que la Cour internationale juge la conduite des Etats, comme les tribunaux nationaux jugent celle des individus, l'analogie est très nette. Il existe le même genre de rapport entre la Cour internationale de Justice et l'Assemblée générale qu'entre les tribunaux britanniques et le Parlement. La Cour, comme les tribunaux, fait partie d'une structure constitutionnelle; et ni la Cour ni les tribunaux ne peuvent empêcher les membres de l'Assemblée générale ou ceux de la Chambre des communes de prendre la parole, mais, dans les deux cas, l'impartialité de la Cour et les droits des plaideurs doivent être à l'abri des pressions extérieures. Dans les deux cas, la Chambre des communes ou l'Assemblée générale pourraient, si elles le voulaient, exercer une très forte pression sur l'instance judiciaire en exprimant leur opinion. De l'avis de M. Smithers, il est bon que l'Assemblée générale et ses commissions observent une réserve analogue à celle que s'imposent la Chambre des communes ou d'autres institutions analogues à l'égard des affaires qui sont en instance devant la Cour internationale de Justice.

63. La Commission se trouve devant une question de principe extrêmement importante et qui peut avoir de graves répercussions. Pour la grande majorité des Etats Membres, le respect de la règle de droit dans le monde est le meilleur garant de leur protection et de la sauvegarde de leurs droits; la règle de droit ne serait remplacée que par le règne de la force. La Cour internationale de Justice est le principal interprète du droit, et le seul moyen d'assurer le respect de ses décisions est que les Etats Membres de l'ONU et tous les organes de l'Organisation lui apportent un appui loyal. C'est pourquoi la délégation du Royaume-Uni estime qu'ils devront observer la plus grande réserve en participant aux débats et M. Smithers espère que d'autres délégations partageront son avis.

64. M. LOUW (Union sud-africaine) constate que la Commission a décidé — peu sagement, à son avis — d'entreprendre la discussion de la question à l'ordre du jour. Sa délégation ne peut participer à la discussion d'une affaire qui est en instance devant la Cour internationale de Justice, car, si elle le faisait, elle enfreindrait la règle sub judice. Par conséquent, la délégation de l'Union sud-africaine ne pourra pas participer au débat sur la question, de la manière dont elle avait exprimé l'intention de le faire avant que la Cour internationale de Justice ne soit saisie. Comme preuve de cette intention, M. Louw fait état de la présence à New York, depuis six semaines, d'un membre du Comité exécutif du Sud-Ouest africain et du Commissaire principal aux affaires bantoues, venus spécialement pour traiter de toutes les questions soulevées et répondre à toutes les accusations portées dans le rapport du Comité du Sud-Ouest africain (A/4464).

65. M. KIANG (Chine) déclare que sa délégation n'a pu faire autrement que de s'abstenir, car elle désirait disposer de plus de temps pour étudier la déclaration du représentant de l'Union sud-africaine, dont elle ne voyait pas clairement la portée. Même si la motion avait été adoptée, elle n'aurait pas pu, à son avis, s'appliquer à toutes les phases de la discussion; la Commission aurait dû, de toute façon, entendre les pétitionnaires.

66. Mlle BROOKS (Libéria) déclare que, si elle avait pu le faire avant le vote, elle se serait associée à la déclaration de l'Ethiopie. En tant que partie

au différend, sa délégation se serait normalement abstenue, mais, comme le représentant de l'Ethiopie a exprimé l'intention de parler de l'initiative prise par l'Ethiopie et le Libéria, elle a cru devoir voter contre la motion.

La séance est levée à 13 heures.

Rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte

[Texte original en anglais et en français]
[3 octobre 1960]

I. — CONSTITUTION DU COMITÉ

1. Par la résolution 1467 (XIV), adoptée le 12 décembre 1959, l'Assemblée générale a considéré qu'il serait souhaitable qu'elle énumère les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte leur est applicable ou non et décidé de créer un Comité spécial de six membres chargé d'étudier ces principes.

* Pour les comptes rendus des séances relatives à ce point de l'ordre du jour, voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Quatrième Commission, 1031^e à 1049^e, 1087^e et 1088^e séances : et ibid., Séances plénières, 948^e séance.

2. Le Comité spécial désigné par l'Assemblée générale comprenait : les Etats-Unis d'Amérique, l'Inde, le Maroc, le Mexique, les Pays-Bas et le Royaume-Uni de Grande-Bretagne et d'Irlande du Nord. La liste des représentants participant à la réunion est donnée à l'annexe du présent rapport.

3. Le Comité s'est réuni au Siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies à New York du 2 au 22 septembre 1960 et a tenu 14 séances.

II. — ELECTION DU PRÉSIDENT

4. Le Comité a élu président M. C. S. Jha (Inde) par acclamation.

III. — DOCUMENTATION ET ORGANISATION DU TRAVAIL

5. Par sa résolution 1467 (XIV), l'Assemblée générale a invité les Etats Membres à communiquer au Secrétaire général leurs vues sur la question soumise au Comité. Au 1^{er} septembre 1960, les réponses de 26 gouvernements avaient été reçues et transmises au Comité. Le Comité a pris pleinement en considération ces réponses et les vues exprimées dans 24 d'entre elles pour parvenir à ses conclusions¹. Les textes des réponses sont transmis à l'Assemblée générale dans le document A/AC.100/1 et Add.1.

6. En outre, conformément aux termes de la résolution de l'Assemblée, le Secrétaire général a préparé pour le Comité un historique des discussions sur la question ainsi qu'un résumé des vues exprimées par les Etats Membres à l'ONU et des opinions formulées dans les ouvrages juridiques (A/AC.100/2 et Add.1 et 2).

7. Le Comité disposait également comme documentation de base du rapport (A/2428) du Comité ad hoc pour l'étude des facteurs (territoires non autonomes) nommé par l'Assemblée générale aux termes de la résolution 648 (VII), de la liste de facteurs approuvée par l'Assemblée générale dans sa résolution 742 (VIII) et du Répertoire de la pratique suivie par les organes des Nations Unies.

8. Le Comité a commencé ses travaux par l'audition des observations préliminaires de ses membres sur la question dont il était saisi. Des déclarations ont été faites par tous les membres du Comité. Pour les représentants du Maroc, du Mexique, des Pays-Bas et du Royaume-Uni, ces déclarations complétaient les réponses écrites antérieurement communiquées au Secrétaire général par les gouvernements de ces pays. Le texte des observations préliminaires figure dans les comptes rendus analytiques des séances correspondantes (A/AC.100/SR.1 à 14).

9. Par la suite, le Comité a examiné les considérations générales et les principes concernant l'application du Chapitre XI de la Charte. Après cet échange de vues, le Comité a décidé de poursuivre ses travaux sur la base d'un projet de texte sur les principes devant être énumérés, projet établi à cet effet par la délégation de l'Inde. Après discussions et nouvel échange de vues, le Comité a établi une liste des principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 leur est applicable ou non.

10. La liste des principes figure à la section V ci-après.

IV. — INTRODUCTION

11. Les observations préliminaires ont montré qu'il y avait un large accord sur la façon générale d'envisager le problème, ainsi que sur les principes fondamentaux en cause, accord qui permettait au Comité de parvenir à des conclusions unanimes. Le Comité a également pris en considération les facteurs annexés à la résolution 742 (VIII) de l'Assemblée générale.

12. Les conclusions auxquelles est parvenu le Comité sont reproduites dans les principes formulés dans le présent rapport. Les paragraphes suivants viennent néanmoins éclairer la position des membres sur certains points contenus dans ces principes.

13. Sur le principe IX, le représentant du Royaume-Uni a exprimé certaines réserves. En particulier, il a estimé que bien que son gouvernement approuvât pleinement le caractère désirable en principe du suffrage universel des adultes, il pouvait y avoir des circonstances dans lesquelles la pleine autonomie se réalisait avant qu'on puisse mettre en pratique l'exécution de ce principe. En tout état de cause, il estimait que l'alinéa a du principe IX contenait une restriction superflue de l'alinéa b de ce principe. Il avait aussi éprouvé certaines difficultés à admettre la référence au caractère désirable du contrôle des Nations Unies dans ce contexte.

14. En ce qui concerne la question du contrôle international, le représentant du Maroc a dit que son gouvernement posait comme principe que la consultation des populations devait être contrôlée par l'ONU. Il a estimé que le contrôle de l'ONU n'était pas seulement souhaitable, mais parfois même nécessaire. Déclarer seulement que le contrôle international « peut être » souhaitable ne répond que partiellement aux préoccupations de son gouvernement.

15. Le représentant du Royaume-Uni a déclaré accepter le principe X, étant entendu qu'il pouvait y avoir des circonstances dans lesquelles les considérations constitutionnelles du genre mentionné réduisaient à néant le volume des informations pouvant être transmises.

V. — PRINCIPES QUI DOIVENT GUIDER LES ETATS MEMBRES POUR DÉTERMINER SI L'OBLIGATION DE COMMUNIQUER DES RENSEIGNEMENTS PRÉVUE A L'ALINÉA e DE L'ARTICLE 73 DE LA CHARTE LEUR EST APPLICABLE OU NON

A. — Considérations générales

16. Au cours des discussions du Comité, certaines considérations générales ont été présentées auxquelles il convient de se référer pour éclaircir la nature de la tâche du Comité.

17. Le Comité a noté que, depuis 1946, plus de 100 millions d'habitants dans près de 30 territoires non autonomes ont atteint les objectifs du Chapitre XI. De nombreux Etats, qui étaient antérieurement des territoires non autonomes, ont déjà été admis comme Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Le droit des peuples dépendants de choisir leur propre destin est plus largement accepté aujourd'hui qu'à tout autre moment depuis la signature de la Charte à San Francisco. La Charte a été un point culminant de l'évolution progressive dans l'opinion publique internationale, car elle exprime la préoccupation internationale touchant le bien-être et la liberté des peuples dépendants d'une manière beaucoup plus forte que tout autre instrument international similaire. On reconnaît aujourd'hui d'une façon générale que l'indépendance est une des aspirations légitimes de chaque nation dont la réalisation constitue un important facteur pour le maintien de la paix et de la sécurité internationales.

18. La Charte est un document vivant et l'application du Chapitre XI doit être considérée à la lumière de la réalité politique et de l'évolution actuelle des esprits. Avec l'Article 73 de la Charte, les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies ont affirmé la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires non autonomes et reconnu que le développement progressif de leur capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes doit tenir compte des conditions particulières de chaque territoire et des aspirations de ses populations. Ce développement doit s'harmoniser avec le mouvement vers la liberté et l'égalité qui se manifeste partout dans le monde.

19. Les obligations assumées par les Etats Membres au titre du Chapitre XI ne sont pas limitées à l'Article 73. Conformément à l'Article 74, les Etats Membres reconnaissent l'obligation de respecter le principe du bon voisinage non seulement pour leurs zones métropolitaines, mais aussi pour les territoires dont ils ont assumé la respensabilité. Ce principe s'applique à la fois à l'égard des pays qui sont leurs voisins immédiats au sens géographique et à la communauté internationale dans son ensemble. Le principe du bon voisinage implique une obligation morale qui renforce l'obligation de transmettre des informations suivant l'Article 73, contribuant ainsi à l'évolution rapide des territoires non autonomes.

20. Le Comité a estimé que les principes suivants doivent s'appliquer à la lumière des faits et des circonstances particulières à chaque cas individuel en vue de déterminer s'il y a ou non obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

B. — Les principes

I

Pour les auteurs de la Charte des Nations Unies, le Chapitre XI devait être applicable aux territoires qui étaient alors connus comme étant de type colonial. Il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements aux termes de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte à l'égard des territoires dont les populations ne s'administrent pas complètement elles-mêmes.

II

Le Chapitre XI concrétise le concept des territoires non autonomes dans un état d'évolution dynamique et de progrès vers la pleine capacité à s'administrer eux-mêmes. Aussitôt que le territoire et ses populations parviennent à cette pleine autonomie, l'obligation cesse. Jusqu'à sa réalisation, l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 subsiste.

III

L'obligation de communiquer des renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte constitue une obligation internationale qui doit être exécutée en tenant dûment compte de la loi internationale.

IV

A priori, il y a une obligation de communiquer des renseignements à l'égard d'un territoire qui est séparé géographiquement et distinct au point de vue ethnique et (ou) au point de vue culturel du pays qui l'administre.

V

Une fois qu'il a été établi a priori que les distinctions géographiques, ethniques et culturelles existent, d'autres éléments peuvent entrer en considération. Ces éléments supplémentaires peuvent être notamment d'une nature administrative, politique, juridique, économique et historique. S'ils affectent les relations entre le territoire métropolitain et le territoire envisagé de telle façon qu'ils placent arbitrairement ce dernier dans une position ou un statut diminué, ils confirment la présomption qu'il y a obligation de communiquer des renseignements aux termes de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte.

VI

On peut dire d'un territoire non autonome qu'il atteint la pleine autonomie :

- a) Par sa constitution en un Etat indépendant souverain ;
- b) Par sa libre association avec un Etat indépendant ;
- c) Par son intégration avec un autre Etat indépendant.

VII

a) La libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question, exprimé par des méthodes démocratiques et éclairées. Celle-ci doit respecter l'individualité et les caractères culturels du territoire et de ses populations et maintenir pour les populations du territoire associé à l'Etat indépendant la liberté de modifier son statut par l'expression de leur volonté par des méthodes démocratiques et par des procédures constitutionnelles.

b) Le territoire associé doit avoir le droit de déterminer sa constitution interne sans intervention extérieure conformément aux procédures constitutionnelles régulières et aux vœux librement exprimés de ses populations. Ceci n'exclut pas les consultations utiles ou nécessaires aux termes de la libre association conclue.

VIII

L'intégration à un Etat indépendant doit se faire sur la base de l'égalité complète entre les peuples du territoire antérieurement non autonome et ceux de l'Etat indépendant auquel il est intégré. Les peuples des deux territoires doivent avoir un statut et des droits de citoyenneté égaux ainsi que des garanties égales pour ce qui est des droits et libertés fondamentaux sans distinction ni discrimination ; les deux doivent avoir des droits égaux et des possibilités égales de représentation et de participation effective à tous les échelons dans les organes exécutifs, législatifs et judiciaires de l'Etat.

IX

L'intégration doit satisfaire aux conditions suivantes :

a) Le territoire intégré devra avoir atteint un stade avancé d'autonomie avec des institutions politiques libres, de telle sorte que ses populations aient la capacité de faire un choix avisé par des procédés démocratiques en pleine connaissance de cause ;

b) L'intégration doit résulter d'un choix librement exprimé par les populations du territoire pleinement au courant de la modification de leur statut, la consultation se faisant par des procédures démocratiques et largement diffusées, d'une façon impartiale et sur la base du suffrage universel des adultes. Il est admis que dans certains cas le contrôle de ces procédures par l'ONU peut être souhaitable.

X

La communication de renseignements concernant les territoires non autonomes au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 est sujette aux limitations que peuvent exiger des considérations constitutionnelles et de sécurité. Cela veut dire que la portée des renseignements peut être limitée dans certaines circonstances, mais la limitation prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 ne peut libérer un Etat Membre des obligations que lui impose le Chapitre XI. La « limitation » ne peut porter que sur le volume des renseignements d'ordre social, économique et de l'enseignement qui doivent être transmis.

XI

Les seules considérations constitutionnelles auxquelles l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 se réfère sont celles qui résultent des relations constitutionnelles entre le territoire et l'Etat Membre administrant. Elles concernent une situation dans laquelle la constitution du territoire lui donne l'autonomie dans les matières économiques, sociales et de l'enseignement au moyen d'institutions librement élues. Cependant la responsabilité de communiquer des renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 subsiste à moins que ces relations constitutionnelles empêchent le gouvernement ou le parlement de l'Etat administrant de recevoir des statistiques ou autres renseignements de nature technique concernant les conditions économiques, sociales et de l'enseignement dans le territoire.

XII

Les exigences de la sécurité n'ont pas été invoquées dans le passé. Ce n'est que dans des circonstances très exceptionnelles que des renseignements d'ordre économique, social et de l'enseignement peuvent mettre en cause la sécurité. Dans les autres circonstances, par conséquent, il n'y a aucun besoin de limiter la communication des renseignements pour des raisons de sécurité.

