SEPARATE OPINION OF JUDGE SEBUTINDE

Object and purpose of the United Nations Charter — Maintenance of international peace and security — Role of the Court in the peaceful settlement of disputes — The Court’s compulsory jurisdiction derives from the optional clause declarations pursuant to Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Court’s Statute and not from the existence of a dispute — The existence of a dispute is merely the precondition for the exercise of that jurisdiction — Article 38 of the Statute of the Court — The objective determination of the existence of a dispute is the prerogative of the Court and is a matter of substance, not of form or procedure — Conduct of the Parties is relevant evidence — The new legal prerequisite of “awareness by the Respondent that its views were positively opposed” is formalistic and alien to the Court’s jurisprudence.

INTRODUCTION

1. I have voted against the operative paragraph of the Judgment because I am unable to agree with the decision of the Court upholding the first preliminary objection of Pakistan, as well as the underlying reasoning. In my view, the majority of the Court has unjustifiably departed from the flexible and discretionary approach that it has hitherto consistently adopted in determining the existence of a dispute, choosing instead, to introduce a new rigorous and formalistic test of “awareness” that raises the evidentiary threshold and that is bound to present the Court with difficulties in future. Furthermore, given the importance of the subject-matter of this case not only to the Parties involved but to the international community as a whole, I find it regrettable that the Court has opted to adopt an inflexible approach that has resulted in summarily disposing of this case at this early stage. I explain my views in more detail in this separate opinion.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE MAINTENANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY

2. If there is one lesson that the international community learnt from the human catastrophes that were the First and Second World Wars, it was the need for a concerted, global effort

“[t]o save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, which twice in our lifetime has brought untold sorrow to mankind, and to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women and of nations large and small, and to establish conditions under which justice and respect for the obligations arising from treaties and other sources of international law can be maintained . . .”

3. It is also important to recollect the purpose for which the United Nations was created, namely,

“to maintain international peace and security, and to that end: to take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression or other breaches of the peace, and to bring about by peaceful means, and in conformity with the principles of justice and international law, adjustment or settlement of international disputes or situations which might lead to a breach of the peace”

Under the Charter, although the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security lies with the Security Council and to a lesser extent, the General Assembly, the International Court of Justice, as the principal judicial organ of the United Nations does contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security through its judicial settlement of such inter-State disputes as are referred to it for adjudication and through the exercise of its advisory role in accordance with the Charter and the Statute of the Court. Today there is no greater threat to international peace and security, or indeed to humanity, than the threat or prospect of a nuclear war.

THE NPT AND NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT

4. It may also be useful to briefly recall the historical background to the present case. The Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) which entered into force in 1970 and whose objectives are, to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons and weapons technology, to promote co-operation in the peaceful use of nuclear energy and to further the goal of achieving nuclear disarmament, currently has 191 States parties including the Republic of the Marshall Islands (RMI). Pakistan has neither signed nor ratified the NPT (Judgment, para. 17). However, contrary to the NPT objectives, State practice demonstrates that for the past nearly 70 years, some States have continued to manufacture, acquire, upgrade, test and/or deploy nuclear weapons and that a threat of possible use is inherent in such deployment. Furthermore, State practice demonstrates that far from proscribing the threat or use of nuclear weapons in all circumstances, the international community has, by treaty and through the United Nations Security Council, recognized in effect that in certain circumstances the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons may even be justified.

5. In December 1994 the United Nations General Assembly sought an advisory opinion from the Court regarding the legality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons. The question posed by the General Assembly was quite simply “Is the threat or use of nuclear weapons in any circumstance permitted under international law?” In response, the Court considered that it was being asked “to determine the legality or illegality of the threat or use of nuclear weapons” 11. After taking into account the body of international law (including Article 2, paragraph 4, and Article 51 of the United Nations Charter) as well as the views of a vast number of States that filed their written submissions before the Court, the Court opined that:

— there is no specific authorization of the threat or use of nuclear weapons in either customary or conventional international law;

— there is no comprehensive and universal prohibition of the threat or use of nuclear weapons as such, in either customary or conventional international law;

— a threat or use of nuclear weapons that was contrary to Article 2, paragraph 4, or that failed to meet all the requirements of Article 51 of the United Nations Charter; or that is incompatible with the principles and rules of international humanitarian law applicable in armed conflict or that is incompatible with treaties specifically dealing with nuclear weapons, is illegal.