Adoption des principes énoncés dans le rapport du Comité spécial des Six chargé de la question de la communication de renseignements prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte (A/4526)

Bolivie, Irak, Irlande, Nigéria et Venezuela : projet de résolution

[7 novembre 1960]

L'Assemblée générale,

Considérant les objectifs énoncés au Chapitre XI de la Charte,

Tenant compte de la liste de facteurs jointe en annexe à sa résolution 742 (VIII) du 27 novembre 1953,

Ayant examiné le rapport (A/4526) du Comité spécial des Six chargé, aux termes de la résolution 1467 (XIV) de l'Assemblée générale, du 12 décembre 1959, d'étudier les principes qui doivent guider les Etats Membres pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte des Nations Unies, leur est applicable ou non et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée, lors de sa quinzième session, sur les résultats de son étude,

1. Exprime sa satisfaction des travaux du Comité spécial des Six ;

2. Approuve les principes énoncés dans la subdivision B de la section V du rapport du Comité spécial des Six ;

3. Décide que les principes qui figurent en annexe à la présente résolution devraient être appliqués, compte tenu dans chaque cas des faits et des circonstances, pour déterminer si l'obligation de communiquer des renseignements, prévue à l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte, est applicable ou non.

Communication de renseignements au titre de l'alinéa e de l'Article 73 de la Charte

Afghanistan, Birmanie, Ceylan, Ghana, Guinée, Inde, Népal et Nigéria : projet de résolution

[Texte original en anglais]
[8 novembre 1960]

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant que, par sa résolution 742 (VIII) du 27 novembre 1953, l'Assemblée générale a approuvé la liste des facteurs qui doivent servir de guide pour déterminer si un territoire est ou n'est plus visé par les dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte,

Rappelant également que des divergences de vues se sont produites entre des Etats Membres au sujet du statut de certains territoires administrés par l'Espagne et par le Portugal et dénommés par eux « provinces d'outre-mer » de l'Etat métropolitain, et que, pour mettre fin à ces divergences, l'Assemblée générale a chargé, par sa

1654 (XVI). La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

L'Assemblée générale,

Rappelant la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, contenue dans sa résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960,

Tenant compte des objectifs et des principes énoncés dans ladite déclaration, Rappelant en particulier le paragraphe 5 de la Déclaration, aux termes duquel :

"Des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires, sans aucune condition ni réserve, conformément à leur volonté et à leurs vœux librement exprimés, sans aucune distinction de race, de croyance ou de couleur, afin de leur permettre de jouir d'une indépendance et d'une liberté complètes",

Constatant avec regret qu'à quelques exceptions près il n'a pas été donné suite aux dispositions contenues dans ledit paragraphe de la Déclaration,

Prenant note du fait que, contrairement aux dispositions du paragraphe 4 de la Déclaration, des actions armées et des mesures de répression continuent à être employées dans certaines régions, d'une façon de plus en plus impitoyable, contre des populations dépendantes, les privant de leur prérogative d'exercer pacifiquement et librement leur droit à l'indépendance complète,

Constatant avec inquiétude que, contrairement aux dispositions du paragraphe 6 de la Déclaration, des actes visant à détruire partiellement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale sont encore perpétrés dans certains pays en voie de décolonisation,

Convaincue que tout nouveau retard dans l'application de la Déclaration est une source continue de conflits et de discorde sur le plan international, entrave sérieusement la coopération internationale et crée, dans de nombreuses régions du monde, une situation de plus en plus dangereuse qui peut constituer une menace à la paix et à la sécurité internationales,

Soulignant que le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance,

1. Réitère et réaffirme solennellement les objectifs et les principes énoncés par la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux, contenue dans sa résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960;

2. Demande aux Etats intéressés d'agir sans plus tarder afin d'assurer scrupuleusement l'application et la mise en œuvre de la Déclaration;

3. Décide de créer un Comité spécial de dix-sept membres qui seront désignés par le Président de l'Assemblée générale au cours de la présente session;

4. Prie le Comité spécial d'étudier l'application de la Déclaration, de formuler des suggestions et des recommandations quant aux progrès réalisés et à la mesure dans laquelle la Déclaration est mise en œuvre, et de faire rapport à l'Assemblée générale lors de sa dix-septième session;

5. Charge le Comité spécial d'accomplir sa tâche en se servant de tous les moyens dont il disposera dans le cadre des procédures et des modalités qu'il adoptera pour bien s'acquitter de ses fonctions;

6. Autorise le Comité spécial à se réunir en tout autre lieu que le Siège de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, lorsque cela pourrait être nécessaire pour lui permettre de s'acquitter efficacement de ses fonctions, en consultation avec les autorités compétentes;

7. Invite les autorités intéressées à assurer au Comité spécial leur coopération la plus complète dans l'accomplissement de ses tâches;

Déclaration du Président

1. Le PRESIDENT: L'ordre du jour de la présente séance comporte cinq questions. J'ai l'intention de soumettre à l'Assemblée les trois premières qui ne semblent devoir donner lieu à aucune discussion importante et qui nous sont renvoyées respectivement par les Cinquième, Quatrième et Sixième Commissions. Il s'agit premièrement du point 68 de l'ordre du jour relatif à la bibliothèque de l'Organisation des Nations Unies; deuxièmement, des points 13, 50 et 51, concernant le rapport du Conseil de tutelle, la diffusion, dans les territoires sous tutelle, d'informations sur l'Organisation des Nations Unies et le régime international de tutelle, et les moyens d'étude et de formation offerts par des Etats Membres aux habitants des territoires sous tutelle; troisièmement, il s'agit du point 77 de l'ordre du jour, relatif à l'augmentation du nombre des membres de la Commission du droit international. Ensuite, nous aborderons la discussion des points 73 et 72 de l'ordre du jour. Le premier a trait au maintien de la suspension des essais nucléaires et thermonucléaires et à l'obligation pour les Etats de s'abstenir de reprendre ces essais; le second a trait à la nécessité urgente d'un traité interdisant, sous contrôle international efficace, les essais d'armes nucléaires. Pour ces derniers points, la Première Commission nous a demandé un examen urgent en séance plénière. Enfin, nous aborderons le point 88 de l'ordre du jour, c'est-à-dire la question de la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. L'examen de cette question demandera sans doute un certain nombre de séances.

POINT 88 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux

85. Le PRESIDENT: Nous passons au dernier point inscrit à l'ordre du jour de notre séance d'aujourd'hui et intitulé "La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". Je rappelle aux membres de l'Assemblée que cette question doit être examinée directement en séance plénière; elle ne nous a été renvoyée par aucune commission.

86. Je rappelle également que l'Assemblée générale est saisie, jusqu'à maintenant, de deux projets de résolution: d'une part, un projet présenté par les Pays-Bas [A/L.354] et d'autre part, un projet présenté par l'Union soviétique [A/L.355].

87. Je donne la parole au représentant de la Nigéria pour une motion d'ordre.

88. M. WACHUKU (Nigéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé la parole pour une motion d'ordre, à propos du point 22 de l'ordre du jour et des sujets inscrits à l'ordre du jour sous le titre "Assistance à l'Afrique: a) Programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance", dont il a été décidé qu'ils seraient discutés directement en séance plénière.

89. A la dernière session, ce point de l'ordre du jour avait été renvoyé à la Première Commission, sous le titre "Afrique: programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance et le développement". Je me souviens qu'en cette occasion on l'a fait passer du dixième rang au deuxième rang. A la suite de plusieurs demandes, la question a finalement été discutée pendant la reprise de la quinzième session. Elle a donné lieu à un projet de résolution^{4/}, mais l'Assemblée a décidé [995ème séance] de renvoyer l'examen de cette question à la seizième session. Or, au cours de la quinzième session, l'objet du point 88 de la présente session, auquel se rapportent les deux projets de résolution que le Président a mentionnés, figurait sous le point 87, qui a été discuté directement en séance plénière. Il a donné lieu, après discussion, à la résolution 1514 (XV) du 14 décembre 1960.

90. Ce que je veux dire à ce sujet, c'est qu'on a l'intention de discuter la question qui fait l'objet du point 88 avant le point particulier dont je viens de parler, qui est inscrit à l'ordre du jour de la présente session et qui est divisé en trois parties: le point 22, a, qui doit être discuté en séance plénière; le point 22, b, qui est renvoyé à la Deuxième Commission; le point 22, c, qui est renvoyé à la Troisième Commission. Le point 22, b, est intitulé: "Assistance à l'Afrique: Développement économique de l'Afrique" et le point 22, c: "Assistance à l'Afrique: Développement de l'éducation en Afrique". On a décidé depuis qu'il serait préférable de discuter ensemble les deux points b et c à la Deuxième Commission. L'Assemblée générale, après en avoir discuté [1042ème séance], a pris une décision en ce sens.

91. Ce que je veux souligner, c'est que la question qui a fait l'objet du point a est actuellement si importante et si urgente qu'un haut rang devrait lui être attribuée car, à la dernière session, alors qu'un projet de résolution avait été rédigé et était prêt à être discuté, pour certaines raisons il a été renvoyé à la présente session. J'ai l'impression qu'à moins qu'on n'accorde à cette question un rang de faveur, il n'y a aucun espoir qu'elle soit jamais discutée à la présente session. Si nous entreprenons maintenant la discussion du point 88, nous risquons de voir les séances plénières s'y consacrer exclusivement et ce point particulier qui est d'une urgence spéciale pour l'Afrique ne sera pas discuté du tout. Nous avons déjà présenté un projet de résolution [A/L.357] qui a été distribué et je demande à l'Assemblée que ce projet qui a trait au point 22, a, reçoive priorité et soit traité séparément. Je crains que si le point 88 est mis en discussion maintenant, cela ne soit au préjudice du débat sur le projet de résolution de la délégation de la Nigéria, qui traite spécialement de la question de l'abolition des colonies en Afrique.

^{4/} Voir Documents officiels de l'Assemblée générale, quinzième session, Annexes, point 88 de l'ordre du jour, document A/4747.

92. Cela est de première importance pour nous et je demande à l'Assemblée de bien vouloir nous accorder la priorité, ainsi que le droit de discuter ce projet de résolution en tant que point séparé, tout à fait distinct de la question générale de l'abolition des colonies, ou de l'application de la résolution 1514 (XV).

93. Le PRESIDENT: Ainsi donc, l'Assemblée est saisie d'une motion d'ordre présentée par la délégation de la Nigéria, tendant à examiner en priorité le point 22, a, de l'ordre du jour intitulé "Assistance à l'Afrique: programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance". Je donne la parole au représentant de la Pologne pour une motion d'ordre.

94. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) [traduit de l'anglais]: Il semble que nous soyons tous d'accord sur la nécessité d'appliquer la résolution [1514 (XV)] adoptée l'an dernier à l'unanimité par l'Assemblée générale et l'application de cette résolution semble à notre délégation l'une des tâches les plus importantes que l'Assemblée ait à remplir. Certes, nous savons, comme le représentant de la Nigéria l'a rappelé il y a quelques instants, que l'ordre du jour de la présente session contient également une question importante ayant trait à l'assistance à l'Afrique. Le représentant de la Nigéria a fait ressortir que cette question était divisée en deux parties, l'une devant être discutée directement par l'Assemblée générale et l'autre étant renvoyée à la Deuxième Commission. Cette répartition n'a pas été faite sans de bonnes raisons. La question d'un programme pour l'indépendance a été séparée des autres aspects du problème de l'assistance à l'Afrique et est discutée directement en séance plénière, premièrement parce que c'est une question d'une importance spéciale, et deuxièmement parce qu'elle est étroitement liée à celle de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux.

95. Les Etats africains ont fait la même distinction entre les différents aspects du problème, à la quinzième session, lors de la discussion de la question intitulée: "Afrique: programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance et le développement". Je signalerai que dans un projet de résolution présenté à la Première Commission^{5/} les auteurs ont invoqué la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance. En outre, dans le même document, les auteurs demandaient à tous les Etats qui ont la responsabilité de l'administration de territoires africains d'appliquer la Déclaration. En d'autres termes, les Etats africains eux-mêmes ont décidé de reconnaître la Déclaration en tant que point de départ du programme d'indépendance et d'assistance à l'Afrique. Cela n'est que naturel si on considère la part importante et même historique qu'ils ont eux-mêmes prise à la préparation et à l'adoption de cette même déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance. La Pologne apprécie vivement cette contribution extrêmement importante et efficace des Etats africains. Elle n'apprécie pas moins leurs efforts constructifs en vue de résoudre de nombreux autres problèmes auxquels les Nations Unies doivent faire face.

96. Les Etats africains, nous en sommes convaincus, estiment comme nous que cette déclaration est d'une portée universelle et qu'elle n'est aucunement limitée à telle ou telle région du monde. En fait, la Déclaration dit que des mesures immédiates seront prises, dans les territoires sous tutelle, les territoires non autonomes et tous autres territoires qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance, pour transférer tous pouvoirs aux peuples de ces territoires.

97. Ce n'est un secret pour personne que certains vestiges du colonialisme continuent d'exister aussi en Amérique latine, en Asie et dans la région du Pacifique. Je prétends que les problèmes de la Guyane britannique, de Goa ou du Honduras britannique ne sont pas moins graves que ceux de la Rhodésie ou du Mozambique. Il est donc nécessaire d'élaborer des règles uniformes pour l'application de la Déclaration afin de déraciner le colonialisme où qu'il subsiste encore.

98. Nous pourrions peut-être rechercher sur cette base une solution des problèmes propres à l'Afrique et, sur ce point, je suis en complet désaccord avec le représentant de la Nigéria lorsqu'il dit que cela ne peut pas être fait cette année. C'est pourquoi nous estimons justifié d'examiner conjointement le point 88 intitulé: "La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" et le point 22, a, qui a trait à un programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance en Afrique. Notre intention n'est pas simplement de gagner du temps.

99. La préparation d'un programme pour l'indépendance en Afrique doit découler directement d'une décision sur l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux. Il n'est peut-être pas inutile de rappeler que si la Quatrième Commission a décidé de renvoyer toute décision sur les problèmes fondamentaux concernant l'avenir des territoires sous tutelle et non autonomes, y compris les territoires d'Afrique, c'est parce qu'aucune résolution relative à l'application de la Déclaration n'a été adoptée. La Quatrième Commission, chargée de tous les problèmes concernant les territoires non autonomes, attend que nous réglions aussitôt que possible la question de l'application de la Déclaration anticolonialiste, car cela fournira une base pour régler toutes les questions que pose la liquidation du colonialisme ainsi que les questions dont s'occupe la Quatrième Commission. C'est pourquoi la délégation polonaise, bien qu'elle considère invariablement les problèmes de l'Afrique avec sympathie et compréhension, est d'avis qu'il faut donner la priorité au point 88, qui a trait à l'application de la Déclaration et qui est inscrit à l'ordre du jour de la séance plénière. Mais si l'Assemblée était d'un avis contraire, nous proposerions, et, si le moment est venu de le faire, je propose dès maintenant, que nous discussions le point 88 déjà inscrit à l'ordre du jour de la présente séance, en même temps que le point 22, a, dont le représentant de la Nigéria vient de parler.

100. M. WACHUKU (Nigéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Comme l'Assemblée le sait, je n'ai jamais manqué d'exprimer ma reconnaissance aux grandes et aux petites puissances lorsqu'elles ont fait quelque chose dans l'intérêt du bien-être de l'Afrique et je reste reconnaissant aux grandes puissances qui ont pensé à deux points de l'ordre du jour. L'Union soviétique a demandé l'inscription à l'ordre du jour de la quinzième session de la question relative à la Déclaration concernant l'abolition des colonies, et les Etats-Unis ont demandé l'inscription de l'autre question relative à un programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance et le développement en Afrique; l'Assemblée a inscrit ces deux questions à son ordre du jour.

101. L'Assemblée est maintenant saisie, à propos du point 22, a, d'un projet de résolution [A/L.357] présenté par la Nigéria. On doit reconnaître que nous avons quelque connaissance des questions africaines. Nous sommes des spécialistes de tout ce qui concerne l'Afrique, car nous connaissons notre propre milieu, et j'ai déjà dit et répété ici que la Nigéria ne veut pas que l'Afrique soit entraînée dans la guerre froide.