13 Ibid., para. 105 (2) B.

14 Ibid., para. 105 (2) C and D.
6. However, the Court did make one exception to its findings (albeit in an evenly divided manner)\textsuperscript{15} when it opined that:

\begin{quote}
“in view of the current state of international law, and of the elements of fact at its disposal, the Court cannot conclude definitively whether the threat or use of nuclear weapons would be lawful or unlawful in an extreme circumstance of self-defence, in which the very survival of a State would be at stake”\textsuperscript{16}.
\end{quote}

7. Finally, although this does not appear to have been in direct answer to the question posed by the General Assembly, the Court went an extra mile in what, in my view, is the real contribution of the Court to world peace and security as far as the question of nuclear weapons is concerned. It stated in paragraphs 98 to 100 of the Advisory Opinion, as follows:

\begin{quote}
“Given the eminently difficult issues that arise in applying the law on the use of force and above all the law applicable in armed conflict to nuclear weapons, the Court considers that it now needs to examine one further aspect of the question before it, seen in a broader context.

In the long run, international law, and with it the stability of the international order which it is intended to govern, are bound to suffer from the continuing difference of views with regard to the legal status of weapons as deadly as nuclear weapons. It is consequently important to put an end to this state of affairs: the long-promised complete nuclear disarmament appears to be the most appropriate means of achieving that result.

In these circumstances, the Court appreciates the full importance of the recognition by Article VI of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons of an obligation to negotiate in good faith a nuclear disarmament... The legal import of that obligation goes beyond that of a mere obligation of conduct; the obligation involved here is an obligation to achieve a precise result — nuclear disarmament in all its aspects — by adopting a particular course of conduct, namely, the pursuit of negotiations on the matter in good faith.

This twofold obligation to pursue and to conclude negotiations formally concerns the 182 States parties to the [NPT], or, in other words, the vast majority of the international community... Indeed, any realistic search for general and complete disarmament, especially nuclear disarmament, necessitates the co-operation of all States.”
\end{quote}

\textsuperscript{16} \textit{Legality of the Threat or Use of Nuclear Weapons, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1996 (I), p. 266, para. 105 (2) E.}
8. The Court then unanimously opined in the operative clause that, “There exists an obligation to pursue in good faith and to bring to a conclusion negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control.” The Advisory Opinion of the Court, although not legally binding, was well received by the vast majority of NPT States parties, although it was less welcome by those nuclear-weapon States that were of the view that the Court had over-stepped its judicial function by rendering this opinion. In December 1996, the General Assembly passed a resolution endorsing the conclusion of the Court relating to the existence of “an obligation to pursue in good faith and to bring to a conclusion, negotiations leading to disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control” and calling upon all States to immediately commence multilateral negotiations leading to a nuclear weapons convention prohibiting “the development, production, testing, deployment, stockpiling, threat or use of nuclear weapons” and providing for their elimination.

9. Regrettably, since the adoption of the Court’s Advisory Opinion 20 years ago, the international community has made little progress towards nuclear disarmament and even the prospect of negotiations on the conclusion of a nuclear weapons convention, seems illusory. It is in this context that, on 24 April 2014, the RMI filed an Application against nine respondent States (United States, Russia, United Kingdom, France, China, India, Pakistan, Israel and North Korea) which the Applicant maintains currently possess nuclear weapons, alleging a failure by the respondent States to fulfil obligations concerning negotiations relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament. Of the nine respondent States, only Pakistan, India and the United Kingdom (UK) formally responded to the RMI Application, each of the three States having previously filed declarations pursuant to Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court recognizing the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court (Judgment, para. 21).