102. Si la suggestion du représentant de la Pologne est acceptée et si le point 22, a, est jumelé avec le point 88, je puis vous assurer que nous allons être entraînés dans la guerre froide. Deux projets de résolution ont été présentés au titre du point 88: l'un [A/L.355] par la délégation de l'Union soviétique, l'autre [A/L.354] par la délégation des Pays-Bas. Des documents ont déjà été distribués au sujet du projet de résolution des Pays-Bas. Il existe une controverse entre les Pays-Bas et l'Indonésie. Si les deux projets de résolution sont examinés, une querelle interminable s'élèvera à leur sujet. Or, nous ne pouvons pas attendre.

103. Je demande donc à l'Assemblée, avec tout le respect que j'ai pour le représentant de la Pologne, de passer outre à la demande tendant à lier le point 22, a, et le point 88 dans la discussion. Je sais qu'il y a un lien entre ces deux questions, je ne le nie pas, mais nous ne pouvons accepter l'idée que tous les problèmes relatifs aux diverses régions coloniales seraient identiques: ils ne le sont pas; chaque région a ses propres problèmes, ses propres difficultés, ses propres épreuves et tribulations. En Afrique, le tableau n'est pas le même qu'ailleurs. Nous sommes tout disposés à collaborer avec les autres peuples dans leurs régions respectives.

104. Nous avons eu une déclaration de caractère général et nous sommes maintenant saisis d'une déclaration précise qui résulte nécessairement du point 22, a. Dans le projet de résolution présenté par la Nigéria, il est question d'une déclaration précise applicable à l'ensemble des territoires africains. Si on demande une autre déclaration au sujet d'un autre territoire se trouvant dans cette région du monde, la délégation de la Nigéria est toute disposée à l'appuyer. Nous ne voulons pas être entraînés dans une querelle verbale et, par conséquent, avec toute la force dont je dispose, je demande instamment à l'Assemblée, au nom de ma délégation, d'examiner à part le projet de résolution relatif à l'Afrique.

105. Il s'agit d'une des séries de questions qui résulteront probablement du principe généralement accepté selon lequel les territoires coloniaux doivent maintenant conquérir leur indépendance. Je ne voudrais pas que le représentant de la Pologne passe outre à l'opinion mûrement réfléchie de la délégation de la Nigéria. Il s'agit d'un continent où nous sommes chez nous; nous connaissons très exactement la psychologie de notre propre région et nous pouvons parler objectivement au nom de l'Afrique, plus peut-être que quiconque. J'espère vivement que ce projet de résolution sera accepté en tant que base de discussion et nous comptons bien sur le ferme concours de tous les pays amis qui veulent réellement nous aider. Il s'agit d'un programme d'assistance à l'Afrique. C'est maintenant que ceux de nos amis qui veulent réellement donner assistance à l'Afrique doivent collaborer avec nous pour la réalisation de ce grand plan d'une déclaration spéciale réclamant l'octroi de la complète indépendance à l'Afrique dans un délai déterminé.

106. Nous avons déjà bien préparé le terrain en ce qui concerne ceux qui ont entre leurs mains le destin de territoires de l'Afrique et je suis absolument certain que si nous y apportons tous nos soins nous avons toutes chances de réussir en ce qui concerne ces puissances. Je ne veux pas qu'un accident quelconque risque maintenant de compromettre ce succès. Je ne veux pas que nous soyons entraînés dans une guerre verbale. Telles sont les raisons pour lesquelles je demande au représentant de la Pologne de bien vouloir retirer sa proposition tendant à jumeler le point 88 avec le point 22, a, et de prêter une oreille attentive à ma requête. J'espère sincèrement que les pays africains m'appuieront lorsque je soutiens que les problèmes africains doivent être considérés comme un point séparé de l'ordre du jour et que tous les pays amis — et nous savons que l'Afrique a des amis dans toutes les délégations — nous appuieront lorsque nous proposons que ce point de l'ordre du jour soit discuté séparément afin que l'Assemblée puisse voter, au cours de la présente session, une déclaration sur l'abolition des colonies en Afrique.

107. M. GEBRE-EGZY (Ethiopie) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'appuie la demande du représentant de la Nigéria. La question est vraiment très simple.

108. La question que nous voulons voir discutée en premier nous vient de la Première Commission. L'an dernier, cette question a été discutée à la Première Commission et elle a donné lieu à un projet de résolution. A la fin de la session, faute de temps, nous nous sommes inclinés devant la majorité des membres de la Première Commission qui étaient d'avis de ne pas adopter alors une résolution sur la question. Nous demandons maintenant que l'Assemblée agisse équitablement, discute la question qui nous intéresse et se prononce à son sujet. C'est la seule question qui se pose pour le moment.

109. Nous ne nous opposons pas à la discussion de la question relative à la liquidation du colonialisme; nous avons voté en faveur de cette question. Nous travaillons à un projet de résolution à propos duquel nous avons des consultations avec de nombreuses délégations et nous pensons que l'Assemblée pourra l'adopter. Il n'y a vraiment ni opposition ni conflit entre les deux questions, mais la nôtre ayant été présentée la première nous désirons qu'elle soit discutée la première et qu'une décision soit prise. A notre avis, il ne serait pas équitable que notre question ait été pesée ici, discutée à la Première Commission, ajournée à un an, puis reléguée par l'Assemblée en fin de liste. Il s'agit simplement de discuter une question qui l'a déjà été l'an dernier et sur laquelle une décision définitive n'est pas intervenue. C'est pourquoi j'appuie la demande du représentant de la Nigéria et j'espère que toute l'Assemblée s'y ralliera maintenant.

110. M. WINIEWICZ (Pologne) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je ne puis dire combien je déplore d'être en désaccord avec les représentants de la Nigéria et de l'Ethiopie, et d'être engagé avec eux dans un débat de procédure.

111. Je désire simplement souligner qu'en proposant la discussion simultanée des deux questions, nous avons obéi à des considérations très importantes touchant la meilleure procédure à adopter pour notre débat. Je désire vivement que le représentant de la Nigéria sache que je ne puis accepter l'idée qu'une discussion sur l'application de la Déclaration anti-colonialiste adoptée l'an dernier constituerait une manœuvre de guerre froide. C'est une question qui engage l'avenir. Elle n'intéresse pas seulement le continent africain, mais aussi toutes les colonies qui existent encore en Asie ou en Amérique latine. Je ne puis accepter l'idée qu'il y aurait une manifestation de guerre froide, car je me rappelle que, parmi les auteurs de la Déclaration adoptée ici en décembre de l'an dernier, il y avait des Etats africains et des Etats asiatiques. Je ne pense pas que l'on puisse dire que les délégations de ces Etats proposaient un projet de résolution qui avait trait, si peu que ce fût, à la guerre froide.

112. Je ne puis retirer ma motion parce que je la considère comme raisonnable. Nous pouvons discuter les deux questions ensemble. Etant donné que je considère ma suggestion comme une sorte d'amendement à la proposition du représentant de la Nigéria, je demanderai au Président de bien vouloir la mettre aux voix en premier.

113. M. WACHUKU (Nigéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je remercie le Président de me donner la permission de répondre à cette dernière observation.

114. Quiconque a regardé la carte du monde et des régions où sont situées les diverses colonies, en particulier dans l'océan Pacifique, peut être certain que lorsque le point 88 viendra en discussion de nombreuses controverses seront soulevées. Quiconque a participé à la rédaction finale du dernier projet de résolution, comme je l'ai fait, sait que de nombreux éléments ont été supprimés du texte primitif pour parvenir à la version définitive. Quiconque est familier avec la procédure des débats de l'Assemblée sait aussi que les orateurs qui interviendront à propos du projet de résolution relatif au point 88 reprendront de nombreux éléments qui ont été éliminés du texte primitif pour aboutir au projet de résolution que nous allons maintenant discuter. A coup sûr, dès que certains aspects de la question seront évoqués, des réponses jailliront de tous les côtés intéressés. Ainsi, lorsque nous commencerons à échanger entre nous des répliques qui feront ressembler notre débat à une partie de ping-pong, le projet de résolution intéressant l'Afrique se trouvera relégué à l'arrière-plan et risquera de ne pas être examiné avant janvier peut-être, voire plus tard; peut-être même subira-t-il le même sort qu'à la quinzième session. C'est ce que je veux éviter.

115. Aucun point de l'ordre du jour, en lui-même ou du fait de son titre, n'évoque la guerre froide. C'est la manière dont il est traité qui lui donne cette coloration. Toute question discutée par l'Assemblée peut l'être dans un esprit pacifique, si le débat demeure objectif et si on n'essaie pas d'en faire un sujet de guerre froide, mais toute question peut être transformée en une question de guerre froide. Pour ce qui est de la scène africaine, la situation est si claire qu'il ne peut y avoir aucune difficulté. Le représentant de la Pologne a parlé de territoires coloniaux en Amérique latine. Je n'en ai pas moi-même soufflé mot, car je ne vois pas le rapport qu'il pourrait y avoir entre l'Amérique latine et le projet de résolution que la Nigéria a présenté au titre du point 22, a, de l'ordre du jour.

116. Cela dit, je suis certain qu'au moment où le débat s'engagera sur le point 88 il se trouvera quelqu'un pour parler du colonialisme en Amérique latine, ou dans le Pacifique, ou peut-être pour parler du canal de Panama et d'autre chose encore, et je sais très bien ce qui se passera. C'est pourquoi j'implore l'Assemblée — que nous votions maintenant ou plus tard, à son gré —, mais il ne doit y avoir aucun doute que ce que nous voulons, c'est que le projet de résolution sur l'Afrique soit examiné isolément et non pas en relation avec un aspect quelconque de la question faisant l'objet du point 88. Il est certain que les deux questions sont très étroitement liées. Elles concernent toutes deux le colonialisme. Mais accordez-nous votre assistance. Il s'agit de l'assistance à l'Afrique. Il s'agit de l'assistance politique à l'Afrique. La question est celle de l'indépendance de tout le continent africain. Il s'agit d'une assistance à nous prêter. C'est le mot "assistance" qui est le mot clef. Il ne s'agit pas d'une déclaration générale. Nous en avons déjà une. Il s'agit d'une assistance à l'Afrique en particulier. Je demande à tous de nous donner assistance pour que ce sujet soit examiné en tant que programme précis et distinct, afin que nous puissions avoir une déclaration et que nous entreprenions un programme particulier. Lorsqu'il s'agira de l'assistance à l'Amérique latine et aux territoires coloniaux, nous agirons en conséquence. Si l'on nous demande de prêter assistance à une autre région, nous prêterons cette assistance. Telle est la distinction que je tiens à faire ici. Nous demandons nettement que l'on prête assistance à l'Afrique et je suis sûr que les représentants nous prêteront l'assistance dont nous avons besoin.

117. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée est donc saisie d'une proposition de la Nigéria destinée à donner la priorité au point 22, a, de l'ordre du jour, intitulé "Assistance à l'Afrique: Programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance".

118. Le représentant de la Pologne a proposé un amendement visant à ce que le point 22 soit discuté en même temps que le point 88 de l'ordre du jour intitulé "La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux". Telles sont les deux propositions dont nous sommes saisis.

119. M. DIALLO (Guinée): La délégation de la République de Guinée a écouté avec tout l'intérêt qu'elle mérite la demande de priorité formulée par le représentant de la Nigéria. Ma délégation tient tout d'abord à dire combien elle est surprise qu'une question de priorité intéressant un problème de cette importance n'ait été portée à notre connaissance qu'en séance de l'Assemblée générale. En effet, dans le cadre de notre groupe de travail — le groupe africain —, nous sommes en contact avec la délégation de la Nigéria sur ce point précis et nous avons eu, pas plus tard que le 3 novembre 1961, des discussions à ce sujet. Le président de notre groupe pour le mois de novembre, le représentant de Madagascar, vient de nous informer à l'instant qu'une réunion du groupe africain est prévue pour ce soir à 18 heures; au cours de cette réunion le représentant de la Nigéria nous parlera de ce problème.

120. C'est en tenant compte de ce fait, et étant donné qu'il est capital, à nos yeux, que toutes les délégations africaines s'entendent sur ce point, que la délégation de la Guinée voudrait lancer un appel au représentant de la Nigéria pour que sa demande de priorité ne soit pas mise aux voix au cours de la séance actuelle, pour permettre au groupe africain de discuter la question. Nous avons des raisons de fond pour nous opposer à cette priorité et nous les évoquerons si nous y sommes contraints. Mais nous préférons, pour l'instant, lancer simplement un appel au représentant de la Nigéria pour que ne soient pas étalées à cette tribune des divergences africaines sur des questions essentielles et vitales pour l'émancipation de notre continent.

121. C'est pour cette raison que nous demandons au représentant de la Nigéria et aux membres de l'Assemblée de surseoir à toute décision jusqu'à ce que le groupe africain ait pu se réunir. Si cet appel n'était pas entendu, je demanderais à reprendre la parole pour exposer mes raisons de fond.

122. M. QUAISON-SACKY (Ghana) [traduit de l'anglais]: La délégation du Ghana juge assez malencontreux qu'un désaccord quelconque ait pu s'élever sur la question du colonialisme. Pour nous, le colonialisme, où qu'il se manifeste, est un phénomène inquiétant. Il est vrai que l'Afrique est le seul continent où l'on trouve encore de nombreux territoires coloniaux; aucun autre continent n'en compte autant, nous semble-t-il. Voilà pourquoi nous estimons que la question de l'Afrique dont nous avons appuyé, au Bureau [138ème séance] l'inscription à l'ordre du jour et dont nous avons demandé qu'elle soit discutée directement en séance plénière, revêt une grande importance. Cependant, comme l'a dit le représentant de la Guinée, il serait regrettable qu'il y ait un éparpillement des voix ou un différend causé par la divergence de vues entre les représentants de la Nigéria et de la Pologne.

123. Je viens d'être informé que le groupe africain tiendra une réunion à 18 heures. Il est maintenant 17 h 30 et je dépose donc une motion d'ajournement, en sorte que le groupe africain puisse se concerter et que nous puissions prendre définitivement position demain, ou lorsque le Président l'estimera à propos.

124. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée est saisie d'une motion d'ajournement de la séance, soumise par le représentant du Ghana. Avant de la mettre aux voix, je tiens à préciser que le règlement intérieur ne prévoit pas de motion d'ajournement pour permettre à tel ou tel ensemble de délégations de se prononcer, étant donné que jusqu'à présent il n'y a pas, à l'Assemblée générale, de groupes reconnus comme tels.

125. Quoi qu'il en soit, nous sommes saisis d'une motion d'ajournement de la séance, que je mets immédiatement aux voix.

Par 78 voix contre zéro, avec 17 abstentions, la motion est adoptée.

La séance est levée à 17 h 35.

Décision concernant la procédure

1. M. RAKOTOMALALA (Madagascar): J'ai demandé la parole pour faire une brève déclaration au nom des 27 délégations des Etats africains. Ces délégations, soucieuses de contribuer à activer les travaux de notre assemblée, et désireuses également de montrer leur cohésion et leur solidarité lorsqu'il s'agit de problèmes aussi vitaux pour le monde et pour l'Afrique que ceux faisant l'objet des points 88 et 22 de l'ordre du jour, proposent que ces points fassent l'objet d'une discussion commune et, partant, d'un débat général unique.

2. Ces 27 délégations comprennent, bien entendu, la Nigéria, dont l'Assemblée connaît et apprécie l'ardent dévouement à la cause de la liberté dans le monde et à la défense de l'Afrique. De ce fait, je suis autorisé à déclarer que la demande de priorité qui a été présentée par la délégation nigérienne est retirée.

3. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée est saisie d'une proposition de compromis tendant à faire discuter le point 88 de l'ordre du jour intitulé "La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux" conjointement avec le point 22 de l'ordre du jour intitulé "Assistance à l'Afrique: a) Programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance".

4. La présidence constate qu'aucune délégation ne soulève d'objection à la proposition du représentant de Madagascar et considère que cette proposition est adoptée par l'Assemblée.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

POINTS 88 ET 22 DE L'ORDRE DU JOUR

La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux (suite)

Assistance à l'Afrique:

a) Programme des Nations Unies pour l'indépendance

5. Le PRESIDENT: L'Assemblée va donc commencer la discussion commune des points 88 et 22 de l'ordre du jour. Nous discuterons les projets de résolution lorsque le débat sur les points eux-mêmes sera terminé. Il va de soi que chaque délégation pourra parler sur l'une ou l'autre de ces deux questions, ou sur les deux points à la fois, au moment où nous abordons le débat général, je voudrais attirer l'attention des membres de l'Assemblée sur le fait que d'importantes questions sont inscrites à notre ordre du jour et que nous devons essayer de mener nos travaux à bonne fin. Je lance donc un appel à toutes les délégations qui veulent participer à la discussion sur les points 88 et 22, a, de l'ordre du jour pour qu'elles se fassent inscrire le plus rapidement possible et soient prêtes à prendre la parole dans l'ordre de leur inscription. Je propose à ce sujet, sauf objection de la part de l'Assemblée, de clore la liste des orateurs pour le débat général sur ces deux questions le jeudi 9 novembre à 18 heures.

6. M. Henry Ford COOPER (Libéria) [traduit de l'anglais]: Je suis toujours au regret lorsque je ne partage pas les vues du Président; tel est le cas en ce moment: je demande au Président de ne clore la liste des orateurs que le vendredi 10 novembre. Il s'agit d'une question très importante pour les Etats africains, qui continuent à tenir des réunions sur cette question. Je vous demande donc instamment, Monsieur le Président, de ne clore la liste des orateurs que vendredi, au lieu de jeudi.

7. Le PRESIDENT: Compte tenu des observations formulées par le représentant du Libéria, la présidence ne voit aucun inconvénient à clore la liste des orateurs, pour le débat de ces deux questions, le vendredi 10 novembre à 18 heures.

Il en est ainsi décidé.

8. M. LAPINE (Union des Républiques socialistes soviétiques) [traduit du russe]: Nous sommes heureux que le groupe africano-asiatique ait décidé de discuter en même temps les deux questions qui figurent à l'ordre du jour. En effet, elles sont étroitement liées.

9. Il y a un an exactement, à la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale [869^e séance], M. N. S. Khrouchchev, chef du Gouvernement soviétique, lançait un appel à tous les Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, pour qu'ils adoptent sans tarder une décision sur la liquidation complète et immédiate du système colonial.

"... rien ne peut arrêter la lutte des peuples pour leur libération, car c'est là un grand processus historique et irréversible qui se manifeste avec une force toujours croissante" [par. 172].

"L'histoire, toute l'évolution économique et politique du monde condamnent inexorablement l'anachronique et honteux régime colonial." [Par. 220.]

10. L'Union soviétique a toujours été et reste fidèle à sa politique de paix et de soutien de la lutte que les peuples asservis mènent pour leur indépendance nationale. Cette politique a été proclamée pour la première fois par le fondateur de l'Etat soviétique, V. I. Lénine, et elle a été constamment appliquée par le Gouvernement soviétique depuis l'instauration du pouvoir des Soviets, c'est-à-dire depuis 44 ans.

11. Je suis heureux de le mentionner le jour même où dans mon pays et dans le monde entier se célèbre le quarante-quatrième anniversaire de la grande révolution socialiste d'Octobre.

12. Cette politique de paix et de soutien de la lutte des peuples asservis a été récemment réaffirmée au cours du vingt-deuxième congrès du parti communiste de l'Union soviétique, parti qui compte 10 millions de membres. Dans son nouveau programme, qui a été approuvé par tout le peuple soviétique, le parti communiste de l'Union soviétique affirme qu'il a l'obligation internationale d'aider tous les peuples qui cherchent à obtenir et à consolider leur indépendance nationale et qui combattent pour la suppression totale du régime colonial.

13. Le peuple soviétique a gagné sa liberté au prix d'une lutte longue et opiniâtre contre le joug des grands propriétaires et des capitalistes et contre les interventions de l'impérialisme international. Les citoyens soviétiques, qui ont tant souffert eux-mêmes, suivent avec une sympathie sincère la lutte pour la libération des peuples coloniaux; ils appuient activement leur juste combat et sont convaincus que l'aube de la liberté et du bonheur doit maintenant poindre pour tous les peuples qui se trouvent encore sous la dépendance coloniale.

14. Les personnes ici présentes se rappellent les discussions passionnées et orageuses qui ont eu lieu, aux séances de l'Assemblée générale et hors des Nations Unies, à la suite de la proposition du Gouvernement soviétique sur la liquidation immédiate et complète du colonialisme. Les joutes oratoires qui ont marqué la session de l'ONU sont sans précédent dans l'histoire des organisations internationales. Les représentants des puissances coloniales ne voulaient pas accepter une intervention lourde de conséquences de l'Organisation des Nations Unies dans les affaires coloniales, qu'ils ont pris l'habitude de considérer comme relevant de leur compétence nationale. Ils ont accusé l'Union soviétique d'envenimer artificiellement les antagonismes internationaux. On a même tenté de prouver à cette même tribune que, depuis de longues années, les puissances coloniales n'avaient pas d'autre souci que prendre soin des peuples opprimés, et on nous a parlé de "mission civilisatrice", des "bienfaits" des puissances coloniales, etc.

15. Mais les défenseurs du colonialisme ont été couverts de honte. La discussion qui s'est déroulée devant l'Assemblée a arraché leur masque aux colonisateurs et a montré le vrai visage de ceux qui, pendant de longues années, ont asservi et pillé les peuples coloniaux et ont voué des millions d'êtres humains à la misère, à la faim et à la mort pour assurer les profits des monopoles impérialistes.

16. Vous vous rappelez avec quel acharnement les puissances coloniales se sont opposées à l'adoption de la Déclaration [résolution 1514 (XV)] qui a été proposée d'abord par l'Union soviétique et, ensuite, par un groupe de 43 Etats indépendants d'Asie et d'Afrique. Et ce ne fut que par crainte de se trouver totallement isolés que les représentants des puissances coloniales ont été contraints de modifier leur tactique. Finalement, ils ont retiré leurs objections contre la discussion de la question coloniale en séance plénière, et ils se sont ensuite abstenus lors du vote de la Déclaration. Ils ne l'ont fait que lorsqu'ils ont été convaincus qu'ils n'étaient pas en mesure d'empêcher l'adoption de la résolution proclamant la nécessité de mettre fin au régime colonial.

17. L'adoption de la Déclaration par l'Assemblée générale a donné en quelque sorte une forme juridique aux demandes légitimes des peuples qui luttent pour leur indépendance nationale. Les guerres coloniales, la terreur et les mesures de répression exercées contre les combattants des mouvements de libération, les tentatives visant à démembrer les nouveaux Etats et à saper leur souveraineté, ne peuvent être considérées autrement que comme des violations flagrantes du droit international, comme des crimes contre l'humanité et comme un défi évident lancé à l'Organisation des Nations Unies.

18. La Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme a reçu l'approbation des peuples, car la suppression du régime colonial écarte l'une des causes de guerre les plus dangereuses et contribue par là-même à améliorer la situation internationale et à consolider la paix et la sécurité entre Etats.

19. Cette déclaration a marqué le début de la dernière étape de la lutte pour la libération des peuples et elle représente un grand succès pour tous les peuples épris de liberté. Il y a une dizaine d'années, les colonisateurs n'imaginaient même pas qu'il leur faudrait, et très rapidement, dire adieu, non seulement à une ou à quelques-unes, mais à toutes leurs colonies. L'adoption de la Déclaration a démontré la force et l'influence croissantes des Etats pacifiques et elle a prouvé au monde entier que lorsque ces Etats s'unissent pour défendre une cause juste et forment un front unique, ils peuvent obliger l'Organisation des Nations Unies à servir les véritables intérêts de la paix et la cause de la libération des peuples du colonialisme.

20. L'année qui vient de s'écouler a été une période de lutte intense des peuples pour leur libération, et cette lutte a porté de nouveaux fruits. A la présente session, nous avons admis comme Membre de l'Organisation des Nations Unies le jeune Etat africain du Sierra Leone. On peut noter également avec satisfaction la fin du régime de tutelle au Cameroun britannique ainsi que la proclamation prochaine de l'indépendance du Tanganyika, du Samoa-Occidental et de l'Ouganda.

21. A propos de l'octroi de l'indépendance à ces pays, on a pu entendre des remarques sur la "bonne volonté" des colonisateurs. On a tenté de présenter la création des nouveaux Etats comme une manifestation de la générosité des puissances coloniales. Ces déclarations hypocrites ne peuvent tromper personne. Les peuples ont une assez bonne idée de la "générosité" des colonisateurs au vu des événements d'Algérie, d'Angola, du Sud-Ouest africain, du Kenya et de nombreuses autres régions où coule le sang des patriotes qui luttent pour la liberté et l'indépendance.

22. Les nouveaux pays dont nous avons tous salué les représentants à la dernière session ont aussi gagné leur liberté au prix d'une lutte très dure qui leur a coûté d'innombrables victimes et de pénibles privations.

23. Si l'on ne prend pas les mesures les plus urgentes, le colonialisme peut encore causer beaucoup de nouvelles souffrances et faire d'autres victimes, entraîner la mort de millions d'êtres humains et susciter des conflits armés et des guerres, menaçant ainsi la paix et la sécurité internationales. Les puissances coloniales continuent à résister obstinément au puissant mouvement de libération des peuples. C'est pourquoi il est significatif que l'Assemblée générale ait décidé à sa présente session, sur proposition de l'Union soviétique, d'examiner la façon dont la Déclaration est appliquée et les mesures qu'il y a encore lieu de prendre pour accélérer la liquidation complète du régime colonial.

24. Ainsi que vous vous le rappelez, la Déclaration proclame solennellement que tous les peuples ont le droit de libre détermination et qu'en vertu de ce droit ils déterminent librement leur statut politique et poursuivent librement leur développement économique, social et culturel. En outre, elle se fonde sur un principe équitable, à savoir que le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social ou dans celui de l'enseignement ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance. Cependant, les colonisateurs se livrent encore à diverses manœuvres et inventent toutes sortes de prétextes pour retarder l'octroi aux peuples colonisés du droit à l'autodétermination et à l'indépendance et pour freiner leur développement politique et économique.

25. Au cours de la discussion générale, à la présente session, certains représentants des puissances coloniales ont essayé de créer l'impression que le problème colonial aurait perdu de son acuité. Des déclarations d'apaisement ont été faites du haut de cette tribune; on nous a dit que le nombre actuel des habitants des territoires non autonomes constitue moins de 2 p. 100 de la population du monde. Mais que signifie ce chiffre de 2 p. 100? Cela représente plus de 70 millions d'êtres humains qui subiront encore la domination coloniale au 1er janvier 1962! Il s'agit de 88 territoires non autonomes. Sur ce nombre, 35 territoires, qui comptent 34 millions d'habitants, sont encore des colonies anglaises; 11 territoires, avec une population de 12 millions d'habitants, sont des colonies françaises; 8 territoires, avec 13 millions d'habitants, sont des colonies portugaises; 12 territoires appartiennent aux Etats-Unis, 5 à l'Espagne, 2 aux Pays-Bas, etc. Peut-on tolérer que 27 territoires coloniaux ou sous tutelle existent encore sur le grand continent africain et que plus de 50 millions d'Africains y vivent sous le joug colonial le plus cruel? On ne saurait non plus oublier que 16 territoires coloniaux comptant près de 10 millions d'habitants existent encore en Asie, qu'en Amérique il y a 17 colonies peuplées de 7 millions d'habitants, etc.

26. La Déclaration proclame la nécessité de mettre fin à toutes les actions armées et mesures de répression dirigées contre les peuples dépendants. Cependant, les puissances coloniales n'en tiennent pas compte.

27. Le colonialisme agonise. Cependant, comme un fauve gravement atteint, il résiste désespérément et cette résistance s'accompagne de crimes monstrueux contre l'humanité. Les guerres coloniales continuent à causer la mort de centaines de milliers d'individus; le racisme et l'arbitraire policier se déchaînent dans les colonies et les territoires sous tutelle. Il est évident que les déclarations hypocrites sur la "bonne volonté" des colonisateurs ne sauraient aucunement masquer ces faits flagrants.

28. L'Assemblée générale doit se rendre compte exactement de ce qui se passe en Angola. Les colonisateurs portugais y mènent depuis deux ans déjà une guerre ouverte contre une population sans défense. Ils détruisent des villages entiers, des régions entières, et laissent derrière eux des incendies et des cendres. Plusieurs milliers d'Angolais ont été obligés de quitter leur patrie et de chercher refuge dans d'autres pays.

29. L'Organisation des Nations Unies dispose d'un nombre suffisant de témoignages autorisés qui prouvent que les bandes armées portugaises ont exterminé en Angola plus de 50 000 femmes, vieillards et enfants sans défense. Des documents effrayants — les photographies de patriotes angolais atrocement torturés — ont été présentés récemment à la Quatrième Commission. Les colonisateurs portugais ne jugent même pas nécessaire de dissimuler l'extermination en masse de la population autochtone. Le journal anglais Daily Mirror écrivait au mois de mai de cette année: "Ils se vantent maintenant publiquement de leur intention de tuer encore 100 000 Angolais". Et l'agence Reuter a communiqué de Lisbonne que le nouveau gouverneur de l'Angola, De Slandez, avait déclaré: "La seule alternative que nous leur offrons (c'est-à-dire aux patriotes angolais), c'est la capitulation librement consentie ou l'extermination".

30. Et tous ces événements ont lieu à notre époque, à un moment où les représentants des puissances coloniales nous parlent ici, aux Nations Unies, des nobles principes du "monde libre" et même de leur générosité à l'égard des peuples opprimés!

31. Il convient d'ajouter que la situation dans d'autres colonies portugaises, telles que le Mozambique et la Guinée portugaise, n'est pas meilleure qu'en Angola; le racisme y règne, la traite des esclaves existe encore et la population sans défense est exterminée.

32. On ne saurait parler sans tristesse et sans colère d'une date qui a été tout récemment marquée dans le monde entier: sept années se sont écoulées depuis le début de la guerre coloniale en Algérie. Près de 800 000 Algériens ont péri pendant cette période de guerre; plus de 200 000 patriotes ont été jetés en prison, près d'un million d'autochtones ont été enfermés de force dans des camps de concentration que l'on appelle des "camps de regroupement". Plus de 300 000 personnes ont été obligées de quitter leur patrie pour fuir les persécutions. Il n'existe pas de village algérien où les expéditions punitives n'aient pas laissé de traces sanglantes, ni de famille algérienne qui n'ait pas souffert du fait des colonisateurs.

33. La guerre d'Algérie n'a valu et ne pourra valoir aucun succès aux colonisateurs. Malgré sa supériorité militaire et économique et l'assistance de ses alliés de l'OTAN, la France n'est pas en mesure de briser la résistance du peuple algérien qui, aux prises avec les difficultés causées par la guerre et par la terreur, a pu créer son gouvernement et s'unir contre l'opresseur.

34. Depuis que la guerre d'Algérie est commencée, l'Assemblée générale s'est réunie sept fois et chaque fois, ici, dans cette salle, on a entendu des appels pour faire cesser la guerre criminelle contre le peuple algérien. Jusqu'à quand la France et ses alliés militaires méconnaîtront-ils l'opinion de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, sa charte et ses décisions?

35. Les activités auxquelles se livrent les colonisateurs dans la République du Congo continuent à susciter de graves inquiétudes. Les puissances coloniales ne peuvent nullement se faire à l'idée que le peuple congolais défend son indépendance et l'intégrité territoriale de son jeune Etat en dépit de toutes les difficultés et de tous les obstacles.

36. Le Gouvernement national qui a été constitué dans la République du Congo a déclaré qu'il se considérait comme le successeur du premier gouvernement légitime de Patrice Lumumba, homme d'Etat éminent et héros national qui a été tué par les colonisateurs et par leurs mercenaires. Mais les colonisateurs poursuivent leurs manœuvres douteuses au Congo. Les résolutions du Conseil de sécurité et de l'Assemblée générale concernant ce pays sont restées jusqu'à présent lettre morte et les assassins de Patrice Lumumba et leurs complices ne sont toujours pas punis.