THE THRESHOLD FOR DETERMINEING THE EXISTENCE OF A DISPUTE AND THE NEW CRITERION OF "AWARENESS"

10. The RMI bases the jurisdiction of the Court on its optional clause declaration pursuant to Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court dated 15 March 2013 and deposited on 24 April 2013\(^{19}\), and Pakistan’s optional clause declaration made on 12 September 1960 and deposited on 13 September 1960\(^{20}\) (Judgment, para. 1), which declarations the RMI claims are “without pertinent reservation”\(^{21}\). However, Pakistan raised a number of preliminary objections against the Court’s jurisdiction, including the absence of a legal dispute between the Parties as at 24 April 2014, the date of filing of the Application. The RMI disagrees and maintains that a dispute did exist at the time it filed its Application, the subject-matter of which is “Pakistan’s compliance or non-compliance with its obligation under customary international law to pursue in good faith, and bring to a conclusion, negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament”\(^{22}\). In its Judgment, the Court agrees with Pakistan in this regard and upholds its objection to jurisdiction (Judgment, para. 56). I respectfully disagree with the majority decision as well as the underlying reasoning, and set out my reasons in this separate opinion. In my view, the evidence on record when properly tested against the criteria well-established in the Court’s jurisprudence, shows that a dispute did exist between the Parties before the filing of the Application. I particularly disagree with the new criterion of “awareness” that the majority introduces, as well as the formalistic and inflexible approach taken in the determination of whether or not a dispute exists (Judgment, paras. 38-48).

11. Pakistan raises a number of interrelated objections as to the existence of a dispute. It contends that the Court lacks jurisdiction to entertain the Applicant’s claim on the grounds that:

(\(a\)) prior to or at the time the RMI filed its Application on 24 April 2014, there was no legal dispute in existence between the Parties that could trigger the Court’s jurisdiction under its Statute\(^{23}\);

that the alleged dispute is not demonstrated either in the Application or Memorial of the RMI;
(c) that the alleged dispute is not legal in nature because the RMI claims are based on the NPT and the Court’s 1996 Advisory Opinion, neither of which is binding on Pakistan;
(d) that the RMI “has failed to identify its legal claims with sufficient clarity for Pakistan to understand the alleged dispute”;
(e) that the statements made by Marshallese officials at the UN High-Level Meeting on Nuclear Disarmament, on 26 September 2013, and at the Second Conference on the Humanitarian Impact of Nuclear Weapons, on 13 February 2014, were not directed specifically at Pakistan nor did they identify “the subject-matter of any legal dispute that the RMI might have with Pakistan”;
(f) that since there were no prior communications, consultations or diplomatic negotiations between the RMI and Pakistan there could be no conflict of legal positions between the two Parties, and as such no legal dispute between them;
(g) that the claims of the RMI are artificially constructed and speculative in nature and that “it is not the function of the Court to decide a hypothetical or abstract claim based on speculative injury”;
(h) that the RMI has failed to prove the existence of any concrete or imminent harm or injury that is genuinely due to the action or inaction of Pakistan and which is capable of judicial settlement or redress; and
(i) that the actual purpose of the claim submitted by the RMI is to enforce the obligations established in Article V of the NPT and to “attracting judicial statements of a general nature that the Court was not willing to make in its 1996 Advisory Opinion.”

12. For its part, the RMI maintains that a dispute did exist between the Parties at the time the Application was filed, the subject-matter of which is the Respondent’s “non-compliance with its obligation under customary international law to pursue in good faith, and bring to a conclusion, negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament”\textsuperscript{33}. The RMI argues further that it has repeatedly called for nuclear-weapon States, including Pakistan, to comply with their international obligations and to negotiate nuclear disarmament\textsuperscript{34}. In particular it refers to two of its statements made publicly in the presence of Pakistan before the Application was filed. First, on 26 September 2013, at the UN High-Level Meeting on Nuclear Disarmament, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the RMI called upon: “all nuclear weapons states to intensify efforts to address their responsibilities in moving towards an effective and secure disarmament”\textsuperscript{35}. Secondly, on 13 February 2014, during the Second Conference on the Humanitarian Impact of Nuclear Weapons at Nayarit, Mexico, the RMI representative made similar remarks\textsuperscript{36}.