37. Malgré les décisions du Conseil de sécurité, des armements (y compris des avions d'origine belge, française, ouest-allemande ou anglaise) et de nombreux mercenaires sont dirigés vers le Katanga à travers la Rhodésie, le Congo (Brazzaville), l'Angola et d'autres Etats. Les monopoles étrangers et en premier lieu l'Union minière financent et arment la bande séparatiste de Tshombé et les autres agents des colonisateurs qui s'opposent à l'unité du Congo.

38. L'Union soviétique considère qu'il est grand temps de mettre fin aux interventions des puissances coloniales dans les affaires intérieures du Congo, de rattacher le Katanga au territoire de la République, de punir les assassins de Patrice Lumumba et des autres patriotes congolais, de retirer du territoire du Congo toutes les troupes étrangères, tous les mercenaires belges, français, sud-africains, rhodésiens et autres et de permettre ainsi au peuple et au gouvernement du Congo de disposer librement d'eux-mêmes.

39. Les actes des colonisateurs belges au Ruanda-Urundi constituent une violation flagrante de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux: la terreur policière règne dans le pays; des villes et des villages y sont occupés par les troupes belges. Le Premier Ministre, M. Rwagasore, y a été assassiné récemment. Les Belges persécutent les forces patriotiques du pays et continuent à piller ses richesses naturelles et à exploiter la population en s'appuyant sur un régime d'arbitraire policier. Pour cela, ils utilisent le régime de tutelle et usent des droits de la "puissance administrante". Cependant, ce régime a pris depuis longtemps la forme illégale de la domination coloniale. Rien ne le justifie et il devrait être liquidé avec l'ensemble du vieux système colonial. La suppression du régime de tutelle doit apporter l'indépendance totale non seulement au Ruanda-Urundi, mais aussi à la Nouvelle-Guinée, à l'île de Nauru, aux îles du Pacifique et à tous les autres territoires qui, sous divers prétextes, demeurent encore sous la dépendance des puissances impérialistes.

40. A entendre les représentants britanniques, on croirait presque, dans bien des cas, qu'ils sont partisans de l'octroi de l'indépendance à leurs colonies. Cependant, le Royaume-Uni reste toujours la plus grande puissance coloniale et n'abandonne ses positions coloniales que sous la pression des mouvements de libération nationale.

41. Si le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni n'est pas opposé à l'octroi de l'indépendance aux colonies britanniques, pourquoi donc les colonisateurs anglais la refusent-ils encore au Kenya et à la Guyane britannique? Pourquoi l'aviation anglaise bombarde-t-elle des agglomérations pacifiques d'Aden oriental? Pourquoi cette guerre coloniale menée depuis six ans contre le peuple d'Oman? C'est un fait aussi que les troupes et la police britanniques se livrent à des représailles en masse contre la population de la Rhodésie du Nord.

42. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux interdit toutes les pratiques de ségrégation et de discrimination. Cependant, chacun sait que le racisme continue à sévir dans la République sud-africaine. La discrimination raciale et l'apartheid y sont mises au rang de politique gouvernementale. M. Verwoerd, premier ministre de la République sud-africaine, a déclaré avec cynisme au mois de mai de cette année que son gouvernement maintiendrait "la suprématie des blancs", en d'autres termes le racisme, l'arbitraire policier, la terreur et les mesures de répression à l'encontre de la grande majorité de la population.

43. M. Louw, ministre des affaires étrangères de la République sud-africaine, a payé, dans un discours prononcé à la présente session [1033ème séance], de citer en quelque sorte la politique raciste en exemple aux autres puissances coloniales. Ce discours révoltant a été condamné par la grande majorité des Etats Membres et seules les puissances coloniales ont refusé de s'associer à la décision de l'Assemblée générale stigmatisant l'intervention raciste de Louw.

44. L'Afrique du Sud a annexé le Territoire du Sud-Ouest africain et y a introduit le régime de discrimination raciale et l'arbitraire policier; l'esclavage y est pratiqué et la population locale est enfermée de force dans des "réserves" que rien ne distingue des camps de concentration hitlériens. On ne peut lire sans un sentiment de colère et d'indignation le rapport du Comité du Sud-Ouest africain, qui relate les tortures monstrueuses auxquelles on soumet la population autochtone.

45. La délégation soviétique appuie sans réserve la proposition tendant à exclure la République sud-africaine de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et à appliquer à cet Etat raciste des sanctions économiques, politiques et autres.

46. L'Assemblée générale doit s'opposer fermement aux tentatives obstinées de certaines puissances coloniales visant à maintenir leur domination dans des territoires qu'elles occupent illégalement et qui font partie intégrante d'autres Etats indépendants Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Jusqu'à quand les colonisateurs portugais vont-ils se conduire en maîtres à Goa et dans les autres territoires appartenant à l'Inde? Quand les colonisateurs espagnols quitteront-ils finalement les territoires qui appartiennent au Maroc? Jusqu'à quand les Indonésiens qui habitent l'Irian occidental devront-ils subir le joug des colonisateurs hollandais? Il faut rappeler ici encore une fois la disposition bien connue de la Déclaration: "Toute tentative visant à détruire partiel-lement ou totalement l'unité nationale et l'intégrité territoriale d'un pays est incompatible avec les buts et les principes de la Charte des Nations Unies".

47. Les manœuvres auxquelles le Gouvernement néerlandais se livre actuellement ne sauraient tromper personne. L'Irian occidental est partie intégrante de l'Indonésie. Aussi, le droit à "l'autodétermination" que les autorités hollandaises proposent pour ce territoire n'a-t-il pour objet que de perpétuer en fait la domination des colonisateurs hollandais sur cette partie du territoire indonésien. Il est du devoir de l'Organisation des Nations Unies non seulement de rejeter le plan des Pays-Bas, mais encore d'exiger fermement du Gouvernement néerlandais qu'il mette immédiatement fin à l'occupation illégale de ce territoire étranger.

48. Un an s'est écoulé depuis l'adoption de la Déclaration sur la liquidation du colonialisme et il est manifeste que les puissances coloniales se sont abstenues l'année dernière au moment du vote dans l'espoir qu'elles pourraient — à parler franchement — méconnaître la décision de l'Assemblée générale et garder leur liberté d'action à l'égard des pays colonisés. Les puissances coloniales ne veulent pas céder leurs positions de bon gré. Au front mondial anti-colonialiste, elles opposent le front de leurs forces armées, de leurs alliances et de leurs bases militaires, de leurs forces de police et de tous les autres moyens de lutte contre les peuples coloniaux. La consolidation des sombres forces du colonialisme peut être décelée partout où les peuples opprimés ont engagé le combat pour leur libération.

49. Un pays politiquement et économiquement arriéré comme le Portugal pourrait-il résister aux forces nationales vigoureuses et croissantes de l'Angola si les colonisateurs portugais ne recevaient pas une assistance continue de la part de leurs alliés de l'OTAN? Les faits qui ont été cités lors des débats de l'Assemblée prouvent que les troupes portugaises utilisent dans la guerre contre l'Angola des armes en provenance des Etats-Unis ou d'Allemagne occidentale. Ce sont des avions de fabrication américaine qui lancent des bombes américaines au napalm sur les villes et les villages d'Angola. Pour mener la guerre en Angola, le Portugal reçoit des crédits américains.

50. Est-il nécessaire de prouver que, sans l'assistance des Etats-Unis et de ses autres alliés militaires, en particulier de l'Allemagne occidentale, la France n'aurait pas été en mesure de continuer aussi longtemps la guerre contre le peuple algérien? La France mène cette guerre à l'aide d'armes américaines modernes que lui fournit l'OTAN, et grâce aux crédits des Etats-Unis et de l'Allemagne occidentale.

51. Les événements du Congo ont clairement montré au monde entier que, malgré les divergences et les contradictions qui existent entre les monopoles des puissances impérialistes, les gouvernements de ces puissances se mettent rapidement d'accord lorsqu'il s'agit de mesures communes à prendre pour sauvegarder les intérêts de telle ou telle d'entre elles qui se trouve menacée par la pression du mouvement de libération nationale. Si les colonisateurs belges du Congo n'avaient pas reçu à temps l'aide des colonisateurs américains, anglais et français, qui ont utilisé, à cet effet, l'Organisation des Nations Unies, le peuple congolais aurait su les chasser depuis longtemps et consolider l'unité nationale et l'indépendance de son Etat.

52. De nombreux représentants qui sont intervenus ici lors de la discussion sur l'apartheid en Afrique du Sud et sur la situation au Sud-Ouest africain ont demandé comment il se fait que l'Organisation des Nations Unies examine cette question depuis plus de 10 ans déjà sans aboutir à un résultat quelconque et que le gouvernement raciste de la République sud-africaine méconnaisse impunément toutes les décisions de l'Assemblée générale. La réponse est simple: les principales puissances coloniales, c'est-à-dire les Etats-Unis et l'Angleterre, soutiennent en fait la République sud-africaine et empêchent l'Organisation des Nations Unies de prendre des décisions, des mesures et des sanctions susceptibles de contraindre le gouvernement de ce pays à tenir compte de l'opinion publique mondiale.

53. Les puissances coloniales, que leur lutte commune contre le mouvement de libération nationale rend étroitement solidaires, comptent de plus en plus ouvertement sur les blocs coloniaux militaires et sur les bases militaires qui sont devenues les citadelles du colonialisme et qui subsistent même dans les anciennes colonies devenues indépendantes.

54. L'année dernière, les impérialistes belges ont utilisé la base militaire de Kamina comme point de départ de leur agression contre la République du Congo. C'est de là qu'ils ont lancé des opérations militaires ayant pour objet de séparer la province du Katanga de la République du Congo. Tout récemment, la base militaire française de Bizerte a servi à lancer une agression contre la Tunisie. Les autorités françaises ont conservé cette base pour exercer une pression sur tous les pays du Maghreb. Les milieux dirigeants français se sont réservé le droit de garder la base militaire de Diégo-Suarez et d'autres points d'appui situés à Madagascar, île qui, disent-ils, est un navire porte-avions tourné vers l'océan Indien; les autorités françaises renforcent leurs bases militaires en Mauritanie, au Niger et au Tchad; ces bases sont pointées vers l'Algérie.

55. Les colonisateurs anglais utilisent la base militaire de Kahava au Kenya pour maintenir leur domination dans ce pays et s'aventurer à main armée dans les pays voisins. Malgré les protestations des partis politiques du Kenya, les Anglais renforcent et élargissent ce point d'appui du colonialisme. La base militaire de Moukala, à Aden, permet aux avions britanniques de bombarder les villes et les villages d'Oman. Les Anglais ont mis à la disposition des Etats-Unis des territoires situés dans la mer des Antilles pour qu'ils y construisent des bases militaires.

56. Il est universellement connu que ce sont les bases américaines situées à Porto Rico ou dans d'autres pays latino-américains qui ont servi à l'agression contre Cuba. Les colonisateurs américains conservent leurs bases militaires sur des territoires étrangers, même lorsque les gouvernements légitimes de ces pays en exigent l'évacuation. Les autorités françaises et anglaises agissent avec la même arrogance et foulent aux pieds les normes internationales et la souveraineté des petits pays.

57. Ainsi, d'une part, les représentants des puissances coloniales ont tendance à affirmer ici que c'en est pratiquement fini du colonialisme et ils parlent de leur "bonne volonté"; d'autre part, ils conservent, renforcent et agrandissent leurs bases militaires en territoire étranger et créent de nouvelles bases dirigées contre les pays colonisés et les Etats qui ont récemment accédé à l'indépendance.

58. Ce sont les actions concertées des alliances militaires et coloniales et le réseau des bases militaires qui révèlent peut-être le plus éloquemment les véritables intentions des puissances coloniales et leurs plans à l'égard des peuples colonisés et des nouveaux Etats.

59. Avant d'accorder l'indépendance à un pays quelconque, les puissances coloniales mettent en œuvre leurs forces armées, leur puissance économique et leurs relations commerciales et autres pour tisser autour de lui un réseau de traités, accords et engagements inégaux; ils concluent des arrangements avec les forces réactionnaires du pays et s'infiltrer partout. Leur objectif est de maintenir leur influence pendant de longues années, de conserver les leviers économiques et de continuer à exploiter la population et les richesses naturelles.

60. De nombreuses colonies possèdent d'immenses richesses naturelles dont les monopoles étrangers tirent profit; mais quand elles accèdent à l'indépendance, elles se trouvent invariablement débitrices des puissances coloniales. Par exemple, à la veille de son indépendance, le Congo (Brazzaville) avait un déficit commercial de plus de 10 milliards de francs africains; quant à celui de la République du Tchad, il dépassait 3 milliards de francs. Le Dahomey, la Haute-Volta et d'autres pays se sont trouvés dans une situation analogue.

61. Tous les nouveaux Etats éprouvent actuellement de grandes difficultés en raison de l'écart entre les prix des produits agricoles et ceux des produits manufacturés. Au cours de la discussion générale, les représentants des pays africano-asiatiques ont noté avec une grande inquiétude que cet écart ne cessait d'augmenter. Par exemple, d'après le représentant de la République centrafricaine, au cours des six dernières années, les prix des produits agricoles exportés par les pays africains n'ont augmenté que de 11 p. 100, alors que les prix des produits en provenance des pays capitalistes se sont accrus de 42 p. 100, soit quatre fois plus que les premiers. Grâce à la politique des prix et au taux défavorable de l'échange, les monopoles des Etats-Unis et de l'Europe occidentale exploitent de plus en plus les pays colonisés et les pays économiquement peu développés.

62. Un grave danger menace l'indépendance économique des pays africains: il s'agit des efforts qu'on déploie pour les entraîner dans la Communauté économique européenne. On veut ainsi en faire des fournisseurs de matières premières à bon marché pour l'industrie européenne et subordonner leur politique aux objectifs de l'OTAN qui, comme on sait, s'appuie largement sur les ressources de la Communauté économique européenne. La participation des Etats africains à la Communauté ne ferait qu'accentuer la différence entre les prix agricoles et les prix industriels, différence qui grève déjà lourdement l'économie des jeunes Etats. Par conséquent, la tentative des pays impérialistes d'entraîner les pays africains dans la Communauté économique européenne répond aux vieux objectifs colonialistes: maintenir les pays peu développés dans le rôle de producteurs de matières premières agricoles, exploiter leurs populations, conserver les profits excessifs résultant du déséquilibre du taux de l'échange.

63. Pourtant, les puissances impérialistes font du battage autour de la prétendue assistance qu'elles accordent aux pays peu développés. Mais de quelle "assistance" s'agit-il? Qui donc bénéficie des crédits, des prêts et de l'assistance technique octroyés par les Gouvernements des Etats-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de la France et des autres puissances coloniales? Ce sont avant tout leurs monopoles et leurs consortiums, qui continuent à piller les peuples des pays peu développés en réalisant des bénéfices fabuleux.

64. Car c'est un fait que, de 1946 à 1959, chaque dollar investi dans les pays peu développés a rapporté aux Etats-Unis deux dollars et demi de bénéfice. D'après les calculs des économistes soviétiques, les monopoles des Etats-Unis et des autres puissances occidentales retirent 20 milliards de dollars par an des pays peu développés. Ce n'est pas par hasard que les monopoles américains s'infiltrer avec une telle persistance dans les pays nouvellement indépendants. Ils font pression sur leurs partenaires, les anciens colonisateurs, obtiennent des concessions, s'assurent des privilèges, imposent aux gouvernements des jeunes Etats toutes sortes d'accords de coopération économique, créent des "zones monétaires", des "unions douanières" dont ils tirent profit, etc.

65. Cependant, cette course effrénée aux profits se heurte maintenant aux nouvelles relations économiques entre pays peu développés et pays socialistes fondées sur l'assistance désintéressée et la coopération dans l'égalité des droits; aussi les rois des monopoles et ceux qui sont à leur service dans les gouvernements entrent-ils en fureur. Ils dénoncent à grands cris le danger et l'expansion communistes, alors qu'il s'agit simplement d'assistance économique et de coopération commerciale.

66. L'Union soviétique et le système socialiste mondial ont en effet mis fin au monopole des puissances impérialistes en ce qui concerne la fourniture de biens d'équipement, l'octroi de crédits et de prêts, l'expérience et les connaissances techniques. Le monde entier sait que les pays socialistes apportent aux Etats peu développés une assistance désintéressée, exempte de toute condition politique. Les Etats socialistes considèrent que c'est pour eux une obligation internationale d'aider les pays peu développés, ils sont animés par des sentiments de solidarité à l'égard des peuples de ces pays, qui luttent pour l'indépendance économique complète et pour la liquidation rapide des pénibles conséquences que le colonialisme a entraînées dans les domaines de l'économie, de l'instruction, de la science et de la culture.

67. En faisant obstacle par tous les moyens aux relations économiques croissantes entre les nouveaux Etats et les pays socialistes, les impérialistes cherchent à maintenir les anciennes colonies et semi-colonies dans le système économique capitaliste. Ils s'efforcent d'y consolider la position d'infériorité de ces Etats. C'est l'impérialisme des Etats-Unis d'Amérique qui est le principal rempart du colonialisme moderne. Les monopoles américains et la politique militariste des Etats-Unis dirigent l'action des blocs militaires et coloniaux contre les mouvements de libération nationale et contre la souveraineté des jeunes Etats. Les impérialistes américains continuent à renforcer le réseau des bases militaires dans les régions des ex-empires coloniaux, où l'esprit de la lutte libératrice n'a pas disparu. Le Pentagone crée de nouvelles formations aéroportées, qu'on appelle "brigades de pompiers", "unités spéciales", etc., pour écraser la résistance des peuples opprimés et dépendants.

68. En un mot tous les moyens — guerre coloniale, blocs militaires, conspiration, terreur, sabotage, pression économique, corruption — sont mis en œuvre pour maintenir sous la domination des puissances impérialistes les peuples qui se sont libérés, pour faire en sorte que l'indépendance qu'ils ont conquise soit purement nominale ou pour les priver de cette indépendance.

69. La République fédérale d'Allemagne s'est jointe au front des pays impérialistes. Cet Etat revancharde et militariste aide la France dans sa lutte coloniale contre le peuple algérien et lui a accordé un crédit de 2 milliards de marks à cet effet. Des anciens SS jouent un rôle actif dans les légions étrangères de France, d'Espagne, de Belgique et d'autres puissances coloniales. L'Allemagne occidentale, d'après les informations de presse, a participé aux expériences nucléaires françaises en Afrique. Les monopoles de l'Allemagne occidentale, étroitement liés à ceux des Etats-Unis, agissent de concert dans de nombreux pays coloniaux et peu développés. Certains milieux de l'Allemagne occidentale nourrissent encore l'espoir de rétablir et même d'agrandir l'ancien empire colonial de l'Allemagne du Kaiser. Et c'est justement à partir de l'Allemagne occidentale que continuent à se répandre les idées et les théories racistes, haineuses, les idées de militarisme et de revanche.

70. Cependant, quels que soient les efforts conjugués des puissances impérialistes, ils ne sauraient arrêter l'offensive finale contre le colonialisme. Le front uni de la lutte contre le honteux esclavage colonial croît et se renforce. Ce n'est pas un fait du hasard si, au cours des dernières années, les impérialistes n'ont pu attirer, dans leurs blocs militaires, aucun des nouveaux Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique.

71. Chaque jour voit s'intensifier la lutte pour l'indépendance politique et pour un développement économique autonome répondant aux intérêts du peuple, et non à ceux des monopoles étrangers. Les pays libérés du joug colonial comprennent de mieux en mieux la signification historique de la noble voie qu'ont tracée les peuples de l'Union soviétique et des autres pays socialistes.

72. L'intérêt grandissant que l'on porte aux républiques socialistes de l'Asie centrale et d'autres régions de l'Union soviétique qui, en évitant le stade pénible du capitalisme, ont obtenu des succès sans précédent dans les domaines de l'économie nationale, de l'instruction, de la science, de la culture et de l'art, est significatif. Aucune propagande anticomuniste ne peut supprimer ou atténuer l'attrait irrésistible que l'expérience magnifique des pays socialistes exerce sur les peuples hier encore assujettis. Ceux-ci y voient de plus en plus clairement l'exemple à suivre pour développer leur indépendance nationale d'une manière susceptible d'assurer leur bonheur et leur prospérité.

73. L'Union soviétique et les autres pays socialistes n'ont pas l'intention d'intervenir dans les affaires intérieures des jeunes Etats et d'imposer le socialisme à quiconque. Les idées socialistes trouvent toutes seules leur chemin vers le cœur des peuples qui ont acquis l'indépendance nationale et de ceux qui luttent encore pour leur libération du joug colonial.

74. La marche victorieuse de ces idées ne saurait être arrêtée ni par les bases militaires ni par les blocs agressifs des puissances impérialistes.

75. La Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux est la condamnation à mort du colonialisme. Mais l'exécution de ce verdict exige de nouveaux efforts concertés de la part de tous les peuples du monde. L'Assemblée générale doit achever l'œuvre qu'elle a si bien commencée à la session précédente.

76. Désormais, l'objectif principal consiste à traduire dans les faits la volonté des peuples, telle qu'elle est exprimée dans la Déclaration de l'Organisation des Nations Unies, afin que les dispositions qu'elle contient ne restent pas lettre morte.

77. L'Union soviétique estime que l'Assemblée générale, à sa seizième session, doit adopter une résolution prévoyant des mesures concrètes pour l'application de la Déclaration. Et tout d'abord, il faut fixer la date limite de la liquidation complète et définitive du régime colonial. On sait que la Déclaration ne comporte pas de clause à cet effet. Les colonisateurs en profitent pour maintenir leur domination sur les colonies en recourant à toutes sortes de prétextes.

78. La Conférence de Belgrade des pays non alignés a été d'avis que 1962 devait être l'année de la liquidation définitive du colonialisme partout où il existe encore. Nous proposons que la liquidation définitive et inconditionnelle du colonialisme sous toutes ses formes et dans toutes ses manifestations soit achevée à la fin de 1962 au plus tard.

79. Pourquoi cette année-là? Nous partons du principe bien connu de la Déclaration du 14 décembre 1960 selon lequel "le manque de préparation dans les domaines politique, économique ou social... ne doit jamais être pris comme prétexte pour retarder l'indépendance". Il n'y a pas à l'heure actuelle de peuples qui ne soient mûrs pour la liberté; il n'y a que des colonisateurs qui s'opposent à l'octroi de l'indépendance. L'expérience a montré de façon concluante combien il était faux de prétendre que les peuples colonisés ont besoin d'une préparation spéciale pour accéder à l'indépendance. A une certaine époque, les défenseurs du colonialisme ont essayé d'appliquer ce système, si l'on peut l'appeler ainsi, aux peuples de l'Asie, mais ceux-ci n'ont pas jugé bon de les écouter. Ils ont chassé les colonisateurs et, grâce à la création d'Etats indépendants, ils développent avec succès leur économie et leur culture et jouissent d'une grande autorité sur la scène internationale. On peut en dire autant des Etats d'Afrique. On essaye de nous convaincre que les Africains ne sont pas encore mûrs pour l'indépendance, qu'ils ne seraient pas en état d'assurer le fonctionnement complexe de l'administration de l'Etat. Pourtant, combien d'hommes d'Etat et d'hommes politiques éminents l'Afrique a-t-elle déjà donnés! Les représentants des jeunes Etats d'Afrique dont nous écoutons avec intérêt les brillants discours sont-ils donc en quoi que ce soit inférieurs à nous autres, formés à l'école de la diplomatie européenne? L'histoire des jeunes Etats d'Asie et d'Afrique a montré de façon évidente le haut degré d'épanouissement culturel et spirituel qu'atteignent les peuples lorsqu'ils rejettent le joug colonial, redressent la tête et commencent à s'exprimer à haute voix.

L'histoire de ces Etats prouve justement que les régimes coloniaux, loin de préparer ces peuples à "l'autonomie", freinent de toutes les manières possibles le processus naturel de leur développement économique, politique, social et culturel.

80. Certains prétendent que, dans le cas de l'Afrique, par exemple, il faudrait reculer la date de l'octroi de l'indépendance de presque 10 ans! Cela signifierait que nous devons nous résigner à ce que la population du Sud-Ouest africain subisse pendant de nombreuses années encore la barbarie moyenâgeuse des racistes sud-africains, à ce que les peuples du Kenya et de la Rhodésie du Nord vivent dans la terreur et soient victimes de mesures de répression. Non, nous manquerions à notre devoir devant l'humanité si nous continuions à tolérer l'existence du colonialisme. Voilà pourquoi nous proposons que le système colonial soit complètement liquidé dans le monde entier à la fin de 1962. Nous croyons que cette proposition trouvera un appui unanime.

81. Mais il ne suffit pas de fixer une date. Il faut encore préciser de façon concrète les mesures à prendre entre-temps, dans tous les territoires non autonomes, pour assurer l'application de la Déclaration.

82. Tout d'abord, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit exiger qu'il soit mis fin immédiatement à toutes les guerres coloniales et à toutes les mesures de répression exercées contre les combattants des mouvements de libération nationale.

83. L'Organisation ne peut rester indifférente devant la juste lutte de ces peuples et elle doit exiger des colonisateurs qu'ils se soumettent à la volonté exprimée dans la Déclaration. De plus, il est indispensable que les gouvernements des puissances coloniales comprennent qu'ils risquent de s'attirer les sanctions prévues par la Charte des Nations Unies s'ils continuent à méconnaître à l'avenir les décisions de l'Organisation. En particulier, ces sanctions doivent être appliquées dès à présent au Portugal, qui refuse de se conformer à la demande de l'Organisation des Nations Unies et de cesser sa guerre criminelle contre l'Angola.

84. Il faut souligner l'absolue nécessité de retirer immédiatement des territoires coloniaux toutes les troupes des puissances coloniales, de dissoudre toutes les formations paramilitaires étrangères et de liquider complètement les bases militaires étrangères dans les territoires non autonomes et partout où elles servent à exercer des pressions sur les jeunes Etats.

85. Nous pensons également que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit exiger l'abrogation de tous les accords — y compris les accords secrets — qui ont été conclus avec les territoires non autonomes dans le dessein de limiter la souveraineté des futurs Etats indépendants.

86. Si nous soulevons cette question, c'est parce que les colonisateurs ont commencé à appliquer une nouvelle méthode pour "moderniser" en quelque sorte le régime colonial décrépit: lorsqu'ils se rendent compte que leur domination dans un pays quelconque touche à sa fin, ils cherchent à y préserver leurs positions de toutes les manières possibles. Ils tissent autour des colonies un réseau de traités et accords divers qui limitent directement ou indirectement la souveraineté du futur Etat indépendant.

87. Avant tout, ils se réservent des privilèges pour leurs monopoles et le "droit" pour ceux-ci de conserver les concessions qui leur avaient été précédemment accordées, et ils imposent aux nouveaux Etats l'obligation d'aligner entièrement leur politique économique, monétaire et financière sur celle de l'ex-métropole. Les puissances coloniales essayent de poser comme condition à l'octroi de l'indépendance la conclusion de diverses conventions prévoyant une prétendue "coopération" avec la métropole en matière de politique étrangère, de défense, etc., qui ont pour but de limiter la souveraineté des jeunes Etats et de les attirer d'une façon ou d'une autre dans les blocs agressifs militaires et politiques des puissances occidentales. Nous savons que, dans certains cas, les dirigeants politiques des Etats dépendants ont été obligés de signer des conventions de ce genre afin d'obtenir l'indépendance de leurs pays. Mais nous jugeons absolument inadmissible que les puissances coloniales continuent d'imposer des accords de ce genre aux Etats dépendants et fassent renaître ainsi le colonialisme sous de nouvelles formes.

M. Quaison-Sackey (Ghana), vice-président, prend la présidence.

88. Il faut aussi exiger l'abrogation immédiate des actes par lesquels les puissances administrantes annexent des territoires non autonomes ou des parties intégrantes de ces territoires, et interdire de tels actes à l'avenir.

89. Enfin, nous estimons que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit demander aux puissances administrantes d'accorder sans délai des droits et des libertés démocratiques étendus aux populations de tous les territoires non autonomes, de créer toutes les conditions nécessaires pour le transfert des pleins pouvoirs à la population locale et d'abroger toutes les lois et dispositions qui prévoient une discrimination raciale, religieuse, etc. Selon nous, il faut octroyer aux peuples dépendants les droits et les libertés démocratiques les plus larges, y compris la liberté de parole, de presse, de réunion, ainsi que le droit d'élire leurs organes de gouvernement au suffrage universel.

90. C'est là le minimum que l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit faire pour s'acquitter de la noble mission que représente la liquidation du colonialisme.

91. Pour assurer l'exécution de toutes ces mesures, l'Organisation des Nations Unies doit exercer un contrôle sévère et inlassable. C'est pourquoi le Gouvernement soviétique propose de créer une commission spéciale de l'ONU composée de représentants des principaux groupes d'Etats, qui sera chargée d'examiner en détail la situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration, et les mesures propres à mettre cette déclaration en œuvre. Cette commission comprendra avant tout des représentants des Etats qui ont porté tout le fardeau du joug colonial et qui, de ce fait, ont acquis une vaste expérience en matière de lutte contre le colonialisme et de création d'Etats indépendants.

92. Les propositions du Gouvernement soviétique figurent dans le projet de résolution de l'Assemblée générale [A/L.355] intitulé "La situation en ce qui concerne l'application de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux", que la délégation de l'Union soviétique recommande à votre attention.

93. La suppression du colonialisme est l'un des problèmes les plus importants de notre époque et des millions d'hommes, l'humanité tout entière, ont intérêt à ce qu'il soit résolu sans tarder. Les peuples des colonies obtiendront enfin la liberté à laquelle ils aspirent et pourront jouir du droit naturel de décider librement de leur destin. La destruction des points d'appui du colonialisme éliminera l'une des sources les plus dangereuses de conflits militaires et assainira considérablement la situation internationale. La liquidation définitive et complète du colonialisme permettra d'établir entre tous les pays et tous les peuples des relations fondées sur une égalité réelle, de renforcer l'amitié et la coopération entre tous les peuples de la terre et de conserver et de consolider la paix dans le monde.

94. M. MALALASEKERA (Ceylan) [traduit de l'anglais]: Depuis qu'à sa quinzième session l'Assemblée générale a adopté sa déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance aux pays et aux peuples coloniaux [résolution 1514 (XV)], certains événements se sont produits qui ont confirmé combien cette déclaration était nécessaire. Les auteurs de cette résolution et ceux qui en ont pris l'initiative, comme ceux qui ont voté en faveur de son adoption, peuvent éprouver à juste titre un sentiment de satisfaction à la pensée que la Déclaration a pris place dans l'histoire de l'évolution du colonialisme et, bien entendu, dans l'histoire des activités des Nations Unies, qui s'inspirent des objectifs exaltants énoncés aux Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte.

95. Parmi les événements qui sont pour ma délégation une source de satisfaction particulière, il faut citer l'admission au sein de la communauté internationale du Sierra Leone qui est passé du statut de colonie au statut de pleine souveraineté. Le passage de la tutelle à l'indépendance dans l'ordre et la légalité n'est plus qu'une question de semaines pour le Tanganyika que nous espérons voir admis parmi nous peut-être au cours de la présente session. La question de l'avenir du Territoire sous tutelle du Ruanda-Urundi semble aussi entrer dans une phase de conclusion positive et nous espérons vivement que cette solution sera conforme à l'objectif premier de la mission sacrée du régime de tutelle, celui de la primauté des intérêts de la population.

96. Le continent africain n'est pas la seule partie du monde d'où nous parvenons de bonnes nouvelles de cet ordre. L'indépendance sera reconnue également au Samoa-Occidental dans un très proche avenir et nous espérons que ce peuple pacifique jouira de sa liberté dans le bonheur et fera rayonner sur le reste du monde cette sérénité pour laquelle il est célèbre. Nous espérons aussi que dans d'autres régions, pour lesquelles la solution des problèmes s'entrevoit mais reste encore voilée par certaines complications, il sera possible d'aboutir bientôt à des conclusions de nature à satisfaire les populations qui aspirent à un avenir meilleur.