13. The RMI submits that these and other public statements illustrate “with perfect clarity the content of the claim”\textsuperscript{37} and that these statements were “unequivocally directed against all States possessing nuclear arsenals, including Pakistan” (emphasis added)\textsuperscript{38}. The fact that Pakistan participated in those conferences was, according to the RMI, sufficient to consider it notified of the claim of the RMI\textsuperscript{39}; in particular, because the RMI statements were very clear on the subject-matter of the dispute, namely, the failure of nuclear-weapon States to seriously engage in multilateral negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament arising under the NPT and/or customary international law. The RMI also considers that the legal basis of the claim was also clearly identified\textsuperscript{40}. Finally, the RMI considers that its claims have been positively opposed by Pakistan\textsuperscript{41} in that the latter, while rhetorically claiming in international fora to be committed to achieving a nuclear-free world, domestically “continues to engage in a course of conduct consisting of quantitative build-up and qualitative improvement of its nuclear arsenal”\textsuperscript{42}. Furthermore, RMI submits that Pakistan positively opposed the Applicant’s claims in its Note Verbale of 9 July 2014 and in its Counter-Memorial, where it explicitle disputed the validity of those claims. In its Judgment, the Court uphold Pakistan’s preliminary objection to jurisdiction on the ground that there was no dispute between the Parties prior to the filing of the RMI Application. I respectfully disagree with that decision as well as the underlying reasoning and set out my reasons in this separate opinion. In my view, the evidence on record, when properly tested against the criteria well-established in the Court’s jurisprudence, shows that a dispute did exist, albeit in a nascent form, between the Parties before the filing of the Application and that this dispute crystallized during the proceedings. I particularly disagree with the new criterion of “awareness” that the majority introduces, as well as the formalistic and inflexible approach taken in the determination of whether or not a dispute exists.

14. First, the Judgment rightly points out the Court’s function under Article 38 of its Statute, which is to decide such inter-State disputes as are referred to it (Judgment, para. 33). In cases such as this one, where States have made declarations (with or without reservations) recognizing the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, the jurisdiction of the Court emanates from those very declarations rather than from the existence of a dispute as such. It is more accurate to say that the existence of a dispute between the contending States is merely a precondition for the exercise of that jurisdiction (ibid., para. 33).

15. Secondly, the Judgment rightly defines a dispute as “a disagreement on a point of law or fact, a conflict of legal views or of interests between parties” (Judgment, para. 34). The Judgment also correctly states that it is for the Court (and not the parties) to determine objectively whether a dispute exists after examining the facts or evidence before it (ibid., para. 36) and that such determination is a matter of substance and not of procedure or form (ibid., para. 35). Thirdly, it is clear from the Court’s jurisprudence that neither prior notification by the applicant, of its claim to the respondent, nor a formal diplomatic protest by the applicant, are necessary pre-requisites for purposes of determining the existence of a dispute (ibid.).

16. While the Judgment correctly rehearses the Court’s jurisprudence regarding the definition of a “dispute” and the fact that determination of the existence of a dispute is “a matter of substance, and not a question of form or procedure”, I disagree with the approach and analysis that the majority has employed in arriving at the conclusion that there is no dispute between the Parties. I find that approach to be not only formalistic and procedural, but also lacking in addressing the substantive aspects of the Applicant’s claim, such as the conduct of the Respondent. Given the importance of nuclear disarmament to the international community at large, I believe that this is not a case that should have been easily dismissed on a formalistic or procedural finding that no dispute exists between the Contending Parties. Instead, a more substantive approach that analyses the conduct of the contesting States right up until 24 April 2014 and beyond if necessary, should have been undertaken in determining whether the Parties had “clearly opposite views”44. The Court’s jurisprudence clearly demonstrates the Court’s consistent preference for a flexible approach that steers clear of formality or procedural rigour, right from the days of the Permanent Court of International Justice45, and until more recently in Croatia v. Serbia46.