97. Nous nous trouvons donc en présence d'événements réels et d'espoirs solidement fondés qui indiquent les uns comme les autres que la Déclaration a permis d'aboutir à des résultats tangibles. Je n'ai nullement l'intention de discuter avec ceux qui pourraient prétendre que ces événements se seraient produits de toute façon et que, même s'il n'y avait pas la Déclaration, l'histoire suivrait son cours et entraînerait en tout état de cause la disparition du colonialisme, phase historique caractérisée par des erreurs politiques et par un traitement indigne de la personne humaine. Que cela soit vrai ou faux, ceux qui voudraient minimiser les répercussions immédiates de la Déclaration doivent cependant reconnaître que cette déclaration n'a pas été imaginée impulsivement, mais qu'elle a été précédée par une lutte de l'homme, lutte matérielle, émotive et morale, et qu'elle est devenue un impératif international, tirant son origine des aspirations de ceux qui étaient opprimés et de ceux qui, bien que libres, ont consacré leur vie et leurs efforts à l'abolition du colonialisme. Il faut reconnaître que les puissances coloniales elles-mêmes, s'étant rendu compte de la violence de ce vent de révolution, ont aussi en maintes occasions pris conscience des réalités de la vie, ont eu la sagesse de satisfaire les exigences des populations et se sont montrées à la hauteur de leur tâche en élaborant d'avance les phases préparatoires et les phases initiales du transfert des pouvoirs. Il convient de rendre hommage comme il se doit à de telles attitudes clairvoyantes et de reconnaître, à cet égard, la sagesse dont ont fait preuve le Royaume-Uni, les Etats-Unis, la Nouvelle-Zélande et la France.

98. Nous sommes enclins, certes, à décerner des louanges méritées et il nous est agréable de le faire, mais nous sommes prêts aussi à infliger, quoique sans plaisir, le blâme justifié. Le monde n'est pas encore débarrassé du colonialisme, bien qu'il n'y ait plus actuellement que 50 millions de personnes sous domination étrangère, contre 800 millions en 1946, à la création de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Le progrès accompli est en soi remarquable, mais il reste encore presque 70 territoires sur la liste des territoires non autonomes et pour la plupart d'entre eux les puissances administrantes n'ont pas encore pris nettement position quant à leur avenir. Dans certains cas, nous avons entendu des déclarations négatives tant au sein de l'Assemblée que dans d'autres organes des Nations Unies et ma délégation, comme beaucoup d'autres, est très préoccupée de cet état de choses. A ce sujet, je ne cacherai pas que je pense au Gouvernement de l'Afrique du Sud qui pratique ouvertement et avec une obstination entêtée la discrimination raciale au Sud-Ouest africain, et que je pense aussi au Gouvernement du Portugal qui a provoqué le soulèvement de nations africaines opprimées, en appliquant des méthodes coloniales de l'âge médiéval, et qui réprime maintenant l'insurrection avec une cruauté implacable par les bombes, les balles, le feu, l'emprisonnement et les exécutions. Ma délégation estime que l'Organisation des Nations Unies ne peut continuer à rester le témoin muet de la barbarie des coupables et des souffrances tragiques des victimes.

99. Comme je l'ai déjà indiqué, il existe encore près de 70 territoires soumis au régime colonial. La situation dans certains de ces territoires n'offre pas toujours le spectacle d'une répression aussi radicalement draconienne que dans les cas que je viens de citer, mais, dans l'esprit de notre temps, elle est cependant totalement anachronique.

100. De l'avis de ma délégation, nous devons nous proposer surtout, en examinant la question dont nous sommes saisis, d'éliminer cet anachronisme une fois pour toutes et de rendre la dignité, le droit à l'autodétermination et l'indépendance à tous ceux qui, à un moment ou à un autre, ont perdu ces biens et ces droits élémentaires de la personne humaine à la suite d'une défaite infligée par la force matérielle.

101. La Déclaration que l'Assemblée générale a adoptée l'an dernier [résolution 1514 (XV)] énonce un ensemble de principes qui sont en parfait accord avec les principes de la Charte et qui, pour donner des résultats efficaces et tangibles, doivent, comme tous les principes, se traduire en une action réaliste clairement définie. On a déjà souligné nettement la nécessité d'une action de ce genre lors de la quinzième session de l'Assemblée générale, au cours de laquelle la Quatrième Commission, la Première Commission et l'Assemblée elle-même ont manifesté l'intention d'aborder cette question de façon concrète. C'est uniquement en raison de l'ordre du jour très chargé de l'Assemblée à sa dernière session qu'il n'a pas été possible de prendre une décision. A cet égard, je me permettrai de renvoyer les membres de l'Assemblée au procès-verbal de la 995ème séance plénière, au cours de laquelle cette opinion a été exprimée.

102. Ma délégation est fermement convaincue qu'une décision est nécessaire et je me propose de présenter dans un instant quelques suggestions quant à sa nature.

103. Auparavant, je ne puis m'abstenir d'adresser à tous les Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies l'appel le plus énergique, en leur demandant de reconnaître que le colonialisme est une question trop importante en soi, trop pénible et trop grave, pour que nous la considérions comme un aspect du conflit qui oppose les grandes puissances ou encore, pour employer une expression courante, que nous la mêlions aux différends de la guerre froide. Ma délégation est d'avis qu'abstraction faite des autres périls de portée internationale, si la lutte pour l'abolition complète et inconditionnelle du colonialisme n'est pas poursuivie pour sa propre cause, on risque de perdre de vue la seule et unique fin si admirablement formulée dans la Charte: la primauté des intérêts et de la prospérité des habitants des territoires dépendants. Rien ne doit ni ne peut nous faire perdre cette fin de vue et tout ce qu'on peut y adjoindre accessoirement risquerait justement d'avoir cette conséquence.

104. Nous n'avons pas à chercher bien loin pour trouver la preuve de la vérité de cette prémisse. Les diverses phases de la tragédie qu'a connue le Congo (Léopoldville), ancien territoire non autonome sous administration de la Belgique, nous apparaissent comme l'exemple le plus déplorable de la manière dont la convoitise et l'ambition peuvent rendre vain ou illusoire le potentiel de prospérité et de bien-être, par ailleurs excellent, d'un pays doté de richesses naturelles et de solides ressources humaines. Il faut en outre faire en sorte que les souffrances endurées par des milliers d'êtres humains et le sacrifice de M. Lumumba, de notre Secrétaire général et d'autres fonctionnaires des Nations Unies, et plus récemment celui du prince Rwagasore, premier ministre du Burundi, entre autres, servent à tout le moins à décourager ceux qui se prépareraient à répéter des actes analogues qu'il faut considérer comme des méfaits du colonialisme.

105. Compte tenu des opinions que je viens de formuler et qui constituent le cadre général dans lequel ma délégation se propose d'aborder la question de l'application de la Déclaration sur l'indépendance, je désire présenter quelques remarques sur certains détails relatifs à l'application de la Déclaration. Je tiens aussi à réserver le droit de ma délégation de développer ces remarques et d'entrer dans des détails plus techniques, si la suite du débat sur la question en révélait la nécessité.

106. J'affirmerai d'abord que ma délégation est fermement convaincue qu'il n'y a dans le monde ni territoire ni population qui soit incapable de se gouverner efficacement. Le mythe selon lequel les populations devraient être progressivement préparées et formées en vue de s'administrer elles-mêmes et de gérer leurs propres affaires est finalement détruit. Même ceux qui, pour des raisons évidentes, étaient très attachés à cette opinion jusqu'à une date très récente, l'ont abandonnée en la reconnaissant erronée et moralement inadmissible. Je dirai aussi que ce mythe doit être remplacé par une vérité intangible à mes yeux, qui est que chaque peuple est parfaitement capable, dans le cadre social et culturel qui lui est propre, de gérer ses propres affaires à condition que d'autres n'y interviennent pas, que ce soit sous prétexte de le protéger ou sous tout autre prétexte spécieux.

107. Une autre question se pose à propos de ce qu'on appelle la préparation à l'indépendance; je veux parler de la situation économique du territoire en cause au moment du transfert des pouvoirs. Tandis qu'un être humain ayant atteint la maturité d'esprit est naturellement doué de la faculté de formuler un jugement politique exprimant son propre intérêt individuel et collectif, il n'est malheureusement pas naturellement pourvu des ressources matérielles et de l'habileté suffisantes pour appliquer les techniques modernes et pour que l'exercice de l'autonomie soit automatiquement couronné de succès. On peut dire sans hésitation que, à exception d'un ou deux cas particuliers peut-être, l'économie de tous les territoires dépendants et de tous les nouveaux Etats indépendants est plus ou moins dans un état de sous-développement caractérisé. Dans certains cas, ils possèdent de vastes ressources naturelles en grande partie inexploitées; dans d'autres, ces ressources ne sont pas abondantes; souvent l'économie y est fondée sur la monoculture ou sur l'agriculture de subsistance; et dans la plupart des cas, ils ne disposent pas de connaissances techniques et administratives suffisantes pour faire profiter la population des ressources du pays. Cet état de choses résulte principalement du fait que sous le régime de l'administration coloniale les ressources de ces territoires étaient soit laissées à l'abandon, soit exploitées au profit de la métropole, le plus souvent sous la direction de techniciens et d'administrateurs métropolitains qui n'acceptaient qu'exceptionnellement de transmettre leurs connaissances aux autochtones, et encore n'était-ce qu'aux échelons inférieurs. Mon propre pays a acquis de ces questions une expérience suffisante pour traiter de ce sujet avec autorité.

108. Nous constatons, d'après les renseignements contenus dans les rapports du Conseil de tutelle et d'après les renseignements communiqués en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, qu'au cours des dernières années la situation s'est un peu améliorée dans certains territoires et que l'on s'y préoccupe davantage maintenant de la formation et de la préparation de cadres civils autochtones, de façon à faciliter le transfert des pouvoirs et, par la suite, la jouissance de l'indépendance. Mieux vaut tard que jamais, puisque ces mesures auront contribué au moins à une transition pacifique de l'état de dépendance à l'état d'indépendance par exemple pour le Ghana, la Nigéria, le Sierra Leone et le Tanganyika, et bientôt, nous l'espérons, pour l'Ouganda. Elles peuvent aussi avoir contribué à entretenir les espoirs et à ouvrir les perspectives qui s'offrent à ces pays de parvenir à une prospérité résultant de leurs propres efforts et répondant à leurs propres besoins. La politique du "jamais" a donné au Congo (Léopoldville), par exemple, de tristes résultats car ce pays souffre encore du manque d'administrateurs, de médecins, d'enseignants, de cadres, etc., provenant des milieux autochtones. Les populations de territoires comme ceux qui sont sous l'administration du Portugal ou de l'Afrique du Sud et qui n'ont pas encore accédé à l'indépendance qui leur est due sont maintenues dans l'ignorance délibérément et par intention malveillante, et aucune formation ne leur est donnée.

109. Ma délégation s'inscrit en faux, parce qu'elle la considère comme indéfendable et illogique, contre toute argumentation tendant à montrer qu'une prétendue maturité économique serait un préalable nécessaire à l'octroi de l'indépendance. Cette argumentation est indéfendable en raison de ses implications opportunistes et contraires à l'éthique, et elle est illogique parce qu'on ne peut supposer que les puissances coloniales, qui ont disposé dans bien des cas de dizaines d'années ou même de siècles pour former et éduquer les autochtones et ne l'ont pas fait comme elles auraient dû le faire, iraient s'engager maintenant dans cette voie si le régime colonial était maintenu.

110. Il semble, dans ces conditions, que les Nations Unies soient pleinement justifiées à admettre le principe de l'indépendance immédiate et à la réclamer. Elles ont en outre l'obligation sacrée de veiller à ce que toute demande et toute acceptation d'indépendance s'inspirent du principe qui domine tous les autres: celui de la primauté des intérêts des habitants des territoires considérés.

111. Pour diverses raisons, parmi lesquelles celles qui viennent d'être exposées, la situation de fait est telle qu'il existe actuellement pour environ 70 territoires une responsabilité internationale bien définie en vertu des Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte et de diverses résolutions de l'Assemblée générale. Il existe aussi un certain nombre de territoires pour lesquels on peut admettre que cette responsabilité existe, mais au sujet desquels l'Assemblée ne s'est pas prononcée suffisamment nettement. Parmi ces derniers figurent les territoires administrés par la France en Amérique latine, qui ne sont pas nécessairement autonomes bien qu'on affirme qu'ils le soient. Des représentations concernant le statut de ces territoires ont déjà été formulées tant à la Quatrième Commission qu'au Comité des renseignements relatifs aux territoires non autonomes. Bien qu'ils aient précédemment fait l'objet de rapports présentés par le Gouvernement français en vertu de l'Article 73, e, de la Charte, ils ont échappé au contrôle international direct à la suite d'une décision prise unilatéralement par ce gouvernement. Le statut de l'Algérie est maintenu et la guerre de libération se poursuit sans que le Gouvernement français ait clairement exposé la situation devant l'Assemblée générale. D'autres territoires restent sous l'administration d'autres gouvernements, par exemple les territoires sous administration des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, dont le statut — bien qu'ils aient d'abord été sous l'application des obligations visées au Chapitre XI de la Charte et aient été libérés de ces obligations par la suite — justifierait peut-être un nouvel examen de l'Assemblée à la lumière de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance, afin que l'Assemblée s'assure que les intérêts des populations sont convenablement protégés par ce statut particulier assez mal défini.

112. Pour développer les quelques arguments que j'ai essayé de faire valoir en ce qui concerne la nécessité de faire passer dans un ensemble de recommandations pratiques les principes énoncés dans la Déclaration, je tiens à ajouter les observations suivantes, dans lesquelles sont condensées les vues de ma délégation.

113. Les territoires qui font l'objet de nos recommandations sont ceux auxquels s'appliquent les dispositions des Chapitres XI, XII et XIII de la Charte, ainsi que ceux auxquels le Chapitre XI reste applicable bien que, par suite de décisions arbitraires de certains gouvernements, toutes les obligations découlant de ce chapitre de la Charte ne soient pas remplies. Ma délégation voudrait aussi que l'on fasse figurer dans la catégorie des territoires dépendants tous les territoires définis dans l'énoncé du principe IV de la résolution 1541 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale comme des territoires géographiquement séparés et ethniquement ou culturellement distincts du pays qui les administre. Bien que cette définition corresponde généralement aux territoires qui tombent sous le coup des dispositions du Chapitre XI de la Charte, elle est applicable à certains autres territoires qui n'ont pas été énumérés explicitement au titre de ce chapitre.

114. Ayant déjà exposé les vues de ma délégation sur la question de la maturité politique des populations et de leur état de préparation à l'indépendance, et étant parvenu à la conclusion que toute nation est parfaitement capable de gérer ses propres affaires, je désire ajouter quelques observations au sujet des mesures qui rendront pratique, réaliste et valable toute recommandation que nous allons présenter, en ne tenant compte d'aucune autre considération que de celles de la volonté de la population intéressée, de ses intérêts et de sa prospérité.

115. En conséquence, qu'il s'agisse d'élaborer, pour l'application de la Déclaration, une recommandation d'ordre général ou une liste détaillée de dates limites, ma délégation estime qu'il faut tenir compte du principe VI de la résolution 1541 (XV) de l'Assemblée générale, ainsi que des principes VII, VIII et IX, car ce n'est qu'en appliquant ces principes avec sagesse que nous pourrions donner effet à ce qu'exigent les vœux librement exprimés des populations.

116. Le principe VI est rédigé comme suit:

"On peut dire qu'un territoire non autonome a atteint la pleine autonomie:

"a) Quand il est devenu Etat indépendant et souverain;

"b) Quand il s'est librement associé à un Etat indépendant;

"c) Quand il s'est intégré à un Etat indépendant."

117. Bien que, de l'avis de ma délégation, la souveraineté constitue la meilleure forme d'indépendance et celle à laquelle aspireront la plupart des territoires dépendants, il est raisonnable aussi, je pense, d'admettre que certains des territoires encore dépendants actuellement se demanderont si la souveraineté est la forme d'indépendance qui répondrait le mieux à leurs intérêts.