17. An applicant is required under Article 40, paragraph 1, of the Statute and Article 38, paragraph 2, of the Rules of Court to indicate the “subject of the dispute” in the Application and to specifying therein the “precise nature of the claim”47. The RMI did specify its claim or subject-matter of the dispute in its Application and Memorial as the failure of Pakistan to honour its obligation towards the Applicant (and other States) “to pursue in good faith, and bring to a conclusion, negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control”48. It is therefore not true, as Pakistan alleges, that the RMI “has failed to identify its legal claims with sufficient clarity for Pakistan to understand the alleged dispute”49. Furthermore, the RMI’s claim is clearly legal in nature in as far as it concerns the alleged non-performance by Pakistan, of an obligation under customary international law. Of course, the existence and nature of the purported obligation, as well as the acts constituting the alleged breach thereof, are matters that would have to be examined at the merits phase of the case50. However, it is not sufficient, for purposes of demonstrating the existence of a dispute, for the RMI to articulate its claims in its Application and Memorial. Nor is it sufficient merely for one party to assert that a dispute exists or for the other to deny that it does. It must, in this case, be demonstrated that the claims of the RMI are positively opposed by Pakistan or that there is "a disagreement on a point of law or fact, a conflict of legal views or of interests" between the two Parties\(^5\) and that this was the case at the time the Application was filed.

18. As stated in the Court's jurisprudence, it is for the Court to determine on an objective basis, whether or not an international dispute exists between the parties by "isolate[ing] the real issue in the case and identify[ing] the object of the claim"\(^5\). The Court must carry out a substantial examination or inquiry of the facts or evidence\(^5\). Although the dispute must in principle, exist at the time the Application is submitted to the Court\(^5\), there have been cases in which the Court has adopted a more flexible position, considering that facts arising after the application has been filed may be taken into account. For example, in the Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras) case, the Court held that:

"It may however be necessary, in order to determine with certainty what the situation was at the date of filing of the Application, to examine the events, and in particular the relations between the Parties, over a period prior to that date, and indeed during the subsequent period."\(^5\)

19. Furthermore, although the Court has stated in the South West Africa cases that in order for a dispute to exist, the claim of one party must be “positively opposed” by the other, such “positive opposition” should not be perceived as a formal or procedural disagreement on a point of law or fact only. In my view, the Court should, consistent with its jurisprudence rehearsed in the Judgment (pars. 34-37), adopt a substantive approach whereby if one State adopts a course of conduct to achieve its own interests, which conduct is then protested by the other, a positive opposition of views or interests is demonstrated. The perspective that takes into account the conduct of the contesting parties in determining the existence or otherwise of a dispute, and with which I agree, was aptly expressed by Judge Gaetano Morelli in his dissenting opinion in the South West Africa cases when he stated as follows:

“As to a disagreement upon a point of law or fact, it is to be observed that, while such a disagreement may be present and commonly (but not necessarily) is present where there is a dispute, the two things (disagreement and dispute) are not the same. In any event it is abundantly clear that a disagreement on a point of law or fact, which may indeed be theoretical, is not sufficient for a dispute to be regarded as existing.

In my opinion, a dispute consists, not of a conflict of interests as such, but rather in a contrast between the respective attitudes of the parties in relation to a certain conflict of interests. The opposing attitudes of the parties, in relation to a given conflict of interests, may respectively consist of the manifestations of the will by which each of the parties requires that its own interest be realized. It is the case of a dispute resulting, on one side, from a claim by one of the parties and, on the other side, of the contesting of that claim by the other party. But it may also be that one of the opposing attitudes of the parties consists, not of a manifestation of the will, but rather of a course of conduct by means of which the party pursuing that course directly achieves its own interest. This is the case of a claim which is followed not by the contesting of the claim but by the adoption of a course of conduct by the other party inconsistent with the claim. And this is the case too where there is in the first place a course of conduct by one of the parties to achieve its own interest, which the other party meets by a protest.”

20. In order to determine with certainty what the situation was at the date of filing of the RMI Application, it is necessary to examine the conduct of the Parties over the period prior to that date, and during the subsequent period. First, Pakistan has not made available to the Court any of its internal policies regarding the obligation to negotiate nuclear disarmament, maintaining that these are “issues of exclusive domestic jurisdiction”\textsuperscript{58}. However, the conduct of Pakistan that the RMI has raised issue with in its Application and Memorial is “Pakistan’s non-compliance with its obligations under customary international law to pursue in good faith, and bring to a conclusion, negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament”\textsuperscript{59}. Pakistan, while not denying this conduct, has merely stated that it is not obligated to do so either under the NPT (since it is not a party thereto) or under customary international law. Furthermore, the RMI takes issue with Pakistan’s development over the years of its nuclear weapons\textsuperscript{60}, describing this conduct as “a quantitative buildup and qualitative improvement” of Pakistan’s nuclear arsenal\textsuperscript{61}. The RMI submits that that conduct is inconsistent with Pakistan’s international obligations to pursue negotiations towards nuclear disarmament. Again, while not expressly denying the build-up of its nuclear arsenal, Pakistan refers to its right to maintain a nuclear arsenal for reasons of national security and points to its national defence policy against external aggression or threat of war\textsuperscript{62}. It also points to the fact that it has consistently voted in favour of United Nations resolutions in favour of international negotiations towards nuclear disarmament\textsuperscript{63}. The RMI maintains that, notwithstanding its voting patterns, Pakistan’s course of conduct, consisting on the one hand of its participation in the nuclear arms race and, on the other hand, its failure to pursue multilateral negotiations towards nuclear disar-disarmament, is inconsistent with its obligations under customary international law. Without prejudging the issue of whether or not Pakistan’s conduct referred to above actually constitutes a breach of an obligation under customary international law (an issue clearly for the merits), the question for determination is whether, before filing its Application against Pakistan on 24 April 2014, the Parties held clearly opposite views concerning Pakistan’s performance or non-performance of certain international obligations.

21. In this regard, I have taken into account relevant statements of high-ranking officials of each of the Parties. The RMI specifically mentions the statements it made when it joined the NPT\textsuperscript{64}, and those made during the 2010 NPT Review Conference, the 2013 United Nations High-Level Meeting on Nuclear Disarmament\textsuperscript{65}, and the 2014 Conference on the Humanitarian Impact of Nuclear Weapons\textsuperscript{66}. The RMI argues that those statements were sufficient to make all nuclear-weapon States, including Pakistan, aware of the RMI position on the matter\textsuperscript{67}.

22. First, the views of the RMI on nuclear disarmament were clearly communicated to all nuclear-weapon States present in New York on 26 September 2013, at the UN High-Level Meeting on Nuclear Disarmament, when the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the RMI called upon: “all nuclear weapon states to intensify efforts to address their responsibilities in moving towards an effective and secure disarmament”\textsuperscript{68}.

23. Secondly, on 13 February 2014, at the Second Conference on the Humanitarian Impact of Nuclear Weapons at Nayarit, Mexico, the RMI reiterated its position on the failure of nuclear-weapon States to pursue negotiations towards nuclear disarmament when it issued a Declaration stating that:

"the Marshall Islands is convinced that multilateral negotiations on achieving and sustaining a world free of nuclear weapons are long overdue. Indeed we believe that States possessing nuclear arsenals are failing to fulfil their legal obligations in this regard. Immediate commencement and conclusion of such negotiations is required by legal obligation of nuclear disarmament resting upon each and every State under Article VI of the Non Proliferation Treaty and customary international law."\textsuperscript{69} (Emphasis added.)

24. In my view, those statements also represent the RMI’s claim that nuclear-weapon States, including Pakistan, are obliged under the NPT and/or customary international law, to pursue negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament. Pakistan, known to be one of nine States that possess nuclear weapons, was represented at each of the above meetings. At the meeting of 26 September 2013, Pakistan was represented by H.E. Muhammad Nawaz Sharif, Prime Minister, while at the meeting of 13 February 2014, it was represented by H.E. Aitzaz Ahmed, Ambassador of Pakistan to Mexico and Mr. Majid Khan Lodhy, Head of Chancery, Embassy of Pakistan in Mexico. Thus, although the statements were generally addressed to “all nuclear-weapon States” and Pakistan was not singled out for mention by the RMI, it was implicitly included in the category of nuclear-weapon States that were, according to the RMI, “failing to fulfil their international obligations to carry out multilateral negotiations on achieving sustainable nuclear disarmament”.