118. Il existe une longue liste de territoires au sujet, desquels nous avons avec certitude que l'accession sans délai à l'état de souveraineté favoriserait les intérêts et les aspirations. Pour en citer simplement au hasard quelques-uns appartenant à cette catégorie, je mentionnerai le Kenya, la Rhodésie du Nord, la Rhodésie du Sud, le Nyassaland, les Indes occidentales, les îles Fidji, la Guyane britannique, etc. Cependant, en étudiant la liste d'un peu plus près, nous nous demandons, dans le cas de certains autres territoires, si une telle mesure servirait aussi bien leur cause et si ces territoires pourraient envisager avec sérénité leur avenir en tant qu'entités souveraines ou si, au contraire, ils n'éprouvent pas eux-mêmes certains doutes en se demandant si l'indépendance ne serait pas un fardeau plus qu'une source de satisfaction. Je tiens cependant à affirmer avec force maintenant qu'en aucun cas ma délégation ne recommande le maintien du statu quo pour ces territoires. Ma délégation ne propose pas non plus que l'un de nous, ou l'ensemble de l'Assemblée générale, dicte en aucun cas à ces populations ce qu'elles doivent souhaiter. Nous reconnaissons néanmoins aux Nations Unies un rôle à jouer dans l'accession à l'indépendance et c'est là un point que je me propose de développer un peu plus loin.

119. Les mesures à prendre pour donner effet à la Déclaration, tout en traduisant le désir de l'Assemblée générale de voir tous les territoires dépendants accéder à l'indépendance, doivent établir une distinction entre les territoires dont l'indépendance devrait revêtir la forme de la souveraineté et ceux dont l'indépendance devrait plutôt revêtir la forme d'une association ou d'une intégration à un autre Etat, conformément aux formules énoncées par l'Assemblée dans les principes VII, VIII et IX de la résolution 1541 (XV).

120. Pour rappeler à ceux qui ne les connaîtraient pas bien le sens de ces principes, je vais citer rapidement quelques phrases de ces principes qui illustrent les notions fondamentales du concept de l'association et de l'intégration. Les principes VII, VIII et IX de la résolution 1541 (XV) stipulent:

"La libre association doit résulter d'un choix libre et volontaire des populations du territoire en question, exprimé selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées..."

"Le territoire associé doit avoir le droit de déterminer sa constitution intérieure, sans ingérence extérieure, conformément aux méthodes constitutionnelles régulières et aux vœux librement exprimés de ses populations..."

"L'intégration à un Etat indépendant doit se faire sur la base de l'égalité complète entre le peuple du territoire antérieurement non autonome et celui de l'Etat indépendant auquel il s'intègre. Les deux peuples doivent avoir... un statut et des droits de citoyenneté égaux ainsi que des garanties égales pour ce qui est des libertés et droits fondamentaux..."

"L'intégration doit résulter du désir librement exprimé des populations du territoire, pleinement conscientes du changement de leur statut, la consultation se faisant selon des méthodes démocratiques et largement diffusées, impartialement appliquées et fondées sur le suffrage universel des adultes. L'Organisation des Nations Unies pourra, quand elle le jugera nécessaire, contrôler l'application de ces méthodes."

M. Slim (Tunisie) reprend la présidence.

121. Pour des raisons évidentes, je n'ai pas l'intention de donner des exemples de territoires entrant dans la catégorie de ceux qui doivent chercher à obtenir leur association ou leur intégration à un autre Etat souverain. Il est bien évident, en effet, qu'il n'appartient pas à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de dire aux populations ce que doivent être leurs aspirations. C'est l'inverse qui s'impose, c'est-à-dire que les territoires devraient pouvoir dire à l'Assemblée générale, selon des méthodes constitutionnelles régulières et conformément aux vœux librement exprimés des populations, quelles sont leurs aspirations.

122. On peut prévoir que certains territoires jugeront que leurs ressources économiques sont trop restreintes pour qu'ils soient économiquement viables, ou que leur population est trop peu nombreuse — il y a des territoires dont la population compte 1 000 personnes ou même moins, des territoires peuplés de 2 000 ou de 5 000 personnes, etc. — ou encore que leur situation géographique est défavorable. Les populations de ces territoires pourront donc conclure que leurs intérêts exigent l'association ou l'intégration à un autre Etat.

123. Comme il ressort des procès-verbaux de l'Assemblée et de la Quatrième Commission, ainsi que d'autres documents, il existe aussi des territoires sur lesquels divers Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies revendiquent des droits de souveraineté. Pour n'en citer que quelques-uns, et sans oublier, à titre d'exemple, le cas de Chypre, je mentionnerai Aden, le Honduras britannique (Belize), les îles Falkland ou îles Malouines, Gibraltar, l'Ifni, l'Irian occidental et bien d'autres. En prenant des mesures pour l'application de la Déclaration, on devra nécessairement examiner d'une manière assez détaillée ces revendications qui intéressent la communauté internationale.

124. L'histoire du colonialisme nous enseigne que de nombreuses frontières artificielles ont été fixées à la suite d'accords intervenus entre les puissances occupantes. Elle nous enseigne aussi que, dans un certain nombre de cas, les puissances coloniales ont effacé, avec plus ou moins de succès, les vestiges d'influences culturelles et politiques qui existaient dans les régions devenues possessions coloniales. Nous connaissons des cas où certains groupes de population ont été déplacés et remplacés par des colons qui s'expatriaient de la métropole; quelquefois, des chefs ou des groupes de population ont été éliminés par extermination, bannissement, subjugation, arrestation ou corruption, que cette corruption revête la forme de postes bien rémunérés ou toute autre forme. L'Assemblée devra avoir la possibilité d'examiner la légitimité des revendications de certains Membres et, si besoin est, de les confronter avec les vœux de la population. L'Assemblée aura notamment la très lourde responsabilité de veiller à ce qu'une forme de colonialisme ne soit pas remplacée par une autre et qu'aucune forme de néo-colonialisme ne vienne s'y substituer.

125. Pour que l'Assemblée générale puisse faire ce qu'il faut et le faire bien, ma délégation estime qu'elle doit décider, dans le cadre de l'application de la Déclaration, quels sont les meilleurs moyens de s'attaquer à cette question et à diverses autres. De même l'Assemblée doit compter, dans la mesure du possible et pour autant que cela soit judicieux, sur la coopération des Membres administrants auxquels elle pourrait demander de lui faciliter le travail en acceptant de recevoir, dans certains territoires qu'ils administrent, des groupes ou des missions de bons offices ou tout autre organe, quel qu'en soit le nom, qui seraient envoyés par l'Organisation des Nations Unies et d'accorder à ces missions toutes les facilités qui seraient nécessaires pour leur permettre de déterminer les tendances de l'opinion publique dans le territoire considéré.

126. On pourrait aussi, le cas échéant, solliciter la coopération du Membre administrant pour aider lesdits groupes ou missions à préparer et mettre en œuvre des consultations permettant de déterminer les vœux des populations en ce qui concerne la nature de leur statut futur. Si le choix de la population s'orientait vers l'association ou l'intégration à un autre Etat, la question se poserait de savoir quel serait cet Etat souverain. Par la suite, si c'était nécessaire et si les parties intéressées le désiraient, il appartiendrait à l'Organisation des Nations Unies de les aider au cours des négociations relatives à l'accord de cet Etat et aux conditions de l'association ou de l'intégration.

127. Je me souviens qu'à diverses reprises, par exemple dans la résolution 1539 (XV), les Membres administrants ont été invités à assurer la participation des représentants de territoires non autonomes aux travaux des organes appropriés de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. D'ailleurs, mon pays, Ceylan, est en partie à l'origine de la rédaction de cette clause de cette résolution. Maintenant que le Royaume-Uni, après bien des années d'hésitation, s'est engagé à communiquer des renseignements d'ordre politique ou constitutionnel relatifs aux territoires qu'il administre, ce pays jugera peut-être possible de faire venir devant l'Assemblée des représentants qualifiés de ces territoires pour exposer les problèmes politiques qui se posent dans les territoires en question. Je choisis comme exemple le Gouvernement du Royaume-Uni parce que ce pays administre encore plus de 40 territoires et parce qu'en coopérant avec l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour la liquidation définitive du régime colonial ce pays faciliterait et simplifierait beaucoup la tâche des Nations Unies. La participation directe de représentants qualifiés des territoires non autonomes à ces travaux particuliers des Nations Unies pourrait en effet faciliter considérablement les activités de l'Organisation et pourrait même alléger la charge des responsabilités des puissances administrantes elles-mêmes, qui ont été jusqu'à présent la seule source de renseignements officiels sur la situation dans les territoires et dont les renseignements ont pu être déformés, soit délibérément, soit, je le reconnais, inconsciemment.

128. De l'avis de ma délégation, les Nations Unies ont une lourde responsabilité pour ce qui est d'aider les territoires non autonomes à atteindre les fins ultimes fixées par la Charte. Comme nous le savons tous, les fins des Chapitres XII et XIII relatifs au régime de tutelle ont déjà été atteintes dans une large mesure, mais les fins du Chapitre XI restent toujours à atteindre; il en est de même des fins de la Déclaration sur l'octroi de l'indépendance en ce qui concerne les territoires qui n'entrent pas dans le cadre des activités des Nations Unies, prévues au Chapitre XI de la Charte.

129. En simplifiant peut-être excessivement la question, on pourrait dire que dans un certain nombre de cas l'accession à la souveraineté ne doit pas pré-senter de grandes difficultés. Si les observations que j'ai faites au nom de ma délégation à propos des autres formes d'indépendance méritent de retenir l'attention de l'Assemblée, je suggérerai, sans présenter pour le moment une proposition formelle, que l'Assemblée envisage de créer un groupe de travail, constitué sur la base d'une répartition géographique, où seraient représentés les grands secteurs d'intérêt qui se dégagent de l'opinion internationale sur cette question. Le groupe ainsi constitué pourrait réunir des Etats Membres d'Asie, d'Afrique, d'Amérique latine, d'Amérique du Nord, d'Europe de l'Est et d'Europe occidentale. Son mandat pourrait être suffisamment étendu pour lui permettre d'entendre sur place, c'est-à-dire dans les territoires en cause ou en tout autre lieu, les opinions exprimées par des experts qualifiés en matière de questions coloniales, quelle que soit leur nationalité, et, surtout, de recueillir les vues des chefs des territoires et de définir les tendances de l'opinion publique dans les territoires en cause. Il existe à l'Organisation des Nations Unies des comités qui ont acquis une grande expérience en matière de colonialisme et qui ont obtenu dans ce domaine d'importants résultats, et si le groupe proposé était créé il devrait aussi se mettre en rapport avec ces comités, car il s'assurerait de cette manière un concours précieux pour les tâches qui lui incomberaient.

130. Ce sont là des détails dans lesquels l'Assemblée n'a pas à entrer pour le moment, mais qu'elle voudra peut-être examiner plus tard si elle décide que les propositions qui viennent d'être présentées méritent attention. Pour décrire brièvement et en termes généraux l'objectif fondamental du groupe en question, je dirai qu'il consisterait à aider l'Assemblée à résoudre le problème de l'abolition du colonialisme. Le temps presse et la solution doit être trouvée rapidement. Il est essentiel d'agir vite, mais la hâte peut aussi être préjudiciable. Si, animés d'un dessein ferme et persévérant, nous nous mettons en devoir de résoudre ces problèmes multiples et complexes, nous réussirons dans notre tâche et nous la mènerons à bien sans nous fixer d'autre objectif que celui que j'ai répété un si grand nombre de fois dans les paragraphes qui précèdent: la primauté des intérêts et de la prospérité des populations intéressées.

131. La question de la date à laquelle l'abolition définitive du colonialisme doit être achevée a fait l'objet de profondes spéculations et d'âpres discussions parmi les représentants de nombreux Etats Membres de l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Ma délégation est convaincue qu'on ne peut tolérer un seul jour de retard injustifié. J'ai déjà développé les raisons de ce point de vue. Etant donné les décisions relatives à l'indépendance prochaine de certains territoires et si l'on considère que l'Assemblée générale doit tenir compte de l'opinion publique dans d'autres territoires, il semblerait raisonnable de penser qu'il ne devrait plus subsister dans quelques années une seule colonie dans le monde moderne. Je n'ai cependant ni l'intention ni le moyen de fixer une date limite. Ma délégation a beaucoup réfléchi aux problèmes que pose la question en discussion et nous avons jugé utile d'exposer aux membres de l'Assemblée, pour qu'ils les examinent, certaines de nos pensées.

132. Le PRESIDENT: Je n'ai plus d'orateurs inscrits pour le débat général de ce soir. Je vais donner la parole aux orateurs qui veulent exercer leur droit de réponse.

133. M. FLORES AVENDAÑO (Guatemala) [traduit de l'espagnol]: Je suis monté à la tribune pour y traiter brièvement de deux questions. En premier lieu, je voudrais répondre à certains propos tenus par le représentant de l'Union soviétique au cours de l'intéressante intervention qu'il vient de prononcer. Si j'ai bien compris, le représentant de l'Union soviétique a déclaré que les pays qui se sont abstenus de voter sur la motion de censure adoptée par l'Assemblée générale [1039^{ème} séance] contre le discours prononcé par le représentant de l'Afrique du Sud [1033^{ème} séance] ont agi ainsi parce qu'ils étaient soumis à une pression des puissances colonialistes. Comme le Guatemala s'est abstenu dans ce vote, je tiens à dire au représentant de l'Union soviétique que son opinion est erronée et qu'elle est injuste. La position constante de mon pays au sujet de la question coloniale est bien connue à l'Assemblée et à l'Organisation des Nations Unies. Le Guatemala s'est toujours prononcé catégoriquement contre ce régime qui met l'homme dans un état de sujétion, le prive de sa liberté et l'exploite. Il existe sur ce point des preuves suffisantes dans cet organisme international. Le Guatemala s'est abstenu de voter la motion de censure pour la simple raison qu'il ne voulait pas, ne fût-ce que d'une manière indirecte, porter atteinte à la liberté de parole du représentant d'un Etat Membre; or, la motion de censure équivalait à certains égards à une limitation de cette liberté de parole.

134. La délégation du Guatemala a toujours fait sienne la pensée de l'homme qui disait à son interlocuteur ces magnifiques paroles: "Je ne suis pas de votre avis sur ce que vous me dites, mais je donnerais ma vie pour défendre votre droit de le dire". C'est pourquoi je déclare que l'opinion émise par le représentant de l'Union soviétique au sujet de la position du Guatemala est injuste et erronée.

135. L'autre question dont je veux parler est la suivante: l'orateur qui vient de quitter la tribune a parlé du territoire de Belize en indiquant qu'il s'agissait là d'un cas qui pose une question de souveraineté. A cet égard, ma délégation déclare que le territoire de Belize est occupé illégalement par le Royaume-Uni et elle réaffirme dans les termes les plus fermes les droits de souveraineté du Guatemala sur ce territoire.

136. M. GODBER (Royaume-Uni) [traduit de l'anglais]: J'ai demandé à faire usage de mon droit de réponse au sujet du discours prononcé par le représentant de l'Union soviétique. Toutefois, je voudrais auparavant répondre d'une simple phrase à l'intervention du représentant du Guatemala que je viens d'écouter. Je ne veux pas m'engager maintenant dans une controverse. Je me bornerai à dire que le Royaume-Uni ne doute aucunement de sa souveraineté sur le Honduras britannique et je tiens à réserver formellement tous nos droits au sujet de cette question. J'en resterai là.

137. Comme je l'ai dit, je m'étais proposé de répondre en quelques mots au discours du représentant de l'Union soviétique parce que j'ai jugé ces quelques mots nécessaires pour que mon silence ne puisse pas être interprété comme l'acceptation, sous quelque forme que ce soit, des affirmations absurdes et ridicules formulées dans ce discours au sujet de la politique du gouvernement de Sa Majesté. Toutefois, je n'ai pas l'intention de commenter maintenant ces accusations grotesques. Je le ferai en temps opportun, si le Président me donne la parole, au moment où, comme je l'espère, je participerai à ce débat particulièrement important. Je me bornerai à dire pour le moment que mon gouvernement rejette absolument les accusations qui ont été portées, accusations qui sont absolument dénuées de tout fondement et, si je puis me permettre de le faire remarquer au représentant de l'Union soviétique, ont été ressassées si souvent. En inventant ces histoires ridicules sur les réalisations de mon pays, le représentant de l'Union soviétique fait la preuve du néant de la politique de son pays sur ces questions. Je tiens à dire que mon pays est très fier de ce qu'il a accompli dans ses colonies et je m'efforcerai de justifier cette fierté lorsque je prendrai la parole officiellement à ce sujet.