25. In my view, the “Nayarit Declaration” quoted above did mention with sufficient clarity both the obligation on nuclear-weapon States to negotiate nuclear disarmament as well as the legal basis upon which the RMI based that obligation, namely, “Article VI of the Non-Proliferation Treaty and customary international law”. In this regard I disagree with the findings of the majority in paragraph 46 of the Judgment. I do not subscribe to the view that in the context of these multilateral conferences, it was necessary for the RMI to single out and name each of the nine nuclear States in order for it to validly express its claim against them. A distinction ought to be drawn between a purely bilateral setting where the applicant must single out the respondent, and a setting involving multilateral exchanges or processes such as the present case, where it is well known throughout the international community, that amongst the over 191 member States to the NPT, only nine possess nuclear weapons. To insist that the RMI should in its statements have identified each of these States by name and mentioned the conduct of each one that it objects to, is to apply form over substance. Similarly, the fact that the Nayarit Declaration was made at a conference the subject of which was the “broader question of the humanitarian impact of nuclear weapons” does not detract from the clarity of that statement nor of the RMI protestation.

70 Since the NPT entered into force in 1970, India, Pakistan and North Korea have all conducted nuclear tests, although they are not party to the NPT. North Korea withdrew from the NPT in 2003. Israel is also widely presumed to have nuclear weapons although it maintains a policy of deliberate ambiguity in this regard. NPT States that possess nuclear weapons include the permanent five on the United Nations Security Council, namely, China, France, Russia, United Kingdom and the United States. (Belgium, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and Turkey are NATO nuclear-weapon sharing States.) against the conduct of the nuclear-weapon States expressed therein. That argument too is unduly formalistic.

26. Furthermore, at the High-Level Meeting of the General Assembly on Nuclear Disarmament in New York, the Prime Minister of Pakistan H.E. Nawaz Sharif made a statement in which he expressed Pakistan’s peculiar stand on nuclear disarmament which, in my view, was diametrically opposed to that expressed by the RMI. In that address the Prime Minister stated the fact that the goals and consensus on the mandate and machinery to pursue the disarmament reached 35 years previously, had been eroded; that Pakistan was committed to the global goal of nuclear disarmament in a non-discriminatory and verifiable manner, and which upholds the right of each State to security; and that Pakistan would continue to adhere to its policy of the credible minimum deterrence without entering into an arms race71. Furthermore, it has been argued that Pakistan’s public statements, both domestically and in international fora, demonstrate its commitment to negotiations towards nuclear disarmament. True as that may be, for the purposes of demonstrating the existence of opposing views, the RMI has made it clear that it has no issues with Pakistan’s rhetoric in this regard. Its opposition is with regard to Pakistan’s failure to pursue in good faith those obligations. Again, without prejudging the issue of whether or not Pakistan’s conduct is in breach of its international obligations, the above facts clearly demonstrate that there is a course of conduct by one of the Parties (Pakistan) to achieve its own interests, which the other Party (RMI) meets by protest.

27. I have also taken into account the course of conduct of the Parties after the critical date of 24 April 2014. It is clear from Pakistan’s Note Verbale filed on 9 July 2014 and Counter-Memorial, that the Parties hold opposing views as to the legal validity of the claims of RMI, thereby crystallizing the dispute. In particular, they hold opposing views regarding the existence of an obligation under customary international law to pursue negotiations towards nuclear disarmament, as well as regarding Pakistan’s alleged breach thereof.

71 CMP, Ann. 1: Statement by H.E. Mr. Muhammad Nawaz Sharif, Prime Minister of the Islamic Republic of Pakistan at the High-Level Meeting of the General Assembly on Nuclear Disarmament, 26 September 2013.
The New Criterion of “Awareness” in Determining the Existence of a Dispute Is Alien to the Court’s Jurisprudence

28. Hitherto, the Court has not made it a legal prerequisite for an applicant to prove that before the application was filed, the respondent State “was aware or could not have been unaware that its views are positively opposed by the applicant” State, before making a determination that a dispute exists (Judgment, para. 38). This new test is not only alien to the established jurisprudence of the Court but also directly contradicts what the Court has stated in the past and with no convincing reasons. On every occasion that the Court has had to examine the issue of whether or not a dispute exists, it has emphasized that this is a role reserved for its objective determination (not that of the parties) and that that determination must involve an examination in substance and not form of the facts or evidence before the Court. For example, the Court has categorically stated in the South West Africa cases that:

“A mere assertion is not sufficient to prove the existence of a dispute any more than a mere denial of the existence of the dispute proves its non-existence. Nor is it adequate to show that the interests of the two parties to such a case are in conflict. It must be shown that the claim of one party is positively opposed by the other.”

Also in Nicaragua v. Colombia the Court stated that, “although a formal diplomatic protest may be an important step to bring a claim of one party to the attention of the other, such a formal protest is not a necessary condition [for the existence of a dispute].”

29. By introducing proof of “awareness” as a new legal requirement, what the majority has done is to raise the evidentiary threshold that will from now on require not only an applicant, but the Court itself, to delve into the “mind” of a respondent State in order to find out about its state of awareness. In my view this formalistic requirement is not only problematic but also directly contradicts the principle in Nicaragua v. Colombia quoted above, since the surest way of ensuring awareness is for an applicant to make some form of formal notification or diplomatic protest. The test also introduces subjectivity into an equation previously reserved “for the Court’s objective determination”.

30. It is also pertinent to note that paragraph 73 of Nicaragua v. Colombia cited by the majority at paragraph 38 of the Judgment as the basis for the new “awareness” test, merely sets out the factual assessment conducted by the Court to determine whether a dispute existed in that case\textsuperscript{76}, and not the legal test applicable. In paragraph 72 of Nicaragua v. Colombia, immediately preceding, the Court had just observed that,

“although a formal diplomatic protest may be an important step to bring a claim of one party to the attention of the other, such a formal protest is not a necessary condition . . . in determining whether a dispute exists or not, ’[t]he matter is one of substance, not of form’”\textsuperscript{77}.

It is clear that the Court in that case was not prepared to turn a specific factual finding into a formalistic legal requirement of prior notification. In my view, it would be inappropriate to turn what was clearly a factual observation into a rigid legal test that was rejected by the Court in that case.

31. Similarly, Georgia v. Russian Federation\textsuperscript{78}, also cited in the Judgment at paragraph 38 in support of the majority view, is inapplicable and should be distinguished. That case involved the interpretation and application of a specific treaty (the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination) to which both Georgia and Russia were party. Article 22 of that treaty (the compromissory clause conferring jurisdiction on the Court) has an express requirement that, prior to filing a case before the Court, the contending parties must first try to settle the dispute by negotiation or by other processes stipulated in the Convention\textsuperscript{79}. It was imperative in that case for the Applicant to prove that prior to seising the Court, it had not only notified the Respondent of its claims

\textsuperscript{76} The exact quotation of paragraph 73 is “Colombia was aware that its enactment of Decree 1946 and its conduct in the maritime areas declared by the 2012 Judgment to belong to Nicaragua were positively opposed by Nicaragua”. The applicable legal framework regarding the existence of the dispute is quoted at: Alleged Violations of Sovereign Rights and Maritime Spaces in the Caribbean Sea (Nicaragua v. Colombia), Preliminary Objections Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2016 (I), pp. 26-27, paras. 49-52.

\textsuperscript{77} Ibid., para. 72.

\textsuperscript{78} Application of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (Georgia v. Russian Federation), Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2011 (I), p. 78.

\textsuperscript{79} Article 22 of the Convention stipulated that:

“Any dispute between two or more States parties with respect to the interpretation or application of this Convention, which is not settled by negotiation or by procedures expressly provided for in this Convention, shall, at the request of any of the parties to the dispute, be referred to the International Court of Justice for decision, unless the disputants agree to another mode of settlement.”
but that the two had attempted negotiating a settlement. It was therefore logical that the Respondent formally be made “aware” of the Applicant’s claim before negotiations could take place. That case is in stark contrast to the present case where no such compromissory clause exists requiring prior negotiations or formal notification or “awareness”. Accordingly Georgia v. Russian Federation is, in my view, distinguishable and inapplicable as an authority for the “awareness” test.

Conclusion

32. Based on the evidence examined above, my view is that, at the date on which the Application was filed, there existed a dispute between the Parties concerning the alleged violation, by Pakistan, of an obligation under customary international law to pursue in good faith and bring to a conclusion, negotiations leading to nuclear disarmament in all its aspects under strict and effective international control.
